

CANADA

HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SECOND SESSION—TWENTY SIXTH PARLIAMENT

13 ELIZABETH II

VOLUME IX

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE SIXTEENTH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1964, TO THE EIGHTEENTH DAY OF NOVEMBER, 1964, INCLUSIVE

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

ROGER DUHAMEL, F.R.S.C.
QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1964

20220—577½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 16, 1964

The house met at 11 a.m.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

ADDRESS OF LOYALTY AND AFFECTION FOLLOWING VISIT

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the spirit that animated the discussion initiated in the house on Wednesday afternoon by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) I move, seconded by Mr. Diefenbaker, that an humble address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To Her Most Excellent Majesty
Elizabeth the Second

By the Grace of God of the United Kingdom, Canada and Her other Realms and Territories Queen, Head of the Commonwealth, Defender of the Faith:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

The Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled, wish humbly to convey to Your Majesty this expression of our deepest loyalty, affection and respect, and of our heartfelt appreciation of your recent visit to Canada.

The presence in our country of Your Majesty and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip on the occasion of the centennial of the meetings of the Fathers of Confederation held at Charlottetown and Quebec city warmed and moved the hearts of all true Canadians. Your messages will be an inspiration and guide to the Canadian people as we work together to achieve the national progress of which you spoke so movingly.

We pray that you may continue to reign for many years as our gracious and beloved sovereign.

Motion agreed to.

Whereupon the members of the house rose and sang

God save the Queen

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. Diefenbaker:

That the said address be engrossed, and that a message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that the House of Commons had passed the said address and requesting Their Honours to unite with this house in the address by inserting therein the words "and Senate".

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMMUNIST CHINA—REPORTED EXPLOSION OF NUCLEAR DEVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him whether he has received a report to the effect that the government of mainland China has just exploded a nuclear bomb; whether he has any official report to make to the house, and whether this event, if it has taken place, will have any effect on Canada's policy regarding the feasibility of bringing China as quickly as possible into the community of nations in order that some measure of control with respect to nuclear weapons possessed by China as well as by other countries may be implemented.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. gentleman who represents Digby-Annapolis-Kings sent me a note a few minutes ago indicating his intention to ask this same question. There is a Reuters report to the effect that the government of mainland China has detonated a bomb. I have no official confirmation of this report.

It will be recalled, however, that about a week ago it was indicated both in the United States and here in Canada that there was a possibility that within a very short period the Chinese government would detonate such a nuclear bomb. At that time I took occasion to draw attention to the provisions of article IV of the partial test ban treaty signed in August a year ago in Moscow by three of the great powers and later adhered to by 102 nations.

If a bomb has been detonated in China it will add to the radioactivity of the atmosphere, with all its consequences. I would hope—the government of Canada would hope—that no country already adhering to the test ban treaty would use this event as an occasion to withdraw its support of the test ban provisions.

In response to the final part of the hon. gentleman's question I can only say that I agree that this event confirms the desirability of mainland China itself supporting the test ban treaty.

Mr. Douglas: Does the Canadian government intend to initiate any steps to encourage the bringing of the government of mainland China into the United Nations by itself establishing diplomatic relations with the government of China?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have nothing to add to what I have already said.

RUSSIA—POSSIBLE EFFECT OF CHANGES IN PARTY LEADERSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question, likewise, is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that recent news reports indicate that many officials personally appointed by Mr. Khrushchev are today being removed from office, does the minister have any word for the house with regard to developments in the Soviet union and the possible effect of these events upon the general world situation?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this morning I had a visit from the ambassador of the Soviet union in Canada, who informed me that because of ill health Chairman Khrushchev has been relieved of the important responsibilities that were his as head of the government of the Soviet union. The ambassador took the occasion to state that I could be assured, and through me the people of Canada, that the foreign policy of the government of the Soviet union would not change. He also assured me that there would be no reversal of the policy of destalinization.

I would simply like to add that I intimated to the ambassador what I proposed to say in the house this morning; that it will be important to see if the new leaders will have the will to move forward toward a peaceful resolution of the basic issues such as disarmament, the proliferation of nuclear weapons, and the division of Germany, which are so important in the future of our world. I can assure the new leaders that the Canadian government, and I am sure other western countries as well, will be prepared and indeed happy to work with them in patiently exploring and implementing peaceful and equitable solutions of these vital issues.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

UNITED NATIONS

PROSPECTIVE OTTAWA MEETING ON STAND-BY UNITS FOR PEACE FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sorry I was not able to get in touch with him to give him notice. Is the conference on peace keeping operations to take place in Ottawa on November 2 and 3, as set out quite fully in an article in the Globe and Mail this morning; and does that very interesting article written by Mr. Stanley Westall accurately set out the plans and prospects for this conference?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the article in question; therefore I am not in a position to comment on it.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder, then, whether the minister would at some time make a statement to the house in respect of this conference. I would particularly suggest to the minister that he tell the house whether members of the opposition who are interested in this conference might be allowed to be present as observers. The conference is said in this article to be a low key conference, but perhaps that would not prevent members of the opposition being present.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, if I had a certain quality of humour I would of course say, in answer to the last comment of the hon. member, that this would be one good reason why the opposition should be present; but as I do not possess that type of sense of humour I will not make the observation.

Mr. Brewin: Will the conference take place?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I said in the house about a week ago, in answer to a question, that we fully anticipated that the conference would open on November 2. We had at that time unofficial information from some 11 countries of their willingness to accept formal invitations to attend. Formal invitations have now gone out, and I have no reason for believing that the conference will not take place on November 2.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REPORTED STATEMENT BY JUSTICE MINISTER—INQUIRIES AS TO MATTERS DISCUSSED

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether in the course of an interview on the C.B.C. yesterday, dealing in particular with the formula for the amendment of the constitution, he was asked a question to this effect: "Does this formula mean that the door is now open for an associate state?" And did he reply thereto in approximately these words: "You might put it that way"?

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. I wonder whether, in the course of the relaxed and co-operative atmosphere which apparently prevailed in his discussions with the attorneys general, he discussed with them his views as to the necessity of finding a wider area if he is going to properly enforce the law with regard to restrictive trade practices; and did he ask any of the provincial attorneys general whether they were prepared to surrender any of their jurisdiction so he could secure this wider jurisdiction that he indicated he needs?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, the matter of the restrictive trade practices commission was not, of course, on the agenda at the discussion and was not part of the discussion. As to whether any part of the formula, once it has been enacted, will be of some use in this direction will be left to the interpreters of the formula.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): A supplementary question. What consideration was given by the premiers and the attorneys general to the proposal for the entrenchment of the bill of rights in the new constitution?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, in all fairness to the participants in the conference—I am not speaking just for myself when I ask for fairness—I think it would be a good thing for all members concerned to wait until the report on the deliberations and discussions has been published and circulated, because certainly most of the answers to these very interesting questions will be given in the text.

Mr. Fairweather: When will that be?

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question. I wonder if the minister would advise the house whether the formula which has been agreed upon by the minister and the provinces will contain provisions which will permit the acquisition of associate state status by Quebec or any other province or provinces in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the formula has nothing to do with the implications of the question just asked, and I think the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) can draw his own conclusions by reading the proposed formula, without having to ask my opinion on this matter.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of Justice, who was somewhat more generous in the information he gave in the course of this interview yesterday than he is to the House of Commons today, if he was not asked whether the formula would permit of an associate state in Canada. I simply ask him whether he was asked that question.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken that question was asked, even though I cannot remember exactly in what terms. Again, in this case I think the actual wording should be given in reply to the Leader of the Opposition.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad the minister suggests that. Now I would ask the Secretary of State whether he will secure from the C.B.C. a copy of the interview which was given yesterday by the Minister of Justice on the program "Aujourd'hui" and have it tabled in the house. We have the co-operation of the minister now.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I will see if I can satisfy the right hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

FAILURE TO INCLUDE FISHERIES REPRESENTATIVE IN MISSION TO CARIBBEAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the importance of the fishing industry to the economy of Nova Scotia and the Atlantic provinces generally, and the necessity in view of foreign competition to constantly expand our markets, will the minister inform the house why a representative of the fresh and salt fishing industry was not included in the trade mission sponsored by his department which leaves tomorrow for a three week visit to Bermuda, the Bahamas, Jamaica, Trinidad and Barbados?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. The question was also put to me by one of my colleagues, and I am trying to ascertain the answer.

PENITENTIARIES

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL—REQUEST FOR TOUR BY MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice and ask the minister whether he would be kind enough to arrange, as early as possible and for as many members who may desire to participate, a tour of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary so that all members may have a chance to see at first hand the deplorable conditions which exist there.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think I succeeded in arranging a pretty successful tour the other day for the hon. member for Skeena. As to his question this morning, I will give it consideration.

KINGSTON, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO NEW CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice. Has a final decision yet been taken on the construction of the proposed new complex of buildings for penitentiary facilities at Kingston? If this has not yet been done, will he make plans to assure that he will get the most knowledgeable advice on the design and structure of these new buildings?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as to the first part of the question I must say that a final decision as to the exact nature of the complex and as to the plans has not yet been made by myself. With regard to the obtaining of advice, I must say that already specialist consultants from the United States have given their advice on the matter of plans and designs, but I repeat that as far as I am concerned I have yet to make my final decision thereon.

Mr. Enns: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister intend to allow a parliamentary committee to have a look at the plans and inspect them? Is there going to be an opportunity to do this?

Mr. Favreau: I am seriously considering the question of a parliamentary committee on the matter of prisons and penitentiaries.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that according to the newspapers tenders have closed for the new penal institution at Springhill and there is an indication that there will be a delay of some six weeks before treasury board can approve the low bidder's contract, I wonder if the minister could look into this in the hope of speeding up the process of investigating these tenders and making an award at an earlier date.

Mr. Favreau: I will, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

BELLEVILLE, ONT.—STEPS TO PREVENT CLOSING OF FACTORY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister. What steps have been taken or what steps are contemplated to prevent the closing later this month of the International Precision Company at Belleville, Ontario, thereby making it necessary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Webb: —for some 70 skilled craftsmen to seek new employment?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Webb: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, this is a very urgent question because later this month this plant will be closed and these men will be out of work.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Webb: What is going to be done about it? That is the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If I am not mistaken this question has been asked two or three times before.

Mr. Webb: I should like to give notice to debate this matter at the first opportunity.

TRANSPORTATION

PROPOSED REDUCTION IN C.P.R. SERVICE IN WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Transport. In view of the announcement by the Canadian Pacific Railway that they intend to reduce severely the passenger train service between Calgary and Lethbridge and between Lethbridge and Medicine Hat, would the minister consider requiring the board of transport commissioners to issue an order granting a little more time to the people involved to make representations to the board? I might say that this reduction in service is to become effective on October 21.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the act, the minister has no power to require the board of transport commissioners to take such action. However, I will draw the hon. member's statement to the attention of the board right away.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister suggest to the railways at the same time that there be a moratorium on all passenger service cancellations until this matter has been thoroughly discussed on the bill which is going to be debated very shortly?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I can pass on the hon. member's statement to the railways, but I doubt that the two matters are related in a way that would warrant that kind of action being taken.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, there are several other supplementary questions, but perhaps I could give notice to debate this matter at the adjournment hour.

Mr. McIlraith: Not tonight.

NATIONAL PARKS

JASPER AND BANFF—INQUIRY AS TO DEVELOPMENT PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources I should like to direct a question to his parliamentary secretary. Would he inform the house if the development plans for Jasper townsite to be announced in Jasper on Monday are based on the Oberlander report commissioned in 1962? If so, would he agree to table the report in the house, as was done in the case of a similar report for the Banff townsite?

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, when the announcement is made I think it will probably answer the hon. member's question. I will bring the second part of his question, having to do with the tabling of the report, to the minister's attention on his return.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question on a related topic. Is the minister aware that there is a movement under way by public spirited citizens to make all the lots between Caribou street and Wolf street in Banff townsite available to the government of Canada for conversion into a beautiful park open to all visitors to Banff national park? If so, will the minister bring this subject—

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Mr. Dinsdale: —to the attention of the Banff advisory council when he meets them next week? I ask this question Mr. Speaker, because I do not think the minister will be back in the house before he meets with the Banff advisory council.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister is aware of the situation and will be discussing the matter with the Banff advisory council when he is there.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can I take it from the remarks of the parliamentary secretary that the minister is meeting the Banff advisory council on October 23, or around that time?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, he has offered to meet the council, and I would hope that a meeting will take place.

SPORTS

INQUIRY AS TO GREATER SUPPORT FOR TRAINING IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that for the second time Canadians have unexpectedly won gold medals at the Olympic games, in bobsledding last winter and in rowing yesterday, is the government giving consideration to more support for athletic events in Canada, particularly in preparation for the Olympic games?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree that it is so surprising. We have a great many very excellent athletes who are competing in the Olympics and I am sure we are all very proud of them, particularly of the two young men who in their second race together were able to win a gold medal for Canada.

The government, of course, is always considering improvement of the fitness and amateur sport program. As my hon. friend knows, each year another $1 million is added until the $5 million originally planned has been expended. It is obvious that even when the $5 million is reached this will be insufficient to provide all the money necessary for capital works or for other uses to which money might be put, but the fact is that the government is from time to time giving increasing attention to the possibility of expanding this program.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, what did the hon. member mean by "unexpected" when it is Vancouver that is involved? Our athletes have won a gold medal and a bronze medal.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that in both cases, the bobsled team last winter and the rowing team this fall, the participants had difficulty in getting themselves and their equipment to the Olympics?

Miss LaMarsh: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but that obviously did not deter them from carrying off the highest awards, and this situation is far from unique to Canada.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister of Justice advise the house whether the government is planning to give Hal Banks a gold medal for bail jumping?

LABOUR RELATIONS

MARITIME UNION TRUSTEES—APPEARANCE BEFORE HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the pending S.I.U. elections I wonder whether the minister has now made a decision to bring the trustees before a standing or special committee of the House of Commons at this time, particularly since Mr. Banks has now shown up in New York and has his judicial thumb on some aspects of the election.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How do you know the government knows?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Portage-Neepawa.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Mr. Enns: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, did the Minister of Labour hear my question? I asked him whether he was intending to bring the maritime trustees before a standing committee of the House of Commons, and I think it is an important question.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I heard the question. I answered it two days ago.

[Later:]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege with respect to a question I put to the Minister of Labour today. Briefly, I asked him was it the intention of the government to bring the maritime trustees before a special or standing committee of the House of Commons to be questioned on matters affecting the S.I.U.

The minister said he had answered this question two days ago. I have checked Hansard very carefully, and this is the first opportunity I have to bring the matter to Your Honour's attention. My question was entirely different from the question put to the minister two days ago by the hon. member for Winnipeg North and the hon. member for Kootenay West. The minister has tried to mislead the house. He has been evasive and, above all, he has been most arrogant in his evasion so far as this matter is concerned. It is arrogance of the worst kind.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE USE OF FORMER R.C.A.F. BASE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister, because it is a matter covering several departments. It has to do with the Kitsilano reserve property in Vancouver. Is it correct that a statement has been made in this connection indicating that the government will lease 15 acres of the 26 acre Kitsilano reserve site for a 99 year period to the city of Vancouver for park use at one dollar per year; that the C.B.C. will lease the buildings on this property from the city of Vancouver for a period of 10 to 15 years at an annual rental of $52,000 per year, and that the balance of the 26 acre site, namely 11 acres, on which the defence buildings stand, will be purchased by Vancouver for $250,000?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I cannot confirm the details of the report to which my hon. friend refers, but as he knows there was a meeting a short time ago with representatives of Vancouver and as a result of that meeting an arrangement, which it is hoped will be mutually satisfactory, is being considered. We expect to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I ask—

Mr. Prittie: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond on a point of order.

Mr. Prittie: On September 30 the hon. member for New Westminster attempted to ask a question about the C.B.C. and the Kitsilano site. He was ruled out of order and was told to put it on the order paper. I suggest that if that ruling applied then, it should apply on this occasion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I appreciate the fact that someone in left field has given some information, Mr. Speaker, but this has to do with an agreement which I understand was made—

Mr. Prittie: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have a valid objection.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Leader of the Opposition has a right to ask this question. He is asking for confirmation or denial of a fact, and the other question asked by the hon. member for New Westminster was one seeking detailed information, I believe.

Mr. Howard: Favouritism.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member for Skeena to withdraw that remark. I ask the hon. member for Skeena to withdraw the remark that the Chair has ruled on a favouritism basis.

Mr. Howard: I will gladly bow to your request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wanted to ask the Prime Minister in this connection if he would consider having this question submitted to a committee of the house for consideration, in view of the fact that if this suggestion is implemented it will cost the people of Canada, through the C.B.C., $5 million or $6 million, and there is a property available downtown that would not cost the Dominion of Canada anything.

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, all these aspects of the matter have been and are being considered in regard to the proposed arrangement. If an arrangement can be agreed upon, as I believe it will be, I am sure this aspect of the matter will have been taken into consideration.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REORGANIZATION OF MILITIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): May I ask the Minister of National Defence if he can give the house a firm date upon which he will make an announcement concerning the second part of the Suttie report; because I am sure the operation of the militia is being seriously and adversely affected by the delay in an announcement of cut-backs in militia units.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I am sure the hon. gentleman, after his long years of experience in this house, would never really suggest that such a course should be followed.

Mr. Lambert: May I ask a supplementary question. The minister may have noted that I asked him if he could give us a firm date.

Mr. Hellyer: I was surprised that the hon. gentleman asked that question, Mr. Speaker. I have already indicated that we will make this information available as soon as we can.

HARBOURS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—DEVELOPMENT OF SALT WATER PORT THROUGH ALASKA PANHANDLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to pose a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and ask him whether he has any views to indicate to the house relating to a report that, because of a receding glacier, there is now a salt water port extending through the panhandle of Alaska into Canadian territory, and whether any plans for the development of such a port are being made.

Mr. Speaker: Surely the hon. member knows this is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Howard: On a question of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it is a question for the order paper. I posed it in all seriousness. If you suggest I put it on the order paper, I will.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should know this is a typical question for the order paper.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PURPORTED REPRODUCTION OF SECURITY INSTRUCTIONS ON ROYAL VISIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I ask the Minister of Justice if he is now prepared to answer the question I put to him yesterday concerning the escape of confidential documents from department files to the press?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, but I have asked for a report on this. I shall be able to answer on Monday, probably.

INVESTIGATION INTO ALLEGATIONS OF POLICE BRUTALITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): My question is for the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that the attorney general of the province of Quebec has ordered an investigation into alleged brutality by police in connection with the visit of Her Majesty the Queen, and in view of the fact that the federal government was in charge of security arrangements, is the Minister of Justice ordering a similar investigation?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): A report is forthcoming to me.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister if he or the superintendent of the R.C.M. Police have received any complaints in this regard, either from citizens or from the press corps who were in attendance at the royal visit?

Mr. Favreau: So far as I am concerned, in relation to the R.C.M.P., I have received no complaints about police activities. One must realize, first of all, that local policing is under the immediate jurisdiction of the local authorities and the Quebec attorney general, and it is proper that he should have initiated the investigation into the matter. In so far as the R.C.M.P. are concerned, no complaints have been received by the Minister of Justice but numerous congratulations have been received on the conduct of the R.C.M.P. in relation to the whole coverage of the Queen's visit.

[Mr. Howard.]

FISHERIES

NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT OF STRAIGHT BASE LINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries arising out of a reply he gave me yesterday to a question on the matter of base lines for fishing zones. The minister indicated that negotiations have been going on with Norway and Denmark. My question arises out of my recollection that he indicated earlier that negotiations with the United States on this subject had been completed. I am wondering, inasmuch as Norway, Denmark and these other countries are not involved on the west coast of Canada, if he could not indicate that some action is being taken at an early date with regard to the proclamation of base lines for the west coast.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): No, Mr. Speaker, no action will be taken until all negotiations have been completed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES—DISCUSSION OF FINAL ENACTMENT BY CANADA AFTER REPATRIATION OF CONSTITUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, which has to do with the relationship between the government and parliament. As hon. members are aware, on several occasions during the course of this session I raised the question of some final enactment by Canada as a sovereign nation in case a decision is made to repatriate our constitution. In particular I asked whether this matter would be discussed at certain recent conferences.

On Monday, August 17, as recorded in Hansard at pages 6909 and 6910, I put a question to the Prime Minister about this matter. In particular I asked him whether it would be discussed at Charlottetown, and he said that it would be. That answer is found on page 6910 of Hansard.

After the Charlottetown conference was over I asked the Prime Minister a question regarding it, which will be found on page 7608 of Hansard for Thursday, September 3. To be precise, I asked him whether this matter had been discussed. This was the answer of the Prime Minister:

That matter was mentioned, but it was not discussed in any detail. It will certainly be considered by the attorneys general and the Minister of Justice.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, September 30, I asked the Minister of Justice whether this matter would be on the agenda of the then pending conference of the minister with the attorneys general of the provinces. My question is found at page 8609 of Hansard for that date. It was a bit lengthy and I do not need to read it, but it was the same question; would the matter of Canada taking a final stand herself be discussed at the then pending conference. The minister's reply was also lengthy. He went into certain details, but he concluded with these sentences:

But I must say I am very ready to consider the matter and to raise the point at the conference as it has been raised by my hon. friend. This once more goes to show how useful these discussions are.

Twice by the Prime Minister and once by the Minister of Justice the house was given the assurance that this matter would be discussed at these conferences. Yesterday, as recorded at page 9073 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Justice whether the matter had been discussed. The operative portion of his answer reads as follows:

No, Mr. Speaker.

I suggest that if the government had no intention of raising this matter at the recent conferences it could have told the house so, but what has happened is that the house was told on three occasions that it would be done. Yesterday we learned that it was not done. My point of privilege is surely quite clear. Parliament deserves better than this at the hands of the government.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

1. Departmental administration including fees for membership in the international organizations listed in the details of the estimates, $5,180,500.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, last evening at ten o'clock I was discussing a few unfair facets of the department's administration in their application to the national economy. About ten years ago a Liberal administration gave permission to the Del Monte company of California, a large food processing company in the United States, to buy out Canadian Canners, close down some canneries and thus cut off a large economic market for Canadian farmers. I mentioned this matter last night with particular reference to the riding of Prince Edward-Lennox, where many factories were closed down.

I also discussed the vast outflow of union dues to the United States. These matters seem to complement one another, the closing up of Canadian industries by U.S. financial interests and the multimillion dollar flow of union dues from Canadian industry to the United States. The minister mentioned the progress made by Canadian industry, but in doing so I think his eyesight was in reverse. What a wonderful thing it would be for Canada if we could rid ourselves of United States industrial colonialism.

I am not against unions and I realize their necessity to collect dues for their funds, but I submit the unions should be strictly Canadian in nature, investing their money at home and drawing interest on it in Canada. Once their funds pass beyond our boundaries they are nothing but a detriment to our country. Only a very small proportion is returned to Canada in the form of payments made to union employees whenever they are on strike, and I would remind members of the committee that strikes per capita are less frequent in Canada than they are in the great republic to the south of us.

How long will we have to put up with this economic system of industrial colonialism? Lately we have heard a lot about repatriating our constitution. I say let us repatriate those millions of dollars which are going out of the country in the form of union dues, and which are a detriment to our economy because they represent a good share of our adverse trade relationship with the United States.

One of the main causes of the high cost of living is the taxation of business and industry. Increased taxation of industry by the government is an impediment to the export of our manufactured products to other countries, especially to those countries which have a more frugal and less luxurious standard of living than we enjoy. I pause here to congratulate Canada in this regard. We certainly have a very high standard of living here compared with the other countries with which we trade and with which we enjoy a preponderance of trade in our favour.

Does Canada know just what the end cost of high living will be? Will the Canadian people allow their government to tax them into oblivion, to tax them and their industry into a state where they sit among their luxury items of high living beside silent machines which will no longer feed them and no longer allow the people even a plain living, let alone a luxurious one?

In conclusion there is one further point I wish to bring to the attention of the committee. It concerns taxation. Retailers of our country are concerned with all aspects of income tax and general taxation because of their pervasive influence on the economy of Canada and their impact on the profitability of small businesses. The small businessman is in narrow straits at the present time, and I would remind the committee, despite all the progress which has been made and despite the rosy picture which the minister has painted, that 1964 seems to hold the record for the number of bankruptcies this country has experienced; and most of these failures have been in the area of small business. Small businessmen are concerned that the burden of taxation should not exceed their ability to pay while remaining dynamically competitive, and they are anxious to ensure that the burden of business income tax is distributed equitably among all those who are engaged in business.

I realize these remarks do not apply directly to the department whose estimates are before us, but I pointed out last night the close liaison which is necessary between the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Finance, and that is why I bring these observations to the attention of the minister so that he may pass them on to his colleague, the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Aiken: I should like to discuss one single matter at this time. It touches the minister's department in three ways; first, with reference to the balance of payments in international trade; second, with regard to the government travel bureau; and third, with respect to the dominion bureau of statistics.

The subject I wish to mention, or one particular aspect of it, is the most alarming feature of our foreign trade at the present time, the state of the balance of payments on travel between Canada and other countries, particularly the United States. An examination of the figures provided by the dominion bureau of statistics discloses what I consider to be a real mystery which someone will have to analyze and solve very quickly. In 1960 Canada had a debit balance on travel with other countries amounting to $207 million, which was high. In 1961 this debit balance declined to $160 million. By 1962 it had gone down further to $43 million, and in 1963 the balance of the scales was tipped to the other side and for the first time in many years we had a credit balance of approximately $13 million. The trend was in the right direction and the trend was good.

Just who should take the credit is unimportant. I could say, I suppose, that the trend had been started in 1960 and had carried on through 1963. But I do not think that in the realm of travel, government influence through the travel bureau, which is mainly an advertising agency, accounts for everything. So we have to look somewhere else to explain the situation I am now about to outline.

What is the situation in 1964? We do not, of course, have the figures for more than the first half of the year, but the figures we do have are shocking. In the first half of 1963 Canada experienced a debit balance of $90 million on travel. In the first half of 1964 there was a debit balance in the amount of $145 million, a very substantial increase. In the first quarter of 1964 the debit amounted to $96 million, the highest for over ten years. If we look back to the first quarter of 1963 we find the debit of $67 million was the lowest debit balance in the first quarter of the year for seven years. The second quarter of 1963 showed a debit of $23 million, the lowest for more than ten years. Then, as I have stated, in 1964 this debit increased substantially in the first quarter. It more than doubled in the second quarter. We do not yet have the figures for the third quarter in 1964 because it is too soon to have these returns, but from what I can gather the indications are that the picture will be no better.

Certainly travel was discouraged by a number of factors, one of which was bad weather. However, there were other factors, as I intend to show. As I said, the figures present something of a mystery because when one looks at the number of vehicles travelling between Canada and the United States, the number of people travelling by bus, air and rail, one finds that the difference between this year and previous years is not very great. In the first half of 1963 the number of vehicles of U.S. visitors was 1,120,000. In the first half of 1964 it was 1,252,000. This represents an increase of 11 per cent. Likewise the number of Canadians returning from the United States shows an increase between 1963 and 1964, in the first half of each year, of 11.4 per cent. This is roughly the same as the increase in the number of vehicles entering and leaving. Likewise the number of short term visitors, people who go and come the same day, amounted to 1,693,000 in the first half of 1963. In the first half of 1964 the figure was 1,794,000, an increase of about 6 per cent. In the same category, vehicles returning from abroad showed an increase of 8.3 per cent, slightly higher but not much. So this alarming deficit to which I have referred cannot be accounted for on the basis of the numbers travelling between Canada and the United States.

In connection with dollars spent, in 1962 for the first half of the year we were in deficit in the amount of $133 million; in 1963 it was down to $90 million; in 1964 it is up to $145 million. I am referring to the deficit between those who travel abroad and those who visit Canada. We cannot seem to find out where the problem lies. Certainly it is not in the number of people travelling. Can it be that there are more people travelling abroad than we have been able to entice to visit us in Canada?

As I say, Mr. Chairman, this is a serious problem. The trend was going very well and the situation had been improving for the last four or five years, but this year it has reversed itself and the deficit is again back in the upward direction. I do not think, for example, that for the first half of the year you can blame this on the weather because the damage to the tourist business in Canada, generally speaking, is done in the summer. While there was an increasing amount of winter travel, it was in the wrong direction in 1964.

I think one of the reasons is that we are not taking enough interest in interprovincial travel within Canada. This is not something that the travel bureau has in general interested itself in over the years. Being a Canadian organization under the federal government they have occupied themselves, and rightly so, with bringing people from abroad into Canada. But I think the figures I have just quoted indicate the obvious trend, and I suggest that we have to make a more definite effort to keep within this country some of these people who travel abroad.

I think a very excellent example of this type of thing was the confederation centennial conference in Charlottetown, this year. I was one who took advantage of the invitation from the province of Prince Edward Island to visit them with my family this year, in spite of the fact that parliament was sitting every day and had sat continuously since February 18. Despite this I managed to find a week end and a few days at each end of it to get away and visit this province. I think it was an excellent example of what we can do within Canada interprovincially; because a great many people who went to Prince Edward Island and whom I met there in a very short space of time said they had come because of the centennial arrangements in that province and the promise of good fellowship and a great welcome from the kind people in the maritime provinces and particularly in P.E.I. I think this also did a good deal for the other provinces of Canada which were in the line of travel.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, this is the answer, and I am raising the problem today to urge the minister, through the travel bureau and perhaps through government policy—because I think there will have to be a change in that policy—to make a greater effort to have Canadians spend their holidays in Canada. Often an affluent society, people who do well and make money, have the ambition to go elsewhere to spend their money. I have no doubt that this is part of the problem; that a great many of our people who have done well and have travelled either in their business or on holidays, have decided "I am going to take a holiday and I am going to Florida", or California or Europe or some other place outside Canada. This of course is something no one can prevent them doing; but I think the time has come when a sharp change in direction is called for if we are going to do anything about changing this deficit in travel account. The minister can go out and sell hard products that this country has to sell and at the same time be met with a deficit that is undoing all the benefit being created in other fields. In my opinion we have to take this aspect of the problem into very serious consideration.

There is one other matter I wish to raise, and I do so at this point because of the fact that I have always been interested in the tourist business and have a special interest in those people in the northeastern Georgian bay area who are operators of tourist establishments relying upon access by water, rental of boats, use of marinas and other water uses connected with the travel and tourist business. These people had a very bad summer this year. I am sure this will influence the figures we may get for the third quarter of the year. Many of them had very expensive operations to maintain, and they could not get their customers to the water to go boating; they had to send them to other places. Many people who heard of the low water problem did not come at all; others came and stayed a much shorter period of time than before.

This is one factor, and it is a serious one. My reason for raising this question now is that the problem these people face in trying to attract clients for their businesses is caused by the low water levels of Georgian bay and lake Huron. This particular group for some reason is the most hard hit of all. I am given to understand that it has to do with their location, the prevailing winds, and so forth; but they were very hard hit.

It is possible to approach any department of government to get any assistance for these people. The Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources say "Well, there is not much we can do about it. We will try to get the water levels back, but this problem is not our affair". The Department of Public Works say "We will keep main entrances to navigation channels and main harbours open, but that is all we can do". The Department of Transport say "We are only concerned with major navigation, and not minor". So there is no particular place to which these people can go for assistance, though I must say that they will be encouraged to come here and present a brief to the committee on mines, forests and waters that is being set up.

I am raising this matter now because this is a group of people to whom the government should consider giving some special assistance. They are not asking for remuneration for loss of business; they are asking for some help in restoring the facilities that either nature or the government—or someone—took away from them. Whether they were taken away by natural causes, or by the deepening of the St. Lawrence seaway, or by any one of a number of other causes thus far suggested is immaterial. For a very small amount in comparison these people can be helped, and I hope the minister will take this particular group into account. This matter does require government consideration, not just the consideration of one department. There are various other groups who have also suffered this year, mainly because of weather and for the many other reasons which have been publicly stated.

I should like the minister if he can, or in consultation with his department, to tell me what has brought about this reversal of the balance of payments on travel account, and also to tell me what the government is going to do to correct it. There are two problems involved. One of them is money, which of course is always important in the balance of payments. The second is the travel industry itself, which as everyone knows is the third largest producer of foreign currency in Canada. I think we have to find out what is the reason for this reversal. It may be that too many people are travelling abroad. If so, I suggest the government should undertake a special campaign to encourage people to travel in Canada, and this is only one suggestion which could be made.

[Mr. Aiken.]

Having watched this matter very carefully for quite a number of years I had reason to feel, even as late as last fall, that we were making progress in the travel field and were creating something of benefit to the national economy. We were reducing this terrible deficit which had been hanging over our heads for a number of years; but then when the figures for 1964 started to come out they showed a very marked and tragic reversal. This does not mean, of course, that our travel business has fallen off; there has been an increase, a very satisfactory increase, in travel in Canada. But unfortunately at the same time there has been a greater increase in money spent on travel abroad. I think a crash program on this one subject is called for, and I hope the minister and his department will find the answer.

Mr. Gundlock: Mr. Chairman, if I may I should like to ask the minister a question having to do with wheat prices. May I ask him for the weekly prices of wheat, particularly in the 1963-64 crop year, and also for the dates of the major sales, including sales to Russia, Britain and China.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I should like to add a few remarks, before the minister replies, relating to some of the comments made by my colleague the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. I think his were the first remarks on the importance of tourism in the Canadian trade and commerce picture, and I would not want this important aspect of Canada's economy to be neglected.

It is, of course, a well known fact that tourism is the largest single item in international trade, and it is only in recent years that the government of Canada has become fully aware of its importance to our trading position. As a matter of fact, for many years this economic factor was neglected in a shocking manner and the Canadian government travel bureau, which was founded in the 1930's, became the orphan of departmental branches. It rotated from department to department because no one could appreciate its tremendous economic impact. It was not until it settled in the new Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources in the early 1950's that fresh appreciation of its economic significance was gained by the government. I think perhaps it was due to the fact that the whole concept of the establishment of the department of resources was to think in terms of the economic aspects of our resources and to begin planning in a co-ordinated and organized manner. The new awareness was also associated with the revolution of rising expectations which occurred following world war II and the lure of Canada's wilderness in an age of growing leisure time.

I was interested to hear the comments of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, who drew the attention of the committee to the rather encouraging change in the statistical position of Canada's tourist industry in recent years, when for the first time in many long years we came pretty close to having a balanced position on the international tourist account. He is aware, of course, as I am sure are the members of the committee, that this happy situation resulted from a vigorous stepped-up promotional program on the part of the Canadian government travel bureau. I think Canada is very fortunate in the men who are serving her in this bureau. In the few years I was associated with them as the responsible minister for northern affairs I began fully to appreciate their dedication to this important economic activity.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I cannot give any explanation of the reversal in our international tourist account situation referred to by my colleague from Parry Sound-Muskoka. It might be that the United States market, upon which Canada had substantially depended until 1962, has reached the saturation point. Until 1962 the government of Canada exerted all its efforts in tourist promotion in the direction of the United States market, and there was a constant program of expansion of promotional activities. Perhaps the minister, when he replies, can give the committee some idea from his up to date contact with these statistics why it is that the position has reversed itself this year following the more favourable statistical position noted last year and for the past several years.

Perhaps he could also indicate just how far the program of expanding our tourist promotion activities in the United States market has been developed. I know there were plans afoot and some already implemented to extend and expand the bureaux in the United States. The opening which took place in 1961 in California, which has now become the most populous state of the union, was to be the forerunner of other similar developments in the United States market. I have not seen any official announcement with regard to the opening of an office in Minneapolis to cover the important midwestern United States market, but I know this is in contemplation. I am sure, as has been the case in the tapping of the California market, that it will make a large contribution toward redressing the unfortunate trend referred to by my good friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka.

I have been reading any statements on the subject of tourism that have become available, particularly from the minister's office, and I have been pleased to see that he is personally dedicated to the continuation of this development. I am also pleased that in a recent series of speeches in which he has referred to Canada's booming economy he has given top attention to the important contribution made by Canada's expanding tourist industry. He has also given credit where credit is due, to the "Diefendollar" which was brought into effect in 1962. I think this is one of the main reasons for the sudden, encouraging expansion referred to by my friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka. This had an amazing psychological impact on United States tourists who for several years had laboured under the disadvantage, more psychological than economic, of the artificially inflated Canadian dollar on the international financial market.

I am sure that the decision of the government party to continue the "Diefendollar", notwithstanding their rather strident and almost hysterical criticism while in opposition, indicates that they have put aside political considerations in the interests of economic and fiscal reality. I am also sure that if this is accompanied by a continuation and expansion of the vigorous promotional program begun a few years ago in the United States market we will once again see a surge forward and a continuation of the trend toward a more balanced relationship on international account.

There is one further question I should like to raise. In 1962 a five year plan was launched by an announcement at the annual conference of provincial and federal tourist organizations. The plan was geared to coincide with the celebration of Canada's centennial in 1967. I notice that the minister now refers to it in his speeches as a three year plan, but back in 1962 it was actually known as the five year plan. There has just been a change in the numerical designation.

Mr. Sharp: Last year it was four years.

Mr. Dinsdale: It is a change in the numerical designation. I remember the optimistic prophecies envisaging a figure of $1 billion in tourist earnings by 1967, confederation year, which were made at the commencement of the five year plan. I wonder how we are progressing along the road to a realization of the $1 billion target. I am on the side of the optimists in this regard. I think it will be quite easy to realize this figure so long as the government continues the vigorous promotional campaign which accompanied the launching of the program in 1962.

To my mind an integral part of the success of such a promotion is a rapid development of the new market in Europe. The decision was made to move into tourist promotion in the European market for the first time in 1962. If it is true, as the figures for the current year seem to suggest, that we are reaching the saturation point in the United States market, it is all the more urgent that we move forward with all possible speed to expand the program in Europe. We only have three years left in which to prepare Europeans for their friendly invasion of Canada in 1967.

The first opening occurred in London in September of 1962 and was to have been followed by similar openings in Paris and the capitals of other major European countries. I hope this program is going forward just as fast as is physically possible. I know there is a feeling of dedication among the officials of the Canadian government travel bureau, and I know that if support is available from the public treasury there is no limit to their dedication and enthusiasm with regard to the realization of the ambitious $1 billion target first announced in conjunction with the five year plan.

Become I resume my seat I should like to pay tribute to the private enterprisers in the important field of tourist development. The Canadian tourist association has played a major and expanding role in realizing the importance of tourism to the Canadian economy. I can understand the anxiety of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka with respect to interprovincial tourist trade, and there is no group more conscious of the economic importance of this aspect of tourism than the Canadian tourist association. It is a theme that I think might well be pursued as it has been pursued in the past; and in view of the statistics indicating a reversal of the trend this year it might be taken as one of the important topics to be considered at the annual federal-provincial conference on tourism which, according to the usual schedule, should be just around the corner.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Chairman, in entering the debate at this time I am sure it will be appreciated that, as a member of parliament from British Columbia, my primary interest in trade development is in its effect on the economy of western Canada and the Pacific province in particular. Mine is not a narrow, regional interest, but rather in the substantial effect such trade development could have on the nation and the effect the accelerated development of the Pacific region could have on the growth of the nation as a whole.

I know that the minister has shown an awareness of the importance of Pacific policies. He was recently in Japan, and he knows the value of the sales of western grain to China and other Pacific markets. However, I wonder if he has not found, as he has turned his attention to the development of trade and commerce in that region, that we have never had in Canada, and we do not have now, a truly developed policy for the entire Pacific area, a policy that relates not simply to trade and commerce but to every other field of Canadian policy in relation to our Pacific neighbours. As we go beyond the direct field of trade and commerce and develop other policies that are required, such as external affairs policy, immigration policy and fisheries policy, we provide a basis upon which trade policies will be developed over a period of years. In a speech in Montreal on May 21 of this year Dr. Arthur J. R. Smith, director of the Economic Council of Canada, said:

> Traditionally, Canadian interest in international economic affairs has been concentrated on the United States. Over recent years, dynamic developments in western Europe have obviously stimulated greatly increased attention by Canadians to economic affairs across the Atlantic. But no comparable accentuation of Canadian interest has appeared in economic affairs across the Pacific—and especially in the dramatic changes which have been taking place in the Japanese economy.

I think that is a valid criticism of Canadian policy in so far as it relates to the development of our interests throughout the entire Pacific basin. While I agree it is not the direct responsibility of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to take into account those things that come within the jurisdiction of other ministers in the government, it is his responsibility to be very much aware of all the elements of policy that will assist him in the development of policies for Canada in the trade field. I feel that the minister probably is aware of this. I hope in his discussions he has encountered the necessity for this; for this is a policy area to which we must devote far greater attention than we have in the past.

I believe there are many elements that have to be taken into account in providing a basis for the expansion of our interests in the Pacific. We have to consider trade policies with nations both bordering upon and located within Pacific regions. This includes the states of the United States on the Pacific coast, and not forgetting for one moment the state of Alaska. We must consider the relationship of Canadian foreign policy to those policies already established by Canada's commonwealth partners in the Pacific and the United States; foreign aid programs now in effect, with special emphasis on expansion of aid programs to commonwealth nations in the Pacific, including southeast Asia and the Indian subcontinent; north Pacific fisheries policy; the development of the interchange of peoples through educational aid programs and, as has just been emphasized, tourist travel; accelerated development of west coast harbour facilities, including northern and island ports; improved highway communication between the west coast and north central B.C. and the northern resource areas of the prairie provinces and the Peace river region of B.C. and Alberta; the exploration of either the feasibility or desirability of seeking a corridor through the Alaska Panhandle with free port facilities on the coast to tap the potential resources of northwestern British Columbia and the Yukon.

It is quite obvious that the suggestions I have made do not fall within the ministerial responsibility of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but they do fall within an area in which he is interested. The things I have suggested which should form the elements of policy in the Pacific will have a very definite effect on the expansion of trade in the whole of the Pacific region. I could come back to the question of communications. It will not be possible for the government of Canada to undertake the most advantageous trading arrangements in the Pacific if it is not possible for the newly developing resource areas in British Columbia, the Yukon and the northern sections of the prairies to get their products rapidly and economically to coastal ports. It will be of no advantage to develop an expanded means of communication—and particularly I am thinking in terms of highway communications to the coast—if the coastal facilities are not adequate to handle the products, particularly the newly developed, highly specialized products that are coming out of our western industries.

These things are essential, and we have to consider them in the development of a trade policy. We have to take into account all these related policies which are part and parcel of our over-all objective, the development of the Canadian economy. I hope when he speaks the minister will indicate whether he is prepared to work together with the other members of the cabinet and with the governments of the provinces of western Canada, including British Columbia, to see what leadership all levels of government can give in the development of an integrated Pacific policy.

It is said that something like two thirds of the world's people live in the Pacific region or adjacent to it. We recognize that the economies of many of the nations in that area are underdeveloped. They are not yet at that point where they can trade with us on an equal basis. We have, however, sound reasons to consider the greater role that Canada may play in helping to improve the economic conditions of those nations, so that in due course we may be able to trade with them on a more equal basis and find markets for Canadian products which do not now exist, or in which we are finding competition from other resource developing nations difficult, or in which tariff policies perhaps are a hindrance.

In any event, when two thirds of the world's people are located in an area to which we have ready access through our Pacific coast, it is about time that Canada really devoted all its resources of knowledge and interest to the development of a policy that will give us a far greater share of the economic activity, political activity, trade activity, immigration and social interchange of people in the entire area. It is absolutely essential that we stop turning our attention completely either to the south or to the Atlantic, and consider that there may be a potential we have tended to overlook in an area that is just as much a part of the Canadian area of interest as any other part of the world.

We must recognize that in tapping trade markets in South America we can reach a very substantial part of those markets through the Pacific ports. We tend to think of the Pacific ports as shipping wheat to China, as shipping coal and the products of the petroleum chemical industry to Japan, and we forget that those ports provide us with entry not only to the western U.S. markets but also to a very extensive part of the potential South American markets as well. Therefore, by every criteria we can find reason to expand our interest and develop our policy as it applies in the Pacific.

In Dr. Smith's speech, to which I referred earlier, he outlines on the final page what he considers to be the Japanese approach to their economic development in the present world of trade and commerce, of rapidly changing economies and technology. The points he outlines as being the objectives of the Japanese government are, I think, important in the creation of Canadian policy. These are some of the things he suggests the Japanese have done, and which I think we should examine with great care and perhaps adopt ourselves:

—a broad capacity among decision makers in both the public and the private sectors of the economy to think in terms of longer range economic probabilities and potentials, and not merely in terms of short term opportunities and problems;
—a broad consensus as to what these potentials are, and what are the chief obstacles to their achievement;
—a broad understanding of the processes of economic growth, underpinned by objective and high quality economic analysis;
—a broad acceptance of the uncertainties and strains of rapid adjustments to change which are an invariable feature of swift economic growth; and —a broad willingness to support government policies designed to promote economic growth.

If this has been the basis of Japanese policies; if this is what the Japanese people accept, both in public and private life; if this is what they believe they can and must accept to achieve their objectives, then we should be examining these policies as a basis for developing our own policy, because Japan has expanded at the most rapid rate of any nation in economic and industrial growth during the post-war period.

In that context we can think of the development of the Japanese merchant fleet and its shipbuilding industry. These are spectacular things of which those of us who live in the Pacific region are very much aware. We see their ships in our ports. We see the volume of commodities they are carrying to ports all over the world. We know what their strength is as a customer for our products. In B.C., Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba we know the importance of their purchases from us, and we are well aware that Japan is buying some $200 million more a year from Canada than Canada is purchasing from it.

This is one nation in the Pacific upon which we have become very dependent in our trading relations, but there are other nations in the Pacific which, over the period of the next decade, will be developing and, if not as rapidly, will be improving their economies so as to enable them to trade on fairly equal terms with us. There will be a tremendous opportunity in those nations for our industries in western Canada, and I assume also for all industry throughout Canada which has developed skills and specialities to the point where it is able to meet the demands of export markets wherever they exist.

Therefore I think we must come back to a very careful analysis of all the elements of government policy in the Pacific if the minister is to achieve the maximum potential of trade policies in that region. I would think that the news which the newspapers have carried during the past few days would be of interest to him, in the sense that he himself should make it of interest to his colleagues the Minister of Public Works and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is the news that the great glacier in Tarr inlet in the Alaska Panhandle has receded at such a rate that it may be the inlet now extends ice free into B.C. and provides us with a corridor to the sea that would give us the shortest communication with the Pacific from the southern Yukon and northern B.C. resource region.

There would, of course, be problems in acquiring port facilities, perhaps even free port facilities in the United States if the recession of ice has not been such as to permit the creation of a port entirely on Canadian soil. This inlet could provide us with a further outlet on the Pacific, and it would tap a region that has had great difficulty in getting its products into world markets because of the problem of having to ship them through U.S. ports, of paying U.S. stevedoring wages, and encountering the difficulty of shipping them to outlets on the Pacific. If we can get the products of that region direct to the ocean, which provides the shortest route of sea communication, rather than having to transport them over railway lines to the more southern ports, then we can reduce the cost of getting raw material and manufactured products into world markets.

A few weeks ago I asked the Minister of Public Works whether any step was being taken to reconvene the conference that was once held on national highway policy. I was surprised and disappointed when the minister indicated that there was no intention of reconvening the conference nor of proceeding with the national highway policy. It should be of tremendous interest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the question of national highway policy be considered in the context of getting Canadian products to the coastal ports, particularly in this instance to the Pacific coast ports, so as to move them into the markets that are and will be available for Canadian industry.

National highway policy is an integral part of trade policy. It is the part which will assist us to move our products at competitive costs and get them into world markets at more competitive prices than we can at present. This is a question of particular importance to the Pacific coast, where the construction of highways and the integration of a highway system are complicated by extremely rugged terrain, where the combined resources of the best government planning are essential if the network is to achieve its objective.

We on the Pacific coast know that the government of B.C. has gone into the shipping business in a big way through the construction of ferries. It is now moving from the north coast of Vancouver island into Alaska by providing car ferries, thus improving communications between Alaska and the west coast of B.C. But this will not solve the whole problem, and a proper land link between Vancouver island and the mainland appears more necessary as time goes on and pressure of traffic increases.

In the balance of time that may be available to me later in this debate I shall relate this matter to the policies of trade and commerce but now, Mr. Chairman, I note it is one o'clock.

The Chairman: Order. It is my understanding that this item will stand, and that the committee will go on to other estimates at 2.30.

Item stands.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—

L20. Advances to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the purposes of subsection (1) of section 37 of the National Housing Act, 1954, in respect of the acquisition, development, construction and improvement of land and buildings, $216,000.

The Chairman: This item will be found on page 517 of the blue book.

Mr. Nielsen: Before the committee passes this item I think we might draw to the attention of the minister a few of the inadequacies in national housing, and point out also one or two contrasts between what used to be the program of the national Liberal party as promised during two election campaigns and what has actually happened over the last two years.

Of interest to the committee I am sure is a recent report by the Ontario association of housing authorities which showed that hundreds of thousands of Canadians live in inadequate and substandard housing. An article published in the Montreal Gazette on August 28, 1964 under the heading "Public Housing Policy in Canada Criticized" may be of some assistance since it contains a condensation of the criticisms embodied in the Murray report. I quote from the Gazette of that date:

> A report sharply critical of Canada's attitude towards subsidized public housing was presented to the federal government Thursday.
>
> Based on a two year study by the Ontario association of housing authorities—

The length of time taken would certainly indicate that a good deal of care and consideration went into this assessment of national housing ills.

> —the hundred thousand word report describes the public housing program as inadequate and late, "bearing absolutely no relationship to any realistic appraisal of the need in Canada."
>
> It blames government inaction and public apathy for the fact that 750,000 families are forced either to live in dilapidated and overcrowded houses or pay an excessive portion of their income to escape bad housing.

It would be interesting to hear the minister's views on this particular criticism contained in the Murray report:

> In order to achieve good housing for all Canadians by a 1980 target, 4,000,000 new or rehabilitated dwellings were needed including about 1,000,000 subsidized for low income and ill housed families.

The report tells us:

> The study team, headed by Prof. James A. Murray of the University of Toronto, included amongst its recommendations the appointment of a federal minister of urban affairs and housing, a similar minister at the provincial level, and a national housing and urban advisory committee.

I believe the committee would also be interested to hear the minister's views on behalf of the government with regard to this particular recommendation. Perhaps the minister would also inform the committee whether the subject of national public housing was among those matters which were considered at any of the recent federal-provincial conferences and, if not, whether this very pressing matter is to be referred to any such conference which may be held in the future. To continue this article in the Gazette:

> The report found that about 87 per cent of Canadian dwellings are of reasonable quality.
>
> But it also estimated that "about 570,000 younger families and 180,000 elderly families in the low income group were living in substandard conditions of dilapidation, doubling-up, overcrowding, or were paying excessive portions of their income to escape bad housing."
>
> Another 170,000 elderly households and individuals were similarly troubled.

The report goes on to say:

> "By 1964 Canada, which was the last nation in the western world to embark on assisted housing for low income families or elderly persons, had over a 15 year period laboriously achieved the unimpressive total of some 11,000 units of family-type public housing, 24,000 units of moderate-income housing, 1,000 units of low income co-operative housing and some 6,000 units of elderly persons housing.
>
> Two fifths of 1 per cent of all housing units assembled in the post-war period were public housing units, with rentals subsidized to adjust shelter cost to family income."

I quote further from this article in the Gazette which, in turn, quotes from the report.

> The study recommends that Canada should embark on a program which will aim at introducing low income families and elderly persons into the mainstream of community living.

These are matters which have been discussed with the minister and they are matters upon which I, and I am sure all members of the committee, would be interested to hear the minister's views. As far as I am aware, apart from one or two relatively minor alterations in our approach to housing over the last couple of years no policy has been produced to meet the valid criticisms which are contained in the Murray report.

It seems to me to be quite evident that public housing in this country suffers from fragmentation of authority, inability to make decisions and an overlapping and general confusion. We want to know from the minister what the government intends to do in order to clean up the national housing mess. I believe it can properly be called a national housing mess, particularly in the light of the Murray report. One of the more aggravating factors that gives rise to almost insuperable problems as far as the government's inability to cope with this national housing mess is concerned—

Mr. Hahn: What did you do with it?

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Nielsen: My hon. friend from Toronto asks, what did we do with it. There were more housing starts in the few years the Progressive Conservative party held office than at any time in Canada's history. If the hon. member will check the d.b.s. statistics, he will find that this statement is quite accurate. The reason for that is quite evident, too, in the policies that were implemented during the years 1957 to 1963, policies which injected $750 million, for instance—I believe that is an accurate figure; it is that, or more —into the national housing field, policies which allowed residential construction in the north, where hitherto—that is, prior to 1957 —in my own riding, for example, only two N.H.A. homes had been built. Well over 100 were built immediately after 1958.

Mr. More: Any more interjections?

Mr. Nielsen: I say, Mr. Chairman, that we are faced with a national housing mess. The Murray report indicates this quite clearly. At the same time housing prices are pushed irresistibly upward. One of the factors which is causing this upward rise is the action of this government in imposing an 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. This has produced some disastrous results, which is now quite evident from d.b.s. figures that have been published. This situation cries out for rectification. I quote from the Tuesday, September 29, 1964, d.b.s. Daily Bulletin at page 2, where it is set forth that new residential construction in Canada had decreased by 25.1 per cent. The reasons attributed to that decrease are set forth at the bottom of page 2 of that Daily Bulletin as follows:

> The upward drift of prices was reinforced in the second quarter. Most of the increase of about 1 per cent in over-all prices took place in expenditure on gross fixed capital formation (up about 1.5 per cent), largely due to the implementation of the second stage of the sales tax on building materials and production machinery. New residential construction prices rose by almost 2 per cent. An increase of a little more than 2 per cent was recorded for the price of machinery and equipment.

That is the conclusion of d.b.s. In our view every effort should be made to reduce, and not to raise the price of housing; for if the price of housing goes up, it is elementary to conclude that fewer starts are going to be made on residential units and that the national public housing problem is going to be irritated and aggravated further. One of the matters this government has crowed about as being so effectual in order to meet the national public housing difficulty is the implementation of the winter built home program, whereby a bonus of $500 is given to individuals if they commence construction at a time which, incidentally, simply is not practical in the northern half of the country. I am speaking of the northern portions of the provinces as well as the areas above the 60th parallel. I believe the subfloor stage must be reached by December 15. At that date, in most northerly areas of Canada, it is simply impossible to proceed any further than the subfloor stage because it is too cold. Housing must be completed by, I believe, March. Therefore you have a bracket of December 15 and the first three months in the new year when you cannot work in northerly climes unless the building is closed in; and yet you do not become eligible for the $500 bonus if your building is closed in before December 15. As a result you find very few individuals living in northern Canada being able to take advantage of this program.

This program does nothing at all to solve the native housing mess, which is a national disgrace and about which I will have a few words to say in a moment. I am not speaking now of the housing situation as represented by the igloos of the Eskimo people; I am speaking of housing with regard to the native Indian peoples throughout Canada, who live in the southerly areas as well as the more northerly areas of this country.

What did the minister and the Liberal party of Canada say they would do with regard to the housing problem in this country? I am going to quote from a pamphlet entitled, on its red front page, "Better places to live and work. The answer", published by the National Liberal Federation of Canada, 251 Cooper street in Ottawa. The Liberal party had all the answers when these circulars and pamphlets were distributed throughout the country, and yet they do not seem to have the courage of the conviction which is disclosed by the propaganda contained in them. The one from which I read says in part:

> A new Liberal government will have a national plan to help municipal development. This plan will promote sound development projects in the places where Canadians live, where they need jobs.

It goes on, under the heading of "Clearing slums":

> Our big cities need special development measures. They have slum areas where overcrowding and poor housing breed ill health, family tension, crime and juvenile delinquency; where adults cannot live well and children cannot get a proper start on the road to good citizenship. No Canadian family should have to live in these conditions.

What does the Murray report say about the hundreds of thousands of families which are living in precisely those conditions; conditions which this government has allowed to exist and worsen for two years, and conditions for which the government is concerned for its inaction by the Murray report.

Mr. Macaluso: That is not accurate.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend suggests this is not accurate. He was not here when I was reading excerpts from the Murray report.

Mr. Macaluso: I have read it.

Mr. Nielsen: If he did not hear it the first time, it will take a moment to put my finger on it again. The Murray report blames government inaction, and the report gives the number of families in distress as 750,000. This is the Liberal pamphlet "The Answer" which I am sure my hon. friends opposite will recognize as being an official publication with which they were provided during the last two campaigns:

> We have to attack these evils. A new Liberal government will provide vigorous leadership, working with provinces and municipalities in a co-operative plan of attack.

We want to know what this plan of attack is.

Mr. More: All in 60 days.

Mr. Nielsen: My hon. friend refers to the 60 days of blazing action, a phrase which I am sure the author is sorry ever to have uttered. We want to know what are these dynamic plans which are going to meet the criticisms of Professor Murray and his colleagues in the compilation of a report which took two years to prepare. I am sure that these studies which went into this report over the course of two years cannot be lightly brushed off by the government.

> For this purpose—

The propaganda pamphlet goes on—> —the present federal contributions to urban renewal schemes are inadequate. A new Liberal government will increase federal aid to slum clearance schemes.

This has been done in the amendments to the act which went through this house a few months ago, but obviously it is not enough and it is too late. I recall sitting on that side and meeting this criticism of almost every piece of legislation put through during the six years the Progressive Conservatives formed the government. I remember the "four horsemen" over here saying that it was too little and too late. This is not a political charge; this is a charge made by an economics professor who knows his onions and hails from the University of Toronto. It is a charge which is the product of two years of study to make a realistic appraisal of the housing requirements of this country.

Then the pamphlet goes on to refer to a thorough program and says:

Liberal policies for municipal development will operate as a part of a thorough national development program.

Farming communities often face particularly burdensome costs for municipal services.

And further on it says:

In all areas, a new Liberal government will work with the provinces and municipalities in a major campaign to provide more low rental homes.

I should like the minister to explain to the committee, in view of the major campaign to provide more low rental homes which is referred to in the pamphlet, how many more low rental homes have been provided in the two years the government has been in office. I dare say the number the minister is able to quote will fall short of the assessment made by the Murray report.

Then this statement appears on every one of the pamphlets and nothing could be more fantastic:

The Liberal party has, for today's problems, the answers which are progressive, realistic and responsible.

We want some progressive, realistic and responsible answers from the government regarding such criticisms as those levelled by this impartial and hard hitting report, a report which exposes inaction, lack of planning and lack of responsible programs to clear up our national housing mess.

The argument of the Minister of Finance that employing men in March, April and May under the municipal winter works incentive program, and so on, and then laying them off in June, July and August represents some kind of solution to unemployment is, I think, one of the prime reasons perhaps which prompted the government to pass what I refer to as gimmick legislation, legislation such as the $500 winter built home bonus. This is what has prompted gimmick legislation rather than a realistic appraisal of what are the needs of national housing and the passing of legislation designed to meet those needs, and specifically those needs. If legislation is designed to meet housing needs and criticism such as that I have cited from the Murray report, then the resultant benefits to employment will occur as a matter of course.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

This point was made in an article which appeared in the Vancouver Province, a newspaper which circulates in the minister's own home riding, on August 31, 1964 under the heading: "A better place to spend defence dollars". It says:

A two year study by the Ontario association of housing authorities of Canada's attitude toward subsidized public housing declares this country's housing program is inadequate and late and that it bears "absolutely no relationship to any realistic appraisal of the need".

Then toward the end of the article the following appears:

A national housing program on this scale—

That is, the scale proposed by the report from which I have cited.

—might be the answer to those who question Canada's $1.6 billion annual outlay on a largely obsolete defence establishment but argue that if this country did not spend so much on defence it would invite unemployment and dislocate business and industry.

A billion dollars a year on new houses would go a long way to reduce the shortage of adequate housing and few can argue that it would not be a good substitute in every way for a corresponding cut-back in defence spending.

Home construction gives work to carpenters, plumbers, electricians, bricklayers, architects, earthmovers, cement men and moneylenders. Home-building dollars percolate through every level of the economy.

That is what one of the prominent newspapers in the minister's own home province feels about the situation.

I should like to refer to another article, this time appearing in the Charlottetown Guardian on September 1, 1964. This article also writes up the Murray report and says, in part:

Present legislation, the study finds, offers little hope of meeting the "distressing housing circumstances of thousands of Canadian families". In order to achieve good housing for all Canadians by a 1980 target, 4 million new or rehabilitated dwellings will be needed—

And then it goes on to quote the remainder of certain portions of the report.

I feel that the arguments which I have heard advanced by the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Finance in tying in this housing legislation—this what I call gimmick legislation—to meet the unemployment situation, is not a proper approach. The proper approach is to design legislation to provide adequate housing to meet the needs of Canada. To adopt the arguments of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Labour is rather an infantile approach, I believe, to economics. Certainly I am not an expert economist but I am sure that even my hon. friends opposite agree with me that the only way to meet housing requirements in this country is to design legislation which is intended to meet those requirements, not to design gimmick legislation merely as a sop to unemployment. This is an area in which I believe the government should be moving and planning, rather than indulging in meaningless gimmicks which do not provide the addition of one single house or provide any additional jobs on a year-round basis.

I hold in my hand a bulletin issued by an association with which I am sure the minister is familiar, the Vancouver housing association. They too make some fairly pointed criticisms. The bulletin is dated March 1, 1964 and one of their submissions is the following:

> The Vancouver housing authority has applications on file from some 450 families, including many broken families, and 600 elderly persons. Many of these people are very poorly housed.

Under the heading "Too Many Cooks" the bulletin has this to say:

> In an address given in January before the social planning council of metropolitan Toronto, Mr. Harold Clark, a member of the metropolitan Toronto housing authority, made a strong plea for simplifying the administration of public housing. After stating bluntly that, "today there is general frustration over the ineptness of government in the field of public housing, and there is also confusion", Mr. Clark went on to point out that there are no fewer than five separate local agencies and four levels of government responsible for the building or management of public housing in the Toronto area and that 56 separate steps, involving numerous agencies, have to be taken before a housing project can get under way. The net outcome has been that "C.M.H.C. and the provincial government working as a team, and pooling their vast resources of manpower and money power, have since 1958 constructed and turned over to the housing authority 352 units of family housing, or 7 per cent of the 1958 metropolitan Toronto target" of 5,000 units.

Perhaps the minister can bring us up to date on what progress has been made in the field of public housing so that we can compare the situation in 1960, the time the report covers, with that in 1963.

Before I sit down I want to say a word about native housing. As I have noted, new residential construction is down by 25.1 per cent and housing starts are down by 26 per cent. I have called native housing in Canada a national disgrace. I see the minister shaking his head. I am quoting d.b.s. figures taken from page 2 of the d.b.s. Daily Bulletin for September 29, 1964.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps I should interrupt the hon. member at this strategic moment to bring to his attention that his time has expired unless he has the consent of the committee to continue. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: I will just take two minutes to make my point to the minister with regard to native housing. I have called it a national disgrace and it is time that the government attacked this problem by taking off their kid gloves. They should embark immediately on a massive program of housing for native Indian populations on reserves. Present conditions on these reserves, and I am sure the minister is aware of them, are scandalous and carry with them the seeds of permanent social disaster. The minister is probably keenly aware of the disgraceful conditions in which most of our native populations in southern Canada live but if they are disgraceful in southern Canada they are absolutely appalling in northern Canada. In the Yukon, in the Northwest Territories and in the northern portion of the provinces living conditions are absolutely appalling. Some of the people live in tents all year round and others live in sod hut hovels.

I believe these conditions are an affront to the conscience of every Canadian. The government plays and plays with schemes to unload its responsibilities upon, in most cases, unwilling provincial authorities. I ask the minister this question. Why does the government not take a positive stand and come to grips with the very serious problems involving native housing conditions in this country rather than attempting to slough them off on the provinces? The minister will realize that I have reference to the plan for disposing of the Ungava Eskimos and a few other plans with respect to the native peoples of this country with which the government is playing around.

The conditions are a disgrace. As I have said, they are an affront to the conscience of every Canadian. There is no reason in the world why the minister, who reports to parliament as the minister responsible for C.M.H.C., cannot co-ordinate a scheme with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and his other cabinet colleagues to embark on a positive program to eliminate for all time the disgraceful and appalling housing conditions which, as I have said, are inviting permanent social disaster so far as the native populations of Canada are concerned.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, with all the unofficial notice the minister has had over many weeks, if not months, through the medium of questions on orders of the day, I certainly hope that the minister and the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation have come prepared this afternoon to give a most detailed explanation of and exhaustive reports on all operations concerning the Fraserview veterans rental and purchase scheme in the city of Vancouver. Since 1962 clear evidence has been presented in the house indicating the interest of veterans in Vancouver particularly and in general throughout Canada, as well as that of members from British Columbia in what has taken place at Fraserview in the city of Vancouver under the housing policy of the government or Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

The need for an exhaustive investigation in committee this afternoon would not have arisen had there been a commonsense and, realistic approach by either or both the government and C.M.H.C. in holding a public hearing in the city of Vancouver as promised, where the entire issue could have been placed on the table and decisions reached. In the alternative the whole question could have been referred to the veterans affairs committee of the House of Commons for the purpose of investigation and examination and making a report to the house. However, in view of the decision by the government or C.M.H.C. or both not to hold a public hearing in Vancouver as requested and promised, and not to refer the matter to the veterans affairs committee, members of the house have no other recourse than to insist, in fact demand that before this item passes we shall have the fullest information and the most complete explanation of policy. When I say the fullest information I do not mean only for the last two years. I hope the minister or the officials have information with them for everything on the balance sheet from the start of construction in 1949 up until the present time.

I ask for a balance sheet showing both sides, revenues and expenditures. I ask that the expenditure item disclose the cost of the land, the cost of servicing construction, the cost of construction, the maintenance cost, the insurance cost, the taxes and what has been written off by the central mortgage and housing as depreciation since 1949. Then the revenue item should disclose the rents and the sales. Then, Mr. Chairman, let us get the relationship between the rentals that are now being asked and the selling price which is being asked.

When I asked the minister a question a couple of days ago, and another member asked one I believe last week, we were told that everyone has signed a rental or sales agreement except 50. I believe that was the figure. I am not in any position to challenge the figure of 50 and say it is right or wrong. I will accept the minister's statement. However, let me make this clear, or as clear as I possibly can: Even if there are only 50 who have not yet agreed to the sale price or signed a rental agreement, they are backed by the hundreds who have signed in so far as the principle those 50 are espousing is concerned. I will say, without fear of honest contradiction, that the majority of those who have signed within the last two years, signed because of intimidation and fear as a result of the letters they received to the effect that if they did not agree to the rental or the sale price, then they would get their eviction notice.

There are many who will bow to that sort of thing because they feel, what else can they do? I also used the word "fear". There may be a better word that escapes me at the moment. What are they up against right now? First, you have to find new accommodation in Vancouver or the lower mainland; there are the costs of moving, the disturbance to the home and children being torn from the only local friends they have; taken away from school and put in a new one. If you add all these things together, you will find the reason many people signed under protest, as a result of intimidation and fear. I am not speaking out of hearsay, sir. I have talked to a great many of these people as recently as one week ago in Fraserview itself.

Now, sir, we are asking for a balance sheet from 1949 until now. We are asking that the minister give us, from the record, the policy basis for the construction of these homes. What were the commitments, definite or implied at the time the veterans went into these homes? What was the position of the Liberal party up until last year with regard to the Fraserview situation, on the basis of which some 1,200 veterans in the city of Vancouver, in Fraserview, are being asked by the government and C.M.H.C. to make up the losses that have been incurred in the rest of Canada? We would like to know in detail why the government, whose heart bleeds for the veteran during election campaigns, now want to make a profit out of the veteran? To the best of my knowledge, they do not even intend to take into consideration in the selling price the depreciation which has been wiped off every year since construction. Of course, when I say "every year", I may be a little bit out. If my memory serves me correctly, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation said that the records of the first few years had somehow been destroyed. I hope that since that answer was given in the house a couple of years ago, perhaps those records have been found and we can now have the complete story.

May I ask the minister, as he gives some thought to his answer, that he bring back into his memory Hansard page 754, October 22, 1962, which records the parliamentary return we received. This parliamentary return indicated that the total cost of 1,137 houses built in Fraserview, including land and servicing of the buildings, amounted to $11,340,452, which works out at an average of $9,972 per house. This was the average cost to the government in 1949. A profit has been made on the rentals and on the sales, and now you want to sell the houses to the veterans at more than they cost in 1949. On what basis of decency, sir, could there be any explanation? We will be interested in hearing it.

This is not just my own view. I know it is the view of the minister that what a Liberal candidate says when he is running for election must not be held against him if he is successful and becomes a member of the government. Here we have the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who is the member for Vancouver South, in which Fraserview is located, making the following statement. I want to read this to substantiate our request for decent treatment for the Fraserview veterans. This appeared in the 1963 election campaign, and I want to read every word on this page because this was directed to every veteran in Fraserview. I quote:

Arthur Laing
5957 West Boulevard, Vancouver 13, B.C.

An hon. Member: Speak louder.

Mr. Winch: Believe it or not, boys, I could.

Dear Constituent:

To the residents of Fraserview:

In the general election of 1962 I made an issue of the method by which C.M.H.C. was seeking to sell the houses in the Fraserview area.

It was obvious that the basic philosophy which prompted the development in 1949 had been abandoned—

This, of course, was by the Conservatives.

—and that the low rent concept no longer had an appeal to the government at least on this project. It appeared that memory was short, that this was a project for returning veterans who had lost a few years of normal incomes not denied to those who were not overseas.

It appeared to me that a 25 year mortgage carrying interest as high as 6½ per cent on these houses not only failed to recognize the residuary principle of assisted housing but would be hard to defend in a private market. As view lot property and from the angle of the services installed the area is superb. But upon discharge of the mortgage offered the houses would be almost 40 years old. Their construction is not such as to give validity to such an undertaking.

To obtain information I asked two very detailed questions... I ask that the answers be studied carefully.

Please note from the answers the following facts:

A. The average original cost of land, services and houses was $9,808.

B. Straight line depreciation of 2½ per cent was computed for the purpose of determining the corporation's book value of the properties.

C. The project was originally financed at a borrowing rate of 2 per cent per annum.

D. No instructions were ever issued that the sale price was to be based on the actual cost rather than current market value.

E. The sales prices are established on a basis to recover nationally the government's outlay in a program involving 12,000 houses throughout Canada.

F. There is an admission that identical houses are being sold in Vernon for $2,500 less. The defence is that in addition to the original cost of construction present market value and location are considered.

The method of straight line 2½ per cent depreciation would place book value of the properties, on average, at under $7,000. Fraserview being considered a premium property, prices have been set that pick up losses incurred in other parts of the country.

I believe that an injustice is being done the residents of Fraserview in the present methods of sale. I think proof of injustice is contained in the answers of the Department of Public Works. I shall continue to seek redress of our grievances here, which, when complete must include an adjustment for the some 400 properties already sold.

Sincerely,
Arthur Laing, Liberal candidate, Vancouver South.

This was the letter written before last year's election by the man who is now Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and is the member of parliament for the constituents to whom he wrote this letter, a letter in which he stated that the Conservative policy was to charge Fraserview a price that would pick up losses on the other 12,000 veterans' homes built across Canada, a letter in which he admitted that taking into account the depreciation charges in the books of C.M.H.C., the value per home in 1963 was under $7,000. That was his statement before he became a cabinet minister.

He also stated that the owners of the 400 homes that had been bought prior to the 1963 election were entitled to a redress because they had been overcharged by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In view of this entire situation, in view of the situation of the minister as a candidate just over one year ago, in view of the importance of this to the veterans, in view of the policy under which these homes were constructed —not as a profit making enterprise by the government or Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, but to meet the need of those who offered their lives in the last world war—in view of the fact that the government did not see fit to honour this promise, and in view of the fact that this matter has not yet been referred to the veterans affairs committee, though I hope it will be, if we cannot receive the most complete and factual information on this matter this afternoon then this estimate should not pass.

The estimate should not pass unless the government is prepared to refer this matter to what I consider a most responsible body, the veterans affairs committee, representative of all parties in parliament, I believe composed almost 100 per cent of veterans who are concerned with veterans' problems and welfare under all departments of government. I suggest that this is the logical procedure, in order that we can proceed with the other business of the house. In conclusion, I hope we shall have a complete, factual, realistic, honest report on policy, expenditures and revenues on the Fraserview project from the first day of construction in 1949 to date.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, this lone item of $216,000 in the estimates for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the fiscal year 1964-65 is a very modest one, having regard to the nature and extent of the corporation's work. I would point out that the individual items which make up this $216,000 do not come within any of the remarks made by the hon. member for Yukon and the hon. member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Winch: We did not hear anything from the hon. member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Nicholson: But I do welcome the fact that the estimates come before parliament so that these hon. members and others have an opportunity of commenting on the activities of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and on housing and allied programs of our country. I think I should add that I do not intend to make any detailed reply, except on the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation aspect of the Fraserview project. I did make a very comprehensive statement, or at least what several members, including the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said was a very comprehensive statement on the activities of the corporation when I introduced the bill which led to the amendment of the National Housing Act.

[Mr. Winch.]

His memory must be failing him, or else he was not in the chamber on that occasion, or the hon. member for Yukon would never have made some of the statements he made here today. I have sent for a copy of the remarks I made on that occasion, and I would ask one of the pages to deliver it to the hon. member for Yukon because I think he will see that almost every point on which he spoke with the exception of better housing for Indians, was dealt with in these earlier remarks of mine.

Mr. Nielsen: I was here.

Mr. Nicholson: I should also like to refer briefly to the Murray report, and I would point out to the committee that 75 per cent of the cost of that report was paid for by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. That report was commissioned early in 1962 and it refers largely to the conditions that existed prior to 1962.

I would also point out to the hon. member for Yukon that the president of the Ontario association, Mr. Freiday, who assumed responsibility for preparation of the report, came to my office with Professor Murray. On that occasion there was also present the provincial minister of economics and development, whose government paid the other 25 per cent of the cost. We were complimented by Mr. Freiday and by Professor Murray upon having anticipated many of the points made in the report and upon having covered them in the legislation we introduced last May, supplemented by the legislation introduced in the legislature of the province of Ontario There have been several complimentary references to the government in connection with the actions taken in anticipation of the criticisms contained in the report.

Mr. Nielsen: I compliment the minister, too.

Mr. Nicholson: Thank you. There was another point which the hon. member made this afternoon and which I think calls for some comment. As I announced in this house in late September, I think, we held a conference in Halifax—it was referred to as a symposium—attended not only by several provincial ministers and some deputies but by more than 50 municipal representatives. We discussed the amendments to the act and the possibilities under the new legislation When we convened not only the Halifax conference but the subsequent conference in St. John's I was acting, upon a suggestion which was made here in the house by one of the Toronto members, I think it was the hon. member for Danforth, who in the course of his remarks on the amendments to the National Housing Act said he had a few constructive suggestions to make and offered the hope that at a later date they would be given attention. But in the main he was most complimentary about the program envisaged by this new act. He went on to make it clear, however, that in the absence of active co-operation and enthusiastic support from provincial and municipal governments this new act, of which I think we can all be very proud, would be meaningless. And he suggested a series of these conferences. The object was to ensure that every municipality in Canada or that every province in Canada would know of the possibilities and of the facilities which are now available under the new legislation. That was the purpose of these meetings.

The Halifax meeting was attended not only by the president of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation but by all of the directors of the board with one exception. The vice president and other senior officials also were there, as were the members of parliament for that riding and some members of the legislature. Questions were answered and there was a really worth-while discussion. I think I can say the conference was a great success. Then on October 8, 9, and 10 I visited Newfoundland in company with the president, the vice president and other senior officials of C.M.H.C. There we found the premier together with several other ministers of the Newfoundland government in attendance with the deputy ministers and officials concerned. No fewer than 75 municipal representatives came to St. John's for this two-day symposium. I think it was a timely and helpful discussion. I will go further and say it was a very lively discussion—you cannot spend two days in Newfoundland without things being lively, especially when a question period is included.

We have arranged for meetings in Alberta on November 5 and 6. The meeting on November 5 will be held in Calgary and the meeting on November 6 in Lethbridge, while the federation of municipalities of the province of Alberta is holding its annual meeting. At the request of the federation we are holding the meeting at the same time. The provincial minister and I will be in attendance, along with the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation on that occasion. Not only will the subject of housing generally be under discussion but the possibilities of using the new act for sewerage construction projects and, more particularly the advantages of an extensive program of urban renewal, will be discussed at length during that meeting.

I welcome this opportunity to make an announcement. A few weeks ago, I stated that the two provincial ministers concerned and I had agreed on the dates for the housing conference for eastern and southern Ontario as November 23 and 24, in Toronto. I have since found we were not able to get sufficient hotel accommodation for those dates. I also found that not only the mayor of Ottawa but the mayor of London, Ontario, and the mayor of Toronto felt it would be better to wait until after the municipal elections. This morning, with the assurance of the provincial ministers that they were in agreement, we changed the dates to December 16 and 17 by which time the elections will be over and some thought will have been given to who will be the leaders of housing programs by all the mayors and the reeves. So the meetings will be held in Toronto on December 16 and 17. The federation of mayors and reeves have been advised and are in agreement with the new dates.

Now I should like to make a special reference to the Fraserview veterans' housing project which, as the hon. member for Vancouver East has said, has been the subject of many questions. A series of questions has been asked in the house relating to the increases in rents which were introduced effective October 1 of this year. This housing project comprises 1,146 houses. They are units of two, three and four bedrooms. This is one of several projects completed after world war II under the 1948 and 1949 veterans' rental housing program. Hon. members may recall the statements which were made in answer to questions raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East and other hon. members. Approximately 12,000 houses were built across Canada during the two years which followed the passing of the legislation. All of them were rented to veterans of the second world war and of the Korean war.

I should like to make it clear—and this is apparent from the discussion which took place when the original legislation was passed—that this project was not intended to provide subsidized housing for veterans. It was intended to provide badly needed houses at fair rentals for veterans of the second world war and of the Korean campaign in large parts of Canada where the need arose. In 1954 it became apparent that the demand for rental accommodation for veterans was diminishing and that in most cities it was over. In that year the government of the day authorized the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to offer houses for sale to qualified veterans. However, before the houses could be placed on sale certain requirements had to be met. In the first place the corporation had obtained the co-operation of several cities and other municipalities in providing sites for the houses, and renegotiation with these municipalities had to take place. In addition an assurance had to be received from veterans' organizations and others that there was no longer an acute shortage in a particular city or municipality and that there would be sufficient demand from veterans to buy these houses if they were offered for sale, I might say that when they were initially offered for sale, the sale price of these houses was established on a national basis. But in setting prices for each individual project consideration was given to a series of factors, including the original cost of construction, the age and condition of the houses, their location and their fair market value at the time they were offered for sale. The government was to try, if this could be done in a reasonable way, to recover its full outlay in respect of these houses on a national basis. This policy resulted in sale prices which were somewhat higher than the actual cost in some communities where the market values were higher, and in prices which were somewhat lower in a number of communities where market values were lower. This policy enabled Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the instrument of the government concerned, to offer houses for sale in individual communities in the light of existing conditions there.

Because market values in Nova Scotia are quite different from market values in Ontario or British Columbia, you have higher prices in one place than in another. That is not surprising. But if you had sold a house in Vancouver that had gone up in value by $3,000 or $4,000, you would have upset the market conditions in that area and you would in effect have been bonusing, to the detriment of taxpayers, including other veterans, all projects in other parts of the country. It was felt they should not offer houses for sale in any city or town at prices likely to disrupt the market too radically.

There was also a serious objection to this program based on the fact that there would be serious speculation in some cities. Houses that might have cost $10,000 or $12,000 in 1949 or 1950 had in some instances appreciated in value, due to conditions in that particular city, by as much as $4,000 or $5,000.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

It was agreed that if a veteran wanted to buy a house, to prevent speculation they would add right across Canada the sum of $1,000 per house, which was to be written off if the veteran remained in the house for a five-year period. It was to be written off at so much a year for five years. This technique, I might say, was known as the rebate procedure. I am assured, not only by the officials of central mortgage and housing but by veterans and others that this procedure has worked successfully in connection with projects in many parts of Canada.

Although the agreement with the city of Vancouver covering Fraserview was successfully renegotiated in 1955 to permit the sales program, they were not able to embark on sales immediately because final construction costs for the whole project were not known at that time. The Fraserview project was therefore the last one of the 10 or 15 or more projects throughout Canada that went on the market. The cost reports were completed by the end of 1958, and in February, 1959, the representatives of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation met with more than 500 of the Fraserview tenants and presented a schedule of proposed prices, together with terms of sale, and that schedule included this $1,000 mark-up which would be rebated if the veteran held the house for a five year period.

The meeting was in February, 1959, and there was almost unanimous acceptance of this schedule. The houses were offered for sale on May 1, 1959. I might say that the records show beyond a shadow of a doubt that the fair value of the average housing unit in Fraserview was $2,000 to $4,000 per unit higher than the actual cost at that time. If they had been sold, it would have meant that every veteran in those houses, in addition to the other benefits he had received would have received a bonus of at least $1,000, because the $1,000 rebate would come into the picture if he had sold the house after a five year period.

Throughout this whole program of disposing of houses—this practice has been followed consistently in most parts of Canada—Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation have disposed of thousands of these units under this program. In Vancouver, up to the beginning of June of this year, they had disposed of over 500 houses of the 1,140 or so that comprised this project. But during the whole of this period in every city or community in Canada that had a program of this kind semi-annual reviews were carried on to determine whether the $1,000 rebate procedure should be retained in different cities. The corporation, through its staff and advisers, were also kept aware of market conditions not only in Vancouver but in other cities. In May, 1963, to encourage the sale of the Fraserview houses to veterans, a team of corporation appraisers was appointed specially to look into the Fraserview situation. They recommended the removal of the rebate. This is not surprising, because the five year period had elapsed, even in the case of British Columbia, in the period 1954 to 1959. They also recommended a reduction of $600 in the sale price of basementless houses.

But I would point out that in the same report that was made in the late spring of 1963 it was shown that existing rents were substantially below the level of houses of that quality in that part of Vancouver. On July 25, 1963, the $1,000 rebate was removed from the sale of these houses and the prices of the basementless units were reduced by the $600 recommended by the corporation's appraisers. However, at the same time the corporation announced rent increases ranging from $3.50 to $11.50 per month to take effect on September 1, 1963. Following this representations were made on behalf of the tenants by several people, including the hon. member for Vancouver South. I believe representations were also made by the hon. member for Vancouver East, but I know they were made by the hon. member for Vancouver South. As a result of representations from several sources, the rent increases were deferred and the minister then in charge, the late Jack Garland, after consulting with the corporation and receiving their agreement in this regard, arranged for an independent appraisal to be carried out with regard to the rentals that should be charged and as to the values of these houses.

The appraisal company that was brought in was Bell-Irving Realty Limited, of Vancouver, the president of which is a distinguished veteran, Brigadier Henry P. Bell-Irving. He has a distinguished war record; he was awarded the D.S.O. and O.B.E., and fought in Italy and on the western front. The firm's appraiser, Mr. E. W. Palmer, was eminently qualified for the task he was asked to perform. He is an accredited appraiser of the appraisal institute of Canada, a senior real estate appraiser in the society of real estate appraisers, a fellow of the valuers institute of London, England, and a member of the professional division of the realtors institute of British Columbia. He is considered by all who know him to be a highly qualified specialist in this field.

The Bell-Irving appraisal confirmed the corporation's report of May, 1963, but recommended that further reductions should be made in the sale prices of two basic house types in the amounts of $300 and $500. The corporation immediately implemented the reductions recommended by this independent appraiser; they were implemented on June 1, 1964, and since that time I understand that another 50 or so houses have been sold. The effect of these adjustments was to establish selling prices that are in the order of $500 to $600 below current market values in Vancouver. I ask the hon. member for Vancouver East to keep that in mind. This shows conclusively that the prices at which veterans are now able to buy them are in the order of $500 to $600 a house lower than the current market value for that type of house. At the time these reductions were effected the corporation's board of directors reaffirmed the previously recommended rent increases that should have taken effect in September, 1963. They reaffirmed them to take effect on October 1, 1964. In June last notices to that effect were sent out to the 601 tenants. They were given until September 15 to signify whether they wanted to enter into a new lease at the increased rents. I might say that the increase in rentals is due largely if not entirely to an increase in grants in lieu of taxes being paid to the city of Vancouver. There is no profit in it for the corporation. The increases do not cover the added amount paid on the Fraserview houses to the municipality. These rent increases range from $3.50 to $11 per month.

By the deadline of September 15, 419 of the 601 tenants had accepted, 38 had purchased their houses, 12 had vacated, leaving 132 not heard from. In the two weeks which followed, that is between September 15 and October 1, 59 more tenants made their decision and as of the close of business on September 30 the corporation then had 73 tenants from whom they had not heard. The corporation then sent out notices that since the tenants had not entered into these new arrangements they would be evicted. Of course this would not mean that if they had a good case they would be evicted; a judge of the court would listen to the reasons in any case coming before him. I have stated repeatedly that since this matter had been reduced to manageable proportions I was quite prepared to have the officials of the department consider each individual case, or if anyone wanted to take them up with me individually I would be pleased to do so.

Mr. Douglas: Could I ask the minister a question. Could he tell the committee on what basis the appraisers set these rents? Was it on the basis of actual cost or a rent which would retire the investment which Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has made, plus current expenses, or was it a rent which was based on current rents in the area?

Mr. Nicholson: The rents in all cases are lower than rents in the area for houses of similar value. The combination of circumstances to which I referred—the cost of the house, its condition and other factors—were all taken into consideration, as well as general rents in the area.

Mr. Douglas: The minister is talking about the condition of the houses and I assume is talking about the sale price; but in determining these rents was the determination based solely on an economic rental to cover the investment of C.M.H.C. or was any other factor taken into consideration?

Mr. Nicholson: The rents were just enough to carry these houses, but not to make any profit out of the transaction. They are amortized to the amount of the balance owing so as to pay current taxes and maintenance and operating expenses.

Mr. Chatterton: Could the minister tell me at what rate was the amortization?

Mr. Nicholson: The amortization was on the basis of 2½ per cent interest over a period of 50 years, credit being given for the amount which had accumulated up to that date.

Mr. Winch: Might I ask whether in this compilation the amount which had been cleared off through depreciation over the years was also taken into consideration?

Mr. Nicholson: Might I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that I be allowed to finish my statement. I have had prepared a table which will help answer these questions, and then if hon. members have any further questions I will do my best today to answer them.

As of the close of business on September 30 there were some 73 people who had not agreed to enter into new leases; two of the people who said they were going to did not in fact do so. Then in the two weeks which followed the notices of eviction which were sent out, certain other people indicated that they wanted to stay on in the houses. This reduced the total of 73 to a total of 54 by a date in early October.

Yesterday I received from 18 other people —that is in addition to the 52 plus the two —altogether 54-signed letters addressed to me which obviously had been typed by the same machine, indicating an organized drive. These letters asked for a public hearing. All but 54 of these 600 odd tenants are paying the new rents and have paid them for the month of October. So that while over 500 people out of the 601 have entered into some new leasing arrangement, another dozen or more have vacated voluntarily and I think about 40 people have bought houses, you have at the outside, taking the 52 and 18, 70 people who are still complaining. These people have had the benefit of the lower rentals for more than a year. The corporation has not collected rents so as to carry this project for over a year. The corporation's appraisers recommended that these rent increases should take effect last summer. Further delay will be unfair to the people who have bought houses, and the 500 odd people who have entered into the new leases and are paying them without complaint. I am not saying that there are not people who do not complain. Of course, no one likes to have his rent raised and any one of us would complain of that. But many veterans have stated publicly that they do not want to be subsidized in these houses and are willing to pay, which is demonstrated by the fact that over 500 of them are paying the higher rents.

To explain the current rents and also the current selling prices I have had a tabulation prepared showing the individual type of houses and listing the original selling price, that is, the price at which these houses were offered in 1959 and which was almost unanimously accepted by the tenants. On the same sheet is shown the adjusted price as a result of the corporation's appraisal in 1963 and the independent appraisal in 1964. The rent is also shown; that is, the former rent, the new rent and the estimated fair market rent for each type of house. Rather than read this, Mr. Chairman—it would be difficult to follow if I just gave the isolated figures—I should like to table a copy of this tabulation and have it made part of Hansard.

Mr. Nielsen: Might I suggest, Mr. Chairman, if the committee is agreeable, that the tabulation referred to by the minister be printed in Hansard at this stage of the minister's remarks.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is it the wish of the committee that the minister have leave to print this tabulation in the record?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table above referred to is as follows:]

Fraserview Veterans' Housing Project
Schedule of Selling Prices and Rents

Selling Prices

Type of unit	Original sale price including rebate	Adjusted sale price
Small, 4 room, non-basement bungalow	$ 9,300	$ 7,700
Large, 4 room, non-basement bungalow	9,600	8,000
5 room, non-basement bungalow	10,800	9,200
Small, 4 room, full basement bungalow	9,800	8,800
Large, 4 room, full basement bungalow	10,400	9,100
5 room, 2 level	10,500	9,500
5 room, full basement bungalow	11,600	10,100
5 room, part basement bungalow	11,700	10,700
5 room, 1½ storey, small	11,600	10,600
5 room, 1½ storey, large	11,800	10,800
6 room, 1½ storey	11,900	10,900

Rents

Type of unit	Former rent	New rent	Fair market rent
Small, 4 room, non-basement bungalow	$48.50	$52.00	$67.50
Large, 4 room, non-basement bungalow	50.00	54.00	67.50
	50.50	59.00	70.00
5 room, non-basement bungalow	57.00	67.00	77.50
Small, 4 room, full basement bungalow Large, 4 room, full basement bungalow	55.50	65.00	75.00 and 77.50
5 room, 2 level 5 room, full basement bungalow 5 room, 1½ storey, small 5 room, part basement bungalow 5 room, 1½ storey large	61.00	72.00	82.00 and 92.00
6 room, 1½ storey	64.00	75.00	93.50

Mr. Winch: May I also ask the minister if he has any tabulation of costs and revenues?

Mr. Nicholson: Not included in this form. I have it before me and if the hon. member will come into my office I will be glad to show it to him in detail.

Mr. Winch: I want to see it before the estimates pass.

Mr. Nicholson: I might say, Mr. Chairman, that I have extra copies of this sheet for each of the other parties if they wish to have one. The last column is headed "fair market rent", and that is the fair market rent in the opinion of the representative of the Bell-Irving firm who made the appraisal. Hon. members will see that in each case the new rents are substantially below rental charges in the area.

That is all I wish to say on the subject of the Fraserview veterans' housing project, but I should also like to correct another impression that might have been created by an earlier statement. I am sure the committee will be interested to know that as of September 30 starts of new housing units in Canada were up in 1964 by 10.2 per cent over those reported for the same period in 1963.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the minister a question at this point? Is he suggesting that the d.b.s. news bulletin is inaccurate?

Mr. Nicholson: All I am suggesting is that the figures I am giving may be as of a different date and they may also represent a comparison with a different period. I am comparing the first nine months of 1964 with the corresponding nine months of 1963, and the figures show that starts actually are up by 10.2 per cent.

Mr. Nielsen: I think the figures I quoted from the bulletin were for the same period. I do not have it before me now because I gave it to Hansard, but my recollection is that the figure in the bulletin was as of the same date, September 29, 1964. If d.b.s. is wrong may I suggest there is an obvious lack of accurate communication between C.M.H.C. and d.b.s.

Mr. Nicholson: That may be but this is the figure and I am prepared to stand behind it. It is up 10.2 per cent for the first nine months. This means that if the winter house-building program meets with the same measure of success it did last year, and this is our expectation based on the applications for loans, housing starts in 1964 will be upward of 155,000 units, or the second highest year in Canada's history.

Mr. Nielsen: Which was the highest?

Mr. Nicholson: I think it was 1958. Prior to this year the second highest was 1963 which now takes third place. On the basis not only of my visit to Halifax and St. John's and the meetings that took place there, but also of my visit to Saskatoon where in company with the minister of the former government a federal-provincial housing project was opened and discussions were had at that time, as well as of visits that I have made to housing projects in Manitoba and Alberta and more recently to my native province of New Brunswick, I would say that a great deal of interest has been stimulated in housing and urban renewal. The scope of the projects, for instance, in the city of Hamilton, in the city of Windsor and in the city of Saint John is beyond belief. The same applies to cities in Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is in the midst of one of its busiest and, I think, most challenging years. There is a lot of educational work to be done, but I believe sincerely that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is an efficient and dedicated organization and I invite the committee's early approval of their very modest estimate.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Chatterton: With regard to the column, "new rent", in the table the minister has given us, I think the minister said in his remarks that one of the factors considered was amortization of the outstanding capital, and the minister referred to a rate of 2½ per cent. Is that correct?

Mr. Nicholson: Two and a half per cent. It was agreed in the initial stages when these houses were being built for veterans that the investment would be recouped over a period of 50 years at the rate of 2½ per cent per year. This policy has been carried through, but when some years later a program of sale was embarked upon factors involving speculation and other things came into the picture and they were taken into consideration in determining market values in the respective areas. If I may leave rents aside for a moment, you will note that so far as the sale price is concerned in no case is the adjusted price higher than the original price. In some cases they are slightly higher than cost but they are not higher than the original price.

Mr. Chatterton: That is my next question. The adjusted sales price is less than the original—

Mr. Nicholson: No, it is not higher.

Mr. Chatterton: It is less, I say. What factors were used in making that adjustment? Was the portion of the rent allocated by C.M.H.C. to depreciation considered?

Mr. Nicholson: My information is that it was only one of the factors.

Mr. Chatterton: Would that be the major factor in considering adjustment?

Mr. Nicholson: I think the major factor was that nobody would have to pay more than the house was worth and the object was to try not to disturb either prices or rentals in the particular areas involved. It is not just a case of being fair to a limited number of veterans, for whom I am sure every government would want to do the best it could. The fact is there are other people to whom the government has to be fair, the people who are paying the taxes that make these projects possible.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I should like to join with the hon. member for Vancouver East in protesting very strongly the treatment which has been meted out to veterans in the Fraserview housing project. I must say that my concern about this matter has not been lessened to any degree by the outline the minister has just given to the committee. If anything it has been heightened.

The minister says that there were some 1,146 houses in this project and that they were a part of 12,000 low rental houses that were built for veterans across Canada. Then he went on to say that these were not to be subsidized houses but houses which were to pay the actual cost. But then he went on to say that when it was decided in 1954 to make them available for sale, the sale price in some communities of necessity had to be higher than cost in order not to disturb the market. I take it this means that if C.M.H.C. was going to balance out its operations over the entire 12,000 houses and if some of the houses were going to be sold for more than they cost, then in other communities they were going to be sold for less than they cost. The government which objected to subsidizing houses, was really asking the veterans to subsidize veterans' houses in some instances. Veterans in some parts of Canada were going to subsidize veterans in other parts of Canada. It seems to me the height of absurdity to object to government subsidization and yet to ask veterans to subsidize other veterans' houses in other parts of Canada.

The argument which the minister posed, that they could not disturb the market, seems to me like a typical real estate argument. These were veterans. These were men who had lost years of income. These were men who deserved special consideration from the country, and to say it was necessary to charge them more than cost merely for fear of disturbing the local real estate market seems to me the strangest argument I have ever heard advanced for charging veterans more than they should have been called upon to pay.

The minister says that by 1959 they had finally worked out what the cost of these houses would be and that for the Fraserview veterans' housing project the price set at that time was $2,000 higher than the actual cost. Of course, at that time there was to be a rebate of $1,000 but this was later cancelled and instead there is to be a reduction of $300 or $500 depending upon certain categories. If I understood the minister correctly, what he is really saying is that in order to balance out the total cost of the entire 12,000 houses the veterans in the Fraserview project who decided to buy their houses were going to be charged in 1959 $2,000 more than it actually cost to build those houses. Instead of a reduction of $2,000, there is a reduction of only $300 or $500 as the case may be. The minister is shaking his head, so I do not want to proceed on this line if I am wrong. May I ask the minister, is that not what he said? In 1959 the price which he said the veterans were prepared to accept in the schedule was $2,000 higher than the actual cost of constructing these homes? I notice the minister shaking his head, and I do not want to make a statement that is incorrect.

Mr. Nicholson: What I was saying, or at least by nodding my head was indicating, was that the statement was not in accordance with what I tried to say earlier this afternoon. The new sale program was introduced in 1954, and was introduced in Vancouver in February of 1959. The original program was to provide houses at a modest rental for veterans who urgently needed houses when they returned from the two wars. You were converting a purely rental project to one giving the veterans an opportunity to buy the houses into which they had put some of their own efforts and to which they had become attached.

At that time, in 1954 and 1955, and in the case of Vancouver in 1959, you were going to sell the houses and it was no longer a case of getting just a rental that would cover it. With housing values as they were in Vancouver—I am sure the hon. member knows they were really higher than in Halifax or some other place—the government would get out of the sale project, not just a rental project, on a nation-wide basis without making or losing any money.

I should like to read into the record, for the benefit of the hon. member and also the hon. member for Vancouver East, a letter that was sent by the Fraserview community association. It is dated February 10, 1959 and it is addressed to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, re offer of sale of Fraserview homes. I quote:

> Further to our telephone conversation with you this morning, we are pleased to report the outcome of the meeting of this association held last evening in the auditorium of Sir James Douglas school with reference to the above question.
>
> This meeting was attended by more than 500 members of the Fraserview veterans' community. Subsequent to presentation of our report of the meeting with you on February 2 together with the schedule of prices upon which sale of the Fraserview homes will be based, and a subsequent detailed question period, a show of hands indication was called on two questions.
>
> To the first, viz., approval in principle of the schedule of proposed home prices and terms, well over 90 per cent indicated affirmatively.

To the second, viz., how many had already made the decision to purchase upon receipt of the official offer, something over 50 per cent of those present so indicated.

This was borne out by the fact that they did.

In view of the size of this meeting, we feel that you will agree with us in regarding these results as quite decisive and as fully warranting your implementation of the proposed offer of sale forthwith.

We take this opportunity to express to you, Mr. Houston and to Mr. Clauson, our sincere appreciation and thanks for your sympathetic attitude and kind co-operation in this matter. It has been a pleasure thus to associate with you.

Now, you will see that the deal which came out of the two recent appraisals is better for these veterans who have remained there than had they taken advantage of this earlier offer.

Mr. Douglas: This does not alter in any way the point I was making. The Fraserview housing project was originally a rental project. In 1954 it was decided to offer these houses for sale. In 1959, the price which was set was not based on the cost to C.M.H.C. for that particular project, it was based on the cost of the entire 12,000 veterans' houses built across Canada. If I interpreted the minister's statement correctly so far as the Fraserview project was concerned, the prices at which these houses were offered in 1959 were $2,000 higher than the actual cost for that project, less the reduction which the minister is now producing of $300 or $500.

Mr. Nicholson: That is correct, with this modification, that they were also $2,000 lower than the fair market value for similar houses in that area.

Mr. Douglas: I am not interested in the market value of houses in this area. I am interested in the Canadian people making these houses available at what it cost the Canadian government to construct and operate them. The minister is now talking about some other fact. These people are now going to pay more for these houses than they cost C.M.H.C. to build and operate.

Now the minister has defined the position which was taken in 1959. I want to point out that is not the position which the Liberal party took in 1959, or which they took in the election campaigns of 1962 and 1964. My colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East, read into the record a copy of a letter sent out by the present minister of northern affairs, the member for Vancouver South, in 1963. Here is part of a letter he sent out in 1962 on exactly the same subject. It is dated June 15, 1962, and was also sent to the veterans in the Fraserview housing project. I quote:

I think that home ownership is good and that the residents, having paid for depreciation of the houses and services in their rent for years should have the opportunity to buy their homes if they wish to, at cost, taking into account the depreciation they have already paid.

The present Conservative government says that at a price around $10,800 per home it is making the Fraserview houses available at cost. This is not the case. The actual average cost of house, land and services on C.M.H.C. books is approximately $6,600. If all houses are sold at an average of $10,800, C.M.H.C. will make a capital gain of just under $5 million.

It is imperative, of course, that C.M.H.C. return to those veterans who have already purchased their homes, the capital gain that C.M.H.C. has taken. The method of doing so will not be difficult to devise if fair principles are applied.

It is my intention to see to it that the intention expressed by C.M.H.C. to offer these properties for sale without capital gain is implemented. If this is done the houses can be made available for sale on monthly term payments approximately the same as is now being paid for rent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, surely that is quite plain. When the Liberals were in opposition, when they were seeking re-election, the member in whose constituency this project is located criticized the Conservative government because it was offering these houses for sale at a figure not approximating the cost for the particular project, but at a cost covering the entire 12,000 houses that had been built across Canada. The Liberal candidate, I assume speaking for the Liberal party, said these veterans should be entitled to buy those houses at what those particular houses cost C.M.H.C.

Mr. Nielsen: Who said that?

Mr. Douglas: The hon. member for Vancouver South, (Mr. Laing). He said that these houses stood on the books of C.M.H.C. at $6,600. He said that if they were charged $10,800, which was being suggested at that time, C.M.H.C. would be making a capital gain of just under $5 million.

I object strongly to any party taking one line when it is out of office and an entirely different line when it is in office. If the position the minister is taking now is a sound one, that the price charged for these houses should have nothing to do with the actual costs of this project but should be based on the cost of building 12,000 houses across Canada, then why did the Liberal party criticize this concept when it was introduced by the previous government, and why did the present minister of northern affairs, when he was running for office in this constituency, pledge himself that these houses would be sold to the veterans at the actual cost, which would be about $2,000 less than they are being asked to pay; and why did he pledge that those who had already purchased their houses would get a rebate of the extra amount they had paid?

The minister wonders why there is a great deal of discontent in the Fraserview veterans' housing project. The people are discontented because they were told in 1959, and particularly in 1962 and 1963, by spokesmen for the Liberal party, that it was unfair to make them pay more than the houses cost in order simply to make up the losses which C.M.H.C. had incurred on other housing projects across Canada.

The people were told that if a Liberal government were elected the sale price of these houses would be reduced to actual costs, which would mean a reduction of about $2,000, and that those who had already purchased houses would get a rebate. On that basis surely these people had a right to expect, when a Liberal government was elected, that that promise would be kept.

I think the criticism which Liberal members expressed regarding the policy outlined in 1959 was a valid one, but I strongly object to their now coming in and defending the position that was taken in 1959, which the minister and his colleagues criticized in two general elections and promised to reverse if they were elected. So far as these people are concerned this is a complete betrayal of public trust. I presume a great majority of these people—maybe all of them for all I know—supported the minister of northern affairs, the member for Vancouver South, because they thought the statements which he made in the letter of June 15, 1962 which I have just read, and in the letter which my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East. put on the record, were a commitment on behalf of a responsible Liberal candidate, now a minister of the crown, and that that commitment would be kept. It has not been kept and that is why the present minister is incurring so much displeasure and so much discontent from these people.

I say to the minister that I am not at all satisfied to be handed this sheet of paper in which the minister tells us what was the original sale price offered in 1959, and what the adjusted price is after taking off the $300 or $500 as the case may be. This does not tell the committee what it cost C.M.H.C. to build these houses.

This committee has a right to a balance sheet. We have a right to know what it cost C.M.H.C. to buy this property, and to build these houses. We have a right to know how much was collected in rent, how much was written off in depreciation, what the operating costs have been and what the actual cost ought to be now if these people are going to get the houses at cost, as was promised in this letter of June 15, 1962 by the minister of northern affairs. We ought to have a balance sheet. We ought to have some facts—not figures pulled out of the air.

For the minister to get up and say he has a letter from a group of people who had a meeting, saying that a lot of people by a show of hands were prepared to accept this schedule, is completely begging the question. The point at issue is that Liberal members promised they would get these houses at cost.

The tenants are not asking to be subsidized. They are not asking the government for any money. They are not asking C.M.H.C. to give them a handout. But they are asking that the Liberal party keep its promise.

It is very apparent from the sheet of paper which the minister has given us that these people are not going to get their houses at cost, and I say to the minister that before I will be satisfied I want to see a balance sheet. I want to know the actual costs to C.M.H.C. as of this present time. I want to know the figure at which these houses are being carried on the books of C.M.H.C. I want to know what prices would have to be charged these veterans in order to relieve C.M.H.C. of any financial liability with respect to this project and this project alone, because that is what was promised.

I want to know if the minister of northern affairs was correct in his letter of June 15, 1962, when he said these houses were being carried in the books of C.M.H.C. at $6,600. If he was correct, then the figures which the minister has given to the committee of the prices which they are going to charge, running all the way from $7,700 to $10,900, are a form of robbery. This is taking more money from these people than the houses cost, and it represents a complete breach of faith with the people in that constituency who took the minister of northern affairs at his word that these houses would be sold to them at actual book value.

The minister says that the number of persons who have not signed the leases for the increased rentals totals some 52 persons. That does not surprise me, but what does surprise me is that there are still 52 who have not signed the leases. I do not know what choice these people had but to sign these increased rentals because they have had every possible form of duress imposed on them. They have been told repeatedly that they are going to be put out. When a man and his family are faced with the prospect of being evicted, he signs a lease no matter what the increase in rent.

I would certainly like more information than we have been given this afternoon as to why these increases in rent were necessary, whether this is an actual economic rent based on costs to C.M.H.C., or whether this is once more an attempt not to disturb the market. I would like the minister to inquire of C.M.H.C. just to what extent rentals in other projects are carefully checked, and in this connection I would like to draw his attention to a project in my own constituency.

I have already written him about it and he was kind enough to send me a reply. It has to do with the Woodland Park apartments in Port Moody, B.C. Though the minister has told me it is under the name of Port Moody Garden Apartments Limited the letters have all been sent out by Midwest Property Management Limited of 12,220 125th avenue, Edmonton, Alberta. I have a copy here of a letter which has been sent to one of the tenants in the Woodland Park apartments at Port Moody—

Mr. Nicholson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I think I told the hon. gentleman in my letter that I was convinced it must be this other organization. We know nothing of this midwest body. This is a limited dividend project. We have loaned money to them but we are not the landlords.

Mr. Douglas: I am quite aware the minister is not the landlord. However, I am pointing out that this particular landlord, as I pointed out in my letter to the minister, has posted in front of the property a sign which I myself have seen many times saying, "Government controlled rent—$76.50 for three bedrooms," and also giving the cost of the other suites. The tenants are told when they sign a lease that these are government controlled rents and that they cannot be increased without the consent of C.M.H.C. That is the question I am raising—

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. gentleman allow me to answer it?

Mr. Douglas: No, I should like first of all to put the problem before the minister. In this particular instance, in the middle of the year—this is a new project; people have only been in this apartment a few months—the rents were raised by $6 a month. That is $72 a year. And the reason given for increasing the rents was that taxes had gone up, and apparently C.M.H.C. which controls the rents authorized an increase. What I want the minister to tell us is the extent to which C.M.H.C. reviews these applications for increases in rents. I am sure the minister realizes the prospective tenants take seriously the fact that they see a sign in front of a housing project saying "Government Controlled Rents". They believe that having signed a lease the rent agreed on is at least good for a year, and that if there are any increases they will be justifiable. It is difficult for me to believe that in five months taxes on this project, a 100 house project, had gone up by $7,200 a year in respect of two high rise apartments. I want to know what attempt has been made to police this arrangement. There are two possibilities. Either the corporation is simply granting to these limited dividend companies the right to increase rents without a very careful examination of their financial statements, or factors other than taxes have been taken into consideration. I want to urge the minister and, through him, the corporation, to check very carefully these applications for rent increases by limited dividend companies. These companies do manage to attract tenants by virtue of the fact that they can advertise that rents are government controlled. If they are going to use this as a gimmick, then the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in turn has the responsibility to see that the rents are, in fact, controlled and that they are not raised half way through a year on the excuse that taxes have gone up in the course of the year, if they have not done so to such an extent as to make the increases justifiable. I should like to know whether in this case taxes actually went up by $7,200 in one year. I recognize that the corporation is responsible for a great many projects which are going on across Canada and that it has a great deal of work to do, but if these companies are given the right to advertise that rents are government controlled, then C.M.H.C. surely has a responsibility to the tenants to see that the rents are controlled and that any increases which are authorized are justifiable and necessary.

Mr. Stenson: I have no intention of delaying the committee for long but there are a few observations I wish to make. Earlier this year the minister spoke of land assembly projects which come under the control of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I asked the minister several questions at that time and I do not feel I received satisfactory answers to them.

The first question I had in mind is this: Why should land assemblies be set up in direct competition with private developers who are obliged to pay taxes on the property while holding it? I refer to the agreement which was signed with the city of Peterborough. It provides that no municipal tax rate or charge of any nature whatsoever shall be levied by the city while the lots are owned by or on behalf of the corporation. In 1952 the city turned over to the corporation 660 acres of land to develop. Since that day the city has received no tax revenue whatsoever from this property, so in effect the city has been asked to make a direct subsidy. No private developer has ever had such a concession made to him. I consider that the city of Peterborough has lost thousands of dollars in tax revenue over the past 12 years. This arrangement was set up in 1952 but there was no development in the area until 1957. If the present government intends to carry on with land assembly projects it should be asked to share in the cost of trunk services such as sewers, water mains and storm drains and also to bear some of the cost of providing main streets and thoroughfares. It should also be asked to pay its fair share of municipal taxes. All private developers in cities today are required to do this.

Another point I should like to bring out is this: If a city does not wish to carry on a scheme of this type and the property involved has not been developed after 10 or 15 years, the land should revert to the municipality and any moneys owing to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation should be paid by the municipality. Why should the corporation be allowed to put its property on the market to the highest bidder and keep the money for the government of Canada, when the corporation has made no investment in it and taken no risk? The only party which has been stuck for an investment is the city itself.

I feel that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation should be careful where they set up land assembly projects. I do not feel they should come into an area, as they did in Peterborough, and sell the municipality a project which is not likely to be completed for 10, 15 or 20 years. This is exactly what was done in my constituency. I feel the project was too big for the area. It is well planned and it is a subdivision of which any city could be proud. On the other hand it has cost the city many thousands of dollars and I do not think it has cost this government or the provincial government anything. Right now the Peterborough land assembly is short of building lots and the corporation points the finger at the city, blaming the city for not keeping lots available. I know that if the city had received more financial assistance from the corporation it would have been in a better position to keep the lots coming forward.

I should like to ask the minister whether he does not feel projects of this type should share in the cost of the municipal services I mentioned earlier and also whether he does not agree that a municipality wishing to withdraw from such a project should be able to do so without the balance of the property reverting to the corporation, which would then make a substantial gain. I should also like to ask the minister whether he does not believe that land assemblies should be kept for public housing and for the construction of houses for older people and for people with small pensions.

There is one other point I would like to raise before resuming my seat. I think this matter was mentioned by the hon. member for Yukon, but I wish to raise it specifically. It refers to Indians. I believe they should have money available from Central Mortgage and Housing to build on the reserves. I would refer to a young constituent of mine, 25 years old, who came to the city of Peterborough, educated himself and now has a job in the city. He is married and wants to build a house for himself on the Indian reserve, under the provisions of the National Housing Act, and commute to Peterborough. He made application under N.H.A. to build a home on the property owned by him on the reserve, but was refused. I would like to ask the minister if there is not some legislation which would permit those living on Indian reserves to obtain such a loan. This is one way in which we could improve living conditions on reserves. I think the minister and his department should consider these suggestions and look into the possibility of making these loans available to deserving Indians.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, the minister has heard from the cities of Vancouver and Port Moody and now he will hear from Richmond. I do not wish to lay any charges against Central Mortgage and Housing or Consolidated Building Corporation, which is involved with the construction of the Richmond Gardens project; but I just wish to relate to the minister some of the complaints I have received and pose some questions to him.

This has to do with the Richmond Gardens housing project in Richmond, B.C., which was built by Consolidated Building Corporation of Toronto. I think the concept is a very good one. They took a large tract of unoccupied land, laid out a fairly good subdivision pattern and built houses which from the exterior are very attractive. They completed the services. I believe the municipality was very well satisfied. However, there have been a considerable number of complaints about the quality of the workmanship and the finish of the houses generally. I wish to bring to the attention of the minister some of these complaints.

I am going to quote from a letter from one of my constituents to the manager of Central Mortgage and Housing of Vancouver. This letter is dated August 22, 1964. I shall not use the person's name, but the corporation of course has some of this correspondence on their file. This letter illustrates the type of complaint I have heard on a number of occasions concerning this particular project which was built under N.H.A. The person protesting had not been making his payments, and the letter concerned that point. Then it says:

> I know my agreement with you. I know that it will take 25 years to pay this house. Can you guarantee that it will stand those 25 years?
>
> When I made my agreement with you, I trusted that C.M.H.C. would make five careful inspections of this house, and especially because it is built by government loan.
>
> Am I forced to buy a house where the foundation is completely fractured in three places; where framing is showing the poorest workmanship ever done; where the outside siding is filled with nail holes; insufficient or no overlap, broken and used asbestos shingles, as well as being wavy; where brick facing is loose with cracked base due to building mistakes; where the ceiling is wavy; where the basement floor is cracked all over, etc.
>
> If your "inspectors" passed all these facts, I have not only been misled by C.B.C., but also have a wrong conception of C.M.H.C.
>
> I am sure that this house does not meet N.H.A. minimum standards. It is wasting government money.

This complaint has been looked into by the corporation. There has been correspondence between this person and myself and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and between the minister and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. The house was to have been completed in December. This person moved in in February and as late as September, last month, the corporation was still sending inspectors back to check on the workmanship and to see whether certain repairs had been carried out. This is a particular case, but others have come to my attention.

I said that I am not making charges, because I have not had an opportunity to personally inspect a number of these houses built under N.H.A. However, I did have an opportunity during one of my trips home recently to look at the type of row houses which have been built by the same company, but not with N.H.A. money; this was done with private mortgage money. The workmanship which I was shown at these places was very, very poor; the steps were of a very narrow type and the risers were of varying height. There was very poor workmanship on the woodwork generally, on the mouldings, and so on. There was some evidence that this corporation is perhaps not employing competent workmen who can do the work on time and do it well.

This may raise some doubt about the quality of inspections. I do not want to condemn C.M.H.C. inspectors out of hand, but I would ask these questions. Have they the time to do a proper job of inspection? Have they enough inspectors in the lower mainland area, in the Vancouver area, to do the work? If they have not enough inspectors to carry out the type of inspection that should be carried out, what is the reason for this? Are they not offering sufficient salary to get sufficient qualified building inspectors? If they have sufficient inspectors, why should these complaints be coming in? I should also like to ask the corporation, through the minister, to give us some idea of how many complaints they have received about this particular project. Have they investigated all these complaints? Have they found out whether or not they were ill founded? It seems to me that if members have received a great many complaints, surely the corporation has also, and I should like to know what type of investigation has been carried out.

With regard to the particular case I mentioned a few minutes ago, apparently the complaints were valid, because the inspectors made several return trips and the work was still not done satisfactorily. I would also raise this question and ask the minister to answer it. If a building company has developed a record of this type, and apparently because of the type of workmen they are hiring there are too many complaints from prospective or actual buyers. does this make any difference to the corporation's dealings with the building company in the future? In other words, if there are too many complaints does that company continue to be an approved builder eligible to receive N.H.A. loans?

This is a very serious matter for the people in these houses. They are paying a considerable amount of money for them and will have to pay this money for many years to come. They are concerned that they receive value for their money. I know there have been some complaints that this particular project is not meeting N.H.A. minimum standards. The general type of housing construction in the area is of a higher standard than is the case with this project, which is simply meeting the minimum N.H.A. standards as to the spacing of the framing, 2 by 4's, joists, etc. I am very concerned about the complaints regarding the quality of the workmanship. The corporation has sent people back time and again to try and repair some of this poor workmanship. I simply conclude, Mr. Chairman, by asking whether C.M.H.C. has sufficient inspectors in the lower mainland area to carry out the kind of inspection that should be carried out. If they have not, why do they not have sufficient inspectors who are qualified to do this work? Also, has the corporation received a considerable number of complaints from this particular project, Richmond Gardens, and has it been found that these complaints were well founded?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have been sitting here patiently and I want to make a few remarks on this item. First of all I should like to say how much I appreciate the courtesy of the senior officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the keen attention they have paid to any complaints that have been directed to them by people in my constituency. I appreciate that very much because there are a few unusual and particular problems which have arisen during the last year. I was very glad they acted promptly in getting the facts and dealing with the situation, meeting the local representatives of the council in one case and certain other individuals on another occasion. I also recognize the good work which has been done by local officials. Sometimes one is misinformed and I have had a few letters criticizing local officials for delay in making arrangements for certain payments to be made in regard to the winter works program, I think the $500 for winter built houses. That was not the fault of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation but was occasioned, shall I say, by some delay in another department in making a payment.

I want to take this opportunity again to stress the need for continued and careful consideration of the needs of the residents in the smaller communities. I think there has been an improvement in this respect in recent years, but I do urge continued consideration of the particular problems which arise in smaller communities.

Second I want to urge once more—I am sure the minister supports me in this—that everything be done to utilize local materials. We have all these synthetic materials and newer types of materials these days, but there is no more interesting house today, both in its exterior and its interior, than one built from forest products. There is a great opportunity for even further research in this respect.

I would also say that I was very pleased that the local officials during the last year or so have met with responsible organizations in various communities to explain the operation of the act, the regulations, and so on. I urge a continuation of that policy because it removes a lot of misunderstanding. If you can get the co-operation of responsible groups such as chambers of commerce, labour organizations and farmers' organizations in the administration of the act, and in dealing with any problems which arise locally, I think matters generally are settled to the satisfaction of all concerned. The greater co-operation that exists in the administration of any department, the more democratic is the system.

I want to bring to the attention of the minister a problem which has interested me for some years and which has also particularly interested the Royal Canadian Legion and other veterans' organizations in the country. I am referring to the problem of satisfactory housing for aging veterans who are capable of looking after themselves. I have discussed this question pretty thoroughly with a good number of veterans and with representatives from local organizations, and I have become well informed on the matter as a result of attendances at conventions of veterans' organizations, zone council meetings of the Royal Canadian Legion in my own constituency, attendance at branch meetings of the Legion and attendance at meetings of other organizations which are interested in this particular problem. I met some of the committee members of the Royal Canadian Legion on housing and discussed it with them, and I found that this problem was not just related to Kootenay West but was of concern across Canada.

I want to make a special appeal, Mr. Chairman, for some further consideration of the needs of these veterans for assistance under the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, and in this regard to quote briefly from the report of the committee on aging veterans and housing of the Royal Canadian Legion. Their report deals with the needs of aging veterans for housing, and this is an extract from the report which was submitted to the nineteenth dominion convention at Halifax:

> Provided that an aging veteran is physically and mentally capable of looking after himself, either alone or with help, and provided he has sufficient funds to live on and is adequately housed, he will be happier and it will, in every way, be better for him to remain an ordinary citizen enjoying his own comparative independence in his own community.

I heartily agree with that paragraph in the report because that has been my experience. I know a number of veterans in my own constituency who are desirous of living in satisfactory houses, not palatial quarters by any means, in the community. They have spent the greater part of their lives in these communities and wish to live among people they know, and this is the reason for this particular representation this afternoon. The report goes on:

> It was further noted that while valuable help and co-operation was available from several of our provincial governments, there was little or no help received from our federal government, outside of the fact that a loan for building purposes could be secured from C.M.H.C. It was also the opinion of our committee that the sponsoring body had to pay far too high a rate of interest on the mortgage money (presently 5¼ per cent, while the interest rate under V.L.A. is only 3½ per cent). The situation was further aggravated by the government's action last year imposing an accelerated sales tax on building materials which by next year will amount to 11 per cent. A request that Legion-sponsored housing for aging citizens be exempt from this tax was contained in the brief presented to the cabinet last November. To date we have received no relief on this. Construction of homes such as these is a non-profit venture and we feel that this tax is unjust. We do pay provincial taxes which we cannot object to, as we receive other considerations, but from the federal government, no assistance is provided other than a loan. We feel this should be of vital concern to the department of health and welfare.

I draw that to the particular attention of the minister who I see is listening most carefully to my remarks on this occasion. The report continues:

> Your committee recommends that C.M.H.C. be requested to develop plans for smaller projects of 10 to 15 units, in the same way as plans are provided for veterans wishing to construct their own homes. This information would be of considerable help to our sponsoring groups who wish to do something for our senior people in the smaller towns and cities. It is further recommended that more detailed written instructions be made available outlining the requirements that have to be met by sponsoring groups to qualify for loans so sponsors of projects will become better acquainted with the requirements for same.

I heartily support that recommendation and urge that it be given favourable consideration.

I should like to quote another paragraph from this interesting report which I promised certain persons to bring to the attention of the minister:

> At present, C.M.H.C. has a regulation that low-rental homes may only be used by people who are 60 years of age and over. It is recommended that this regulation be amended to permit disabled persons of any age to take advantage of this assistance.

I think that is a very good point indeed.

> It was also suggested that further study should be given to the advisability of restricting admittance of those who, other than disabled persons, are over 65 years of age.
>
> Another regulation which adds considerably to the cost of construction is with respect to the size of both suites and storage space. Persons with sufficient income, living in commercial, profit making buildings, are paying much higher rates for considerably smaller accommodation than that required by C.M.H.C. in our housing projects. The greater percentage of our units are far more elaborate than the requirements demand.

I do think that consideration should be given to evolving a design which meets the needs of those persons who wish to take advantage of the act to live under very modest circumstances.

> If C.M.H.C. would reduce its requirements for space, this would result in greatly reduced construction costs.

I have mentioned these sections of this report because I think they are based on a very sound study of the situation by some very capable men who undertook to become members of this housing committee of the Royal Canadian Legion. As the result of the collection of information from various branches across Canada it represents the opinion of those persons who are interested and represents, shall I say, the need for consideration of changes in the regulations and administration to meet the circumstances.

I see I have been allowed to go three or four minutes overtime and I thank hon. members for their courtesy in this respect. I do urge the minister and his officials to give some consideration to the particular needs of aging veterans who are quite capable of taking care of themselves and who want to continue to reside in the communities in which they have lived for many years.

The Chairman: Shall the vote carry?

Mr. Winch: I should like to ask one very brief question. Is it possible for the minister to give a short progress report on the meetings which I understand have been commenced between representatives of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Department of National Defence and the city of Halifax and surrounding communities for the purpose of resolving the big problem there in respect of accommodation for navy personnel?

Mr. Nicholson: I am glad to inform the hon. member that we had a good meeting in Halifax. It was held in Admiralty house. Admiral Brock and several of his officials were present. In fact, I understand that the officials who presented the case for the service personnel when the defence committee was in Halifax were represented at this gathering. It was agreed that a committee should be set up immediately upon which the service personnel would be represented and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I believe that Mr. Houston, who used to be in Vancouver and is now head of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in the Atlantic provinces, is chairman of the committee. They are at work now trying to find a solution for this serious problem.

The Chairman: Shall the vote carry?

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the minister indicated earlier that he had the balance sheet on the costs of the Fraserview houses and I wonder whether we could get that now or when the committee meets again.

Mr. Nicholson: I have it here. I would be glad to have it also printed in Hansard. It is a full page and it shows not only the costs but a breakdown of maintenance and operating expenses, payments in lieu of taxes and so on year by year up to 1962. It also shows the credits. It shows that the average operating loss per unit, charging for money at 2½ per cent over the 50 year period, at the rental level that prevailed prior to October 1 of this year was $10.38 per unit.

Mr. Douglas: The minister misunderstood me. I was talking about the sale price. Could the minister give us the balance sheet which would show us the essential thing we want to know, namely the figure on C.M.H.C.'s books at which these houses stand?

Mr. Nicholson: I would be glad to. I have that here and I could put that in also as part of the record today provided I have the consent of the committee.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that these tables will be incorporated in the minister's remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The tables above referred to are as follows:]

Vancouver 6—Fraserview

Capital cost and financing statement as at December 31, 1963

Capital cost to Dec. 31/53 (The last unit was completed and turned over Nov/53)		$10,972,275
Additional capital cost 1954 to 1958		368,177
Final capital cost		$11,340,452	$11,340,452
Cost breakdown as follows:
Land	$ 1,202,390
Services	2,241,751
Houses	7,896,311
	$11,340,452
Less capital value of 512 houses sold to December 31, 1963			4,878,183
Capital cost of 634(*) unsold houses as at December 31, 1963			6,462,269
Principal repayment of capital borrowings under section 34, NHA (1944) based on 2½% per annum, to Dec. 31/63			2,081,264
Outstanding borrowings as at December 31, 1963			$ 4,381,005

(*) Includes 630 houses built
4 existing houses acquired when land assembled
634

[The Chairman.]

Vancouver 6—Fraserview

Comparative operating statement (Estimated)[1]

	5 yrs 1954 - 1958		1959		1960		1961		1962		Current stabilized operating statement
	Total	Average per unit per month	Total	Average per unit per month	Total	Average per unit per month	Total	Average per unit per month	Total	Average per unit per month	Total	Average per unit per month
	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$
Property maintenance expense and operating costs	244,009	3.55	50,196	3.92	90,336	8.00	105,500	10.42	82,940	9.12	82,909[2]	9.62
Municipal payment in lieu of taxes	546,260	[3]7.95	225,434	[4]17.59	213,656	18.92	193,149	19.07	186,008	20.45	186,680	21.67
Principal repayment of capital borrowings under section 34, NHA (1944) (2½% of cost of project)	1,530,091	22.25	273,233	21.32	242,629	21.49	221,005	21.82	199,317	21.91	189,000	21.93
Interest paid on borrowings (2% of outstanding balance)	1,003,765	14.60	184,525	14.40	158,461	14.03	135,872	13.42	119,341	13.12	110,000	12.76
Administrative overhead	159,102	2.31	35,677	2.78	32,182	2.85	29,962	2.95	25,810	2.84	24,928	2.89
Total expense	3,483,227	50.66	769,065	60.01	737,264	65.29	685,488	67.68	613,416	67.44	593,517	68.87
Rental revenue	3,182,040	46.28	713,544	55.68	643,644	57.00	599,240	59.17	533,894	58.69	503,960	58.49
Loss	301,187	4.38	55,521	4.33	93,620	8.29	87,248	8.51	79,522	8.75	89,557	10.38
Average number of units	1,146		1,068		941		844		758		718

(1) The Corporation's accounting records do not reflect costs by project.
(2) Based on national 1962 average of $95 per unit, plus .2% of capital cost of unsold houses.
(3) Fixed payments in lieu of municipal taxes were $55 per unit to and including May 1, 1955. On that date fixed payments increased to $110 per unit per annum.
(4) Payments in lieu of municipal taxes increased January 1, 1959 to equivalent to regular taxes.

Mr. Douglas: Could I ask the minister this question? This would give us the figure at which these houses could be sold if the only purposes was to clear off all liabilities for C.M.H.C.

Mr. Nicholson: Yes.

Mr. Douglas: Is this figure anywhere near the price at which the houses are being sold?

Mr. Nicholson: It was $4,381,005 at the time, when there were 630 houses still to be sold.

Mr. Stenson: Mr. Chairman, would the minister consider some time in the future the matter I raised regarding taxes?

Mr. Nicholson: I will undertake to meet with the hon. member and give him the information he has requested today.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I would be quite satisfied if the minister would take note of the questions asked and reply to me personally or by letter.

Mr. Nicholson: I have taken note of the question and I can answer one of the questions asked now. I can assure the hon. member that if an approved lender or builder does not correct his practices he is struck off the list. The builder and the lender are treated in the same way. I will give a more complete answer to the hon. member either in writing or, if he prefers, in my office.

Item agreed to.

Resolution adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

ADDRESS OF LOYALTY AND AFFECTION FOLLOWING VISIT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate to acquaint this house that the Senate have passed the address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen, conveying to Her Majesty the expression of our deepest loyalty, affection and respect and of our heartfelt appreciation of her recent visit to Canada and have inserted in the blank space therein the words "Senate and".

I also have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate as follows:

Resolved—That the following address be engrossed and presented to His Excellency the Governor General, namely:

To His Excellency General the Right Honourable Georges P. Vanier, Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, upon whom has been conferred the Military Cross and the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency:

The Senate...of Canada, in parliament assembled, have agreed to an address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen, conveying to Her Majesty the expression of our deepest loyalty, affection and respect, and of our heartfelt appreciation of her recent visit to Canada, in the manner set forth in our joint address hereto attached, and respectfully request that Your Excellency will be pleased to transmit the said address to Her Majesty the Queen.

Ordered—That the Clerk do go down to the House of Commons and acquaint that house that the Senate have passed an address to His Excellency the Governor General respectfully requesting that His Excellency may be pleased to transmit our joint address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen, conveying to Her Majesty the expression of our deepest loyalty, affection and respect, and of our heartfelt appreciation of her recent visit to Canada, and more particularly set forth in the said joint address, and request the House of Commons to unite with this house in the address to His Excellency the Governor General by inserting therein the words "and Commons".

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Queen's Privy Council): I move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker):

That this house do concur in the address of the Senate to His Excellency the Governor General, respectfully requesting that His Excellency may be pleased to transmit the joint address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen; that the words "and Commons" be inserted in the said address from the Senate; and that a message be sent to the Senate informing their honours that this house doth unite with the Senate in the said address.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B), 1964-65

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates (B) for the financial year ending March 31, 1965, was presented by Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Queen's Privy Council), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: If it is agreeable to the house, Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate the business for Monday now, rather than at six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIlraith: On Monday the government proposes to submit for consideration of the house item No. 77 on today's order paper, the house in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-126, an act respecting hours of work, minimum wages, annual vacations and holidays with pay in federal works, undertakings and businesses. In the happy event of that being disposed of before the end of the day, we propose to submit for consideration several smaller bills and perhaps I should indicate them by the numbers of the items on today's order paper: item No. 51 on today's order paper; item No. 68 on today's order paper; item No. 32 on today's order paper and item No. 69 on today's order paper. Then, on Tuesday, regardless of the progress made on Monday, we should like to call for consideration of the house item No. 6 on today's order paper, that is the house in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to a consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

POST OFFICE ACT

USE OF MAILS FOR DISSEMINATION OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION LITERATURE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved second reading of Bill No. C-43, to amend the Post Office Act (hate literature).

He said: Mr. Speaker, Canadian cities from Montreal to Vancouver in recent months have been inundated by hundreds of thousands of pamphlets, some of them by mail and some by door to door distribution. The material in these pamphlets has been of the kind that most of us thought would have disappeared with the defeat of Hitler's armies in Germany. Much of the material has been actual reprints from material which was published by the nazis in Germany. I am sure hon. members have seen copies of the infamous paper put out by the nazis called Der Stürmer which went to many homes across Canada. I have with me, as I am sure other hon. members have, some samples of the literature which has been distributed. One distributed in Toronto some months ago, which has been referred to in this house on a number of occasions, mailed from Scarborough and printed originally in Atlanta, Georgia, comes from the National White Americans Party. Mr. Speaker, I wish to read just a couple of lines from this pamphlet to indicate the kind of filth which is going into Canadian homes:

[Mr. McIlraith.]

> We believe in sending all negroes back to Africa whence they came. The negro races have never developed a civilization, discovered any new invention, written a great symphony, or even originated an alphabet. They are on a much lower level to the whites.

Coming a couple of days after Martin Luther King received the Nobel prize for work for peace, I think this indicates the level to which such material descends. Later on, the same pamphlet says:

> On the Jewish question our policy is much stricter. We demand the arrest of all Jews involved in communist or Zionist plots, public trials and executions. All other Jews would be immediately sterilized so that they could not breed more Jews. This is vital because the Jews are criminals as a race, who have been active in anti-Christian plots throughout their entire history.

Last week in the city of Ottawa I received a pamphlet, apparently printed in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, but mailed in Toronto, headed "Anti-Semitism, a Phony Bogey." Some weeks ago an Ottawa resident sent me a copy of a paper, put out in Ottawa, called The South End News, which is mailed through the facilities of the post office. Its issue of August 6, 1964 devoted a full page to the reprint from the Protocols of Zion, incidentally quoting Henry Ford as to the veracity of it, even though it is well known Mr. Ford made a public statement many years ago saying he realized this was a complete forgery.

This is the kind of material being distributed in Montreal and Toronto. I have also with me a statement issued by the secretary of the B.C. federation of labour, Mr. O'Neal, referring to the kind of material which is being distributed in Vancouver. In my own city of Winnipeg the Winnipeg junior chamber of commerce, in the summer issue of its magazine called Actimist, printed a whole page with a montage of the kind of pamphlets being distributed in Winnipeg.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that in proposing any kind of legislation which would restrict the rights of people in Canada to use the mails, I can be accused of infringing on the democratic rights of people, and that I can be accused of supporting censorship. However, since coming to this house I have consistently defended the rights of any and all groups, no matter what their opinions, no matter how small a minority, to have the widest democratic rights, above all the right to express their opinions. But it seems to me we must distinguish between democratic rights and licence, licence to incite to violence, licence to incite to kill, licence to attack people on the basis of race, creed, colour or religion.

For those of us who were born in Canada and who have lived under a democratic system of society, most of us looking at this kind of material would think it was ridiculous that it could not have any effect and that we ought to ignore it. But that was precisely the attitude taken by so many people in Germany, until it was too late.

A large number of organizations have called on the government to take action in respect to this matter. I am sure the Postmaster General (Mr. Nicholson) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) know better than I do the organizations which have written them and which have passed resolutions urging action on this matter. I have seen some of the material. I have seen editorials, written in newspapers published in almost every city of Canada, calling on the government to take action.

I know that the Canadian Legion passed resolutions at its national convention. I know that the Canadian Labour Congress submitted a brief to the Minister of Justice calling for action. I know that the Canadian Jewish Congress has called for amendments to the Criminal Code. Just briefly I wish to refer to two of these submissions made to the government, in order to indicate the kind of proposals which the government has been asked to consider.

The Canadian Labour Congress, in a brief presented to the Minister of Justice on April 7, 1964, by the president of the congress, Mr. Claude Jodoin, made two specific recommendations, and I quote:

> We call upon the government to enact legislation which would require the authors, publishers, distributors and printers of any printed matter being sent through the mails to identify themselves clearly on the face of the material which they disseminate. This legislation should be drafted in such a way as to require the identification of at least one responsible officer as well as that of the organization itself. It should also identify the Canadian accomplices in the distribution of materials printed outside of Canada.

If such a proposal had been adopted by the government it would in fact only be applying to this kind of material the same kind of provisions which we have in our legislation with respect to elections, which require that all election material have the person responsible for its printing identified on it. In fact it is similar to the kind of provisions which are in the labour relations act, which require a union, during an organizing campaign, to identify itself on any printed material it distributes.

The Canadian Labour Congress in its brief also said:

> We call upon the government to enact legislation making it illegal to publish statements which are designed to incite violence or disorder against groups because of the group's race, creed, colour, place of birth, national or ethnic origin.

On March 12, 1964 the Canadian Jewish Congress submitted a brief to the Minister of Justice and the Postmaster General, in which they made several specific proposals, one being that section 166(2) of the Criminal Code include the following:

> Injury or mischief to a public interest shall include the promotion of hatred, contempt or hostility against a group of persons by reason of their particular race, national or ethnic origin, colour or religion.

And that a new section 62A should read:

> Every person who publishes or circulates or causes to be published or circulated, orally or in writing, any matter or statement which is intended or calculated to incite violence or disorder against a group of persons of a particular race, national or ethnic origin, colour or religion, or against the members thereof, shall be guilty of an indictable offence and liable for imprisonment for two years.

I know that both these briefs received very sympathetic consideration from the Minister of Justice. I know he is concerned, and rightly so, about the kind of hate literature which is being distributed. Nevertheless he and his officials have not been able to draft legislation which, though not accepting the specific proposals I have quoted, would at least begin to meet some of the problems which have arisen. It is for that reason I hope the house will give serious consideration to my bill today.

I recognize there may be difficulties. I recognize that once you begin to put any kind of prohibition on the freest dissemination of printed material you may run into difficulty. But, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that until the government brings in alternative legislation, which the Minister of Justice on a number of occasions has indicated the government is considering, the house should give sympathetic and favourable consideration to my proposal.

My proposal is a very simple one. It is merely an addition to section 7 of the Post Office Act, which would spell out the rights of the Postmaster General to restrict the mailing rights of people who are using the mails to distribute hate literature.

On Wednesday of this week, as reported at page 9041 of Hansard, the minister was asked a question by the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker), with respect to actions which he had taken in several cases. The minister made an excellent statement to the effect that he had already taken action against several people who had been found responsible for the dissemination of hate literature. I think the actions of the minister were very proper and very correct. I am concerned, however, that should he take similar action in the future his orders might be challenged, not simply before a board of review, which I understand is an internal organization, but on the basis that the hon. gentleman does not have the power under the Post Office Act as it now stands to issue orders of the kind he has already made.

The gist of my bill is simply to spell out the legislation so that there may be no question that the minister has the right to take action to remove mailing privileges from people who disseminate literature of this kind. As I said earlier, those of us who were born in Canada and who have lived here all our lives may not regard this as a very important matter. We may not feel that many people will be misled by this kind of filth which has been widely disseminated. However, to the people who have come from Europe, more than a million of them, from countries where literature of this kind was extensively used to divide people, this is a matter which is serious, which really is urgent, and in respect of which the government should take action and take action now.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Let me say at the outset of my remarks that nobody in this chamber is more disgusted or more shocked than I am at the distribution of the vicious material of the kind referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

To me it makes no difference whether this vile material is distributed through the mail or by any other means; it is offensive and objectionable and every reasonable effort must be made to stop it. Nobody is more anxious than I, or the government, to put an end to this filthy business and to protect the innocent persons in Canada who have suffered from such conduct.

As I have stated more than once in this house, my department is working closely with the Department of Justice in an effort not only to find some effective legislation to deal with this situation, but to find an effective means of applying existing laws to cut off what I think has properly been referred to as traffic in hate. We are trying to find a means of amending the law in a way which will accomplish the purpose the hon. member had in mind when he introduced this bill.

I will admit frankly, however, that in searching for a solution to this problem we are on the horns of a dilemma. If, on the other hand, we do not take effective action against these nefarious traffickers in hate literature, this traffic is likely to continue. On the other hand, and this is what distresses me—and I know it distresses others with whom I have discussed it—if we do take strict measures to shut off the use of the mails to those who deal in hate literature we shall almost certainly prejudice the rights and freedom of the majority of Canadians and others who use our mails for decent and legitimate purposes.

Perhaps we should look back on history. It will be recalled that the privacy of the royal mails has always by law and practice been sacrosanct, at any rate in this country. In times of peace post office officials have never had the right to act as censors, to open deliverable letters and, more important, to decide what is objectionable or unacceptable correspondence. I believe that we in this house must make very sure that any action we may take to suppress the transmission of hate literature is not likely to result in a situation where government officials, with no trained jurists to guide them—and certainly the officials of my department are not trained jurists—would be called upon to exercise censorship of the mails and to impose their ideas of morality upon the public at large. I believe that legislation which would permit such a situation would be striking a blow at the very roots of our freedom of speech and expression. If today we decide it is illegal to express an opinion about a religious sect or group, then tomorrow why should we not make it illegal to attack a political party or to question the authority of the government? If there is one thing I have learned in the few months I have been Postmaster General, it is that the post office is really a service organization; it is in the business of carrying the mails expeditiously. It is not our responsibility or our business to decide what opinions are legal or illegal. Surely that is a matter for the courts. And when the courts have made the decisions as to what is right or wrong and what should or should not be distributed, then I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, the post office will exert every reasonable effort to carry that decision into effect when it has to do with the use of Her Majesty's mails.

I am well aware that certain sections of the Post Office Act and of the Criminal Code give the Postmaster General the authority to prohibit the use of the mails for illegal purposes and, as has just been mentioned by the hon. member for Winnpeg North, I have had occasion to exercise my powers under that statute more than once during the last few months. Twice I have issued orders, once in July and again in late September, under section 7 of the act under which I have been given the right, if I feel that a section of the Criminal Code is being broken, to prohibit the use of the mail for the distribution of indecent or scurrilous literature. I had no doubt about reaching the conclusion that the material in question was scurrilous and I had no hesitation in imposing these orders, the first of which now stands as a final order.

Obviously, however, an attempt has been made to get around my first order because directly it was put into effect another organization, with a name similar to the one I had prohibited, came into being. That is what happens in these cases. The organizations affected go under cover, adopt a new name and start out afresh. However, I have not hesitated to use my authority where I can in an effort to suppress the distribution of scurrilous literature whether by organizations or by individuals. We will block it in Canada, and we will block it coming into Canada if we have to.

In the last case—and the literature to which the hon. member has just referred is this type of literature—the literature was so vicious, so outrageous, so scurrilous that I felt I had very firm grounds for taking the action that I did. But I should point out and reiterate what I said a moment ago, that what has happened in this particular case illustrates the thing about which I am most concerned, namely that it drives these people underground and they seek the protection and privacy of the first class mail, which we cannot open. We cannot under such circumstances even perform the service we are performing now, if they resort to that practice. When this happens we have a very limited course of action open to us.

My department and the Department of Justice have this difficult problem under active and intensive study. We have not as yet, unfortunately, come up with what we consider to be an effective solution—that is to say, a solution that would stop the flow of hate literature but at the same time would not interfere with the right of free expression or the privacy—and this is what concerns us —of the mails. If we had to open all letters in trying to find out whether or not hate literature or even vicious material was being distributed, we would come across all kinds of secrets and we would find ourselves acting as censors in many fields which are of no concern to the department.

It is my opinion that if a solution—and we must strive to find a solution—is to be found, it will lie in an amendment to the Criminal Code or some similar statute, rather than in changes in the Post Office Act. I say this because, as I intimated earlier, in my opinion—and I practised law for nearly 20 years before I went into business, and had some experience in the criminal courts as well as with constitutional law—the courts, which interpret the Criminal Code and our other statutes, are the logical persons, are the proper judges, of what literature is decent, what literature is vicious, what literature is legal and what literature is illegal. In my humble opinion it is not for post office officials to make such decisions, as I am sure most members of this house will agree.

Mr. Speaker, from the time the first newspaper was printed and the first broadside distributed, those whose views were offended have cried out for control, for censorship. It is easy to say, "This material is vicious," or "scurrilous," or "poisonous. Ban it from the mails". But I again say, who is to judge what is vicious, what is scurrilous and what is poisonous, unless it can be brought to the attention of some person charged with the specific responsibility, and brought before that person in a proper way? Especially, who is to make the decision as to just what sealed letters officials of the post office can open? If they do, what do you do with mail that comes in a plain envelope, first class mail? It will be said that some of the cases that have been discussed in the house, including some of those mentioned by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), this afternoon are very obviously scurrilous. I most certainly agree. But if we start, where do we stop? Do we prohibit the use of the mails to a newspaper because it attacks a political organization? Do we ban the use of mails to those religious publications that violently and intolerantly oppose other denominations?

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I loathe and detest the foul propaganda that has been circulated throughout this country by people with warped and twisted minds. I believe that every possible action should be taken against them under the law. But in saying that, Mr.

Speaker, let us make sure that we do not set up a machine that is perhaps potentially more dangerous than the evil we are fighting. Let us make sure that the medicine is not worse than the disease. Let us make sure that our decisions as to what is right and what is wrong are made by the established process of law, by the courts, and not by officials of the post office or any other department. They certainly should not be made by persons whose prime job is to distribute the mail as quickly and as expeditiously as possible. They are not there to act as censors; they are there to do the job in the quickest and most expeditious way.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have received some of the literature that the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has described. I think all members of this house join in agreeing that it is offensive, that it is deplorable that persons should take it upon themselves, first of all to write and then to distribute this kind of despicable material. I think too that when we understand that there is an opportunity, through paying a certain amount of postage, to deliver these things through the mail to a great many people who have not subscribed to them, they do take offence and resent the fact that this kind of material is being sent into their homes.

I have to agree, however, with the Postmaster General (Mr. Nicholson) that there are some very serious problems involved in administering the provisions contained in Bill No. C-43. The minister mentioned—and I was pleased that he did mention these things—that a post office department is not and should not be a censorship bureau or organization; they are primarily, and perhaps even solely, concerned with being a service organization to deliver the mail. Therefore we run into the problem, because I do not see it provided for in the amendments to the act that are proposed to us, of who is going to decide what is in fact calculated to bring into hatred, ridicule or contempt any person or group of persons by reason of race, national origin, colour or religion. It is, as has been quite properly stated, a matter for the courts to decide as to what should be calculated to bring into hatred or ridicule any of these things.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, this is not an easy matter. I think it is well that we have this bill before us so we may discuss this problem, cast some light on it and then give consideration to what can be done about it.

As has been said by both hon. members who have spoken, it is an offensive thing to receive some of these pieces of literature, but at the same time to amend the Post Office Act in such a way that you can prevent this literature being carried is perhaps not the way to deal with it. I think, too, that the Criminal Code should be amended so it could be made substantially more clear with regard to what would be an offence, to be decided by the courts, with regard to printing this kind of literature. But I do not think members of the house would be satisfied to set up any quasi judicial committee or board to really decide whether an offence had been committed, because the two or three pieces of literature from which the hon. member for Winnipeg North quoted are certainly extreme cases and there would be no problem in deciding that this was scurrilous, offensive, and so on. If we were to write into the statutes the provision that this be decided by the Post Office Department, they are certainly going to be presented with other pieces of literature not so extreme. Then it will be a problem of making a decision whether or not they are an offence under the act.

I want to join with the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and the Postmaster General (Mr. Nicholson) in expressing our distaste at the fact that it is possible for this sort of thing to be distributed; but at the same time I believe we must be pretty careful about charging the Post Office Department with a responsibility with which they are not equipped to deal, and further must be reasonably careful not to set up restrictions in the use of mail which really may not serve the purpose for which they are designed.

Mr. M. L. Klein (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Postmaster General (Mr. Nicholson) for the action he took in July and September of this year in passing judgment on this scurrilous literature and I believe he has earned the approval of every right thinking man, certainly in this house and in the Dominion of Canada.

It is not my purpose to deal with this matter at length but I should like to bring to the attention of the house a statement made by President Johnson after the assassination of President Kennedy. It is printed by the Institute of Human Relations of the United States and the quotation is as follows:

The time has come for Americans of all races and creeds and political beliefs to understand and to respect one another. So, let us put an end to the teaching and preaching of hate and evil and violence. Let us turn away from the fanatics, from the far left and the far right, from the apostles of bitterness and bigotry, from those defiant of law, and those who pour venom into our nation's bloodstream.

Appearing in the Montreal Star of this week is an article dealing with the appearance of President Johnson in Corpus Christi, Texas, this Sunday. A raid had been made by the police and an ex-plumber was questioned, at whose home the police seized guns and nazi flags in connection with a reported plot to kill President Johnson this Sunday. The police chief and 25 deputies gathered up machine guns, automatic pistols, high-powered rifles, a mortar, a rocket launcher, live hand grenades and about 20,000 rounds of commercial and homemade ammunition, swords, several nazi flags, world war I and II German helmets, and so on. I bring this to the attention of the house in order to indicate that hate literature brings the kind of violence it breeds, especially in the state of Texas. Because where hate literature flourishes it creates an atmosphere which gives the assassin the courage which he would not have in a healthy and sane community.

I should like to bring to the attention of the house the fact that in discussing another bill dealing with group defamation there was a motion to send it to the external affairs committee as set out in the motion at page 5984 of Hansard. I would be happy to have this bill referred to that committee, since the motion stood in the name of the government, and particularly since the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), at page 7823 of Hansard, is reported as saying:

> Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this question of hate literature and the action to be taken under the Criminal Code has been under consideration by the government for months, would the minister consider setting up a special committee of the house to look into the whole problem, to hear the law officers of the crown, and to ascertain whether action has been taken in other parts of the world without interference with freedom, to the end that the house might favour the recommendation of amendments to the Criminal Code—

And so on. In view of the fact that the government seems to favour a committee for this type of subject matter, whether the external affairs committee or some other committee, and in view of the fact that the Leader of the Opposition, and I believe the leaders of other parties also favour committee consideration, I hope that a clinical study can be made of this bill by referring it and all other bills of this nature to that committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) for the worth-while initiative he took in introducing Bill No. C-43 to amend section 7 of the Post Office Act.

Before proceeding with my remarks on this bill, I feel it would be proper to read section 7 of the Post Office Act:

> (1) Whenever the Postmaster General believes on reasonable grounds that any person
>
> (a) is, by means of the mails,
>
> (i) committing or attempting to commit an offence, or
>
> (ii) aiding, counselling or procuring any person to commit an offence, or
>
> (b) with intent to commit an offence, is using the mails for the purpose of accomplishing his object, the Postmaster General may make an interim order (in this section called an "interim prohibitory order") prohibiting the delivery of all mail directed to that person (in this section called the "person affected") or deposited by that person in a post office.

The amendment provided for in Bill No. C-43 apparently would deny in effect the use of Her Majesty's mail to persons who address or disseminate hate literature calculated to foster hatred, cast contempt or ridicule on any person or group of persons for reasons of race, national origin, colour, religion, etc.

This matter, Mr. Speaker, has been brought up in this house many times before, and I entirely agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North who, with all his deep and sincere feelings, respects the rights and freedoms of every citizen of this country, whatever his tongue, religion, nationality or colour.

I am one of those who in this house have vehemently protested against the almost systematic poisoning of our youth and our whole population, as practised by certain publicity media in this country. The mails, Mr. Speaker, are not the only means used for discriminatory purposes. One only has to read certain newspapers and publications and look at certain television programs to realize the immense harm and sometimes irretrievable injury which some of those writings, programs or broadcasts can inflict upon the individual, the family and the Canadian population in general.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, in view of the fact that we did not get started on this bill until 20 minutes after five o'clock, and also in view of the general interest in this matter and the very constructive suggestion made by the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Klein), I wonder whether hon. members would agree that this bill should retain its position on the order paper?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house agree that this bill will retain its position on the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following item was passed in committee of supply this day:]

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Loans, investments and advances—
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—

L20. Advances to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the purposes of subsection (1) of section 37 of the National Housing Act, 1954, in respect of the acquisition, development, construction and improvement of land and buildings, $216,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, October 19, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. COATES—FAILURE OF MEMBER TO RISE FOR SINGING OF GOD SAVE THE QUEEN

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I rise on a question of privilege affecting all members of this house. When a member takes a seat in this chamber at the beginning of a new parliament he must first swear an oath of allegiance to Her Majesty the Queen. The oath in question is to be found on page 406 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms and reads as follows:

I do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II.

The words in the oath which I think are most significant are the words "faithful" and "allegiance". The most obvious definition of "faithful" is "loyal" and of "allegiance" either "loyalty" or "devotion". On Friday every member present in this house, with the exception of the member for Quebec West, stood and sang the prayer and anthem "God Save the Queen". We were displaying by our action our continued adherence to the oath we took on assuming our seats in this house; we were indicating our faithfulness and our true allegiance as members of parliament.

The member for Quebec West by his action indicated his unwillingness to stand by the oath to which he swore when he took his seat in this house and it is my belief that you, Mr. Speaker, or the committee on privileges and elections should determine whether he has any right to continue sitting in this chamber. This is not the first example of words or actions incompatible with the oath of allegiance, but it is certainly the most glaring and repulsive example to date in this twenty sixth parliament—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Coates: —and other members are entitled to know the true significance of the oath of allegiance and the action which will be forthcoming when it is broken.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, due to the fact that the hon. member for Quebec West, (Mr. Plourde) is absent, I wish to point out that the stand taken by our party in this matter was formulated by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) the other day, and all parties in the Commons agreed that it was reasonable.

The members spontaneously decided to sing "God Save the Queen". The hon. member for Quebec West stated that he did not know this English hymn and that he could not sing it. Therefore, he remained seated. That was not an official act from a member of the government, and in no means does it violate the oath he took upon entering this house.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that there is no motion before the house, I propose to proceed.

PROCEDURE

CONCURRENCE IN ELEVENTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat) moved:

That the eleventh report of the special committee on procedure and organization, presented to the house on October 7, 1964, be now concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving concurrence in the eleventh report on behalf of the committee on procedure and organization, I would like to make a few brief remarks respecting the four recommendations that are contained in it. If hon. members will refer to Votes and Proceedings of Wednesday, October 7, they will find the complete report. I might say that in that complete report there is a summary of some of the work that has been done by the committee in attempting to examine and make recommendations respecting the whole committee structure of the House of Commons. The committee on procedure and organization in fact appointed a subcommittee to address itself specifically to this problem, and to study and make recommendations respecting the committee structure of this house. I have before me several copies of the summary that was prepared and the recommendations that are in the report. For the interest of the various parties perhaps they would like to have copies of this summary.

Generally speaking, Mr. Speaker, the subcommittee held a number of meetings to try to find ways and means of strengthening the committee structure of the House of Commons. One of the most important matters considered—and it is the main substance of this eleventh report—was that of giving committees the power to perhaps sit beyond prorogation, or at least to sit during an adjournment of the house. We looked into this matter in some detail with regard to the propriety of standing and special committees sitting after prorogation, and your subcommittee came to the conclusion that it was not competent to make recommendations with regard to sessions of standing or special committees after prorogation. If hon. members would refer to paragraph 14 of this report they will note that it says:

> Your committee is of the opinion that the house should not empower a committee to sit beyond the prorogation of a session by simple resolution, or even by means of an amendment to standing order 65, since either course would infringe the royal prerogative. It appears to your committee that this reform could properly be implemented only by means of legislation. Ample precedent exists whereby the royal prerogative has been limited by means of an act of parliament, such legislation requiring the signification of the Queen's consent (not to be confused with the royal assent) prior to its final passage by the house. Since the practical exercise of the royal prerogative is today vested in Her Majesty's ministers, with whom the reality of power resides, your committee therefore recommends that the government give serious consideration to the introduction of such legislation at an early date.

The recommendation, therefore, is that the government should give consideration to this matter and introduce such legislation if they see fit. We believe it would be well for the government to consider this kind of action.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, we draw to the attention of the government and the house that there are two ways of dealing with this matter in the interim. One is that prorogation of a session could be delayed as long as possible to enable committees to meet while the house stood adjourned; and (b), where necessary a committee of the house could be constituted as a commission under the terms of the Inquiries Act, chapter 154 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, to enable it to continue its work beyond the prorogation of a session. Of these two alternatives your committee feels that the first suggestion—that is, to delay prorogation—would be the most desirable.

I think it would be well for hon. members to consider the problems this house encountered last year when a number of committees were sitting and we were working toward a prorogation date of, I think it was, December 21. Many of those committees had insufficient time to complete their work, to report to the house and to move concurrence therein before prorogation. It is well known to all hon. members that all the work of a committee dies on prorogation unless a report is made to the house which is considered, adopted or concurred in by the house.

This session we see the possibility of two of our standing committees of this house requiring time beyond what may be considered an appropriate date for prorogation. One of those committees is the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines which is considering Bill No. C-120; the other is the standing committee on agriculture and colonization which is considering the matter of feed grains for eastern Canada. Perhaps both these committees would need to sit beyond the date when most of the other business of the house has been completed.

We do not believe it ought to be automatic that these standing or special committees sit when the house is not in session, but we do think that by adjourning rather than proroguing and passing a simple resolution or motion in the house, certain of these committees could sit beyond the adjournment date.

The third recommendation, Mr. Speaker, deals with the matter of continuing the membership of committees from one session to another. We think standing order No. 65 should be amended by the substitution in line 2 of the words "the first session of each parliament" for the words "each session". That would enable the membership of committees to be named for the duration of a parliament instead of for the duration of a session.

This becomes important, Mr. Speaker, because if we look back in the records of this session of the twenty sixth parliament we find that while the striking committee was set up on the first day of the session, as required under our standing orders, it was not until March 11, as reported at page 777 of Hansard, that the Prime Minister moved the motion that would set up the standing committees of this house. We believe the reason this action was taken even as early as March 11, which was nearly 30 days after the house was in session, was that it was necessary to get the external affairs committee functioning to deal with a specific matter.

We also note, Mr. Speaker, that only one standing committee was set up on that date, and that it was not until April 10, as recorded at page 1989 of Hansard, that the chief government whip was in a position to make the motion naming the membership of all of the standing committees of the House of Commons. So you can see, Mr. Speaker, that nearly two months had gone by after the commencement of the session before these committees were actually in existence; for certainly it cannot be argued that they were in existence before names of members were attached to them.

We believe that if this recommendation to amend standing order 65 were accepted by the house and by the government, and the motion was moved to set up these committees at the beginning of a parliament rather than at the beginning of each session, then the first day of each session when parliament gets under way the committees would be in existence and the membership would be named. In this event there would be no waiting for the various parties to supply names each session for the different committees.

The fourth recommendation, Mr. Speaker, deals with the terms of reference. We believe that a committee's terms of reference, particularly a standing committee, should automatically include the power to appoint subcommittees. The motion relating to the powers of standing committees should in the future be moved, we think, in the following terms. First of all, this was the motion moved by the Prime Minister, as appears at page 777 of Hansard:

> That the standing committees of this house be severally empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the house; and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Our recommendation is that these words be included:

> —and to delegate to subcommittees all or any of their powers except the power to report direct to the house.

It appeared that even during this session it would have been expedient for at least one or two committees to have the power to set up subcommittees, and I refer specifically again to Bill C-120, which deals with three separate areas of railway transport matters in Canada. It seems to me that it would be well for the house to delegate this power to that committee so that three separate studies could be carried on at the same time.

It will be recognized that these recommendations being made today by your committee must be the subject of action on the part of the government so that effect can be given to them. While concurrence today would not necessarily mean that these recommendations would automatically be put into effect, it would give to the government an indication that we believe the things we suggest should be done. Therefore, on behalf of the committee, I recommend to hon. members of this house that this report be concurred in, giving an indication that they think these recommendations are desirable.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that in so far as a complete study of recommendations respecting the committee structure of the house is concerned, this eleventh report must be considered as an interim report. Your committee is continuing to study this matter and will be coming forward at a later date with other recommendations as to committee size, function and vested authority. It is the opinion of the committee on procedure and organization that these matters we are now recommending for consideration today require immediate attention for the business of this particular session.

Miss Pauline Jewett (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, as seconder of this motion I am pleased to join with the hon. member for Medicine Hat in asking for the concurrence of the house in the eleventh report of the special committee on procedure and organization. I hope all hon. members have read this report which can be found in Votes and Proceedings of October 7 last; because it outlines not only the three immediate proposals we are recommending to the government, but also some of the problem areas in this whole field of committees which the committee on procedure and organization, through its subcommittee on committees, is planning to undertake and study.

I think it is accurate to say that all hon. members of that committee, and I hope all hon. members of this house, feel there is a great deal to be done to both rationalize and strengthen the committee system of this house, not only to make the committees themselves more effective but also indeed to make the house itself more effective. It seems to me that if we have a stronger, more rational and more effective committee system we will be able to cover a great deal more ground in our committees and accomplish much more by way of tightening debate in this chamber. The two seem to me to go hand in hand.

For all these reasons I hope all hon. members will again read this whole report, since it does outline some of the areas we plan to study. I know the members of the committee will be grateful for suggestions from hon. members as to what other areas they think we might look into.

Our immediate request is for concurrence in essentially three recommendations. One is that the government give consideration at some time to introducing legislation which will make it possible permanently for committees to continue from one session to another within a parliament. As has already been said, this will involve some limitation on the royal prerogative; therefore the Queen's consent will have to be secured before this legislation is introduced. The committee felt, however, that this was the appropriate way of going about it, and we hope that at some time the government will make it possible for committees to sit between sessions within a parliament, as a routine or automatic thing. In the meantime, until that is done, we suggest either of two courses of action, and particularly favour the course of action which would allow committees to continue sitting by, in effect, postponing prorogation as was done during the war, I believe, until the day before a new session begins.

As the hon. member for Medicine Hat has said, our second proposal is to make it possible for the membership of committees to be named for an entire parliament. I am sure there should not be any disagreement with that.

The next proposal is to allow committees to appoint subcommittees. This latter recommendation will be particularly important if in the reorganization of the committee structure of this house we should decide that it would be preferable to have fairly large committees covering broad fields of action, functional areas as they are called, rather than a large number of very small committees. If we have fairly large ones it will be absolutely essential that they be enabled to appoint subcommittees.

Beyond this immediate report we hope to go into the whole question of what powers committees should have. For example, should committees have the power to initiate? Should committees discuss estimates as well as legislation in their appropriate fields? Should there be new committees to which we have not given any thought at all in this house, as for instance a committee on statutory instruments or delegated legislation such as they have in the United Kingdom? Should there be only standing committees and should all the work be done by these, through subcommittees, or will we still require the occasional special committee? How many members should be on each committee or on each subcommittee? Most important, what powers should committees have? It seems to me this will be by far the most crucial problem we will be discussing. No doubt there will be further reports brought to this house.

I think we are all aware of the fact that we do operate under a system of responsible cabinet government. We have not thought of creating a series of small cabinets within the House of Commons in rivalry to the cabinet itself. There could be no thought, therefore, of copying the United States system, as has been suggested, unless we change our whole system of government, which we are not thinking of doing, at any rate in this committee. However, within the confines of the system of responsible cabinet government surely it is possible to give larger functions and stronger and clearer powers—I would hope even the power of initiation—to our standing committees of this house. As I say, this will come up in the future. It is not something for which we are asking concurrence today; it is something for the future. It is something that, if the recommendations we are making today are concurred in, will be easier for the committee to discuss.

Nor is there any reason why we should limit our discussion to these problem areas mentioned in this report. There are other suggestions that might be made, and I hope that in the course of the next few months as this committee continues its work, hon. members will be bringing forward other suggestions as to ways in which the committee system, and parliament itself through its committee system, can be strengthened.

For example, I have always felt that there are some bills which could be referred to committees after first reading. This is quite contrary to the general practice under our parliamentary system where the principle is always decided upon before the bill goes to committee. There are occasions, particularly when our parliamentary timetable is so crowded, upon which we could send non-controversial, non-partisan bills to a committee after first reading, provided the committees themselves were representative and that there would be a full discussion there of this type of bill. There are bills right now on the order paper which I believe could be referred to a committee.

This is one kind of suggestion which is not made here and to which I think we could give some serious consideration. I urge all hon. members to try to stretch their imaginations a little on the use of the committee system of this house to see if they cannot come up with something that will be compatible with the system we have of responsible cabinet government, and at the same time compatible with the needs of the kind of complex system in which we live today.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words with respect to the motion for concurrence in this eleventh report. I do so both as a member of the committee and on behalf of this party.

The adoption of this motion, Mr. Speaker, does not have the precise effect that the adoption of some other motions for concurrence in reports of Your Honour's committee have had. The adoption does not actually effect any change. Nevertheless, we as members of the committee feel that this is a very important report we are presenting to the house, and that the heart of it is something very significant. The heart of it, as we see it, is that the house should give consideration to the greater use of committees.

I agree with the position just stated both by the hon. member for Medicine Hat and the hon. member for Northumberland. We are not trying to change our system of government, but we do feel the house could benefit from a strengthening of its committees and from a greater use of them. As we see it, there are two things that are necessary if this is going to be done and in this instance both these things fall on the shoulders of the government.

In the first place, we have to do something about the royal prerogative that makes it necessary for us to re-establish committees at every session, and consequently prevents committees meeting between sessions. By the terms of the royal prerogative a session of parliament starts when we are called into session by the crown, and it ends with prorogation. Between prorogation and the next summoning of a session of parliament, there is nothing that parliament or its committees can do. This can be resolved by legislation affecting the royal prerogative and, as a committee, we are asking the house to ask the government to give serious study to this matter and take action upon it at an early date.

Another step that will be necessary if we are going to strengthen committees and use them more will be for the government to take a positive position and ask the house to refer more matters to committees so they can be studied thoroughly, and so that good use of the committees and of the members of those committees can be made. All of us feel, and I think the feeling is generally shared by the members of our committee on committees, that there should be certain times of the year when the house itself need not be in session but when the committees might be able to meet and deal on a full time basis with matters referred to them.

Without going into detail, which certainly is not necessary at this time, I join with the other two members who have spoken in saying that our studies have convinced us that a very much greater use can be made of committees. In this report all we are saying is that we hope the government will take the necessary steps to see that what is requested in this report is implemented at an early date.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): As a member of the committee, all I want to say is that I believe the committee made some very good suggestions, and I support the adoption of the report.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SPECIAL ASSISTANT TO LABOUR MINISTER

Question No. 1,866—Mr. Coates:

1. On what date did Bernard Alasdair Graham's appointment become effective as a special assistant to the Minister of Labour?
2. How many days since Mr. Graham's appointment has he spent away from Ottawa on government business and into what provinces did this government business take him?
3. What is the total amount of Mr. Graham's expenses to date in relation to time spent away from Ottawa and what is the total amount of his expenses since the date of his employment if it varies from the aforementioned amount?
4. What is the breakdown of his total expenses?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour):

1. July 20, 1964.
2. Twelve days. Nova Scotia.
3 and 4. No expenses submitted.

RESEARCH GRANTS TO DENTAL SCHOOLS

Question No. 1,948—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

Questions

1. In each of the last five years, what has been the total of dental research grants by the government to each Canadian dental school?
2. What has been the specific purpose of each such grant given in the last year?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): 1. Under the national health grants, for the fiscal years 1959-64, the following grants were made available to the provinces on behalf of the faculty of dentistry of the Canadian universities listed hereunder:

1959-60: University of Toronto, $169,304; University of Alberta, $960.

1960-61: University of Toronto, $31,373; University of Alberta, $4,490.

1961-62: University of Toronto, $34,936; University of Manitoba, $18,558; University of Alberta, $4,266.

1962-63: University of Toronto; $34,497; University of Alberta, $337.

1963-64: University of Toronto, $31,025; University of Alberta, $6,647.

2. At the request of the provinces, two projects related to dental research were approved in 1963-64, namely: (a) Evaluation of a program of interceptive orthodontics (faculty of dentistry, University of Toronto), and (b) A study of the eruption of teeth and growth of jaws in normal children from birth to three years of age and a survey of dental health in chronically ill Canadian children (faculty of dentistry, University of Alberta).

EXCHANGE OF STUDENTS AND PROFESSORS WITH RUSSIA

Question No. 1,960—Mr. More:

1. How many Canadian students have gone to work in or visit institutions in the U.S.S.R. in the past year or so?
2. What U.S.S.R. universities have they worked in or visited and what has been the length of their stay?
3. How many Canadian professors have been invited to go to the U.S.S.R. for a visiting professorship at a U.S.S.R. university during the last year or so?
4. (a) What are their names and qualifications (b) what U.S.S.R. institutions have offered these visiting professorships (c) what has been the length of each visiting professorship?
5. How many U.S.S.R. students have come to Canada to work in or visit our universities during the past year or so?
6. What universities have they worked in or visited and what has been their length of stay?
7. How many U.S.S.R. professors have come to Canada to fill invitations for a visiting professorship in the past year or so?
8. (a) What are their names and qualifications (b) at what Canadian universities have they filled these assignments (c) what has been the length of their assignment in each case?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. 4, 1963-64; 6, 1964-65.

[Mr. Howe (Hamilton South).]

2. Moscow University, one year.

3. Visiting professorships, six.

4. (a) Dr. W. W. Moorhouse, professor of geology, University of Toronto; (b) Academy of Sciences; (c) exact length of assignment not available.

Dr. S. G. Mason, head, physical chemistry division, Pulp and Paper Research Institute of Canada, Montreal; (b) institutes in Leningrad and Moscow; (c) three weeks.

Dr. H. E. Welch, research institute, Department of Agriculture, research branch, Belleville, Ontario; (b) Academy of Sciences; (c) exact length of assignment not available.

Dr. P. A. Kondra, associate professor of poultry science, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg; (b) Academy of Sciences; (c) six weeks.

Dr. J. D. Keys, physics and radiotracer subdivision, Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, Ottawa; (b) Academy of Sciences; (c) five months.

Professor L. G. Berry, Department of Geological Science, Queen's University; (b) Academy of Sciences (Geology); (c) two weeks.

5. 3, 1963-64; 6, 1964-65.

6. University of Toronto, Ontario Agricultural College in Guelph, University of British Columbia. One year.

7. 6 in 1963-64.

8. (1963-64).

(a) Dr. L. N. Andreev, Main Botanical Garden, Academy of Sciences; (b) University of Saskatchewan and Research Institute; (c) six months.

Academician L. I. Sedov; (b) Institute of Aeorospace Studies, Toronto University; (c) one month.

Dr. S. I. Berezin; (b) National Research Council and visits in Kingston; (c) eight months.

Mr. O. A. Kossov, Institute of Automation and Telemechanics, Academy of Sciences; (b) National Research Council (and visits); (c) ten weeks.

Dr. E. L. Franksvich, Academy of Sciences (chemistry); (b) University of Alberta, University of British Columbia, University of Manitoba; (c) one and a half months.

Dr. D. S. Korzinsky, geochemist; (b) McMaster University, Hamilton; (c) one week.

TENDERS FOR REFITS, FRIGATES AND DESTROYER ESCORTS

Question No. 1,963—Mr. Bell:

Have tenders or bids been called with respect to the program of refitting and conversion of frigates and destroyer escorts and, if so, what were the original amounts, final costs, and the number of days for completion of each in both east and west coast yards?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Yes, for destroyer escorts H.M.C.S. Skeena and Margaree. Contract values were: $2-884,519.75 and $3,218,352 respectively.

Contract prices were the result of competitive tenders. They cover the total conversion work including helicopter platform and facilities, variable depth sonar and improved communications facilities. The contract prices also include all repair and refit requirements known at the time tenders were invited. However in any refit of a ship there is additional work which cannot be defined at the time of the contract award since its extent is known only after the opening up of machinery spaces and equipment. Such work will be extra to the contract but will be priced on the basis of firm labour overhead and profit rates quoted in the initial tenders, and will be relatively small in relation to the total contracts.

Work on H.M.C.S. Skeena commenced at an eastern yard on July 15, 1964, with completion scheduled 13 months later. Work on H.M.C.S. Margaree commenced at a west coast yard on September 15, 1964, with completion scheduled 13 months later.

ATOMIC ENERGY LTD.—PURCHASE OF PROPERTY, CARLETON COUNTY, ONT.

Question No. 1,993—Mr. Nugent:

1. Has Atomic Energy of Canada Limited acquired a site in the township of March in the county of Carleton and, if so (a) from whom was it acquired (b) how many acres (c) what was the price per acre (d) what, in detail, were the arrangements made for sanitary sewer, storm sewer and water connections (e) what amount of the cost of such services is to be contributed by (i) Atomic Energy of Canada Limited (ii) the land developer who sold it (iii) the township of March (iv) any other municipality or person (f) at what date will each of such services be available to the land purchased (g) for what purpose will the land be used?

2. Did Atomic Energy of Canada Limited negotiate with any other property owners in the township of March or the township of Nepean for a site and, if so (a) with whom (b) at what price per acre did each such person offer to sell (c) what arrangements were proposed by such persons for services (d) why was each such offer rejected in favour of the site acquired?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited advises as follows: 1. Yes. (a) March Ridge Development Ltd., original owners, deeded from Fairfield Investments Ltd., (b) 44, (c) $3,000, (d) Sanitary sewer and water connections to be provided by Wm. Teron Ltd., from neighborhood No. 3, community No. 1, March ridge, to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited site and plant. No storm sewer, (e) (i) Nil (ii) 100 per cent (iii) Nil (iv) Nil, (f) April 30, 1965, (g) site for office and manufacturing building for commercial operations.

2. Yes. (a) Township of Nepean (1) national capital commission, two sites (2) Conarm Developments Limited, (b) (1) national capital commission, lease basis, (2) Conarm Developments Limited, $2,700 per acre, (c) (1) national capital commission, services available to property line (site 1) and by arrangement with defence research board at Atomic Energy of Canada Limited expense (site 2), (2) Conarm Developments Limited, a well on site. Sanitary sewer available on site property line, (d) the property acquired was the most desirable in terms of use and the evaluated cost per acre was lower than the two other sites referred to.

LANGUAGE USED IN UN SPEECHES

Question No. 1,994—Mr. Fisher:

In speeches made by members of Canada's permanent delegation to the last two United Nations assembly sessions, how many were given (a) in English (b) in French?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): According to the records of the permanent mission of Canada in New York, members of the Canadian delegation gave 19 speeches in English and four in French during the 1962 assembly; during the 1963 assembly, 18 statements were made in English and 10 in French. Those figures embrace all statements of substance made in plenary or in committees, but exclude minor and ad hoc intervention not based on a prepared text.

During the same period, the Secretary of State for External Affairs gave two speeches, one in English, one in French.

The normal practice for the Canadian representatives is to speak in their mother tongue.

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN DESALINATION SYMPOSIUM

Question No. 2,015—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Has the government now replied to the invitation of the United States to participate in the first international symposium on water desalination and, if so, what has been the reply?

2. Have delegates to the symposium been chosen and, if so, who are they?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes, the invitation has been accepted.

2. The delegates have as yet not been chosen. The conference takes place in October 1965.

FORT SMITH, N.W.T., AIRPORT FIREFIGHTING EQUIPMENT

Question No. 2,017—Mr. Rhéaume:

1. Has the Department of Transport purchased the additional firefighting equipment required to meet minimum standards of safety for the airport at Fort Smith, N.W.T., and, if so, is this equipment on site?
2. If this equipment has not yet been acquired, when will this be done and on what date will this equipment be installed on site?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): 1. No additional firefighting equipment has been purchased to augment the crash rescue vehicle presently at Fort Smith airport.

2. Specifications for the additional firefighting equipment for Fort Smith and other airports are being developed. It is now expected that a new aircraft crash firefighting vehicle will be delivered to Fort Smith airport during the late summer or early fall of 1965.

SHORE PROTECTION AND ROAD REPAIRS, CARIBOU ISLAND, N.S.

Question No. 2,020—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Were public tenders called for new shore protection work and repairs to Lightstation road at Caribou island, N.S., and, if not, what individuals and firms were asked to tender on this work?
2. What were the names of the tenderers and the amount of the various tenders?
3. To whom was the contract awarded?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): 1. Tenders by invitation to the following were requested: R. C. Goodall and A. E. McMaster R.R. No. 3, Pictou, Nova Scotia; Ernest A. Falconer, R.R. No. 3, Pictou, Nova Scotia, Joseph Almon, New Glasgow, Nova Scotia.

2. Tenders received were from: Ernest A. Falconer, $3,929; Goodall and McMaster, $6,968.

3. The contract was awarded to Ernest A. Falconer.

REPORT ON UNEMPLOYMENT IN PICTOU COUNTY, N.S.

Question No. 2,029—Mr. MacEwan:

Has the Minister of Labour received a report from the Atlantic development board regarding unemployment in Pictou county, as a result of the reference to the board of this matter on the recommendation of the New Glasgow district labour council?

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The Atlantic development board, in acknowledging the request submitted by the New Glasgow district labour council, advised that the board would examine, in co-operation with other departments, the feasibility of carrying out the investigation requested. It is understood that under ARDA a detailed research program has been initiated of an area which includes the county of Pictou and the Atlantic development board is being kept informed of progress made on these studies. Three years ago the Department of Labour in co-operation with the government of Nova Scotia undertook a study of the manpower resources of the New Glasgow labour market area which includes the county of Pictou.

DISPOSITION OF AIR OBSERVER SCHOOL, CRUMLIN, ONT.

Question No. 2,037—Mr. Irvine:

Have the properties formerly known as No. 4 air observer school, Crumlin, Ontario, been turned over to war assets disposal corporation for disposition and, if so (a) what offers, if any, to purchase buildings and/or property have been received (b) what is the anticipated finalization date of disposition of these properties?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): In so far as Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is concerned, the answer is as follows:

1. Nine buildings of the former No. 4 air observer school at Crumlin, Ontario were declared surplus and offers thereon were invited by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation for September 23, 1964. Twelve offers were received but after the buildings were advertised and prior to the closing date, the Department of Transport requested two of the buildings, which were allocated to them. In view of the reduced quantity of buildings bidders were subsequently given an opportunity to revise their bids and the highest bidder on this second round has now been requested to forward the balance of his purchase price and performance deposit. Removal of the buildings and the restoration of the site is to be completed by May 1, 1965.

TENDERS FOR DRYDOCK CONSTRUCTION, CLARENVILLE, NFLD.

Question No. 2,043—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Have tenders been called for the construction of a drydock at Clarenville, Newfoundland?
2. For what purpose will the drydock be used and who will use it?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): 1. Contract for the issue of the main haulout section of the drydock facilities at Clarenville was awarded to Avalon Construction Company of St. John's, Newfoundland, in June 1963 and this portion of the drydock is now 98 per cent complete. Tenders for the transfer system and fitting out wharf have been called.

2. The purpose of the drydock is to inspect ships out of the water in compliance with the requirements of the Canada Shipping Act. The drydock will be operated by Newfoundland Ship Yards Limited of Clarenville, Newfoundland.

AREA SERVED BY NATIONAL EMPLOYMENT OFFICE, PEMBROKE, ONT.

Question No. 2,049—Mr. Martineau:

1. What area is included in the area served by the national employment service office located in the town of Pembroke in the province of Ontario?
2. Has this area been designated as a surplus labour area by the federal government?
3. Does this area include any portion of the county of Pontiac, province of Quebec?
4. What criteria were employed to designate the town of Pembroke and the area served by the national employment office in that town as a surplus labour area?
5. Were the number of claimants for unemployment benefits or the number registered at the national employment service office, at Pembroke, used as one of the criteria?
6. Did such statistics include claimants for unemployment benefits or applicants for positions who live in the county of Pontiac and, if so, how many such claimants and applicants were there from the county of Pontiac and what proportion of the total number of claimants and applicants of the Pembroke area did such claimants and applicants constitute?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): 1. The Pembroke national employment service area comprises some 2,700 square miles of territory, located in eastern Ontario and extending some 130 miles along the Ottawa river. The area takes in the following townships in Renfrew county: Alice, Brudenell, Buchanan, Burns, Clara, Fraser, Hagarty, Head, Jones, Lyndoch, Maria, McKay, North Algona, Pembroke, Petawawa, Radcliffe, Raglan, Richards, Rolph, Sebastopol, Sherwood, South Algona, Stafford, Westmeath, Wilberforce, Wylie and part of Bromley; and the following townships in Nipissing district: Airy, Dickens, Lyell, Murchison and Sabine.

2. Yes.

3. No.

4. The Pembroke national employment service area qualified for designation under the following set of conditions of the established criteria. It was classified by the Department of Labour as a labour surplus area for one half or more of the summer months, May to October, during the three years prior to designation and it experienced an employment decrease in each of these years.

5. The classification of national employment service areas by the Department of Labour is based on the number of persons registered in a given area expressed as a percentage of the number of wage and salary workers in that area. The N.E.S. registrations are taken into account in the unemployment criterion for designating areas. This criterion is based on the classification of the area over the years.

6. The statistics that have been used in this regard refer to the total number registered at the N.E.S. office. There is no information on the number of applicants that were from the county of Pontiac.

ESKASONI INDIAN RESERVE MEDICAL ADVISERS

Question No. 2,071—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. What are the names and addresses of the medical advisers or advisers who provide service to the Indians at the Eskasoni reserve?
2. On what date were they appointed and what is their remuneration?
3. Up to the present date, what remuneration have they received since they were appointed?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Medical officer in charge, Sydney clinic, medical services, Department of National Health and Welfare, 63 Charlotte street, Sydney, Nova Scotia. The staff of this clinic varies from time to time as it is rotated but all are full time employees of the Department of National Health and Welfare. The clinic includes on its staff public health nurses, a sanitary inspector and other health workers.

The public health services of the Nova Scotia department of health are available when these are required to supplement the federal department's program. The provincial department of health carries out the tuberculosis control program in this area on behalf of the federal department.

An occasional patient is referred to a privately practising specialist, chosen in accordance with the requirements of the case rather than according to any fixed rule. Except when referred by the department, Indians who consult privately practising physicians in the Sydney area do so at their own expense on a private patient basis.

2 and 3. See 1 above.

OLDER WORKERS INCENTIVE PLAN

Question No. 2,072—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. How much money was spent in advertising the older workers incentive plan?
2. How many were placed in employment as a result of this plan?
3. Does the government consider this a successful plan?
4. Is it the intention of the government to propose alterations to the plan and, if so, what are they?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): 1. $184,800, advertising and publicity.

2. 1,948.

3 and 4. The plan was introduced on an experimental one year basis and is currently being evaluated. Government policy with respect to the continuation of the plan will be announced when the evaluation study has been completed.

EXPORT CREDIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Question No. 2,076—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

1. What is the total amount of operating capital of the Export Credit Insurance Corporation which comes from the consolidated revenue fund made up of public taxes or from the national treasury?
2. What is at present the total amount of current loans of the Export Finance Corporation Ltd. (a company belonging to the chartered banks) which are guaranteed by the Export Credit Insurance Corporation?

[Translation]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. The authorized and subcribed capital of the corporation is $15 million of which $5 million has been paid in by the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance has also paid in capital surplus of $5 million. The total amount thus paid in by the Minister of Finance is $10 million which is held in an interest free account of the consolidated revenue fund in accordance with the Financial Administration Act.

2. Export Credits Insurance Corporation has no knowledge of the loans of the Export Finance Corporation of Canada, Limited. Such loans are not guaranteed by the Export Credits Insurance Corporation.

[Text]

STATUS OF QUEBEC DELEGATION IN PARIS

Question No. 2,092—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

1. Has the Canadian government officially asked France to award diplomatic status to the general delegation from the province of Quebec in Paris and, if so (a) when did the government of Canada make such a request (b) what reasons were given in support (c) was a reply received and what did it contain?
2. If no request was made does the government of Canada intend to make such a request to France and when?

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, the Canadian government has not asked the government of France to grant diplomatic status to the Quebec delegation in Paris. For that matter, the government of Quebec has never at any time asked that its delegation in Paris be given diplomatic status. The government of Canada has therefore asked on several occasions, and in complete agreement with the government of Quebec, privileges and immunities for the Quebec delegation in Paris comparable to those which have been accorded for a long time by the British government to the agent general of Quebec and to other provincial representatives in London. Our discussions with the authorities of the government of France on this subject continue, especially through the intervention of our ambassador in Paris. I hope that the government of France will soon be in a position to grant to the Quebec delegation, and in due course to any other delegation of a province of Canada which might be established in Paris, appropriate privileges and immunities which would facilitate the effective accomplishment of their tasks.

[Text]

STILLBIRTHS AND CONGENITAL ABNORMALITIES

Question No. 2,095—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

In each province, in each of the last ten years, what has been the rate per 1,000 births of (a) stillbirths, and (b) congenital abnormalities (all types)?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): (a) Rate, per 1,000 births, of stillbirths (28+ weeks gestation) Canada and provinces, 1954-63:

Year	Canada	Nfld.	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.	Que.	Ont.	Man.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Yukon	N.W.T.
1954....	16.3	17.4	21.2	16.9	18.5	20.6	14.7	14.3	12.9	12.3	11.2	11.6	20.2
1955....	15.4	16.1	15.6	17.2	15.6	18.8	14.4	13.6	12.0	12.4	11.0	11.3	13.5
1956....	15.2	17.6	18.8	17.3	19.6	18.7	13.5	14.2	12.0	11.6	11.3	8.2	13.8
1957....	14.4	16.6	16.9	16.5	14.6	17.7	13.1	13.3	11.6	10.7	10.8	10.0	12.1
1958....	14.1	17.7	16.0	16.6	15.2	16.9	13.0	14.0	11.2	10.6	10.4	10.5	10.5
1959....	13.5	20.3	19.5	13.5	15.1	16.1	12.7	12.9	10.1	9.8	10.0	11.0	13.9
1960....	13.3	17.8	13.0	14.4	14.8	16.7	12.2	11.9	9.1	9.5	10.8	12.8	10.8
1961....	12.5	17.7	16.0	15.2	13.2	13.9	11.7	12.8	11.0	9.5	10.6	7.1	14.1
1962....	12.4	16.3	20.3	14.1	14.2	13.3	12.2	11.9	10.5	9.9	9.8	5.5	16.5
1963....	12.2	16.9	17.3	12.5	14.7	13.3	11.9	11.7	10.2	9.5	9.6	9.9	14.4

(b) No information available in the dominion bureau of statistics.

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS ADVERTISING COSTS

Question No. 2,100—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

What is the cost to the government of advertising the current issue of Canada savings bonds?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): It is expected that the cost of advertising for the 1964 Canada savings bonds campaign will be $972,000.

NATIONAL DEBT

Question No. 2,105—Mr. Mather:

What was the amount in dollars of the federal debt in 1940, 1950, 1960 and 1963?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Unmatured funded debt and treasury bills as of March 31: 1940, $3,695,685,192; 1950, $15,188,138,961 (including $115,651,082 refundable portion of excess profits tax); 1960, $15,890,151,803; 1963, $17,961,836,331.

INMATES OF MENTAL INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 2,106—Mr. Mather:

1. How many persons were in Canadian mental institutions at the end of the calendar years 1961, 1962 and 1963?

2. What percentage, or ratio, of the population did they represent in the years indicated?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1 and 2. Persons in Canadian mental institutions at the end of calendar year:

1961: (117 institutions reporting out of 146 in operation, representing 98.4 per cent of the operating rated bed capacity.) Patients on books[1], 75,372 or 413 per 100,000 population[2]; patients in institutions, 65,312 or 358 per 100,000 population[2].

1962: (137 institutions reporting out of 150 in operation, representing 97.9 per cent of the operating rated bed capacity.) Patients on books[1], 76,140 or 410 per 100,000 population[2]; patients in institutions, 66,096 or 356 per 100,000 population[2].

1963: Data not yet available.

[1] Includes on probation, boarding out or otherwise absent.

[2] June 1 population figures as enumerated in census years or estimated for inter-censal years.

STUDENT LOANS GRANTED

Question No. 2,119—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. As of September 20, 1963, how many students in each province and territory, have been granted Canada student loans?

2. In each province and territory what was the total of loans granted as of September 30, 1964?

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. This information is not yet available.

2. This information is not yet available.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP IN INTERNATIONAL COMMISSIONS, ETC.

Question No. 1,669—Mr. Latulippe:

1. On what international commissions, committees or other agencies is Canada represented within the framework of the United Nations organization or otherwise?

2. What is the nature and purpose of each such commission, committee or agency; what is Canada's role in each; and what countries are members?

3. Who are the Canadian personnel on each such commission, committee or agency; who directs each; and what proportion do they represent in comparison with other countries?

4. What were Canada's yearly expenditures in connection with each such commission, committee or agency since its creation?

5. What were the increases or decreases in personnel and appropriations of each such commission, committee or agency since its inception, and in each case, for what reasons were those increases or decreases made?

6. During the past ten years, did Canada withdraw from any such commission, committee or agency and, if so, from which body and for what reason?

7. What conditions are generally required before Canada participates as a member of an international commission of the United Nations?

Return tabled.

FEDERAL PAYMENT FOR MEDICAL CARE

Question No. 1,805—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. How many people by provinces, receive medical care paid in full by the federal government?

2. How many people, by provinces, receive medical care paid in part by the federal government?

Return tabled.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT USE OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 1,854—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. How many computers, of all types, are now being used by the federal government?

2. How many civil service positions have been pre-empted by computers in each of the last five years?

3. What has been the total operating cost to the government of computers in each of the last five years?

Return tabled.

RESEARCH GRANTS TO MEDICAL SCHOOLS

Question No. 1,947—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. In each of the last five years, what has been the total of medical research grants by the government to each Canadian medical school?

2. What has been the specific purpose of each such grant given in the last year?

Return tabled.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMMUNIST CHINA—METHOD OF EXPLODING NUCLEAR DEVICE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him whether the government of Canada has any information on whether the detonation of the nuclear device by communist China was done in the air. If so, has the government given consideration to the request of the Voice of Women, calling on the government to step up and expand immediately all existing monitoring procedures for the detection of radioactive fall-out, in particular iodine 131, which is expected to fall on Canada as a result of this test?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I understand that the measurement of this type of radioactive fall-out cannot be undertaken for an indefinite period, perhaps I had better take my right hon. friend's question as notice, and give him a detailed answer tomorrow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Could the minister say whether the government of Canada has any knowledge as to whether this explosion was in the air, in the atmosphere or underground?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, to the best of our knowledge it was in the atmosphere.

DISCUSSIONS WITH LEADERS OF NEW U.K. GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the new foreign secretary for Great Britain, Patrick Walker, has announced that arrangements for a visit and consultation with U.S. secretary of state Dean Rusk within the next few days, could the minister say whether he has had any communication with the new foreign secretary, and will Mr. Walker be including Canada in his itinerary?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the event that the arrangements made with the U.S. secretary of state are firm, and notwithstanding the fact that I shall shortly have an opportunity at the United Nations to meet Mr Walker in his new capacity, I have indicated that we would be very happy if he would come here, and in fact that we believe we would find such a meeting useful.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the announcement of the pending visit of Right Hon. Harold Wilson, Prime Minister of Great Britain, to Washington, would the government give consideration to extending an invitation to him to visit Ottawa while he is on this continent?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already sent a message to the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom expressing hope for an early exchange of views, and I have had a telephone conversation with him as well. His reaction to this idea was a very positive one, and I think he will visit Ottawa on his next crossing of the Atlantic.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): As a supplementary question, in view of—

Mr. Fisher: Socialists all.

Mr. Gordon: Listen to who is talking, of all people.

Mr. Douglas: —in view of the interest expressed by the government of the United Kingdom in extending commonwealth trade, are any plans being made for discussion of this subject with the United Kingdom government?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, that is certainly one of the matters we would wish to discuss most with the Prime Minister and foreign secretary of the United Kingdom.

FINANCE

INTEREST RATES ON SHORT AND LONG TERM BORROWINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I am pleased to note that the yield on 90 day treasury bills has been reduced to some 3.68 per cent as a means of discouraging the inflow of foreign, short term capital, and I wish to ask the minister whether he is planning to take any similar steps with respect to long term borrowings in the Canadian market?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, the weekly treasury bill rate fluctuates from time to time. Among other things it is influenced by short term rates in the United States. Dealing with the second part of the question, I think it is fair to say that the spread between Canadian and U.S. rates both long and short term, have been narrower in the past year than they were prior to that period, and this has a tendency to influence the inflow of capital in the way my hon. friend suggested.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question may I ask the minister whether he is planning to introduce at this session any measures to deal with the deficit in our balance of payments with the United States, which in the first half of this year was approximately $1,070 million?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I shall be surprised if the current account deficit in total reaches anything like that figure this year. The imbalance on a bilateral basis with the United States has been of this order for some time, and this is one of the things of which the government is very conscious. I may add that the government's policies are directed over the long term toward correcting this imbalance, but I do not think it is something which should be done in a precipitate manner. I believe we should work at it carefully. One of the most important things is to encourage greater exports to the United States, in particular greater exports of Canadian manufactured goods, and this is something to which the government is giving its close attention.

BANK OF CANADA COMMITMENT UNDER AGREEMENT WITH U.K. GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Can the minister tell us whether he has yet had an opportunity to consult with the new chancellor of the exchequer of Great Britain; and if so, is he now in a position to tell the house the extent to which the Bank of Canada is committed under the recent stand-by agreement with the British government?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first part of the question I would say that I had the pleasure of a long conversation with the new chancellor of the exchequer when I was in London last June, and I have written to him subsequently to congratulate him on his appointment and also to say that, while the newspapers are commenting a great deal upon the fact that the government of which he is a member has a majority of only four seats, these things are relative and from this distance that does not look so bad.

With regard to the last part of the question, I do not think my opinion has changed. With great respect, I do not think there would be any advantage in disclosing details at this stage.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REPORTED INTENTION TO APPLY TIGHT MONEY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It concerns a report issued by the Canadian stock exchange this morning to the effect that the government is fearing inflation and is now applying a tight money policy. Is that so?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report, which sounds to me as if it were highly exaggerated.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, my question is a related one. Is the government considering action to prevent the creeping inflation which is destroying the value of the consumer's dollar?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STUDY OF PROVINCIAL ALLOCATIONS OF FEDERAL REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Finance?

Could the minister tell us whether he has now obtained the report he asked his department to prepare concerning federal expenditures in every Canadian province?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, some three months ago I asked for a study to be made in order that I might be able to answer some questions that in the interim have been made orders for returns. Those studies have taken a great deal of time. They have taken up the work of several members of my department over several months. They are extremely difficult and complex studies. I have not received them as yet, but I hope to have them in the not too distant future.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Does the Minister of Finance intend to table the report in the house as soon as he receives it?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I intend to answer the questions that have now been made orders for returns, and I shall do that at the earliest possible date.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A further question, Mr. Speaker.

Will the minister table only parts of the report so as to answer questions on the order paper or does he intend to table the whole report of the investigation made by his officials?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: I do not know what is meant by a report, Mr. Speaker. Certain studies are being made with a view to answering the questions that were placed on the order paper, and those questions will be answered as fully and completely as it is possible to do.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REPORTED THREATS AND PROPERTY DAMAGE RESPECTING MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice, which question is pressing and is of capital as well as national importance with regard to the safety of the members of parliament.

Over the week end we learned that the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Dupuis) as well as the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) had been threatened by the F.L.Q. (Front de Libération du Québec).

Has the Minister of Justice investigated this matter, with a view to establishing whether, since the member for Three Rivers was concerned, the F.L.Q. had indeed made such threats, or whether they were made instead by the Quebec Liberal federation?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first incident mentioned by the hon. member for Mégantic, I must say that I have had, personally, no information on the matter.

Still, I have been much concerned by yesterday's news relating what had occurred in the case of the hon. member for Three Rivers. As he is obviously one of the most likeable and popular members of this house, I hastened, upon arriving at the office, and without interfering in provincial "jurisdiction" with regard to the administration of justice, to request a full report or at least full information on this matter.

[Text]

POSSIBLE ACTION RESPECTING ONTARIO SUPREME COURT JUDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rhéaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice. Is he in a position to answer the question put to him on October 13 by my colleague the hon. member for Yukon, which was as follows:

—I should like to ask the Minister of Justice . . . whether the federal government is considering taking any action under the Judges Act with respect to Mr. Justice Landreville.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the charge which had been laid against Mr. Justice Landreville was dismissed at the preliminary hearing stage; that is to say, the judge decided there was insufficient evidence for the case to go to trial. Of course there is nothing that ought to be done or can be done under the Judges Act except to take into account the normal course of judicial process.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is the minister entirely correct in that? Even though there was insufficient evidence to establish a criminal charge and send this matter for trial, is it not proper that a judge, under the circumstances, should have his conduct examined by way of a commission, in order to ascertain whether the action taken was such that it constituted on his part such a dereliction of duty as not to be in keeping with the position of a high court justice?

Miss LaMarsh: Like Courtemanche.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I would much rather take that question as notice.

DORCHESTER PENITENTIARY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STABBING OF GUARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Is the minister now in a position to report to the house on the investigation carried out by Mr. D. M. McLean into the murder of Edwin James Masterton while he carried out his duties as a guard at Dorchester penitentiary, which report the minister informed me on September 29 would be ready within 10 days?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not, but I will inquire about the state of the report.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's recent statement to the house that the fatal stabbing of a guard at Dorchester was not connected with the serious overcrowding at that institution, and in view of the fact that this opinion has now been publicly seconded by the commissioner of penitentiaries, will the minister enlighten the house as to what purpose will be served by the appointment of a commission of inquiry into the incident when both the minister and the commissioner of penitentiaries have already drawn and published their own conclusions?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, the reason for appointing a board of inquiry or a commission of inquiry is obvious, and I think it is only fair that I be allowed to look into the report when I receive it.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

STATEMENT BY JUSTICE MINISTER RESPECTING RADIO INTERVIEW

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, while I have the floor I should like to reply to a question directed to me by the right hon. leader of the official opposition last Friday, which appears at the bottom of page 9116 of the English version of Hansard of October 16, 1964. I shall quote the exact text in the language in which it was asked as this is always the best way to proceed. I quote:

[Text]

I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether in the course of an interview on the C.B.C. yesterday, dealing in particular with the formula for the amendment of the constitution, he was asked a question to this effect: "Does this formula mean that the door is now open for an associate state?" And did he reply thereto in approximately these words: "You might put it that way"?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I have now obtained a transcript of the question as put to me and the answer I gave, and I wish now to read it into the record as being my answer to the question.

[Translation]

Q.—If, for instance, it should happen at a given moment that four provinces, if not more, decide to delegate important powers to the federal government in years to come and that the province of Quebec, for reasons of her own which we can all understand, should decide to keep such jurisdictional powers would it not be possible to arrive at some sort of associate state status for the two ethnic groups, the two nations?

A.—Up to a point, it would be possible. The reason is that in at least four important sectors—for instance, the one dealing with civil rights and property, which the province of Quebec looks upon as something sacred—well, we could have a delegation of authority to the Canadian parliament by seven, eight or nine provinces and then, of course, for that purpose, well, there could exist between Quebec and the other provinces, let us say a difference, if not in actual status—for the constitution would remain the same—at least a difference in fact.

[Text]

Those are the facts, and this is the record.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question. In view of the minister's qualifying remarks preceding his statement, would the same consideration be given to any member of the house who is not a nice man?

CONSIDERATION BY HOUSE COMMITTEE OF AMENDMENT FORMULA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is for the Minister of Justice. Last Thursday the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam asked the minister whether he would consider having the house set up a special committee to consider the problem of an amending formula for the Canadian constitution, in view of its transcendent importance. The minister said he would take the question as notice and answer it later. I wonder if he is now in a position to answer that question.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I am not yet in a position to answer that question either in the negative or in the affirmative, but the matter will be taken up with my colleagues.

Mr. Brewin: Is the minister in a position to tell the house whether before introducing any resolution in parliament requesting the imperial parliament to enact an amending formula, he would first ascertain that the legislatures of all the provinces have agreed to the proposed amending formula?

Mr. Favreau: I thought I had answered that question. But I will add that this is a matter on which I shall be making a statement very shortly.

[Mr. Favreau.]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROTEST RESPECTING PLAY ON PROGRAM "FESTIVAL"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. On October 13 I asked the hon. gentleman a question regarding a production in the C.B.C. program "Festival". What justification was there for the second program in the series last Wednesday, which has been widely criticized because of its demoralizing influence?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I will be very glad to ask the C.B.C. for that information.

REQUEST FOR SETTING UP OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the eulogies which have been paid to committees this afternoon by several speakers, and in view of the motion which was concurred in, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether, because of widespread criticism of some of the C.B.C. programs, he would have a committee set up so the house might have the officers of the C.B.C. before it and so that matters such as, for instance, the Kitsilano reserve property in British Columbia could be considered. These are matters which parliament has a right to know about. Will the hon. gentleman have the committee set up, now that he and his associates have given such support to the further extension of committee work in parliament?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): As the right hon. gentleman knows, all these matters are now before a special advisory committee which is preparing a report for the government. As I have said several times in this house, when this report has been received the government will consider its recommendations and prepare new legislation. Then the house will be asked to form a committee to consider the legislation and to study the new set-up.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With great respect, it is not a question of studying the legislation but of examining what is being done by the C.B.C. in the expenditure of $86 million a year. We want to know about that, and the house has the right to this information without having to wait until some committee set up by the government makes some report, some time, somewhere.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT BY ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the evident need for action to bring about greater unity in Canada, can the Prime Minister advise the house when the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism is expected to render a report?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have already indicated to the house that we hope to have an interim report from the commission in the matter of a few weeks.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LOUISBURG, N.S.—STRIKE OF WORKERS AT HISTORIC SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I had a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources but I see the hon. gentleman is absent, undoubtedly due to illness or official business. May I direct it to the acting minister or to the Prime Minister, in view of the urgency of the matter. In the light of the statement by the minister of northern affairs as reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald on Saturday, that he is prepared to meet at any time with representatives of striking workers on the Louisburg restoration program, will the acting minister or the Prime Minister say whether any steps have been taken to arrange a meeting with the workers' representatives?

Mr. Speaker: Surely this is a question for the order paper. I do not see how the minister could be expected to answer.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): With all due deference, I can understand that Your Honour is probably not aware that these workers are on strike. It started on Thursday or Friday, of last week and it is an urgent matter.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): My colleague communicated with me earlier today, and I hoped to have some information on hand. However, it has not yet been received. I understand the minister concerned will be back, and I gather there will be a report tomorrow.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Would the hon. gentleman prevail on the minister of northern affairs to keep in close touch with the situation so the matter does not get out of hand, as have his dealings with the advisory board in Banff?

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Labour could tell the house the reasons for the strike at the Fort Louisburg restoration project, and whether his department is attempting to reconcile the differences that caused the strike.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I am attempting to reconcile the differences, Mr. Speaker, because the project is located in my constituency.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: But I am not acting in that way as Minister of Labour, because this is a matter of provincial jurisdiction. I think the dispute arises over travel allowances that have been assimilated as part of the wage rates, and with respect to a new flexibility employment plan instituted at the Louisburg project. I have been in touch with the office of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and I understand today that there are in motion procedures that will lead to an early solution of this problem.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN POSITION ON ADMISSION OF COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the remarks by President Johnson last night respecting communist China's changed status in the world, and the remarks of the minister last week, I think it was, when he said words to the effect that we must face up to the recognition of communist China very soon, is Canada going to initiate or support some action to admit communist China to the United Nations, or is Canada now contemplating recognition of red China?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add anything to what I stated as government policy on May 22.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

EGGS—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN DEFICIENCY PAYMENT METHOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture in connection with the 2 cents deficiency payment in regard to eggs. Since these payments are really small and are unfair to the western egg producers, would the minister give serious consideration to providing deficiency payments on a cumulative regional price basis, instead of the basis used at the present time? Would the minister give serious consideration to this matter, in view of the shortcomings of the method used at the present time by the agricultural stabilization board?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, these matters are under consideration and study at all times, and at this particular time they have not been resolved.

Mr. Rapp: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I cannot accept that as an answer, and I would like to debate this issue at ten o'clock this evening.

[Later:]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister consider allowing the stabilization board officials to come before the agricultural committee to study the situation with regard to eggs and the price of eggs which was recently announced?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to take this question under consideration.

STEPS TO IMPROVE POSITION OF EASTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. I wonder whether the minister has been considering the very serious position of eastern farmers in regard to the depressed income situation in which they find themselves. Has he any announcement to make with regard to the policy to be followed or the action it is intended to take in this regard?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have had four bills before the house since June 16. I believe these measures will give them some help in so far as credit is concerned. Also, at the first of next year we expect to introduce some more bills that we think will also help.

Mr. Winkler: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the minister whether he does not really believe that the farmers are in a position where they need income, not credit.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mégantic.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): It is all right, Mr. Speaker; the hon. member just asked the question for me.

RAPESEED—REQUEST FOR ADVANCE OF QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister ask the Canadian wheat board to consider the urgency of an early advance of the quotas for rapeseed?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to quotas of the Canadian wheat board which falls under my jurisdiction, I will take the question as notice.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

CONSIDERATION OF ROYAL COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS BY DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the government has now had the Hall commission report for a full four months, is the Prime Minister now in a position to announce a date for the federal-provincial conference within the six months recommended by that report?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. A good deal of time will still be required, and that was made clear at the federal-provincial conference last week.

SUGGESTED MONITORING OF DAIRY PRODUCTS FOR RADIOACTIVITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the recent Chinese atomic explosion and in view of week end reports that many dairy herds are still grazing outside, will the minister reconsider her decision not to monitor dairy products for radioactive elements?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As of this date, Mr. Speaker, it is not possible to ascertain what has happened as a result of this single explosion. As my hon. friend knows, we receive daily reports with respect to air samples, and none of them has yet shown any significant change.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF GILL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Labour. It concerns a question that has been asked in this house a great many times and is of the utmost importance, particularly at this time of year. Is the minister willing to consider as soon as possible the formation of a committee to study the Gill committee report with regard to the lamentable, abnormal situation that exists at the moment with regard to the administration and functioning of the unemployment insurance commission?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker. The unemployment insurance fund is in a solvent condition at the moment, reflecting the improved employment situation. This is the best answer I can give to the hon. member's question.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister did not quite get the point of my question. It referred to the formation of a committee to study the Gill committee report, and was not so much concerned about the financial situation of the unemployment insurance fund as with the administration of the commission. I refer to the administration itself and the effect of applying the law as it exists, which is causing hardship across this country at the moment.

Mr. MacEachen: It is not the intention of the government to send the Gill committee report to a committee of the house. When legislation is put forward based on the Gill committee report, or arising out of that report, that will perhaps be the time to send this matter to a committee for study.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, would the minister consider forming a committee so some of the government representatives in this administration can come before the committee and answer questions?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker. That would not be in accord with the statement I have already made as to the policy to be followed.

TRADE

FAILURE TO INCLUDE FISHERIES REPRESENTATIVE IN MISSION TO CARIBBEAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a question directed to me last Friday by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg, in which he asked why it was that a representative of the fresh and salt fishing industry was not included in the trade mission which is going to the West Indies, sponsored by my department.

The reason we did not include a fisheries representative in the Caribbean food products trade mission was that we had sent a specialized Canadian products trade mission to the Caribbean and to Latin America in 1962. Last year, in 1963, we sent a fisheries specialist to the Caribbean to reassess and report on this market, and the information was provided to the industry. In planning its trade promotion program the department has always treated fish and fish products as a special subject, not part of any generalized trade mission with respect to market development projects. We are keeping this whole matter under continual review, and intend sending a fisheries mission for reconnaissance purposes to a number of key markets. This year we have already sent some to Japan and Scandinavia.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPORTED INTENTION TO INCREASE LOCAL POSTAL RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether, as a result of a public statement made by him over the week end in the city of Windsor, Canadians must now expect a general increase in postal rates.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, certainly not as the result of any statement I made there.

[Later:]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce. Does the Postmaster General intend to raise the local postal rate from 4 cents to 5 cents, and would this apply to smaller communities?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question I have nothing to add to the statement that I made earlier this year when I introduced the bill which I hope will eventually lead to an amendment to the Post Office Act, and to the further statement I made when the estimates of the Post Office Department were before the house. I think the time has come when we will have to abolish the local delivery rate; I think such action is long overdue, but that is a matter for this house to decide.

IMMIGRATION

TORONTO—STATUS OF PERSONS CONCERNED WITH NEWSPAPER STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. My question arises out of an answer given on his behalf on Friday by his parliamentary secretary to a question asked earlier by the hon. member for Danforth, and it relates to the six persons in Canada without status who are involved in the I.T.U. dispute in Toronto. Has the minister been able to resolve this issue or do anything about it since the answer was made on Friday?

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker. I was informed of that supplementary question this morning. I shall inquire and I shall be very happy, within a few days, to supply the hon. member with information.

[Text]

MARITIME FREIGHT RATES

INQUIRY AS TO PROVISION FOR STUDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the request made by Premier Stanfield last week of the maritime transportation commission concerning fears of further intrusion on the Maritime Freight Rates Act, would the Prime Minister restate the guarantees which I believe he gave to Premier Stanfield, and more particularly would he announce that the special study as promised on this whole matter will be set up fairly soon?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we had a very useful exchange of views on this matter. If my hon. friend would put his question on the order paper I would be able to give the details in my reply to that question. I have not all of them in my mind at the moment.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister not think, in view of the railway legislation which is going to be considered very soon and the fact there may be exceptions to the Maritime Freight Rates Act provided therein, that this study should be announced before this hearing proceeds?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid any delay I will be glad to take my hon. friend's question as notice, and perhaps I can reply to it orally tomorrow.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MEASURE RESPECTING HOURS OF WORK, MINIMUM WAGES, ETC.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. C-126, respecting hours of work, minimum wages, etc.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words with respect to clause 2. I propose to move an amendment to this clause, but let me say it is only the first of two or three amendments which we may wish to move to this clause. As you are aware, sir, we are now operating under a rule which gets us right down to business; therefore I shall come straight to the point concerning which I wish to move an amendment.

Clause 2 paragraph (f) lists a certain number of general holidays. Or, to put it another way, this paragraph defines a general holiday as meaning New Year's day, Good Friday, Victoria day, Dominion day, Labour day, Thanksgiving day and Christmas day, and includes any day substituted for any such holiday pursuant to section 28.

As the minister and hon. members of the committee will realize, we feel that providing for only seven general holidays, which those individuals who come under the provisions of this act will receive with pay, is not sufficient. We feel that the number should be either eight or nine.

I may say that we were not impressed by the arguments the minister advanced with respect to this point when he concluded the debate on second reading. As a matter of fact his submission at that stage of the debate suggested that all this bill is doing is simply making law of what now is the practice or fact, so far as most of the workers who come under federal labour jurisdiction are concerned. We feel that the number of holidays should be increased to nine, but we realize that we may run into difficulty in proposing an amendment increasing the number from seven to nine. Therefore, in the hope that by making our request a reasonable one it will be accepted, we propose that there be eight general holidays or in other words that to the list of holidays set out in this paragraph there be added one more, namely Remembrance day.

I point out, Mr. Chairman, that Remembrance day is included in the list of holidays in the Civil Service Act, and also in the list of days that we in this house have decided not to sit. There is a general feeling throughout Canada that this day ought to be recognized as a holiday. We feel very strongly that Remembrance day should be added to the list as set out in paargraph (f).

The arguments for such an addition are so obvious and clear it is hardly necessary to debate the proposal at any length; therefore I move:

That paragraph (f) of clause 2 be amended by inserting a comma immediately after the words "Thanksgiving day" and by inserting immediately after the said comma the words "Remembrance day".

If this amendment is accepted then paragraph (f) of clause 2 in its entirety would read as follows:

"general holiday" means New Year's day, Good Friday, Victoria day, Dominion day, Labour day, Thanksgiving day, Remembrance day and Christmas day and includes any day substituted for any such holiday pursuant to section 28.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the minister, having thought this matter over since the second reading stage of the debate, will see fit to agree to this amendment, and that he will appreciate our reasonableness in asking for an increase from seven to eight rather than to nine holidays, which we would like to ask for; and that therefore the house will unanimously concur in this amendment providing for eight general holidays under this legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say a few words about the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

I feel that the reasons he put forward were perhaps sufficient when he said that those holidays corresponded with those provided by the house under the report of the committee on procedure. I believe he is right and it is precisely for those reasons that I would ask the minister to consider at the same time adding St. John the Baptist day, which is the feast day of French Canadians observed throughout the province of Quebec, not only by private enterprise but also by government agencies.

If the minister will take it upon himself to introduce his own amendment, we would have nine statutory holidays instead of seven and he would then obtain the unanimous consent, just as he would in order to increase the number of holidays to eight, by including Remembrance day.

It is the only intervention I wanted to make and I hope the minister will take my recommendations into consideration and take upon himself to move an amendment so that from now on we will have nine statutory holidays instead of seven.

[Text]

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, we in the official opposition support the proposed amendment, and feel that Remembrance day is a worthy addition to the list of general holidays provided for in this bill.

I must say in respect to the words of the speaker who has just resumed his seat, without the significance of that day referred to by the member for Winnipeg North Centre in his amendment, there would be no need to celebrate any other holiday. I sometimes feel that Remembrance day is one of the more important holidays that should be observed. If there was no reason to celebrate that day I suggest there would be no need to celebrate days such as the Queen's birthday or Saint John the Baptist day.

There is one other important aspect of this question which I think all hon. members should recognize. In some municipalities, where feeling is strong about Remembrance day, this day is set aside and dedicated to this purpose, where as in other communities it is not so recognized. By accepting this amendment we will eliminate any discriminatory attitude which exists between and among communities across this country.

The members of this party feel that the thought behind the amendment including Remembrance day in the list of general holidays under the provisions of this bill is an exceptionally good thought, and we therefore support the amendment.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise to give my wholehearted support to the amendment as one who has for many years urged that Remembrance day be included as a national holiday. Many veterans and other organizations in all sections across Canada have requested that Remembrance day be set aside as a national holiday. By including this day in this list of holidays we will recognize, in a fitting and proper way, a day that means very much to many Canadians, a day that will never be forgotten by many Canadians, and at the same time provide an opportunity for regularizing its celebration across Canada. This day has been recognized in some sections of the country while not in others, in some municipalities and not in others. By accepting the proposed amendment we will give national recognition to this important day, and provide an opportunity for all those who wish to honour it from year to year.

With those few remarks, Mr. Chairman, I will resume my seat, and I trust that the minister will respond favourably to this amendment which represents the views of a very wide section of the Canadian people.

Mr. Cantelon: When I introduced this subject on Wednesday I was ruled out of order, and I believe quite properly. It was my thought at the time that of all the holidays Remembrance day was the one we could least afford to eliminate. I must confess I was not very much impressed by the minister's argument in which he suggested that seven holidays were sufficient. It seems to me that if seven holidays are enough this is one which should not have been eliminated. As a school teacher, I say that we have few enough days in this country which we can point out to the young children as being of national significance. This is one day that certainly does have national significance. If it is a holiday I am sure it will be brought very strongly to the attention of the young people. This, I feel, is a pre-eminent reason for its being included in the list of holidays.

[Mr. Winkler.]

In addition, I feel that it really should be a holiday, to remind us of all the sacrifices which the young men of this country made during two great wars. This again would be an example to the young people of this country.

Mr. MacEachen: Before the bill was introduced, Mr. Chairman, and since our discussion on second reading I have given consideration to the addition of a further holiday to the list set out in paragraph (f) of clause 2. I think one should start with the argument that, having decided upon seven statutory holidays, we are then obliged to examine which holidays are most generally observed in Canada, in all regions.

Mr. Orlikow: I wonder if the minister could tell us what the magic is about seven? Why does it have to be seven?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, I shall be glad to deal with that, because in establishing standards we are in a sense entering a field that is normally reserved to collective bargaining. It is certainly not the privilege of this House of Commons to legislate completely and fully the working conditions of the work force under our jurisdiction. If we established eight statutory holidays we would be legislating in this respect for 46 per cent of the work force under federal jurisdiction.

I believe, on balance, that having established seven statutory holidays it is desirable to leave the remainder for the field of collective bargaining. Bear in mind that on this continent the United States has never entered the field of establishing statutory holidays. The provinces have not entered this field, either, but we have entered it by establishing seven statutory holidays. We will affect directly at least 10 per cent of the work force under our jurisdiction, which I regard as a very substantial body of men. For example the running trades on the railways at present have no statutory holidays, and they have bargained for their working conditions. We are in that sense establishing seven statutory holidays when no holidays exist at the moment.

I would remind the committee, therefore, that we are taking a very big step in this direction. When you combine the action we are taking on holidays with minimum wages, with vacations with pay and hours of work, as a total package we are asking the employers under our jurisdiction to take, in my view it would be unreasonable to extend it at this time.

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister permit a question before he leaves this aspect of the question? Is he not defeating his own argument? He said at one moment that we must not make it eight because the non-operating railway employees, by and large, have won only seven through collective bargaining. He says we must not therefore interfere with that. On the other hand he says that by providing for seven statutory holidays he is doing something for the running trades employees on the railways because they have not established any statutory holidays through collective bargaining. One argument cancels the other. If we are entering the field at all, and if we are legislating standards in a field in which there is collective bargaining, have we not the right to decide ourselves what these minimum standards should be? Does the minister not realize that that is the basis upon which we feel that eight would be better than seven?

Mr. MacEachen: I think that the apparent contradiction is really only apparent because in the running trades, to which I have referred, they have voluntarily decided to bargain and settle for other matters. In this process of bargaining, they have come down on some other working conditions which they have regarded as more important. Notwithstanding that, we say in this case that to meet the standards that have been established and to which I referred last week, seven statutory holidays should be established.

I do appreciate the views that have been expressed with regard to Remembrance day. There are other days that could be mentioned, but it is a fact that in Canada the most generally observed holidays are those that we have mentioned, namely New Year's day, Labour day, Christmas day, Dominion day, Good Friday, Thanksgiving and Victoria day. Should we then add a further holiday, Remembrance day, which is not fully observed in this way throughout Canada as the schedules of the industrial standards in various provinces will indicate? There is a provision in the bill that will permit employers or employees to substitute a holiday for any of the seven enumerated holidays. This is a clause in certain collective agreements now in the province of Quebec, for example, so that any particular area or industry which felt strongly about observing Remembrance day could do so, and could substitute it for one of the days enumerated.

We have attempted to meet this problem by making this provision. Bear in mind, that we are taking a very big step in this field. We are taking the lead on the continent. We are establishing a standard that has been established through collective bargaining by one of the strongest unions in Canada, namely seven statutory holidays. If we went to eight, we would be legislating for 46 per cent of the work force, which I think goes beyond the intent of a bill that establishes minimum standards. This is my argument, Mr. Chairman, and I regret that I cannot accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Winkler: If I heard the minister properly, he mentioned that great strides forward are indicated in the legislation before us. He referred also to the fact that certain standards had been established by collective bargaining, so obviously he has consulted with one of the larger unions. He referred to this one extra holiday as being burdensome. If we are to take a step forward at all, surely the inclusion of this day, which is so important in comparison with some of those included in this package deal, will not be a burdensome thing. As I said before, it will eliminate a certain amount of intercommunity discrepancy which exists at the moment.

This is not something about which we will get involved in great argument, but I do not think the minister has advocated the proper view. Let us include this day in the package deal, even if it means one of the other days being eliminated. He will not gain anything by saying, "If you want to celebrate this day six months from now, O.K., but pick your own day." There is a lot of significance attached to this particular day and we shall stand firm with the mover of the amendment in support of it.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I am certainly prepared to support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and though up to a point I can see the arguments presented by the minister, nevertheless Remembrance day is a day of great significance and importance to a large majority of people. I do not suggest for one minute that any other day be eliminated, but I think the minister would agree that Remembrance day has greater significance for most Canadians than, for instance, Thanksgiving day. I would like to see eight days stipulated; and to suggest that Remembrance day is of less importance than some of the other days included is something which I, and I am sure most Canadians, would find difficult to follow.

Many persons in this chamber lost relatives or friends in one war or another. Canada has been engaged in a number of conflicts since the beginning of the century, and Remembrance day is the most significant in the year to our people. As was pointed out by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, many of the other statutory holidays could not be celebrated if it were not for the reasons we celebrate Remembrance day.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment and I find the minister's arguments strange. His main reason for opposing the amendment is that the running trades in the railways have no statutory holidays and that the employees belonging to other railway unions have only seven statutory holidays by virtue of their collective bargaining agreement. To argue this is to ignore the whole history of the railway industry, which is about the only one in Canada that operates seven days a week, 24 hours a day, from one end of the country to the other.

It is one of the few industries I know in which workers do not get premium pay for working evenings or nights. It is one of the few industries in which organized workers do not get time and a half for working Saturdays, and double or triple time for working Sundays. This is no criticism of the unions concerned. To a large extent it is due to the nature of the industry which must operate all the time; but simply because railway workers have not been able to win this in their collective agreement, or because they take another day in lieu of Remembrance day, as the minister seemed to suggest, is no argument for saying they ought not have statutory holidays. One might as well argue that they are not entitled to any statutory holidays.

In my own province the provincial government has made Remembrance day a statutory holiday. In fact it has drawn up some pretty stiff regulations prohibiting work on that day without a special permit, and stipulating stiff penalties for anybody who violates them. I join with other members who have spoken on the importance of Remembrance day to people who fought in the forces and to people who lost relatives and friends during the world wars in which Canada has participated.

Now that we have adopted the principle of providing statutory holidays I think we ought not try to make them as few as possible. I am not being too critical of the minister, but having proposed seven statutory holidays I do not think he should refuse to write in Remembrance day as the eighth, because it has great importance to many people in Canada.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, listening to the minister I thought his arguments were convincing in favour of the inclusion of Remembrance day rather than the conclusion he finally made. This is one of the few places where the government can show a little bit of leadership. It is important that we impress upon our younger people the price at which peace has been won, and it is important that we take advantage of Remembrance day to dwell on the nation's role and stake in international affairs. It is also important that we renew that spirit of sacrifice upon which our national purpose depends. For these reasons I hope the minister will reconsider the position he has taken.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the minister's argument is rather weak when he suggests the purpose of this legislation is not to deal with matters which can properly be dealt with by collective bargaining. As I understand the whole purpose of this bill, it is to set fairly high, minimum labour standards. The minister is doing this in the matter of minimum wages, and in arguing as he has done it would be equally valid for him to argue that, because the minimum wage in one province is 50 cents or 75 cents an hour, by suggesting $1.25 an hour he is invading the field of collective bargaining.

When we suggest to him that he add another statutory holiday this is not raising the minimum labour standard for purposes beyond what already exist. Several provinces have provision for statutory holidays with pay. One province provides for eight statutory holidays with pay, and federal employees in it ought not to be treated differently from persons who come under provincial jurisdiction.

Federal civil servants, who unfortunately do not yet come under collective bargaining, are provided by statute with eight statutory holidays.

Mr. Knowles: Nine.

Mr. Douglas: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre corrects me—nine statutory holidays—and surely persons coming under federal jurisdiction ought not to get that much less under this labour legislation than the government is already providing for its own employees. I do not think the minister would invade the field of collective bargaining by agreeing to eight statutory holidays, a provision which already exists in at least one province, which other provinces come close to providing, and which is exceeded in the federal government's relations with its own employees.

After all, the minister with considerable fanfare advertised this bill as advanced labour legislation, as setting up a standard for the provinces to aim at a standard which would provide an incentive to any provinces which are laggard in this regard. Surely in these circumstances the minister does not intend to provide for a lower number of statutory holidays in this legislation than is provided in any provincial legislation.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I say to the minister, a fellow Cape Bretoner, that he is deserving of every commendation for bringing in this bill. He deserves full marks for it. May I say also that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre deserves full marks for bringing in the amendment. I agree with the comments which have been made from this side of the house, particularly in regard to Remembrance day. By putting this day in the bill we would not only be providing another holiday but we would be paying a debt to the veteran, a debt which we truly owe to the veterans; we would be expressing appreciation of all they have done for humanity. If these men who fought for us had not done what they did, I doubt very much whether we would have any House of Commons in which to speak today.

The minister may be thinking that if he were to accept such an amendment the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre or the opposition generally might be given the credit for bringing in this extra holiday. I would ask him to put aside such thoughts. Someone said in years gone by: "Come, let us reason together". Why cannot we get together? I see the minister smiling, but I say this sincerely. Why do we not get together and agree on this amendment, and I am sure the minister would receive full marks for everything he has done so far in connection with this legislation.

Mr. Barnett: If the Minister of Labour is beginning to feel a little badgered on this subject, all I can say is that he deserves to feel badgered.

I know from experience that the minister can from time to time advance arguments which are persuasive, arguments which I am willing to admit are sound and logical. But though I listened to him as carefully as I could today I felt this was not one of the occasions on which he was being either persuasive or logical. He made great play with his assertion that this proposal for seven holidays was really going a great distance. Then he suggested that because in all areas of Canada collective bargaining had not resulted in the achievement of eight or more, we should stop at seven as far as this legislation is concerned. I cannot see the logic of this. As all members know, certain holidays are generally recognized as such in all parts of this country and Remembrance day is one of them. If the minister had brought a proposal before us in this legislation providing for, say, three statutory holidays, I might have seen some force in his argument that this was a minimum standard beyond which we should not proceed. But the hon. gentleman will recall that it was not too many years ago when it was considered an achievement in the process of collective bargaining to have provision for three holidays made in an agreement. The particular union with which I have been associated for a number of years did just that in its first breakthrough in the field of provision for paid statutory holidays in an agreement. Over the years the number has grown until today the collective agreement includes provision for nine; this is in a field which is not within federal jurisdiction.

The objective which the minister announced with respect to this proposed code was that we in this parliament should fix by law certain basic and reasonable standards. It seems to me that having gone as far as to set seven statutory holidays as being a suitable standard the minister should not quibble about adding a further day, a generally recognized holiday. Not to do so would be to defeat his own purpose. The minister appeared extremely uncomfortable as he sought to oppose the amendment which was put forward by hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre. He surely will not argue that the addition of one holiday falling in a month distinct from those in which the other listed holidays occur would raise the minimum standards in this country so high that the balanced package, if that is what he considers this proposed code to be, would be seriously upset. I think it is foolish when we are considering an important piece of legislation such as the bill before us to create a situation which will result in arguments brought forward in the house from time to time in the years which lie ahead. Surely the minister, if he expects to remain in his present portfolio for any appreciable length of time, cannot relish the prospect of having to face, as undoubtedly he will have to do unless the amendment is adopted, the introduction of bills by private members of this house, probably by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, next year and the year after that and in all the years following seeking to incorporate into this labour code this one extra statutory holiday. Some of us hoped that with the introduction of a new labour code this long process of erosion over the years would not be necessary; that the putting forward of what often appear to be futile arguments session after session would no longer be required.

At any rate, along with other members of the committee I join in appealing to the minister to accept the proposal which has been made. Let us agree on this point and accept this relatively minor amendment. There may be more fundamental matters which we would like to see changed, and with regard to these the minister might well be unprepared to make concessions at this time. Perhaps we could understand this attitude. But the amendment before us now is not one of them.

Mr. Churchill: I should like to speak in support of the proposed amendment. While I am speaking the Minister of Labour might take the opportunity of conferring on this particular point with his experienced colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs; he might tell the hon. gentleman what we are discussing and see what he has to say about it. I say this because the Secretary of State for External Affairs has had a good many years of experience in the House of Commons and realizes, as the present Minister of Labour does not realize, that there are occasions when a government should accept suggestions which come forward from the opposition benches, and yield without losing face.

The Minister of Labour is using the same method as was adopted by the Minister of Agriculture a few days ago—refusing to accept any suggestions from this side of the house, as a result of which a prolonged debate developed. Here you have a reasonable suggestion put forward from the opposition side to include one more holiday in the list of statutory holidays; and of all days that should be suggested, it is Remembrance day. A government that was not completely insensitive to the feelings of the people of this country would accept that amendment, apologize for the error of omission, and we would get on with the rest of the bill.

Over the years the Royal Canadian Legion, army and navy veterans, and other veterans organizations, have suggested that Remembrance day should be observed as a holiday, and observed not simply for a day off from work or from the troubles that beset us month by month but a day of actual remembrance of the sacrifices made in warfare. I think it is high time that the parliament of Canada recognized this day for what it is, a day in which the people of this country and the leaders of the country as represented by the various governments, dominion and provincial, take note of the fact that our freedom has been preserved by the sacrifices of Canadians in the past. That is what Remembrance day is.

During the time that I had the privilege of serving as minister of veterans affairs I examined with the officials of that department this problem of the observance of Remembrance day, and I raised this point with them, pointing out that I had observed that there had been a tendency to let the importance of this day slip a little bit as the years go by. It happened between the two world wars. I know from my experience then, when I was engaged in the field of education, that the tendency in many areas was to let the school children and teachers observe Remembrance day, whereas the adults should have been the ones who were setting the example. In some areas that was changed. Then we had the second world war. Remembrance day means even more now than it did in between the two world wars. So I discussed this problem with the officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs and said, "We must do something to assist the serious people in this country who want to properly observe Remembrance day". As a result of some of those discussions we had produced by the national film board the film "The Fields of Sacrifice", which was shown last year for the first time and is now available for all communities across Canada in the 16 millimetre version. This was a government response to the observance of Remembrance day. I had some other ideas with regard to that day, which I was not able to bring into effect due to various changes that took place.

However, here we have the opportunity now presented to us for government recognition, recognition by parliament, of the importance of Remembrance day by adding it to the list of statutory holidays. Amongst these other holidays it ranks very high in the list.

As has already been mentioned, Mr. Chairman, one or two of the days mentioned in this bill cannot conceivably be raised to the level of Remembrance day when it is properly considered. I suggest this government should really consider this matter seriously now, pause for reflection if you wish, and take this matter under consideration; but I would think even better still would be to accept immediately the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and supported by people on this side of the house. This is a day that should be recognized as a statutory holiday, and if it becomes a statutory holiday the adult population of this country can set the proper example to our young people as to what this day means. As it is now, it is a school holiday and school children will recognize it as they do any other holiday. But this should be a day of dedication on the part of the adult population of this country, which understands the sacrifices involved in warfare, on which to express our hope that we will not be involved in war again; that the younger generation will not in their turn have to go through the holocaust of a great war. This is the purpose, as I see it, of Remembrance day. We should make this day available to veterans and the friends and relatives of veterans so they may solemnly observe this day as it should be observed. Mr. Chairman, those are some of the reasons why we feel this amendment should be accepted immediately by the government.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Knowles) agreed to: Yeas, 49; nays, 44.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment carried. Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I want to move another amendment to clause 2. I would refer hon. members to the discussion we had last week when considering this bill, when the hon. member for Yukon, the hon. member for Northwest Territories and myself drew the attention of the house to the fact that clause 2(e) excludes from the provisions of this bill the people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories. It is not my intention this afternoon to go over in detail the arguments that were advanced at that time. However, I think it is worth putting on the record the fact that living in the Yukon and Northwest Territories we have in the neighbourhood of 20,000 people of Indian origin, and according to statistics prepared by the dominion bureau of statistics after the 1961 census was taken, the average annual earnings of the Indian people of Canada was about half the average annual earnings of the people of Canada as a whole. The average annual earnings of the Canadian Indian was just $1,660, while the average annual earnings of Canadian workers as a whole was about $3,250.

In the light of that and also the fact that the Yukon and Northwest Territories have no governments to set minimum wages, as have the other 10 provinces, it seems strange to me that the government proposes in this bill that the Yukon and Northwest Territories be excluded. The minister pointed out when we raised the matter the other day that the Yukon and Northwest Territories are not excluded in terms of people who work in industries which come under federal jurisdiction, but I think this covers only 10 per cent of the people. Since these territories do not have their own provincial governments to pass minimum wage legislation it seems to me there is no reason to exclude the Yukon and Northwest Territories from the provisions of this bill.

I would further point out that we ought to keep in mind that the cost of living in these areas as a result of transportation costs and the fact that there is no basic industry there is very substantially greater than it is in the rest of Canada. Therefore we would only be helping to provide some kind of equality between these two areas and the rest of Canada if we provided as part of this legislation that all of the people in the Yukon and Northwest Territories who work for their living should be entitled to a minimum wage of $1.25 per hour. Therefore I move:

That paragraph (e) of clause 2 be amended by deleting therefrom the words "other than a work, undertaking or business of a local or private nature in the Yukon Territory or the Northwest Territories".

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Chairman, before the committee goes any further in this matter may I ask whether the minister is in a position today to do what he promised the committee he would do—in fact, he said he would be delighted to do it—and that is to check into some of the objections which have been raised by my colleague the hon. member for Yukon and myself on the last occasion concerning the reasoning behind this bill. There is a certain element of confusion here and until such time as that is cleared up it is difficult to say whether an hon. member should or should not go along with this amendment. While supporting the principle and the objective which my hon. friend from Winnipeg North is trying to achieve, it may be that we would do precisely the opposite if we went along with the amendment, unless the minister explained his thinking behind the bill.

Perhaps when he rises to do this he would also answer some of the questions I asked him previously. I realize that at the time the minister was bombarded with questions and had only a few minutes to try to answer many of them, but the point I made at the time and which I will make again now to refresh the minister's mind is this: I want to know with whom his department consulted when they were preparing this legislation. I know they did not ask the hon. member for Yukon for advice, which I am sure he could have given them, and they did not ask me. I am not aware that they made any approach to the councils of the Yukon and Northwest Territories for any advice. The minister will recall, and I repeat, that I had asked him, before he held the federal-provincial conference, to be gracious enough to allow the councils of the Yukon and Northwest Territories to sit in and give him advice about this sort of thing, but as far as I know he did none of this.

Therefore the question I put to him now, and it relates to this amendment, is not only what was the thinking of the officials, but whom they consulted in relation to making these decisions concerning the Yukon and Northwest Territories? In the minister's explanation as recorded at page 9063 of Hansard he said he was not sure whether it was a good thing for the Yukon and Northwest Territories even if these provisions were maintained. But what I want to know is whether consultation was had with any of the elected officials of the councils of the Yukon and Northwest Territories, or even with the commissioners of either the Yukon or Northwest Territories, in relation to this specific bill.

I would point out to the minister that it was suggested that the Yukon and Northwest Territories in fact have labour legislation on these matters at this moment, and the minister indicated that yes, labour ordinances have been passed by the two territories. But in fact this is true in the Yukon Territory whereas it is not true in the Northwest Territories. At the present time there is no legislation anywhere in the Northwest Territories relating to minimum hours of work, minimum pay, annual paid vacations or overtime. It would certainly help me as a member of this committee of the whole if the minister would take time now to do what he said he would do and tell the committee in detail what was the purpose of excluding these two territories. He might also explain once more the technicalities of the matter, which I am sure all of us did not understand on Friday. At the same time will he tell me who advised his department before they decided to put this exclusion into clause 2.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, in clause 2 we exempt from the application of this bill works in the Yukon and Northwest Territories of a local and private nature. I think our thinking on this is understandable: This bill will cover in the Yukon and Northwest Territories industries under federal jurisdiction. In other words, we will claim our jurisdiction over federal industries in the Yukon and Northwest Territories in the same way as we do in the provinces.

I would draw to the attention of the committee the fact that in the past ten years this has been the consistent practice of both governments. For example in 1956 the Female Employees Equal Pay Act was passed from the application of which act works of a local and private nature were exempted.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What are works of a local or private nature, just for purposes of information?

Mr. MacEachen: Works which would normally fall under provincial jurisdiction, such as hotels, restaurants, stores and so on. In addition to the Female Employees Equal Pay Act of 1956, the Annual Vacations Act of 1958 which was proposed to the house by the former minister of labour and the safety in employment bill proposed two years ago but which did not receive second reading also made this exemption. I think the reason is simple, and it is because the councils in these territories are already in the field of making ordinances for works of a local or private nature. For example, the labour provisions ordinance of the Yukon prohibits work on six public holidays unless time and a half the regular rate is paid. So they are moving into this field, and in a sense doing that which the provinces are doing in areas under provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about the Northwest Territories?

Mr. MacEachen: I understand in the Northwest Territories there is a mining ordinance for an eight-hour day for workers below ground in the mines. I understand there are presently under consideration, or will be, by the council of the Northwest Territories, other provisions in respect of the operation or extension of labour ordinances there. We have thought that the areas of jurisdiction which now fall to the provinces should be left to the councils of those territories, so that those councils may exercise the authority in their areas that is being exercised by provinces in provincial areas of jurisdiction.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister can tell us whether the Yukon or Northwest Territories councils have put through any ordinance setting a minimum hourly rate?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Chairman, they have not.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, the minister has answered my question by saying that neither the Northwest Territories council nor the Yukon council have passed any ordinances setting a minimum hourly rate. Assuming we pass this bill as drafted by the government, no protection will be provided to 90 per cent of the people who work in those territories by virtue of either federal or territorial councils action.

Again I should like to say that under the present constitutional set-up, all the people who live and work in the Northwest Territories or the Yukon are the legal responsibility of the federal government. While it is true that in the ten provinces of Canada there is divided jurisdiction and all the provinces, as is their right, have passed legislation setting minimum hourly rates, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon are exclusively under federal jurisdiction and are not included in the provisions of this bill.

There may be some hon. members who think the government has gone too far in setting the rates too high. Every member of this group feels that not one province has set the minimum wage of the workers in that province high enough. That is however a responsibility of the provinces, and the people of those provinces, under our democratic system, have recourse at a future election if they see fit.

In respect of these two areas which come under the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government, it is the responsibility of the federal parliament to legislate for those people. It seems to me we ought to exercise our legal authority, and fulfil our moral responsibilities by setting a standard for those areas, thus providing the people with a minimum decent standard of living.

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Chairman, would the minister give an answer to the other part of my question, which I think is important both in terms of the legislation now before us and in terms of any future legislation? Who are the officials with whom his department consulted, as a result of which he refused to invite representatives of the councils of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon to the labour conferences?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, you will recall that when this question of inviting representatives of the Yukon and Northwest Territories to the conferences of labour ministers was asked, the matter was raised with the provincial premiers by the Prime Minister. It is a matter of policy established by the participants to the conferences that in such cases representatives of the councils are not invited. We did make an effort in respect of that particular conference to have representatives from the territories in attendance, and I have indicated the result of that effort.

In this bill I have followed a pattern set over a ten year period, that it is desirable to set up local governments within these areas, and to assign to those local governments responsibilities of the type normally discharged by provincial governments. If we accept this amendment we will be overriding declarations and acts already adopted by parliament, including the Yukon Act and Northwest Territories Act. Those acts would be superseded by the acceptance of this amendment in respect of that matter proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, there is one point that I should like to see cleared up with regard to this clause, as well as clause 3 which includes an exception for the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

The minister said that in those cases it was the same legislation which was applied in other provinces and that, literally speaking, they were not federal workers.

Therefore, I would ask the minister why are the Northwest Territories and the Yukon mentioned if it is merely a policy which applies to the ten provinces. Why have these two territories been specifically mentioned in the legislation while there is no reference at all to the other provinces?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, we are now entering a discussion on a point of law, but under the British North America Act provinces are now responsible for those labour areas which are left to the territories and assigned to them, as I understand it, under the Yukon Act and Northwest Territories Act. If parliament saw fit it could supersede these acts, but if it should do so it would be taking away what presumably it thought ought to be a matter for provincial or local determination.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister appreciates the fact that this house is faced with a problem, in that while it recognizes the jurisdiction of the provinces in dealing with things of this nature, there is a desire to encourage the territorial councils to act in this regard. The minister suggests we should not get into this field, but what assurance has he from his colleague, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, that the two councils in question are going to take some action?

It is all very well to say that we would be impinging upon what really is a trend toward local government by accepting this amendment, but if the house passes the bill as proposed by the government it will be creating a vacuum. If I understand the purport of the amendment correctly, it is to make sure that there is no vacuum, because as far as we know there is no guarantee that the councils will act in this way within the next two or three years. If we now accept the amendment as proposed we will deal with this situation as far as the people working in the territories are concerned, and remedial action may be taken three or four years hence, should the councils then decide they want to move into this field. In the interval these workers will be protected. If the minister is as proud of this measure as he indicates, I am sure he will want to extend it as far as possible, rather than create a vacuum.

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Chairman, by what strange thought process has the minister come to the conclusion that a law which is necessary and overdue to protect the workingman of southern Canada does not have the same virtue as far as the worker in the Northwest Territories is concerned?

Mr. MacEachen: The territories, to which reference has been made, were excluded as far as this bill is concerned as a result of the same thought processes and reasons they were excluded from the provisions of the Annual Vacations Act by the former minister of labour.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Rhéaume: I cannot accept the minister's statement that because the previous minister did this or because the practice has been followed for ten years, he is going to do it. As a new member of this house, I cannot take responsibility for what went on prior to my arrival. This statement has not changed my thinking. I want an answer to my question. If this labour code is so good, and we have heard paeans of praise for it, by what process of logic is it not made applicable to the 40,000 people who live north of the 60th parallel in this country, where protection is every bit as necessary as it is anywhere else in softer climates? I want to know the answer before we vote. I want an explanation. It is not good enough for the minister to say that ten years ago we did this, and it was pretty good so I think we will stick by it. What strange process of conversion has taken place if the minister suggests that the reason we are going to go ahead with it is that the previous minister did? Surely, we are entitled to a more intelligent explanation than that.

Mr. Douglas: It seems to me the minister's argument only holds up if these two territories in question were to become provinces, or if in the interim they were self-governing, governed by elected councils. What we have here, actually, are two territories whose councils, in very considerable part, are made up of appointees from the federal government. From the minister's own answer, it is apparent that the councils have taken no action to provide minimum labour protection for the workers in these two areas. It seems to me that the minister, as Minister of Labour for Canada, cannot slough off his responsibility by saying it is up to these two councils, the members of whom are appointed by his own government, to take action in these areas. If the councils themselves have not passed the necessary ordinances to provide adequate minimum wages, holidays with pay, and so on, then surely this parliament has no right to deprive the people of the benefits of this legislation. If and when the time comes that these two areas have provincial governments, then of course the parliament of Canada can always transfer to them the same jurisdiction in labour matters which the other provinces have.

I suggest to the minister that in the interim the parliament of Canada has a responsibility to legislate for these people, and the minister, as Minister of Labour, has responsibility for seeing that they are given protection which this legislation is going to provide for other persons coming under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. MacEachen: I am as interested as any hon. member in having the standards apply everywhere, including the territories. We want to know whether standards, perhaps establishing wage rates and hours of work, would be immediately suitable to the small businesses, for example, such as retail stores in the territories. These would be affected if this particular amendment were accepted. These provisions would apply to such local businesses as of January 1. Now, our thinking was based on the area of jurisdiction that we have, namely in the high wage industries like railways and so on. This is one practical difficulty.

A second difficulty is that if we did accept the amendment we would be taking this vital area out of the jurisdiction of the councils, and the purpose apparently is to build up the strength of these councils. Finally I think I ought to tell the committee that the commissioner of the Northwest Territories, for example, has prepared a reference requesting the advice of his council on the introduction of labour legislation in the Northwest Territories. I understand that the principal proposals or recommendations of the reference were considered by the council in June of this year and they have not proceeded further with the preparation of the draft ordinance because the commissioner and the council have been waiting to see the Canada labour code. They are moving in this direction and taking into account, we hope, the effect of this bill. If I could ignore the considerations I have mentioned I would be quite prepared to accept the amendment. But bearing in mind the development of local government and bearing in mind that the councils are moving in this direction, I think it would be desirable for us to allow them to proceed to establish ordinances that are locally suitable.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister, what are the terms contained in this recommendation which the council is considering? What, for instance, is provided as a minimum wage; what hours are provided? Are holidays with pay set forth and vacations with pay?

Mr. MacEachen: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have the reference here. I do not have any authority to release it, but I will talk to the commissioner and make it available to my hon. friend. This document covers quite a range of labour standards, vacations with pay, statutory holidays, workmen's compensation and so on.

Mr. Douglas: Have you got the minimum wage?

Mr. MacEachen: I do not believe there was a minimum wage in this reference. I would be glad to let the hon. member have it.

Mr. Rhéaume: The minister has said they were not sure whether or not it would be a good thing to have some of these rates apply at this stage of development. What I want to know is, before the minister excluded the Yukon and Northwest Territories he must have had some advice telling him to exclude the area. It is not enough to say that this has been going on for ten years. The minister knows my explanation for that ten year period. I am convinced that somewhere in the civil service there is a minor and evil official whose sole job it is to exclude the north from all beneficial legislation that is passed.

The minister must have obtained advice from somewhere, and I want to know who the adviser was. Was it the minister of northern affairs? Was it the council of the Yukon or the Northwest Territories? I am not satisfied to have the minister say, by way of explanation, "Someone told us perhaps we should leave it out, since that had been done before". I want to tell the minister that it would be an easy, practical step if the federal government were to move into this vacuum. I think we have to get the details about that reference for advice. I have not knocked around the council of the Northwest Territories for quite a few years, but I know that a reference for advice is a document prepared by civil servants who work in the department of northern affairs. That document advises the minister on what the problems are, and it occasionally recommends specific solutions. It is a document prepared by federal officers hired by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and I think the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has raised a very valid point.

Before the committee accepts the minister's statement that someone suggested it to him, it might not be a bad idea if we were given the terms of that reference for advice, because it is possible members of the committee would want to do something entirely different if they found the reference for advice unacceptable in terms, or unacceptable on the grounds of the pace at which such legislation will be introduced into these two northern territories. Can the minister give us the details?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, while listening to the interesting observations of the hon. member for Northwest Territories it occurred to me that, in a way, his remarks reflect in what I consider a most unkind and unfair manner on the former minister of northern affairs and national resources, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. Though we may differ politically, I think I can suggest the hon. member for Brandon-Souris attempted to carry out his duties with the utmost diligence, and with due regard for the people of the Northwest Territories. Yet the hon. member for Northwest Territories suggested that some civil servant, hidden in a little room, whom he termed an evil spirit, was able to put something over on that diligent and capable member for Brandon-Souris.

Mr. Nugent: And on the minister before him, and the minister before that.

Mr. Gray: That is a most unfair reflection. It would seem to me that if the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, having dealt with a similar problem, considered it in the interests of the people of the Northwest Territories to exclude strictly private undertakings from legislation designed to operate in a similar way, this helps confirm the soundness of the approach taken by the Minister of Labour with respect to this particular legislation.

I may have misread the bill, but I think the hon. member for Northwest Territories fell into some misconception when he suggested that the bill is applying to the working people of the southern part of Canada in a way that it does not apply to the people of the north of Canada. I hope the hon. member or the minister will correct me if I am wrong, because it seems to me from my reading of this bill—

Some hon. Members: You are wrong.

Mr. MacEachen: No, he is not.

Mr. Gray: —that it applies to exactly the same industries in the north as it does in the south. When I have completed my remarks I would be happy to have any hon. member get up to give me details and facts to show where I am wrong. As I understand this bill, the undertakings, businesses and industries not covered in the north are the very same ones not covered in the south, because in the south in the provinces they are deemed to come under provincial jurisdiction. But the industries, which in the south in the provinces are deemed to come under federal jurisdiction, and which are covered by this bill, will also be covered in the north, and therefore people in the north who may be employed by these so-called federal industries will also be covered by this bill.

The hon. member for Northwest Territories, while expressing a very commendable regard for the interests of the people of the north, is falling into a position which is somewhat contradictory. On one hand he is criticizing the Minister of Labour and the government for not permitting or enabling the Yukon and Northwest Territories to participate in federal-provincial conferences in a manner similar to the way in which the provinces participate, I suppose the basis being that the Yukon and Northwest Territories have already reached a high degree of self-government and should be moving swiftly to an even greater degree of self-government.

Now, however, the hon. member is coming to us and saying that, even though this parliament has delegated to the councils of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon the authority to act in certain spheres by legislating with respect to strictly private business, we should ignore this delegation, ignore this degree of self-government and make this bill apply to them. In this he seems to be contradicting the very sensible position he has taken in the past, of according an even greater degree of self-government to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon as the days go on.

I might add further that the argument made by one of the N.D.P. members, that the councils for the Yukon and Northwest Territories have not as yet acted fully, or even at all in this area, is not really an argument for having this bill apply to them, because I am sure there are many other areas in which power has been delegated by this parliament to the Yukon and Northwest Territories, but in which they have not fully exercised the authority given them. If this principle were sound we should be spending almost all our time dealing with a whole host of private matters such as sewerage, parking and so on, matters which are of importance but perhaps not as important as this question of labour standards, for which we have apparently delegated the power to the councils of these territories.

Mr. Clancy: I would like to ask the minister one question. Is this bill designed to set a standard minimum wage across Canada of $1.25 an hour?

Mr. MacEachen: For employees under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Clancy: Is it for all federal employees no matter where they live? Is this $1.25 an hour for casual labour? Is that the proposal you are putting forward? If so, what is this argument just put forward by the former speaker? What is wrong with having a basic wage across Canada? In my province the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam was the man instrumental in giving us a basic wage which is a great deal higher. Where is your argument?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Clancy: Just a minute, I have listened to you boys talking about two types of citizens. There are not any. The basic matter is $1.25 an hour. I say if you can get $3 an hour, take it.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, the name suggested for this bill is the Canada labour standards code, and the minister has told us that one of its purposes is to set an example which might be followed by provincial legislatures within their own jurisdictions. It is completely illogical to proceed to exclude areas which have no legislatures and in which the federal government has jurisdiction, because if that is done this parliament can hardly anticipate that the bill will have great effect upon other legislatures in setting standards. I believe the amendment should be passed.

Mr. Rhéaume: Has the minister had a chance to skim through that reference for advice, and can he give us the details of what is proposed? What advice has the commissioner been given by the officials in the federal department of northern affairs who advise him on hours of work? How does the reference for advice stack up against the labour standards code which he is proposing in this bill?

Mr. MacEachen: I called attention to the reference merely to underline the fact that the councils, especially the Northwest Territories council, have the question of standards under consideration at the present time. I should like to talk with the commissioner from whom I received this reference to determine whether it is correct.

Mr. Orlikow: I was a great deal surprised that the hon. member for Essex West, who comes from the city of Windsor, one of the most highly organized cities in Canada, should have expressed the views he did. Though he denied it, what he did in effect was to seek to divide the people who live in the far north from those who live in the rest of Canada. He wanted to make them legally, not just in actual fact, second class citizens.

In all the rest of Canada, if this bill is passed, the people who work for a living will have certain minimum rates of pay. Either they come under provincial jursdiction, in which case their minimum rates of pay will be set by the provincial minimum wage legislation, or they come under federal jurisdiction and their minimum rates will be set by this government. As hon. members know, the councils in the territories are not elected by the people. They are councillors who are appointed, but we do not need to go into that today. The fact is that the federal government still has jurisdiction over the people who live in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon, and the minister does not convince me when he suggests that because there is a council which may, some day, next week, next month, or five years, or ten years from now, take action in this field, the federal government should refrain from doing anything at the present time. The hon. gentleman does not know whether the councils, if they do act, will set a rate of $1.50 or $1 or 75 cents or 50 cents. He is content to give them full authority without knowing what they are likely to recommend. As I say, I find this position an amazing one to be taken by a member who represents a constituency of the kind from which the hon. member for Essex West comes.

Mr. Nugent: The minister appears to hold the opinion that if this house were to take action along the lines suggested the power of the councils in the territories would be, in some way, usurped. It is true the councils have not legislated, and I do not imagine the minister can give us any assurance that they will in fact provide legislation of this type. It seems to me therefore that this parliament has the responsibility and the opportunity to make this protection available without delay. The minister feels he should drag his feet because this is a subject with which a provincial government should be able to deal. But as has been pointed out, the council is only partly elected; part of the voice of that council is a government voice and in this sense the minister seems to be saying: We do not want to grant this protection, now. There is an indication that if we do not give this protection, the council will not. There are only four on the council who are elected. Five of the members are appointed. I suggest that if the government does not take steps to provide this protection now its action will be a clear indication to the five appointed members on the council that they should not legislate in this field. In other words, instead of the minister telling this committee that we are considering action which he hopes the council will take, and that we should allow them to take it in order that they may grow in stature by exercising this greater responsibility, he is, in effect, directing the appointed members not to give any protection as to minimum hours, and so on.

I therefore suggest we should support the amendment as the only way in which we can effectively give protection to the people in the north in the same way as to people in the rest of the country. I hope the government will accept the amendment, or at least that the minister will indicate that any position he adopts should not be taken by members of the council as a direction that the council is to make sure that these provisions are not contained in any legislation it passes. When we consider the composition of these councils and the present need of this legislation as against the vague hope of action at some time in the future, I think we must conclude that it is the duty of this committee to act in such a way as to provide protection without delay.

Mr. Barnett: I suppose that up to a point the Minister of Labour has an excuse for not being fully cognizant of every detail relating to labour conditions or working conditions in the Northwest Territories. I think it is unfortunate that the minister of northern affairs is not able to be with us this afternoon to give the committee some authoritative statement as to the situation in the north and the steps which are intended.

The Minister of Labour has told us that this amendment must be related to the provisions of clause 51 of the bill which makes provision for deferring the application of the legislation for a period of one and a half years. This transitional period would be as applicable to the corner grocery store in the Northwest Territories to which the hon. gentleman referred as to any segment of an industrial operation which normally comes under federal jurisdiction in any other part of Canada. It seems to me that if the minister intends to recommend the provisions of clause 51 he is thereby subtracting from the validity of the argument he attempted to advance, particularly in view of the fact that he has informed the committee, first, that there is no protective legislation applicable at the present time in the territories and, second, that he understands the territorial council has some such legislation under consideration or study.

The proposal in clause 51 would nicely cover the transitional period. It would enable the provisions of the minimum standard wage to be applied immediately to people who live in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon. It would, also, through the proper use of the proposed transitional period, provide an opportunity for the territorial councils to take action which would make the present provisions of the proposed Canadian minimum standards code applicable in the territories under their jurisdiction. I wonder whether the minister in the reply he gave earlier had fully taken into consideration the impact of clause 51 which does provide for this transitional period of a year and a half and which would enable him if he so desired to prevent the small grocery store somewhere in the Northwest Territories from going out of business during the adjustment period until such time as the territorial councils had made their enactments in this field.

Mr. Gray: I feel I should say a brief word about the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. His assertion that I am in favour of some form of second class citizenship status for the people of the north is of course entirely incorrect. The purpose of my remarks a few moments earlier was simply to point out that we have a similar situation in the north to the one which would prevail in the southern provinces of Canada if this bill were passed, because the Yukon and the Northwest Territories have already gone a long way toward provincial status and are progressing further toward that end. It therefore seemed sensible to me to follow the same outlook that seemed sufficient to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris when he was minister, namely that of excluding strictly private and local undertakings, which would ordinarily be under provincial jurisdiction, from the immediate application of this legislation.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, my name has been mentioned on two occasions by the hon. member for Essex West, so I think I should say a few words on the amendment that has been proposed in connection with clause 3. I appreciate the kind words of the hon. member for Essex West, but I think as I examine them they might be regarded as a somewhat left-handed compliment.

Mr. Gray: I am left-handed.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think the hon. member is ambidextrous, having listened to his second presentation on this particular item. It is quite true that the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory have been progressing with reasonable speed toward a greater degree of local autonomy, with the eventual objective in mind of provincial status. This was one of the avowed intentions of the previous administration. Unfortunately, as I have viewed these developments from the ranks of Her Majesty's official opposition during the past two years, it seems to me that the sense of urgency that had been generated under the leadership of the former administration has been to a great extent lost. It is for this reason that I am going to support the amendment proposed.

Another point that has been ignored by the hon. member for Essex West is this. There is a slight difference in the degree of local autonomy between the Yukon government and the government of the Northwest Territories. The Yukon government is an entirely elected body and in many spheres of operation is completely autonomous. Unhappily, the government of the Northwest Territories has not proceeded nearly so far in the direction of self-government as has the government of the Yukon. At the time the previous administration left office we had launched a program that was designed to accelerate the movement of the government of the Northwest Territories toward a greater degree of decentralization. I was the responsible minister for some three years, and it did not require a very long period of time to realize that the Northwest Territories, and to a lesser extent the Yukon Territory, would never come into its own until it had a greater degree of local responsibility and initiative.

We were carrying on negotiations with the labour organizations that are active in these territories with a view to encouraging the governments of the respective territories to establish a labour code of their own. According to this legislation before us it would seem that no further progress has been made in these conversations and discussions. I was quite disappointed in this, along with the hon. member for Northwest Territories, who above all members of this house knows whereof he speaks because he was a part of the administration of the Northwest Territories for a number of years and made an outstanding contribution in that regard before he became the elected representative of the people there.

I was surprised to see that the present government, when bringing this bill before the house, had decided it was going to continue the discriminatory approach to the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories which has existed far too long for the good of the general development—the political development as well as the economic development—of these territories. I think that if the amendment is accepted by the committee it will serve as a catalytic agent, particularly in the Yukon where the government, I am sure, is ready to deal with the matter of establishing a labour code of its own. It will certainly act as a catalytic agent in getting moving once again the efforts that were under way to give a greater degree of self-government to the Northwest Territories. There has been a complete stalemate in this development. We had the matter before the committee on mines, forests and waters for several weeks, but the committee died a premature death. I think that here is an excellent opportunity for this committee, by expressing its opinion on this amendment, to give a prod to the powers that be to get in motion once again this movement toward self-government and local autonomy.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, when I first read the bill, I also was under the impression that the House of Commons should not agree to the exception provided for in clauses 2 and 3, concerning the Northwest and Yukon Territories.

However, after the explanations given by the minister, and particularly as a defender of the special interests of the provinces and the territories, I believe that I should object to this amendment for the following reason: I cannot see how the federal government could overstep the powers granted the council of the Northwest and Yukon Territories, and then allow it to pass the legislation it desires.

I know personally that in certain districts of the province of Quebec, should private enterprise be compelled to apply the minimum salaries mentioned in this bill, it would encounter major difficulties.

This small clause of the bill will specially protect private and local businesses.

In my opinion, the Yukon and Northwest Territories are already considerably handicapped by their geographical position and their lack of means of transportation.

Should all private and local industries be tied down to this act, this would bring a surcharge to bear on private industries of those territories and would place them in an unfavourable competitive position not only internationally, but also nationally from the economical standpoint.

That is why we are opposed to the proposed amendment, even if we suggest that the council which has the jurisriction over the Northwest Territories and Yukon, acts as soon as possible but taking into consideration local requirements and not those of the federal government, as we do according to this act.

[Text]

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether, before the question is put, the minister could state to the committee his position on a matter that relates precisely to this kind of problem. I have asked him on repeated occasions whether there is any possibility of the staff of his department looking into this and related kinds of labour problems within the northern territories, with a view to assessing the present situation. I am not prepared to accept the statement of hon. members that this would work a hardship on someone in the Northwest Territories. I do not know out of which part of the atmosphere they draw this conclusion, or on what advice. The minister has not told me who advised him that this would work a hardship. Was it the officials of the department of northern affairs who said it would, or is it just because of some feeling that the territorial council would do something along this line?

The point I am making which has application to the amendment before the committee is this. Not nearly enough research and examination has gone into this kind of exclusion. I for one am not prepared to admit that it is in the best interests of the northern territories to make this exclusion or that it will afford some sort of protection which the business community in the Canadian north needs. That is always the argument which is used whenever an effort of social reform is brought down—that it is not in the best interests of those it will affect to have this sort of help. The minister has a division which does this sort of thing and I asked him about this the last time his estimates came up. I do not want the officials of the department of northern affairs brought in because already they have too much to do in the Northwest Territories and have their fingers in too many pots in the Canadian north. But it is time this was curbed, and curbed smartly.

To get back to the purport of the clause, what guarantee has this committee that the minister and his officials will give the territorial council the sort of advice which is required? The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona pointed out that right now the council of the Northwest Territories is made up of nine people. Four of these people are elected from some part of the north and five are appointed. The five who are appointed live in southern Canada. They are appointed by the governor in council. In at least two cases they are also federal civil servants who give advice to the officials of the department of northern affairs. Here is the kind of inbred problem, if you will, that we face now.

I am not reassured when the minister says they have done nothing about this in all these years, but he thinks they are going to do something and because of that the government does not want to step on their toes. Surely the minister can say what studies were undertaken and on what basis he excluded the territories. It is not enough just to say that it seemed like a good idea at the time. I want to know who advised him in this regard; and second, can he tell the committee what sort of advice will be presented to the council? The minister said the council of the Northwest Territories will be considering a document which will offer advice about these matters and whether or not it will be hurtful to certain business enterprises in the territories to implement a standards code. I do not think we should have two labour standards codes in this country any more than I think we should have two flags. We are getting too many instances where there is one thing for one part of the country and another thing for another part of the country. I am still not convinced that northern workers need less protection than southern workers.

I am aware of the observations made by the hon. member for Essex West—and there was probably a moral in this, namely that people who live that far south should not advise people who live in the north, and vice versa. I have yet to make a speech on labour conditions in the city of Windsor, and I doubt that I will. None the less I wish the minister would give the committee some information as to the quality of the advice that is going to be given to the federal authority prior to the next meeting of the Northwest Territories council. That would not be betraying any secrets. I for one am not prepared to tell our northerners not to worry, that the department of northern affairs officials love them and will look after their best interests, and that they need no guarantees of any kind. That sort of nonsense has pervaded too much of our legislation. Surely the minister can tell the committee what advice is being given the council of the Northwest Territories, and who it was advised his department to exclude the Northwest Territories and the Yukon from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment is very worth while. I am wondering whether the minister will give some consideration to a charge which has been made this afternoon, namely that the former minister of northern affairs found himself in the same position as the present minister has now been advised to take. Does this not flow from the fact that the same advisers who made this decision before are making the decision now?

I have several persons from the Northwest Territories who live in my constituency who have had occasion to write to me concerning compensation, vacation pay, and so on. In two cases I went from the council to the Department of Labour, and then to the department of northern affairs and the Department of Public Works. In each case we came across a decision which had been made by the director of industrial relations in the department, which I think was wrong. I also think this official was wrong in advising the former minister of northern affairs, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, and is wrong today in advising the present minister.

Clause 3 (h) makes reference to any work which is before or after its execution declared by parliament to be to the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces. This is a highly technical clause which has disallowed the benefits of labour relations legislation to persons working in the Northwest Territories and, I presume, the Yukon. If we are to write into this bill an exclusion of the Yukon and Northwest Territories we will not be meeting the requirements which the Minister of Labour has declared must be met. Because of the direction being given and the vast amount of legalistic confusion which exists through the actions of five or six agencies having relatively equal responsibilities in the territories, we are not well advised here, and the minister is not well advised to put himself in the position of making an exception of a very large segment of the country in regard to industries in those areas over which he has jurisdiction.

I think the minister should think again about this matter because he is recommending an exclusion which must indicate that he had knowledge that such a thing has worked to the disadvantage of workers in that area. I thought some time ago that this bill should apply mainly to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon because this is one place in which the federal government can give leadership, and I congratulate the minister for this. However, I do not think this exemption should be left in the bill in the form it is, although he may be perfectly right that there are segments of the labour field in Northwest Territories and the Yukon in which it would be difficult to implement the terms of this bill. This means there is no difference between the application of this exemption in one part of Canada compared with the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

I think the minister is being unfair to himself and is not giving the leadership he wants to give by exempting for one reason or another a small segment of the country to which this measure would bring a great deal of benefit. I am sure other hon. members have also brought before the minister cases which would be effected by clause 3 (h) to which I have referred. Normally even work done by the federal government is not classified as being in the interest of Canada or Canadians, as it reads in this bill, which means that there must be a special declaration to this effect. If we allow this exception we will be providing a loophole in respect of this problem which has developed over the years, and which has been discussed and argued with the officials of the department on numerous occasions; and it will continue to exist. If the minister is not prepared to support the amendment now before us, I think he might find it to his advantage to reconsider it, in terms of those works being done by the federal government in the Northwest Territories which are not specifically declared by the governor in council, or by the parliament of Canada as being to the general advantage of Canada. If the minister is not prepared to support this amendment I hope that he will indicate he is prepared to propose an amendment which is perhaps not as all-embracing as the one now before us.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say a few words, because according to the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Rhéaume) I might have suggested that the passage of this legislation with the amendment as proposed would result in an additional charge for the Northwest Territories.

If I said that, it is because in the province of Quebec, under orders and regulations, minimum wages are 64 cents per hour and in many parts of the province of Quebec, people are paid three or four times that amount. However, in certain depressed areas, where transportation costs are extremely high, some companies see fit to keep to this minimum wage of 64 cents per hour.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Marcoux: Yes, it is a shame. But if the federal government were to compel these municipalities, these localities or regional contractors to pay the minimum salary we propose, that is $1.25 per hour, this would certainly constitute an overload. Even if the hon. member for the Northwest Territories does not think so, I believe that this exists in our area.

However, I wish to point out to him that in the Northwest Territories there is but one member, and if that member were of the Liberal party he would be of the same opinion as the government, but as he is in the opposition, it is clear that he must oppose even if in his heart—

[Text]

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak to a question of privilege. I do not want the hon. member to say something he does not really mean, but the suggestion that my motives for voting may approximate his is surely an insult which I cannot accept.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I see that the hon. member misunderstood me completely when I meant that there was not just one member from Quebec and that was why there could be some difference of opinion, whereas, as far as he is concerned, he is the only one and, in most cases, his opinion differs from that of the government.

The reason for my intervention, in a way, is that I am convinced that there will not be any more satisfaction in the Northwest Territories and all I did was to extrapolate in what I found to be the case back home, in many areas of my province.

[Mr. Peters.]

[Text]

Amendment (Mr. Orlikow) negatived: Yeas, 51; nays, 57.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Chairman, before clause 2 carries I have an amendment to propose which affects the French version of the bill. For example, on page 2 of the French version at the top of the page, the words "du gouvernement fédéral" should be "relevant de la juridiction fédérale". This appears in various clauses throughout the bill and I propose to move an amendment which will cover those various clauses, as follows:

[Translation]

That the words "works, undertakings and businesses coming under federal jurisdiction" and "work, undertaking or business coming under federal jurisdiction" be substituted for the words "federal works, undertakings or businesses" or "federal work, undertaking or business' wherever these words appear in the French version of Bill No. C-126.

[Text]

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 2 as amended agreed to.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

On clause 3—Application of act.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, clause 3, for the main part, is a standard kind of clause which tells us the categories of work that come under federal jurisdiction, and for the most part it simply carries out the terms and spirit of the constitution of Canada. It does of course have in it a reference to the question of work in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. We would have had to move a consequential amendment to that, had we been able to carry the amendment that we moved in that respect to clause 2.

However, I should like to direct the minister's attention in particular to subclause (3) of clause 3 which reads as follows:

This act does not apply to or in respect of employees who are

(a) managers or superintendents or who exercise management functions, or

(b) members of such professions as may be designated by the regulations as professions to which this act does not apply?

We have had a good deal of experience with wording such as that set out in subclause (3), paragraph (a). However, I wish the minister would tell us what the government has in mind under 3(b), where the wording is a bit new. What are the kinds of professions that it is proposed to exempt from the provisions of this legislation?

While the minister is answering that, I wonder if he could tell us if the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation comes under the provisions of this bill? If so, will he relate in particular this question of professional work to the various kinds of work that are done by the employees of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It would seem to me that this is an entity in which there is room for argument as to which persons are professional and which persons are tradesmen or technicians. I wonder if the minister could deal with this general point at this time?

Mr. MacEachen: I understand why a member would raise this particular point with regard to clause 3, paragraph (b). If he will observe the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, he will note there is an explicit provision with regard to the exclusion of the professions. The act excludes members of the medical, dental, architectural and engineering professions from the provisions of this act when employed in that capacity. When we considered this particular paragraph, we considered including the words of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. Then, I considered it would be preferable to permit some flexibility in the way of including professions.

Now, there may be some professions to which, because of their method of operation and ethical practices, this act would not regularly apply. We would like first of all to have representations from employers or professional associations with regard to who were to be excluded from this act. What I really have in mind is the opportunity of including professions which would benefit from the application of this bill. Rather than apply the wording in the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, I thought it would be better to leave it flexible so we would be absolutely certain there would be no advantage to a profession before it was excluded from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. Knowles: I was quite aware of the wording in the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, and it was precisely because the wording in this bill differs from that wording that I put the question I did to the minister. I do not know whether my concern is relieved or not by the way in which the minister has put it. In the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, while members of the professions are excluded from the provisions of that act, at least we know what professions are excluded because they are spelled out in the legislation itself. In the case of this legislation, however, we do not know in advance because the decision is to be made by the government and implemented by regulations passed by order in council.

Now, it is good to have this word from the minister that it is his desire to have it this way, so that he can include as many professions as possible rather than excluding them; but I wonder if he could not give us examples of the kind of professions he has in mind, now classified as borderline cases but which he might be able to include.

Mr. MacEachen: For example, the Annual Vacations Act excludes members of the medical, dental, architectural and engineering professions. Unless there were strong reasons or evidence why benefits would be available to these persons, or why their inclusion should be maintained, we would consider excluding them. But there are others, for example those in the nursing profession, whom we would like to consider carefully before we excluded them from the benefits of this bill which would assist them in certain instances. The motive is very clear. It is to extend, where advantageous, the application of this bill, and we would like to have some consultations with and hear from members of professional associations before we would exclude them.

Mr. Knowles: May we take it as a commitment on the part of the minister that no additions will be made to the exclusions that are listed in the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and in the Annual Vacations Act? Is it clear that the purpose of this is to include more, not to exclude more?

Mr. MacEachen: That is the purpose, because as a matter of fact the original draft which I had before me automatically excluded certain professions, and I thought it would be better to have a look at these on their individual merits before we excluded them automatically from the wording of the bill. Certainly I have no proposal in mind that would enlarge the range already mentioned in the I.R.D.I. Act.

Mr. Knowles: Could the minister answer my earlier question: Is the C.B.C. covered by this bill?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, I understand it is covered by this bill.

Mr. Knowles: Has the government run into any difficulty in interpreting other legislation with regard to this word "profession", because it seems to me that among those working for the C.B.C., particularly with the wide range of duties they perform, the employers might well decide that certain employees are technicians and certain others are professional people? Can we be assured that, apart from lawyers, doctors and dentists, there will not be the exclusion of these other kinds of technicians who work—

Mr. Douglas: For a living.

Mr. Knowles: —for the C.B.C.?

Mr. MacEachen: I accept the qualification of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. I certainly can give a commitment to the extent that we do not have in mind exclusion of any profession, except the traditional professions that have already been excluded in other statutes; and before we exclude any, we would have to be satisfied that it was justified on the basis of professional practice. For example, one point that was very much in our minds was the encroachment by this legislation upon hours of work that might be professionally accepted among members of the medical profession which would not be appreciated by them as in any sense normal for the job. We would not do anything of that kind, and this is why we ask for some flexibility in the bill.

Mr. Crouse: Clause 3(1) says:

> This act applies to and in respect of employees who are employed upon or in connection with the operation of any work, undertaking or business that is within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

And paragraph (a) says:

> Any work, undertaking or business operated or carried on for or in connection with navigation and shipping, whether inland or maritime, including the operation of ships and transportation by ship anywhere in Canada...

This is an interesting clause, and due to the fact that these references are included in clause 1(a) it is evident that the government attaches considerable importance to wages and salaries earned by seamen on Canadian ships. Since the bill is to apply to any undertaking or business operating "within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada" could the minister inform the committee if it applies in any way to the fishing industry?

The federal government is today more concerned and involved with the fishing industry than ever before. Our fishermen register for unemployment insurance with the Department of Labour. Our draggers and trawlers are licensed by the departments of transport and fisheries and must undergo regular steamship inspection; but in view of the nature of the fishing industry, in view of the fact that fish must be caught and processed when they are available regardless of statutory holidays, I doubt whether it is possible to apply standard hours of work and overtime regulations to that industry. I hope the minister will clarify this point, especially for the men involved in the deep sea fishery.

Mr. MacEachen: This listing of the federal works and undertakings covered is the traditional listing found in all federal statutes such as the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, the Annual Vacations Act and all other acts passed by parliament with respect to federal works and undertakings in the labour field.

It should be pointed out that, for example, fish plants are not covered by this bill because they are under provincial jurisdiction, but there is a nice question in my own mind as to whether trawlers operating out of a fish plant would be covered. However, work in connection with navigation and shipping, whether inland or maritime, would be covered.

Mr. Crouse: I listened carefully to the minister's explanation, and if I heard him correctly he said there was a question in his own mind as to whether coverage by this bill could be extended to deep sea fishing trawlers. As I explained in my previous remarks, in view of the nature of this work, the nature of the industry and the manner in which the fishermen must operate, this point should be clarified before we proceed further.

It is simply impossible to adopt regular hours of employment on a fishing dragger. The men may well fish from eight to six o'clock, but during that period there may not be any fish to be caught. If a dragger is operating at night and is successful in securing a large catch, it is sometimes necessary, as the expression goes on board ship, to break watches, to bring out all the crew at three o'clock in the morning to dress all the fish caught. The catch cannot simply be left lying on deck, waiting until morning to be processed because it is very perishable. As a fellow Nova Scotian the minister is well aware of the many difficulties under which fishermen must operate, and I believe we should have a clear definition from him of the manner in which this bill is to apply to the fishing industry and the men in it.

Mr. Douglas: I wonder if I may ask the minister whether this legislation covers a group which greatly needs the benefits it will confer? I am referring to the commissionaires, of whom there are about 5,000 in Canada. As the minister knows, these are veterans who are enrolled in the corps of commissionaires for the purpose of acting as watchmen, doorkeepers and in other functions. On a number of occasions I have taken up their problems and found they were not covered by provincial labour legislation. My information is that they have no statutory holidays and very little protection as far as labour legislation is concerned. I have been asked whether or not they will be covered by this legislation. I have not been able to ascertain from reading the bill whether or not they are included.

Mr. MacEachen: The class of employees referred to is not covered directly by this bill. It is a question of determining their status. I stated on second reading that it is the intention of the government to apply the standards of this bill to government employees generally. If the commissionaires are government employees, then the standards would apply. If on the other hand they operate in connection with contracts issued by the federal government, then the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act would apply. As I have already stated, we propose to bring in amendments to this act to apply these standards, especially with respect to wages and hours of work. In order to be absolutely certain as to the coverage of this particular bill and as to the coverage extended to government employees under the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act I would have to know the precise employment status of commissionaires.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister whether he would look into this? I am told the Canadian corps of commissionaires often assigns people to work on airports and sometimes on government dock contracts—various jobs of that kind. One particular case which came to my attention was on Vancouver Island. It was ruled that they did not come under the provincial labour legislation. There was no federal legislation and these people were without any protection at all. I fear they may fall between two stools—that they do not come under the provincial legislation and that they will not be covered by the bill before us. Is it possible for the minister to look into this matter to see whether they can be included in any regulations made under this bill?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes. It is possible to say that commissionaires employed by any federal agency, such as a bank, would be covered. They would be covered if they were employed at a radio station, or presumably the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Douglas: Airports and docks?

Mr. MacEachen: Airports, yes. We expect they would be covered if they were working directly in a federal post or one under federal jurisdiction. Then we go on to consider the position of a commissionaire employed in connection with federal government contracts and we hope that ultimately these standards will apply when we have passed the necessary legislation. However, I would wish to look at this question further and see that this class is given the maximum protection possible.

Mr. Crouse: I wish to ask a question supplementary to one I asked a minute ago. Am I to understand from the minister's answer that the legislation does not apply in any way to the fishing industry and to the men involved in it? Is that correct?

Mr. MacEachen: I suppose, ultimately, it would be a matter for the courts to determine. It would be my opinion however that the trawlers to which the hon. member referred, operating as part of a fish plant located on the shore, would normally be under provincial jurisdiction and we would not cover them. I know one fishermen's union which has been certified under the provincial labour legislation. The fishermen's union in British Columbia has been certified under provincial legislation. This gives us an indication or a guide as to the possible coverage of this measure.

Mr. Rock: I should like to know whether the words "any aerodrome" mean "any airport". Do they apply to the land where any airport is situated? What I should really like to know is whether people working for concessionaires would be covered, for example employees of Murray Hill taxis who are underpaid and who work 75 hours a week or more.

Mr. MacEachen: On the facts presented I am not absolutely sure whether these people would be covered in the bill or under the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act. But they would be covered under one or other of these measures.

Mr. Winkler: My question is in the same field. It refers, generally speaking, to the trucking industry. It seems to me that in clause 3 there is an area which is not entirely clear and which may lead to hardship in certain cases. I would ask the minister if the terms of this clause apply, generally speaking, or even specifically, to the trucking industry. Take as an example a firm working out of Toronto. If its operations are wholly within the province of Ontario would the terms of the act apply? Let us take another case. If the firm operated outside the boundaries of the province in which it was located, would the act then apply if it did not in the first instance?

Mr. MacEachen: The answer to the first question is, no. It would not apply to a trucking operation within a single province. But it would apply as I understand it to a trucking operation extending into another province.

Mr. Winkler: Does the minister not agree this will create an area of injustice because of the competition to which such a company would find itself exposed? Runs between one province and another must take place, and these affect the hours of work. I understand this is a most important factor in a company's operations. Would it involve the total operation of the company or would the minister divide the two questions with regard to its application to any one company so as to apply to just those operations outside the province concerned?

Mr. MacEachen: Perhaps I may answer the hon. member by saying there was a case in the Ontario high court of justice in 1960 dealing with this question, and as I understand the decision it was that if any single employee or any number of employees are covered by the federal authority then all the employees automatically are covered.

Mr. Rock: I would still like to know whether the word "aerodrome" would include "airport".

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

[Mr. Rock.]

Mr. Herridge: I wish to refer again to the question which was raised by my hon. friend from Burnaby-Coquitlam in connection with the corps of commissionaires. I have been interested in their problems ever since I entered this house, particularly as a member of the veterans affairs committee, as have other members of that committee. Having discussed this question with officers and members of the corps in various places in Canada, may I say I do not think the minister's reply in this respect was altogether satisfactory. I know from experience you will find members of the corps employed for a few days on work which would come under this legislation, and then, perhaps two or three weeks later, they will be employed on something which is covered by the provincial legislation.

Would the minister look into this question very carefully and see what can be done, so that these persons who are members of the Canadian corps of commissionaires will know their rights and will know, when they are in a particular employment, whether they come under this bill or under provincial legislation. I think this should be clearly defined and the Canadian corps of commissionaires notified to this effect. Will the minister look into that question so these people will know their rights after this legislation is passed?

Mr. MacEachen: I think it would be helpful for the department to investigate this matter a little more carefully with regard to the employment conditions of the commissionaires, so we may determine the extent of the application of this bill. We will be glad to look into this matter and notify the commissionaires as to their rights under this legislation.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I raised on the orders of the day, the question of postmasters in local post offices. At this time I would like to ask the minister two questions in that connection. The first question is: Will this bill affect postmasters who are operating small, local post offices? If I could have the reply to that question, I will then ask the second one.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I stated on second reading that the standards established in this bill will apply to government employees. I stated, further, that the President of the Privy Council would make a statement later giving the details in this regard. This is the intention. For example, employees of the post office would come under the minimum wage provisions of the bill. We are certain these standards will be applied to employees of the post office, for example, or casual employees of the post office at Christmastime. The exact date of the application would depend upon the bringing into effect of this bill and a statement to be made by the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Aiken: Arising out of that answer I would like to point out what I consider to be an anomaly in the legislation. The postmasters in small offices earn anything from $500 a year upwards for operating their post offices, and this is sometimes not much more than $1.25 a day, let alone $1.25 an hour. The minister has just stated that the provisions of this legislation will apply to employees of the post office. I am thinking of clerks who are employed by a postmaster. Will they be eligible for the rate of $1.25 an hour?

It seems to me that a postmaster of a small post office will never be able to hire an assistant at $1.25 an hour if he is only getting $1.25 a day himself on a contract basis. Many of these smaller offices are operated in that fashion. In the average post office the postmaster has some other duties and receives a reasonable amount of income. There is for example a requirement that the office stay open a minimum of eight hours a day. This would result in the postmaster having to pay his helper up to $12 a day, when he himself was getting a good deal less than that on a contract basis.

Unless the bill operates to the benefit of the postmaster himself and permits him to draw this minimum wage so he can pay it without losing money, there is a very great anomaly in this bill. I have had the matter drawn to my attention by a number of postmasters who thought they were going to get $1.25 an hour as soon as this bill came into effect. However, it is quite obvious they are not, but their assistants are. How on earth they are going to manage, I do not know. If the minister can shed any light on this problem, I would like him to do so.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the light I can shed is that the policy has been laid down and it will be up to the Postmaster General to grapple with the application of these principles with regard to employees of the post office. I think it is a very good thing that we have established as a matter of policy that the standards within this bill will be applicable to federal government employees. It will be up to the head of each department to work out the details.

Mr. Aiken: I assume from the minister's reply that I should go after the Postmaster General for an answer to this question, rather than himself. Does the minister agree with that?

Mr. MacEachen: Employees of the post office will naturally get the standard rate. There are certain persons working for the post office on a contract basis, and this would be an entirely different aspect because they are contractors. The status that would be occupied by revenue postmasters under the provisions of this bill is something that I think would have to be determined by the Postmaster General.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I would like to come back to the question of commissionaires. First of all, I wonder if the minister could spell out whether under the provisions of this bill the take home pay of commissionaires will be at the rate of $1.25 an hour. I realize that the provisions of this bill only apply to work which comes under federal jurisdiction. As I understand the set-up now, the corps of commissionaires bids for certain work; for example, if the government or some industry that comes under federal jurisdiction hires the corps of commissionaires, the corps then supplies personnel. Under the provisions of this bill will the corps be required to bid at such rates that after the deductions are made by the corps the people working will get $1.25 an hour?

As I understand it now, if the corps bids, let us say, for the sake of argument, $1.25 an hour and gets the contract, the corps then deduct their commission, or whatever they call it, for handling the contract, and then they deduct "X" cents an hour as payment for the uniform. Then of course there is also the question of whether the corps will be required to put aside a percentage of this money for holiday pay. I think these are important matters. It seems to me the government is involved, because very often a government department decides to hire the corps rather than hiring government employees directly, who would get the rate established by the government. Therefore the government very often hires the corps in order to save money.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the illustration given by my hon. friend obviously refers to persons employed under a contract. A person contracts with the government to provide certain services and these services are provided by the corps of commissionaires; in this case the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act would apply in so far as contracts with the federal government are concerned. In that case we set the minimum rates of pay, and to my knowledge there is no rate at the present time that we have set for the corps of commissionaires that is less than $1.25 an hour.

Mr. Orlikow: My information is—and I have taken it up with the appropriate person in the department—that these deductions are made, and for the person actually doing the work it really does not make any difference whether the government says, "We are paying $1.25 an hour", $1.50 an hour, or $2 an hour, because the deductions bring the rate of pay down below the $1.25.

I am trying to get the assurance that after the rates are set and the deductions have been made by the corps for handling, and so on, the person employed will receive the $1.25 an hour, and that with regard to work which comes under the jurisdiction of the federal government they will receive, for the days they work under a federal government contract, the equivalent of two weeks holidays with pay for a full year's work. That is what I am trying to get at, before it is too late.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I do not understand what deductions could be involved. If a federal contract comes, as it does, under the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act, then the employees must receive a certain wage set by the department under that act. I do not understand what deductions could possibly take place which would supersede the rate approved by the department, unless it were a deduction freely given by the employee himself to his association.

Mr. Orlikow: As I understand it, and I have discussed this with Mr. Wilson, it is a very simple matter. I have not got the file here but the corps charges, for getting the contract and handling it for a particular employee, 10 or 15 cents an hour for every hour the person works. In other words, if the corps get the contract at $1.25 an hour this person would get $1.25 less 10 or 15 cents service charge. The corps also charges for the uniform. I think the uniform costs $40 or $45, and when it is paid for deductions in that respect stop, but the 10 or 15 cents an hour continues the whole way through. What I am concerned with is that if the corps charges this kind of fee it might never get a government contract if the rate were not less than $1.40 an hour, giving the employee $1.25, plus a couple of cents holiday pay.

Mr. MacEachen: The situation is that the employee receives the rate, and whatever fee is owing to the corps of commissionaires is paid over and above that rate. Because of the dispute over facts here I would be glad to check into this matter further with my hon. friend, because I think this is a point on which we should be clear.

Mr. Orlikow: I will be glad to give the minister the facts. What I am concerned about is that no government department should accept a contract at less than an amount which would leave the commissionaire who is actually doing the job $1.25, plus whatever he is entitled to for holiday pay.

Mr. MacEachen: I would agree with that.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether the bill applies to hotel employees in hotels which form part of a railway system. I am not quite clear whether this bill would be broad enough to cover all employees employed in connection with the operation of a railway. There may have been some decisions of the courts on this matter and I am wondering whether large hotels like, for example, the Royal York, which are owned by railways or which simply offer a service in connection with the railways are covered by the bill.

Mr. MacEachen: Certainly the hotels of the Canadian National Railways are covered by this bill. As I understand it, the hotels of the Canadian Pacific are not; they are under provincial jurisdiction. I think the reason is that the C.N.R. hotels have been declared to be to the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure I quite heard what the minister said. Did he say that hotels operated by the Canadian National Railways fall under this bill but that hotels operated by another railway, such as the Canadian Pacific, would not fall under the bill? If that is so—he said something about declaring them to be for the public benefit of Canada—would it not be reasonable that hotels under both systems should fall under the same administration and be subject to the same laws?

Mr. MacEachen: I had a meeting this morning with the vice presidents of the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. and this was a matter of discussion, that the bill was discriminatory in that it covered C.N.R. hotels and not C.P.R. hotels, presumably because the C.P.R. hotels fall under provincial jurisdiction. The reason cited is the reason I have given, that these hotels were declared to be to the general advantage of Canada and therefore under federal jurisdiction. However, this is a legal point which, I must say, is rather baffling to me.

Mr. Brewin: I suggest to the minister that there is no doubt, if there is a legal problem here, that it can be resolved by the government's declaring these hotels to be to the public advantage of Canada. Certainly it seems to me that a person working in a hotel owned by the C.P.R. is working in connection with a railway, just as much as an employee working for a C.N.R. hotel. I should have thought the federal government could bring this matter within its jurisdiction. If there is any doubt, I suggest that it do so by explicit language or by declaring such hotels to be for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I should like to follow up my previous point about a postmaster with an allied subject which I should think would cause just as much difficulty and which we should have out here and now, because if this principle is applied it will make quite a difference to highway mail services and rural routes operated for the carriage of mail.

Rural route contractors bid for contracts and receive so much money in accordance with their bid. Likewise the men who haul highway mail services from one point to another put in a bid for a given contract, which might perhaps be $1,000 or $1,100 or $1,200, and they are contractors. In the past the contract has stated that the contractor will pay the prevailing wage, and in some cases the prevailing wage for the driver of a truck operating on a rural route, who himself is not a contractor, has been put at a very low figure. In fact, since there was no real minimum wage no minimum was applied at all in most cases.

The position of these carriers is the same as that of a postmaster. They contract at a stated figure and are therefore contractors, and I presume they do not come under the provisions of clause 3. Yet their employees will be covered because they are engaged in carrying mail and are therefore federal employees. In this event a contractor who may be bound by his contract to carry mail for anything up to four years will suddenly find that he has to pay his drivers $1.25 an hour, with the average rural route run taking three or four hours. That is $6 or more per day. I think this is another instance where the bill in respect of a minimum wage cannot be applied, and I point this out for this reason. The general impression is being given that this will be an across-the-board minimum wage for all employees in government works. I do not know how on earth a contractor who is bound by a contract of $1,000 is going to be able to pay $2,000 to a man he has hired to drive the vehicle.

Exactly this same situation will exist in regard to a postmaster of a small post office who has a contract for perhaps $500 or $600 but has to pay a clerk $1.25 per hour. I think this is one of the most difficult areas in which to apply this principle.

If the principles embodied in this bill are not applied to federal government employees on an across-the-board basis, and particularly to individuals carrying the royal mail, I think we must consider that it will be ineffective. I do not know how the government intends to work out these problems.

The minister has said in respect of postmasters and their problems in this regard, that the Postmaster General will take responsibility and provide some solution. Is the Postmaster General going to allow these contractors, who employ other individuals, to adjust their contracts so they can pay at least the minimum wage and not be out of pocket as a result of previous contracts? I should like the minister to give us some explanation in this regard.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, there is an answer to that question. The regulation in respect of federal government contracts is covered under the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act. Only construction contracts are covered by the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act, and the rates have been established under that act for those contracts. There is nothing in this bill in respect of such federal contracts, and there was no intention that this bill should cover those contracts, because they are covered, as I have said, by that act. As I have outlined, we intend to cover federal government contracts generally by amendments to the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act. When these amendments are brought before the house we will all have an opportunity to discuss this important range of contracts entered into by the federal government.

Up until this time the Post Office Department has asked the Department of Labour to prescribe rates for persons employed by postal contractors on a voluntary basis. The contractor himself is self-employed and does not come under this voluntary edict, so to speak. We are providing for employees of the contractor by way of rates prescribed by the Post Office Department.

Mr. Aiken: Just to clear up this point, do I understand that the class of people described as postal clerks, who are not civil servants, including drivers and others who are employed by postal contractors, are not included in the provisions of this bill?

Mr. MacEachen: That is right.

Mr. Aiken: Thank you.

Mr. Groos: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister one more question in an attempt to nail down the status of the members of the royal Canadian corps of commissionaires, and I am thinking particularly of those who are employed directly by the government in my area as Department of National Defence security guards. Will they be covered by the provisions of this bill?

Mr. MacEachen: They will not come under the terms of this bill because they are not employees of federal industries. However, we have stated that the standards set by this bill will apply to government employees, and the standards and wage rates will apply to commissionaires as employees of the government. As I have stated, the timing of this legislation will depend on a statement to be made by the president of that body.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, we seem to have touched upon a wide variety of subjects during the course of our discussion on this clause. I was interested in the point raised earlier by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg, and perhaps what I have to say should more properly be considered when we are dealing with clause 5. Perhaps for a moment, however, I may be permitted to go back to that question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre at the beginning of our consideration of this clause. That hon. member made reference to clause 3, paragraph (3)(b) in respect of the application of this bill to members of the various professions. The question which arose in my mind as I read that part of this bill was whether it is worded so that it would be applied to all of the members of a profession, no matter what the circumstances of their employment, or whether it was worded so that it would apply to only certain members of a profession and not to others. What I have in mind is that in many professions certain persons are in private practice and in fact self-employed, whereas others who are members of the same profession may be salaried. As this clause is worded, does the minister feel that it will be applied to the whole membership of a profession, or does he think that under this part of the bill self-employed persons or persons in private practice will be excluded? Will some members of a profession be excluded from the provisions of this bill while other members of the same profession, who are employed directly on salary, will enjoy the protection provided, such as the non-deductions from salary for statutory holidays? Can the minister give us his understanding in this connection?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, naturally all members of a profession covered by this bill would be those employed in connection with a federal works or undertaking. That would limit the area of coverage. We did discuss this matter during our consideration of clause 3, paragraph (b). We have provided for a certain amount of flexibility in the application of this act to members of the professions employed upon or in connection with federal works. We have done this for the purpose of examining each profession, so to speak, on its own merits to see whether there might be advantages to the professions or to the public interest by including members of the professions. It might well be that some traditional professions should be excluded, such as the medical profession, the dental profession and perhaps the engineering profession. There are others, however, we should examine very carefully before we exclude them, and possibly we will include them so that they will benefit from the provisions of this act.

The one profession I have very much in mind is that of nursing. It may be advantageous to that profession, particularly in respect of hours of work, which would induce us to include it.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, just before we pass this clause I should like to return once again to a consideration of the point I raised earlier in connection with the trucking industry. I listened to the minister say that he wanted to be fair, that he wanted to see there was no discrimination as between areas. However, to get back to a specific item under which unfairness might arise, I should like to refer to a carrier who operates within the confines of a province. In each and every province, and certainly in the large provinces in the country, there could be a run that would take more than eight hours. I am thinking of the answer the minister gave me before, in relation to an operation that is partly outside a province, and the fact that this bill will apply to the whole operation in the province.

I am sure the minister is well aware of the fact that carriers can operate out of the city of Toronto under provincial legislation and can have a tremendous advantage over a carrier who conducted a small part of his business outside of the province. He would come within the terms of this legislation. The point which I feel the minister should clarify is this: Is there any recourse for those operators or their associations, individually or collectively, at any time to correct an injustice this legislation might cause any one of these interprovincial operators? Can he give us any assurance that if the measure does operate to their disadvantage they will have an opportunity to change the application of the provisions of this bill which relates to their industry?

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member has asked if there is any recourse to the application of the hours section. I agree that this is an important consideration, especially for the trucking industry. There is a transitional provision with regard to hours in clause 51. It may be that at that time it would be appropriate to discuss a little more fully the type of problem that is posed by the standard hours provision in relation to the trucking industry. I have some things to say about it, and I think they would best be said under clause 51 where the transitional provision is found.

Mr. Winkler: While we are dealing with this bill?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

Mr. Aiken: There is one further question I should like to raise and perhaps the minister will answer it readily. Earlier this afternoon we disposed of an amendment to clause 2 in connection with the exclusion of the Yukon and Northwest Territories. I do not intend to raise that question again now, but in this clause there is a suggestion that perhaps there is some discrimination involved in excluding those two territories. This brought me back to the bill of rights which was passed in 1960 which, under clause 3, paragraph 3, requires the Minister of Justice to examine every bill introduced in the House of Commons in order to ascertain whether any of the provisions thereof are inconsistent with the purposes and provisions of the bill of rights. I refer particularly to clause 1(b) which guarantees the right of the individual to equality before the law and to the protection fo the law. I should like to ask the minister if the Minister of Justice has examined this bill and has reported that it complies with the bill of rights?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the obligation mentioned is an obligation imposed upon the Minister of Justice. I think the hon. member would have to direct his question to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Aiken: I believe there would be an obligation on the Minister of Labour to see that there had been compliance with the provisions of this act before the bill was introduced.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, it is certainly not in any sense discriminatory. The exclusion has been made for the reasons stated. It is precisely the same coverage that is extended in all parts of Canada, exactly the same coverage in the Northwest Territories. In fact, if we took the alternative course we could then describe it as discriminatory because it would be discriminating with regard to the territories. It is not discriminatory in any sense. I do not want to go into an argument which has been decided by the house.

Mr. Aiken: I had intended to ask this question of the minister earlier today when the Minister of Justice was sitting beside him and might have made it easier to answer. I still feel that, while the Minister of Labour has expressed the opinion the statutory obligation is on the Minister of Justice, he should be able to give the house the assurance that the provisions of the bill of rights have been complied with. I am raising the point because I have a feeling that this bill of rights was treated by the opposition of the day, and the government of this day, very lightly. These provisions are there. They were passed and are obligatory in connection with the legislation. While there are those who may say that this bill of rights was not as effective as it might have been because it did not include provincial legislation, nevertheless there is a requirement that the Minister of Justice examine each bill to ascertain whether any of the provisions are inconsistent with the purposes of the bill of rights. I should like to ask the minister if, before we pass the last clause, he will assure the house that this has been done.

Mr. MacEachen: I will try to get this message to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Knowles: Before we finish with clause 3, I should like to ask the minister another question or two. My questions relate in particular to the matter of contracting with other people or contracting out. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier-Lasalle, the member for Victoria, British Columbia, and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam have touched upon examples of what I have in mind. I remind the minister also of the very useful and constructive statement made on this point the other day by the hon. gentleman who is now sitting at his left, the hon. member for Hamilton East, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

When he was speaking on second reading of the bill, this hon. gentleman, as recorded on page 9045 of Hansard for October 14, did me the honour of reading the wording of one of the sections of my labour code bills that I have been bringing in for the past ten years. In particular he pointed out that the wording which I had in my various bills included very specifically contractors, representatives, managers and agents. The hon. member for Hamilton East expressed the hope that clause 3 of this bill would be wide enough to cover all such operations. I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he has satisfied the hon. member for Hamilton East on this point?

May I bring up a particular case? The hon. member for Jacques Cartier-Lasalle raised the question in relation to the operations that take place at an airport. Is it possible for the Department of Transport, which is operating an airport, to contract out some of the work at that airport and for the contractor or subcontractor to say that the kind of work his employees are engaged in comes under provincial jurisdiction?

Similarly, may I ask a corresponding question with respect to the C.B.C. It is clear that the work of any radio broadcasting station is under federal jurisdiction, but could the C.B.C. contract out some of its camera work, or some of its technical work of one type or another, and could we then find ourselves in the position that the contractor or subcontractor could claim that the work he was doing was provincial in nature, and therefore that his employees were removed from the protection of this bill?

I am glad to have the interest not only of the minister but of the hon. member for

[Mr. Aiken.]

Hamilton East because the point he made the other day was a valid one. We should hear from the minister whether the bill is so worded that it does cover contractors and subcontractors who get work that is initially under federal jurisdiction? Are all the employees of such contractors and subcontractors covered by this bill?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, clause 3 says "This act applies to and in respect of employees who are employed upon...." and so on; and if my hon. friend will refer to line 27 he will see it says "to and in respect of the employers of such employees and to employment upon or in connection with the operation of any such work, undertaking or business." We are satisfied that the application of this part of the bill will include the instances mentioned by the hon. member for Hamilton East and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. We are satisfied of that, both upon the wording and upon a supreme court case in 1955, the stevedoring case, which supports the view that any contracting activity, even though it is contracted out, if it is an integral part of federal work comes under federal jurisdiction.

I am satisfied, so far as one can be satisfied. We have covered this category. I may say it is a matter about which we were very conscious, because we thought this might have been an escape route if it could be successfully employed. We do not think it can be.

Mr. McIntosh: I am interested in paragraph (h) which reads:

> —any work or undertaking that, although wholly situated within a province, is before or after its execution declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces, and—

What is meant by the phrase "to be for the general advantage of Canada"?

Mr. MacEachen: This is also a standard paragraph or section in all our labour statutes. The parliament of Canada is free to declare a work to be to the general advantage, and if such a work is done it comes within federal jurisdiction. For instance, uranium mining has been declared to be to the general advantage of Canada and is under federal jurisdiction. The wheat elevators, flour and cereal mills have also been declared by parliament to be to the general advantage of Canada, and for that reason come under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. McIntosh: I would refer the minister to section 174 of the Canada Grain Act which says:

All elevators in Canada heretofore or hereafter constructed are hereby declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada.

I am wondering how this clause would apply to the managers of these elevators in the fall, when the farmers are taking their crops off and when they get into the elevators at all times of night. Clause 3(3) of this bill says:

This act does not apply to or in respect of employees who are
(a) managers or superintendents or who exercise management functions,

Would this apply to all elevator operators on the prairies in the fall months when the crops are coming off? They certainly could not work a 40 hour week and take in all the crops.

Mr. MacEachen: I appreciate the point being made by my hon. friend because we have given consideration to the problem that has been posed by the representatives of the country elevators with respect to time, or the standard hours of work. In the operations of the country elevators there are peak periods, and these peak periods go beyond the standard hours of work for a day or a week, and this might be regarded as an excessive burden on the elevators with respect to overtime.

The officials of my department have had discussions with representatives of the elevators, and we expect that the application of another clause in the bill, providing for the averaging of the standard hours beyond a period of two weeks, would take into account the problems raised by country elevators with respect to the application of hours.

Mr. McIntosh: To what other clause is the minister referring?

Mr. MacEachen: Clause 5(2).

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): In the case of the country elevators I wonder if this should not be spelled out in definite terms so that it would not come up as a point of argument at a later date. I do not know whether the minister understands it, but I know the elevator agents could work a great number of hours a day during peak periods, and I am wondering whether these employees should be included as managers and operators.

Mr. MacEachen: I think it would be unfortunate to exclude the country elevators specifically from the total operations of the bill, because we want to apply its principles to the employees of federal undertakings, including country elevators. We think it is reasonable to provide for an averaging over a period greater than two weeks and, if need be, this could be extended over a period of a year, which would provide an opportunity to level off the seasonal peaks with the seasonal valleys. This is one protection in the bill that I think will go a long way to meet the difficulties.

When we come to the transitional provisions I shall have something to say in connection with the opportunities available for a deferment, where the application of the hours might be prejudicial to the employees or to the operation of an undertaking under this bill. There are two protections here that will look after the situation without spelling it out specifically, because I think it would be unfortunate to exclude these people.

Mr. McIntosh: If this is not spelled out, is there not a conflict here between what the minister is trying to do and what it says in the Canada Grain Act, which provides that elevators will open and remain open for the convenience of the farmers? I think, in this case, if he would spell out, as the hon. member for Assiniboia suggested, an amendment substituting "elevator operator" for "manager" in the prairie wheat area some of the fears we have as to what could happen if this were carried in its present form might be eliminated.

Mr. MacEachen: First of all, there is a feeling, presumably that these are managers, though they have entered into a collective agreement as employees of the wheat board in a Saskatchewan trade union—

Mr. McIntosh: If I may interrupt; there are two definitions given in the Canada Grain Act. One applies to managers and the other to operators. I cannot remember what the definitions are, but there are two.

Mr. Douglas: I wish to support the minister by saying I certainly think all grain elevator operators should come under this legislation because they are in a group which is not covered by provincial labour legislation and they should have the benefit of this bill, particularly as far as statutory holidays, vacations with pay and so on are concerned—the minimum wage provision scarcely affects them because most of them are paid well in excess of it.

However, I am sure the minister is aware there are some problems. The key problem is that there are times of the year when the quotas are open and when farmers must be able to deliver their grain. At such times the elevator operators must be there. On the other hand there are long periods in the winter, and when quotas are not open, when the job is merely a caretaking proposition with occasional cleaning of grain and so on. I think the minister could work this problem out under subclause 2 of clause 5 and under the regulations which provide for averaging. We encountered the same difficulty with respect to oil drillers under provincial legislation, but in the end agreement was reached between the employers and the employees under which for certain months in the year the employees worked on the basis of a 30 hour week while in another season of the year they worked on a 48 hour basis. It averaged out. If extra hours had to be worked, then of course overtime was paid.

I think a solution could be worked out in this case. I should like to ask the minister whether he is satisfied that he has the necessary powers under the regulatory provisions to enable him to deal with the situation in this way. I agree it is essential that the elevators should be kept open and that someone should be there whenever grain is delivered. This particularly applies during the fall when grain is wet and has to be delivered to the elevator and dried. This might mean working 12 to 16 hours a day. It would, of course, be unfortunate if we tried to impose an eight hour day at that time of the year and then stuck to an eight hour day in the winter when there is less work to be done. I hope the minister is satisfied he has the necessary powers, after consultation with the grain operators, because I believe that by making the necessary adjustments in the regulations he could solve this problem. The operators must be covered by the legislation, yet the legislation must at the same time provide sufficient flexibility to enable farmers to deliver their grain to the elevators at any reasonable time.

Mr. McIntosh: May I suggest that this clause stand until we have an opportunity to ascertain what subclause (5) means? It would give us an opportunity to look up the grain act and make sure that the western producers are protected.

Mr. MacEachen: I am content that it be allowed to stand and I am satisfied we can meet this problem.

Clause stands.

[Mr. Douglas.]

On clause 4—Saving more favourable benefits.

Mr. Herridge: I have one question to ask on this clause. It concerns subclause (2) which reads:

> Nothing in this act authorizes the doing of any work on Sunday that is prohibited by law.

I can understand those words, but I should like to know the reason for including them in this clause. Can the minister tell the committee how they apply in all the circumstances?

Mr. MacEachen: This subclause makes it clear that the bill is not to be taken as interfering with any law prohibiting work on Sunday. It is necessary because of the provisions of clause 7 which require one day's rest in seven, wherever practicable on a Sunday.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5—Standard hours of work.

Mr. Orlikow: I think this is the proper place to ask the minister whether he can now give an explanation of the problems I raised when we were discussing this question last week in connection with groups of workers such as railway workers and others. The illustration I used last week was the case of sleeping car, dining car and parlour car employees who are now working substantially more than a 48 hour week. If they were included in the provisions of this measure and if the railway company reduced their hours of work to 48 while holding them to the hourly rate established by the contract, they would suffer a very severe reduction in pay.

Mr. MacEachen: I think the place to deal with this is under clause 51. Presumably we are already agreed on the principle of the eight hour day and the 40 hour week, and clause 51 gives us an opportunity, as it were, to time the application of this principle, taking into account considerations of the kind mentioned by the hon. member. I think if we could defer consideration of this matter and others like it—there are a number of them —until we come to clause 51 we would have a better discussion. Presumably we would do nothing at this point to upset the acceptance of the principle on second reading.

Mr. Orlikow: Except that as I understand clause 51 the transitional period only applies for a maximum of 18 months. I suppose that in 18 months the unions concerned could negotiate a new contract, but those negotiations could conceivably lead to a substantial reduction in take home pay at the end of the month.

Mr. MacEachen: That is the problem we are attempting to deal with in the clause I have just mentioned. I think it would make for a better discussion if we were to postpone this issue unil we reach that particular clause. It would give us a chance, too, to deal with some other aspects. The case of the country elevators is really the same type of problem.

Mr. Knowles: I am sure that my hon. friend, along with the rest of us, will not mind having the discussion on clause 51 rather than on clause 5, provided we are not precluded from putting forward the proper amendment necessary to the appropriate clause. Things are going fairly well today so we thought this might be the proper time to move another amendment.

Clause 51 as we understand it merely provides for the 18 months transitional period. But we had some discussion the other night as to whether a time limit is the best way to deal with this, or whether it is necessary to have legislation saying that the total take home pay shall not be reduced because of the effect of this legislation.

The minister has not yet accepted the idea of writing such a provision into the legislation. But if he were to accept it as the result of discussion in this chamber, to which clause would these words be added; would they be added to clause 5, or to clause 51?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I would not raise a point of order if my hon. friend proposed an amendment to clause 51 to cover that point.

Mr. Knowles: All I can say to the minister is, many thanks for the invitation. We do not need it, but we will accept it.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister at this point a question regarding the matter raised by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek and the hon. member for Assiniboia. Looking at clause 5 (2), the last few words are:

> —in such manner and in such circumstances as may be prescribed by the regulations, as an average for a period of two or more weeks.

If that is the case, I am wondering whether this gives the minister sufficient flexibility to deal with the problem raised by hon. members regarding grain elevators on the prairies.

Mr. MacEachen: This would permit us to arrive at an average for a period of two or more weeks. We would have the authority to average over a full year, if that were necessary. Presumably the premium paid would apply only beyond 2,000 hours, because on a yearly average the total hours permissible within the 40 hour week would be 2,000 and beyond that overtime would apply. Presumably this would meet the seasonal character and would also preserve the principle of the 40 hour week. This certainly goes a long way in levelling off, I would think.

Mr. Douglas: Then the minister is satisfied that this is flexible enough to meet the problem outlined?

Mr. MacEachen: I am satisfied that it is sufficiently flexible, based on the conversations we have had. But it may be that clause 51 is another place where this situation could also be helped.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister is correct with regard to clause 5(2), but one of the points that I think could be raised as an eventual argument is that the elevator operator might possibly go to the elevator at eight o'clock in the morning and be there until six o'clock at night. So far as he is concerned, he can say he is on duty full time, and I do not think the two weeks would be enough extra time to cover the extra hours he would be there for that period of time. This is the part I am concerned about. Possibly the elevator operator is not buying grain for a good deal of the time; he may even be over in the town drinking coffee. This is a possibility. But at the same time he is on the job working for the elevator company that has hired him and most farmers would know where to find him. He is going to say that he was on duty for eight or nine hours a day.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would allow me to read section 109 of the Canada Grain Act. I think this is why there is a conflict here. It is not spelled out by the minister, and if he will spell it out we will accept what he says. Section 109 says:

> Except as provided in section 108, the operator or manager—

It uses both terms:

> —of every licensed public country elevator shall, at all reasonable hours on each day upon which the elevator is open, receive all grain offered thereat for storage without discrimination and in the order in which it is offered, provided that there is in the elevator available storage accommodation for grain of the variety and grade of such grain and of the character desired by the person by whom the grain is offered.

I think if this is spelled out, we would have no further argument.

Mr. MacEachen: It seems to me that there is no necessary contradiction between "reasonable hours" and the system provided in this clause, because presumably the grain act obligates the operator and manager to be available for reasonable hours. If the reasonable hours at a peak period are 12, we would make provision to take that into account in the average for the year. Surely in a slack period he is not obligated to be there for 12 hours; perhaps he is obligated to be there for eight hours, or perhaps only three hours. So you could average this out, and we believe it is a reasonable provision. We certainly would not think this would contradict the "reasonable hours" mentioned in the grain act. I think we are safe enough here.

Mr. McIntosh: I know that in the past elevator agents have been on duty in their elevators for 18 hours a day during certain periods, and others may not have to be there more than one or two hours on other days, but you cannot average it for a period of two or more weeks.

Mr. MacEachen: We can average up to 50 weeks in a year, if we need to. We can prescribe an average for two or more weeks in a year so that we have it—

Mr. Douglas: So that you have it for the whole year?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, so that we have it for the whole year, if need be.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): In coming to an average would you expect the elevator operator to be there from, say, eight o'clock in the morning until noon and to be away for the rest of the afternoon? Is this what the minister means by averaging, that he can close up the elevator for half a day periodically to offset the hours he has worked for a longer period?

Mr. MacEachen: Presumably it is up to the management to decide the hours men shall work. From the facts the hon. member has mentioned, working four hours or three hours a day, we would average those days of few hours with the days having 10 or 12 hours of work over a period as long as is required to meet the needs of the particular operation. If the facts are as we have had them discussed, this looks after the situation.

Mr. McIntosh: This situation is going to be further agitated when rail line abandonment takes place—and I believe it is going to take place in certain areas—and farmers come in from many miles away with their grain and find the elevator closed. This is a situation against which we as legislators must guard, and protect our constituents. Although we are dealing with clause 5(2) here, it refers to clause 3(3), and I think before we conclude this matter we must have a definite statement from the minister that elevator operators or managers are not included. If my colleague is satisfied that it will be averaged over the year and he thinks this will look after the situation, or other members representing farm areas are satisfied this will be taken in the way the minister means it, and when the regulations come out they will not change the minister's meaning—which I have seen happen in other cases, where the regulations have been more powerful than the act itself—this would be sufficient; but I believe the minister should spell it out right now.

Mr. MacEachen: I have spelled it out as far as I can. I gather my explanation met with the approval of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the hon. member for Assiniboia; I thought they agreed with what I said in regard to the facts as we know them concerning variable hours. We certainly will utilize the provision to the limit, to meet the problem of the country elevators. I believe in this way we are going very far in that direction, and I do not believe hon. members would want us to go to the extent where the principles of the bill would be overcome.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Chairman, I merely want to get it completely clear in my mind. Supposing a farmer delivers a load of grain to the elevator and the elevator operator has been working really long hours for two or three weeks? A period of adjustment is provided to cut down the hours; if I understood the minister correctly he mentioned a figure of 2,000 hours. The elevator operator goes to his elevator at about eight o'clock in the morning—some go before that—and stays until six. In that case he will say he was on duty, and because of the fact he has worked there long hours he will say he is going to work just in the mornings for two or three weeks and will close in the afternoons. That is not going to satisfy the farmer who comes in with a load of grain at four in the afternoon, only to find the elevator operator away, and rightly so because he has been averaging out his hours. I think this has to be spelled out in black and white so that everyone can understand it in no uncertain terms.

Mr. MacEachen: This legislation does not provide any authority for an employee to advance that argument. This is a matter he has to work out with his employer.

Mr. Barnett: I do not want to get mixed up in the problems of country elevators but I would say that in the part of the country I come from, if that situation arose and an operation was required to be open 18 hours a day over a period of time, they would put on a second shift. That is one method of settling that kind of problem, it seems to me.

I rose, Mr. Chairman, because I am a little puzzled about what appears to me to be some conflict between clause 5, which is now under consideration, and clause 6. I want to know which one of these clauses is to be the operative clause as far as the bill is concerned when it becomes law. Clause 5 refers to standard hours of work and clause 6 refers to maximum hours of work. Clause 5 says that the hours of work shall not be longer than eight hours per day or 40 hours per week. In clause 6 it turns right around and says that an employer can require an employee to work 48 hours per week. Why is clause 6 there at all, particularly if one considers it in relation to the provisions of clause 9 which we will be coming to a little later on. The thing which concerns me is that some of the people who read this act when it becomes law are likely to decide that the present clause 6 is really the operative clause, and it may very well tend to become the standard provision rather than the exception. I think we should have some information on why clause 6 is there at all before we pass clause 5.

Mr. MacEachen: Clause 5, of course, establishes the standard day of eight hours and the standard week of 40 hours. The clause now mentioned allows for the working of 48 hours in a week, but the additional eight hours beyond the standard 40 must be at premium pay; in other words, at time and a half. That is set out in clause 8.

The hon. member referred to clauses 9 and 10 which provide for two instances where an employee may be required to work beyond 48 hours per week on the issuance of a permit by the minister. Second, there is a possibility that in the event of emergency conditions—for example, the breakdown of machinery or an accident occurring—work beyond the 48 hours may be required, in which case a report is subsequently made to the minister. So that actually a 40 hour work week is prescribed. Then there is the possibility of a 48 hour week at premium pay, and then work beyond a 48 hour week as a result of emergency conditions with a report made to the minister. That is the sequence.

Mr. Barnett: If I might pursue the particular questioning I had in mind, the other matter which puzzles me is the relationship between subclause (2) of clause 5 and clause 7. As I understand it, clause 7 imposes a limitation on the operation of subclause (2) of clause 5. I am not certain I am opposed to clause 7, but I am wondering how this averaging out principle will work under certain circumstances if it is limited by clause 7.

I have particularly in mind the kind of situation referred to earlier by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg in respect of employees in marine transportation and that sort of thing who may be out working for a period of time extending beyond seven days. I know there are some procedures which allow for people to be on duty for longer than seven days, with compensation provided under some union agreements for extra days off. I have in mind here ships returning to shore. But I am wondering whether the minister could explain what he understands to be the implications of clause 5(2) and its relationship to the operation of clause 7.

Mr. MacEachen: May I draw the hon. member's attention to the phrase "wherever practicable" in clause 7. Where it is impracticable of course to have a full day of rest on a Sunday, provision is made for one day of rest in the week. But it is to be on a Sunday wherever practicable. If work had to be done on a Sunday, presumably averaging would apply on that day as on any other.

Mr. Barnett: Then may I ask the minister who decides when it is practicable? There are some areas in the bill where such matters may be defined by the regulations, but I have not noticed anywhere where this particular matter is set out in such a manner as to give the minister or the governor in council authority to make regulations defining what constitutes what is practicable or impracticable regarding Sunday as a normal day of rest.

Mr. MacEachen: I cannot tell my hon. friend at the moment who decides when it is practicable, but there is now an established law providing for this day of rest. Or, at least, it has a persuasive character and it is carried forward in this bill that Sunday shall be the normal day of rest in the week wherever practicable. If it is not practicable, then presumably another day of the week will be provided. The sanctions of the bill will presumably apply to this clause as to all others.

Mr. Barnett: I think this is rather an important question because, if I may say so, sometimes this develops into a situation where the employer decides what is practicable. I can quote an example of this, which I admit falls outside the minister's jurisdiction.

Apparently the management of the British Columbia ferry authority has decided that their employees are going to work ten days on, straight through, and then so many days off. This has become quite a bone of contention and up until this time the employer, the B.C. ferry authority, has decided that the ten day period is to be worked by the employees. I would hate to see that kind of situation remain in respect of the operation of our national minimum standards, so that a group of employees is entirely at the mercy of an employer as far as the decision as to what is practicable is concerned. That is why I wonder whether the subject matter of clause 9 could more effectively be covered in some way by incorporating it in the provisions of subclause (2) of clause 5.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I think it is agreed that there shall be provided one day a week off on a mandatory basis as a day of rest. That is an obligatory provision of this bill. Sunday is the normally accepted day of rest. There is no absolute assurance or sanction that Sunday will be the day off, but wherever practicable it shall be. It is presumably suggested that whenever Sunday is impracticable as the day of rest, clause 5 (2) shall apply. Certainly one could argue that this involves an irregular distribution of the man's hours of work when it is impracticable to have Sunday off.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, just before we pass clause 5, I should like to state that I have listened with interest to the discussion carried on by the hon. members for Swift Current and Assiniboia in relation to grain elevators employees. It may be true that the hours worked by those employees can be averaged out for a period longer than two weeks, but I still envisage some complications in this regard.

In the event that an elevator operator operates his elevator on the prairies on an average of 12 hours a day in the fall for several months, then he would have to declare a similar period of months during the summer as a short work period—perhaps four hours per day—in order to strike an average. If I understand the wording of this bill correctly, this could greatly injure the grain handling trade, and I am thinking particularly of a year like last year when the grain handling companies did a tremendous job in respect of moving a large quantity of wheat for export.

I think the minister should make this averaging out principle a little more clear, because clause 3, as I read it, definitely includes the grain handling trade—the wheat board and grain elevator companies. The provision contained in clause 5 (2), embodying the averaging out technique for more than a two week period, does not really solve the problem to which I have referred. I think the provisions of this clause would eventually have the effect of increasing the cost of grain handling and make much more uneconomical the operation of some country elevators. Perhaps these provisions would bring about the abandonment of some country elevators, as well as some railway branch line abandonments. These abandonments would greatly contribute to the cost of grain handling, and I am sure no one in this house desires to see that happen in any of the grain producing areas of western Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I think this aspect of this bill should be given some further consideration. If the grain trade falls within the provisions of this act, there should be some further provision made, clearly setting out this averaging clause, so that an elevator may remain open only half a day during the wintertime in order to average out the working hours. It may be that that practice could only be followed by a certain portion of the total grain trading area, and I think a great deal of difficulty will be created by this provision for the Alberta wheat pool, the united grain growers and many other grain handling companies in western Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I should also like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that in many cases the farmers find themselves only able to deliver their quotas of grain to the grain elevators in the last weeks of July, as a result of which further difficulty will be created in respect of the averaging out technique. I think there is a great deal of room for improvement in this portion of the bill. Perhaps the Minister of Trade and Commerce would give some consideration to this part of the bill, and perhaps between the two ministers a clear explanation can be worked out which would answer some of the questions asked in relation to the obvious complications which appear to exist. I should like the Minister of Labour to again clarify what is involved in this bill in relation to the grain trade.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, of course the principle of this bill is to provide for a 40 hour week. That principle was accepted on second reading. All employees under federal jurisdiction are to come within this provision. It has been argued and suggested that in the case of grain elevator companies, they would be obliged to pay an excessive amount of overtime during peak periods because of the nature of their operations. Clause 5(2) will permit these companies to average out the hours worked, even to the extent of a period of a full year, so that if an employee works on the average of 2,000 hours for 50 weeks, the employer would not be obliged to pay overtime until that employee had worked more than 2,000 hours. At that time, of course, he would be obliged to pay overtime, and that is the purpose of this bill. I think the provisions of this bill do clear up any difficulty which arises as a result of a seasonal operation. It may be that the elevator companies will occasionally have to pay overtime, and I am sure they do so now. It may well be that they will reorganize their operation, putting on an extra shift, or something of that nature. There are alternative ways of dealing with this seasonal type of operation. We think that in this bill we have met, to the maximum, any difficulty that arises from the seasonal nature of an operation.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask about the business for tomorrow and Wednesday, if we could have it.

Mr. MacNaught: Tomorrow we will resume the committee stage of the electoral boundaries commission act. This will be followed by the committee stage of the Canada labour standards code. Then, we will take up second reading of an act to provide for the establishment of harbour commissioners.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

AIR TRANSPORT—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN AIR CANADA AND C.P.A.

Mr. Gene Rhéaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, the question I raised the other day and that I want to raise again tonight relates to the urgent need for the government to make some kind of statement on the negotiations that are going on between Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines, particularly inasmuch as until some sort of conclusion has been reached the minister has told us he will not be in a position to even consider regional air carrier policy.

This question is not a new one. It is not even new to this session. If you look at the record of the first session of the twenty sixth parliament, you will see numerous occasions upon which members directed questions to the then minister of transport. From press reports we were led to believe that the former minister of transport, who is now the President of the Privy Council, was just on the verge of exploding with some kind of policy statement, when internal difficulties about regional carrier problems within the cabinet forced a change of duties. Consequently this matter was not raised again until February 26 of this year. The question is to be found on page 256 of Hansard, when the hon. member for Three Rivers asked the Minister of Transport when we could expect a statement. The last sentence of the minister's reply reads as follows:

> I hope this will be before too long.

We all remember what happened on April 30, the night the minister attempted to make a policy statement over the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and the resulting furore in the house. I do not intend to rehash that debacle. I should like to quote from the minister's statement the following day, which is found on page 2808 of Hansard:

> I considered very carefully last Friday morning whether the very tentative decision which was taken by the government to carry on another stage in the formulation of air policy, which has not yet been formulated—

These are the pertinent words.

—and which I am sure will not be formulated for at least another month—

When the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines was examining the officials of Air Canada on June 22, the minister told us then, those of us who were on that committee, that he expected to make a statement around September 1. He asked us to forbear asking any further questions because this would only complicate negotiations that were then proceeding between Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines. Well if you look at the record of this session, you will find members did refrain from asking any questions. Indeed the next time a question was asked on this subject was on September 3, two days after the time the minister thought he would be in a position to make a statement, at which time I asked a question. The minister's reply can be found on page 7613 of Hansard, as follows:

I can report that very active discussions have been going on between the two air lines since discussions commenced some months ago. I get progress reports from time to time, but I doubt that a statement at this stage would add very much to the prospects of success in these negotiations.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we were told not to ask questions because it could hamper prospects for success. Six weeks later, on October 13, I raised the question once more, and it was at that point Your Honour ruled the question was not one of urgency.

If you read the press you will have noticed that last Saturday the Ottawa Citizen carried a feature by Norman Campbell headed, "Parliament", in which he stated:

Meanwhile, parliament awaits the promised statement of government policy on Canadian air lines and the international routes...

More than six months ago, transport minister Pickersgill told the Commons the whole question of future air policy was under "very active consideration." He hoped it would not be too long until conclusions were reached and could be announced to the house.

Many Canadians see in this kind of hedging, this referral of a government decision basically to two air lines, Air Canada and C.P.A., a calculated manoeuvre not to get on with the problem of announcing a regional air carrier policy for the country. If he cannot make any statement tonight, may I appeal to the acting minister to try another television performance so that we may find out something about what is happening.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, following the meeting which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) held with the presidents of the major railways and the presidents of Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines to outline the basic principles which should apply in the development of Canadian aviation policy, a number of meetings have been held between working teams of the two air lines and between the two presidents of the air lines to discuss possible avenues of co-operation.

These discussions have not yet been completed and it would therefore be premature at this stage to attempt to make any detailed statement on the various items on which progress has been made. However, I am very happy to be able to state that the two air lines have jointly requested the following information to be made public, and I quote:

Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Air lines have agreed to co-operate in presenting a united Canadian effort in the highly competitive world of international air transportation.

The agreement follows a government request for greater co-operation between the two Canadian carriers.

Both carriers have agreed to "sell Canada first" by ensuring each adopts the other's service as first alternate to its own, consistent with customer requirements.

That is, if one carrier cannot accommodate a customer due to inconvenient routing or lack of space, it will book him on the other Canadian carrier before any foreign operator, providing it is not to the passenger's disadvantage.

Air Canada has also agreed to appoint C.P.A. as its general sales agent in many areas of the Orient, the South Pacific and South America, while C.P.A. will name Air Canada as its general sales agent in Bermuda, the Bahamas and the islands of the Caribbean.

Additional general sales agency appointments are under review.

The new policy is expected to improve service to passengers and shippers by providing greater Canadian representation in the areas concerned, while aiding both carriers in obtaining additional revenues on international services.

TRANSPORTATION—PROPOSED REDUCTION IN C.P.R. SERVICE IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I raised the question of further curtailments in passenger train service between Calgary and Lethbridge, and between Lethbridge and Medicine Hat. Effective October 26 C.P.R. trains 307 and 308, now operating daily between Medicine Hat and Lethbridge, will be reduced to Monday, Wednesday and Friday from Lethbridge to Medicine Hat, and Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday from Medicine Hat to Lethbridge.

Trains 309 and 310 now operating Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday between Calgary and Lethbridge via Macleod subdivision will operate only on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Trains 311 and 312 now operating Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Sunday between Calgary and Lethbridge via Aldersyde subdivision will operate only on Thursdays and Sundays.

The Railway Act does not require that a railway make application to the board of transport commissioners for authority to reduce passenger service. Such prior authorization by the board is required only where a passenger service is being completely discontinued. Accordingly, none of these reductions I have mentioned requires the board's approval. Under the Railway Act, however, the railways are obliged to maintain adequate service and facilities, and the board has full authority to require that reductions in passenger service, for example, be not proceeded with if in the board's opinion the reductions would reduce the service below what the board would consider adequate in the public interest. Furthermore, after the reduction has gone into effect, the board can order the restoration of the service for the same reasons.

The only notice given with respect to this reduction in rail service has been that posted in all the small railway stations between the points mentioned that service would be reduced within 30 days. Representations have been made to the Department of Transport, and I believe to the board of transport commissioners, that the service which would be left would not be adequate to meet the needs of the area I have mentioned. I think that in all fairness to the city of Lethbridge and the city of Medicine Hat, to the chambers of commerce in those cities and to other interested parties, there ought to be a longer period between the date when notice is given and the date when the reduction takes effect. My appeal to the minister tonight is that he request the board of transport commissioners to see that this period is extended by 60 days at least in order that the interested parties may have an opportunity to appear before the board and present their case. Then, if in the opinion of the commissioners the reduction is not likely to inflict an undue inconvenience on the communities concerned, the railways could proceed with the reduction in service which is contemplated. But up to the present time there has not been sufficient opportunity given.

I should like to say also that in my opinion during the last two months there has been a terrific upswing in demand for rail passenger service. I should like to quote from an editorial which appeared in the Medicine Hat News of September 26. It says this:

> The entire railway situation is under review at the present. This would be a good time for the government, its board of transport commissioners and others concerned to probe the passenger service provided by the railways in this country.
>
> Is the C.P.R., for example, deliberately attempting to discourage the public from travelling by rail?
>
> Is the C.P.R., through this "policy" trying to steer would be train passengers to its air line?
>
> The public has a right to know the answers to these and other questions inasmuch as public money subsidizes the railways.
>
> Lastly, the politicians should ponder well the fact that there is a demand for rail service. Is it not to be met?

This involves much larger considerations than the local services I am talking about now, but I ask the minister tonight to take this into consideration, to get in touch with the board of transport commissioners and at least give the people concerned the opportunity to make representations.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): I should like first of all to express my appreciation to the hon. member for the accuracy of his statement of the facts involved in his question, and for the accuracy of his statement of the law applicable. I might also add that he did me the courtesy of making his request in a wholly objective way.

The situation is that the board of transport commissioners has received complaints with respect to these changes and they are at present being considered. Since the changes in both of these services do not involve discontinuance of specific trains, but a reduction in the frequency of their operations, the board has taken no action to intervene on the strength of the representations which have been received from parties objecting to the changes.

In view of the volume of complaints received by the board, however, it has directed the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to file its submissions with respect to the specific points raised, and also to furnish the board with the particulars of the patronage of the existing services. It will be seen from what I have said that this matter is receiving the careful attention of the board.

AGRICULTURE—EGGS—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN DEFICIENCY PAYMENT METHOD

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): I welcome this opportunity to debate a matter pertaining to the 2 cents deficiency payment to egg producers.

As the house knows, these deficiency payments are based on the national weighted average price which farmers receive during a 12 months period. In my opinion this should have been on a regional, cumulative price basis. To justify my argument I should like to give hon. members this information. During the month of May on the prairies the price received for grade A large eggs was 17 cents. This included the cities of Edmonton, Calgary, Saskatoon, Swift Current, Regina, Melville, Brandon and Winnipeg. The price range was from 17 cents to 19 cents, while at the same time other places in the east received 35 cents. Victoria 32 cents, Vancouver and Kelowna 31 cents, Fort William, Toronto and other cities received 32 cents to 35 cents.

When the stabilization board establish the average price they take the low that the prairies received, normally 17 cents, and the high received by the egg producers in the east and on that basis they calculate what should be made as a deficiency payment. This year it is 2 cents. My argument is this. Instead of taking the national weighted average it should be done on the regional basis. The difference in price ranges from 17 cents to 35 cents. We on the prairies just help to get a higher price for these people who receive 35 cents and 37 cents; we lower the average. They will again receive 2 cents per dozen, while our fellows on the prairies who received 17 cents will also only receive 2 cents per dozen. My argument is that the price should be established on the regional basis instead of on the national basis.

Last year I had a resolution on the order paper to provide deficiency payments for eggs—and the same applies to hogs—on a cumulative regional price basis, rather than on a national weighted basis. Until this is done the egg producers in the west will never receive justice.

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his question and for the opportunity of commenting on it briefly. I think the hon. member would agree that the purpose of deficiency payments under the price stabilization board is first of all to provide stability to the egg market, and second to provide a measure of guarantee to the small producer who may receive a deficiency payment on the first 4,000 dozen eggs that he produces.

I think the hon. member would also recognize that in view of the fact that this is a matter which might normally be regarded as government policy, he could not expect me to elaborate in too great detail. I do, however, wish to avail myself of the opportunity to comment briefly on this matter and say that the ideal situation of course would be where the production is nearly equal to the demand. Because production is difficult to regulate precisely, so may we expect price fluctuations. These fluctuations in production usually follow a pattern affected by the seasons of the year. To make deficiency payments on a quarterly basis, or even on a regional basis, would be to aggravate the situation and would tend to defeat the principle of price stabilization on a year round basis.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.21 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 20, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Sixth report of standing committee on public accounts—Mr. Baldwin.

Eighth report of standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Pennell.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CONSIDERATION OF GILL REPORT—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this stage to ask leave, in accordance with standing order 26, to move the adjournment of the house to discuss an urgent matter of national importance with regard to the report which was submitted almost two years ago by the royal commission on the administration and application of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

We have asked a number of questions on the subject and tried to get some information, but without too much success.

The government is studying the report, but we have not been informed of the results of that study. At present every member must face problems dealing with unemployment insurance and the operation of the unemployment insurance commission in his own riding.

The unemployed are affected and are victimized, that is, half a million persons out of work are affected by the functioning of that agency. Furthermore, the officials find themselves in an impasse, since they must apply the act as it exists, and sometimes it is unjust and very poorly drafted.

The government has been studying this report for several months, but the house was not informed of the results of the study; we do not know the opinion of the government or what it intends to do. If such an inquiry proved to be very useful and necessary two years ago, it is even more so today, especially if we take into account the unemployment situation.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the immediate need on the part of the house to take the immediate action necessary for the duty in committee of the Gill report and to carry out as soon as possible the recommendations of the said committee in order to correct numerous anomalies in the operation of the unemployment insurance commission.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Are there any other hon. members who wish to say anything on this request to adjourn the house under standing order 26 in order to give more attention to the Gill report? If not I am prepared to render a decision.

Standing order 26, of course, envisages something which is a sudden emergency. Citation 100 (8) of Beauchesne's fourth edition says, in the middle of the paragraph:

> What I think was contemplated was an occurrence of some sudden emergency, either in home or in foreign affairs.

I think all hon. members would agree that this matter has been raised several times during the question period. It is not exactly a new matter and to my way of thinking it is not a new, sudden emergency. In my opinion it does not conform to the dictates of standing order 26; therefore I must decide that the proceedings of the house should not be set aside at this time to proceed with the matter set forth in the motion submitted to me.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EFFECT OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION ON TRUCKING AND FISHING INDUSTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour regarding the labour standards code. I should like to ask him whether he would be prepared to meet representatives from the trucking interests, whose claim it is that adopted in its present form this bill would have a detrimental, if not disastrous, effect on that industry.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to hear further representations from the trucking industry. Yesterday I did meet with a group of truckers and I had an opportunity to appreciate the difficulties that face this industry. During discussion on a particular clause of the bill I might be able to indicate a way which would meet the problems which are posed by the truckers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister for those encouraging words. I know they will be appreciated.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Could I ask the minister whether he would be prepared to delay the reintroduction of this bill in the house until the trucking industry has had an opportunity to present its case.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe the views of the trucking industry and the problems which are involved have been pretty well put forward by the industry. When we come to a discussion in committee of the transitional provisions of the bill I believe I will be able to indicate a way to meet, I trust, the problems which are posed.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I commented on the effect of Bill No. C-126 on the fishing industry. That industry has made representations to me to ascertain whether the minister will further clarify the situation as it relates to the fishing industry. I say this because the whaling industry on both coasts is affected in that they have permanent employees; on the west coast the seiners and packers have permanent employees who would therefore be affected by the bill according to the hours they worked. I think the minister might further clarify the position of the fishing industry before this bill is passed, and I ask him whether he would do this.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker; and I hope it would meet the convenience of my hon. friend if I did that when we return to the committee stage of the bill.

LOUISBURG, N.S.—STRIKE OF WORKERS AT HISTORIC SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, asking him whether he is now in a position to report to the house about the strike of the workers at the Louisburg restoration project.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, as acting minister I was given a report by the department a few minutes ago to the effect that a meeting held today broke up about 2.30 this afternoon in a very hopeful mood, and with the full expectation that the men will be returning to work tomorrow.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. After the lay-off of 55 men at the restoration project, can the Minister of Labour indicate what his winter works program will mean by way of further work for the men in that area? Does it mean that the 55 men laid off will be assured of employment in addition to the several hundred more who are looking for work in that area?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this question really is for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, but my understanding is that the men who were temporarily laid off will be rehired under the winter works program.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, my question was directed to the Minister of Labour, since he made the announcement in conjunction with the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. My question is, will the men laid off be assured of employment when the winter works project starts, and can the minister indicate to the house just how many men will be involved in the winter works project?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes, and I will attempt to get specific figures to answer the second part.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING ABILITY TO AFFORD NEW SOCIAL MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question regarding the speech which was made in Toronto yesterday by the premier of Saskatchewan, in which Mr. Thatcher is reported as having indicated that Canadians could not afford new social measures such as the national pension plan and a national comprehensive medical insurance plan. I want to ask the Prime Minister whether this statement expresses the views of the Liberal party and explains the apparent delay in the government proceeding with these two programs.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity of reading the report of this speech by the provincial premier to which my hon. friend has referred, but the views of the Liberal party in respect of this matter are well known and have often been expressed in this house.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. I wonder whether the Prime Minister can tell the house, in regard to the pension legislation, whether we can expect that it will be introduced into the house before the conclusion of the present session.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have already answered that question a good many times. The last question was whether the resolution would be put on the order paper before the end of this month. I believe that will be the case.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a further supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Will there be any necessity to hold any further consultations with the provinces before a resolution in respect of the Canada pension plan can be placed on the order paper?

Mr. Pearson: I do not think so, Mr. Speaker. The legislation is drafted and the resolution will be on the order paper in a few days.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In regard to this report that appeared in a Toronto newspaper, would the minister tell the house whether he received these representations in verbal or written form; and I refer particularly to the reference the premier of Saskatchewan made to the advice he gave the Minister of Finance regarding a reduction in taxes before the next budget is brought in.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that I am able to make any comment which would throw any light on this very difficult and complex question.

TRADE

VISIT TO CANADA OF U.K. HOME BUILDERS MISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce. It is related to a subject of importance to those who are interested in increasing Canadian sales of forest products overseas, namely the visit of the 26-member home builders mission from Great Britain to Canada.

In view of the importance of the Kootenays as a forest producing area, and in view of the topographical pulchritude of this district, would the minister give consideration to arranging a visit of the home builders mission from Great Britain to the Kootenays on its way from Vancouver to Calgary? They are very interested in this area.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Important as the question is, I wonder whether the hon. member would put it on the order paper.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I should like to give notice of my intention to debate this at ten o'clock.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO INCREASE TRADE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister and arises out of an answer he gave yesterday to a question asked in relation to commonwealth trade. In view of Prime Minister Wilson's views on commonwealth trade, has the Canadian government any specific proposals to make, or does it intend to take any specific initiative in this regard in the near future?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the views of the government in respect of this matter are well known. We are anxious to do everything we can to increase trade within the commonwealth, and we will be very anxious to discuss ways and means of doing this with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom as soon as we are able to meet with him.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED CHANGES IN RUN-THROUGHS IN MOUNTAIN REGION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Acting

Minister of Transport. Has the minister received representations from the brotherhood of trainmen respecting certain changes in run-throughs on the part of train crews in the mountain region? If so, what has been done in this regard? Is any consideration being given by the minister to asking Canadian National Railways to defer the pending changes while the implications and ramifications of the contemplated moves are ironed out with the men in question?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, representations have been made by the brotherhood concerning run-throughs in two areas. I presume the area the hon. member is asking about is the Wainwright area. Those representations were made last week and have been communicated to the management of the railway. I do not know that I can say anything useful beyond that at the moment.

Mr. Lambert: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister exert some influence on his colleague the Minister of Labour in order to have him meet the delegation which has been here since Friday afternoon?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I met the delegation with the Minister of Labour and there was a further meeting late Friday afternoon; but because of certain things that had to be done in the house at five o'clock I had to leave the meeting and come here at that hour. On that occasion we were not together when we met the representative, as we had been the day before.

Mr. Lambert: He still has not seen the Minister of Labour.

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR FROM NOVA SCOTIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Rober Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I wish to address a question to the Acting Minister of Transport. In view of the information contained in a recent press release from the office of the Minister of Transport indicating that no one from the province of Nova Scotia has been appointed to the board of directors of Canadian National Railways, can the acting minister advise the house and the country when this serious error will be corrected, more particularly in view of the fact that the press release stated that one director had yet to be appointed?

[Mr. Lambert.]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): I do not wish to become involved in an admission or denial as to whether the omission of the name of a director from Nova Scotia is a serious error, because other provinces have laid the same kind of claim for that one position. In any event, I will take notice of the question and bring it to the attention of the Minister of Transport on his return which, I am glad to say, will be within a few days.

IMMIGRATION

DAISY MAUD HENRY—CONSIDERATION OF DEPORTATION ORDER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Last week he promised to take into consideration the exercise of his discretionary powers to reverse the decision of his department respecting Miss Daisy Maud Henry of Toronto, who had been ordered deported to England. Has the minister reached any decision regarding this case?

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not as yet received the file from the court of appeal on immigration matters. As soon as it reaches my office I shall give it serious consideration to see to what extent I could use my discretionary powers to allow Miss Henry to remain in Canada.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister how soon he expects to make this decision?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Within a few days, I hope, Mr. Speaker, because that is about the time needed by the department to examine the file and send it to me.

[Text]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): As a supplementary question, has the minister had an opportunity to look into very serious charges, both in the newspapers and on television last Sunday night, against an immigration official in Toronto, charges that he expressed a very discriminatory viewpoint with regard to race and colour?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I did not have the privilege Sunday night of seeing on the English network the televised broadcast dealing with certain immigration cases in Toronto. As I already pointed out in this house a few days ago, I carried out an investigation following Miss Henry's case, which was brought to light by a newspaper. After this investigation, although it was not proved that discrimination had occurred against Miss Henry or Mr. Hyde, who was also mentioned none the less, the department realized that an official in its Toronto office during an examination, made a statement contrary to the policy applied by the department, and disciplinary action was taken by the department against this employee.

[Text]

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—PROVISION OF TRANSPORTATION SERVICE TO NORTHEASTERN SECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, but in his absence I wonder whether the acting minister has any further information concerning a matter I raised some time ago, namely the question of transportation service to and from Toronto international airport and the northeast sector of Toronto.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has been advised by the president of Air Terminal Transport Limited that on Monday, October 26, the company is inaugurating on a three month trial basis a regular hourly service from 6 a.m. until 12 midnight, five days a week, across the north end of Toronto. Stops will be made at the Toronto transit commission terminal on north Yonge street and at the Canadiana hotel at Kennedy road and highway 401. This route has been approved by the Ontario highway transport board and the air lines.

Mr. Moreau: Would the acting minister undertake to contact the company to make sure this service is well publicized; because it is on a trial basis and, if not given a chance, could soon fail.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I shall draw the hon. member's question to the attention of the company.

PUBLIC WORKS

WELLINGTON, ONT.—REQUEST FOR CHANNEL DREDGING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works of which I have given him notice. Due to low water levels in lake Ontario and a local silting condition, Wellington harbour, facing on lake Ontario, is now closed to navigation. This has crippled the commercial fishing industry and has adversely affected the whitefish catch. In this emergency can the minister give his immediate attention to dredging the channel leading to the federal wharf in Wellington harbour?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this matter has already been reported to the local office. We are looking into it, but unfortunately I have not yet received a preliminary report. As soon as it reaches my office I shall inform the hon. member.

CONSTRUCTION OF POST OFFICES, MÉGANTIC COUNTY, QUE.

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has he reached a decision following the two resolutions which have been sent to him by two municipal councils respecting the building of post offices at Notre Dame de la Guadeloupe and Coleraine, in Mégantic county? If so, can he tell the house—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that this question be debated tonight after ten o'clock.

[Text]

CANADA COUNCIL

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN FEDERAL GRANT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Secretary of State.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Could he tell us if the government has reached a decision with regard to the request made by the Canada Council that the moneys allotted to it for the coming years be increased?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): No decision has been reached, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. Could the minister tell us whether the government is studying the matter and whether a decision will be reached in the near future?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, we are now studying this request most seriously, as well as other solutions to the problem, but I am unable to say exactly when a decision will be made.

[Text]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STUDY OF ECONOMIC INTERDEPENDENCE OF PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Several months ago he indicated that the commission on the economic interdependence of the provinces would be reporting toward the end of September. Has the commission finished its report, and when may we expect to get it?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. As I have already stated, this is an inquiry undertaken by officials of the government. Their work has not yet been completed, and will not be for several weeks.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REORGANIZATION OF MILITIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Since several days have transcended the "next few days" the minister spoke of, is he yet in a position to announce a decision with regard to the militia, in conformity with part 2 of the Suttie report?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): It will be soon, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

PROVISION OF NUCLEAR MISSILES FOR R.C.A.F. IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Are press reports, the only source of information from the department, accurate, to the effect that nuclear missiles have now been provided for the R.C.A.F. Voodoo planes in Canada, a year and a half after the minister assumed office?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Notwithstanding the form of the question, Mr. Speaker, I may say that if there were press reports to that effect they were not correct.

FINANCE

QUEBEC—TAX CONCESSIONS RESPECTING CONSTRUCTION OF STEEL COMPLEX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Has the General Investment Corporation of Quebec, in respect of its plans to build a huge steel complex in that province, been granted or made any request for any tax concessions?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton West.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): That was the question I intended to ask, Mr. Speaker.

UNION CARBIDE SHARE ISSUE—INVESTMENT OF PROCEEDS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can he tell the house whether any arrangements were made with, or any undertaking obtained from, Union Carbide to invest in this country the proceeds from the sale of $60 million of their shares in Canada?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend knows that under our laws these matters are within the jurisdiction of the company's officers. I expect this is the way most of us would like things to continue.

Mr. Lambert: Knowing the minister's preoccupation on other occasions with foreign exchange problems, as a supplementary question may I ask whether there was also some indication that the funds which arose from this sale would be withdrawn, shall we say gradually, from Canada?

Mr. Gordon: I am a little confused by the question, Mr. Speaker, but if my hon. friend is worrying about the condition of Canada's foreign exchange reserves I can reassure him there is nothing to worry about.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND—U.S. BORROWING TO PERMIT REPAYMENT OF CANADIAN ACCOUNT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In view of that last statement, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister whether it is a fact that the United States borrowed moneys from the international monetary fund within the last few days in order to lend Canada funds needed to repay the Canadian account with that fund?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I wonder if the Leader of the Opposition would mind repeating that question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The question I asked was whether within recent days the United States government had borrowed a large amount of money from the international monetary fund, part of which was to be loaned to Canada to enable Canada to have funds to repay the Canadian account with that fund.

Mr. Gordon: I am glad I asked for a repetition of that question. Last month Canada repaid part of its previous borrowings from the fund. Under the arrangement Canada put up U.S. dollars, but part of the money had to be repaid in other currencies, and I think the rather complicated matter to which my right hon. friend has referred had to do with those various transactions. If he would like a more detailed report I will be glad to get the specific amounts in the specific currencies and make a report tomorrow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is fine. Possibly we will get the facts tomorrow.

REPORTED INTENTION TO APPLY TIGHT MONEY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): As a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister of Finance if there was going to be a tight money policy in the country and he said he did not know. Does he know today whether a tight money policy will be in effect?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): In the first place, I did not say I did not know. There has been no tight money policy, and there is no prospect of there being one.

BANK OF CANADA COMMITMENT UNDER AGREEMENT WITH U.K. GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance whether, following the drop of the pound sterling, the Bank of Canada granted loans to the Bank of England and, if so, at what rate of interest?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: It does seem to me that this is a question asking for considerable detail and that the minister can hardly be expected to answer on the spur of the moment.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I admit this is an embarrassing question, but I do not ask the exact amount, I only ask whether the Bank of Canada granted cash advances to the Bank of England and, if so, at what rate of interest?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I suggest this is a question for the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I give notice that I will discuss this matter at ten o'clock tonight.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker, may I put my question, worded differently, to the Minister of Finance, and ask him without going into details, simply this. Has the Bank of Canada, since the new government came into power in England, granted loans to Great Britain?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Once again there is in my opinion no pressing necessity for an immediate answer to that question this afternoon. May I suggest it is a question for the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Lambert: It is no question of privilege at all.

Mr. Grégoire: It will be interesting to see, by reading Hansard tomorrow, what very urgent questions have been asked this afternoon. This problem has been discussed before in the house and the minister was ready to answer my question which only requires a yes or no answer.

It is extremely important to know whether the Bank of Canada lends our money to foreign countries when they are subjected to credit restrictions.

I wonder why the Minister of Finance is not allowed to answer this question of general interest, when I am not asking for any details and, moreover, the minister is willing to reply.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would be willing to withdraw his proposal to ask me his question at ten o'clock. I would then be in a position to make a full statement tomorrow which I think would give him the information he is seeking.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

MARITIME FREIGHT RATES

STATEMENT ON INQUIRY AS TO PROVISION FOR STUDY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yesterday the hon. member for Saint John-Albert inquired about discussions I had held with the premiers of the Atlantic provinces regarding the proposed railway legislation. At the time of those discussions last week I explained that because of the complexities of the problems of transportation in the Atlantic provinces a decision had been taken when the new legislation was first under consideration by the previous administration —and this decision was confirmed by the present administration—that the questions relating to the Maritime Freight Rates Act which had been brought forward by the royal commission on transportation should be the subject of a separate examination. The current railway legislation does not deal with these particular recommendations, although it maintains the protection accorded to the Atlantic provinces under the Maritime Freight Rates Act as extended by the government of the day early in 1957.

I am sure hon. members will be glad to hear that the Minister of Transport will be back at his desk within a few days. At that time we intend to give prompt consideration to the establishment of a special examination into the problems relating to maritime transportation and the Maritime Freight Rates Act which were raised by the royal commission.

The provincial representatives at the discussion to which I am referring also raised the question whether the proposed railway legislation would lead to a further deterioration with regard to rate problems in the Atlantic provinces. I indicated that the intent of the legislation was to retain all the existing advantages and statutory protection accorded by the Maritime Freight Rates Act. Given this situation, the new legislation might be expected to be more advantageous on an overall basis than the situation which has applied heretofore, in which rate increases took place on a broad horizontal basis. Nevertheless, the points raised by the provincial premiers in this regard are being further reviewed on our part.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I thank the Prime Minister for answering this question in detail. We are all pleased to know that the Minister of Transport will be available later to take part in our discussion of this important railway legislation. I hope the government will continue to consider this matter sympathetically in view of the fear in the maritimes that there will be a further deterioration as a result of the new legislation, in spite of the fact that there are supposed to be exemptions in the area of the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO BE CONSIDERED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether he has any revised list of priorities respecting public business to place before the house before the Christmas recess or prorogation, whichever may come earlier.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, we have two important pieces of legislation before us now; we are shortly to have before us again the redistribution bill and the labour standards bill. In addition we have a great many estimates to deal with, so I think we have quite enough ahead of us to keep us occupied for some days, apart from important reports from special committees which we are expecting shortly. And there is, of course, the pension plan.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Can the Prime Minister assure the house that it is the intention to deal with and pass the Canada pension plan legislation prior to any Christmas recess?

Mr. Pearson: I have already stated our intentions with regard to the pension legislation, but I am informed we have only managed to get through seven departments out of 23 as far as estimates are concerned, and this is certainly priority business.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Would it not be possible for the Prime Minister to set out at an early date the legislation which he and his government expect to have passed before the prorogation of this parliament, in addition, of course, to the estimates?

Mr. Pearson: I have already mentioned certain pieces of legislation, but legislation has to be considered at the present time in the context of the progress made with the estimates. We have already spent 66 days on estimates this year.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): On the contrary. May I ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. Is it not a fact that we have spent on the main estimates this year only 27 days, whereas in the session of 1960-61 some 54 days were devoted to the main estimates?

Mr. Pearson: I corrected myself by saying "supply".

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Pearson: I think if the facts are ascertained it will be found that I was conservative in my statement. We spent more than 66 days on supply.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Having regard to the widespread interest in priorities and the course which the government intends to take, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, particularly as press references are coming out of the committee on the flag, whether when that committee reports it is the intention of the government to resume debate on the resolution before the house and the amendment and subamendment thereto.

Mr. Pearson: When the committee reports on this matter it will be the report of that committee on this subject which will be first considered by the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: At the moment I am not accepting the right of the government to do that which the Prime Minister has suggested, but is it the intention of the government to resume thereafter the debate on the resolution and the amendment or the subamendment?

Mr. Pearson: The intentions of the government with regard to this matter will be made known in due course.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am very glad to have the Prime Minister's answer, and when he asks for co-operation in the days ahead we shall remember the answer he gives us when we ask for information.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR BOUNDARIES COMMISSIONS AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

The house resumed, from Monday, September 14, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith—Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Pearson)—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee rose on September 14 last, with regard to clause 6 there was an amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and clauses 7, 8, 9, 12 and 13 had also been allowed to stand. Shall clause 14 carry?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I was just waiting to get clarification from Your Honour as to precisely what clauses were going to be considered this afternoon, following the 20 minutes, shall we say of unforeseen debate of some three weeks ago just before the adjournment hour. I was wondering whether it had been agreed among the party leaders that we should revert to clause 6, because the Minister of Transport who was then piloting the bill through the house indicated that because of the short notice it would perhaps be better if the committee went on to some non-controversial ground. As a result of this suggestion I believe clause 10 was passed, though I am subject to correction in this regard.

With regard to clauses 13 and 14 I have some observations to make. I should like to have a chance to bring out my material, Mr. Chairman, so perhaps the Minister of Labour, who I understand is now deputizing for his colleague, could indicate to the committee the manner in which the government would like to proceed on this bill.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we all regret the circumstances which necessitate my being in this position today. The Minister of Transport is at home, indisposed, and for that reason I have been asked to act for him in this particular matter. I have attempted to master this bill as well as I can, but I expect a good deal of forbearance and assistance from the committee as we go through the various clauses. As the hon. member for Edmonton West has stated, at its last sitting on September 14 the committee stood clauses 6, 7, 8, 9, 12 and 13, so this afternoon the committee presumably would be dealing with clause 14.

Perhaps I might indicate what I have in mind for the consideration of the committee. I suggest that the committee proceed with the clauses of this bill, beginning with clause 14, and work to the end of the bill; then return to clause 6 which is, as we all know, a clause of considerable importance and contention. I had hoped yesterday and today to have more consultation than I have been able to have with members of other parties with respect to clause 6 and other contentious clauses. I commenced these negotiations, but because of my being in the house all day yesterday I did not complete them.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, perhaps it would be the wish of the committee to begin with clause 14 today and complete the remaining clauses, including clause 31; then having done that, if the day is not completed we could move to the labour code and return to these other clauses at a later date. In the meantime we would hope to continue these consultations with members of the other parties. I put this suggestion before the committee and hope hon. members will find it agreeable.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, my first words must be to refer to the illness of the minister who was piloting this legislation through the house, and to express the gratification of us all at the statement made by the Prime Minister today that the hon. gentleman will soon be back in his place.

[Mr. Lambert.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: After all, parliament would not be the same place without him. Now with respect to the suggestion of the minister, I recognize the difficulties of a minister who is propelled into dealing with a bill with the complications of this one, particularly with regard to two of its clauses. I certainly would want to do everything I could to co-operate with him. We are trying to assure in this bill non-partisanship in redistribution, and we want to have the best bill possible.

As far as the opposition are concerned, we are prepared to go ahead with the clauses of the bill, beginning with clause 14, and leave these two controversial clauses, the one dealing with appointments to the several provincial commissions and the other as to the percentage of tolerance that should be allowed with regard to populations of various constituencies, to a later date.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise merely for the purpose of saying that the proposal made by the Minister of Labour, and amended slightly by the Leader of the Opposition, is suitable to us as well. When I suggest that the proposal has been amended slightly I have in mind the fact that the Minister of Labour seemed to suggest that we would leave over until another time clauses 6, 7, 8, 9, 12 and 13, but I think on reflection he will agree with the Leader of the Opposition that the only two we really need to leave over are clauses 6 and 13, unless of course we run into difficulty on one of the others. At any rate, the general proposal that we start with clause 14 and go through to the end of the bill, passing any others that we can, and then adjourn the discussion on this piece of legislation, if we get that far this day, meets with our approval.

On clause 14—Powers of commission.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I would raise this question as a preliminary point, and I think it will assist the thinking of hon. members with regard to some of the provisions of the bill. This point is not germane to clause 14, but I think the minister can give us the assurance that the committee would like to have. In regard to the negotiations that took place at, shall we say, Canada's so-called super parliament, the dominion-provincial conference, there was a communiqué issued on October 14 with respect to the drafting of the amendment of our constitution, and clause 2 thereof reads:

No law made under the authority of this part affecting any provision of this act or section 51A of the British North America Act, 1867, or affecting any provision of the constitution of Canada relating to—

Then it lists four points, and says:

—shall come into force unless it is concurred in by the legislatures of all the provinces.

That in itself is quite clear. Section 51A is the amendment of 1916 whereby the representation in this house of any province is limited to a floor of not less than the senatorial representation from such province. However, what concerned me was a report in the press—and I must say there were conflicting reports in the press—that in the field of representation in parliament discussions had been held between the premiers and the representatives of the federal government which suggested that before any change was made in the representation of any province it should be the subject of agreement with the provincial government concerned. I must confess I cannot read that interpretation into paragraph 2 of the communiqué, but there have been sufficient noises on the fringes to indicate that this may have been part of the negotiations and the agreements reached at this dominion-provincial conference.

I should like the minister on behalf of the government to assure this committee that other than the floor established by section 51A of the British North America Act, there has been no undertaking given and no understanding reached that any provincial legislature shall have any say whatsoever in the determination of the composition of the membership from that province in this house. Otherwise it is a one way street.

With all due respect to those people who speak about co-operative federalism and who say that the provinces should have a say in what is done by the federal government, are those self same provinces prepared to say that the representation in their own houses shall be subject to the consent of the federal house? Of course they are not. Therefore the counter argument is equally untenable.

However, I should like to have the assurance from the minister that there is no question that any provincial government will have a say in the representation in this house by the body of members who come from that province. If such were the case the whole consideration of this representation measure becomes academic. After all, what is the point in setting up norms, representation commissioners and rules and regulations regarding the composition of this house within a certain province if the matter is going to be subject to a veto or to some other consideration by a provincial government?

The Chairman: I wonder whether the minister proposes to reply to the remarks made by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I realize these remarks were perhaps introductory to the discussion this afternoon, but as the hon. member himself remarked these comments went somewhat beyond the terms of clause 14. I suggest that from now on, subject to the reply of the minister, we restrict our comments to the terms of clause 14 of the bill presently before the committee.

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Chairman, before we get to clause 14, in considering the procedure outlined by the minister may I take a moment of the committee's time to remind the house of the urgency of the constitutional responsibilities which parliament has in this matter.

The Chairman: I do not think the committee should get involved in discussions of that kind at this time. We have agreed to start with clause 14. I recognize that the hon. member for Edmonton West was granted quite a bit of latitude in making his introductory remarks, but I think hon. members in general would agree with the Chair that from now on we should try to respect the rule of relevancy and limit ourselves to the specific matter before the committee, namely clause 14.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I would be rather rash, I think, to attempt to deal with this important constitutional question, but I think it may suit the hon. member if the Minister of Justice dealt with this later when we are on another clause of the bill. I will draw it to his attention and ask him to deal with it later.

The Chairman: Shall clause 14 carry?

Mr. Lambert: Just one question on clause 14. Is it envisaged that there is to be a duplication of staffs, in regard to the staff which is permitted to be hired by the representation commissions and the staff which is now at work on behalf of the commissioner who was appointed by legislation last year? How is there to be a transfer of staff from one office to another? We do know that people have been drawing maps and travelling about the country preparing material. For whom are they going to work, the representation commissions or the representation commissioner?

Mr. MacEachen: My understanding is that the representation commissioner presently has a staff, but when this legislation is passed his staff will have to be enlarged in order to do the work involved. The commissions, of course, will require a staff as set forth in this clause.

Mr. Lambert: The authority to employ staff is given in subclause 2 of this clause, which says:

> A commission may employ such technical advisers and other staff, including a person to act as secretary to the commission, as it deems necessary—

—and so on. What I am concerned about is this. Is this technical staff going to repeat the work which has been done by the staff of the representation commissioner, and what will be the status of these people if they are transferred? The representation commissioner, who after all will have to oversee this work, will deem it in his wisdom to assign people to various representation commissions. What will be their status with regard to their conditions of public employment? After all, we know under which regulations the commissioner's staff are employed, but as far as these other people are concerned will they come under another set of rules?

Mr. MacEachen: I understand that the commissions will require a staff. They will be empowered under this section to employ such staff subject, of course, to treasury board approval. That is not a unique situation, certainly as far as I understand employment of persons in categories of this kind. This staff would be of a temporary nature and used by each commission to assist in the work of the commission. As I understand it, it is not intended that the representation commissioner's staff will be transferred to the commissions.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 15 agreed to.

On clause 16—Rules of procedure.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On clause 16, Mr. Chairman, may I ask what is the meaning of this clause, which says:

> A commission may make rules for regulating its proceedings and for the conduct of its business, and may provide therein for the conduct of any inquiry or hearing by one or more of its members.

Would the minister outline something of the procedure which a commission would follow in determining the course for the province for which it is appointed? Would the commission move around throughout the province? What evidence would it hear? May representations be made verbally or in writing; and generally, would the minister give the committee an outline in this regard within the limitations necessarily imposed upon him by reason of his entry into the discussion of this bill at this time? Naturally I am trying to find out how these commissions are going to operate, and if the minister could give a general outline, so that the house and the country will understand their modus operandi, it would be beneficial.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I certainly cannot give a generalized description of the functions of the commissions, because I understand that the tasks of the commissions would vary from province to province, as would the extent of the task each commission has to undertake. Different kinds of procedures might be involved in provinces such as Ontario and Quebec from those involved in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, for example.

The next and subsequent clauses include provision for sittings to be held so that representations can be made to the commissions. Clause 17 prescribes the sittings of the commissions, and paragraph 4 of that clause prescribes how the sittings may be held. I regret that I cannot give further detail about the operation of the commissions, except to say that I would conclude that clause 16 gives the commissions the authority to make the rules which govern their sittings, and provides for the conduct of any inquiry or hearing by a commission or by one or more of the members of a commission.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the minister has pointed out the complete uncertainty as to the manner in which these various commissions will operate, and has stated that, as is provided by clause 16, there may be a variety of regulation. However, I do feel that there should be mandatory sittings. I think an opportunity should be available for evidence to be given, to the end that the commissions will have the fullest possible information. At present the representation commissioner, with his staff, has made an assortment of diagrams covering the various provinces and outlining the territorial limits of the various constituencies. As I understand it, these have been based on various percentages of tolerance. It seems to me that no commission could possibly fully understand local conditions and considerations unless there was provision for the taking of evidence. Clause 17, paragraph 1 states:

A commission may, in the performance of its duties under this act, sit at such times and places in the province for which it is established as it deems necessary, and before completing its report may, if it sees fit, hold one or more sittings in that province for the hearing of representations by interested persons.

The use of the expression "may" when applied to the crown is always meant to be "shall", but not in so far as it applies to a creation of the crown in the form of a commission. To give a reasonable degree of unanimity to the discharge of the responsibilities of the several commissions, I suggest there should be a change in line 1 where the word "may" appears so that it would read "a commission shall, in the performance of its duties—". Line 4, which reads "—before completing its report may, if it sees fit—" should read "—before completing its report shall", and the words "if it sees fit" should be left out.

It is very material that representations should be made, but if we pass the legislation as it is now a commission may simply say it is going to sit in province A but not in province B.

The hon. member for Scarborough was about to speak, but circumstances and rules prevented him from doing so. I am sure he was going to make some representations, but he was denied the opportunity of doing so under the rules. He certainly should not be denied the opportunity of placing his views, or the views of others, before a commission set up in his province and, indeed, others should have the same opportunity. I ask the minister whether he will consider an amendment along the lines I have suggested, in order to assure a degree of unanimity among the commissions so they will not interpret what they should do in one province, in so far as public hearings are concerned, differently from what they should do in other provinces.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the Leader of the Opposition has made a very valid point. This point has been raised in earlier sittings of the committee, as hon. members know. I have a suggested revision to clause 17 which I should like hon. members to look at and consider, and if it meets the point made, as I think it does, I will be glad to move it as an amendment to clause 17.

If I might be allowed to elaborate on the first point made by the Leader of the Opposition in respect of at least one mandatory sitting, this suggested amendment provides that the commission may, in the performance of its duties, sit at such times and places in the province for which it is established as it deems necessary, except that before completing its report it shall hold at least one sitting in that province for the hearing of representations by interested persons.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is meant by "one sitting"? Is that one day? If it does mean one day that is not sufficient, because if a commission sat from ten o'clock in the morning until noon and then adjourned for tea, that would not be long enough to hear all the representations which can be expected.

Mr. MacEachen: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that "one sitting" in this sense is similar to a court sitting, which may be as long as required.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, in this regard I came with my music prepared. I should like to go slightly further than the minister has suggested in his proposed amendment. In my view the commission should sit for longer than one sitting. I suggest that we should strike out the whole of paragraph 1 and substitute the following. "A commission shall in the performance of its duties under this act, and before completing its report, hold one or more sittings in the province for the hearing of representations by interested bodies or persons." After all, in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec it would not be possible to hold only one sitting in each and receive all the representations expected. I am sure that in respect of a province as large as Ontario at least four sittings would be required; therefore I suggest it should be mandatory.

I think the Minister of Transport previously agreed with the contention advanced at an earlier stage of the debate that public sittings must be mandatory, and I would think the language should constitute a directive rather than as proposed, because it seems that it is exceptional. The language of the amendment put forward by the minister is "except that before completing its report it shall hold". I suggest it would be better and simpler to say, "it shall hold one or more sittings" and let it go at that.

Mr. Douglas: Shall hold one or shall hold more? It cannot be both.

Mr. Lambert: Oh, yes.

Mr. Knowles: Maybe it is a matter of semantics, but "shall" is mandatory. If it is "one or more" you introduce the element of choice. Is not the phrase "at least one" better in the sense that it does require one?

Mr. Lambert: I am not going to dispute it. I think we are in agreement.

Mr. MacEachen: I gather that this amendment is acceptable.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, there is one other aspect of the minister's proposal upon which I should like to touch before he assumes it is completely acceptable to all members of the committee. In my view the proposal the minister has placed before us in draft form is an improvement over the original drafting of clause 17, apart from the question of whether the holding of sittings should be optional or mandatory as far as the provincial commissions are concerned.

One point with regard to the original draft which caused me a good deal of concern was the provision with respect to the giving of notice of hearings. I think the proposal advanced by the minister in the substitute draft is an improvement in this respect over the original proposal, which as I understand it provided for the giving of notice only in the Canada Gazette. If the original draft had been accepted it would have created the possibility of people having only five days' notice of a hearing prior to the time within which they had to give notice of their intention to make representations and to file their written representations with the secretary of the commission.

The proposal the minister has put forward suggests that notice must be given at least 30 days before the commencement of the sittings, and that notice in writing to the secretary by interested persons must be filed within 20 days from the date of publication in the Canada Gazette of the advertisement referred to in subsection 1. This certainly provides more opportunity for those desiring to file notice of their intention to make representations, but I suggest to the minister that even with that provision there are places in my constituency where it would take more than that time for the Canada Gazette to reach people and for a reply to reach the hands of the secretary of the commission through the mail services provided by the government.

I think the minister will agree that it is not only those people who live in large urban centres where daily mail service prevails who should have the right to make representations to the commission. The Canada Gazette is not very widely read, of course, by people generally throughout Canada, and I suggest that in addition to publication therein provision should be made to require the commission to give notice, to use a phrase that is certainly in some election acts if not in the Canada Elections Act, in at least one newspaper circulating in the district or districts affected. I think this would be a distinct improvement and would give the commissions a clearer directive that it was the desire of parliament that they should provide every opportunity to people in all parts of the province affected by the hearings of a commission to make representations if they so desired.

[Mr. Knowles.]

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) spoke about the period of time at the disposal of those who wish to appear before a commission, because I believe that a period of five days between the date when the meeting of the commission is announced and the time witnesses must notify the commission before which they wish to appear, is insufficient.

I believe that it would be advisable to extend further the period of time at the disposal of those who wish to make submissions, because even a time limit of ten days is rather short.

I would also point out that paragraph 5 should be added to those presently included in this bill.

I wonder whether under this subclause 5, it would not be possible for the commission, which is required by subclause 1 to sit at least one day, not to sit at all, since it is free to state that the evidence to be given is not to be heard at the sitting, so that if that commission felt that no evidence was worthy of being heard at that sitting, it could simply decide not to sit.

I wonder if subclause 5 is not at variance with subclause 1 of section 17, because I feel the commission could easily give the following interpretation to subclause 5: since there is no evidence likely to be of interest to the commission, the commission will not be required to sit at the place scheduled for that date.

I therefore ask the minister to clear up this point and also suggest that he might extend even to 30 days the period of time allowed to people anxious to submit representations to the commissions.

[Text]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether we are going to discuss the whole of clause 17 at one time or do so by subclauses. The discussion started on 17 (1), then jumped to 17 (2) and has now come back to 17 (1). I would prefer to limit myself to 17 (1) and then go on to 17 (2), because it raises an entirely different sort of suggestion that we would wish to make to the minister. So far as 17 (1) is concerned, I had one wording but I am quite prepared to accept the minister's wording.

Mr. MacEachen: Would it be desirable that I should move the amendment to clause 17, subclause 1, now and dispose of 17 (1)?

Mr. Lambert: Yes.

Mr. MacEachen: I move:

That subsection 1 of clause 17 be deleted and that the following subsection be substituted therefor—

Mr. Lambert: I think one of your colleagues has to do this.

Mr. MacEachen: I am advised that because the motion is in the name of the Prime Minister I am free to do so.

—17. (1) A commission may, in the performance of its duties under this act, sit at such times and places in the province for which it is established as it deems necessary, except that before completing its report it shall hold at least one sitting in that province for the hearing of representations by interested persons.

The Chairman: The committee has heard the proposed amendment. Is it carried?

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now deal with subclause 2.

Mr. Lambert: I agree with the general principles enunciated by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni but I think it would be preferable to expand the advertisement beyond the Canada Gazette. Who receives the Canada Gazette? Lawyers and official bodies receive it by mail. It takes two or three days to deliver and has not a general circulation. As a matter of fact a lot of lawyers put it into their libraries when they receive it, and in some cases into their wastepaper baskets, and whether opened or unopened is always a good question.

Representation is such an important matter that I suggest the advertisement not only be published in the Canada Gazette, in order to make it official, but also in at least two appropriate daily newspapers published in a province. When I use the words "appropriate daily newspapers" I am thinking of a province such as Quebec where it should be published in both the French and English language papers, and the same would apply in New Brunswick.

Alberta has two definite regions, and so the advertisement could be published in a Calgary paper and an Edmonton paper, and for the province of Saskatchewan in Regina and Saskatoon papers. In B.C. it could be published in one of the daily newspapers on Vancouver island and in another on the mainland. Further, there should be at least 30 days notice given before the commencement of sittings.

Mr. Moreau: The hon. member's purposes are good, but does he not think that since this matter comes up only once in ten years and is of considerable public importance, the newspapers would carry information about the sittings in any case?

Mr. Lambert: They might, but possibly not concerning the exact hour and date of sittings. There are consequential provisions concerning the submission of representations, and that such representations be received prior to a certain time. One organization may say, "We will have our submission in the mail by the 10th of the month," but the commission may have indicated it wants all submissions received by 12 noon or 3 p.m. on that date.

Calls for tenders and other types of official notices on behalf of the government are advertised in daily newspapers, and surely the changes which may be made in constituency boundaries deserve as much consideration as calls for tenders. With the greatest respect to the government, if there is one way of making sure something will not be seen by the general public it is for the government to put it in the Canada Gazette.

I have an amendment which I am prepared to move, but if the minister accepted this suggestion I think it would be better if it were moved by the government.

Mr. Barnett: I am pleased to have the support of the hon. member for Edmonton West with respect to notice other than in the Canada Gazette. I thought he was doing quite well when he outlined his proposal for advertisements in two newspapers—

Mr. Lambert: In at least two.

Mr. Barnett: That makes it better. I thought he was doing quite well when he discussed some provinces, but he boggled a bit when he got to B.C. When I suggested earlier that the advertisement be published in a newspaper circulating in the area concerned I had in mind the situation in my own province of B.C. where I do not think two newspapers could be said to cover the province.

If the area most affected were in the coastal region, say the Prince Rupert area, a Vancouver city or Vancouver island newspaper would not be suitable, nor do I think would the people of the Kootenays agree that a Vancouver newspaper would be suitable for their purposes. For that reason I would not like to see a commission confined to publishing the advertisement in two newspapers within a province.

Mr. Thomas: I would like to support the contentions of the previous two speakers, and in addition to newspaper advertisements I suggest the best way to disseminate this information would be to contact the people most concerned, the candidates in the preceding general election and the candidates in any intervening by-election. They would then disseminate the information to their political parties.

Mr. Patterson: I wish to support the views expressed by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. We all recognize the fact that very few people who receive the Canada Gazette read it, but I do not believe the suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton West is adequate, because it is almost impossible to pick out two papers in a province—

Mr. Lambert: At least two.

Mr. Patterson: He says at least two, but I think you would have to go much beyond that to give the coverage required. We believe the fullest information possible should be disseminated in this connection. I think the government is aware of other means by which this could be done. I do not see why we could not use our own broadcasting corporation to place this information before the public. It is there, and it is providing a public service. I think all these media should be used to acquaint people of what is going on relative to this important matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I approve the view expressed by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). This bill must be given great publicity as it is certainly a most important piece of legislation since it deals with the preparation of the future electoral map of Canada.

However, I wonder if my hon. friend has read subsection 3 of clause 17. According to the principle he has laid down will it be necessary, in newspaper advertisements to insert the drawing referred to in subsection (3)?

Are you in favour?

[Mr. Barnett.]

Mr. Lambert: Oh, yes.

[Text]

Mr. Bell: I should like to suggest to the minister, if he does not look too kindly on the proposal to publish this information in newspapers, that he might consider the methods used by such bodies as the board of broadcast governors and the board of transport commissioners with regard to their hearings on the subject of new radio stations, the discontinuance of railway lines, and so on. I think it is most important that every opportunity with regard to time should be given to all those who are interested and that facilities for publication should be made available. After all, hearings of this type are only held every ten years.

Mr. MacEachen: I appreciate that the Canada Gazette is not widely read in the constituency of the hon. member for Edmonton West, or, for that matter, I hasten to add, in any other constituency in the country. I appreciate the hon. member's interest in this point. I gather that when notice is published in the Canada Gazette that the commission proposes to hold hearings it is a matter of general interest which would be picked up by the news media and widely publicized. This of course would give appropriate publicity to such hearings. However, I am prepared to make an attempt, at least, to meet the views expressed by the hon. member. I readily accept the point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West that the number of days might be increased from 15 to 30 and I will also accept, at least in part, the proposal with respect to newspaper publication. Would it not meet the situation if we provided that notice of the time and place fixed by the commission for any sittings to be held for the hearing of representations from interested persons shall be given by public advertisement in the Canada Gazette and in at least one daily newspaper of general circulation in the province concerned? This is going to be an expensive business—

(Translation)

Mr. Lambert: And in the province of Quebec, it would be in an English language newspaper?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Probably we should say that the information should be made public in at least one daily newspaper. The commissions will themselves be able to decide on the basis of their appreciation of the need for publicity whether to utilize more than one. But let us say "at least one". If this meets with the wishes of the committee, I would move:

That subclause 2 of clause 17 be struck out and that the following be substituted—

Mr. Thomas: Before that amendment is read, I wonder if I might press this idea that all candidates at the preceding general election should be notified at the same time as publication is made in the Canada Gazette. After all, the representatives of our organized political parties in Canada are the people who operate our elections and our election machinery. Were it not for the organized political parties and the people who have taken an interest in this work over the years, our elections would be nothing but confusion. You can reach these people most readily through the candidates who contested the previous general election and I would certainly urge that notification be sent to the candidates.

Mr. MacEachen: I appreciate the importance of organized political parties and the desirability of candidates being informed. But it seems to me these constitute the group of persons most capable of getting this information, particularly if they are interested in running again. I would think this group would automatically follow these matters and need no special notification.

Mr. Knowles: They might even read the Canada Gazette.

Mr. MacEachen: It might be required reading for all candidates.

Mr. Barnett: Before the minister proceeds I should like to raise one point. If I heard him correctly, he intends to use the phrase "in at least one daily newspaper". I cannot see it is necessary to include that word "daily".

Mr. Lambert: Oh yes.

Mr. Barnett: Why? In certain areas of this country the commission might well consider it most desirable to publish in a newspaper which appeared less frequently than daily. If the word "daily" is used the commission will be prevented from exercising its discretion in this way. The minister may not have realized it but there are large areas of British Columbia where the residents just do not get daily newspapers within a reasonable time after their publication. But there may be a perfectly adequate weekly paper covering the area and I should like to see the legislation left open on this point so that the commission would not be bound in all cases to use daily newspapers, though I have no doubt that in most parts of Canada daily newspapers would be selected.

Mr. Francis: I cannot support the suggestion of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. In the first place we are meeting the request which was made with regard to time; the minister has indicated that 30 days will be allowed instead of 15. This deals with part of the problem. There is one other matter to which I would draw attention. In most of the metropolitan areas there are local papers which come out weekly or biweekly. I have noticed that in some cases the requirement of the Canada Elections Act for publication of the expenditures of candidates is met by publication in a weekly newspaper in a relatively obscure section of the riding. The technical requirement of publication is still met but I would not like to see a loophole of this kind left in the present measure and I do not believe that upon reflection the hon. member for Comox-Alberni would like it left in either.

Mr. Barnett: The minister suggested that publication would have to be made in a newspaper in general circulation and I think this would cover the point raised by the hon. member for Carleton. I can understand the consideration he has in mind in regard to urban areas, but I still maintain my right to suggest that people who live in scattered rural areas, where there may be no daily newspaper circulating, should be entitled to the same rights with regard to notice as people who live in populous places such as Carleton, which the hon. member represents in this house.

Mr. MacEachen: I will certainly take out the word "daily", Mr. Chairman. I do not think it will hurt the matter. Therefore may I continue with the motion. I move:

That subsection 2 be struck out and that the following be substituted:

"Notice of the time and place fixed by the commission for any sitting to be held by it for the hearing of representations from interested persons shall be given by advertisement published in the Canada Gazette and in at least one newspaper of general circulation in the province at least 30 days before the commencement of such sitting".

Amendment agreed to.

Subclause as amended agreed to.

The Chairman: We are now on subclause 4, notice of representation to be given before sittings.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, is not the minister going to move an amendment to subclause 4?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, I have an amendment here to subclause 4, but before moving it, if hon. members would like to speak to the subclause it might be better.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of subclause 4 is to maintain the ten days notice to the commission. Under the bill as originally proposed, with the 15 days and then ten days before the commencement of the sittings, it allowed only five days for the public to become aware of a sitting, after publication of the notice, and to make up their minds after studying the advertisement whether they wished to make representations. Then they had to prepare a synopsis of their representations and get it into the hands of the secretary to the commission. Frankly that was impossible. That is why there has been the insistence on the 30 days notice. Now that the minister has brought forward the 30 days amendment, notice must be given within 20 days after the date of publication. This means that the commission will get ten clear days notice. I think that is basically the same requirement in subclause 4 as it now stands as it is in the proposed amendment. I would have thought that was not necessary. I would have thought it would be adequate to give five days notice.

My notes in the original instance on examination of this bill indicate that five days notice would be sufficient, and therefore we could take the proposed amendment of the minister by saying "within 25 days of the date of hearing". I think the purpose of the notice is to give the public the chance to study the proposals and make their representations. It must be remembered that you will be dealing in many instances with really untrained persons, in so far as making representations before public bodies is concerned. They are not going to go running to high priced counsel to make these representations. Therefore every latitude should be given to the public in this regard.

It may be a little bit of tough luck on the commission, but in any event the subject is somewhat limited. I do not know how many representations will be received, say in the province of Alberta, with regard to 17 seats as the matter now stands. Ontario, regionally might be somewhat greater. But I do feel, and suggest to the minister, that at this time we should bear in mind that publication in the Canada Gazette at the first of the month will perhaps not get to the people until the third of the month, and if it is a newspaper circulated in a province, by the time it gets to the rural areas three or four days may have been eaten up. Let us give the public the benefit of any latitude that can be given. Therefore instead of saying "20 days from the date of publication", why not say 25 days, giving the commissions five days before the sittings? I think this would be quite adequate. I put my point forward on that basis, Mr. Chairman. There is a proposal for a subclause 5 and I am going to have something to say about that, but I am dealing with subclause 4 at the present time.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I am advised, and I think there is considerable validity in this view, that the commissions will require more than five days between the moment a representation is received and the time a hearing is held. This is regarded as the irreducible minimum in order to give the commissions an opportunity to sift out the representations. There may be many representations received by a commission and it may not be possible for them to get ready for a hearing and hold it in five days. We think ten days is the minimum they ought to have. I put that forward as a reason why the provision which is contained in the amended subclause 4 ought to be maintained.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, the minister will readily understand that in certain areas of the country time will be taken up by what might be called the portal to portal requirements in connection with notice reaching interested people. Then they have to prepare their representations and get them into the hands of the secretary. Anywhere from seven to ten days may elapse as a result. Therefore what I am concerned about is the time allotted to the public to study the proposals, make up their minds and then prepare their representations. I am concerned that this time is being squeezed. After all, there will be a deadline imposed by the secretary to the commission, and if they say representations will be received until five o'clock on a certain day, and that is ten days before the sittings, difficulties might arise for the public. In this regard I would ask the minister, just how complicated can these representations be? The commissioners may have to bend over a little more, I will admit; but my concern is primarily for the public, unless the intention is to insist that they go to high priced counsel to prepare these briefs and get them in. I think we would be erring on the side of restriction rather than on being generous with the public.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a few words in support of the views expressed by the hon. member for Edmonton West with respect to increasing the number of days to 25. Let us consider the situation. The commissions will be well versed in the electoral boundaries of the ridings with which they are concerned, because they will have studied them and set those boundaries. They will know the conditions that exist in the constituencies with which they are concerned. On the other hand, when a notice appears to the general public it will not be the individual who will be making the representation as much as groups of people interested in the political affairs of that particular constituency. No one person in that organization is going to make the necessary decision as to whether or not representations should be made. Meetings will have to be called; they will have to prepare themselves and look at the situation, all of which will take a longer time than it would take the commission to acquaint themselves with the representations they have already carefully studied in the setting out of the electoral boundaries. Therefore I think if we are to decide which way it should go the benefit should be given to those people who are not acquainted with what is going on but who are anxious, after careful consideration resulting from a number of meetings, to decide whether or not they should make a representation, and also to decide what form the representation should take.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might say a few words on this question. I certainly agree with the two hon. members who have just spoken with regard to the need for adequate time. We have already dealt with the clause which requires at least 30 days notice to be given. I am wondering whether the minister, in view of his earlier remarks, could give us any indication, arising out of any experience, knowledge or advice he has on the question, just what emphasis will be put on the 30 days and what interpretation will be given to the words "at least". In other words, if we could have some reasonable assurance that the normal practice would be that more than 30 days notice would be given and that only in unusual circumstances would just 30 days notice be given, then I think there might be a better case for the minister's idea that the commissions will require at least 10 days notice. It would appear to me that in using the phrase "at least 30 days" we are indicating the general desire of this house in putting through this measure that the normal practice should be that wherever feasible more than 30 days notice should be given. Has the minister any advice or information in this particular connection which he is able to give the committee on this very important aspect of the matter?

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister whether he has any information on the Australian act in this regard? I understand a lot of the thinking behind the bill has originated from the Australian position and it is quite important that we do give adequate time. Perhaps we should have considered subclause 2 in relation to subclause 4. I am all in favour of all the time in the world. The minister, coming from Nova Scotia, is familiar with a case conducted before the transport board regarding the discontinuance of a railway line of which very little notice was given the public and considerable annoyance resulted. Surely we know what is the experience in Australia.

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Chairman, in our meetings with the electoral officer who studied the Australian act—some members of the house took advantage of this—Mr. Castonguay, in reporting on the Australian experience, did indicate to the members interested—I do not know whether the hon. member who just spoke was at the meeting—that it was the experience of the commission in Australia that the largest number of public hearings were rather beneficial, and I think probably that would be the attitude of our commissions.

With regard to the point made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, let me say that 30 days is a minimum time for advertisement, and I certainly hope the commissions in Canada will give more time than that. I think we must keep in mind that this is the minimum time. In my opinion we should not attempt to hamstring the commission too much. We must remember that five days might just straddle a week end, which may give them very little time. We are dealing with people who, to some extent at least, are engaged in other occupations as well. I hope the members of the committee will accept the amendment proposed, bearing in mind that we are indicating to the commissions that 30 days is a minimum period.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member for Saint John-Albert said, if we had looked a little more carefully at subclause

2 we might have provided 40 days so as to give 30 days to the public and then 10 days to the commission. The point of view expressed by the hon. member for York-Scarborough and also by the minister with regard to the commission is certainly a very arguable one and I agree that there is some merit in it. But in balancing the two as between the public interest and the interest of the board within a limitation of 30 days, my view is that we should err on the side of the public.

If one looks back to clause 13 certain factors are indicated at which the commission may look in deciding to go outside the normal population quotient, such as the special geographic conditions, sparsity or density of population, historical boundaries, historical counties and such other matters. Those people will have to mobilize their information, and so forth, because it is not going to be the city ridings where there will be trouble. One street compared to another is not going to make as much difference as, say, a traditional boundary or county. In the older parts of Canada these traditional boundaries are certainly very important and I think must fully be taken into account. That is why I tend to plump on the side of the public interest rather than what I might call the administrative convenience of the commission.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I should like to support the argument which has been raised for a greater length of time, and I should like to quote an example to the minister from northern Ontario, where I imagine at the first redistribution there will be the most difficulty. You will have a situation where there would be five ridings to which probably some adjustments will be made. They cover a distance of roughly 700 miles from east to west and 600 miles from north to south, with communities scattered all along the way. I would point here to Kenora-Rainy River, where some communities involving several thousand voters could be on the margins of boundaries with as much as 300 or 400 miles between them.

Another point is that there is no single newspaper which reaches this region. There is no radio station or television station in this region. The watersheds of influence and information are tremendously varied and the changes which will be necessary as a result of any commission hearings and subsequent redistribution will be substantial. If I may give one example, it is quite possible that the constituency of Port Arthur, which is going to be cut considerably, is likely to have some relationship with Kapuskasing and even Timmins; yet there is no normal centre for any communication between these two places at all. For that reason I think the time mentioned is really minimal; it is very narrow.

I think the minister is aware that during elections there is an extra time allowance for certain of the northern ridings because of their area, and it is a rather substantial time allowance in relationship to the total electoral period. It seems to me that very same argument applies in this case. Therefore I should like to support the arguments which have been put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West regarding the time factor. I like the improvement to this clause suggested by the minister but I think he can be even more generous.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Chairman, the minister has been very kind in accepting certain suggestions, but perhaps the way out of this dilemma would be to leave the ten day period and make the notice 40 days. As the hon. member for Port Arthur has pointed out, objections will be raised in remote sections of the country where communities may be shifted from one riding to another, and it is under those circumstances that the people will require additional time. It is relatively simple to effect a redistribution and notify everyone in a city riding where the large population changes will be made. However, the controversial changes are going to be those where townships and towns are changed. Perhaps the minister would accept the 40 days notice and the ten day period, because in fairness to everyone five days is a short period of time for the commission to prepare for representations.

Mr. MacEachen: I am conscious of the argument that has been made in respect of giving the public sufficient time, but a few moments ago we decided that the 30 days would be ample. We must reconcile the interest of the public with the efficient conduct of the commission's work.

What we could do is give the commission a week, or seven days, and within the 30 day period give the public 23 days, providing additional time within that 30 day period. In most provinces I do not think the commissions will need the 30 days, but in large provinces they will perhaps need more.

Mr. Smith: In the first instance they will require more time.

Mr. MacEachen: We must bear in mind that the commissions, in the exercise of their duties, can take more time if necessary, because this suggested 30 day period is a minimum. The commission could take 40 or 50 days if they require that much time. We are only suggesting that the time must be at least 30 days.

Perhaps I may be allowed to move an amendment making this seven days and 23 days.

Mr. Chairman, I move:

That subclause 4 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"No representation shall be heard by a commission at any sittings held by it for the hearing of representations from interested persons unless notice in writing is given to the secretary to the commission within 23 days from the date of publication in the Canada Gazette of the advertisements referred to in subsection (2), stating the name and address of the person by whom the representation is sought to be made and indicating concisely the nature of the representation and of the interest of such person.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, since this was prepared on the basis of the Canada Gazette, and the minister then amended subsection 2 to include the words "and in at least one newspaper of general circulation in the province", would it not be proper to have this subclause read "within 23 days from the date of publication of the advertisements referred to in subsection 2"?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we could make that change by consent.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, would that not spoil the effect of this amendment? If a commission decided it should have 40, 50 or 60 days, the effect of this subclause, fixing the time from the date of that publication, would prevent the commission from providing more time. I think it would be much safer, if we want seven days, to simply change the ten to seven.

The Chairman: The committee has heard the amendment as proposed by the minister and further amended by the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West, which now is as follows:

No representation shall be heard by a commission at any sittings held by it for the hearing of representations from interested persons unless notice in writing is given to the secretary to the commission within 23 days from the date of publication of the advertisements referred to in subsection (2), stating the name and address of the person by whom the representation is sought to be made and indicating concisely the nature of the representation and of the interest of such person.

Is the subclause carried as amended?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thomas: On division.

The Chairman: We will now proceed to subclause 5.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I am suggesting that a subclause 5 be added to clause 17 as follows:

A commission may, in the case of any representation of which notice has been given under subsection (4), dispense with the hearing of such representation at any sittings held by it where, in its opinion, the nature of the representation as indicated in the notice is such that no such hearing is necessary.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I am rather surprised that the minister has come forward with this proposed amendment, because it represents a judgment without a hearing. I could not for a moment accept it. It may be that in a case where there are no representations the commission would not be required to sit, although it has given notice of a hearing, but we could not possibly accept this amendment in its present form. It states "the nature of the representation as indicated in the notice is such that no such hearing is necessary." We are giving carte blanche to the commission to reject, in theory, any representation, yet the machinery of the act does not provide for any appeal from the commission's decision in this regard. Again I think public interest demands that any representations made must be heard. After all, the requirement is only on the basis of a concise representation as referred to in subclause 4. Therefore, representations could be dismissed out of hand on the basis of a précis or synthesis of a representation to be made, and there is no appeal whatsoever from a commission's decision.

Mr. Moreau: Would the hon. member permit a question? Perhaps I misunderstood him, but is he suggesting that the commission should be bound to accept representations made by anyone?

Mr. Lambert: I am suggesting that representations must be heard, and that is all. If at the hearing it is apparent that the representation is frivolous, the commission should hear the people and tell them that their representation will not be considered. I do not think the commission should be permitted to reply by letter to the effect that it has received a representation but cannot understand or accept it, and therefore there is not going to be a hearing. This problem is theoretical, but is in respect of theoretical problems that trouble occurs. With the greatest respect to the minister, we on this side cannot accept his amendment.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, before the hon. member for Edmonton West takes a firm position, may I ask him in respect of those representations having to do with minor patent errors in the description of boundaries which representations they propose to accept. Every redistribution committee I have been on has experienced several cases involving obvious omissions in descriptions, and that sort of thing. How would the hon. member handle that situation?

Mr. Lambert: The same way as would be done in a court of appeal. An appeal is launched and the court may not hear counsel prior to granting the appeal. In any event, it makes a public declaration that it is accepting the appeal, or if it is not accepting the appeal without argument it then hears argument. No court will say: We have judged these cases and no sittings will be held. This is what this subamendment is suggesting is possible, that the commission will say they have read the representations and they reject them out of hand. If they accept them that may be all right, but what about the rejections?

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member was taking a firm position in absolute terms with regard to the proposed amendment and I was trying to suggest to him that in the case of both the redistribution committees on which I have served there were several situations where there were minor inaccuracies in the description of boundaries. They were petty things and I do not want to take time to recount them in detail. Surely there should be provision somewhere to permit the commission to deal with that type of case. Possibly this clause does not do it.

Mr. Lambert: The minister will agree with me that the proposition I have put forward is quite tenable and that under the wording of the proposed subamendment representations could be rejected entirely out of hand. That would be possible under this wording.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, but I was trying to intimate to the hon. member that having put forward that point he then went much further and excluded the authority to deal with another situation where there may be a necessity for such authority.

Mr. Lambert: Again I would much prefer to err in the other direction than in the direction indicated by the subamendment.

[Mr. Lambert.]

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the fact of giving the commission the power to reserve its opinion on the representations to be made is something new.

There is the board of broadcast governors which decides in advance whether a brief can be accepted or not. We have also here in this house the decision of the Speaker who decides whether the remarks made are pertinent or not, so that before a matter is completely detailed, he can call the member to order.

However, as I mentioned to the minister a while ago, I wonder if subparagraph 5 does not say the very opposite of subparagraph 1 of clause 17.

As I explained, if the commission feels that no useful information is likely to result from the representations, it might merely decide not to hold a hearing. In my opinion, the discretionary powers given to it by subparagraph 5 are too wide, since under that clause the commission may decide not to sit at all unless there is another way to explain the same thing in that clause.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of getting this point clear I wonder whether we could have an answer to what the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency has just said. As I understood it, he said that the commission could in its own judgment dispense with the sittings. I do not read it that way. As I read it, the commission could dispense with a representation but it would have to do so at one of the sittings. In other words, if a representation is made that is frivolous or that is not necessary because the matter has been taken care of, the commission could say so but would have to say it publicly at the sitting: We are dispensing with the representation, not with the sitting. Is that not what it says?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knowles: The proposed subclause 5 reads:

> A commission may, in the case of any representation of which notice has been given under subsection 4, dispense with the hearing of such representation—

May I emphasize these words.

> —at any sittings held by it—

It seems to me it cannot do so in camera or under the table or secretly. It has to do it at the sittings that still have to be held. I wonder whether the minister would comment on the remarks made by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency and my own remarks so we may get the point clear.

Mr. MacEachen: That is my understanding of the section, that a commission certainly could not dispense with a sitting or a hearing. It could dispense with the hearing of a representation. I should like to indicate to those members who have spoken on this point the reason for making this proposal. It is to avoid placing an obligation on the commission to hear, for example, repetitious representations. And, although it may be an unlikely eventuality, possibly this is the most important point: Suppose a group of individuals or an individual attempted systematically to hold up and delay the work of redistribution by a series of successive representations. This is a possibility that may be unlikely but it may occur. This provision would give the commission the opportunity to dispense with such representations. It certainly is not intended to remove the possibility of hearing valid representations.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, could you not achieve the same result by taking due advantage of clause 16 without the necessity of having subclause 5 of clause 17? I assume that clause 16 was adopted in its present form. Clause 16 gives the commission the power to make rules and surely by making rules, as any appellate court with competent jurisdiction may do, they could prevent the kind of repetition which the minister now appears to be afraid might take place. All that would be required to avoid that result would be the making and promulgation of rules under clause 16.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Chairman, these hearings are going to take place only once every 10 years and I think it is just as important that the commission give the appearance of a full hearing for everyone as it is to provide for such hearings. While the minister's explanation is reasonable on the face of it, I should like to draw attention particularly to the last words of the proposed amendment, "that no such hearing is necessary". How would a commission really know whether or not a hearing was necessary until they had heard the representations? I think that the intention of the amendment is perhaps good but the wording is unfortunate and can only suggest that the commission might want to be secretive or might want to have less than a full airing of views. I know that is not the intention but we have there the words "as indicated in the notice is such that no such hearing is necessary".

We are changing the boundaries of the ridings only every 10 years and it is a very final thing. Therefore I think it is most important that no words be left in there that will give the slightest hint of anything less than a full hearing. The President of the Privy Council has suggested that one case might be where the commission is prepared to accept the suggestion of a group. This happens every day with the Ontario municipal board. A group of citizens come before the board and are told at the beginning of the hearing that the board is very happy to see them but it has accepted their proposition. I think that is the way it should be done in this instance. If there is any validity in this amendment then certainly happier and better words could be used.

Mr. Churchill: I take it that the minister did not formally move this subamendment.

Mr. MacEachen: I did not think I had moved it.

Mr. Lambert: So this has been technically all out of order.

Mr. MacEachen: If the hon. member will forgive me for taking the floor, I wish to say my purpose was to put the thought before the committee in the form of an amendment, but I did not move it.

Mr. Churchill: That is my point. It was a bit of kite flying, and we have shot the kite down. Perhaps we could now go on to some other clause of the bill, otherwise we shall have to spend a lot of time discussing a proposal to which we on this side are opposed. The arguments against adopting the amendment have already been presented. I do not want to be guilty of repetition but I think it has been made clear to the minister that, although whoever devised this and put it in front of him may have had a good idea at the time, on examination it does not seem satisfactory.

It is unnecessarily adding something to the bill, and one of the difficulties with attempting to do that with a bill, as has been illustrated this afternoon, is that it immediately strikes members of the committee as being unnecessary. We do not want the commissions to give an appearance of preventing the public being heard. We are charting a new course, and let us not put restrictions on it at the start. If, following experience of commission hearings, it may be advisable in the distant future to make a change, it can be made at that time. I suggest that the minister drop this point now.

Mr. MacEachen: May I suggest that we have another look at it and maybe we could produce a proposal in a form that would be agreeable to members of the committee. I would be willing to pass on, with the understanding that I could come back to this and in the meantime try to work out something that would get general consent.

Mr. Barnett: And may I suggest that in his reconsideration the minister take into account the rather interesting points raised by the hon. member for Peace River in relation to the implications of clause 16, with which we have already dealt. I am wondering whether some slight modification of the wording in clause 16 might not more appropriately cover the problem which I know the minister has in the back of his mind.

Mr. Baldwin: May I tell the minister that the rules of court which are promulgated by supreme court judges are wide enough to cover from time to time the kind of thing the minister has in mind, not to the extent of preventing a litigant from having his remedy before court, but providing the rules under which he gets there. I think clause 16 is ample to cover the sort of thing the minister has in mind.

Mr. MacEachen: I would be glad to have the proposal made by the hon. member for Peace River reviewed, and with further consideration and consultation I reserve the right to come back to this if we can work out something acceptable. On the other hand, if it is established that the point made by the hon. member for Peace River covers the situation, we will not have to come back to this at all.

Clause 17 stands.

On clause 18—Time within which report to be completed.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, before we consider clause 18, I should like just to say a word on clause 17, in its entirety, since this word is accepted. It is related to the advertising to be done: about the publication of notices in newspapers, according to paragraph 2.

There is one thing I would have liked to see and that is bilingual advertising, whatever the province in which it appears, because in the long run if the notice is published let us say, for instance, in a newspaper of Quebec city—where 5 per cent of the people are English speaking, why should we accept bilingual advertising in Quebec city and not in Prince Edward Island where, according to official data, 8.8 per cent of the people are French speaking?

I respectfully submit, therefore, that all publicity from the federal government should be bilingual, no matter what part of the country it is meant for. That would help us a great deal to fight against those many subversive ideas which are spreading and make the French-Canadian element look upon the federal government as an institution not to be trusted, because it is said that the federal government is not interested in the least in promoting French culture and the French language. That is why I find this suggestion most timely and that the government should see to it that all publicity be bilingual, for the federal government, besides being the government of 12 million English speaking people, is also that of six million French speaking Canadians. It would seem to me, then, to be perfectly logical and reasonable that this matter be given serious consideration and that all publicity from the federal government be bilingual across the country.

[Text]

Clause 18 agreed to.

On clause 19—Report to be laid before house.

Mr. Lambert: With respect to subclause 2 I think the same considerations would apply to the dissemination of the report of the commission as were required for the purposes of the notices of sittings. Therefore I would suggest that the subclause be amended by adding to it the words "and in at least one newspaper of general circulation in each of the provinces".

Mr. Thomas: Why could we not have the candidates in the last preceding general election notified? Speaking on a previous clause the minister said this would not be desirable and I would like him to enlarge on his reasons.

Mr. MacEachen: My thoughts are simple on this point. I do not see why candidates, important as we regard ourselves, should be singled out for special attention. Second, I think those who are candidates have an inbuilt incentive to inform themselves about these matters.

Mr. Barnett: What about the point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West?

Mr. MacEachen: The report of any commission in a province is bound to get publicity. Surely it will be big news and will appear in every paper. Further, such reports are likely to be voluminous, and may possibly contain electoral maps. I ask, do members of the committee think it necessary to publish the whole of such a report as an advertisement in the newspapers, since the report itself is bound to get publicity? I should like to meet the point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West but I do believe that here is a case where the news is of such importance that it is bound to get out—

Mr. Lambert: But there is one point which I would bring to the minister's attention with regard to the time element involved. Clause 20 reads:

> If within a period of 30 days from the day the copy of the report of any commission for a province is laid before the House of Commons or published pursuant to section 19—

There is a time limit and I do not think we can rely on the fact that communications media will pick up the report. There is an official step to be taken. There is a requirement. And if we require somebody to do something within a certain period there must be a starting date and there must be publication of that date. Certainly the news media will carry the story. But we do not know in what form they will use it. After all, a daily newspaper is not likely to take page after page spelling out reams of descriptions of changes in constituencies on the fringe of its circulation area. How much news space can a metropolitan newspaper devote to a report of this kind? In certain towns and cities there is only one newspaper, and one aspect of this is a smattering of editorial content between the advertisements. This constitutes the newspaper on certain big shopping days. Why not guarantee the widest distribution by the publication of this report? It may take a whole page. What is the difference? Is it not worth it? You are paying $800 or $900—

Mr. Moreau: But we may be dealing here with a voluminous report and surely the hon. member is not suggesting that the whole report be published. I should like to bring to the hon. gentleman's attention a recent experience when some changes were made in metropolitan boundaries. They received considerable publicity throughout the province of Ontario; new maps were printed, and so on. I suggest to the hon. member that his concept of making this information available by public advertisement could be applied to almost any piece of legislation. Surely he is not suggesting we should insert paid advertisements in newspapers throughout the country to acquaint the public with everything parliament has done? There is a role here for the news media. It strikes me this would be a news story of paramount importance. One paper would be trying to "scoop" another and I cannot see any need for the publication of the whole report.

Mr. Lambert: Is the hon. member suggesting, then, that a deadline be fixed on the basis of the publication of a news story? We are involved here in a legal requirement, because 31 days after the happening of an event it will be too late to do something. I say therefore that the legislation has to provide for a legal pattern. There must be a starting point which is generally known, not merely a date of publication in the Canada Gazette which is unknown to the public generally.

Mr. Moreau: Would the hon. member not agree that there is a role here for the member of parliament? He will have access to the report when it is tabled in the house, and if there are any features in it which appear to him to be objectionable he will be in a position to deal with them. It would seem to me that when we take into account the Canada Gazette, the news media and the members of parliament who will receive copies of the report we find ourselves with ample means of getting out this information.

Mr. Lambert: On the other hand, as far as members of this house are concerned they receive the Canada Gazette at their offices, and we are talking about a period between sessions. It is all very well for the hon. member opposite who comes from Toronto, close to Ottawa, to talk in this way but I am thinking of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, for instance, who could be entirely cut off from a notice in the Canada Gazette, completely to his detriment. I admit there will be wide publicity, but a news story does not start the clock ticking for a legal pattern.

Mr. Churchill: I take it that clauses 19 and 20 refer to procedures to to be followed by members of the House of Commons. If we could add something at the end of subclause 2 of clause 19 whereby members would be notified individually of the report, it would meet the objection raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. The general public are not concerned with the wording of the clause we are considering, but the members of this house are. I do not have the wording in mind at the moment but I would think that if a few words could be added at the end of subclause 2 providing for direct notification being given to members of parliament, this might satisfy us.

Mr. Barnett: I was on the point of rising to make a suggestion along the lines of the one just made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. It seems to me his proposal would meet the situation. If, in addition to publication in the Canada Gazette, the Speaker were required to notify members of the house individually when the house was not in session, an opportunity would be given for action to be taken within the time limit as suggested in clause 20.

Mr. Thomas: Again, I come back to my suggestion that all the candidates in the general election preceding redistribution should be entitled to this information, not just the sitting members.

Mr. Lambert: This affects the sitting members only.

Mr. Bell: While the minister is thinking about this matter for a few moments, I return to the point I raised a short while ago. It is true we are dealing with new legislation here but I think some of the patterns which have been established by other boards and commissions could well be followed at the present time. For example, we have been talking about notification of interested parties. I suggested we might follow some of the practices used by such bodies as the board of broadcast governors and the board of transport commissioners. The post office has a system which provides for notification after hearings have been held. When the board of broadcast governors has held a hearing, those concerned are notified by mail, afterwards, of the results. Would it not be possible to follow a system of this kind? I think it should be the responsibility of the commission not only to notify interested parties so that they may make their representations but also to make the results available afterwards. I urge that some standard procedure be followed throughout this whole business of notification and publication.

Mr. MacEachen: The proposal put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is satisfactory. I would be prepared to include a provision that a copy of the relevant Canada Gazette—the copy which contains the report—

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Knowles: It had better be a marked copy.

Mr. MacEachen: —be sent to each member of parliament; that it be mailed to each member of parliament. This is a matter, as the hon. member for Edmonton West pointed out, that relates to an action that must be taken by members of parliament and it is logical that some special effort should be made to see that the reports get into the hands of members. I do not think that effort will really be required, but it might be desirable in the future, when members may not be so concerned about the boundaries of their ridings.

The Chairman: Is the minister proposing an amendment to clause 19?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, could we leave this clause open until after the dinner hour? There are other amendments that will be brought in at that time for the consideration of the committee.

Mr. MacEachen: Certainly.

The Chairman: Clause 19 stands.

On clause 20—Procedure where objection filed with Speaker.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, with regard to clause 20, I think earlier in the debate on second reading hon. members had drawn out attention to line 29 which says:

> —signed by not less than one third of the members of the House of Commons representing electoral districts in that province—

With the distribution of seats by parties, this prohibits any objection by certain provinces. I think this is something the committee must now consider, namely how objections can be put forward by parties which are not represented in the house.

Mr. MacEachen: We have considered the points that have been raised in this regard and I have circulated a proposed amendment, Mr. Chairman. I hope all interested hon. members have a copy. This represents a rather important change to clause 20. As I read the changes proposed, the one third is reduced to one fourth of the members of the House of Commons representing electoral districts in that province. This meets, of course, a point that was made in the debate by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, who argued, as an illustration of the necessity for a change, that the present membership of his party in the province of Ontario is less than one third and therefore the group from that province would not be in a position to take the action that is contemplated.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It would be the same in Quebec.

Mr. MacEachen: I am sure that may occur in other provinces. So we have met that point and are suggesting that one fourth of the members of the House of Commons representing electoral districts in that province sign such an objection and file it with the Speaker. Of course, the Solicitor General, for example, and the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) would be in a different position; one member from the province of Prince Edward Island would be able to raise an objection. That might be fine.

Mr. Knowles: With regard to this new rule, Mr. Chairman, supposing my hon. friend the minister and his friends do not like the map that is submitted for Saskatchewan; what would they do about it?

Mr. Lambert: Lump it.

Mr. MacEachen: That is the point that was raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. I suppose we could not do anything about it, unless we could get the co-operation of hon. members on the other side to present a proposal.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I believe there is a serious point here, even though there has been some amusement about it. After all, while the members of a province do have a particular interest in the ridings of that province, under this clause the matter is being brought before parliament; it is parliament as a whole that looks at it. I am wondering whether there is not some way whereby a certain number of members of parliament could do it, rather than its being limited to those from the particular province concerned.

Mr. Smith: That is co-operative federalism at its worst.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, this is a rather harsh rule. I can think of a number of provinces in which there could be no objection, no matter what was done. In the province of Saskatchewan, of course, no objection could be raised by anyone. With regard to the province of Alberta, the Liberal party would be in the same position. With regard to the province of Quebec, on this basis we would simply have to accept what was determined for us.

I am wondering whether there should not be a provision made, as a member of parliament represents all of Canada, that one fourth of the members of the House of Commons should be concerned with such an objection. That would give a general power of objection. It could never hope to cover the various third parties, but it would cover the position of the two major parties. Certainly the system that is provided in the amendment would not protect third parties at all; but if there were a provision whereby one quarter of the membership of the house would be able to object, I think it would be fair. On the present basis it is certainly anything but fair. Again I repeat that, as a member of parliament represents not only his own constituency but his country, if provision were made for one fourth of the members of the house to object to what had taken place in Quebec, Ontario or any other province, I think the general cause of objection in this regard would be removed.

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the Leader of the Opposition would clarify a point for me. I think members of the committee would realize the danger in having 25 per cent of the members of the House of Commons considering the whole report. I think this might be acceptable province by province; but it seems to me that members of parliament are never so impartial as when they are considering ridings other than their own. In view of the far reaching effects of this redistribution, I do not think it is likely that any of us will be completely happy with the final report. It would seem to me there would be a very serious danger if the report were considered in its entirety, and perhaps it should be considered province by province.

I believe this is why the initial proposal was made. The final decision by the House of Commons would be by the majority of members and not necessarily by those members who come from that province. This report will have to be accepted by parliament, as I understand it.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, there is a much more fundamental change in the amendment than the one to which reference has been made; that is, that in the original draft of clause 20 the members who register an objection with the Speaker have the right to debate the matter, and if the house passes a resolution to this effect, the report is sent back to the commissioner for reconsideration by the commission. The draft now before us provides:

—the Speaker shall, within the first five days next after the expiration of that period that the House of Commons is sitting, cause a copy of the objection to be laid before the House of Commons and published in the Votes and Proceedings of the said house, and the report shall thereupon be referred back to the representation commissioner by the Speaker, together with a copy of the objection, for reconsideration by the commission having regard to the objection.

I take it this means there will be no debate and no resolution agreed to by the house. If that is correct, I would object very strongly either to the provision that it would require one quarter of the members from a particular province to register an objection or to the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition that one quarter of the members of the house be required to register an objection. If these objections are not going to be debated it seems to me that any ten members should be allowed to file an objection. Since all that is going to be done with these objections is to have them appear in Votes and Proceedings and then be referred back to the commission for reconsideration, I do not think we need restrict the number very severely. I can understand that when an objection was going to be debatable and the house had to take up a good deal of time naturally we would not want 20 or 30 objections registered.

Mr. Knowles: Or 265.

Mr. Douglas: Yes. Well, you could provide that ten members could make an objection and have some provision that those members' names should not appear on any other objection. But if all that is going to happen is that these objections are filed and printed in Votes and Proceedings and then forwarded to the commission, we can afford to have this clause wide open so that any ten members can raise an objection to some part of the report, and then have this objection considered by the commission.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I had not read this suggested amendment but it would simply destroy the power of parliament. This goes much too far. We must have the opportunity of determining in parliament whether substantial wrong has been done. We should at least be able to debate the question. This proposed amendment would simply emasculate parliament. All that would happen is that an objection would appear on Votes and Proceedings; it would go back to the commission and the commission would say that they had already determined the matter once and for all and were not going to do anything more about it.

I should like to hear an explanation of this. This is an administrative short cut which puts an end to parliament. I had not appreciated its significance until I heard the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam speak. I would oppose this suggested amendment to the limit. It would remove from parliament the power to debate a wrong when it occurs in the opinion of a substantial number of members of parliament.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Lambert: If I may, Mr. Chairman, in order to establish on the record what we are discussing perhaps I may be permitted to read this suggestion. Nowhere does it appear on the record at the present time, and I do not think it would be fair to ask the minister to put it on because it would become a formal amendment. Perhaps it would be better if I just read the suggestion:

If within a period of 30 days from the day a copy of the report of any commission for a province is laid before the House of Commons or published pursuant to section 19, an objection in writing signed by not less than one fourth of the members of the House of Commons representing electoral districts in that province is filed with the Speaker specifying the provisions of the report objected to and the reasons for the objection, the Speaker shall, within the first five days next after the expiration of that period that the House of Commons is sitting, cause a copy of the objection to be laid before the House of Commons and published in the Votes and Proceedings of the said house, and the report shall thereupon be referred back to the representation commissioner by the Speaker, together with a copy of the objection, for reconsideration by the commission having regard to the objection.

As has been suggested to me, this is a suggestion on the part of the minister, and I would put it no higher than a suggestion. It may require a little more consideration than we can give it now, we having just received it, so perhaps after we have heard a few speakers we could stand clause 20 so that we could consider the matter over the dinner hour.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, may I just explain the purpose of the suggested changes which have been circulated in the form of a draft for the consideration of the members of the committee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who drafted the last one?

Mr. MacEachen: The first change is a reduction from one third to one quarter and was intended to meet the point made by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. It would also help the situation generally.

The second proposal certainly removes the opportunity for the house as a whole to debate objections proposed by members of parliament. However, if, for example, the hon. member for Queens, Prince Edward Island, following the report of the commission for that province, had serious objection to that report, under the original proposal this objection would have to be debated and a resolution passed by the house before it could be considered by the commission. In other words, any objecting group would have to secure a majority in the house before they could have their objections considered by the commission. This alternative makes it possible for the objecting members to have their objections heard by the commission without in the process enlisting majority support for their objections. This is obviously a protection for minorities in the house to enable members to have their objections heard by the representation commissioner. As the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out, it does remove that stage which is provided in the earlier draft, namely that parliament debates the matter and then by resolution sends the objection back.

As I understand it these are the purposes of the suggested draft which has been put forward for consideration, but I did want to explain, as I understand them, the reasons for the proposed changes so that hon. members might consider them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the suggestions—perhaps I might refer to them as the draft suggested amendments—have not yet been placed before Your Honour, although they are being considered by the committee. I must say they have no appeal to me whatever. This is the kind of thing which would actually deny parliament any control whatever. Certainly we would have to have a majority of the house in order to secure reconsideration by the commission if the original clause in the bill were carried.

However, difficult as it would be to get a majority of the house, on the basis of my experience going over many years, and as an interested party in two or three redistributions, public opinion does have its effect. If we accepted this projected, anticipated or casually advanced suggested amendment, we would deny the public the opportunity of hearing the facts, and I for one would be very opposed to anything of that kind.

Mr. MacEachen: Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition would develop his argument along this line—and I do not relate this thought to the present parliament. Is it not possible that during some future parliament party advantage might be taken, in that the objecting members would be prevented by a majority of another party from having their objections heard? In other words, if an element of partisanship entered into this it could have this effect. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition would consider that point.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let us try to analyse the situation, human nature being what it is. Let us consider, for example, commission A. That commission hears representations and draws a map. All of the possible objections will have been raised at its hearings. If parliament simply goes through a perfunctory operation, and not one based at all on consideration, because one quarter of the members from the province in question, over which commission A has authority object, the matter goes back to the commission. Anyone who has ever reargued a case in a court which has originally come to a conclusion, yet for some reason a reargument is considered necessary, knows what the difficulties are. The difficulties in a court under those circumstances would be much less than the difficulties of bringing these objections again before the same commission that had decided earlier, on the basis of what it had heard and the evidence placed before it, as to the course to be followed. The commission would simply meet and say, "Under the law 25 per cent of the members from the province have objected. We dealt with this matter and it has come back to us purely as a mechanical result of the statute as it exists, but that is the end of it".

I have a great deal of regard for public opinion, and if a wrong is done, or a mistake is made, and 25 per cent of the members from any one province object, then in a debate the searchlight of scrutiny and examination will be brought to bear on what has taken place, and where there has been unfairness public opinion often steps in. If it does not step in at the time, it steps in later on whenever there is an opportunity for the people to vote.

I am not going into particulars in this regard, but I know something about this because I had an experience which was spoken of at the time. I do not think any member of this house ever went through two gerrymanderings, but I did go through two of them. This is what we are trying to get away from. As a matter of fact, as I said to the minister in the course of a private conversation recently, if it had not been for the gerrymander of 1949 I would never have sought re-election to parliament. However, that operation took place without anaesthetic and the results were most favourable to me in the long run.

That was public opinion operating in consequence of what was believed to be an injustice. This has happened to members in all parts of the house. None of us has been guiltless in connection with arranging constituencies of political opponents in such a way that their hopes of return were considerably diminished, and that has been so throughout the years.

We are now doing away with that sort of thing, but in doing away with it we must preserve the authority of parliament. Parliament must have the final say and the opportunity to speak. We cannot, as parliamentarians, abdicate the rights of parliament to a commission. Otherwise the first responsibility of parliament, the assurance of fair representation, is completely denied—whether in fact or in theory, none the less actually, under statute.

Members of this house as a whole, I am sure, would agree that we dare not pass an amendment which simply provides for a perfunctory return to the commission of an objection, because it has been raised by one quarter of the members of a province, without debate in this chamber. To do otherwise would be to make the commission in effect the absolute authority.

Mr. MacEachen: Would the Leader of the Opposition think that if a debate were provided for in the house in respect of the bill of objections, without the necessity of a resolution which would require a majority of members endorsing the objections, that this would satisfy the requirements?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, it is always difficult to answer a categorical question of that kind when one has not given it the fullest consideration, but on the face of it, that appears to be a most reasonable suggestion, and it would protect minorities as well.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I am wondering what has happened to this bill. Someone has been nibbling at it during the time it has been in the pigeon holes of the offices of the government. We studied this bill in March and April and I thought we had reached the agreement that two of the most contentious clauses would stand until we made our way through the rest of the bill. However, every other minute now we are being presented with some new idea. Some of these ideas may be very useful, but I do not think we are going to make much progress if further suggestions, such as the one just presented, are to be placed before us. Alternatively I suggest that if there are any more, they be placed before us now so that we may consider them over the supper hour, rather than having them presented in this nebulous fashion.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, may I tell my hon. friend that I have no more proposals to make.

Mr. Churchill: I am glad we have that situation cleared up, and perhaps if we can throw out this one we will be in a better position.

This last suggestion raises a fundamental issue, as the right hon. Leader of the Opposition has pointed out, in respect of airing grievances in parliament. The purpose of clause 20 is to permit people, who think something has not gone right, or who have a grievance, to bring the matter before parliament. Provision is made for members to advance their case in parliament and to have it discussed, and then you have the play of public opinion with regard to what has been said. But if the proposed amendment is accepted, that debate is not permitted and public opinion has no effect whatsoever, nor has the opinion of the house itself.

We are all quite familiar with the fact that at times issues are raised in the house with which we are not very familiar, but as the debate develops people discover they have an interest in the subject being debated and they then make a contribution. Therefore I hope the minister will reconsider this matter. I started off in discussing clause 20 by drawing attention to the fact that when this bill was before the house on other occasions earlier people had considered that one third was an unsatisfactory figure and the minister then suggested one quarter. But he did not disclose his hand at that moment. He had a great, long amendment which in some mysterious fashion—

Mr. MacEachen: I did not disclose my hand because when I was about to move to the next point the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre got up and took the floor and I did not get a chance. I was not trying to conceal anything.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member sometimes has trouble with me, too.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre constantly and consistently intervenes. However I suggest that the minister let clause 20 stand so that we may consider his proposed amendment over the supper hour and that he rewrite it to make it acceptable.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

Mr. Churchill: Perhaps we might then proceed with the rest of the bill.

Mr. MacEachen: I will make an effort to meet the point that has been raised. As I understand it, the Leader of the Opposition accepted the view that, provided an opportunity for debating a report was available and was provided, a resolution might not be necessary and that if we provided that the matter could be aired in the house so that members could express their views a formal majority vote would not be necessary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And the matter would then be returned to the commission.

Mr. MacEachen: And then it would go to the commission.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested that we all look at this over the supper hour and I am sure we all agree this is a good idea. I should like to suggest that when we are looking at it we look at the record of the debate at an earlier stage. As I recall, some members of the house, I believe in the official opposition, objected to clause 20 in its original form on two counts. First of all, it was objected that the requirement of one third was too high in some provinces and, second, if my memory serves me correctly there was an objection that the requirement of a majority vote in the house before the objection could be referred to the commission was unfair.

It seems to me what the government is trying to do in bringing in this draft amendment is to meet both of these objections. I quite agree with the point made by the Leader of the Opposition that it is not really doing it in a parliamentary way just to have it in Votes and Proceedings and have no discussion on the floor of the house. I suggest that what has evolved between the Leader of the Opposition and the Minister of Labour might perhaps meet the point in that some discussion of these grievances would be a good idea. But I think that the official opposition might well consider the merit of the suggestion that if there is objection from a reasonable number of people it should not be necessary for that reasonable number of people to get a majority vote in the house before the matter can be referred back to the commission. Otherwise we are keeping this thing on a partisan basis.

While I concur in the suggestion that we look at this matter over the supper hour I should like to say while I am on my feet that I support the position taken by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, that to require a quarter of the membership of the house certainly is unfair to a number of groups in the house. If one looks, for example, at the position of my colleagues from the province of British Columbia he sees that they happen to be fairly numerous. Yet under the requirement of 25 per cent of the membership of the house they would not be able to register any objection. I should like to suggest that a further look be taken at my leader's proposal that it be any 10 members of the house. Then we might go along with the suggestion that there be a debate and without the requirement of a majority vote perhaps all of these things put together might result in the drafting of an amendment to this clause that would be satisfactory to all.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I think I probably started all of the trouble in the original debate. My objection was that reading clauses 20 and 21 together as they now stand we might have the result of the House of Commons debating and passing a resolution respecting a change in the electoral boundaries of a particular province, sending it back to the commission and then finding that under clause 21 the commission could either accept or reject parliament's vote. My objection at that time was that this is wrong. If the House of Commons has taken a vote and made a decision that decision should be respected. But clause 21 says that the commission can take our recommendation or vote and either accept it or reject it. I felt that was wrong and that is the reason I raised the point in the first place.

I think the discussion that has taken place between the minister and the Leader of the Opposition has provided an answer. If there is a provision for debate without a formal resolution, then my objection will be overcome, but I do think we have to consider clauses 20 and 21 together. I think a solution has perhaps been reached and that if such an amendment is proposed it will meet the situation.

The Chairman: Shall the clause stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Churchill: Six o'clock.

The Chairman: I have to advise hon. members that pursuant to provisional standing order 39A the following question is to be raised this evening:

The hon. member for Kootenay West, trade, visit to Canada of United Kingdom home builders mission.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, before we rose at six o'clock we were discussing clause 20, and I had circulated a draft amendment to members of the committee, with the purpose of gaining their views on it. I thought we had a very useful discussion and during the recess we have worked on an amendment that might meet the various points raised by the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, among others. Therefore I am going to break my pledge that I would not produce any more amendments.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister mind reading it?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, I shall read it, though I am not moving it as yet. It reads:

That clause 20 of Bill C-72 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

20. If within a period of thirty days from the day the copy of the report of any commission for a province is laid before the House of Commons or published pursuant to section 19, an objection in writing, in the form of a motion for consideration by the House of Commons of the matter of the objection, signed by not less than ten members of the House of Commons is filed with the Speaker specifying the provisions of the report objected to and the reasons for the objection, the House of Commons shall, within the first fifteen days next after the expiration of that period that the House of Commons is sitting, take up the motion and consider the matter of the objection, and thereafter the report shall be referred back to the Representation Commissioner by the Speaker, together with a copy of the objection and of the House of Commons Debates with respect thereto, for reconsideration by the commission having regard to the objection.

This seems to fit the various points that were made by members of the committee. It overcomes the matter raised by the Leader of the Opposition in that debate is provided for where objections may be ventilated. It protects the rights of minority groups which might not be able to get a majority in support of their objections. It also enables ten members of the House of Commons to raise objections, with the result that the point so kindly raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West with respect to the Liberal party in Saskatchewan will also be met. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I now move this admendment.

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt this amendment?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment has been skilfully drawn following careful consideration, and I believe it will be generally accepted. I thank the minister for utilizing the interim between the adjournment at six and our return at eight for doing such effective work.

Mr. Knowles: I should like to join in the remarks just made by saying the amendment has been skilfully drawn and seems to take into account all the points that were raised during the discussion just prior to six o'clock. I believe it should receive the endorsation of the committee but, having said that, there is one question that readily presents itself. What happens if quite a number of these objections are filed and they do not all get a chance to be considered within the first 15 days? I expect the minister will say he and I should discuss this in our subcommittee on procedure, but does it not raise the question of how much time is to be allocated for consideration of each individual objection?

This problem is posed by the wording of the amendment which says it shall be done "within the first fifteen days next—". Suppose there are 20 of these objections and the first ten occupy the first 15 days; what happens to the rest of them?

Mr. MacEachen: This is a point that occurred to me because I envisaged ten reports descending on the house at the same time, but it is quite unlikely this will happen. For example, the commission for Prince Edward Island might complete its report in three or four months. It could be laid on the table and the 15 days would apply there. If they come in the way we expect, this objection would not be too great, bearing in mind also that the house will be asked to deal with this problem only at ten year intervals.

Mr. Knowles: Let us take a chance on it, then.

Mr. Douglas: One point which concerns me a little is the phrase—

—the House of Commons shall, within the first 15 days next after the expiration of that period that the House of Commons is sitting, take up the motion and consider the matter of the objection—

What is covered by those words "take up the motion and consider the matter of the objection". How does the house determine when it has finished taking up a motion and has given proper consideration to the objection? I presume this is something to be worked out by the house itself.

Mr. MacEachen: That is what I thought. It might be difficult to put into this measure the procedure to be followed. This is something which might be considered in the committee on procedure. One thing that worried me somewhat was this: Unless there is a time limit—and there is one here of 15 days—the house could delay dealing with a report indefinitely and thereby hold up redistribution. This is something which might be worked out by the committee on procedure as the hon. member has suggested. But the bill does deal with this problem.

Mr. Baldwin: May I suggest to the minister that once the matter has been taken up within 15 days it need not necessarily be completed within that time. Consider this in the light of an appeal. Once an appeal has been taken up there is nothing in the amendment, as I understood, to indicate the procedure has to be completed within that time. So if it should happen that all ten reports come back at the same time and there are ten objections and they are all entered or taken up within the 15 days, I do not think we will be obliged to complete our discussion on them within that period.

The words used are "in the form of a motion for consideration" and I would point out that this might presuppose an actual motion before the house, a motion which could only be determined, like all motions, upon a vote. I think the committee on procedure should have in mind that this is a type of motion which would not be determined by a vote. I have no desire to raise too legalistic a point but I believe the hon. gentleman or his successor might find himself in grave difficulty in not taking this procedure to the stage where there would have to be a vote; great care would need to be exercised as to the wording. Apart from these considerations, I think the proposal put forward is one which well meets the situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, we should be grateful to the minister for having tried to substitute for clause 20, the present clause which takes into account all the objections raised this afternoon in connection with Bill No. C-72.

With reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), if and when the house should face a rather difficult problem, it would surely be possible to obtain the unanimous consent of the members to allow discussion to extend beyond the time provided by this clause.

I feel that, unless luck is decidedly against us, the reports from the various commissions should not reach the house all at the same time, so there should be no problem. Still, should it arise, I am quite sure that the members of parliament, in view of the fact that they are all concerned, would give unanimous consent so that the debate could extend beyond the period stipulated in the clause.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, for our part, we also accept this amendment which will certainly be more satisfactory to the members of the house, all the more so because, by allowing ten members to put forward their objections, all the important parties in the house will have a chance to be heard with regard to electoral representations in each province.

[Text]

Mr. Churchill: I have a word to say with regard to the suggestion made by the minister and followed up by my hon. friend from Peace River. I am not at all sure we should saddle the committee on rules and procedure with the work of determining how this particular section of the act when passed will be applied in the House of Commons. I think that when we are dealing with new legislation and experimental procedures we should try them out first. Then if something is wrong with the procedure we can get a special committee to work on it. But the committee on procedure has other things to do and I would not saddle it with this particular job at the present time.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 20 as amended agreed to.

On clause 17—Sittings of commission; hearing of representations.

Mr. MacEachen: We stood clause 17, I understand, because I had proposed a subclause 5 which fell like a lead balloon on members of the committee. So I withdraw completely from that position and hope the committee will now pass the clause.

The Chairman: It is understood that the last part of the proposition, discussed but not formally moved by the minister, referred to as subclause 5 of clause 17 is not one of the amendments agreed to.

Shall clause 17 as amended carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Churchill: Wait a minute; no.

The Chairman: Shall clause 17 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Clause 17 agreed to.

Clause 19—Report to be laid before house.

Mr. MacEachen: Clause 19 also stood and subclause 2 was under discussion as a result of proposals made by the hon. member for Edmonton West, followed up by a concrete suggestion on the part of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. It seemed to be generally agreed that the point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West would be met if it were ensured that a copy of the Canada Gazette were sent by mail to each of the members of the House of Commons representing an electoral district in a province.

I therefore propose to move:

That subclause 2 of clause 19 of Bill C-72 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

(2) where the copy referred to in subsection (1) of the report of any commission for a province is received by the Speaker during an interval between two sessions of parliament, the Speaker, shall forthwith cause the same to be published in the Canada Gazette and a copy of the Canada Gazette, to be sent by mail to each of the members of the House of Commons representing electoral districts in that province.

Mr. Knowles: I do not want to be as fussy as some people think I am—

An hon. Member: That would not be possible.

Mr. Knowles: —but as I read that amendment, any copy of the Canada Gazette, for instance, one which was 15 years old, could be sent and it would still meet the conditions. Should it not read "a copy of the Canada Gazette containing the report"?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Weichel: To the last known address?

Mr. Knowles: I realize there is a fair amount of humour being exercised at my expense but I submit it is altogether ambiguous to say "the same to be published in the Canada Gazette and a copy of the Canada Gazette—

[The Chairman.]

An hon. Member: The said copy.

Mr. Knowles: It does not say that. It says the Canada Gazette, for all time.

An hon. Member: You are really splitting hairs.

Mr. Churchill: No, he is very sound in this.

Mr. Knowles: We are not just putting speeches on the record; we are passing legislation and we should be precise as to what is intended.

Mr. MacEachen: What about "to be published in the Canada Gazette and a copy thereof to be sent by mail—" and so on.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: I should like to point out to the Minister of Labour, who is sending us those amendments, that they are coming to us in English only.

Naturally, it takes more time to grasp their full meaning.

I am wondering whether it would be possible, if other amendments are forthcoming, to have French versions made available to us, so that we could thoroughly understand every word contained therein.

[Text]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister has got himself into a position where he is going to have to send a copy of the report to hon. members, because the amendment says:

Where the copy referred to in subsection (1) of the report of any commission for a province is received by the Speaker during an interval between two sessions of parliament, the Speaker shall forthwith cause the same to be published in the Canada Gazette and a copy of the Canada Gazette to be sent—

The article is used twice there. Why could we not say "and a copy of such Canada Gazette"?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: That is what I suggested in the first place.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps the Chair should read the amendment as it now reads:

Where the copy referred to in subsection (1) of the report of any commission for a province is received by the Speaker during an interval between two sessions of parliament, the Speaker shall forthwith cause the same to be published in the Canada Gazette and a copy of such Canada Gazette to be sent by mail to each of the members of the House of Commons representing electoral districts in that province.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 19 as amended agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 21 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Clause 21 agreed to.

On clause 22—Preparation of draft representation order.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the minister must have a consequential amendment with respect to clause 22 (1)(a) because of the procedure that has now been adopted with regard to the report dealt with by the house.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Chairman, the consequential amendment is in connection with clause 22 (1) (a). I move:

That the following be substituted for the first three lines of clause 22 (1) (a):

"it is ascertained by the representation commissioner that no objection has been filed with the Speaker in the manner and within the time prescribed therefor in clause 20—

Then it continues:

—or that an objection has been filed—

And so on. I move that consequential amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lambert: Does the minister still feel that the latter portion of that subclause is still applicable, because there is no direction under clause 20 any more? There is no direction by the house at all; it is automatically referred back to the commissioner after objection has been filed. I would think it should stop immediately after "20".

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is perfectly correct. I move this substitution for the new subclause (a):

"it is ascertained by the representation commissioner that no objection has been filed with the Speaker in the manner and within the time prescribed therefor in section 20—

And then, comma. I thank the hon. member for his help.

Mr. Lambert: Does (b) apply?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Chairman, (b) applies. It would be comma "or (b) after the report was referred back to the representation commissioner by the Speaker".

The Chairman: The Minister of Labour moves:

That clause 22 (1) (a) be amended as follows: "(a) it is ascertained by the representation commissioner that no objection has been filed with the Speaker in the manner and within the time prescribed therefor in section 20, or—

Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. Lambert: No, Mr. Chairman, with respect to subclause 2(a) I posed a question this afternoon that had some constitutional implications. They are immediately pertinent at this point, because if there is any signed agreement or any question of the provincial governments participating in the determination of the members of parliament returned from each province, of course 2(a) becomes somewhat academic.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, did you rule that subclause 1(a) was deleted?

The Chairman: Is the hon. member referring to clause 22(1)(b)?

Mr. Thomas: No, Mr. Chairman. Was subclause 1(a) deleted?

The Chairman: No. Clause 22(1)(a) now reads as follows—

Mr. Thomas: What is in (a) thereafter is deleted?

The Chairman: The Chair understands that the first three lines are deleted and replaced by the following amendment:

(a) it is ascertained by the representation commission that no objection has been filed with the Speaker in the manner and within the time prescribed therefor in section 20, or—

Mr. Thomas: Then all the rest of that paragraph in the draft bill would be deleted?

Mr. MacEachen: That is right.

Mr. Thomas: And you go from the word "or" on to paragraph (b)?

The Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I will attempt to deal briefly with the point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. Section 51(1) of the British North America Act, as my hon. friend well knows, provides for the adjustment of representation in the Commons, as follows:

—the number of members of the House of Commons shall be 263 and the representation of the provinces therein shall forthwith upon the coming into force of this section and thereafter on the completion of each decennial census be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules:

Then the rules are set forth. The first one, for example, is:

> There shall be assigned to each of the provinces a number of members computed by dividing the total population of the provinces by 261—

And so on and so forth.

As I understand it, if these rules as set forth here are changed the changes will involve the invocation of the amending formula agreed to at the recent conference. I would much prefer my hon. friend to have an opportunity of raising this question later with the Minister of Justice, but that is the explanation.

Mr. Lambert: I think the minister sees the difficulty. I raised it as a preliminary point this afternoon because it becomes very pertinent when we are considering clause 12. Clause 22 (2) flows from a decision which is taken under clause 12 and therefore I feel we must decide the principle, or have some clarification of the principle, upon which clause 12 is based before we can approve clause 22 (2).

Mr. Moreau: Could I ask the hon. member for Edmonton West a question. Does he envisage clause 12 in any way affecting the rules under section 51 of the B.N.A. Act? I do not feel that this bill affects the apportionment of members of parliament from the various provinces in any way. Does he see a difficulty there?

Mr. Lambert: Yes, I do. If I may be permitted at this time to intrude this concept into the discussion, section 51 of the B.N.A. Act provides rules and regulations for the determination of the members. The point I raised this afternoon was that the communiqué issued following the dominion-provincial conference made reference in paragraph 2 to section 51A. Section 51A is not section 51. Section 51A merely deals with the senatorial floor for any and all provinces.

There have been conflicting reports in the press that it was agreed at the time of the last dominion-provincial conference that the representation from the provinces in the House of Commons could not be changed by this house without the consent of the provincial governments. I think Hansard will show that this afternoon I indicated there were conflicting reports about this and I wanted the minister once and for all to tell us whether there was or was not an agreement that the provinces had any say at all in the determination of the number of members to come from any province. The senatorial floor is definitely provided for in paragraph 2 of the draft amendment; that is one of the matters specifically referred to.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, the principle which has been preserved in the draft amending formula under section 6(g) of the formula which has been tabled and distributed is the principle of proportionality. The number is immaterial. If one reads the text this is quite clear; it refers to the principles of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the constitution of Canada.

Section 51 of the B.N.A. Act, as has been very aptly noted by the hon. member for Edmonton West, states what are the rules of proportionality. Section 52, which also deals with the membership in the House of Commons states:

> The number of members of the House of Commons may be from time to time increased by the parliament of Canada, provided the proportionate representation of the provinces prescribed by this act is not thereby disturbed.

So that what we have tried to do in the formula is rendered subject to the general amending rule which requires the consent of at least two thirds of the provinces having among themselves 50 per cent of the population, in conformity with the principle of proportionality prescribed by section 51.

The question of the number of members which might result from the application of the principle of proportionality was not considered as sacred because I remember, and I suppose this will appear in the report, that there were many references to the principle of section 52 of the B.N.A. Act. It is also agreed—I speak for no one other than myself but I personally satisfied myself about this before discussing the new amending formula —that if this proposal were adopted, or if it had been adopted in the past, it would not have prevented the present law relating to the redistribution of electoral seats from being passed by parliament, because it is completely within the constitutional framework of the B.N.A. Act as it presently stands.

Mr. Lambert: Just one further clarification in this regard, Mr. Chairman. Could the minister tell us in what regard this proportionality applies? I do not have section 52 of the B.N.A. Act before me, but if the minister could clarify that point we may be satisfied. I think the minister should be able to tell us clearly to what extent he envisages the provinces, as a result of this accord, being able to determine the membership in the composition of this house.

Mr. Favreau: There would be no difference in the status or in the proportion of representation between what exists now and what would exist if the proposed amending formula were passed by the parliament at Westminster. If afterwards there is a question of a modification of the proportions presently existing as a principle, then the basic rules contained in paragraph 5 of the proposed amending formula would apply. The effect of that is that at least two thirds of the provinces, representing at least 50 per cent of the population of Canada, according to the latest general census, will have to give consent to any modification of the proportions which are presently stipulated under section 51 of the British North America Act, or any modification to any of the principles which are contained in that section.

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether, when he referred to proportions, he was referring to the rules which apply, because I hope he is not suggesting that proportionate representation of the various provinces is going to be fixed? As I understand section 51, proportionate representation will vary with the variation in population of various provinces. It seems that any amending formula must be applied to the various rules which exist.

Mr. Favreau: At the present time we have 263 seats in the House of Commons, allocated among the provinces, and one seat each for the Yukon and Northwest Territories. Section 52 of the British North America Act states that this number is not sacred. What is sacred are the rules which regulate the number of seats to which each of the provinces is entitled after each decennial census.

I could read the rules which are contained in section 51 of the British North America Act, but what they mean is, once a new decennial census has been made, and the resulting figures have been published and a readjustment effected, one must apply the rules contained in section 51 in respect of proportionment. We have been very careful in this regard not to apply the limitation to numbers of proportionate representatives in the House of Commons as prescribed by the constitution of Canada. Until there is a change in section 51 of the British North America Act by amendment, as the result of the consent of the parliament of Canada and seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population, the principles spelled out in section 51, in so far as the proportions to which each province is respectively entitled in the House of Commons, will have to be respected. This whole question depends on changes in the distribution of the over-all population of Canada.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, there is one other aspect of this problem that is sacred, and I should like to pose a question to the minister in this regard. Was any decision taken at the dominion-provincial conference that would in any way diminish the protection the senatorial floor provides the maritime provinces?

I ask this question for two reasons. First of all, there were submissions made in the press, before the conference commenced, to the effect that British Columbia was annoyed because it could not increase the number of representative senators, which threw that province out of proportion. Second, when the union of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia was discussed at this conference, in the first stages in a preliminary way, some thought was given to the idea that the total number of parliamentary representatives for that union might be diminished. I asked the Acting Prime Minister about this situation, and whether there was any guarantee that the same senatorial floor arrangement would apply to the united provinces as now applies to the individual provinces. The Acting Prime Minister said it was regrettable that I did not ask this question before the conference commenced. The implication of that answer obviously was that some decision was taken which would change the present situation.

For those two reasons I should like the Minister of Justice to assure us that no decision was taken at that conference which would in any way diminish the protection we now receive in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia as a result of the senatorial floor arrangement.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, unless you rule me out of order I should like to make the following statement. Aside altogether from whether this is relevant to the issue under discussion, I must say that the proportionate number of senators is not affected, but rather has been entrenched. That section of the constitution is the safeguard which preserves the minimum number of senators to which each of the provinces is entitled, and it shall remain in force unless an amendment is concurred in by the legislatures of all the provinces. The hon. member will realize that the representation is completely safeguarded and entrenched, not only by implication, but by expression.

The Chairman: After listening to this discussion I am wondering whether the members of this committee will agree that we have perhaps gone beyond the limited terms of the clause with which we are now dealing. The hon. member for Edmonton West initially raised a proper question in respect of proportions, but I think since then we have gone a little far afield in our discussion. Perhaps at this point we can return to a specific consideration of the clause before us.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, in spite of the explanations made by the Minister of Justice, some ambiguities remain in so far as this subclause is concerned.

As I understand the situation, under section 51 of the British North America Act there are certain rules in respect of the decision as to how many members there shall be, and how they shall be distributed among the provinces, taking into consideration such things as the senatorial floor. However, under the proposed amendment to section 51 of the British North America Act I envisage this problem. The minister suggests that whenever the proportionate number of representatives for the provinces is to be changed, such change requires the consent of seven of the ten provinces representing 50 per cent or more of the population. Presumably we must decide this proportion by calculating the total population of Canada and dividing that population by, as at the present time, 263 members. But if there is a shift in the population which, using this mathematical calculation, would in fact change the number of seats that would be assigned to the provinces, then according to what the Minister of Justice is now telling us it would seem that in spite of the change indicated by the mathematical calculation it will require agreement by seven out of the ten provinces representing more than 50 per cent of the people of Canada before the number of seats in a province can be changed. I understood the minister to say this would be the effect of the proposed method of amending section 51 of the British North America Act.

Mr. Favreau: No, Mr. Chairman. I agree that the words I used might have been a little too technical, and when I say that I hope the hon. gentleman will not take offence because whenever one deals with the words of one's own profession he sometimes makes the mistake of using them to too great an extent.

I did not say that if there was a change in the relative population of all the provinces as shown by a new decennial census you would need the consent of seven provinces to increase the number of representatives of one province whose population has increased very much, and to decrease the representation of another province whose population has decreased. What I said, and the hon. member has referred to it, is that it is completely ruled or regulated by the principles of section 51 of the British North America Act which establishes the relationship between the population of a province in relation to the over-all population of Canada and the number of seats which that population will entitle the province to in relation to the over-all number of seats in the House of Commons. So if the amending formula is adopted its precise effect will be that this rule, this proportion or this relativity will continue in effect. Each 10 years we will have to determine, in accordance with the new census and according to the rules which exist at present, in what proportion and to what extent the relative number of seats to which each province is entitled will change.

What I said was that to change the rules in accordance with which we do that every 10 years, to change the proportionality, if I may express myself that way, we will need to amend the constitution of Canada. We will need to change section 51 of the British North America Act and enact a new proportion. In other words, we know at present that if the province of Ontario has a population of 6,500,000, let us say, it is entitled to so many seats in the over-all total of 265. If 10 years from now the new census shows that the population of Ontario is then nine million people and Quebec is down to three million, in applying the rule at present found in section 51 of the constitution the relationship or proportion will be maintained but there will be a new number of seats to which Ontario will be entitled and a fewer number of seats to which Quebec will be entitled. That proportion under the formula, not the number of seats but the rule of proportionality—that is why we use that word in subsection (g) of section 6—will be maintained. Does that answer the question?

Mr. Olson: When the minister used the word "proportionality" I was a little confused with regard to whether he was referring to the total population or as between provinces.

The Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I want only a moment or two. I think it is clear that the formula in the proposed arrangements for amending the constitution will not prevent us from changing the number of seats that each province might have under the rules in section 51A of the constitution, but it will prevent us from changing the principles or rules themselves as set out in section 51A. I am not going to discuss that now, but I suggest that when we get to the point where we are discussing the minister's formula for amending the constitution, what will be brought into sharp focus is the fact that in 1951 or 1952 we were able to amend section 51 of the British North America Act and write into it the rules that are there now, including the rule that saved Saskatchewan two seats, and we were able to do it on the authority of this parliament alone. But under the minister's formula we would not be able to do that again because this would be changing the rules, changing the principles of proportionality as among the provinces and we would have to get the consent of seven provinces. I do not propose to debate the minister's formula now. I am as out of order as everybody else has been, but I do point out that there is a problem in that field when we get to it.

The Chairman: Shall clause 22 as amended carry?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I want to indicate that I think we have been entirely in order all along because subclause 2 indicates that "the draft representation order shall specify the number of members of the House of Commons who shall be elected from each of the provinces," and therefore the whole thing is entirely germane.

Mr. Knowles: Read the rest of the sentence.

Mr. Lambert: "As calculated by the representation commissioner under section 12". Section 12 refers to section 51 of the British North America Act. Using a specific example, I want to put one question and I will take the province of Saskatchewan about which there has been speculation that it will be seriously affected in that it may lose two or three seats. Notwithstanding the calculations of the representation commissioner under section 12, if it were determined that this should not happen, then according to the explanation of the Minister of Justice we would require the consent of seven of the provinces to do that because that would be disturbing the proportionality. It would be disturbing the proportionality because it would require a change in the result from the working out of the formula laid down in section 51, which is quite clear. Therefore any thought of adding members to certain provinces in order to save Saskatchewan two or three seats will require the consent of the provinces according to the explanation of the minister. I should like him to verify that.

Mr. Favreau: This is true, of course. To change the rules either to give a province more seats than the number to which it is at present entitled under the application of the rules or to decrease the number of seats to which a province would be entitled in applying the rules in respect of a new decennial census, we would, of course, need the consent of two thirds of the provinces having 50 per cent of the population. But this goes two ways. This is a protection against an undue increase, because the proposed formula says that you will not amend the constitution to reduce the number of seats below the number of senators to which the province is entitled. Therefore it is a two way proposition. But I know the hon. member will not be offended if I say that this, of course, has no effect under this bill because it presupposes, as he has just noted very exactly and aptly, the application of the formula devised and enacted under section 51 of the B.N.A. Act. Therefore there is no question in this bill of changing the rule of proportionality.

Clause 22 as amended agreed to.

On clause 23—Proclamation declaring order in force; effective date.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like an explanation from the sponsor of the bill. If, as was explained to us a while ago, the reports from the provincial commissions should arrive one after the other and be adopted, in turn, at different intervals, supposing for instance that the reports of five provinces are accepted, these reports would come into effect immediately. Now, in the meantime, during those two months, parliament may be dissolved and new elections called for. Therefore, the new provincial representations would be valid in five provinces only and not in the other five which will not have submitted their reports.

In other words, supposing a study of the provincial commissions' reports gets under way, that some are accepted but not all, if in the meantime elections are called, would the new electoral districts as approved by the House of Commons stand for these elections in those provinces for which they have been accepted, and not in the others?

Would the minister give us some explanation on this, for I feel the clause does not define at all this aspect of the problem?

The Chairman: Order. Is the hon. member referring in his remarks to clause 23 now before the committee?

Mr. Grégoire: Naturally, Mr. Chairman, clause 23 deals with the effective date and says:

> ...the governor in council shall by proclamation, declare the draft representation order to be in force, effective upon the dissolution of the then existing parliament or effective upon the dissolution of the next following parliament if upon the issue of the proclamation parliament is then dissolved, and upon the issue of the proclamation the order shall have the force of law accordingly.

But if a draft representation order has precisely been accepted by the House of Commons and the Senate, in a word, by all, and approved by the governor in council for certain provinces only, and not for everyone of them, will the effective date start immediately for the provinces whose draft representation order has been accepted and not for the others?

There may be some danger of a mix-up then between certain provinces whose new draft representation order will be in force following approval by the governor in council, while the draft representation order of other provinces will not yet be in force, because those provinces were not ready and an election has been called in the meantime—I feel therefore, Mr. Chairman, that this is certainly related to clause 23.

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: The situation is that the representation commissioner does not submit his draft representation order until all the reports are in, as is specified in clause 22, with respect to each of the reports referred to in clause 18, so that there is no intention to have successive proclamations with respect to draft orders for each commission report. When they are all in there will be a representation order covering all the provinces.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: I do not think that is exactly what the minister told us a while ago when a time limit of 15 days was mentioned as concerns motions which must be introduced in the house for the purpose of rejecting certain representation drafts. The minister said that a province—he even mentioned Prince Edward Island—could submit its report before others, and then the house would take that report into consideration before any other, since it had been submitted to it. This could bring about what the minister now denies; the report of some provinces could be accepted before that of others.

The representation commissioner could submit all those reports at the same time; and let us suppose that among the reports submitted at the same time by the ten provinces, five would raise no objections because those reports had been unanimously accepted by everyone, then the house could accept those five reports from the provincial commissions. But in the case of the five others which are returned to the provincial commissions, should elections be held in the meantime, would the new draft order be applicable before the election date to the other provinces whose reports had already been accepted? Could the minister include a section providing that no election could be held while the draft representation of some provinces was being amended, while that of others remained unchanged, and that all representations be changed at the same time, even if that meant deferring those changes until the next election?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: It is true that all reports may not come in at the same time. Indeed, it is unlikely all reports will come in simultaneously. What will happen is that the representation commissioner will wait until the final report is in and then he will prepare his draft representation order. It will be impossible for a proclamation to be made for five provinces. The proclamation will be made with respect to all the provinces when all the reports are received.

Mr. Lambert: But that does not prevent the house being furnished with copies of the reports, under clauses 18 and 19, seriatim as they come in.

Mr. MacEachen: No.

Mr. Lambert: In other words, we may get little dribs and drabs in that regard.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Still in the same vein, let us assume that the representation commissioner presents to the Speaker the ten provincial commissions' reports and that, precisely in the case I was referring to, those representation orders for five provinces are accepted in the house but that there is an objection in the case of five or maybe two other provinces and that those orders are returned to the provincial commissions, the house might then be allowed to adopt the orders to which there is no objection while those to which there is objection will be returned to the provincial commissions.

Still along the same line, if in the meantime we have an election, what is going to happen?

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question, and may I say this is in an attempt to be helpful. I wonder if the hon. member is not confusing the word "report" with the word "order." It is a report when a provincial commission files its recommendation. There can be ten reports but there can be only one order. The order is the document the representation commissioner produces after all ten reports are received, and I wonder if this is not the basis of the hon. member's confusion.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: It is quite clear in my mind and, also, it is just what I was thinking of. The projet, as it is called in French, that is the draft representation order, is what the representation commissioner brings in. He brings in—

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: After the ten reports are in.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: —what you call the draft order prepared for the ten provinces by the representation commissioner. Then, we all have before us that draft representation order. However, in the case where seven or eight provinces would have no objection but three others did, is there anything which provides that the draft representation orders for the seven provinces submitted by the representation commissioner could not be passed? Is there something in the legislation now which provides that those draft representation orders could not be passed?

Mr. Lambert: No, nothing at all.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: Is the hon. member aware that the point at which objection can be made is when the reports are before us. When a report has gone through the mill completely and an order has been made by the representation commissioner there is no room for objection. At that point, the job is done.

Mr. Churchill: I have a point to raise in connection with this clause. If you do not mind, Mr. Chairman, I will read the clause.

> Within five days after the receipt by the Secretary of State of the draft representation order, the governor in council shall by proclamation declare the draft representation order to be in force, effective upon the dissolution of the then existing parliament—

Then the second part of the clause reads as follows:

> —or effective upon the dissolution of the next following parliament if upon the issue of the proclamation parliament is then dissolved, and upon the issue of the proclamation the order shall have the force of law accordingly.

I want to draw the attention of the committee to the first part of that clause where it indicates an order being effective upon the dissolution of the then existing parliament. Under our parliamentary system in Canada and under parliamentary systems elsewhere there have been occasions when governments have somewhat unexpectedly been retired from office. It might well happen that a parliament expecting to continue for two, three, or four more years might proceed to proclaim an order to be effective upon the dissolution of the then existing parliament, believing that dissolution would not occur for a year or two years. Suddenly a crisis might develop and parliament might be dissolved within a week or even a shorter period. We would then be faced with a most difficult situation in the organization of constituencies whose boundaries had been substantially altered.

I confess I have not pursued this thought to any finality; I have not pursued it to the point at which I am prepared to suggest some amendment to provide authority under which the effect of what I am now suggesting could happen would be deferred. The second part of the clause is, I think, all right, although I judge it might be unusual for the proclamation to be issued after parliament had been dissolved. But I wonder whether the minister has given any consideration to the point I have raised. If it is not a valid point I am prepared to have my error disclosed.

Mr. Moreau: I think the point made by the hon. gentleman is, in one way, a technical one because it would be impossible for the chief electoral officer to conduct an election on such short notice without having the forms printed for the new ridings and the machinery of the election organized. It would not be possible for him to complete these arrangements within the 60 days provided under the Canada Elections Act. I do not think it would be possible for any government to contemplate such an action.

An hon. Member: Suppose it is beaten.

Mr. Lambert: That is the point my hon. friend made. There is a sudden cessation of life of the government. In other words, it is defeated.

Mr. Moreau: Would not the chief electoral officer simply have to make the decision? The hon. member is taking the position that proclamation would already have been made—

Mr. Lambert: Oh yes. The representation order has been presented and the law is mandatory in this regard. It says five days. There is no one who can control it. This is an area in which one must tread very carefully.

Mr. Bell: May I present the problem differently? Suppose a government did not wish to have an election under the new electoral boundary arrangements. Suppose it knew a proclamation was to be issued. It could bring about in various ways the dissolution of parliament and then it could have an election under the old boundary arrangements because the new boundaries would not become effective until there was a new parliament. Thus it is not obligatory on a government, once this machinery gets going, to have an election on the basis of the new boundaries which are to be put forward.

Mr. MacEachen: I think the hon. member is making a valid point. This could happen, but there is an inexorable movement of time envisaged by this bill. Any government would have to take this movement of time into account. In other words, if it intended to do as the hon. member suggested, dissolution would have to take place—

Mr. Lambert: Before the fatal ten days.

Mr. MacEachen: That is right. I do not know how it could be avoided. I agree that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has raised an important point. I am advised that this matter has been considered and wrestled with but that nobody has been able to provide a solution which would meet this problem of the proclamation of the draft order occurring, let us say, two weeks before a dissolution. There would obviously be a great problem in the constituencies. I would certainly be glad to hear any views from the committee as to how to meet this situation, or how it could be avoided. I would point out that the government itself would be faced with the same chaotic problem with respect to its own electoral ridings and would not likely resort to the procedure suggested, and would seek to time a dissolution so as to avoid the difficulty to which the hon. member referred. However, as the hon. member for Edmonton West pointed out, when a government is defeated dissolution is inevitable. In that eventuality, of course, the timing would be known to the other parties in the house.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): A thought which occurs to me is this: The decennial census is taken up in years the dates of which are fixed. On the other hand, terms of parliament are irregular. A situation could arise where a new redistribution had just been completed at a time when a parliament was almost at the end of its life. What would happen in these circumstances? It would be obligatory to dissolve parliament. Would the proclamation necessary under this legislation be delayed so that the new parliament could be elected under the old redistribution arrangements, despite the fact that a census had recently been taken?

Mr. MacEachen: There is theoretical validity about the point which the hon. member raises—

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I have not figured it out, but I know there is a census taken every ten years and the average life of a parliament used to be four years. One period does not divide into the other evenly. The situation to which I have referred might occur every few years.

Mr. MacEachen: It would happen, no doubt, but in the case cited a government would be required to run its full term of five years before it would be involved in the kind of situation the hon. member has outlined. This is not a frequent occurrence; in fact, it is very rare.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, would it be possible to give 90 days of grace by some such wording as this in line 43, after the word "force":

—the draft representation order to come into force within 90 days or to be effective upon the dissolution of the then existing parliament if that dissolution occurs subsequent to the said 90 days.

I just said 90 days to give the electoral officer an opportunity to take the action that he simply must take prior to an election, because of the forms he has to have printed, the various conferences he has to have with the returning officers, and things of that nature.

Mr. MacEachen: As I understand the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, certainly the provision of 90 days would give a government an opportunity, would it not, to avoid the application of the new representation order? If it were not to come into effect unless a lapse of 90 days had occurred, within that time the election could have taken place. So it seems difficult to devise a formula that would meet this situation. I admit the possibilities. They may not be as real as one might think, but they are possibilities.

Mr. Churchill: I refrained from using the expression "60 days".

Mr. MacEachen: I appreciated that.

Clause 23 agreed to.

On clause 24—Publication of order and proclamation.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, in clause 24 there is a mandatory requirement that publication shall take place in the Canada Gazette not later than five days after the issue of the proclamation. Publishing schedules of the Canada Gazette being what they are, how can you guarantee this?

Mr. MacEachen: I am advised that the Canada Gazette produces extras very readily on a 24 hour notice.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, since subclause 2 of section 17 has been amended, can the minister tell us whether he plans to propose a similar amendment to section 24 or whether he prefers to have the section passed in its present form.

An hon. Member: The section is already passed.

The Chairman: Is section 24 passed?

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to point out that when the house studied subclause 2 of clause 17, it was decided, that a notice would be published in newspapers. In my opinion, when the map of a new electoral district is passed, it would be a good thing if the electors were told what is their constituency, because many are often confused since the limits of the ridings are constantly being altered.

In fact when provincial elections are held, they vote in a certain riding and in the case of federal elections, they vote in another riding, so that confusion sometimes results. I therefore ask the minister if he wishes to give his opinion in that connection.

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the necessity for using the medium of the newspapers to publicize the representation order is not as apparent as in the other cases we have dealt with, because we want to notify persons in view of subsequent actions they are to take. This is a publication in the Canada Gazette of a representation order that has the effect of law, and this is the normal way in which these laws are made known officially.

Clause 24 agreed to.

On clause 25—Construction of order; doubtful cases.

Mr. Enns: Mr. Chairman, I believe that clause 25 (2) is the first place in which there is any reference to the names of constituencies.

There are in other clauses several references to maps being used. I am sure the representation commissioner will find it necessary to completely subdivide very large constituencies; in other words, creating entirely new ridings. What names will he use? Does this clause give the authority, or anywhere in the act—I am just asking the question; it is a very small point—is there authority for the representation commissioner or the commissions to devise new names for the few new constituencies that had not existed before?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the task of assigning names to the constituencies is for the provincial commissions. It may be that changes will be made; it may be that the present names will be retained. That is a matter for the commissions. But my hon. friend will bear in mind that it is possible to make representations to the commissions at hearings, and this may be one of the matters upon which interested parties may wish to make representations. Again, when the reports come from the commissions there will be an opportunity to object to them, and it may be this would be a matter with which persons could object. Therefore, while the commissions have the authority to set the names, there are opportunities when people can make their views known.

Mr. Enns: Mr. Chairman, I quite understand that this is a matter for the commissions. However, with regard to those few large constituencies which might be made into two, a name has not existed before. The next clause, clause 26, provides that maps shall be published. How are these new districts to be designated? It is a minor point, but there will be a small problem faced by the representation commissioner in this regard.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, on the point raised by the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa, I presume that the matter of names, and so forth, will be discussed when the report is before the house, and if there were objections that would be the time they would be dealt with. Let us hope that the representation commissions will use their good sense and listen to some proper representations in this regard.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, with regard to clause 25 (2) I just want to underline to the minister one of the dangers with regard to the names of territorial divisions. As the minister said previously, the government will be aware, or might be aware, but not the other parties in this house, as to when an election would occur, and the name that may be chosen for the designation of these territorial divisions may sometimes exclude some of the existing divisions which are well known to the people voting in those areas, to the benefit of existing areas which are held by members of the government. This is a very practical question, but I feel that the members of this house who belong to opposition parties, whatever they may be, might find that the names of their constituencies would disappear entirely. Existing members of parliament who are members of the government may take advantage of this situation. It may be that a district might keep its present name but the name of a constituency held by a member of the opposition could entirely disappear, which might be disadvantageous to the members of the opposition.

Mr. MacEachen: Personally I should like to see the traditional names of the constituencies maintained. It is really up to the commissions, and government members will have to take their chances along with opposition members as to the names of their constituencies—which is not going to bother me as much as the kind of constituency I might be looking after when the draft order is put into effect.

Mr. Valade: Just one further observation. I do not want to hold up the minister but this is a very important point. I am not talking so much of the members themselves as of the electors in a riding the name of which disappears entirely, or perhaps changed by your next door neighbour who unlike you might be a government supporter. I am not injecting partisanship into this, but that is a situation which may arise. I think provision should be made so that if one district name disappears then the neighbouring district name should also not be retained in its entirety. I think members of parliament should be able to make representation to the commission in this regard.

Mr. MacEachen: There is no difficulty about members making representations. Presumably members of parliament can take advantage of the provision in regard to making representations, and attend hearings if they wish.

Mr. Knowles: It depends on the definition of "interested persons".

Mr. MacEachen: Yes; that is one stage. Then when the reports come back members will have the chance to object, and it would be surprising if there were not objections to the names of constituencies.

Clause 25 agreed to.

On clause 26—Maps to be prepared and printed.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask one question on this clause. At what stage would the interested people in a federal electoral riding come to know the boundaries of their area? Would this be before the production or publication of these maps?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The commission may sit, as provided in clause 17, and hear representations. In the notice of such hearings there shall be a map or drawing prepared by the commission showing the proposed division of the province into electoral districts. So that is the first time members will get the news.

Mr. McMillan: One other question. If it were proposed to transfer a municipality, or let us say a town, into another federal district, would the local council have an opportunity to discover this and to make representations?

Mr. MacEachen: This would be evident from the maps which would be contained in the notice. The council will have an opportunity to make representations and appear before the commission of the province, which must hold one sitting in the province.

Mr. Lambert: This may be expressing a pious hope, but the director of the surveys and mapping branch of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys should prepare an up to date map. If I recall rightly my constituency maps were based on the 1951 projection of a growing suburban portion of the city of Edmonton. Let me assure the committee that the map distributed to me by the chief electoral officer bears very little real relationship to the actual city itself, in that there have been replots and all sorts of things. So let us hope that they work with up to date information which is kept current.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, my understanding of clause 26 and also of the following clause is that both of them have to do with the enabling of certain preparations to be made in order that an election may be conducted after the redistribution order is put into effect. If I might for a moment consider the two clauses together, a question which occurs to my mind is whether or not these two clauses are adequate for the purpose. If I read clause 26 correctly, I understand it to mean that once the proclamation is issued the director of the surveys and mapping branch shall prepare and print maps. I take it that the preparation of those maps can be carried out prior to the effective date of the proclamation, which is contingent upon the dissolution of parliament. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

Mr. Barnett: Then in that connection, as far as I understand it the only other reference to enabling advance preparation to be made is in clause 27, which provides for action in the appointment of returning officers under the elections act. I have not got the elections act before me but the question arising in my mind is whether under either one or both of the two clauses to which I have referred any sort of authority is given to the chief electoral officer to make preparations for providing any other forms or documents which are involved in the conduct of a general election. I can understand that there may be a larger time element involved in the preparation of maps than is the case with other documents; but I can hardly see the point of our giving authority for the appointment of returning officers for the proposed new constituencies unless the chief electoral officer is authorized to supply them with a preliminary batch of materials which will be required in order to commence the necessary arrangements for conducting an enumeration, and that sort of thing, in a constituency. Perhaps the minister could elucidate on the point I have raised.

Mr. MacEachen: My hon. friend may recall that the Representation Commissioner Act which was passed last December contained a provision that on the completion of any decennial census the commissioner shall prepare maps, and so on, with respect to the electoral districts of provinces, and shall thereupon supply such maps to the appropriate electoral boundaries commission. So that this is provided for in the Representation Commissioner Act.

Mr. Barnett: I do not quite see that that covers the points I have been raising. The advance preparation by the representation commissioner for the work of the commission is one thing. Clauses 26 and 27 make some provision whereby the chief electoral officer is able to make certain advance preparations prior to the coming into full force and effect of the results of the new representation order. The question I am raising is whether the proposals set out in clauses 26 and 27 are inclusive enough to enable the chief electoral officer, as distinct from the representation commissioner, to make adequate preliminary preparations. I note that as far as clause 26 is concerned, authority is given only and solely for the preparation of maps of constituency boundaries, but not for the preparation of any other document. On the other hand, clause 27 provides for the appointment of electoral officers under section 8 of the Canada Elections Act. As far as I can see, it makes no provision for the chief electoral officer to give the electoral officers whom he has appointed any authority to do anything after their appointment. There is no authority for example to supply them with any material or instructions. Perhaps there is an obvious answer to this question which has not occurred to me.

Mr. MacEachen: The Canada Elections Act gives complete authority to the chief electoral officer to prepare for an election after redistribution has taken place.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, the minister says that authority is given to the chief electoral officer to prepare for an election after redistribution becomes law and, as I understand the situation, redistribution becomes law upon the dissolution of the then existing parliament, presuming there is a parliament in existence. The purpose of clauses 26 and 27 is to enable certain preparatory work to be done prior to the time a new distribution becomes law. The question I wish to raise is, within these provisions is there sufficient authority given to that chief electoral officer?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the chief electoral officer is satisfied that he has the power necessary to carry out the tasks referred to by my hon. friend. He has that authority under the Canada Elections Act. The clause now under discussion provides that the director of surveys of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys shall prepare certain maps of the electoral districts, but these maps cannot be prepared until the issue of the proclamation putting the representation order into effect. This clause really is to put into effect, the results of a representation order.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, if the minister is able to give us his assurance that the chief electoral officer is satisfied with these provisions, I am prepared to accept them.

Mr. MacEachen: The chief electoral officer has the authority to prepare for an election at any time, and perhaps that is not very reassuring for anyone.

Clause 26 agreed to.

On clause 27—Returning officers.

Mr. Lambert: In this regard, Mr. Chairman, I have the suspicion that there will be some unforeseen results from the passage of this clause, in that at the time of proclaiming a representation order the appointments of all returning officers holding offices shall terminate, and there shall then be a renomination of all returning officers. If that is the situation I think this committee should be made aware of it. Is that what is contemplated by the government under this clause? If there is going to be a complete refashioning of constituencies, and section 29 of the Representation Act is being repealed, and the ridings in respect of which these returning officers hold positions disappear, their appointments will disappear. Is that contemplated by this clause?

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may be allowed to comment in respect of that point. This matter was raised before the committee on privileges and elections during its consideration and review of the Canada Elections Act. That act provides, as I recall it, that as soon as the boundaries of a riding are changed in any way, or the riding itself is changed in any way, the returning officer's office is vacant, and the riding is considered as a new riding. I understand that to be the situation under the existing act.

One of the matters that was considered by that committee was whether these offices should be made permanent. I think the hon. member will recall that under the Canada Elections Act, as passed in 1960, these positions became vacant. That is one of the provisions of the Canada Elections Act which I do not think should necessarily be covered by this bill. Perhaps a discussion of this particular point should properly take place during a consideration or revision of the Canada Elections Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, on that point I believe that the subject is important enough. Indeed, in the constituencies the returning officers are appointed by the government in office, and often these appointments are—I do not speak for my constituency, far from it—but in several constituencies these are political appointments and the returning officer is there to protect the interest of the party in office. Therefore, I feel that this is a major point to decide.

In the event that new boundaries are fixed, will all the returning officers presently appointed lose their jobs and will others be appointed by the government?

If that is the case, we should provide, before going through with this, a new procedure for appointing returning officers in the constituencies, because in many cases the actions of some returning officers give rise to complaints. Thus, we fear that with another party in office, or a change of government, returning officers would also change and we would constantly be faced with the same problems, for any time there would be a change of government there would also be a change of returning officers, or a way would be found to amend the act in order to be able to appoint new returning officers.

Therefore, I think a new procedure should be devised for the appointment of returning officers, in order that appointments be made in a manner which would be fair and equitable to all candidates in an election.

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Let us consider clause 27. As I understand the situation, a representation order does not come into effect until a dissolution of parliament. This clause permits a representation order to take the effect of law whenever it is proclaimed, so that returning officers can be appointed under the Canada Elections Act for ridings that are designated in the representation order. In other words, by bringing it into effect in respect of the returning officers, it is possible to appoint the returning officers before a dissolution.

Mr. Lambert: May I ask how you would have them vacate their offices?

Mr. MacEachen: This has nothing to do with that point. As a matter of fact, there is nothing in any of the clauses here that determines the point about which my hon. friend is talking. My hon. friend asks when the office of returning officer becomes vacant. If the representation order establishes a particular constituency with a new name, for example, and if there is a returning officer for Inverness-Richmond or Digby-Annapolis-Kings and the new riding is—

Mr. Nowlan: Inverness-Guysborough.

Mr. MacEachen: —Inverness-Guysborough, then the electoral district disappears and the returning officer for that particular electoral district more or less disappears, at least from the point of view of an office.

Mr. Lambert: But the act does not come into force until dissolution and therefore the newly designated constituency does not come into force until dissolution and the old riding does not disappear until dissolution. Reasons for vacating his office, such as the returning officer no longer living in the constituency, do not apply because the constituency does not come into being until dissolution. So what are we going to be faced with? A vast number of returning officers being out of office on the dissolution of parliament and then a whole new group taking over on the first day of the election period.

Mr. MacEachen: I am advised that the purpose of this particular clause is to avoid the possibility put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert: The possibility; but I am interested in why they would have vacated their offices. What sort of blackjacking is going to be done to get them out?

Mr. MacEachen: The representation order with respect to returning officers comes into effect on proclamation. That does the job.

Mr. Lambert: It is on the proclamation of the order that the returning officers are out.

Mr. MacEachen: I would gather this is correct. However, if a riding is unchanged and the name is unchanged nothing happens to the returning officer because he is still there for that particular riding; but if there are changes presumably his job disappears in the way I have mentioned.

Mr. Lambert: Even though the act has not come into force, but with respect to returning officers it comes into force on the date of proclamation.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, may I direct a question to the hon. minister?

Does this mean that this legislation will allow the government to change the returning officers in all constituencies, or at least in those where there is the slightest change as soon as the representation order is accepted and approved by the governor in council? Then, will the government be able to change the returning officers in the constituencies where there is a change?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: The government may reappoint or change. Mind you, I do not think there is anything in these clauses which really determines this.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister this: As the present act empowers the government to change the returning officers in all constituencies where there are changes, would it not be advisable or preferable to provide at the same time for a non-partisan method to appoint returning officers in the constituencies.

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: This is really a matter for the Canada Elections Act and the consideration of the privileges and elections committee. It cannot be done this way.

Clause 27 agreed to.

Clauses 28 and 29 agreed to.

On clause 30—Electoral district of Yukon.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask another of my legalistic questions. It applies both to clause 30 and to clause 31. I wonder why there appears at the beginning of each of these clauses the phrase "notwithstanding anything in this act". These two clauses provide for constituencies to be known as Yukon and Northwest Territories, but may I point out that is provided for on a mandatory basis in the British North America Act.

It is there as subsection 2 of section 51 of the British North America Act, so why do we now say "notwithstanding anything in this act"? Should the language not be "by virtue of the provisions of the British North America Act" or "as provided in the British North America Act"? After all, nothing in this act could set aside the British North America Act in any case.

Mr. MacEachen: The reason this is put in is found in the repeal of the Representation Act which provides for these seats.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the fact is that, Representation Act or no, it is already required and called for under section 51, subsection 2, of the British North America Act.

Mr. MacEachen: That may be the case, but the reason it is put in here is the repeal of the Representation Act. It may be it is not necessary, but that is the reason for it.

Clause 30 agreed to.

Clauses 31 and 32 agreed to.

The Chairman: Clause 6.

Mr. Churchill: Could we stop at this point?

Mr. Knowles: Let us carry the amendment to clause 6 and go home.

Mr. Churchill: For our convenience could we have listed at this point in Hansard for ready reference the clauses still to be passed?

Mr. MacEachen: The clauses still to be discussed are 6, 7, 8, 9, 12 and 13. I want to thank the committee for their excellent co-operation.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the acting house leader about the business for the rest of the week?

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will take up the discussion of main estimates commencing with the Department of Veterans Affairs, then the balance of the estimates of the Minister of Industry, namely the remainder of the estimates of the Department of Defence Production and the votes for atomic energy and the national research council; then the balance of the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, the balance of the estimates of the Department of Labour including the unemployment insurance commission, and the estimates of national revenue.

[Mr. Knowles.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

TRADE—VISIT TO CANADA OF U.K. HOME BUILDERS MISSION

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as the voice of the Kootenays I addressed a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce on orders of the day today with respect to the visit to Canada of the home builders mission from Britain to study the Canadian timber trade, housing methods and so on and asked him if arrangements could be made for this very important mission to visit the Kootenays while en route from Vancouver to Calgary.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is an important mission as indicated by the news release issued by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, which reads as follows:

> A 26 member home builders mission from Britain will arrive in Vancouver on October 15 for a two week tour of this country to study Canadian timber frame housing construction methods. Sponsored by the Department of Trade and Commerce, the mission will comprise ten directors of British housing construction firms, and representatives of the British government's ministry of public building and works, the royal institute of British architects, the national building agency, the London county council, the timber trade federation of the United Kingdom the British woodwork manufacturers association and British building societies and trade unions. The mission will visit Vancouver, Calgary, Toronto and Ottawa.

The release goes on to describe the purpose of the mission, which is a most interesting one.

> One of the primary purposes of the home builders mission will be to study Canada's timber frame construction methods and their application to a wide variety of dwelling designs. Members will also have an opportunity to see the milling of Canadian surfaced lumber and the manufacture of softwood and hardwood plywoods. Canadian builders and lumber interests will also have an opportunity to meet the British builders to discuss possible ways of participating in Britain's accelerated housing program.

This is a mission which is of great importance to all Canadians, of importance to the Canadian economy, and of particular importance to the forest products producing areas; and I happen to represent one of the largest and most important forest products producing areas in Canada.

The reasons for my suggesting this visit are several. First of all, the Kootenays have often been overlooked when arrangements were being made by this and former governments for groups in other countries visiting Canada. If I had time I could give several illustrations of this, but I shall only mention one, which was when the British forestry commission visited Canada. It visited certain areas interested in forest production and certain other areas, but it overlooked one of the highest producing yield areas in Canada, the Kootenays. This has been noted by the industry and by the organizations in the constituency which I have the honour to represent.

I also make this suggestion because the Kootenay forest production area people are interested in the expansion of markets, both domestic and foreign, including markets in Great Britain. Third, we have a particular type of species in the Kootenays and interior B.C., a very high quality species, and high quality producing species, which is treated in the processing plants there. Fourth, we have a varied type of house construction, and the uses of timber for housing and other purposes in that area would be very interesting for these visitors to see. Fifth, if they visited this area they would have the opportunity to meet the local people, the local operators, and discuss questions which would be of mutual concern to them both.

It would also provide an opportunity for these visitors to witness different methods of production, and compare those methods with the ones used in other parts of Canada. We have, in the Kootenays, some of the most up to date mills and producing plants in Canada. Finally, such a visit would give them an opportunity to enjoy most unusual scenery and unparalleled natural beauty.

I urge that even at this late date consideration be given to having this mission visit the Kootenays and the interior of B.C. while en route from Vancouver to Calgary. Furthermore I urge upon ministers in this government that in future, when arrangements are being made for these visiting groups, whether they represent agriculture, labour, the forest industry, the mining industry or any other industry, to consider the interior of B.C. and the Kootenay area in particular, areas which have been often overlooked during previous visits. I should like the parliamentary secretary to let me know whether arrangements can be made, or whether he can promise that in the future the situation will be remedied.

Mr. Jean-Luc Pépin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): May I say I am quite sure the minister will read with great interest the wise remarks made by the hon. member.

In the meantime I wish to make it clear that the mission has come to Canada, not so much to look at our forests or to enjoy the landscape, even the landscape of the beautiful Kootenays, as to inspect Canadian building methods and techniques of timber frame construction. This is part of a program designed to demonstrate the advantages of timber frame construction using Canadian lumber and plywood, and allied building materials.

The mission which is now in Vancouver already has a very heavy program of visiting construction sites, building associations and government agencies across the country. Therefore it would be difficult, if not impossible, to fit a visit to the Kootenays into its program. However, approximately 30 per cent of the total time of the mission in Canada will be spent in British Columbia and this should be a source of satisfaction to the hon. member.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.08 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 21, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. VALADE—ALLEGED WRONGFUL POSSESSION OF LETTER BY MEMBER FOR SHERBROOKE

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning the general behaviour of members of parliament as far as the provisions of the Post Office Act are concerned and I am doing so in order that the public may continue to have the confidence it should have in the Canadian postal service. I should like to refer to the Post Office Act, Revised Statutes of Canada 1952, vol. 4, chapter 212, and more particularly to section 39 which reads as follows:

Subject to the provisions of this act and the regulations respecting undeliverable mail, mailable matter becomes the property of the person to whom it is addressed when it is deposited in a post office.

I also wish to refer to the provisions of section 55 which read as follows:

Every person who unlawfully opens or wilfully keeps, secretes, delays or detains, or procures, or suffers to be unlawfully opened, kept, secreted, or detained, any mail bag, post letters, or other article of mail, or any receptacle authorized by the Postmaster General for the deposit of mail, whether the same came into the possession of the offender by finding or otherwise, is guilty of an indictable offence.

In order to elaborate further my question of privilege, I should like to quote section 73 (1) dealing with penalties:

Every person who is guilty of an indictable offence under this act is liable, on conviction, to a fine not exceeding three thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years or to both fine and imprisonment.

Subsection (2) reads as follows:

Every person who is guilty of an offence under this act, other than an indictable offence, is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two months or to both fine and imprisonment.

I have here an affidavit relating to the above sections which I have just read and, with the consent of the house, I would like to table this affidavit.

It reads as follows:

Sherbrooke, October 13, 1964.

I Robert Delisle, a student at Sherbrooke university, after having been sworn on the Holy Gospel, declare and say:

1.—I have taken note in Hansard of October 8, 1964, of Mr. Gérard Chapdelaine's question of privilege.

2. In that question of privilege, the member of parliament for Sherbrooke mentions a letter which was sent to me by Mr. Maurice Allard, secretary of Hon. Léon Balcer.

3. I admit I won the Molson trophy at a golf tournament at Sherbrooke university.

4. I never gave to Mr. Chapdelaine the letter Mr. Allard wrote to me.

5. I never received the said letter and it was never given to me by anybody.

6. I conclude that the said letter was intercepted for reasons I am personally unaware of.

7. As a Canadian citizen, I want to receive the letters addressed to me.

In witness whereof, I have read this document and signed

Robert Delisle.

Sworn before me at Sherbrooke, this 13th day of October, 1964.

Louise Bruneau, C.S.C.
St-François district

Now, Mr. Speaker, on October 8 last the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine) raised in this house a question of privilege concerning the same Robert Delisle, a student at Sherbrooke university, in relation to a letter he never received, according to his affidavit, and which is in the hands of the hon. member for Sherbrooke, as he stated in this house on October 8, 1964, and as reported in the left hand column of page 8864 of Hansard.

In the circumstances I ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Nicholson) to order an investigation into this matter and to make the result known to the house as soon as possible.

Besides, I have also in hand page 8864 of Hansard for October 8, 1964, reporting the statement of the hon. member for Sherbrooke as follows:

I am ready to table this letter so that all the hon. members might see it.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Postmaster General to order an investigation and to report to the house on the next occasion.

Question of Privilege

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I have listened with the greatest of care to the hon. member for St. Mary, and it seems to me he has given extended publicity to the matter at issue. Inasmuch as there is no request or motion before the house I do not think any question of privilege lies. However, the matter has been aired thoroughly this afternoon, and I am sure that if any steps are necessary they will be taken.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Due to the absence of the member for Sherbrooke, I would like to point out a fact of which I am aware. Since the Post Office Department did not seem to know the addressee, it decided to return the letter to the sender at the House of Commons.

Due to the fact that this letter was postmarked from Sherbrooke, I imagine that the Post Office Department thought that it should be returned to the member for Sherbrooke, since no other address appeared on the envelope.

I am sure that when the member for Sherbrooke is present he will explain, but I am personally aware of those particular facts.

Mr. Valade: As regards the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no question of privilege.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. I do not understand Your Honour's ruling that I should not be allowed to air this question, since the hon. member has taken a stand on this matter which he does not know anything about.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has been given considerable leeway this afternoon, and he has consumed a good deal of time in presenting a series of allegations. I do not know whether they are facts or not. I am not concerned with that, but I am concerned with seeing whether there is a question of privilege, and in my opinion there is no question of privilege. The hon. member should not debate that decision unless he wants to appeal it.

Mr. Valade: In that event, sir, I rise on a point of order in reference to the question of privilege. I have read certain articles from the postal regulations which make it quite clear that no one has the right to interfere with or hold letters which are directed to other persons. Since the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Valade: On the point of order, sir—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The sections of the law to which the hon. member has made reference speak for themselves. I do not think we need any interpretation in this regard. The only question before the house is whether there is a question of privilege, and in my opinion there is not.

Mr. Valade: If Your Honour will allow me, I should like to bring—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Since the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency was allowed to place some information before this house I think I should be allowed to complete my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member must know the rules as well as the Chair. If, after the Chair has made a decision it is to be argued by every member in turn, we will never get any business done in the house. A decision has been rendered, and I think it is up to the hon. member to accept that decision.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION BUILDING—N.C.C. CONSULTATION

Question No. 1,606—Mr. Aiken:

Was the national capital commission consulted (a) about the decision not to proceed with the erection of a citizenship and immigration building (b) about the decision to lease space in a building for which the excavation had not been commenced?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): The answer of the national capital commission is in the negative.

STUDENTS' CAMPUS IN GATINEAU PARK

Question No. 1,766—Mr. Martineau:

Has the national capital commission deeded to a corporation called "Corporation de la Cité des étudiants de Hull" property for developing a campus in the Gatineau park district and, if so, (a) under what conditions was the property deeded (b) who are the directors of the said corporation?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): No.

Questions

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Question No. 2,008—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. As of this date, what is the financial state of the unemployment insurance fund?
2. What are its future prospects?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): 1. On September 30, 1964 the unemployment insurance fund showed a credit balance of $37,833,285.54.

2. It is expected that the contributions to the unemployment insurance fund will continue to increase the financial state of the fund until some time in December 1964. From approximately January 1965 during the heavy claims season it is expected that the outgo from the fund will exceed its income.

C.N.R. MASTER AGENCIES AND SATELLITE TERMINALS

Question No. 2,013—Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron):

1. How many master agencies and satellite terminals are to be set up under the new express and freight handling service proposed by the C.N.R.?
2. Where are these master agencies and satellite terminals to be located?
3. What are the names and locations of the stations that will be closed up if this plan is carried forward?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1 and 2. The establishment of master agencies and satellite terminals on system-wide basis is still in the planning stage and it is, therefore, not possible at this time to indicate how many agencies or satellites will be established or where they will be located. At present, there are master agencies in operation at Moncton and Edmonton.

3. The closing of any station as a result of the foregoing is dependant on approval being obtained from the board of transport commissioners.

ROCKCLIFFE, ONT.—RELOCATION OF SEAPLANE BASE

Question No. 2,047—Mr. Thompson:

Where does the Department of Transport expect to relocate the seaplane base presently located at Rockcliffe which is about to be transferred to the Department of Transport from the Department of National Defence?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The department does not plan to relocate the seaplane base at Rockcliffe. It is proposed to make this a civil facility at its present location.

REPORT OF ONTARIO LABOUR FEDERATION RESPECTING POVERTY

Question No. 2,048—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Is the government aware of a report by the Ontario federation of labour to the effect that 2,500,000 Canadians are living in destitution and, if so, has a similar study been undertaken by the government?
2. Has the government considered the establishment of a royal commission to examine and report on the question of poverty in Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): 1 and 2. The government is aware of the report by the Ontario federation of labour and constantly evolving range of policies and of federal jurisdiction, to develop policies and programs that will eradicate the varied causes of destitution. This has been, and will continue to be, a prominent objective of policies designed to enhance Canadian economic growth, of programs such as those of the area development authority, Atlantic development board and ARDA designed to meet the special problems of particular areas and regions, of programs designed to raise and extend the skills of Canadian workers, and of the broad range of programs, both established and prospective, to improve standards of social welfare, health and housing.

It is equally of concern to the government to assess the effectiveness, in terms of the living standards of all Canadians, of this wide and constantly evolving range of policies and programs in order to identify residual areas of special need. In this sense, the government is engaged in a continuous assessment of the location and causes of economic distress in Canada, and of the measures best suited to its eradication.

BIDS FOR PENITENTIARY CONSTRUCTION, SPRINGHILL, N.S.

Question No. 2,073—Mr. Coates:

1. How many bids were received for construction of the young offenders penal institution to be constructed at Springhill, Nova Scotia?
2. What are the names of the firms submitting bids and the amount of the bid in each case?
3. What is the anticipated date for the initiation of construction on the said young offenders penal institution?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): 1. Six.

2. Foundation Maritime Limited, Halifax, N.S., $8,940,000; Modern Construction Limited, Moncton, N.B. $9,316,600; Fraser Brace Engineering Co. Ltd., Montreal, P.Q., $9,359,000; Argo Construction Limited, Montreal, P.Q., $9,374,000; Thomas Fuller Construction

Co., Ottawa, Ont., $9,428,000; Atlas Construction Co. Ltd., Fredericton, N.B., $9,750,000.

3. A recommendation for contract award is being submitted to treasury board. Construction will commence shortly after authority has been received.

*C.B.C. BROADCAST ON CONSERVATIVE CONFERENCE

Question No. 2,075—Mr. Irvine:

1. Were there any telephone conversations between the Prime Minister and Mr. Norman DePoe of the C.B.C. on September 9 or 10, 1964, while the latter was in Fredericton, New Brunswick?
2. Did the C.B.C. receive any complaints from any member of the federal government concerning the broadcast in connection with the national Conservative conference on Canadian goals?

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, question 2,075 is in two parts; and the answer to each of those parts is in the negative.

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING MAIL SERVICE, HAMILTON, ONT.

Question No. 2,077—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

Has the Hamilton, Ontario post office received complaints regarding missorting and delayed delivery of mail and, if so, what action has been taken?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): No complaints of missorting. Three complaints of delay: (a) To mail from Montreal. Explained to the satisfaction of the patron. (b) To a local letter. No evidence found that postal service failed in its responsibility. (c) To mail from the United States. Found to be due to diversion for customs examination. Problem reviewed by customs and postal officials and explained to patron.

EXPERIMENTAL SPRAYING FOR SPRUCE BUDWORM CONTROL

Question No. 2,078—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. What was the role of the federal government in the experimental spraying of 160,000 acres in New Brunswick with phosphamidon for spruce budworm control?
2. Why was a much smaller area not chosen for experimental spraying?

Hon Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): 1. The spraying of 160,000 acres in New Brunswick with phosphamidon in 1964 was carried out as part of the provincial operational program of Forest Protection Limited, the crown company charged with control operations against the spruce budworm in that province. Their decision to employ phosphamidon on an operational scale was reviewed and accepted by the interdepartmental committee on forest spraying in November 1963 with members representing fisheries interests expressing their strong desire to have phosphamidon used for the entire spray program for approximately 2.4 million acres because of its recognized low toxicity to fish. The 160,000 acres treated with phosphamidon were selected to include the major fish spawning streams within the spray program and to cover certain areas where a developing insistance of spruce budworm populations to D.D.T. was known to exist. Cost considerations prevented the broader use of this material which had been under study by the Department of Forestry for several years in its concerted search for alternative material to D.D.T. that would produce a desirable degree of budworm control with reduced effects on fish and also wildlife. Following laboratory toxicity trials against the budworm and fish in 1960 and 1961, experimental aerial applications were made in 1962 to several plots in New Brunswick involving about 600 acres of forest. The results were encouraging and prompted an operational test on about 40,000 acres in 1963. Again the results were satisfactory and formed the basis of the Department of Forestry's recommendation prior to the 1964 spray program that phosphamidon might be used with benefit on areas where the fish hazard was high or where budworm resistance to D.D.T. was apparent.

2. The area of 160,000 acres was decided upon by Forest Protection Limited as the minimum necessary to cover areas of high fish hazard and of developing budworm resistance to D.D.T.

TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT SHIPS, WEST COAST

Question No. 2,079—Mr. Basford:

What are the names, sizes, headquarters port and intended purpose, or use, of all Department of Transport motorized ships of 20 feet over-all length or more, stationed on the west coast?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The following Department of Transport vessels are stationed on the British Columbia coast and use the facilities of the Victoria and Prince Rupert marine agencies as supply and support bases as required:

Questions

Ship	Length	Gross tonnage	Function
Camsell	224′	2,022	Full icebreaker.
Estevan	200′	1,161	Lighthouse supply and buoy vessels.
Sir James Douglas	150′	730
Alexander Mackenzie	150′	556 gross	Lighthouse supply and buoy vessel.
Katherine B	43′	24 gross	Agency tender.
Skidegate	70′	136 gross	Agency tender.
St. Catherines	283′	1,895 gross	Weather ship.
Stonetown	283′	1,883 gross	Weather ship.
St. Stephens	283′	1,890 gross	Weather ship.
Ready	95′	153 gross	Search and rescue cutter.
Racer	95′	153 gross	Search and rescue cutter.
Bamfield	33′	11 gross	Shore based lifeboat.
Tofino	33′	11 gross	Shore based lifeboat.
Mallard	40′	8 gross	Search and rescue cutter.
Moorhen	40′	8 gross	Search and rescue cutter.
Canada Pilot No. 20	37′	16 gross	Pilot boat.
Canada Pilot No. 22	57′	40 gross	Pilot boat.
Canada Pilot No. 24	41′	18 gross	Pilot boat.

BUDGETS AND EXPENDITURES, NATIONAL DEFENCE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 2,084—Mr. Prittie:

1. What was the total amount of the budgets of the Department of National Defence for the fiscal years 1949-50 to 1963-64 inclusive?

2. What was the total amount of actual expenditures by the Department of National Defence for the fiscal years 1949-50 to 1963-64 inclusive?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1 and 2. Information requested for the years 1949-50 to 1962-63 has already been made available in the official publication "Public Accounts of Canada" issued by the Department of Finance. In so far as the year 1963-64 is concerned the following figures are from official departmental records: Appropriation, $1,728,882,707; expenditure, $1,683,471,003.

SAINT JOHN, N.B., POST OFFICE

Question No. 2,090—Mr. Bell:

1. Have any surveys been conducted regarding a new post office in Saint John, N.B. and, if so, with what result?

2. Has it been decided to rebuild on the present site or in the outskirts of the city?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): 1. No special survey has been conducted regarding a new post office building. Examination of the post office situation has resulted in some recent adjustments of space in the present post office. No decision can be made with respect to a new building until the question of road and railway relocation has been determined by the municipal and railroad authorities.

2. Answered by No. 1.

*SALE OF H.M.C.S. "PREVOST", LONDON, ONT.

Question No. 2,101—Mr. Irvine:

1. What bids were received, and for what amounts, by the war assets disposal corporation for the properties formerly known as H.M.C.S. Prevost, London, Ontario?

2. Who was the ultimate purchaser?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): In so far Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is concerned, the answer is as follows:

1. The only offer received by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation on the former H.M.C.S. Prevost property at Carling and Richmond streets, in London, Ontario as a result of four advertisements in the London newspaper, was from Carlonne Holdings Limited, of London, in the amount of $162,010.

2. Carlonne Holdings Limited.

REQUESTS FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH GRANTS

Question No. 2,109—Mr. Grafftey:

1. What was the total amount of grants requested this year by the Canadian medical research council for basic research in Canada?

2. What portion of the amount requested by the Canadian medical research council this year was actually granted by the federal government?

Questions

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): In so far as the national research council is concerned, the answer is as follows:

1. For the year 1964-65 the medical research council requested an appropriation of $7,000,000 of which $5,500,000 was to be allocated to grants in aid of research.

2. The medical research council estimates for 1964-65 have not yet been passed by parliament. To date $4,522,125 of the funds made available to the council through interim supply have been spent on grants in aid of research.

REPAIRS TO RETAINING WALL, PARRSBORO, N.S.

Question No. 2,112—Mr. Coates:

1. How many firms submitted tenders for repairs to the retaining wall at Parrsboro, N.S.?

2. What are the names of the firms and the amount of each tender submitted and was the contract awarded to the lowest bidder?

3. Is the federal government assuming full responsibility for the repairs to the retaining wall?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): 1. One.

2. Mr. A. I. Cochrane, Parrsboro, N.S., $3,846. Contract awarded to A. I. Cochrane at reduced price of $3,445.50.

3. The federal government is assuming responsibility for payment of the cost of these repairs.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, TASCHEREAU, P.Q.

Question No. 2,120—Mr. Laprise:

Will a post office be constructed shortly at Taschereau, Chapleau county and, if so (a) what lots have been considered for such construction (b) what lots have been purchased (c) who owned these lots (d) what was the price paid for the lots (e) when will tenders be called for the construction of the said post office?

[Translation]

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): It is proposed to construct a standard plan post office at Taschereau during the coming winter of 1964-65, subject to funds being available.

(a) The following lots have been considered for such construction: (i) Part of lot No. 952 on Privat avenue owned by C.N.R. (ii) Parts of lots No. 656 and No. 657 on Privat avenue owned by François Caouette Inc. (iii) A parcel of land with a 50′ frontage located south of the railway owned by Mr. Marcel Audet. (iv) Lots No. 7 and No. 8 of block No. 2 owned by Mrs. Wellie Bergeron.

(b) Part of lot No. 925 on Privat avenue, measuring approximately 70′ × 100′.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

(c) Canadian National Railways.

(d) $500.

(e) Tenders for this project are expected to be called late this fall.

[Text]

STATUS OF SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN REGIMENT

Question No. 2,124—Mr. Southam:

1. Have representations been made to the federal government by various interested bodies in Saskatchewan, and in particular from the city of Estevan, Saskatchewan, for the retention of the South Saskatchewan regiment?

2. Has the Minister of National Defence, or his officials, come to a conclusion on the future status of this famous regiment?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. No.

2. Not yet.

IMPORTATION OF CHARLOAIS SEMEN

Question No. 2,137—Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson):

1. Has any change been made in the past 12 months on the importation of Charloais semen into Canada from France and, if so, what are the new regulations?

2. If not, what effect will the new U.S. regulations have on Charloais breeders in Canada?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): 1. No change has been made in the past 12 months on the importation of Charloais semen from France.

2. There have been no recent changes in the United States regulations governing the import of semen from France. The department is working jointly with the United States on possible regulation changes and, if and when changes come into effect, it is intended both Canadian and United States regulations will be uniform.

RETIRED OFFICERS EMPLOYED WITH FIRMS SUPPLYING DEFENCE MATERIAL

Question No. 2,140—Mr. Coates:

1. Has the government taken steps to determine the number of retired officers of or above the rank of major in the army, and the equivalent rank in the other two services, presently employed with the following firms who have secured contracts through the Department of Defence Production: Canadair, De Havilland, Canadian Aviation Electronics, R.C.A. Victor, Canadian Marconi, Hawker Siddeley, Canadian Vickers Ltd., Litton System Ltd., Canadian Pratt and Whitney, Canadian Westinghouse, Collins Radio Co., and Computing Services of Canada?

2. If so, what are the names of the individuals in question and what positions do they hold in the aforementioned companies?

3. On what date did they secure employment with the firms in question?

4. If such a study has not been made, when does the government plan to undertake steps for this purpose?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. No.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

4. The government does not plan to take steps for this purpose.

TRANSFER OF NAVAL PERSONNEL TO GUARD QUEBEC ARMS DEPOTS

Question No. 2,141—Mr. Coates:

Why were 50 members of the Royal Canadian Navy transferred from Halifax to guard arms depots in the province of Quebec during the royal visit?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No R.C.N. personnel were transferred from Halifax to guard arms depots in the province of Quebec during the royal visit.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

DISCIPLINARY PENALTIES FOR POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,826—Mr. Orlikow:

1. When did the Post Office Department adopt its policy of disciplinary penalties for postal employees?
2. What are the disciplinary penalties for each offence?
3. Are the penalties the same for all postal employees in every part of Canada?
4. Who decides on the nature of the penalties?
5. Were the postal employees and their organizations consulted about these penalties?
6. Did they agree to this type of penalty?
7. Is there any other government department following the policy of imposing this type of penalty on employees whose work is unsatisfactory?

Return tabled.

*ROYAL VISIT TO OTTAWA—ACCREDITED PHOTO AGENCIES

Question No. 2,143—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. On the occasion of Her Majesty's Ottawa visit what Canadian news or photo agencies were accredited to the tour to photograph the participation of our armed forces?
2. Were units of any foreign or international news or photo agencies accredited for this purpose and, if so, who were they?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, motions Nos. 169, 174 and 175 are acceptable to the government. Motion 171 is acceptable subject to the usual reservation concerning the consent of the province. Will Your Honour call motions Nos. 172, 173 and 176? I ask that motion 170 be allowed to stand.

Motions for Papers

PROTEST RESPECTING C.B.C. BROADCAST CONCERNING HAL BANKS

Motion No. 169—Mr. Coates:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of a telegram dated October 4, 5 or 6, sent by the Minister of Justice, or by anyone on his behalf, to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation complaining about the program which featured his views on Hal Banks.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS SERVICE AT ATLIN, B.C.

Motion No. 171—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government or any department, agency or branch thereof and any other person, group, organization or government since January 1, 1964, relating to customs service at Atlin, B.C.

Motion agreed to.

AGREEMENTS UNDER GOVERNMENT WHARVES REGULATIONS

Motion No. 172—Mr. Knowles (for Mr. Howard):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all agreements entered into pursuant to section 33 of the government wharves regulations.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. member is agreeable to having this order limited to the agreements respecting floats on the Pacific coast, and with that understanding there is no objection to the motion passing.

Mr. Knowles: That was agreed to by the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion subject to the reservation?

Motion agreed to.

EXEMPTIONS UNDER GOVERNMENT WHARVES REGULATIONS

Motion No. 173—Mr. Knowles (for Mr. Howard):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all exemptions granted pursuant to section 28(2) of the government wharves regulations.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, no exemptions have been granted pursuant to section 28 (2) of the government wharves regulations, and I understand that the hon. member in whose name the motion stands has been so advised. I would accordingly ask that this motion be dropped.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

BREAKWATER AND HARBOUR FACILITIES, PORT SIMPSON, B.C.

Motion No. 174—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the government or any agency or branch thereof and any person, group, or organization regarding the question of a breakwater and/or harbour facilities at Port Simpson, B.C. since January 1, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

ADMINISTRATION OF GOVERNMENT WHARVES REGULATIONS

Motion No. 175—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all agreements entered into between the government or any department, agency or branch thereof and any other person, group, organization or government relating to the administration of the government wharves regulations or the collection of wharfage fees thereunder except on agreement made pursuant to section 33 of the said regulations.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, NOTRE DAME DE LA GUADELOUPE, QUE.

Motion No. 176—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and letters exchanged between the Minister of Public Works, the Postmaster General and the municipality of Notre Dame de la Guadeloupe in the constituency of Megantic, concerning the construction of a post office and the acquisition of land for this purpose, since January 1, 1958.

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Motion stands.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the request of hon. members that motion 176 stand, may I say I was prepared to deal with it today and if it is going to stand I would ask that it stand for two weeks.

Mr. Speaker: Stands for two weeks.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING DISSEMINATION OF "HATE" LITERATURE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Justice whether he is now in a position to advise the house what the government intends to do in connection with an amendment to the Criminal Code relative to hate literature. A spate of this literature of a scurrilous nature has been distributed in the last few days. The Canadian Jewish News stated in a recent issue it had been advised that legislation had been prepared and was ready for presentation to the house. Months have gone by while this matter has been studied. Would the minister take the house into his confidence now and tell the house whether any action is going to be taken in this connection?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question I am pleased to report that on Monday the Prime Minister received a joint delegation of the Canadian Jewish congress and the Canadian Zionist movement, I believe it is called, and I had the honour of attending that meeting, at which further submissions were made in relation to hate literature. We repeated to the congress, and to the other members of the delegation, that the matter was still under active study in the department and we would consider immediately the further representations that had been made. It is my view that very shortly I will be in a position to submit recommendations to the government in connection with this subject.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): May I ask a supplementary question with regard to the distribution of hate literature. I should like to address it to the Postmaster General. The other day he intimated that a board of review would be held at which a person by the name of Stanley was to appear. The minister stated he would advise the house when and where this meeting would be held and if the public were to be admitted.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): I am not in a position as yet to make a report, but I assure my hon. friend it will not be long delayed.

LEGISLATION TO DEAL WITH FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice in connection with new legislation to be introduced by his department. Is the minister in a position to give the house any information about possible bankruptcy legislation, particularly in view of the announcement by the solicitor general in Quebec about an investigation into the whole bankruptcy situation?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I have told the house already that the question of bankruptcy is being studied on a very broad basis and at the same time, within that broad framework, particular phases of the question are being studied. There will be a short bill introduced within a few weeks, and I shall be in a position to report to the house further at a later date as to the status of the study with regard to the broader scope of the act.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of a statement made in Montreal yesterday by the premier of Saskatchewan to the effect that under certain circumstances it may be necessary for him to arrange to have his province join the United States, I wonder if the Prime Minister is making any arrangements for overflight rights for Air Canada or other necessary travel arrangements, so that Canadians who travel from Manitoba to Alberta might be able to do so without going via the Northwest Territories?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the circumstances are so hypothetical that I do not believe I need to comment on them, except to say I am quite sure Saskatchewan will never become a Polish corridor.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a short question to the Minister of Finance.

Does the government intend to follow the course taken by French minister of finance, Mr. Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, who is going to table a bill to make mandatory the balancing of the state's budget and who will entrust to government agencies the task of providing the credits required for the improvement of the nation's economy?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONGO—INQUIRY AS TO CANADIANS HELD AS HOSTAGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A large number of foreign nationals are being held by the rebel regime in Stanleyville as hostages, and amongst this group are a number of Canadians. I know of one or two who have not been heard from since July 30. Does the minister have any information for the house regarding Canadian nationals being held in that part of the Congo?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have been asked about this matter several times. I must say that the situation is a serious one. There are 800 Europeans in the area, including 20 Canadians, who are being held as hostages. On September 25 a Swiss plane bearing international Red Cross markings was permitted to land at Stanleyville with much needed medical supplies and food. It was hoped at that time that evacuation of women and children by the Red Cross plane might be permitted, but the rebel authorities refused. The international Red Cross is continuing its negotiations, but the head of the rebel organization is having difficulty in convincing the extremists in his army to agree to plans for evacuation.

We have today made some suggestions to certain governments and I may have something more to say about this later. But I must agree that the situation is, regrettably, a serious one.

RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC DELEGATION IN PARIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him whether there has been any change respecting the status of the Quebec office in Paris since the hon. gentleman, on October 19, confirmed the intervention of his department to obtain from the government of France certain privileges and immunities for the agent of Quebec. Would the minister confirm reports that Premier Lesage expects to obtain official recognition of a Quebec consulate in Paris?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I know of no situation such as that implied in the last part of the hon. member's question. The government of Canada has asked the government of France to accord to Quebec house in Paris the same privileges that are accorded by the government of Britain to Ontario house and to Quebec house in London. It is not a question of a consulate being set up by the government of Quebec. This is a request made by the government of Canada to the government of France with regard to according to Quebec house in France the same privileges that are accorded to Quebec house in London.

The hon. member may possibly have misunderstood the announcement of the establishment of consulate service by the government of Canada at Bordeaux and Marseilles. That announcement may have provoked his question.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): The minister cannot read everything that appears in the press; I would not expect that. But has there been no request by the government of Quebec for the extension of consular privileges other than the privileges of which he spoke a moment ago? In other words, has there been any request for the granting to the province of Quebec a consulate in France, at the instance of Premier Lesage?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Could the minister tell us whether he has received a reply to this request whereby the Canadian government asked France to grant to Quebec the same privileges that London has granted to the various provinces and was this reply in the affirmative?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, we have not received a definite reply through our ambassador yet, but we expect one any day now.

[Text]

FINANCE

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND—U.S. BORROWING TO PERMIT REPAYMENT OF CANADIAN ACCOUNT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I was asked two questions yesterday. Perhaps I might reply first to the question of the Leader of the Opposition, who inquired:

—whether it is a fact that the United States borrowed moneys from the international monetary fund within the last few days in order to lend Canada funds needed to repay the Canadian account with that fund.

The simple answer to this question would be no. However, I should like to reply more fully.

On September 30 I stated that the Canadian government had repaid a further $50 million U.S. to the international monetary fund, reducing to $57.2 million U.S. the remaining Canadian debt to the fund. The original borrowing in June, 1962 was for $300 million U.S.

On the same day the United States for its own purposes borrowed $100 million U.S. from the fund. The currencies borrowed by the United States included the equivalent of $25 million U.S. in Netherlands guilders and $25 million U.S. in Deutsche marks. Canada used its holdings of U.S. dollars to purchase these currencies from the United States, and used the currencies thus acquired to repay the fund.

I should like to explain briefly the reason for following this procedure. Canada holds most of its reserves in the form of U.S. dollars, but the fund cannot at the present time accept U.S. dollars in repayment of outstanding debts because the fund's holdings of U.S. dollars are in excess of 75 per cent of the United States quota. Therefore, to repay the fund, Canada had to use currencies other than U.S. dollars. We could obtain these currencies either by purchasing them in the open market or by purchasing them from the United States in the manner I have just described. The latter alternative was chosen because it provided more effective support to the United States balance of payments and this, of course, would not in any way increase the cost to us.

BANK OF CANADA COMMITMENT UNDER AGREEMENT WITH U.K. GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Could he make the statement he promised us for today respecting the loans made by the Bank of Canada to England?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): In reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Lapointe I would say that in September of this year the Bank of Canada, in conjunction with a number of other central banks, entered into an arrangement with the Bank of England to place a short term credit facility at their disposal to help protect sterling against speculative pressures that might arise. These arrangements were made before the British election, and no new arrangements have been entered into since. Some use was made by the Bank of England of this facility before the British election.

This arrangement with the Bank of England is similar in nature to those which have been made on several occasions among central banks over the last few years in support of various currencies which might at the time have been open to some speculative pressures in the exchange markets. In June 1962, for instance, the Bank of Canada entered into such an arrangement with the federal reserve system and with the Bank of England in support of the Canadian dollar.

The British authorities have not yet announced the amount of the recent new standby arrangements made by the Bank of England or the extent to which the facilities have been used. As I have already said in the house, I do not think there would be any advantage in disclosing here the details of arrangements made on the initiative of another country. Such an announcement should obviously come from the other country concerned. The rates of interest applicable under these arrangements have not yet been published by the parties to them, but I am informed they are based on prevailing market rates.

May I say again that having in mind the support accorded to Canada by the United Kingdom and others when it was needed, it is a pleasure to have been able to reciprocate by means of these arrangements, which were initiated under the previous British government and are being continued under the present British government.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance.

Could he tell us whether interest was charged to the Bank of England for those sums recently made available to it, although we do not know what they amount to?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Speaker; to the extent that these credits are drawn on, there will be an interest charge.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, may we know what rate of interest the Bank of Canada asks from the Bank of England?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: I have just said that the particulars have not yet been published, and I think it would be preferable—

Some hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Gordon: May I finish? I think it would be preferable that this whole arrangement should be made public by the country which initiated the arrangement, that is by the United Kingdom. The same courtesy was extended to Canada when the shoe was on the other foot.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

MONTREAL—BENEFITS TO LONGSHOREMEN SUSPENDED BY INTERNATIONAL UNION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Minister of Labour and I feel it is both very urgent and serious.

Is the Minister of Labour aware of certain activities of the longshoremen's international union in Montreal which led to the suspension of three longshoremen from September 24, 1964 to December 31, 1965, because they reportedly inquired about the state of their pension fund?

Since those individuals, heads of large families, do not draw any unemployment insurance benefits and are without income, could the minister investigate and see to it that in the meantime they draw unemployment insurance benefits?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this matter was raised some time ago by the hon. member for Lapointe. I have given an explanation of the situation with respect to the rights of these longshoremen, as I understand it, under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, to unemployment insurance.

Mr. Valade: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I asked the Minister of Labour whether he is aware that these persons have not received any unemployment insurance since September 24. I understand these cases are being investigated by the unemployment insurance commission, but would the minister make sure that these people receive unemployment insurance; because they have no other means of support.

Mr. MacEachen: It is not possible for me to do that, Mr. Speaker, because under the law the insurance officer in the first place, and later the board of referees, is responsible for determining the eligibility of workers to benefits under the act. As I suggested earlier, if the insurance officer has rejected a claim, it ought to go forward to the board of referees for further adjudication.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOLLOWING RAIN DAMAGE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture, but since he is away I shall put it to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Has the government taken action or will it take any to assist farmers in the Abitibi and Témiscamingue areas as a result of the serious damages caused by 69 consecutive days of rain in those areas since the end of July?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

HOUSING

VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR MEETING RESPECTING VETERANS PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General in his responsibility for national housing. Has the minister received a petition bearing the names of over 600 Fraserview residents requesting a public hearing?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have received a petition. I cannot say whether there are 600 signatures on it—I doubt that there are—but there are a great many signatures asking for a public hearing. I have said before I do not believe that, under the circumstances of this case and in view of the long delay, a public hearing is called for.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Chatterton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I presume the minister has received the first petition and the second petition is on its way. In view of the statement by the minister as reported at page 9142 of Hansard, that only some 70 people are still complaining, would the minister now, since more than half the residents have complained, reconsider his decision and arrange for a public hearing so the matter can be thoroughly aired?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the answer is briefly no, but I would supplement it by saying that the petition to which I believe the hon. member refers, which has several signatures, says these people have signed the new agreements, and I can confirm that they have also paid the increased rents. They say that notwithstanding the fact that they signed these agreements, they only did so because they had received notice that they would be evicted if they did not.

I have already told the house that notices to that effect went out several weeks ago, and that this was a legal requirement that had to be followed. We believe the rents are fair; they are not unreasonable. These people are changing their minds; they are now objecting to paying the increased rents. A great many people have that objection, but I certainly see no reason for a public inquiry in this case just because people have subsequently changed their minds.

Mr. Chatterton: A supplementary question. Would the minister not agree that in view of the fact that more than half the residents now indicate they do not agree with the agreements they made—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chatterton: —or are not satisfied, there should be a public hearing?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, at the risk of being repetitious I would say that they do not say this in the petition. They say they would prefer not to have increased rents. The petition is to that effect. Then they say they would like a public hearing.

TRANSPORTATION

NOVA SCOTIA—REPORTED INTENTION TO REDUCE SERVICE BETWEEN HALIFAX AND YARMOUTH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Minister of Transport. Can the minister now report on the position of the board of transport commissioners regarding the D.A.R. passenger train cancellation?

Mr. MacInnis: We got the answer to that yesterday.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker—

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

How is it that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan) can ask a question relating to the cancellation of trains and his question is allowed whereas the other day the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) asked a question relating to the same cancellations as the hon. member and, in the case of the member for Compton-Frontenac, the matter was somewhat urgent as the cancellation could be put into effect very shortly, his question was ruled out of order and he was told to put it on the order paper?

Are questions from the Liberal party accepted and those from other parties refused?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: There is obviously no question of privilege here. However, perhaps the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan) would like to say something. My understanding of the two questions was that they were completely different; the first question, asked by one of the hon. members to my left, required a detailed answer concerning a small section of railway between cities A and B, and I understand the second question had to do with the general principle.

Mr. Regan: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I submit also that there is urgency in this matter, inasmuch as the D.A.R. service was to have been curtailed at the end of this week. I also understand the minister is in a position to make a brief statement in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Regan: If I can make myself heard over the noise from the opposite side of the house—

Mr. Speaker: Order. In order to settle the matter, would the hon. member put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Lambert: It was a stooge question, anyway.

Mr. Winch: It was decided two days ago by transport, and you know it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

STUDY OF EXTENSION OF TELEVISION SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he is now in a position to answer the question which I directed to him through his parliamentary secretary on October 6, regarding a study of the extension of C.B.C. television services.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend might recall, the decision with regard to extension of service or alternative service will not be made until the advisory committee on broadcasting presents its report, which I hope will be early in 1965.

Mr. Simpson: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The question I asked was in two parts. I asked whether the government had made a request to the C.B.C. for an up to date study; and if they have not, would they consider doing so at this time, namely asking the C.B.C. for an up to date study regarding the extension of television services to the unserviced parts of Canada?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am quite sure that the C.B.C. is giving very active consideration to this very important matter and will present its views to the advisory committee.

IMMIGRATION

TORONTO—STATUS OF PERSONS CONCERNED WITH NEWSPAPER STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether he has completed the investigation he has been making for the last couple of weeks into the status of the people employed by the newspapers in Toronto in connection with the strike, and in particular the status of the six individuals who are apparently here without status.

I wonder whether we could have a report on that.

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in my absence my parliamentary secretary made a statement to the house on the problem concerning the group of people who came to Canada or were allowed to work for the newspapers which were involved in a strike in Toronto.

I know the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) inquired more specifically about the status of six persons, and I have yet to receive the details of the inquiry carried out in Toronto. I hope to receive them within the next few days, at which time I will be pleased to answer the question of the hon. member.

[Text]

STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF CASES OF GREEK SEAMEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I should like to give an answer to the Leader of the Opposition who, on October 8 and again on October 14 inquired concerning the government's attitude toward deserting seamen. He made specific reference to a number of Greek seamen in Toronto now awaiting hearing of their appeals from convictions handed down by the courts for illegal entry to Canada.

Considerable publicity has been given to the subject of ship deserters, both in the house and in the press, during the past several months, and the problem and difficulties attendant to this question have occupied my department's attention for an even lengthier period. In our review of these problems one point became abundantly clear at the outset; that is that there has been an alarming increase among certain groups of the resort to this particular means of gaining entry to Canada. They are doing so in the hope that even if they are caught they will be able to bring enough public pressure to bear to allow them to remain in this country. These people, the majority of whom are otherwise inadmissible as immigrants, are knowingly and purposely breaking the law, and if this practice were to go unchecked it would only result in utter chaos and a complete disregard for Canadian law.

When discussing the cases referred to by the Leader of the Opposition it must be remembered that there are two separate and distinct issues involved here. In the first instance, because of their actions these persons became the subject of immigration inquiries under the Immigration Act, and were properly ordered deported under section 19 (1) (e) (x) of the act for having remained in Canada without the permission of an immigration officer after the departure of their vessels. In very exceptional cases where the strongest compassionate grounds exist, and where the fullest co-operation has been forthcoming, I have directed that the person might be allowed to remain in this country to see how he progresses. I would also like to make it clear, however, that where deportation has taken place this has not ruled out the possibility of the individual being permitted to come forward again at some future date as a legal immigrant in the normal way if he can comply with all other immigration requirements.

As to what may be the outcome of the specific cases referred to by the Leader of the Opposition, it is not possible to say just what action may eventually be taken in their cases. All I can say at the moment is that they will be examined carefully in the light of the policy considerations I have set out above. The specific case of Ilias Vitsas is no different than any of the others, and this man's case will also be carefully reviewed under this policy.

The second issue involved in these cases is that by reason of their method of gaining entry to Canada they have broken the law, and like anyone else who does not adhere to the laws of Canada they become liable for arraignment by the responsible police authorities before the competent courts of the land. It would be inappropriate for me, of course, to offer any comments whatever concerning the action taken or the decisions reached by the courts in these cases.

Regarding the right hon. gentleman's inquiry concerning any direction given to the government's counsel in these cases, I would just like to confirm the position I took earlier in this respect, that no instructions were issued to counsel by either officials of my department or the Department of Justice as to the degree of vigour with which these cases were to be pressed. The role of the prosecuting counsel in these cases was no different than it is in any other court proceeding, and that is to pursue the prosecution only to the point required in the interests of simple justice.

PROCEDURE

CORRECTION OF ELEVENTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE IN "VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the house to a correction appearing in Votes and Proceedings for Tuesday, October 20. It relates to the eleventh report of the special committee on procedure and organization, concurred in on Monday, October 19. The report was first printed, and without error, in Votes and Proceedings for Wednesday, October 7. Unfortunately, however, when reprinted on Monday, October 19, a transposition of certain lines occurred, and this has now been corrected by the erratum following page 813 of Votes and Proceedings for yesterday. I draw this to the attention of hon. members because it is part of an important report concurred in by the house.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

DISCIPLINARY MEASURES RESPECTING APPLICATION OF FUNDS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. A few weeks ago the minister announced that he was going to make a statement concerning the investigation now being carried out with regard to the R.C.M.P. in Montreal. Can the minister tell us if this investigation has now been completed and what changes have been made as a result of the said investigation?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, all the proceedings have not yet been completed in this regard.

Mr. Martineau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Was this followed by changes in the high command of the R.C.M.P. in Montreal?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, changes have been made in the high command of the R.C.M.P. at Montreal and they were announced in the press. I must say, however, that they should not be attributed to the results of the investigation because, as I have already pointed out, it will only be proper to make comments on the investigation as such when all proceedings have been completed.

[Text]

INVESTIGATION INTO ALLEGATIONS OF POLICE BRUTALITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice a question. Last Friday he said he expected to receive fairly soon a report regarding police activities in Quebec city during Her Majesty's recent visit. I want to ask the minister whether he has yet received such a report and, if not, when he does receive it will it be made public?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received the report; but I might add that today I once more asked that it be forwarded to me promptly.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt, but we are already four minutes overdue. Question time was up at 3.25 p.m., but on account of the long statement made a few moments ago I thought three or four minutes extra should be granted as a bonus. But we are over the half hour period.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the difficulties with which you are confronted, but I had been attempting to get the floor for some time before you called orders of the day. I thought we were going to continue on orders of the day, so I sat down; and then you called on the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Speaker: There is a slight misstatement there. I did not call on the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam; he took the floor.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I apologize. I had forgotten it was Wednesday and I had not realized that time was up. I apologize to the hon. member.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

1. Departmental administration, $6,491,400.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to make a statement at this time because the estimates of the department have, of course, been thoroughly examined by the standing committee on veterans affairs. I only want to say that I think I should put on the record the fact that I am sure all members of this committee will join with me in expressing our highest commendation for the very efficient and cooperative manner in which the estimates were dealt with in that committee. Perhaps I should also put on the records of the house the resolution moved by the hon. member for Kootenay West in that committee, which is as follows:

I would like to move that this committee express its appreciation of the clear, concise and informative way in which the deputy minister and other officials have answered questions during this hearing.

I should like to add my commendation to that remark.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to go any further at this moment, because as I said the estimates were thoroughly dealt with in the committee. I will of course answer any questions that are asked during our examination of the estimates this afternoon.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact that the estimates were dealt with quite thoroughly by the committee, but I did anticipate that the minister would make a statement about government policy in respect of veterans affairs at this time. Simply because these estimates were considered thoroughly by a committee does not in itself relieve the minister from his responsibility to indicate on the floor of this chamber, at the beginning of a consideration here of his estimates, what government policy is in respect of veterans affairs. I think the minister should indicate what legislation he has in mind for the veterans of this country. The minister has given us no indication in that regard this afternoon, the first opportunity we have had for a general discussion.

The minister has not satisfied me, nor presumably other members on this side of the house, by simply suggesting that because these estimates were considered thoroughly by a committee it is not necessary for him to make a further statement here. This is the forum in which the government has the opportunity to outline policy in respect of major questions, such as veterans affairs, and the forum in which we have a responsibility to listen and to commend or criticize those policies. I hope that at some later time the minister will consider what I have said in this regard and give us an outline of the government's intentions.

When questions were asked during the committee meetings about legislation or review of legislation in respect of veterans affairs, the minister said he hoped that the government's intentions in respect of this legislation would be introduced in the house by the end of this month or early next month. I am sure the minister must realize, as we do, that the members of this committee are very limited in their approach to this important subject without having in their minds some idea of government policy.

On December 10, 1963, the third report of the standing committee on veterans affairs was presented to this house. It contained a number of recommendations which called for legislative action. As yet we have not seen evidence of any action of that kind. At this time we can only hope that there will be something done in the way of legislation in respect of veterans affairs. The minister said that there would be some legislation of this kind introduced. I think it would help us in our consideration of these estimates to know what that legislation is.

A period of ten or 11 months has elapsed since that committee report was received by the house. Surely that is sufficient time for the minister to make a review of the veterans legislation and consider the steps which ought to be taken in respect of the recommendations of that committee. Surely the minister has had time to consider the representations that I am sure he has received during that period of time. Obviously there is necessity for a review and revision of veterans legislation. The minister did not enlighten us in this regard by his statement this afternoon. As a result, I think we must consider the recommendations contained in the report of the veterans affairs committee, keeping in mind some of the changes which have occurred since that time. Many of the difficulties which were discussed by the committee have not been sufficiently covered by the minister today.

I should like to refer to two aspects of veterans affairs legislation which were not the subject of recommendations contained in the report to which I have made reference, and I refer to veterans allowances and disability pensions. In view of the substantial increase in the cost of living during the past year, and the various representations which I am sure have been made to the minister and the government—certainly many members of this house have received representations—what consideration is being given to the difficulties being encountered by recipients of war veterans allowances and disability pensions? These recipients are now realizing that their present levels of pensions and allowances are not adequate. We do not know what the government's intention is in this regard. Nothing has appeared on the order paper which would give us an indication. We have been assured that when the legislation does appear on the order paper it will meet all our requirements, but we are not absolutely sure that that is an accurate statement.

In view of the increase in the correspondence received by the members of this house dealing with this situation, undoubtedly there is a strong realization among the veterans in this country that the present level of pensions and allowances is not sufficient to meet the increased costs they must meet from day to day. Rents have increased as a consequence of increased building costs, about which I think the government has heard a great deal. Food and clothing costs have increased. Because of the fixed level of incomes of veterans, and increasing costs, the veterans are now finding themselves in what our agriculturist friends refer to as a cost-price squeeze. Surely the government has had ample opportunity to do something to alleviate this situation, or at least to give the veterans some assurance that action is contemplated.

I should now like to refer to the recommendations contained in the report of the standing committee on veterans affairs, as presented to the house on December 10, 1963. Recommendation No. 9 in that third report to this house is as follows:

> Your committee feels that the time has come when major pieces of pensions legislation should be reviewed and is of the opinion that much of the difficulty can be overcome by reviewing the sections in question so as to clarify the following points:
>
> (a) "Benefit of doubt". At the moment there is some evidence to show that the interpretation now being given by the commissioners is not sufficiently broad to be entirely in keeping with what we believe to be the spirit of the act.
>
> We suggest that the word "doubt" in the phrase "benefit of doubt" be interpreted to mean "a reasonable doubt" as might be expected to arise in the mind of a reasonable man in the street.

As the minister is well aware, this question about the benefit of doubt was raised during the deliberations of the committee. The chairman of the pension commission said that the benefit of doubt in his opinion is adequately exercised in reviewing every case that comes before the commission. We do not doubt the sincerity of the chairman of the pension commission in that regard. We believe that within the general terms of reference to that commission they do exercise the benefit of the doubt. I am sure there is not one member of this house who does not have a thick file of representations from veterans in respect of applications for pension or revisions of pension. As a result I am sure most members have come to the conclusion that the benefit of the doubt clause has not been exercised as generously as has been suggested, or as generously as we in this house think it ought to be. We do not think it is being exercised as generously as was intended by the parliament of Canada when it enacted the legislation which contains that clause.

I should like to refer to a specific case, and there have been a great many over the last six or seven years. An individual of the Royal Canadian Navy while on board a vessel in the port of New Orleans between 1943 and 1944 underwent an appendix operation. From that time he has had a history of continuous illness, both while in the service and after his discharge, including tuberculosis, which resulted in a period of confinement in a t.b. sanitorium. This was followed by bouts of blindness, deafness and continuous pain. The veteran required drugs over a period of many years, all of which he paid for. No help was provided in this regard through any pension award because no benefit of the doubt was given. Unfortunately the doctors were unable to come to a final diagnosis of the disease and because they could not diagnose the disease they would not give an opinion whether it was as a consequence of war service. But one fact that was known was that the recurring illness was continuous from the time the man had the initial operation while on service until the time he applied to the pension commission. Finally after 18 years the pension commission did grant a pension but made it retroactive for only 12 months.

Where is there adequate application of the benefit of the doubt in such a case? This is what the committee had in mind when it asked the government to consider reviewing the legislation in order to provide a far more generous interpretation of the phrase "benefit of doubt" and far greater attention to the needs of the veterans in order to eliminate cases of the kind I have just cited, where years and years can elapse and the veteran is perhaps finally given pension entitlement only as a consequence of the exercise of the benefit of the doubt. But how many years of suffering, financial uncertainty, job loss and agony of mind must a veteran go through before the benefit of the doubt is applied in the manner in which the parliament and government of Canada meant it should be applied, I believe, when this provision was placed in the legislation?

I go on to the second part of recommendation No. 9 in the committee report where in paragraph (b) they state:

> That the burden of proof rests with the commission and not with the veteran applicant.

Then there is a reference to an extract from Lord Denning's report which appears in the evidence during the committee's hearings last year. I believe it is up to the minister to tell us very soon whether these recommendations have been fully considered and whether legislation is going to be presented to us based upon them. He should also tell us why it has been found necessary to bring forward the general discussion of veterans affairs on these estimates before the legislation has been made available to the house for study. Section 10 of the committee's report reads as follows:

> Your committee further feels that instead of a "one-shot" appeal which is both final and binding, there should be two appeals as follows:
>
> (a) a preliminary appeal in which all the evidence is transcribed and then the ruling is given in the form of a written judgment in which all points of evidence both medical and legal on which the ruling is based is set forth in writing and signed.

In the committee we heard officers of the department say that when a final judgment is given by the commission the veteran is acquainted with all of the facts and knows the reasons for the commission's decision. Although I do not deny that this information is available, I am not certain that those who have made applications and receive word of rejection are completely aware of all of the reasons. If they are, if they know the procedures to follow, if it is common knowledge among these people what they must do next, then how is it that so many members of parliament spend so much of their time endeavouring to secure answers for them? There is not one member of the house who does not have case after case in which he finds himself acting as an intermediary between the veteran and the minister and his departmental officials.

If the means by which veterans are informed of their rights and of the reasons for the rejection of pension applications are adequate, surely there should be no necessity for the voluminous quantity of mail in this regard with which members of parliament have to deal. There must be something missing in the procedures. Surely it would be a very simple matter to improve the procedures so that veterans who make application to the commission will have a far better understanding of the precise reasons for rejection, what they have to do next and how to go about entering an appeal. The second part of recommendation No. 10 in last year's report reads as follows:

> (b) a second ruling as at present. Your committee recommends that this procedure would correct the disadvantage the veteran now suffers as he would know what arguments must be rebutted instead of having to prepare his appeal blindly as at present.

It may be that the committee report goes a little too far. In my experience the chief pensions advocate and the pensions advocates across the country do a remarkable job in helping veterans to present their appeals. Once the pensions advocates become familiar with the case and get in touch with the veteran their work on behalf of the veteran is outstanding. They give very sympathetic attention to these matters and I do not believe they permit veterans to go blindly into appeals.

However, strangely enough, although we are assured that the procedures are well understood by all applicants we find that time and time again members of parliament must intervene in order to bring a veteran who does not seem to know his rights into contact with the officers of the department, including the veterans advocates, who can assist him. Therefore in this instance it is perhaps not so much a failure of administration or policy but a failure of communication. If this is all that is missing, then for goodness sake let us get something done about it because it does not need to wait for legislation. This is an administrative matter that can be taken care of.

Because of the substantial volume of mail that members continually receive, I am afraid it is not going to be enough to suggest to members that the present procedures are adequate. Furthermore, I am sure the minister knows from his own experience, as do his departmental officials, that the mail we receive is not frivolous. It does not involve somebody trying to get something for nothing. The Legion branches and other veterans organizations do very valuable work in this regard, and time and time again when cases are brought to the attention of members of the house or the Legion it turns out that the applicant has not understood his rights and has finally approached a Legion branch or another veterans organization or a member of the house in order to try to get proper attention to his legitimate rights. A failure of understanding has intervened and has been the cause of considerable hardship and suffering for some veterans when in fact procedures exist to relieve such conditions.

The eleventh recommendation of the committee was in these words:

> Your committee is of the opinion that the time has come when the excellent prosthetic service developed by the D.V.A. should become a national service available for all Canadians.

It would be interesting to know how far the government has proceeded in looking into that question, and I believe other speakers may be dealing with it in more detail later today. The twelfth recommendation reads as follows:

> Your committee is aware that a point has been reached where a decision must be made regarding treatment services in both areas of responsibility and administration. Your committee recommends that fullest consultation be carried out with veterans organizations before any changes are made.

During the past year and a half we have had a good deal of discussion of this question in the house. I believe we can accept the fact that the minister is now consulting in advance with the veterans organizations and he has given the committee the assurance that he will do so in the future, for which we give him full credit. However, as the minister must be aware, if there should be any deviation from this intention there are members of the house who will have something further to say on the question. In view of the testimony given in the committee and what we have heard in answer to questions in the house I believe we can assume that the interests of the veterans are paramount in any change that is contemplated, that their interests will be given first consideration and that the veterans organizations will be consulted prior to any change.

I hope the minister has taken fully into account the recommendation that was made with regard to the payment of increases in veterans pensions and allowances. The recommendation of the committee was to the effect that such changes should be favourably considered whenever similar adjustments are made to the salaries of civil servants and members of the armed services, and consideration should be given to legislation which would bring this about. This would have the result of eliminating increases in pensions and allowances by the sort of hit or miss method that is used at the present time when other considerations than the ones to which I have referred are taken into account. If the government comes to the conclusion that the salaries of civil servants or members of the armed services are not adequate, they act. The procedures in this respect have been greatly altered and a continuous review now takes place. A similar procedure should be adopted with regard to war veterans allowances and pensions. Perhaps the minister has given approval to this idea or something like it, but we do not know. Again, I can only say that it is unfortunate we do not know because we expected we would know before these estimates came before us.

Finally, there is a very special recommendation in this report upon which I should like to comment. It reads as follows:

> In view of the special problems that time and experience have revealed concerning the Hong Kong veterans this committee urges that a special study and survey be made of their problems and particular disabilities.

We understand that such a survey is taking place within the pension commission or within the department. How much longer is it going to take? It has been ten months since this report was made and approximately 20 years since the Hong Kong veterans were brought back to Canada and the Canadian people and the department became aware of the special problems confronting them. During the last year or two, perhaps for a longer period, I do not believe there has been very much new ascertained within the Department of Veterans Affairs about the particular problems of the Hong Kong veterans. The diseases to which they were subjected and the conditions under which they were imprisoned were so severe that a much higher proportion of these prisoners of war have died during the years since the war than in any other particular group of veterans. They are living with continuing afflictions resulting from the diseases and conditions of their environment, their diet, the treatment they received and the things to which they were subjected and from which they have been unable to recover physically, and in many cases mentally as well.

I would expect the minister to be particularly sympathetic because of his own experience. I shared the somewhat similar experience myself in a German camp. I am one of the lucky ones and I expect the minister would consider he is one of the lucky ones, too. The Hong Kong veterans are not lucky. I do not suppose it was ever really lucky to be a prisoner of war, anyway. However, the Hong Kong veterans did encounter particularly difficult circumstances. We know the survey is being made. What are the results? There have been interviews, discussions and questions on this subject in the public forum for years. I feel it is time now we knew what it is the government intends to do. Is this survey going to go the way of so many surveys, and disappear into the limbo of pigeonholes? Let us have some answers. There have been sufficient months now in which to secure and correlate all the information. Give us some indication of the government's intention with regard to the Hong Kong veterans. I am sure there is no member in this house who would not regard sympathetically any action by the government in this regard.

Generally speaking, Mr. Chairman, these are the questions that come to the minds of the members of this committee in dealing with these estimates. Of course it is quite possible that details may be raised on individual items as we go along. One of the things that occurs to us now is that sufficient time has elapsed for us to be made aware of the government's intentions with regard to veterans legislation. We are no longer satisfied to sit here quietly and wait while the government continues to use up further months making up its mind. We want to know now. We want to know precisely what the intentions are and when they are going to be implemented.

So far as the members of the Department of Veterans Affairs are concerned, the senior officers and other officers there, I think it was stated very well in the committee, and it could be repeated here, that every one of us knows the men and women who direct the affairs of the department are dedicated to the interests of the veteran. They have the support of this house in their efforts, regardless of where a member sits. We appreciate what they do, and we will support them in the doing of it. We do want some policy announcement now from the government.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, like the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke, I was somewhat disappointed that the minister did not take the opportunity in introducing his estimates to inform the house of the government's intentions with regard to amendments to legislation which have been sought by veterans organizations and members of the house for some time. I trust that this brief, shall I say, prologue on his part only indicates we shall hear much more when we come to the epilogue so far as these estimates are concerned. I do want to say this to the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke: I trust he shows the same vigour in protecting the rights of veterans whose property is about to be flooded by the Columbia river development as he has shown this afternoon with regard to these estimates. I can say that in all sincerity because I have had correspondence with many of them. I trust he shows the same sense of urgency in protecting the property and civil rights of these veterans against the British Columbia power authority.

[Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke).]

Having said that, I want to say that I appreciate the courtesies I have received from the minister. I say quite frankly I have appreciated his personal attention to any questions I have brought before him. I believe that applies as well to inquiries directed to the officials as well. I should like to pay tribute also to the senior officials in Ottawa of all branches of the Department of Veterans Affairs and to the field staff. I support the remarks made by the previous speaker in that respect. There is no question about the services rendered by the officials of this department who, I think it is safe to say, throughout the years have dealt directly with more human beings than any other department of government.

Now, before proceeding, I want to pay tribute to the work of the Royal Canadian Legion, the army and navy veterans association, the Canadian corps, the imperial veterans, the amputation association, the Hong Kong veterans association, and all of those other veteran organizations, who have studied veterans problems so closely. These organizations have made it possible for this department, with the experience of 20 years, to accomplish a great deal for veterans and their dependants. I should like to say that this department is a rather unusual one. It is the department responsible for providing services to the veterans and their dependants. This has been a great experience so far as Canada is concerned. This department has pioneered legislation that has shown the way for the development of legislation in social welfare, and so on. The department has pioneered certain medical research, as well as the question of manufacturing artificial limbs and that sort of thing, which has been of advantage to Canadians other than veterans. It has pioneered in the treatment service as well. It has pioneered administrative services—administrative procedures and methods. Moreover the Veterans Land Act administration pioneered certain things in connection with farm credit. It is my opinion that the farm credit legislation which was placed on the statute books a few years ago was largely based on the experience of the Veterans Land Act administration.

I have always taken a personal interest in the work of this department and the problems it has to deal with. I am, I believe, well into my twentieth year as a member of the committee on veterans affairs, more recently known as the standing committee on veterans affairs, and I am sure that when the time comes for me to create a breath of fresh air by disappearing from this chamber I shall be able to say with the poet Moore:

> When Time who steals my years away
> Shall steal my pleasures, too,
> Fond memories of these days will stay
> And half my joys renew.

I wish now to deal briefly with a few of the matters which have been considered by the veterans organizations, by the standing committee on veterans affairs and by a good many members of this house. Time will not permit me to deal fully with all the questions which concern veterans and veterans organizations. However, I expect colleagues of mine in tnis group to discuss other matters which are of importance. I wish to deal first of all with a resolution which has passed at the last national convention of the Royal Canadian Legion. I think this is a matter to which the minister should give some consideration. I will read it:

> Whereas Canada achieved nationhood in large measure through the efforts and sacrifice of those who served in the forces in time of war; and
> Whereas the Royal Canadian Legion is composed of many ethnic groups which comprise a large portion of Canada's population:
> Be it resolved that we urge upon the government that the Royal Canadian Legion be represented on all national committees that may be set up for the purpose of considering Canada's status as a nation.

I support the principle of that motion and I support the thought behind it. However, I would suggest it might be advisable to ask all the veterans organizations to get together and nominate persons who could serve on these national committees. I think the veterans of this country should have representation on these important committees which deal with the national questions mentioned and I urge the minister to give this resolution his consideration since I believe it to be very constructive and appropriate.

I wish to turn briefly to the question of pension rates. When the veterans legislation was first under consideration it was established that pensions would be related to the earnings of the ordinary workers of this country. I think this has been the generally accepted principle throughout the years. In recent years there has been an increase in the cost of living across this nation. Salaried people and wage earners have received a measure of compensation by way of increases in salaries and wages. Naturally the veterans organizations have been urging the government to consider granting an increase in disability pension rates. I support such requests and I support the recommendation of the standing committee on veterans affairs that these rates should be increased to meet the circumstances of the day. We are looking forward with a great deal of anticipation to the introduction of legislation to amend the Pension Act.

There is too this question of the benefit of the doubt, which has been brought before the committee on veterans affairs on a number of occasions. I think this is one of the most contentious and longstanding problems with which the committee has had to deal. We listened last year to the evidence given by the chairman of the Canadian pension commission and we have also listened to the evidence presented by the veterans organizations. The representations of these organizations convinced members of the committee that the benefit of the doubt was not being given in accordance with the expectations of members of parliament when the bill was passed. A recommendation to this effect was included in the committee's last report to the house; I will not deal at great length with this question because one of my hon. friends will be discussing it in greater detail.

Another matter which came before the committee was a request that there should be automatic pension increases for all 50 per cent pensioners on the basis of age. The resolution passed at the convention reads as follows:

> Whereas veterans in receipt of 50 per cent pensions for conditions other than gunshot wounds are also experiencing diminished earning capacity:
> Therefore be it resolved that all 50 per cent disability pensioners be entitled to the automatic age increase.

I support that resolution, as do other members of our party. I have felt throughout the years that there was a measure of injustice in the working of this section of the Pension Act. I am aware that in the first instance the section was included so as to provide a measure of compensation for those who were wounded in battle. But I think there are many veterans who suffered disabilities in similar circumstances, on the field of battle or otherwise, and I would therefore urge that consideration be given to this proposal also.

An hon. member who spoke earlier mentioned the survey now being undertaken by the department in connection with the needs and circumstances of the Hong Kong veterans. I join with all others in expressing the hope that this survey will soon be complete and that there will be a report followed by some action on the part of the government to meet the needs of these men. In this connection let me say again that one of my hon. friends will be dealing with the question of these veterans at great length later on.

Another matter in which I am particularly interested is the resolution passed at the last dominion convention of the Royal Canadian Legion to the following effect:

> Whereas it appears that the Canadian pension commission from time to time adopts matters of policy in deciding pension cases which are not anywhere stated in law or by regulation:
>
> Therefore be it resolved that whenever any new policy is decided by the commission in dealing with any case, the same shall be made available to the Royal Canadian Legion.
>
> And that all present existing policy which is not stated by regulation or law also be made similarly available.

I strongly support this resolution and I believe this information should be made available to veterans organizations. I recall some years ago requests being made year after year on behalf of veterans organizations that the table of disabilities be made public. This was denied by successive governments. Finally—and I consider this one of my major achievements since I have been a member of this house—I moved a motion for the production of papers asking that this table of disabilities be produced. There was a certain timidity and hesitation on the part of the government of the day, but finally the minister took the bull by the horns and said he was agreeable to the production of the table. It was produced, and it is available now to the veterans organizations of this country. It has been a most valuable document to them. Though there was a certain reluctance about producing it, it is admitted now—I think the minister and his officials will admit it—that it has been a useful document for veterans organizations and their advocates to have in presenting the claims of veterans before the pension commission. I suggest that this further recommendation is very worth while and its implementation would be a positive contribution toward the co-operation that has existed throughout the years between the department and the veterans organizations in Canada in the administration of veterans legislation.

I now come to the War Veterans Allowance Act. I want to make a plea for the consideration of an increase in the war veterans allowance, on the same grounds upon which an increase in disability pensions is being sought. It is obvious from the interest taken in this question by veterans organizations at national, provincial and branch levels that this is a matter of serious concern to the many veterans and their dependants who do require a substantial increase in the war veterans allowance. I know from personal experience in meeting a good many veterans throughout the constituency that there is a definite need for such an increase. I have discussed with the veterans their difficulties; I know their problems and the domestic circumstances of a good many of the veterans I have the honour to represent, and I have no hesitation in saying, in association with other members in this house, that those veterans on war veterans allowance urgently need an increase in the allowance.

I suggest that at the same time there should be an increase in the permissive income. I think the minister indicated to the committee that this question is receiving some consideration. I am of the opinion that there should be the abolition of the means test in respect of those veterans over age 65. We have never been able to secure general approval for this proposal, but I believe that for those over 65 years of age there should be the abolition of the means test in connection with war veterans allowance.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I come to the question of veterans hospitals. The policy announced by the minister has caused some concern in veterans organizations across this country. First of all I want to congratulate the minister on the way he presented his case before the dominion convention of the Royal Canadian Legion. I fully expected to see a bit of fireworks there. I sat in the audience and listened to him, and I thought he presented his case in such a way that it indicated he knew the spirit and temper of veterans. I heard a good many delegates to that convention, while not agreeing with all the minister said, speak in quite complimentary tones of his very tactful and, shall I say, gracious approach to a prickly problem.

Mr. Fane: Don't embarrass him.

Mr. Herridge: After the minister had spoken, that convention passed the following resolution:

> Whereas many veterans with chronic disabilities must have domiciliary care and frequently must have expert medical advice as is evidenced from a further statement made by the director-general of treatment services that "they all have some degree of medical reason for being in the hospital and many of them have a very great degree of medical reason":
>
> Therefore be it resolved that no transfer of any D.V.A. hospital to civilian administration be made by D.V.A. at the present time without full consultation at the outset of negotiations and mutual agreement with both dominion and provincial commands of the Royal Canadian Legion; and

Be it further resolved that no such operational transfer be effected until adequate domiciliary care, with the necessary medical services actually in being; and that if and when any active treatment hospital facilities are shared with civilian authorities, D.V.A. must control the admission, the care and the discharge of all veterans, and provision must be made for their admittance, regardless of the pressure of civilian demands.

As I said before, Mr. Chairman, I think all reasonable people recognize that there are changing circumstances with respect to admissions to veterans hospitals across this country. I hope and trust that the minister will, in dealing with this problem, recognize the spirit and purpose of the resolution passed by the Royal Canadian Legion. Personally I am quite optimistic in that respect.

Now I come to the Veterans Land Act. A resolution was passed by the Royal Canadian Legion in this connection. I am just picking a few resolutions out of the many that were passed, because they are of particular interest. There was one with respect to the removal of the time limit for serving personnel, which reads as follows:

Whereas it has been determined that many veterans with wartime service now in the Canadian forces are eligible for benefits under the Veterans Land Act:

Therefore be it resolved that the Veterans Land Act be amended to ensure that benefits may be available to veterans now in service upon discharge, regardless of that date.

I think that is a very reasonable request on the part of the Royal Canadian Legion, and the members of this group support it. We look forward to an amendment to the Veterans Land Act to meet the situation that is covered by this resolution. I could go on at greater length to some other minor amendments with respect to the Veterans Land Act, Mr. Chairman, but I will leave those to a later date.

I now come to a question that has been concerning veterans organizations and a good many veterans generally across Canada. This is the question of the maintenance of the veterans preference in the civil service. We will soon be 20 years away from the last world war, veterans are aging, and there is a tendency on the part of some people to feel that the veterans preference should no longer apply, and so on. But, Mr. Chairman, we strongly support the maintenance of the veterans preference in the civil service. The resolution passed by the Royal Canadian Legion dealing with this matter says:

Therefore be it resolved that the existing statutory preferences for war veterans as set out in the Civil Service Act be maintained.

They were very concerned about the Heeney report of December, 1958, and the Glassco report of July, 1962, which recommended the substitution of a less embracing form of veterans preference for the existing absolute preference. The Royal Canadian Legion also recommended that additional preference be established for world war II veterans. The resolution reads as follows:

Whereas these veterans do not qualify for veterans preference over a non-veteran for employment in the federal civil service:

Therefore be it resolved that section 40 of the Civil Service Act be amended to provide an additional veterans preference after the overseas preference to the active veterans of world war II, regardless of where the veteran served.

I trust the minister will give consideration to that recommendation. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words on behalf of the corps of commissionaires. A resolution was passed at the Royal Canadian Legion convention in this regard. I discussed this matter with a number of the delegates present at the convention who are concerned with the growing practice of government departments and private employers in employing private detective agencies. As a matter of fact I was rather shocked when I visited the national art gallery recently and noticed that the building is policed by a private detective agency; I think it is called the national security service, or something of that sort. This has caused veterans some concern, because it reduces the opportunities for veterans who are getting on in years to undertake useful employment and provide a useful service that is not beyond their physical capacity.

In this connection the Legion passed a resolution which is critical of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation because it replaced the corps of commissionaires in certain areas. It says amongst other things:

Whereas a great many veterans who were employed with the corps of commissionaires carrying out these duties have consequently lost their employment; and

Whereas the Legion is becoming increasingly concerned over the failure of governments at all levels to maintain the provisions of the veterans' preference and to promote the employment of ex-servicemen in government positions:

Therefore be it resolved that the government be requested to immediately halt any further replacement of corps of commissionaires personnel by private security agencies and urge other levels of government to follow suit.

I am sure all members of our standing committee on veterans affairs will support that recommendation by the Legion and I urge the minister to look into the question to see what is happening at the present time. Because this practice of employing private detective agencies is growing.

I know my time is fairly short but I want to make reference now to a matter which concerns veterans in my own constituency. I have raised the matter in the standing committee on veterans affairs. I am referring to those veterans who will be affected by the building of dams under Columbia river treaty projects. There are two classes of veterans: There are those who are purchasing property, but have not completed their purchase from the Veterans Land Act administration, and those who have purchased it in other ways. I think this provides an opportunity for the department to set a pattern which will be of value to the other property owners who will be affected.

At this time I want to thank the minister for his prompt attention to a matter which I brought up by way of a question asked in the house. I am informed that the B.C. power and hydro authority soon got wind of the question and answer and immediately sent their men in to meet this veteran in question, to settle the matters of which he complained. These were not matters of price but matters of inconvenience and that sort of thing which I thought were thoroughly unnecessary. Anyway the matters were settled and I thank the minister for his prompt attention and the complete reply I received from him in this respect.

I think the department can perform a service to the veterans who come under its jurisdiction, namely those who still owe money on their properties under the Veterans Land Act administration, and also other veterans and property holders who are affected. I know that a good many of my colleagues in the house think I get a little too disturbed about this question, but I am representing people some of whom I have known for 50 years and the majority of whom I have known for many years. I urge the minister to make certain that everything is done to protect the rights of these veterans under the V.L.A. because, as we were informed in the committee by the director, who I am sure is most sympathetic, the Veterans Land Act administration could not agree to the sale of the property unless the veteran concerned gave his permission. If he failed to give permission, then as a last resort the administration had to get an order in council. I hope that the Department of Veterans Affairs stands right up squarely for the veterans who are depending on them.

[Mr. Herridge.]

In this connection I want to read a letter written by a veteran who lives in the riding of Okanagan-Revelstoke. This letter was published in the Revelstoke Review on Thursday, October 15 last, and I have received numerous letters in similar vein to this from people living up and down the shores of the Columbia river and along the Arrow lakes, both veterans and other property owners. I mention this letter because this indicates the spirit of the B.C. power and hydro authority. The letter says:

> Editor, Review:
>
> Farmers in Sidmouth are now facing the darkest time in their lives. Soon we will be forced to leave our farms and homes at hydro's price.

There is no bargaining on their part; B.C. hydro sets the price and people have to take it or leave it. There is no negotiation. The letter continues:

> We have nothing to say even if we have lived here 50 to 60 years, worked hard and made a place for ourselves where we could make a living as long as we live.
>
> If that is just around the corner for us, 42,000 Canadians who died for freedom must be turning in their graves at this display of freedom and civil rights.

That figure is wrong; it should be 60,000 odd.

> We might as well join the 42,000, as there is little to live for now.
>
> We know we are living in an awful troubled world, but the Bible tells us that the time will soon be here when the lion will eat with the lamb—instead of now—when the lion eats the lamb.

That is the B.C. power and hydro authority to which he is referring.

The Chairman: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member as his time has expired.

Mr. Herridge: I have just two or three sentences more and I am finished.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Herridge: I appreciate the courtesy of hon. members. This letter concludes:

> The present situation in our valley shows that water is getting more and more expensive and our farms less and less valuable.

I mention that because it is typical of the letters I have received from veterans; and I received another the other day from a veteran near Castlegar. It is obvious that people would not write in this vein unless they thought they were being treated unfairly and unjustly and I urge the department to do what they can to help these veterans.

There is one more matter before I conclude. There is a veterans cemetery in the area, with individual veterans graves. I trust that the department will do all it can to see that the rights and wishes of relatives are respected. I hope they will make an investigation to see what cemeteries will be affected and what individual graves in other cemeteries will be affected; and I hope the department will do all it can to ease the difficulties of the veterans who are affected by this development.

Mr. Patterson: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I want to say we appreciate the fact that the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs were referred to the committee for detailed study and analysis. I believe this gives an opportunity for a more thorough examination of the details of the estimates which are contained in the blue book. I was rather surprised at one or two references today to the absence of any extended remarks by the minister. It was my understanding that reference of estimates to a committee was not only to help expedite a thorough study of the estimates but also somehow to reduce the necessity of extended debate when they came back to the house; but perhaps my understanding is not quite true to the fact in this connection. However, I do not intend to prolong the debate on the estimates at this time, although I do want to make several brief references to a number of items of special concern which have been referred to me by constituents and others from time to time.

In the course of the committee hearings the Minister of Veterans Affairs indicated that amendments would be introduced to a variety of acts concerning veterans, and perhaps I was rather naïve but I expected him to come through with them in due course. However, this afternoon it was pointed out that we have not anything at all in this regard except the minister's says so. We have nothing definite or positive, so therefore we are somewhat held in suspense. As I pointed out on another occasion, I think we have to take the minister's words at face value, and we expect in the very near future to have him bring before this house the amendments he has predicted and promised concerning various acts having to do with veterans affairs.

Mr. Chairman, reference has been made this afternoon to the possibility and desirability of an increase in war veterans allowances, and I should like to give my full support to this request. It is not necessary to enlarge upon it or state once again the reasons for this request, but perhaps I should clarify the situation. There are two factors which ought to be taken into consideration. One is the constantly increasing cost of living, and the second is the upward revision of pensions that are being paid to Canadian citizens through other types of legislation. These two reasons alone would be sufficient to support an upward revision of war veterans allowances. Therefore when the minister does introduce amendments I trust one will deal with this matter.

Another matter in this same connection which has been brought to my attention on a number of occasions by veterans is the necessity for amendment relating to the service-related disability pensions. There is a strong feeling that these have been somewhat bypassed, and a number of veterans feel they had been completely left out in the cold. On their behalf I recommend that consideration be given to veterans who fall within this specific category.

Another request was made for an increase in the ceiling on permissive income. The hon. member for Kootenay West made reference to this particular matter. I do not think there can be any argument as far as this request is concerned, because we are all aware of the increased cost of living, and that with an increase in that cost there is a decrease in the purchasing value of our dollar. That is one of the reasons we have been advocating that, as far as personal income taxes are concerned, there should be an increase in the basic exemption. I believe that is absolutely necessary, and suggest the same principle applies to veterans. Veterans require more in order to maintain the standard of living which they have been used to. I was going to say the standard of living which they have enjoyed in the past, but perhaps I should not go that far. In drafting his legislation I would ask the minister to remember these veterans and bring in some definite recommendation or proposal in respect of an increase in the ceiling on permissive income of veterans.

There is just one other matter I should like to bring to the attention of this committee, although I was not very successful when I broached this subject during a meeting of the veterans affairs committee. I have reference to the quite general dissatisfaction in regard to decisions handed down by the pension commission. I was given to understand most of the personnel on the pension commission are veterans and are bending over backwards to accommodate veterans, to the extent of bending the regulations almost to the breaking point. There is considerable room for improvement in this particular respect.

Reference was made to the benefit of doubt clause, and perhaps that is one of the most important issues to be considered, because like many other members of parliament I have received communications and briefs outlining the positions in which many veterans find themselves. In view of the method by which appeals from decisions of this commission are considered one could hardly expect the decisions to be altered. Looking at these decisions from the point of view expressed in the many representations we have received we can only feel that in many cases far better treatment could have been accorded to those individuals who have applied for pension or who have asked for revisions of their pension benefits. In this connection I suggest the minister should give close and diligent attention to this aspect of veterans problems. As was pointed out during the meetings of the veterans affairs committee, the greatest number of complaints and gripes lodged by veterans relates to this aspect of their problems. That being the case, it would seem to me that there must be some justification for this attitude of dissatisfaction toward decisions rendered by the pension commission.

As I pointed out earlier, Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to prolong the debate on these estimates, but I did feel that I should bring these points to which I have referred to the attention of the minister, and to give my support to the various suggestions which have been raised and which will no doubt be raised by hon. members during the course of this debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: At this stage in the study of the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs, I would like to make a short remark concerning the difference which exists between the veterans, or the active army, and the servicemen who serve in this country in peacetime.

I must point out that the minister and the government pay special attention to veterans, and I realize that this is necessary. In my opinion, there is surely room for improvements, and I realize that the minister, with his understanding and good will, is giving consideration to those future improvements.

[Mr. Patterson.]

But if some of our men who were on active service, whether on the battlefield or not, have recognized rights, we should also think about those who serve in this country in peacetime.

When a soldier serves overseas for a period of one, two or five years, or even only one year or six months, he has some rights. One realizes that those who serve in peacetime for periods of five, eight and even 11 years, do not get the same attention.

I therefore ask the minister to give more attention to our soldiers serving in Canada in peacetime, so that when for some reason or other they leave the army, they will not suffer hardships and have to rely on social welfare to provide for their needs. This is the recommendation I wished to make to the minister at this stage.

[Text]

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to congratulate the minister upon his courtesy in always giving immediate attention to questions directed to him. I do not intend to prolong this debate for any length of time, but I do feel that I should express my hope that there will be no further encroachments on veterans hospitals across Canada. This is a day and age when we need more research centres. By and large, the veterans hospitals have proven to be great reservoirs for research.

It is almost 20 years now since the end of the last war, and it is obvious that most of the veterans of that war are over 40 years of age, although of course, there are some younger veterans of the Korean war. The illnesses and injuries these veterans suffered during combat, and for which they now require treatment, are becoming chronic and more disabling. It follows that the majority of cases will fall under the following headings: cardiovascular renal disease, chest cases, cancer, prosthetic cases or the effects of wounds and contusions suffered in battle.

Hospitals are established by the Department of Veterans Affairs for research purposes, the training of interns and as teaching centres in postgraduate work. All of the active treatment hospitals with which I am familiar are approved by the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada and this puts the stamp on them to indicate that they are number one, so far as the training of personnel is concerned. In that regard I am not only referring to doctors. We are going to be very short of doctors quite soon. In fact, doctors are in short supply right now but the need is going to increase over and over again. The same thing applies to personnel such as laboratory technicians, radiology technicians and so forth right down the line.

It is interesting to note that there are 270 doctors taking training in veterans hospitals across Canada and that there are over 157 interns in occupational therapy, physiotherapy, psychology and laboratory work. Another interesting fact is that there are some 90 research projects under way. If we are going to set up more medical schools across Canada, surely one of the things we must have is more trained personnel. We have to have more people who have done research work and have become professors because we are short now of such personnel.

A great many of the projects appeal to all of us because they are in the field of geriatrics, and there is not one of us in this house who is not getting older. In this field of course investigation is concerned with arteriosclerosis and why people develop it. This is in the news today because all one has to do is to visit the old people's homes and chronic invalid hospitals across Canada and he will see people being cared for there day after day at great expense to the taxpayers. I am trying to focus attention on the fact that if through research we can prevent the development of this disease we will have done a lot to relieve the burden that the taxpayer has to bear today, to say nothing of the suffering of the people involved, which is of course the greatest of all considerations.

Geriatrics also is concerned with the field of coronary disease and strokes. I am sure that all of us have friends or even members of our own families who have had a coronary attack or a small stroke. We see the mental ability of people who suffer strokes one after the other slipping away, unless something is done to keep the condition under control.

As I have said, our chronic hospitals are loaded with victims of these diseases. Surely the veterans hospitals are doing a worthwhile work from a dollars and cents point of view. This point is not emphasized enough. If the work they do can prevent a person suffering from a chronic disease having to be placed in an old persons home or chronic hospital where somebody has to look after him and where he becomes a complete and total liability, then they are certainly doing a great job in reducing the cost, to say nothing about restoring the happiness of the individual.

In cutting down the number of veterans hospitals are we leaving out of consideration the rights of the veterans, the promises made to them and our debt to them? After all, there would not be a Canada today if they had not gone overseas and fought for this country. I am going to be brief but I want to draw the attention of the minister to the question of the application of the benefit of the doubt provision. I recall the case of a man who was receiving $8 a month in war veterans allowance. He had been ill for years and was unable to work. His wife went out and worked and maintained the home. She had to have a car to operate her business and she brought somebody into the house to look after her husband when he needed care.

If my memory serves me correctly, this man was awarded a war veterans allowance of approximately $8 a month. In addition, his hospitalization was paid for as well as his doctor bills and his drugs. This man has been in and out of hospital four or five times over the years to my own knowledge. When he was well enough that he could go home he was sent home for his wife to look after him and she did so and got help when she needed it. She did a very good job. When he became acutely ill again from his cardiovascular renal disease he had to go back into the hospital and be given oxygen treatment. He was treated many times in this way but after four weeks or so in an acute illness hospital the hospital wanted to get rid of him, so he was sent home again. Not once was he put into an institution or home. His wife looked after him.

After this man had received the allowance of $8 a month for two or three years an investigator called and looked into their bank book and a lot of other things. I understand that the wife had not earned over $3,600 in any one year. However, the investigator went to the bank and looked into the matter. The last I heard about the case was that the lady was supposed to pay all the money back. This man is 70 years of age. Where in the name of common sense is there any milk of human kindness or decency in such an action? I bring this case to the attention of the committee as one with which I am familiar and about which I feel very sad, because what has been done is not right. This man is a veteran of the first world war and is now 70 years of age. Those are the facts as I understand them.

I recall the case of another man who is a veteran of the second great war. He was in the tank corps and was blown up a few times. He was an A-one risk and was in the army for five years. I knew his doctor very well and I asked him about this fellow. His doctor said he was a real hardy buck, just like the whole family. After spending five years overseas this man returned and tried several things but was a failure. Finally he became a patient of a certain doctor. Under any stress or strain this man breaks down. In other words, he was psychologically damaged.

This case was brought before the pension commission. The doctors gave their evidence and said that the man was pensionable. But what pension did they give him? Twenty per cent. With the great upsurge in education today, how in the name of conscience do they expect veterans who fought in the last great war to compete in a world where more and more education is needed and where it is harder and harder to get a job and keep it? This man is unemployable but he was only awarded a 20 per cent pension. This is not right, Mr. Chairman. I appeal to the minister to look into these cases and see to it that a little more of the milk of human kindness is shown. I know there are regulations, but for heaven's sake do not have the regulations completely loaded in favour of one side.

Then, I wanted to dwell for a moment on the problems facing the sons of deceased veterans. I understand they receive $500 per year if they are going to university. If they are going into medicine, which is a six year course, they receive this allowance for only four years. I should like to know if such a student could apply for a student loan under the new legislation and thus secure the extra $500 or $1,000 which may be needed.

In conclusion, I should like to say that I know the minister must be sympathetic to the veterans problems because he has been through the mill himself. Do not let us sit down and make a soldier who went over and fought for us subject to the balancing of a group of statistics, weighing this on one hand and that on the other. Do not let us treat him in that way. We know that the cost of living has gone up. The last time there was an increase in the pension was in 1961 under the previous government. Surely to goodness, when everyone else gets a salary increase or a pension increase, the veteran is entitled to one too. The members of this house have had their salaries increased. Why do we have to leave the veterans to the last? Probably the minister has been thinking about the things along this line that he should do, and for heaven's sake let us do them. Let us put the veteran back where he should be. We always seem to be late in looking after the fellow who went over to fight for us.

[Mr. Rynard.]

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a few moments to say something about the transfer of military hospitals to civilian authority. I support the previous speaker and say, with great respect, that I feel the minister should look very carefully into the question of the transfer of hospitals. The first question is, what is civilian authority? There is a presumption that there is some overriding authority in every city which controls the administration of hospitals. We know that in Toronto this is not so. Each hospital has its own administrative body. It is a well known fact that a doctor on the staff of one hospital cannot practise in another hospital. It is well known that some hospitals do not release patients on Saturday or Sunday. It is suspected also that some doctors keep their patients in hospital a little longer than necessary because of the system of allocating beds. In fact, the question comes up, how are beds allocated in hospitals? Is it on the basis of seniority in practice or seniority on the staff? Everyone knows that there has been trouble in the larger centres in connection with hospital beds and the shortage of beds. For that reason I feel this department should look into the matter carefully before transferring any veterans hospitals to these civilian authorities. The administrative control of hospitals should remain with the department.

Then you will also have to face the question of the doctors in the department being paid a salary. If you are going to have another group of doctors who are in business for themselves in these hospitals, you are going to have a conflict of interest. Who is going to be in control? The department should remain in control until there is some satisfactory conclusion of the problem of the shortage of hospital beds. We have discussed these questions in the committee and it is clear that the patients are becoming more and more of one type, either rheumatic or aged. This does not give enough challenge to the doctors. We agree with this. We agree with a lot of the problems that Dr. Crawford has put before us. We agree with him when he says he wants to maintain the highest standards in his treatment centres across Canada.

There is another avenue that perhaps the minister has not explored, and that is to allow veterans hospitals to be used by veterans and their families. Then the administration of these hospitals could still be maintained by the department. You could have all types of cases in these hospitals and it would also relieve the shortage of beds in other hospitals. Another advantage would be that mentioned by the previous speaker, the opportunity for research and for the development of new ideas in hospitalization. No one in Canada as yet has investigated the concept of hospitals that is quite common now in Switzerland, where they were faced with a shortage of nursing staff, too. With a slightly larger capital outlay, they have constructed duplicate rooms so that the relatives of some patients can live in and do a lot of the nursing chores, thus leaving the nurses free to perform medical chores. This practice has resulted in many people being drawn to the nursing profession. After all, we all admit that a lot of the chores nurses must do are not really medical chores. This is something which I believe the department could investigate in connection with veterans hospitals.

I should like to add this one word of caution to the minister: Do not transfer administrative control of veterans hospitals to the civilian authority, as you call it, until you are absolutely sure that the veterans will get first class treatment, without knowing a doctor or having had a doctor for a certain length of time, without qualification as to the size of his purse or any of these things. A veteran must have the best of treatment immediately. With that note of caution, I just want to say that I have received the greatest co-operation from this department and the minister. He should be proud. There has never been a question left unanswered or a problem left unattended to by this department.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to repeat many of the things that have been said here this afternoon, other than to endorse the idea that it is about time some attention was given to the pensions of veterans, and in particular the recipients of war veterans allowance. As has been said, people who are on a fixed income such as this are completely dependant on this government and this House of Commons to look after their present and future welfare. Certainly the time is long overdue, in the face of the rising cost of living and other circumstances, when some attention should be given to this matter.

I should like also to compliment the minister on the manner in which he deals with problems. Even when he says no, as he unfortunately has to do on different occasions, he does it in a very nice way. My purpose today is not to criticize this legislation in general but to draw attention to some of its inadequacies. I believe this legislation was passed by people of good will who believed at the time it would be adequate to look after the needs of our veterans. But as time went on we found that loopholes and inadequacies existed, and it is to these that I wish now to draw attention in the hope that action will be taken to correct the situation.

One of the matters which has come to my attention, and I am sure it has come to the attention of other members of this house, is the predicament in which veterans of the first world war who are now in their sixties find themselves. Maybe they have found gainful employment over the years and belonged to various medical plans, either those they have joined in the course of their employment or others which exist across the country. These men are now in their late sixties. When they give up whatever jobs they are engaged in they may lose their medical coverage and find it extremely difficult to get coverage under private plans. This is a situation which calls for attention, and I think the Department of Veterans Affairs should consider whether it would not be possible to make medical and hospital coverage available to these people through a scheme which would cover all veterans reaching an age at which they are denied coverage by the various private plans which exist in this country.

There is another matter which is of considerable concern to me because I believe that in addition to its unfairness to those involved it is a contradiction of common sense. Consider a recipient of war veterans allowance who does have medical and hospital coverage himself. If he is a married veteran and if he wishes to get coverage for his spouse he finds that in order to do so he has to insure himself as well as his spouse. I feel this is unfair because the Department of Veterans Affairs is already providing medical coverage for the veteran himself. Yet he has to pay a premium for double coverage despite the fact that he, like many other veterans, may be in straitened financial circumstances. I do not think this makes sense. I think it is a situation which should be straightened out. I believe that having regard to the small extra cost which would be involved, coverage should be provided for the spouses of all recipients of war veterans allowance.

This leads me to another problem and it is a much more complicated one. It has to do with recipients of war veterans allowance who still have dependant children. I fully realize that this allowance was originally intended for elderly veterans. But as I have mentioned we find these loopholes occurring from time to time. In recent years we have found that younger veterans, some of them considerably below the age of 60, may through some chain of circumstances, illness or accident, become completely unable to provide for their own living, and the existing legislation has been stretched so as to include these cases under the war veterans allowance provisions. However, no provision can be made for their children and their dependants. I believe something should be done in this connection.

I should like to illustrate this contention by drawing attention to one case which really highlights the loophole which exists in the legislation. I believe the minister is familiar with this case; part of these 61 letters which have accumulated in this file over the last 15 months are letters to his department. I should like to show the committee just what can happen to a veteran and his family under the present legislation. This has to do with a veteran who is only 42 years of age. This man is completely crippled, unable even to walk around, let alone provide any sort of living for himself and his family. As a result of various representations we have been able to establish a partial war veterans allowance which now amounts to $99 a month. In addition I was able to establish through the Ontario department of welfare a partial dependant fathers allowance. But I should like to draw attention to the ordeal through which this particular family has gone in the last 15 months. Aside from the war veterans allowance which has, thank goodness, been stable throughout these months, this is exactly what the family has received; I have the correspondence here to show the amounts to which the provincial department ruled these people were eligible. In September, 1963, they were entitled to $145.20; in October, $145.45; in November, $96.70; in December $45.95; in January $47.20; in February, March and April, $30.25; in May, $9.25; in June, $39.05; in July and August, $54.70, and now, $78.70. It is a miracle to me not only how this family can keep body and soul together but how they can keep their sanity.

[Mr. Martin (Timmins).]

Mr. Teillet: Just to make sure I have this straight—the hon. member is not now speaking of the war veterans allowance?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): That is correct.

Mr. Teillet: The variations in these amounts are not variations in W.V.A.?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): No, the minister is correct. I mentioned earlier that the war veterans allowance of $99 a month has remained stable throughout this period. But I am illustrating the ordeal which veterans and their families are going through under the existing legislation as it applies across the country in cases where they have to turn to two or three different sources in order to try to eke out a minimum standard of living. This is an actual case.

Moreover, some time last June I was able to get the department to reassess this case and the department came to the conclusion that there was a back payment due of $124.20, which they said would be forwarded to the family by the end of June. Well, that cheque arrived less than two weeks ago. In other words, this family was kept dangling on the end of a string for five months waiting for a cheque to come. How can these people budget, how can they have any peace of mind in circumstances such as this? This is why I say that while the veterans legislation in the main is good there are a number of loopholes in the various acts, and these loopholes must be plugged up.

There is one other point I should like to raise in the course of my brief remarks today. It has to do with veterans—possibly only a small number of them—who during their service, particularly overseas, came in contact with certain contagious diseases. I think the contraction of these diseases should be regarded rather as an accident; the attitude taken now is to regard them almost in the same way as a self-inflicted wound. I think that especially where families are involved, where children and dependants are involved —certainly no blame can be laid on a spouse or on the children—something should be done, and the department should take a new look at the way in which these particular problems are handled.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, my criticism is not of the legislation in general but rather of the particular things that crop up from time to time. I am sure every other hon. member is familiar with them, because I do not think the mail on these problems is confined to my office.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up much of the time of the committee because I realize these estimates have been carefully examined by the standing committee on veterans affairs. However, I would like to make one plea to the minister, and I do not want him or anyone else to get the impression that if I limit my remarks to this one topic I do not agree with some of the views that have been expressed by other members of the committee with regard to the need for reviewing and increasing the scales of pensions and war veterans allowance.

I would like to make a special plea with regard to a special, small group of veterans. I refer to the survivors of the expedition to Hong Kong in 1941. I think everyone would agree that these men are in a special category. After all, they spent almost four years in prisoner of war camp, where they suffered from malnutrition, and so on. The minister is familiar with the excellent submission of the Hong Kong veterans association made to the veterans affairs committee and I would commend that strongly to him for a further review.

I am aware of the fact that the pension commission is engaged in a survey to determine exactly what the data is with regard to the health, life expectancy, and so on, of this special group of veterans. However, Mr. Chairman, this is a fairly long process and I would urge the minister to give immediate consideration to means of doing something for these veterans to recompense them in some degree for the special suffering they endured. They were in a special category, and still are I believe, because during their time in prisoner of war camp they suffered from malnutrition to an extent not experienced by other veterans. As a result of this, and for other reasons, they contracted diseases which are not even well known in this part of the world, in addition to a great many diseases like beriberi and pellagra, which stem directly from malnutrition. They were undernourished, badly housed, and constantly ill. Nevertheless, during their imprisonment they worked most of the time at hard types of labour such as in the coal mines, shipyards, and so on. In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, this has inevitably left not only physical damage with these veterans, but perhaps more importantly, physchological damage.

I would recommend to the minister that in the case of Hong Kong veterans he should consider giving them entitlement to free treatment for any illness for the rest of their lives. In many cases these men have an anxiety neurosis, if I use the correct technical term; they are worried about their life expectancy, their constant illness, and so on, which makes it difficult for them to retain a job or leaves them with a fear that they will not succeed in staying in their job for a reasonable period of time.

I believe consideration should also be given to the possibility, in the case of Hong Kong veterans who are receiving veterans disability pension, of providing that their entitlement to pension should not be less than 50 per cent. This would compensate for the general deterioration in their health and I believe it would have a tremendously useful psychological effect, because they would then know their widows would not be left without recourse to assistance if they died prematurely. I commend these matters to the minister's attention.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, first of all I would like to say a word or two of appreciation for the devoted and dedicated men throughout the department who have served the veterans between the wars and since. I do not think any government department is to be so highly commended for the way they have looked after the returned soldiers generally. However, times change, and those things that were done for the soldiers 20 years ago are now out of date. I want to touch on just two things. One is the need for a complete review of the situation with regard to veterans pensions. In my opinion section 70 of the act, which in general is a very generous act as we all know, has not been taken by the pension boards in the spirit in which it was passed by this parliament. I might remind the committee that section 70 provides that the benefit of doubt should be given to the veteran in all cases.

I know, from having sat on the committee myself and from having received complaints from veterans generally, that this is their main objection; the veteran feels that before he can make a case for his pension he is obliged to prove, usually with documents, that he did in fact suffer such and such harm to his health, which is attributable to war service. Of course, Mr. Chairman, in a great many cases it is impossible to prove this. Although records were kept while we were in Canada and in England, and often on the battlefield, in a great many cases the records are far from complete, and in some cases the most deserving veterans are left without any documents whatsoever with which to prove their case. Then they are obliged, generally, to go through a series of long correspondence with their old pals in order to find out who was their doctor, their old buddies in the line, and so on, and by verbal evidence of one form and another establish a case. Even then I am afraid that in some cases they are not given the benefit of the doubt. This is a difficult problem, but I am sure that we as legislators intended that when the veteran has a case which can be believed one way or the other, in simple terms he is to be given the benefit of the doubt. Efforts were made to put through a private bill, Bill No. C-7, but it has not been put through. It purported anyway, to remove the onus from the veteran, and to put into the statute books a clear ruling so the veteran would in all cases be given the benefit of the doubt.

The general cost of living is constantly going up—I know I am being repetitive, but I do not think it can be repeated too often until definite action is taken in this regard—and the circumstances in which we all earn our living in this modern age have changed. At one time, I suppose, say 30 years ago, if a man had today's veterans pension he would have been well off. However, today he is expected to live on it, pay the average rent paid in Canada and support himself alone; and we must all admit that the average pension does not do that in any style at all. Add to that the fact that, although we do not always like to admit it in our affluent society, a large percentage of our women are working, and if a veteran is completely disabled it means that his wife would have to stay at home. Therefore she is cut off from supplementary earnings to assist the modern family. Let us be realistic and realize that a single pension today, or even a married pension, is not adequate to support a home in the way intended.

The next point I want to make concerns the Hong Kong veterans. It is argued that the Hong Kong veterans should be treated exactly the same as anybody else. That is what people have said; but I personally have known some of these veterans over the past 20 years, and although I am not a doctor I would say without hesitation that the greater percentage of these boys have had their physical ability—and I stress physical ability because it is that on which all pensions are based —to earn their living in a pioneer country like Canada in most cases, I would say, reduced by at least 50 per cent. If there is nothing specifically wrong with them, such as having had a broken arm or having lost their eyesight, something which can be definitely assessed, it is very difficult to say how much pension they should get. This group have asked in their brief for a 50 per cent pension for every veteran taken prisoner in Hong Kong. I would not go so far as to say that every man who served in Hong Kong has had his physical capacity to earn his living reduced, but this is certainly one case where section 70 should be applied.

Let us say a Hong Kong veteran complains of continuous fatigue. In this case his employer could be interviewed and if his employer said that he was one of the most willing men on the staff, but that he was just not capable of pushing a wheelbarrow, that he must be found a softer job because he could no longer earn his living with his hands, then we should apply the principle on which pensions are paid. If the Hong Kong veteran is incapable of earning his living with his hands, as a farm labourer or even pushing a wheelbarrow, then the principle we have always followed is that if he is 50 per cent reduced in this ability he receives a 50 per cent disability pension. Whether or not he has a leg off, if you reasonably believe that the reason he is only 50 per cent capable of earning his living with his hands is a result of serving for four years in a prisoner of war camp in Hong Kong, then that is a legitimate war disability and I for one say he is entitled to our deepest consideration.

Dr. Crawford has done signal service in providing medical services to veterans under D.V.A. Largely of his own volition and in his own time he has made a detailed study of this whole question. I have discussed the matter thoroughly with Dr. Crawford and found him to be a very fine man in his attitude to these people. Not only has he made a study of this question but he himself suffered as a prisoner of war and knows the physical hardships which these men went through from his own personal experiences. He is a giant of a man, but neither he nor anybody else would expect the average soldier to be able to rehabilitate himself and fit into society after the war in spite of the terrible experiences these men went through.

I would say that Dr. Crawford has made perhaps the most outstanding contribution to our information on this subject, but I believe he could do more if he was given more funds and had more help. Either he or some younger doctor could do a great deal more and look into these rather strange symptoms exhibited by a man who has been nearly starved to death or perhaps temporarily

The Hong Kong veterans as a group have no funds available to make such a study or they would be pleased to do so, I am sure. They also have no advocate to pursue the matter for them.

If I as an individual were fighting a pension case I could appeal it and have an advocate assist me with my case. These advocates are usually very experienced in the law, particularly in this type of subject. But to my knowledge, the Hong Kong veterans have no way of getting the services of an advocate to take their case and to make sure that they as a group will get proper consideration. This is rather unique. For example, if I had lost a leg I would have had no difficulty in getting my case attended to. But this group is rather unique in the experiences and problems they have. I suggest they have an across the board problem inasmuch as their physical ability to earn their living with their hands has been reduced as a result of four years of near starvation.

I would suggest to the minister, and through him to his department, that he might take into consideration the appointment of a member of the legal profession or a member of the justice department to make representations on behalf of these men to medical societies, and so on, so as to find out what has been done in this type of case. This sort of evidence is available. The French have made quite an extensive study of the problem of tropical diseases connected with malnutrition and its side effects. The United States has not done as much as one might expect in view of the fact that they had hundreds of thousands of men who served in the Pacific. Nevertheless they have done something, and I suggest that this small minority group—perhaps only 1,200 men are involved—is certainly worthy of our greatest consideration. I should not like to think that the matter of spending a few thousand dollars to make a proper survey would stand in the way. This survey should be made quickly; it is no good bringing in a report 15 years from now. These boys have been out of the prison camps now for 20 years and old age and their physical disabilities are coming upon them. I should like to see immediate attention paid to this question, and if a proper study were carried out and a competent legal officer were to tie things up for them, a recommendation acceptable not only to the department but to the house as a whole could soon be brought down.

Mr. Groos: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief because I do not wish to delay the passage of these estimates, which have all been thoroughly investigated previously both by hon. members in the committee today as well as when they came before the veterans affairs committee. However, I should like to lend my support to some of the remarks which have been made by the hon. member for Timmins, particularly in respect to granting extra allowances with respect to children of recipients of war veterans allowance. The hon. member made a very good point there and I should like to support it. I also wish to support generally the idea which has been expressed in this house many times today, as well as in the veterans affairs committee, namely that there be a general increase in war veterans allowances. The reasons for this are too well known to require any elaboration here. The increase in the cost of living would justify this support to the hilt.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say that I also have a personal interest in the Hong Kong veterans group. You will recall that I introduced a private member's notice of motion in this house earlier in the year. I have been very gratified indeed with the sympathetic reaction this has aroused in the house and across the country. I intended to bring this point to the attention of the minister, and although the speaker immediately preceding me made reference to it, I should like to reiterate it for emphasis. I urge the minister, in respect of the investigation now taking place by the Canadian pension commission in relation to certain Hong Kong veterans, that it be completed at the earliest possible date, and that some time limit be fixed within which a report shall be presented.

Mr. Chairman, I shall close my remarks with those few words. Thank you.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the veterans affairs committee of the house, but I have given some attention to the proceedings of that committee in consideration of the estimates of the minister's department. I was interested to note that at the outset of those proceedings the minister informed my colleague, the hon. member for Kootenay West, that he was glad he would not have to discuss the Columbia river treaty. I notice today that he may be having some difficulty in avoiding that subject matter altogether.

In looking at the proceedings of that committee, and in listening to the discussion that has taken place this afternoon, it seems quite obvious that the main focus of interest of

hon. members of this house at the present time is perhaps more in relation to changes in the legislation, which the minister indicated to the committee he intended to bring forward at an early date, than in relation to some of the questions of administration within his department. Certainly my main purpose in rising in my place today is to indicate my own feeling that that is the most urgent question which lies before us as members of the house.

Mr. Chairman, I have noticed a considerable change in the general attitude of the membership of this house in consideration of veterans affairs questions, even during the comparatively short time I have been a member of parliament. As other members have indicated today, I think there is a general recognition on the part of all of us that the members who initiated what is commonly referred to as the veterans charter did lay some sound foundations in the field of veterans legislation. What we are really seeking is not a basic change in much of that legislation, but rather the kind of improvement which will meet the situation existing today.

Other members have made reference to the fact, as did the minister, that generally speaking, because of the inevitable passage of time, the veterans of Canada as a group today are of an older age group than when the veterans charter was established, and for that reason I think it is perhaps fair to say that the emphasis of our interest is turning more toward questions of pension arrangements, whether disability or war allowances, than toward those matters which were of great concern to the members of this house shortly after the end of the second world war, involving immediate questions of rehabilitation, educational opportunities, the setting up of the Veterans Land Act, and things of that sort.

When the minister appeared before the veterans affairs committee he was optimistic, as ministers very often are, that the proposals he is going to bring forward will meet with the general approval of this house. I hope that will be the case. Other members have mentioned some of the things they hope this legislation will accomplish in the way of increases in war veterans allowances and other pension payments. Before the minister introduces this legislation I suggest that he consider what needs to be accomplished in the light of at least two facts. The first is the fact that the government, of which he is a member, is proposing to introduce a Canada pension plan which, under the terms as presently proposed, will not really become fully operative for a period of ten years from the time of its passage. The second fact is one to which I have already referred, that the age group to which veterans belong generally is getting older. In other words a great many of the veterans in Canada will not really benefit as a result of a Canada pension plan. It seems to me that the steps taken in relation to war veterans allowances and veterans disability pension arrangements should be taken with that fact in mind.

Involved with that question is the other question, which has been referred to by a number of members this afternoon, relating to the benefit of doubt clause—that is to say, whether certain disabilities requiring pension arrangements are wholly or partially attributable directly to war service.

The second point I should like to bring to the minister's attention arises out of a proposal contained in the Canada pension plan, and to which consideration should be given. That is the idea of incorporating into pension arrangements for veterans one of the key principles of the proposed Canada pension plan. I refer to the arrangement whereby the pension plan is to be geared to the cost of living index or the general level of earnings index. During the first few years I was a member of this house, any member who proposed that a pension plan should be geared to that principle was labelled as an economic screwball. I remember that very vividly. Nevertheless as I have pointed out on more than one occasion, the government of Canada is actually taking some steps to incorporate that principle into the Canada pension plan. Certainly if any group in Canada should receive the benefits of the application of that principle to a pension plan, it is the veterans group of this country.

I believe revision should be made to war veterans allowances arrangements and to pensions for veterans, so that all veterans who may have requirements because of disabilities, but who, because of their age group, will not benefit from the introduction of the Canada pension plan, will be eligible for suitable pension arrangements. I hope that will result from the changes the minister has indicated he is going to propose.

The member for Simcoe East made reference to recognition of the need for the milk of human kindness. As a result of my experience in dealing with individuals in the minister's department who look after the administration of veterans affairs, I am of the opinion that while there may be some minor incidents which would indicate a certain lack of the milk of human kindness, basically the the question relating to the milk of human kindness is one which the members of this house must consider in relation to legislation. It is fair to say that 99.9 per cent of the problems I have encountered in respect of individual veterans situations arise really, not from administration, but from the kind of legislation we in this house have said these people must administer, and the regulations that have flowed from that legislation.

I suggest it is very much the responsibility of the government and members of the house to take the necessary steps to remedy situations of the kind that have been mentioned by my colleague from Timmins and other members of the house this afternoon. I could also give similar examples if I wished to take the time. I certainly wish the minister well in his endeavours to bring about the early introduction of the proposed legislative changes and I hope they will live up to the anticipations many of us have with regard to improvements in the situation of the veterans.

Mr. Fane: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased today to have the opportunity to say a few words on the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs. It is not my usual custom to congratulate the minister on his work because I feel it is not good to embarrass a minister in such a way. However, there are two points on which I will congratulate him. First, he has been appointed to a department which has always been staffed by dedicated men and women who give everything they possibly can to the cause of the veterans, and who do so willingly and without stint. He has also been appointed to a department with regard to which there is very seldom any real controversy or trouble in getting the estimates passed. Some of us at times may wish to say things that are aimed at being helpful to the department in the administration of veterans affairs, and this may take a little longer in discussing the minister's estimates than the minister might wish.

In making my remarks I know I am reiterating and repeating things that have been said by other members but I feel I should do so. I also want to point out to the committee that any changes in the acts found in the veterans charter are not the responsibility of the people who administer those acts but are the responsibility of the government of the moment and of parliament. Therefore any changes that must be made are our responsibility. Any suggestions I may make will be made in that light.

I feel that the minister must take the advice contained in the recommendations of the standing committee on veterans affairs. Those recommendations are made by a committee composed of a goodly number of members of all parties in the house, and naturally they are made with the idea of helping those veterans who were not so fortunate as some of us who came back from the wars more or less in one piece.

In making my remarks I want to support particularly what the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke, the hon. member for Simcoe East and the other hon. members have said. I also want to remind the minister that all changes in veterans legislation should and must be discussed with the veterans organizations first before they are put into effect.

There are some special matters I should like to bring to the attention of the minister, the first being an increase in veterans pensions and war veterans allowances. In this day and age the recipients of war veterans allowances are not getting assistance adequate enough for them to live decently. The cost of living has increased and that situation affects veterans as well as all others. Most veterans have some other means of livelihood, but those who have nothing more than their pensions are entirely dependant on what they receive in this way, and their pensions should be increased whenever the cost of living rises or perhaps whenever civil servants are given a raise in pay. I know that would be fairly frequently, but what group of people is more deserving of having their means of livelihood increased than those veterans who were not so fortunate as most of us who were in the services?

Adequate veterans legislation is approved by practically everybody in Canada. There are between two and three million people who have a direct interest in veterans legislation and they are the greatest exponents of proper assistance. With regard to veterans pensions and war veterans allowance awards a great deal has been said about the benefit of the doubt. I realize quite well that the pension commission, the war veterans allowance board and the other boards concerned fulfil adequately on most occasions the spirit of the benefit of the doubt clause in veterans legislation. However, there are cases where it does seem that somebody has slipped up with regard to the benefit of the doubt clause, and it would appear to one on the outside that a little more consideration could have been given in some cases. Personally I have not brought too many cases to the attention of the Department of Veterans Affairs in which the benefit of the doubt clause has not been given full consideration. In fact, Mr. Chairman, the Department of Veterans Affairs is very good and, on the whole, I am satisfied with the treatment I have received on behalf of my veterans.

There is something, though, about veterans pensions which I feel should be given greater consideration. As I understand it, if a veteran receives less than a 50 per cent pension there is no continuing pension to the wife should the veteran die. I feel that more consideration should be given to the provision of assistance to the surviving partner in cases where veterans have been receiving less than a 50 per cent pension.

In so far as the war veterans allowance is concerned, I said that in many cases the amount authorized does not seem to be adequate to meet the needs of the veteran concerned. I believe it should be increased. I know there is a movement afoot in places suggesting that there be no means test in connection with war veterans allowance when an applicant is over 65 years of age. I make no recommendation in that respect, except that I would suggest to the minister he pay some attention to investigating the claims of people in this category.

The Veterans Land Act seems to be exceedingly well administered, and there is very little difficulty now with that. I am pleased to note that the Veterans Land Act is again operating as a unit and not as part of the Farm Credit Corporation.

I now come to my few remarks about veterans who were prisoners of war in the east, commonly referred to as the Hong Kong veterans. I know that the director of medical services is looking after these people. I know that he is torn by his loyalty to his fellow prisoners of war from Hong Kong, and I know that he has done everything possible to help them. However, there is a feeling amongst a great many of the Hong Kong prisoners of war that they are getting something less than they deserve. There is a feeling that they should be set aside as a special class, because of the extra privations that they were forced to undergo. I was fortunate. I was not a prisoner of war anywhere, so I do not really know exactly what the difficulties were. However, I do know these men went through great hardship, and the majority of them feel that they were subjected to more severe treatment than prisoners in other theatres of war. I ask the minister therefore to do everything possible to see that these men get whatever consideration they deserve, over and above the consideration which the rest of the veterans receive. I have conferred with many of them and the complaints are the same throughout. They feel their treatment was much worse than that received by prisoners in other countries.

This item was discussed at length in the veterans affairs committee and a recommendation was made by that committee to the effect the veterans of Hong Kong should have their cases investigated.

The last time I spoke on the matter of veterans hospitals and the turning over of these hospitals to civilian control, I said that I thought until adequate facilities for domiciliary care could be provided there should be no question of turning over veterans hospitals to civilian organizations. I still feel this way. As I said, I believe the veterans receive more consideration in hospitals operated by the Department of Veterans Affairs than they would receive in hospitals operated by other organizations. I feel that until adequate care can be assured for the aging veterans who are not surgical cases, the hospitals must be retained within the control of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the acting house leader about the order of business for tomorrow and Friday. Will it be the estimates as already outlined?

Mr. MacNaught: Tomorrow we will continue with the discussion of the main estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs. Then, we will take up the balance of the estimates of the Department of Industry, namely defence production, atomic energy and national research council; then, citizenship and immigration, trade and commerce and public works, the last two or three not necessarily in that order because it would depend upon the availability of ministers when the estimates are to be called.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 22, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PRITTIE—INCOMPLETE ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, this question of privilege concerns question No. 2,084 which I submitted and which was answered yesterday. The question is in two parts and reads as follows:

1. What was the total amount of the budgets of the Department of National Defence for the fiscal years 1949-50 to 1963-64 inclusive?
2. What was the total amount of actual expenditures by the Department of National Defence for the fiscal years 1949-50 to 1963-64 inclusive?

In replying to the question the Department of National Defence gave the information for the fiscal year 1963-64 but noted that the other information was contained in the public accounts.

I am well aware, Mr. Speaker, that the information is in the public accounts, but I asked the question because I wanted it to be a matter of public record. I checked Hansard and found numerous examples of questions which have been answered with information which is contained in the public accounts, or in departmental reports, or in the Canada Year Book.

Let me quote just two examples. First of all there is question 1,835 which was answered on September 14, as appears at page 7952 of Hansard. This concerns hospital grants paid to the provinces for the past five years. The information is in the public accounts, but the question was answered. Question 1,793 was answered on September 9 and appears at pages 7776 and 7777 of Hansard. It concerns expenditures on historical sites in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. This information is also in the public accounts, but the question was answered by the department.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is an established practice, and that the ministry should be consistent in this matter.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in connection with representations which Her Majesty's loyal opposition thinks deserve attention, namely the request from the civil service federation of Canada to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance asking for higher pensions for superannuated employees of the federal government because of the reduction in the purchasing power of fixed incomes, and in view of what is described as the ever increasing cost of living. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether attention will be given to this very proper request.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have received representations from the organization in question. With the Minister of Finance I am receiving a delegation next week, at which time those representations will be considered with them.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. If when the government considers the representations from the civil service federation on behalf of retired civil servants it looks favourably upon those representations, will legislation regarding this matter be introduced at this session?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think we better receive the representations and have a discussion with the representatives of the organization in question before I answer that question in the house.

BROADCASTING

STUDY OF EUROPEAN SYSTEMS BY ADVISORY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State, and relates to the Fowler commission and its announced study tour in Europe. Will the commission be including Germany in its itinerary as it studies the various broadcasting systems in Europe?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not too sure about that, but I will make inquiries and give the hon. member an answer at a later date.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REPORT ON POLICE ACTIVITIES DURING ROYAL VISIT TO QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice.

Could he tell us whether he asked members of the R.C.M.P. who were in Quebec city on Saturday, October 10 last, to report on the events which took place that day, and more especially on the behaviour of members of the local police force?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question which enables me to correct a mistake in this morning's issue of Le Devoir concerning a reply I made.

Yesterday, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), referring to a question he asked me last Friday, requested that I give this house certain information concerning what occurred in the city of Quebec during the visit of Her Majesty.

The daily Le Devoir, in this morning's edition, seemed to think that the matter dealt with the reading, or the reception, by myself, of the report of the solicitor general of the province of Quebec, Mr. Wagner. I was not referring to Mr. Wagner's report, the text of which, as printed in Le Devoir, I already had in my files, but to the report I was expecting from the R.C.M.P. I received that report at noon today, and I will be in a position to make a statement to the house on this matter tomorrow; however, I do not think it is in order for me to comment, especially in this house, on the behaviour of the provincial or of he municipal police, because the attorney general of the province of Quebec is the only one who has jurisdiction to pass official judgment or take action in this matter.

As far as I am concerned I shall limit my report to the activities of the R.C.M.P., over which the federal government has jurisdiction.

Mr. Grégoire: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

I am not asking the Minister of Justice to make a decision concerning the behaviour of the municipal police of the city of Quebec, but could he give us at least a report from the R.C.M.P. concerning the activities or the behaviour of the Quebec municipal police on that day?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, of course from now until this report is communicated, I must decide how far I can go along this line, but I shall endeavour to do so to the extent that my duties and the limitations of my jurisdiction allow.

[Text]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it not a fact that under no circumstances should the mounted police be placed in a position of becoming a kind of court of appeal against the actions of other police forces? To put the mounted police in that position would be very detrimental to that great force.

Mr. Favreau: I fully agree, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the hon. Minister of Justice a supplementary question.

Can he tell us if the R.C.M.P. was in charge of all security measures during the royal visit in Quebec city?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, the delimitation and allotment of the various fields of responsibility will specifically constitute one of the aspects I shall deal with in the statement I intend to make before the house tomorrow.

[Text]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST OF TRUCKING INDUSTRY FOR EXCLUSION FROM PROPOSED LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour, but in his absence I will address it to the Prime Minister who will probably want to take it as notice. In view of the representations that have been made to the government by the interprovincial trucking industry requesting that they be excluded from the application of Bill No. C-126, can the Prime Minister tell us whether any decision has been made in this regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, their representations are being given very careful consideration.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister be able to give the same assurance he has just given to my colleague vis-à-vis the managers and operators of country elevators in western Canada?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to give that assurance too.

POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE—CONSIDERATION OF SENIORITY AND VETERANS PREFERENCE IN LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Does the trade testing of qualified employees at the Point Edward naval base, and the proposed lay-off of tradesmen without right to seniority or veterans preference, represent government policy?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): I shall take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, the question I have asked is not of the type the minister can answer by saying he will take it as notice. If he chooses not to answer, that is one thing; but for him to say he takes such a question as notice is ridiculous on his part.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to the one I asked previously. I direct it now to the Prime Minister. I would ask the Prime Minister whether he no longer considers the veterans preference and prior agreements made by labour-management as part of government policy. I put special emphasis on the veterans preference as policy.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the veterans preferences as laid down in the regulations will certainly be observed by this government.

Mr. MacInnis: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Now that the Prime Minister has assured the house that the veterans preference will remain as such, would he take the trouble to inform both ministers of national defence?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): It is not being observed now.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—SUGGESTED DELAY IN ORGANIZATION OF MULTILATERAL NUCLEAR FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to whom I sent notice, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of reports from Washington that virtually no NATO country, with the sole exception of West Germany, wants any part in the multilateral nuclear force, and in view of the present international situation, would the government of Canada give consideration to urging the United States to delay consummation of this United States-German nuclear venture until further opportunity is provided for consultation with the new leaders of government?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be the course of wisdom for this government to intervene in a matter of this kind involving consultations between the United Kingdom and the United States governments which will be taking place when the new British secretary of state for foreign affairs arrives in Washington next week.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO INCREASE TRADE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): My question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and is based on answers given to me this week by the right hon. Prime Minister on commonwealth trade. In the light of Prime Minister Wilson's proposals, and those of our own Prime Minister in 1962 in North Battleford and Edmonton on the question of commonwealth trade, has the Canadian government prepared any specific proposals—I underline the word "specific"—and does it intend to take any special initiative in regard to commonwealth trade? Can the minister give us any information at this particular time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): As the Prime Minister has said, we would be very happy to discuss with the new government matters of commonwealth trade. We are interested in the promotion of commonwealth trade, and we believe also that the promotion of world trade in general will help the commonwealth. I expect that we shall be receiving some proposals from the new government, and these we shall look at most sympathetically.

Mr. Grafftey: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that Prime Minister Wilson's views with regard to this subject have been known for quite some time, may I ask if the department has at this time prepared any specific proposals relating to commonwealth trade?

Mr. Sharp: I should think that since the new Prime Minister of Britain has expressed these views publicly, he will probably be taking some initiative. I would hope and expect that we shall treat the initiative of the British government on this occasion a good deal more sympathetically than it was treated by the government of which he was a supporter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The usual cheap remarks from the minister; cheap and false.

TRADE

WHEAT—NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING FURTHER SALES TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce? In view of the minister's recent statement in Nova Scotia last week, and in view of the rumours that are now current about delays in negotiations with the Russians vis-à-vis wheat particularly, has the minister considered, as one type of initiative he might take, a quick visit to Moscow to establish contact with the new administration and get negotiations back on the rails?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am flattered by the suggestion that I might be able to help relations between the Soviet union and Canada by taking a quick visit to Moscow. I can assure the hon. gentleman there has been no delay in any negotiations between the Soviet union and Canada, which are proceeding as I expected they would. They will take their course until the Soviet union decides how much wheat they would like to buy. We are in constant communication with them urging them to buy Canadian wheat to the extent that they need it.

[Later:]

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, in view of the assurance by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that discussions are continuing between Canada and Russia I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister inform the house if it is true that two eminent Canadians, Mr. Dalton Camp and Mr. Keith Davey, have flown to Moscow to find out how it is done?

EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY—STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT DE GAULLE RESPECTING AGRICULTURAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether his attention has been drawn to the statement made by President de Gaulle yesterday that unless there is a reconciliation of agricultural policy France may withdraw from the European economic community. There is also the fact that there is no further point in negotiations in the so-called Kennedy round until these problems are resolved. I would like to ask the minister whether these trade negotiations are continuing and whether the representatives in the negotiations are addressing themselves specifically to this question of trade in agricultural commodities.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Just today I read dispatches from Geneva dealing with the news item that appeared in the newspapers and to which my hon. friend has referred. The continuing difficulties in trying to work out a common agricultural policy for the European economic community is one of the most serious difficulties standing in the way of the opening of the so-called Kennedy round. The United States, supported by Canada, has said on a number of occasions that we believe the negotiations should relate not only to industrial goods but to agricultural products. The United States, in negotiations with the European economic community, has not yet been able to agree with them upon a suitable method of negotiation.

However, the discussions are continuing. I think all those concerned—and I believe this includes all the participating governments without exception—would like to see a successful round of trade negotiations. Therefore I am hopeful, although of course not confident, that a method will be found of negotiating with regard to agricultural products that will enable the negotiations to proceed.

QUEBEC—PROPOSED STEPS TO CURTAIL MOVEMENT OF GOODS IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the minister's recent statement in Winnipeg, repeated in Halifax last week end, that regional economic barriers should be avoided in Canada, has the minister made any representations to the government of the province of Quebec with regard to sanctions against the free movement of goods within Canada such as are implied in some of its policies?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I should like to ask a supplementary question. I thank the hon. minister for his reply, but in view of his remarks to which I have referred is it his intention to make any representations to that government in this respect?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I made these remarks publicly on a number of occasions. I am quite sure the ministers of all governments in Canada are aware of them, and I do hope they will take them to heart.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—FEDERAL PERMISSION TO CONDUCT RAINMAKING OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. This question arises from newspaper reports published in La Terre de Chez-Nous and La Frontière de Rouyn concerning tests made with a view to producing rain artificially.

Here is my question. Has the government granted a permit to the Weather Engineering Corporation of Canada to produce showers artificially in northwestern Quebec or in the Saguenay region?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Surely this is a question for the order paper if there ever was one.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, in a little while I shall put down this question for debate at the earliest opportunity.

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I was really going to say I had heard nothing about this matter, but I would look into it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The question asked by the hon. member for Chapleau probably sounds strange to a resident of Montreal, but I do know that clouds are sown over our area and, as a result, there have been so many days of rain in the Saguenay region that crops have completely failed and a large number of farmers have seen their year's work wasted.

That rainmaking has brought about a farm crisis in those areas. As far as our region is concerned, therefore, this is a most important matter.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think sufficient publicity has been given to the question by now.

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I will direct my question to the Minister of Forestry.

Could he tell us the results of the negotiations and discussions which took place yesterday between the officials of his department and U.C.C. officials?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the Minister of Agriculture had a meeting yesterday with U.C.C. officials.

Mr. Grégoire: It is time you knew.

[Text]

RAPESEED—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a question asked on October 19 by the hon. member for Rosthern about quotas in respect of rapeseed.

I have been advised by the Canadian wheat board that the quota for rapeseed, which currently is five bushels per seeded acre, is determined largely by market requirements. At the present time stocks are more than ample.

The rapeseed situation is under continuous review by the board, and indications are that the quota can be increased in the near future.

EDUCATION

LOANS TO STUDENTS ATTENDING INSTITUTIONS IN OTHER PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is he aware that, contrary to the intent of the student loans act as indicated by the minister when introducing Bill No. C-110, many needy students attending educational institutions outside their home provinces find it impossible to obtain loans simply because of the differing policies of the provinces involved?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would not like to make any comment on the adequacy of the administration of the provinces concerned without knowing more about which provinces are involved, and more about the details.

Mr. Chatterton: As a supplementary question, would the minister look into this matter in that I understand, for instance, the provinces of Nova Scotia and British Columbia will issue certificates of eligibility only to their own resident students for fear they will use up their quotas?

Mr. Gordon: I shall be glad to look into the matter, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

P.E.I. CAUSEWAY—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION START

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works a question which has been prompted by my recent reading of United States magazines. Has the government decided that construction of the Prince Edward Island-New Brunswick causeway will begin in 1966?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): It is under very active consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): As a supplementary question, is the minister aware of the fact that one of his colleagues, at least in a report to this effect, expressed the assurance that the construction would commence by 1966?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Deschatelets: I am not aware of this, Mr. Speaker.

UNITED NATIONS

UNESCO—VOTE OF CANADIAN DELEGATION ON ADMISSION OF CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question concerning the current conference of UNESCO in Paris. Is there a Canadian delegation there, and did they vote on the question of mainland China and the admission of Formosa?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall have to look into that question, and I will be able to reply tomorrow.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CLOSING OF NAKINA, ONT. AS DIVISIONAL POINT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Acting Minister of Transport in connection with the Canadian National Railways. I have received a number of representations regarding the closing down of Nakina as a divisional point, which is to take place within the next couple of days. Would the minister take up with the railway the question of postponing that action for a short time, until a decision is made by one of the great steel companies in our country regarding the establishment of an iron pellet plant there? If this takes place naturally Nakina would have to continue as a divisional point, and in view of the shortness of the time within which the closedown is to become effective I would appreciate very much if the minister would do that.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the start of a proposed run-through affecting the Nakina divisional point has been indicated by the railway to commence at the end of this week and to be fully implemented within two years. Representations were made last week by representatives of the municipalities in the immediate area and by certain railwaymen as well. Following those representations made to the Minister of Labour and myself, I passed them on to the railway management. Subsequent to that there were certain other messages received, which were also passed on to the railway management. But the point now raised by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is a new one and is additional to what was contained in the earlier representations. I will be very glad to draw the attention of the management to the right hon. gentleman's remarks.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister for his very courteous answer.

PROPOSED REDUCTION IN SERVICE TO COMMUNITIES BETWEEN TORONTO AND MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Transport. My question relates to the recent announcement of Canadian National Railways regarding the curtailment of passenger train service to many communities between Toronto and Montreal effective October 25, 1964. Will the minister make immediate representations to Canadian National Railways to reconsider this decision, and in addition request the board of transport commissioners to follow recent precedents and order Canadian National Railways to continue the present service until such time as the board can hold a public hearing on the matter?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will draw the subject matter of the hon. member's question to the attention of both the C.N.R. management and the board of transport commissioners.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY, N.S.—EFFECT ON DOSCO OF PROPOSED QUEBEC STEEL COMPLEX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry. In view of the announcement by Premier Lesage of the proposed integrated steel complex in Quebec, which will undoubtedly provide competition for the Dosco steel operations at Sydney, does the minister have any plans either under export credits or other legislation to provide for the maintenance and expansion of the Sydney steel industry?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the Dosco operation in Sydney is currently a very successful one, as I think hon. members know. This is partly as a consequence of assistance they have been able to obtain from the Export Credits Insurance Corporation. I do not think the hon. member would expect, nor does the government intend to do so, legislation to be passed to provide for the continuing existence of Dosco.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister whether the department has undertaken, or will it undertake, any studies of the long term prospects for the Sydney steel industry; and if so, will the minister make them public in order to allay the justifiable anxiety of the people of Nova Scotia in general and the people of Cape Breton in particular?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think it would perhaps be doing a disservice to the people of Nova Scotia to suggest that they and the steel operations at Sydney are not capable of competing with anybody in the world. They have demonstrated that they can. I may add parenthetically, however, that the Department of Industry is engaged with the Domintion Steel and Coal Company in a research operation in connection with the smelting of the particular iron ore which Dosco employs at Sydney.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister not aware that the success of the Sydney steel operation has been due mainly to government assistance provided under the Export Credits Insurance Act?

Mr. Drury: I do not think I would admit that. The success of the Dosco operation at Sydney has been due, in my view, essentially to the initiative of the Dosco management and labour force.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Thank you, Mr. Goldwater.

[Later:]

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry. Under the provisions of the Income Tax Act both provincially and publicly owned and controlled undertakings are exempt from federal income taxes. Would the minister assure the house that, should a steel complex located in Quebec and promoted by the Quebec provincial government qualify for such exemption, appropriate action would be taken to equalize the competitive position of privately owned steel corporations such as the steel complex in the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. Drury: I will take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct to the hon. Minister of Industry a question supplementary to the one asked by the member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd).

Is the minister aware that most of the shares which shall be issued by the new steelworks in Quebec will be held by private individuals and not by the government of the province of Quebec?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I have read the press reports.

[Text]

INCOME TAX

PROPOSED CHANGE IN METHOD OF REMITTANCE BY EMPLOYERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is the new system regarding the remittance of income tax deductions, effective November 1, whereby employers will have to remit the taxes they collect to the chartered banks, the first step in the minister's plan whereby employers will have to remit taxes the week following that in which they are collected?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say that the two are necessarily connected. However, if one is to look to pay day remittances, this would certainly be an assistance.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How does the minister propose to introduce this new system? Will it be by a minister's directive, by order in council, or by an amendment to the act?

Mr. Benson: The collection of taxes is the responsibility of the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Hales: How will the announcement be made?

Mr. Benson: I have not as yet said that an announcement will be made.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the assurance given by the Prime Minister that the new legislation respecting the Canada pension plan will be on the order paper before the end of October, can she now tell us on what date this legislation will be on the order paper?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is expected early next week.

Mr. Knowles: May I address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Does the commitment given earlier by the government, that this legislation will be concluded before this session ends, still stand?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I ever gave a commitment that the legislation would be concluded. I gave a commitment that the legislation would be introduced.

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Justice on July 6 gave the commitment to which I refer, and the Prime Minister confirmed it on September 25.

Mr. Fisher: Short memory.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. gentleman knows, of course, that the government can introduce legislation but parliament is responsible for the date of its conclusion.

Mr. Knowles: I also know what the Minister of Justice said.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I have a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I would like to ask her whether all the nine provinces that we hope will be participating in this pension plan have indicated that they are willing to participate.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): All provinces were represented at the last meeting at which this matter was discussed, and there was no indication from any province that it did not intend to participate.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. That was not an answer to the question I asked. I asked whether the government has received an indication from all the provinces that they are willing to participate.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I think my former answer must stand if only on this account. It is not only unusual but I might say rather improper for a federal government to request heads of provincial governments to approve either in advance or concurrently what is wholly federal legislation. I would say that none of those who were present and who were fully apprised of the information in respect to pension plans indicated that under the constitution it would be prepared to introduce legislation which would usurp the function of a Canada pension plan.

Mr. Olson: A further supplementary question. Could I ask the Prime Minister whether it is the view of the government that this pension plan is solely federal legislation?

Mr. Pearson: It is indeed federal legislation, Mr. Speaker, and only one province has indicated its intention of introducing provincial legislation in this field.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBLE ACTION RESPECTING ONTARIO SUPREME COURT JUDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that the proceedings against Mr. Justice Landreville have come to an end, would the minister inform the house as to his view of the propriety, in the interests of the administration of justice and in the light of the facts revealed and the evidence which came out in court, of the resignation of the justice?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think I said yesterday that I would be making a statement shortly on that matter.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Would the minister say whether any consideration has been given, since I raised the matter, to the appointment of a commission? In addition, can the minister give the house an assurance that if there is a resignation here there is certainly no case for pension rights?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sherbrooke.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to know whether a commission is going to be appointed, Mr. Speaker. Is there going to be a commission to deal with this matter, or is a flagrant case such as this to remain not subject to the fullest examination by a commission?

Mr. Favreau: I said, Mr. Speaker, that I would make a statement on this matter. At the moment I am not ready to prejudge any question.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHAPDELAINE—LETTERS ON HOUSE OF COMMONS STATIONERY FROM DEFEATED CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege based on my personal interest as well as that of all hon. members of this house.

On October 8 last I raised a similar question to call the attention of the house to the fact that Mr. Maurice Allard, former member of parliament for Sherbrooke, used stationery placed at the disposal of members of parliament to send congratulations or other messages to people in the riding of Sherbrooke and, at that time I read a letter of congratulations for Mr. Robert Delisle, a student at Sherbrooke, who had won a golf trophy.

I thought that this warning would be enough for that former member of parliament who has no right whatsoever to one of the exclusive privileges of members of this house, namely to use the letterhead of the House of Commons to write to their constituents. Now, outdoing himself in rashness, Mr. Allard has convinced Mr. Delisle to send me a threatening letter and order me to return to him immediately the said letter, forbidding me to make copies or photostats thereof, and also asking me detailed explanations on how it came into my possession.

Moreover, the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade), speaking yesterday in the name of the said Mr. Allard on a question of privilege, accused me of a violation of the Post Office Act and told the house that the criminal offence I had committed was liable to a maximum fine of $3,000 or three years in prison or both.

Mr. Speaker, I think the house has already wasted enough time on such a trifle, but due to the way events are shaping, it is my duty to propose that this matter be referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

I am prompted by the following reasons to take this action:

1. I believe that only members of parliament or officials of this house are authorized to use stationery bearing the crest of the House of Commons.

2. The use of this stationery for such frivolous purposes as those invoked by the former member for Sherbrooke reflects upon the prestige of this house, and in order to convince you of this fact, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of this house to another letter which was returned to me by mail and which reads as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. Odina Gagnon,
1350 Kingston St.,
Sherbrooke, P.Q.

Dear Friends:—

I learned through the newspapers that your son was recently married.

I am glad to congratulate you on this occasion, and I would ask you to convey my best wishes of happiness to the newlyweds.

Yours truly,
Me Maurice Allard

Member of Parliament for Sherbrooke (1958-1962)
Present secretary to the Hon. Léon Balcer.

That letter added to another one I have in hand at present and to others that I do not have, but which you will allow me to table, confirm the danger that exists when you let unscrupulous individuals use a privilege belonging only to members of parliament.

That individual is using the prestige connected with the stationery bearing the coat of arms of Canada and the words "House of Commons" to promote his personal interests.

Should all Canadians have the privilege to do what the former member for Sherbrooke is doing, then the stationery which is made available to us would no longer have any meaning and it would be useless for the government to spend money so as to provide us with it.

In concluding my remarks, I want to make it clear to the house that I am not holding these letters illegally but that they were returned to my home in Sherbrooke because they were incorrectly addressed and since they bore the seal of the House of Commons they were returned to the only member for Sherbrooke, your humble servant.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Portneuf:

That this matter be referred to the committee on privileges and elections for consideration in order that it may be decided what persons are entitled to use House of Commons stationery and what sanctions should be taken against those using it illegally and without authorization.

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, in raising his question of privilege, the hon. member for Sherbrooke mentioned having received a threatening letter from one of the addressees who received a letter not belonging to him, and I would ask that the hon. member for Sherbrooke also table the copy of that letter which he qualifies as threatening in order that the house may have the full story.

As far as the question of privilege is concerned, I should like to quote section 42 of the Post Office Act which reads:

All undeliverable mail and all non mailable matter found in the mails shall be sent to the section of the department established by the Postmaster General for the receipt thereof—

And no other person, even a member of parliament, has the right to intercept, retain or delay delivery of a parcel when he is not the addressee. I hope that this explanation will confirm the complaint I made yesterday.

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, I do not object to tabling the letter in question and, furthermore, should the hon. member for St. Mary decide to take legal action later on, he can go ahead.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I may tell the house that this is not the first time I have heard of this matter, nor does it exactly catch me by surprise.

On October 8 the hon. member for Sherbrooke raised this matter, but he did not follow through with any motion to the effect that it should be referred to a committee for study, and the matter died there. Today, October 22, he raises in effect the same question. As all hon. members know, the proper procedure is to raise a question of privilege at the earliest opportunity. In my view the motion cannot be accepted at this time for at least that one reason, that it has not been raised at the earliest opportunity. The hon. member had an opportunity on October 8 to move a motion, but apparently decided at that time not to follow through.

As partial authority for this view I should like to quote Beauchesne, citation 104, subsection 5, as follows:

As a motion taken at the time for matters of privilege is thereby given precedence over the prearranged program of public business, the Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that there is a prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed, and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity.

I should also like to quote from Beauchesne, citation 113, beginning at approximately the middle of the paragraph, as follows:

A question of privilege ought rarely to come up in parliament. It should be dealt with by a motion giving the house power to impose a reparation or apply a remedy.

In view of the fact that this matter has been discussed now on three occasions it is my opinion that the opportunity for raising this at the earliest possible time was not taken and, consequently, I do not think the motion is in order.

[Translation]

Mr. Chapdelaine: If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that the second letter I read was returned to me only after October 8 last, and that I did not intend to raise the question by proposing a motion to the effect that the matter be sent to the committee on privileges and elections, even though I have had the letter from the beginning of this week. It is the intervention of the member for St. Mary who, intending to accuse me of having committed a criminal act, tends to lead the house into believing that I have acted illegally.

Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that the illegal act has been committed by the former member for Sherbrooke, and I should like this point to be elucidated once and for all by the committee on privileges and elections or by the competent authorities, in order that we may know definitely where we stand with regard to the use of House of Commons stationery.

[Text]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In my opinion more than enough publicity has been given to this matter. If any mistakes have been made—

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Speaker: If any mistakes have been made I am sure they will be corrected. I still hold to the decision that if the hon. member had a point of privilege on October 8—and there appeared to be a prima facie case—he did not avail himself of the opportunity to propose a motion to the house to the effect that the matter be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. Several days, or perhaps even two weeks later, in my opinion, is too late.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on a personal question of privilege, the hon. member for Sherbrooke in his remarks—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rise because of allegations made by the hon. member which are not in accordance with the facts. The hon. member for Sherbrooke has said that I accused him of doing something illegal. I never said that in any of my interventions. I did mention certain articles of the post office regulations which deal with this aspect of the matter, but I never accused the hon. member of having proceeded illegally. I did say the articles did not provide for that procedure.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I know it is irregular to direct a question to you, but in respect of this very important matter would you consider looking into the situation and examining what has happened? Many of us are very concerned about this kind of thing. I do not particularly want to have the committee go into this case, but I certainly feel you should protect the interests of all of us by examining this matter.

Mr. Speaker: I should like to reply very quickly that I spent considerable time in respect of this matter this morning. I would be very pleased indeed to accept the suggestion of the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we are also agreeable to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) to the effect that your ruling be deferred, so you may have time to examine the matter, because all hon. members are interested in finding out exactly how things stand with regard to stationery and to their rights and privileges in that connection.

Mr. Valade: And also with regard to the Post Office Act.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The suggestion of the hon. member for Port Arthur was that the Speaker look into the matter, and it was not made to delay or to solicit a further interpretation of the decision.

AIRPORTS

MONCTON, N.B.—PROPOSED ENLARGEMENT OF TERMINAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. What action, if any, is contemplated to enlarge the size of the presently planned new passenger terminal at the Moncton airport, in view of growing concern that the present plans will not provide sufficient space for present and future traffic?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I would agree with you except for the fact that tenders have already been called in respect of the construction of this terminal, and when they were called this fact become known. Representations have been made to the department in an attempt to have the traffic facilities there enlarged. I am wondering whether that has been contemplated.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice so that I may obtain an answer for the hon. member.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Cameron (High Park) in the chair.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Cameron, High Park): Order. The house again in committee of supply. Owing to the fact that the chairman of the committee, Mr. Deputy Speaker, cannot be here for a short time, and because the deputy chairman is otherwise engaged, I have been asked to take the chair, if it meets with your approval.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Cameron, High Park): The first matter is the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs, item No. 1.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

1. Departmental administration, $6,491,400.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Cameron, High Park): I recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, before I commence my remarks I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs whether the annual report for the fiscal year 1963-64 has been published.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I am informed that it is now at the printers. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman now when it will be ready, but I will get an answer for him as soon as I can.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, it makes it a bit awkward to discuss the estimates of the department when the annual report is not before the house. As I look back at other annual reports I notice that the letters of transmittal signed by the ministers have been dated in the months of May, June or July. In all these years this is the first occasion that has come to my attention of the report not being in the hands of the house by the last week of October. I am surprised it was not available for the standing committee on veterans affairs when they were conducting their deliberations earlier this month.

I should think the minister would have to look into this matter very carefully to see why there has been such a substantial delay. When he first became a minister of the crown in 1963 he signed the report which had been prepared under myself and my predecessor, the hon. member for Edmonton West. He did so on May 30, 1963. What has happened this year? It is almost the end of October and we still do not have the annual report of the Department of Veterans Affairs. I judge that there has been a dereliction of duty here and I hope the minister will improve his attitude with regard to this department.

On December 19 of last year, ten months ago, the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs were before the house for consideration. Those estimates had been prepared by the former Conservative government. Consequently we did not spend as much time examining them on that occasion as we are spending in examining the estimates on this occasion, when the estimates are new and have been prepared by the new government.

However, on that occasion the minister had been in office for quite a number of months, and when he introduced his estimates he restricted himself to a very short speech of about three minutes or less. When he introduced his estimates this year he cut his remarks down even more. On both occasions all he really said to us was "The estimates have been before the standing committee on veterans affairs; consequently I have nothing to add to the committee proceedings."

I think this is a wrong attitude on the part of ministers of the crown. When their estimates come before the House of Commons they should make statements indicating what they have been doing during the course of the year, because virtually a year elapses between their appearances for the purpose of discussing their estimates. They should make statements concerning the policy of their departments, tell us what has been done as the result of suggestions made the previous year, and also give an outline of future policy.

We have had nothing of that sort from the minister.

Last December I put three questions to the minister. We accepted the fact that he had not been long in office, and for that matter not long in parliament. But I suggested to him that even then he was derelict in his duty in not giving us some idea as to what he and the department intended with regard to certain matters pertaining to the department. I thought that amendments to the Pension Act should have been looked at, including the question of the benefit of the doubt clause. I also asked him about the section dealing with servicemen now in the regular forces whose affairs come under the jurisdiction of the pension commission. I think it is section 13, subsection 2, but in any event it causes a lot of trouble. I also asked him about the question of veterans hospitals.

The standing committee on veterans affairs also made a report last year containing ever so many recommendations, which the member for Okanagan-Revelstoke drew to our attention yesterday. Not one word was said by the minister with regard to those recommendations of the standing committee. There were 14 paragraphs in the report of the standing committee made on December 12, 1963, but not a word have we had from the minister. He said nothing about the Hong Kong veterans, a question also raised a year ago. I use that as an example because the subject has been aired in the house on two or three occasions in the last few months.

Some members who spoke yesterday said that in view of the fact that the standing committee on veterans affairs had examined the estimates there was not much need to discuss them in the House of Commons. We have recently had a report from the committee on rules and procedure advocating a more extensive use of committees, and there is a general feeling that if problems are referred to committees everything will be all right and the problems will be solved and settled.

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that is a careless view of what actually happens. In the years I have been here I have served on a great many committees, and I know exactly what a committee can accomplish and some of the omissions that occur with regard to committees. In looking at the record of the present standing committee on veterans affairs I notice that although it started off with a membership of 40 it found it necessary to reduce its quorum to 10, which is a clear indication the committee was having difficulty in assembling members to discuss veterans problems.

So I do not see that it makes very good sense for people to say here in the house that these estimates were carefully examined and scrutinized by a committee, which had only four or five meetings, and that on that ground we in our turn should not give much attention to these estimates in the house. I do not take that stand at all. I have had too much experience with committees. It is here in the House of Commons that the minister has to answer to the house with regard to his knowledge of the department and his system of administration. He must also be prepared to give us an indication of the policy of the government and an accounting of what he has been doing.

The minister has been in office now for a year and a half, long enough to indicate whether he is maintaining the Department of Veterans Affairs at the level at which it should be maintained, long enough for him to be able to give us decisions with regard to some of the problems still affecting veterans. In the interests of the general public I think in his opening remarks each year the minister should say something about the veteran population of this country which still requires assistance. People get the wrong impression with regard to our veterans, and that impression should be corrected from time to time by the Minister of Veterans Affairs himself here in this public assembly.

There is a misunderstanding in the country with regard to our veterans hospitals. That situation should be explained again. Granted the minister made a statement last March, I think, but this is the end of October. Let us have a statement now as to the situation with regard to these veterans hospitals.

Why has he not done something with regard to the problems raised by the director of medical services, who last year and again this year in the standing committee on veterans affairs raised the problem of staffing veterans hospitals? In effect, on both occasions he said that although he could manage moderately well under the present terms of reference, it is up to parliament to decide this question for him and give him the necessary direction. If this means we should be building institutions for domiciliary care to look after chronic cases and relieve present hospitals of those cases, then let us have a policy on the part of the work of the department.

The present minister may say, why did you not do that while you were in office? I had this subject under discussion, but I did not have time to complete it during the years our government was looking after veterans affairs. We made ever so many amendments to the veterans charter; we kept the house busy and the officials of the department very busy making the necessary amendments to the veterans charter. We looked after the situation with regard to disability pensions, war veterans allowances and things of that nature. During the years we were in office we raised very substantially the amount of money available for our disability pensioners and those on war veterans allowances. We made it possible for the Veterans' Land Act to operate more effectively by increasing the loans. All told we increased by almost $100 million the amount of money available for our veterans who required assistance. We were repairing some of the neglect of earlier years.

Now, what is this present minister doing with regard to our disability pensioners, with regard to people on war veterans allowances? In the time we were in office we were not able to solve all these problems. There are other problems that arise. Veterans associations right across this country keep bringing forward suggestions for the improvement of conditions with regard to veterans. The department is a good department; we all admit that. It is well staffed. However, the departmental officials themselves require direction. If parliament passes a measure they are obliged to follow the terms of that measure. They have no authority to deviate from it. If there are modifications of the charter that should be introduced, parliament should introduce those modifications.

I am sure the parliamentary secretary to the minister must be frustrated, because in days gone by I recall him as a very active worker in connection with veterans affairs. When he was sitting in opposition he always participated in the debates on veterans problems when we had bills or estimates before the house. He made some very useful suggestions for which I commended him. Some of those suggestions were put into operation later. He must be a very frustrated man now, sitting here as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and we have not heard a word about the suggestions he made two or three years ago. I feel sorry for him because his interest in veterans always impressed me, and I am sure it continues. Where is his influence? Has he no affect on his minister? I am afraid not.

[Mr. Churchill.]

I am not here to praise the minister, as may be evident. I think the minister must show whether he has any value as a minister of veterans affairs. A year and a half has gone by and we have had no declaration of policy from this minister, no amendments to the veterans charter. He talked in the standing committee about amendments he was going to bring forward, but was rather vague and nebulous about them. He said nothing about disability pensioners, nothing about war veterans allowances. He said nothing about the Hong Kong veterans. He has not given us an up to date report with regard to hospitals, and a year and a half has gone by. This Department of Veterans Affairs is not just a department. It has a very important function to perform. I think the department, under this minister, has not received the attention it deserves.

I wonder how the minister fares with his cabinet colleagues. Do they just brush him aside and say "You may have some ideas but we are not ready for them, we have other problems with which to deal." I wonder about his influence with the members of the treasury board. Are they brushing him aside and saying "No, you must not ask for any increase anywhere down the line at all"? Who is responsible for the veterans of this country? The rising cost of living and the vast number of requests that are coming to members of the house mean that the minister must very quickly do something about these particular problems.

I draw these matters to the attention of the committee. I feel the minister should become active so that this department may continue to function at a high level of efficiency and with continuing regard for the veterans of this country. There are still living in Canada over one million veterans of the various wars in which we have been engaged. Fortunately 80 per cent of them do not require assistance, but approximately 20 per cent do. This 20 per cent require help because of wounds suffered in wartime or because of serious economic conditions. We are maintaining our veterans hospitals to look after those who require medical assistance. The department therefore has a continuing responsibility, a responsibility that goes on and on and on.

As I pointed out on one other occasion, once a nation enters into war; once that fateful decision is made, as was done in September of 1939, you are obligated for 70 years to those people who suffer in that war. It is for this reason we are still looking after some members of the South African force. The disability pensioners of the first world war will still be around for a number of years, although their average age is now about 70. There are hundreds of our veterans who are living to what we call a ripe old age, up into the nineties. They enlist at 19 or 20, so we have a 70 year obligation. The veterans of the second world war will present problems for this parliament and for this country for another 50 years. We cannot brush these problems aside. This is a debt of honour that the country owes to her veterans.

Let me remark again that 80 per cent of the veterans do not require any assistance at all. They are the fortunate ones who escaped serious injury in wartime. We must give help to the other 20 per cent, their dependants, their widows and orphans. I hope the present government will make sure the Department of Veterans Affairs is maintained as one of the important departments over which the government has jurisdiction. I am afraid that in the last year and a half there has been a cooling off of interest with regard to this department and the welfare of the veterans. What I am attempting this afternoon is to draw attention to the importance of reviving that interest so that people generally will have an understanding of our obligation.

The figures in the 1960-61 and 1962-63 annual reports are the most reliable we have, because the annual report for the last fiscal year has not yet been distributed. These show that in 1960-61 first world war disability pensioners totalled 48,000, and their number declined to 41,000 in 1962-63. I may add that I am giving the round figures. World war II disability pensioners numbered 104,000 in 1960-61, and increased to 106,000 by the end of 1962-63. The number receiving war veterans allowances increased from 48,000 in 1960-61 to 54,000 in 1962-63, and these figures show that the decline in the number of first world war veterans is matched by the increase in the attention that must be given to the second world war veterans and the boys from Korea.

I anticipate that with the improved economic conditions over the last 20 years, better conditions than we had between 1920 and 1940, the number of veterans from the second world war who will require war veterans allowance will not reach the same percentage as those from the first world war, who had a much more difficult period in which to adjust themselves. If economic conditions improve and social improvements continue, the veterans' problem will not reach the magnitude it did following the first world war, but I give the figures to illustrate the continuing problem that faces the department.

There is another subject I wish to raise, but I shall not do so now because it is entirely different from what I have been talking about and I see I have almost exhausted my specified allotment of time. However, I conclude by urging the minister to give us a definite statement with regard to what he intends to do concerning disability pensions, war veterans allowances and the Hong Kong veterans, whose case has been ably presented by various members. Also I urge him to give us an up to date report on medical services and veterans hospitals.

Mr. Lambert: I had not intended to speak on these estimates, but having read what was said yesterday I agree with my colleague from Winnipeg South Centre on the paucity of the minister's remarks. In fact his statement as recorded in the transcript of evidence given before the standing committee on veterans affairs was just about the same length as the statement he made yesterday and which is recorded in Hansard. For that reason he deserves the strictures uttered this afternoon by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre with regard to the limited nature of his remarks as official spokesman for the department.

I too would like to have seen a definite statement. I know the estimates could have gone to the committee a lot sooner, and privately I indicated this to the minister. It is a charge I have levied against the government on other occasions, because the estimates of many other departments could also have been sent to committee. In some ways I differ from my colleague on the value of sending estimates to a committee, but it is true that even if a committee does the appropriate work, general principles may remain to be discussed in this chamber. This is the point involved here, and I am not surprised that we may now have to cover somewhat more ground than would have otherwise been the case.

Yesterday the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke, leading off for the opposition, referred to last year's lengthy recommendations of the veterans affairs committee. I believe we are entitled to a progress report on those recommendations, and I think it should have been given yesterday. I hope the minister will see fit to comment on those recommendations in his closing remarks, because the veterans affairs committee is one which adopts a non-partisan attitude. Recommendations coming from it should receive careful consideration in this chamber. Not only that; the appearance of careful consideration should be given them by a report from the minister, following consideration of the recommendations by the departmental officials, the minister and the government.

Part of the problem which arose during the past year concerned veterans hospitals which, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, was something which was exercising the director of medical services, the senior departmental officials and the ministry at the time the present minister assumed office. Progress may have been made in the interim, but it has not been indicated. However, may I say the situation that boiled up in Edmonton has been dealt with and, providing the provincial authorities are able to go forward as outlined on page 12 of the evidence before the committee, we shall be satisfied if that progress is made as rapidly as possible.

I was most gratified to note the reactions of the various service organizations and veterans generally in the Edmonton area as a result of the arrangement that was made. I hope it will serve as a blueprint for other areas. Once again, we shall have to be guided by the experience of how it works out over the years, but certainly the negotiation of the agreement should serve as a pattern for similar situations. Having said that, I must add that I do not know whether the same circumstances will arise again. I do not know whether any provincial government will be almost aching to death to get hold of certain departmental properties for projects of its own, but I think with the pattern established we will come out of this with a better deal. The director of medical services is to be commended on what he has done in this regard.

Although the department has not published its report for the past year, there is some information in a publication I received today which may be even more up to date than that contained in the department's report. The publication is called "National Finance" and is issued by the Canadian tax foundation. Before dealing with it, however, I wish to add to the representations made at the committee hearings concerning war veterans allowances, because one serious difficulty has arisen as a result of the 1961 amendment dealing with the requirement of one year's residence in Canada. I know there would be problems for the department with veterans living, say, in the United States. In fact if this requirement were waived claims would come in from all over, and people might move south to warmer climes; but I am concerned over one particular group which is large in number, the Canadian veterans living in the United Kingdom where, for a variety of reasons, they settled after the war. Many of them married girls living in Britain and they have continued to live there ever since.

An hon. Member: Eighteen thousand.

Mr. Lambert: One of my colleagues suggests that the number is 18,000. A number of these men have now fallen victim to those circumstances which would normally entitle them to war veterans allowance, and they cannot claim it; they simply cannot afford to come to Canada, live here for a year and then go back to the United Kingdom in order to qualify for war veterans allowance. But, Mr. Chairman, there was another amendment at about the same time which permitted special allowances to be paid to members of the allied forces living in Canada, after a specific period of years of residence. So that a Canadian living abroad who has not come back to Canada is not entitled to war veterans allowance, but a member of an allied force who has settled in Canada is so entitled.

I think we are building up a body of Canadians—fortunately it is not too great a number; it is not a number that will increase but it will be a steadily declining number, or potentially so—who must depend upon social welfare in another country; yet they are entitled, by reason of their service in the Canadian armed forces during world war II or world war I, to the same consideration that we give to our veterans under the War Veterans Allowance Act. I would urge upon the minister a very careful examination of this matter to see whether he could not take care of these people. They are very deserving cases.

I know there has always been this difficulty about those living in continental North America outside the Canadian borders, but I do not believe that for this reason we should disentitle those living in the United Kingdom or in Europe, if there happened to be some there, because the man who is living in the United States can motor back up to Canada—it is not impossible for him to come here—whereas the man living over in Europe is naturally faced with an almost insurmountable obstacle. Those are the matters I would like to bring to the minister's attention with regard to the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words with regard to the estimates generally. Disregarding the minor supplementary estimates and supplementary estimates A, the amounts contained in the estimates for 1964-65 with regard to disability and death pensions total some $171 million, of which $109 million are estimated to be in respect of world war II and some $57 million in respect of world war I. Then we have some other items such as peacetime defence forces, $2.3 million; Korean forces, about $1.6 million; civilians, world war II, $590,000; burial grants, $350,000. Then there are smaller amounts for the Newfoundland special awards, flying accidents compensation, and the northwest field force, etc.

In so far as civilians are concerned, I think the parliamentary secretary to the minister should take considerable credit for his persistent representations in regard to merchant seamen and others who are entitled to these civilian awards. In the compilation of the national finances there are a number of tables that are really very instructive. I have not made a copy of them because I have not had the time, but I would like to have them appear in Hansard. Perhaps with the consent of the committee I could furnish the Hansard office with the tables I have before me and they could be printed in Hansard. Incidentally, they are tables taken out of the Canada Year Book, from dominion bureau of statistics sources, so they come from an official source. I would appreciate it, Mr. Chairman, if hon. members would permit me to do this and then I could make certain references to them.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Cameron, High Park): Does the hon. member have the consent of the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I am sure that as far as we are concerned we would gladly give consent. I would like at the outset perhaps a little clearer identification of the individual tables so we may look at the information.

[Editor's note: The tables above referred to are as follows:]

TABLE 46

WORLD WAR I PENSIONS

For selected fiscal years 1920 to 1964

Fiscal year	For disability		To dependants		Total
	Number of pensions	Annual liability ($ million)	Number of pensions	Annual liability ($ million)	Number of pensions	Annual liability[a] ($ million)
1920	69,203	14.3	17,823	10.8	87,026	25.2
1925	44,598	19.8[b]	20,015[c]	11.8[b]	64,613	31.6[b]
1930	56,996	27.1	19,644	10.7	76,640	37.8
1935	78,404	30.4	18,241	10.4	96,645	40.8
1940	80,133[c]	29.8	18,177	10.6	98,310[c]	40.5
1945	73,863	26.5	17,221	10.6	91,084	37.1
1946	72,396	26.5	16,982	10.6	89,378	37.1
1950	67,387	31.2	16,414	13.2	83,801	44.4
1955	58,548	38.0	15,323	17.0	73,871	54.9
1960	47,845	37.5	14,812	19.6	62,657	57.0
1961	45,588	41.9	14,714	23.2	60,302	65.2
1962	43,143	40.5	14,552	23.2	57,695	63.7
1963	40,879	38.3	14,455	23.1	55,334	61.4
1964	38,493	35.9	14,321	22.9	52,814	58.8

[a] Does not necessarily add due to rounding of figures.

[b] Reflects the increase in the basic rate of pensions.

[c] Peak year for number of pensions.

SOURCES: Canada Year Books; Annual Reports of Department of Veterans' Affairs; Canadian Pension Commission.

TABLE 47

WORLD WAR II PENSIONS

For selected fiscal years 1941 to 1964

Fiscal year	For disability		To dependants		Total
	Number of pensions	Annual liability ($ million)	Number of pensions	Annual liability ($ million)	Number of pensions	Annual liability[a] ($ million)
1941	319	.1	319	.3	638	.3
1945	15,506	5.4	11,419	8.3	26,925	13.7
1946	36,454	11.4	16,839	12.0	53,293	23.4
1950	94,117	36.6	17,989	13.0	112,106	49.6
1955	100,256	54.3	18,250	16.9	118,506	71.2
1960	104,911	68.5	17,546	19.3	122,457	87.9
1961	105,338	81.9	17,301	22.1	122,639	103.9
1962	105,951	84.8	17,088	23.1	123,039	107.8
1963	106,437	85.1	16,805	22.9	123,242	108.1
1964	106,628	85.2	16,581	22.7	123,209	107.9

[a] Does not necessarily add due to rounding of figures.
[b] Reflects the increase in the basic rate of pensions.

SOURCES: Canada Year Books; Annual Reports of Department of Veterans' Affairs; Canadian Pension Commission.

TABLE 48

TOTAL WAR PENSIONS

For selected fiscal years 1940 to 1964

Fiscal year	World Wars I and II		Korean Forces		Total
	Number of pensions	Annual liability ($ million)	Number of pensions	Annual liability ($ million)	Number of pensions	Annual liability[a] ($ million)
1940	98,310	40.5	—	—	98,310	40.5
1945	118,009	50.8	—	—	118,009	50.8
1946	108,850	60.5	—	—	108,850	60.5
1950	195,907	94.0	—	—	195,907	94.0
1955	192,377	127.0	1,273	.7	193,650	126.8
1958	188,597	146.6	1,638	1.0	190,235	147.6
1959	187,015	146.1	1,722	1.1	188,737	147.1
1960	185,114	144.9	1,776	1.1	186,890	146.0
1961	182,941	169.1	1,820	1.3	184,761	170.4
1962	180,734	171.5	1,874	1.5	182,608	173.0
1963	178,576	169.4	1,926	1.5	180,502	170.9
1964	176,023	166.7	1,962	1.5	177,985	168.2

[a] Does not necessarily add due to rounding.

SOURCES: Canada Year Books; Annual Reports of Department of Veterans' Affairs; Canadian Pension Commission.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, one table is entitled, "World war I pensions for selected fiscal years 1920 to 1964". These tables give the number of pensions paid, the annual liability for disability, and then the number of pensions paid to dependants and the amount. Then the total amount is given for the two categories. There is also a second table for the years 1941 to 1964 in regard to world war II pensions. This table is on the same basis. Then there is a third table which is, shall we say, a synopsis of the first two tables. This table is entitled, "Total war pensions for selected fiscal years 1940 to 1964".

The conclusions we may draw are that the annual financial liability for pensions increased for nearly two decades following world war I, rising from $25 million in 1920 to nearly $41 million in 1940. With the granting of pensions for disability or death during service in world war II and with the increase in the basic rate of pension, the annual financial liability since world war II rose from $60 million in 1946 to a peak of almost $148 million in 1958. In 1959 and 1960 a slight decrease occurred as the number of pensioners declined, but the 1961 increase in rates raised the annual liability by $24 million. Then there was a new peak of $173 million in 1962. With regard to 1964, the estimated cost is $168 million. The peak number of pension recipients reached a maximum of 195,900 in 1950 but has been declining ever since. There are now about 177,000 pensioners, of whom 10,000 live outside Canada.

With regard to the first world war I will take some selective figures. It is interesting to note that the peak in the number of disability pensioners for world war I was in 1940, when there were just over 80,000, and there were some 18,000 dependants, for a total of 98,310, with an annual liability of about $40.5 million. By 1945 this figure had declined to 91,000 pensioners, with a liability of $37 million. In 1960 there were only 48,000 pensioners, with some 15,000 dependants, and with an increase in rates the pension liability was some $57 million. On March 31, 1964 there were 38,493 disability pensioners and 14,321 dependant pensioners, for a total liability of $58.8 million. That is with regard to world war I.

So far as world war II is concerned, in 1945 there were 15,506 pensioners and 11,419 dependant pensions for a total liability of $13.7 million. In 1955 there were 100,000 odd disability pensioners with some 18,000 dependant pensioners for a total liability of $71.2 million. In 1960 there were 104,911 disability pensioners and 17,546 dependant pensioners for a total liability of $87.9 million. In 1964 —this is still world war II—there were 106,628 disability pensioners and 16,581 dependant pensioners for a total liability of $107.9 million.

Just as a last recap, according to the tabular information before me, in 1964 there were 176,023 pensioners, including dependants, who served in world wars I and II, for a total annual liability of $166.7 million. As for the Korean forces there were 1,962 pensioners for a total liability of $1.5 million. As soon as I have completed my references to some more statistical information, Mr. Chairman, I will give this information to Hansard.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I trust that in agreeing to this, these tables to be printed in Hansard are relatively short?

Mr. Lambert: Yes, they are short tables and will occupy less than one page, I think.

I did speak of war veterans allowance. According to the information I have there were about 54,000 under this head. We know that indigent overseas veterans may also receive free treatment services and other veterans may obtain treatment at cost. I think this information with regard to veterans benefits which has been published by the tax foundation is of considerable interest, and as my hon. friend for Winnipeg South Centre indicated it would be interesting if the minister when he replies could give us a projection forward of the number of disability pensioners including dependants who might be expected by his departmental officials over the next five or ten years. Also some indication of the hospital care required would be enlightening. I remember that the director of medical services indicated there was quite a change in the treatment pattern regarding world war I veterans. There were fewer and fewer active treatment patients with disability ailments or pensionable disabilities, but there was a greater incidence of patients requiring chronic and domiciliary care. None of us is getting any younger and I am sure that the incidence of world war II veterans in the latter two categories has now become quite noticeable both as regards war veterans allowance and chronic and domiciliary care. Certainly men who in the early 1940's were in their forties are today well over the sixties and certainly their presence is now being felt in the patient stream, and over the next 20 or 25 years I think we are going to see the bulk of them.

It is true that much more extensive hospital facilities are available to the population in general through the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, and there may be a lightened load on the Department of Veterans Affairs. Certainly in provinces such as Alberta where there are some very fine senior citizens homes we are going to get much less requirement for domiciliary care. Also auxiliary hospitals are being built in the province in fairly large numbers and this is going to reduce the incidence of chronically ill patients who are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

This pattern is not general throughout the country. It is unfortunate but there it is. I think we should get some sort of forecast from the minister for the next five to ten years—I think it is asking too much to forecast over the next 20 to 25 years.

Another area concerning which I have had quite a conversation with the minister and in which I know he is very interested is this: Could he give the committee some idea of the thinking of his officials in connection with dealing with those men who must leave our regular forces as a result of incurring injury while in service? For example, they may have lost an arm or a leg or an eye or sustained a back injury. Are these men who are injured in the course of duty or while in service in our regular forces to be cast on some sort of scrap heap? They do not come under any workmen's compensation legislation. They are not covered by a pension and disability plan with a private concern such as might be the case in industry. What are we going to do with them? This is something with which a man is concerned when he enlists, and if we want to continue to get the right type of people in our regular forces we must concern ourselves with this matter.

I do not know whether the present legislation is broad enough to deal with this matter. I suggest that if it has not already been done —I know the minister is thinking about this —a full study should be made to bring this matter into the ambit of another act. It certainly does not come under veterans benefits because these men are not war veterans. The matter does not come under war veterans allowance. I think there should be some other head of legislation to cover these persons because I am certain more and more cases are going to arise. After all, it is now ten years since 1954 when our regular forces were constituted at the level of 120,000. There must be a rather imposing total of these cases, each one becoming harder and harder to deal with. One feels that there should be adequate compensation, but there does not appear to be adequate legislation to cover this situation.

With those few remarks, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the minister that he give us a full statement when he does reply in respect of the points which have been raised by various members of this house, because I think we would then be in a better position to deal with these estimates. Unfortunately many of these things were not fully considered by the committee.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Chairman, while I have no intention of making a lengthy speech I do feel that I must speak for a few minutes during our consideration of the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs, because of their importance to so many Newfoundlanders. I am appealing primarily on behalf of the Newfoundland foresters who served during the last world war. I am sure it is the wish of all members of parliament on all sides of the house, as well as of all the people of Canada, that our veterans and their families receive adequate compensation for their services.

[Mr. Lambert.]

At a result of the speeches which have been made in the house in the last two days during the consideration of the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs, it can be seen that veterans have the sympathy and support of us all. I should like to express my appreciation to the minister, and particularly to his parliamentary secretary and the officers of the department, for their co-operation and many acts of courtesy in assisting me in dealing with matters which I have had to refer to them from time to time.

I must again bring to the attention of the minister the need to bring the status of Newfoundland veterans in line with that of Canadian veterans, and request that the government take into consideration the services given by the forestry units of world war II, as well as the merchant navy and the rescue tug service. All who served in these bodies should and must be brought under the veterans charter. There is scarcely a week during which I do not have to refer matters relating to Newfoundlanders who served in the Newfoundland overseas forestry unit to the Department of Veterans Affairs here in Ottawa.

During the second world war many Newfoundlanders were asked to serve with the Newfoundland overseas forestry unit and they were told that by serving in this unit they would be performing duties as important as any other branches of the services. Hundreds of Newfoundlanders answered the call to duty and served side by side with the Canadian forestry corps in a manner that reflected credit on them and their province. They were exposed to the same hazards and dangers from invasions and bombings, and for a longer time they were active in the front line of battle, as evidenced by Captain A. C. Hanely for the director of territorial army and army cadet force.

I have heard it said that the commission of government of Newfoundland did not recognize any obligation towards the forestry unit. Surely, Mr. Chairman, this does not mean that the obligation does not exist. The time is long past for the Newfoundlanders who served with the forestry units to receive the same recognition as other Canadians who served in similar capacities.

I am very well acquainted with many of these foresters because it was my duty to purchase the clothing they used, on behalf of the then Newfoundland commission of government, before they left to take up their duties overseas. These foresters have never been recognized as veterans, as far as I can understand, because they did not wear uniforms.

I should like to quote from a brief prepared on behalf of the Newfoundland overseas forestry unit. At page 10 of that brief the following is stated:

> Why did the Newfoundland unit not have a uniform? It is submitted that the only reason is because the United Kingdom government wanted loggers and wanted them badly and fast. There was no time to provide the first contingent with uniforms. It was much less expensive for the government to send them in their own civilian clothes and in fact the men could, most likely, work with greater ease and more comfort in these clothes than in uniform. Two thousand Newfoundland overseas forestry unit men were in Britain by February 1940 whereas the first contingent of Canadian forestry unit men did not arrive there until late 1941 and early 1942.

They were not recruited in the same manner as the other fighting forces, but they did exactly the same work, and for a longer period, as the members of the Canadian forestry corps. I feel that the time is long past when this wrong should be rectified, and I hope that the minister will find some way to overcome this technicality, thus treating the Newfoundland foresters in the same manner as other Canadians.

It has been said that Newfoundland foresters did not sign for the duration of the war. This fault in many cases did not lie with the foresters themselves. They were asked to sign up for six months, and this was done, and then many of them signed for another six month period. However, on March 31, 1960, a brief was submitted to the then minister of veterans affairs. In this brief it was pointed out in section 3, clause B, that the contract was altered in June, 1940, when each individual had to sign a formal agreement that he would not and could not be transferred to any other unit or to any of His Majesty's armed forces, and had to sign for the duration of the emergency.

This, Mr. Chairman, shows how important the work of our Newfoundland overseas forestry unit was, and I strongly appeal to the minister, not to show any particular preference to our Newfoundland overseas foresters, but to see that they are treated in the same manner as other veterans.

I strongly urge the minister and his officials to give serious consideration to the submission made on behalf of the Newfoundland forestry unit. The brief from which I quoted explains in detail why the Newfoundland foresters did not have uniforms. In spite of that fact, they were told that they were doing as important work as the other branches of the services. If the minister will give consideration to the brief which was submitted, I am sure that the members of our Newfoundland overseas forestry unit will be treated as veterans, and I submit they should be treated in that manner.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, as regards the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs, I should like to direct but a few questions to the minister, so as to clarify the matter of the pension granted to the veterans and that of paid holidays. I should like to know to what extent the Department of Veterans Affairs is responsible as far as the veterans' protection and welfare are concerned. Exactly where does this responsibility end in the case of war casualties? What kind of supervision can the minister exercise in the case of the veterans' hospitals such as the Queen Mary hospital, in Montreal, and the Ste. Foy hospital in Quebec and also in the case of a veteran's death?

Mr. Chairman, a rather sad case comes to mind. Without belabouring the point, I would like to say a few words about it, in the hope of sparing people the agony which I saw this veteran suffer. This young man had enlisted in the air force, and was sent to Germany. During his stay in Germany, while on leave—probably on a paid leave, because I am not too familiar with the military regulations—he was a victim of a very serious accident and had to be hospitalized in Germany. The next day, he was transferred to a British hospital where he was very well taken care of. During his stay in that British hospital, a telegram was sent to his family, stating his condition. After approximately ten days, when the patient was well enough to be moved—apparently, one or two discs in his spinal column were fractured—the British physicians, in the best interests of the patient, decided to remove him to the Montreal veterans' hospital, after having informed him that he would undergo an operation in that institution and that in two or three months, his condition would be normal once more.

His family was most surprised when they learned that this Montreal hospital no longer recognized those servicemen who came from England but has a French Canadian name. It was in that hospital that this patient endured agony. Month after month, his operation was postponed, and finally it was no longer mentioned. He was termed a "cry-baby". After a whole month, and many investigations, the government of the day was informed about the conditions prevailing at the hospital; it ordered an investigation and as a result thereof, two matrons, who came directly from England, and who were the supreme authorities at the hospital, were probably sent back to England. As for our patient, at the end of three months he could not stand it any longer, probably because his wound was getting more infected every day and prevented him from sleeping. He spent his time yelling his head off. So it was decided to put him in a cast from neck to toe. There he remained for three weeks and, when his yells got too loud, they put him in a dark room so they could not hear him shout. Their patience at an end, his relatives went to the hospital. And when they saw the condition he was in, they had the cast removed and had him sent to the hospital in Quebec city. This is where it was found that the flesh was in a state of decay and it was too late to do anything.

Mr. Chairman, the pain that patient had to endure was such that twice he tried to kill himself by cutting his veins open. When he yelled too loudly, they told him: "You go over there in the corner, you dirty Canadian."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I went to the hospital myself but I must say that at that time the government took the situation in hand and made a thorough cleanup. Now, I am not blaming the department, which did its duty; my sole purpose is to tell you about this case. After two years in the Quebec hospital, that serviceman died.

It is strange that he received only $7 a week during his stay at the hospital. That is the point I especially want to stress before the committee. For three years he only received $7 a week and his family had to send him $10 a week for petty expenses. He died three years later. Upon his death his family was granted $200 and not a penny more. This is worth noting. The family was unable to obtain one penny more. They made various representations, consulted Quebec lawyers, one of whom was asking $2,000 saying "I will fix this for you". I wonder if the committee and the minister would take this case into consideration, and I ask the minister if the army is still responsible for soldiers on leave with pay.

If the army, through the Department of Veterans Affairs, pays more than $7 a week to a veteran who is ill, why does it only pay $7 per week to a veteran who was hospitalized and unable to do anything since he remained three years lying on his back in hospital?

I have been unable to understand this attitude. I went with his relatives to try to clear up the matter and recover at least the expenses which they had incurred, but we were unable to obtain more than $200 after the death of that veteran.

I know that the government of that day assumed its responsibilities when the veteran was in the Montreal hospital. As a matter of fact, the department, at its own expense, took him over to the Quebec hospital, where he received the care he needed but too late unfortunately, according to the doctors themselves at the Quebec hospital. In fact, they admitted that a surgical operation would have been required at least two months earlier.

This is why I am speaking now in order to let the officials of the minister's department know about the abuses in the army and military hospitals. I am sure that the minister, instead of laughing as some may do, will consider the matter more seriously and see the human side of such an appalling case.

[Text]

Mr. Millar: I have no intention of delaying the committee this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, but perhaps if I am allowed to put my question the minister can answer all questions at the same time. I should like first of all to ask the minister whether or not any consideration is being given to increasing the amount of money available to veterans under the Veterans Land Act. I believe that at the moment the maximum amount available is $12,000. At a recent meeting of the veterans affairs committee, we heard evidence to the effect that the cost of the average house to the veteran is something like $12,500. I am referring only to the construction cost. In addition to this the veteran has to pay something like $2,000 for the land required. This means that his cash outlay is considerably higher than it was previously when a house could be built for $10,000. I believe some consideration should be given to these facts, especially in view of the fact the government has seen fit to increase the amount of the loan available from the Farm Credit Corporation, the farm improvement loans, and under this machinery syndicate measure which was passed a short time ago.

I have had complaints from veterans who find it difficult to raise this larger amount of cash necessary for a down payment resulting from these increased costs. It has been said that less than 1 per cent of the loans outstanding under the Veterans Land Act are in arrears. This is a very good record and compares favourably with the record of the Farm Credit Corporation. This is really the only point I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. However, while I am on my feet I should like to add my voice to those who have already spoken in support of consideration for increased pensions. Here again I think the government itself has provided the best evidence of the necessity for this move. They have raised the pay of practically all the categories of civil servants as a result of the increased cost of living. This increased cost of living applies to everybody. If it applies to the civil servants, certainly it would apply to the veteran who is trying to exist, in a good many cases, on a limited pension.

I have nothing further to add, Mr. Chairman, except that I believe the fact the minister has received little criticism in this committee indicates that his department is doing a fairly satisfactory job. I should like to say that my own personal experience has been that I have received full co-operation from the minister and the officers of his department.

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, I believe that hon. members have the interests of veterans at heart and the minister should understand this. I fully endorse the plea for increased pensions for veterans because we all know that the purchasing value of the dollar has gone down. War veterans should have a greater allowance.

I want to stress one point and that is that the benefit of the doubt now seems to be interpreted by the pension commission in the wrong way. The pension commission seems to think they have to doubt the veteran. I think they have it backwards, and my experience has been that the doubt has not been given to the veteran by the pension commission. I want to bring to the attention of the committee the case of a friend of mine who served in the first world war, and in whose welfare I have a particular interest. He is retired now and is in his late sixties. He never was sick so far as I am aware, and he never asked for a pension. He did not ask for anything. He was always under the impression that when a veteran was old he could go to a veterans hospital and get fixed up. He went to a veterans hospital and the government of New Brunswick paid for his room, but he had to pay the surgeon $75. This man wanted a hearing aid and I will give you the reason he wanted this hearing aid. He says this:

> While serving with the 26th battalion C.E.F. in Belgium in the fall of 1917—

I want to say that this man spent his entire service while he was in his teens.

> —while the battle of Passchendaele was being fought in which my battalion suffered heavy casualties, my company went in the line with 145 men and four officers; 16 returned and no officers came out. I was one of the 16 that came out safe. We were forced to hold the line for 48 hours due to relief trouble, with no rations other than for the one day; we were very hungry and tired when relieved.

Then he goes on to say that he was very happy to get out alive, but his happiness was short lived. He says:

> I was detailed to go back up the line to carry out the wounded. It was during this trip in that I had the misfortune to have my hearing affected. The time was approximately 2300 hours, very dark; travelling in single file after leaving the main road at Ypres a 15 inch Howitzer fired a shell. This was unexpected and so near that the concussion was tremendous—

He turned around three or four times and fell to the ground, but got out. This incident was not reported. He was deaf from then on. I said to him, "Well it is strange this was not reported." He said, "There were a good many things in the first world war that were not reported." I should like to quote further from his letter:

> Only the day before this happened I had the pleasure to save another soldier's life, not one of our own battalion but of the 31st western troops that had been buried by shell fire early in the morning and when I came across him it was approximately 11 p.m. He could get air enough to breathe but only his feet were out, lying on his belly at that time. I heard his shoes clicking together, with approximately three feet of earth over him, saved only by the metal covering the Germans used to make their flunk holes.

He took his trenching tool, dug the man out and saved his life. He goes on further:

> I had a bag of Mills bombs on my back and the attachment on my rifle as I was in that section in my platoon. I started to drop the bombs over approximately 75 yards. I sent about six bombs in that area and waited for approximately one hour as they had stopped firing soon after I had started. I was alone at the time, but the machine section of my platoon was nearby so I joined them and told them what I had just done, and the N.C.O.

in charge there suggested to have a look and see what had taken place. We made around this mound and found a German machine gun and five dead Germans. We brought the machine back with some ammunition but were unable to make it work so we buried it in the mud—

This man is an upright citizen, he is retired, and he cannot even get a hearing aid. I have taken this matter up with the pension board. I know the minister and his parliamentary secretary have done their best but nothing has happened, and so I am mentioning the case in this chamber.

This man deserves something, and as an example, I refer to another case in which a father wrote to me about his son. He told me his son was a cadet, that he had been hurt in a football game, had suffered a shoulder injury, and he eventually got 10 per cent disability pension. This was a young fellow in his teens. But on the other hand, this old soldier who went through the war, and who never asked for anything, cannot get anything from the pension commission. I believe the benefit of the doubt provision must be changed. In fact I would eliminate it. If a good, honest veteran makes an affidavit his word should be accepted. I know the minister has plans for the veterans, for increasing pensions, etc., but I urge him to remove this benefit of the doubt—

Mr. Winkler: Does the hon. member make with authority that statement in regard to the increases?

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): I beg your pardon.

Mr. Winkler: Does the hon. member make with authority that statement with regard to increases in pensions?

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): It is on my authority; that is what I understand.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I am as disappointed as some other hon. members with the brevity of the minister's introductory remarks yesterday. I wish to say something about a point made by the hon. member for Charlotte with reference to the benefit of the doubt provision, and I hope the minister will take note of what his own members are saying.

I cannot thoroughly agree with my colleague on this side who said he felt the minister was doing a good job. The minister has been in office for almost two years and during that time not one piece of veterans legislation has been brought before parliament. When you compare that with what was brought before the house while the Conservatives were in power—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIntosh: I will have something to say to you fellows in just a few moments. When you compare that record of performance with what the Conservatives introduced I wonder why any veteran would vote for the party that forms the government.

We had a right to anticipate that the minister would make some reference to the legislation he says he proposes introducing, and I say that more forcefully than some other hon. members because I have been a member of the veterans affairs committee ever since it was established. We have had a very happy committee, and so far as I know no partisan politics have been played in it. We all work for the advantage of the veterans, and my main disappointment is that the minister made no reference whatsoever to the recommendations of that committee. As a matter of fact I am extremely doubtful he will take recognition of those recommendations upon which we in the committee worked so hard and so long.

I ask myself, what is the use of serving on a committee like that, digging into the facts for the minister, if he is not going to take recognition of them? I am not asking him to take recognition of all the recommendations. It is not likely any minister would do that, but we members of the committee have a right to know why the minister would not accept our recommendations. He must have a reason but, as I have said many times before in this chamber, some ministers are captive of their officials. I ask, if he is not going to take the recommendations of the committee, then whose recommendations is he taking? We are entitled to know that.

Why is it that veterans legislation has not been introduced? If the minister had given us some indication of the legislation he intends to put before parliament I am quite sure he would realize he would not have been held up this long in getting his estimates passed, because the estimates were thoroughly gone over in the standing committee. We had no intention of holding up the estimates, and I do not accept the fact that we are holding them up now. What we are trying to do is to get some information on behalf of the veterans we represent.

The minister has been vague and evasive, and I refer to the remarks he made in the standing committee on veterans affairs. When I heard him at the time I did not realize he was so evasive, but when asked about legislation being introduced this is what he said:

> Well, as I indicated in the house, I would still hope to have this before the house during the coming month. This is not a definite commitment but I will do my best to try to get it into the house before the end of October. This is my objective. It may be that it might run into November, but it will be done in the not too distant future. It will be done before the end of the year.

As members can see, he was just going on and on, and that is why I say he was evasive. Because of the few weeks left between now and Christmas, I ask even if he does introduce legislation on behalf of the veterans, does he believe for one moment that any action can be taken on it this year? So far as his department and the veterans are concerned there will be no action this year on pension increases. No action will be taken on war veterans allowances or on any of the things veterans have been writing to us about, because it will be impossible for the house to deal with the legislation which the Prime Minister said he is going to put on the order paper between now and Christmas.

What does the minister intend to do about the committee's recommendations? Someone has said our recommendations contain 14 paragraphs, but the first one dealing with anything except platitudes is paragraph six, which I wish to read. But before doing so I remind members that the veterans affairs committee is made up of members from all parties, the majority of them from the government side. There was unanimous agreement on this recommendation which reads:

> With respect to the subject matter of Bill C-13, it was unanimously agreed that more effective steps should be taken to observe November 11th as a national holiday and a solemn day of remembrance in all parts of Canada.

I do not believe the minister had any intention of taking notice of this recommendation. Some few weeks ago the hon. member for Kindersley rose on a question of privilege with regard to a labour bill which was before the house, and said he thought it deplorable Canada did not recognize Remembrance day as a national holiday. Just a few days ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre moved an amendment to that labour bill, calling for the recognition of Remembrance day as a holiday, but not one of the members on the government side voted for it. I remind hon. members again that the majority of members on the standing committee—

The Chairman: The hon. member knows that under the rules of the house he cannot reflect on a vote already taken.

Mr. McIntosh: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Walker: Apology accepted.

Mr. McIntosh: All right. I will call it five o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order. In order that the house may proceed with the consideration of private members' business, it is my duty to leave the chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills; notices of motions, papers; public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from Thursday, October 8, consideration in committee of Bill No. S-27, respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada—Mr. Brown—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Number of directors.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on October 8 last clause 1 of the bill, with an amendment proposed thereto by the hon. member for Timiskaming and an amendment to the amendment by the hon. member for Lapointe, was being considered. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, this measure has been useful in calling the attention of the public to some of the operations of this very large and very powerful corporation which controls virtually all the means of communication between the people of Ontario and Quebec. I am not sure whether it has called sufficient attention to some of their operations, indicating that the amendment presented here has some real substance, and the necessity of having some sort of watchdog over the operations of this company. I propose this afternoon to quote from two extremely interesting articles which appeared a couple of weeks ago in the Toronto Star, written by a Mr. Haggart, on the operations of the Bell Telephone Company and what he describes as its sibling company, the New York Telephone Company. These articles refer to the method by which this company disguises some of its charges to the public and the price people are asked to pay for what is termed "local service and equipment". I recall that I paid my telephone bill today and this question occurred to my mind: just what is meant by "local service and equipment"? I know that it cost me quite a bit of money, but the telephone bill did not explain what I was paying for. Apparently in New York there is a public spirited gentleman called Levine who is making it his business to act as spokesman for the subscribers to the New York Telephone Company, exposing some of these charges that are made by the company without explanation. This article says:

> Levine is the director and guiding spirit of an outfit called the American telephone consumer's council, which plans to join in court actions, appear before regulatory commissions, and generally raise hob with the phone company on behalf of its customers.

As most of us are customers, and few of us are shareholders, I am sure we will all cheer Mr. Levine on in his efforts:

> In his current campaign against the cute concealment of extra charges on the phone bill under "local service and equipment", Levine is trying to whet the appetite of the consumer frauds branch of the New York attorney general's department.
>
> Levine's petition laid out the complaint this way: "Undoubtedly, the New York Telephone Co. fears that if the charges were brought to the customer's attention by being itemized, the customer might cancel the luxury rentals.
>
> "We demand an immediate investigation by the bureau of consumer frauds into this attempt by the New York Telephone Co. to mislead us as consumers"—
>
> The charge in Toronto—

I should perhaps include this:

> Levine's complaint about the concealment of monthly rental charges (he likes to call them "forever charges")—

I think that is a very nice term:

> —is as true in Toronto as in New York.
>
> The charge in Toronto for installing a princess phone—

And I am sure we would all love to have a princess phone:

> —is $6.

Whether that is because you have some special connection with royalty, I do not know; or whether when you pick it up you get a princess at the other end, as when you pick up the telephone to send a telegram—

An hon. Member: You are just dreaming.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Oh, I was afraid I would not get a princess for $6; but still I can hope. This article continues:

> It also costs an extra 85 cents a month forever, and if the Princess is an extension the 85 cents is an addition to the extension charges of $1.25 a month.
>
> A Princess extension, therefore, costs $31.20 the first year, and $25.20 for every year thereafter. In ten years, a Princess extension phone will cost the customer $258. New York dealers sell the same phone for $35 cash.

The Chairman: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I wonder whether he would enlighten the Chair and indicate how the comments he has been making are related either to the subamendment, the amendment or the bill.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I would be delighted to do so, Mr. Chairman. I am only surprised that I am required to do so; I thought it would have been self-evident. The object of this amendment is to place on the board of directors of the Bell Telephone Company individuals who will represent the people of Canada, the government of Canada and the customers of this company. I am merely advancing evidence to show how sorely needed are such inquisitors, such observers, in the operations of this company.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Would you like to hear something, sir, about coloured phones. The article continues in this way:

> Regulatory commissions which are supposed to be the public watchdogs of monopoly public utilities seldom pay much attention to such charges, although they loom large both in the customer's phone bill and in the receipts of the phone companies. The single exception seems to be the state of New Jersey, where the public utilities commission recently ordered the charge for a coloured phone to be reduced to $4, and the monthly rental for an extension reduced to 90 cents. Across the river in New York, a coloured phone is $10; in Toronto it's $9. Any extension in Toronto, coloured or black, costs $1.25 a month, forever.

I suggest that this report indicates—and I presume it would not be published by the Star if it was not verified—the urgent need of some more permanent observation and surveillance of the operations of this company than can be provided by the board of transport commissioners. Hon. members will recall that in the original presentation of this bill it was stressed again and again that this is a purely Canadian company, a Canadian-owned company, with only a really minute smidgen of stock held by a non-Canadian. Of course, it is quite a small percentage; only some 2.6 per cent of the stock is owned by a non-Canadian. But this happens to be the largest single block of stock owned by any shareholder.

Curiously enough it is owned by American Telephone & Telegraph Company, an organization which has its special contract agreement also with the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, which provides quite a little bit for the revenues of this company.

> Among the interesting facts not disclosed in the propaganda pamphlet—and facts which the Bell company has no reason to be embarrassed about—is the involvement of American Telephone & Telegraph often called North America's largest company and the giant, paternal overseer of the Bell system.
>
> The largest single shareholder in Bell of Canada is A.T. & T., with 2.6 per cent of the shares, or a total of 749,992.
>
> This is two or three times as much Bell stock as anyone else owns.
>
> The Bell pamphlet sent to subscribers this month does not even mention the existence of A.T.& T. Yet A.T.& T. was entitled to $1,600,000 in dividends out of Bell of Canada last year, and was paid another $4,700,000 under the terms of management contract and patent pool. (A.T. & T. takes 1 per cent off the top of Bell's gross telephone revenue.)

I suggest that this indicates the need for a very careful surveillance of the operations of this company, of the charges it is making and of the impact it has on the Canadian economy.

Specifically this bill asks us to authorize the appointment of five more directors. We were not able to get any very conclusive or definite statement out of the officers of the company when we met as to who such people would be. If one looks at the present board of directors the reason is obvious, of course. This article continues:

> In fact, there is only one of these 11 directors who is not also a director of a bank. It's entirely likely that the bank just down your street is represented on the Bell board of directors—

Just as the Bell Company says that your neighbour down the street is probably a shareholder, that neighbour down the street in the form of a bank is probably represented on the board. According to this article the board of directors is composed of:

> —the Bank of Montreal, the Royal Bank, the Toronto-Dominion Bank, La Banque Canadienne Nationale each has one director on Bell; the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, has three. Montreal Trust and Royal Trust have two and three directors respectively on Bell. In addition, Sun Life, Crown Life, Norwich Union, Canada Life and Dominion Life are all represented on the Bell board of directors.
>
> If I were one of those neighbours down the street with Bell Telephone stock myself, I'd want to ask questions about the huge amounts of new stock Bell sells to its employees at bargain-counter prices.

That is another method by which the illusion is created of a popularly owned and controlled organization in our midst.

It may be that eventually this house will pass this bill and the Bell Telephone Company will appoint five more directors. It may also be the case that again they will be chosen from the ranks of bank directors and directors of trust companies. But I would hope, sir, that we shall not leave the position of this company in its present state. I trust we shall not even be satisfied with appointing the sort of watchdogs of which I have been speaking, but that we have a thoroughgoing investigation into the operations of this company, an investigation which cannot be undertaken by the present regulatory body because it lacks the power to do so. If we are going to pass this bill I suggest that it is the duty of the government to bring in legislation which will increase and broaden the powers of the board of transport commissioners so that they can make a real investigation of the operations of this company, and enable the Canadian people to decide whether or not the time has come to remove from private hands altogether this octopus on which the whole of our economy in central Canada depends and from whose decisions the ordinary Canadian citizen literally has no recourse at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, in discussing Bill No. S-27, let me say I am greatly surprised at the helplessness of the government. This bill has been coming back before the house every Thursday for several weeks, without the slightest amendment being brought to it, although that was what we requested of the mover of the bill himself.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder who is actually inciting the government not to take into account all the arguments we have submitted up to now.

Here, I wish to congratulate the hon. member who spoke previously for the fine statement he has just made. This is further proof that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) was right in submitting an amendment to the house to refute the words of the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown) who said, as reported on page 8638 of Hansard, that the mover of the amendment had good intentions. On the other hand, I doubt very much that either he or his supporters can seriously expect the Canadian parliament to pass this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I can assure you that on reading such a subsection, opposition members ask themselves many questions, and the people generally have not finished asking some more. Through the amendment brought forward by the hon. member for Lapointe, we are asking the government to make the Bell Telephone Company see to it that the five directors to be added to the board of directors are not shareholders, in order that various public bodies may have their say in such a powerful organization.

This trust is especially dangerous because it seems to find favour with this government as with the previous ones, probably because of its important contribution to the election funds of the old-line parties.

Mr. Chairman, we are in favour of private enterprise, but not in favour of almighty trusts which can give orders year after year to the government and this is why the Bell Telephone Company of Canada is constantly asking for rate increases. Today, under Bill S-27, it is asking to increase by five the number of its directors.

We are fully justified in wanting to know the reasons and in imposing conditions on the company, since it is authorized to tax the entire population at will. We are concerned, however, that old-line party members do not dare to reject those ever increasing demands of the company, probably because it is one of the reasons why trusts can overpower the voice of the people.

Its funds might have contributed to the election of governments up to now, which necessarily requires silence.

But whatever the reasons, it is the people who must pay. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, the people now pay millions of dollars more for those small favours on election day. Those who were elected under this label must necessarily show their true colours by remaining the loyal servants of that company.

Am I right? Am I wrong? The facts are there to prove my statements.

Let us compare the rates charged the Bell Telephone Company of Canada's customers with those charged in other provinces. On the prairies the subscribers pay a rate of $3.90, and the rate is even lower in British Columbia, we pay more than $6.40 for the same service. And yet, in British Columbia, where there is a Social Credit government, companies' profits have increased by more than 100 per cent. Don't you think that the Bell Telephone Company of Canada can be an exception to that rule?

Therefore, I can see one reason only for increasing by five the number of the company's directors; it is to be able to deduct a few thousand dollars more from their income tax, depriving the government of revenues which it will have to take from the small wage earner who is unable to cheat because his income tax is deducted at the source.

I feel, then Mr. Chairman, that this is a fine opportunity for the government to take advantage of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada's request in order to require the company to choose the five new directors among the various social groups. Thus, the interests of the taxpayers will be protected.

If we grant full powers to this trust which is competition free—because, to my knowledge, the Bell Telephone Company of Canada is not faced with too much competition—the government must take every precaution to prevent the people from being frustrated of their right to fair democratic treatment.

Somebody will object saying that the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada is required to examine the balance sheet of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. Indeed, it is that board which is responsible for representing the public in its relations with this company. But what can be done by that board, made up mostly of the mute members we find in this house, when they have been unable to stem the prohibitive prices we have now. Let us consider that, for calls from public booths, we have to pay 10 cents to unhook the receiver, instead of 5 cents as in the other provinces. That is a difference of 100 per cent, compared with other provinces, and it is the same for the whole schedule of telephone charges.

Some may say that it is because of the good service. They should ask people in the other provinces who are in a position to compare what the situation is. They will be the first ones to be disappointed by the inadequate service and the lack of control of charges to users. Indeed, if we do not check every day long-distance calls—and heaven knows how many we have—we will have to pay for the bill of those who used our name.

One may say that when a report is made to the office, they correct the mistake quickly, but when it goes unnoticed, they also hurry to make us pay.

For all those reasons, Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), namely that five new directors should be appointed by municipalities, school boards, unions, chambers of commerce and employers and industrialists associations, to make sure that the majority of consumers will be represented in the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Each of these new directors would be in a position to look into the administration of this company which, in fact, lives on the money paid to it by all the Canadian taxpayers.

If it is our duty to encourage private companies, it is also very urgent that we should protect the people against the danger of abuses from trusts that are too powerful for the government to lay down a policy for them.

The regulations must be complied with by the big fellows just like the small ones, and I am not aware that we have yet reached the stage of the law of the jungle.

That is why, to face up to some trusts, the government must assume its responsibilities and prescribe terms which, while enabling them to expand, will guarantee freedom in justice for all Canadian citizens.

[Text]

Mr. Regan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make several remarks with reference to the amendments to this bill. I originally intended to make these remarks some weeks ago but the opportunity to do so did not present itself. I may on one or two occasions repeat comments which have been made earlier by other members in respect of this matter, but repetition has not been lacking during the discussion of this bill.

I should like to commence by indicating that I am opposed to the amendment and subamendment, but that does not necessarily mean I am happy with all the aspects of the present operation of the Bell Telephone Company. First of all I think the amendment and subamendment are not proper amendments. The bill now before this house calls for an additional five directors to be appointed to the board of directors of the Bell Telephone Company, changing the powers of that board to appoint 15 directors, and allowing them to appoint 20. I suggest that any amendment which gives this house the power to appoint members to the board of directors of that company, rather than the company having the right to appoint its directors, goes to the heart of the incorporation of the company and is improper.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the speaker a question?

Mr. Regan: You want to ask the Speaker a question?

Mr. Peters: You are the speaker in this case. In view of the fact that the original charter of the Bell Telephone Company was granted by the federal parliament, is the hon. member not of the opinion that when the company seeks to change their original incorporation the manner in which this is done and the results that will flow from such action involve the same kind of situation as when the company received its original charter from parliament?

Mr. Regan: No, I am not of that opinion. I respect the hon. member's opinion in the matter but I am of the opinion that to be a proper amendment it would have to deal strictly with what is involved in the bill, an increase in the number of directors. If the amendment dealt with that I think it would be proper, but when you start to deal with who is going to make these appointments I do not consider it to be a proper amendment. However, I am not prepared to enter into a legal discussion of the matter—

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Regan: I do not believe there is a point of order.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Lapointe on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

We are now considering an amendment and a sub-amendment which have been accepted by the Chair. At the beginning of the sitting at five o'clock you said yourself there were some amendments.

And now an hon. member is protesting against your ruling and states that an amendment would not be in order, whereas it already has been accepted by the Chair.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan) should withdraw his words which I consider an offence to you, since the said amendment has been declared in order by Your Honour.

If a member wants to object to such a ruling, it is up to him to do it at the proper time but not after several weeks have elapsed.

I am therefore asking the hon. member for Halifax to show greater respect to the chairman of this assembly.

The Chairman: I can assure the hon. member that the chairman appreciates very much his concern but he must remind him that a point of order may be raised at any time, even at the resolution stage.

Should the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan) or any other member wish to rise on a point of order at this stage, such a point could be considered, but I do not think this is the point made by the hon. member who has the floor.

[Text]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I was about to attempt to ask the hon. member a question, and in view of the fact that this point has been raised I think the hon. member should at least clarify the matter by saying whether he considers the form or the subject matter of the amendment to be improper.

Mr. Regan: Mr. Chairman, I would prefer to make my own speech and not have hon. members, as much as I appreciate their concern, assist me to such a great degree. I will move along from what I have said to give some other reasons why I feel the amendment and subamendment should not be supported by members of the house. My next point is that I do not think the Bell Telephone Company, as one of a number of utilities and monopolies operating in this country, should be singled out to have a person appointed by the government sitting on the board of directors of the company. I believe there is some precedent in Europe for such action, but if there is merit in this policy and if it is ever to be adopted in this country it should be adopted by government decision as government policy and apply to all utilities that fall under the jurisdiction of this house. I do not think it would be fair at all to single out the Bell Telephone Company in this regard and to introduce such a policy in this manner.

My next point with regard to the amendment is that if there is something wrong from the point of view of lack of supervision or the way in which the Bell Telephone Company is being directed by the board of transport commissioners, I do not think what has been suggested would effect a remedy. As a matter of fact, I think it is remarkably naïve on the part of those who have proposed the amendment to suggest that one director, or indeed three directors appointed by the government would be in a position to know what was going on inside a large company. If they were appointed they would be, as a friend of mine said, little more than lobbyists with a fairly good connection.

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: The hon. member for Lapointe.

[The Chairman.]

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

I think the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan) is now in the process of insulting the Canadian civil service, by declaring that if the government appoints civil servants to act as directors of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, these civil servants would not be competent and would act, according to the expression he used, only as "lobbyists".

In my opinion, this is an insult to the civil servants of the Canadian government, and I ask the hon. member to withdraw his statement.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Lapointe has raised a point of order. Would he kindly enlighten the chairman by telling him on what particular rule he is basing his point of order.

[Text]

Mr. Regan: Mr. Chairman, as I might well have anticipated, the hon. member did not understand what I was saying. I never suggested that civil servants were to be appointed and I do not believe that is in the amendment. Anyone could be appointed. When I said they would act as lobbyists I meant they would act as lobbyists for the interests of the government or parliament or the taxpayers. However, they would not be effective if the company wanted to freeze them out because, as anyone who has any knowledge of corporate operations knows, a single director or a very small group of directors within a larger group of 20 would not be able to be effective for this purpose.

Let us go on to the next objection that I see to the amendment. As I understand the rules of the house with regard to a bill of this sort, if the amendment were passed the Bell Telephone Company at that stage would be in the position of being able to withdraw the legislation and therefore nothing would be accomplished and additional directors would not be appointed. Therefore I think that the question whether the Bell Telephone Company should have five additional directors to be appointed by the company should be considered by the house on the merits of whether or not more directors are needed.

Mind you, because of the size of the Bell Telephone Company, with which I will deal in a moment or two, and because the house does not have the opportunity to deal with the affairs of this company very often, I agree that those occasions when they do come to the house seeking amendments to their charter are legitimate occasions to review their operations in a reasonable manner. I do not believe in a prolonged filibuster on the subject but I believe there should be a reasonable review. On these occasions members of the house, the elected representatives of the people, should be able to express their views and concerns with reference to the magnitude of the Bell Telephone Company and some of its practices. I think this would be very worth while. I hope the company will take note of the fact that members from all parts of the house have spoken on this bill and that this must reflect a certain concern throughout the country with regard to some of their operations. I am thinking specifically about their ownership of Northern Electric and the competition of that company with other private companies in the same field.

There is another matter on which I should like to say a word or two. I think most of the members of the house are believers in free enterprise. Sometimes the press indicates that one who criticizes such a utility or company may not support free enterprise, but I hasten to say that ever since I can remember it has been my impression that the essence of free enterprise is competition. Competition in any field makes for free enterprise that is healthy and guarantees the people of the country good service.

I remember when I had an opportunity to visit Moscow at the time of the world's ice hockey championships in 1957 I found the service in the restaurant in the hotel to be absolutely terrible. I waited for three quarters of an hour to be served because there was not another restaurant across the street to which I could go. I think this is an example of something that happens when there is no competition, and of the fact that competition is of the essence of free enterprise.

Unfortunately some enterprises must be run as monopolies. The Bell Telephone Company has become a very large monopoly. I think all members will agree that you cannot have half a dozen telephone companies stringing wires along the streets. You would be in a position of attempting to call someone and finding he was served by another company, and you would have a very complicated process to go through in order to reach him. As a consequence, a telephone company is one operation which, to be effectively run, has to be run as a monopoly. Under such circumstances there is a necessity for the government to intervene, to some extent, in the operation of the business because free enterprise as such does not exist wherever there is a monopoly of this type.

A long time ago, it was established that the board of transport commissioners would be the body which would oversee the operations of the telephone company. They have certain terms of reference for doing that job. Now I suggest, and I think a good case could be made out, that the present powers of the board of transport commissioners are not sufficiently strong to enable them to do as efficient a job of overseeing this particular monopoly. I suggest that rather than introduce amendments which would add one or more directors appointed by the government or by parliament to the Bell Telephone Company, the proper way to deal with the question is to beef up the board of transport commissioners. If the personnel of the board are not strong enough, if more personnel is needed to do the amount of work necessary or if the powers of the board are insufficient to do the job, and I do not know this because I have not had experience with it, then let us act in that direction. I would certainly conclude from the experience I have had that the board of transport commissioners does not have sufficient power to oversee the operations of the Bell Telephone, particularly in relationship to the ownership of Northern Electric by that company. The remedy therefore lies in legislation to change the position of the board of transport commissioners and give them the power to carry out this function.

I spoke earlier for a moment, Mr. Chairman, about the ownership of Northern Electric by the Bell Telephone Company. We want to remember that we are not talking simply about a telephone company, we are talking about an empire. We are talking about an organization that had a gross income of $471 million for a year. This company has become so big that it is bigger than many governments that exist in the world today. It is a company which, even with a very strong board of transport commissioners or some other public utilities body, will need to be watched carefully at all times. In so far as the ownership of Northern Electric is concerned, other members have reviewed the fact that Bell owns all the shares of Northern Electric by virtue of the interpretation of a clause giving the company power to hold shares of or make arrangements with other companies involved in telephone business. The fact that Northern Electric owns a telephone line which stretches a short distance in the city of Montreal has been used as the back door for Bell Telephone to acquire ownership of this giant Northern Electric, which provides Bell Telephone with all its wire, cable and other such supplies.

I do not necessarily argue over the question that the Bell Telephone Company is manufacturing wire and cable for its own use. Let us remember also that Northern Electric are not content with supplying the big market offered by the Bell Telephone monopoly, but all Bell's customers have no opportunity to go anywhere else. Bell then uses its subsidiary, Northern Electric, to supply its requirements for this vast market and then Northern turns around and competes in the ordinary market with the smaller companies that exist in Canada which are manufacturing wire, cable and so on. I suggest that they have little chance of being able to compete with Northern in those circumstances.

I questioned the officials of the Bell Telephone Company on this matter during the hearings before the committee. They were quick to make the point that Bell Telephone bought all their supplies from Northern Electric at a rate that was much lower than the market cost, and therefore the public interest was being served. However, Mr. Chairman, the representatives of the other companies in Canada quickly made the point that this was not true. They said that, certainly, the rate that was being paid for these goods would appear to be lower than the market price, but when you consider the quantity discount other companies might offer, this may not be the case. They never had the opportunity of competing for these supplies to Bell Telephone. They say, give us a chance to compete for Bell's supplies along with Northern Electric and we will quote a price on these goods that will be lower than that which the Bell Telephone Company is presently paying Northern Electric. These companies make what appears to me to be a very valid point. Therefore Bell is paying an artificially high rate for these supplies to Northern Electric. Since the rate for telephones is set on the basis of allowing the company a reasonable profit after costs this means, in effect, that the telephone subscribers of this country are, to a substantial extent, helping Northern Electric provide unfair competition to companies that are operating the same type of business as Northern Electric in this country today. It is to this aspect of the matter that I object.

[Mr. Regan.]

I feel that any court examination, and there has not been any, of the power of the Bell Telephone to own Northern Electric would result in a finding that such ownership was ultra vires of the powers of Bell Telephone. I would strongly urge, Mr. Chairman, that the only way this matter can get before the Supreme Court of Canada is by a reference. I feel it is in the public interest that the government should refer to the supreme court the question of whether or not the ownership of Northern Electric is proper, when it depends upon the ownership by Northern of this one wire. In my opinion, it may well turn out that Bell Telephone would be required to divest itself of its interest in Northern Electric, as has been done in other nations under similar circumstances. If Bell Telephone wanted to retain Northern Electric to do their manufacturing of their supplies, they could quite legally do that and not enter the competitive field with other companies manufacturing the same line of goods. It seems to me, and I will admit that I may be wrong, that only the Supreme Court of Canada is in a position to say—

The Chairman: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member as his time has expired.

Mr. Regan: There were quite a number of interruptions, Mr. Chairman, and I wonder if I might be permitted two minutes to finish.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Regan: I am not exactly sure where I was.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Regan: But I was saying that the ownership of the vast Northern Electric Company surely cannot be valid on this pretext. I would join with many other people who suggest it is in the national interest, and for the sake of the protection of the small companies in the same business, and the protection of the telephone subscribers, that the government make a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada to determine the validity of this ownership.

Just before concluding I would like to comment on one or two practices of Bell Telephone Company. In the past it had a practice of charging extra for coloured telephones. I gather this is not the case now, but it charges a monthly fee for putting a light in your telephone, and has other charges of this type. I feel these charges should be one time charges, covered by an amount paid when a phone is installed—

The Chairman: Order. Would the hon. member be kind enough to relate this particular point to the subamendment and the bill before us?

Mr. Regan: That would be extremely difficult, Mr. Chairman, so I shall leave it. I conclude my remarks by saying that for the reasons I have outlined I think the committee should vote down both the subamendment and the amendment. I think the bill should be passed giving Bell Telephone their five extra directors, or else it should be refused on a vote on the basis that the company does not need them. I believe the bill should be considered on its merits, and that every consideration should be given in the future to changing the method of checking the operations of Bell Telephone so that this can be done more efficiently.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to make any prolonged remarks. I have not heard all the debate but I was most impressed with the remarks made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan). His proposal that at the instance of the government a reference be made to the Supreme Court of Canada would clear up a problem which has been concerning us through the course of this rather protracted debate.

I have had the advantage of reading about 400 pages of the evidence on this matter when it came before the board of transport commissioners. I must say I found that material very interesting, but I thought a serious legal question arose as to the right of the Bell Telephone Company to hold the shares of Northern Electric. It is a very important question that affects the whole basis of this company's operation. It is a question which has many complicated problems of law and fact. It is one which I feel should be reviewed, not by the board of transport commissioners, who may be highly expert in their own field, but by the highest court in the land. I wish to commend the suggestion made by the hon. member.

As I recall, this issue of the connection between these two companies was raised in the hearings before the committee on private bills. It was also raised earlier in this debate, and I must say I think a solution to the problem could only be secured in the manner suggested by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan).

Having made that observation I must add I am greatly interested in the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Lapointe. I thought the original amendment had tremendous merit, but the subamendment seems to improve on it. It suggests an even broader representation of the public interest, enabling the government to appoint representatives of consumers, of labour, and of other groups in the community who are deeply interested in the operations of this company. I feel the subamendment has a great deal of merit and I hope it will commend itself to the committee.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, in rising to take part in the discussion on the increase in the number of directors of the Bell Telephone Company I would point out that I have spoken on this subject in the past. In my first remarks I commented on a situation involving the C.B.C., in which they gave a contract for the sound carried for 195 radio stations in Canada to the Bell Telephone Company, which had submitted a tender 25 per cent below that submitted by the joint operation of the C.P.R. and C.N.R. telecommunications system.

I pointed out at that time that the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. had 30 years experience in the operation of this radio sound system, yet an outsider came in and undercut them by 25 per cent, and the C.B.C. granted a ten year contract. At that time the two railroads sent a joint letter to the government, signed by President Donald Gordon of the C.N.R. and the then executive assistant to the president of the C.P.R. but now president, Mr. Emerson, pointing out that they did not think it was fair one company should be able to adjust its rates higher and higher in certain fields of endeavour, while at the same time undercutting other organizations in the competitive rates field.

I have in my hand a clipping from the Quebec city Chronicle-Telegraph of May 22 last—

The Chairman: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the question to be raised at ten o'clock this evening is the following:

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise; rain making in northwestern Quebec and the Saguenay region.

[Text]

The house will now resume the business interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

1. Departmental administration, $6,491,400.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, prior to the private members' hour I was making reference to recommendations that the committee on veterans affairs had made to the minister of the department. I had almost completed my remarks in regard to the first recommendation; that is, in regard to Remembrance day. I would say to the minister at this time that I regret finding myself in the position where I must state my mind, on behalf of the people whom I represent and particularly on behalf of the veterans whom I represent, in regard to the inaction, I might say, of the minister of this department. In saying that I would also like to remind the minister that if he would put himself in my position, being a member of that standing committee and having the feeling that the recommendations on which we spent so many hours are going to be disregarded altogether by him and his department, he would understand my resentment, if he wishes to take it that way.

I now come to the second recommendation made by the committee, which was in regard to amendments to the Pension Act. I am of the opinion that several sections of that act should be reviewed with a view to changing them. I admit that perhaps up to the present time they have been necessary, and were necessary particularly in the years immediately after world war II. I refer to section 5 (5) in which full power with regard to the interpretation of the act is given to the commission. This is an extraordinary type of act in Canadian justice. I believe there are very few other acts that have been passed by this parliament and our predecessors that are not subject to interpretation and decision by the courts. This act happens to be one exception. As many hon. members have informed the minister in this debate on his estimates, we believe it is now time this act was reviewed. I refer to one hon. member who spoke in the house yesterday afternoon and who is in fact a non-veteran; therefore I compliment him for saying this. I have reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, who said:

> What we are really seeking is not a basic change in much of that legislation, but rather the kind of improvement which will meet the situation existing today.

I think that is all the members of the veterans affairs committee were trying to do when we asked the minister to review section 70, which is commonly known as the benefit of the doubt section. Any review of Hansard will show that from time to time members of parliament have tried to change the interpretation which the Canadian pension commission has been putting on this particular section. Another section we have been trying to change is 13 (2). In this regard I would point out that there has been one change that I know of in regard to the phrase "arising out of and directly connected with". The word "and" in that section has been changed to "or", and it now reads, "arising out of or directly connected with".

I maintain that this is significant, in that prior to the change from "and" to "or" the pension commission felt they had to be satisfied that the applicant qualified in regard to both those terms. It was the intent of parliament that he only had to qualify under one. We maintain that the members of the pension commission do not recognize this, or so it seems to us who are fighting these cases. I do not say this just as a member of the opposition, because hon. members opposite have made reference to this particular section, as well as to section 70. In this connection I would refer to the problem the British government had in regard to this particular type of act. I could say some very harsh words about the Canadian pension commission, and perhaps I have already said some very harsh words about that body; but I hope those on that commission as well as the officials of the department realize that I must attack all officials rather than perhaps one or two who are responsible for the block, if I may call it that, which apparently exists between what members of parliament are trying to do—the intent of parliament, if you want to put it that way—and the way in which they are actually administering the act.

As the hon. member for Comox-Alberni said, we believe we must keep up to date; and if the minister has not brought in or is not going to bring in any changes to this act, I think it is high time he considered changing some of its sections. I repeat again, Mr. Chairman, that section 5 (5) should be reviewed, section 13 (2) should be reviewed, section 63 (5) should be reviewed and section 70 should be reviewed.

I mentioned that I would say something about what happened in the United Kingdom. During the committee discussion on section 70 and section 13 (2) I had something to say because at that time I believe I had a bill dealing with this very matter referred to the committee on veterans affairs for investigation. At that time the most convincing argument that I think was put forward was in connection with the maiden speech of Lord Denning in the United Kingdom House of Lords. I should like to put part of that speech on the record, not only for the minister's benefit but for the benefit of the veterans who will read the contents of Hansard. Lord Denning said at that time:

My Lords, it has been my lot as a judge to review the decisions of many tribunals, and may I say how welcome it is that this important report should be accepted by all parties in the state, because it contains and reaffirms a constitutional principle of the first importance—namely that these tribunals are not part of the administrative machinery of government under the control of departments; they are part of the judicial system of the land under the rule of law. This report shows how that principle should be put into practice. These tribunals should, whenever appropriate, give reasons for their decisions, and their decisions should be subject to appeal to the courts on points of law.

This is what I have always maintained, that the commission is not capable of determining points of law. It so happens that in my opinion a precedent is set by some decision of a member of the commission and that precedent is followed throughout in practically every case.

Then later on His Lordship said:

I will tell Your Lordships something about an appeal structure with which I had some connection—namely the pensions appeals tribunal. After the war the late Lord Jowitt, of honoured memory, appointed me as the nominated judge to hear all appeals from ex-servicemen. The machinery of appeal is this. The ministry look into a case, and say whether or not it is a proper case for a pension. If they reject it, there is an appeal to the high court on points of law. I was nominated as the judge to hear all these appeals.

See how the course of justice may unknowingly go wrong. I had not been sitting for two or three weeks, when I realized that the tribunals had been putting the burden of proof the wrong way—they were putting it on the service man to prove his disability was attributable to war service.

The hon. member for Charlotte mentioned this afternoon that the benefit of the doubt was put the wrong way by the commission. Parliament in Canada has been contending for a number of years that this is wrong, but no action has been taken by the minister's department to change the section of the act and to spell this out to the commission. It seems to me that the commissioners themselves pay no attention to what is the intent of parliament. We have tried in every possible manner, I would say, to impress upon these people that this is what we mean; but apparently there is someone on the commission who, in my opinion, has said that we do not know what we are talking about and that the present way is the way it is going to be.

Lord Denning went on to say this:

That had been the law before 1943; but in 1943 the royal warrant was amended to say that if a man was fit when he went into the service and disabled when he came out, there should be a presumption, and a compelling presumption, that his disablement was due to war service and that the burden was on the ministry, if they could, to prove the contrary. So far as I could see, despite the change in the royal warrant, the tribunals had gone on in the old way. They were saying in their reasons, "We cannot find sufficient ground for saying that this was attributable to war service". I hope I was right, but in every case I allowed the appeal.

Further than that, there arose the question of those people whose cases had been decided in the last two years on a wrong basis.

I would say that we have many such cases in Canada which have been decided on a wrong basis.

Application was made to extend the time limit for an appeal. The attorney general of the day argued that a judge had no power to give an extension of time. I held that an extension of time was permissible, and made it reasonably clear that in every case the time would be extended; whereupon the government of the day, very properly, set up a special review tribunal which reviewed all those cases. As a result, many men got the pensions to which they were entitled, and counsel for the British Legion, addressing me afterwards, told me how admirably the review tribunal had done their work.

I say it is time that we in Canada recognized what has happened in the United Kingdom and amended our act accordingly.

His Lordship goes on:

What I have said shows how, quite unconsciously and unmeaningly, a tribunal may slip into error and may need to be corrected. But that is not the only purpose of an appeal. Another purpose is to get uniform decisions. There were 14 or 15 tribunals operating all over the country, and one might come to a decision different from that of another. There were difficult cases. Cancer, for example, is a very difficult and arguable case. On the one hand, doctors could not say what was the cause of cancer, so how could it be said that it was not due to war service? On the other hand, it was said that cancer is just as prevalent in civilian life as it is in the army, and that there is no possibility of its being due to war service. One tribunal would decide a case in one way and another tribunal would decide in quite a different way. How unfortunate for all the widows and other dependants. We arranged to have test cases in which the medical evidence and the legal position in a typical case of cancer could be settled and decided, so that that might act as a signpost for all other cases of that type. That was done in regard to cancer, leukaemia, varicose veins and other ailments which continually arose, so we achieved uniformity of decision. That, then, is the other value of an appeal.

I might say here that I personally in the past year have had a couple of cases of ex-servicemen who had developed multiple sclerosis, and in neither one was I successful in getting a settlement for the applicant, although I knew full well that others of my colleagues had had more success in getting these cases through the Canadian pension commission. I wonder why I was not successful. I think my cases were just as valid as any of the others. In fact the records of one case showed that the first symptoms of multiple sclerosis appeared while this serviceman was in the service, and as a result he was discharged. I understand from the medical profession that no one knows how multiple sclerosis starts. Therefore how can it be determined whether or not it was attributable to war service in this case? Similarly with cancer, and I think His Lordship said something about that in the course of his remarks. In some cases of cancer it has been found in later years that owing to a bump received a cyst or growth formed and turned out to be malignant. No one knows how cancer starts. No one knows how multiple sclerosis starts. Therefore how can the Canadian pension commission in their wisdom say that this sort of thing is not attributable to war service? That is my point. However, if a ruling were made that all multiple sclerosis cases were not to be considered for pension, perhaps I would accept it; but when the commission accepts one case and not another I wonder why.

His Lordship goes on to say:

As a result of this experience, I would ask that, if appeals are to be limited to points of law, a liberal interpretation should be given as to what constitutes a point of law. I would give Your Lordships one illustration. Gunner Lee had suffered a great deal from stomach trouble while in the army. He had reported to army doctors, and they had pooh-poohed him and put the case on one side. One suggested that he was malingering. When he went to a civilian hospital it was found that his condition was by then inoperable and he died. His widow brought the case which eventually came to me. She conducted it in person. The man's captain, his comrades and his wife herself proved how he had reported sick to the army doctors and not been given attention; and the tribunal had decided against him simply because nothing appeared in his medical history sheet in regard to his complaints. Medical history sheets, however, may be incomplete. Rightly or wrongly, I held that if a tribunal comes to an unreasonable conclusion, that is a point of law with which courts can interfere. I am glad to say that only a year ago this house, in its judicial capacity, held that if a tribunal comes to a conclusion to which no reasonable man could come, that is a point of law on which the courts can interfere. In passing, may I express the hope that in any structure which is made in future the jurisdiction of this house in its judicial capacity will be preserved. Those who remember the workmen's compensation cases which came to this house will recall the liberal interpretation then given by the house in its judicial capacity—that the burden should not be on the workman who is injured but on his employer.

I could present many cases in respect of this benefit of the doubt clause, although I do not think that is necessary. Perhaps I should just ask the minister to read the remarks of hon. members who have spoken during our consideration of his estimates yesterday and today, counting the number of times the benefit of the doubt clause has been mentioned. I do not refer to the comments of members of the opposition only, but also to those remarks made by members of his own party. Perhaps the minister will consider the many briefs he has received from the various veterans organizations in Canada and count the number of references in those briefs to this same clause.

In view of the number of times the benefit of the doubt aspect of veterans problems has been referred to one must come to the conclusion that there is something wrong in its interpretation. I feel that parliament has done almost everything possible to bring this situation to the attention of the minister and his department. I do not believe the commissioners are carrying out the intent of parliament. Perhaps we should take some action to change the type of commission we now have. Mr. Chairman, I have said some very harsh things about the pension commission, and I must warn the house that unless some change takes place in the interpretation of this clause by that commission, as long as I am a member of this house I will have to use similar terms.

In view of the experience we have gained over the past number of years in respect of veterans pensions, I think it is time we paid attention to what Lord Denning of the United Kingdom, said in this regard. It is time this legislation was changed. We have tried to make a change but apparently the commission has seen fit not to accept or follow our suggestions.

Several other things mentioned by members of the veterans affairs committee are worthy of repetition. First, I should like to refer to that committee's recommendation in respect of Remembrance day. What happened to that recommendation? Second, I should like to refer again to the benefit of the doubt clause and the committee's recommendation in relation to it. I think enough has been said about that particular aspect of veterans affairs problems.

Paragraph 13 of the recommendations of the committee on veterans affairs is related to increases in pensions. The minister implied, or at least I am under this impression, that there may be something done in this regard in the near future. I had hoped the minister would be more specific in his statement, because he must have received many letters of the type we have received from veterans, complaining that their pensions as of two years ago are no longer adequate in view of the increased cost of living and the decreased purchasing value of the dollar. I feel there should be automatic adjustments in those pensions. This point has been raised by several members during our consideration of the minister's estimates. Perhaps every three years the officials of the minister's department should appraise the cost of living and adjust these pensions accordingly. It should not be necessary for members of parliament to take up the time of this house in an attempt to impress upon the minister that because of increasing costs pensions should be adjusted. Surely that was the intent of the Canadian people when, through their elected representatives, they offered these pensions to veterans, whether they be disability pensions or veterans allowances. The people of Canada have felt that Canadian veterans should be taken care of, and I think it is the minister's duty to see that that wish is carried out.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of parliament it is my duty to impress upon the minister of this department the merits of the many suggestions made by myself and by other members. I should like to say a word or two in respect of the clause in the War Veterans Allowances Act which refers to the 365 day duty period in the United Kingdom. I did sponsor a bill which embodied certain changes in that clause, but unfortunately that bill was talked out. Many members of this house will agree that the intention behind the bill was to eliminate discrimination by the Canadian government in respect of veterans receiving these allowances. Apparently we are not looking after our own veterans so far as pensions are concerned because of the application of the 365 day limit. At the same time we are recognizing individuals as veterans eligible for allowances who were veterans in allied forces. Any individual who was a member of the armed forces of any allied country such as Russia, Italy, Belgium, France and many others, who lived in Canada for a period of ten years, can qualify under the War Veterans Allowances Act. On the other hand, if one of our own Canadian veterans served in the United Kingdom for a period of only 364 days he cannot qualify. That is discrimination and I hope the minister will give some consideration to this situation.

As a result of reports I have received I understand that an announcement was made on the C.B.C. yesterday morning to the effect that the Sunnybrook hospital in Toronto is under new management. I have heard rumours to the effect that the Ste. Foy hospital in Quebec city is either now under new management or will be under new management very shortly. In fairness to members of parliament, announcements of this kind should be made in parliament rather than through the news media, availing members of parliament an opportunity of informing their constituents of these changes.

The minister made a commitment to the standing committee on veterans affairs that before changes, of the nature to which I have referred, took place there would be consultations with veterans organizations concerned with the changes. Whether that took place or not I am not in a position to know, because the first word I heard in this regard was in the form of a report about that C.B.C. broadcast.

The minister also said in his opening remarks that he would answer any reasonable question asked. I have one question to ask him. Will the minister tell the house what legislation he proposes to bring into this house before the end of this session in respect of veterans affairs?

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I should like to commend hon. members for the very excellent suggestions and remarks they have made during the course of this debate. I think they have been most helpful. When I have been chided reasonably I have not complained. Because of the nature of our parliamentary system it is for opposition members to press the government to take action at perhaps a faster rate than usual. As I have said earlier, I have been very gratified in this department by the temper and spirit of hon. members both in this committee and in the standing committee on veterans affairs. I think all hon. members, with little exception, have dealt with my estimates in a non-partisan manner, and I accept all the comments that have been made in that spirit.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to deal with a number of things to which reference has been made, and perhaps I should commence by outlining the main subjects referred to by hon. members yesterday and today. First is the question of the adjustments of rates of war veterans allowances and disability pensions, the adjustment of the Veterans Land Act lending ceiling, and the treatment accorded the Hong Kong veterans. Those are the four subjects to which most hon. members have directed their remarks.

As I outlined to the standing committee, and I repeat now, proposals in respect of war veterans allowances, disability pensions and the Veterans Land Act are in the offing. I am not in the position tonight, as I had hoped, to outline the definite proposals to be made, but I will reiterate what I said. I hope to bring these proposals forward at an early date. I know that will perhaps be a little disappointing to hon. members but I think they will also understand that my responsibilities require me to acquire certain authority to achieve certain things before I can make an announcement of policy to the house. However, I am not going back on the commitment I have made not only to the standing committee but also in response to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition a week or ten days ago.

Mr. Winkler: Myself too.

Mr. Teillet: And there were other hon. members. In the matter of the Hong Kong veterans, here again this question has been taken up as a result of the recommendations of the committee and other representations, and I think we did inform the house some time ago that an inquiry had been undertaken under the direction of Dr. Richardson. This inquiry has now been under way for some little time. I think one should appreciate some of the difficulties involved in gathering the kind of information which will put the treatment service branch in a position to make the kind of recommendation they feel will meet the circumstances of the Hong Kong veterans adequately.

Let it be said first of all that no Hong Kong veteran is ever refused the services of any of the departmental hospitals unless there is an absolutely clearcut situation where the illness or treatment requirement cannot possibly be connected with service or with imprisonment in Hong Kong. Generally speaking, and almost without exception, the doors of our treatment service centres or hospitals are open to our Hong Kong veterans. This is not new, and I certainly claim no personal credit for it because it has been going on for some time. I believe it is also correct that something in excess of 90 per cent of the Hong Kong veterans are now pensioned. An effort has been made in order to meet their special requirements, and I think hon. members will accept the fact that my immediate predecessor in this office and I, do have a very special sympathy for these people because we had a little bit of a taste of something which was considerably worse in their circumstances. We are looking forward to the report of this inquiry in order to make sure that we can adequately take care of the requirements of these veterans.

With regard to the question of the hospitals, on repeated occasions I have informed the house that it is extremely difficult to be able to forecast what will happen in any given situation in any given locality. I have tried to inform people of what has taken place. I also suggested that this was a long term development and that one step would be taken at a time. I was delighted to hear this afternoon the comments of the hon. member for Edmonton West about the arrangements in Edmonton, and I quite agree with him that this should be the kind of thing we should be working toward, the kind of objective that would solve our treatment difficulties and would ensure that we can carry out our responsibility to maintain that level and standard of treatment for our veterans which I am sure not only we, but all Canadians desire them to have.

I hope this arrangement, which appears very satisfactory to us, will work out. It consists in the main of two or three elements. One is that the operation of that hospital is in the hands of a university. They operate the hospital and we say what veterans are entitled to be admitted or discharged. In other words, we control that factor. We have adequate safeguards. In addition, plans are now under way to have adequate, modern facilities for domiciliary care. I think that is of great importance. I think it must also be said, and in this regard I must agree again with the hon. member for Edmonton West, that at the moment Alberta is perhaps in a much better situation to meet these circumstances than is the case elsewhere, but that does not mean we should not do our best to achieve this kind of objective in other areas.

Sunnybrook and Ste. Foy were mentioned by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. I can say to the hon. member that no arrangements have been concluded with respect to Sunnybrook or Ste. Foy and I can also say to him that wherever that press story originated I have no idea and no knowledge, but I am certain it did not come from this department.

I think it might be useful at this time to reiterate the undertaking I gave to the Royal Canadian Legion, and repeated to other veterans organizations, that I will consult with them. It may be helpful to the committee to know that at the moment an advisory veterans committee is being established by the Royal Canadian Legion and the national council of veterans in order that they may be in immediate contact with any developments that may take place.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I cannot let pass the remarks made by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) before the six o'clock adjournment.

I understood that he was talking about a veteran, whom he called a martyr and who had a great deal of difficulties, but I could not understand whether the Department of National Defence or the Department of Veterans Affairs was involved in this case.

However, after the very serious charges he has brought forth, I would suggest that the hon. member should submit to me this information in writing and that he should substantiate his charges, with dates, names, etc., because I can assure the house and the hon. member that the Department of Veterans Affairs never allowed such reprehensible actions to be committed, and I am quite sure that the Department of National Defence never permitted that either.

I do not know what department is involved at present, but I would ask the hon. member to give me, as soon as possible, the necessary information so that I can clear up the situation, because this concerns the goodwill of officials, the good understanding and the good operation of veterans hospitals.

[Text]

I was very interested this afternoon in some of the suggestions made by the hon. member for Edmonton West with respect to the projections in regard to our disability pensioners, war veterans allowance recipients, veterans requiring treatment, and one other subject I will deal with in a moment. We do have some projections at the moment, and with regard to the figures he used this afternoon the experience of 20 years with first world war veterans involving a rising curve for about 20 years and then going down appears to be repeating itself with world war II veterans.

It seems to us that in the case of disability pensioners we have perhaps reached a plateau, with the tendency now being for the curve to go down, which is in effect a repetition of the previous experience. In the case of war veterans allowance recipients, if we use past experience to project a curve into the future it will probably be about 1985 when the top of the curve is reached when it will likely be at a considerably higher figure than anything projected in earlier years, in terms of numbers.

I think I must agree there, as well, that there are so many uncertain factors in this that the curve could be different from one which is constructed on past experience. There is a question, as the hon. member has suggested, of social security measures, better hospital facilities and perhaps a different attitude on the part of some men who may want to be looked after within their own communities. There are so many imponderables there, it is really difficult to project a curve.

In the case of treatment services, of course to some extent the same considerations apply. Our curve of active treatment patients is of course a downward one, while the chronic and domiciliary care of patients is still on the increase and is likely to continue. By the way, I do regret the delay in the printing of the annual report. I am now informed it was signed and presented to the printers in the normal fashion, in the normal time, but apparently there has been some difficulty which is attributed—this is hearsay—to the fact that this house has not recessed as it formerly did at this time of year. I am told it will be possible perhaps to have a projection for five or ten years for disability pensioners. In so far as such a curve can be established, and there are qualifications to it, perhaps we may be able to present it in the way we do the annual report. Certainly I hope we may be able to supply this information for the use of hon. members who may desire it.

There is one last point, Mr. Chairman, and I am extremely interested in it. I refer to veterans, not in the legal sense we use that term, as referring to ex-combatants, but to people leaving the services as well as those who are taking part in the peace keeping operations on behalf of Canada. I refer to such circumstances as we now have in Cyprus. I think I must agree that a new concept has to be evolved here. I think we have to treat these people differently, perhaps, than we did the veterans of world wars I and II and the Korean war. The concept of that time, if I can recall the situation correctly, related to the question of rehabilitation of people perhaps in an economy that everyone really thought might present difficulties. There were large numbers of people, and the circumstances of their service certainly were very different, in terms of benefits, from the circumstances of today. I must agree that a new look must be taken at this situation. As the hon. member mentioned this afternoon, he and I have had at least one conversation about this matter. I have had some conversations with other members and with some officials in my own department, with a view to trying to assess this situation and assess what kind of policy may emerge from the situation. We hope that something useful will emerge. I believe we are moving into an era in which we have to think of these people in a different way than we have. We have been thinking about rehabilitation as it related to the masses who went forward under the banners of the army, navy and air force to do their part under extremely difficult circumstances, when there were many casualties, a great deal of suffering and a great requirement for rehabilitation afterwards. I think this is something which should be undertaken, and I must agree with that.

There have been a number of other points raised, Mr. Chairman, but I believe I have largely answered the main comments that have been made here. I do want to assure the members of the standing committee that their recommendations are taken very seriously and given serious consideration. As time develops I think you will find that most of them will have been accepted. As I said this afternoon, I agree that hon. members are entitled to have the recommendations accepted or reasons given for the refusal to accept them. Again I want to express my appreciation for the suggestions and remarks that have been made during the course of this debate. I think they have been most helpful. I am sure the officials of the department and myself will take careful note of the things that have been said this afternoon and yesterday in attempting to meet the wishes of parliament with regard to veterans legislation.

Mr. Lambert: I want to thank the minister for his remarks. There was one point overlooked and that was the specific point related to the potential responsibility for war veterans living in the United Kingdom. This is a difficulty I pointed out, and would the minister consider that?

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I know we have had a number of discussions about this matter. There are, as you know, considerable difficulties in the way of this kind of thing. I am sure the hon. member is very familiar with those difficulties.

I have discussed the question of the benefit of doubt with a number of officers of the various veterans organizations. While I must accept the fact they are unanimous on one point, that something has to be done about it, the manner of doing it is not clear. I, frankly, voice a fear about changing that section without being absolutely certain what the result will be. At the same time I will say that I have checked quite a number of cases and I appreciate what hon. members have said so far. I believe those I have checked indicate that the benefit of doubt was given to the veteran. I know there are cases where that is not admitted. However, I feel that tinkering with that section, and perhaps making it more difficult—

Mr. McIntosh: It could not be.

Mr. Teillet: —than it is, would be extremely dangerous. I am still looking at it. I confess readily I have not reached a conclusion on it because I would not want to do anything here that would handicap the veteran in later years. I think hon. members will agree that everyone in the department, perhaps largely because they are still all veterans—has one objective in mind and that is to give the veteran every possible benefit of the law and the regulations passed by parliament. I think that is the intent. I suggest that perhaps where it has not been actually applied it has been the result of a misunderstanding of some kind. I agree with hon. gentlemen that there have been cases that are difficult to understand. On the other hand I have investigated a large number of them and I would want to be very sure that if anything is done to that section we are going to improve the situation rather than make it more difficult.

I have not reached a conclusion on that and I would not like to leave members with the impression that we are going to amend it immediately. Perhaps I am not so astute as I might be in this, but though recognizing a desire to change the situation, the manner of doing so is by no means clear.

There is a problem in the matter of 365 days residence and this also is being examined. Hon. members will recall that not too long ago we did, in a relatively modest manner, assist Canadian veterans in receipt of assistance in the United Kingdom in order to bring their allowances a little closer to the level they would be if they were living in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, in order that it might be officially recorded in Hansard, I should like to complete the statement made this afternoon by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier). He is not in the house this evening. This afternoon he drew to the minister's attention a rather special case. The minister asked him for the name of the serviceman concerned as well as the service to which he belonged; he also implied that there was a possibility of exaggeration, and that it was a case of trying to make a martyr of the fellow.

It is true that the hon. member for Roberval did not mention any name this afternoon. However, may I say that the case did occur 20 years ago. A soldier was wounded in battle in Germany; he came back to Canada where he underwent an operation in a military hospital. There he was called a cry-baby, he always howled, and when his plaster cast was removed, it was discovered that his wound had become infected and that decomposition had set in to such an extent that his body was nothing but rotten flesh. This afternoon the hon. member for Roberval did not report everything which happened then, because he was too greatly affected by this case, and it was probably the first time he ever told about it.

I can now say to the minister that the serviceman who suffered this agony was the brother of the member for Roberval. He was present when this happened, and he has personal knowledge of the whole matter.

That is why the hon. member for Roberval did not want to mention any name. I am saying this for the benefit of the minister and to keep the record straight. The minister himself is not to blame because he was not then a minister. However, the hon. member for Roberval wanted to mention that case so that the responsible authorities should be more careful when dealing with specific cases.

Certain patients should not be considered as cry-babies when, upon removal of their casts, it is found that gangrene has set in.

I think it was a distressing and pitiful case. The hon. member for Roberval did not want to mention any name because the person in question was one of his brothers and because at that time the hon. member for Roberval was, in a sense, disgusted with the manner in which this wounded man had been treated.

I am making this statement in the absence of the hon. member for Roberval so that it may be printed in Hansard at the same time as the answer given by the minister.

[Text]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I regret that owing to my having to attend two committees this afternoon and evening I was for some time absent during discussion of the minister's estimates. I do not intend to prolong the debate unnecessarily but I understand some hon. members, including the hon. member for Edmonton West, made representations with respect to the contents of the brief submitted by Canadian veterans living in the United Kingdom, with respect to the War Veterans Allowance Act and the necessity under its provisions for those veterans to return to Canada in order to qualify for war veterans allowances.

I fully appreciate the difficulties involved in remedying the situation, but I simply rise to ask the minister, when he is considering it that he consider it in the light of the fact that it does provide an opportunity for this parliament to recognize, almost in a symbolic way, the value of residence within the commonwealth.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I was particularly interested in the minister's remarks with regard to section 70 of the Canada Pension Act, which is the benefit of doubt section. In the recommendations of the veterans affairs committee there was a paragraph dealing with this benefit of doubt section which said:

We suggest that the word "doubt" in the phrase "benefit of doubt" be interpreted to mean "a reasonable doubt" as might be expected to arise in the mind of a reasonable man in the street.

I come back to the classic example that we are always confronted with in decisions of the commission. I refer to the case that was brought up before the committee by one of the officials, who was asked how narrow are these decisions. He referred to a case where a serviceman was ordered by his commanding officer to go from the camp into a village and post a letter. The serviceman did so, but unfortunately coming out of the post office he stepped off the curb, was hit by a vehicle and killed. In the reasons which they gave for their ruling the commission said that if the man had been hit going into the post office before he delivered the letter he would have been pensionable, but as he had delivered the letter and was hit coming out, he was not pensionable.

I do not know how much narrower a decision could be, because a trained serviceman knows that if he is given an order he must go to the point he is directed to, and return, and he has not completed the order until he returns to camp. I could mention another classical case with which I am dealing at present, and in which the decision is just as narrow. However, as it is coming before another board I shall refrain from going into the details.

The representations which the minister has received with regard to section 70 must mean something to him. Where the minister gets his ideas I do not know; it must be from his officials. As parliamentarians it is our duty to change this; and it is the duty of the officials to administer, not make, policy. I am sorry the minister made that statement.

Mr. Teillet: In fairness, Mr. Chairman, I must say I am sorry I left the impression with the hon. gentleman that my mind is closed to this. It is not by any means. I fully admit the necessity of doing something in this regard and I accept that necessity. The only question I posed was about the method. There is no question in my mind that there is a need to make an adjustment of some sort, whether administrative or legislative. The method of making it is the one thing which is still open and I confess to the committee that I have reached no conclusions as yet.

I am very conscious of the recommendation made by the committee, and also of numerous other recommendations and of consultations and meetings with the officials of various veterans organizations.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Mr. McIntosh: In reply may I just say that in a couple of cases I had which came under section 70 the applicants have since died. I hope the minister does not leave it too long, until all the applicants are dead, before he makes up his mind.

Item agreed to.

15. Other benefits including treatment and related allowances, burials and memorials, the training of certain pensioners under regulations approved by the governor in council and repayments under subsection (3) of section 12 of the Veterans Rehabilitation Act in such amounts as the Minister of Veterans Affairs determines, not exceeding the whole of amounts equivalent to the compensating adjustments or payments made under that act, where the persons who made the compensating adjustments or payments received no benefits under the Veterans Land Act, or where, having had financial assistance under the Veterans Land Act, are deemed by the minister on termination of their Veterans Land Act contracts or agreements to have derived thereunder either no benefits or benefits that are less than the amounts of the compensating adjustments or payments, $5,340,100.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I refrained from rising at the conclusion of the minister's comments. All I will say is that I was unimpressed. I had reserved some remarks with regard to vote No. 15. The details of this vote are shown on page 503 of the blue book and at the bottom of the page there are some apparently minor items which seldom receive any attention. They deal with such things as books of remembrance, battlefields memorials, and over the page you find maintenance of departmental cemeteries and plots, and commonwealth war graves commission. I think it is the function of the Department of Veterans Affairs to acquaint the people of Canada with the work of the commonwealth war graves commission and some of the other things I have mentioned, so that the people will realize the sacrifice that was involved in the various wars.

The extent of the work of the commonwealth war graves commission is not generally known. I asked the officials of the department, when they published the report of 1961 and the one in the following year, to pay some attention to that matter and list the number of areas in which our Canadian dead of both world wars are buried. It is a very large figure; 137 cemeteries scattered around the world, but chiefly in northwest Europe. There are three outstanding memorials of world war I and three of world war II in countries overseas, where the names of the missing have been engraved. Canada's prestige in countries that were liberated in world wars I and II stands very high, and the memorials are there for the people of those countries to see, in France, Belgium and Holland in particular. The people of those countries participate in ceremonies each year at some of the cemeteries in which Canadians are buried and at the memorials where the names of the missing are engraved.

Unfortunately the Canadian people seldom, unless they travel overseas, see these memorials or the cemeteries. It is a very depressing visit to motor through that strip of Belgium and Holland where so many people died and were buried in both world wars, and I think it should not be carried too far. On the other hand, I think it is important that the war graves commission should continue its work; it is important that these memorials should be maintained and it is important that some of these battlefields should be kept in a state whereby they are available for visiting Canadians. The Department of Veterans Affairs, with the co-operation of the national film board, had produced a film called "The Fields of Sacrifice" in order to bring to the Canadian people pictures of these memorials, some of the cemeteries and the areas in which Canadians fought and died, so their relatives who cannot travel overseas will at least have some idea of where their loved ones served. I hoped the minister would say something about that film. It is not a possession of the Department of Veterans Affairs but the idea originated with that department. I would like to know—and the minister can answer later—how many of those films have been made available and have been taken up by Legion branches and educational institutions across this country. It is now October 22. The film was designed to prepare the way for Remembrance day, which should be a day of dedication and memory for Canadian citizens. I would like to know how useful this film has been. Last year there were displays in some of the theatres in Ottawa and some of the major cities across the country. In the 16 millimetre version this film was to be made available in very large numbers. I would like to know what the facts are in this regard.

I would also like to know what the department is doing with regard to a project which was started when I had some responsibility for the Department of Veterans Affairs. This was a project with regard to the Vimy Ridge battlefield in France, an area of 250 acres given by France to Canada; it is Canadian soil. I suggest that plans be made to put that battlefield area in somewhat better condition, and that this should be done after the fashion of the field of Gettysburg in the United States, which has been restored to the appearance it had 100 years ago and which is visited by about 1½ million tourists every year. In 1967 we will have the anniversary of the battle of Vimy Ridge; that year is the year in which we will be celebrating confederation. I took some tentative steps toward having work done at Vimy Ridge, looking forward to 1967. I hope the minister can give us a report on that project.

The last I heard about it, we had photographs taken over there by the Canadian army, with the co-operation of the air force, a model was constructed here in Ottawa and various plans were undertaken to improve the roads there. I suggested that the commonwealth war graves commission be asked to improve the general area, which has been covered with a forest of trees and does not resemble the area as it was 50 years ago. I suggested that a great many of those trees should be cut down and that steps should be taken to beautify more than has been done up to the present, although a great deal has been done, the general area around the Vimy memorial itself, the approaches to it, and so on. I suggested that the seven craters, which are the only surviving craters of the first world war as far as I know, should all be marked, because they had names at the time of the battle of Vimy Ridge.

The front line trench system of years ago was cemented in and is a great attraction to tourists. I suggested that one of the communications trenches be restored as a reminder of the conditions under which people fought in that war. I would like to know what, if anything, has been done in this regard. At the battle area of Beaumont-Hamel a very excellent undertaking was completed, or virtually completed, one or two years ago. There at Beaumont-Hamel you can see the area over which the Royal Newfoundland regiment advanced from their front line trenches, the gaps in the wire through which they attempted to move and where they were mown down. I think that about 90 per cent of the regiment were either killed or wounded. These places are far away. Nevertheless 100,000 Canadians visit Europe each year and if they were aware of these memorials I think being tourists and being proud to be Canadians, they would visit them. There is Beaumont-Hamel, Vimy Ridge, the Menin gate, the monument at Saint-Julien recalling the first gas attack in the history of the world where the Canadians gained great distinction; these places have a special significance for Canada and should be more thoroughly known. Then of course there are memorials and cemeteries in other parts of the world. I should like the minister to tell us something about this matter.

I should like to take another minute or two to go to another subject. There is no government department keenly interested in a military museum. We have, of course, a military museum in Ottawa which I described years ago as the smallest museum in the world, and plans are under way to erect other buildings which will give Canadians some idea of their past history. I should like to know from the minister whether representatives of the Department of Veterans Affairs are sitting in with the planners of the other museums which are going to be constructed in Ottawa over the years, and are they going to see that the military history of Canada is adequately presented? Somebody has to take an interest in this. It cannot be left to the Department of National Defence, although their historical section will give co-operation. I think the Department of Veterans Affairs is the one to take the lead in influencing those who will have some responsibility for the portraying of Canada's military history. We have a military history going back for over 300 years. It is a fascinating history. But it has been played down to a great extent in Canada and I think it should be emphasized. Other countries take note of their military history; they have military museums as well as the preservation of battlefield areas. I hope the minister can tell us something about this also.

One other project I had hoped to advance which I think would be a good confederation celebration project is the publication of the military history of Canada from the earliest times to the present. I do not know whether the two years remaining are sufficient for this to be done, but here again the Department of Veterans Affairs, in addition to its duties about which we have been talking tonight, could play a leading part on behalf of Canadian veterans and their relatives. It is a great story. It is the story of Canada's military history, and I hazard the guess that if someone would undertake to write the story of the land settlement of Canada it would be a story of settlement of this country very largely by veterans. In the Atlantic provinces, the province of Quebec, the province of Ontario and particularly British Columbia the opening up of the country and the settlement of the land was done I think very largely by veterans. There is a story which should be told and which should be incorporated in our history books. Out in the prairie provinces once again you will find that a great deal of the opening up of that territory was done by veterans. Land grants were made. People on discharge made their contribution in days of peace toward opening up this country.

I have drawn the committee's attention to these matters, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to prolong the discussion but I should like to have a comment from the minister if he has information on these subjects.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, coming from a province that gave an impressive number of war heroes, I cannot but seize the opportunity of the discussion on the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs to make a few remarks.

First I want to recall that I had opportunity, in 1959, to go to Europe with the parliamentary secretary of the minister (Mr. Carter) to participate in a NATO conference. At that time, accompanied by the Canadian delegation, we visited some cemeteries where the remains of our compatriots are interred.

Accompanied by the parliamentary secretary of the minister, I bowed before the tomb of those who gave their lives so that we, on this side of the ocean, might enjoy the peace and freedom which exist on the North American continent.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo and myself noted that perhaps we do not have for those who gave their lives in order to protect our freedom, all the respect due to veterans.

And even if it is somewhat against the rules, Mr. Chairman, I take the opportunity to ask the minister (Mr. Teillet) to study carefully and with kindness the problems which veterans and their representatives submit to him.

Since my election as a member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, I had the opportunity to submit to the proper authorities the views and recommendations of veterans who felt their case had not been properly considered when it was first referred to the authorities.

I remember in particular one of my countrymen who had been refused admittance to the medical unit of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, this matter has been fully discussed at the beginning. Could we not limit ourselves to the item under discussion?

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, if the minister is unwilling to listen to the complaints of former servicemen from St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, I shall resume my seat, but I feel duty bound to act as spokesman in the House of Commons for those who fought for our freedom.

However, if the hon. minister is unwilling to entertain this complaint, I shall resume my seat because at the beginning of my remarks I said that I certainly believed that I was out of order, but due to the fact that previous duties prevented me from being present when item No. 1 was called, I hoped that the hon. minister would be kind enough to listen to the claims I wished to put forward on behalf of the veterans in my riding.

Once more, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. minister is unwilling to listen to what the veterans—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Ricard: —from St. Hyacinthe-Bagot wish to express, then I will resume my seat.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I call upon you to bring the hon. member back to order.

I do not intend to gag him any more than any other member, but this matter was discussed extensively yesterday afternoon, this afternoon and tonight. On the other hand, he may submit his complaints later, when another item is examined.

It is altogether unfair to say that I am unwilling to entertain the complaints from veterans of his riding.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I have no alternative but to accept the decision of the hon. minister to the effect that he does not wish to hear what—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Teillet: Order, please.

Mr. Ricard: —the veterans wish to say.

[Text]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that we would be able to hear the remarks of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. I am sure we all understand that he is serving as a member on a committee which is sitting three times a day, and on reflection it would have been easier to allow him to complete his remarks. It is rather sharp on the part of hon. members to call him to order, because I felt the minister was quite prepared to allow him to continue. If other members were working as assiduously as that hon. gentleman they would perhaps be a little more careful in calling him to order.

I should like to express my appreciation to the minister for the pleasure of accompanying him during the past summer to Normandy, Belgium and Holland, to observe the fine work done by the commonwealth graves commission. I was much impressed by what has been done by our representatives there during the past year in honour of Canadians who died during the wars.

For the benefit of hon. members who have not seen these memorials at Vimy, Ypres and Saint-Julien, I urge them to make a pilgrimage to these areas because they are so soul stirring, and we can be very proud of them. These memorials were erected in memory of the sacrifices of a generation that preceded me. I hope that each successive generation will not find it necessary to make a pilgrimage to visit the graves of soldiers of each preceding generation.

Perhaps the minister will be able to outline specifically some of the proposals he has in mind in regard to the Vimy memorial. In this connection I should like to pay tribute to a man who has devoted a lifetime to this Canadian memorial. This individual is now retired, and I am sure that many members will have seen his name in an article which appeared in a recent Week End magazine. Usually I do not mention individuals by name in this chamber, but I think I should depart from that practice and refer specifically to Mr. Paul Piroson, whose devotion to the development of the Vimy memorial is epic. Canadians owe this man a great debt of gratitude. I personally was very pleased to be his guest for a short period of time this summer.

Again I should like to echo the remarks of my colleague from Winnipeg South Centre about the film "Fields of Sacrifice". I hope that private distribution of this film is now possible, following the restrictions placed on its distribution by commercial outlets. This film is an extremely commendable production by the national film board and officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs. I congratulate them for their efforts.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I am sure that many hon. members could wax eloquently about the memorials at Vimy, at Saint-Julien as well as others, and I certainly want to add my tribute to those people who have made them possible.

If I have not done so before in this chamber, and I may say I have done so in public, I should like to compliment my predecessors in office for the tremendous job in respect of the production of the film "Fields of Sacrifice". I should also like to commend the officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs and the national film board for this really outstanding film which won a prize at the Toronto festival last summer as a documentary. The film has been extremely well prepared and is a tremendous production. I am sure it is the kind of thing that the veterans in Canada want to see created to remind the people of this country of the sacrifices made by those who lost their lives during the wars.

Since the beginning of June a 16 millimetre film has been available for distribution. Seventy prints are in existence for distribution by the national film board throughout Canada. I have been given to understand that its distribution throughout Canada is extensive, and the comment of members of various branches of the Royal Canadian Legion who have seen the film have been favourable. So it is receiving very wide distribution. I think I should also add that a little while ago Colonel Wood began the task of preparation for publication of a book on the memorials and cemeteries in Europe, and the battles surrounding these memorials. I also thank my hon. friend for the very kind comments about the trip to Europe. Perhaps I too should express my gratitude and thanks for the very kind and effective co-operation I received from him in representing Canada. I think he will also agree with me that this might be a good occasion to pay tribute to General Simonds who did a very effective job of representing Canada on some of these occasions and also to Senator Power who, as you know, is a veteran who took part in the battle of Ypres. I should like to have the time to dwell on this visit.

Mention was made of the memorial at Saint Julien. I do not think there is a sculpture anywhere in the world that is as impressive. I think all will agree that the commonwealth war graves commission is doing the kind of job that makes us very proud when we visit the cemeteries in Europe. I think this might be a good occasion to pay tribute to the Royal Canadian Legion on the organization of their maple leaf tour this summer which gave us the opportunity to take part in a pilgrimage to the battlefields and last resting places of our comrades. If I were to attempt to develop any one of these topics I could say so much that I think it is better for me not to attempt to go beyond what I have said and try to make my remarks general.

Mention was made of the Vimy memorial. This is probably one of the greatest memorials in Europe. There is some damage to the memorial and research is being done on how to correct it. It is suspected at the moment that the damage has been caused by chemicals drifting through the air toward the monument. It is a most impressive sight and I want to add my words of tribute to Mr. Paul Piroson who has done such a magnificent job and who will be retiring shortly. There is a great deal of work to be done at Vimy. As was mentioned, a plan was developed a little while ago which involves arranging for the relocation of a road, some fencing and I think some general landscaping. In that regard I think we will need an expert to give advice on how that should be done. There is so much that needs to be done there.

Again, one could spend a great deal of time in talking about the memorial and the communication trenches. Some of these have been completed within the last two or three years but the galleries, the underground areas, are not fully reconstructed. The damage of the war of 1939-45 has not been completely corrected and a lot of work needs to be done. There is a story to be told about Vimy and anyone with any degree of eloquence could spend hours talking about the underground passages. We know so little about these things in Canada and I heartily agree we must make every effort to make sure that the Canadian people know what is there. We must organize things in such a way that Vimy will serve as a place of honour, a show window for Canada. I could not agree more and I can only say that I pledge myself to undertake to the best of my ability, with the full co-operation of the department, I am sure, to continue this work to make of Vimy that which we all hope it will be. Whether we can complete the whole project by 1967 is a little difficult to say. I do not know whether such a target can be reached but at least the work certainly will go forward.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, may I again express my very heartfelt thanks for the co-operation, the suggestions, commendations and criticisms I have received yesterday and today. I accept them in the spirit in which they were offered and I am sure that if we go forward in that same spirit the veterans of Canada will receive their justly due. I wish to express my gratitude to the committee.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The committee will now discuss the estimates of the Department of Defence Production and subsidiary agencies. Vote No. 20.

Mr. Churchill: What page is that?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of members of the committee may I say we will be looking at page 86 of the estimates, section 8, emergency measures organization. Hon. members will recall that consideration and approval were given to sections A and C of the Department of Defence Production but section B, emergency measures organization, was allowed to stand.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

Emergency measures organization—
20. Administration and operation, $2,600,000.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, as minister responsible for the emergency measures organization I would recall to hon. members that evidence was given to the special parliamentary committee on defence both by myself and the staff of the emergency measures organization on July 18 and again on July 23 at which times the program of the emergency measures organization was outlined and an indication was given of the intentions with regard to emergency measures and also as to the priorities which would be observed in the implementation of this program.

The objectives of the civil emergency planning program remain the same as disclosed to the committee, namely to make preparations to help ensure maximum survival of the Canadian population and resources in a nuclear or conventional war, and to assist the provincial governments and through them the municipalities in coping not only with a war emergency but also with peacetime disasters whenever requested to do so and when the damage is beyond the capabilities of these local governments. We would like to encourage local civil defence organizations to publicize their preparedness and availability for any type of disaster. We hope that nuclear war will never occur, but there is no guarantee that the present international climate will not degenerate into cold war or actual conflict. Also we know that peacetime disasters do occur periodically and in either context civil emergency planning is a good insurance policy. We believe that as long as military defence is required so too will civil defence be required.

Civil defence planning is still being actively pursued in the United Kingdom and the United States and other NATO countries, and there is continued close consultation between the NATO countries, including Canada, on this matter.

I believe that adequate progress is being made in civil emergency planning in Canada. Vote 20 covers the administrative costs of the emergency measures organization, including the civil defence college at Arnprior. The total staff remains modest in size, numbering approximately 90, including the staff of the 10 regional offices, and 96 at the civil defence college. Vote 25 includes the program for the provision of radiac instruments to provinces on a cost sharing basis, the provinces reimbursing 25 per cent of the cost. These instruments would be used for the detection and measuring of radioactive fallout. Again good progress has been made, with six provinces having agreed to participate in the new program.

Vote 30, which provides for financial assistance programs to the provinces and from them to the municipalities, indicates a slight increase over last year. I believe that the provinces are progressing satisfactorily in this field. I may say we are pleased to note that there is a greater tendency in the provinces to group municipalities into larger county organizations, which the federal emergency organization encourages as it provides for a more efficient and economic organization.

To ensure the continued adequacy and effectiveness of civil defence preparations, the emergency measures organization and national defence have reviewed the effective decision to increase the emphasis on purely military training in relation to the militia. It will be recalled that the regular army will have as its second role responsibility for preparing for civil defence operation. As stated in the terms of reference of the Suttie committee, and I quote:

> It must be recognized that in the event of an all-out nuclear war, all military forces would be employed on survival operations. Therefore, the militia, with all available regulars, would be required to provide a framework for the conduct of survival operations, using a large number of civilians.

The terms of reference also state that the militia will assist in fulfilling the army's national survival responsibilities. On the basis of the latest assumptions and requirements, national defence will continue to maintain or improve:

(i) the warning system against possible enemy attacks;

(ii) the system for the location of nuclear detonations in likely target areas and the forecasting and determining of fallout and warning to the public;

(iii) its plans for re-entry operations into damaged areas or areas of serious fallout;

(iv) the emergency government communications network, which is part of the peacetime Canadian army signal system. A survey will be carried out in the near future, under the direction of the emergency measures organization, to prepare plans for the provision of regional emergency government headquarters in the four provinces where these are not already available, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. The completion of these headquarters will then permit the installation of the communications equipment, most of which has already been acquired.

The Canadian army, through its command and area headquarters, will maintain emergency readiness plans up to date, so that all units of the regular army and militia would be capable of carrying out survival operations on short notice. It is intended to include the necessary funds to continue the implementation of such a program in the national defence five year budgetary estimates.

The fourth report of the special committee on defence, I am pleased to see, contains chapter 3 which has been devoted entirely to civil emergency planning. We have noted the recommendations of the committee. I should like to review briefly these recommendations. I would agree generally with the three aims stated for the emergency measures organization by the committee in paragraph 30, that is, to help insure continuity of civilian government, the identification and allocation of resources after an attack, and that the civilian population be informed and able to make use of any existing protective facilities.

I concur with the statement in paragraph 31 to the effect that a fundamental task is to ensure the availability of an effective communications system across the country in the event of an emergency. To ensure such communications in protected facilities in all provinces, we are considering the completion of the regional headquarters network in the remaining four provinces of New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. Also discussions are being continued with all communications companies to ensure maximum utilization of all networks in an emergency.

Although, as stated in paragraph 32 of the report, it would be desirable to have a civil defence organization in all municipalities, I am not satisfied that we should consider it a priority. The important aspect at this time is to provide a capability in and around larger populated areas, making maximum use of the funds available through the financial assistance program. Such larger municipalities could provide assistance to smaller ones as required, whether in peacetime or wartime disasters. Also, it is our belief that planning is more effective and economical if smaller municipalities are grouped into county organizations.

As stated in paragraph 33 of the report, and I quote:

> It is important that the responsibilities and the authorities at each level of government be defined under these varying conditions.

With regard to peacetime disasters, and in respect of this definition of responsibility, a very careful study was initiated some time ago and we are now consulting informally with the provinces and comparing notes with the United States. Specific recommendations can be expected to emerge from these discussions.

With regard to wartime responsibilities, the emergency measures organization has had under discussion with all departments and all provinces for some time, a specific outline of division of responsibilities. Work in this direction will continue.

With reference to the further observation in the report of the committee that there has not been a meeting of the federal-provincial conference on emergency measures since December, 1962, I must say this statement is correct. Now that the government has reviewed its policy and prepared a program on a basis of priorities, it is our belief that the time is opportune to hold a federal-provincial conference. I am proposing that such a conference be held in mid February of 1965. It is my belief that with adequate preparation made prior to the conference, it should be the best and most successful yet held.

It was observed also that there has been no national exercise for a number of years. It is true that the last national exercise was held in November, 1961. Preparations were made for a TOCSIN exercise in 1963, but it was not actually held. However, all studies made for the exercise, preparations and reporting, were carried through as if there had been an exercise. A thorough review was made of the results obtained. We are satisfied that the main aims of the exercise were met, that is, a compilation of the resources remaining at 48 hours after an attack, a review of war books and a review of emergency legislation and other similar objectives. Furthermore, studies by the provinces or by the federal emergency measures organization, in close collaboration with the provinces, are carried on on a continuing basis. As a matter of fact, we believe that the time has come to establish a cycle of exercises, starting at the municipal level, through to regional or provincial and finally the central level. This allows for a much better identification and analysis of problems at each level, especially those requiring decision at the national level.

With respect to the statement in the report that this lack of continuing liaison and exercise with the provinces has seriously impaired the validity of the planning, I regret to say that I cannot entirely agree. There has been during the period a close and continuing collaboration with the provinces although there has, as I mentioned earlier, been no formal federal-provincial conference. There has, however, been no lack of continuing discussion, dialogue and liaison. This indeed has been sufficiently successful to warrant the holding of the proposed federal-provincial conference next February.

Reference was made to the fact that the home shelter program has not been successful. Members of the committee will recall that this was a view put forward by the emergency measures organization itself. However, although the invitation to construct home shelters at individual expense has not been taken up by the general public, we do not believe that the government should discontinue to make available C.M.H.C. loans to those individuals who may wish to build a home shelter for their families. These, I would remind the committee, are only loans.

No effort will be made in the future to stimulate such a program, but I believe we should make literature available to those who request it. This can be done at very little cost to the government. Already the E.M.O. has made available, in its literature, the necessary information to provide home protection quickly with materials at hand. A pamphlet called "Simpler Shelter" is ready for distribution if the situation so warrants and the public interest demands. I believe it would be wise to continue a modest research program in this field.

However, the answer to the fallout problem appears to be the provision of public fallout shelters in existing buildings. Although we cannot yet evaluate the costs of modifications to buildings, on the basis of a survey completed in Alberta we can estimate that it would cost approximately 5 cents per head of the population to carry out a national fallout shelter survey across Canada, for a total of approximately $800,000.

All federal buildings have already been surveyed and over one million spaces have been identified. We are hopeful that a national survey of all large buildings will identify enough spaces to provide protection to a good percentage of the population, and this at a reasonable cost. However, before initiating such a national survey the conclusions of the Alberta survey will be very carefuly considered.

As recommended in paragraph 37, expenditures in civil emergency planning should be limited generally to priorities outlined to the special committee on defence for communications, warning system, central planning function, field co-ordinating agencies, and research on fallout and blast protection and, as stated above, fallout protection for the public if this is found to be relatively inexpensive. I can, therefore, state with confidence that the E.M.O. is in general agreement with the special committee on defence.

The staff of the organization and I were pleased to appear before the committee and would like to express our appreciation to its members for the time they devoted to this difficult but important program. I would recommend to hon. members that the estimates for E.M.O. be approved so that civil emergency planning may be adequately carried out in Canada.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, there is very little time remaining this evening but I will try to condense my remarks into the period between now and ten o'clock. It seems the minister concentrated his remarks on the observations of the special committee on defence which devoted a considerable amount of time and a rather difficult chapter of its report to the difficult—because it is rather nebulous —proposition of civil defence. I say nebulous because there seems to be a lack of public consciousness of the vital necessity for civil defence.

This reminds me that during wartime there was never anything but an actual air raid, which brought air raid drill to function efficiently among units in the field, where one went through the experience, and all the practice you had tried to instil into yourself and your men came to the fore and they saw the value of it. The general public have a tendency to sweep the requirements of civil defence under the rug.

Several years ago when national programs of civil emergency planning were launched one of the pamphlets issued was "Eleven Steps to Survival." At that time there was a great consciousness of the necessity for civil defence, and I believe there is much to be said in favour of reviving national exercises.

I participated as a regional commissioner in both the national exercises that were held. At the beginning we were groping in the dark, with the exception of certain people involved, but by the time the second exercise was held most of the people involved had some idea what they were doing, and facilities were being prepared for them. I thought TOCSIN II accomplished a great deal, but it was held back in 1961, and a lot of the personnel involved have changed since. I would like an indication that another TOCSIN exercise will be held.

Some of the siren systems installed in certain communities seem to have been left dormant. I know other communities test their sirens every week or two at a specified time, which overcomes the nonsensical situation that occurred in Ottawa a little while ago. In fact I thought the minister should have said something to clear up that comic opera situation, when no one was home and no one could find anyone to determine why the sirens were sounding.

Mr. Grégoire: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Lambert: I would also like the minister to tell us how many persons are brought down to Arnprior for training, because Arnprior is a good college. The municipal officials brought there have always expressed their satisfaction.

Mr. Grégoire: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Lambert: It is too bad the hon. member for Lapointe can't be put through Arnprior; he might learn a few manners. When the minister continues his remarks at some indeterminate date in the future I hope he will tell us more about the training at Arnprior.

The Chairman: Shall the vote carry?

Mr. Lambert: No. I am calling it ten o'clock.

Item stands.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

[Mr. Lambert.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I inquire with regard to the business tomorrow and the early part of next week?

Mr. MacNaught: The first item of business tomorrow will be consideration of interim supply. It is the intention of the government to ask for two months supply. Then we will take up the estimates relating to the Department of Industry, and the balance of the estimates of trade and commerce, citizenship and immigration and public works.

Mr. Churchill: What about Monday?

Mr. MacNaught: I cannot give any outline at this time for Monday.

Mr. Churchill: The government has rather sprung interim supply on us. It is too bad we could not have more notice and it is regrettable we cannot hear something about Monday and Tuesday.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

AGRICULTURE—QUEBEC—FEDERAL PERMISSION TO CONDUCT RAINMAKING OPERATIONS

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, I directed a question to the right hon. Prime Minister in order to find out if licences had been issued to the Weather Engineering Corporation of Canada, in Montreal for rainmaking over a given area.

I hope that tonight the Prime Minister or his representative will be in a position to tell us if individuals can take it upon themselves to throw the whole economy of an area out of gear in order to favour one sector, while we do not know on what authority they are acting and for whom.

I want this information, Mr. Speaker, because I have received numerous complaints from farmers in my constituency and in Témiscamingue and also in the light of an investigation carried out by a citizen of Rouyn, echoed in the local press, and after reading in the newspaper La Terre de Chez Nous that the Saguenay region was also being affected and that the Catholic farmers' union of that area was threatening to take legal action to protect farmers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have had a year of very bad weather in northwestern Quebec where it rained a total of 112 days, 69 of them consecutively.

Everybody knows that agriculture is in the doldrums in eastern Canada but, in that region where normal weather conditions are not at their best, I think we should let Providence look after rainfall.

Mr. Speaker, according to some reports more than 130 of those "rainmaking machines" have been distributed across northwestern Quebec with the result that farmers in that area have been in an extremely difficult situation since the end of July. In fact, several of them will have to forsake the land unless they receive some compensation for the losses incurred as a result of rains this year.

Last year part of my region was devastated by a hurricane, a natural phenomenon; this year it was rainmaking. This doubtless, might help the forest industry by eliminating the threat of forest fires, and be of benefit to some other companies, but it is very harmful for the farmer, ever the victim.

Last year I asked for help. Nothing was granted, for Quebec did not deem it advisable to request assistance from Ottawa.

Yesterday I asked if the government would take the necessary steps to help the farmers whose crops were a failure this year, and whose lowlands, especially, have been damaged for many years to come. They did not even bother to reply.

It is easy to see that the present federal government is not the least bit interested in the welfare of eastern farmers.

Mr. Speaker, I should like the secretary to the Prime Minister to tell us, this evening, if the Weather Engineering Corporation of Canada in Montreal, operates under a federal government permit. If not, I should like the government to have an inquiry made to determine who pays that corporation and on whose behalf it is carrying out this work.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the people in the areas affected are entitled to know what is happening.

[Text]

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for bringing this important matter to the attention of the house. I regret my inability to reply in his native tongue, but I am sure he will understand. There are two points I wish to make in connection with the remarks of the hon. member. One was with regard to licensing. I think if anyone is licensed to operate these machines which are alleged to be operating in that particular area this would be a matter for provincial jurisdiction.

Second, with regard to the question of relief for farmers who have been flooded or affected by excessive rains, this again is a provincial matter and would have to be brought by the provincial authorities to the federal government, who I am sure would be glad to assist if there is need in excess of the ability of the province to meet that need. As regards the matter of the corporation the hon. member has mentioned, I am unable to provide him with any authentic information as to whether or not this does or does not exist. I am in possession of the copy of Le Devoir from which he quoted and I am familiar with the article. I note from the article that there is no confirmation that these machines are in the area. I can only assure the hon. member that this matter will receive immediate attention and that an inquiry will be made.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.09 p.m.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply this day]:

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

1. Departmental administration, $6,491,400.

1a. Departmental administration, $42,000.

Welfare services, allowances and other benefits—

5. Administration, including the expenses of the war veterans allowance board, and grants as detailed in the estimates, $4,097,200.

10. War veterans allowances, civilian war allowances and assistance in accordance with the provisions of the assistance fund (war veterans allowances) regulations, $88,975,000.

15. Other benefits including treatment and related allowances, burials and memorials, the training of certain pensioners under regulations approved by the governor in council and repayments under subsection (3) of section 12 of the Veterans' Rehabilitation Act in such amounts as the Minister of Veterans Affairs determines, not exceeding the whole of amounts equivalent to the compensating adjustments or payments made under that act, where the persons who made the compensating adjustment or payments received no benefits under the Veterans' Land Act, or where, having had financial assistance under the Veterans' Land Act, are deemed by the minister on termination of their Veterans' Land Act contracts or agreements to have derived thereunder either no benefits or benefits that are less than the amounts of the compensating adjustments or payments, $5,340,100.

15a. Other benefits including treatment and related allowances, burials and memorials, the training of certain pensioners under regulations approved by the governor in council and repayments under subsection (3) of section 12 of the Veterans' Rehabilitation Act, $45,000.

Pensions—

20. Administration, $2,634,300.

25. Pensions for disability and death, including pensions granted under the authority of the civilian governement employees (war) compensation order, P.C. 45/8848 of November 22, 144, which shall be subject to the Pension Act; Newfoundland special awards, and gallantry awards (world war II and special force), $170,826,000.

Treatment services—

30. Operation and maintenance including authority notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year for hospital, prosthetic and related services, $44,223,900.

35. Hospital construction, improvements, equipment and acquisition of land, $3,294,000.

Soldier settlement and Veterans' Land Act—

40. Administration of Veterans' Land Act: Soldier settlement and British family settlement; upkeep of property, Veterans' Land Act, including engineering and other investigational planning expenses that do not add tangible value to real property, taxes, insurance and maintenance of public utilities; and to authorize, subject to the approval of the governor in council, necessary remedial work on properties constructed under individual firm price contracts and sold under the Veterans' Land Act and to correct defects for which neither the veteran nor the contractor can be held financially responsible, and for such other work on other properties as may be required to protect the interest of the director therein, $4,330,600.

45. Grants to veterans settled on provincial lands in accordance with agreements with provincial governments under section 38 of the Veterans' Land Act, grants to veterans settled on Dominion lands in accordance with an agreement with the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources under section 38 of the Veterans' Land Act and grants to Indian veterans settled on Indian reserve lands under section 39 of the Veterans' Land Act, $150,000.

Loans, investments and advances—

Veterans Affairs—

Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Act—

L55. Purchase of land and permanent improvements; cost of permanent improvements to be effected; removal of encumbrances; stock and equipment; and protection of security under the Soldier Settlement Act and the Veterans' Land Act, $38,400,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 23, 1964

The house met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF ITALIAN SETTLEMENT IN CANADA

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I crave the indulgence of the house to recognize and do honour to the one hundredth anniversary of Italian settlement in Canada. Tomorrow evening, October 24, in many communities across Canada celebrations will be held to mark the many contributions the Italian people have made to Canada. Indeed, they are the second largest group of people who have emigrated to Canada. Canadians of Italian origin have played a very important part in the development of our country, and as one who has the honour to represent many Italian Canadians I am pleased to recognize this century of their contribution to the economic and social life of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON SALARY REVISIONS

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the report of the joint committee of both houses on the library of parliament, concerning a revision in salary rates of clerical classes in the library, presented to this house by Mr. Speaker on Thursday, October 15, 1964, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

STATEMENT ON SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS FOR ROYAL VISIT

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make the following statement as a result of questions put to me on October 15, 16 and 21 by the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas).

The prime responsibility of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was for the safety of Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh. A secondary responsibility would have been to furnish assistance to municipal and provincial police in the event that in the maintenance of law and order those forces required assistance from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

So far as the visit to the city of Quebec is concerned, it should be pointed out that for a considerable period prior to the royal visit threats of demonstrations, civil disturbances and violence had been made publicly from anonymous sources.

Several demonstrations occurred, the first one of any consequence being in front of the provincial legislature while Her Majesty was inside the building. These and other demonstrations in the city of Quebec were dealt with by the Quebec city police. The solicitor general of the province of Quebec has issued a statement on these matters.

During the day a number of persons were arrested by the various forces, of whom eight were arrested by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in rendering assistance to the local authorities.

Le Soleil of Quebec city subsequently published a part of the orders issued to members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who were on duty in Quebec city during the royal visit. Individual copies of these orders were issued to all members of the force on duty, and the copy which came into the possession of Le Soleil was not secured from any official source. It has not been possible to ascertain how this particular copy, out of the many that had to be issued, reached the newspaper; but while the document was confidential and for the information of members of the force, there is nothing in it of a secret nature or of a nature affecting security. In fact it exemplifies the care which was taken to see that members of the force were properly instructed. In the circumstances I do not believe that any investigation beyond the ordinary service inquiry is necessary.

The security arrangements provided by all the police forces which were involved in the royal visit were effective and successful and, in spite of several demonstrations, at no time during the royal visit in any of the provinces that were visited by the Queen was there any attempt to molest Her Majesty, His Royal Highness or any member of the federal or provincial governments.

Neither I nor the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have received any complaints whatsoever regarding the security arrangements or the conduct of or action taken by any member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. On the contrary, the press and the public generally have commended the R.C.M.P. In these circumstances I am sure hon. members will agree that there is no occasion for me to direct an investigation.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF RUN-THROUGHS—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Melville, the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the pending changes at Sunday midnight, October 25, by the C.N.R. management which will establish run-throughs at the divisional points of Nakina and Wainwright, thus creating a great likelihood of a tie-up of the transcontinental line and tremendous hardship on the communities and railroaders affected.

In making the case for urgency I would point out that as you may have noted, Mr. Speaker, this matter was raised yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition, and several days before by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I have not made it an issue in terms of questions because delegations have come to Ottawa and we have been working through the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Transport on the assumption that this was the channel through which advice and representations should be passed to Mr. Gordon and the management of the C.N.R.

It is obvious that despite our representations and our efforts, Canadian National Railway officials have not seen fit to change their plans or to accept the request for postponement. The change is going to be introduced on Sunday night and, as I have expressed in the motion, there is every likelihood that this will create a situation that can tie up the transcontinental line of the C.N.R., and it may have even further ramifications. I do not need to point out that such a situation has always been considered, in the Canadian political scene, as one of the most serious things that could happen.

I am making the point in addition, Mr. Speaker, that this move by Canadian National Railways, particularly as it affects Nakina and Wainwright, according to the contention of some of the men in the unions involved is a violation of an agreement entered into in 1926 between the Canadian National and the unions. This gives all the more reason for our feeling that a debate should take place on this matter, in order to bring to the attention of the Canadian National Railway and its president the need for, at the very least, a postponement of this decision for six weeks in view of the protests that may follow.

You will not mind if I point out, Mr. Speaker, that there is a motion for interim supply to follow which undoubtedly will give an opportunity to me and other members who are interested to speak on this problem. However, I want to put it to you that if, as I believe, this matter is of urgent importance, it deserves the significance of having the house accept this motion to give it the effect that I think it needs in order to put over to this crown agency, which has taken this action despite the representations that have been made, that to go ahead would involve consequences which I do not think I over estimate in presenting this motion to the house.

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): In seconding the motion moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur, Mr. Speaker, I am activated by the same concern for the railway employees which he indicated in sponsoring this motion. The situation regarding this proposed run-through operation is most controversial, and the railway employees feel that unilateral action has been taken by management to impose this change on the railway employees concerned. The railway employees feel that the urge by the railway companies to economize by instituting the new run-through system should not be acted upon without due consideration for its effect on the employees and their families, and on the economies of the local communities involved. Surely, with new railway legislation pending, there is a logical reason for a reappraisal of this whole program.

What the hon. member for Port Arthur has mentioned with regard to Wainwright and Nakina, which are isolated instances, will be felt all over Canada and particularly in my own city of Melville, because there will be this change in pattern. It is for this reason, and because of the threatened deterioration of our system, that I urge some consideration be given to this matter.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, while the matter raised by the hon. member is undoubtedly one of considerable importance, particularly in the two areas concerned, the point at issue here as I see it relates to the urgency of debate on this matter, and as to whether the matter is one coming under the administrative responsibility of the government. The purpose of rule 26, I respectfully submit, is to permit the discussion of a matter that is, by its nature, of such urgency that debate is required, taking precedence over all other opportunities in the house for discussing the matter and interrupting the ordinary business of the house for that purpose. It is a very extraordinary remedy and must be limited under the circumstances. In addition it is, of course, quite clear that it must be something related to the administrative responsibilities of the government.

As to the first point, the urgency of debate, I would draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that at the conclusion of the business of the house last night the item of business indicated for today was interim supply, when it is possible for an hon. member to raise a grievance against the government in the area of the government's administration. Therefore if the matter is indeed one that comes under the responsibility of the government administratively, it is properly discussable on interim supply which will come in a few minutes, I hope, when we reach orders of the day. Of course if it is not one within the administrative responsibility of the government then it is not something upon which a motion under standing order 26 can be raised.

I would like to direct Your Honour's attention to the first sentence in citation 100 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which says:

> The definite matter of urgent public importance for the discussion of which a member may ask leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 must involve the administrative responsibility of the government.

I want to point out that while this question of run-throughs may properly be of great concern to all hon. members, it is a matter for the administration of the Canadian National Railways, a statutory corporation created by statute of parliament; that parliament has divested the government of responsibility for the operation of the railway and has seen fit to give that administrative responsibility to the Canadian National Railways by statute.

In support of that proposition I would refer Your Honour to an attempt made on March 13, 1961, by a former minister of transport to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26. On that occasion the matter had to do with a rather substantial proposed lay-off of men in the Montreal region. When the then hon. member for Laurier presented his motion he was advised by Mr. Speaker as follows, and I quote from page 2903 of Hansard for that date:

> I shall be glad to hear the hon. member. I assume that it is a matter of importance, but the urgency that is involved is urgency of debate. I think I should like to hear the hon. member on the question of whether or not this is one of the administrative responsibilities of the ministry. It seems to me that the point may be well taken that it is a decision of the Canadian National Railways on its own authority.

That was very early in the attempt made by the hon. member to move the adjournment, and after considerable discussion, as recorded at page 2907 of Hansard, in giving his ruling Mr. Speaker went on to say:

> The problem of their employment is, of course, an important matter to them at least and of significance to the Montreal area. However, parliament has given to the Canadian National Railways the responsibility for administering the railway and included in administration is the responsibility for all labour policy. It is true that parliament can change the legislation but it is not true, as I see it, that the government can intervene to direct Canadian National Railways to do something different.

At a later point he said:

> It would be necessary for parliament to amend its Canadian National Railways legislation, if an enforceable decision is to be made or an effective remedy applied.
>
> That may not appeal to all hon. members as a correct summary of the situation, but in addition to that point I think that lay-offs of this kind, whether isolated or part of a pattern, are a continuing problem of employees of the government owned railway which will be coming before the house from time to time when it is sitting, and should be dealt with on the occasions on which it is possible to debate the administrative policies of the Canadian National Railways and the control of these policies by parliament.
>
> I therefore regretfully have to refuse the hon. member leave.

I suggest that the motion proposed today is directly parallel to the type of situation faced in 1961, and that leave should be refused for the reasons stated by the Speaker on that date.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words with respect to the question of urgency of debate. The President of the Privy Council relied heavily on his contention that matters raised under standing order 26 must be matters within the administrative responsibility of the government. May I point out, however, that standing order 26 does not impose any such limitation; it is drawn to make possible discussion of questions of urgent public importance, and nowhere is discussion limited to matters which come under the administrative responsibility of the government. I would point out that only recently this house passed a provisional amendment to standing order 26, which implies that we have reviewed this standing order, and we did not feel it necessary to put in language of the kind the President of the Privy Council has just used.

The hon. gentleman quoted from citation 100 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. Of course he is a lawyer and I am not; therefore we have different views about precedents. But the citation he quoted is taken from a ruling given by Mr. Speaker Bowman in the House of Commons on May 22, 1935. All it amounted to was a ruling of the Speaker on that occasion. Anyone would agree, I think, that we should look at what was placed before Mr. Speaker Bowman on that occasion. In fact it was a motion to adjourn the house to discuss a certain matter, namely the presence of a large number of men from unemployment relief camps in the city of Vancouver. The contention put forward by those who opposed that motion—the contention accepted by Mr. Speaker Bowman—was that this was a matter which came within the responsibility of the provincial and municipal authorities.

I suggest the conclusion that it could not be brought before the house because it did not come within the administrative responsibility of the government was in the nature of an obiter dictum. All that Mr. Speaker said on that date was that this was a matter which came under the jurisdiction of the province of British Columbia or the city of Vancouver. I suggest, therefore, that it is improper to take that sentence out of Mr. Speaker Bowman's ruling and make it part of standing order 26, which it is not.

Standing order 26 provides for the discussion of a matter which is of urgent public importance. There is a limitation that it must be a matter on which debate is urgent. But we in parliament may feel that there are matters beyond those within direct governmental responsibility which should be discussed in this national forum and I submit, therefore, that this particular argument of the President of the Privy Council falls to the ground.

I submit also that the hon. gentleman's contention that there is a parallel between what was proposed by Mr. Chevrier a few years ago and what is asked for today by my hon. friend from Port Arthur does not stand up. These are totally different matters. The concern then was the employment of a certain group of people. The concern now is a policy, the putting of which into effect could result in tying up the Canadian National main line right across this country. I suggest there is a difference, and that the case established for the urgency of debate is a prima facie case.

The only other point made by the President of the Privy Council is that interim supply has been listed as an item for debate today. My hon. friend from Port Arthur has already referred to this, and in my view he has a valid case in suggesting that this subject is in itself so important that it should be discussed now, not when anything else can intervene or at a time when it could only be sandwiched in among various speeches on other subjects on the motion for interim supply.

For these reasons I think Your Honour should recognize that the subject raised is one which meets the urgency of debate requirement.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, there is just one matter I should like to add. The President of the Privy Council made the point that today we would be taking up interim supply. He also mentioned that the question before us was not one of government responsibility or one which should be discussed in parliament.

Mr. McIlraith: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Aiken: The fallacy of this argument is that if we can discuss it on interim supply surely it is a matter which can be discussed in parliament. I suggest that this would bring it under standing order 26. The President of the Privy Council cannot have it both ways.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, there is a point here; I am sure the hon. member does not wish to misrepresent what I said. I did not for one moment suggest that this was a subject matter which could not be raised for debate in parliament. It is a subject matter which can be raised for debate in parliament. My point was that it is not a subject matter that warrants the usage of standing order 26, because standing order 26 can only be made applicable to those matters which come under the direct administrative responsibility of the government. Therefore it must be debated in other areas of debate available in parliament. So the two points are quite separate. I never for one moment suggested that this was not a subject matter which should be debated in parliament.

Mr. Aiken: Just one word in reply to that. Standing order 26 refers to a definite matter of urgent public importance and I am sure does not limit itself in the way suggested by the President of the Privy Council. If it is a definite matter of urgent public importance, then it can be discussed under standing order 26. If it is not, then his argument about discussing it on interim supply today is not valid.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to help the Chair? If not, then first of all I should like to thank all hon. members who have contributed to the discussion and have been very helpful.

In my view there is no doubt about the importance here. Anything affecting the lives or the livelihood of seven or eight hundred people is certainly important. There is no doubt about the urgency of the matter, but in the view of Beauchesne in citation 100 (3), urgency means:

> "Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately

I may say in passing that in my view standing order 26 could apply to any public matter within the powers of the federal parliament.

As to the question of opportunity, Mr. Speaker Black on March 31, as reported at page 50 of the Journals for that day, said:

> The reason for allowing such a motion—
>
> —obviously under standing order 26.
>
> —for the adjournment is to afford members an opportunity of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance which they could do in no other way—

So we have these two citations; that "urgency" means urgency of debate, and the decision of Mr. Speaker Black in 1931 concerning giving members an opportunity of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance which they could do in no other way.

In view of the fact that interim supply was announced last night and that there will be almost immediate opportunity to discuss this matter, it does seem to the Chair that there will be every opportunity of discussing this matter within a matter of minutes. Therefore I regret that, in my opinion, consent to adjourn the house under standing order 26 should not be granted at this time.

PROPOSED RUN-THROUGH CHANGES—COMMUNICATIONS WITH COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would now direct a question to the Acting Minister of Transport in connection with the action being taken by the Canadian National Railways. I asked him a question on this matter yesterday, and he said he would communicate with the C.N.R.

I would also ask whether, having regard to the very serious repercussions which could follow such action, which is almost peremptory in its nature, and the effect this action would have on the railway employees who have always given of their best, and on the general economy of the country, would the minister say whether he suggested to the president or to other executives of the C.N.R. that, under all the circumstances, the public interest demands a postponement of this action?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Well, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman's question was rather lengthy, and he made certain statements about the nature of the action proposed to be taken. For example, he used such phrases as "almost peremptory" and so on. In a difference of this importance between the management of the railway, which parliament has charged with the operation thereof, and the employees I would not want to have any remarks of mine interpreted in such a way as to indicate that I was taking one side or other in the difference which exists.

Having said that, I want to go on to say this. I do not know whether it is proper to refer to the Hansard blues, but as quickly as the blues could be obtained yesterday the actual text in connection with this matter was immediately communicated to the railway management. There was no instruction given, or—I have forgotten the word the right hon. gentleman used—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think a good word would be "recommendation" from the minister.

Mr. McIlraith: There was no recommendation on the part of the acting minister as to what action should be taken by the railways, because I do not know whether that would be welcomed; I suspect it might not. In any event, I did not see fit to go beyond the authority granted to the minister under the legislation by taking this action. Perhaps I will have to leave my answer in that way.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not quite get the answer, Mr. Speaker, so I am rather uncertain about this. Was this suggestion met by silence on the part of the officials and the head of the C.N.R., or was it just disregarded? Because somehow the minister's answer seemed to die away.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the answer died away because I do not know that it is proper for me to discuss the details of the conversations that have taken place. A great many discussions on this subject have gone on in the last week with the responsible officials in the railway company, and I do not think it is appropriate or proper for me to give the details of those conversations, other than to say this. Each representation, whether made in the house or made outside the house, by delegations either from communities or from unions, was communicated very promptly to the railway management, and there has been a great deal of responsible consideration given to this subject.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then would the minister say, as to this question which was raised yesterday and which is of such importance, it having been placed before the president of the C.N.R., whether he gave an audible answer?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the president of the C.N.R. is always audible.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he actually got a negative reply, not to any persuasions he may have attempted but to representations. In other words, has the C.N.R. told him they are not going to postpone it but are going ahead?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I have received no firm negative reply.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he has consulted with the Minister of Labour and his officials about this particular problem, and whether they have brought forward any suggestions that might be useful in clearing up this situation.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have consulted with him to a great extent on this matter. We have had discussions about possible methods of dealing with the problems posed by the railwaymen in relation to the possible effect run-throughs might have.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Would the minister inform the house whether he has received an unfirm negative reply from the railway officials?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Have the minister and the Minister of Labour been in touch with the employees concerned to ascertain whether we are going to have a stoppage on the transcontinental line next week?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I do not think any of the employees have taken that position. In respect of all these disputes there is a great deal of talk, rumour and so on. I do not think it is fair for me to guess as to what action will be taken by the railway employees or by management in this difficult situation.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Prime Minister?

Could he ask members of the other place to stop taking holidays all the time and to sit a little more often, so as to pass the bills being studied by their committees, including the one relating to the establishment of the bank of British Columbia?

Mr. Speaker: May I point out that this question is out of order.

[Text]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—INQUIRY AS TO INCREASED FOOD SHIPMENTS FROM CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I am not sure whether I should address this question to him, to the Minister of Agriculture or to the Minister of External Affairs, but in view of the fact he is the minister present I will direct it to him. In view of the critical food situation in India, is any special action being taken under any of our food aid programs?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the government is well aware of the very critical situation facing India at the present time because of the shortage of food. We have made known to the government of India our willingness to assist in the provision of wheat, in particular, and other foods if they are useful to them. We have had no request for aid.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Has there been any communication between the government and the administration of the world food program or the FAO?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been in continuing communication with the world food program, and we have received no request from the FAO to provide assistance to the food aid program to India.

AGRICULTURE

TURKEYS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF REFERENCE TO TARIFF BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, October 15 the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale directed a question to me, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, concerning the tariff on live turkeys.

Further to my answer of that day, I am pleased to be able to inform the hon. member that the Minister of Finance has referred the question of the tariff on live turkeys to the tariff board for study and report, with the request that the board deal with this matter as promptly as possible. It is expected that the board will shortly be issuing the notice of hearings on this matter.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that this study and report will take some time and will not be of any material help to producers at this stage, is any consideration being given to a reimposition of import controls?

Mr. Beer: Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that the minister will be in consultation with the federation of turkey producers on Monday of next week, and any announcement will be made by the minister.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would it be possible, until the tariff board makes a decision, to put the tariff back on, or fix quotas?

Mr. Beer: Mr. Speaker, that would be a matter of government policy, and I am sure any announcement will be made at the appropriate time.

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR INCREASED MILK SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture—and it seems one must preface questions at all times with that remark—may I direct a question to the acting minister, or the Minister of Forestry.

Miss LaMarsh: Look at your front benches.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They are not ministers with the responsibilities of the ministers of the crown, and that is something which you over there should learn. In view of ministerial absences we are unable to obtain answers. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but it was the intrusion of a completely improper remark that caused me to say that.

I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry, because he is responsible for many of these things. Has l'union catholique des cultivateurs been in touch with the government regarding the serious dairy industry situation in Quebec? Is consideration now being given by the government to that union's request that the subsidy of 30 cents a hundred pounds of milk for industrial purposes be raised to 40 cents?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the house that there will be meetings among the Minister of Agriculture, the Quebec government and representatives of l'union catholique des cultivateurs in coming weeks for that purpose.

RAPESEED—ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASE IN QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I answered a question asked by the hon. member for Rosthern about quotas on rapeseed. I said the indications were that the quotas could be increased in the near future. Indeed, the quotas were increased almost as soon as the words were out of my mouth, so I thought perhaps I ought to inform the house that the wheat board has just announced an increase, effective October 26, for flaxseed and rapeseed quotas as follows. For flaxseed the quota was increased from 5 to 10 bushels per seeded acre of flaxseed for all stations in western Canada or 400 bushels, whichever is the larger; for rapeseed, in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, the quota was increased from 5 to 10 bushels per seeded acre of rapeseed or 400 bushels, whichever is the larger; for Alberta, the quota was increased from 5 to 8 bushels per seeded acre of rapeseed or 325 bushels, whichever is the larger.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): This information is very helpful to the rapeseed producers, but quite often at this time of year the wheat board removes the quotas altogether for some areas. Will the minister not make representations to the Canadian wheat board to follow the usual practice of removing the quotas?

Mr. Sharp: As I said yesterday, the quotas on rapeseed are related to the market requirements. As the hon. member knows, stocks are more than ample at the present time.

PENITENTIARIES

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL—REQUEST FOR TOUR BY MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of a press story which appeared this morning in the Toronto Globe and Mail, which indicated that the minister intends to make a personal inspection of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary in Montreal, accompanied by the Minister of Public Works, will the minister make arrangements so that as many members of parliament as may wish may participate in this visit?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to arrange for a visit by members of parliament, but one must bear in mind the various factors and circumstances involved in such a visit, including such things as the necessary precautions to be taken and limits to the number of persons visiting penitentiaries at any one time. I wish the hon. member had given me notice of his question so I might have consulted with the commissioner of penitentiaries and other authorities. We know that the visit which has been planned will take place under circumstances fully consistent with the operation of a penitentiary. I should be very pleased to arrange for a visit by hon. members if given due time to properly consider what relevant factors exist in this respect.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Has the minister forgotten that I asked him about a week ago whether he would arrange such a tour, and his answer to the effect that he would give it consideration?

Mr. Favreau: Of course I said I would give that request consideration, and I am considering it. The hon. member should not complain within ten days of making that request. One visit has been arranged for him and a group, and another visit has been authorized. I do not think anything can be said that would make it appear there is any reluctance on the part of the Department of Justice to organize such a visit in order that members of parliament may see what is taking place in penitentiaries. More will be said about that in the very near future. What I said was that rather than refer in the house to a newspaper article which appeared this morning and which I have had no occasion to read as yet, the hon. member could have notified me in advance.

Mr. Peters: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I agree there is some displacement when these visits take place, but because of the nature of the visit outlined in the minister's press statement would it not be more advantageous from the point of view of the operation of the penitentiary for the whole visit to take place at the same time as the visit by the large number of press people you have already invited, when a certain amount of dislocation of operations is going to occur anyway?

Mr. Favreau: Of course, Mr. Speaker, the reason I gave the answer I did is precisely that I should like to have the opportunity to discuss the matter fully with the officers of the penitentiary commission. All I can say for the moment is that this visit has been arranged, and it is consistent with the proper operation of the penitentiary. This is why I should like to have the opportunity to consider further the matter of a visit by members of parliament, as it might well be that doubling the number of visitors would have serious consequences.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say how many newspapermen are going to accompany him on this crusade?

Mr. Favreau: I have not made the arrangements personally, Mr. Speaker, but I have asked that the proper measures be taken so that the penitentiary will be properly operated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Chapleau.

Mr. Scott: A supplementary question. Does the minister's announcement mean—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Chapleau. There have already been three or four supplementaries, and perhaps we could give the hon. member for Chapleau the opportunity to ask his question. If the hon. member has a question on this subject he might return to it later.

Mr. Scott: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I submit with respect that surely the practice of the house has been that supplementaries are permitted, in a great many cases endlessly, and as this is an important subject—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fisher: Listen to the angry roar over there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair did not deny the hon. member the right to ask a question. He will have an opportunity to do so within a very few minutes.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL—INQUIRY AS TO NEW CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works regarding his pending visit on Monday next to St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary and the proposed press conference at 4.30 that afternoon at the Leclair institute. Has the minister any plans to announce at that press conference regarding the building of a new penitentiary?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, after the visit to this building by the Minister of Justice and myself, it is proposed to have a press conference to answer questions. At this time I cannot say whether we have any definite plans for St. Vincent de Paul.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SUGAR

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INQUIRY INTO PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, but not along the same lines. Can the minister tell the house whether, following last year's excessive increase in the price of sugar, an investigation was held by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission under the Combines Investigation Act and, if so, what are the results?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that he put his question on the order paper?

Mr. Grégoire: Why?

[Text]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

RATE OF PAYMENT FOR EXTRA CHRISTMAS STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. In view of the questions raised by the Ontario department of labour, is the government considering paying Christmas postal staff less than the minimum Ontario wage and less than the proposed federal minimum wage?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, a brief answer would be no. Actually I think the hon. member's question arises out of a discussion that took place at the annual meeting of the Canadian postmasters association held here earlier this week. I took advantage of the presence of the postmasters in Ottawa to discuss certain things that were taking place, and I announced on that occasion that in semi-staff and revenue post offices a rate of 95 cents per hour would be payable to Christmas help.

This is not less than the minimum rate There is legislation in the province of British Columbia fixing a minimum rate of $1, but for inexperienced help you can go as low as 85 cents. Similar legislation exists in Ontario, where the minimum rate is $1 but there is a leeway of 10 per cent for beginners or inexperienced help. The people, who are taken on in revenue post offices and semi-staff offices, not in the staff offices which are in the cities, are frequently high school students and others who are relatively inexperienced. Therefore in trying to establish what would be fair on a national basis we have picked 95 cents per hour, which is the highest provincial minimum established by statute in any of the 10 provinces.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Without wishing to be facetious, is this the spirit that the government is going to adopt in connection with its minimum wage of $1.25 an hour?

Mr. Nicholson: No, Mr. Speaker, it is in line with the spirit of the legislation. If the hon. member has read the bill introduced by the government, he will have seen that the objective of $1.25 is to be reached by July 1, 1966; and when we at this time move in the post office field from rates as low as 60 cents in some of the provinces to 95 cents, we are moving progressively in the direction envisaged by the proposed legislation.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question on this point. In view of the fact that most of these temporary workers are repeaters who have done the work from year to year for a considerable number of years, would the minister not agree that these are experienced people, and that the action of the department does violate the spirit of the Ontario minimum wage act?

Mr. Nicholson: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I will agree with the hon. gentleman that in cities of any size in Canada many of the Christmas helpers are experienced. In the case of the cities however, we do pay a minimum of $1 in all staff offices, as distinguished from semi-staff or revenue offices. The minimum is $1, and for heavy work the minimum is $1.25.

Mr. Aiken: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Post Office Department now giving general reconsideration to the question of postal contracts, which was raised in connection with the Minister of Labour's bill? Is general reconsideration being given to all postal contract rates in relation to that bill?

Mr. Nicholson: The answer is yes. The matter is under consideration, and officials of my department have discussed it at length with officials of the Department of Labour.

INQUIRY AS TO BOARD OF REVIEW ON "HATE" LITERATURE DISTRIBUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. I wonder if he is in a position to advise the house when the review board in connection with the distribution of hate literature will be holding meetings, and whether the public will be admitted?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): I am glad to be able to inform the hon. gentleman and other members of the house that I have nominated the three men whom I would like to see act on a board of review. They were to be approached either yesterday or today, and if all three accept I hope to be able to announce at the beginning of the week the composition of the board of review and the place and date of the hearing. They have to get together and agree upon a date. I consider the matter of this board of review one of great urgency, because there has been a splurge of literature and at recent public meetings this has been referred to. Items appearing in the press suggest that box No. 11 in one of the Toronto postal stations is still being used by individuals engaged in the distribution of this type of offensive literature.

I should like to clarify that situation. This box No. 11 was one of the boxes that I closed last spring because it was rented by a person who I learned had been engaged in the distribution of this literature. I exercised the power which I had under the act and closed it. After the box was closed it was entirely removed from any association with this type of activity. Subsequently it was rented to a person for normal, legitimate purposes. I am assured it is not used in connection with any activities that might be associated with the distribution of hate literature. In other words the statements on this subject that have been appearing in Toronto and other newspapers are erroneous.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MENTAL RETARDATION—FUNDS FOR RESEARCH AND CARE

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Eloise Jones (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the serious lack of funds for adequate research and care of the mentally retarded, and since this is an urgent Canada-wide problem as revealed at the dominion-provincial conference which has just terminated, will the minister recommend to the government the setting aside of a special fund to meet this pressing need, over and above the present inadequate matching grants?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would have appreciated the hon. member giving me notice. As she knows, this conference, the first of its type ever called in Canada, ended only yesterday. Reports were prepared by all the experts who were in attendance, and these reports have not yet found their way to my desk.

I cannot agree with what the hon. lady says about the inadequacy of the health grants, in that there has not been a request heretofore for an increase in the grants for this purpose. The hon. lady may not yet know that at this time of year all departments begin the preparation of their estimates for the coming year and this is one matter, of course, which will receive particular attention.

However, she probably will know, as will many members of the public, that the chief recommendations given publicity to date have not been for an increase in grants of money but for co-ordination and assistance in assuring that the four or five provincial departments which deal with the matter of retardation do so in a co-ordinated way.

UNITED NATIONS

UNESCO—VOTE OF CANADIAN DELEGATION ON ADMISSION OF CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister has an answer to the question I asked yesterday concerning how the Canadian delegation at the UNESCO conference voted on the admission of mainland China.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to talk to the Secretary of State for External Affairs about this matter, as he has been in touch with our delegation in Paris, but he is out of town today on official business. However, although this may not be a complete answer to my hon. friend's question—and if not it can be supplemented next week—I have learned that there was no vote at the UNESCO conference on admitting communist China. This incident arose over the challenging in the credentials committee of the credentials of the nationalist Chinese delegate. Canada was not represented on that committee. The validity of those credentials was upheld. The plenary assembly did vote on a resolution put forward in the same sense as that on which the credentials committee had ruled, namely the validity of the credentials of the Chinese delegate, and his credentials were upheld. Canada, at the plenary assembly, voted with the majority.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE—CONSIDERATION OF SENIORITY AND VETERANS PREFERENCE IN LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Yesterday the hon. member for Cape Breton South asked the following question which I took as notice:

> Does the trade testing of qualified employees at the Point Edward naval base, and the proposed lay-off of tradesmen without right to seniority or veterans preference, represent government policy?

Well, Mr. Speaker, there was a suggestion that certain categories of employees at the Point Edward naval base should be trade tested in order to determine their qualifications for continuing employment, but it is not proposed to proceed with this trade testing program. As hon. members know, the Department of National Defence has for many years used a point system for determining the order of release when it becomes necessary to reduce the staff of hourly rated employees at any defence establishment. This system gives points for seniority, for wartime overseas service with the armed forces and for efficiency. This system has been used to determine which qualified employees were to be retained when it became necessary to reduce staff at the Point Edward naval base in the past, and will continue to be used in the future.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In view of the imminent report on juvenile delinquency, has the minister yet decided whether this report will be made public when it is received by him?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): This is one thing which I have yet to consider finally, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMMIGRATION

TORONTO—STATUS OF PERSONS CONCERNED WITH NEWSPAPER STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether he has yet completed his study of the reference to him concerning the newspaper strike in Toronto, and particularly the six individuals who are here without status. If so, can he give a report to the house this morning?

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member for the delay in obtaining the information he requested from my parliamentary secretary concerning the six persons who were admitted at Toronto and who do not yet have any status. I will do everything possible in order to obtain this information and give it to the hon. member Monday or Tuesday next, because I deem that it is important for him to obtain it.

[Text]

Mr. Scott: May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister give us any reasonable explanation as to why it is taking so long to get this information? Surely the information is available by picking up the telephone and talking to the officials in Toronto.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I requested this information, but as everyone knows, due to the various levels of government, communications must be effected at every level until they reach the Toronto authorities.

This information related to particulars concerning the trade and various types of work being performed at present at Toronto by those persons, and I believe that this matter requires several days of investigation.

However, I will do my best to give this information as soon as I shall receive it.

[Text]

INDUCEMENTS TO ENCOURAGE ENTRANCE OF DOCTORS, NURSES, ETC.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether he has anything to report on his endeavours to influence doctors, nurses and technicians from the United Kingdom to come to Canada?

[Mr. Favreau.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I suggest that perhaps this is a question that might be put on the order paper. I wonder if in view of the time that has been spent on these questions, we should not proceed to orders of the day?

Mr. Rynard: I have just this to say on that point. This question was asked some weeks ago, and I think the minister probably has an answer.

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I had already answered the hon. member when he asked his question.

[Text]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF COURT OF CLAIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration if he is yet in a position to announce the time or date of the introduction into the house of a bill respecting the Indian claims commission.

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, this bill, as amended, is part of the total legislative program of the government, and this is announced by the house leader on behalf of the government, as parliament proceeds with its work.

I will tell the hon. member that at present we are actively engaged in revising this bill and that it should soon be introduced.

[Text]

INDUSTRY

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF TAX ON PRODUCTION MACHINERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fred F. Stenson (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. It arises from the statement he made in Toronto yesterday to the effect that the federal government is considering direct financial aid to private industry for new projects designed to develop better products. The minister said Canada was lagging behind in this field and my question is, does he not feel that the tax on production machinery should be removed immediately? I feel this would be a start in the development of projects of this type.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I suggest this is a question for the order paper.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. McIlraith moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $740,710,-974.77, being the aggregate of

(a) two twelfths of the total of all of the items to be voted in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, as reduced, except finance item 15, mines and technical surveys item 25, national research council item 10, and transport items 15 and 25 for which the proportion is one twelfth and atomic energy item 5, external affairs item 20, forestry item 25 and legislation item 20 for which no proportion is being released, $651,-829,576.84;

(b) an additional two twelfths of the amount of public works item 70 (schedule A), of the said main estimates, $666,666.67;

(c) an additional one twelfth of the amount of fisheries items 5 and 10, legislation item 5, mines and technical surveys item 70, post office item 1 and public works item 40 (schedule B), of the said main estimates, $20,263,800.00;

(d) two twelfths of all of the items to be voted in the supplementary estimates (A), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except national defence item 56a and loans, investments and advances items L12a, L17a and L37a for which no proportion is being released, $20,612,-522.50;

(e) an additional two twelfths of the amount of transport item 103a (Schedule C), of the said supplementary estimates (A), $872,966.67;

(f) nine twelfths of the total of the items to be voted in the supplementary estimates (B), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $46,215,108.75;

(g) two twelfths of the amount of transport item 103b (schedule D), of the said supplementary estimates (B), $250,333.34, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965.

Mr. Ormiston: Mr. Chairman, the discussion of interim supply gives us an opportunity to accept the suggestion kindly put forward by the President of the Privy Council, the Acting Minister of Transport, to debate some of the matters concerning the management of Canadian National Railways and the implementation of some of the run-through systems which it is anticipated will be coming into effect in the next few days.

The hon. member for Port Arthur outlined the situation in a clear and concise manner, and other hon. members primarily interested in this problem include the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, myself, and the other hon. member who spoke earlier this morning. The problem involved is not new. It has been with us for several years, and the situation is likely to deteriorate before it becomes any better.

The Acting Minister of Transport is well aware of the situation. In the past he has been very co-operative, as a matter of fact sympathetic, and I am sure he has made every effort to bring the representations of the railway employees to the attention of management. Evidently, however, these representations have fallen on deaf ears, and we believe the new run-through system will be introduced in some areas very shortly.

At a time when the economy is fairly buoyant it is unfortunate that some areas of our country will suffer as a result of the proposals of Canadian National Railways. Trainmen have lived in these areas for many years, building up comfortable communities, and now it is possible that in the near future the population of these areas will be depleted as a result of the adoption of the run-through system. The basic idea of this system is that trainmen will spend longer time over longer distances performing their duties in running trains. This means that the turnaround points will be too far away for return trips, and will cut down on the time train crews are able to spend at home.

This is an inconvenience to the trainmen and their families, and I believe their feelings and the impact of this on their morale should be taken into consideration by management, which on many occasions has expressed its concern for the welfare of the workers. It must be evident that when employees are antagonistic to a system being imposed on them, their work will suffer.

The employees realize automation is inevitable and that management is willing to make certain concessions, but up to the present very little consideration has been given to the reasonable requests of railwaymen who will be greatly inconvenienced by the new run-through system. Inevitably the population of some towns will be reduced, thus changing the economy of the areas around them.

Some consideration—and I do not mean just monetary consideration—must be given to employees who will be displaced. The run-through system may have some advantages. Possibly it will be more economical to the railway companies, but if the employees operating the trains are dissatisfied the railway operation in itself will suffer. Because of this we are asking the minister and the government to give consideration to some of the representations which have been made, and I urge the minister, his departmental officials and the railway management to sit down and once more discuss and analyse the situation in so far as it applies to railway employees.

I suppose I am fortunate in that the system is not to be introduced immediately in my area, but I understand it will be soon effective in other areas, and many areas will be adversely affected by it.

I feel the management of the C.N.R. has a responsibility to sit down again with the unions and try to work out a reasonable solution to this problem, which has been a festering sore for the last couple of years. Those members of the house who are more directly interested in these questions will be able to corroborate the statements I have made regarding the inconvenience which will be caused to these employees of the C.N.R. particularly, and a great deal of inconvenience will probably be caused to the travelling public as well. As the hon. member for Port Arthur has told us, time is running short, but I should like the minister to do everything in his power to see whether some solution can be reached to this urgent problem.

Mr. Fisher: The step which the C.N.R. proposes to take on October 25 is another incident in what I have thought of all along as a long—and I am tempted to use the word "slimy"—series of incidents in which over the past decade the management of this railway has been following a policy amounting to "divide and rule". It has been a process of doing a little bit here and a little bit there; a process of changes and shifts, never coming out into the open with a clearcut plan. In the meantime they have managed to create an atmosphere in which you have a president of a railway who is probably as detested by a large group of people in Canada as anyone could possibly imagine.

It is not my purpose here to throw recriminations at Mr. Donald Gordon, but I wish to put this point before the committee. We are seeing the death arranged of communities in this country as a consequence of huge sums which this parliament has approved to allow the C.N.R. to make changes. We have approved the spending of billions of dollars to allow the C.N.R. to modernize, dieselize, introduce central traffic control and so on.

Members of this house who have served on the railway committee before which Mr. Gordon appears every year know that for a number of years I, in association with others in this house, have brought up this problem and tried to discuss the way in which the C.N.R. could make the adjustment. Only last July when Mr. Gordon was before the committee he was asked directly whether there were to be any more run-throughs in connection with the changes proposed as a result of dieselization. We also asked where these run-throughs would take place, if any were proposed.

We were fobbed off with the general answer that the C.N.R. was not yet in a position to reply. On September 15 it was announced to the local chairman at a divisional point that it had been decided to abandon the whole terminal of Nakina and run through. A parallel situation is that at Wainwright. There is no general plan. The C.N.R. refused to negotiate this question with the men's representatives in the unions at bargaining and contract time. Instead, they do a little here and a little there. They did it at Sioux Lookout; they did it at Belleville; they will never present a common problem.

I am sick of our approving expenditures for the Department of Labour to set up manpower consultative services, to study the effects of automation and how best to meet technological change. Here we have a prime example of technological change and its consequences. But are we prepared?

As the member most affected by the change to be introduced this Saturday, I have obviously played my hand incorrectly. This is a problem national in its scope. I thought the way to proceed was to make representations to the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Labour; to approach the problem quietly, with common sense and realism. Obviously an approach of this kind has not done any good. The Acting Minister of Transport by his remarks earlier today gave an indication that he sees himself, or his function, as simply a funnel or channel through which representations can be made. He regards himself as, in a sense, equivalent to a telegraph clerk or somebody who links up an intercom system. He did not seem to think he was in a position, in his relationship with the company, to add any force of persuasion at all.

In other words, in the representations we have made to the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Labour to the effect that there really is a good case for postponing this important move, we have not been able to carry conviction, or else the Acting Minister of Transport feels he is in a strait-jacket because of the type of relationship which exists between the government and this crown agency and is unable to intervene in favour of this postponement.

One of the worst grey areas we have is this relationship between crown agencies and parliament. We know we are not administrators. We know we are not executives. But, somehow, the only way the spending of these agencies and the appointments to them can be legalized is by ourselves, acting in consort, doing something about it. We are on the scene; somehow or other we are in there. Yet we seem to be denied, perhaps properly so, any great influence; all we can do is talk about these things.

Well, talking is not very effective if one is talking to ministers who are not prepared to argue the case and take it to the head of the crown agency concerned, in this case the head of the C.N.R. I contend that the government should take a direct interest in this situation. For the first time a home terminal of the C.N.R. is being wiped out. A home terminal is a terminal from which railroaders operate. I contend that this is probably an illegal action, and I am prepared at this time to say I will go into my area and work with the railroaders there in meeting this problem by what is possibly another illegal action, namely by a refusal to give service when the date comes. I may be penalized, and so may these men, for refusing to offer services on Saturday night. It may be held that a crime is being committed under the Criminal Code, but this is the situation to which long-suffering employees are brought in the absence of a constructive approach by management to grave situations such as this.

Knowing the minister personally and the interest he has taken in this—the good Lord knows the hon. gentleman has listened to me and I have listened to him in the last few weeks—it occurs to me he may think I am exaggerating, dealing in hyperbole because I am speaking in a public forum and appealing beyond it. But I would point out to the hon. gentleman how little is being asked for. The C.N.R. decided in mid-September to introduce changes on October 25 which will lead to the death of a town. It decided that on such short notice as this it would change traffic arrangements which have been in effect for generations. Is it not reasonable to ask for a postponement?

We have before the house at the present time amendments to the Railway Act. We have all been told about the scope of this legislation based on the deliberations of a royal commission. Included in it are provisions dealing with section 182 of the Railway Act which has been a matter of contention for a decade. Only a couple of weeks ago the railway brotherhoods were in to see the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Transport about this particular section, whether it is not possible to give men better protection when railways go through with these grand changes that dislocate jobs. Surely the fact that the legislation is before us is worth advancing as a reason for the postponement.

I think the minister likes technical points, so I would mention this. The Railway Act is before the house for amendment. It is the right of everyone to move amendments, and I have already indicated that I am going to offer an amendment to section 182 of the act which, if accepted by the house, will have the effect of bringing situations such as those existing in Nakina or Wainwright under the purview of the act. And I think I have a good prospect of getting this amendment accepted, because I remind the minister that last year our railway committee approved the subject matter of a public bill which I brought before it. Among the recommendations made by the railway committee, which is the same committee which will be handling the Railway Act, there was a strong recommendation that this kind of situation be met by a change in legislation. Surely I am right in assuming that this situation may come under the Railway Act as amended, and it indicates that the door should be left open and this decision postponed. That is the Railway Act aspect of the matter.

I wonder how many hon. members noticed, Mr. Chairman, that recently the Canadian Pacific Railway announced that it would suspend passenger operations on its day-liner service between Peterborough and Toronto. Public opinion geared the newspapers to take the matter up, members of parliament were contacted, representations were made and the acting minister expressed concern. A few days ago, before it was announced in the house the Canadian Pacific Railway indicated that it was not going to go ahead with the withdrawal of this passenger service at this time. I mention that as an indication that there is nothing fundamental about postponing something. It is a very simple request.

Yet Canadian National Railways have given no information at all about this matter. I have information that it has alerted its officials, trainmasters and so on, so that in the event there is a withdrawal of service the men who ordinarily move the transcontinental trains will be ready to move over for a period while the squeeze is put on the men. This information I have is reinforced by the fact that the C.N.R. has wired the people of Nakina to the effect that the offer made a couple of weeks ago—belatedly—to buy their homes still holds, which is surely an indication that there is some kind of conscience in this matter. Why would this offer be repeated if it was turned down by the men and by the community? It has been repeated because the company feels that this will be a sort of oyster for someone to reach for as the men begin to worry and to fear the power of this company if it does withdraw this service.

This is a power game, and the people who are under the power of this company are out along the periphery in small towns along the system without the resources of communications media which can really build up their case as the Peterborough case was built up. They do not have a couple of columnists in Toronto who were riding this dayliner and who built up the case in the newspapers. These people are exposed to the power of the major employer of the area, an employer who, in the main, has indicated that in matters like this it is prepared to be ruthless.

I have never liked the contention that the Minister of Transport is just a funnel through which you can drop something and it will get to the president of the Canadian National Railways. On the other hand, I am not one who believes that the Minister of Transport is at all times second guessing the president of the Canadian National Railways. Nevertheless we have to assume there is a relationship somewhere between the funnel and the Charlie McCarthy kind of act.

I suggest that the difference here is exposed in specific situations. Normally you leave the Canadian National Railways free from advice on minor matters, but when something major brews up it seems to me you have to have consultation and a rather full explanation of policy. One of the regrettable things, despite the questions which have been asked in the house, is that the minister has come into this place and given us no information at all on the Canadian National point of view. He could not even transmit a firm negative today. In other words the matter is still up in the air.

[Mr. Fisher.]

The situation roughly is this. Canadian National Railways, as a result of great expenditure, has to make changes in its arrangements. It feels it has to do this. It has not worked out any system of doing this. A lot of people say, why is it that Canadian National is in the van? Why is it that Donald Gordon always carries the ball and is the aggressor? Why is it not the Canadian Pacific Railway, the private enterprise outfit, which is in this position?

I will tell you why, Mr. Chairman, and it is very simple. The unions working under the Canadian Pacific Railway have protection because they have no big seniority districts, and no changes can be made in the working conditions of the contracts which affect them in any single one of the terminals. But the situation is different with the Canadian National. It is organized—and this has been very useful to the company over the years—in big seniority districts. In this way it can make a change which will wipe out Nakina and its railwaymen and will bump along all the way down through Capreol to Toronto, and so on, and there is no way the men can come at this as the railway interprets it.

There is an agreement in existence. There is a 1926 Montreal agreement entered into between the brotherhood of locomotive firemen and enginemen and the brotherhood of locomotive engineers and the C.N.R. Section 9 of that Montreal agreement sets out that no changes will be made in the set-up regarding home terminals without prior conference, arrangement and negotiation between the management and the unions. This agreement can only be rescinded on 30 days' notice. As far as I know this agreement still exists and is still in effect. The railway does not want to talk about it. It does not even want to give notice of rescission, because it knows that something will blow up. This brings a very large issue into some kind of arrangement for negotiation.

I do not think the Minister of Transport has really realized the way the C.N.R. has moved on this whole question of technological change. It has never given us any over-all policy. What they are doing in Wainwright is hitting the trainmen over the head with the club and leaving the firemen and engineers alone. At Nakina the situation is the opposite. They haggle and nip a piece off here and a piece off there and never give the railwaymen an opportunity of seeing what is the over-all plan or structure. I suppose that is good labour relations. It is good labour relations on the basis that the arrangement between management and labour is a war of some kind and that it is good to outsmart the opposition, but it really is not good enough in a situation where we have technological change of such scope.

What will this do to the town of Nakina; and it will bump others along the way? This is a town of 800 people. Approximately half of them are railroaders and dependants. In two years all will be gone. What are the consequences for a town which has a school, roads into it, a Legion and churches? In effect it means the end of the town. The town may have other prospects because of very large iron resources which happen to be nearby, but in effect it is a town created by Canadian National Railways, created by Sir Henry Thornton and killed by Donald Gordon. Surely there is a greater responsibility here than just making a decision like this. Nevertheless Mr. Gordon has decided to do it; and make no mistake about it, Mr. Chairman, this decision was not reached at the local level; this decision has come right out of Montreal. We are going to begin the ending of this town's existence. And this is only the first one. Biggar will be next. Wainwright is under the gun this time, of course.

Where is a policy to meet this situation? Are the Minister of Transport and his colleague the Minister of Labour going to keep on insisting that they can only transmit representations which are made, that they have no responsibility and that there is no onus on them to see that a better plan is forthcoming? This may be the new co-operative federalism, I do not know, but it certainly offers very little and makes hypocrisy of a great deal many of us have said here during our consideration of the estimates of the Department of Labour. I thought we were going to have some kind of reasoning and planning in this regard. The Minister of Labour is touting his doctrine of economic planning around the country, and we have created the new Department of Industry to do something about this whole question of planning and developing industry and regional co-ordination. I'll bet the Minister of Labour has never even heard of Nakina and Wainwright.

An hon. Member: And couldn't care less.

Mr. Fisher: That may be his Goldwater phase, but I do not know about that.

My point is that we have all these agencies and we have talked about our responsibilities in this situation, but when we get down to brass tacks we cannot even obtain a postponement. We cannot obtain any suggestions as to how these kind of changes should be made. I cannot go back to the people of Nakina and Wainwright and tell them that the saving of $40,000 or $50,000 of public money by the C.N.R. is worth the cost of social dislocation in those areas. This action on the part of that company is unilateral, and surely we have a greater responsibility to the people of these areas than has been indicated.

The premier of Ontario has made representations to the government in this respect. The minister of mines, who represents that area in Ontario, has made representations, the unions have made representations, and the communities have instructed their federal members here in parliament to make representations in this regard. The only answer to these representations we can obtain from the Minister of Transport is that he has passed them on. The Prime Minister has been approached in this regard. Women's associations in the area have approached the Minister of National Health and Welfare on the assumption that she, also being a woman, would be interested in their problem. I do not know what response she made. All I can say is that I hope consideration is being given to all aspects of the situation in which the people in this area find themselves.

Mr. Chairman, as I conclude my contribution to this debate I should like to refer to the seriousness of the political aspect of this situation. The thing that has galled me about the Liberal party ever since I was a small boy is their damnable arrogance as a total crew. I have always felt that Donald Gordon is sort of a perfect administrative instrument for that kind of arrogance that has been associated with the Liberal party and its record. It seems to me that one of the most galling things that can happen is for a minister of the crown, and the government, to assume that questions such as the one to which I have referred should be left to the administrative competence and decision of these crown agencies. That seems to me to be the core of Liberal party doctrine. Their doctrine seems to be that these questions should be left to be answered by those who know best, in this case the president of the C.N.R.

Mr. Chairman, we all know what happened to parliament under the Liberal regime up to 1957. It was falling away, and everything was being left to a group of administrative geniuses who supposedly knew how to do things. I want to inform the Acting Minister of Transport, much as I have appreciated all the assistance he has given in the last week or two, that I cannot help but read into the general reaction of the government the feeling that they assume they are really a funnel through which representations pass. I have noticed that in almost every case. That is an example of the existence of that same old Liberal arrogance.

Mr. Chairman, there is a final irony to this whole situation. Most railroaders along the Canadian National Railways tend to vote Liberal. This is a long tradition which goes back to the ability of Mackenzie King to settle railway strikes at the time of the first world war. This tradition is related to the fact that this region of Canada was settled during a Liberal administration many years ago, and the railroaders have tended to look at that party with kindness. The final irony is that one of the hardest things I have had to do, as have the Conservatives, has been to convince these men that all their faith placed in the Liberal party for so many years has been proven repeatedly during the last generation to be absolute nonsense.

I do not want to dot the "i" too much in this regard, but I will always remember the people of Redditt, Kenora and Sioux Lookout coming to Ottawa in conection with the same kind of problem a few years ago, on which occasion they discovered that the Liberal representative for Kenora had difficulty even arranging a meeting for them, let alone carrying their case.

I can only come to the conclusion that one of the features of this whole situation is that we have a government which refuses to even go to the trouble of asking, with some firmness, that the railway officials postpone this decision for six or eight weeks, or until this parliament can consider appropriate legislation. I do not think that in these circumstances I can do anything else than carry back to my area, or anywhere else I go in the country, the feeling that we have here an indifferent regime with that kind of arrogance I have come to identify with the Liberal party. All I can do is say how much I regret that this is my conclusion about the attitude of this government regarding a problem which I feel should be aside and apart from any partisanship or politicking.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, when this item was called I was in the process of rising in my place for the purpose of making it clear that the usual undertaking was being given in connection with this interim supply motion, that the passing of interim supply would not prejudice the position of hon. members. I want to make it clear now that this committee can assume that that undertaking has been given.

[Mr. Fisher.]

The question raised by the hon. member for Melville is an important one, and I think he presented an objective statement to this house about a problem which is of great concern to the House of Commons and to parliament generally. He referred to the difficult consequences of automation and its effect upon employees who will be dislocated because of changing procedures. He also mentioned the possible detrimental effect on communities involved.

I must contrast his method of presentation with that of the hon. member for Port Arthur, who raised two main points. Undoubtedly they are closely related, but I think he unnecessarily confused the two. He referred to the important problem of the dislocation of railway employees and the consequential effect on communities. He referred also to the immediate local difficulties at Nakina and related communities.

The hon. member for Port Arthur saw fit to commence his presentation by using some language with which I cannot associate myself. I do want to point out to the committee, though, that in my view at least this is not the method to approach a difficult problem like this if any appropriate solution is to be reached. It will be recalled that he started his remarks by referring to the management of Canadian National Railways as slimy.

Mr. Fisher: Just a minute. On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I intended to say and believe I said that there was a long history of a slimy trail in management-labour relations on the C.N.R. There is some difference.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I completely accept the hon. member's explanation of the difference, but I will let the record speak for itself. I respectfully suggest this is not the way to bring the facts before the committee, but that is his responsibility and not mine. I want to dissociate myself publicly from that kind of argument.

He then moved on in the next sentence or two to make a personal reference to the president. He did not say that his actions were in any way wrong, but he made a personal reference by speaking about the extent to which he said the president was personally detested. Then he moved on to the acting minister and chose to refer to him as the equivalent of a telegraph operator. His opinion of the acting minister is, I am sure, of no concern to the committee. It certainly does not concern me in the least, because I think hon. members will make their own assessment in regard to these matters and I am content to leave it there. He referred later to the acting minister as a Charlie McCarthy.

Mr. Fisher: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, if the minister wants to take this line I hope he will listen a bit. What I suggested was that it seemed to me there were two possibilities for a minister of transport, and one to be more or less a funnel or telegraph operator or a Charlie McCarthy, the kind of arrangement where he would be standing at the shoulder of the president of the C.N.R. I do not mind the minister making these remarks, but I do not think he should get that far away from what I said.

Mr. McIlraith: If I may continue, Mr. Chairman, I did the hon. member the courtesy of not interrupting him at any point. Perhaps it is clear now that I should have done so as he went along, but in any event I did not. He then concluded his argument with a reference to the damnable arrogance of the Liberal party and proceeded to identify the president of the C.N.R. as the chosen instrument—I think that is the term he used—for expressing that attitude.

I want to invite the committee's attention to the fact that I think it would be quite impossible to find any arrogance or damnable arrogance in the treatment of this subject since it arose, and in my opinion the answers to questions on the orders of the day in the last number of days should have indicated that there is nothing but great concern over this matter.

Mr. Orlikow: What action?

Mr. McIlraith: If the hon. and impatient member for Winnipeg North could possess himself in patience and listen to other hon. members he might find it would be helpful to him in gaining knowledge about a great many subjects, including the standard of conduct expected of members of parliament. I do not mean to be severe with him, but surely a subject of this seriousness does not deserve interjections of that type.

In my opinion the matter at issue here involves a double barrelled problem. The system of railway divisional points approximately 125 miles apart was set up in the days of the coal burning engines. It has been thought fit by management to seek to change that system with the advent of diesel engines involving different methods of servicing and different requirements inherent in the technological improvements in the building of engines for hauling trains. I do not want to divert into a discussion of the matter at the moment, but I suppose it will be generally granted that there must be necessary changes arising from this development. Indeed, changes are desirable if the users of the railway services are to be properly served by this transportation medium.

Therefore the matter is one of making sure that the changes are brought about in a way that is not harmful but rather is beneficial to all the interests concerned, which in the final analysis really means the public throughout the country, rather than merely dealing with the problem from the point of view that there must be no change, period, and that anything that was established in the past must be left completely untouched. I would hope that would be common ground.

With regard to Nakina, when the initiation of the run-throughs was announced it was made clear by the railway company that it was proposed to introduce the run-throughs over a period of two years. That was made very clear, and it has always been clear. It was also made clear that the details of the method of introducing and bringing about the run-throughs were open for discussion. That was repeatedly made clear by the railway management both to the community representatives with whom they discussed this matter and to the railwaymen concerned. Again, because the situation did not seem to be fully appreciated, it was made clear to the men by letter of October 8 in the proper way through the appropriate union authorities. It was also requested in the letter that anyone who wished to make any proposals on this matter should put them forward.

I am only the acting minister. I regret that the minister is absent, although we are looking forward to his return in a very few days. However, when I first learned of the proposition that had been made by management to the men and to the community, and sensed from the delegation who came to see me that it had not been properly appreciated, I took the liberty of reiterating it to the delegation in, I think, rather clear fashion. This has always been the position of management, and so far no proposals or suggestions on this point have been made. No advantage has been taken of the proposition put forward by the railway, either by the men or the community.

There is another facet about which I should speak. Very early in the course of events, as this difficulty was building up, the railway management put forward another proposition. It was that they would buy the homes of employees if these employees were moving from the town of Nakina. A method of valuation was established involving three valuators who would fix prices. One valuator was to be from the railway, one from the owners' group and an independent valuator was to be chosen by the other two. Hon. members will appreciate that the railway was going quite a long way, in that such a proposition is quite new. They put forward that proposition because of the particular nature or extent of the dependence of Nakina on the railway, and the history of the development of the town in relation to the railway. This has two consequences; it saves the individuals employed from any economic loss if they choose to move, and it also means that the community continues to receive its taxes on those houses.

Perhaps I should call it one o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose for the noon adjournment I had been explaining the proposal put forward by the management of the Canadian National Railways concerning the proposed run-through at Nakina. I indicated that the management had dealt with the individual employees of the railway company at Nakina, and had put forward a scheme for purchasing the homes of any of the employees who would wish to move from Nakina consequent upon the implementation of the run-through. Further, I indicated the basis of valuation, and said the company had also dealt with employees individually on arrangements regarding moving expenses.

I then went on to state that the company had indicated it was prepared to consider or discuss any counter-proposals which the men might have to advance, and that the plans for implementing the run-through were completely flexible, subject to one condition which apparently I did not mention before one o'clock, that the program of implementing the run-through be completed in two years, that is by the latter part of 1966.

I also indicated that the significance of these proposals and the invitation to put forward counter-proposals had not, in my view, been fully appreciated, and when I sensed this I made the point clear to the representatives of the community who attended as a delegation in Ottawa. The railway management also made this clear in a letter sent to the appropriate union officials involved, but as yet no counter-proposals have been made.

Mr. Churchill: A counter-proposal with regard to what?

Mr. McIlraith: A counter-proposal regarding the timing and the method of implementing the run-throughs; and there was one condition, namely that the run-throughs be fully implemented by two years from now.

Mr. Fisher: Surely the minister would acknowledge that a request was made for a six weeks postponement so that the matter could be discussed more fully?

Mr. McIlraith: I am coming to that point as I develop my remarks. No counter-proposal has yet been received in the context in which I have explained the invitation, and I think I have tried to make my remarks as accurate and precise as possible on this point. However, after the delegation attended in Ottawa last Friday, some time early this week a request was received from the community representatives asking for a postponement of the starting date of the implementation of the program.

A start was to be made on the program on October 25, just two days from now, but the community's request was limited to delaying the start of the program, and carried with it a plea that the whole matter be discussed. It did not carry with it any acquiescence in the whole program being implemented at the end of two years. Indeed the delegation made it quite clear they were completely opposed to the run-through, and that is where the matter stands now.

There are some other aspects of this matter on which I would like to speak for a moment or two. The hon. member for Port Arthur indicated to the committee—and I wish to draw the hon. member's attention specifically to this, so that I may not be accused of misinterpreting his remarks—that the action taken by the railway was probably, in his view, an illegal action, and he went on to tell the committee he would go into this area and work with the railroaders there in meeting this problem by what would, possibly, be another illegal action, namely by a refusal to give service when the date comes. He went on to say that he might be penalized, and so might the men, for refusing to offer services on Saturday night and that it might be held a crime was being committed under the Criminal Code. Nevertheless, he observed, this was the situation to which long-suffering employees had been brought in the absence of a constructive approach by management to grave situations such as this.

I think I have accurately repeated what the hon. member said. I want now to draw his attention to this. He told us that in this difficult situation the approach by management had not been constructive. That is a legitimate argument and I have no objection whatever to such an argument being put forward. But here we have a member of the House of Commons indicating that he proposes to violate the law, and I want to ask him: What kind of constructive action is that? The people of this country have a representative in parliament who says he intends to act illegally and wilfully to break the law of this country. In other words he is not willing to use the methods which are open to him under the law but is asserting he will break the law. I would ask the hon. member to consider very carefully whether this is a helpful or constructive attitude to take in what is admittedly a difficult situation. Is this the kind of action which is likely to be helpful in bringing about a suitable solution to a problem of labour-management relations? Surely this is not the kind of example which should be given to employees of any company or to citizens of the country generally. I invite the hon. member to consider further what he said on this point and what his action should be.

Mr. Orlikow: Would the minister permit a question? I wonder if the hon. gentleman would consider suggesting to the C.N.R. that the company should live up to the spirit of section 182 of the Railway Act, which it has consistently violated over the years.

Mr. McIlraith: I do not agree that the railways have consistently, over the years, violated section 182 of the Railway Act. But I will deal with the points raised by the hon. member for Port Arthur—

Mr. Grégoire: They have violated the law in the province of Quebec, with their trucking system, and they are now before the courts; yet they continue their operations. The minister knows that.

Mr. McIlraith: I will deal with points arising out of section 182 of the Railway Act in a few moments to the extent I think it is proper to do so during a debate on interim supply. In any event, turning now to the Nakina aspect of this matter arising from the technological changes due to automation and so on, it would seem to me that this aspect is a matter for the management of the railroad—that this is something relating wholly to the operations of the company. It would seem that in dealings with particular employees—I have in mind now the more restricted aspect of the problem as it immediately affects the situation at Nakina—the railways, or management, have made responsible offers to the men—some might say they were generous—and that in this narrower aspect they have shown a most considerate attitude toward the human element. Having said this, I agree there is a larger aspect of the whole matter which was raised by the hon. member for Port Arthur, and I sought at the outset of my remarks to indicate that in my view there are two closely related, though none the less separate questions raised in his argument, one of them being the whole question of the consequences of automation as it affects railroad employees and communities consequent upon the implementation of run-throughs by railways. In this context the hon. member raised the possibility of amending section 182 of the Railway Act and he developed his argument by suggesting other means of dealing with this problem. This is a much larger and, I agree, a most important question. For my part I do not know whether it is appropriate for me in a debate on interim supply to seek to outline precisely what should be done with regard to this question. But I would point out to the committee that the Department of Labour has set up an advisory committee on technological changes composed of representatives of government and of labour and management, a committee which is now considering this type of problem in its broader aspect, and it must surely be apparent to all members that the subject matter which the hon. member had in mind is being dealt with.

There are several arguments one could make with regard to the precise method which might best be used for dealing with this problem. It has been suggested it should be dealt with under section 182 of the Railway Act. I must frankly say I am convinced this is not the best possible way of dealing with it. Another suggestion is that general legislation should be enacted to deal with the whole question. Just how this would be done, I do not know. Another school of thought takes the view that this is a subject for negotiation and coverage by union agreements. In any event it is apparent one could develop various arguments about which method of dealing with this problem would be the most suitable. Since I am neither the Minister of Transport, who is directly responsible for railway matters, nor the Minister of Labour, I would consider it inappropriate, in an interim supply debate, to argue—and indeed I have some doubt at the moment as to my competence to argue—as to precisely which method should be followed.

It is clear—however—that the government is concerned with this problem and that a government advisory committee within one of the departments is dealing with it. I believe it is an able committee and it might well be it should concern itself more directly with this particular problem. I know it will be unsatisfactory to many hon. members if I say that the immediate aspect of the implementation of the run-through policy at Nakina is a matter for the management of the railway. I appreciate that this will be quite unsatisfactory. Yet I believe it would be less than fair to hon. members if I were to indicate otherwise.

That is the fact as I believe it to be. Goodness knows all concerned, notwithstanding the tremendous burden there is on the railways because of the restrictions we have placed on them, will agree they must be kept efficient. I believe all hon. members will agree that on aspects which are purely for management in the internal operations of the railways it is desirable that members do not interfere.

Unsatisfactory as that answer may appear superficially to be, I believe it is important that it be asserted, but at the same time that a solution be sought to the larger, major question. I assure hon. members that this subject matter has been receiving very careful consideration, although perhaps over too short a period of time. Every aspect of the matter debated today of direct concern to the railways was communicated immediately to them on every occasion. The other larger question is, of course, receiving continuing attention, as its nature warrants that it must.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks I should like to make in connection with this important matter involving, as it does, the question of automation and technological advances. We cannot, of course, go into a lot of detail in this regard on a debate such as this, but it does seem to me that technological advances and automation are nothing new. However, government policy, particularly at the federal level, must be geared to take care of the circumstances that arise out of these technological changes and automation, and it seems to me we are lagging far behind in this regard.

I do not think we should be afraid of technological advances and automation. As a matter of fact we should welcome anything which will raise the standard of living of all our peoples. I am reminded of the speech made by the Minister of Labour, which was quite fully covered on a television program last night, in which he regretted that in many parts of Canada today people are in abject poverty. Here we find we are moving into a situation which will add to the distress of the people in the areas concerned because we have failed to go ahead with our plans to take care of situations which arise owing to technological advances and automation.

To the people who are affected this is a very serious matter. The minister has said that the railway company has agreed to buy the homes of these individuals. They might buy the houses of the individuals but they cannot buy the homes, because a home is more than just a place to live in. The association of a community is part of home life, and there is more to that than just buying the house of an individual or buying his assets. Surely this step should only take place under certain conditions, and there are a lot of ways in which this disagreeable move can be made less agonizing if the proper steps at the proper time are taken.

According to the minister, the over-all plan is to get these changes through by 1966. It would seem to me that with the moves which have been made to get some action on section 182 of the Railway Act over the years, certainly somebody has slipped up somewhere when there comes to light a situation where plans have been made to eliminate by 1966 many of these small places through action taken by the railways. I am one of those people who believe that we should never fear change or be afraid to move along; but at the same time where human beings and families are involved I think we should certainly take a much more serious look at the implications of such moves.

At this point I think I should say that I believe that a postponement of the railway's plan is absolutely necessary. I think we must allow for further consideration of this particular case. There is no doubt at all in my mind that for the efficiency of the railroad these changes are good and I think they must come. It has been the practice of the railways over the years to make these changes at the same time as they make major changes in their time tables. Having this in mind it seems to me that there will be no great hardship in the offing either to the railroad or to anyone else if this proposed change was left over until next spring when the time tables of the railway companies are changed again. There are summer and winter schedules, and as I say it has been the practice of the railway companies to make most of their changes at the same time as they make the change from summer to winter schedules or winter to summer schedules.

I believe the management of the railway could easily bring about a discussion of this matter, such as we are having in this committee today, so as to bring the whole business into focus. I can understand that a businessman who is running a railway and having to deal with government, with parliament and with population, would demand that drastic action be taken where there is a lack of initiative on the part of the government. I suggest to hon. members that the railway company has been forced into taking this drastic action in order to focus attention on the problem. Certainly we have not received from the government any indication that the action necessary to forestall the inconvenience and hardship which is going to be caused the people affected will be taken. Therefore I would urge the government to take a very serious and hard look at this whole situation, to do what they can to influence the railways to postpone the action contemplated in these run-throughs and to find some real solution to the problem.

The minister says he is not certain whether section 182 should be changed. I agree that there are other types of business, occupations and operations facing the same problem with which we are confronted here, and perhaps section 182 of the Railway Act is not the place to make this sort of change. If this is not the place to make the changes let us move on and make changes where they should be made, so that this kind of thing can be taken care of whether it be in respect of mining, farming in dried out areas or railways and other services. Let us move in a direction which will lead to some permanent solution to the problem with which we are faced in respect of displaced persons as a result of automation and technological advances.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, while the minister was speaking before our luncheon adjournment he took exception to some interjections I made in his speech and in the speech of the hon. member for Port Arthur. Having heard the minister speak since lunch time I not only have no apology to make, but I wish my interjections had been made in a stronger vein.

I do not know why the minister took exception to the fact the hon. member for Port Arthur put the responsibility for what is taking place at Nakina directly on the shoulders of the president of the C.N.R. and the government. Surely the president of the C.N.R. must accept responsibility for everything the C.N.R. has done, whether he, a vice president or an official at Nakina issued the orders. Surely the president is responsible for the actions taken by the C.N.R., whether they are right or wrong. Certainly the hon. member for Port Arthur need not feel that he should explain or apologize for what he said about Mr. Gordon. If the actions contemplated by the C.N.R. this week end are wrong in principle and will adversely affect the people of Nakina, surely the government must accept responsibility.

We are not discussing this issue only because of the adverse effects it will have on a small town in northwestern Ontario, in spite of the fact that the town will be almost wiped out. We are discussing this situation because it is the first change of a series which undoubtedly the C.N.R. contemplate.

Let me make it clear that neither I, any other member of this party, nor perhaps any member of this house, objects to the C.N.R.'s actions and necessary steps to make it as efficient as possible, enabling it to move passenger and freight traffic as economically as possible to compete with other forms of transportation. On the other hand, we do have a right to expect the government and the C.N.R. to give some thought to the costs involved. Included in those costs must be considered the disruption of the lives of the many people who are not being asked to sacrifice only a few hundreds or thousands of dollars, but their whole way of life.

For the past two or three years members of the present government have been travelling from one end of Canada to the other talking about the importance of planning, and suggesting that this country will not develop in full the use of its material and manpower resources without intelligent planning. The Minister of Labour was in Hamilton last night talking about the benefits of automation, and what automation could do for Canada if we only had the intelligence to use it properly. Not so many months ago the Minister of Forestry, at a conference in Toronto, attended by a number of members of parliament, referred to the benefits of planning and direction by the federal government in co-operation with provincial and municipal governments. Indeed that minister went so far as to refer to himself, and this is often considered to be a dirty word, as a socialist. I do not know how he fits in with the ideas expressed by the Minister of Transport, or that great exponent of free enterprise, the Minister of Industry. That is the kind of talk regarding planning we have heard from one end of Canada to the other.

The present situation provides a concrete test, rather than a test of theory, as far as efficiency of operation is concerned. Surely the C.N.R. is not a company that can exercise the rights of free enterprise, to run its business in any way it sees fit which will be only to the greatest advantage of its shareholders. This is a company owned and operated by and for the people of Canada. This company was not built to make money, but was built to meet a political situation in Canada, to provide coast to coast transportation. This is a company which has received and continues to receive massive subsidies from the people of Canada. These subsidies run in the neighbourhood of hundreds of millions of dollars. Every year this company comes to the parliament of Canada asking for millions of dollars to help meet its deficits. If we pass the railway legislation proposed ostensibly to implement the recommendations of the MacPherson report this company will receive further hundreds of millions of dollars in subsidies.

This company has decided that in order to be more efficient the workers of a small town in northwestern Ontario will have to be moved. What is this great planning about which the acting minister spoke so glowingly today? The company has indicated that it is willing to make contributions toward the purchase of the homes to be vacated by these people. I do not think the hon. member for Port Arthur was scathing enough in his remarks about the Liberal party, if the pending action by the C.N.R. is an example of its thinking on planning.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

The provincial department of education recently built a high school in the area of Nakina at a substantial cost, with the understanding that a number of students from Nakina would attend that school. The provincial government spent a substantial amount of money to build a paved highway into Nakina five or six years ago. All that money will be going down the drain because these services will be completely useless with the run-throughs which the C.N.R. has ordered go into effect next week end. That town will virtually become a ghost town.

All these facts have been ignored by the acting minister. I should not expect anything more because he is typical of the do nothing, stand pat, business as usual Liberals who really run the show. Why are we concerned in this regard? We are concerned because we realize this is only the first step. I had a telephone conversation with an individual in Winnipeg last evening as a result of which I am sure that the step to be taken at Nakina this week end is only a first step in a program of this kind. In the very near future major changes affecting the Winnipeg area will take place. Many workers in the past six years have been shifted from Sioux Lookout and Redditt to Winnipeg. Soon they will be shifted again from Winnipeg to areas further west, if the projected plans of the C.P.R. in respect of run-throughs are carried out. These individuals, who in the last six years were shifted from western Ontario to Winnipeg, will again have to move from Winnipeg to somewhere in Saskatchewan and work on services from Saskatchewan back to Winnipeg. I do not know whether the C.N.R. will think them important enough to compensate them for their homes in Winnipeg. Probably they will not, because this is the first time they have ever made such an offer and I am sure they did not do so voluntarily, or with very good grace. So, Mr. Chairman, for the minister to say that this is not a very important or big matter is for him simply to beg the issue.

The minister said that he advised the railway unions and these people to make a counter-proposal. How ridiculous can you be, Mr. Chairman? This problem cannot be solved in Nakina or Wainwright. Railway workers from one end of Canada to the other are concerned and upset because they know what has happened in the last 15 years and they know that the tremendous changes which have taken place are going to continue. You cannot expect the people in Nakina or Wainwright or their local or national unions to work out a plan to apply to only these two places.

Surely if the government really believes in what it has said about planning so eloquently, so often and in so many places, the government ought to be urging, in fact directing the management of the C.N.R. not simply to tell the railway workers and their unions what is going to happen on Sunday in Nakina and Wainwright but to tell them what their plans are for the next five or ten years. Let railway management work out a national plan in co-operation with the railway workers and their unions.

I suggest to members of the committee there is not a single railway worker or a single railway union that does not know about and agree with the idea that the railways have to be modernized and have to change their methods of operation, but the workers do not want to carry the whole burden and they should not be expected to do so. It behooves the management of the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. as well as the government of Canada to work out plans for an orderly transition.

The acting minister says today, as the Minister of Transport said on September 14 when we discussed his estimates for one day, that the department is not satisfied that section 182 of the Railway Act is the proper method by which to protect the rights of the railway workers. The railway workers and their unions are not very concerned about what section of the Railway Act is used, whether it is section 182 or another section or whether entirely new legislation is adopted, but they are tired of the excuses that have been made year by year by railway management and by the government. They want action.

The railway workers are not opposed to the principles and recommendations of the MacPherson report. They are not opposed to reorganization and rationalization of the railways. They are not opposed to the railways being put into a position where they will be able to compete fairly with all other methods of transportation. But they are fed up with the idea prevalent in railway management, which I must say it seemed to me the acting minister expounded very well for railway management, that everything must be done to modernize and rationalize the railways, but nothing can be done to protect the rights of the railway workers, to make sure that there is an orderly transition and that people who have worked for the railway for 10, 15 or 20 years are not thrown on the scrap heap.

I am not going to prolong the debate at this time. However, if the government persists in ignoring and sloughing off the railway workers with double talk when they ask for guarantees in the proposed railway legislation so that they will not be treated in the future as they have been in the past, if the government persists in saying that section 182 is not the right section but they do not know what is, if the government says again what the Minister of Transport said to me on September 14, that the only way this matter can be handled is in the over-all method of handling the problem of automation through setting up a technical committee in the Department of Labour with really no power to do anything, then I want to warn the acting minister right now that it will be a long, long time before the proposed railway legislation will pass, if it ever does. The government is going to have to do a great deal better than it has or it will not get the co-operation of the house in passing that legislation.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Chairman, I must say I listened with great interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Melville regarding run-throughs and the many people who will be affected. I also listened with interest to the hon. member for Port Arthur who covered the subject extensively. One thing that gives me great concern is Bill No. C-120 and the question of rail line abandonment. In the railway committee I put questions to the president of the Canadian National Railways about this matter. I think it is most unjust for the C.N.R. to talk about rail line abandonment before it has fulfilled its obligations.

I remember quite well when the Shellbrook-Turtleford line was constructed and how the department of colonization of the C.N.R. went into the area and encouraged homesteaders to settle there and develop the country. I have seen how Canadian National Railways has fallen down on its part of the bargain over the years by never completing this line. It now claims that the line does not pay, but the fact is it has not lived up to its responsibility to complete the gap from Frenchman Butte to Heinsburg, Alberta. It should keep in mind those people who have spent the greater part of their lives in developing this area because the fact is that it is the mismanagement of the Canadian National which has made it impossible for the line to be a paying one, simply because of the failure to complete the gap of 38 miles. If this were done we would have a main route that would serve northern Alberta including the salt mines at Heinsburg. There would be a direct run from Winnipeg through Prince Albert and North Battleford and the line could very easily be made to pay. But the C.N.R. has this line on its list for abandonment. In talking about abandonment it is betraying those people who went in there and developed that region. The C.N.R. has not lived up to its part of the bargain. If it had done so the line would have paid but it has failed to fill this gap of 38 miles across level country.

If the C.N.R. would take stock of its own failures with regard to some of the lines it is talking about abandoning, I think there would be a different feeling in western Canada. The people in this area are very much concerned because they settled there, established homes, built up fine farms and raised their families. But now they find they are going to be without a rail line of any kind and in many cases they will be 75 to 100 miles away from the nearest rail point. The people of western Canada are very much concerned about these things.

In another case the C.N.R. graded the right of way from St. Walburg to Cold Lake and then did not lay the steel. There the right of way stands today, overgrown with trees. This lack of faith on the part of the Canadian National, this betrayal of many settlements in western Canada, is something that should be considered before we allow the Canadian National to say they are going to pull up this track. The railway should be made to live up to its responsibilities to the settlers, merchants and businessmen all along this line which the Canadian National is talking of abandoning.

These are some of the things to which the railway should give a close look, and to which we as legislators of this country should give a close look. I questioned Mr. Gordon in the railways committee with regard to this. He admitted that the salt mine was still there, but the settlers were still there, and he admitted the railway had betrayed them by allowing them to go in and settle these farmlands, then talk about abandonment. The possibilities are still there, but there is no talk of filling in the gap in order to make this a paying line so that it would be unnecessary to talk about abandonment.

I should like to touch upon one more topic which relates to a misunderstanding between both railway lines. I believe the Canadian Pacific was given running rights over the Canadian National from Prince Rupert to Debolt to complete the 90 miles to Debolt and tap the wealth of the Meadow Lake district. There it sits, with no hint of any extension because the railway has already tapped the wealth of the area, but they have deprived the people of Pierceland, Goodsoil and Cold Lake of access to a railway line. The Canadian National was forced to give the Canadian Pacific running rights on the 90 miles of track, and the Canadian Pacific only had to build 90 miles of track to tap the whole wealth of the Meadow Lake country.

These are some of the things at which I think this government should look before any such abandonment should be allowed. One knows very well that when the Canadian National had this line built to Debolt they were the ones who should have had the opportunity of tapping the Meadow Lake country. I am sure they could have made the line pay very easily. These are the things at which I feel we should have a close look before considering Bill No. C-120. We should consider the completion of these gaps that have resulted from mismanagement by the railways before the railways are allowed to go further in their betrayal of these people. When we stop to think that there is merely 38 miles of line to be completed between Frenchman Butte and Heinsburg to tap the wealth of that land and the salt mine in that area, then I believe the people in the area are entitled to have the line of which they have been deprived for many years. We should take another look at the line from St. Walburg to Pierceland, and the railways should get their heads together regarding running rights. Why should the Canadian Pacific have running rights over this track when they only need to build 90 miles of track to tap the wealth of the Meadow Lake country. They are leaving the people in the Goodsoil area with no chance of being any closer to a railway unless we make the railways sit down and talk some common sense before they talk about rail line abandonment.

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the minister one or two questions. I understood him to say that a delegation had waited upon him and had put forward a proposal for postponement of the action which is about to take effect at Nakina at midnight on Saturday, I believe. What was the response to that request by the minister, and what was the response to that request by the management of Canadian National?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, when the delegation presented its main case it consisted of opposition to any run-throughs at any time. There was quite a lengthy discussion and interview lasting two hours or two and a half hours on the first occasion. The second occasion was much shorter. Immediately following that, and arising out of the discussion—I am not sure of the date—they then brought forward a request for a postponement. This was a request for a postponement, not a counter-proposal to the one put forward by the railways. It did not involve any recognition or tentative admission that run-throughs would be agreed to at any time. This request, which was by itself, was immediately transmitted to the railway company. The railway management replied that they would consider it. There have been several discussions by the railway management. After discussion back and forth the railway has taken the stand that they do not think this partial implementation of the run-through on October 25, which is the main point discussed today, should be delayed. They do not believe it is appropriate to delay it.

Mr. Churchill: In other words, the request for a postponement was denied. What does the minister mean by "partial implementation of the run-through"?

Mr. McIlraith: Well, I do not have the precise data on the Nakina run-through, but it is to be implemented generally by making it applicable to certain railway workers or certain trains only. Perhaps I could express it this way, although there is some danger in doing it, that out of a number of employees, say 90 employees, it would affect about 20 at the moment.

Mr. Churchill: On the 25th; and then when would the others be affected?

Mr. McIlraith: During the next two years—a gradual process during the next two years.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the minister another question? When was formal notice given by the railway management to the Canadian National employees?

Mr. McIlraith: I cannot give that date, I do not have it. I notice that the brief presented by the community representatives refers to a discussion that took place in May of 1964. There are many references in that brief. In any event, there was a specific discussion of this on September 18, 1964. I do not know on what precise date formal notice was given.

Mr. Churchill: Is the minister satisfied that the railway management has observed the appropriate sections in the Montreal agreement of May, 1926?

Mr. McIlraith: I am not familiar with the Montreal agreement. The first time it was mentioned in any of these discussions was today. It is a new agreement to me, and I immediately drew it to the attention of my officials the first time it was mentioned. I am satisfied all the other agreements have been fully observed. In addition there has been a great deal done that has not been required in law to be done. I am satisfied, notwithstanding some of the sharp criticism by hon. members today, about the generosity, if you like, of the offer to purchase homes from any of the men who wished to move, on the basis of a valuation of them and the implication of that in relation to the tax rolls of the community. I am not aware of any, and I do not believe any criticism has been offered of the method of valuation or anything like that. It has been a refusal to accept the proposition that run-throughs can be implemented that has been the core of the problem.

Mr. Churchill: Well, I will refer to some of these matters in a few minutes. The subject introduced today by the hon. member for Melville and the hon. member for Port Arthur is of major importance, and others who have spoken have drawn our attention to the fact that more instances like this are likely to occur in the near future. It is advisable for the committee to take cognizance of this situation. Perhaps some time during the course of this afternoon we may persuade the minister to communicate directly with the head of the C.N.R. and indicate to him the opinion expressed by members of parliament, suggesting a postponement of his proposed action would be very much in order so that further attention could be given to the problem and the wishes of the people of the community affected taken into consideration.

I do not see anything wrong in postponing an action such as this which, in its final effect, will be disruptive of the life of the community. We in this country are not opposed to modernizing our methods of transport. We have a progressive country and we want to proceed with many of these things. Everyone appreciates that the age of automation is crowding us closely, that disruption of the activities of many people is inevitable, but at the same time we think the blow should be eased as much as possible.

We have some experience in matters of this sort. A few years ago when I had some responsibility for uranium we negotiated an agreement with the United States on the basis of a stretch out program, so that the mining communities would receive another two, three or four years life before the shift occurred. The blow was eased a little bit, and there was not the sudden chop off in 1962 that was foreseen at the beginning of the negotiations.

The minister is familiar with the disruption of the T.C.A. overhaul maintenance base in Winnipeg. He knows the efforts he and his colleagues have made to stretch out the life of that base. I hoped that the base would not be transferred, but at the very least a stretch out program is essential when the lives of people are affected.

With such experience behind us why can the management of C.N.R. not adopt that principle? The minister has said the management must be given freedom to run its own affairs. Everyone is familiar with the answers we get to questions about crown corporations. A minister replies, "I will direct the attention of the crown corporation to the hon. member's observation or question." We get this all the time with the C.B.C., and over the years we have had the same experience with the C.N.R.

When crown corporations are dependant upon parliament for grants of money, and for modification of legislation that affects their operations, there must be a quid pro quo. We are justified in saying, "In return for the things we are doing for you, you must do something for us and our constituents, because we are dealing directly with the lives of people." The problem before us this afternoon affects the lives of people in a community that has been thriving for some considerable time.

On September 14, as recorded at page 7982 of Hansard for that date, the Minister of Transport expounded the philosophy that should prevail, and I quote:

> It is our view that it is of great importance that we should give the railways an opportunity to operate as efficiently and as economically as possible and avoid adding unduly to fixed charges that are imposed upon the taxpayers and that inevitably have to be paid for and are therefore a minus factor in the economy. At the same time we must remember that the railways are large employers of labour; that the interests of the employees of the railways, our fellow citizens, must not be overlooked, and that, though change is essential in this field if the railways are to compete and receive a reasonable share of the traffic which will enable them to maintain their services out of their revenues, we must at the same time see that we do not, because of changes for which they have no responsibility whatsoever, visit hardships that are not reasonable and bearable upon a large section of the Canadian population.

That was a good expression of the philosophy that should be kept in mind when we are dealing with this type of problem. We should strive for economy and greater efficiency, but not at the expense of the people operating in the industry. Without people an industry just does not exist. It finally comes down to the human factor, and sometimes we tend to overlook the fact that the employee is a vital segment of industrial development. The employees of the railways are absolutely essential and their interests must be protected. As changes occur, those changes should be stretched out.

I question whether the management of the C.N.R. has lived up to an agreement which it signed on May 1, 1926. I am informed this agreement was signed by a representative of the C.N.R. and by representatives of the brotherhood of locomotive engineers and of the brotherhood of locomotive firemen and enginemen. It is known as the Montreal agreement, and I am told has been effective ever since. Section 9 of it reads as follows:

> Nothing in this agreement shall be taken to permit the company without prior conference with representatives of the employees to change existing home terminal stations of the employees affected thereby—

The action which it is proposed to take tomorrow interferes with that provision. It will change the existing home terminal station of the C.N.R. employees living in Nakina, and I ask the minister whether a prior conference took place between the C.N.R. management and the representatives of the two brotherhoods who were party to this agreement?

A few minutes ago the minister said he did not have the terms of the Montreal agreement in front of him.

Section 10 reads as follows:

> This agreement will become effective when signed by the representatives of the Canadian National Railways, the brotherhood of engineers and the brotherhood of locomotive firemen and enginemen and shall continue in effect until 30 days notice of a desired change is given by either of the parties to the other.

I take it there are two requirements here —consultation and then formal notification from officials to officials, that is, from management to officials of the brotherhood, and it has not been clear this afternoon whether or not these two steps were taken. The suggestion has been left with us that unilateral action was taken by the management of the C.N.R. If this is the case I suggest to the minister that an immediate phone call should be put through to the head of the C.N.R. with a recommendation that a postponement should take effect and that the status quo should remain tomorrow night. Then let the minister and railway management and the representatives of the brotherhoods get together and discuss whether or not this agreement of 1926 has been abrogated, and reach some conclusion with regard to it. I think a definite responsibility rests on the minister in this regard. I am making no charges. I am asking for information. But it has been suggested to me that the steps to which I have referred, the steps contained in the agreement, have not been carried out. Parliament should know. If those steps have, indeed, been carried out, then the management of C.N.R. would not be under attack on that ground. If they have not been carried out, the management of the C.N.R. would, I think, have to give an accounting to parliament. We have some responsibility to the people of Canada for the way in which the railways are operated, and this is one matter I should like to see cleared up. Until it has been cleared up, I suggest the only reasonable approach is to postpone the action proposed tomorrow night.

I do not think the minister can put us off by saying: This is no concern of ours; it is up to management to carry on its affairs and we should not interfere. I say the management of C.N.R. should tell parliament what it is up to. I refer again to the statement by the Minister of Transport which I read a few minutes ago, the statement which says that hardships or burdens which are not reasonable should not be imposed upon a large section of the Canadian population.

Why this great haste with regard to the operation at Nakina? Why cannot suitable notice be given? Why cannot there be a stretch out program as suggested by the hon. member who spoke before me? Why cannot this operation be postponed until the spring of the year? How much difference would this make to the railway? Would it seriously inconvenience the railway? I doubt that very much. Will the people directly concerned be seriously inconvenienced, now that we are approaching the winter season? I think this is likely, and these are factors which I hope the minister will taken into account.

Other matters affecting the railways will be before parliament soon. Legislation concerning railway line abandonment to permit greater economy and efficiency of operation will be a major subject for discussion. The railways will be expecting concessions and benefits as a result of the actions of parliament. In return we must say to them: Your employees and their families must be given a fair break. This is a good time to start, right now with regard to the problems which have come to our attention today. Let the management of the C.N.R. say right out: We will postpone our proposed change in Nakina, and subsequently give to the Minister of Transport, or to the acting minister, and through him to parliament, our proposals over a long period of time—so that parliament shall not be faced with isolated cases such as the one with which we are dealing today, but will have the general picture of what is proposed as a result of automation and the various changes considered necessary for efficient operation.

Are we to be faced next month with a similar situation in some other railway centre, and then in January with another and in February with yet another? Why can we not have the whole plan put in front of us so that we may understand the general picture. And if railway management thinks we are presently unsympathetic, this is the way to cure that attitude. Give us the information, and then we shall be able to deal with these matters on the basis of accurate knowledge. We should not be faced with such a situation as occurred today—a motion for adjournment of the house on a matter of urgent public importance, raised because of a proposed action by railway management affecting the lives of people in Nakina whose protests had apparently been rejected. What recourse is open to them? Their only recourse is to appeal to members of parliament to raise the matter in the house, to bring it to the attention of the public and to urge the government to take some action.

This is, of course, what has happened today. We just happened to be dealing with interim supply when the subject could be discussed. May I say, in conclusion, that the minister himself is not unfamiliar with the activities of the government in connection with the railways, and employees of the railways, at various times over the years when strikes have occurred or when strikes have been threatened. The government has had to intervene. It has been obliged to consult and confer with representatives of both employers and labour. The minister has, I think, been through this process himself in the past. He will certainly remember the special session of 1950. I have vivid recollections of being up all night long, when we were in office, until 4 a.m. in the east block conferring with management and representatives of labour with regard to a proposed rail strike.

The government cannot avoid becoming involved in these problems which affect the citizens of this country. Why not take steps to head off trouble before it occurs? In this particular instance, action taken now might well forestall trouble later, though of course I do not know what other steps may be taken by those concerned. But in order to avoid a protracted dispute—and I gather this might happen from what I have heard today—is this not an opportunity for the minister to take appropriate action immediately, to contact the head of the C.N.R., apprise him of the feeling of members of parliament, and to say to him: "Cannot we get a postponement of this?" Let us get all the facts assembled, if we have not already got them at our disposal, and see whether this matter cannot be cleared away without unnecessarily stirring up a hornet's nest. The minister can say to the head of the C.N.R.: "You are waiting impatiently for railway legislation to go through this house. If you proceed with this action you are not going to put the members of the House of Commons in the proper frame of mind to meet some of your requests in the future." I do not suggest that as a threat, but we are all human beings and we understand how these things operate. It is a quid pro quo. I make one final request to the minister to do his level best to get a postponement of the situation at Nakina.

Mr. Regan: Mr. Chairman, I shall just take a few moments of the time of the committee to speak on this subject of railways. First of all, I should say, in general reference to rail abandonment, that while in some circumstances conditions certainly exist where rail abandonment cannot be avoided and is in the national interest, it has always seemed to me that wholesale abandonment of rail lines indicates a lack of faith on the part of the railways in the future of this country. The fact that our growing population is now nearing 20 million means that in the future in all these areas more rail service will be required because these people will provide more rail traffic than has been the case in the past.

My primary purpose in rising this afternoon, however, is to discuss the question of the attitude of the Canadian Pacific Railway with reference to their policy of curtailing passenger service, specifically as it applies to service by dayliners into and from the city of Halifax through the Dominion Atlantic run via the Annapolis valley to Yarmouth. As members of this committee will know, earlier this week the board of transport commissioners intervened to rule that the proposed curtailment of such service, which would have cut down the number of dayliners and the hours of service in that area for residents of the valley coming into and out of the city of Halifax, should be postponed until public hearings on the matter could be held. This occurred only after there had been widespread public protest. I am confident that when public hearings are held on this matter there will be very strong submissions, and well reasoned ones, against the curtailment of this service.

The only point upon which I wish to comment this afternoon is the fact that it appears to me, using this instance in Nova Scotia as an example, that the Canadian Pacific Railway is interested in getting out of passenger traffic rather than trying to make it pay, and that they are prepared to use whatever guise is necessary to make some of their runs unprofitable so that they can be abandoned. I can come to no other conclusion as a result of what is being done with this dayliner service in Nova Scotia.

Despite the fact that from Hants county and Kings county, which are areas served by the dayliner, as well as from other surrounding counties such as Lunenburg and Colchester, over 1,000 people drive their cars in all types of weather to commute to work in Halifax every day, people who would much sooner travel, particularly in the cold weather, in the comfort of an efficient commuter service, and despite the fact that these dayliners are very comfortable and satisfactory to the people who do have occasion to travel on them, the railway has never found it worth while to attempt to run dayliners during hours which would serve the commuting public in any manner, shape or form.

To give an example, the city of Kentville is about 69 miles from Halifax. All this summer and fall the dayliner service has been leaving Kentville in the mornings at something like 8.30 a.m. and arriving at Halifax at a quarter to eleven daylight time, which is the time in force in Nova Scotia at this time of year. I think you can readily see, Mr. Chairman, that this service cannot attract any but those who wish to travel in leisure at whatever hour they like and who are not working on that day. Now, if that train were to leave Kentville at 6.45 in the morning and arrive in Halifax at a quarter to nine, although that might be a little late for people in the labouring class who start work at eight o'clock it nevertheless would be of great service to those who work in offices, banks, etc. who start work at nine o'clock in the morning. It does not take a great brain to see that the railway company could have much more in the way of traffic on that train if that were the case.

In addition, the train which leaves the city to go back to Kentville in the evening, the one they want to take off, has been leaving Halifax at a quarter to seven in the evening and arriving at Kentville a couple of hours later after passing through Windsor, Hantsport, Wolfville and other towns. I think it is obvious that if this service left downtown Halifax at, say, ten after five in the evening and made a stop on the outskirts of the city, particularly during the winter months, there would be a lot of people who would travel on the train.

However, I do not mean to suggest that at the present time this train travels empty or that the C.P.R.-D.A.R. application to curtail this service is justified. In the last couple of weeks and while this matter has been under consideration I have made a point of travelling on the train twice. I know that on a Saturday night coming from Halifax—I presume most people who leave the city for the week end leave on the Friday night—there were 38 people on board, which I am told is more than ample to justify its operation. On the week ends the service between Halifax and Kentville is very crowded. Acadia University students, and people at other educational institutions such as King's College, Edgehill and Haligonians going to the valley for one purpose or another, have patronized the service to the point that it has been extremely crowded at week ends. On another occasion during the past two weeks I travelled on the train when there were 140 people on board and I had to stand the whole way from Kentville to Halifax. I think this is a demonstration of the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway is interested only in getting out of the trouble of running passenger service.

Mind you, they are still talking of curtailment despite the fact that they are particularly busy on week ends and could make what I would call a continuous service at week ends when it pays handsomely. They arrange this service throughout the week and bring about a situation where, if a person goes out of or into the city he has no alternative but to stay overnight at his destination and return the next day. This type of commuter service could, I think, be a very efficient and profitable one if ran at the proper hours.

I think there is a responsibility somewhere to provide an efficient service. If the railways are not going to accept the proper responsibility, then it is the responsibility of some level of government—and I know of no other government than the one here—to work in co-operation with municipal officials in areas where rail service is run as part of a commuter service and is the only efficient commuter service serving the area concerned. The railways should consider the interest of the people in the cities. So much for the situation at Halifax.

I have brought this matter up this afternoon so that it receives some public attention before the hearings to which I have referred are held on this proposed rail curtailment, either later in the fall or early in the new year. I think the railways of this country are the foundation of our national existence.

The only other matter regarding the new rail legislation on which I should like to comment at this time is this. I hope I will be reassured by the officials of the government that when this legislation does reach the committee stage for consideration it will contain protection for the maritime interests, and the maritime interests I might add will not be protected as a result of leaving the Maritime Freight Rates Assistance Act as it is. That act, as some hon. members are aware, applies only to domestic cargoes. We are still faced with problems in respect of export and import cargo rates, if the ports of Saint John and Halifax are to remain in business, and that is something I am sure will be discussed in coming days.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Regan: Always.

Mr. MacInnis: To avoid the necessity of making a correction in Hansard on Monday, would the hon. member when he is checking his speech change his reference to the cities of Windsor, Wolfville and Kentville?

Mr. Regan: I should have been very happy to make a similar generous appellation with regard to Glace Bay, and since the hon. member has made reference to the correction, those are incorporated towns, not cities.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I should first like to congratulate the hon. member for Port Arthur and the hon. member for Melville for referring in the first instance to this matter. The fact that we have to discuss it during our consideration of interim supply is, of course, one of those things that happen in parliament. I am not going to refer to a decision that was made in this house today, particularly because I noted the chairman looking in my direction as soon as I referred to it, but I do not think there is any more important matter to be discussed by the members of the House of Commons at the present time than the subject we have been considering, and particularly its application to Nakina.

The railroad development that has taken place in this country is one of the most dramatic stories in Canadian history, as well as one of the most controversial. The minister today in his quiet way made some devastating revelations. After all, the matter that has been discussed is part of a larger problem in respect of automation, not only as it affects railways in this country, but as it affects other industry. The remarks placed on the record today indicate some lack of action and appreciation by those who sit opposite and who are charged with the responsibility of dealing with these matters. Railroad development in this country called together not only those men who formed the working unit of our railways, but the necessary resources to make our national railways system the utility it is today.

What has been suggested by the management of the C.N.R. in respect of Nakina is a modification of long term plans which were placed not only before the people of the various communities concerned, but the employees who were taken on as part of this organization. When we consider the extent to which the proposed action will affect many of these employees and communities, and the absolute lack of consideration for those who will ultimately be squeezed out, we cannot help but think that the House of Commons at this time could serve no better purpose than discussing this matter and impressing upon the government and the minister their responsibilities in this regard.

It has been said today that this matter is not directly part of the administrative responsibility of the ministry or government. That may be true in a narrow sense, but every one of us will agree that transportation and railway problems, and problems associated with automation, must be of immediate concern to the ministry which sits in those seats across the way.

There are those individuals who will say that the railway officials have indicated to some that they will do certain things to help lessen the load, but there are others who ultimately will be squeezed out by this contemplated action. I have yet to note any contemplated action which will protect their interests in this matter.

When we consider interim supply we usually look for a grievance as the subject matter of our speeches. Today we did not have to look very far. Many things could have been referred to, but I think it is fitting today that we are discussing this subject which is related not only to personnel abandonment, which is one of the real problems facing the country today, but also to contemplated rail line abandonment. Without getting into a discussion of that aspect of the situation, as has been indicated by several members here today parliament itself should give an indication to the officials of the railways of the determination that the rights and privileges of their employees will not be forgotten. Nor will the future and welfare of the various communities concerned with rail line abandonments be forgotten.

We are told by the minister that there is complete flexibility, but it seems to me there is only flexibility so long as the C.N.R. is allowed to proceed on its chosen path, a path which the minister pointed out today is one which allows certain employees to bump others along the line. This is a procedure which will within less than two years affect the great percentage of the population of the town of Nakina.

The consequence of automation is one of the problems that everyone in the House of Commons and across this country is thinking about today. Every one of us realizes that with new techniques developed there will have to be a readjustment of our working force. We realize at the same time that in any readjustment, not only the companies involved but the government should move very carefully. What is taking place is an upheaval of our entire industrial process in Canada. With such an upheaval most families will necessarily find themselves in a new environment. The question we must ask at this time, and it has been asked by members of the opposition today, is whether or not those directly concerned and affected by the action contemplated will indeed suffer a measure of inconvenience and loss out of proportion to what any citizen should be asked to shoulder.

The minister referred to the law. May I say to him that there is a law known as the law of common sense, and perhaps that is the kind of law that should govern in a case such as the one under consideration at the present time. A few months delay in this matter is of no great consequence to the C.N.R. but it is of great consequence to the men and their families, particularly having in mind, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the season of the year when the railway proposes to take this action. Indeed, sir, one would almost think that the management of the railway has forgotten entirely the inconvenience that will be suffered by their employees.

I do not want to take any more of the time of the committee this afternoon. I hope the minister will impress upon the officials of the C.N.R., particularly the president, the necessity for taking action to alleviate this situation, and I look forward to an announcement along that line, at least to the effect that the minister has tried. After the debate we have had today I suggest we have every right to expect that the minister should try to do something in this connection even at this late hour.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, first of all I want to express my complete support of the protests and pleas put before the house and the minister by the dozen or so members who have dealt with the proposals of Canadian National Railways, which will affect the lives of a good many of its employees and the welfare of certain communities. There is no necessity for me to repeat what they have so eloquently, forcefully and in some instances lividly stated.

I also want to express my complete support of the remarks made by the member on the government side of the house from Nova Scotia with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway and its proposals for the abandonment of railway services and lines. I can see that the persons he represents are experiencing, shall I say, the same set of circumstances that the constituents I have the honour to represent experienced over a number of years. In my opinion the hon. member was quite correct when he said that in the first instance the C.P.R. does all it can to discourage passenger service and then uses the small numbers using the service as a reason for abandoning it. That is exactly what happened on the Kettle Valley railway.

For two or three years the C.P.R. did everything it could to decrease passenger service on the Kettle Valley railway by splitting the service at Penticton, by reducing the service and by making it as inconvenient as possible for the over 150,000 people served by that railway in the southeastern interior of British Columbia. While the C.P.R. has been successful in getting the board of transport commissioners to grant its application to withdraw passenger service on the Kettle Valley railway, in view of the fact that because of weather conditions and other circumstances numbers of people in the interior of British Columbia depend on railway travel primarily for good service in the winter, I suggest to the minister that this whole matter should be reconsidered and reviewed. I am not going to go into it at greater length now.

I want to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of the acting minister that this railway abandonment fever has again spread to the Kootenay district and is causing concern to the residents of the city of Rossland, and other people in my constituency. An application has been made by the C.P.R. to abandon some 7.1 miles of railway line between the village of Warfield and the city of Rossland. That is not a very long piece of railway line but it is an important one because it travels over a heavy grade into one of the highest cities in British Columbia, a city with a population of something over 3,000 people, a prosperous city which is mostly inhabited by persons employed by the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, or persons who find their occupations in providing services to these employees. This application came out of the blue, as it were, and it has taken the people of Rossland by surprise.

I cannot understand the attitude of the C.P.R. first of all with respect to the Kettle Valley railway, which was and is a very profitable railway, although of course the C.P.R. insists on dividing freight receipts and passenger receipts, when presenting the company's costs. Second, I cannot understand the company's attitude now with respect to the abandonment of the line between Warfield and Rossland in view of the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway makes the bulk of its profits out of its operations in the Kootenays. I think the officials of that company completely fail to recognize their responsibility to the persons who are producing the greater part of their profits, and I am sure there are a good many members of the house who will agree with me. I can see by the expressions on the faces of a number of members on the Progressive Conservative benches and on the government side of the house that I have a great deal of sympathy in respect of the plea I am making this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: I should also refer to the mutterings of approbation and so on expressed by Social Credit members to my rear. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I now read a letter I received from the city clerk of Rossland. It is dated October 2, 1964, and reads as follows:

Dear Sir:

Re: C.P.R. application for abandonment of rail service Warfield to Rossland

Sorry for the delay in answering your letter of September 18 with regard to the above subject. After considerable study city council arrived at the decision that they would not object to the removal of the majority of track within the city limits—

See how reasonable they are.

—providing rail service is maintained from Warfield to the vicinity of the Rossland southerly boundary.

It is felt that in view of the renewed mining activity in this immediate area and in view of the fact that coal, flour and feed and a certain amount of oil and heavy equipment are supplied by rail the rail service should not be terminated to this city. There is 1.78 miles of main line and 1.21 miles of sidings within the city boundaries. Council would consent to this removal.

As a result of the correspondence I have received from the city of Rossland and other sources I have taken the matter up with the board of transport commissioners and I understand that an inspector has been sent to the district to interview the municipal authorities of Rossland, the major shippers in the district and all other persons who might be affected by this railway abandonment. I understand that after the inspector has reported to the board they will then come to a decision whether the circumstances are such as to warrant a hearing in the district with respect to the C.P.R. application to abandon this portion of their lines.

I urge the minister that in the first instance every opportunity be given to business people and other interested persons in the district to present their views at hearings of the board of transport commissioners, that a thorough study be made of the question and that there be no haste in coming to a decision. Here we have a very important industrial centre, the most important industrial centre in southeastern British Columbia, having to suffer once again from the railway abandonment fever which has seized the senior officials of the C.P.R. in recent years, and once again they have failed to recognize their responsibility not only to Canada as a whole but to the various employees and communities so seriously affected.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, we have had a very interesting discussion of this very vexing problem. When the hon. member for Port Arthur and the hon. member for Melville attempted to adjourn the house to discuss this very urgent matter their motion was not allowed, but still we have spent the whole day on this question which indicates just how important it is and how much it concerns most members of the house. This is the value of interim supply, that we can bring up these questions, as was pointed out by the Acting Minister of Transport when he argued against adjourning the house to discuss this matter. At that time he asked us to present our views and that is what we are attempting to do.

The acting minister gave quite a lengthy explanation of the railway company's attitude regarding the possible easing of the impact of the new policy upon the employees. It was quite a clear statement, but I do not believe it will allay all the fears of the railway workers. I should like therefore to join with others in congratulating the hon. member for Port Arthur and the hon. member for Melville for the introduction of this question, almost on the eve of what could be the adoption of this run-through policy. I do not want to repeat all the arguments because I believe most of the arguments concerning the impact of this policy on railway workers and communities have been advanced. However I feel I should take some part in this discussion, at least to the extent of pointing out that the main line of the Canadian National runs through my constituency of Moose Jaw-Lake Centre. Since I will be referring to it a little later, I may point out also that the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway also runs through Moose Jaw-Lake Centre in the southern area. The Canadian National is in the northern area. It is for this reason I am joining in this debate to point out that many of my constituents are vitally concerned.

One of the main towns in my riding on the main line of the Canadian National is Watrous. There are a large number of railway employees there. I am sorry that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar is away just now on official business, but I should like to point out that a town in his constituency, Biggar, is also vitally concerned with this situation. I have received letters about it, Mr. Chairman, but I will not read them. They are from union officials, and although I have a few of them I should like to refer to some comments made in one letter. It deals with what is called the announced intention of Canadian National Railways to implement a change in operations which would require train crews to be on duty for double the length of time usually involved in making a run over twice the usual distance they have been required to operate. I quote:

> We in the railway running trades, being most familiar with train operations, are very concerned over the unsafe condition that will result to both operating personnel and to the public if such a practice is permitted—

I just read that as an example of some of the letters I have received concerning this matter. The hon. member for Meadow Lake, as well as others, have made some reference to railway line abandonment. This is a matter of greater concern to western Canada perhaps, Mr. Chairman, because of the greater impact over a larger area. Now there is the added concern over this proposed policy of run-through. I agree with other speakers that technological advances cannot be stopped. We must advance, the railways must advance, the whole economy of Canada must advance and all industries must adopt technological changes.

However, I believe there are other considerations to offset considerations of railway efficiency or economy of operations. I am thinking of the effect of this run-through policy on individual workers as well as on the communities in which they now reside. The Acting Minister of Transport made a statement concerning the offer of the railway company to buy the homes of workers who are affected by the run-through policy and may have to move. This offer, I imagine, is appreciated to a certain extent, but it certainly is not the whole answer to the concern of railway workers. As others have said there is the disruption of home life, and as one earlier speaker said the attachment to the community is part of the home life. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the effect on the communities, should the railway workers have to move, is one of the main concerns in connection with this problem. I do not know the situation in Nakina too well, to which the hon. member for Port Arthur referred. However, I do know the situation in my home city of Moose Jaw, which is on the main line of the Canadian Pacific. I think I should refer to it briefly, as I know what can happen.

The main line of the Canadian Pacific came through Moose Jaw in 1882. According to records there certainly was a great celebration when that first locomotive reached the small settlement of Moose Jaw. The city was established as the main divisional point on the main line of the Canadian Pacific between Winnipeg and Calgary. So many employees in the city were on the railway payroll that the city was referred to for many years as "Moose Jaw, the railway city". The main roundhouse was built there to service the steam locomotives, and a large proportion of the population was employed by the C.P.R.

The picture changed greatly with the advent of diesel locomotives. No longer was the roundhouse of use. The diesels could go right through without being serviced, and for the last three or four years the roundhouse was used for the storage of wheat. Many of the railway employees were moved to Winnipeg or Calgary, and the city is no longer known as the railway city.

Some years ago a large depot was built which is still in use. Right beside it was a big railway office filled with administrative staff, but now that building is nearly empty, except for the ground floor where the telegraph office is situated. I mention these things to indicate what the hon. member for Port Arthur is referring to when he forecasts conditions in Nakina.

However, during the last three years, due to the huge exports of wheat negotiated by the previous government, many railway employees were brought back to Moose Jaw. Also there is now the great potash development in Saskatchewan, and three or four of the big potash mines are located in my constituency. This development will create more business for the railway and bring more of its employees back to work in Moose Jaw. As a nostalgic gesture commemorating Moose Jaw as a railway centre, a public subscription was recently taken up to purchase a steam locomotive that used to operate out of Moose Jaw. It is now stationed in the city as a reminder of the older days before the big diesels and automation changed railway policy.

The employees are concerned about this policy of run-throughs because it is one more step in changing the mode of railway operations. We should consider the situation carefully, and I thought the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre used a very apt term when he said this policy should be stretched out. The terms run pretty well together: Stretch out the run-throughs.

We should impress upon the government and the railways that no precipitate action should be taken. The run-through policy is supposed to go into operation on October 25, but I point out that Bill C-120, previously referred to, is designed to establish a rationalization authority, and I wish to emphasize the word rationalization. I might mention in passing that I could not attend a meeting today which dealt with Bill C-120, as I was waiting my turn to speak on these estimates. I have attended previous meetings in connection with that bill and the attendance at them indicates the great interest in the bill. In closing, Mr. Chairman, I believe the C.N.R. should be asked not to take this action until Bill C-120 is finally dealt with by parliament, at which time the house can take a look at the complete railway picture.

Mr. Winkler: On the occasion of interim supply members of the opposition have an opportunity to raise complaints about specific actions of the government, and in dealing with the subject matter being discussed today I wish to say it seems peculiar that the C.N.R., in a unilateral way, should be taking action against the town of Nakina. It is particularly peculiar when we consider some other aspects of government spending.

On this occasion interim supply involves something close to $800 million, and I would point out that the taxpayers of Canada support the C.N.R. to the tune of about $80 million a year. They also support the C.B.C. to the tune of about $100 million a year, and in view of these amounts it is most peculiar that the C.N.R. would take action practically to eliminate a town of some 400 wage earners and their dependants in an isolated part of northern Ontario, and this to save a few thousand dollars. It is even more peculiar because we know that in the not too distant future, if Bill C-120 is passed, it will implement an over-all pattern of operation for the C.N.R. We think this is quite justified, but having read the brief presented to the government by the delegation from Nakina I have come to the conclusion that it contained very strong arguments.

It is also worth noting that towns in the immediate vicinity also concerned with the functioning of the C.N.R. are in agreement with the terms of the brief. One of the towns which would probably benefit a great deal as a result of this particular change is supporting the brief which was presented to the government. We must consider the social and human effects such a proposal is likely to have, even though the population directly involved might be considered small. It would be another matter entirely if we had the feeling that an over-all plan or policy was being introduced. But all we are getting are bits and pieces of policy. I must add that this is something for which the government itself has long been noted. Hon. gentlemen opposite try to tell us that this is a crown corporation, not subject to direct parliamentary authority, but we do not accept this view entirely because we know that in the interest of the people whose lives are affected the government could, if it wished, play a determining role.

I referred just now to failure to produce an over-all policy, and I would point in this regard to the present session of parliament, the longest I believe in Canadian history. We have witnessed one area of confusion after another. I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare in her place. We all know how many times she has tried to bring her pension plan before the house. Maybe she will be able to do so within a few days; I hope so. But one could examine any phase of government legislation during the present session and find confusion all the way. I referred earlier to the budget of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Here we find a creeping burden on the taxpayer. We find that increases in the expenditure of the C.B.C. have been very great, and undesirable to the people of Canada in many phases, though not in all phases, of the operations of the corporation. I must be fair in saying this criticism does not apply to all phases of the corporation's activities. The expenditure of money seems to mean nothing. I understand from my own research that the expenditures of the C.B.C. are now away beyond even those which are apparent; that the corporation uses methods to spend money in ways which have not been approved by parliament. We cannot get at this authority.

For the greater part of our discussion today the committee has been considering a proposal which would have an adverse effect on the people of Nakina and on the economy of that part of northern Ontario, and we must do something in this parliament to see that the rights of these people are fully protected and that they do not suffer as a result of the harsh policy which the C.N.R. is now adopting. The people who live in these railway towns are not the only ones who are uncertain about their future. We need look no further than the Department of National Defence under this very government, and the uncertainty which prevails within that department at the present time. In addition to those in the Nakina area directly affected by the railway proposals, there are of course the small business people, the people who offer service in the stores and elsewhere, the police department, the school teachers, and so on. All these people are affected. It is all very well to offer a monetary return, but this does not really solve the problem. Does the C.N.R. intend to cut out these smaller towns right across the country, making all those concerned feel they do not know where the axe will fall next? I suggest that for once the government should take a decision. Let us take a small community of this kind and show the people of Canada that we intend to act in a democratic fashion. Let us not say: This affects only a few people so we do not need to worry about them; throw them out the back door. It is time we got down to serving the people of this country. If there is to be an over-all pattern, let us have it expressed in Bill C-120.

I was disappointed that only one hon. member opposite rose to support the views expressed by the opposition. I am referring to the hon. member for Halifax. I think sometimes that he should be over on this side of the house, but I will allow the hon. member to remain there as an outstanding member of the Liberal party, who can at least rise on occasion to criticize the policy being followed by his own government when he knows it is wrong.

In concluding these few remarks may I express the hope that the minister in charge of the Department of Transport will take another look at this situation affecting Nakina and take action to postpone or cancel the decision which the company has reached until at least such time as the house is able to consider Bill C-120.

Mr. Barnett: I gather that most of the speeches made today have been directed to the minister who is piloting interim supply through the committee, the Acting Minister of Transport. I should like to direct a few remarks to him in his position as President of the Privy Council. May I say I am glad to see his colleague the Minister of Public Works present because the subject I am about to raise is of concern to his department, too.

I think the most expeditious manner in which I can place this question before the house—it is one which involves several departments and for that reason I raise it on interim supply—would be by reading the following letter which came into my hands today.

Dear Mr. Barnett:

I am sorry to have to call upon you once again. I hope this will be the last time.

My purpose in dealing with this letter is to try to ensure that it will be the last time, because I have had to do some trouble-shooting before in this connection.

Last January we came to an agreement with the Department of Public Works regarding payment for land expropriated by the Department of Justice a year ago in August. To this date the agreement is all we have. Actual money does not seem to enter into their scheme of things.

To begin at the beginning:

1. In February, 1963, we came to an agreement with the Vancouver office (of the Department of Public Works) regarding terms of sale of our land bordering the French Creek boat basin. Our offer was fully endorsed by the Vancouver office and forwarded to the Minister of Public Works in Ottawa. However, we received neither acknowledgement nor reply to our letter.

I might say that the project undertaken in connection with the sale is now proceeding. It is a good project, and I am happy to see it go on. Nevertheless, I think the other party concerned should not be left out in the cold. The letter continues:

2. In August, 1963, without any previous warning, the Department of Justice expropriated our property and informed us after it had been re-registered. We had been assured by the Vancouver office that under no circumstances would this be done. You will understand our indignation, especially after we had been led to believe that our offer would be accepted.

3. In January, 1964, our offer of February, 1963, was accepted and a cheque was received by Mr. Bruce Brown, Qualicum, solicitor for the Department of Justice. Naturally, we believed that interest was owing for the time lapse since expropriation and Mr. Brown withheld the cheque pending further word from the Department of Public Works.

4. In February, they agreed to the payment of 5 per cent interest up until the time we received the money.

5. In June, having heard nothing further I wrote to Mr. Walkey in Vancouver and his department assured me that our cheque had been mailed to Mr. Brown on May 26. By July, neither Mr. Brown nor I had received word of it. Again I wrote to Vancouver. This time they informed me that the Department of Justice had to get word from the department of the treasury before the cheque could come through. Mr. Brown wrote the Department of Justice immediately and they did not acknowledge even his letter. At the end of August he wrote again and this time the Department of Justice replied. They stated that they were waiting to hear from the Department of Public Works.

In September our lawyer in Vancouver was assured by the Department of Public Works that the delay had been caused by the E & N Railway rights but that everything was now cleared and that our cheque would be here within a few days. That was a month ago.

You will understand now why we have come to regard any statement made by any of the departments with distrust. My husband maintains that they should set up a department for activating other departments.

This matter is all tied up with my mother's estate. We are a family of five and we all think the situation has passed the ridiculous. Our lawyer agrees with us. What private individual or company would be allowed such inefficiency and actual dishonesty?

We would be grateful if you could take up the matter with the appropriate department—treasury, justice, public works? It is obvious that any individual's letter is beneath the notice of all of them.

Yours sincerely,
Mrs. M. Urie

I have put this letter on record in the hope that it may save the writing of another 20 or 25 letters on the subject, and also in the hope that the departments of justice, public works and the treasury will take due note of its contents. I also hope some immediate action will be taken to unsnarl this administrative tangle so that I will not have to follow through with the idea of proposing a motion to set up a department to activate other departments.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Chairman, as the hour is almost up now for the day, I should like to say a few words on this subject and possibly conclude my remarks on Monday. First of all I should like to say that I am shocked that it has been necessary to bring the situation which exists in Nakina up in this manner. We have had on the order paper since September 14 Bill No. C-120 which outlines the action planned by the government to provide for the country a national transportation policy. This bill has been on the order paper now for more than a month but still no action has been taken by the government to see that it comes before us for debate and the policies outlined considered so that we can determine whether or not it is good and helpful legislation and legislation which will be of benefit to the country.

Only recently in this house the Prime Minister, in answer to questions posed by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, assured us that the railway bill should be of assistance to the maritime provinces and that no detrimental action as a result of the bill would be forthcoming. However, I may say that the hon. member for Halifax indicated today that he was not anywhere near as optimistic about the legislation as was the Prime Minister. He is concerned about the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the effect that this legislation will have on our area of the country. I may also say that Premier Stanfield recently indicated in a release that he was not anywhere near certain that the railway legislation was going to be of as much benefit as the Prime Minister would have us believe. Premier Stanfield indicated that a hike in freight rates for the Atlantic provinces would likely result from the new freight rate legislation now before parliament.

In view of the conflicting comments relating to this legislation, I am wondering whether or not it is the policy of the government to withhold any consideration of this matter until after November 9. I say this because a very important by-election is taking place in a very important railway centre in the maritime provinces. The city of Moncton derives a great deal of its livelihood from the operations of the C.N.R. and there is no doubt in my mind that there is a good possibility that what has happened at Nakina and what is possibly going to happen in Wainwright might very well happen in Moncton.

This government does not want the constituents of Westmorland who will be putting their ballots in the box on November 9 to learn that this is going to happen in their area; to learn that there will be unemployment and people thrown out of work who now feel they have security and steady employment. No, this is not the type of thing this government wants those particular people to know about, so the government are leaving this legislation sitting on the order paper and taking no action on it in the hope that the people of Westmorland are not going to know anything about this, and that it will come as a great shock to them after they cast their ballots. This is done in the hope that if these people know nothing about it they will cast their ballots in favour of the Liberal party.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I think the Liberal party is going to get a shock because it is not going to get the benefit of the railway vote in the way hoped by pulling shoddy tricks like this, and not telling the people in the Moncton area that there is a very good chance, if this legislation is passed in the way it is presently framed, that they are going to be without jobs in a very short while. I think that the honest approach would have been for the government to bring this legislation before the house, to inform these voters what is actually going to happen in this area, and then let them decide what action to take at the polls on November 9.

This government will derive nothing but the deep distrust of the voters of Westmorland, and I certainly hope the voters react in the only way they can, and that is by showing this government on November 9 that this type of shoddy treatment is not what we in the maritime provinces expect, even though it is what we have been getting ever since this government has taken office.

May I call it five o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, and in order for the house to proceed to the consideration of private members' business, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being five o'clock the house will now proceed with the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills.

POST OFFICE ACT

USE OF MAILS FOR DISSEMINATION OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION LITERATURE

The house resumed, from Friday, October 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Orlikow for the second reading of Bill No. C-43, to amend the Post Office Act (hate literature).

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I was not in the house when my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) introduced Bill C-43 a week ago. However, I have read the debate and I wish to make a few remarks to urge the house to give second reading to this bill, or at least preserve the principles of it by adopting the suggestion made by the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Klein), that this bill and others of a similar nature be referred for careful study to a committee of this house.

Mr. Speaker, I read very carefully the interesting speech of the Postmaster General (Mr. Nicholson) on this bill. He pointed out in his remarks the dilemma that faces anyone who is considering how to deal with a problem of this sort, and that censorship may be an evil greater than the disease it is supposed to correct. I myself as a lawyer, who has been interested over the years in civil liberties, think that we should not rush headlong into this suppression of freedom of speech or right to disseminate information merely because some material appears particularly odius or objectionable to us. I agree with the minister when he says that the courts are, generally speaking, the best places to determine what is legal or illegal and whether or not some particular publication goes beyond the boundary of tolerance. Although I share the hesitations of the minister, and I think these hesitations if I may say so are creditable, I think this particular bill deserves our support.

I believe it is necessary for us to have a balance in these matters, and I do not believe that the public or postal services of this country need be a vehicle for the hateful, dangerous and disruptive phenomena that we have seen in respect of this so-called hate literature. I think the evil is palpable as well as vicious. Even the most ardent champion of freedom of speech will recognize that a man who in a crowded theatre shouts "fire" has to be suppressed.

The minister himself told us he had found it possible to act under the Post Office Act in respect to scurrilous publications by proceeding under section 7. Can anyone doubt that in a shrinking world the most dangerous and most disruptive thing there can be in a human society is a matter which is calculated to bring into hatred, ridicule or contempt a person or group of persons by reason of their race, national origin, colour or religion—and I take those words from the bill introduced by my colleague. Nor do I think this language is too vague, or so broad as to invite interference with the rights of normal and healthy criticism. There is no real danger that just because on occasion one criticizes an individual or group of individuals there is likelihood of a postal ban being applied, if this legislation is adopted. I point out to the house that the ban applies only when the minister has reasonable grounds for believing that an attack contained in material is calculated to bring an individual or group into contempt by reason of race, national origin, colour or religion.

The minister told us that in the particular cases with which he had to deal he was able to conclude that the material in question offended some provision of the Criminal Code. I know, as do other members of this house, that the language of the Criminal Code is often necessarily very vague. In the field of sedition, for example, the classic definition uses language very similar to the language used in the bill before the house.

The minister, quite rightly in my opinion, was hesitant about exercising the jurisdiction to decide what is offensive and what is scurrilous. I point out to the house that that duty is already imposed on the minister by the terms of the Post Office Act. All that Bill C-43 does is clarify what is offensive and what should not be allowed the use of the mails, by referring to that which creates hatred and contempt by reason of race, religion, and so on. There is nothing here to interfere with or stop in any way legitimate criticism of other groups. What is interfered with is something which must be calculated to bring individuals or groups into hatred or contempt.

There is nothing wrong with criticizing other groups of people, but it is when that criticism is based upon the fact of race or religion that it becomes disruptive of the society as a whole. Most of us in this house know what the effect has been of tolerance or indifference when this sort of poison is permitted. I see no reason why the public mails of this country should be allowed to be used for this type of very definite, very calculated and very real, if I may say so, menace we have seen at this time.

While I am speaking on this subject I should like to refer, without detail, to the sort of thing I mean. A distinguished member of the community from which I come, Rabbi Feinberg is referred to in a pamphlet issued by a man named Stanley, as the "red rabbi". This pamphlet is published by the world service of Birmingham, Alabama, and distributed by Canadian publications. It refers, in tones that are definitely anti-Semitic, to a man who has rendered great service to his community. I must admit that he is a controversial figure, but the basic statements are without foundation. Why is it that on the back of this pamphlet the protocols of learned elders of Zion are advertised? This is something I think all hon. members of this house will know was used as almost a symbol of hate literature and violent racial poison. This advertising in itself attacks this distinguished rabbi of the community from which I come. We do not all happen to agree with Rabbi Feinberg, and he is a controversial man, but we know this sort of thing is scurrilous and insulting not only to him, not only to the particular race that he happens to represent, but to the whole community which he has served with distinction.

As I have said, I believe that while we should not jump headlong into more areas of censorship, and I would be the last to suggest that should be done, I believe this particular bill defines, in clear enough terms, a clear and present danger, and that in all jurisdictions—in the supreme court of the United States as well as others—the right of the community to deal with clear and present danger has been conceded as a proper exception to that general respect that we have and should have for freedom of speech.

The minister in this respect has no absolute discretion. His discretion is only in respect of making an interim order, and informing the people concerned, who have a right of appeal to a board of review. There are many other cases in respect of which we in this group have urged that ministerial discretions should be subject to a board of review. Under the Post Office Act they are. The minister was right in being hesitant about assuming this responsibility. I suggest he would discharge his responsibilities much better because he is hesitant. However, as he himself has said, he has had occasion already to deal with scurrilous literature. I do not see why this house should not strengthen his hands by passing this legislation.

I should like to conclude by saying that if the house feels that the actual wording of this legislation requires further study, if it feels there are implications about putting such provisions in the Post Office Act rather than in some other legislation which members wish to review, this can be done without our carrying on the spectacle of futility that sometimes happens when we merely talk out a bill of this sort. If the house is not ready to deal with this matter and give second reading to the bill I would hope we would accept the proposal made by the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Klein) and preserve the basic idea on which I think we are all in agreement, that we must use what powers we have and can have to stop this hate literature. Therefore I hope this measure will be referred to a committee of the house, together with other bills that affect the same subject, so it will be clear that we are concerned and that we do realize the clear and pressing danger and propose to do something about it.

[Translation]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, everyone without exception detests this hate literature which is spread about the country by various means—through the mails or otherwise. I do not know anything more pernicious than this literature which reaches us through the mails, through newspapers, and which criticizes Jews, Protestants, Roman Catholics and other organizations because they do not entertain the same beliefs as the writers of such literature.

I think this is something we should abhor, something which should be removed from our statutes and our organizations, but this would be difficult because the mails are still secret. We have not yet come to the point of examining letters sent through the mails with a view to detecting hate literature, as is the practice in certain totalitarian countries. Furthermore, our postal employees, who are sometimes well-meaning, may not be quite qualified to examine seriously and thoroughly this literature which is addressed to us through the mails.

Many letters are sent from various post office boxes, various homes, various parts of the country, from the United States and elsewhere, and that literature is always as detrimental as the previous or the next one. It would be difficult for the post office and its employees to study and examine that literature and decide whether or not it should be intercepted. It would be difficult for the department to ask its employees to act in a totalitarian manner.

In my opinion, it would be preferable to examine this matter more thoroughly, and to obtain legal advice which would enable us to stamp out that literature. Those organizations are known to change their names and their postal boxes, and when reached in such and such a place, they are elsewhere and keep on sending us the same literature. If we were to amend every Canadian piece of legislation, we would not be any more able to prosecute the writers of such literature.

For the most part, this literature comes from the southern United States where Jews, Negroes and Asiatics are hated. I wonder whether it would not be advisable to refer this bill to a committee for careful and serious consideration, in order to see if there is some means of remedying this situation.

[Text]

I know it has been very hard for the Postmaster General (Mr. Nicholson) and the postal officers to find the exact way to deal with this problem. It is an onerous one. It is one of the worst problems we have now or have had in the past, and I do not think we can find any easy way to deal with it. It is not that we do not hate this practice. We hate it just as much as anybody else does, but human nature being what it is there are only a few such crackpots throughout the country. They are crackpots in some ways, but in other ways they know how to change their postal addresses and how to move from here to there. When we just about reach them here we find they are over there and we cannot reach them. So it is a difficult matter unless we can find some way to catch up and deal with all of them at one time. We cannot change the law every time they change their postal box number, so I think we need a committee to deal with the subject matter of such bills having to do with hate literature.

The government is most anxious that the whole subject of hate literature and all its ramifications be subject to the most searching scrutiny by a committee of the house. I believe that all parties in the house have at some time implied their agreement with such a proposal. When Bill No. C-21 dealing with genocide and group libel was before the house a government motion to refer the subject matter was turned down by certain opposition speakers. Since that time the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) himself has suggested in the house that the government should set up a committee to look into hate literature.

In view of all the public speeches purporting to be in favour of action in this regard, I now ask for unanimous consent to allow Bill No. C-21 to be dealt with at the same time as the bill now under discussion. To achieve this purpose I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai):

> That Bills C-21 and C-43 be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on external affairs.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might offer a suggestion. I think the house does wish to do what the hon. member for Hull has suggested. The fact is that Bill No. C-21, which is No. 64 on today's order paper, already has lying against it an amendment to refer its subject matter to the standing committee on external affairs. I think what the hon. member proposes could be accomplished if his amendment were to the effect that the subject matter of my hon. friend's bill, Bill No. C-43, be referred to that committee, and then the house would perhaps agree to move immediately to order No. 64 and do the same thing with Bill No. C-21. I think this is what we want to do and I am sure those of us who are here would be glad to agree to this.

Mr. Caron: That is what I wanted to do but I went too far. It appears that we can only deal with Bill No. C-43 now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I think it would be far better procedure if we were to deal at the moment with the bill which is before the house. If it is the desire of the house to have Bill No. C-43 referred to a committee—

Mr. Knowles: The subject matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): —the subject matter, I think it would be much better if we were to deal with that individually.

Am I to assume now that a motion is moved by the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) that Bill No. C-43 be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on external affairs?

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

Mr. Caron: I so move.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion (Mr. Caron) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house give unanimous consent now to proceeding with order No. 64 on today's order paper, namely Bill No. C-21?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GENOCIDE

PROVISION OF PENALTIES UNDER UNITED NATIONS CONVENTION

The house resumed from Friday, July 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Klein for the second reading of Bill No. C-21, respecting genocide, and on the motion proposed thereto by Mr. MacNaught.

Mr. Walker: Let us put the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I am advised that there is already before the house a motion to refer the subject matter of Bill No. C-21 to the committee on external affairs. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion (Mr. MacNaught) agreed to.

BUSINESS OF HOUSE

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, having accomplished the two matters relating to public bills, I would suggest that we await the arrival of the house leader in order to ascertain where we go from here. So far as this side is concerned, we have no other bills with which to proceed at the moment, unless somebody on the other side has one.

Mr. Knowles: We could take up the resumption of my bill to abolish the Senate.

Mr. Walker: There is another alternative; we could call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house give unanimous consent to calling it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: What is the business for Monday?

Mr. Churchill: We will carry on with interim supply.

Mr. Robichaud: As was stated we will carry on with interim supply on Monday.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, October 26, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

TRADE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF BRITISH IMPORT SURCHARGE

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, over the week end the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, Mr. Harold Wilson, advised me in advance of the special economic measures announced in Britain earlier today. The Minister of Finance received a supplementary message from Mr. Callaghan, the chancellor of the exchequer.

The British government, on the basis of a review of Britain's present financial and economic situation, particularly the current and prospective balance of payments deficit, has concluded that in addition to a number of internal measures designed to increase productivity and measures to encourage exports, immediate steps were necessary to reduce imports from all sources.

Accordingly the British government has decided to levy a temporary import charge of 15 per cent on imports other than—and the exceptions are very important for us—foodstuffs, basic raw materials, and unmanufactured tobacco. The exceptions, Mr. Speaker, are very important for us covering as they do a large proportion of our exports to the United Kingdom. No detail is as yet available as to the specific impact of this new charge on particular Canadian exports. However, it appears that in general it will apply to Canadian manufacturers. We are awaiting further information concerning the applicability of the charge to Canadian semi-manufactured materials.

It is important to note that the new charge will apply to imports from all sources. Moreover, existing margins of tariff preference will not be altered. Mr. Wilson has told me how much he regrets that it has been necessary to impose charges on certain imports from the commonwealth, but Britain's non-discriminatory obligations and the urgency of the situation left him no alternative. He has assured me that the new charges are essentially temporary and will be reduced as soon as the balance of payments situation permits and abolished at the earliest opportunity. The British government will maintain the existing parity of sterling. Mr. Wilson has indicated that in this connection ample facilities are available for the support of sterling. Britain, Mr. Speaker, is Canada's second most important market and we value highly our trading relations with her. Britain's economic strength is important to Canada and to the rest of the world.

I have expressed our hope that the combination of measures introduced by Britain will result in the speedy restoration of balance of payments equilibrium and the earliest possible elimination of the special charge on imports. I have assured Mr. Wilson that he can count on the understanding of the Canadian government with respect to the present economic difficulties facing Britain and the necessity of measures on their part to overcome them.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will recognize the difficulty of the situation created in consequence of the action taken by the government of the United Kingdom. In saying that I want to make it quite clear that we in Her Majesty's loyal opposition recognize that the cirmumstances in the United Kingdom must have been such as to impel the government of that country to bring into effect a system of imports surcharges which of course will have a very considerable effect on Canada's trade with the United Kingdom. The imbalance that has existed over the years has been large, and naturally this is one of the circumstances that have exercised the minds of successive governments in our own country to the end that that imbalance should be diminished to the greatest degree possible.

I join with the Prime Minister in the expression of the hope that the action taken by the government of the United Kingdom may be terminated at the earliest possible date. We found ourselves in that position in 1962. We acted, and the co-operation we received from the United Kingdom and other countries at that time certainly merits a similar attitude being taken by us at this time. Our hope is that the United Kingdom will soon find itself in a position where once more the normal trading relations, free from controls and the like, may be resumed.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with the increased duties being applied by the United Kingdom. Can he tell us what proportion of Canadian exports of manufactured products to the United Kingdom will be affected, in particular what industries will be affected, and the proportion of Canadian exports of semi-manufactured products which may be affected?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): We have not yet received, Mr. Speaker, the full details of the application of the temporary British charge on imports. So far as we have been able to make calculations, about two thirds of our exports to the United Kingdom will be free of the charge and the remaining one third will bear the charge. We cannot be more precise than that. The charge will apply not only to fully manufactured goods but to most goods in semi-processed form. It will apply, for example, to paper. The best guess I can make at the moment, perhaps, is that about two thirds of our exports are free and one third subject to the levy.

Mr. Harkness: Can the minister tell us what other classes of semi-manufactured goods might be affected? Would sawn lumber come under this classification of manufactured products?

Mr. Sharp: The British order, as we have seen it, lists the exempt goods; therefore what is not exempt is subject to the levy. The information I have given is on the basis of a calculation of the exempt items, which would be about two thirds of our exports last year.

Mr. Harkness: Will the minister indicate how soon he might be in a position to make public a list of the goods that are specifically going to be affected by this charge? I think this would be a matter of considerable concern to a large number of people in Canada.

Mr. Sharp: I should like to assure the hon. member that it will be one of the main tasks of the Department of Trade and Commerce to give advice to Canadian exporters in this connection. I am quite satisfied that in the course of the next few days and weeks we shall be publishing a good deal of information to the trade as a whole on the application of this tax.

WHEAT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF FURTHER SALE TO RUSSIA

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I should like to inform the house that the Canadian wheat board announced today that it had entered into a contract covering the sale of 250,000 long tons of wheat and 25,000 long tons of flour to the Soviet union. This amounts to the equivalent of approximately 10.6 million bushels of wheat.

The wheat and flour have been purchased for cash and will be shipped from St. Lawrence and Atlantic ports, commencing in November and continuing through the crop year. The contract provides for the shipment of the wheat and flour to the Soviet union and/or Cuba, similar to the contract entered into in 1963.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce which arises out of the statement he made earlier today on motions. How much of the approximately 10 million bushels will be delivered in the form of flour and, though he may not be able to answer at the moment, could he also give an indication of how much of this flour will be shipped out through west coast ports?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in the course of my statement I gave the amount of flour, namely 25,000 long tons, which is included in the contract. The wheat and flour have both been purchased for cash, and will be shipped from the St. Lawrence and Atlantic ports.

UNITED NATIONS

STATEMENT RESPECTING OTTAWA MEETING ON STAND-BY UNITS FOR PEACE FORCE

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I wish to make a statement to the house on the peace keeping conference which will be held in Ottawa from November 2 to November 6. This meeting is the outcome of a suggestion made by the Prime Minister of Canada in his address before the general assembly of the United Nations on September 19, 1963. At that time the Prime Minister stated that Canada would welcome an opportunity to share its experience with other countries which have participated in United Nations peace keeping operations. To this end he proposed that there should be an examination by interested governments of the problems and techniques of these operations.

One of the main tasks confronting the United Nations is to find ways of strengthening and improving the peace keeping capacity of the organization, to learn from the experience gained in previous operations, and to seek more effective ways to perform this function in the future. The present meeting is a first step in that direction. As I explained to the standing committee on external affairs on July 9, the aim is to review past experience of the United Nations peace keeping operations and to exchange views on the practical and technical problems which have been encountered in the course of these operations. The meeting will provide an opportunity for informal discussions of these problems amongst the representatives of those countries which have made major contributions in men to United Nations peace keeping operations, or have formed stand-by units for possible service with the United Nations or announced their intention to do so.

Given the nature of the meeting, it is intended that representation should be at the working level and be drawn from persons mainly military experts, with practical knowledge of the problems. The exchange of views would be informal, confidential and without commitment. The points for discussion cover such questions affecting the work of United Nations peace keeping forces as composition; command; control and liaison; training and operational problems; environmental operating information; logistic support; personnel administration; public relations; accounting procedures and legal problems.

Members will note that all these are practical and technical problems, the kind that must be faced whenever a United Nations peace keeping force is organized. This is the first attempt to organize a meeting of this kind. Thus the meeting will be exploratory in nature, and the discussions will concentrate on the practical and technical problems involved in United Nations operations, with a view to strengthening the capability of the participating governments to serve and support the United Nations.

The wider political issues surrounding the authorization, control and financing of United Nations operations are to be discussed at the United Nations. This meeting will not deal with how future peace keeping operations are established or how they are financed. Nor will it attempt to set up a permanent United Nations force or to form co-ordinated stand-by arrangements. This is the responsibility of the United Nations itself.

We believe that the exchange of views will be fruitful and should be of great value to the participating governments. No formal steps will be taken to draw conclusions, and it will be for participating governments to decide what use to make of the information gained at the meeting.

We have already had informal assurances from the following governments that they are prepared to participate: Brazil, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, Ghana, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Malaysia, The Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Sweden, Tunisia, and the United Arab Republic. Formal invitations have been extended to these and other governments, and we are hopeful that a number of other countries will accept. The response thus far has been most encouraging.

I have instructed our ambassador at the United Stations to transmit the text of this statement to the secretary general of the United Nations this afternoon.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this meeting that is being convened will be most theoretical in its nature until some determination has been made as to the responsibilities of member nations within the United Nations to pay their shares and assessments of the costs of peace keeping.

This meeting is simply the formalization of what has taken place in the past among various peace keeping nations in informal discussions. Though it has been described as a significant step forward, in effect it is not of the consequence that some would give to it. Until there has been a settlement among the nations belonging to the United Nations, and a readiness by each nation to undertake its personal and several responsibilities as a member of that organization, meetings like this, while always helpful and always described as fruitful, will be meaningless.

I would like to hear the views of the Canadian government on the stand it will take in the United Nations regarding the U.S.S.R. and these other nations which, in a cavalier manner, have disregarded their pledged acceptance of the principles of the charter.

As for this conference, it will be a fine get-together, but I think it should be made clear that Canada and Canadians as a whole do not relish being in the position of playing their part in peace keeping while other nations, derelict in carrying out their responsibilities, do not assume that burden. That is the problem which should be faced. That is the problem which must be faced if the United Nations is to take effective action to ensure that peace keeping operations are maintained and that peace is preserved. This is simply window dressing until there is a decision made in the United Nations which will effectuate the principles of the charter.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): On behalf of this group I should like to welcome very warmly the announcement which has been made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Although there are serious problems, as the Leader of the Opposition has mentioned, from our point of view a conference of this sort is by no means meaningless. On the contrary, we think it has an important contribution to make.

If there is one feature of international affairs which has been a hopeful development it has been the gradual emergence and growth, step by step and from precedent to precedent, of peace keeping activities under the United Nations. We are fully conscious that these are only first steps and that there are many practical difficulties to be overcome. We believe Canada is in a unique position to make a contribution in this field, and we congratulate those responsible, including the government, for having this conference called in Canada. We wish the conference the very best of luck. We know this is only one step forward, but we believe it is an important tactical step and one which should be welcomed without reservation by the Canadian people.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): I am sure we all agree that the principle of peace keeping is a most commendable one. On the other hand, when we consider the problems and issues which surround this important matter it becomes apparent that there is a great deal of misunderstanding and, I think, a good deal of regret that more substantial results do not accrue from the meetings which are held from time to time in this regard.

The minister has indicated that many of the most important policy problems will not be discussed at this conference, for instance the financing of peace keeping operations. Another matter which I believe should receive considerable attention is the finding of political solutions which would eliminate the causes which necessitate the sending of peace keeping troops to these various areas.

As was pointed out, this is not necessarily a policy making conference; it is, rather, to be an information sharing conference. While it does not go as far as we would like, I believe it will be worth while and we wish the delegates success as they meet for these talks.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister tell us to how many countries invitations were extended to attend the peace keeping operations conference early in November?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Twenty seven.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER TO EXAMINE PROPOSED RUN-THROUGHS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to announce that the government has taken steps to appoint a commissioner to examine the proposals by Canadian National Railways for running through Nakina, Ontario, and Wainwright, Alberta, the matter discussed in this house on Friday. Following representations forwarded by the government on this matter to the president of the Canadian National Railways I was informed by telegram received from Mr. Gordon this morning that the company would be willing to withdraw run-through plans and withhold further action on their implementation pending an examination into the railways' proposals by an independent and impartial commissioner.

In reply to this telegram the government acknowledged the willingness of Canadian National Railways to withhold run-through plans and, conditional on this being done, is taking steps immediately to appoint a commissioner with appropriate terms of reference.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, to table copies in English and in French of the exchange of telegrams between Mr. Gordon and myself.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is too bad that this course was not followed before the matter became a crisis. I recall that it was brought before the house on several occasions and members in various parts of the opposition asked that action be taken. On October 22 I raised the matter, and again on the 23rd, in order to find out the answer of the minister; whether he had transmitted the questions that had been asked to the president of Canadian National Railways and what the reply was. Now, when this sorry spectacle has developed into a serious situation—and the railwaymen are not the ones responsible—this action is taken.

I find it difficult to understand the message from the president of Canadian National Railways to the Prime Minister in which he said:

> We fully believe our discussions with employees affected and their union representatives would have reached amicable understandings as has been the case elsewhere and that present situation is due largely to intervention by third parties which has led to misunderstandings and distortions of actual situation.

I do not know who these third parties are, but on Friday last this house spoke with definiteness and clarity in this connection and demanded action. Now the action the government should have taken earlier is taken today. It is late, but at least it indicates that these third parties, members of parliament, when they express themselves for the Canadian people will be heard.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to move along the line of criticism of the Leader of the Opposition, but I forgo that temptation and raise a couple of points in connection with the Prime Minister's statement. The Prime Minister may be aware that there are at least 2,000 employees of Canadian National Railways all the way across the system from Montreal to Vancouver who are at present booked unfit for duty, or are sitting around the clock in union meetings.

I have received communications which indicate that while they are pleased the Prime Minister has taken this action, they would like at least two points cleared up. One is that there will be no recriminations and no disciplinary action contemplated by the management. There is nothing in the Prime Minister's statement or the wire from the president of the C.N.R. to touch on this. That is No. 1. The second is whether the terms of reference for the commission of inquiry will be general enough to take care of the points that should be considered.

I wanted to make this point clear. The three brotherhoods which have an interest in this matter, the engineers, the firemen and the trainmen, made representations to the Minister of Labour in connection with the statement of declaration of intent of Canadian National Railways to unilaterally operate crews through recognized terminals.

This was brought forward six months ago and is a request for just such a commission of inquiry, and it sets out the general terms of reference they would like. The first is to investigate unilateral actions of Canadian railways in changing working conditions and altering conditions of employment detrimental to the interests of their employees during the currency of a contract. The second—and this is the important part—is to study the provisions of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and the Railway Act to ascertain whether railway employees are adequately protected under existing legislation and interpretations relative thereto, and recommend any necessary amendments.

If these men are to go back to work it seems to me the government must go further, and go further immediately, with some information to the men, perhaps through management, that there will be no recriminations, and that the terms of reference will be broad enough so the inquiry is not just confined to the narrow situation in Nakina and Wainwright but that these other important considerations can also be taken care of.

I underline the importance of this because we do not get spontaneous reaction from Montreal to Vancouver, in respect of men scattered throughout the country, just on the basis of what has taken place at Nakina and Wainwright. I should like to ask the Prime Minister or the Minister of Labour whether they would take some action in respect of their comments so these men can get back to work and the C.N.R. can begin to move again. I should also like to ask that the documents be made an appendix to Hansard rather than merely tabled.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, all I have to say in this connection, related to what I said on Friday, is that we are very happy to have a commission set up to look into this matter, and that the management of the railways has decided not to proceed with the run-throughs, as a result of requests to delay their implementation.

In this connection, I believe the procedure now being followed will have good results. I must say that I have to agree with some of the remarks which have been made to the effect that we have not in the past taken this situation seriously enough, nor dealt with it as we should have done. I hope this same attitude will be taken in respect of other difficulties which may arise in future. The government should take action to prevent these difficulties from occurring, rather than waiting until they occur, so the individuals concerned will not have to book off on sick leave, placing themselves in the position of not being on call for work. There are many avenues open to the government which I should like to see it follow so that appropriate action can be taken to deal with some of these problems.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the documents tabled by the Prime Minister be printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of documents referred to above, see appendix.]

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister what actual steps are being taken to get the railroaders back to work?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the first point raised by my hon. friend in his statement, to which I could not reply on motions, I should tell him that steps have already been taken to clear up the situation. I am talking about the penalties that have been threatened.

So far as the terms of reference of the commission are concerned, we are trying to work them out without delay and in a way which we hope will be satisfactory to all those concerned. We have already invited a commissioner to take on this task and are waiting to hear from him. Perhaps I should add that the Minister of Labour is in touch with the labour unions concerned with this matter as well.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TABLING OF TEXT OF INTERVIEW WITH MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the right hon. Leader of the Opposition asked that a copy of the interview given by the Minister of Justice on the French C.B.C. program "Aujourd'hui" on October 15 be tabled in the house. A transcript has now been prepared by the C.B.C. from the tape of that particular broadcast, and I would ask that it be tabled at this time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO QUEBEC

Question No. 1,755—Mr. Ouellet:

1. What payments did the federal government make to the province of Quebec during each of the fiscal years 1961-62, 1962-63, 1963-64 and 1964-65 (estimated) under the following headings, in detail (a) unconditional grants (b) conditional grants (c) payments to individuals (i) unemployment insurance benefits (ii) family allowances (iii) old age security (iv) others?

2. What is the total amount of all payments made in each of the fiscal years mentioned above?

3. What is the per capita share paid by the government with respect to each of the above items compared with the per capita share paid to the other nine provinces?

[Translation]

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Federal payments to the province of Quebec:

—	1961-62	1962-63	preliminary 1963-64	estimated 1964-65
		(in thousands of dollars)
1. (a) Unconditional grants—
Statutory subsidies	4,023	4,023	4,023	4,023
Equalization	62,632	77,755	69,064	95,066
Share of federal estate tax	—	—	—	8,382
50% of federal income tax on certain public utilities	2,064	4,481	4,623	4,965
Sub-total	68,719	86,259	77,350	112,436

Questions

——	1961-62	1962-63	preliminary 1963-64	estimated 1964-65
		(in thousands of dollars)
(b) Conditional grants—
(i) Agriculture—
Agricultural Lime Assistance	2,239	2,099	1,205	1,205
Farm Labour agreements	21	24	25	25
Ram Premium policy	2	2	—	—
Freight assistance to Royal Winter Fair	6	5	4	3
4-H Clubs	11	10	10	10
Potato warehouse construction	—	—	139	32
Compensation for disease losses	—	—	2	2
ARDA	—	216	2,670	3,555
Barberry eradication	—	—	—	10
Sub-total	2,279	2,356	4,055	4,842
(ii) Health—
Hospital construction	4,988	5,786	5,883	4,020
General public health	1,641	1,923	1,794
Tuberculosis control	1,232	1,238	1,043
Mental health	2,476	2,331	2,575
Professional training	466	501	638	9,087
Cancer control	480	586	696
Public health research	650	562	613
Medical rehabilitation and crippled children	533	628	743
Child and maternal health	549	501	393
Vital statistics fees	18	21	—	—
Disability advisory services	—	13	12	12
Blind pensioners	—	10	16	15
Sub-total	13,033	14,100	14,406	13,134
(iii) Hospital insurance	73,022	88,714	113,849	119,000
(iv) Welfare—
Old age assistance	10,896	13,794	13,860	16,362
Blind persons allowances	1,412	1,663	1,643	1,904
Disabled persons allowances	7,461	8,578	8,081	9,532
Unemployment assistance	38,222	33,579	39,439	43,000
National Welfare grants	—	—	—	148
Sub-total	57,991	57,614	63,023	70,946
(v) Fitness and amateur sport	—	—	—	334
(vi) Vocational training—
Student aid	100	100	100	100
Vocational school training	—	—	897	897
Technician training	2,825	5,445	4,900	5,560
Trade and occupational training	3,376	5,380	5,200	6,300
Training in co-op. with industry	12	27	45	200
Training of unemployed	930	1,655	1,300	2,000
Training of disabled persons	—	299	112	312
Training of technical teachers, etc.	55	59	75	80
Training for federal departments, etc.	23	22	—	46
Correspondence courses	—	34	20	25
Capital assistance—technical schools	1,509	7,391	9,000	22,000
Sub-total	8,830	20,412	21,649	37,520
(vii) Highways and transportation—
Trans-Canada Highway	2,703	9,622	20,000	18,460
Railway grade crossing fund	119	152	—	—
Miscellaneous	8	971	—	—
Sub-total	2,830	10,745	20,000	18,460

—	1961-62	1962-63	preliminary 1963-64	estimated 1964-65
		(in thousands of dollars)
(viii) Resources development—
Fishing vessel construction	—	174	226	135
Industrial development—fisheries	—	—	15	12
Forest inventories	—	—	—
Reforestation	—	—	—
Forest fire protection	281	268	639	1,907
Forest access roads	1,099	1,076	1,000
Forest stand improvement	—	224	268
Camp ground and picnic areas	29	—	—	—
Roads to resources	426	2,281	1,500	1,400
Sub-total	1,835	4,023	3,648	3,454
(ix) Civil defence	427	669	1,543	1,729
(x) Municipal winter works	10,634	11,548	14,055	15,000
Total	170,881	210,181	256,228	284,419
(c) Payments to individuals—
(i) Unemployment Insurance benefits	135,782	123,026	116,695	N.A.
(ii) Family allowances	157,713	160,299	162,324	160,000
(iii) Old age security	131,711	155,360	172,992	188,000
(iv) Others—
War veterans pensions (estimated)	19,743	19,578	17,853	17,609
War veterans allowances (estimated)	8,387	9,127	9,860	9,700

2. The above federal contributions to the provinces or individuals resident in the provinces for the following fiscal years are set out below:

—	1961-62	1962-63	preliminary 1963-64	estimated 1964-65
		(in thousands of dollars)
Unconditional grants	543,366	275,198	252,818	326,327
Conditional grants	606,453	846,202	880,992	902,058
Unemployment insurance benefits	454,739	403,191	365,655	N.A.
Family allowances	519,537	530,225	537,045	544,735
Old age security	624,668	733,857	807,827	881,425
War veterans pensions (estimated)	163,462	161,777	159,537	156,800
War veterans allowances (estimated)	75,019	81,398	82,708	84,600

3. Per capita contributions to (a) Quebec and (b) Other nine provinces.

	1961-62		1962-63		preliminary 1963-64		estimated 1964-65
	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)
	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$
Unconditional grants	13.07	36.67	16.08	14.35	14.15	13.11	20.22	15.69
Conditional grants	32.49	33.66	39.17	48.31	46.86	46.66	51.14	45.30
Unemployment insurance benefits	25.82	24.65	22.93	21.28	21.34	18.59	N.A.	N.A.
Family allowances	29.99	27.96	29.87	28.10	29.69	27.99	28.77	28.22
Old age security	25.04	38.09	28.95	43.94	31.64	47.41	33.80	50.86
War veterans pensions	3.75	11.10	3.65	10.80	3.26	10.58	3.17	10.21
War veterans allowances	1.59	5.15	1.70	5.49	1.80	5.44	1.74	5.49

NOTE: The above answer, with respect to payments to individuals, includes the five most important categories of payment but excludes a very large number of smaller payments which have not been included because of the amount of work which would have been entailed.

[Text]

PROVINCIAL EMPLOYEES IN GOVERNMENT, SCHOOLS AND MUNICIPALITIES

Question No. 2,066—Mr. Gelber:

1. What is the most recent information in the Department of Labour on the number of persons employed by each provincial government, and the average annual wage for each province?

2. What is the most recent information in the Department of Labour on the number of persons employed in each province in primary and secondary schools, and what is the average annual wage for each province?

3. What is the most recent information in the Department of Labour on the number of persons employed in municipalities in each province, and what is the average annual wage for each province?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour):

1. Employees and gross earnings by province —departmental services, March 1964:

Province	No. of Employees	Gross earnings
Newfoundland	7,138	$ 1,777,495
Prince Edward Island	1,760	374,450
Nova Scotia	9,377	2,254,283
New Brunswick	6,584	1,897,665
Quebec	30,136	10,706,000
Ontario	53,430	19,067,782
Manitoba	7,409	2,555,513
Saskatchewan	10,268	3,704,643
Alberta	14,785	5,099,349
British Columbia	*	*

Note: Institutions of higher education, government enterprises, and workmen's compensation boards not included.

Source of data: Dominion bureau of statistics.

2. Number of teachers and principals and average annual salaries in primary and secondary schools, 1963-64, by province:

Province	No. of Teachers	Primary	Secondary
Newfoundland	5,097	$2,516	$4,306
Prince Edward Island	1,235	2,819	4,098
Nova Scotia	7,720	3,499	5,023
New Brunswick	6,321	3,038	4,984
Quebec	61,995	*	*
Ontario	60,903	4,771	7,485
Manitoba	9,395	4,073	5,982
Saskatchewan	10,152	4,246	6,359
Alberta	14,869	5,073	6,639
British Columbia	15,253	5,343	7,018

3. Employees and gross earnings in urban municipalities with population greater than 10,000, departmental services, by region:

Region	No. of Employees	Gross earnings
Atlantic Provinces	4,681	$ 16,973,030
Quebec	27,812	126,016,850
Ontario	46,477	199,600,000
Prairie Provinces	19,142	82,816,150
British Columbia	109,275	53,066,081

Note: Figures do not include municipal enterprises not normally associated with departmental activities of municipal government. Also excluded is information for municipally owned hospitals and municipal school boards.

20220—596½

Source of data: Dominion bureau of statistics.

*Not available.

FISHERIES DEPARTMENT SHIPS, WEST COAST

Question No. 2,080—Mr. Basford:

What are the names, sizes, headquarters port and intended purpose, or use, of all Department of Fisheries motorized ships of 20 feet overall length or more, stationed on the west coast?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries):

Motorized Ships—West Coast
Department of Fisheries

Name	Size	H.Q. Port
Agonus	37′	Butedale
Arrow Post	54.6′	Bella Bella
Atlin Post	61.5′	Nanaimo
Atolla	37.3′	Tofino
Babine Post	55.7′	Butedale
Beaver Rock	51′	Campbell River
Brama	42′	Port Hardy
Branta	36′	Donald's Landing, Babine Lake
Chilco Post	63′	New Westminster
Ciona	34.5′	Zeballos
Clavella	52′	Prince Rupert
Comox Post	54.2′	Port Alberni
Daphnia	34′	West View
Diaphus	39.6′	Arrandale
Egret Plume II	46.5′	Rivers Inlet
Falcon Rock	50′	Rivers Inlet
F.D. 102	34.1′	Comox
F.D. 202	38.2′	New Westminster
Gavia	40.7′	New Westminster
Howay	115.7′	Victoria
Hunter Point	90.6′	Victoria
Kitimat	79.7′	Prince Rupert
Laurier	113′	Victoria
North Rock	45′	Bella Coola
Onerka II	46.5′	Arrandale
Pholis	37.3′	Quatsino
Pillar Rock	51′	Masset
Rissa	36′	Mission City
Sarda	31.9′	Walters Cove, Kyuquot
Seal Rock	43.5′	New Westminster
Sooke Post	55.7′	Queen Charlotte City
Star Rock	39.9′	Steveston
Statistic	30′	Cowichan
Stuart Post	54.6′	Alert Bay
Surge Rock	48.3′	Sandspit
Temple Rock	45′	Westview
Takla Rock	26′	Stuart Lake Station
Thrasher Rock	32.8′	Ladysmith

These vessels carry out patrols necessary for fishery resource management.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

A. P. Knight	78′	Nanaimo
Alta	38′	Nanaimo
G. B. Reed	177′	Nanaimo
Investigator No. 1	60′	Nanaimo
Melibe	25′	Nanaimo
Noctiluca	33′	Nanaimo
Velella	76′ barge	Nanaimo

These vessels serve as floating platforms for the conduct of research operations at sea and in coastal waters.

*REFIT OF H.M.C.S. "BONAVENTURE"

Question No. 2,091—Mr. Fisher:

1. Does the government intend to carry out a major refit of H.M.C.S. Bonaventure in 1966 and, if so, what are the spending implications of this refit; in particular, what is the total expenditure; how much of it is to be included in maintenance expenditure and how much in a capital program?

2. What is the top estimated figure of the spending necessary to bring the Bonaventure up to requirements?

3. Is there any possibility that this ship will ever be returned to the British navy and, if so, what conditions in the agreement are there for making changes in the ship so that it will be acceptable to the British and who is responsible for the cost of such changes?

4. Is it the intention in refitting the Bonaventure to achieve an efficient naval troop carrier and, if so, has any consideration been given to the purchase of a fleet logistic ship, such as the British navy is building at the cost of approximately two milion pounds?

5. How many executive personnel in the R.C.N. are now involved in working on the proposals for altering the Bonaventure aside from the ships officers and the normal administration work which would relate to the vessel?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answers to parts 1 and 2 of the question are yes, as indicated in reply to part 1 of starred question No. 1,169. A decision on total expenditure and whether the costs will be provided from operations and maintenance or capital funds depends on the type and extent of the work to be undertaken, and this matter is now under review.

The answer to part 3 of the question is no, inasmuch as the Bonaventure is owned by Canada, unlike her predecessors the Magnificent and the Warrior, which were on loan.

The answer to part 4, regarding the sea-lift capability of the Royal Canadian Navy, is that this is also a matter of current study.

The answer to part 5 of the question is, six Royal Canadian Navy officers.

TENDERS FOR HEADSTONES, HALIFAX DISTRICT

Question No. 2,103—Mr. Coates:

1. Who was the successful tenderer for the supply and installation of headstones and markers in the Halifax district for the Department of Veterans Affairs for the 12 month period commencing October 1, 1964?

2. How many bids were received and what was the amount of each bid?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Tingley Monuments Ltd., Amherst, N.S.

2. Three bids were received, in the following amounts: $10,823, $10,969, $11,076.

PROPOSED REDUCTION IN C.P.R. SERVICE, QUEBEC

Question No. 2,139—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Does Canadian Pacific Railways intend to reduce by 50 per cent its schedules in various regions of the province of Quebec and, among others, cancel the runs known as 202 and 203 between Lac Mégantic and Montreal?

2. Will the government ensure that no action will be taken until the population affected have been consulted?

3. Will steps be taken by the government before October 25, 1964 to prevent or delay such reductions in service?

[Translation]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): In respect of part 1, the board of transport commissioners advise as follows:

The following reductions in passenger train service have been announced by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to take effect on October 25, 1964:

Trains 202-203 which now operate daily between Montreal and Mégantic, P.Q. are to be discontinued.

Trains 31-32 operating daily between Montreal and Farnham, P.Q. are to be discontinued. Trains 31-32 form part of a through service between Montreal and Boston.

Trains 137-138 now operating Saturday only and Trains 132-133 now operating daily between Montreal and Ottawa via Lachute are to be discontinued.

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company has also indicated its intention to reduce the frequency of the passenger train service operating between Montreal and Mont Laurier, P.Q.

Notice of these changes was posted in all railway stations on the lines served by these trains on September 25, 1964. Concurrent with the posting of this notice, advice of the changes was also furnished the board.

Subsequently, the board directed the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to defer the effective date of these changes with respect to the Montreal-Farnham and Montreal-Ottawa services.

In the case of the Montreal-Farnham service, since this change would have involved a complete abandonment of passenger train service on a portion of this line in Canada, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has been advised that it will be necessary to secure the board's approval before making this change. Consequently, this reduction in service will not take place on October 25, 1964 as contemplated.

The change in service on the north shore line between Montreal and Ottawa represents a reduction in the existing service and as such does not require the board's prior approval. However, the substance of the submissions filed protesting this reduction in service caused the board to direct Canadian Pacific Railway Company to continue these trains pending consideration of these protests. The seriousness of the complaints received with respect to this particular service is such as to have prompted the board to set the matter down for public hearing.

A change is also being made in the Montreal-Mont Laurier passenger train service effective on the same date. This change, however, does not involve the discontinuance of specific trains but a reduction in the frequency of their operation. Such a change in passenger train service does not require the board's approval.

Complaints have, however, reached the board with respect to this particular reduction as well as the proposed elimination of the local passenger train service between Montreal and Mégantic. The board has directed the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to file its submissions with respect to the specific points raised in these complaints.

2 and 3. The Minister of Transport has no power to take such action but the steps taken by the board of transport commissioners are set out in the answer to part 1.

[Text]

BANK OF CANADA PROFIT

Question No. 2,144—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What is the Bank of Canada's main source of profit or revenue?

2. Is the annual net profit made available to the government for the advantage of the nation?

3. What profit was made by the Bank of Canada in 1944, 1954 and 1963?

[Translation]

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. Income on investments.

2. Yes. Since 1955 when the rest fund of the Bank of Canada reached $25,000,000, being five times the paid up capital, the whole of the annual net profit has been paid to the receiver general as required by section 24 of the Bank of Canada Act.

3. 1944, $20,312,659.68; 1954, $51,877,398.94; 1963, $116,386,458.94.

[Text]

*C.B.C.—CANCELLATION OF NOON BROADCAST BY B.B.C.

Question No. 2,147—Mr. Noble:

Is the B.B.C. twelve o'clock noon broadcast from London, England, being dropped by the C.B.C. and, if so, what are the reasons which will cause the termination of this most outstanding and reliable newscast?

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the B.B.C. news from London has not been discontinued. The hon. member's question may be concerned with a change of scheduling that has recently taken place at CBL, Toronto, where the B.B.C. news is now scheduled at 7 p.m., Monday to Friday, and at the noon hour on Saturdays and Sundays.

C.B.C. COVERAGE OF ROYAL VISIT

Question No. 2,148—Mr. Noble:

During Her Majesty the Queen's visit to Canada, what was the number of C.B.C. employees who participated in programs in (a) Charlottetown (b) Quebec city (c) Ottawa, and the estimated cost in the case of each city named herein?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: The radio and television coverage of the royal visit for French and English networks and international service involved a total staff of approximately 400. The assignment of staff by locations was as follows: (a) Charlottetown and Summerside, 196; (b) Quebec city, 183; (c) Ottawa, 154.

The budget for the complete 1964 royal visit coverage was authorized at $270,000, including contingencies. No breakdown was made on the basis of locations.

C.B.C. PERSONNEL AT OLYMPIC GAMES

Question No. 2,152—Mr. Nesbitt:

1. How many commentators employed by the C.B.C. are in attendance at the Olympic games in Tokyo?

[Mr. Latulippe.]

2. What is the total number of C.B.C. personnel, both permanent and temporary, in attendance at the Olympic games?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Fifteen to cover English and French radio and television services.

2. Twenty one.

C.B.C. CAMERAMEN COVERING ROYAL VISIT

Question No. 2,153—Mr. Nesbitt:

1. How many cameramen were designated by the C.B.C. to cover the recent visit of Her Majesty to Canada?

2. How many of these were temporarily employed?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Nine film cameramen.

2. Six.

AMENDMENTS TO INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS ACT

Question No. 2,154—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering amendments to the industrial relations and Disputes Investigation Act and, if so, will such amendments include provisions to penalize an employer who uses industrial espionage to interfere with the right of association granted to employees under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): It is the intention of the government, when an opportunity permits, to consider the amendment of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. At that time, such consideration will take into account all unfair labour practices, not only the matter of industrial espionage.

*PROTESTS RESPECTING C.B.C. PROGRAM "FESTIVAL"

Question No. 2,159—Mr. Noble:

Were telephone calls, letters and telegrams of complaint received by the C.B.C. regarding the plays that were shown on C.B.C. t.v. on October 7, 1964 and October 14, 1964, on the program "Festival" and, if so, how many?

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the plays presented on October 7 and 14, 1964, in the "Festival" series have received about 160 telephone calls and 80 letters and telegrams commenting on the presentation. Thirty per cent contained favourable comment and 70 per cent unfavourable.

NEW BRUNSWICK—VETERANS TREATED OUTSIDE LANCASTER HOSPITAL, 1964

Question No. 2,167—Mr. MacRae:

For the province of New Brunswick, now many cases of war veterans allowance recipients, all classifications, were operated on or treated medically, outside of Lancaster military hospital, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Four hundred and sixty five.

NEW BRUNSWICK—VETERANS TREATED OUTSIDE LANCASTER HOSPITAL, 1963

Question No. 2,168—Mr. MacRae:

For the province of New Brunswick, how many cases of war veterans allowance recipients, all classifications, were operated on, or treated medically, outside of Lancaster military hospital, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Four hundred and eight.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

C.N.R. BOAT CHARTERS, NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 1,760—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did the C.N.R. charter any boats for service on the Newfoundland coast from January 1, 1951 to December 31, 1963 and, if so (a) what was the date of charter (b) name and address of owners (c) condition of charter, length of each (d) amount paid each year and to whom it was paid (e) what officials of the C.N.R. are in charge of chartering (f) what tonnage did each boat carry each year from January 1, 1951 to December 31, 1963 (g) what was the tonnage capacity of each ship?

2. Did the C.N.R. pay any bonus besides the charter price from January 1, 1951, to December 31, 1963 and, if so, what was the amount of same and to whom was same paid?

3. Did the C.N.R. pay any salaries for crews on any chartered boat from January 1, 1951 to December 31, 1963 and, if so (a) what was the amount paid to crews as regards to each boat (b) to whom was each amount paid?

4. Did the C.N.R. do any repairs at C.N.R. expense on any boat chartered from January 1, 1951 to December 31, 1963 and, if so, what was the cost of repairs on each boat and the name of same?

5. Has the C.N.R. any unpaid accounts for repairs to boats not owned by the C.N.R. at St. Johns, Newfoundland from January 1, 1951 to December 31, 1963 and, if so, what is (a) name of boat repaired (b) value of repairs for each year on each boat?

6. What is the actual amount of claims for lost freight claimed at North Sydney for each year from January 1, 1954 to December 31, 1963; what is the actual amount paid by C.N.R. to claimants each year from January 1, 1954 to December 31, 1963?

7. Has the C.N.R. any unpaid accounts for freight charges between January 1, 1959 and December 31, 1962 over $1,000, and, if so, what is (a) name of debtors and addresses (b) what steps have been taken to collect (c) date of charges as yet unpaid?

Return tabled.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INTERVIEW WITH LEADER OF U.S. NAZI PARTY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State, asking him whether his attention was drawn to a C.B.C. television program on which the so-called leader of the United States nazi party was interviewed, and whether there has been any complaint in connection therewith. Were complaints received, among others, from the Zionists' convention and from representatives of the Royal Canadian Legion? The program in question had to do with a man whose conduct is such that I can see no reason why it should receive the attention of the C.B.C. across Canada, nor why nazism should be glorified in this way.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have indeed received views and protests against the announcement by the C.B.C. that they were going to interview this individual. I transferred those views and protests to the president of the C.B.C. I hope the corporation took them into very serious consideration before reaching its decision. They seem in fact to have been taken into account if we consider the statement made by the narrator, John Drainie, as a preamble to the Rockwell interview, which I will be glad to table if the house sees fit.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, does the minister agree that one way in which we could find out why this sort of thing is going on is through a committee before which the president of the C.B.C. could appear, so this kind of thing will not appear to receive the tacit approval of parliament which is supplying the money to operate this corporation?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question on a number of occasions during this session. I have already said that at the present time the C.B.C. is proceeding with an internal study of the organization, and that the advisory committee which was established at the end of May has been asking all kinds of questions which necessitate a good deal of work by top management. I have already said that the president of the C.B.C. has appeared during this session before the public accounts committee. If, in addition, the C.B.C. were asked to appear before a parliamentary committee, this in my view might completely paralyse the corporation in its work, which would most certainly be undesirable.

Mr. Marvin Gelber (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the minister inform the C.B.C. that statements such as those made by John Drainie in introducing the program are rationalizations of the position of the C.B.C.? On the basis that the C.B.C. wants responsible policy in Canada, it should follow a responsible policy itself?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister if he thinks it is right that parliament should set up a crown corporation and then be barred from having anything to do with that corporation because the government will not set up a committee to deal with the problems that exist?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, when we introduce legislation next session I think that will be the proper time for the hon. member to express his views.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister when he expects his estimates will be before parliament.

Mr. Lamontagne: That, Mr. Speaker, depends on the house leader.

[Later:]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I should like to return to the questions about the television program "This Hour Has Seven Days". The question I should like to ask is directed to the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Justice who is now visiting St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary.

On this show last night a serious allegation was made that there was a prisoner in this penitentiary who had received a 14 year sentence as a result of his participation in the riot of two years ago. This prisoner was a French Canadian. Another prisoner, who had led the riot, was said to have got an extra sentence of one day. The second statement that was made that was very shocking was that this French Canadian prisoner had his letters to his family and other people stopped. This is a very serious infringement of ordinary human rights. I should like the Prime Minister to ask the Minister of Justice, when he makes his statement to the house concerning his visit to the penitentiary, to make some attempt to tell the members of the house the truth about these statements made on television.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I agree, Mr. Speaker, that both these matters should be and will be investigated, along with two or three other statements that were made on the same program.

[Later:]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I have a further question relating to the C.B.C. program to which the attention of the Secretary of State has been directed. Does the minister not consider it an impropriety for the C.B.C. to make available to a large number of United States viewers and voters on the eve of their election a highly controversial political film which the leader of the party which made that film had decided should not be released over any United States television outlet?

Mr. Lamontagne: As long as I am responsible for reporting to parliament for the C.B.C. I intend to follow the example which was given me by one of my predecessors, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, who, as the hon. member knows very well, said he would not comment on the programming of the corporation.

REPORTED COMMUNIST INFILTRATION OF FRENCH NETWORK

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): The question I am about to ask has nothing to do with programming; it has to do with a speech made by Hon. Bona Arsenault; I have to refer to this before I can ask the question. According to a report I have here Mr. Arsenault said:

> There has been left wing communistic infiltration of the French network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, most of our newspapers and political organizations, perhaps even the Quebec Liberal federation.

However, the administrative responsibility of the minister does not go beyond the first. Has this statement been brought to the attention of the minister? Will the hon. gentleman get in touch with the president of the C.B.C. and have him secure from Mr. Arsenault information regarding this communist influence in the C.B.C. in Quebec, to which reference has been made on a number of occasions?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I will be very glad to ask Mr. Arsenault whether he has any names—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, no. The minister cannot do that; he has just told us he cannot do that. Will he take up this matter with the president of the C.B.C. and let us get to the bottom of this suggestion, because it is repeated frequently that there is communist influence there.

Mr. Lamontagne: I will be happy to ask the president of the C.B.C. as well.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN FAMILY ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

In view of the budgetary surplus for the first six months of the current year, could the minister tell the house if he is considering the possibility of increasing family allowances next year?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I presume my hon. friend refers to a statement of the government accounts as at the end of September, which shows a very heartening improvement over last year. This reflects in large measure the improvement in conditions in the country.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And higher taxes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gordon: My right hon. friend is now talking about something he understands full well.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is something the minister does not understand.

Mr. Gordon: I would point out that not too much by way of inference should be drawn from these published statements—

Mr. Grégoire: That is not what I asked.

Mr. Gordon: I will come to your question in a moment—until the results for the full year are in. In some particulars there have been differences in the way amounts have been collected, so to some extent the comparisons are not completely on the same basis. As to my hon. friend's question, I suspect he knows it is out of order, Mr. Speaker, because he is asking for a statement of government policy on orders of the day.

Mr. Lambert: So has the answer been out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, respecting the point of order, I believe that if the Minister of Finance deemed that my question was out of order, he took quite a long time to answer it and then say that it was out of order.

I would like to ask him a supplementary question.

Does he deem that the prosperity of the country is measured by the increase in taxes? Is this the meaning of the answer he just gave me?

[Text]

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the situation will the minister consider the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax?

Mr. Gordon: I have already answered that question on several occasions. If there are any changes in taxation they will be announced in the next budget.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REORGANIZATION OF MILITIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact we are long past the first half of October, when his colleague the associate minister indicated that a decision would be announced with regard to the second half of the Suttie report, is the minister now able to give some certainty of future to the militia by announcing what the decision of the government is in regard to the recommendations in that report?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, at the moment the Suttie proceedings and the departmental position in relation to them are being reproduced and translated. As soon as this mechanical process has taken place we will be in a position to table them. I would expect this to be within a very few days.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRANSPORT

WHEAT SHIPMENTS THROUGH PORT OF CHURCHILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. It concerns a question I directed to the minister on July 16 regarding the shipment of grain through the port of Churchill. At that time the minister answered as follows:

> The hon. member may like to know that last year we shipped a record amount of wheat through Churchill, and I suppose we may even exceed that record this year.

In view of the figures just released, which show that 21,644,773 bushels have been shipped through Churchill this year and that this is a million and a quarter bushels less than last year and a half million bushels less than 1959, how can the minister now justify the answer which he gave me on July 16?

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am unable to provide the hon. member with the information he requires. I will bring the question to the attention of the minister, and I am sure he will make a report at the first opportunity. In view of the prefatory remarks to the question of the hon. member, I think he might be interested in the itinerary of the minister for today.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I really think we could save the time of the house by avoiding such material.

POWER

INQUIRY AS TO STUDY OF CONTINENTAL GRID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marvin Gelber (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. The minister issued a statement advising that a study is being made of phase two of a national power network which would take into account north-south connections. I wonder whether any consideration is being given to a study of a continental power grid.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the hon. member would put this question on the order paper.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Since the minister announced last week the establishment of a federal-provincial committee to look into long distance power transmission, I should like to ask him whether he has invited a representative of the province of Quebec to sit on that committee.

If so, what was the reply made by the province of Quebec in this connection, since I note the absence of a Quebec representative on the committee?

[Text]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member that we have endeavoured at all times to work very closely with the province of Quebec. They were not represented on the interprovincial committee, but it was specifically understood in the interprovincial committee, where this decision was taken, that Quebec be kept advised in every respect on every move that is made.

IMMIGRATION

DAISY MAUD HENRY—CONSIDERATION OF DEPORTATION ORDER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, I advised the house that I would give serious consideration to the case of Miss Daisy Maud Henry, to see to what extent I could use the discretionary powers of the minister to allow her to remain in Canada.

I wish to emphasize again that the decision in her case was based wholly on the fact that she gained entry to Canada by material misrepresentation, and there is no doubt that she was properly ordered deported. I have decided, however, that the actual deportation will be suspended for three months, during which time all the circumstances relating to Miss Henry and her children will be thoroughly reviewed.

TORONTO—STATUS OF PERSONS CONCERNED WITH NEWSPAPER STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I should like to give an answer to the hon. member for Danforth with regard to a few cases involving workers on newspapers in Toronto. In view of all the circumstances with respect to the dispute in the newspaper industry in Toronto, I deem it proper not to grant landed immigrant status to seven persons who have come to Canada from the United States for employment with the newspapers and who have not been landed, unless in one or more of these cases factors not now known arise that make such landing proper.

To this end I have directed that the case of each of the persons concerned be concluded immediately, and unless exceptional factors arise each person concerned will be asked to leave voluntarily at once. In default of so doing the provisions of the Immigration Act respecting special inquiries and deportation if necessary will be invoked.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I wonder whether he would consider adding a supplementary answer to the one he gave today to the question by the hon. member for Danforth, giving the names of the persons to whom he is about to deny landed immigrant status so that we may compare them with the information given in answer to my starred question No. 2,054, made by his parliamentary secretary on October 14.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I do not have with me the names of the people concerned and I wonder if it would be proper for the minister to give that information to the house.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: If that is not possible, will the minister look again at the answer given on October 14 to see whether he can give any more information regarding the names which were placed on Hansard on that date?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire whether there is a reconciliation to be checked and whether there are contradictions.

[Text]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CONSIDERATION OF OBJECTIONS TO PENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the strong objections to Bill No. C-126 by the Vancouver board of trade, the air lines, the Northland Shipping Company, the B.C. towboat owners association, the automotive transport association of B.C., will the minister defer further consideration of this bill in the house, even at this late date, and receive delegations from these industries and organizations?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I would be glad to receive delegations with a view to hearing representations on this bill. The principal objection to the bill, as I understand it, from almost all these organizations has to do with the hours of work. I think in committee of the whole there will be an opportunity to discuss this and possibly to satisfy hon. members that the provisions of the bill are not as restrictive as they might appear at first glance.

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): I should like to ask the minister if he has replied to the many representations he has had from the trucking industry, and will he table a copy of his reply for the information of the house?

Mr. MacEachen: I have signed a good many letters in reply to representations from the trucking industry. I would be glad to table or make available copies of those letters, or representative copies.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the answer given by the minister a moment ago are we to take it that all that is going to be done in the committee is to explain that the effects of several sections of this bill are not as the trucking industry believes them to be? Is that all he meant by the statement? I wish to ask him at the same time, in view of the objections that have been raised which appear so well founded—and I am referring to those trucking industries operating between province and province—is it the intention of the government to reconsider the section dealing with hours of work so that the necessary exemption may be provided for that industry?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, presently I have under consideration this particular transitional section which provides for the deferment of the total application of this section, and that I would hope would take into account the objections that have been made. The bill has received second reading, and I think it would not be the wish of the house to depart from the principle, but I think it would be the wish of the house to make it possible for all groups to comply without undue hardship and to consider how this clause might operate or how changes might be made in it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister for his statement, because that is along the lines of the answer he gave in the house the other day. Will these various industries, particularly the representatives of interprovincial or national trucking companies, have an opportunity of placing their views before the committee so an amendment may be brought in to assure that the industry shall not be struck a mortal blow?

Mr. MacEachen: I have already heard from the trucking industry, and I gather that hon. members generally have received similar representations. This industry involves a number of complicating factors, including the long hours that have been traditionally worked and the operations which in part may be federal and in part provincial, as well as the further complication of competition between provincial operations, which are under provincial jurisdiction, and competitive organizations under federal jurisdiction. All these things are under consideration. I would not wish to depart from the principles of this bill so that we could achieve them, but I would hope that in committee of the whole we can reach a conclusion which will make it possible for these industries to comply without receiving a mortal blow.

Mr. Gene Rhéaume (Northwest Territories): May I ask the minister a supplementary question which is based on a charge made in this morning's Montreal Gazette, to the effect that he conspired with certain Liberal members of parliament to lose the committee vote that made Remembrance day a statutory holiday. I want to ask the minister if he has seen the report, does he agree with it and, if so, why—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Speaker, I give notice I would like to debate this on the late show.

Mr. Speaker: It is possible to debate a question which is in order, but I do not think one which is out of order should be debated.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): As I understand it, the minister is now proposing that we resolve these difficulties in committee of the whole. Would the minister not reconsider and bring this matter before a committee of the house to which we can invite representatives not only of the trucking industry but of other industries, such as the country elevators in western Canada whose interests will be seriously affected by this legislation? In such a committee their viewpoints can be brought directly to all hon. members instead of being leaked into the house by individual members.

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not intended to send the bill at this stage to a special or standing committee of the house. We, as well as individual hon. members have been hearing the representations of interested groups over the past ten days, and I believe we could deal with the matter effectively by continuing our discussions in committee of the whole. There is one particular point involved. I think there is a solution for it in the bill, and possibly this solution can be improved.

Mr. Chatterton: As a supplementary question, can the minister say whether the shipping and air lines industries were contacted by experts from his department before final drafting of this bill?

Mr. MacEachen: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have attempted discussions, extending back quite a number of months, with interested associations in the country. I cannot say specifically whether discussions were held with these operators prior to the introduction of the bill, but I am sure discussions have been held by officers of the department with at least one group involved, and we would be glad to have discussions with the air lines.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): As a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest to hon. members that this is almost becoming a debate. We have had seven, eight or nine supplementary questions already.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, may I put this one supplementary which has not been asked. Has the minister received representations from the three prairie wheat pools and other elevator associations in the west with regard to country elevator operations and how Bill No. C-126 applies to them?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have had representations. We have given and are continuing to give them most careful consideration.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Would he advise the house whether, since the adjournment of the debate last week, Bill No. C-126 has been referred to the law officers of the crown for re-examination to see to which industries it does apply and to which industries it does not apply?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, certain questions did arise in the discussion last week, for example with regard to the fishing industry, and I have asked for advice on the application of the bill to some of these borderline cases which I, as a non-lawyer, would hesitate to deal with myself without further advice.

Mr. Lambert: As a supplementary question, does the minister suggest that the bill was prepared and presented to the house without this prior consideration as to what would be its ambit?

An hon. Member: Typically Liberal.

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker. We have included within the ambit of the bill the traditional jurisdiction of the federal parliament in labour matters. If my hon. friend will refer to other labour acts he will find that we have followed exactly the claims made in those previous acts with respect to jurisdiction.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): As a supplementary question, now that the Department of Justice is studying the bill, would the minister ask that department to list all the industries to which the bill is applicable and those which are excluded from its provisions?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I said I had referred the bill to the Department of Justice. I have asked for further advice on certain points that were raised. The industries that are included in the application clause are those which are covered by the Annual Vacations Act, which my hon. friend introduced. There is exactly the same coverage.

Mr. Starr: In view of the tremendous doubt that there seems to be in the minds of many industries across Canada would the minister not consider asking the Department of Justice to list all the industries to which the bill will be applicable, and those excluded from its application?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I suppose ultimately this is a question that will have to be determined by the courts, but in this bill we are claiming the exact jurisdictional area that has been claimed for federal laws of this kind in the past, and surely there is an experience there that will assist industries in determining the application of this bill to their operations.

[Later:]

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question related to the one asked by my hon. friend from the Northwest Territories. Has the government evolved a new technique of governing by proposing legislation which its own members will assist in defeating or amending by staying out of the house?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Aiken: I am not satisfied with the answer, Mr. Speaker, and I give notice I should like to debate this matter at ten o'clock

Mr. Speaker: I may say I am not satisfied with the form of the question.

Mr. Aiken: My question related to the administrative responsibility of the government and I should like to know why it is out of order. I may be wrong, but I phrased it in such a way that it would be in order, as far as I could see.

Mr. Speaker: I may be wrong too, but in my opinion it was a statement, not a question.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PHYSICAL CONDITION OF PERSONNEL RECALLED TO WORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Transport. Has he received complaints today that over the week end the C.N.R. called back to work people who had been turned down previously for certain work because they were colour blind and, in one or more other cases, because they had heart conditions? If he has received such complaints will he look into the question of the possible safety hazards involved?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not received any such complaints.

Interim Supply

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO FRENCH EDITION OF GOVERNMENT TELEPHONE DIRECTORY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put to the Secretary of State a question which I asked about two or three weeks ago and which has remained unanswered.

Could the minister tell us why we have received the government telephone directory in English but not in French?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I had the reply with me the other day but the hon. member was not in the house. I do not have it with me today but I shall give it to the hon. member tomorrow.

[Text]

HOUSING

HALIFAX, N.S.—LOW RENTAL ACCOMMODATION FOR NAVAL PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General as the minister in charge of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. What action does he anticipate as a result of his recent meetings with members of the Royal Canadian Navy at Halifax, with regard to providing housing accommodation for ordinary seamen and non-commissioned officers at reasonable rents, a situation that is non-existent today?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question just a few days ago. If the hon. member will look at Hansard I am sure that he will see the answer.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $740,710,974.77, being the aggregate of

(a) two twelfths of the total of all of the items to be voted in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, as reduced, except finance item 15, mines and technical surveys item 25, national research council item 10, and transport items 15 and 25 for which the proportion is one twelfth and atomic energy item 5, external affairs item 20, forestry item 25 and legislation item 20 for which no proportion is being released, $651,829,576.84;

(b) an additional two twelfths of the amount of public works item 70 (schedule A), of the said main estimates, $666,666.67;

(c) an additional one twelfth of the amount of fisheries items 5 and 10, legislation item 5, mines and technical surveys item 70, post office item 1 and public works item 40 (schedule B), of the said main estimates, $20,263,800.00;

(d) two twelfths of all of the items to be voted in the supplementary estimates (A), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except national defence item 56a, and loans, investments and advances items L12a, L17a and L37a for which no proportion is being released, $20,612,522.50;

(e) an additional two twelfths of the amount of transport item 103a (schedule C), of the said supplementary estimates (A), $872,966.67;

(f) nine twelfths of the total of the items to be voted in the supplementary estimates (B), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $46,215,108.75;

(g) two twelfths of the amount of transport item 103b (schedule D), of the said supplementary estimates (B), $250,333.34, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965.

Mr. Lambert: We are dealing today, Mr. Chairman, with the third or fourth request by the government for interim supply. On this occasion it is for two months and this, of course, represents a very large amount of money. We should bear in mind, I think, that on the last occasion three months' supply was granted, and I feel it is incumbent upon members of this committee, especially in view of the fact that there is some doubt as to when the main estimates will come forward —from time to time additional items are brought in—to give this request close consideration.

If we consult a calendar we will find, if I recall correctly what a certain radio announcer said yesterday, that there are 66 or 67 days left before the end of the year. As far as this parliament is concerned it means possibly some 40 sitting days. The Minister of Fisheries, I believe, is doing some fast calculating; he is bringing in all kinds of things. If he wants to get down to a real discussion, then he and I can have one. I should like to get down to a worth-while discussion of the estimates of this government, including those of his department.

In these main estimates the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is responsible for some $88 million, and we are asked to approve one sixth of this amount on this occasion. But there is another item, to which reference may have been made at an earlier date in this house. At the back of the estimates, among the money loans, is an item of $14¼ million to be lent to the corporation. Considering the type of operation carried on by the C.B.C. and the financing carried on by the corporation for a number of years, how is it expected that this loan will be repaid? The total budget of the corporation is far in excess of $88 million, in fact well over $100 million; the C.B.C. has certain revenues of its own. Yet the government of Canada is asked to make up a deficiency of some $88 million for the operation in the coming year. This sum of $14¼ million is presumably to meet expenditures of a capital nature.

In the past such expenditures have been included within the current budget, and when the corporation sought approval of parliament for the provision of the sums it needed, those capital requirements were included in the figure shown in the estimates; there was nothing tucked away in the back of the book. This is one question we should like to have answered. How is it expected that the corporation will repay this loan, and what will be the terms thereof? It behooves us to have more information that the Secretary of State, reporting for the corporation, has given today and on previous occasions when representations have been made from this side of the house and when, I am sure, they have been made by members on the government backbenches to the effect that it is high time the broadcasting committee was reconstituted to look into the affairs and policies of the corporation.

This is not with an idea of conducting a witch hunt. Mr. Chairman, I have to laugh at the sort of coy smile that appears on the face of the Minister of Fisheries when I say that because, after all, my connections with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation are far in excess of his. For three years I was parliamentary secretary to the minister who reported to this house, and I had very cordial relations with the officers and know a good deal about the operations of the corporation. Certainly in the proposals that I make today I have no idea that this house should conduct a witch hunt; that parliament should become in any way a censor of the programming of the corporation, despite the pressures that are on members of parliament by their constituents, or out of their own desire, to bring some influence to bear on the programming standards of the corporation.

This is a public body, financed by public funds, and therefore has a responsibility perhaps even greater than a similar body with a private financial structure. It has been granted a tremendous responsibility by the Broadcasting Act, and I think in the main its record has been good. The officers of the corporation would be the first to admit that a review of their philosophies with regard to programming should be aired before the public, whereby they could place their views before a committee of members from all parties of this house. This would furnish them with the appropriate forum in which they could put across the philosophies of their programming and the principles of their operations. Then members of this house could more readily appreciate the problems and complexities of the operations of such a corporation. It is a big business. I cannot understand the hesitancy on the part of the government at this time, with the rather lame duck excuses made by the Secretary of State that the corporation could not or should not at this time be available for a complete review of its operations.

After all, Mr. Chairman, when hon. members who now occupy the treasury benches were sitting on this side of the house they were always after the government of the day to have the C.B.C. appear before a committee. As a matter of fact the broadcasting committee sat in 1959 and, if I recall correctly, it sat last in 1961. Three years have elapsed since that time; certain questions were under study then, and in a committee members could far better determine what progress has been made and what difficulties have been encountered in the formulation of future programming of the corporation and the extension of its services since 1961.

But no; we are told there is an advisory committee which will report in a confidential manner to the government. This advisory committee is headed by a man who had previously sat on a commission that had to do with broadcasting and who, frankly, made some recommendations that did not work out. This committee is to report to the government. Then, apparently under a cloak of confidentiality, policy will be determined and it will then be announced. It is said that then a broadcasting committee may be set up.

Just who is the government trying to fool? This is not going to help the corporation. It has a public relations responsibility to the viewing public, to the citizens of Canada; and I am afraid that at the present time its public relations have suffered, because never have we seen so much in print, either in letters to the editor, comments in newspaper columns, or representations by members, about the nature of programming.

I readily agree that individual members should not be in the position of acting as censors, because what is one man's meat is another man's poison. But why this disquiet? It must mean that there is an uneasiness about the philosophy at the back of certain types of programs. Let us take the field of public affairs. I personally am very concerned as to why certain individuals seem to have a prominence on many programs; that they are the ones who are invited to be interviewed; that they are people who represent far-out ideas, whether they are from the right or from the left, whether they are of a wildly non-conformist view or whether they are just plain oddballs. It seems that the smart thing to do is to guarantee them a prime forum. They represent a minuscule of opinion in this country, and they could not buy the forum they are given.

Let us look at the situation at the time of the royal visit and after those unhappy events in Quebec city. What happened in the case of the leader of a very minor group, a man who had been castigated by the Prime Minister, by the Minister of Justice, by the premier of the province of Quebec, and by right thinking citizens across this country? The C.B.C. was indecently precipitate in putting him on one program called "Front Page Challenge". I am talking about the man Bourgault. Lo and behold, if that was not enough, on the Sunday night the Queen arrived in Ottawa I watched the program "This Hour has Seven Days" and one of the interviewers, with perhaps a touch of wry humour, indicated that the man who had done most to make the stay of the Queen in Quebec city unpleasant had not been able to appear on that Sunday program because he had been stopped, or he could not get to the studios because of the size of the crowds that were welcoming Her Majesty in Ottawa.

It is not that I object to the fact that a man is going to be interviewed on a program, but I do not understand why he should be allowed to use this forum. Last night the C.B.C. imported a man from the United States to Canada whose philosophy is that which was adopted by a group which many of us who served for years in Canadian armed forces, attempted to destroy. The hon. member for York South was mystified as to why he should be allowed or invited to appear.

Last year a man who had been convicted in the United States and fined thousands of dollars, and was subject to further penalty in relation to downright dirty pornography, was brought to Canada for the purpose of interviewing him on a television program. I should like to know what is the philosophy behind this type of programming. These programs come into our living rooms, and as parents of children, who are very impressionable, we realize what detrimental effects this type of thing can have. It seems that the C.B.C. follows a policy in respect of programs whereby anything which is wrong, a deviation, or detracts from common decent morality or commonly accepted authority should be glorified.

The corporation does a great deal of good work in many fields. I hope to see it do much more work in the field of education. The C.B.C. does a great deal of good work in respect of its productions which show various areas of Canada to Canadians. It does good work in respect of its documentary productions, and in this regard it should be commended. On the other hand, are members of parliament asked to appear on C.B.C. programs to answer questions or present their views in respect of things that affect us all as Canadian citizens? That is not the case. Are members of parliament, or men in public life, asked to present their views in respect of certain films? That is not what is happening.

The thing I object to is the choice of individual who is interviewed on television. I do not know whether the officials of the C.B.C. are aware of this fact, but an individual who appears on television seems to have received a sort of seal of approval, or at least this is the impression in the minds of a great proportion of Canada's viewing public.

The hon. member for Grey North on several occasions has asked serious questions in respect of particular programs which have appeared as parts of series. Many of these programs have been highly objectionable because they are viewed by family groups. It is not sufficient to say that if we do not like or object to particular programs we should turn off the television set. That can be done, but some of the things which are shown and statements which are made are not foreseeable, and any harm that might be done will have been done before the set can be turned off. Many of these statements are made from one second to another, and one cannot avoid the possible harm by turning the set off after the objectionable things have been said.

I suggest we must receive answers to questions so that we will know why certain programs are being allowed. Many of them deal with subjects of morality. Not too many days ago on the program called "This Hour has Seven Days", individuals were interviewed about the contraceptive pill. The program contained street interviews of high school girls, and the view that these pills should be issued in high school was blithely presented. Apparently it was suggested that there is a lack of morality in our high schools, and because of human relationships these pills might just as well be made available. I wonder what could have been in the minds of the producers of this program when they allowed this expression of opinion by individuals interviewed on the streets, and what effect they think such an opinion would have on teenagers. While it may be of interest and benefit to discuss matters of this kind among adults, I can see no possible advantage in presenting this type of opinion to the people of Canada. Again I say that we must look into this situation and find out why the C.B.C. is allowing this type of program.

In this regard I should like to refer briefly to an article which appeared in today's Toronto Globe and Mail under the by-line of Dennis Braithwaite. The article is headed "Fighting Sin, C.B.C.". I do not intend to read this article, but wish to say that it is a protest by various groups against certain programs which seem to glorify sin, sexual deviation and crime. The people referred to in this article are not a group of oddballs, but are responsible citizens discharging their responsibility with respect to and concern with the things around them. The list of individuals includes members of fraternal organizations and women's organizations who are very concerned with this whole question.

During the past few years there has been a great deal of criticism in respect of the corporation because of its programming policy. Surely it is the duty of all members of this house who are charged with the safeguarding of the public interest to demand—and I do demand—an examination and a review of the C.B.C. There may be some point of view on the part of the corporation that we as individuals not connected with the broadcasting industry may not appreciate, and the corporation could put forward this view. I want to see this frank exchange of views in order to make what I think is a soundly based broadcasting organization function more efficiently.

I do not know whether the management of the corporation are deaf to the things that are said by individual citizens in regard to what is done by the corporation. Certain producers, and what have you, move in rather arty circles where views are somewhat freer and there is perhaps not quite the same appreciation of everyday morality, but the fact is their views as to what should appear on television screens and come forth from loudspeakers do not necessarily represent what is the best for Canada.

I cannot share at all the views of the Secretary of State this afternoon that the management of a corporation could not possibly cope with committee hearings. They are much more able men than that. He is actually underestimating their capacity. In addition, it is not only the top management whom we would like to question. There is within the corporation a very extensive middle echelon and I think it would be most helpful to have these people explain their operations. It is not those who work at the headquarters of the C.B.C. and live in Ottawa who determine the exact nature of a program. After all, I am sure that the president and vice presidents only become aware of certain programs if they happen to see them on the screen and then it is too late to do anything about them.

Another aspect of the corporation that we would like to examine is its facilities. What are its plans for Vancouver? We have had a lot of questions on this matter. There is already a great deal of controversy between the city of Vancouver and the corporation. Let us help resolve the matter. Let us bring it out in the open where it can be examined and where the corporation can state its point of view.

What about Montreal? Where is the corporation heading there? What is being done? What progress is being made? In this regard it is not sufficient to have the minister responsible for the corporation answer questions on the discussion of his estimates. I am sure the estimates of his department and of the corporation will be among the last to be examined by the house and they will be caught in the gallop toward adjournment. This has happened so often in the past and it can easily happen again.

What about Toronto? There is an amount of $14 million here that we want explained. When we pass the motion for interim supply we will have granted eight twelfths or perhaps nine twelfths of the total amount of the estimates. This is more than the proper time to be discussing what the corporation is going to do.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Lambert: If I may have a couple of minutes I shall be finished.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert: I would refer to another point in which the hon. member for Churchill, the hon. member for Port Arthur and a number of hon. members from Newfoundland are also most interested. I have in mind the extension of services to outlying areas. It is three years since we have had a statement of policy in this regard informing us what the corporation planned to do at that time. We should like to know what it has done in the interval and what it intends to do in the future.

In the same vein, what about colour television? This will cost the Canadian people a vast sum of money not only for facilities for the C.B.C. but with regard to the private television network and also for individual receiving sets. This is a matter on which we must have some information from the corporation.

As an individual I should also like to see what the corporation is really doing with regard to planning in the field of educational programming and co-operation with the ministries of education of the provinces. We are interested in what can be done. What use is being made of visual instruction? I know it is already being done in a limited way in the schools for certain subjects at certain levels, but I think we should really look into this matter in view of the expected great shortage of teachers.

Yesterday I was talking to a man who had come to Ottawa for the Canadian universities conference. This year the universities have been hit with the front line of that wave of students who were born in the immediate post-war years, and the universities frankly do not know whether they are going to be able to cope with the problem. Is television part of the answer in order to deal with the shortage of teachers and the shortage of plant? I think we could get a worth-while contribution from the corporation in this regard by ascertaining what its ideas are on the subject. If it has no ideas we want to know why.

For these reasons I think the government has been most remiss in refusing to accede to the legitimate demands of members of the house for the setting up of the broadcasting committee many weeks ago. In my view a lot of the difficulties and much of the criticism on orders of the day, which will continue, would have been taken care of if we could have had a broadcasting committee. I intend to emphasize this point again and again and I am sure my colleagues are going to do the same. I do not think it is the corporation that is at fault. Rather it is the government that is at fault by refusing to accede to our request for a parliamentary committee and prefering to set up its own little confidential advisory committee. I do not think that such a committee is a good answer to our requests.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, members of this party have been asking for a parliamentary committee on broadcasting for several months. There have been a number of reasons why we felt this was necessary and many of them were repeated once more by the hon. member for Edmonton West in his remarks. If the government, and the Secretary of State in particular, continue to refuse to set up this committee it leaves those of us who feel strongly about the matter with only one alternative, that is to take advantage of these interim supply motions from time to time to air our grievances about the operations of the C.B.C., thereby taking up a lot of time that could be devoted more properly to legislation. If this committee had been set up, all of these grievances and representations could be made in the committee. What is more, Mr. Chairman, this procedure would be more beneficial because we would have not only the senior officers but other officials from the C.B.C. before us and we could get some answers to the questions we ask.

Now, over the years, particularly during the last few months, whenever questions pertaining to programming or any other aspect of C.B.C. operations are posed to the Secretary of State, who has the responsibility of answering for the C.B.C. in this house, he consistently ducks the questions by saying, "I will communicate the opinion of my hon. friend to the C.B.C." He has also been fairly consistent, Mr. Chairman, in not coming back with the answers. As I have said, this leaves us no other course of action except continually to raise these grievances on interim supply motions. The hon. member for Edmonton West repeated something that has been said in this house on a number of occasions, that is that probably the estimates of the Secretary of State, which include the C.B.C. estimates, will be introduced during the dying hours of this session when there will be a rush to complete a number of tag ends. We can look back over the record and find that last year the C.B.C. estimates were introduced after supper—it was after seven o'clock—on the last day of the session. I cannot but believe that this was done deliberately so that there could not be opportunity, or at least it would be awkward and inconvenient to have a detailed examination of some of the activities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

The year before that there was no detailed examination of the estimates of the C.B.C. This parliament, therefore, which is supposed to have some control of the operations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, has been completely denied any access to the officers of this corporation for the last three years. This parliament has been denied even the opportunity of interrogating the minister when the C.B.C. was asking for nearly $100 million of the taxpayers' money. We believe this practice has gone completely beyond reason. We do have a responsibility. So far as I am concerned, I am getting tired of providing the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation with a blank cheque for about $100 million every year without having the C.B.C. answer to this house for what they do with it, and whether or not the people who are providing that money are satisfied with the kind of service they are getting.

There is a great deal that could be said about the kind of programming in which the C.B.C. seems to persist, regardless of the protestations they receive. I can remember for example, there were protests in this house, and by way of letters to the newspapers all over the country, regarding a program called "Quest". I believe they even started a new season of "Quest" after these protestations were received, and the program continued for many months. The government never provided us with an opportunity to examine any officer or producer, whoever it is inside the organization, as to why they insisted on keeping this kind of program. I think that the whole moral structure of that which the C.B.C. is apparently prepared to present has deteriorated to such an extent that the members of this house have not only a right but an obligation to have a good, hard look at who is perpetuating this kind of thing.

It has been repeatedly stated, but I am going to say it again because we do not get any answers. The C.B.C. is responsible directly to parliament and to no one else. But we are in fact prevented from getting a minister involved in the details of answering for the activities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. At the same time we are denied a parliamentary committee which would give us an opportunity to send for witnesses from this organization. Now, putting these two things together simply leaves you in a ridiculous, frustrated position. I believe it is about time the government took these protestations seriously. I am convinced that resentment amongst members of this house, and amongst Canadians generally, is building up to the point where some drastic action has to be taken and the people are prepared to support this kind of drastic action against the C.B.C.

It does not seem to me it is any protection for the members of the government to refuse parliament this broadcasting committee. I cannot understand why the government persists in its position. It is providing an internal examination conducted by another so-called committee. Perhaps this committee will perform a useful function, but why this should necessarily prevent the setting up of a parliamentary committee is beyond my comprehension. What is the government afraid of? What are the officers of the C.B.C. afraid of? If they are afraid of something, we ought to have them before us. As I have said, I am not concerned with whether or not it is convenient for the senior officers of the C.B.C. to meet a parliamentary committee. To me, this has no weight at all. I feel there has been enough representation that whether or not it is convenient for them they should be called and they should be prepared to testify to the kind of action they have been taking.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these protests have come from a number of parties in the house, and have come from a number of organizations. Perhaps in some respects you may say that this stems from some dissatisfaction with what the C.B.C. does about public affairs programs and how they allocate political time. Certainly there has been room for dispute about the justice of the manner in which they handle this, but it is considerably worse than that at this time.

The hon. member for Edmonton West referred briefly to an article in today's Globe and Mail, written by Dennis Braithwaite, and I should like to deal with it in more detail as it is pertinent to the matter before us this afternoon and is in line with the resentment building up in the country. I quote from the article as follows:

Did you ever hear of an all-Canadian movement called Declaration by Canadian Women? Its purpose, which it has been pursuing among women's organizations and church groups over the past year at least, is, in the words of its manifesto, "to end the domination of a minority who misuse the C.B.C. to spread propaganda for perversion, pornography, free love, blasphemy, dope, violence and crime." In its general preamble, attached to a petition form, Declaration states that both radio and t.v. are being exploited to maintain a constant assault on character, to undermine faith in God and respect for law and authority and to destroy sound home life and the knowledge of right and wrong. Noting that the C.B.C. last year spent $86 million of public money, the document calls on members of parliament to make the corporation "answerable to the Canadian people." Lest anyone think this is a demand for censorship, the declaration insists that the present freedom of the C.B.C. is a form of censorship. "Those who kill the conscience of a nation dig the grave of freedom and prepare the ground for dictatorship. It begins when God-given standards are mocked and their proponents are belittled, bullied, or silenced altogether."

This might be called a fairly strong statement, but let us have a look at those supporting Declaration by Canadian Women. They are people such as Mrs. Ward Markle of Toronto, president of the Ontario section of the Catholic women's league; Mrs. J. E. Houck, of Brampton, a former UN delegate and C.B.C. director; Senator Quart of Quebec; Ethel S. Wilson, minister without portfolio in the Alberta cabinet; Mrs. G. C. V. Hewson, president, Ontario division of the Canadian mental health association; Mrs. Cora R. Casselman, former member for parliament for Edmonton East; Mrs. A. D. Keith of Winnipeg, president of the women's Christian temperance union of Canada; Mrs. Isabel Ross, a member of the board of education of Toronto and Mrs. H. M. Schweitzer, past provincial commissioner of the girl guides of Saskatchewan.

The article adds:

While the language of the declaration can be dismissed as extremist and even hysterical, these names (there are 30 in all) carry weight. How did the usually circumspect C.B.C. manage to alienate so many of those who should be its friends and supporters?

The reason it has been able to alienate a lot of high placed and reasonable thinking people is its cavalier disregard of those protestations that were made during the past few months. We have come to the point where it is without doubt the responsibility of the government to set up this committee at once, first in order to clear up this matter of the protestations and second, to exonerate, if that is possible, a crown corporation that is financed from public funds to the extent of about $100 million a year.

We as members of parliament have no right to continue to provide public funds to an organization that has fallen into the disrepute that the C.B.C. has. It is, as I said, incomprehensible to see the government adamantly refuse to shed some light on the reason officers of the C.B.C. are continuing to allow this kind of programming.

I believe the C.B.C. has probably done more to spotlight the divisions between English and French speaking Canadians than anything else, and has done so by giving repetitious attention to the extremist viewpoints. For the most part we in this parliament consider these divisions as one of the most serious problems facing the nation, yet when protestations are made through the Secretary of State to the C.B.C. to stop providing a platform for these extremist viewpoints, we are told we must not be concerned with C.B.C. programming.

Another thing which disturbs me is the tremendous expansion of the C.B.C. If it is responsible only to parliament I would like to know where it got the authority to continue to expand year after year to its present magnitude. I have never heard anyone on the floor of this house demanding that the C.B.C. expand its activities and its budget year after year, but when I say that I must make one modification. There has been a demand for the C.B.C. to extend its broadcasting facilities through satellites in order to carry its signals into some areas that are not served by any television channel. That is a valid request for expansion, but to my knowledge no member of parliament has requested that the C.B.C. continually expand its budget.

Over the past ten or 12 years the C.B.C.'s estimates have grown from $25 million to $50 million to $70 million and are now well over $100 million annually. In this connection I would point out that the argument advanced by the hon. member for Edmonton West, that its estimates for operations are a little deceptive, is a valid one. Prior to 1964-65 the C.B.C. has included in its estimates so much for operations and so much for capital works or the expansion of capital works. We all know very well that when it starts out on a $30 million or $40 million building in Toronto or Montreal, but only requests something like $10 million or $14 million in the first year, once we approve that initial expenditure we are hooked for the rest of it.

In addition to the matter of loans this is a complete deception because, as has been pointed out, the C.B.C. does not have any substantial income other than that voted by parliament. So when it calls these moneys loans we know very well they will have to be paid back out of appropriations passed later by parliament. In my opinion this is not a proper way to proceed and present estimates. It is a kind of subterfuge to circumvent what may be required under the law respecting estimates, and it gives the C.B.C. the opportunity to spend more money than is indicated. These are some of the more important reasons we need the officers from the C.B.C. before us.

On a number of occasions we in this party have taken the position that there is neither a fair distribution of free political time nor objective reporting of the news from this parliament. We have seen a screen of silence come down within the C.B.C. over the activities of members of this party in the House of Commons, and we should like to have someone from the C.B.C. explain why this is being done. I know that members of the Social Credit party have been most vociferous in their criticism of the corporation. We do not apologize for that. What is more, we intend to continue this criticism in line with what we consider to be our responsibility. If this is some kind of revenge being practised on this party in the allocation of free political time and also in the imposition of a news blackout upon us, those concerned may as well know now that we do not intend to be intimidated by actions of this kind. I have asked the Secretary of State in this house at least three times to tell me how the C.B.C. allocates time to the various political parties on both the national and the provincial scene. The program on the national level is, I believe, called "The Nation's Business" and at provincial level it is called "Provincial Affairs", at least in Alberta.

I happen to know that in some years, 1961 and 1962 particularly, there was a difference of as much as 61 to one. Yet when the C.B.C. allocated time on "Provincial Affairs" in Alberta they gave the same time to the party with one member in the provincial legislature as they did to the party which had 61 members. I happen to know that one of the conditions they laid down before any time was granted on the national scene was that a party should have some members in the House of Commons. Yet there were occasions in Alberta in the "Provincial Affairs" program when free time was given to speakers belonging to a party which did not have a single member in the provincial legislature. My hon. friend from Cariboo tells me it is that way in British Columbia now.

This is not fair, and we have asked time and again: who is it who sets down the formula? Who makes the decisions, and why are they not consistent as between one area and another or one province and the next? The Social Credit party to my knowledge has not been provided with any free time on "Provincial Affairs" broadcasts in any province where it has no elected members. Yet we find parties in Alberta and B.C., parties which have no members in the legislatures, being given time. Why? Who sets up the formula? Who decides these things? We never get answers from the Secretary of State or from his parliamentary secretary who replies from time to time. We want to get answers to these questions. We do not want to be dismissed with elusive remarks and perhaps a smile. To us this is a serious matter. We believe that when we are called upon to provide $100 million for a public broadcasting system and are told consistently that this corporation is responsible to parliament and to parliament alone, there should be some opportunity for the members of this parliament to interrogate the officers of the corporation. That ought to be clear. It does not seem to me that there is any ambiguity about that request. But still the government adamantly refuses to set up the committee to enable us to look into this question.

There are many other questions which should be asked. The committee should look into allegations concerning the management of news; allegations with respect to the type of individual who is asked to appear on public affairs programs. We should like to find out why certain patterns are followed. No one can deny that this forum which is provided by the C.B.C. does have a profound influence on public opinion in Canada. Certainly, if it does not, it is a complete failure because it is one of the major media of communication with the masses in Canada. So it seems to me that the government could save itself a lot of headache and a lot of time on interim supply motions if it would move quickly to set up this parliamentary committee on broadcasting and clear the air with regard to some of the allegations which have been made. Serious allegations made by very responsible people have not been dealt with.

Members of the opposition have been criticized for taking too much time in the House of Commons on supply motions and other matters. If the way in which the government has handled the queries which have come to it concerning the C.B.C. is to continue there will certainly be a lot more time taken up. I heard it said this afternoon that a lot of time could be saved in the question period preceding orders of the day if the government would agree to set up this committee, and I believe this to be a fact. Indeed as the days go by I am sure more questions will be asked before orders of the day are called, and a lot more time will be used to discuss matters on the floor of this house unless we are given an opportunity to examine some of the officers of the corporation.

I cannot understand why the government appears to be protecting the C.B.C. at the present time. Our examination of the officials need not interfere in any way with the work of this other committee, this secret committee or whatever you want to call it, which the government itself has set up. Even if we did not receive satisfactory answers from the officials of the C.B.C. to the extent that we could revise the relationship between the corporation and members of this house, at least we would have the opportunity to indicate to those officials the opinions coming to us from the people we represent. This process is the essence of democracy as far as I am concerned. Asking members of this house to provide money for a corporation while at the same time refusing them an opportunity to examine the affairs of that corporation is, to me, the exact opposite of democratic procedure. So I hope the government will understand that there is increasing pressure to establish this parliamentary committee, and the sooner they get on with it the sooner we will be able to have some time and clear up some of the business before the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: I have but a few comments to make, Mr. Chairman. Further to the previous speaker's remarks, I would point out that members on this side of the house have no objection whatever to seeing those of the opposition do their duty.

I think many hon. members would benefit greatly by being a bit more concise in their remarks. Some of them go on until their time has run out, when they could easily cut down what they have to say to ten or 15 minutes. As for me, I should like to give evidence of such conciseness in the points I wish to make in this debate.

Last Friday during the debate on interim supply the house dealt with C.N.R. lines. Today we are discussing the C.B.C. For my part, I feel that the most important problem facing us now is that of national unity. That is why I should like to take the opportunity afforded me by the examination of interim supply to express a few ideas.

[Mr. Olson.]

In my opinion, what is missing in our country at present is the development of a Canadian ideal. Regionalism is showing itself here and there across Canada. Often an excessive provincialism also manifests itself. I feel it would be much more in keeping with this desire to achieve the Canadian ideal to look after, if not the creation, at least the consolidation of a Canadian ideal.

What is a Canadian ideal? If it can be summed up schematically, it is an ideal according to which one believes in the expansion and dissemination of the two fundamental cultures of our country. Many speeches are heard on both sides. Speeches intended to proclaim equality of rights, speeches intended to illustrate the greatness and beauty of our two national cultures. However, on the practical level, tremendous deficiencies become evident.

This is why I feel it is urgent—and this becomes imperative for the federal government—to work unceasingly on this task, in order to create, to consolidate and to strengthen a Canadian ideal.

Today Canadians co-operate mainly for economic purposes. But we need more than solidarity on the economic level. I believe that we should all acquire a deep patriotic ideal, which at present does not exist.

As far as I am concerned, I would approve the federal government taking the initiative in this area, because if it is held in suspicion among French speaking Canadians, it is due to the fact that it was realized and it is still being realized that the federal government does not seem interested in promoting French culture. What the French Canadians obtain, they always gain after bitter demands, often after recriminations, and we are wondering if this complex of recrimination is not being forced into us; at times, this becomes an exhausting task.

In my opinion, the federal government must assume a determining initiative in the area of national unity. It could, for instance, create a department of French culture, as a division perhaps of the Secretary of State department. There is nothing contrary to this in our constitution. The emergency created today by the stormy events of the last several months certainly indicates a crisis in our national unity, and we know that according to our constitution, peace, order and good administration in Canada fall under the jurisdiction of the federal government. This department of French culture would not in any way violate any provision of our constitution, because the Massey-Lévesque commission established very fine shades, subtle distinctions between the area of education and that of primary and secondary education, which falls exclusively and which will always fall exclusively under the jurisdiction of the provinces; distinctions made between the field of education and that of culture as such.

That is why, in my opinion, it would be quite consistent with our constitution for the federal government to take the initiative in this area by creating a department of French culture and thereby take advantage of the new spirit in this regard. This must be pointed out, in order to pay tribute to those who show this fine attitude. Attention must be drawn to this new climate which prevails in a goodly part of the English speaking population, which today shows a far greater understanding of the French fact than it did some 25 or 30 years ago.

For my part, I must say that within the Liberal party—I do not wish to make a political issue of this, but I must say that I could not feel more at ease than I do within the Liberal party, and I feel that this spirit of mutual understanding, which is favourable to biculturalism, is due in the first place to the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson.)

Mr. Chairman, while establishing a department of culture, we could refer to some figures which are most significant and promote the French culture from coast to coast, instead of limiting it to Quebec.

Statistics show that, in all provinces of the country, there is a French fact. It is more or less powerful, according to the demographic strength of the various provinces. So, may I point out to you that, in Prince Edward Island, 8.8 per cent of the population is French speaking, in Nova Scotia, 6.9 per cent is French speaking, in Manitoba, 8.2 per cent, in Alberta, the figure is lower, but still significant, 4.7 per cent. In British Columbia, 3.6 per cent. In Ontario, figures are a little more comforting, that is 9.4 per cent; in New Brunswick, 37.8 per cent of the population is French speaking.

What part would a department of French culture play? Its importance would be as follows: I quoted figures relating to the French speaking population in the various provinces; if one now refers to the people of French origin, one notes a set-back, because many people of French origin in certain provinces can no longer speak French. Therefore, a certain assimilation took place. I do not hesitate to say that the Durham report belongs to the past.

There is no question today of assimilating the French speaking population. On the contrary, this new climate which should make us happy, instead of promoting this assimilation, tends more to encourage the development and the growth of the French fact.

Mr. Chairman, assimilation has been fairly intensive in all provinces. In Prince Edward Island, for instance, 16.6 per cent of the population is of French origin but only 8.8 per cent speak French. In Nova Scotia, 12 per cent of the people are of French origin but only 6.9 per cent of them are French speaking. In New Brunswick, 38.8 per cent of the population is of French origin but only 37.8 per cent speak French, there being a loss of 1 per cent in that province.

In the province of Ontario, 10.3 per cent of the people are of French origin but only 9.4 per cent of them are French speaking. Comparative figures for Manitoba are 9.1 and 8.2 per cent. The situation is the same in the other provinces.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, so as to put an end to this assimilation movement, to promote an atmosphere of national unity, to show that the great principles we advocate with regard to bilingualism and biculturalism do not remain meaningless and empty statements, I think it is time, now more than ever, for the federal government to stop being suspected of furthering assimilation, since on the contrary the federal government must strive by all available means to keep these two cultures, these two civilizations in our country more flourishing than ever.

I would add a suggestion, Mr. Chairman, in order to accomplish which seems to me the most urgent task: There is a royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism whose terms of reference in my opinion, should be extended to include a study of a vital and essential problem, i.e. immigration.

As we know, immigration is the chief instrument through which the French cause could be served, for immigration can affect the population pattern in this country. At the present time, immigration could be one of the greatest instruments at our disposal. I said it again and again, and repeat it once more today, immigration has always operated against the French fact.

I believe immigration is a vital problem, and the terms of reference of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism should be broadened to include a study of this serious problem, as it affects national unity and the French fact, so that a fair balance might exist and that French Canada be no longer victimized by our immigration policy.

There is another instrument which can be beneficial to French Canada. I refer to television, which comes under the Secretary of State and to which there could be added another branch, that of French culture. Television could then play a leading part and be beneficial to us.

I believe that in promoting the French fact we shall create that climate of national unity which is becoming more and more essential at this juncture.

[Text]

Mr. Gundlock: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who has just resumed his seat brought certain aspects of this debate to your attention and to the attention of this committee. I noticed particularly that he related his remarks to the actions of the C.B.C., the biculturalism and bilingualism commission, to immigration and to a new spirit of cooperation. He also suggested that a new minister be appointed in respect of the C.B.C. The hon. member also referred to contributions to French culture, and called attention to certain percentages.

At this time I do not mention these items by way of criticism, but should like to point out that in spite of the fact that on many occasions during past weeks, months and even years when these questions have been asked, the minister responsible to parliament for the operation of the C.B.C. has not been in his place. That is a significant fact which should be brought to the attention of this committee, and possibly to the attention of the public as a whole. I think the public should be made aware of the situation, in view of the fact that this crown corporation is asking us to approve, by passing these estimates an expenditure in the neighbourhood of $88 million. I should like to remind this committee that these are tax dollars, and we are only discussing a portion of them today. The hon. member for Edmonton West earlier today drew attention to capital loans in the amount of $14,500,000. To use the vernacular, Mr. Chairman, that ain't hay.

I have in my hand an article written by an individual closely associated with broadcasting, which relates directly to certain points I should like to refer to this afternoon. Basically this article dealing with broadcasting principles, particularly of the C.B.C., reads in part as follows:

[Mr. Choquette.]

In principle, it is parliament which determines the roles of the various elements within the Canadian broadcasting system. However, in practice—

I should like to repeat that for emphasis, Mr. Chairman.

However, in practice parliament has confined itself to the declaration of certain broad national objectives without offering many specific instructions concerning how the goals are to be achieved. For the most part, it is content to examine, and usually approve, methods devised by others.

For example, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has placed its own interpretation on its simply worded parliamentary mandate to provide "a national broadcasting service". The corporation has devised policies, which, in its judgment, meet this requirement and these it refers, periodically, to parliament for endorsation. Since the corporation's inception, this procedure has been a significant feature of its operations. It has been followed consistently, and without serious parliamentary criticism. Consequently, the C.B.C. is justified in assuming that it is interpreting its role correctly.

Mr. Chairman, after this quotation from a prominent broadcaster in respect of his interpretation of the C.B.C.'s role in the Canadian broadcasting system I should like to refer to specific cases, to which almost violent objection has been taken both in this and that other place, as a result of representations by Canadian citizens. I should like also to refer to specific statements which have been made both during the question period and during the debate in this committee this afternoon. I refer again to this sentence from the quotation: "It has been followed consistently, and without serious parliamentary criticism". This can hardly be so, Mr. Chairman. As the member for one constituency it would be my conclusion that in some cases the C.B.C. has almost flagrantly disregarded public opinion. As I pointed out earlier, almost violent representations have been made to members, and I will put some of them on the record later.

There is also a general misunderstanding among the Canadian public with regard to the very conception of a crown corporation. We as members of the house understand what is really meant when it is said that the C.B.C. or any other crown corporation is subject to parliamentary control. But there is general misunderstanding among the Canadian people with regard to the C.B.C. in particular and this may be because people are so much more familiar with the actions of this crown corporation. The average Canadian citizen or taxpayer has the impression that control of the C.B.C. by parliament may be obtained by a mere objection or prayer or petition to his representative in parliament. Few people realize that control by parliament actually means control by the government in the first instance, second, by the House of Commons and, third, by the other place. Very few people indeed realize that there has to be a combination of expression of views by all three before the management of the crown corporation really listens to parliament.

We had a good example earlier today in connection with Canadian National Railways. How many times and for how long have objections been raised in the house with regard to the C.N.R. which as a crown corporation is in my view almost identical to the C.B.C.? For a long, long time in committee of the whole house we have heard objections about certain aspects of the management of the C.N.R. But what happened? Actually the situation was allowed to deteriorate to such an extent that the railway personnel had to take action which resulted in service to the people being curtailed.

When was the control finally exercised by parliament? Earlier today there was tabled in the house a communication between the Prime Minister and the head of the crown corporation. After years of representations and many complaints, only then did the crown corporation come close to being controlled by parliament and even then the control was temporary.

In my view the government, or at least the minister responsible for reporting to the house for the C.B.C., should take note of some of the things that have been said today. I have pointed out the final reaction with regard to complaints and disputes about one corporation, and in so far as the C.B.C. is concerned I hope that things do not have to proceed to that point in order to have the management of the C.B.C. at least listen to some of the complaints made in parliament, particularly by people who feel that such a crown corporation should be controlled by parliament. After all, the people who are elected to represent the taxpayers of Canada certainly should be listened to with regard to crown corporations more so than has been the case for some time past.

I mentioned earlier that revisions in C.B.C. programming have only been made in some cases, not all, after almost violent objections by decent, intelligent citizens. If I may, I should like to put something on the record in this regard. The letter to which I wish to refer has to do with a program no longer broadcast but it bears on the point we are talking about today. The letter is signed, is from Lethbridge and is dated February 26 of this year. It is addressed to me as a member of parliament and reads as follows:

Dear Sir:

I am writing to you to complain about that program "Quest".

I know this is old hash but it does bear on the point I am trying to make this afternoon.

I think it is the most filthy program I have ever seen and last night it was terrible. Everybody around here is disgusted. It makes you ashamed to be a Canadian. It is no good writing to the C.B.C. They have had so many letters and pay no attention to it. I think it should be taken off the air. It is surely no program for teenagers. If you have not seen it, especially last night's, I wish you could.

I might interject that I did not see the program.

Usually we turn "Quest" off, but we left it on last night and it was disgusting. I can't understand the players. Don't they feel embarrassed playing parts in a thing like that? I thought I would write to you and see if there is anything you can do. Thanking you for your time...

P.S. There have been a lot of people here talking over telephone this morning and everybody is disgusted with last night's "Quest" program. The C.B.C. have quite a lot of good programs.

I want to emphasize that too, Mr. Chairman. The C.B.C. has a lot of good programs.

Why spoil it by putting on things like last night's?

That brings up another point, and may I say I do not mean to be completely critical, Mr. Chairman. Many Canadians, I among them, are very proud of the corporation, particularly because of the fact that service was made possible long ago to people who might not yet have either radio or television broadcasting service. The position of the corporation has been jealously guarded and I think it should continue to be. However, the corporation also has a primary responsibility in that it has a captive audience and therefore the corporation must give first place to its primary responsibility. In my view its primary responsibility encompasses such things as educational programs, factual programs, factual reporting of the news and so on.

The hon. member for Edmonton West brought forward a good point when he mentioned education by television. In the more remote areas, this applies to radio as well. I think we could go even further than that and refer to the impact that television and radio have today on the written word. I believe that the power of the written word is still the most powerful influence today. Not only do we have a responsibility in so far as television and radio are concerned, therefore, but television and radio have a responsibility today with regard to their influence on the press, as we commonly refer to the written word. This, to me, is very important.

In order to emphasize what I said earlier, I want to refer to a current happening. The Canadian people have the idea, with regard to the C.B.C. as well as other crown corporations, that this parliament shall determine the various roles of the various elements within the Canadian structure. I said in the beginning, and I want to repeat this, that if parliament is to control or even to consider the role the C.B.C. and other crown corporations have in the general Canadian structure, then why is the minister responsible for reporting to parliament on the C.B.C. absent when we are discussing this matter?

Mr. McIlraith: I will explain that in a moment.

Mr. Gundlock: Now?

Mr. McIlraith: No, as soon as the hon. member completes his remarks.

Mr. Gundlock: I hope it will be a good explanation and I appreciate hearing from the minister. Nevertheless this question will be a matter of record today. The hon. member who spoke before me mentioned some new ideas. They were good ideas. I agree with them, probably with the exception of his reference to a percentage of French and English. I am not talking about that, I am talking as a Canadian. I am thinking of Canada as a whole. I do not care about percentages here and there. Some of the best friends I have are probably members of smaller groups. Perhaps hon. members in the house at the moment belong to one of the larger groups but, Mr. Chairman, I have no idea whatever of referring to these percentages. I am talking about Canada as a whole and the benefits to be derived by Canada as a whole. If other hon. members want to refer to this topic in terms of percentages, then whatever I have to say I am quite sure will not have any bearing on these percentages.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I dislike hearing Canadians referred to in terms of percentages. I think Canadians are Canadians. I feel, too, that we have something of which we should be very proud. I feel that our constitution, the British North America Act, or however you want to refer to it, is something of which Canadians as a whole from one end of this country to the other can be very proud.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Say that to the member for Three Rivers.

[Mr. Gundlock.]

Mr. Gundlock: I will say that to any member in this house. I am putting it on the record and I am quite sure it will be public. I say sincerely and honestly that we in this house, the members in the other place, and the people of Canada can be proud of our articles of confederation, the British North America Act, the constitution or whatever you want to call it. It is something of which we should not only be proud but something we should advertise. It might very well be, Mr. Chairman, that the C.B.C. could have done this a couple of weeks ago. We have something of which we can be proud and something to show the rest of the world. Sure, we have our troubles, and we have people right here talking about percentages. Surely we, as Canadians, we in this house, have something of which we can be very proud and we should advertise it to the whole world. The C.B.C. could well have done so some time ago and Canada's image throughout the world would be better than it is today.

I hope you will forgive me, Mr. Chairman, for getting sidetracked but I felt very sincerely that I had to say these things. I thank the hon. member opposite for reminding me of this because it was away down in my notes.

Mr. Choquette: We did not want you to miss anything important.

Mr. Gundlock: How much more important could anything be? If you have a different version, I will gladly yield the floor to you.

Mr. Choquette: You are right.

Mr. Gundlock: O.K., then; keep smiling and we will get through.

There is something else that I want to mention, and I referred to it a moment ago. I should like to refer to the Queen's visit. We have to realize that during this time the sovereign probably could have been humiliated to some extent. I am rather hesitant about bringing this matter forward, but I do feel that I must. I just said a moment ago that the C.B.C. might have done something along this line.

I note from a popular magazine and from the press that there were 400 reporters from the C.B.C. alone reporting the visit of Her Majesty to Quebec city, and I am reminded of the fact that many years ago, and under different circumstances, a club known as the 400 club was formed. I wonder if the C.B.C. is trying to form a new 400 club. There were 400 reporters there, but what did we see and what did we hear?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Did the hon. member say 400 reporters or 400 employees?

Mr. Gundlock: I said 400 newsmen—reporters.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I thought the hon. member meant employees.

Mr. Gundlock: No, I said reporters covering the event—reporters, cameramen. Perhaps I should have said employees—but 400 personnel were there.

Mr. Habel: Four hundred C.B.C. men?

Mr. Gundlock: Four hundred men, including cameramen, copymen—

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Employees.

Mr. Gundlock: All right, employees. It is the same thing; 400 C.B.C. personnel.

Mr. Habel: Where?

Mr. Gundlock: At Quebec. If any hon. members opposite want to give their version I will yield the floor to them. Some of them may have other facts and if they want to put their version on the record I will let them. Does anybody deny that the C.B.C. had 400 personnel at the Quebec visit?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Not reporters.

Mr. Gundlock: I said personnel.

Mr. Grégoire: No, you said reporters.

Mr. Gundlock: Admittedly I said reporters, but quite frankly I meant personnel.

Mr. Grégoire: Why did you say reporters?

Mr. Choquette: Because he meant personnel.

Mr. Gundlock: Were you there?

Mr. Choquette: In Quebec, yes.

Mr. Gundlock: Mr. Chairman, I may have made a little mistake, but may I continue. Roughly there were 400 there. I am not going to say 399 or 400 or 401 because members opposite might get the facts and say there were 398 or 402 and I would be shown to be wrong; but generally speaking there were 400 personnel from the C.B.C. covering Her Majesty's Quebec visit. What did the Canadian public get from this?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. Gundlock: The point I want to make—

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question? Is he familiar with the answer given today to question No. 2,148?

Mr. Choquette: I think Her Majesty deserves more personnel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gundlock: I am not familiar with the answer to that question, but what does it have to do with this point? I agree Her Majesty deserves more than that, but the point I am trying to make is that I think she deserves better results from that number of personnel.

Mr. Choquette: I have never seen anyone attack Her Majesty the way you did.

The Chairman: Order please. I have to interrupt the hon. member and advise him his time has expired.

Mr. MacNaught: Let him continue.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): We like you.

Mr. Gundlock: Thank you very much. It is very seldom I get that sort of agreement. The point I want to make is that what we saw on t.v., heard on the radio and read in the press was not the actual facts of the case. I know the press will criticize what I have been saying today and will refer to one short program that showed us what actually took place. But generally speaking throughout the period of the visit what we were shown were empty streets, the lack of flags flying and that sort of thing. True enough there was one short program, I think it was on "News Magazine", that reported the visit fully, but surely we could have had more than that. Earlier I said something should have been done in the matter of public relations. There should have been programs dealing with confederation, the B.N.A. Act and the things of which Canada has reason to be proud. We did not see that; we did not hear it; we did not read it.

I want to thank hon. members for the extra time they have allowed me.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I feel obliged to interject a few remarks at this point in the proceedings to remind the committee of one or two relevant facts as I see them, with which some members may not agree, but which I think should be drawn to the attention of the committee. Before doing so, however, I wish to answer a question asked by the hon. member for Lethbridge who has just resumed his seat. He asked why the minister responsible to the house for the C.B.C. was not here to discuss these estimates. The answer is very clear, that we are not now discussing the main estimates. We are merely discussing interim supply for the expenditure of moneys for a two month period.

The detailed estimates of departments are examined by the committee of the whole house and may be approved or rejected as the committee sees fit. That being the situation, it has not been the custom in this parliament to have the individual ministers come to the committee discussing interim supply to answer for their departments. Rather it has been the custom—

Mr. Lambert: May I ask a question?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, in just a moment. Rather, it has been the custom to discuss the details of the estimates when they are before the house and to discuss on interim supply any major grievance against the administration that the opposition parties may have. That is the reason why the individual ministers are not here to answer for their individual departments and for the details of the individual items involved in the main estimates.

Mr. Lambert: Does the President of the Privy Council not recall the many instances when he and his colleagues were on this side and they used to try to castigate a former minister of finance on this particular point?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, I recall that experience very well and I have based my remarks on it. I recall how careful the opposition of that day was to confine its attack on the then government, on one occasion for its failure to bring in a budget in a fiscal year, and on another occasion for certain matters having to do with the Bank of Canada. I recall very well how careful the opposition was, not to discuss the details of the main estimates on interim supply.

Mr. Lambert: That is nonsense.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member is entitled to his opinion of my remarks. I might remind him that I did him the courtesy when he was speaking of not expressing my opinion of the remarks he was making earlier this afternoon. I thought that was the courteous procedure to follow in committee of the whole. I refrained from any comment while he was speaking. I know he follows a different procedure but that is his privilege and his responsibility—

Mr. Lambert: The hon. gentleman's halo hangs heavy.

Mr. McIlraith: In any event, I do wish to point out to the committee, and I believe it is my obligation to do so although some hon. members may differ from me on this, that we have now, in this session of parliament, had supply before the house on some 72 days out of a total of 176; that we have been calling estimates for consideration three days out of five every week, with one exception, for many weeks in the recent past, and that in the United Kingdom parliament the time allowed for supply is only some 26 days for the whole year, though I agree the procedure followed there differs from our procedure in Canada. If the government is devoting three days out of five to supply, surely on interim supply we should not be discussing details of the estimates of particular departments? I invite the committee to consider that notwithstanding the fact that some 70 full days debate on supply have taken place this year—I point out in all fairness that instead of taking the permitted 12 days on supply motions the opposition only required seven days out of 12 and generously gave up five days—notwithstanding the fact I have mentioned, we have only succeeded in approving the estimates of only eight departments out of some 26.

I would point out, also, that though today we have been discussing the affairs of the C.B.C. almost exclusively, no opposition group has requested that the estimates of the C.B.C. be called before the committee of the whole when we are considering main estimates. If the opposition wants to discuss these estimates they can be brought forward on a convenient day very soon and I invite members of this committee to consider whether we should not do better if we were to pass this interim supply bill now and devote the time we would otherwise spend on it, considering main estimates. If there are any suggestions which would expedite the final passage of the main estimates, which hon. members opposite in any of the groups or parties wish to make which would bring to a conclusion the examination of the estimates within a reasonable length of time, bearing in mind that we have already spent 70 days on supply this year, the government would be very willing to listen to such suggestions and consider them very carefully. I feel it is my obligation to bring this matter to the attention of hon. members because it must be readily apparent that in the light of the legislative program on the order paper and with the approach of Christmas, having had no adjournment since the house started its work earlier this year, some thought should surely be given to the subject. I make this appeal to hon. members because it seems to me, having listened attentively and carefully to the debate this afternoon, that the whole of the discussion might better have taken place on the main estimates.

It was a different situation on Friday when hon. members felt they needed to raise a subject matter of urgent and special significance which could not wait until the main estimates were called. But we have three days on estimates this week and if hon. members have suggestions for additional days in the week, for calling and considering estimates I would be very glad to have their proposals considered by the government. I make an appeal to hon. members to consider this matter and, if they have any views on it, to bring them forward.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, after the remarks which have just been made by the President of the Privy Council I would not have proceeded with my observations had I not noticed that two or three other members were rising at the same time. Indeed, I find myself indulging in a sentence which opens many speeches in this house, namely, "I had not intended to take part in this debate, but—".

However, it seems to me that even the devil deserves an advocate. The devil in question may not appreciate my being the advocate but I do feel something should be said in this day's debate on the other side of the issue, as far as the C.B.C. is concerned. The fact is that every speech on this subject this afternoon has been a speech in which the C.B.C. has been treated as a popular whipping boy. It is true the C.B.C. makes mistakes from time to time; it would probably go on making mistakes even were it to listen to the criticisms voiced in this house. But there are one or two things which might be said on the other side.

First of all, I want to congratulate the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on being the subject of controversy. If there were no controversy surrounding the C.B.C., if nobody complained about anything which appeared on the C.B.C. programs, it would not be worth five cents of public money. It is to the credit of the corporation that it is presenting challenging programs, that it is making us look at new ideas. It is to its credit that people are expressing their views pro and con about what appears on C.B.C. television programs or over its radio network. There are times when I myself am critical of some of the things I hear and see and, like other members of this house, I do not think the C.B.C. gives me proper coverage for my work in the House of Commons. But the C.B.C. is like the press in that respect. We are used to that.

An hon. Member: You will get it, now.

Mr. Knowles: We shall just have to wait and see. Surely this is a time in man's history when it is necessary for us to do some new thinking. Some of the great organizations of our time are going through agonizing reappraisals of their thought, their doctrine and their position. This is of great importance both for them and for our society. I believe that to the extent the C.B.C. presents to us new ideas and makes us look at the problems of our country, of our hemisphere, of our world and, indeed, one might say today, of our universe, it is doing us a service.

This does not mean we are denied the right to be critical of some of the programs which are broadcast. However, I think there should also be an occasional word of commendation and I welcome this opportunity to voice that word at this moment. I doubt whether the argument over last night's program in which this fellow Rockwell appeared will ever be settled. There will be those who will contend as long as we recall it that it should not have been put on. There will be others who will think it was a good idea to put on this program. I shall not at this moment try to settle that argument one way or another, but since so much has been said against the Rockwell interview having been aired over television, may I suggest there could be some advantage from its having been broadcast? Surely the Canadian people now realize what racism can lead to; surely we have had a picture of how serious can be anti-Semitism, antipathy toward negroes, toward coloured races, toward people who disagree with us. Surely people can realize that Hitlerism, so far as its ideas are concerned, is not necessarily dead because world war II is over.

I fully appreciate the views of the Zionist organization of Canada and of the Royal Canadian Legion and others, who still wonder whether that program should have been aired last night—and it is a good question; but I suggest there is also the other side, and that maybe it has helped us in Canada to realize that we want no part of racism, of totalitarianism or of the kind of arrogance that was displayed by that man on our television screens last night. John Drainie's prediction, so far as I am concerned, was correct; I was shocked, sickened and disturbed by what I saw. But I dare to believe that Canadians generally will have been so shocked, sickened and disturbed that there will be an increasing opposition to any form of racism in this country.

There have been many appeals this afternoon to the government to set up a committee on broadcasting so that the C.B.C. can appear before that committee. I agree that there ought from time to time to be reviews of broadcasting policy. I think, indeed, that once in a while there has to be a review by a royal commission—not just by a private advisory committee such as we now have, but a full-dress royal commission. I also think that from time to time there has to be a review by a committee of parliament. This is the way you keep broadcasting by a public body responsible to parliament and, through parliament, responsible to the people. But in between these reviews I insist that the board of governors, the management of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, should be free to arrange its programming and should not be subject to censorship by the government; neither should it be subject to interference in its day to day programming by members of parliament. We are free to make our complaints; we are as free as any citizens of the country—but surely, having set up a corporation to do a job, having given it the policies we think it should carry on, we should give it the opportunity to carry on those policies. If we do not like them, if we disagree with the things that are being done, our function is to get rid of the board of governors, to get rid of the management and bring in new people to do the job.

It is very common in this house to talk about the way things are done in Britain. As members are probably aware, the activities of the B.B.C. are not even permitted to be the subject of the kind of questioning, in the House of Commons at Westminster, that goes on here in the House of Commons in Ottawa. There the attitude is taken that the B.B.C. is set up as an autonomous body, and in between the times its work is reviewed it is free to do what it thinks is the best job in broadcasting, subject to the knowledge that if it does not do a job that is satisfactory to the people, the management will be changed, the board will be fired. It seems to me that should be our approach, rather than the attitude of heckling at and carping about the C.B.C. day in and day out, as goes on in this house.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, that seems inconsistent with the opening remarks I offered when I congratulated the C.B.C. on being the subject of controversy. But if it is going to be attacked, not only in letters to the editors of our newspapers, not only in the columns our columnists write and in editorials, but also here on the floor of the House of Commons—and I take no objection to the criticism because I think it is good that members stand up and express their clear and honest views about what is happening—I suggest there is also a place for those of us on the other side, who feel that the C.B.C. is doing a good job, to say so in the course of a debate of this kind.

As I said earlier, Mr. Chairman, I think that the C.B.C., like any other organization run by human beings, has made many mistakes. Sometimes its public relations are rather poor. I think sometimes its advance announcements as to what is going to be broadcast have not been fully thought out. I believe, like anybody who advertises his products, the C.B.C. sometimes overemphasizes what is coming and the show it has not boosted turns out to be better than the show that has been boosted for a week or so. But in the main this organization is trying to help Canadians to think; it is trying to help us look at the problems which face this country; it is trying to bring to the radio and television audiences the things that are happening in this country; it is trying to give our artists, performers, speakers, and so on, the opportunity to put forward their views. I think that in the main the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is doing a good job. It deserves to be looked at critically; but it also deserves once in a while to be told that it is doing a good job.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knowles: Gladly.

Mr. Greene: The hon. member stated that the C.B.C. should be criticized when it abuses its licence, when it brings forth programs that deal with hatred; but I gathered from his remarks earlier that he did not think this criticism should come from members of parliament. Am I correct in believing that he feels they should be criticized by anyone but members of parliament?

Mr. Knowles: First of all, Mr. Chairman, whether or not a program on C.B.C. is one that deserves negative criticism is of course a matter of opinion. But if I did not make myself clear before, I thank the hon. member for Renfrew South for giving me this opportunity to make myself clear. I believe it is perfectly proper for members of parliament to voice their criticism in a debate such as this, provided we do not dictate to the C.B.C. what it should do; but my main point is that, with everybody else expressing negative criticism, I thought there should also be opportunity for someone to express positive criticism, and that is what I have tried to do.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Rosthern.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, before the supper hour we were privileged to hear a few words from the minister, the hon. member for Ottawa West. It seemed to me that he was complaining that we were discussing the C.B.C. today because he thought that the details should be discussed at some other time. As I listened to the debate today it did not seem to me that we were discussing the details, but a broad outline of a policy under which the C.B.C. might be a more effective instrument on behalf of the Canadian public. It was very strange that the minister should change his mind so soon, because only on Friday a matter was referred to by the hon. member for Port Arthur and the hon. member for Melville, which the minister at that time thought did not deserve enough attention to set aside the normal business of the house, but that the details of that matter should be gone into during our consideration of interim supply.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member does not want to misrepresent me. The proceedings of Friday are on record, and he will find that what took place is quite different from what he is asserting, in so far as the record represents what I put forward. What I did suggest was that since there was an opportunity to discuss what was the major complaint of the opposition concerning the government on interim supply later in the afternoon it should proberly be discussed then, rather than on a special motion to adjourn the house.

The point I made today is that since we are discussing the C.B.C. estimates, the proper place to discuss them is during the consideration of the main estimates and not on interim supply. That statement was accompanied by my offer to have the main estimates brought forward, since we are already giving three days a week to a consideration of them.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, the minister has aptly defended my point, because the details of the C.B.C. have not been discussed. We have been discussing general policy. He has come to the defence of the position I have taken. I think the record of last Friday will indicate in no uncertain terms that that is the case. However, I do not intend to go into that phase of the discussion at all tonight, Mr. Chairman.

At this time we are being asked to vote $740 million for the carrying forward of the government's program for the next two months. Naturally the opposition must ask itself why it should vote this money. As I asked myself that question tonight I found it very difficult indeed to find any reason why the government opposite should be given $740 million necessary to carry on the business of this country for the next two months, and I make that statement because of the conditions which exist in this country today.

Mr. Chairman, one need only look back to last Friday and what happened at that time to realize that this government never moves until it is almost too late to consider problems which deserve attention. I think that fact is made clear by the action taken over the week end by the minister and the government, and indicates that the debate which took place last Friday could very well have been dispensed with had this government done its duty in regard to the particular matter under consideration at that time. I refer to the railway problem.

The problems affecting agriculture today, and I think immediately of the plight of the turkey growers of this country, and the government's lack of action, represent one reason for not voting confidence in the government, but for withholding supply. The decline in the price being paid for cattle across this country and the lack of action on the part of the government is another indication of why steps should be taken to withhold interim supply from the government opposite.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nasserden: I note there are some hon. members who represent the areas concerned, where there has been crop failure in eastern Canada and in parts of the province of Quebec, and I should like to ask you, sir, what this government is providing in this vote of $740 million for the relief of those people? One need only think of the dairy problems in eastern Canada today to ask what this government has done to alleviate that situation.

When we pick up our daily newspapers these days what do we see? We see an indication by this government opposite that there is to be a tax cut some time in the near future. This announcement is only a belated reparation of the damage done to the economy of the country by the Gordon budgets, which brought forward an 11 per cent sales tax which is stifling industry, to a certain extent, and reducing the full impact of increasing employment which could have been ours had the government followed the policy which should have been followed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nasserden: That is another indication of the carelessness of hon. members opposite. When one thinks of the $740 million required by the government to run the affairs of this country for two months, he at the same time can only think of inflation and the alarming increase in the cost of living which today is eroding the value of the Canadian dollar to consumers in every part of the country. When one thinks of the situation, bearing in mind the tremendous increase in consumer credit in this country today, he cannot but ask what action the government opposite is proposing to meet that situation? One need only travel to any part of Canada today to realize the tightening application of taxation measures on the books today, as they are applied to individuals and corporations.

Mr. Chairman, I could cite scores of examples, almost all of which indicate that the government opposite is reaching unrelentingly to obtain every last dollar it can on almost any pretence it can find. This afternoon the minister made some reference to the approach of Christmas and I thought that he thought he could perhaps bring about a mellowness in the chamber that would cut short this debate and thus infringe upon the responsibility of members of the opposition to question the government on the measures and courses they are now following. One need only ask: As Christmas approaches, what is the situation that faces the thousands of Canadians who during the past year have had to bear the burden of the increased taxation that the government has levied on them since it came into power? During that period of time there has been little appreciable increase in the income of the average and below average income employable person in this country. One need only look at what the government have done and the attitude of mind they have displayed to realize the direction in which they are heading and where their sympathies lie.

I think of the old age pensioners who received an increase of $10 per month, but which was not made retroactive as were the increases of $8,000 to members of parliament. I think of the other increases in salaries granted to hundreds of people in the upper levels of the civil service.

Mr. Winkler: The president of the C.B.C.

Mr. Nasserden: They received increases of $3,000, $4,000 or $5,000 and the president of the C.B.C. received a salary increase beyond the imagination of most people in this country. But those in the lower income groups were lost sight of by the government opposite and by the Prime Minister who it was said during the election campaign was a man who cared. What does he care about? That is the question we have to ask ourselves on this occasion.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): He cared about you.

Mr. Nasserden: He cared about me but he did not care about the thousands of little people in this country.

Mr. Cashin: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nasserden: As soon as I am finished I will be very glad to do so. There is another reason why we should question the advisability of providing interim supply to the government opposite. I refer to the carelessness with which they have arranged the business of the House of Commons. The order paper is in their hands. They have the responsibility and the opportunity as well to place before the House of Commons a bill of fare that in an orderly way will provide the maximum benefit for the Canadian people. That has not been the case during the 16 months the government has been in office.

One need only think of the pension plan, the revisions in that plan and the questions that are still being asked to realize that this is a government that did not know what it wanted to do, did not know how to do it and in the final analysis wasted the time of parliament by the reconsideration of ill-prepared, ill-conceived measures that did not receive the attention of the ministers concerned which is expected from responsible ministers of the crown.

One need only think of the flag resolution, and I will say no more than that, to realize that the government has brought forward the kind of faltering policy that has endangered the reputation of parliament itself. We should not forget the first budget introduced by the Minister of Finance and the threatening aspects of that budget not only with regard to the domestic scene but in international circles as well.

Mr. Greene: Things look pretty good now though.

Mr. Nasserden: Things look pretty good now?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winkler: You had better talk to your farmers, Joe.

Mr. Nasserden: That has always been the great boast of the Liberal party, but in no sphere of activity has their failure been greater than in the sphere of national unity. One need only look at Canada today to realize how shallow, how utterly deceitful, have been the claims that have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite when they have spoken about the unity of our nation.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nasserden: The hon. gentleman can make a speech later if he wants to but he knows, as all members across the way know, that national unity is questioned today as it never was before, and all because we have in power a government that has failed in its responsibilities to all Canadians, but more so with regard to the province of Quebec because it has made greater promises to the people of that province than to those of any other province. I think of the damage the government has done to the theme of a strong central government, a government that can fill the expectations embodied in the articles of confederation and also give people in all parts of this nation that stature, that opportunity, that the Fathers of Confederation had in mind when they laid the foundations for the building of a united nation made up of French, English and those of other races all in one big happy family.

These are the reasons why we have to question the government on the courses upon which it has set out. There is before the Canadian people today one aspect of governmental activity that has brought all of these questions into even greater focus. I refer to the role of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. If we go back and look at its origin and purpose we will see that at the time it was brought into being there were high hopes that this instrument would be one of the great unifying factors in the development of this nation. I am sure it is true that members in all parts of the house thought that in the development of Canada over the years the C.B.C. would be able to search out talent that would enhance the cultural genius of our nation. But what has been the effect of the policies deliberately embarked upon by the management of the C.B.C. over the last decade or two?

Mr. Winkler: Lincoln Rockwell.

Mr. Nasserden: What manner of search have they made for talent here in Canada? Look at what they have done to challenge the very institutions that Canadians in all parts of this nation hold dear by holding up to ridicule and questioning the moral and religious foundations of our nation. I cannot help but wonder what they have been trying to inspire because certainly it has not been the unity of Canada. Certainly there has been no effort on the part of the C.B.C. to try to inspire and encourage a philosophy that would enhance Canadian citizenship in the eyes of the people of the world as well as in the eyes of the people of Canada and their children.

The Chairman: Order, please. I should like to suggest to hon. members who wish to carry on conversations in the chamber that they should do so in a soft voice so that the chairman will have an opportunity to hear the speeches that are being made.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I believe it is the hon. member for Longueuil who has been chattering like a chipmunk all through my remarks.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I am sure you were not referring to me when you were saying somebody was speaking out of turn.

An hon. Member: If the shoe fits, buddy, wear it.

Mr. Greene: A chipmunk knows a nut when he sees one.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I may have been laughing sometimes, because he says some funny things.

Mr. Nasserden: If it is funny for a member of this house to question the direction the C.B.C. is taking today in connection with the cultural aspirations of our people, the way in which it has challenged everything in which the people of Canada believe—and this is just as true in your constituency as it is in mine—then I believe more consideration should be given to these matters than you have been giving to them up to date.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Could I ask a question?

Mr. Nasserden: As soon as I have completed my remarks. I believe that because of the reluctance of the minister responsible for the C.B.C. to engage in any type of consideration of what is going on in the C.B.C., there has grown up in that organization almost a contempt for this parliament and for the desires of the Canadian people. I do not say this by way of criticism of the present minister only, nor by way of criticism of the former minister who now sits in the opposition, but I say it by way of criticism of those who have held up the C.B.C. as one of the holy cows that could not be questioned concerning the direction in which it was trying to develop Canadian thought and Canadian culture. I believe, from the observations I have heard in every part of Canada, and from letters I have received as well from people who are the backbone of this country today, that the Canadian people are fearful of the consequences if this organization is allowed to continue without some kind of direction from parliament.

This does not mean that we want to interfere with individual programs, but it does mean that there must be some philosophy behind a crown corporation charged with the great responsibility that was given to the C.B.C. when it was originally formed. If I may say so, sir, it has been left without direction of any kind from parliament itself. We are to blame in this parliament and in the parliaments that went before us for what is taking place in this organization. I believe that the time is long past when parliament itself should give some expression to what parliament hoped this cultural organization, if you wish to call it that, could do for the unity of our nation, for the development of our future as a nation amongst the nations of the world.

I do not wish to go into individual programs and will not do so tonight. This is not because I have not seen programs on the C.B.C. that were open to question. It is not because I have not received letters from people who have been seriously concerned about these matters. I think someone here today referred to the fact this organization has a captive audience. I thought that was very well put because, in many parts of this nation, they have a captive audience. What they did, and what they did not do, in a very large measure could affect the future of this nation. There are many other things that could be said about the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. There will be other occasions when we can deal with this in greater detail. This is in conformity with the wishes of the President of the Privy Council who indicated the estimates of the C.B.C. will be brought forward very shortly for consideration.

Mr. McIlraith: Well, I offered to do that.

Mr. Nasserden: The minister says he offered to do it. This is the kind of hedging we have had on so many occasions from ministers. First of all, they like to hold something over your head as a club, and that is exactly what the minister tried to do today. However, he did it in such a nice way that none of us could take exception to it. He is very adept at that, I have to admit. However, this does not subtract from the fact that he tried to hold this club over our heads and say, if you boys pass these things quickly without examination, we will bring forward the C.B.C. estimates.

The fact is, sir, that there are other matters that engage our attention as well as the C.B.C. There are danger signs in our Canadian economy today. Some hon. members opposite may feel I am talking through my hat when I talk in this fashion, especially if one looks at some of the figures. But when you analyse those figures you realize that some of these things have happened because of the tax policies that have been evolved by this government. You cannot help but realize there are serious implications in what is happening throughout Canada today.

I want to return to what I said before concerning the increased use of consumer credit in this country. This is one of the most dangerous aspects of the present situation. It is a situation to which not only the President of the Privy Council but the Minister of Finance and other members of cabinet should be giving much more serious consideration than they are at the moment. During the past year Canada has enjoyed the fruits and benefits of the sale of grain made to the U.S.S.R. This was a great shot in the arm to our economy. Today we had an announcement from the Minister of Trade and Commerce of the sale of 10.6 million bushels of grain to the U.S.S.R. This, in itself, will not be much of a shot in the arm to the economy this year. We had hoped the sale to the U.S.S.R. would have been much larger. In fact, there is reason to believe they will require more than 10.6 million bushels in the year ahead.

I ask myself again, why should we vote this government $740 million? Why should we give them permission to carry on for another two months? We have heard very little from the benches opposite today or Friday to indicate there is anything in the complexion of the situation that faces us today that could inspire confidence in the government amongst the Canadian people. We recall the action that was taken a few years ago to devaluate the Canadian dollar. We recall the words that were spoken. We recall those green pieces of paper that were sent from one end of the country to the other questioning that action.

No one on the government benches can claim much credit for what has happened to the Canadian economy because almost everything has been as a result of the devaluation of the dollar at that time, and of the trade promotion program begun by the former administration, which had an eye to the future of Canadian industry and labour. All we have had since then is a hit or miss program aimed at certain localities, almost bypassing the national scene and leaving outside parliament's consideration that sense of equity that must exist between one area and another in developing a national program for our people.

Once again I come to the question, why should the government be voted $740 million, why should it be given another two months in office in order to carry on the tactics it has employed during the last several months? The government has been slow to take action on hate literature. Perhaps one of the reasons for its slowness is that if it passes legislation outlawing hate literature it would make all its own campaign literature obsolete. That is a valid statement to make when one recalls what took place during the last general election, and despite the hon. member opposite, who is not in his seat—

The Chairman: I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): May I ask the hon. member a question.

The Chairman: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Regan: Mr. Chairman, my principal purpose is to speak for a few minutes on the subject of the C.B.C. Quite a number of speakers have dealt with it at some length today. They took up a considerable part of parliament's time to talk about it and I think I am justified in using a little of its time to speak on the same subject.

First, may I say we are always interested in hearing the monthly state of the union address by the hon. member for Rosthern, who tonight indicates that he sees danger signs to the Canadian economy. If we are to judge from recent newspaper reports probably the danger signs he sees are that the budget may be balanced this year after seven years of monumental deficits. In his state of the union address he omitted that, and failed to mention anything about the re-establishment of fiscal responsibility, about the buoyant economy, or about the reduction in unemployment.

However, referring to the C.B.C. the hon. member had a good idea when he said it was useful to review the early days of the corporation and its early purposes. Its principal purpose was that of uniting the nation and developing cultural interest in the country. I am in full accord with those principles. As I have said previously in this chamber, if it had not been for the existence of the C.B.C. in the early days of radio, and in the early days of television, it is doubtful whether Canadian culture could have been salvaged. Had it not been for the C.B.C. our culture could well have been submerged in American culture because of the great influx of U.S. television programs.

In passing, I wonder how many singers and artists have been discovered and encouraged over the years by the C.B.C. I wonder how many people across Canada have had their knowledge of public affairs broadened by the C.B.C. I wonder whether any broadcasting network in the world has kept a higher standard in news broadcasts than the C.B.C. No organization has done more to provide entertainment in the medium of sports coverage. But I do not wish to review only past accomplishments.

The C.B.C. has been frequently mentioned in this chamber in recent days and it would be well for us to remember how and why the corporation was established. The reason it was not made a department of government, that it was not made directly responsible to parliament is tied in with the fact that in a country so large and thinly populated it would be difficult initially for private radio and television to produce the type of programs that all Canadians might well expect to see, and to do this at a financial profit. As a consequence there was a necessity for government ownership, and the objective was to have government ownership without government or parliamentary interference. Thus the C.B.C. was set up with a president and a board of 11 directors appointed from all across the country.

In 1958 the Broadcasting Act, repealing the Canadian broadcasting act, provided for the establishment of a board of broadcast governors, whose purpose was the provision "of a varied and comprehensive broadcasting service of a high standard. . . ." and which had the power to make regulations "respecting standards of programs." Regardless of what the B.B.G. has or has not done with this power, it must be remembered that the previous government gave the B.B.G. the power to make regulations regarding standards of programs, and it was the previous government which appointed the first members of the B.B.G.

Over the years frequent attempts have been made to interfere with the independence of the C.B.C., and in dealing with them the proper view has been that which was expressed so well by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings in 1962, when he held the cabinet portfolio which embraced the C.B.C. As recorded at page 857 of Hansard for February 14, 1962 he said:

> —it has been the policy of this government from the beginning, as it was the policy of the previous government and as I hope it will always be the policy of federal governments, not to interfere with the programming of the C.B.C.... If we were to start interfering with the programming of the C.B.C. we would be laying the foundation for either a fascist state or a communist state.

I am sure we all agree with the stand which he took on that occasion, but I hasten to say that I disagree with some of the things that are done by the C.B.C., and in particular I refer to certain programs that may be held to be in bad taste. I shall not again take the opportunity to criticize the C.B.C. in this chamber because I do not think this is the proper place to do it, but since we are on the subject I think we should be most concerned about the showing of a film that is highly controversial in the United States just prior to the eve of the presidential elections. I am sure there would be great yelling and screaming on this side of the border if the Americans were to use their television facilities which come into this country, as ours go into parts of the United States, to put on controversial political material on the eve of a Canadian election.

Mr. Winkler: They did last time.

Mr. Regan: Despite the fact that sometimes we all disagree with the policies of the C.B.C. we are in such a situation that were we to interfere with the policies of that corporation we could destroy its independence. Every few years it is useful for a parliamentary committee to review the progress of the industry. At the present time an advisory committee is at work under Mr. Fowler, a committee made up of experts, looking into the development of the industry as a whole. Its report will be ready in the spring and would make an appropriate subject for consideration by a parliamentary committee. We would then have the opportunity to consider the report of this departmental committee and express the views of Canadians as their elected representatives. I think the meeting of a parliamentary committee now would be premature and without direction. I believe it would be used by many of the members of this house to indulge in program reviews, as they do periodically, reviews upon which they waste the time of the people here in the House of Commons. When this report comes before a parliamentary committee—and we have been told that such a committee will be set up next year—I believe it would be a good idea to have the officials come before us, in order that the general trend might be considered. But to hold meetings now would merely provide a platform for those in this house who want parliament to run the C.B.C. on a day by day basis. I would point out, also, that not only is it very late in the session but that we have a very heavy backload of business to attend to without taking on this extra responsibility now.

I wonder, however, whether the members who have spoken on this subject are really concerned at all about the general policies of the C.B.C. I think it more likely they are merely trying to establish a forum for their program reviews. Let us consider some of the things which have been said today. The hon. member for Edmonton West was very careful, when he spoke, to tell the committee he did not want to carry on a witch hunt or interfere with the independence of the corporation. But he did want to know, he said, why certain individuals seemed to enjoy a predominance on certain programs. He wanted to know why these people were invited to appear. Was this not just the type of situation which parliament was concerned about when it first set up the C.B.C. as an independent corporation? The hon. member for Lethbridge also spoke. He said he was concerned about the number of reporters—he used that word first and then changed it to "personnel"—who were used to cover the Queen's visit, and placed the number at 400. He thought that was a terrible thing; but he did not tell us how many were used by other networks to cover the same occasion. He did not tell us how many were used by the B.B.C. or by N.B.C. in the United States. He did not tell us what all these 400 people did. He did not tell us because he has no idea in the world what they did.

An hon. Member: Do you?

Mr. Regan: This is the type of criticism we get so often, despite the fact that the legislation says the C.B.C. shall be independent and not run by parliament.

What was the criticism made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, an hon. member for whom I have the greatest respect? He told us he felt a committee should be set up because he was disturbed about the distribution of political time; he was disturbed by the lack of objective reporting. Apparently he does not hear much about Social Credit. I would have a different viewpoint and, I am sure, so would many other members of this committee. It seems to me Social Credit does get a great deal of publicity. I hear statements very often by members of the Social Credit party; and these are given publicity. As I say, these things are all a matter of viewpoint.

I want to say that the objections to setting up a parliamentary committee in an attempt to run the C.B.C. are threefold. First, it would be contrary to the principle of independence of which I have spoken. In the second place, we would be using parliamentary time—as we are doing at the moment, I know—to discuss the internal direction of a crown corporation; we would be dealing, for instance, with the question of how many reporters were used to cover the Queen's visit. The third objection is, of course, the lack of expert knowledge by members of this house of the broadcasting art. Very few of us have worked in broadcasting and some who have done so are far from being experts. I realize we may have one or two experts present—

An hon. Member: Are you?

Mr. Fisher: Keep going; never stop.

Mr. Regan: One interesting question which occurs to me is this: Why has there been so little criticism of the private broadcasters? Is commercial television so much better? Are all the private broadcasters in Canada perfect in their programming?

Mr. Nesbitt: We do not pay for that.

Mr. Regan: The hon. member for Oxford says "We do not pay for it". So, despite the fact that broadcasting comes under the board of broadcast governors, a board set up by parliament to supervise the standards of broadcasting generally, the hon. member for Oxford says: We don't pay for private broadcasting, but since we provide the money for government radio it should be run on a day to day basis by the government.

Mr. Winkler: He did not say that.

Mr. Nesbitt: The hon. member for Halifax is very astute with his language, but I never said any such thing, and he knows it.

An hon. Member: May I be permitted to ask a question?

Mr. Regan: I would prefer that it should be asked at the end of my remarks, if that is agreeable. I will leave time.

We have dealt with this question of why there has been no criticism of private broadcasters. We are told this is because we do not pay for private broadcasting. But I would point out that all private channels in this country are controlled by the Broadcasting Act, which provides that we should be equally concerned with what goes on in any private station across Canada. No one should profess to be concerned only with what the C.B.C. does just because we happen to be paying for it. I disagree fundamentally and entirely with that principle.

We heard some words from the Leader of the Opposition on this subject, as we do from time to time. He has on a number of occasions objected to programs which the television network has carried, and he mentioned one today. I can only wonder whether the Leader of the Opposition was as concerned with the standards and programming of the C.B.C. when the directors of the corporation were chosen. I wonder whether he showed his present concern when the board of broadcast governors was set up. In my opinion there has been a trend in some of the C.B.C. programming which has caused a number of us to be somewhat concerned, though not to the extent that we are prepared to interfere with the independence of the C.B.C. But if there is any question about the deterioration of C.B.C. standards, if the programming is not as good as it was two or three years ago, if it is more offensive to some people; if the corporation has producers who are giving them ideas which are "way out," it is not the responsibility of individual members of this parliament, because they know they should not interfere with the internal operations of the C.B.C. There is only one man in this House of Commons who is in a position to take responsibility, if the standard of services has deteriorated in the past three or four years. Who appointed the directors?

Some hon. Members: Who?

Mr. Regan: As I said earlier in my remarks, the whole principle of setting up the C.B.C. was to have independent directors, to give this organization independence from parliament. Therefore, of course, it was important that the directors be chosen on a basis of representing the different races in the country, the regional interests and the cultural interests; that they be people of good taste and of wisdom. I am not saying they are not, but I am saying it is important that the directors of the C.B.C., if they are going to run this vast organization, be chosen on that basis. It was certainly the responsibility of whoever chose them to see that this was the case. These directors run the C.B.C. the same as do the directors of any other corporation. They have full power—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Regan: Maybe they do not use it; I do not know about that. They do not have to, if they do not have the courage. But they, like the directors of any company, decide what the policies of that company will be, or have the power to do so. So I ask, Mr. Chairman, were these directors chosen with consideration for their wisdom, their good taste, and so forth? All but two of the present directors were appointed by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition during the days of his government. If the C.B.C. is falling down in good taste; if it is presenting bad programs, it is only the responsibility of the right hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): You are away off.

Mr. Regan: I see. The only other thing is this. The government of the right hon. gentleman in 1958 also set up the B.B.G. with the terms of reference that I mentioned a little earlier. He set them up and gave them the power to make regulations with regard to programming. If hon. members opposite have become concerned about the standard and the type of programs that are being shown to the Canadian public, I presume those men on the B.B.G. were also selected by the right hon. gentleman with great care for their wisdom, good taste and national interest. One can only assume that if the B.B.G. has been concerned only with the Canadian content of broadcasting and has not spent enough time on the effective supervision of broadcasting in this country, there is only one man who is directly responsible, and that is the person who appointed them. He is the only man in this house who had any opportunity to do any of these things.

I do not believe anyone will really argue with the principle that if you have directors who do their job, if you have a B.B.G. that does its job, the C.B.C. is bound not to overstep the limits. I am not dealing with the question of whether they have or have not; I am just pointing out that if you condemn the C.B.C. and come to the conclusion that their programs have been in very poor taste, that is where the responsibility has to lie.

Mr. Grégoire: That is quite a joke.

Mr. Regan: In conclusion, Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Regan: —I want to say that, while the right hon. Leader of the Opposition bears that responsibility, at the same time his supporters in this house have used the time of parliament all day today to carry on this program review of the C.B.C. and bring it up again and again, while the people of Canada wait for legislation on minimum wages, on pensions, on railways, on unemployment—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Regan: When I conclude.

Some hon. Members: You are afraid.

Mr. Regan: Never. I want to say this: Next year, when the report comes in from the advisory committee, that will be an appropriate time for a parliamentary review, for a committee to review the general course of the industry and where it is headed. When directors come up for reappointment is the time to consider whether or not they have done a good job as directors, I would suggest; and I will be interested to hear the remarks of the hon. members on that side of the house at that time.

Mr. Winkler: You will get them.

Mr. Regan: In the meantime, Mr. Chairman, I tell you that Canadians are tired of this house being used as the forum day after day for small matters like this. The people of Canada want to see us get on with the job of running this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Regan: I say, Mr. Chairman, let us consider the nation's business; let us get on with it, and let us not gossip about t.v. programs.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member will now permit a question, I wonder whether he really feels that $100 million of the taxpayers' money is sufficiently unimportant that we should not spend a couple of days debating this matter, or as much time as it takes to satisfy members of this house. That is my first question. Also, does this debate make any difference to bringing forth the labour bill either last Friday or today? I would ask the hon. member that question. It makes absolutely no difference.

Mr. Regan: Mr. Chairman, I would say to the hon. gentleman that the time to deal with the question of the C.B.C. is on the estimates of the C.B.C.

Mr. Winkler: You want to sweep $100 million under the door.

Mr. Regan: That is the first answer. I would say, further, that even at that time, if we are to save the independence of the C.B.C. we should not be dealing with its programming: we should be dealing with the general development of C.B.C. policies in broadcasting in this country.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. member a question. I listened very carefully to his remarks—

Mr. Regan: I am glad.

Mr. Olson: —and I think he advanced a very substantial argument, provided that one premise, the premise upon which his whole argument was based, is in fact a valid one. This premise, it seems to me, was that someone in this house is asking that the parliamentary committee in fact administer the day to day affairs of the C.B.C. First of all I would like to ask the hon. member, who has asked that this committee shall be in charge of administering the day to day affairs of the C.B.C.?

Mr. Winkler: He hasn't been here long enough.

Mr. Olson: If that premise is not present, his whole argument breaks down.

Mr. Regan: I want to assure my hon. friend that my whole argument does not break down, because the hon. member for Medicine Hat himself was suggesting that we need to deal with the C.B.C. with regard to the question of the objectivity of their news broadcasting among the political parties, and the question of the distribution of free time to air political views. He thus indicated that he wants to go into the internal management of the C.B.C. and wants to break down their independence. I also suggest that the general tenor of all the criticism of the C.B.C., not only today but at other times when the question of the corporation has come before the house, suggests interference in minor internal management, such as how many employees are necessary to cover the Queen's visit.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Regan: This is the one I am afraid of.

Mr. Greene: I was very interested in the hon. member's premise that the C.B.C. is the guardian and custodian of Canadian culture, and I wondered whether he could tell me in what guise such programs as Jack Benny, Danny Kaye, Ed Sullivan, and that great exponent of Canadiana, sheriff Matt Dillon, have added to Canadian culture.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Regan: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member would not want to cast any aspersions upon Matt Dillon. But at the same time I say this, that if it had not been for the C.B.C. all television in Canada would have been Matt Dillons; it would have been all-American—because Canada was not in a position to develop a privately owned television network.

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Chairman, I would like to join my hon. friend from Halifax in talking about the C.B.C., even though he said before he spoke for 25 minutes on the subject that we should not be taking up any time at all on it. I want to open my remarks by mentioning a conflict he has resolved for me, in that he said the appointments to the C.B.C. board of directors were made by the previous prime minister and that the right hon. gentleman must take full responsibility for what has happened because he made the appointments. This has resolved a conflict in my mind. Ever since Judge Meunier of Quebec was sentenced to two years in the penitentiary, and he was appointed by the Prime Minister, it has bothered me that there might be a connection here. It has bothered me that there might have been a connection in another regard, and that the Prime Minister might have had some responsibility. Furthermore, that other fine appointment of Mr. Landreville to the high court of Ontario was made by the present Prime Minister, and he was being tried as having taken part in an improper stock transaction. That has bothered me. However, I am now reassured by the hon. member for Halifax that these appointments of that calibre of men are a direct reflection of the attitude and convictions of the man who made the appointment.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, because I represent an area of this country where life is not only basic but at times quite brutal. Most of us there do not have much time for indulgence in righteous indignation. I feel I have a certain amount of perspective for another reason.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether you would ask hon. members opposite to be a little more orderly.

I feel I may have a certain amount of perspective for another reason. Most of my constituents do not have access to even radio programs, and none of them receive television services. The words of condemnation that I intend to utter in respect of the C.B.C. and their programming—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether you would ask those heroes opposite to stand and make speeches, if that is what they are attempting to do.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Rhéaume: I have made these opening remarks because—

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Rhéaume: Surely no one can accuse me of attempting to give expression to a voter reaction within my constituency, since my constituents in fact are unable to receive television.

I am concerned about what has been described in today's Toronto Globe and Mail by a declaration known as the Declaration of Canadian women, in reference to propaganda spread for perversion, pornography, free love, blasphemy, dope, violence and crime. I feel that it should be a source of concern to those of us in this house when we are being asked to vote millions of dollars to underwrite this kind of operation.

I do not hesitate to speak, nor do I apologize to anyone in this house for standing in my place saying those things I believe to be accurate about the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and whether in my opinion it is doing a good or bad job. I am not afraid of any kind of retaliation. Everyone suggests that if you comment about the expenditures of a crown corporation you are engaging in a witch hunt. If by registering objections to pornography and perversion I am witch hunting, I say then, let us get on with this witch hunt. Furthermore if a witch hunt has been conducted anywhere in Canada it has been conducted on Canadian Broadcasting Corporation programming for the last few years.

There are those who believe that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has for some time been the darling of the Liberal party, and that it is dedicated not only to the spreading of pornography and perversion, but also Liberalism. The Canadian taxpayer has the right to have someone stand up in this house and ask questions. This question was raised once before. Was the doubling of the salary of the president of the C.B.C. from $20,000 to $40,000 per year anything more than an attempt on the part of the then secretary of state to ensure that the C.B.C. and its senior executives would be dedicated to the task of keeping the Liberal party in power in this country? It would not be the first time the Liberals bought the people of this country with their own money. One has only to think of the $500 bonus given toward the construction of a house, and the additional cost of $800, or more, because of the 11 per cent sales tax.

Mr. Chairman, I am not alone in my comments about the C.B.C. I could read from a current statement which appears in this declaration of Canadian women printed in the Toronto Globe and Mail today in a column written by Dennis Braithwaite. I do not intend to read this entire article but I should like to read one paragraph as follows:

> In its general preamble, attached to a petition form, declaration states that both radio and t.v. are being exploited to maintain a constant assault on character, to undermine faith in God and respect for law and authority and to destroy sound home life and the knowledge of right and wrong. Noting that the C.B.C. last year spent $86,000,000 of public money, the document calls on members of parliament to make the corporation "answerable to the Canadian people."

I take no objection, Mr. Chairman, to any of these goals of the people who signed this declaration.

The article then continues as follows:

Lest anyone think this a demand for censorship the declaration insists that the present freedom of the C.B.C. is a form of censorship. "Those who kill the conscience of a nation dig the grave of freedom and prepare the ground for dictatorship. It begins when God-given standards are mocked and their proponents are belittled, bullied or silenced altogether.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to place on the record statements which appear in an article in a Roman Catholic newspaper which probably has the greatest circulation of any Catholic publication on this continent. The article appeared in the July 30 issue of Our Sunday Visitor, and appeared under the byline of Patricia Young. Patricia Young makes the general point that the C.B.C. has conducted a constant assault on character, patriotism and our accepted moral standards. To support her arguments she reviews a list of the programs that we saw last year on C.B.C. television. I should like to just sketch her remarks in this regard. First there was the program called "Two Soldiers" which was a drama in the "Quest" series depicting two servicemen returning from the army. Not only were they devoid of patriotism, but they mouthed the typical ban the bomb line and had become homosexually involved because of their army service.

The second program to which she referred was "A Second Look", which appeared on February 9 and featured Ralph Ginsburg of New York, publisher of Eros and other pornography magazines. He was allowed to defend his case on this program, using this corporation of ours, despite the fact that he had just been convicted on 28 counts, sentenced to five years in jail and fined $28,900 for peddling this filth.

The third program was "The Observer" which was produced in Toronto and appeared on February 13. Dr. Albert Ellis offered his view that premarital and extramarital sexual relations were not only normal but necessary, and the best thing for family life.

On May 13, the "Private Memoirs and Confessions of a Justified Sinner" appeared on the "Festival" series. This program gave a distorted conception of religion by showing a pious religious fanatic turn into a man who indulged in violence, rape, perversion, drunkenness and murder.

I could go down the list, Mr. Chairman, which includes a résumé of "The Open Grave", "The Trespassers", and the "Quest" series which blatantly showed a retarded man being seduced by his social worker, and which wound up by revealing that all of the previous social workers had done the same thing to him.

There are people, Mr. Chairman, like the hon. member for Halifax, who believe that members of parliament have no right to take objection to these things, and that to do so would be putting the brakes on the C.B.C. and its programmers. I say it is time that members of parliament put the brakes on this type of nonsense, which is being paid for by the taxpayers of Canada. I believe that this kind of independence has turned into arrogance and that there are times when the C.B.C. directors are even turning on their own benefactors in the Liberal party.

I was forced to come to this conclusion on the basis of events prior to the recent visit of Her Majesty the Queen. For the six weeks immediately prior to Her Majesty's visit to Quebec not a single member of the treasury benches made use of the public affairs facilities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to explain to the people of Quebec the meaning of the visit. I think of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, that cabinet minister from the province of Quebec, that fearless fighter for the rights of the Indian people even though he does nothing to bring in legislation for them. Where was he during all this time? Why did he not take to the C.B.C.?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I am glad that this opportunity is given to me to make some comments on what the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has already stated, as repeated tonight by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Rhéaume), to the effect that I and other French Canadian ministers were not in Quebec city during the visit of Her Majesty the Queen.

I wish to point out to the hon. member that I was very happy, as a minister of the crown, and together with several other ministers of the crown from the province of Quebec, to accompany Her Majesty to numerous receptions in the city of Quebec and also on board the plane which carried her to Ottawa. That was the way for us, French Canadians, to prove our true solidarity toward the Queen of Canada.

Therefore, I would ask the hon. member for the Northwest Territories, and also his colleague for the Yukon, to cease repeating those false insinuations which are intended to divide Canadians, for political purposes upon which the people will pass judgment at the right time.

[Text]

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to get into an argument with the minister. I said, where were the statements by these ministers from Quebec over the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation prior to the Queen's visit? Where were they then? At any rate, Mr. Chairman, if the minister will hear me out I think he will find I am saying precisely what he was saying. But let me go on to the Minister of Justice, because he too said nothing.

An hon. Member: He is not here.

Mr. Rhéaume: Where was the Minister without Portfolio? He is no longer selling bumper stickers so he must have had plenty of time to prepare a broadcast for Quebec over the C.B.C. facilities. Where were these voices? Where was the minister of culture who is responsible for this crown corporation? Why was he not making use of the C.B.C.'s educational facilities months in advance of the Queen's visit? Where was the Minister of Public Works? I cannot believe that these men were cowards. I cannot believe that these men were just lying in the weeds to see how the visit came out before they said anything, just waiting around to see whether or not separatism might be a good thing to espouse. I have to believe that as bold men they wanted to make the people of Quebec anticipate and welcome the visit of the Queen and that somehow or other they were refused the opportunity to do so. I intend to raise these questions again when the estimates of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation come before the house. I want to find out whether these cabinet ministers went to the C.B.C. and attempted to make use of the educational facilities of that corporation in an effort to prepare the people of Quebec to welcome Her Majesty. I know it can be done.

Mr. Mackasey: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Rhéaume: You can wait until I am finished.

Mr. Laniel: What did you do as a French Canadian?

[Mr. Tremblay.]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): What did you do as a French Canadian?

Mr. Rhéaume: I know it can be done because I was in Ottawa the night the Minister of Transport suborned the C.B.C. into allowing him to make a statement on civil aviation policy when, because of sloppiness, he had been denied the opportunity to do so in the house.

I want to speak a moment about programming. Last night I saw the program "This Hour Has Seven Days". I have a right to say what I think about it and I intend to do so. I am not ashamed of giving my opinion. Too many members of parliament look at crown corporations and expenditures on them and say: Our role is to say nothing; we must not say anything because we will take their freedom away from them.

I saw the program last night and I say it was in the worst traditions of third rate college high jinks. What was not in that spirit and taste was an outright and open attempt to whitewash certain people in the United States, particularly Walter Jenkins, the presidential aide. I was disgusted with the freedom that the C.B.C. gave the producers of the program to equate perversion of a homosexual nature with overzealousness in the public service. This is something I cannot accept. I was not amused, enlightened or even entertained by Mr. Rockwell, and the press reports of the reactions of great many Canadian people indicate that I am not alone in that view.

The sad part of all this in my opinion is that there is ample scope for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, with regard to whatever activities it wants to pursue, in keeping with its original mandate. Its mandate is by no means fulfilled and there is ample evidence that the corporation could come to parliament and secure appropriations of $80 million, $90 million or $100 million a year if it would carry out a positive program such as has yet to be enunciated. In other words, let the corporation get away from this nonsense of portraying perversion as though there were some kind of adolescent kick to it, and let it carry out the very necessary work that needs to be done.

I have some suggestions for the corporation. There are hundreds of thousands of Canadian people who are still without television service. There are thousands of Canadians who are not able to receive good radio broadcasts. I am thinking of the people who live in the northerly areas where the only station they can listen to is radio Moscow.

It is the only station that comes in consistently and it has good, impartial coverage of Canadian news.

These northerly areas are the areas of greatest isolation and insulation and if there is anywhere in Canada where the educational and cultural possibilities of radio and television are desperately needed it is in these northern areas where the people are remote from the mainsprings of Canadian life. However, every time I ask the C.B.C. to look into these things I get the answer that the cost of extending these services would be too great.

This afternoon I made a telephone call to a C.B.C. officer to find out about their new building program. I learned that they are expecting to build two new office buildings in Toronto and Montreal. The one in Toronto will cost $45 million, the one in Montreal will cost $60 million and together with a few smaller ones there will be a total expenditure of approximately $108 million. This is so that those who now plan C.B.C. programs can do so in more comfort. I am not so sure that producers of pornography should be allowed to hatch their perversions in air conditioned comfort at a time when hundreds of thousands of Canadians have yet to receive any kind of basic service. What else might the C.B.C. do instead of pursuing this bent they have today? I believe, and I believe this sincerely, that the programming of this agency, now that we are in 1964, requires a careful review. I do not believe that it would be necessary to limit this program review to parliament, although I would have no objection to parliamentarians being on such a committee. I believe a re-examination of this corporation is needed, and is needed now. I do not believe that a member of parliament getting up to register an objection to filth is destroying the independence of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. If in fact this kind of filth is being perpetrated on the Canadian people, then I want to know who else in this country is going to stand up and oppose this sort of thing if members of parliament, individually and collectively, do not do it?

I receive all sorts of requests in relation to the northern service from people who have comments on northern programming. They quite often do not deal directly through me, but directly with C.B.C. officials. I want to give you an example of their requests because this may come at a good time, right after Mr. Rockwell, the leader of the nazi movement in the United States, has been given hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of free publicity. This is a letter from the Reverend Frith who lives at Inuvik in the Northwest Territories where the Mackenzie river empties into the Arctic ocean. The Reverend Frith and his parishioners have been after the C.B.C. to allow the Sunday program of Dr. Billy Graham to be broadcast to the thousands of people who live in that remote area. This is what he was told when he contacted the officials:

> One official told me that C.B.C. was giving to the people of Inuvik and area what they felt was in the best interest of the people. We appreciate what the C.B.C. has been offering but feel with the abundance of time given to popular music and "soap" operas something could be cut somewhere to enable the people to hear the messages of one of the most outstanding evangelists of our day.

I do not want to read this whole letter and I doubt that it is necessary. However, I wanted to put it on the record at this time to positively suggest to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that they read the speech of the hon. member for Rosthern about the origins of the corporation and find out, if they can, what their purpose was when that body was set up by this parliament. I do not believe this is an unreasonable plea. I think it is long overdue. I would hope that the C.B.C. would be unafraid to come to this parliament and ask for $80 million if it meant extending services to all Canadians everywhere. I am sure this parliament would be quite happy to grant such a request rather than going on with the unending requests for money to finance programs like "This Hour Has Seven Days". I am not so sure their mandate was to make themselves comfortable in Toronto and Montreal in $108 million worth of air conditioned buildings, at a time when they had not fulfilled their mandate in substantial portions of this country.

Just last week, Mr. Chairman, the minister of northern affairs and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, speaking in Edmonton about the Canadian northland, said that communications and services were the key to opening this vast area; that the government is planning on doing this and they are looking for all these wonderful things. Well, here is something that the C.B.C. can do; it can rearrange this $108 million and put off air conditioning for another year. Let us see if they cannot suffer through the heat of Toronto and Montreal for just one more summer, so that the people who live all over the country will at least have access to these things. I suggest to them that it would be worth their while to do this.

In closing, I suggest to them that a great many other Canadians think the same way. I want to close by reading a sentence from an article I referred to earlier in the most widely circulated Roman Catholic magazine by Patricia Young. She says:

> Needless to say, Canada's taxpayers (and voters) will be carefully watching and listening. Many have already gone on record as saying: "O.K., you've gone far enough".

Mr. Greene: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Rhéaume: Certainly.

Mr. Greene: Can the hon. member inform us, if the C.B.C. programs are so terrible, so stultifying, to the people who hear them, why is he so anxious to spread the service to his constituents?

Mr. Rhéaume: This is the sort of Liberal sophistry I have no difficulty in answering. I suggested a two point program. I suggested, (a) eliminating the filth and garbage and, (b) those energies that are now being directed to perversion should be devoted to bringing good Canadian broadcasting to the people of this country.

Mr. Fisher: I hope the committee will forgive me for changing the topic. I would love to join in the discussion of the C.B.C., but the points I would like to bring up are really out of context with the debate that has taken place. It seems to me the questions about the C.B.C. that are most pressing are its relationship to commercial policy and its whole relationship to the board of broadcast governors. I am very much bothered by the lame duck status of the present chairman of the board of broadcast governors in relation to broadcasting policy. It seems to me that this type of approach and query that could be handled by a broadcasting committee would be more important in setting broadcasting and radio direction than in considering the perversions and pornography raised by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories. He will forgive me if I say to the house and to him that I really believe in assessing what he said he, himself, would have to acknowledge, that he was drawing a little bit of a long bow. I do not see how any of us, no matter what our contact with the C.B.C. may be, can fail to admit—I have had the kind of letters of complaint that have been mentioned—that the C.B.C. does not continually put out perversion and pornography upon the air waves via either television or radio. I do not believe it does those of us who are really critical of the C.B.C. any good to exaggerate in that particular direction.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what I wanted to speak to was the debate we had on Friday afternoon in connection with a situation on Canadian National Railways known as the run-through problem. Today the Prime Minister made an announcement that he was acceding to the request of the president of Canadian National Railways to set up a commission of inquiry. It would be under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, section 55, subsection (3). The commissioner would have terms of reference that would enable him to examine the situation in connection with run-throughs, arising particularly out of the situation at Wainwright and Nakina. Everyone may have assumed that once the Prime Minister made this announcement, everything would be over. The fact of the matter is that at this stage of the evening the railroad workers, in the main, have still not reported for work across much of Canada. I wanted to bring out some of the reasons for their hesitation, and why some of them are bitter about the situation. This was a spontaneous outburst that developed on Sunday without any triggering, I can assure you, by any third party as the president of Canadian National seems to allege in his telegram to the Prime Minister. Those who developed this spontaneous outburst are somewhat bitter over the fact the government and the Canadian National have not made a couple of points sufficiently clear.

The first point is the whole question about discipline and the kind of disciplinary action that may be taken by the management against the men. The reason there is bitterness is that last night, just at the most inopportune time in view of what happened today, across the system the railway forced letters upon employees informing them that if they were not back to work at midnight they would be out of service, and maybe on a permanent basis.

This kind of threat, coming as it did on the eve of what was imagined by the government to be a settlement, has left a bitterness that requires a very clear statement from the government that it has had an assurance from the C.N.R. that there will be no retaliation. I have received wires and phone calls from Kamloops, Edmonton, Melville, and places all over the country stressing this particular point.

I know the area vice presidents of the C.N.R., among them Mr. Gander in Toronto, have sent out wires to all terminal points stating that the men can have this assurance, but one of the most telling commentaries on the bitterness in C.N.R. labour relations over the last few years is the fact that the men are doubtful of this word. Therefore one of the things that has to follow on this particular tie-up is a recognition by the Minister of Labour and the C.N.R. of the fact that the trust and kind of mutual regard that should exist in good Canadian labour relations has largely disappeared between the C.N.R. and its men. I only hope that this particular incident will give impetus to the development of that kind of trust, and will draw some initiative from the government.

I was tempted to review, as did the Leader of the Opposition on motions today, the somewhat sorry performance of the government on this occasion. On Friday the government argued against urgency of debate on the issue, and the minister got up and indicated the government's responsibility was merely to let representations go to the C.N.R. I say to hon. members, don't let what happened in terms of the wire from the president of the C.N.R. and the wire of the Prime Minister, kid you. Somebody on the government side must have made some representations over the week end. I think it shameful that we were denied an urgent debate on the question of urgency, solely because the government and one of its ministers made an argument that there was not any urgency. The reason the minister thought there was no urgency was because he did not understand there was going to be a blow-up on this particular problem.

The second thing that is bothering the men who are out of service across the country at present is the whole question of the scope of the terms of reference that the commissioner of inquiry will have. I want to put on record that I, as someone interested in the case, accept the assurance of the Minister of Labour and of the Minister of Transport that these terms of reference will be broad enough so that the whole problem of run-throughs can be examined and some solutions recommended to it.

What the men have campaigned for on run-throughs is some way of bringing the problem under contract negotiation so that there cannot be unilateral decision, as was the case last Saturday midnight, when the C.N.R. introduced this particular one. I know the Minister of Labour may not be in a position to give this assurance when he has set up this commission of inquiry, but I want to get very clearly on the record that if something like that does not resolve out of the situation, then the other kind of solutions had better be wonderful in their completeness, thoroughness and ability to satisfy the men.

The main factor in the development of all this bitterness was the fact that the men were never able to negotiate this major change in their working conditions affecting their homes and families. It has always been at the initiative of management who could say, "Whether you like it or not, no matter what little adjustments we are prepared to make, the change is going to be made."

Even as late as yesterday the management of C.N.R. was trying to insist there would be no kind of agreement of any kind unless the men on the local levels were prepared to accept the recommendation that within two years the home divisional point at Nakina would be abolished.

There is one other point in connection with this matter that should be met. On Friday the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre brought up, as did I, the question of the 1926 Montreal agreement. I have seen copies of this agreement over the week end. It is one of the matters I know will be brought before the commissioner, and I want to put a particular section of it on the record so that the Minister of Labour and the government will realize just how much worth and value there is in it.

In May 1926 the brotherhood of locomotive firemen and enginemen and the brotherhood of locomotive engineers entered into an agreement with the C.N.R. This agreement was to last until it was rescinded after 30 days notice on the part of the management, and the point that is particularly important in connection with this document is that it has never been abrogated in any way. The company has never approached the unions with the suggestion that it be thrown out, and I want to point to one of the sections of the agreement which it seems to me is fundamental in a situation where a home terminal is being wiped out. Section 9 says:

> Nothing in this agreement shall be taken to permit the company without prior conference with representatives of the employees to change existing home terminal stations of the employees affected thereby—

And it goes on to say that this will not apply when new facilities are created somewhere in the same city or community; but that part is irrelevant. Is there anything more clear so far as home terminals are concerned? This is one of the reasons why the men have felt all along that they have a justifiable grievance in the Nakina and Wainwright situation. This agreement and the schedule attached to it has been overlooked and completely ignored by the C.N.R. management.

There is one other point that I think the Minister of Labour should make clear to us. It is something the railroaders have been asking him for some time. They also asked it of his predecessor, the hon. member for Ontario, namely whether there could not be an amendment to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act so that they would have the opportunity of negotiating this kind of situation under that act; in other words, that any time there was a major change in their working conditions this would enable them to negotiate.

At present they do not have this protection under the act. As a matter of fact every time they have tried to enter into negotiations or objected to the changes, the company has always produced the threat contained in that section of the Criminal Code which requires them to honour the obligations they have entered into under their contract. This is the kind of assurance that would be fundamental and I would appreciate it if the Minister of Labour could make some comment on it.

Another point on which he or the Minister of Transport should speak concerns section 182 of the Railway Act which, if it was interpreted the way most of us think it should have been by the courts, or if it had been amended the way a parliamentary committee recommended last session, would give the railroaders and the communities concerned the protection they have been seeking.

The thing that I am proudest of in connection with this whole issue and the way it developed is the fact that the railroaders on the C.N.R. proved they are not mice, that they are not rabbits, as a lot of people thought. They came out in a magnificent display of the kind of solidarity which only comes when men are desperate. What I appreciate most about it was not that they thumbed the nose at the man who heads the C.N.R.—a man for whom I have not a great deal of respect—but what I am most appreciative of is the spirit shown by this little town in my constituency, a town which governments and railway managements tend to forget. These people persisted, though they had the devil of a time making their representations and getting them understood. And when the facts of the situation went down the wire on Saturday night, all I knew and all I could report was that the government would not take any action and that from this point of view, the situation was dead.

I should like to remind hon. members that these people are living hundreds of miles from any large city and that their means of communication are very scant. It is not like a metropolitan community where it is possible to get legal advice and all kinds of assistance from a host of politicans, agencies and authorities. They are very much out on a limb. But when the moment came, they moved. They made a response and withdrew their services. And up and down the whole system the reply went along; Nakina and Wainwright were supported from Vancouver right through the piece. I appreciate this. I have to express this kind of appreciation because these constituents of mine are now convinced that even though the government did not show a great concern for them, their fellow workers across the whole system did, and I think this brewing up of a spirit of consideration among fellow railwaymen in different parts of the country is the most significant thing which has happened in labour relations and on the railroads for some time. I believe it will be a long time before railway management considers it can push through changes of the kind attempted last Saturday unilaterally and at such short notice.

I should like, too, to express my appreciation to the ladies of the town of Nakina who were out on the platform for trains at three, four, and five in the morning with posters, handing out leaflets, convincing the passengers and crews, shaming the officials who were running the trains yesterday to try to make them see that in a sense they were helping to kill, or lead to the death of, the community of Nakina.

I should like also to mention one of the ironies I spotted during these developments. More than four years ago a group of railwaymen came down from Capreol, Hornepayne and similar places. They saw the minister of labour and got nowhere with their representations against the company bringing in run-throughs. The unions leadership said they could do nothing for them. They came to me and asked me what I would suggest. I said that if they believed in their cause strongly enough they should be prepared to go to jail for it. I said that if they were prepared to do that they would be prepared to withdraw their services. I was hectored and bullied about this later on in the parliamentary committee before which the president of the C.N.R. appeared. But there was one man who rose to this. He lit a fire and declared there was to be a wildcat strike. He was a man by the name of Shortt. He was the one who got a story to the newspapers, and the C.N.R. changed its mind very shortly—within a day or so. This man was promoted soon after; he became an official. And on Saturday night, in identically the same situation, he was the official who was taking the lead up in that area to make the run-through possible for management. I think this was one of the ironies, that promotion of someone who had been so vigorous on behalf of the men could lead to a situation in which this same man ran through nearly five divisions in some 18 hours pulling trains for management.

The last point I want to touch on in connection with this situation is the way in which the C.N.R. used its officials. One of the contentions some of us have made with regard to the C.N.R. is that there are too many chiefs in comparison with the number of Indians. Well, the C.N.R. had officials scattered right across the country yesterday running trains. I want to know more about this because it is my belief that if the company has all these superfluous officials who know how to run trains so as to be able to cover up when trains are tied up all across the country it does, indeed, have too many chiefs. Obviously if they could trim some of the chiefs they would worry less about a few of the Indians at some of the smaller places.

The Minister of Labour has been very good in this situation, particularly today, and I should like to express my appreciation to him and to his officials. I hope he will be able to bring forward terms of reference broad enough to do the job, and that he will be able to help create the kind of atmosphere between union and management which will establish trust—because trust has diminished, and diminished very severely, on the Canadian National Railways.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: I wish to deal for a few moments only with the question which was debated during this whole day, that is, the C.B.C.

I was naturally surprised to hear the exaggerated statements made from both sides of the house. One side said that the C.B.C. was a den of corruption; the other, that it was a sacrosanct temple. One must nevertheless admit that both sides are exaggerating.

In my opinion, the C.B.C. is at present suffering from a growth problem which is normal in any modern enterprise. Television came to Canada some 15 years ago. Therefore, the technical field, the studios and the reception centres had to be developed, and today ever increasing attention is paid to the production of programs.

In view of the fact that radio and television must face competition which is getting stronger and stronger, the C.B.C. feels it necessary to revitalize its ideas, and that is normal. You cannot broadcast programs 12, 15 and 16 hours a day during 10 or 15 years without trying something new, because obviously if you do not do so, people will be dissatisfied and will quit watching television. In this effort of renewal, errors may have been committed and not only within the C.B.C. but everywhere else. We must understand that.

It is obvious that there have been tasteless programs. In my opinion, it was not mainly due to a lack of taste but because in certain fields untalented persons have been launched in such a considerable undertaking. This is when we witnessed unsuccessful programs.

However, we must not blame the C.B.C. as a whole, because when we consider artistic programs, on the French network at least, everyone will agree, I am sure, that in the province of Quebec the C.B.C. introduced some very talented artists whom we had never heard before.

After all, musicians of great talent and real ability have been made known, thanks to the C.B.C. both on radio and on television, and now they tour the province, the country and even foreign countries giving recitals.

There are playwrights and composers who were able to make themselves known throughout the country thanks to the C.B.C., on either the French or the English network.

After all, there have been amateur sport programs which helped our young people and opened new horizons for them.

Of course mistakes have been made, but it must also be recognized that everything was not bad in the C.B.C. There were also successful programs. At least, we should be proud of the success achieved by C.B.C. in contributing to the bringing into notice of our Canadian authors, actors, artists, musicians, athletes, etc.

Errors were made and I think that there were so many protests across the country that the C.B.C. must have known about it then, as well as it knows now, after the discussion in this house today.

When we ask for the setting up of a committee whose members could deal with C.B.C. management, we are not asking to administer the corporation as suggested by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan) a while ago. No, but we believe that such a meeting would be tremendously important and interesting both for the C.B.C. management and the hon. members. The C.B.C. is after all a government agency, and I agree that its directors must enjoy some independence as regards programming.

A short while ago the C.B.C. was compared with a business firm. Since the shareholders of a company meet the directors at least once a year and tell them what they think of their policies, I think that it should be the same with the C.B.C. whose operations cost the Canadian taxpayers between $80 and $85 million a year.

But the taxpayers' representatives have not even the opportunity of telling, once in a while, the officials of that crown corporation what the Canadian people think of them, while they can do it in the case of the C.N.R. As a matter of fact, we know that it had to be done, fortunately, with the administration of the C.N.R. in order that changes which we have noticed lately be made.

It was fortunate that hon. members could meet the president of Air Canada to tell him what they thought of Air Canada's service, for today we can see that its officials improved certain things. C.N.R. officials have also improved certain things.

The president of the C.N.R. may have found it hard during the few days he was a witness before the railways, canals and telegraph lines committee. The same thing can be said about the president of Air Canada, but at least they heard what the representatives of the people thought about those crown corporations and what changes they wanted made.

The presidents of those two crown corporations thought it advisable to take the members' representations into account, and even if changes were not made too quickly, at least some were made and the service was improved.

Why should we not be afforded the same opportunity to tell the C.B.C. officials what we think not only of the C.B.C.'s administration, but its programming, while not interfering with their independence, their freedom, in short, giving them, as before, a free hand in the administration of that agency?

Such an exchange of views would not be useless. In the past, it proved useful in the case of other crown corporations.

Political programs have been mentioned. In my opinion, hon. members, even those who sit on the government side, would have some rather bitter remarks to make in certain cases to certain C.B.C. officials concerning the anarchy and violence they helped spread for a while. Indeed, Liberal members were the first to complain about that.

Would it not be useful to bring some examples and concrete facts to the attention of C.B.C. directors and officers?

Even if a director is competent it does not mean that he is an authority in all fields such as programming.

Maybe the president is a good accountant—though I doubt it in view of his deficit of $85 million—but even if he is a good businessman, that does not mean that he has the ability to judge the character and atmosphere of poitical programs, cultural programs or the general programming.

Mr. Regan: Would you please speak slowly.

Mr. Grégoire: I shall try to speak more slowly, Mr. Chairman, to make it easier for the hon. member to understand, but after the arguments advanced a while ago by the hon. member for Halifax in his speech, I think that this will be hard.

In any event, such a meeting would be beneficial to everyone because, among other things, in the field of so-called political programs, they will have to admit that for some time now, the C.B.C. has been going astray and that there are in the service responsible for political programs individuals who are more interested in promoting certain ideas than putting forward ideas representing the average opinion of the Canadian people.

There are individuals—and this may be quite human—in the C.B.C., a crown corporation, who are only too anxious to please the party in office. Knowingly or unknowingly—and probably knowingly rather than unknowingly—they try to direct these programs according to a given policy rather than leave the corporation really independent, as some Liberal members were saying a while ago.

But, Mr. Chairman, over and above the C.B.C., there is today a more important problem in Canada. I refer to the economic situation prevailing in this country.

The Minister of Finance may tell us that Canada is prosperous because it has a surplus of $395 million but that is not a sign of prosperity; it means that taxes have increased and that more money has been taken from the taxpayers and the Canadian corporations.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) may tell us that unemployment is decreasing. Why? Because his statistics are inaccurate.

The Minister of Finance counts as jobless only those in receipt of unemployment insurance benefits, when there are others who do not work and are in receipt of social insurance; those people are also unemployed.

Unemployment did not decrease, it even increased. Statistics were falsified, altered.

The Minister of Finance speaks in turn about prosperity; maybe for the rich—

Mr. Knowles: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Grégoire: —but not for the population as a whole.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock?

[Text]

Progress reported.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask whoever is acting as house leader whether we will continue tomorrow with interim supply, or is the government bringing in some important legislation tomorrow for the consideration of the house?

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, I cannot think of anything more important than interim supply. We will continue with the discussion of interim supply tomorrow. When it is concluded we will take up redistribution, and the labour code.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

TELEGRAMS EXCHANGED BETWEEN PRESIDENT OF C.N.R. AND PRIME MINISTER

Montreal, October 26, 1964

Various representations have been passed on to me by the Acting Minister of Transport with reference to the timing of the implementation of Canadian National operational plans for running through Nakina and Wainright. As the record shows we have made offers to purchase residences of employees who may move their homes from Nakina and have also undertaken moving expenses involved. Moreover at all times we have expressed willingness to very implementation timing or postpone inaugurations subject only to completion within two years.

We fully believe our discussions with employees affected and their union representatives would have reached amicable understandings as has been the case elsewhere and that present situation is due largely to intervention by third parties which has led to misunderstandings and distortions of actual situation.

We now wish to advise that if government is willing to appoint an independent and impartial person to examine into reasonableness of our proposals and plans for implementation Canadian National will withdraw run-through plans which were effective Sunday October 25 and withhold further action until report is made. We must assume of course that report can be made within reasonable period and respectfully suggest that three months should be ample. Will you please let me know if government is willing to give this assistance.

DONALD GORDON

Ottawa, October 26, 1964

I very much welcome the suggestion in your telegram. On the understanding that you will withdraw run-through plans and withhold further action, the government is moving at once to appoint an independent and impartial person to undertake the examination you refer to. In view of the deterioration in the railway situation I am announcing your proposal and the government's action immediately.

L. B. PEARSON

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 27, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ADVISORY COMMITTEE TO STUDY CURTAILMENT OF ELECTION EXPENDITURES

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, several months ago the government announced its intention to establish a committee to study election expenditures. This is a complex problem which affects the very basis of our democratic system. Moreover, it has become particularly important these last few years due to the increase of communication media, especially since the advent of television. It is now essential to take appropriate action so as to restrict and control election expenditures.

[Text]

Before proposing such measures, however, the government has decided to ask a small group of men with practical experience and expert knowledge to make a study of the problem of rising election expenses and make recommendations in the light of our own Canadian requirements and of the experience in other countries. The advisory committee will "inquire into and report upon the desirable and practical measures to limit and control federal election expenditures". These terms of reference are general, and we expect that the committee will give them a broad interpretation.

The members of the committee will be Mr. François Nobert, Three Rivers, president; Hon. M. J. Coldwell, P.C., Ottawa; Mr. Gordon Dryden, Toronto; Mr. Arthur R. Smith, Calgary and Professor Norman M. Ward, Saskatoon.

We are very grateful to all these gentlemen for their willingness to serve on the committee. When their report is completed it will, of course, be made public. It is the first time in our country that a study of this kind has been undertaken and that a government has declared its intention to take effective steps to limit election expenditures. As a result of those steps we hope that our political life will be improved and will reflect more faithfully our democratic ideals.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, naturally I had no advance knowledge that this announcement would be made; therefore I shall not go into any detail, except to say the object is one that will commend itself not only to members of the house and defeated candidates but also to the public as a whole. Certainly the trend in recent years, resulting from television and radio and other necessary media of information, has brought about such an increase in constituency and election expenditures that it renders it very difficult for an average Canadian to take his part in public life.

When I mention expenditures I think of an election in Montreal, I believe it was in 1925 or 1926 in one of the constituencies in your city, sir, when the expenditures set out in the election returns by the two candidates involved were between $80,000 and $90,000 each. That was before the days of radio and television. All were legitimate expenditures; none the less the story is indicative of a great danger that democracy faces, namely that parliament shall be a place only for those who are able to supply the necessary funds. This is a particular detriment to young men and women desiring to take their part in public life.

So far as the personnel of the committee is concerned I commend the minister. I think all of them, both individually and collectively, are recognized by Canadians as a whole as having the necessary capacity and ability to face this difficult problem.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Secretary of State and the government for the step just announced. It seems to me this is the very heart of the whole question of democratic government. If we come to the day when elections can be bought and can be won by parties which have large campaign funds, then we will have lost a very vital element in our democracy. We all know that elections cost a great deal more than they used to, particularly if you have to pay for truth squads and pigeons—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: —and comic books. An investigation of the whole question of election expenses, of what measures can be taken to curtail them, and I hope also disclosure of the sources of campaign funds, would be an extremely useful thing if we are to develop democratic government in this country.

The government has taken the first step toward what we ought to have in Canada, a democratic system in which members will be elected to parliament on the basis of their merit and not on the basis of the gimmicks they can afford at election time.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, we in this party join in welcoming the announcement that has been made by the Secretary of State. We all know that for a considerable length of time efforts have been made to spur action in this regard. We only hope the deliberations and studies of the committee will be conducted with dispatch so that before long we will have concrete suggestions and recommendations placed before the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we listened carefully to the statement made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) to the effect that a committee will be formed to study the possibilities of decreasing election expenditures as much as possible.

If the work of this committee is directed with a view to allowing less wealthy candidates the opportunity to conduct an election campaign, then it will certainly be effective and will truly recognize the democratic principles which must prevail in a country like Canada.

Too often in the past we have deplored abuses during elections, and particularly during the last general election.

This study, Mr. Speaker, will not prevent the finance barons from supplying considerable amounts of money to the party in power and also to the official opposition party, which has always been done in the past. In many cases those large amounts have prevented able and serious persons from running, because they could not meet the extravagant expenditures of the major political parties of this country.

When some persons use, for instance, social legislation, family allowances, old age pensions, pensions for needy mothers, pensions for invalids, crippled and blind persons, under the pretext that those social security measures were granted to them by the party in power, then they lie deliberately and shamelessly to the people of Canada, and the same applies as concerns agricultural subsidies.

Parliament as a whole, and not just a particular party, is responsible for social security legislation.

Mr. Speaker, we accept the statement of the Secretary of State when he tells us that the chairman of the committee concerned is a well-known Liberal of the province of Quebec, and we hope that this study will enable those who wish to run for office to face up to the candidates who benefit from considerable amounts supplied by barons of finance.

An hon. Member: The sharks.

Mr. Caouette: The sharks.

[Text]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

TABLING OF REPLY TO REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING PENDING LEGISLATION

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Yesterday I promised the hon. member for Regina City that I would make available to this house a representative copy of replies I have sent to representations received from the trucking industry regarding Bill C-126. With the permission of the house I would now table a copy of a letter to the Manitoba trucking association dated October 23.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wonder whether that copy could be printed as an appendix to Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree that this letter should be made an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of letter above referred to, see Appendix.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INSTRUCTIONS TO RETURNING OFFICERS RESPECTING REVISION OF VOTERS LISTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I would direct a question to the Secretary of State and ask him whether there is any significance in the fact that the chief electoral officer has sent written instructions to the returning officers asking them to revise the lists by December 15, at which time there would be a distribution of election material.

Had the minister any knowledge of this in advance; and what is the interpretation, if any, to be placed on these unusual circumstances in view of the fact that redistribution has not been proceeded with?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): The chief electoral officer did not communicate with me before issuing these instructions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He must be a mind reader.

FINANCE

AUTOMOBILES AND PARTS—CANADIAN-U.S. NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING FREER TRADE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance with regard to an article which appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail by Hugh Munro entitled "Industry Gropes for Answers in Foggy Ottawa Plan on Freer Auto Trade". This article says negotiations are going on between the Canadian and United States governments regarding freer trade in cars and parts. It says that at the present time the industry is suffering from uncertainty because of its inability to get a clear statement from the government. I want to ask the minister whether it is his intention to make a clear statement in the house on this matter in the near future.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, certainly when the government has anything specific and clear that should be announced, it will be announced in the house. I suggest to my hon. friend that I think the article to which he referred is somewhat exaggerated, because the automobile industry in Canada has never been so prosperous and there has never been so much employment in that industry.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This has nothing to do, of course, with whether or not the industry is prosperous. I want to ask the minister specifically are the Canadian and United States governments negotiating to have freer access to the Canadian and United States markets for automobiles and parts? Does the minister intend to make any statement to the house regarding this matter? Third, does the minister intend at any time to introduce with such legislation, if it comes, some type of trade adjustment legislation that will protect both the workers and management against any dislocations which may take place?

Mr. Gordon: As has been stated in the house on other occasions, officials of the Canadian and U.S. governments have been discussing possible extenuations or changes in the present plan in case they are needed. This has been done at the official level and on an informal basis and does not represent negotiations, in any formal sense, between the Canadian and U.S. governments. If, as and when there are any changes in policy, they will of course be announced in the house.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. May I ask the minister whether at the same time any consideration will be given to introducing some type of trade adjustment legislation, which has been suggested a number of times by the hon. member for Danforth, to protect both labour and management against the adverse effects of the dislocation which might take place if such a policy were introduced?

Mr. Gordon: It seems to me there are a whole set of hypothetical conjectures in that question, Mr. Speaker. However, it is my understanding that this is a subject which the Minister of Labour has under consideration; in fact I think he is having a meeting on it this afternoon.

REMOVAL OF TAX ON MACHINERY OF PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Inasmuch as the cost of food producing machinery to United States producers is some 41 per cent lower than the cost of such machinery in Canada, thereby reflecting directly on the cost of living in Canada, would the minister consider removing the tax on production machinery?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I seem to have dealt with this question on several occasions, Mr. Speaker.

PENITENTIARIES

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL—EMPLOYMENT OF STAFF DURING CONSTRUCTION PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice. Will his department take appropriate steps to ensure that the hundreds of guards who are working at the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary will be given employment in the other institutions to be built?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Naturally, Mr. Speaker, no guard will lose his job following the steps we intend to take to improve our penal system.

One of the major problems remaining is to find enough guards who will accept to follow, in due time, the courses of the college set up for that purpose.

Mr. Caouette: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What steps will be taken to ensure that the economy of the town of St. Vincent de Paul, which is entirely dependant upon the penitentiary, will not be too affected? Will there be new buildings in St. Vincent de Paul to prevent chaos?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, the maximum security institution will be transferred from St. Vincent de Paul to Ste. Anne des Plaines. However, a unit in St. Vincent de Paul will look after the selection and distribution of inmates among the various institutions. Administration offices will also be established there and other buildings as well.

I should tell the hon. member who is concerned, and rightly so perhaps, about the future of people now working at St. Vincent de Paul that this aspect of the matter was considered during the study of the project and one of my main preoccupations will be to see that those changes in the system do not affect the town of St. Vincent de Paul.

Much as I would have liked to meet the mayor and the aldermen, I found it impossible to do so. Nevertheless, the hon. member can rest assured that here is one factor to which the department will give its utmost consideration.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice.

Could he report on the conditions he found yesterday during his visit and tell us more particularly if the conditions mentioned on the television program "This Hour Has Seven Days" are based on facts?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Danforth.

[Mr. Caouette.]

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister was about to answer my question.

Mr. Favreau: Of course, I had no intention, Mr. Speaker, of giving a detailed answer to that question apart from tabling a return. Therefore, perhaps my hon. friend could put his question on the order paper and I will endeavour to give as complete an answer as possible.

[Text]

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question for the minister. Is the minister in a position to confirm to the house that a decision has been made to set up a parliamentary committee to look into the whole matter of penal reform and penology in Canada and, if so, could he give the house the nature of the committee and its terms of reference?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I said that it was my intention to recommend to the government the setting up of two committees. I shall make my recommendation presently, and as soon as the cabinet has taken a definite stand on each of the two measures concerned I shall report to this house.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: During his visits, did the minister see prisoner Gaston Nicolas who was the subject of a telecast report Sunday night?

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Now that he has decided that St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary should be evacuated within the next two years and prisoners transferred to other institutions, will he give the necessary instructions to build a medium security penitentiary at St. Pie de Bagot, as had been decided by the Conservative administration, a decision revoked by his predecessor?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is this a question or a statement? I suggest the hon. member put this on the order paper.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I beg to differ with your ruling on this. I think it is a very urgent matter, and I am only taking the report and the statement of the minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Ricard: I know the Grits on the other side do not like to hear this, but the penitentiaries—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If each hon. member in turn were to ask about a penitentiary, if there was one, in his constituency we would never get on with the business before the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for recognizing me but the question I wanted to direct to the Minister of Justice had to do with the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary.

I could perhaps take this opportunity to ask him whether there is any basis to the rumour that he wants to relinquish his position as leader of the house?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, any decision to that effect will be announced before long.

[Text]

PROPOSED LOCATION OF NEW WOMEN'S PRISON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice. On October 13, while he was absent from the house on business, I asked his parliamentary secretary whether any decision had been arrived at by the government in respect of the women's prison now located at Kingston. I wanted to know whether a decision had been reached to leave it in its present location or whether a decision had been reached to move it elsewhere. Because of the tremendous interest in this matter, can the minister advise the house in this regard?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, no decision has been arrived at yet. The position of the matter will be discussed in the course of consideration of my estimates, but no decision has been arrived at yet.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the subject of the moving of this prison could be discussed by the parliamentary committee on prison reform which the minister is setting up.

Mr. Favreau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. One of the two committees I have in mind, if my suggestion is accepted, will be vested with the study of penal reform and our correctional system as a carryover from the conclusions and the point reached at the time of the Fauteux report.

Mr. Fairweather: In other words, no decision will be made to move the prison until the report of the committee has been received. Is that correct?

Mr. Favreau: I thought my hon. friend was referring to the matter of penal reform and correction generally and in principle. As far as the other matter is concerned, I am in a position to state that it is not my intention to recommend a firm decision with regard to the women's penitentiary until such time as the parliamentary committee to be set up has been seized of the question.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the more or less piecemeal pronouncements that are being made here, at Niagara Falls and at St. Vincent de Paul, I wonder whether the minister would be kind enough to package all these developments in one statement which he might make on motions at some appropriate time within the next day or two so we can have a look at the whole picture.

Mr. Favreau: I think the proper time to do this will be when my estimates come before the house—

Mr. Woolliams: When are you going to bring them down?

Mr. Favreau: —and also when either of the two committees to which I have just referred is constituted by the government.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell us when his estimates will be before the house?

Mr. Pearson: When are we going to get interim supply?

Mr. Favreau: I am not in a position to say when my estimates will come up, but they should surely come up in the relatively early future.

Mr. Howard: Will you consult with the government house leader about that?

AGRICULTURE

SEPARATE DEPARTMENT FOR EASTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question.

Would the right hon. Prime Minister tell us if the setting up of a department of agriculture for eastern Canada is still considered by the government as an urgent matter and if we can expect the introduction and adoption of a bill to that effect during the present session?

Mr. Rondeau: An election is coming, he will promise it.

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already dealt with this question two or three times.

NOTICE TO BANKS OF AMENDMENTS TO FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Since the house gave approval to amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act on September 15 and royal assent was given the following day, can the minister tell the house why the banks have not been informed of this and when we can expect them to be informed?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I will be glad to look into the matter, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

RECOMMENDATIONS TO PROVINCES RESPECTING SHORTAGE OF DOCTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and is based on a speech delivered yesterday on her behalf in which it was stated that her department is making a study of the report of the royal commission on health services and hopes to have recommendations to place before the provinces by next spring. I should like to ask the hon. lady whether the review includes a study of the imminent and critical doctor shortage in Canada, and can we expect recommendations to the provinces in this regard before or by next spring?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the first part of the question, yes; and with respect to the second part, yes.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PAYMENT FOR INTERVIEW WITH LEADER OF U.S. NAZI PARTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. L. Klein (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. Will the minister tell the house if George Lincoln Rockwell or the American nazi party received any payment from the C.B.C. or any of its departments for appearing on the program "This Hour Has Seven Days" televised on Sunday, October 25, 1964; and if so, the amount that was paid and to whom it was paid?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

REPORTED COMMUNIST INFILTRATION OF FRENCH NETWORK

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Does he intend to order the holding of an inquiry so as to check whether the C.B.C. is loaded with communist sympathizers, as was asserted by the secretary of the province of Quebec, Mr. Bona Arsenault?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, that question was asked yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition, and I answered it.

[Text]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—STRIKE OF HERRING FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister inform the house about the herring fishermen's strike on the west coast, and what he is doing to help solve the problem?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I received a telegram this morning advising me of the strike of herring fishermen on the west coast, but I wish to advise the hon. member that such problems do not come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Fisheries.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—REQUEST FOR EARLY CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Now that the new resolution concerning the Canada pension plan is, I am happy to note, on the notice paper and will be on the order paper tomorrow, and in view of the fact that under our new standing orders debate on a resolution preceding a money bill can take only one day, will the government arrange for the pension plan resolution to be debated at an early date so the bill can be introduced and we can thus have time to study this very important measure?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope it will be possible to debate this resolution under the new rules at a very early date.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REPORT ON REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, based on remarks that were delivered for him in Toronto a few days ago. Does the proposed new policy announced in those remarks regarding direct grants to new industries established for the production of new products mean the adoption of the recommendations contained in Professor Wilson's report prepared for the four Atlantic premiers; and will the government be announcing the adoption of the recommendations of this report, as requested by Premier Stanfield?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, study is still being given to Professor Wilson's report, and until such time as the study is complete I would hesitate to give any forecast of what might happen.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR FURTHER STATEMENT ON U.K. IMPORT SURCHARGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can he add anything today to the interpretation he gave yesterday of the likely effect of the new British 15 per cent trade levy, particularly as it may affect British Columbia pulp, sawn lumber and aluminum, with regard to which some concern is being felt?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not have very much to add to what I said yesterday, except to say that upon further examination the impact is probably going to be a little less than I indicated yesterday. As far as lumber is concerned, our understanding is that raw lumber itself is exempt from the charge, but we are not clear whether any other forms of lumber are exempt. It is our understanding, of course, that products such as plywood are subject to the charge.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REPORTED DELAY IN PAYMENT OF CLAIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Can he tell the house why the unemployment insurance commission is delaying up to eight weeks in paying cheques that are due to some of the unemployed at the moment?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend will give me some specific instances I will be glad to look into what seems to be an excessive delay.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF COURT OF CLAIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is in a position to tell the house when the legislation concerning the Indian claims commission will be brought before the house.

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, within a few days I will have a meeting with the officers of my department and then we will be in a position to determine changes in the legislation as all the representations from the Indians have been received and considered. We have now reached the stage of amendments to the bill, and the legislation will again be submitted to the house shortly.

[Text]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COLUMBIA RIVER—ABSENCE OF NATIONAL FLAGS AT SIGNING OF TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to my affable friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He looks a little serious today. I should like to ask him why the officials of his department considered it improper to drape the present official distinctive flag of Canada, the red ensign, and the flag of the United States of America as a backdrop to the ceremonial signing of the Columbia river treaty which took place in the railway committee room, which he signed and which the ambassador of the United States signed. Why was it considered improper to display the Canadian red ensign and the flag of the United States on this occasion?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): My hon. friend is somewhat late in posing this important question. I can only say that if there had been any deliberate effort to do what my hon. friend alleges, then of course it would have been a wrong course to follow. I am sure I have never heard of any such suggestion. It would have been appropriate, of course, for this to have been done particularly because of the accomplishment represented by the ratification of that treaty.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

VICTORIA, B.C.—EMPLOYMENT OF FEMALE LETTER CARRIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria, B.C.): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Is it a fact that a female letter carrier has recently been added to the staff of the Victoria post office, and is this indicative of a new employment policy in the Post Office Department?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether this is a pressing question, but it should be put on the order paper.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION—REQUEST FOR ISSUANCE OF COMMEMORATIVE STAMP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I have a question for the Postmaster General. I should like to ask him whether he has considered issuing a stamp to honour the meeting of the interparliamentary union which will be held in Canada in 1965.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Yes, serious consideration is being given to that suggestion. I may supplement that answer by saying that I think I have already written to the Speaker on the subject giving him an assurance, and that is almost as good as a promise.

[Mr. More (Regina City).]

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister, and I hope I can get the same kind of assurance from the Prime Minister as that just given by the Postmaster General. In view of press reports that the Prime Minister stated today that a study is to be made of the possibility of improving the pensions of retired civil servants, can the Prime Minister say if that study will include the possibility of legislation being introduced at this session?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): What I said to the delegation of superannuated civil servants, whom we were very glad to receive this morning and with whom we had a very interesting exchange of views, was that we would study their brief very carefully and very sympathetically, and I would be communicating with them within a fortnight.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Would such a decision be delayed until after the Canada pension plan has been dealt with, as the Prime Minister at one time indicated?

Mr. Pearson: It was the contention of the delegation that these two things were not related.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $740,710,974.77, being the aggregate of

(a) two twelfths of the total of all of the items to be voted in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, as reduced, except finance item 15, mines and technical surveys item 25, national research council item 10, and transport items 15 and 25 for which the proportion is one twelfth and atomic energy item 5, external affairs item 20, forestry item 25 and legislation item 20 for which no proportion is being released, $651,829,576.84;

(b) an additional two twelfths of the amount of public works item 70 (schedule A), of the said main estimates, $666,666.67;

(c) an additional one twelfth of the amount of fisheries items 5 and 10, legislation item 5, mines and technical surveys item 70, post office item 1 and public works item 40 (schedule B), of the said main estimates, $20,263,800.00;

(d) two twelfths of all of the items to be voted in the supplementary estimates (A), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except national defence item 56a, and loans, investments and advances items L12a, L17a and L37a for which no proportion is being released, $20,612,522.50;

(e) an additional two twelfths of the amount of transport item 103a (schedule C), of the said supplementary estimates (A), $872,966.67;

(f) nine twelfths of the total of the items to be voted in the supplementary estimates (B), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $46,215,108.75;

(g) two twelfths of the amount of transport item 103b (schedule D), of the said supplementary estimates (B), $250,333.34, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, before the house rose, last night, I said that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) likes to refer to the prosperity we are supposed to have in Canada at the present time. As late as this afternoon, he mentioned the prosperity of the automobile industry in Canada. It seems to have become typical of the Minister of Finance to talk about the present prosperity of the Canadian economy.

However, there is one thing he overlooks. He does not tell us for whom there is prosperity in Canada at the present time. There is probably prosperity for tax collectors and gatherers. Indeed, that field is in fact prosperous. Collections are much larger than before. Taxes have gone up and so, the coffers of the government are better lined than ever.

[Text]

The Chairman: Order. May I bring to the attention of members of the committee the fact that it is rather noisy. In fairness to hon. members who are trying to listen to the speech may I suggest that conversation should be carried on sotto voce.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I agree with you that it is a little noisy on the Liberal side but that is because the Liberals are disappointed at the announcement made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) to the effect that election expenditures would be cut down in the future. Since they never succeeded in getting elected without a healthy electoral fund, they are looking for new means of stealing elections now that their electoral fund has been cut.

In fact, they are holding a caucus to find how they could steal elections, now that they no longer have a fat electoral fund. And the "Prosper" hon. member for Mercier knows something about it, since his electoral fund has always beeen one of the most prosperous in Canada. If he had not had a healthy electoral fund in the past, I think he would have never been elected to this parliament.

Liberal members are now discussing how they could steal elections without an electoral fund.

In any event, we see that the truth hurts. It has offended some and it will be the subject of conversation among Liberals for some time, because they know that in future they will not be able to win an election so easily, if election expenditures are reduced, because they always had to pay large amounts to their organizers and to their poll representatives, while the Creditistes were able to do so by themselves—

The Chairman: The hon. member for Lapointe has been speaking for a few minutes on a subject which appears to have no relation whatever with the subject under consideration, and I would invite him to come back to our discussion.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that during a debate on interim supply it has always been customary for the chairman to leave the greatest freedom to the members. As a feeling of revolt and fear seems to prevail today among Liberal members, this surely constitutes a matter of current interest.

I was saying that prosperity, to which the Minister of Finance refers so often, is a tax collector's prosperity; it is a national revenue department prosperity.

But look at the people, look at the unemployed, the farmer, the labourer, the small businessman, the small manufacturer. They are not prosperous. Prosperity is found among tax collectors, not among the people.

The surplus of which the Minister of Finance boasts at the present time does not imply a period of prosperity but a period of tax increases.

I said yesterday that unemployment statistics indicate a momentary improvement only because they are inaccurate. Nowadays, for instance, only those who get unemployment insurance benefits are considered as unemployed. However, there are just as many Canadians who are no longer entitled to such benefits, but who are covered by social insurance. Those people are still unemployed, but they are not classified as such because they do not draw unemployment insurance benefits.

The situation is the same as in 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963. The lot of the big fellows is improving but that of the little man is getting worse all the time.

What is the government doing in the circumstances? What legislation has this parliament passed to remedy Canada's present economic conditions?

According to orders of the day, 78 government orders have been put on the order paper during this session.

If you refer to order paper No. 177 for Tuesday, October 27, 1964, you will see that 52 of those government orders have been adopted by parliament. Among those 52, 14 were simply referred to a committee; therefore, nothing was solved, since those questions were referred to a committee for study.

There remain 38 orders, five of which dealt with supply or the estimates. In other words, this meant a two day debate which was nothing more than chatter, followed by a non-confidence motion at the end of those two days.

There remain 33. Five were also adopted on motions of approval of special measures which did not benefit the Canadian people. Among those five motions respecting special measures, there was the motion approving the sending of peace troops to Cyprus, a motion amending the constitution, that is, an address sent to the British parliament requesting the right to amend our constitution respecting old age pensions. There was also an address to the Queen of England after her trip to Canada.

All these motions concerning special bills have contributed absolutely nothing to the improvement of the economic situation in Canada.

So, we are left with 28 orders on the order paper which have been adopted by parliament.

Out of that number there were eight bills ordinarily called supply bills, four for interim supply and four for the supplementary estimates. The Canadian people did not get anything out of those either.

So we now have 20 bills which have been adopted by parliament. Out of that number, six were private bills and of minor importance from which the Canadian people did not get anything either. I might mention, for instance, the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act, the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act—simply to increase the number of judges—the Ste Foy-St. Nicolas Bridge Act and the Roosevelt Campobello International Park Commission Act.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Six such bills of very limited, special and secondary interest have been passed, with the result that there still remain but 14 bills, passed by parliament, which might have been of public interest.

Of those 14, three were based on budget resolutions brought forward when the Minister of Finance introduced his last budget. The sole purpose of those three bills was to increase taxes or change custom duties. Here again, the Canadian people did not get anything.

There are only 11 bills left which were passed by parliament, including five which merely served to amend other acts. One of them amended the National Defence Act, another the National Housing Act. Improvements brought to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation could have been of benefit to the Canadian people if such advantages had not been completely nullified by the 11 per cent increase in the sales tax on building materials.

Of the six bills remaining, three concern agriculture and one the fishing zones. The only purpose of the three bills on agriculture was to run the Canadian people farther into debt: the first was to raise the amount of farm credit loans, the second to raise the amount of farm improvement loans and the third to extend credit to farm machinery syndicates.

Strangely enough, not one of those bills on agriculture is suitable to agriculture in eastern Canada.

There remains only two other bills passed by parliament this year; the first concerns a $10 family allowance to children aged 16 to 18 years, which will definitely not apply in the province of Quebec, since they are already getting it; the other, Bill No. C-111, concerns $1,000 loans to students, which will not apply to the province of Quebec either.

There you have the legislative program put through by this government to date. Result: nil.

This means, Mr. Chairman, that the surplus now showing on government books results from taxes and not from the legislative program of the government.

The government did not legislate in the right direction. It was aiming at balancing a budget which had shown a deficit for the past eight or ten years. It legislated in the interest of the big financial interests of the country, not in the interest of the people.

But when England needs help to maintain the pound at its current level, then, the matter is urgent. There is no need to pass legislation. The Bank of Canada, without even explaining the circumstances to parliament or to the Canadian people, makes a low interest loan to the Bank of England.

When the British economy had to be saved, legislation was not even passed. The Bank of Canada did it without any act, without even consulting parliament, and it lent money practically free of interest to the Bank of England.

Since such a thing is possible to save the economic interests of England, why does the Bank of Canada not act in the same way in order to help the Canadian citizen, the individual, the small businessman? How can the Bank of Canada do that in order to help England, but cannot do the same thing to help our municipalities, school boards and provincial governments?

When the defence of big financial interests of English or international capitalists is involved, then there is no need for legislation. The Bank of Canada takes direct action, as it did less than three weeks ago, by lending tens of millions of dollars to England. But when the economic interests of the Canadian people are involved, there is nothing doing. As suggested by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), no legislation is introduced or our time is spent on passing legislation only to push people into debt, instead of pulling them out of the debt situation in which they are at the present time.

The Bank of Canada can act in the absence of legislation in order to save England's economy. Why could it not act now to save the economy of the Canadian people? Emergency measures are needed to save the Canadian economy at this time.

An hon. Member: Demagogue.

Mr. Grégoire: Liberal members call that demagogy. One is asleep, the other one is reading his paper and there is another one who never did and never will understand anything. That is the contribution of certain Liberal members.

There was an emergency measure taken by the Bank of Canada to assist England and, in the same way, emergency measures must be applied in our country. Among those emergency measures, I should like to name four.

First, an emergency measure concerning every Canadian citizen. It involves three pieces of social security legislation to assist the individual where most needed.

The first step towards helping the individual would be to increase family allowances. The minister tells us that he has a surplus of $395 million. He should increase family allowances in order to give parents of large families, which number five, seven, eight and even ten children, the opportunity to send them to school, give them a decent and honourable life, and provide clothing, food and shelter for them during their studies. We should raise family allowances to $10, $18, or $20 per month in order that those children might attend school—not only primary school, but also secondary school or even university. It is the duty of the government to raise family allowances for all the young people of our country, so that everyone may take advantage of our educational facilities.

A second measure would involve old age pensions. Look at what is going on in the factories today. Come and see for yourselves what is taking place in the big factories in my riding, such as the Aluminum Company in Arvida and Price Brothers in Kénogami and Jonquière. You will see that the worker is retired at 65 years of age. While he is used to a decent salary, he must, at age 65 be retired on a pension that is not enough for him to live on.

As industry and factory workers retire at 65, it seems to me that the government should lower to 65 the age for old age pensions, instead of keeping it at 70. The monthly pension of $75 should be paid to all Canadian citizens 65 years of age, because nowadays factory workers are increasingly being retired at that age and are deprived of their salary, not at 70 but at 65 years of age.

The third point concerns social security. Today we notice that one of the greatest problems faced by the individual and the big family—I know that there is hospital insurance to pay for a public ward—comes from doctors' and anaesthetists' bills, and the price of medicine and operations. The government should pass legislation as quickly as possible with a view to organizing a system of health dividend, in the form of dividend coupons which would be sent to all family heads and to all single people over 21 years of age. Each head of a family and each single person could use these dividend coupons to subscribe to a medical care program with an insurance company of his choice, whether profit-making or not.

Private insurance companies in Canada are in a position to offer health insurance plans, and this would be an economy for the government. A greater number of Canadian citizens would be insured through this health dividend which would only be valid with a Canadian company.

Then the Canadian citizen would be in a position to pay his expenses not only for hospitalization in a public ward but also for a private room, when necessary, as well as the fees of physicians, surgeons, anaethetists and expenses for drugs, house calls and so on.

Those three measures, that is family allowances, old age pensions and health dividends would directly help the individual to live better under our present system.

The first point, the first piece of urgent legislation which should be enacted in Canada is a social security bill concerning family allowances, old age pensions at the age of 65 and a universal health dividend.

Second—

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I think I will be through in four minutes. I have been interrupted a few times at the beginning of my remarks.

The Chairman: Of course, the hon. member can continue if he has the unanimous consent of the committee. Does the hon. member for Lapointe have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Grégoire: I will need only three or four minutes to conclude my speech. In view of the delay you imposed upon me at the beginning and—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member has already had an additional minute, in any case, but I should like to ask the committee once again if the hon. member for Lapointe has its unanimous consent to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Permission granted.

Mr. Grégoire: Here then, Mr. Chairman, is the second measure, and I shall refer to it very briefly.

It would be to provide work for each and every Canadian citizen. There are too many unemployed at the present time in our country, whether or not they are included in the statistics. By carrying out a vast program of public works, improving our public buildings, our roads, our bridges, building schools and universities and also looking after urban renewal, we should be able, by means of such a vast program of public works, to provide jobs for all our Canadian citizens.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

The third emergency measure essential to Canada is to find the solution to the problem of agriculture in eastern Canada. At the present time, agriculture in eastern Canada is in complete stagnation. Its reactivation would require emergency measures, and to these we would be ready to contribute. By so doing, we could save the farmer in eastern Canada, and especially in the province of Quebec, from ruination and bankruptcy.

The fourth emergency measure would be to reduce taxes so that the Canadian government would not take away from the Canadian citizen the salary he earns, as is done through taxes at the present time.

Let the government bring forward those four urgent measures and then, we are convinced, prosperity will follow, not a false or artificial prosperity that benefits tax collectors but prosperity for each and every Canadian citizen. It is the responsibility of all members of this house to promote the prosperity of all Canadian citizens and not only that of tax collectors.

[Text]

Mr. Klein: I should like to discuss for the next few moments the program which was broadcast on Sunday last in the series "This Hour Has Seven Days". I should like to read a statement made by the narrator, John Drainie, prior to the interview with George Rockwell on this program. It reads as follows:

In the 48 hours since we announced that George Lincoln Rockwell, leader of the American nazi party would appear on this program tonight—

The Chairman: Order, please.

[Translation]

An hon. Member: What is the matter, Mr. Grégoire, you are not able to make Mr. Boulanger angry any more?

[Text]

The Chairman: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, would you kindly call to order the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger). He is interrupting his colleague; if he was the least bit polite, he would let him talk.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Klein) has the floor.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. We want to hear the gentleman who has the floor, but the hon. member for Mercier talks too loud and in such a way as to interrupt his colleague. If the hon.

member for Mercier wants the floor, why does he not rise?

Mr. Boulanger: The leader of tomorrow.

The Chairman: May I call the hon. members to order so that the hon. member for Cartier can pursue his remarks?

Mr. Grégoire: He will be able to carry on if the other one holds his tongue.

[Text]

Mr. Winkler: I suggest these children should leave the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Boulanger: Yes, let him continue his speech.

[Text]

Mr. Winkler: May I repeat my suggestion that these boys leave the chamber.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, you see the hon. member for Mercier is always talking.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Boulanger: He is really sick. At his age.

Mr. Grégoire: He is still continuing, Mr. Chairman.

[Text]

Mr. Klein: The statement continued—perhaps I had better begin again.

In the 48 hours since we announced that George Lincoln Rockwell, leader of the American nazi party, would appear on our program tonight the C.B.C. has received many phone calls demanding that he be withdrawn. The callers, some of them members of an organized group, argue that it is dangerous to let Mr. Rockwell advocate on t.v. the extermination of Jews since he might ignite the fires of anti-Semitism and enlist supporters to his cause. We disagree. We believe that Canadians will not take up arms against Jews, negroes or any other minority groups because Mr. Rockwell asks them to. We believe that the best way to deal with extremists is to expose them, not to pretend that they don't exist. We believe that Canadians, given adequate exposure to Mr. Rockwell, are competent to judge him for themselves.

These are the facts: there has been a significant growth in the power and influence of the far right in the past five years. The American nazi party claims a quarter of a million members; its work is well financed. Its message of hate is carried daily by a string of radio stations owned by a Texas millionnaire. Its literature is dispensed through secret postal boxes, and when one box is closed down another opens up.

Last week, in Texas, three men were arrested for violation of the federal firearms laws, for keeping a cache of weapons. They also had nazi flags and pictures of Hitler. The cache was discovered shortly before a visit to Texas by President Johnson.

In France, yesterday, Mrs. Collin Jordan, wife of the British nazi party leader, was charged in a Paris court with plotting against the French state. And in Canada Jews and others were still receiving hate literature although the government announced that post office box II—two or eleven—had been closed down.

Once before in another nation, now our ally, a man with views like Rockwell came to power unnoticed by forces that might have stopped him. By the time his nation was aware of the threat he posed, it was too late for he was already in firm control and could not be stopped.

We don't suggest that George Lincoln Rockwell is on his way to power, but we are convinced that to ignore his very real existence will not reduce the threat he presents and may in fact assist him.

What you will see now is not pleasant viewing.

He was speaking, of course, of the program:

Some of you will be frightened by it, all of you will be disturbed by it; but we believe that it must be shown; that only by exposing extremism in all its monstrosity can citizens be made aware of its dangers and society armed to deal with him.

This is the statement that preceded the television program in which Rockwell was pictured as the commander of the American nazi party, with a huge flag bearing the swastika, and bordered by some 20 or 30 stalwarts, strong-arm men. When we read this statement that was made before the program, in which Mr. Drainie said "We believe that the best way to deal with extremists is to expose them, not to pretend that they don't exist", I submit that the extremists he speaks of simply do not exist in Canada. Rockwell stated on the television program that he had only about 100 followers in Canada. The fact remains that the C.B.C. had to go to the United States with a crew, film and tape the program and import the problem into Canada. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that this was not an exposé, nor for the purpose of exposure; it was for the purpose of exploitation. They wanted to exploit this film, and not to expose problems that do not exist in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Klein: Then Mr. Drainie said:

These are the facts: there has been a significant growth in the power and influence of the far right in the past five years. The American nazi party claims a quarter of a million members; its work is well financed.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I submit again that it is all very well to make these statements, and on its face it is a very excellent statement; but you had to see the program—I do not know how many did see it—in order to really get a good impression of what this statement tried to convey. Then he said in the statement:

Once before in another nation, now our ally, a man with views like Rockwell came to power unnoticed by forces that might have stopped him.

He does not say what forces might have stopped him; and to say that Hitler came to power unnoticed is, in my view, completely contrary to the facts; because Hitler was known for many years prior to his ascension to power in 1933. Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, I may say that neither Hitler nor any other extremist or tyrant has ever been elected to power in any democracy. They have seized power in a democracy, but were never elected to power in a democracy. They were able to seize power through a systematic attack upon minority groups, with hate literature and so forth, with which they were able to destroy the nation by setting up one group in a population against another. In the last part of this statement Mr. Drainie says:

What you will see now is not pleasant viewing. Some of you will be frightened by it, all of you will be disturbed by it—

I state that the C.B.C. has acted contrary to the regulations respecting radio broadcasting. I read from part II of the Canada Gazette of February 12, 1964, page 178, where it states in article 12 (1) under the heading "Offensive promotional programs":

Where, in the opinion of a representative of the board, a promotional program broadcast by a station is of an offensive or objectionable nature, or is likely to create or contribute to any public disturbance or disorder, that representative may, by notice in writing, require that station to show cause, in the manner and within the time indicated in the notice, why the character of that program should not be modified.

If Rockwell had applied to the immigration authorities at any port of entry into Canada in an attempt to make a speech before the 100 followers he says he has in Canada, and had wanted to make that speech in some beer hall, as Hitler did in 1923, he would not have been permitted to enter Canada and he would have been, after the board of inquiry hearing, refused admission on the grounds of security.

Here we have the C.B.C. bringing Rockwell into every living room throughout the length and breadth of Canada completely in violation of the immigration regulations of this country. I believe, if my memory serves me aright, there is a standing order to every immigration officer across the country which advises that if Rockwell were to attempt to come to Canada through any port of entry he should be refused admission.

Rockwell vilified Dr. Martin Luther King. I will not dignify his statement by repeating what he called Dr. Martin Luther King, a man who has just received the Nobel peace prize. By permitting Rockwell to vilify Dr. Martin Luther King the C.B.C., I submit, violated another portion of the regulations. Here I am referring to the same issue, page 172, under the heading of broadcasting generally. Article 5 (1) says:

[Mr. Klein.]

No station or network operator shall broadcast—
(b) any abusive comment or abusive pictorial representation on any race, religion or creed—

I do not see how the C.B.C. can clear themselves of the implication of the violation of this article. If this television program was a preview of colour television I feel impelled to tell the C.B.C. that yellow is not becoming. Because we are now entering an era, if this kind of programming goes on, of yellow television; and may I suggest that moderation is still a virtue in this country.

One of the co-producers of the program is quoted in the Toronto Star for October 26, 1964 as having said this. The co-producer's name is Douglas Leiterman, who explained:

I'm all for sensationalism—but only if it is responsible sensationalism.

I submit that sensationalism is no substitute for responsibility. I say further that I do not believe many Canadians will agree with this statement to which I have referred. Perhaps the only one who would agree with it is Barry Goldwater, one of the candidates for the presidency of the United States. Therefore I submit, Mr. Chairman, that responsible people do not make irresponsible statements, and that irresponsible people should be held responsible for irresponsible statements. I submit that the C.B.C. has taken upon itself to do what the government does not want it to do by admitting into the living rooms of all Canadians this man Rockwell, who would be refused entry to Canada at any border point in the country; and in particular it has violated the provisions and regulations of the Broadcasting Act in the manner I have indicated.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say something about the C.B.C. along a somewhat different line than that followed by most of those who have spoken so far, whose remarks have been related chiefly to programming. In my view the complaints in this regard are the result of the organization of the C.B.C., the manner in which it carries on its operations and the lack of any real control over these operations by anybody.

As we all know, the C.B.C. is not accountable to the government or to any cabinet minister for its operations. Theoretically control can be exercised by parliament itself. In actual fact parliament has been very loath to exercise that control. From the practical point of view the only way parliament can exercise any control is, first, by withholding funds for the operation of the C.B.C., something we have not been prepared to do largely because there is insufficient information available as to the amount which should be withheld and the purpose for which it should be withheld.

The second way in which control can be exercised is by the appointment of a committee of the house to look into the affairs of the C.B.C. There is no standing committee of the house on broadcasting, and special committees have been set up at relatively infrequent intervals. As a result they have not served as an effective means for parliament to exercise control over the C.B.C.

I think a great improvement could be made in this regard if a standing committee on broadcasting were set up and divided into subcommittees, each of which could pursue in detail the operations of a particular phase of the C.B.C.'s activities and thus be able to arrive at an appraisal of what was going on, with the result that the committee would be in a position to make specific recommendations as to the improvements which should be made and as to the course which should be followed.

More important even than the fact that parliament has had no practical means of controlling the C.B.C.'s expenditures or its operations is that it has had no means even of ensuring that the views and recommendations of the committees it has appointed are implemented. In many cases the C.B.C. has paid no attention whatever to the views which have been expressed in these committees and in this chamber itself. A good example of how little attention the C.B.C. pays to the only body to which theoretically it is accountable is the fact that there is no one here in the official gallery from the C.B.C. today paying any attention to the debate which is now taking place; and I doubt whether there is anybody from the C.B.C. in any of the galleries. In other words, what they say is "We don't care what parliament says about us. We don't care what parliament wants. We are going to run our show in the way we want and parliament can go ahead and talk as much as it likes; it will not affect us."

We all have in our possession a very good report on the C.B.C. produced by the Glassco commission—or to give it the full title, the royal commission on government organization—which was issued in January, 1963. In this report on the C.B.C. the Glassco commission made, I think, more serious criticisms of the corporation than of any other crown corporation or department of government. However, remarkably little has been done by the C.B.C. to correct the deficiencies which are pointed out in this report. I should like to quote to some extent from this report in order to indicate those things which the Glassco commission found were wrong with the C.B.C. as a result of its study. In their conclusions on page 49 they have this to say:

> —there can be no doubt but that the corporation is in need of extensive reorganization to secure efficiency and economy in its operations.

But that reorganization has not taken place, although two years will soon have elapsed since the time the report was issued. A little farther on they say:

> —it is apparent that substantial savings can be effected through the application of tried and proven principles governing the devolution of authority and by establishing the accountability of management in its various functions.

These remarks, of course, are particularly applicable to the financial operations of the C.B.C. The Glassco commission also found, as indicated in various places in their report, that the organization of the C.B.C. was not effective either from the point of view of controlling expenditure or controlling programming. With regard to the financial aspect the commission made a number of comments and as found on page 27 of their report stated:

> Each year parliament is asked to vote the funds necessary to bridge the gap between corporate income and outgo. The scrutiny of these budgets is carried out by the staff of the treasury board, the outcome being usually an arbitrary reduction in the operating budget of three or four million dollars.

This is the important part.

> No direction is given the corporation concerning the control of either revenue or expenditure.

In other words, from the financial point of view they in effect do just what they want to do. Treasury board chops off a few million dollars from the proposed expenditures which they submit every year. When we were dealing with this matter in the public accounts committee I said to the president of the C.B.C.: I presume you do what I have reason to believe a considerable number of the departments of the government do; you submit a somewhat higher amount in your estimates than you expect you are going to get because you figure you will have three or four million dollars cut off. This statement was not denied by him and in my opinion that is undoubtedly the situation.

With regard to the financial affairs of the corporation, the commission went on to criticize the budgeting procedure and on page 47 and following of their report they have a number of things to say about this matter. They state:

—the budgetary procedures reflect an unsound approach. Budgets are based initially on broad estimates by head office, influenced by results of the preceding year, instead of being developed in the operating centres on the basis of firm program schedules. They are then submitted to the treasury board. Only after the total has been approved are target figures issued to the operating units as a basis for the preparation of detailed regional budgets. As a result, the final budgets are based on what it cost last year plus an estimate of additional requirements, with no searching analysis of last year's costs. They possess, therefore, little real value for purposes of planning as effective instruments of control.

In other words, what the C.B.C. does is to take it for granted that it is going to get an increased amount of money for operating purposes from parliament every year. It draws up a budget on that basis with the total being more than it thinks treasury board will allow. It submits a budget in that way and after it receives a lump sum it begins to decide how to divide up the pie. As a result there is no proper budgeting procedure and budgeting control.

Earlier this year, having been disturbed by the very serious criticisms of the C.B.C. in the Glassco commission report, I moved in the public accounts committee that the committee should look into the financial picture of the C.B.C. This was agreed to by the committee and was done. However, we were limited in our investigation to the consideration of the Auditor General's report for the previous year, 1962-63. The committee was not able to deal with programming or even with the present financial picture. While the work done by the committee was in my opinion very useful and disclosed a lot of interesting information, it in no way took the place of a regular broadcasting committee. In order to deal effectively with the C.B.C. from year to year there is no question in my mind that we need a standing committee on broadcasting, and a committee should be set up immediately to go into the affairs of the corporation forthwith. In that regard I would refer to the fifth report of the public accounts committee which dealt with the broadcasting corporation and contains this statement as found on page 962 of the proceedings of the committee:

[Mr. Harkness.]

The committee noted that the Auditor General raised questions concerning contents of report No. 19, volume 4 of the report of the royal commission on government organization—

Then it goes on to refer to this statement by the president of the corporation:

—the president stated that he did not agree with all the recommendations of the royal commission and explained that the royal commission had apparently failed to understand the nature of the problem.

This was the experience we had in the committee. With regard to practically every criticism and question raised about the operations of the corporation the president of the C.B.C. immediately fell back on the stock phrase, "We have a mandate from the Canadian people to provide a broadcasting service", or such statements as "I just do not agree with what the Glassco commission found" or "I do not agree with the criticisms that are being made". Never did we receive any really effective answer to our criticisms and there was an apparent determination on the part of the corporation to carry on in the same way as in the past. It did not matter what the Glassco commission had said or what the committee members said. In their report the public accounts committee went on to say:

The committee recommends that the Secretary of State table an official memorandum in the house presenting the corporation's views and its replies to each of the matters dealt with by the royal commission in its report No. 19, and that this be done before the estimates of the corporation are considered by the house.

I hope very much that the Secretary of State has secured such a memorandum from the president of the C.B.C. and that it will be available to us before the estimates are concluded. If not, we will have but another example of a recommendation of a committee of the house being set aside and no attention being paid to it. I think one of the things that the proceedings of the public accounts committee and their consideration of the C.B.C. did do was to show the need for a full inquiry into the capital expenditures planned by the corporation. It was made clear in the committee that facilities such as studios, offices and so on at Montreal and Toronto, which in the report we were considering were estimated to cost $83 million, were estimated just a short time later to cost $105 million. Some time before that the estimate had been $71 million or $72 million. So it is quite evident that the C.B.C. plans to expend a very large amount of money on capital investment. Whether this is necessary, whether the amount they are planning to spend is required or half that amount or some other proportion, we had no means of finding out. Before any money is voted to the C.B.C. for its big capital expansion program, this is one of the things which I think should be looked into thoroughly by the broadcasting committee of the house. The exchange which I had with Mr. Ouimet in regard to this matter is found on page 486 of the committee report. It is rather illuminating and is also a good example of the difficulty we will have in getting changes made in C.B.C. procedure. I was asking Mr. Ouimet about this $105 million loan, and then I went on to say:

As far as the money for these two big complexes is concerned, I know this report says, "subject to appropriation by parliament" but I note that in this year's estimates there is provision for a $14 million loan to the corporation for capital expenditures.

Mr. Ouimet: This is for the consolidation requirements and for other projects.

Mr. Harkness: Under the $105 million?

Mr. Ouimet: It is for all our projects. The government has decided that prior to approval by parliament—because it has to go to a vote—it would finance our requirements as loans instead of grants as it has done in the previous years.

Mr. Harkness: How do you propose to pay back these loans?

Mr. Ouimet: We propose to pay back these loans from our income which will in great part be from public funds and in a lesser part from commercial revenue.

Mr. Harkness: In other words, how are you going to pay the interest on the loan?

Mr. Ouimet: The same way.

Mr. Harkness: In other words you are going to get a loan from the dominion government to build these things, then you are going to get a grant from the dominion government with which to pay the interest, and then you are going to get a grant subsequently to pay off the capital.

Then, I said this:

Perhaps then I had better ask Mr. Henderson who, as Auditor General, audits all these accounts, what he thinks of this type of financing which quite frankly I must say, seems to me to be ridiculous—

Then, Mr. Henderson states:

—I thought it to be a rather remarkable exercise in financing.

Mr. Harkness: That is a euphonious way to put it.

This is just one example, Mr. Chairman, of the way in which the C.B.C. goes ahead to spend money, one way or another, without any real control being exercised and without the money even having been voted by parliament for that purpose. There are many other examples which one could cite to indicate the same sort of thing but I will not go into them at this time.

Yesterday during this discussion the hon. member for Halifax said that the responsibility for any errors made by C.B.C. rests with the members of the board of directors. They are the people who should be held responsible and if there are any attacks to be made they are the ones who should be attacked. In fact, the actual control that the board of directors is able to exercise is not very good. The Glassco commission dealt with this matter and made it quite clear that, in their view, the board of directors was able to exercise very little real control. On page 34 of the report we find these remarks in that regard:

The board reviews—

That is the board of the C.B.C.

—and approves most of the activities of the corporation but its role appears to consist largely of ratifying decisions already made—

In other words, it is merely a rubber stamp.

—rather than initiating corporate policy. As presently constituted, the board cannot be expected to act as more than an advisory committee with indeterminate terms of reference and this situation is the indirect cause of much of the criticism of the management of the corporation.

In other words, this is one of the great weaknesses, that the board of directors cannot exercise the control which parliament quite evidently felt it should exercise when the C.B.C. was set up. I think there is no doubt this is one of the things that needs to be done so far as the reorganization of the C.B.C. is concerned, to increase the powers of the board so the board will be in a much better position than it has been in the past to lay down policy and to see that that policy is carried out.

When we come to programs the line of control, even by headquarters of the C.B.C. itself, is fairly general as shown by the Glassco commission. We have this particular matter dealt with at page 37 of the report, and I quote:

If it be accepted that the primary business of the corporation is to produce and broadcast radio and television programs, the most striking feature of the headquarters organization is that fewer than 20 people are directly concerned with programming while over 800 are engaged in ancillary operations. It is therefore difficult to resist the conclusion that the headquarters organization is excessively preoccupied with secondary matters, and that the generally high standard of the national program service is largely attributable to the enterprise and initiative of the network and regional managements.

The present massive Ottawa headquarters results in part from an observation of the 1959 special committee on broadcasting which recommended that there should be an administrative reorganization, and the restoration of clear authority and responsibility to the central headquarters in Ottawa. Then the report continues:

> Action was accordingly taken by the corporation but there was no substantive reorganization; a whole new level of management was superimposed on the existing organization, but the effective management of broadcasting remained where it had always been—in Montreal and Toronto. The three general managers and the vice president—programming, were appointed with no clear demarcation of their respective areas of responsibility. Meeting together each week as a program council, they attempted to co-ordinate their policies, but have little or no real control over the planning and scheduling of network programs.

In other words, the people in the headquarters of the corporation itself do not know what is going on and have no means of controlling what is going on. I continue to quote from the report:

> In carrying out these changes the corporation failed to give assent to the recommendations made by both the Fowler commission and the 1959 Commons committee that a single executive be given clear authority over the broadcasting function.

Then, the report goes on to speak of this supervisory group of four vice presidents and a comptroller in these terms:

> No recognizable pattern or system is evident in the grouping of functions between these officers—

And farther down:

> One result of the present arrangements is that the ordinary business of corporation management is undertaken by a profusion of committees, which occupy much of the time of the staff at every level of management.

The result of this is that no real control is exercised over general programming so far as the headquarters end of things is concerned. For the most part, it is a waste of time.

A little farther down, the report reads:

> There is no effective central authority over broadcasting, and an overzealous control of secondary activities affords no compensating safeguards, while distracting much of the attention of senior officers from the principal business of the corporation.

This, I think, is perhaps the basic difficulty in the organization of the C.B.C. There is no real control over programming residing in the national headquarters of the corporation. That is delegated to the regional offices and it is doubtful how much control is exercised in them. In the committee we were given two or three examples showing the lack of control any place so far as programming and the money invested in it were concerned. One example was the film "Mr. Pearson."

[Mr. Harkness.]

Another was the Cuban scene film, both of which cost a considerable amount of money. Apparently nobody in authority knew what was being done or exercised control over the expenditure of funds.

We did not get the cost of the "Mr. Pearson" film because it was not made in the period we were dealing with, 1962-3, but the Cuban scene film cost some $40,000 odd, and of course it was not shown. Each year there is quite a list of films and programs known as write-offs. Apparently someone just decides to start making a film or a program, goes ahead and spends a considerable amount of money, and then a decision is made that the end product is not suitable for showing, and the costs are written off. Treasury board authority has to be secured for these write-offs, but in any event the money involved goes down the drain.

These are but a few of the criticisms of the C.B.C. which are to be found in the Glassco commission report. I do not have time to deal with the comments it made on the engineering and architectural staff, on the sales organization and many other matters. But there is another suggestion which it made that I think is of considerable importance. Among the commission's conclusions, as recorded at page 51 of its report, it says:

> No matter how strong or capable a board may be assembled—

This is on the basis that the powers of the board are going to be improved.

> —there will remain a need for policy direction from the government. This can normally be accomplished by informal means but, as a fundamental protection, the minister responsible should have the power of formal direction. Such a plan offers no threat whatever to the integrity of the corporation's program activities, for which the board of directors must assume full responsibility.

This is something which we have been loath to accept as part of the set-up of the C.B.C. because of fear of political interference with its operations, and particularly with its programming, but that is exactly the situation which exists in the United Kingdom so far as the B.B.C. is concerned, and the system appears to work quite well there. I see no reason why it should not work quite well here.

In any event the experience of recent years has indicated the fact that ultimate control of the C.B.C. must reside some place and must be capable of being exercised. It is possible it could be exercised by the means I have suggested, namely a standing committee on broadcasting, with subcommittees dealing with specific parts of the C.B.C.'s operations, and meeting frequently to deal with them. However, I believe this a case in which the government must take the ultimate responsibility as it does in all other federal government activities. The exemption of the C.B.C. from this responsibility has not been a happy experience and for that reason I urge that we try the system which is used with the B.B.C. in the United Kingdom. This is something which would require much consideration by the broadcasting committee and by the house itself. At least it is something that should be seriously considered.

Statements have been made alleging a desire to interfere with the daily operations, conduct and business of the C.B.C., but I do not believe any one in the chamber has that in mind in any way whatsoever, just as we do not consider that we should interfere with the day to day operations of Polymer—

Mr. Nicholson: Hear, hear.

Mr. Harkness: I note the Postmaster General claps at that. I understand why he does; but to continue, we do not want to interfere with the C.B.C., just as we do not want to interfere with the operations of Eldorado, atomic energy and the numerous other crown corporations. We do not interfere with their day to day activities, but in turn they have somebody to whom they must report and who must accept responsibility for them. In that respect I believe we should have a similar situation covering the C.B.C.

One of the things we require is that the general policy to be followed by the C.B.C. should be laid down by parliament, and methods such as I have suggested should be used to see that the policy laid down is followed. There is no use laying down a policy unless there are means of ensuring that it is implemented. That has been one of the difficulties with the C.B.C. to date because there has been no effective means of doing this.

I know that to lay down a general policy in the field of programming would be difficult, but I do not see any problem in parliament laying down certain general rules which must be followed, for example that no pornographic material be presented and this has been the cause of much of the complaints we have heard during the last ten days. As another example no treasonable, semi or quasi treasonable presentations should be made over the C.B.C. I do not think there would be undue difficulty in ensuring such general rules were applied, without interfering with the freedom of operation which all of us want to see continued for the C.B.C.

However, I do not believe there is a person in this chamber, and I doubt if there are many people in Canada who believe it is just, reasonable and proper that the taxpayers' money be used to give the best platform in the country to those who are attempting to break down the moral and political system under which we live, to people such as Bourgault with his separatist activities, Rockwell with his ideas for exterminating the negroes and jews, and that other fellow whose name I have forgotten, the convicted publisher of a pornographic magazine in the United States who appeared on a C.B.C. program a few months ago. It is doubtful if anybody in Canada thinks it reasonable that people of that sort should be given an opportunity to disseminate their ideas to the great majority of our people.

I know the remarks which I have made will be interpreted by some as an attempt to weaken and destroy the C.B.C. but my intention is just the reverse. I have made them for the same reason as I asked a lot of questions about the C.B.C. in the public accounts committee, namely with the idea of improving the C.B.C.'s operation, making it more effective, making it more truly representative of the people of Canada, and making it capable of performing a greater service for them.

Mr. Mackasey: I listened with considerable interest last night and again today to the discussion revolving around the C.B.C. and its programming. I am sure members of this committee would not deny me the privilege of expressing my opinions on another matter which is of even greater concern to me than are the affairs of the C.B.C. I am referring to the question of national unity in general and to separatism in the province of Quebec in particular.

Recent events in this country, including the visit of Her Majesty to the province of Quebec, have focused the spotlight of public attention on the question of national unity and the growth of separatism as never before in the history of this nation. In discussing this subject it is not my intention to dwell at any length on the alleged brutality of the Quebec city police, other than to say we all deplore the use of violence, particularly in the name of law and order, nor is it my intention to speak of the events which led to the feeling of fear which permeated the city of my birth in the weeks and days preceding the royal visit. I am more interested at the moment in putting forward my views about the growth of separatism in Quebec.

I cannot approach the subject of separatism with the detailed knowledge of a Mason Wade—

The Chairman: It is my duty to interrupt the hon. member at this point in order to remind him that in some way his comments as we consider this resolution on interim supply must be related to government administration. I appreciate that what he has said up to now is introductory in nature, but I urge him to keep in mind that his remarks must be related in some way to one or other of the items of supply covered by this resolution.

Mr. Mackasey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps by some stretch of the imagination we can consider the maintenance of law and order as being one of the functions of the government. A little later in my remarks I intend to deal briefly with matters concerning the C.B.C. Perhaps the committee would be patient for a while because, being an Irishman, it takes me a little while to get to the point.

As I said a few moments ago, I cannot discuss separatism with the detailed knowledge of a Mason Wade, nor can I lay claim to the title of a political scientist, nor have I majored in Canadian history. I can only discuss separatism and its effect on Quebec and on Canada, from the insight that 43 years of happy existence in Quebec has given me—43 years as part of a minority within a minority; 43 years in which I was never conscious until very recently that perhaps, as an Anglo-Saxon, I was not entirely welcome in the province of my birth.

I have mentioned before in this house, in glowing terms I might add, my feelings of respect and affection for the French Canadians with whom I have been privileged to live for so long. But I would be betraying that friendship and, indeed, insulting these same people if I did not stand here and say there have been many changes in Quebec. These changes, in many cases, are for the better—I have in mind the progress made in the fields of education and economics, for example. But one change I have not relished particularly has been the tendency of many of our political leaders to introduce racism into their political philosophies. Perhaps political instincts are such that it is not exactly wise for an English speaking person living in the province of Quebec to discuss separatism, particularly one who numbers French speaking Canadians among the majority of his electors. Then again, none of us was elected to this house to perpetuate his role as parliamentarian. All of us were elected to speak out on matters of importance affecting the unity of this country. It is in this light that I should like to discuss separatism and somewhere along the line tie these remarks in with the administrative problems of Canada.

There are misguided optimists, Mr. Chairman, who view the fact that bodily harm did not come to the Queen as an indication that separatism is limited to a few misguided youths, badly organized, a group that will disappear of its own volition. There are others who are very pessimistic because of the deplorable events that marked the Queen's visit to Quebec, people who see separatists behind every tree, people who feel that separatism is lurking around the corner, and who in their panic, judge every action, every word of the French speaking Canadian leaders with suspicion and mistrust. The truth, of course, Mr. Chairman, is that the separatist problem is much more serious than these optimists realize, but not nearly as insoluble as the prophets of doom would have us believe.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that it is in our best interests to analyse the make up of this movement, for only in understanding the motivation behind its leaders and its members will we be able to suggest the required solutions or decide upon a course of action. Perhaps the one fact that English speaking Canada does not understand, Mr. Chairman, is that the hard core of the separatist movement does contain many sincere people who fully believe in the separatist cause. Never mind whether they are misguided, according to our beliefs; what is more important is to realize that these people do not espouse violence. They do not necessarily hate the English. They simply believe that a new state of Quebec, independent of the rest of Canada, is the best solution for the frustrations and nationalistic feelings of many of their followers. They believe that a separate state will lead to unlimited opportunities for the expansion of their culture, to unlimited job opportunities, to a type of Utopia that seems very rational for those who are blinded by their devotion to a cause. But we must bear in mind, Mr. Chairman, that these people, misguided as they may be, are entitled to their opinion, entitled to their movement, precisely in the same way as we provide freedom of expression for those who espouse liberalism, conservatism, socialism or even communism.

But unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, this hard core of idealists has attracted, as indeed all such movements do attract, a lunatic fringe. These misfits are made up of neurotics, of people who would be failures in any society, including, I might add, a new state of Quebec, if the movement were successful. They include those who revel in the false security of publicity, who delight in the prominence that their acts of violence provides them. They see in the separatist movement, not an ideal, not a dream, but rather a means to a degree of personal recognition which normally would be denied them because of their insignificant contribution to Quebec society.

The movement is made even more dangerous by the very fact that it has invaded our universities, that our young people, at the very moment that they are being introduced to the philosophies of great men, of Locke, and Montesquieu, of Aristotle and St. Thomas Aquinas, are being exposed to morbid separatist tendencies. At the very time when we look to the new emphasis on education in Quebec, to produce the leaders of the future, our young men and young women are being filled with the inward-looking theories of pseudo-intellectuals, who by their message of hatred and misunderstanding are prostituting their role as educators, are poisoning whole generations of young French speaking Canadians. And finally, Mr. Chairman, add to this collection those political leaders, those leaders in the field of communications, of radio, of television, those in the journalistic world, who take advantage of the movement to bolster sagging reputations, to gain some shortsighted political advantage, to seek the power that to too many politicians is the prime goal of their very existence.

Perhaps I sound like the pessimists to whom I referred earlier in my remarks. I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that I felt precisely that way several months ago; I felt, then, that the apathy of Canadians outside this house to the question of separatism would in the end permit its growth to a point of no return. To generalize is very dangerous, but surely the efforts of some of our daily newspapers from outside Quebec have provided the very publicity upon which the lunatic fringe breeds. Not too long ago, Mr. Chairman, I bought a daily newspaper published in Ontario. Three quarters of the front page was devoted to an exclusive interview with a separatist who predicted violence to the Queen. He spoke of the movement of arms and all the elaborate preparations that were being made for the Queen's visit. Little wonder that a feeling of apprehension and fear spread out from Canada. But it was only on analysing that article very carefully that one was capable of noting that the so-called exclusive interview took place at two o'clock in the morning in a second-rate, east end Montreal night club, with some young punk, surrounded by his idiot friends, probably well reinforced with liquor. This was the person responsible for making disgusting utterances of violence to the Queen. This type of statement and the article did much to create the atmosphere of tension and fear that permeated Quebec city.

I cannot understand why the leaders of the C.B.C. and the leaders in the journalistic world insist, under the guise of reporting the news, upon providing the type of public exposure which the lunatic fringe in the separatist movement must have for survival. Why cannot the C.B.C. and, for that matter, other means of communication, declare a moratorium on the idiotic utterances of those who revel in the turmoil that their ridiculous statements obviously arouse in this country? One thing that must be emphasized is this. Fully 80 per cent or 85 per cent of the French speaking people of my province have so far rejected the separatist movement; have shown by their aloofness the high degree of responsibility and integrity for which the French speaking peoples of Quebec are justly famous.

Ten months ago, Mr. Chairman, I thought we would lose the battle, by default, for these people's minds. I realized, as no doubt many hon. members have realized, that the separatist movement had so far been confined to certain intellectuals, to young students, and to what I have already referred to as the lunatic fringe. I realized that the very acts of violence that were the responsibility of this lunatic fringe were in fact offsetting amongst the uncommitted the admitted emotional appeal of nationalism. Perhaps the extremist wing of the separatist movement did not realize, or perhaps did not care, that their acts of violence, their intemperate statements, were only impeding the message of the sincere, if misguided, nucleus who really believe in their movement and who hope to achieve it by democratic means.

In that period when I worried about this battle, Mr. Chairman, I longed for one intellectual—just one—from my province to stand up and tell those who advocated separatism that they have no right to confiscate the undeniable stake which French speaking Canadians have in this nation; that these separatists could not turn back the passage of time or obliterate history by physical violence, to remind us of the Plains of Abraham. We can thank the Lord, Mr. Chairman, that we cannot obliterate history; for what a tremendous price French Canada would be called upon to pay. Because the history of Canada, particularly in its early years, is dominated by the contribution of French Canadians, not only Cartier and Champlain, not only Frontenac and Maisonneuve, but also the efforts of those explorers who pushed on and discovered lands well beyond their own province, and indeed in the part of North America that is now known as the United States.

Do these separatists feel they have the right to wipe the slate clean of the contribution of men like Cartier and Laurier, of Lapointe and St. Laurent? Can these separatists really believe that French Canadians who died or fought in the two great wars have no stake in this country? Can they not realize that this nation is as much theirs as it is mine; that Quebeckers are just as important to Canada as are the citizens of Ontario or British Columbia? Can these misguided people ignore the dignified and wonderful performance of our Governor General both in peace and in war? Have the extremists the right to obliterate the contributions of Triquet and Brilland and Thibault? Surely, Mr. Chairman, the right of French speaking Canadians to their proper place in the nation's affairs must be clear not only to those separatists but also to those all too numerous persons who refuse to accept fully the French fact across Canada.

I had hoped for one voice or more to express these views; for one politician to talk back, to explode the myths of Anglo-Saxon domination in Quebec, to lay the blame for some of Quebec's lack of economic growth squarely on the shoulders of the inward-looking policies of Mr. Duplessis. But the pendulum of separatism seemed to stop and the voices of reason did seem to speak back. On May 14 seven French Canadian intellectuals of international repute published what is known as a Canadian manifesto. It is significant that they called it a Canadian manifesto and not a Quebec manifesto. They published this historical document in a magazine known as Cité Libre, a magazine that led the way in Quebec for the emergence of freedom of thought and freedom of expression that was denied the intellectuals of Quebec by Mr. Duplessis. This document exposed separatism for what it is, an escape from reality, a move that would do nothing for French Canada but would relegate it from a strong, respected voice in Canada to a voice drowned out by the sheer numbers of a completely English speaking continent.

The question of separatism must be faced, and faced immediately. Those intellectuals of Quebec who espouse separatism must be challenged by those intellectuals of Quebec who espouse federalism. Our politicians must speak up; our students must be exposed to the fallacy of the separatist movement.

Several people in this house, Mr. Chairman, are doing precisely that. The Secretary of State's speeches six months or a year ago were treated with scorn in my province. Today they are being reviewed and reviewed again by those who are seeking ways out of our problems. The assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce has shown willingness to do verbal battle in Quebec on the question of separatism. The hon. member for Three Rivers has obviously been making a contribution, as recent events testify. The views of moderation expressed by the hon. member for Villeneuve a few weeks ago did much to reassure the people of this country of the sincerity, maturity and integrity of our Quebec politicians. Recent articles in Le Devoir, Le Droit, Le Soleil and L'Action all indicate that those who believe in federalism have many strong and vigorous allies in Quebec, allies who could mean the difference between a nation united and reaching out toward its great destiny or a nation so divided by petty quarrels that it must pale into insignificance and eventually disappear.

While I rejoice at the appearance of cracks in the armour of separatism I cannot but wonder what will happen when the separatist movement virtually disappears, as it will, by the efforts of the French speaking Quebeckers who once again will show the realism that has marked their fight for survival as a cultural group. What will happen, Mr. Chairman, to the separatists outside Quebec when our French speaking Canadians turn once again to Ottawa; when they express a desire once again to participate in the nation's business? Will the doors be closed to them in industry outside Quebec? Will they be expected to forget their own language and every day affairs? Can they look for some relief from the oppressive legislation which in many provinces denies them the rights to which they are entitled under the British North America Act? I refer to rights in the field of education, and education in their own language; rights which I have always enjoyed as an Anglo-Saxon in the province of Quebec.

Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, the appearance of Rockwell on the C.B.C. was not such a bad thing after all, for it emphasized in a vivid, incisive manner that we have no room in this country for hatred and racism. This obviously sick individual showed us the results of racism and provided us with some food for thought in this country of ours.

Those political leaders in Canada who introduce racism in their arguments—and make no mistake there are many—are either intentionally or unintentionally creating an atmosphere which leads to the type of hatred personified by Rockwell. What is the difference between Rockwell's contempt for the negro and those misguided Canadians who contemptuously tell French speaking people to speak the white man's language? What is the difference between Rockwell's evil, disgusting remarks concerning those of the Jewish faith and the utterances of those who condemn the French speaking people because of their religious beliefs? On that latter point, let me say that I have in my possession many articles on this very subject which have been written in well accepted magazines which are circulated in this country.

Let me say this: Our country will stand out like a jewel among nations by reason of our two cultures. They are cultures which do not detract from each other but which, by their contrast, emphasize the greatness of each. This is the dream we should all be striving for, the good life so ably outlined in the Canadian manifesto, required reading, I suggest, for all of us who are vitally concerned with national unity.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I say that I am sure of the disappearance of the French speaking separatist. Can anyone in this house guarantee me the disappearance of the English speaking separatist?

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to begin by congratulating the hon. member for Verdun on his wise, reasoned, reasonable, very sound and very eloquent remarks which he has addressed to a profoundly important subject. In the manner of his delivery he demonstrated that he is indeed gifted, as are most Irish folk, with great felicity of phrase and it was a pleasure to hear him. I remember his leader, the Prime Minister, saying some months ago, when the hon. member for Three Rivers spoke eloquently in French on a similar subject, that the voice of moderation and reason must be heard in this house and in this country both in English and in French. I think today, Mr. Chairman, we have heard in English a most sound and valuable discourse on the subject to which we all must give our very best not only of attention but of effort.

If I were not a Scotsman, Mr. Chairman, I would probably carry on with the subject raised by the hon. member, who said he took a long time to get started. But being a Scot I am stubborn and I think I will continue with the subject I had in my mind before the hon. member made his speech. The question of the C.B.C., as with questions concerning all our crown corporations, is an extremely difficult one. On Friday the hon. member for Port Arthur discussed the question of control in connection with the railway. The hon. member for Calgary North in his very wise and valuable speech dealt with the same subject and the relationship between parliament and crown corporations. I know it is very easy for the Secretary of State or the Minister of National Revenue, almost as a conditioned response, to say they will transmit so and so's views to the management of the C.B.C. This has been the practice for a long time. Yet as representatives of the public we cannot divorce ourselves from our concern for this tremendously important medium.

In a very valuable document, the Massey royal commission on arts, letters and sciences, I find in the section dealing with broadcasting at page 276 of the report a most interesting elucidation of this very question.

> The state, having the right and the duty of issuing licences, must impose certain conditions on radio broadcasting. There are, it seems to us, two alternative views between which every country must choose. First, radio may be regarded primarily as a means of entertainment, a by-product of the advertising business. Such a view does not imply that it may not be used for education, for enlightenment and for the cultivation of taste; all these bring entertainment to many people. On the other hand, radio, as one of the most powerful means of education, may be regarded as a social influence too potent and too perilous to be ignored by the state which, in modern times, increasingly has assumed responsibility for the welfare of its citizens.

This welfare, of course, extends beyond the provision of food, clothing and shelter.

I am not going to join in any vendetta against the C.B.C. It is not my purpose in the few minutes allowed me to put that institution in the dock and fire verbal arrows at it. I would not want this country without the C.B.C. It is one of the things I miss most when I happen to be abroad. Nor would it be useful to me to indulge in discussing my tastes and preferences as to what should be heard over the C.B.C. or aired over C.B.C.

television. The old Latin expression, de gustibus non est disputandum, applies or, as they say in French, chacun à son goût. I suppose I have just demonstrated to you, Mr. Chairman, that I am a little worse in French than I am in Latin. But there is no accounting for human tastes, and we could all discuss at great length that which we like and that which we do not like.

What I am concerned about is that we seem to be in one of those phases where there is a widespread feeling of concern and anxiety about the C.B.C. among the public. This is not just something that has sprung up because of a program last Sunday night. We find all sorts of people and organizations taking aim at this time at the C.B.C. and it is not enough to reply that they are independent in management and independent in administration and so on.

I know it is a dangerous course to come even close to suggesting that points of view, however unpleasant, should be muffled, that some sort of censor should be appointed, because the question then is: How do you trust the censor and whom do you trust to become censor? Yet there is a very definite reason for people today asking, as hon. members have asked this afternoon, why we hear so often, so frequently, from the fanatics, the extremists, the oddballs.

We must be realistic and admit that sensationalism is seemingly the most valuable ingredient of reportorial journalism. There have been a lot of good speeches made today, a lot of good speeches were made yesterday and there will be a lot of good speeches made tomorrow, but the people of Canada will not hear too much about them. As a member of the house once said, if he made a good speech it might be reported on page 17 of some newspaper but if he stood on his head it would be flashed on the front page. This session has been so long, and even a young man like myself is so tired, that I would not dare try to do that because if I ever got inverted I might not get converted. But this is a fact that we must face.

It is unfortunate that there seems to be such a plethora of the off-colour, of the fantastic, of the "way-out". I thought today, as the Secretary of State was announcing the names of the members of his commission on election expenses, and a very illustrious group of names they were, of how much it would cost any of us as candidates to get the prime time that the leader of the American nazi party got over C.B.C. television.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

I would hope I will always be able to admit the need, indeed the desirability of airing stimulating ideas, even if they are disturbing to me and unpopular to the majority. In a country like ours we require a free market of ideas but in that market let there be some ample stalls for the stable and even the staid elements of our society. Let us hear more often the voices of those who cherish our contemporary political and social institutions. Let us give the platform more often to those who desire not to tear down but to shore up the bulwarks of the society to which we belong.

It is difficult to avoid the impression that mere appearance on a publicly owned television or radio network lends some status, sanction or authority to the views that are aired through those facilities. This of course is wrong, and if we have a moment to apply our rational processes we know it is wrong. In connection with the seemingly famous program of last Sunday night I commend the C.B.C. for their efforts to set the stage for that dreadful racist from the United States and to disavow in advance his evil utterances. However, while I have a high regard for the credibility of people I am afraid that not all viewers and listeners got the full import of the C.B.C.'s very proper disavowal and disengagement.

We only have to remember what happened a few years ago when Orson Welles' famous program, "The War of the Worlds", was aired over radio in the United States. Although not once but thrice it was clearly laid out that this was fantasy, that this was a drama, that it was not true, hundreds of people ran outside their homes fearful that missiles from outer space were going to crash upon them. This is one of the facts we must face.

Since we seem anxious to talk about this program—I might say this was the first time I had seen it—I think that while it is perhaps not a large matter the C.B.C. did commit an impropriety or an act of unneighbourliness in releasing a political film prepared for viewers in the United States which the leaders of the party in the United States who ordered the production of the film decided should not be seen. Our own Canada Elections Act, for instance, would prohibit any of us from using United States television facilities to beam in a program upon the voters in our own area. With a little careful thought I feel that the corporation would not have undertaken this sort of thing.

What do we do? Do we put the C.B.C. into shackles? Do we put it into receivership? Do we make it an agency of some government department? Do we put it under a minister? I say no, no, a thousand times no. As much as I think of the Secretary of State I would not think it would be a proper move to put the C.B.C. under his wing or under the wing of any minister of any government, because this is the very kind of control that we do not want and must not have in a free democracy. You cannot have a government controlling the media with the media becoming an emanation of any particular set of thoughts. We do not want thought control. Yet the canons of good taste, good judgment and administrative economy must remain operative. They must emanate from somewhere. They must be directed by someone.

Like the hon. member for Calgary North I am concerned about the apparent insensitivity of the C.B.C. president and management to the views of the public. No one would suggest that the C.B.C. must run for shelter at every expression of public opinion and that it try to prejudge popular reaction and go always to the side of the majority. If the C.B.C. had done this through the years, and had not done that which was unpopular and unprofitable we would have much poorer radio and television fare in this country today. I will never join those who would destroy the C.B.C. or who would turn the whole thing over to private enterprise. I have lived in lands where all radio and television were in the beneficent hands of private businessmen and more than ever I thought that the C.B.C. was a pretty good thing. I do not think I am being un-Conservative in this regard because I recall the whole thing began in the days of a very great Canadian prime minister, R. B. Bennett.

Mr. Macaluso: You would never know it now.

Mr. Macquarrie: Well, perhaps it is not as good as it was in the days of R. B. Bennett, but I do not have the time to go into value judgments of that kind. As we know the legislation certainly envisaged, as did that great prime minister, that it would be a vehicle for national education, for national unity. In this field it has grown to play an essential and valuable part in Canadian life. It is for this reason I am concerned and why I am taking a few minutes to enter this discussion.

The C.B.C. is such a valuable part of our life, so important to all of us in these days when there is such a plethora of idea coming in upon men's minds. It is extremely important that the C.B.C. not endanger its effectiveness or diminish its usefulness in the country. I am fearful that it might lose its effectiveness, both potentially and actually, if it goes too far in its disregard for the deep-seated anxieties of many Canadians. I was impressed by the group of women's organizations read out by the hon. member for Medicine Hat yesterday. This is not a group of narrow-minded Mrs. Grundys looking for notoriety. These are respectable, reputable and highly intelligent people. I share, in sorrow and in sympathy, the closing sentence in this article:

> How did the usually circumspect C.B.C. manage to alienate so many of those who should be its friends and supporters?

The C.B.C. does not have to win a popularity contest, but it cannot find itself in a position where the great bulk of Canadian people look upon it with distrust, suspicion and indeed with hostility. I believe that at this stage in its operation, and it is an important phase for it, the C.B.C. would benefit and Canada would benefit greatly from the establishment of such a committee as has been suggested by many hon. members. There are many known areas for administrative improvement. It is quite possible that many more would come to light. There are many suggestions which could be made. It is often alleged that there is a little too much centralization of thought in the C.B.C. We have very valuable public affairs programs with informed opinion from here and there. I do not belong to that great group of Canadians who believe that "hate Toronto" is a valuable motto. However, I do not see why so many of the informed people and ideas must emanate from Toronto. There are in other parts of the country people with ideas on contemporary problems from whom I should like to hear from time to time. In recent years I am happy that we have heard a great deal from informed, intelligent commentators in the province of Quebec whose major language is French. I hope that equal opportunity is given listeners on the French network to hear from the same type of people in the English speaking sector of our society.

There are things which we should look into. I was shocked yesterday to hear that a member of the Quebec cabinet suggested the C.B.C. was suffering from communist infiltration. The television reporters for the C.B.C. French network, I understand, have protested the statement by Hon. Bona Arsenault that the network was the scene of left wing communist infiltration. I feel that this is a very serious allegation. I hope it is not true. Until I am convinced otherwise, I believe it is not true. This is another proper field for a sane, calm, cool investigation, followed by suggestions from a parliamentary committee. I would urge the setting up of such a committee. No one wants an outbreak of anxiety, reaching crisis proportions, about the C.B.C. We do not want this to become yet another trouble in the country which is allowed to develop into massive proportions. Then, to be followed by serious adjustments and retreats. Let us deal with it now. There has been a widespread expression of opinion, so let a move be taken and have the matter looked at by a committee.

It will not help Canada, it will not help any of us, if the C.B.C. is degraded and its effectiveness diminished. Let us move now. I join in support of those who have suggested the efficacy of a committee, not a witch hunting committee but a committee which will seek ways of improving the effectiveness of the C.B.C. or, to use a favourite expression, improving the image of the C.B.C., which is so valuable to all of us. None of us wants to see it reach a point where it is going to lose its great value in our society.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I would have been quite happy to leave any remarks I had to make about the C.B.C. until the estimates of that department were before us. Apparently, however, we are going to have interim supply for some time, the subject is up for discussion, so I am getting in at this particular point. I want to make my remarks about the general criticisms which have been made, and then later I have some particular remarks concerning the selection of the C.B.C. site in Vancouver.

The hon. member for Calgary North, speaking earlier, referred to the relationship of the British Broadcasting Corporation and the British parliament. He thought that was a good type of relationship and perhaps one that we should have here. I quite agree. I would remind hon. members that in the United Kingdom parliament, members are not up every day during the question period sniping away at the B.B.C. or asking questions about the programs. There is a properly established committee which periodically reviews the complete operations of the British Broadcasting Corporation and I believe also of the independent television networks which have been set up in recent years. It seems to me that much of the discussion which we have had here in the last few months has been out of order. It would have been much better to have discussed these matters at the time the estimates were before us. We will have a further opportunity when the committee, headed by Mr. Fowler, reports in a few months time. His committee is making a very thorough investigation of the broadcasting industry. I imagine this report will be the subject of intensive study by parliament itself and by a parliamentary committee.

There are many aspects of the C.B.C. operation, Mr. Chairman, which properly should concern members of parliament. They should be concerned about the operational budget of the corporation and about the building budget. We have heard a great deal about the sum of money that is being spent on buildings in Toronto and Montreal. Perhaps this is too much. We should be concerned, I think, about the lack of decentralization of the operations of the C.B.C. and the tremendous concentrations in Toronto and Montreal. All of these things should be of concern at the proper time.

One thing we should not be concerned about, as was stated by some hon. members yesterday, notably the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan), is the daily programming of the corporation. To show how ridiculous we might get I want to read briefly from an editorial which appeared in the Peterborough Examiner last spring at the time of the "Open Grave" controversy.

> We can imagine what would happen if the C.B.C. was directly responsible to parliament, instead of through its president and a minister of the crown. The Commons would hardly have time for any other business, so eager are its members to be broadcasting experts. The result might well be live programs from the Commons itself: "Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of our television audience, I am the Conservative member from Brassneck and the Islands and am about to give the government a severe drubbing..." What fun the public could have switching channels and corrupting itself with American programs while this was going on!

The type of activity that is being carried on in this chamber concerning programming was well described last April in the television column of the Globe and Mail written by Dennis Braithwaite in which he said:

> A case could be made for a full investigation of broadcasting (its public and private segments and the B.B.G.—not just the C.B.C.) and the corporation itself has asked for such an inquiry. What is not needed is another witch hunt in which the C.B.C. is asked to account for every hell and damn spoken by its actors, every unpopular or even scandalous opinion expressed by its commentators and every inch of leg shown by its dancers.

Most of all, let's not have a big hullabaloo about bringing the C.B.C. under the control of parliament. It must be made clear somehow, to backbenchers and to crusaders like Mr. Hogan that the C.B.C., although responsible to parliament in the ultimate sense, has always been and must continue to be entirely free to run its business under its mandate.

I agree that there is some clarification needed concerning its mandate. Perhaps something along the lines of the B.B.C. is what we need, but I am quite prepared to wait until the Fowler committee makes its report before dealing with that theory.

I was quite disturbed yesterday by some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Northwest Territories. He named a number of programs which appeared in the "Quest" and "Festival" series, and used such terms as "filth," "homosexuality" and "pornography." In fact he used these terms fairly frequently. I do not know what kind of authority the hon. member is on filth, pornography, homosexuality and other subjects. I do not know who is an authority on these matters. However I suggest that the average member of parliament is probably not a very good drama critic, and I further suggest not many programs that appear on the C.B.C. deal with these controversial subjects.

I do not think anyone would dispute the fact that the broadcasting medium from time to time ought to deal with controversial subjects.

Mr. Winkler: Would the hon. member permit a question? Did the hon. member for Northwest Territories not quote these expressions from a newspaper report dealing with a ladies organization which was raising objections? I believe that is the case.

Mr. Prittie: The hon. member for Northwest Territories did quote that as put forth by the ladies organization, but he used his own terms during the course of his speech.

My point is that most of the time on the C.B.C. television network is taken up with pretty standard broadcasting fare, and there is very little in this controversial field. Most of it comes up in drama broadcasts, but I submit that throughout the ages dramatists have brought in controversial material in order both to entertain and make the public think. Shakespeare did it, and any dramatist worthy of the name has done the same thing. There is not much real controversial drama presented on radio and television and I do not believe we should complain about the small amount that is broadcast.

I have with me a copy of the C.B.C. Times for the week October 31-November 6, and I suggest it would be a good idea to look at the programs on the English language television network for several nights between the hours of seven thirty and eleven o'clock. On Saturday October 31 at 7.30 the program is "The Saint". At 8.30 there is "Hockey Night in Canada," 10.15 "Juliette," and at 10.45 "The Quebec Scene."

On Sunday night at seven o'clock there is the "Patty Duke Show," 7.30 "Flashback," eight o'clock "The Ed Sullivan Show," nine o'clock "Bonanza" and at ten "This Hour has Seven Days."

On Monday, November 2 at 7.30, there is "Don Messer's Jubilee," eight "Show of the Week," nine "Dangerman," and at ten "Other Voices," which is a sort of public affairs broadcast. As will be seen most of these are purely entertainment.

Tuesday, November 3, is not a very good evening because it is the night of the U.S. election, but the "Jack Benny show" is to be broadcast before the election results.

On Wednesday, November 4, at 7.30 there is to be "Provincial Affairs (tonight: the Liberal party)". I do not know what category this comes under, whether entertainment, information or drama. Then at 7.45 there is "Mr. Fix-it," eight "Red River Jamboree," 8.30 "Perry Mason," and at 9.30 a documentary on China called "The 700 Million." Again on this evening that is the only program of anything other than an entertaining value, including the one at 7.30.

These are fairly typical of evening programs on the English language television network, and I submit very little of the time is taken up with the kind of program that tends to be controversial, drama programs such as in "Quest" and "Festival." We should continue to have that type of program, and if people are shocked now and then, what of it? You cannot please all the people all the time.

One person who is apparently quite highly regarded by our television audiences is Mr. Lorne Greene, the star of the program "Bonanza." Years ago he lived in this country and got his start on the C.B.C. When he visited Montreal earlier this year he was interviewed, and I quote from the Montreal Star of March 31 last:

Lorne Greene looked back proudly yesterday on his alma mater, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and spoke of its courage in maintaining its programming independence, as in the case of the controversial "Open Grave" program last week. Then, referring to U.S. television, which has made him one of its stars, he said "this kind of courage is also becoming more frequent on the American networks, as we can see in such explosive programs as those on integration and other social and political conditions."

We have this type of exploratory, controversial program which arouses people and causes them to think. Mr. Greene suggests the Americans are now beginning to adopt the same idea, and I suggest this is something of which we should be proud.

Another Canadian actor who spends some of his time in the U.S., Mr. Lloyd Bochner, had this to say, and I quote from the Globe and Mail of March 13 last, at a time when he was back in Canada to do a program for the "Festival" series:

Few things they're doing in the United States can compare with the aspirations and standards of the Canadian t.v. scene these days. This role I'm doing now, for instance, is one of the toughest I can remember.

Mr. Bochner appears in many U.S. t.v. shows but they are usually of a very standard variety and he felt the "Festival" show was a challenge for him to develop a new acting role on the C.B.C.

My contention, Mr. Chairman, is that the amount of criticism we hear is not justified. Since yesterday's debate I conducted my own private poll among members of parliament. In fact I would like to know how much criticism is being directed to members from the public. I represent a constituency in the lower mainland of British Columbia. It is a riding which contains approximately 35,000 households, and since January 1, 1964 I have had one complaint about the C.B.C. Someone complained that a wrestling show on Saturday afternoon was cancelled. I checked with two other members from the lower mainland or greater Vancouver area, and neither had received complaints. I checked with three members from the Toronto area, the second most populous area in the country, and one admitted to having one complaint. I also checked with three members from the Montreal area and one of them admitted to having one complaint. I suggest that the widespread public criticism which is supposed to exist does not in fact exist and that members of parliament are not hearing from the Canadian people in any large numbers about the quality of the programs.

For my part I believe there is one other criticism which should be made in the field of telecasting in Canada. This is a subject to which I believe the Fowler committee could well direct its attention. I refer to the difference between some of the promises made by certain private telecasters when they were applying for licences from the board of broadcast governors and their performance subsequently. In the October issue of the ACTRA Newsmagazine, the publication of the association of Canadian television and radio artists, appears the proceedings at the hearing of the board of broadcast governors when Mr. Bushnell was making an application for a television licence for CJOH-TV here in Ottawa. We are given a verbatim report of what he promised, side by side with comments upon what has been done. There were great promises made concerning the amount of money which would be spent on Canadian talent and Canadian shows. These promises have simply not materialized. In fact, ACTRA says, since the station began broadcasting in 1961, members of the association have earned $180 for performing. Nevertheless, thousands of dollars were promised for Canadian talent. As I say, I believe this subject is worthy of investigation, bearing in mind the fact that the C.B.C. does spend very large sums of money providing a living for entertainers and artists of many kinds and making it possible for them to work full time in their occupations, supplementing their income from other sources. Without work for the C.B.C. it would not be possible for them to do this.

Mr. Moreau: If you got Doug Fisher in the organization it would probably cost more than it does now.

Mr. Prittie: Well, he is quite a performer.

Mention has been made of the controversial program in the series "This Hour has Seven Days". I saw the second half of the program during which the American nazi Rockwell was interviewed. The hon. member for Cartier took strong exception to this broadcast and I realize his feelings on this subject may well be different from mine. I did not have the impression, as he apparently did, that it was simply sensationalism. The hon. member mentioned the fact that Rockwell stated there were about 100 members of his group in Canada. But I suggest that anti-Semitism does exist in this country, latently in some cases and openly in others, and that this is a proper subject for inquiry. There are other Americans with whom I do not agree, people for whom in fact I have no liking. But I would not object to their being interviewed on Canadian television. Most Canadians are interested in the United States political scene. There is one group known as the Black Muslims who do not like the white race generally. It could well be that members of this organization would be interviewed in the United States even if they were not allowed to cross the border into Canada.

I think the interviewers on this particular program did a good job of exposing this man. I can understand there are people who feel very sensitive about this and I realize their reactions could be very different from my own. But I do think this is the type of controversial, searching program the production needs and I imagine that if the producers do their work properly there will be a great many more complaints and a great deal more controversy in the future.

There is another aspect of this whole question of the continual sniping at C.B.C. programs, and this disturbs me. Even if the minister responsible does not actively interfere with programming—and he should not do so; indeed, I do not think he will—and even if the board of broadcast governors does not move against the corporation, I fear there will be a tendency on the part of management itself to listen to the large number of criticisms which have been made here and to begin to exercise some self-censorship. I know this is what the critics want, but I believe the corporation would be much the poorer if it were to take action along this line.

I wish now to deal with a matter of more local interest relating to the C.B.C. I am glad to see that the Postmaster General who himself comes from the city of Vancouver is present in the house because this has to do particularly with the C.B.C. in Vancouver. As you are aware, Mr. Chairman, there has been a controversy during the past few months between the Vancouver city council on the one hand and the corporation and the federal government on the other. The R.C.A.F. has given up certain facilities at Kitsilano park, Vancouver, and the parks board would like the whole site to revert completely to parkland. The C.B.C. wanted to take a small part of that site as a location for its studios during the next few years. At the present time the C.B.C. studios in Vancouver are scattered all over the downtown area. Radio facilities are in one place, in the hotel Vancouver—apparently they have to leave these premises—while the television studio, located in a former garage, is an absolute disgrace. It is amazing to me they can turn out good productions with such a poor physical plant. Since the opportunity arose for the corporation to go to the Kitsilano site there has been a long discussion among the city council, the parks board, the federal authorities and the C.B.C. concerning this move. The latest proposal is that the C.B.C. should go to downtown Vancouver. The city council is presenting a proposal for the redevelopment of the downtown area and it wants federal assistance to buy land, clear the land and redevelop it. The council wants the C.B.C. to spend a considerable amount of money putting up a fine headquarters in downtown Vancouver. I think I have the solution to this problem, Mr. Chairman, and I hope the Postmaster General will listen carefully.

In July the reeve of Burnaby sent a wire to the C.B.C. with the authority of the council to the effect that land would be available to the corporation at a nominal cost—I presume that means $1 a year—if the corporation would locate its British Columbia headquarters in Burnaby. The officers of the corporation have not, to my knowledge, gone into this subject thoroughly. Nevertheless I think the offer should be taken seriously. If a site in Burnaby were decided upon, the Kitsilano site would be entirely available for parkland and I presume the Vancouver parks board would be happy. There is some merit, possibly, in the corporation locating in downtown Vancouver, but it seems to me such a move would cost a great deal of money and, of course, one of the main criticisms we hear in this house is directed toward the amount of money the C.B.C. spends. The Burnaby site is one which is very close to the freeway from Vancouver to New Westminster. It is only a few minutes from downtown Vancouver and there are two other arterial highways close by. I might add that an important private television station is located in Burnaby somewhat further out than the proposed site for the C.B.C. This is a central location, geographically, in the population complex on the lower mainland. I suggest that the corporation could save a great deal of money and at the same time have all the space they want. I would urge particularly that this suggestion be considered seriously and not rejected out of hand, because it will cost the corporation and the government a great deal more to locate in the city of Vancouver and, as I said, they could have much more space at much less cost in this very central area of Burnaby.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, while the various parties are, on the one hand, criticizing the C.B.C. and, on the other, national unity, I think I shall mainly deal with the farm question on the discussion of these estimates for a total of $740,710,974.

Very important things have been said about the C.B.C. and the national unity but, I believe, Mr. Chairman, that neither the problems of the C.B.C. nor those concerning national unity can be settled at this stage of the discussion.

Errors have been made, of course, within the C.B.C. Some provincial representatives, at least in one province, have charged that the C.B.C. was infested by socialists. There are no doubt crypto-socialists and even crypto-communists within the C.B.C., but to conclude that the whole administration is so infested is going a little bit too far. In the case of the C.B.C., I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the officials of that crown corporation, which is costing the Canadian people between $75 and $80 million in deficit a year, should be invited to appear before a standing or other committee of the House of Commons. As stated yesterday by my colleague from Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), every year officials or the president of the C.N.R., officials or the president of Air Canada do appear before a committee, but the C.B.C. does not, although this corporation is probably costing the Canadian taxpayers more money than any other crown corporation.

Mr. Choquette: They go before the public accounts committee.

Mr. Caouette: They do, but we cannot question them.

So, Mr. Chairman, the C.B.C. controls television and radio broadcasting in Canada. For instance, some private stations are affiliated with the C.B.C. respecting certain programs during certain hours of the day. Last week I realized that in my district station CKRN-TV, which is affiliated with C.B.C., could no longer grant us the period of time which we had enjoyed over the last ten years, that is, between 7 and 8 p.m., during a 15 minute period, because the C.B.C. has taken over all of this period; it had decided to take over the whole time from eight o'clock until the end of the evening.

In my opinion, more latitude should be granted private stations, especially when authorization is asked from the C.B.C. to change the time of the programs and broadcast them another day of the week; but the C.B.C. refuses this request, and it is difficult for us to obtain a broadcast period through the fault of the C.B.C. I think this is a lack and an injustice toward private enterprise, toward the freedom of these individuals or organizations that require time over television.

The C.B.C. should consider those requests and those requirements from organizations and other sources. That is the only point I wanted to make this afternoon concerning the C.B.C.

At the beginning of the afternoon, the hon. member for Lapointe mentioned the economic depression which prevails not only in one part of the country, but in several districts, especially those which we call underdeveloped regions. Instead of calling them underdeveloped regions, I would call them undeveloped regions which offer all kinds of possibilities for agricultural and industrial development.

We have reasons to be annoyed when we ask for expenditures by the government, when we ask the government to take a definite stand or when we suggest it should have more modern and more efficient directors to restore our Canadian economy and when we hear members, as I heard one this afternoon, call the hon. member for Lapointe a demagogue because the latter said that it was possible, through the Bank of Canada—without our knowing the amount or the rate of interest—to make loans with a view to stabilizing the pound sterling.

Mind you, Mr. Chairman, we are not against that if it can help the Bank of England or the British people. We have no objection to that but we do object to the government's refusal to do the same thing for the Canadian people and we cannot accept the word "demagogue" used this afternoon by a Liberal member. We cannot and we will never accept that.

As far as agriculture is concerned, the hon. member who spoke of demagogy this afternoon would do much better if he went around his riding to see what is happening.

Mr. Chairman, we are now being asked to approve supply in the amount of $740 million for two months. Considering that agriculture is in a state of stagnation, it is probably $1,740 million we would need.

And as I said before, farming is the basis and even the whole social and economic structure of Canada. If our agriculture is revived, the effects will be felt everywhere, but if it is in a state of stagnation, it will also be felt all over the country.

As far as western Canada is concerned, I wish to congratulate the western members for their steady and continuous effort for years, to achieve a modicum of comfort for the western farmer. Those members have looked after their farmers, they genuinely looked after them, while in eastern Canada our representatives would not even give a thought to agriculture. This is the reason for the discrimination we notice between the eastern and western farmer.

Mind you, Mr. Chairman, we do not want to deprive in the least the western farmers. As a matter of fact, I would be the first to vote for further improvements to promote western agriculture. But it is about time that a government, Liberal or Conservative, carry out the promises made in eastern Canada, in the province of Quebec, in New Brunswick, in short, in all the maritime provinces and tackle the problems facing the farmers today, in the province of Quebec and in the other eastern provinces.

The condition of the eastern farmer regardless of the county is quite appalling, and we are not the only one to complain about the plight of the farmers.

Recently, as reported in Le Soleil of October 23, 1964, Hon. Paul Comtois, addressed the members of the Catholic farmers' union and the press report said:

The lieutenant governor of the province of Quebec, His Excellency Paul Comtois, stated last night that the unbalance and the unevenness of the farmers' purchasing power compared to that of people working in industry and various services is now obviously clashing with the common weal.

Hon. Paul Comtois is a former farmer. He operated a farm in the riding of Nicolet-Yamaska—I think he still owns it—and when he discusses agriculture, he undoubtedly knows what he is talking about.

According to him, the solution to the complex problem of increasing the farmer's income is certainly not an easy one, but it can be found, it is accessible.

Mr. Chairman, if we draw up a comparison, year by year since 1950, between the income of farmers throughout Canada and that of Quebec farmers, we note a vast difference. In fact, the answer given by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) to a question posed by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Perron) clearly indicates this. We note a decrease in the farmers' income in the province of Quebec, from year to year, since 1950.

In 1950, in Canada, the farmers' income reached $1,219,750,000, as against $211 million in Quebec.

In 1951, in Canada, the farmers' income had increased by $700 million; in Quebec, there was a small increase of $50 million.

In 1952, the income of farmers was maintained in the whole of Canada but it decreased by $20 million in the province of Quebec.

In 1953, this decrease was $3 million in the province of Quebec.

In 1954, the decrease was $22 million in the province of Quebec; in 1955, a $228 million income; a decrease of $35 million in 1956, as compared to 1955. We see a decrease of income for the farmer from one year to another.

In 1962, the income was $179,668,000 as compared with $211 million in 1950. This is how the Quebec farmers are treated, while in 1950, in the whole of Canada, production was $1,200 million and in 1962, $1,630 million, that is an increase of $240 million over a period of 12 years.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that all members of the house will understand that the requests we make in the house on behalf of farmers, of farm organizations and of the family farm are justified.

The battle we have been fighting for three years on behalf of Quebec farmers is not the first to be staged. We have already had—

Mr. Choquette: We have fought too in our party.

Mr. Caouette: The hon. member for Lotbinière tells me he has fought too. I admit it, but we had a representative in the riding of Bellechasse who no longer sits in the house and who was a member of the Ralliement. He fought strongly to obtain feed grain for eastern farmers.

We are reading today the requests put forward by the Catholic farmers' union during their 40th annual convention.

They are as follows:

The Catholic farmers' union has therefore advocated the following policy as far as feed grain is concerned:

1. That the union should protest vigorously with the federal government, following its inaction in this field, at a time when agriculture in eastern Canada is going through a critical stage; and

2. That the federal government should take the necessary steps so as to:

(a) Set up, throughout the country, the same farm cost price as regards feed grain;

We are not asking something for ourseleves but for the whole country, something that will assist agriculture as a whole.

(b) Within the context of equalization of the cost price of feed grain in this country, to abolish immediately the free trade of feed grain in the west and thereafter entrust to the Canadian wheat board all the feed grain trade in the prairie provinces;

(c) To create a feed grain board for eastern Canada with the following powers:

1. The application of an assistance policy for transportation;

This is a burden for eastern farmers.

2. The application of an assistance policy for storage;

Such a policy is now carried out by the Liberal government as it was by the previous Conservative government for the storage of grain in western Canada.

3. The storage of feed grain in public elevators in eastern Canada at the proper time and in sufficient quantities;

4. Importation of feed grain in a period of scarcity; and

5. The purchase, sale and distribution of feed grain in eastern Canada.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

[Text]

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned for dinner, I was referring to a request from an organization recognized throughout Canada, the Catholic farmers' union. I was talking about section 5 of the request they presented at their 40th annual convention which was held recently.

Section 5 refers to the purchase, sale and distribution of feed grain in eastern Canada. I was then saying that Mr. Bernard Dumont, the former member of parliament for Bellechasse, in 1962, on behalf of the farmers and the Catholic farmers' union, made a strong plea in favour of the distribution, sale and purchase of feed grain in eastern Canada.

The union states the following:

The policy of assistance to the transportation of feed grain should become statutory when the proposed board is created.

This matter of transportation was modified this year in order to help the farmers. We were very happy about this. However, together with the Catholic farmers' union, and in order to help it, we are requesting that the policy of assistance to transportation—by rail as well as by truck—be made statutory.

The particular problem which is raised in the province of Quebec and draws wide publicity is that of the dairy industry. On September 10, 1964, the premier of the province of Quebec, Mr. Jean Lesage, made the following statement at the banquet of l'Ordre du mérite agricole—he did not make the same statement when 10,000 farmers marched on the Quebec legislative buildings—as reported by the daily newspaper Le Soleil in its September 10 issue:

—that one of the main characteristics of farm production in Quebec consists in its being too largely centred on dairy products.

Even if we should try to diversify or widen the field of farm activities in the province, the lack of outlets would prevent farmers from looking for sources other than that from which they derive their best income, and that is dairy production.

But when the premier of Quebec states that the dairy industry occupies too big a place in the province and that we should concern ourselves with something else, he is not quite of the same opinion as the president of the national council of the dairy industry, Mr. J. M. Hartwick, who said, at the annual meeting held at Murray Bay last September 9, and I quote:

[Text]

"No acute shortage of dairy products is imminent", he said, after warning that "this year in Canada we will not produce sufficient milk to meet the domestic and export demands for dairy products."

[Translation]

This statement was made in Murray Bay on September 9. This means evidently that the Quebec premier, even if he stated that in 1960 he did not have complete data on Quebec agricultural problems, is certainly ill-advised by his experts in 1964, when he suggests that dairy production is too high and that farmers should change or diversify their production to make it more profitable.

Mr. Chairman, dairy production in the province of Quebec decreased, in 1963, by 4 per cent. Yet, in such small provinces as Prince Edward Island, the same industry increased by 12 per cent; in Nova Scotia it remained stationary; in New Brunswick, 105 per cent, which represents an increase of 5 per cent as compared with 1962; in Ontario there has been a 3 per cent increase; in Manitoba, a decrease of 3 per cent; in Saskatchewan, an increase of 5 per cent; in Alberta, an increase of 8 per cent; in British Columbia, one of 3 per cent; and in Quebec, a decrease of 4 per cent. And now the premier of Quebec province tells us that the dairy industry is producing too much in that province.

Mr. Chairman, agriculture is very important to our province, as it is to all eastern Canada. We have statistical data which, from time to time, are handed to us by the various departments. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) and the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), now responsible for ARDA, often refer to the French development program, what planning is done in France with a view to helping the farmers, etc.

In his speech to the Montreal economics association, on September 22 on the necessity of economic planning, the minister made a point of speaking about this French planning, using as an example its 15 years of experience. This is what the French minister of agriculture, Mr. Edgar Pisani, had to say in the October issue of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture:

We have chosen to encourage the widespread development of family farms—

In some places where farming is not profitable, farmers are paid to stay on the farm as a public service. We follow that policy, just like other countries. France does so and England also tries to do it. Other countries of the world try to keep farmers on the farm.

There are no community farms as suggested by the Minister of Forestry under his ARDA program, but rather family farms where farmers may enjoy the social security they are entitled to, like any other class of society. Thus, the farmer can live with his family as a human being can and must do in a country as great as Canada.

Yesterday I noticed that the hon. member for Lapointe mentioned in his remarks our capability to assist the countries of the world with the potential and the actual assets available to us in our own country. We simply ask for the Canadian people the same treatment as we provide for some countries of the world.

Some will object by saying: where are we going to get the money? For 30 years at least we have been expounding in this house the means of getting the money, of getting the new credit, that is, at the Bank of Canada by granting or giving an adjusted discount to the Canadian consumers, paid to the farmer or the producer in order to enable the consumers to further promote production. We have also asked, so that the farmers may market their products, for an increase in the consumers' purchasing power. We have talked about a national dividend distributed to each and everyone.

The Liberals and the Conservatives find that funny. However, during elections they make promises to farmers, but once the elections are over, they forget about the consumers they praised so much at election time.

Mr. Rondeau: They forget.

An hon. Member: What are your promises?

Mr. Caouette: We promise to give justice instead of injustice.

Mr. Chairman, when we ask that finance be put at the service of the Canadian citizen, we hear immediately people talking loudly about demagogy, crying shame and the utopia of Social Credit without knowing its elementary principles. Those people do not even understand the application of the present system and they are dazzled by the light that hits them in the dark.

For many years Social Credit has offered solutions to the problems of agriculture, to the problems of workers, to all the problems facing the human person at all social levels.

Instead of laughing it off and turning it into ridicule, let us try to understand it. Let us see the situation as it is for the Canadian farmers and for all social classes.

There are unemployed people in all spheres of economic activity in our country, and here again we stumble on the same question, and on the same replies from government ministers: We have no money, we have no money, we have no money.

It is amusing, Mr. Chairman, to note how much faster the government acts when it is required to send Canadian soldiers to Cyprus or to take part in some extraterritorial war. Then, the monetary question has no importance and we find all the money needed to equip a whole army and completely eliminate unemployment in Canada. Why in peacetime, when everything has to be done over, roads, development of natural resources, etc., is everything so complicated? Why does not the Minister of Forestry, who is now sitting in front of us, suggest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) of this government to put at the disposal of his department the money needed to look after the development of our country's forest and other resources?

The whole matter boils down to the monetary question and the minister, instead of tackling that monetary question, would rather diversify the tasks and try all other solutions, try to enlist farmers in ARDA, try to enlist farmers in some other programs, try to enlist all classes of society in another field, try to nationalize medicine, nationalize this and that.

But the monetary system is not touched, that sacrosanct system is held in respect since confederation. And as soon as someone rises to protest against the abuses of that system, people try to ridicule him, instead of trying to understand what we are claiming, not for us, but for all the people and the citizens who make up Canada and who have built it.

Mr. Chairman, I see that my hon. friends of the Liberal party opposite think that is funny. But the question is always: Where could we get the money? Where did we get the money during the war? To whom do we owe the national debt of $23 billion on which we are paying over $1 billion in interest alone this year.

Let a Liberal member or a minister get to his feet to tell me how, with the present system, when the government borrows $100 million, it will be able to repay $200 million in 20 years, when only the chartered banks in Canada have the right to create the credit of the nation. Who can prove to me that the present monetary system can contribute to the development of our natural resources? The purpose of economics is not to provide employment but to satisfy all Canadians.

So let us fight against what prevents us from attaining this objective, in this case, the question of finance. Let us give to Canadians what belongs to them, Canada.

[Text]

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a few moments of the time of the committee to comment on a situation that has arisen in the Department of Transport. I am exceptionally pleased that the Acting Minister of Transport is here tonight; whether or not he is listening does not matter. I have complained in the past of the practice of granting monopoly franchises to the ground transport services at national airports such as Toronto, Dorval, Winnipeg and Vancouver and now the city of Ottawa.

On Friday last I received from the government a return airplane ticket to Toronto on the 4.55 flight. I want to show you some of the niceties that these monopolistic organizations can enforce upon individuals, and I wish to protest. The plane on which I was booked was to go at 4.55 p.m. I showed up at the Chateau Laurier hotel at 4.02, just 53 minutes before the plane leaves. I have always been told by T.C.A. to allow 50 minutes from the Chateau Laurier to the airport. When I arrived at the transport depot at 4.03 I was told the bus had already left for the airport and I was late. The time I was told was 4.07. The starter produced his wrist watch to show me, 4.07. I pointed to the peace tower and asked him if he paid any attention to the time on the peace tower clock. He said, "We go by my wrist watch, my friend." I said, "It is 4.03 and I am told by T.C.A. I am to allow 50 minutes for the transfer service."

At that moment a businessman came out of the Chateau Laurier and asked where the bus to the airport was. He was told it had gone. So I said to the starter of the Red Line that has this monopoly contract, "Here's another man that is here before 4.05 and your bus service has gone." I said to the businessman, "If you and I grab a cab together we will be able to split the $4 between us which the Red Line is trying to make out of each of us." The starter informed me that it would not cost $4 for a taxi, and I said, "I have paid it in past years."

I got into the cab with the businessman. The peace tower clock was reading 4.05 and just then another member of the house, not from this side, came swinging along with his bags. He also thought 50 minutes was all he needed to allow. I got out of the cab; I was now shilling for the Red Line. I said to this other member of parliament, "They are running this service on the wrist watch of the Red Line starter. The peace tower clock means nothing to them. Would you care to climb in with me?"

The second member of parliament got in and the three of us, two members of parliament and the businessman, rode out to the airport. The charge was $3.65. As the starter said, it would not be $4. However, normally when I am forced to ride single, I pay the taxi operator $4—35 cents for himself and $3.65 for the monopoly.

These monopoly contracts should be thrown open for public tender if they are going to continue monopoly practice, but I do not believe in the monopoly practice at all. This service should be open to every taxicab service in the city of Ottawa, and this applies to other communities across Canada.

Many of you may realize I have strong feelings on the liquor question. I am sorry that last week, in walking home up Bank street, for the first time in some years I saw a customer being ejected from a Bank street hotel. It was not any too pleasant a sight and a free-for-all fight developed on the corner. It was a little upsetting and the language was pretty vile.

I began to look for a policeman, as I often see these police cars going up and down the street, and as we always say, when you look for one there isn't one. However, in a couple of moments a police car came by. I hailed the chap and I said to him, "It is pretty rough at that ladies' entrance to the hotel one block down the street. One chap"—I described him —"is the centre of the group, I think you should break it up." To my surprise the policeman whistled away faster than a Canada goose, and I thought to myself that this was a pretty funny thing for the Ottawa police department. Suddenly I realized, however, that no doubt this man was radioing for extra help. In 60 seconds there were four police cars there, the one with the officer I had spoken to, and three more police cars with two men in each, so that seven policemen stepped out at that hotel and the fight was broken up in a hurry.

I refer to this for one reason. The police cannot get in touch with each other any more quickly with the radio in their cars than can the taxicabs in Toronto, and all this balderdash shot about, that you have to give a monopoly contract to a cab firm to have 24 hour service to and from an airport is meaningless in this day and age when taxicabs can communicate with one another as speedily as police cars. If there is a cab shortage at an airport they can summon cabs through the radio-telephone system faster than you can say "Jack Robinson," which is an old time expression.

I do not believe in these monopoly practices in the letting of contracts. They should advertise if they are going to continue the monopoly, but there should be no monopoly. I would like to ask the Minister of Transport to see that the clocks in the parliament buildings are set to keep in step with the wrist watch of the starter of the Red Line taxi cab company so that we will get to the airport at $1.10 instead of having to get a taxicab to the airport at $4.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I will only speak a moment or two on the estimates before us.

Of course, I intend to be brief as far as the C.B.C. is concerned. I think it is superfluous at this time to discuss that matter, since a committee was set up for that purpose and will report to the house. When it does, it will then be in order to appoint a committee of the house to make the necessary recommendations.

I will not speak on monetary theories either, Mr. Chairman, because the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) is quite familiar with such matters. As a matter of fact, during the last election he was saying that the money supply was $8 billion, while in fact it was $15 billion; he was making an error of $7 billion, a small mistake, for there are only 1,000 million in a billion.

In any case, Mr. Chairman, I will deal today with a controversial matter. A commission was set up by the federal government and another one by the province of Quebec, to consider expenditures of the federal government. I think that one of the difficulties which the experts are up against, is that they are not aware of the way government expenditures are distributed among the provinces.

I have noted, since I became a member of parliament, that one of the flaws of this government—

Mr. Grégoire: There are many.

Mr. Chrétien: —this system—flaws which have been there for a long time—is that purchases are not centralized in the federal government.

If there were a sort of department of purchasing or supplies, we would have a better idea of the way in which government purchases are distributed among the provinces.

For instance, there exists in the United States a defence secretariat, a system which determines exactly, each year, how much money was spent in each state. Such information may be readily obtained there, whereas it is very difficult to get here.

That is the reason why, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the government to centralize the purchases of all the departments in a single department, which would enable all the members to know if the distribution is done adequately throughout the country and in each of the provinces. Such centralization would also serve as a tool in the hands of the government to help some areas which sometimes suffer from economic stagnation.

If we were able to determine quickly what expenses are necessary for government purchases, we could, in some instances, depart from ordinary practices and direct the purchases so as to stimulate the economy of certain provinces.

These are the only remarks I wanted to make. I believe this would help clarify the situation and improve the present state of union in Canada.

[Text]

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to many of the speakers in this debate on interim supply, particularly those who have dealt with the operation and policy of the C.B.C. Despite the opinions expressed by the hon. member from Halifax (Mr. Regan) and some of his colleagues, who have felt that members of the opposition are wasting the time of parliament by bringing to the attention of the committee many of the complaints which we have received from our constituents about the operation of the C.B.C., I feel it is my duty and responsibility to bring some of these complaints to the attention of the government.

We have heard a fairly good discussion about some of the programming and financing of the corporation, and about the lack of extension of its services. This is one of the subjects I would like to mention briefly. I may say I am pleased to see there is not complete unanimity on the government side in relation to the remarks of the hon. member for Halifax. I was interested to listen to some of the criticism of the corporation which has been expressed by the hon. member for Cartier and on other occasions by the hon. member for York-Humber. No doubt we shall be hearing from those members on this subject in the future. It is primarily with regard to the extension of the services of the corporation that I should like to speak this evening.

It may surprise some people to hear that many of the complaints I have received are not solely with regard to the extension of the television service but are with regard to the extension of the C.B.C. radio service. In these days when television has become the accepted thing, some may not know that there are places not in the far north but in northern parts of provinces which do not yet have adequate C.B.C. radio coverage. The corporation knows this. I have spoken to its officials on many occasions and they have said for years that places such as Thompson and Lynn Lake in northern Manitoba do not as yet have adequate coverage in the field of C.B.C. radio. There are many more complaints with regard to television. This is simply because there are far more people in the area which I represent who do not have the advantage of television service than there are those who do not have the advantage of radio service. I might say at this juncture in regard to C.B.C. radio coverage in this area that there are two local stations affiliated with the C.B.C. and that at Churchill there is one C.B.C. station. We have had fairly good co-operation to some extent regarding requests for such things as a land line service to bring in such events as the world series this fall, and this has been greatly appreciated by the people. However it has been a long, hard battle to get these things, and for the station at Thompson this was the first opportunity to bring to the people of that area live broadcasts of a world series. A land line service is the only way in which the people can receive such broadcasts because the coverage of other stations carrying these broadcasts is not available.

[Mr. Simpson.]

At the present time parliament is being asked to grant a sum of money in the neighbourhood of $88 million to enable the corporation to carry on for the current year. One thing I feel is surprising is the fact that in these estimates there is no breakdown whatsoever of this figure. It is just a figure of $88 million and there is very limited explanation of how this huge sum of money is to be spent. Parliament never receives any accounting for this expenditure until the following year when the corporation puts out its annual report. We on this side of the house have repeatedly asked that the government convene a committee on broadcasting so that parliament might examine fully the affairs of the corporation. However we have not yet reached success. The government has not seen fit to set up such a committee, but its spokesmen have said that an advisory committee on broadcasting has been set up and this will be reporting some time in 1965. This may be so; but at the present time, long before this advisory committee is due to report, we are being asked to approve expenditures of $88 million. To me, this does not appear to be good business. Some of the financial commitments of the C.B.C. should certainly be open for inspection by members of this house. This subject was covered last night fairly well by my hon. friend from Edmonton West and again today by the hon. member for Calgary North who went into many aspects of C.B.C. finance. I shall have something to say about that matter in a moment or two.

One thing that interests me is the devious and conflicting way in which answers have been given to questions asked by members of the opposition in relation to the C.B.C. and its operations as well as to the setting up of a committee. The Secretary of State has said on many occasions that the C.B.C. must be entirely free from government interference. The hon. member for Halifax said the same last night. Both these hon. gentlemen said the government had no intention of interfering with the operations of the corporation. However, on August 6 I directed a question to the Secretary of State based on reports which had come out to the effect that the C.B.C. was considering the expenditure of many millions of dollars for the consolidation of facilities in Toronto and Montreal, as opposed to the extension of the service to areas which are not now served. At that time I asked the Secretary of State whether the government would not take the necessary steps to set up a special committee on broadcasting so that parliament could be given an opportunity to study this very serious situation. It is interesting to note the answer given by the Secretary of State at that time. He said he had not seen the report referred to but all he could say was that there had been no government decision. This indicated to me that either the government intended to make the decision whether this money would be spent, or they had not yet done so. And as I said, at other times when we bring our complaints to the attention of the Secretary of State and of the government they advise us that they are in no position to interfere in any way with the affairs of the corporation. Then again, on October 6, I directed a question to the minister asking him whether the government would direct the corporation to prepare an up to date report, an up to date study, in relation to the extension of services. At that time the question was taken as notice. On October 21 I asked whether the government had a reply to give me and I was told by the Secretary of State that a decision with regard to the extension of service or alternate services would not be made until the advisory committee on broadcasting had presented its report, which it was hoped would be early in 1965.

So we get back to this question of a committee set up by the government as opposed to a committee consisting of members of this house to look into all aspects of broadcasting. I know there is a great deal of merit attached to the setting up of an advisory committee. That committee will, no doubt, come up with a report which will be of great value to parliament. However, we would like to have been able to look into some of these aspects of the corporation's affairs before being obliged to approve these large expenditures. As things stand, the areas which are not now served can more or less sit back and accept the position that nothing whatsoever is to be done with respect to providing services until this advisory committee on broadcasting reports to the government or to the corporation or to whomever they are going to report.

Looking at the annual report of the corporation for the year 1963-64, first of all I would like to point out some of the purposes of the corporation as set out in the Broadcasting Act. One of them, as acknowledged by the corporation itself, is:

> To be a complete service, covering in fair proportion the whole range of programming; bringing things of interest, value, and entertainment to people of all tastes, ages, and interests, and not concentrating on some aspects of broadcasting to the exclusion of others.
>
> To link all parts of the country in two ways: (1) through the inclusion of a wide variety of national and common interests in its program services; (2) by using its physical resources to bring the national program service to as many Canadians as finances allow. Whether Canadians live in remote or heavily populated areas the national system should serve them as adequately and equitably as possible.

These sound like very interesting and commendable words until we look into the question of finances, as mentioned earlier today by the hon. member for Calgary North. However, let us look at what the corporation has to do, in regard to their views on the extension of services. We find here, under "Coverage policy":

> At the present time the corporation's planning and radio takes into account all areas of Canada with a population of more than 500 which could be served by one transmitter. In television because of higher costs, the minimum population figure is 2,000. All areas which, on the basis of the latest available d.b.s. figures, have this many people are entered on the corporation's planning lists. At this present time there are approximately 122 communities on the radio planning list and about 60 on the television list. The possibility of bringing service to each of these areas and the costs involved have been given preliminary study and priorities established.

Here is another reason why we have wanted the government to set up this committee on broadcasting—so we could in some way find out from the corporation just what this priority list looks like; because I am sure that members of this house whose areas are not serviced adequately by television and radio would be very interested, and the people they represent would be particularly interested, in having some idea of the priorities of the corporation. In their annual report the corporation goes on to say:

> The system of priorities outlined above has been followed by C.B.C. for some years and is in line with the proportion of the over-all budget which it is felt can be devoted to this aspect of development. On this basis it is clear that the needs of these communities cannot all be met at once without seriously neglecting other phases of the national service. In fact, at the present rate, the communities mentioned above will not all be served for perhaps ten years.

This is not what we were led to believe when the committee on broadcasting met formerly. I believe the last time was in 1961. It sat for at least three years in succession. At that time we were more or less led to believe—at least, I was—that it would not be too long before 98 per cent of the population of Canada was covered by corporation service. However, we learn now, three years later, that perhaps these communities will not be serviced for at least ten years. But the interesting thing which I would like to mention at this time—and again I read from the annual report—is this:

> The capital cost of extending service to these communities over a 10-year period starting in 1964 would probably be upwards of $15 million. Strong suggestions from many quarters, however, have caused C.B.C. to study the cost and time factors in other possible methods of meeting the problem.
>
> It has been suggested that this program be accelerated as a matter of national importance. If, for example, parliament were so to decide, and to provide the financing in the form of a special grant, it would probably be possible to shorten the time factor to a few years, with the co-operation of equipment companies. The aspects of this are being explored.

Again we come to another question which I and many others in this house have asked the C.B.C. on other occasions; namely why don't they ask for this money? They ask for $80 million, $85 million, $88 million every year, but they are the ones to decide how this money is going to be spent. Two or three years ago they could have asked, or even now they could ask for this additional $15 million to accelerate this policy of the extension of services to all parts of Canada. They seem to have no hesitation whatsoever in asking for a special loan of $14½ million—the hon. member for Edmonton West pointed this out last night—for capital expenditures to be spent, again, as they decide. So, Mr. Chairman, it is quite exasperating to the people of the areas which are not now serviced and to members representing them when those on the government side and on the treasury benches rise and say that parliament should not interfere in any way whatsoever with the affairs of the corporation. Here parliament is going to be asked for a loan of $14½ million and, as the hon. member for Calgary North pointed out today, in a year or so we are probably going to be asked to grant $14½ million to the corporation so they can pay parliament back its own money.

This is a funny money policy if I have ever heard of one. I say, Mr. Chairman, that if the C.B.C. are going to continue to operate their financial structure in this wheeler-dealer manner, I think it is time parliament had some say in how they should spend this money, particularly with regard to the subject which I am now bringing to the attention of the committee, namely the extension of services. I think this is one of the most important aspects of this whole question. When we get into the subject of programming, everyone has his own views; 50 per cent of the people say there should be no interference whatsoever, and the other half say, yes, parliament should have some say on programming. So we have a 50-50 split there. But I would defy any member in this house to rise and say that parliament would not be justified in approving immediately an expenditure of $15 million by the corporation, if the corporation could assure parliament that the areas in Canada which are not now serviced would be serviced as quickly as possible, and if they specified some reasonable period of time in which they could do this job. They advise us that there are no technical difficulties which cannot be solved and say it is strictly a matter of money. Since I have been in this house, a matter of only seven years, I have yet to see the C.B.C. come before parliament and ask for an outright grant which would be spent in this particular manner.

We have also heard that the C.B.C. are quite interested in colour television. While I agree that no one should stand in the way of progress I am particularly pleased that the board of broadcast governors decided to suspend the hearing which was set up in relation to the subject of colour television because, according to what I have heard in the United States, colour television is a particularly costly project. I am sure that there would be quite a march on Ottawa by people resident in unserviced areas, were parliament asked for many millions of dollars to develop colour television. A good number of people in this country are not yet receiving black and white television service. In the area which I represent at least 50 per cent of the people do not have any television service.

I was particularly interested in certain statistics put out by the C.B.C. in relation to the population a town would require to be considered eligible for radio and television services. The C.B.C. say that a population of 500 is required for radio service, and 2,000 for television. In the constituency I represent the town of Thompson, Manitoba, has 8,500 people and although there is a private cable system of television in the town the people there have no C.B.C. television whatever. In Snow Lake there are approximately 1,500 to 2,000 people, again with no television service whatever. Over 2,000 people at Lynn Lake and over 3,000 people at Churchill are still waiting for television service from the C.B.C. Along the Hudson Bay line there are numerous communities over the 500 population mark which the C.B.C. considers necessary for radio coverage, but which have no adequate radio coverage at all. At The Pas and Flin Flon the C.B.C. have been operating over the past two years a kinescope television service, and by this means the programs are projected one week after they have appeared on the network system. These people feel quite fortunate at having some means of television. However, at Flin Flon there are over 15,000 people. It is an energetic community, but as yet there is no indication whatever from the corporation when network television service will be made available. So again I say that when the C.B.C. comes before parliament and repeatedly asks for approval of sums of money up to $88 million, and then produces reports indicating that upwards of $100 million is required to consolidate their services in the cities of Toronto and Montreal, but refuses to ask for the $15 million which we are informed would complete television service to at least 98 per cent of the population of Canada, then I say that parliament should have a far greater control over the spending of this corporation.

Very shortly we are going to be asked to approve this expenditure. When members of the opposition get up in this house and ask for some answers to the questions we have posed, members on the government side of the house are going to say, as did the hon. member for Halifax last night, that we have no business interfering with the operation of this corporation. I should like him or any other members who feel that way to make a little trip around my constituency and try and tell the people there, who in many cases are paying a much higher per capita tax than is paid by the people in the rest of Canada, that they have no business to complain to their member of parliament about the lack of television service on the part of this crown corporation. I should like to go on record now as telling the ministers on the treasury benches that when the estimates of this department come before the house they can be prepared to receive some very strong statements from many hon. members on this side of the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words concerning the administration of justice.

I want to take advantage of this preliminary remark to point out that if all members could do their utmost to summarize their thoughts, to synthesize their remarks, we could save a lot of time. Some members speak at length nothing but absolute nonsense. I think we could synthesize our ideas. That is what I intend to do tonight in dealing with the matter of justice.

Mr. Chairman, the respect of justice, of the judicial institutions and of those whose duty it is to interpret and administer the law, is a categorical imperative in every well organized society.

When the reputation of justice or of those whose duty it is to administer justice, is compromised, anarchy is liable to develop.

We have been recently aware of events where the integrity of the judicature has been impaired.

One has only to remember, Mr. Chairman, the Coffin case to confine to oblivion events which it is preferable not to mention.

I believe that our judicial system ranks above that of our neighbours to the south, since in Canada, none of those exercising judiciary functions have to be elected to do so.

However, it is obvious, whether we like it or not, that since confederation the appointment of judges has too often, unfortunately, been an instrument of patronage.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that our courts, and more particularly our superior courts, should be above all reproach as far as their efficiency and integrity are concerned. That is the reason I advocate, concerning the appointment of superior court justices, a special piece of legislation which would include strict provisions and require, as an obligation, consultations with the bar association and the bench of the provinces where appointments are to be made. In my opinion, every province—and this should be done upon the initiative of the federal government—should have a committee of the bar association and a committee of high ranking judges which would look into and oversee the appointment of judges. I believe that, should this committee of the bar association and the committee of high ranking judges, whose creation I suggest and which would be advisory bodies, object to the appointment of a certain lawyer to the bench, then the minister of justice would have to consider this opposition as a right of veto. This would prevent the appointment of judges who do not possess the qualifications required to fulfil their duties.

Mr. Chairman, by all means we must reestablish the prestige and integrity of the bench. There must be an end to this system of giving sole consideration to partisanship. The appointment of judges should be based on standards of competence and integrity and not solely on partisanship considerations. Let us restore the prestige of justice and the prestige of those who administer justice. We must strengthen the people's confidence in the administration of justice, a confidence which has been shaken by incidents better left unmentioned.

[Text]

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I should like to participate in the debate this evening because of some additional points that have been brought forward by some other members of the house although I also wish to say a few words about the subject which has been foremost in the discussion, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Possibly I might be quite remiss if I did not say in my initial remarks that as one of those in the official opposition who have been labelled by a certain journalist as being in a certain category I am not endeavouring to measure up to any mark, but words have been spoken today about sensationalism and with the greatest of restraint I must say it sometimes puts fear in my heart when I hear people who are considered prominent in the journalistic field acting so irresponsibly, while at the same time trying to charge other people with irresponsibility.

Mr. Nesbitt: That guy is just a nut.

Mr. Winkler: This bothers me somewhat, of course, but I hope that you, Mr. Chairman, and other members of the house will see fit to bear with me this evening and consider that my contribution is indeed a responsible one. The hon. member for Lotbinière referred to his philosophy with regard to the appointment of judges, but surely he has sufficient confidence in the federal Minister of Justice that he would not think the minister would need support or, if he needed it, would not consult with the provincial authorities in regard to appointments of this type. If he has a condemnation to make of the system, I wonder if he is making that condemnation in regard to appointments which he regrets were made by older people other than himself and the present government.

I also listened with great interest to the hon. member for York-Humber. Indeed I expected other comments from that hon. member this evening, because if my memory is correct he has a case against the C.B.C. before the courts at the present time. Before this debate ends I should like to hear from the hon. member for York-Humber with regard to his feelings about the C.B.C., particularly in the light of the charges he has made. I think he could make a valuable contribution to the debate at this time, and I do not say that in a derogatory fashion, because the subject is certainly topical. I think he could make a worth-while and, in fact, necessary contribution. I hope the hon. member for York-Humber will see fit to let us have the benefit of his wisdom in regard to this question.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, may I assure the hon. member for Grey-Bruce that I will give him a statement tomorrow in the house.

Mr. Winkler: These are words of great comfort, and we will look forward to his contribution to the debate. I should also like to refer to the contribution made by the hon. member for St. Maurice-Laflèche in which he referred to what he said was the anomaly in the method of purchasing by the federal government. He referred to the government generally, but I presume he had the C.B.C. in mind particularly. However, he went on to make some remarks with regard to eastern feed grain policy, and this is a subject about which I wish to say something. I realized that it might not be possible for me to do so at any other time prior to the conclusion of this session, although at the present rate of progress one cannot say for sure. There is a very serious problem in regard to eastern agriculture and certainly the feed grain policy is part of that problem.

One of my main reasons for participating in the debate is that I have before me a letter I received from a farmer in my constituency. I must say immediately that the letter is not written from any political point of view. I could read the entire letter into the record but I do not think that is necessary. It is necessary, however, for me to refer to certain facts contained in it. I know this farmer very well. I know what his previous political affiliation was. I do not know whether he is still of the same mind in that regard but certainly he was not a supporter of mine. In his letter he has this to say:

> I have 200 acres and am in mixed farming. First, let us look at the beef situation. I bought 50 good western steer calves last winter for 24¾ cents per pound, figuring I got a good buy. They cost me on an average of $145 each. After feeding them for nine months, if I sold them now

I would probably make $25 a piece. I have no choice but to stable these cattle and buy corn and concentrate and finish them and hope the price goes up. At today's prices the banker will have more money out of them than I will.

I shipped eight good shorthorn heifers this fall and the price I got ranged from 18 cents to 20 cents in Toronto. It is a long time since cattle have been below 20 cents per pound.

Let's take a look at hogs. A few years back we got between $50 and $60 per pig with hog grower at $45 per ton. Today we get around $40 per pig and pay $78 per ton for feed. Buy a pig at $12 and feed it 700 pounds of feed at that price and you see what your profit is.

Now for poultry, the real moneymakers. I keep 40 hens. We got 23 to 25 cents per dozen most of the summer for eggs. The government is giving us a deficiency payment on the three top grades of eggs, but what about the lower grades? It costs just as much to produce those small eggs as the large ones. How are you going to make a hen lay all large eggs?

I house my pullets and wanted to sell the year old hens. All I could get for these birds was 5 cents per pound. A four pound hen would bring 20 cents. With prices like this and the high cost of labour, machinery, taxes, (etc.), which you know as much about as I do, how in the world is the farmer going to exist?

Now, listen to this, Mr. Chairman:

Surely, our Minister of Agriculture and farmer members must realize this, or are they all millionaires?

We know that is not the case, of course; but it seems so to the average farmer in eastern Canada.

I hope you will present this situation to whom it may concern, and trust that something will be done before the small farmer falls by the wayside.

Now, Mr. Chairman, perhaps this does not seem very important in the course of this debate. I do want to get to the C.B.C. before I conclude, but the important thing is that this question was raised this evening and I took advantage of the opportunity presented to me. I want to say this to you, Mr. Chairman, and members who are present in the house this evening, that ever since the Conservative government left office all that has happened to the eastern farm prices has been that they have gone down, down, and down, and the costs of operation for the eastern farmer have gone up, up and up. If you do not believe me, ask the man who wrote this letter—and I can tell you he has never been a supporter of mine. Ask my hon. friends across the way and see if the situation is not precisely the same in their areas.

I know there are members like the hon. member for York-Scarborough who talks about rural tyranny. Where is the rural tyranny? Is it from these millionaire farmers? Is it from the representatives they have in this house? The hon. member spoke in glowing terms of how one member can represent more people in a rural area. Of what use is it to represent rural people if the government brings forth nothing but policies to destroy these people? Have they no place in our economy? Are they finished? What is the future for them? It is a very dull outlook so far as I am concerned. I am sure the hon. member for St. Maurice-Laflèche knows this is true in his part of the country as well. There is no argument across this country because when you bring people together on common ground you will find that they encounter the same problems in connection with this government. I do not know what the policy is, but the closest we got to it tonight was a little word about feed grain. I am grateful to the hon. member for bringing it up.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Never at any time have I referred to feed grain, as the hon. member is saying now. Of course, he should have paid more attention to my remarks. I only spoke of purchases being centralized in a single body. I never referred to the grain problem, where the situation has greatly improved under the present government.

[Text]

Mr. Winkler: Well, there is no question about it; if you did not talk about it, you should have.

Mr. Moreau: Is the hon. member aware that when I was referring to rural tyranny I was not referring to rural tyranny as practised by the small farmer, but rather to rural tyranny as practised by the hon. member.

Mr. Winkler: I do not know what is inherent in those words, but I can tell you they are very weak. I hope my hon. friend—or perhaps he is not so honourable—reads the Toronto Star, and looks at those words tomorrow, to see who is the more responsible. I will let him be the judge.

I am thinking also this evening of the words expressed by the hon. member for Verdun. I regret that it is all too seldom there is some recognition on the opposite side of the house when the truth is spoken by members about the area they represent, and particularly about the problems with which we are faced today. I think the hon. member for Verdun did a very commendable job this evening in presenting a sane, fundamental argument with regard to the problem that is before us. He did not over-emphasize it; he did not underscore it. He did not make it a sensational thing, he just brought the seriousness of it to the attention of the house. I feel that perhaps, in so far as this problem is concerned, this is the approach that we should take. I say again that I am pleased the hon. member for Verdun made that contribution this evening. There are no bricks in this bouquet. Up until this time I have not heard any words in connection with this problem from members across the way, with the exception of the hon. member for Villeneuve. I hold in my hand a newspaper report of his comments. In my opinion therefore this is the first time a government member has risen to place the problem squarely before us in a responsible manner, and for this we must be grateful to him.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will turn to the matter of the C.B.C. It may be that the C.B.C. has been discussed at length. This evening the hon. member for Lotbinière made some remarks about wasting time. As a matter of fact the hon. member has spoken twice in this debate, but that is of no concern to me. I am grateful for the contributions that have come from Liberal benches. I know hon. members feel as sincerely as we do about this matter because the people we represent are no different from the people they represent. Since when are we wasting time when we, as members of parliament, discuss the estimates of the C.B.C.?

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. member agree that those estimates are not before the committee now?

Mr. Winkler: I agree, Mr. Chairman; the estimates are certainly not before the committee right now. Surely it is our privilege to discuss this specific question, the budget of the C.B.C. I beg your pardon, sir, if you want to be technical; I meant the budget and not the estimates. This evening the minister is becoming very technical, and I regret this fact. If we have no right to discuss the expenditure of $100 million of Canadian taxpayers' money by the C.B.C., then I think there is something wrong with the duty which has been imposed upon us.

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. member permit a question? The point I was making clear was that this is not the point at which to discuss the item. Of course it is an important item and properly discussable, but it is properly discussable during consideration of the estimates of the department.

[Mr. Winkler.]

Mr. Nesbitt: We have never seen them.

Mr. Olson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The minister says the C.B.C. estimates are not before us at this time.

Mr. McIlraith: This is right.

Mr. Olson: I should like to ask him if two twelfths of the amount for the C.B.C. is not before us in paragraph (a) of the resolution, amounting to $14,316,666? Does not two twelfths of that item include part of the C.B.C. estimates?

Mr. McIlraith: No, what is before the committee now is whether or not the government should be given permission to expend two twelfths of the amount of supply—there are one or two minor exceptions to that percentage—pending parliament's discussion in detail of each one of the estimates and everything related to them. If hon. members are interested in following it, this is the reason the commitment is always given when interim supply is presented to the house, that the passage of this interim supply will not in any way limit or abridge the right to discuss the item when the estimates are called. Therefore even if twelve twelfths were passed in the interim supply bill, parliament would still retain its right to discuss the matter fully and debate it at the appropriate time on the estimates. That is the point I wish to make.

Mr. Winkler: Probably the minister is quite right. We on this side will bear that in mind when the estimates of the Secretary of State come before us. But I wonder if the minister bore that in mind when he sat on this side?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes he did, and I will tell you what he did discuss. I have all the statistics here on what the opposition of that day did and the number of days it took on interim supply. The sort of thing that opposition discussed was grievances against administration. One of the major ones was the failure of the then government to bring down a budget for the house to consider.

Mr. Winkler: It is better in some cases not to bring budgets down than to produce something of the sort we have had. But I think the minister put his finger on the nub of the matter. This is something that is important to the present administration and I do not think he can argue that the matter before the committee is out of order.

I have here quotations that were supplied to me by the hon. member for Grey North, but before proceeding, Mr. Chairman, may I ask you to take note of the lengthy interjections during my humble intervention. As I say, I have been supplied with some valuable quotations by the hon. member for Grey North who, because of very serious family matters regrettably could not be with us today. Otherwise he would place these on the record himself. However, I must tell the minister I would be ashamed to read these quotations into Hansard, so that they could be on the record. They are quotations from a C.B.C. program of about two weeks ago, which I think was one of the lowest things ever to come across the air waves.

It is not for me to say, as has been repeated so many times during the last few days, that members of parliament should not be concerned with programming. Maybe this is so. I do not believe it is quite the case, but maybe these other members are right. They may be more accurate than I in this regard, but I do say the time has come for the expenditures of the C.B.C. to be placed before parliament each and every year, the same as the expenditures of any ministry, not for the purpose of considering programming but for the purpose of considering the expenditures themselves.

We have received a large number of letters from good, sound, sensible, Canadian families. They have sent letters to their respective members of parliament, and these people are burdened with the expenditure of $100 million a year for something that they deplore. When that happens there is something wrong with our system. If that is not so, then probably I am wrong in being on the floor or occupying my seat, but I believe we should stand up for the people who object to the money the government spends through the C.B.C.

Incidentally I do not always have the opportunity to listen to all the broadcasts of the C.B.C., but I have not heard the C.B.C. say one word today about the objections that have been raised here. Do the orders for this type of attitude come from the top? I do not believe these attitudes originate below the top level. They originate with the policy people, and it is not fair enough for anyone on the other side of the chamber to reply, "You appointed these men who have the authority. Why don't they act?"

The point is that if the Canadian taxpayers have a problem surely they have the right, through their duly elected members, to place their objection before the authority concerned. I venture to say that if the truth were known the budgets and the expenditures of the C.B.C. that appear before us are much greater than we actually see because I believe—I might be wrong here—that there is not a division between the capital and operating budgets of the C.B.C., and I believe this should be made available to parliament.

As I said previously, this type of expenditure by an agency of the government should be examined by members of parliament, the same as the expenditures of any other government department. It is not good enough for the Secretary of State to rise in his place and say to me, "I will take this as notice and bring it to the attention of the president of the C.B.C." I certainly do not feel I have the qualifications to stand in judgment on matters in regard to programming, but again I say I have quotations here that I would be ashamed to place on the record of parliament; yet these things were broadcast to Canadian t.v. viewers not two weeks ago.

Do we pay these people to give us an uplift in our society? It was stated by the hon. member for Churchill that the philosophy in programming is one of interest, value and entertainment. If it is of interest and value, do we make our people look down instead of up? Are the traditional teachings of family life in Canada to be cast aside? Are we to make our young people think that the things which are held dear in decent family life should be mocked and are in fact wrong? If they are wrong then I think somebody should tell us the whole world is wrong, because we have been revolving around the concept of a basic family unit and the things people hold true in their homes.

Is it any wonder we have trouble in our universities, with the movements that fly off to the left, when we are given leadership such as this and our young people can see it for what it is? These new things then become commonplace and are considered commonplace. I believe the words that were spoken last evening by the hon. member for Northwest Territories were quite correct. I believe the adjectives and the terms he used were correct.

It is not within the competence of any one group, acting as an agency of the government, to take a unilateral position on the type of entertainment to be shown to the public. Consequently the only way we can have this matter properly reviewed and considered is through a committee. Once again I suggest that such a committee be empowered to review both the operating and capital expenditures of the C.B.C. from year to year, the same as with any other ministry of the government.

Mr. Regan: Would the hon. member permit a question? The hon. member specifically in his remarks takes exception to the programming and then suggests a committee to review the expenditure. What is he suggesting specifically? Would he suggest, if the minister was to be placed specifically in charge of the C.B.C., as he is in charge of a department—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Regan: Would he suggest that each program before it was shown on the air should be censored and examined by the minister? Is he suggesting that if a program goes on that the minister does not fully approve, the next day the full executive of the C.B.C. should be fired? How specifically would the hon. member's proposal apply?

Mr. Winkler: If I were to place the hon. member in charge of the C.B.C. he would be in charge of comedy; it would eliminate the entire problem. I would say this to him. We only learn in this particular field by the experience we have had. I believe the present situation of control at the top in C.B.C. has been created possibly by a previous parliamentary committee, where a certain fear existed in the areas of authority of the C.B.C. I am told that people come to their offices today and wonder what they are supposed to do—people in the administration—simply because one man has his hand on the valve at the top. One man has this control of the C.B.C. I say to the hon. member that these estimates are the only way members of parliament can get at the corporation in regard to the representations that are made to us. I hold this in front of the committee again. If we are to get at it for the benefit of Canadians and our constituents, this is the way it is going to be done. We shall only work out a system with regard to the programs and of knowing who the people should be that direct the affairs—

An hon. Member: How?

Mr. Winkler: I am saying right now that the people at the top are wrong.

Mr. Regan: Then should we not have new directors?

Mr. Winkler: Maybe they should be changed. What do we get from the Secretary of State? He says he will take notice of our questions and they will be sent on to the president of the C.B.C. He writes back. We have had hundreds of similar answers: "The matter will be taken under consideration." That is about what happens, and it is not the answer. I will inform hon. members by saying that I do not think there is any man in the administration of the C.B.C. who would not listen if we had him before the committee and I read these out to him—as I would do if he were here tonight. But I will not read them and put them on the record of parliament because they are too base, too vile. However, I would certainly read them if he were here, and any man with an ounce of common sense would know he was wrong.

An hon. Member: Is this not a call for a change of directors?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Cameron, High Park): I was about to congratulate the hon. member for Grey-Bruce for having completed his remarks within the time allotted to him, without an interruption. I permitted a question. It was a long question and there was a long answer, and I think we should now call on the next speaker.

Mr. Olson: On a point of order; a few minutes ago the President of the Privy Council maintained that the estimates of the C.B.C. were not before us. On page 54 of the main estimates which were given to all members earlier in the session there is an item, vote 1, in the amount of $85,900,000. Then the first paragraph of the resolution before the committee this evening includes these words:

> (a) two twelfths of the total of all of the items to be voted in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965—

Then there are some exceptions; but the C.B.C. is not included in any of those exceptions. The government is asking for two twelfths of this $85,900,000 mentioned in the main estimates; that is, if my arithmetic is correct, $14,316,000. I wonder whether the President of the Privy Council would agree that by passing this resolution we do in fact grant that much money to the C.B.C. for its operations and therefore, at least to this extent the estimates of the C.B.C. are before the committee.

Mr. McIlraith: If that is a question directed to me, let me say I would agree that the committee does authorize the government to make this advance, but I would also point out to the hon. member that the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, were passed many weeks ago, yet he will find a reference to them in the resolution as well.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Cameron (High Park)): I do not intend to make any ruling on the point of order raised by the hon. member. If it should be necessary the chairman will make a ruling upon his return. It would seem to me, however, that the discussion so far has been in order, and if I were to make a ruling that would be my ruling.

Mr. Otto: I am glad you made that ruling, Mr. Chairman. This seems to be a take-a-whack-at-the-C.B.C.-week, and I do not want to change the topic. However, I do not intend to take a whack at the C.B.C. although I think you will recognize, Mr. Chairman as most members will, that there must be something wrong with the C.B.C. to have aroused the ire of so many members of this house.

An hon. Member: On all sides.

Mr. Otto: On some sides and in some corners of this house. After all, what can you expect when you have a body which is really not responsible to anyone? It is no more the fault of members on this side than of members on the other. I recall listening to my hon. friend from York-Humber about a month ago when he spoke about the origin of the C.B.C. and the wonderful work it had done at that time. Since those days the needs of the country have changed and the C.B.C. has changed, but because there is a lack of communication of responsibility between the C.B.C. and the shareholders, who are the people of Canada, is it any wonder that some problems arise? As to programming, I do not think anyone in this house would venture to say that he would take the responsibility for programming although, like everyone here, I like to see whether I am getting my money's worth.

During the dinner hour I went through the weekly programs of Toronto television stations. Members may recall we have channel six, which is the C.B.C.; then we have two others, nine and eleven, one of which is in Hamilton. They are private stations. I averaged out the private stations, the two of them, and the C.B.C. station and I more or less designated the programs into certain areas such as drama, variety, public affairs, and so on and we find that at the end of the week the C.B.C. did provide two hours more of drama than went out from the other stations, or the average of both of them; it provided three and a half hours more of imported programs such as Beverly Hillbillies and so on. It put out another three and a half hours extra of local variety programs, another nine and a half hours of sport programs, an extra four hours of public affairs, and three extra hours of educational programs. And that is what the corporation has done. I doubt the value of the imported programs.

The question which comes to my mind is: Is that worth $1,500,000? Is it worth as much money as we are paying out—roughly $2 million a week? Granted, all these programs are very good, very beneficial—drama, education, and so on. But is it worth $2 million? For this reason I cannot see anything wrong with either a committee or any other body studying the whole concept of the C.B.C.

Is it still in the interest of the nation to have the C.B.C. decide by itself what is to be the cultural destiny of this nation? Are they fulfilling the function they are supposed to fulfil? Can it not be done by private television? Could it be possible that the C.B.C. should not be in competitive television, or in the business of trying to make money at television? All these questions could be decided by either such a committee, or a very deep study as to what terms of reference we are going to give the C.B.C. from now on. It is not enough to stand up in this house and say, "The C.B.C. did such and such. The program was wrong. We want to control this," or, "we want to control that". I believe we have to go deeper; we have to find out what is the future of public broadcasting. Is it still necessary? How much of it is necessary? In what direction will it go? I believe this should be a subject of detailed study by a committee and I urge the government to take into consideration the requests that have been made for the seting up of a committee to study the whole problem of the C.B.C., or public broadcasting in its entirety.

Mr. Webster: Mr. Chairman, there has been considerable discussion of the C.B.C. during the past two days. Most hon. members have been critical of this crown corporation. However, a great deal of the criticism has been constructive and justifiable. Especially has this been true of the remarks today of the hon. member for Calgary North and the hon. member for Churchill. There are also many others who are appreciative of the work of this important national service.

I think it is interesting to recall the early stages or the beginnings of television in Canada. A late prime minister, R. B. Bennett, said in this House of Commons in 1932:

> This country must be assured of complete Canadian control of broadcasting from Canadian sources, free from foreign interference or influence. No other system than that of public ownership can ensure to the people of this country without regard to class or place, equal enjoyment of the benefits and pleasures of radio broadcasting.

The Liberal opposition wholly endorsed this view and the act of 1932 was adopted without a single dissenting voice. Throughout the years this great national service has developed in many directions. As we examine the C.B.C. we should in fairness remind ourselves of its admitted achievements. I wish to summarize briefly five areas of interest and accomplishment.

1. Both radio and television programs are presented daily to Canadian listeners and viewers in both English and French.

2. A great variety of attractions is provided, from popular sports and entertainment to public affairs and grand opera. The high standard of these programs is recognized annually by C.B.C.'s success in receiving an impressive series of awards in competition with American networks.

3. The C.B.C. provides a rare opportunity for the training and employment of musicians, artists, writers and commentators; not just a few in Toronto and Montreal but approximately 20,000 across Canada at the many production points. In one year approximately $16 million is paid to these talented people.

4. The C.B.C. helped to create Canada's image to the world by operating the international service; broadcasting by radio to a hundred countries in a dozen languages. Program offices are maintained in London, Paris and New York.

5. Free time on radio and television has been allocated to all political parties during and between election campaigns. This policy of using public funds to prepare the electorate for voting day has been widely appreciated.

Over the past 30 years there have been three royal commissions and 14 parliamentary committees which have all been charged with the responsibility of having a good look at the C.B.C. Each of these commissions and committees has arrived at the same conclusion; that Canadians want a national broadcasting service and they want it to be of a high standard. The most recent examination of the administration was made by the Fowler commission in 1957, which concluded its report with these words:

We must be prepared to spend public money in quite large quantities. The Canadian economy is just not big enough to support a broadcasting system on commercial resources alone. At least it would not be one we would want to have or one that would be anything more than the scattered outposts of American networks. The central factor in a Canadian system is the C.B.C. supported by money out of the public treasury for both its capital and operating needs.

[Mr. Webster.]

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to offer any vigorous criticism of the C.B.C. tonight, except to offer a word of caution to them. I think they must have recognized by now that the people of Canada are in fact alarmed about some of their programs. I am not one who has been too disappointed with the C.B.C. I think some of their programs are excellent; they compare very favourably with any t.v. programs in our modern western world. But I think the least they could do would be to give warning and state that these controversial subjects are going to be broadcast, so that at least those parents who have any control over the television in their homes—and most of us still have some—could encourage their children to look at something else.

I think some of these programs are educational and the motives behind putting them on are not pornographic or even to be very sensational. However, Mr. Chairman, I believe some care should be taken to make sure they are screened to the extent that they are not suddenly forced upon us in the middle of family viewing. If this is beyond the intelligence of the C.B.C. perhaps we will have to institute some form of screening. I am afraid of anything approaching government interference in this regard; in fact my main complaint about the C.B.C. is the fact that in our efforts to put them above interference we have made it possible for some people to use this medium as a very definite channel of political propaganda. I do not use the word "propaganda" accidentally, because I think it is an abuse of our privileges and freedoms when a member of any party can get on the air and give very, very controversial views and ideas, unless there is at least some balance, some opportunity for opposition to it if another party wishes to refute it at the time it should be refuted, which is right away. If you get on the air and give a lengthy statement on any subject, you can never withdraw it; it has gone out to the four corners of the country and it is impossible to undo the damage by merely saying a day or two later that you did not mean it, or something like that.

If on the particular program itself—and we have had some very good arguments brought before the public—views are expressed by all parties through representatives on the program, I think this is educational and should not be stopped. But the idea of using the air waves, especially at the expense of the taxpayer, to brainwash people is an abuse of our freedom which I for one am certainly dead against. That is my main criticism of the actual programming of the C.B.C.

I have another complaint to make. I do not think it is fair to spend all the taxpayers' money in one particular city. If we construct buildings in Montreal or Toronto costing $45 or $60 million it is going to be hard to sell the idea to the people living in sparsely populated areas that we are not putting all our eggs in one basket. As I said before I think C.B.C. programs are good but there are still many people in Canada not receiving them.

Therefore I should like to see the C.B.C. budget their expenditures, first of all to try to provide coverage to everyone in Canada before we go into the super luxury field. I think that $45 million or $60 million spent on one building is providing perhaps a little too much luxury for us at this particular stage. I am only giving an amateur's opinion of course; but the people in my sparsely populated district are not adequately covered by the C.B.C.

In view of the fact we are on interim supply I should like at this point to make a general complaint. I do not think that the members of this house are consulted enough in matters affecting their own ridings. If in the past governments have refused to consult with members of parliament this is a mistake, and let us not duplicate the mistakes of the past. For example, at the present time western Canada is largely represented in this house by the members of one party. Are we to ignore forever the needs of the people in the rural areas of western Canada merely because they are represented by only one party? To say that that is the way R. B. Bennett or Mackenzie King did it is not good enough for 1964.

We are being criticized both in the press and on television for not doing our job. If that is true it is because we are not keeping up with the problems of the day, problems which are new. We require greater co-operation and the government in power, particularly when it is a minority government, should be only too pleased to ask our opinion on matters. We cannot force them to do this but we do represent a cross section of the people; and as the present government only represents only one third of the constituencies in Canada surely something would be gained from consultation.

Some hon. members have suggested changing our committees system. We are now in committee of the whole, and I would suggest to this government that they or any other government which might take over might well use the intelligence and well thought out planning of other party members to enrich the life of our nation.

In the northern part of Alberta the C.B.C. are trying to set up booster stations to supply some television coverage, following along the line I have suggested of providing more coverage for our people before spending most of our money in one particular area. The rumour I have heard—it is only a rumour; I have had no official notice of this—is that a booster station will be erected at Slave Lake, northern Alberta. There is already a good booster station at Grande Prairie. This will cause overlapping of service, with double coverage in the Peace River area in the west end of my district and very little coverage in the central or eastern part. In cases like this a little consultation might have helped. If this station were constructed in the town of Athabasca rather than Slave Lake twice the area would be covered. The areas already covered would not suffer at all and television service would be provided to another 20,000 people who need it badly. It is probably the only television station they can tune into. I submit this is a fair way to spend some money; it is using it wisely and spending it where it will do the most good.

Not only in C.B.C. matters but also on agricultural questions and in other departments I think hon. gentlemen opposite could well use the information and the local knowledge which we have and which we are only too willing to give. I would even suggest that the government should not be allowed to spend more than $5,000 in any hon. member's constituency without first warning that hon. member. Then if he is not to be in any way affected by the administration of that money he should certainly have the right to say what he knows about the local conditions, and an alert government would be glad to hear it.

I have mentioned this before in matters affecting the post office. I do not think that anyone would want to deny people the proper delivery of Her Majesty's mails, yet during the last 18 months I have never been consulted on the postal requirements in my district in any shape or form. I am not at all satisfied with the excuse that R. B. Bennett did not do it so this government will not do it. If that sort of thing took place there would be no progress whatever. This same reply has been given on more than one occasion. It is said that ministers 20 years ago did not answer questions so these ministers are not answering them.

This gives credence to the criticisms we are getting. I would warn the Liberal party that this sort of criticism usually comes from the longhairs or splinter parties. I think it would be a good idea if we smartened up and gave the kind of leadership which the two old parties are better qualified to give.

Mr. Knowles: Too late.

Mr. Grégoire: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Bigg: You can tell from the heckling, Mr. Chairman, that I am drawing some blood down there in the corner. They know what I am saying is true. There is a long and arduous campaign to discredit the older parties so as to assist one particular group of members in the house, and we all know who they are. They are members who never make a positive contribution themselves.

Mr. Grégoire: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Bigg: The handout programs are always their remedy because they do not have to raise the money. It is easy to ride the white horse when you do not have responsibility. In the six years I have been here I have never heard these people make any suggestions concerning how to raise more money. Their free money or give-away programs will never accomplish this. May I call it ten o'clock?

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: I should like to ask the acting house leader whether the government intends to continue tomorrow the discussion on interim supply.

Mr. MacNaught: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow we will continue this discussion of interim supply, and when that is completed we will take up main estimates, departments of citizenship and immigration, forestry and national revenue.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

LABOUR CONDITIONS—LETTER TO MANITOBA TRUCKING ASSOCIATION

Ottawa 4, October 23, 1964.

Dear Sirs:

This will acknowledge with thanks your telegram of October 21, referring to Bill C-126, an act respecting hours of work and minimum wages, annual vacations and holidays with pay in federal works, undertakings, and businesses.

At the present time this bill is being reviewed carefully by a committee of the whole house. The effect of the legislation on various industries within the federal jurisdiction, including the trucking and cartage industry, is now being closely examined. I can assure you that your representations in this connection will be carefully considered.

Yours sincerely,

Allan J. MacEachen

Manitoba Trucking Association,
Winnipeg, Manitoba.

20220—602½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 28, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

SPORTS

DESIGNATION OF HOCKEY AS CANADA'S NATIONAL GAME

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-132, respecting the national game of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Roxburgh: At this time it gives me real pleasure to ask parliament to give consideration to this bill to make hockey Canada's national game.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Roxburgh: Hockey is indeed a wonderful game, clean, fast and exhilarating. More than any game in Canada it has caught the imagination and enthusiasm of thousands upon thousands of people and has given them, and still gives them, great moments of enjoyment either as players or as spectators.

More especially is it favoured by the youth of Canada. Hockey with its dash, crash and smash truly represents the very tempo of our Canadian youth. Today hockey is recognized throughout the world as Canada's national game. During the period between the two world wars and for a long period after the second world war, when a very limited number of Canadians went overseas as tourists, or on business, or as politicians—

Some hon. Members: Carried.

An hon. Member: Time.

Mr. Roxburgh: Just a minute—if it had not been for the game of hockey being played throughout the countries of Europe, Europe would never have heard the name of Canada. And this is something very, very important. Outside of war at that time—not now, but at that time—the only time they ever heard the name of Canada mentioned was when our hockey team played in their countries.

I should like to say this to the sports minded people of all these countries and also of Canada. The words "hockey" and "Canada" are synonymous. Hockey is Canada; Canada is hockey.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): Now that we have heard those very interesting remarks, I wonder if the hon. member would mind telling us the purpose of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PENSIONS

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF CONTRIBUTORY PROGRAM

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure, to be known as the Canada pension plan, to establish in Canada a comprehensive program of retirement pensions payable to contributors; to provide for the payment of supplementary benefits, including benefits for the widows and orphans of contributors and benefits to contributors who become disabled; to provide for the co-ordination of pensions payable under the Old Age Security Act with benefits payable under the Canada pension plan and for the payment of adjusted pensions under the Old Age Security Act beginning at any age from 65 years; to provide for the adjustment of pensions and other benefits in line with increases in earnings and the cost of living; to provide that funds arising from the operation of the Canada pension plan shall be invested in securities of the provinces, provincially guaranteed securities of provincial crown agents, and securities of Canada; and to provide further that all expenditures under the Canada pension plan, including cost of administration, shall be financed from contributions by employees and employers and from contributions by persons in respect of self-employed earnings.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

ARMED FORCES—SENIOR OFFICERS RETIRED

Question No. 1,727—Mr. Harkness:

1. Since January 1, 1964, how many officers of the rank of commodore and above in the navy, brigadier and above in the army, air commodore and above in the R.C.A.F. have ceased to be members of the permanent forces, or have been given notice that they would be retired, or have sent in their resignations?

Questions

2. In each case, what is the name of the officer, the appointment held by him, his age and, where applicable, the number of years and months he would have to go to normal retirement age?

3. In each of the above cases indicate whether the officer retired on reaching normal retirement age, whether he put in his resignation of his own volition, or whether he was asked to retire?

4. How many officers of the ranks indicated in part 1 have been promoted in rank, what are their names, and ages as of the date of promotion?

5. What will be the total amount of their pensions from the date of their retirement until their normal retirement date?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. From January 1, 1964 to August 18, 1964—26.

2 and 3.

Name	Rank	Age	Appointment	Length of time to normal retirement age	Remarks
R.C.N.
H. S. Rayner.....	Vice admiral	54	Chief of the naval staff	9 mos.	Normal retirement—having completed normal time of duty as CNS.
T. B. McLean.....	Surg. rear admiral	54	Surgeon general Cdn. forces and Her Majesty's honorary surgeon	5 mos.	Normal retirement
J. V. Brock.....	Rear admiral	51	Flag officer Atlantic coast. senior officer in chief command, Atlantic. commander Atlantic sub-area and maritime commander Atlantic.	3 yrs. 2 mos.	By notice
H. L. Quinn.....	Commodore	55	Naval member—directing staff national defence college	—	Normal retirement
A. B. F. Fraser-Harris..	Commodore	48	Asst. chief of naval staff (air and warfare)	6 yrs. 7 mos.	By notice
Canadian army
A. E. Wrinch.....	Major general	56	Major general survival	—	Normal retirement
J. P. Bernatchez.....	Major general	53	Vice chief of the general staff	11 mos. 14 days	Normal retirement. Position abolished.
J. E. C. Pangman.....	Brigadier	56	Commander—Manitoba area	—	Normal retirement
J. R. B. Jones.....	Brigadier	55	Chairman—army rank and trade structure committee	—	Normal retirement
J. B. Allan.....	Brigadier	50	Vice quartermaster-general	3 yrs. 11 mos.	By notice
G. L. M. Smith.....	Brigadier	55	Deputy surgeon general (admin.)	—	Normal retirement
A. F. B. Knight.....	Brigadier	54	Commander, New Brunswick area	—	Normal retirement
W. J. Moogk.....	Brigadier	54	Commander, Camp Borden and target area headquarters Toronto	—	Normal retirement

Questions

Name	Rank	Age	Appointment	Length of time to normal retirement age	Remarks
R.C.A.F.
C. R. Slemon	Air marshal	59	Deputy commander North American air defence	—	Normal retirement
R. A. Cameron	Air vice marshal	54	Military advisor Cdn. delegation Paris	—	Normal retirement
M. M. Hendrick	Air vice marshal	54	Air officer commanding air defence command	—	Normal retirement
W. A. Orr	Air vice marshal	53	Air member for personnel	6 mos.	Normal retirement
G. S. Austin	Air commodore	48	Chief of plans and intelligence	4 yrs. 6 mos.	Voluntary retirement
R. H. Bray	Air commodore	54	Deputy air member technical services	—	Normal retirement
G. D. Caldbick	Air commodore	54	Deputy surgeon general	—	Normal retirement
S. G. Cowan	Air commodore	53	Chief of materiel	—	Normal retirement
E. L. Gerow	Air commodore	55	Chieff of finance	—	Normal retirement
R. J. Gray	Air commodore	49	Chief—organization and management	3 yrs. 1 mo.	Voluntary retirement
E. C. Poole	Air commodore	53	Chief of telecommunications	—	Normal retirement
N. W. Timmerman	Air commodore	51	Deputy commander 29 region NORAD	—	Normal retirement
J. A. Verner	Air commodore	52	Chief staff officer training command Winnipeg	2 mos.	Normal retirement

4. Nine, Vice Admiral K. L. Dyer, 48; Lieutenant General J. V. Allard, 51; Lieutenant General R. W. Moncel, 47; Air Marshal C. L. Annis, 52; Rear Admiral R. P. Welland, 46; Surg. Rear Admiral W. J. Elliott, 50; Air Vice Marshal M. P. Martyn, 51; Acting Air Vice Marshal M. Lipton, 48; Acting Air Commodore C. W. Burgess, 49.

5. $217,044.98.

DISABLED PERSONS ALLOWANCES TO MENTALLY RETARDED

Question No. 1,913—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. In each province, and in Canada, how many mentally retarded persons are currently in receipt of allowances under the Disabled Persons Act?

2. In each province, and in Canada, what is the annual disbursement to mentally retarded persons under the Disabled Persons Act?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The international classification of diseases is used in classifying the disabilities of recipients under the Disabled Persons Act. In this classification the designation mentally retarded is not used and therefore no data are available. There is, however, a designation of mentally defective in the classification which is used by the physicians in determining the type of total and permanent disabilities under the disability allowance program and data are available concerning this group of recipients.

Based on an analysis of the total case load as at March 31, 1961, the number of mentally defective recipients as at August, 1964, is estimated as follows:

Newfoundland	550
Prince Edward Island	260
Nova Scotia	924
New Brunswick	798
Quebec	6,865
Ontario	4,299
Manitoba	599
Saskatchewan	731
Alberta	698
British Columbia	748
Total	16,472

2. The estimated total of federal and provincial expenditure for a 12 month period based on the above figures is as follows:

Newfoundland	$ 488,000
Prince Edward Island	231,000
Nova Scotia	820,000
New Brunswick	708,000
Quebec	6,091,000
Ontario	3,814,000
Manitoba	531,000
Saskatchewan	649,000
Alberta	619,000
British Columbia	664,000
Total	$14,615,000

NATIONAL PARKS—LAUNCHING FEES FOR BOATS

Question No. 1,949—Mr. Watson (Assiniboia):

1. Do all national parks in Canada charge launching fees for boats?
2. Under what regulations are these fees charged and when were these regulations passed?
3. In what national parks are launching fees charged and what is the fee per day, and/or week?
4. What is the reason for the launching fee?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. No.

2. The national parks business regulations, passed on April 12, 1962.

3. Only in Prince Albert national park, where the department spent to date since 1961 $526,625 on construction of a marina. This project has virtually been completed this year except for landscaping. The marina has been let to a concessionnaire and the purpose of the fees is to recover costs of operating the marina from the public using this facility. The approved launching fee is $1.50 per launching, in-out charge, or $5 per season, any number of launchings during the boating season.

CENTRAL PURCHASING AGENCY FOR INDIAN RESERVES

Question No. 1,992—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. Is there now a central supply purchasing agency for all Indian reserves?
2. Is this a change in procedure?
3. Does this agency call for tenders for the supply of materials to be used on Indian reserves?
4. Are local businesses no longer invited to tender?

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1, 2, 3 and 4. No. Purchasing of supplies for Indian reserves is undertaken by the Department of Defence Production, the chief purchasing agent of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, and field officers of the Indian affairs branch, in accordance with the government contracts regulations. Local businesses are invited to tender where the circumstances warrant.

PROVISION OF AIRPORT FACILITIES, SAWMILL BAY, N.W.T.

Question No. 2,018—Mr. Rhéaume:

Has the Department of Transport reviewed the volume of traffic to and from the airport at Sawmill bay during the past year and, if so, does the department intend to resume responsibility for the operation and maintenance of this airport and, if not, will the department undertake such a study immediately with a view to providing adequate airport facilities at Sawmill bay, N.W.T.?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Air traffic at Sawmill bay, Caywood field, during the past summer season consisted of one weekly charter flight by TransAir from Winnipeg, one weekly charter flight by P.W.A. from Edmonton, several additional charter flights by P.W.A. in support of mining operations and a variety of light private aircraft traffic generated mainly by five active fishing camps in the area.

This airport was built by Eldorado Mining and Refining Company in 1946 and has been operated and maintained by this company until leased recently to Great Bear lodge. The Department of Transport has no present plans to assume this responsibility.

PLANS FOR TOWNSITE, BAKER LAKE, N.W.T.

Question No. 2,053—Mr. Simpson:

1. Has a contract been awarded for the preparation of plans for a proposed townsite at Baker lake, district of Keewatin, N.W.T. and, if so, what firm of engineers has been appointed to do this work?
2. Were tenders called for this work and, if so (a) from whom were bids received (b) what was the extent of the advertising of same?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. No.

2. (a) No; (b) N/A.

BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION, ALMA, N.B.

Question No. 2,065—Mr. Bell:

Have discussions taken place between the federal government and the government of New Brunswick regarding responsibility for the bridge at the eastern approach to Fundy national park at Alma and, if so, with what result as to both responsibility and the commencement of construction?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): In August, 1958, the federal government concluded that since this bridge was on provincial land it was a responsibility of the province of New Brunswick. The Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources was authorized at that time to carry out repairs on the existing bridge because of its close relation to the operation of Fundy national park. However, the scheduling of construction of a new bridge at the eastern approach to Fundy national park at Alma rests with the province.

CREDIT POLICY OF BANK OF CANADA

Question No. 2,089—Mr. Caouette:

1. Has the Bank of Canada the power to grant credits to foreign countries and, if so (a) at what rate of interest (b) on what terms?

2. Has the Bank of Canada ever used this power and, if so (a) what countries benefited by such credits (b) in what years (c) at what rate of interest?

3. Can the Bank of Canada allow provincial and municipal governments to benefit by the same credit policy?

[Translation]

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. Under sections 18(1)(d) and (e) of the Bank of Canada Act, the bank may buy and sell short term securities issued by the United Kingdom having a maturity not exceeding six months from the date of acquisition by the bank and may buy and sell treasury bills or other obligations of the United States of America. Under section 18 (1)(m) of the Bank of Canada Act, the bank is authorized to place funds on deposit with foreign central banks.

(a) and (b) Interest rates and other terms are not specified in the act.

2. (a) and (b) Aside from deposits with foreign central banks which have been used solely for working balances and securities of the United States of America acquired in the ordinary course of business, the following special arrangements have been made: In June, 1962, the bank entered into a reciprocal currency arrangement with the federal reserve system in the amount of U.S. $250,000,000 and at the same time the Bank of England placed an amount of U.S. $100,000,000 at the disposal of the Bank of Canada. These credits were fully availed of and had the effect at the time of increasing the Bank of Canada's exchange holdings by U.S. $350,000,000. These transactions had been reversed by December, 1962. At that time the arrangement with the Bank of England lapsed and the one with the federal reserve system was placed on a stand-by basis. In November, 1963, at the time of the assassination of the President of the United States, the stand-by arrangement with the federal reserve system was, on the initiative of the latter, implemented to the extent of U.S. $20,000,000 for a short period. In September, 1964, the Bank of Canada, in conjunction with a number of other central banks, agreed to place an amount of U.S. dollars on deposit with the Bank of England if the Bank of England so requested.

(c) Not a matter of public record.

3. Under section 18(1)(c) the bank may buy and sell securities issued or guaranteed by any province. Under section 18(1)(i) and (j) the bank may make advances to provincial governments under certain conditions. The Bank of Canada Act does not authorize the bank to maintain deposits with provincial or municipal governments.

[Text]

REPRESENTATIONS BY NIAGARA FALLS COUNCIL ON MEDICAL CARE

Question No. 2,099—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

Has the government received representations from the Niagara Falls city council deploring the increase in P.S.I. insurance rates, and recommending the early implementation of a national medicare plan and, if so, what has been their reply?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, the Minister of National Health and Welfare received a letter dated October 7, 1964, from the clerk of the city of Niagara Falls.

On October 15 the minister replied indicating that as Physicians' Services Incorporated is a private organization, the question of increased P.S.I. rate does not come within the purview of federal jurisdiction but that she had made particular note of the view of local 536 of the united electrical, radio and machine workers of America regarding the effect on their members of such increased rates.

The minister also drew attention to the recent report of the royal commission on health services and to the wide financial and program implications requiring considerable detailed analyses and stated that careful studies are now being made by the government. A copy of a summary of the recommendations of the royal commission was attached to the minister's letter.

WRITE-OFF OF SEED GRAIN DEBTS

Question No. 2,107—Mr. Lambert:

1. What is the amount of the write-off of seed grain debts incurred by western farmers between 1876 and 1925 as recently announced by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources?

2. What was the amount with respect to each of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta?

3. Can an estimate be made of the land involved in each of the three said provinces and, if so, what is the respective amount of land cleared of liens by this action in each of the prairie provinces?

Questions

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. $716,743.15. This amount includes $33,442.15 in book debts for which there is no security by way of liens against land or the personal covenant of the borrowers.

2. Manitoba, nil. All Manitoba accounts were settled in 1955. Saskatchewan, $431,602.51; Alberta, $285,140.64.

3. Manitoba, N/A. Saskatchewan, approximately 5,300 individual properties were cleared of liens. Alberta, approximately 4,800 individuals properties were cleared of liens.

AIR CANADA UNIFORMS FOR STEWARDESSES

Question No. 2,121—Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke):

1. What will be the cost to Air Canada of outfitting their stewardesses with new uniforms; broken down to show the cost of designing, promoting and any other costs to the company and the cost to the stewardesses?

2. How many designs were submitted to Air Canada and who submitted them?

3. Whose design was chosen and for what reasons and how much was paid the designer?

4. Is there a contract for making these uniforms and, if so, were tenders called, who bid on them and who holds the contract?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The management of Trans-Canada Air Lines advises as follows:

1. The total cost of the new uniform is approximately $160,000, including purchase, design, etc. By agreement with the flight attendants, the company will pay about 75 per cent of this cost. No specific proportion of recent advertising of the company's new look can be attributed to promotion of the new stewardess uniform.

2. More than a dozen designs were submitted to Air Canada by three firms; M. Robichaud of Montreal, Tip Top Tailors of Toronto, and B. Reig of New York.

3. The uniform chosen was designed by M. Robichaud. It was chosen because it was considered to be the most functional, fashionable and economical. Designer's fee is included in 1 above.

4. Tenders were called for manufacture of the uniform; five firms submitted bids, and the contract was awarded to Tip Top Tailors of Toronto.

DEATHS IN HUNTING ACCIDENTS

Question No. 2,129—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

In each province, in each of the last ten years, how many shooting deaths have occurred in hunting accidents?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Attached is a table showing the number of fatalities due to accidents involving firearms, 1954-1963. Of these, it is not known how many involved hunting accidents.

FIREARM FATALITIES IN CANADA AND THE PROVINCES, 1954-1963

—	1954	1955	1956	1957	1958	1959	1960	1961	1962	1963
Canada	166	176	163	166	170	167	216	176	189	150
Newfoundland	2	3	2	6	2	3	6	6	4	6
Prince Edward Island	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	—
Nova Scotia	12	16	8	6	15	8	8	7	18	8
New Brunswick	13	7	12	9	4	9	14	7	9	6
Quebec	40	44	37	41	31	40	56	49	46	37
Ontario	38	54	47	43	61	57	71	49	48	44
Manitoba	13	14	12	13	12	10	11	12	12	9
Saskatchewan	14	11	13	12	6	8	19	12	14	12
Alberta	15	11	13	14	14	13	17	16	17	11
British Columbia	17	13	17	21	21	18	12	16	18	16
Yukon	1	—	—	—	2	—	—	—	—	—
Northwest Territories	1	2	2	1	2	1	2	1	2	1

FEDERAL FUNDS FOR MOUNT HOPE AIRPORT, HAMILTON

Question No. 2,130—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Now that the Hamilton city council has agreed to take over Mount Hope airport, have federal funds been made available for the development of this airport?

2. How much has been given, and for what specific purpose or purposes?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. For rehabilitation of essential aircraft manoeuvring areas, including a portion of the aircraft parking area, the taxiway along hangar line, a portion of runway 16-34, and certain other patching and repair work. Final cost has not yet been established but it is expected that total expenditures may be something over $200,000.

DEATH RATES RELATED TO INCOME GROUPS

Question No. 2,133—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

Has the government ever conducted a study of Canadian death rates relative to income groups and, if so, what were the results of this study?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The government has not conducted a study of Canadian death rates relative to income groups.

UNION DUES REMITTED TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Question No. 2,134—Mr. Muir (Lisgar):

Questions

1. For the years ending December 31, 1962 and December 31, 1963, what is the total amount of union dues collected in this country remitted to foreign countries?

2. What is the total amount of such dues remitted to the United States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1 and 2. Information on the total amount of union dues collected in this country and remitted to foreign countries for the years ending December 31, 1962 and December 31, 1963, is being obtained under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. This information will be contained in the annual report which, it is hoped, will be available before the end of the year.

STUDY OF LIVING COSTS OF AGED PERSONS

Question No. 2,135—Mr. Muir (Lisgar):

1. Has the government made a comparison of the income and the living costs of the aged as between those residing in urban and rural areas and, if so, what are the findings of such study?

2. If no such study has been made does the government intend to initiate such a survey?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. Information is not available on living costs of the aged. Total income, by size, for the non-farm population, 70 years of age and over, by sex, for Canada, rural and urban, for the year ended May 31, 1961, is as follows:

	Males		Females
	Rural No.	Urban No.	Rural No.	Urban No.
Without Income	213	1,464	681	5,561
With Income
Under $ 500	994	2,428	2,111	13,418
$ 500-$ 999	55,220	94,279	61,373	195,623
$ 1,000-$1,499	13,589	42,322	7,125	37,661
$ 1,500-$1,999	7,712	29,002	2,121	18,969
$ 2,000-$2,499	4,369	19,347	1,342	11,463
$ 2,500-$2,999	2,723	14,525	551	6,678
$ 3,000-$3,499	1,912	11,754	456	4,086
$ 3,500-$3,999	1,301	8,258	217	2,841
$ 4,000-$4,499	816	6,115	337	3,510
$ 4,500-$4,999	692	4,237
$ 5,000-$5,999	780	6,237
$ 6,000-$9,999	1,191	9,091	415	6,083
$10,000+	564	5,951
Total Number*:	91,863	253,546	76,048	300,332
Average $*:	1,382	2,321	888	1,221

*Persons without income not included.

Source: 1961 Census of Canada, catalogue number 98-501, volume IV.

2. Studies such as indicated are not contemplated at present.

RADIOACTIVITY LEVELS IN MILK

Question No. 2,146—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

What have been the average levels of Strontium 90 and Caesium 137 in Canadian milk in each month of the last three years?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

	Average levels of Strontium 90 in milk			Average levels of Caesium 137 in milk
	1962(a)	1963(b)	1964(b)	1962(a)	1963(c)	1964(c)
January	7.1	19.2	43.1(d)	19.7	—	254
February	7.1	19.1	41.3	19.6	63	250
March	6.9	18.7	40.6	15.6	53	251
April	9.4	17.4	41.5	20.3	80	246
May	13.7	24.5	46.4	35.6	112	245
June	20.2	45.2	42.5	77.8	187	227
July	26.5	46.4	37.9	125.0	239	209
August	26.0	52.7	32.5	106.5	260	175
September	25.9	52.3	32.7(d)	83.8	232	147(d)
October	32.0	45.0	—	90.9	203	—
November	32.7	42.3	—	90.3	230	—
December	27.1	40.5	—	102.0	245	—

(a) Powdered milk samples, results expressed as picocuries per gram calcium.

(b) Fluid milk samples, results expressed as picocuries per liter. (1 liter contains approximately 1.2 grams calcium).

(c) Fluid milk samples, results expressed as picocuries per liter. (1 liter contains approximately 1.5 gram potassium).

(d) Preliminary estimate.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, MEGANTIC CONSTITUENCY, QUE.

Question No. 2,151—Mr. Langlois:

With reference to the construction of post offices for the municipalities of Notre Dame de la Guadeloupe, Coleraine Station, Leeds village, Garthby Station and St. Méthode, in the constituency of Mégantic (a) to whom were the various contracts awarded (b) who submitted tenders (c) what was the price for each of the various post offices, and (d) what were the dimensions of each of the post offices?

[Translation]

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): The only contract awarded to date was on September 25, 1964, for the construction of a new post office building at La Guadeloupe.

(a) La Guadeloupe Construction Engr., La Guadeloupe, Que.

(b) La Guadeloupe Construction Engr., La Guadeloupe, Que., Herve Lessard & Sigefroid Labrecque, East Broughton, Que., Claude Bourassa, Victoriaville, Que., Maquis Freres Limitée, Sherbrooke, Que., Girard Frere Engr., Chicoutimi, Que.

(c) $24,477.

(d) 37 feet by 38 feet—one storey.

[Text]

IDENTICAL TENDERS FOR ROCK SALT, HAMILTON, ONT.

Question No. 2,163—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Has the restrictive trade practices commission investigated, within the past three years, charges of identical tenders for rock salt submitted to the city of Hamilton, Ontario and, if so, what were the results of such investigation?

2. Was legal action taken on the basis of these findings?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): 1. Yes, complaints were received from a number of cities, towns and other municipalities in Ontario, including the city of Hamilton, and the inquiry dealt largely, but not entirely, with conditions in Ontario. As the facts fell short of establishing collusion between the two Canadian producers, the inquiry was discontinued by the director of investigation and research in March 1964 with the concurrence of the restrictive trade practices commission. The discontinuance of the inquiry is reported in the annual report of the director for the year ended March 31, 1964, at pages 27-28.

2. Answered by 1.

NATIONAL DEFENCE BUDGETS

Question No. 2,173—Mr. Prittie:

1. What was the total amount of the budgets of the Department of National Defence for the fiscal years 1949-50 to 1962-63 inclusive?

2. What was the total amount of actual expenditures by the Department of National Defence for the fiscal years 1949-50 to 1962-63 inclusive?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. $22,180,643,239.

2. $20,773,247,021.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

*LOUISBURG, N.S., HISTORIC SITE

Question No. 2,102—Mr. Fisher:

1. What are the plans for the establishment of an archives and library at Louisburg, Nova Scotia, including an estimated cost, the estimated space proposed, the number of books and documents to be housed, the scale and qualifications of the staff, the number of exhibition cases and tables, the kind of provisions made for the use of scholars, and the structure of the management in relation to other government departments?

2. How much money is now being spent on research in England, France and the United States with regard to the Louisburg project?

3. What historical data is being collected and how relevant is the data in so far as the reconstruction project is concerned?

4. What are the names of the persons carrying out the research, their academic qualifications and experience and the amount and method of payment of their salaries and expenses?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, motion 178 is acceptable to the government. Would Your Honour please call motions 176, 177, 179 and 180. I ask that motion 170 be allowed to stand.

USE OF WHARF, PORT SIMPSON, B.C.

Motion No. 178—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between the Department of Transport or any agency or branch thereof in British Columbia, and any person, group, or organization, since January 1, 1964, relating to the wharf at Port Simpson, B.C., and relating to the loading and/or unloading of freight thereat.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, NOTRE DAME DE LA GUADELOUPE, QUE.

Motion No. 176—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and letters exchanged between the Minister of Public Works, the Postmaster General and the municipality of Notre Dame de la Guadeloupe in the constituency of Mégantic, concerning the construction of a post office and the acquisition of land for this purpose, since January 1, 1958.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, when this motion came before the house last week, in the absence of the hon. member for Mégantic I asked that it stand for two weeks. I have since talked with the hon. member and have cleared up the point that was disturbing me. He has asked for the production of all correspondence, telegrams and letters exchanged since January 1, 1958, between the Minister of Public Works, the Postmaster General and the municipality named in the motion. On the understanding that it is agreed by the hon. member that correspondence between the municipality in question, the Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General will be produced, but not correspondence between ministers, the motion is accepted.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation as expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

FEDERAL EXPENDITURES BY PROVINCES

Motion No. 177—Mr. Grégoire:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the report prepared by officials of the Department of Finance concerning federal expenditures in each of the provinces of Canada.

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should say that there is no such report as suggested in the motion. At the same time I should add that work has been done by the officials, and is continuing, to provide information for the minister with which to answer the large number of questions that have been asked on this subject matter. In view of the circumstances I would respectfully invite the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, the report we would like to have tabled is the one which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) promised October 7 last, when he denied certain figures mentioned in the motion. We believe that the Minister of Finance could at least table what he promised us October 7 last.

[Text]

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the precise answer given by the minister, but I respectfully suggest that the hon. member put his question upon the order paper and I undertake to see that it is given attention.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the explanation of the parliamentary secretary I wonder whether it would serve any useful purpose to demand the production of privileged material. It seems to me that no particular purpose is being served, and I wonder whether in the circumstances the hon. member would care to withdraw his motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I would request that this matter be discussed at five o'clock, Thursday, in view of the fact that those are not privileged documents, but material prepared by the officials of the Department of Finance and which the Minister of Finance said he would communicate to this house at the appropriate time. If those documents are too incriminating for the government, let him say so; otherwise he should produce them, since he told us on August 7 last that those documents existed.

[Text]

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to enter into a debate with the hon. member, but I cannot accept the suggestion that there is anything compromising in the position of the Minister of Finance. The minister has been answering as expeditiously as possible all the questions that have been asked on this subject matter, and answered a very lengthy one today. I can only repeat the answer I gave a short time ago, and would again ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: I wish that this matter be transferred for debate at five o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 47 this motion is transferred to notices of motions (papers).

WHARF CONSTRUCTION, NORTH SYDNEY, N.S.

Motion No. 179—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

That an order of the house do issue for copies of the original and final specifications required in connection with the terminal development construction of a public wharf at North Sydney, Nova Scotia, the tenders for which closed September 30, 1964.

Mr. G. Roy McWilliam (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this motion refers to copies of the original and final specifications. I am advised that there is only one set of specifications, and on this understanding this motion is acceptable.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the parliamentary secretary is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH WEATHER ENGINEERING CORPORATION

Motion No. 180—Mr. Laprise:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence and telegrams exchanged since 1954, between the Weather Engineering Corporation of Canada and the Department of Transport or any agency of the department.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has informed us that he is willing to limit his motion to the tabling of the correspondence between the Weather Engineering Corporation and the department on the sole subject of rainmaking. Subject to that reservation, there is no objection to the motion.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the parliamentary secretary to the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CONSIDERATION OF OBJECTIONS TO PENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the amount of controversy there is in connection with the sections of the labour code to which strong objection has been taken by the trucking industry, and the report today that the government does not intend to take any action to remove the differences between the industry and the department, would the minister for the sake of the record give the house some general idea of what he has in mind? He has told me on two occasions that he thought he had a plan whereby the criticisms which have been offered would be met and the dangers to the industry would be avoided. My correspondence in this regard is very lengthy, and telegrams are being received, and the minister must be experiencing the same situation. Surely he would be willing, in order to let the industry know something of what he has in mind, to summarize his ideas in this connection.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if it is agreeable to the Leader of the Opposition I would be glad to take this question as notice and at the first opportunity meet his wishes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Could the minister look into this and give us an answer tomorrow? At the moment we are dealing with interim supply and we do not want to go into this field. We would very much appreciate a statement, because the industry is quite exercised over the situation.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question. When the minister is answering the Leader of the Opposition I wonder if he would advise the house whether he has referred this bill to and got an opinion from the Department of Justice as to what industries are affected, so that Canadian industries and working groups will know to whom this bill applies?

Mr. MacEachen: Unfortunately Mr. Speaker, I will not be in the house tomorrow, but perhaps I should indicate to the Leader of the Opposition today that I have under consideration a change to the transitional clause in part I covering hours of work.

At the present time it is possible within the terms of the bill for an industrial establishment to come forward and indicate that the operation of the hours of work provision will be detrimental either to the employees, the industry, the operation or the business. If that is demonstrated it is possible to grant an extension of 18 months for a period of adjustment. That possibility is included in the present terms of the bill and gives a considerable time latitude in adjusting to the requirements of the bill.

However, in addition to that I have under consideration a change under which, in certain circumstances and following appropriate inquiry, an extension of time would be granted beyond the present terms of the legislation. I think if this change is put into appropriate form it will meet the major objections of those operations which will find it difficult to implement the hours of work provisions at once, or even over a period of 18 months.

I believe that during the committee of the whole stage we can discuss this aspect and satisfy hon. members that appropriate steps are being taken.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Perhaps I may be allowed to ask one more question, Mr. Speaker. Has the trucking industry, or any other industry to which reference has been made, had this suggestion submitted to it so the committee might have the benefit, through the minister, of their views and advice regarding the pertinence and also the effectiveness of these amendments he has in mind?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions with the various trucking interests and have indicated to them that this is what I have in mind. It seemed that a week or so ago when I met a large group of truckers this satisfied them. It may be that they have had further thoughts and that something of this kind, which I did not present in the detail I have given today, would satisfy them.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether there is any likelihood that he can give us a copy of the amendments so that we could study them prior to their presentation to the committee of the whole.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, this whole procedure is irregular, because under the rules I should not be permitted to answer questions in respect of a matter on the order paper. I did so, however, to accommodate the interest in this particular case. I do not think the irregularity should be extended further by presenting amendments at this stage before we commence our consideration.

INQUIRY AS TO WINTER WORKS PROGRAM IN NATIONAL PARKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In view of the announcement of the winter works program for Cape Breton national park, will the minister say when we can expect winter works programs for other national parks to be announced, and particularly Fundy national park where the work is desperately needed this winter?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I think there is a winter works program in mind for Fundy. We are endeavouring to accommodate the winter works program in that general area to a time which will permit us to accomplish it before what is regarded as the heavy snow period. We want to get started soon because there comes a time, in January I understand, when it is not possible to continue the work.

Mr. Bell: Do I take it from the minister's statement that they expect snow in Cape Breton before it comes to Fundy?

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister give consideration to the idea of expanding the winter works program as compared with what it was in previous years?

Mr. Laing: I believe the winter works program in Cape Breton national park is at least as high as if not higher than last year.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): May I ask a supplementary question of the minister. Will the minister take a look at the announcement made, in conjunction with the Minister of Labour, with regard to the way the work force is divided up, primarily to the great advantage of the Minister of Labour?

Mr. Laing: I will, and I have.

IMMIGRATION

DAISY MAUD HENRY—CONSIDERATION OF DEPORTATION ORDER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, but before doing so I should like to express our delight at seeing the Minister of Transport back in his seat.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: We are pleased that he has recovered from his indisposition, and we hope he will now be back to his old bouncy self again.

My question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is this. Has he as yet made a decision in respect of the case of Daisy Maud Henry? This case was referred to the minister about two weeks ago and I am inquiring regarding this lady who has asked him to reverse a decision of the appeal board regarding a deportation order which was issued against her.

[Mr. Laing.]

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe I gave a reply to that question on Monday last.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, as I recall the minister's explanation at that time, it was that he was going to look at the report when it was received. Has the minister decided to reverse the decision and cancel the deportation order?

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I made a statement on Monday on this subject.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Could the minister tell us when the second part of the report of Mr. Justice René Lippé concerning the dockers retirement fund will be published? According to my information, the judge is already in possession of this report; we would like to know when it will be made available to the public.

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I should like to take this question as notice and answer the hon. member later.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SUGGESTED DANGER OF CURTAILMENT OF HOSPITAL AUTONOMY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In a speech this week delivered by her parliamentary secretary on her behalf she issued a warning to the hospitals saying that their autonomy could be curtailed. Can the minister specify how much curtailment could take place, by whom and at what level of government the curtailment procedure would be initiated?

Mr. Speaker: This question is obviously important and interesting, but perhaps it should be put on the order paper.

ROYAL COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS RESPECTING MEDICAL CARE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Because of the introduction of a rather inferior medical plan in the province of Ontario, is the minister considering speeding up the introduction of the recommendations of the Hall commission, to provide a proper federal medical plan?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I suppose my hon. friend is referring to a headline in a Toronto morning newspaper which indicated that a report is being made to the provincial government. As yet there is no indication that they are going to bring in what my hon. friend has characterized as an inferior plan.

However, I would like to say that my department is working at top speed in order to have recommendations to make to the premiers of the provinces, but because it is a matter of such great cost and importance I do not think it would be possible to have an earlier target than that already selected and announced.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR AGENDA OF DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Some time ago the minister indicated that he would be making public the agenda for the dominion-provincial conference on Indian affairs. Inasmuch as this conference is just around the corner, I wonder if the minister could tell us what the agenda is.

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question directed to me by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), I believe, I said that the members of the house who would express the wish to be made aware of the topics to be discussed during that conference could secure a list from me.

As the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam had expressed his interest, I sent him a letter listing the questions to be discussed. I will be glad to send all hon. members of the house who so wish a list of the subjects to be discussed during that conference.

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question relating to the answer given just a moment ago by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration regarding the agenda for the dominion-provincial conference on Indian affairs. I understood the minister to say he undertook some time ago to send a copy of the conference agenda to members who expressed interest in it, but that is not what he said at the time he gave an answer to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam on October 9. As recorded at page 8924 of Hansard for that date the minister said:

> Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to send to the hon. members a copy of the agenda which lists the problems to be discussed.

Some of us have been waiting for the transmission of that document, or for it to be made public, so we can communicate the information contained in it to people back home. It is unfortunate that the words used by the minister on October 9 did not truly or accurately reflect his intentions.

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I noted that the plural was used in the reference to "the hon. members", while what I said then, in reply to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), was that I would be pleased to send "to the hon. member" a copy of the agenda. That is what I did.

However, I shall gladly send a similar copy of the agenda to all hon. members anxious to get one.

[Text]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COLUMBIA RIVER—ABSENCE OF NATIONAL FLAGS AT SIGNING OF TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, following up a question put to him yesterday by the hon. member for Regina City. Can he now tell the house whether a deliberate decision was made by the officials of his department that the Canadian red ensign and the stars and stripes would not be used as a backdrop for the ceremonial signing of the Columbia river treaty, which took place in the railway committee room?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I made some inquiries, and I can find no confirmation for the alleged statement.

PUBLIC WORKS

OTTAWA—LEASE OF SPACE BY DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Industry. On March 4, in answer to my question, the minister's parliamentary secretary stated that the Department of Industry had leased the entire 11 storey Macdonald building on Slater street in Ottawa, with the exception of the ground floor, at a rental of $384,000 a year, with 119 private offices, 59 shared offices and 29 general offices. Can the minister confirm the report that, because of additional personnel, the department is now taking over space in another building?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Perhaps I should—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unless we can clean this matter up very quickly, it is a typical question for the order paper.

Mr. Drury: I think I can. There are a couple of points. First, the Minister of Industry has no parliamentary secretary. Second, the Department of Industry does not lease space in Ottawa; this is the responsibility of the Department of Public Works. Third, the Department of Industry is not expanding its premises or personnel.

HOUSING

OTTAWA—USE OF FORMER GIRLS' RESIDENCE BY RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): My question concerns possibly two departments, the Department of Public Works and the Postmaster General. In view of the absence of the Minister of Public Works perhaps the Postmaster General can consult with his colleagues. Has the Postmaster General, in his capacity as minister responsible for housing, received requests from organizations or individuals suggesting that Laurentian terrace on Sussex street, the former girls' residence, be maintained as a residence for retired civil servants who only have small pensions as income?

[Mr. Bigg.]

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper?

Mr. McBain: Mr. Speaker, with all deference, I believe this building is slated for demolition soon and I should like to receive a reply.

Mr. Speaker: Unless demolition is starting this afternoon, I do not see the urgency.

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE EVICTIONS FROM VETERANS HOUSING PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Has any progress been made in resolving the differences between C.M.H.C. and the group of veterans in the Vancouver Fraserview project who are refusing to pay the increased rentals demanded by the government?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, this is rather a difficult question to answer on orders of the day. I can say, however, that the deadline contained in the notices to the tenants does not expire until midnight Saturday night, and according to the last report that I got 50 of the tenants have not yet paid the increased rent. If they do not pay it, unless hardship can be established proceedings will be taken in an orderly way to enforce the eviction notices.

I believe not more than two cases of hardship were brought to the attention of C.M.H.C. and both these have been dealt with to the satisfaction of the persons concerned. I might add that one person, the lady whose name was mentioned during debate or in the course of a question period in this chamber, and who was referred to in the newspapers, said she had never authorized the use of her name, that she always had received good treatment and was quite happy.

Until midnight Saturday night I can make no other answer than that we are proceeding along the lines we have indicated more than once during the last few weeks would be followed.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO BOARD OF REVIEW ON "HATE" LITERATURE DISTRIBUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): I should like to ask the Postmaster General a question relating to the distribution of hate literature. Is the minister in a position to announce the composition of the board of review to which he referred last Friday? Can he give the names of the members, the place of hearing and the date of hearing?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the hon. member for Wellington South is not here. He has put two questions on the subject, and I assured him I would be glad to give information to the house early this week.

I am pleased to announce, Mr. Speaker, that a board of review has been established. The chairman will be Mr. Justice Dalton Wells of the court of appeal of Ontario. The two other members will be Mr. Roderigue Bédard, Q.C., associate deputy minister of justice and Mr. G. Douglas McIntyre of the Department of National Revenue. The board will sit on November 23 and other days if necessary. The exact place of hearing has not been determined. It may be in this building or it may be in the justice building. This will be settled by the board of review itself.

There was another point mentioned by the hon. member for Wellington South. He asked if the meetings of the board of review would be in camera or would be open to the public. I would point out to the hon. member for Spadina and other members that while the responsibility for appointing the members of the board of review lies with the Postmaster General, the act goes on to provide that the board of review shall have the powers of a commission under part I of the Inquiries Act, so I presume it will be for the board of review to determine whether the hearings will be open to the public or held in camera.

OTTAWA—REFUSAL TO CASH OLD AGE PENSION CHEQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Postmaster General of which I have sent him notice. Is the minister aware that in Ottawa postal substation No. 47 a postal clerk informs customers that old age pension cheques will be cashed only if the money is to be spent in the store housing that post office; and will he look into this situation?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of the question. I would draw the attention of the hon. member and the house to the fact that post offices, whether they are postal stations or otherwise, are not banking institutions; they are not set up to cash cheques. However, there is a provision in the manual on financial procedure that government of Canada and provincial government cheques, as well as cheques of crown corporations, may be accepted in payment of postal values and services, providing the patron presenting the cheque is properly identified. There is a further provision that this can only be done on the postmaster's own responsibility, with certain conditions attached.

I might say I had a field officer look into this matter after I received notice of the question this morning, and he informs me that about three weeks ago a person presented a cheque at the post office wicket in question with the request that it be cashed; that there were not sufficient funds in the postal till to cash it, and there was no obligation to cash it. However, the person was told that if he or she wished to cash the cheque it could be presented to the store in which the post office occupies a section, and if the proprietor of the store wished to cash it, it could be cashed there.

STAMP TO COMMEMORATE BIRTH OF SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question similar to but more urgent than the one directed to the Postmaster General by my colleague from Grey-Bruce. Is he considering issuing a commemorative stamp to honour the sesquicentennial of the birth of Sir John A. Macdonald, which is now only about 10 weeks away?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): I will have to take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

ONTARIO—SHIPPING SPACE FOR BEAN GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport and welcome him back to the house. For some time now I have been endeavouring to get space for a shipment of beans out of Canada. Before the minister left he directed the request to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. This morning I received a letter from Cook Brothers to the effect that no space has been made available as yet.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will try to give these beans a push.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, in the Minister of Agriculture's absence I should like to ask the Minister of Forestry a question which, I am sure, he will be interested in answering since he is aware of the demands made by the Quebec farmers at their fortieth annual convention. Moreover, this question springs from the reply given by the minister to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition last Friday.

Can the minister tell us whether he met the representatives of the Catholic farmers' union with a view to setting a date for a meeting between the Minister of Agriculture and the representatives of the province of Quebec and those of the farmers' union? If so, what is that date?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CONTRIBUTIONS BY BUYERS ON BEHALF OF FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the regulations regarding unemployment insurance for fishermen specify that a fisherman may have a contribution paid on his behalf by the buyer only in respect of a catch which is delivered to that buyer in a face to face transaction, and as this regulation is working undue hardship on the fishermen of Nova Scotia, especially in the Chester area, where delivery of fresh fish must be made by common carrier, will the minister take action to amend these regulations so that in the absence of a real employer-employee relationship the landings of the fishermen may be considered eligible for unemployment insurance stamps?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the minister has heard the question, but perhaps the hon. member would put it on the order paper.

[Mr. Cardiff.]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED COMMUNIST INFILTRATION OF FRENCH NETWORK

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Secretary of State whether he was in touch with the head of the C.B.C. to ascertain the situation that was referred to by Hon. Bona Arsenault—I don't know what hon. gentlemen are laughing at. Perhaps my pronunciation is not the best, but I do remember that in the British House of Commons on one occasion Sir Winston Churchill called Sir Stafford Cripps Sir Stifford Crapps. Has the Secretary of State been in touch with the president of the C.B.C. in this regard, and have any investigations been made by the government of Quebec to produce supporting evidence on the presence of communists in the C.B.C. in Quebec?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the question as raised by the right hon. gentleman the other day has been referred to the C.B.C. I am quite sure that if we could have a definition of the phrase "left wing tendencies" it would certainly make things much easier for the C.B.C. to give an answer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, Mr. Speaker, I asked about communists. Is the minister in a position where he does not know what a communist is, and needs a definition?

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Does the Secretary of State intend to invite Hon. Bona Arsenault to come before the committee on privileges and elections, or another committee, to define what he means by someone who has communist or socialist tendencies?

Mr. Lamontagne: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

CANADIAN COASTGUARD

APPOINTMENT OF ADMINISTRATOR FOR TRAINING COLLEGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Was it necessary for the department to reach into the ranks of the retired to find an administrator for the proposed coastguard college at Point Edward?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The hon. gentleman, as is not unusual, has his facts wrong. No appointment has been made to this position, because the college has not yet been established. What I did was to approve a suggestion that in the planning phase we should take advantage of the undoubted abilities of Captain Brand, who has great experience and who was the main initiator of the idea which is going to give this college to Point Edward.

Mr. MacInnis: I may say now to the Minister of Transport that I am not, as he tries to make out, usually wrong regarding these matters. A written announcement has appeared saying that Captain Brand has been appointed, temporarily at least, and my question was intended to find out from the department whether it was necessary, having in mind all the men in the services, particularly in the navy, who are being "cut", for the Department of Transport to go into the field of retired personnel. I am not questionning the captain's qualifications.

Mr. Speaker: I think the question has been stated. I do not know whether there is any further answer.

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacInnis: Order has been called.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is raising a question of privilege and I should like to hear what he has to say.

Mr. MacInnis: I have stated before, Mr. Speaker, that since it is your duty to call order in this house I do not intend to pay any attention to yells from the other side. All I want to say on my question of privilege is this. I am permitted to ask a question here, and if the minister so wishes he can answer it. If he does not wish to answer, that is something I must accept. But I also want an opportunity to answer what was not an answer to my question but a statement by the minister in reference to the question I brought up. He never gave any answer. He got up and made his usual political attack about what is going on. He made a statement rather than an answer to the question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will have an opportunity after ten o'clock to debate the matter by giving notice.

Mr. MacInnis: I intend to do so.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think perhaps I ought to apologize to the hon. member. If I said anything offensive to him I did not intend to do so. But I had thought that the hon. gentleman, like the other members from Cape Breton, was so pleased that this coastguard college was being established at Point Edward that he would have been very glad we took the most competent man immediately available to get on with the job as quickly as possible. It may not have been necessary, but in this particular case it seemed to me that it was advisable. I thank the hon. gentleman for showing his affection and esteem for me on my first day back in the house.

Mr. MacInnis: A further supplementary question. Will the minister not agree that the idea of a coastguard school in Cape Breton originated not, as he said, with an idea of Captain Brand but with a co-ordinator appointed by the Stanfield government who raised this question with the previous government as, I suggest, will be found in the hon. gentleman's files?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think this is the time to go into ancient history, but I know that when I became minister Captain Brand was very keen to get on with this thing. He kept at me until action was taken and, I may say, we have got on with it.

Mr. Grafftey: I had a supplementary question I should like to put to the Secretary of State—

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. We are already three minutes over our time. The time was up at 3.25.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $740,710,974.77, being the aggregate of

(a) two twelfths of the total of all of the items to be voted in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, as reduced, except finance item 15, mines and technical surveys item 25, national research council item 10, and transport items 15 and 25 for which the proportion is one twelfth and atomic energy item 5, external affairs item 20, forestry item 25 and legislation item 20 for which no proportion is being released, $651,829,576.84;

(b) an additional two twelfths of the amount of public works item 70 (schedule A), of the said main estimates, $666,666.67;

(c) an additional one twelfth of the amount of fisheries items 5 and 10, legislation item 5, mines and technical surveys item 70, post office item 1 and public works item 40 (schedule B), of the said main estimates, $20,263,800.00;

(d) two twelfths of all of the items to be voted in the supplementary estimates (A), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except national defence item 56a, and loans, investments and advances items L12a, L17a and L37a for which no proportion is being released, $20,612,522.50;

(e) an additional two twelfths of the amount of transport item 103a (schedule C), of the said supplementary estimates (A), $872,966.67;

(f) nine twelfths of the total of the items to be voted in the supplementary estimates (B), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $46,215,108.75;

(g) two twelfths of the amount of transport item 103b (schedule D), of the said supplementary estimates (B), $250,333.34;
be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965.

Mr. Bigg: At ten o'clock last night I was discussing the need for more effective C.B.C. coverage in northern Alberta, and I was complaining that so often in these matters the government in power—and I am not referring specifically to any one government—is inclined to ignore the sitting member despite the fact that he often has considerable knowledge of local affairs and local needs. I am appealing to the minister who is in charge of the spending of the money to agree to at least consult the local member in these cases including, of course, myself.

I understand plans are on the drawing board to erect a television booster station in or near the village of Smith. These booster stations are expensive. I am interested in the taxpayers' money as well as in the provision of proper coverage for my constituents, and suggest that if the station were erected in or near the town of Athabasca television coverage would be extended to perhaps 20,000 people. If the station were built in or near the town of Smith it would only duplicate the booster station already erected at Grande Prairie, and would in no way improve reception in the area.

At the same time I should like to suggest that a similar station be erected in or near the Bonnyville-Cold Lake area, particularly in view of the fact that there are some 5,000 airmen and their families stationed in this area on duty away from home. If we budgeted properly for the C.B.C. and spent a few million dollars on providing reception in these outlying areas we would be getting better results for our money than we will by building television palaces in cities such as Toronto and Montreal. I do not think that is a fair distribution of the taxpayers' money.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I think the corporation has done well in many of its programs, but I should like to add my voice to those who say the leaders of the C.B.C., the directors, should take another look at the programming to see whether we cannot reduce unnecessary sensationalism and give the family viewer a chance to send his children off to a show if some of the programs are considered by the parents a little too adult for juvenile consumption.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words on the question of simultaneous translation, which is closely connected with matters of broadcasting and culture. I think the time is now ripe to have simultaneous translation of our debates in this House of Commons extended to the press and public galleries. If it is necessary for us here in the House of Commons to have simultaneous translation—and I am all for it—I think this service should be extended so that people who come here, and particularly those visting us from the province of Quebec, can hear the greater number of speeches that are still made in English translated into French and relayed to the galleries. In this way their visit to Ottawa would be fully instructive and they would go back home to the great province of Quebec knowing that we are in fact one big, happy country and we are trying here day by day to understand their problems and needs in exactly the same way as they understand ours.

Mr. Chairman, I wish I could make this appeal in French. Personally I am doing my best to learn this language, and I would recommend this course to every member of the house. It is an enriching experience to try to become proficient in any language. I hope that within a year or two, if I keep working the way I have been, I will be able to make this sort of appeal without the necessity of translation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bigg: I repeat, because I think it is important, that I believe it is time we translated these speeches for the press and public galleries, so that we do in fact have complete equality in this house as far as our two official languages are concerned.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, my remarks in this debate will be directed to the question of the C.B.C., and I hope to take just a little different viewpoint from what has been taken by previous speakers. I would like at this time to comment on some of the things said by members who have taken the opportunity in this debate to speak on the C.B.C. and to express my opinion that they have contributed a great deal in making this a real, parliamentary debate. I pay tribute to speakers from both sides of the house who have dealt with both sides of the question. I think this is as it should be when we indulge in real, parliamentary debate. I believe a great deal of very useful information has been brought out in the debate and is on the public record in regard to this most important topic.

This afternoon I would like to speak in direct support of a parliamentary committee being set up to look into the question of broadcasting. I do so because I had the privilege of sitting on a previous broadcasting committee in which we had the opportunity to hear from officials of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I believe this served a most useful purpose, because many of the questions that were in our minds and which we thought were very vital indeed were answered to our satisfaction by the representatives of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. This was not always the case, but it was true in a good many instances. We had an opportunity to meet with and question the various officials who face this tremendous responsibility of satisfying the people of Canada as far as broadcasting is concerned. I believe this is all to the good.

Some accusations of a very serious nature have been put forward in the various speeches delivered in this chamber. These accusations have concerned the activities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I would think, sir, that the members of this crown corporation would themselves welcome an opportunity of having a forum in which to present their side of the story; that they would welcome an opportunity of answering these various questions. They have a great responsibility in providing programming for Canada because this is a very complicated subject. Certainly the men who handle this tremendous sum of money do not make these decisions or undertake these huge expenditures without real consideration and a definite policy in view.

I fail to understand why the government, in its wisdom, would refuse to consider setting up such a forum in which the corporation could make known to members of parliament its views, purposes and contemplations with regard to future expenditures. Naturally, when we speak of $100 million and are considering such large amounts of money, every member of parliament is concerned. This is a great deal of money. I believe that the way in which questions have been answered, where no definite information is given, causes members of parliament to wonder whether something is indeed not as it should be. As far as I can determine, Mr. Chairman, out of the debates and the general opinion across this country, there is a growing opinion that parliament has absolutely no control over this crown corporation; there is a growing opinion across this country that they have a blank cheque as far as the government is concerned. In other words, no matter how much money they want, all they have to do is put in a requisition and it is given to them. There is a growing opinion across this country that this corporation is an entity unto itself; they make all their own decisions, they go their own merry way, they do not have any regard for anyone as far as their responsibilities are concerned, and the people of Canada will pick up the cheque.

This is what is bothering the people of Canada; this is what bothers people in my riding. We are in just a little different position than people in some of the ridings of hon. members who have taken part in this debate. This is because of our geographical location. Many members have said, "If you do not like the programs, turn them off". This is exactly what happens in my area. Because of our close proximity to the United States we have seven or eight alternate channels, some of them being United States stations, and this gives us a variety of programs. What happens is that people turn off the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation program and turn to American radio and television. This is why we who live in the area are so vitally concerned that the C.B.C. programming be of the very finest calibre, in order that our children and the people in the area get the Canadian news, the Canadian facts and Canadiana; so we are not constantly subjected to American views and the American way of life. This is a problem as far as we are concerned.

It is true that there is much discussion about the quality of the programming and some of the programs that have been termed off-colour. Certainly there must be some degree of dissatisfaction or we would not have received these complaints. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that for this reason a committee on broadcasting should be set up, so that the men responsible for the programming of the C.B.C. could come here and give their side of the picture. Perhaps there are very definite reasons for the programs which have been aired by the C.B.C.; but until their side of the picture is given, hon. members have a right to information as to the C.B.C.'s policy in this regard. Hon. members on the government side of the house have in one or two instances tried to explain why the policy of the C.B.C. should not be subject to examination; they have said that the C.B.C. should have an absolutely free hand. If the C.B.C. were to undertake the censoring of their own programs, which I am sure they do, then perhaps we would not have any of this dissatisfaction. But we want to know to what degree they do censor their own programs.

I think that most of the dissatisfaction to which I have referred arises out of the times we are living in now. We live in an era we find hard to understand; an era of irresponsibility to a degree among our young people; an era where justice and laws are challenged; an era where adults are not sure that their teachings to their children are going to be understood or obeyed. This is an era of the greatest unease which perhaps this world has ever seen. I am sure that much of the criticism of some of the programming of the C.B.C. in its television and radio transmissions, as well as matter appearing in magazines, periodicals and other lines of communication, arises out of this fear. We feel that these channels of communication and the teachings of adults today are not checking this trend in our youth who seem, in the opinion of the people to whom I have talked, always trying to keep just one step ahead regardless of which direction they are going. I think this is what is alarming our people today.

Is this state of affairs going to lead us to a greater breakdown in morals? Is it going to lead to a greater breakdown in our sense of responsibility? Are we paying taxes to this huge corporation which is running along without control in order to lead our young people in this direction? That is the fear which is expressed.

Hence, Mr. Chairman, I sincerely feel that if a broadcasting committee could be set up it would have an opportunity, not of censoring but of questioning the men with the responsibility for programming. They could be asked what they feel is right, what they feel the nation needs and how programs should be presented in the future. In this way I think there could be more of a sense of confidence in this huge medium.

The people are alarmed at what they feel is this sense of irresponsibility. They are alarmed at statements to the effect that there is a communist infiltration in the C.B.C. In this day and age when something is unexplainable and not understood by the people they think communist forces are at work. We want to know as members of parliament what is the C.B.C.'s answer to this charge and how they are monitoring their entire set-up to guard against being the tool of such a movement in Canada.

Another matter bothering the people of the country is this. Last year the C.B.C. spent $85 million. This year their budget is $100 million. This means only one thing to the people: an enormous sum of money. People cannot picture it mentally. They have never seen such a sum piled up or counted. They have no idea what is $1 million, let alone $100 million; they have no idea how high it would be or how wide or deep. To them it is just a tremendous sum of money, and they want to know what is being done with that money. Is this crown corporation building a huge bureau, a huge edifice, to be used like an empire? The people see on reading various financial statements that a few years ago the C.B.C. operated with $20 million. Now they require $100 million. When people walk down the street and see the beautiful big building just completed here in Ottawa for the C.B.C. they want to know whether it was necessary that it be built. They want to know whether we have to spend millions of dollars here in Ottawa when people elsewhere in the country have no radio or television coverage; and I think they should have the answer to this question. Certainly these huge edifices in Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal would not have been built unless they were needed; but the C.B.C. should have the opportunity of explaining why they were necessary and what is their program for the future.

When we had the broadcasting corporation before the committee previously we began to learn what a tremendous entity it was and what a complex and technical nature it comprised. I have heard it suggested in this house that the broadcasting committee should be divided into subcommittees, each one to deal with a particular facet of our broadcasting picture. I think that is very advisable because it has a complicated structure. I have heard it argued that we are not technicians and cannot supervise programming. It is true we know nothing of the technical aspects of broadcasting or television, and we do not want to. But as representatives of Canadian citizens we do want to know what is going on, where we are going in the future and what is planned for this huge edifice.

We have heard rumours that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is a gifted favour club; that there are certain reporters and newspapermen connected with the C.B.C. as well as certain television specialists and cameramen who are sent around the world on special news projects. The Olympic games was a prime example. No one who watched the broadcasts and heard the commentary at the Olympic games can voice any criticism; it was an excellent type of program. But I have heard it said in my riding that there were more C.B.C. personnel in Japan than there were Canadian athletes. The people want to know how much such a thing costs, and how much it costs to put on a program.

These are some of the main questions we are asked as members of parliament. This is why I think it is so necessary that we be given an opportunity to pass these questions along to the C.B.C. management. The minister responsible is questioned in the house day after day but gives us the stock answer that he will pass on these questions to the C.B.C., and that is the end of them. We have heard it said with regard to a certain program—I am not going into the details of it—that of 100 telephone calls received 70 expressed indignation at the program and 30 expressed approval. We want to know what happens when the public says it does not like a certain program. Is the program changed? Do the C.B.C. take into consideration the views of the people in future programming or are these views ignored entirely? Unfortunately no matter what the people say their views are entirely ignored by the C.B.C. We should like an opportunity to question some of these officials of the C.B.C. who are directly responsible and find out what are the channels. If a program is not liked or brings on tremendous public indignation, what is the approach to the C.B.C.? Whom must we contact, and what is done about the complaints?

These are some of the questions the C.B.C. could answer if there were a forum. Unless they are given this opportunity the people at large will be more suspicious than ever; and we members of parliament are going to be more suspicious too. When the estimates of the C.B.C. are before us we are going to be asked to grant this considerable sum of money. As was pointed out by other hon. members, we do not want to give an open cheque to this crown corporation when we do not know what is going to be done with the money. That would not be fair. When the estimates of other departments of government are before the house we can question the very last dollar and get the answers we wish —or at least we have the opportunity to ask questions. This has never been so in respect of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

By those few remarks, Mr. Chairman, I have earnestly attempted to put on the record the views of the people of my riding. As I have pointed out before, our views are perhaps a little different because we have this variety of choice. However, I should like to repeat that the one regret we do have arises from the fact that people are prone to take advantage of United States television and radio rather than of our own C.B.C. That is why we are so concerned that there be nothing done at all, or allowed to be done, to downgrade the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and its programs. That is why I make an earnest plea once again that this government seriously consider placing this entire matter in the hands of a broadcasting committee. Certainly this matter does not have a partisan flavour, but is something from which there can be no political gain. Surely this is something of concern to all the people of Canada because, after all, the taxpayer is footing the bills.

Mr. Chairman, all governments have followed the practice of placing matters, about which they require further study, in the hands of standing committees. By doing so I think this government would have the finest opportunity possible of solving two problems which now exist. It would provide answers to the questions people are asking generally in Canada about the C.B.C., and at the same time give the staff of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, who I am sure are attempting earnestly to provide the very finest entertainment possible, an opportunity to present their side of the story.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I would have preferred taking advantage of another occasion to draw to the attention of the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), who is not present in this house at this moment, the application of his famous ARDA program in the province of Quebec, and especially in my district of Roberval. The minister will certainly defend his position and say that the projects must be submitted by the provinces, so the officials of his department may examine them.

Nonetheless, all those famous joint programs have a dramatic character: We never know who is really responsible for them, and I am inclined to believe that they were created in order to confuse the situation indefinitely, so that, i findividuals or groups of citizens endeavour to accuse the government, the latter may answer that it is not responsible for such a situation, and the provinces will claim that they alone are not responsible for such projects.

Thus, when the time comes to pay, or when numerous and bothersome delays must be explained, the responsibility is shifted from the federal government to the provinces, and from the provinces to the federal government.

The same situation exists in the ARDA program as well as in any other joint program. I will but mention a second one—the famous winter works program.

I wish to protest energetically against this practice of delaying payments. In fact, I do not know what is what, although I live in Ottawa and continuously attend the sittings of this house. Is it the federal government's fault? Is the government of the province of Quebec sleeping amidst its glory?

However, there is one sure fact: hundreds of farmers, labourers, heads of families, are still waiting for the money they earned last winter; they have not yet received one cent.

Mothers and children suffer for lack of the bare essentials, and this, because the two governments do not agree on how to solve their problems. Programs are suggested, studied and planned. In the meantime, children are starving.

Mr. Chairman, what I have just mentioned exists in two parishes of my county, namely Notre Dame de Lorette and St. Elizabeth.

One government is blamed or the other, when the two are not blamed at the same time. But no solution is ever found, nor does money ever come in. To punish the citizens of these two communities located in a designated area, they are told they will not have any work during the 1964-65 winter season. This then, Mr. Chairman, is how the two Liberal governments, in Quebec and Ottawa, solve the problem of winter unemployment in the electoral district of Roberval.

I particularly wish to point out this situation to the minister, since November 1 is drawing near and conditions are still at the same point as ten months ago in those two parishes. I am told that Ottawa is responsible for this, and I am pretty sure the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) is quite unaware of the situation. Therefore, we expect from the minister a clear and outright statement, so that the truly responsible one might be taken to task once and for all.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

Second, I should like to revert to the matter I dealt with at the outset of my remarks, that is, the ARDA program.

I point out to the Minister of Forestry that the Quebec government has probably lost sight of the real purpose of this joint program.

The act actually provides that its main purpose is agricultural rehabilitation and rural development. In his speech of September 17 last, the minister specified this object quite well, when he stated at the beginning:

> As Minister of Forestry, I am responsible for three distinct programs: the program on forest research, the assistance program for the transportation of feed grain and the ARDA program.

He goes on to say:

> In order to include all those programs under a single department, a motion is now on the order paper of the House of Commons to change the name of the department to that of department of forestry and rural development.

On page 4 of that speech, the minister said:

> In my opinion, one of the most important aspects of the ARDA program is rural development.

The minister makes a clear distinction between the three main points his department is interested in, that is forestry, transportation of feed grain and ARDA. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, after having established those three points, I will show the minister that in my region the ARDA program is not applied as he wanted it to be.

I go over the various press releases from the Minister of Forestry which I have received and very carefully kept.

We find that, in all the other provinces, an effort has been made to make use of the ARDA program, in some cases through a study, in other cases by developing several pastures, and in still other cases by undertaking drainage projects.

This is evidenced in the releases of May 29, 1964 when the minister announced a study to be made during a trip.

> Early next week, two forest rangers of the federal Department of Forestry in Ottawa will leave Fort Nelson in a jet craft 28 feet long on a 1,200 mile trip on the Mackenzie river system.

The minister was announcing certain studies concerning rural redevelopment under the ARDA program.

And there was another project in Saskatchewan, a program of studies of the natural, social and economic resources of the Torch river area, followed by two famous proposed studies which fitted very well in the ARDA program. Then came some wonderful projects in certain provinces, having to do with the establishment of new pastures.

Again through a press release, the minister announced a new pasture in Alberta for a sum of $315,900, another in Saskatchewan covering over 35,000 acres, another community pasture of 19,200 acres, another one in Alberta at a cost of $600,000, still another in Ontario at a cost of $140,000.

Mr. Chairman, all this goes to show that, in the other provinces, the work of the federal and provincial governments was really aimed at implementing the ARDA program.

The same thing applies to drainage in the other provinces. If you refer to the minister's press release, you will see that he announced a drainage project, in Manitoba, at a cost of $476,000.

Mr. Chairman, after this over-all review of those releases, let us see what has been done in Quebec.

The minister will probably reply that the government has transformed crown lands into blueberry fields. Since, as I say, that was done on crown land and not on farm land, as required under the ARDA program, it constitutes forest transformation rather than farm rehabilitation. It is not redevelopment of old bare farm land either.

It is not that I am against such clearing operations, that we may be sorry for in a few years, but I feel both governments took the bear by the tail. In my opinion, they have been concerning themselves with forest development instead of farm development.

If proper use had been made of ARDA, they would have started by rehabilitating existing farms which have always been marginal for lack of necessary governmental help.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, assistance should first have been provided to all farmers who own blueberry fields since, up until now, that is the only problem which has been tackled under ARDA in our district. Then, aid should have been given to those who have set up co-operatives for the rational growing of blueberries. After those two initial stages, it would have been time to set up the syndicates which have now been created for the production of those berries on a commercial scale.

Those syndicates are surely not farm organizations. In my district we call them patronage syndicates. Those are the organizations the minister has seen fit to subsidize.

What has been the result to date? Political protégés have succeeded in making from $2,000 to $3,000 in the space of a few days. What will be the outcome of all that? Surely not employment for the 8,700 families mentioned in the minister's press release of August 3, 1964, which reads as follows:

> The federal Minister of Forestry, Mr. Maurice Sauvé, and the Quebec minister of agriculture and colonization, Mr. Alcide Courcy, announced jointly today... that an amount of $140,000 will be spent for the implementation of an ARDA project whose purpose is to find which areas are suitable for the growing of blueberries. The federal government will pay half the cost of the project.
>
> To this day, nine blueberry fields have been set up in Quebec under ARDA. The new project is to determine whether it would be advisable to develop additional fields of that kind to provide increased income and employment for over 8,700 families in the Abitibi and Lake St. John areas.

In my opinion, those figures were established, not by the minister, but by government officials, who have been rather generous, considering that the expenditure of $135,000 for the setting up of a similar blueberry farm, not too far from my town, has provided employment for only 42 heads of families approximately, the rest of the money, that is $102,000, going to small political protégés to pay for their machinery and for other political advantages in connection with those works.

It is for that reason I say that even if the minister were to set up 20 blueberry fields of that kind, it is not with such works that he will create jobs for 8,700 family heads.

I want to repeat that if millions had been used—true, a few millions were invested in those projects—but if first things had come first, that is, first of all try to improve what already exists—and what already exists is the family blueberry farm—I think it would have been a worthy achievement in my region and then, I think work would have been done within the framework of ARDA, because it would have been a direct assistance to the farmer.

After that stage, grants could have been made to the many blueberry co-operatives that farmers have set up as a result of painstaking efforts in our region. Today, when they would be ready to produce, those same farmers are being frustrated in their rights and cannot get any money from the two governments so as to improve existing blueberry farms.

But what happened? Millions were voted to set up syndicates, what are called blueberry syndicates, to break new ground in the bush and try to grow blueberries—imagine the tremendous mistake—while land only waiting to be improved is neglected. Thousands of acres of growing trees are destroyed, cut down and burnt to try an experiment, while just close by, the same experiment has been carried out for the last 30 years.

That is where I believe the minister committed a serious error. I cannot accuse him directly, because I think that the government of the province of Quebec is also responsible to a certain extent, but when something wrong is done in a province, the one paying a share, that is the provincial government, to the extent of 50 per cent, should be alert and ascertain that the subsidies granted by the federal government to pay the farmers be used for the purposes for which they were intended in the estimates —that is, for the Canadian farmers, as provided for in ARDA.

Those are the two questions I intended to raise. If subsidies are still granted to those famous syndicates, and if the very basis of the most profitable industry in our region is allowed to deteriorate, in my opinion, we are heading toward catastrophe. We might wake up too late, if ever, because we will then realize that we have committed the greatest error of our lives.

I said, a while ago, that we are not directly helping the farmers through those syndicates because—and the minister probably does not know it—50 per cent of their members are not farmers. City people—plumbers, electricians, lawyers, notaries—compose the membership of the blueberry syndicates. The farmers who are members of those syndicates, who intend to operate blueberry fields are not at all encouraged when they realize that four or five political protégés direct those organizations in order to have the number of members required to be granted an operating permit and benefit from the subsidies. I am sure that most—I do not say all—of those who direct those organizations are more interested in taking advantage of the subsidies than in promoting the agricultural economy of our district.

I wish to draw the minister's attention to these points, because I know he will take them into serious consideration. I ask him to conduct an investigation because, after all, we pay 50 per cent of those grants. I would ask him to order an investigation in our districts. He would be amazed at the amount of patronage—not federal but provincial—being dispensed in that field. He would be amazed at the sums of money appropriated for that purpose, which are not used to help our farmers, and even less to provide for agricultural rehabilitation and development as contemplated by ARDA.

That is why I stated at the beginning that the ARDA plan had never been used in our district. It is the forests that are being improved, instead of farm lands which could become profitable in our area, if only both governments would provide assistance.

[Text]

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, I wish to deal with the whole field of cultural affairs connected with the C.B.C. During the last few days criticisms have been voiced on both sides of the chamber about C.B.C. programming. I do not intend to go into the question of programming, although I do not agree with a lot of the things the C.B.C. has done, but this debate has focused attention on some of the problems besetting our national broadcasting policy.

I would like to comment on the remarks of the hon. member for York East on the question of whether we still need the C.B.C. as it is presently constituted. Having been a member of parliament for six years, and having experience of our broadcasting committees, I do not think setting up another committee is sufficient for our purposes. While we might vent our own personal steam on what the C.B.C. is doing, we would come away from such a committee with the same results as previously. The C.B.C. would carry on, each year, in accordance with Parkinson's law, increasing its appropriations which, like Topsy, continually grow. This year it is asking for another $15 million for capital expenditures.

It is time we took a serious look at cultural affairs in Canadian broadcasting. It is time we took a serious look at the $100 million annually spent on the C.B.C., at the $6 million the national film board is using, and at the $380,000 that is necessary for the B.B.G. Mr. Fowler in his commission report on broadcasting in 1957 made some interesting comments on this problem. At that time we were discussing whether we should have a public system of broadcasting and the conclusion was reached that because of economics and geography we required a national broadcasting system subsidized from the public purse. But right at the beginning of his report Mr. Fowler said:

No politician in his sane mind could want to encounter the difficulties and criticisms and headaches of supervising a public broadcasting system if he could possibly avoid it.

This is what we have been hearing during the last three days. I think it is time we took a hard look at the difficulties we encounter in the supervision of this public broadcasting system. The C.B.C. was set up, as we know, in 1932 under the Bennett government and approved without dissension. But things have changed a great deal since those days. They have changed even since Mr. Fowler's report was made. We have entered the jet age, a new age of electronics. In 1957, at the time of this report, it was suggested we could not have a private television network because we could not afford one. What happened a few short years later, when franchises were made available for additional television stations in some of our major cities? There was really keen competition to get these stations. I think we should remember, too, that the Canadian broadcasting system was not set up by government alone. Even in the earlier days of radio and television they depended on private operators in certain cities to link in with their network to provide coverage across Canada. This surely should be the role of government—to supervise the broadcasting industry, to make regulations to ensure that the content of our television is Canadian, at least to a major extent. It should have some responsibility for seeing that communication is established with remote areas of Canada. These are responsibilities which rest on government in the broadcasting field.

In the years before 1957 we did not have a board of broadcast governors. We now have a board set up by parliament to regulate broadcasting in Canada. It does not matter what government is in power; it does not matter whether you have a committee set up to investigate the C.B.C. or not, there will be all kinds of complaints every time the C.B.C. shows a film which a block of the population does not like. It is not the function of government to push culture down somebody's throat. Culture is not generated that way; it has to be developed from the bottom, up. You do not suppress perversion by exploiting it; you do not suppress minority and hate literature by exploiting that. The C.B.C. has taken it unto itself to become a little government all its own. There can be no control by parliament, as the hon. member for Calgary North so ably pointed out yesterday. Parliament has no control over this monolithic giant which has grown up, like Topsy.

It is a very good question, whether or not parliament should have control over the programming of our broadcast system, as long as it meets certain standards. It is very easy to say to a government in power that it has twisted the arm of a government corporation to suppress a film or to show a film. Are we to go back to the example of dictator-like countries, where they all have a national broadcasting system which is primarily a propaganda instrument to keep governments in power?

The time has come when we should have a reorganization of our broadcasting facilities in Canada. We should take advantage of the board of broadcast governors and allow them to regulate broadcasting. If some television network steps out of line, this is the board which should be stepping on it. If we did that we could immediately save ourselves, not the entire $100 million, but a substantial part of it. I say this because I think the C.B.C. should continue in force, first to administer its overseas network, to provide a radio and television coverage in a mechanical way—I mean by this, technical facilities—and, second, to provide communication with the remote areas of Canada. We could immediately save ourselves at least $80 million a year. We could put up for sale the C.B.C. stations which are now operating in our major centres. We could add to the capital account of the federal government many millions of dollars through selling these tools used to do a job which should be done by private enterprise in any case. Put up the one in Edmonton; it would be sold very readily. Put up the one in Ottawa. Put up the stations in Toronto and Montreal.

In 1957, Mr. Fowler said:

> We are satisfied that the volume of advertising revenue available in Canada is not in itself sufficient to pay for a Canadian broadcasting system.

This has been shown to be wrong. There is enough revenue to pay for another network and there is enough revenue in Canada to pay for competing networks. The situation is there in a nutshell. Allow the C.B.C. to continue to provide films through the national film board. If they want to take it over, that is all right with me because I do not think we need these different divisions in government. All that it does is add new buildings and more people doing paperwork. The national film board is responsible for advising the governor in council on film activities and is authorized to produce and distribute films in the national interest, in particular, films designed to interpret Canada to Canadians and to other nations. Surely we have a vehicle here in the national film board to interpret Canada to Canadians. This is one of the responsibilities of the C.B.C., and surely we could go one step further, because the national film board is now spending $670,900 for films produced specifically for television.

We have all these things which are duplicating each other. I expect the national film board is growing each year, too, because we have to interpret Canadians to Canadians. In other words, we have to interpret ourselves to ourselves. Of course, once you get a good job under the government working for the national film board you are not going to sit down and wonder how you can cut down your appropriation; you are going to sit down and wonder how you can build a little empire for yourself. We have seen the C.B.C. grow. They have a lot of things they would still like to do. They would like to put up buildings in Montreal and Toronto and I am sure these will be magnificent edifices. I am also sure that if private enterprise was offered this network they would find very quickly that they did not need these magnificent edifices at all—that it could do at a quarter of the cost what the C.B.C. has been doing, and that the amount of commercial revenue the C.B.C. is now taking in would very nearly cover the starting cost for a new network.

This is basic economics and a basic reassessment is needed of where we are going in this broadcast field. We have to sit down and take a look at it, and do so right now. Are we going to continue this policy which was established in the 'thirties, this policy which said we needed a public broadcasting system in Canada? I agree that in the 'thirties we did, and maybe even up until 10 years ago we did. Maybe up to five years ago we did. But the time has come when the government of Canada is subsidizing General Motors or anybody else to advertise its products on a national television network. This in essence is what we are doing.

It is very fine to talk, to say what you like about drama and everything else. Some hon. members were saying yesterday that we were not fit judges of what should be on television, anyway. I agree. We should not even be bothered with it. We set up the board of broadcast governors to control broadcasting; we do not want to be concerned. Indeed we are very foolish if we are concerned because, as the hon. member for Calgary North said, there is really no control whatsoever. The ordinary person in Canada believes parliament does have control. Constituents say to us: "Why do you allow the C.B.C. to do this?" We tell them we do not have any control over the corporation, and they wonder what we are doing. But we have no control over the C.B.C. and we will have no control whether we have an inquiry now or at any time in the future. We will have a continuing, spiralling increase in costs, because they want to go into colour television. Imagine what is going to happen when they go into colour television: they will probably then have to rebuild all the facilities they now have, because they will not be just right to suit a government corporation.

Mr. Woolliams: What about the Pearson film?

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): The Pearson film, of course, is a very good example and one of the prime reasons why it is time to cut off the C.B.C. from programming entirely. The C.B.C. should then be relegated to dealing with the technical side of things, to ensure that the people in the more remote areas of Canada have communication in both television and radio. We have this now, in a sense, in asking the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. to build our microwave networks; we are asking private industry to build these networks. All I am suggesting is that we should go one step further. Let us be sensible and businesslike; let us take this emotional nonsense about programming out of the House of Commons and give it to the board set up to regulate broadcasting. Let us forget about this spiralling, empire building organization the C.B.C. has become. I am sure there are other government departments that could move into the building on Bronson avenue here in Ottawa; there are other government departments that could take over the empty buildings of the C.B.C. I am sure that anybody worth his salt who is now with the C.B.C. can get a job in the private broadcasting industry. If he cannot, he had better look to his laurels and pull up his socks.

Can we as a nation and as a country afford this corporation? I say, Mr. Chairman, that we cannot afford to continue with this $100 million a year plaything that does not do anything except annoy the majority of the people of Canada. I know there are many organizations and people in Canada who say the C.B.C. is great. In our farm communities, in our own community at home, we enjoy the C.B.C. farm programs. We think they have done a service along this line. But there is absolutely no reason why the national film board could not take over this portion of the functions of the corporation and provide these films to private networks. After all, the only reason government got into broadcasting in the first place, other than for the purposes of supervision, was because it was not economical to have a privately owned network across Canada.

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Certainly.

Mr. Moreau: I wonder whether the policy of selling the C.B.C. to private interests is a policy that his party is advocating.

Mr. Starr: He did not say that at all.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): What I said had nothing to do with the policy of this party. I am giving my views with regard to a subject with which I have been very deeply concerned for a number of years.

Mr. Woolliams: As a taxpayer.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): As a taxpayer, as my hon. friend says, and also as someone who has been involved with the medical care of patients. I believe that television is a force the potency of which has not even been reckoned with as yet. I believe it should certainly be regulated and supervised, but I see no reason whatever why government should continue to operate studios and produce programs, etc., other than in the national interest; and, as I say, we have such an organ in the national film board, which is already set up specifically to produce films which interpret Canada to Canadians. As I said previously, they are now spending money to produce these films for television. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we have the national film board doing it on the one hand, and we have the C.B.C. doing it on the other. The only difference is that the national film board has not yet found out how to get enough money and they are operating on a very minor level at the moment. I am not suggesting they should be given a larger budget; all I am suggesting is that we should not leave all these things to the C.B.C. I am not saying we are going to sell the C.B.C. I say, let us sell their properties and their franchises in the major areas.

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member not agree that this is virtually disbanding the C.B.C.?

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Not at all. The C.B.C. was set up, as I have already said, because it was not economically feasible to have a private network in Canada. Government has no business in soap operas; that is not the role of government, in my opinion.

Mr. Woolliams: It may be for the Grits, though.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): It may be. But we have to take a really close look at this matter. If we let it go any longer we are going to be lost to this creeping bureaucracy and they will have so much power that we will not be able to do anything about it. We must start looking at the situation now and see that we have a change from the basic policy that has been propagated by one royal commission or inquiry after another. This basic policy is that we must have a public broadcasting system.

We must have supervision of broadcasting in Canada. I agree that there are types of films which are educational and which, using the words of the Canada Year Book, interpret Canada to Canadians. We need this kind of film still; but they could be made available through private broadcasting. We could do more in regard to providing communication to some of our more remote areas. As the hon. member for Athabasca suggested, when we cease to build these edifices in Toronto and Montreal perhaps we will be able to take modern communications into the hinterlands. The cost of television has of course changed very considerably from 1957 to the present time, and will change more as time goes on. As these methods of communication become more common and we have more scientific developments, we will of course have more efficiency and more economy in setting up a television network.

We have all seen what has happened in this industry. The first network was set up with coaxial cable, and so on; then along came microwave and this brought down the cost of network operations. Further developments will probably bring down the cost of network operations to an even greater degree in the future. We now have jet transport, which means it is only a matter of three or four hours to travel from east to west. All these things have changed the entire concept of this industry, even the 1957 concept of the Fowler royal commission. In their report they say that the overwhelming weight of evidence submitted to them compelled them to report that Canadians wished to have a Canadian broadcasting system. The report does not say "a public broadcasting system". We of course want to keep broadcasting as much Canadian as we possibly can; we want to develop the arts with Canadian personnel. All I am suggesting is that private industry can probably do it better than government. Then the Fowler report says that Canadians are willing, within reason, to pay for it. I wonder if we are still within reason in paying for it. I do not think that at the present time the majority of Canadians who are aware of the situation would favour a public broadcasting system. When one considers the history of this corporation, what has happened in the past, why we had it in the first place, and how it has developed throughout the years, he realizes that the time has now come for us to seriously consider its basic policy. This has been the policy of every government. The former government had the same policy toward the corporation, and the government before that had this policy, which is based on the assumption that Canadians want it and need it, and that it was an economic necessity to have a public broadcasting network in Canada.

I am suggesting that the necessity is no longer there from an economic point of view; that the majority of Canadian people who understand the situation no longer feel that we need to have a public broadcasting system; that we could save ourselves a great deal of emotional agony; that we could probably improve the broadcasting fare for Canadians if we were to suggest to the C.B.C. that they should reorganize their entire operation so they would be responsible solely for the technical side of broadcasting. This would include, for example, the remote areas, film boards, educational television advancement and international programs. If that were done I think we would get down to basics and save this country millions of dollars. For example, $100 million right off the bat would be saved and there would be a continuing $100 million a year.

Mr. Moreau: I do not want to interrupt the hon. member but I fail to understand his point. He seems to be advocating essentially that we turn over the broadcasting field to private industry; at least that is what I understood. In view of the general support he is getting from the members on his side of the house, such as the hon. member for Bow River and the hon. member for Ontario, may I ask whether this is an official party position?

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): No, it is not. The hon. member should appreciate that over here we are allowed to express our views from our own experiences.

[Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson).]

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member is putting words in my mouth. I have not made a speech on the C.B.C. If the hon. member for York-Scarborough, one of the trained seals of the Liberal party, wants to make a speech let him make one.

Mr. Noble: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few observations on C.B.C. television activities. It is my belief that the Canadian people are grateful to the C.B.C. for the excellent service they provide across the nation. Personally I admire the board of directors of the C.B.C. for the contribution they have made and continue to make. On their shoulders rests a great responsibility. Decisions made by them can and do have a tremendous influence on many people.

Some people resent the fact that the corporation is a power unto itself and that censorship from any outside source is frowned upon by that body. Many people feel that its work should be open to inquiry, subject to public scrutiny and answerable to public opinion. On the other hand, its progress could be impeded and its services damaged with too much supervision and too many inquiries.

It is understood by everyone that the C.B.C. should be non-partisan and free from political interference. Occasions have arisen when such suspicions were perhaps justified. Such circumstances should not be tolerated and regulations to assure this should be strictly adhered to; but I do think the Canadian people should have an effective liaison through which they might voice their disapproval of extremes that should be protested against and corrected without delay.

Several days ago I objected to certain C.B.C. television programs by way of questions in this house to the Secretary of State. No other course was available to me by which my constituents would know that I had made this appeal. Nevertheless the reply I received brought people everywhere to the full realization of how helpless are the government and the people of the nation to protest effectively a very undesirable program, a feature of our own crown corporation.

My disapproval was directed at the play "Feast of Lupercal" on the program "Festival" of October 7, and again at the same program one week later when two related plays were presented, "Mrs. Dally has a Lover" and "Today is Independence Day". Each play appeared to be an effort to outdo the previous one in vulgar language and in portrayals of seduction and illicit love. My hon. colleague from Grey-Bruce went into some detail on these yesterday so I will not repeat his remarks. Thousands of television viewers across the country were alarmed and disappointed to think that the C.B.C. with its great influence would give time to such revolting plays, which not only displayed bad taste but could be instrumental in promoting immorality in our young people.

This sordidness has gone beyond the limit and should be discontinued at once; because we cannot continue to sow such vulgarity without reaping the demoralizing reward. There is plenty of good material that could be used which would be an inspiration to Canadian family life. There is an abundance of clean, informative, constructive and entertaining program material available to the C.B.C. which would assist parents in getting their children on good moral foundations and by which they, the C.B.C., could make a really creditable contribution to our way of life. The C.B.C. can be a nation builder.

Our young people are the strength of this country and we must demand quality in all ingredients that go into their physical, moral, spiritual and intellectual make-up. The C.B.C. can contribute much to the last three of these. The Canadian people deserve value for the $86 million C.B.C. operation.

Mr. Peters: I had not intended to speak about the C.B.C. but, having listened to some of the comments which have been made, there is another side to the picture. At one time I asked the producer of a show which I considered to be way out why this kind of program was broadcast, and I think his answer is one which all hon. members should consider. He explained to me that because the C.B.C. was such a large organization and served large numbers of people in widely scattered areas of Canada, both the intelligentsia and others, there were programs which should be shown on a limited basis—probably 15 minutes a week—which were in the high class drama category, the sort of thing probably I would not understand. I agree it would be unfortunate if the only music the C.B.C. played was that of Don Messer, even though I happen to like it. If that were the case it might promote a nation of maritimers, which might not be in the interests of the development of this nation. However, I personally would give it a very high rating. My friends who consider themselves of the intelligentsia say that this is very low-brow entertainment. I think it is true that many of the programs shown on the C.B.C. must reflect the interests of all the people in Canada. If we look at some of the programs which have been referred to and to which objection has been taken these are the types of programs which may meet the cravings of some of the more highly educated people in our society who feel that this sort of drama is necessary and is a good thing.

I believe the C.B.C. has done an excellent job. Those members who feel otherwise should question the farming organizations who appear before our committees. Surprisingly enough one category to whom the C.B.C. has brought television and radio coverage is our rural population. They have used this as their total means of communication in order to keep in touch with many other parts of the world. In some instances there is no daily newspaper these people can buy. Many do not have even a weekly newspaper, but depend on the C.B.C. radio and television service to bring them the events of the world, whether they be in the form of drama, other entertainment or news broadcasts. As I say, I think the C.B.C. has done a very good job in this regard although there are many other areas in Canada which still require coverage.

Some will say that the C.B.C. does provide a type of service to a very large percentage of the Canadian population. That is not true when we consider total coverage as far as television and radio are concerned. I think those people who believe in an extension of this type of thing should be sympathetic toward that part of our population which depends entirely on the C.B.C. or government sponsored services for their entire communications media.

The C.B.C. is a very large organization. A communications system in this country must of necessity be a large system. In Canada the C.B.C. operates both radio and television stations, and for the most part private service is provided in the form of networks to large communities, and through affiliates to the smaller communities. There is competition in this field in many sections of our country.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other communications medium which I think should be kept separate from the two I mentioned, and I refer to radio Canada. Radio Canada is providing broadcasting services to one segment of our population which has not been supplied this service by private enterprise.

In comparing various services provided by these three systems we must consider the field of news, entertainment, culture and philosophy. When considering the news aspect, I think we must agree that the C.B.C. is providing adequate coverage. I am sure every member of parliament watches the C.B.C. news programs closely and will agree that that organization has done very well in covering local, national and international affairs. Some of the outstanding events that have taken place throughout the world have been brought to the attention of Canadian viewers as quickly as possible through the facilities of the C.B.C. The demand in Canada for coverage of international events as quickly as possible has increased, and the C.B.C. has met this demand.

In considering the field of entertainment one must keep in mind the difficulties which arise because of the likes and dislikes of viewers. Sometimes I think advertisements are more entertaining than the programs. The C.B.C. has done a good job in this field.

The great difficulty which any organization providing a communications service must face is in the field of culture and philosophy. One of the previous speakers suggested the C.B.C. should be sold. In the event such a thing took place we would only have private television and radio outlets throughout this nation. What kind of culture or philosophy would we then have on our programs in this non-competitive but private system? Certainly such programs as "Quest", "Festival" and "This Hour has Seven Days" would not be possible, because the private systems are dependant entirely upon sponsors. Can anyone visualize a sponsor agreeing to sponsor a program such as "Festival"? I do not hesitate to say that I do not like that particular program, and I think the people who take part in it are a bunch of nuts. That is my personal opinion. I have not been trained in the school of drama, or in the field of culture. Perhaps that is why I think the way I do; but I realize there are a great many nuts in this country who believe this is a very worth-while type of program.

In any event, Mr. Chairman, this type of cultural and philosophical program in a private communications system would have to be sponsored, and I cannot visualize a sponsor sponsoring that type of program, knowing that he would probably have a telephone call the following morning cancelling 40 or 50 contracts because of it. Just because I do not like that kind of program I do not see why it should not be presented. If I were the almighty in the field of communications I would know and be able to pick out what was good for people and what everyone would like, but obviously I am not. I have made no pretense in this regard, nor do I believe the C.B.C. has given any indication that it is the body which should decide what is good and what is bad. The C.B.C. has made a tremendously successful attempt to provide controversial subjects. Controversy is not bad for Canadian people, and I am quite proud of the program "This Hour has Seven Days".

Mr. Habel: You should not be.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member says I should be proud of it.

Mr. Habel: I said you should not be proud of it.

Mr. Peters: I think I should be proud of it because it is a highly controversial program. Perhaps it creates controversy in a sensational way, but it deals with actual problems which face the world today.

Mr. Habel: It is destroying the world.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member suggests this type of program is destroying the world. This type of program is providing information to the people, and I believe it is by hiding information that people are destroyed.

I should like to refer to one statement made during this program the other night. The speaker was a man with whom I violently disagree. In his statement he asked what would happen if a segment of a population from another country was dumped into one of our major cities. I would suspect that anyone who did not think about that question, in the light of the way we solve our own problems, must have turned the set off. Certainly it was a controversial suggestion which in my view warranted some consideration.

With the advent of an entirely private television and radio system in this country we would have a lack of controversy, as a result of which we would be even less colourful than we are. Sponsors of programs would demand that they be non-controversial, because they want to sell their products to every viewer watching the programs. Those members who say they believe in free enterprise and freedom of initiative must have their wires badly crossed when they suggest that we should have a monopolistic control over this medium so there will not be controversy. Those are the kind of people who suggest there should only be one government or one political party—the one they support.

I have no objection to controversial programs. While the C.B.C. has made mistakes we must remember that the C.B.C. is pioneering in this field certainly in this country, if not on the North American continent. It is perfectly proper for hon. members to stand in the house and say they believe that programs which contain interviews and discussions about things such as women's bosoms should not appear during the hours of t.v. programming when children are likely to be watching t.v. I agree that perhaps such programs should be directed toward adult audiences at a time after children have gone to bed. Those who are responsible for putting on these programs should exercise some judgment as to whether they are family programs or whether they should be viewed later in the evening when the children have gone to bed.

One of the amusing things about selling the C.B.C. is that I do not hear anyone say we should sell all of the C.B.C. They say we should sell that part in the large cities where the C.B.C. makes money. Let us look at what has happened in the major cities in which we have allowed a second television station. Did we really get a new type of program? Did we really accomplish very much by this except having the opportunity—and I am 100 per cent in favour of having the opportunity to choose between two or three stations—of choosing between stations? Have we really accomplished anything in a cultural sense as was indicated we would when the applications were made to the B.B.G.? We may have. Again, I may not be in a position to judge; I may not be trained to judge. When we talk of selling the C.B.C. should we not really consider the whole of the C.B.C. operation, rather than consider only those parts of it which are financial plums?

The B.B.G. was established several years ago to provide some control over the operations of the news media in Canada. I feel they have failed to do the job we expected they were going to be able to do. It may be that the board of broadcast governors act should be returned to parliament for amendment. It is quite possible we did not give them enough authority to be able to do the things we thought they were going to do. We know that they have been almost ineffective in policing the broadcasting services in Canada. This may be a field that should be referred to a committee on broadcasting.

This raises another question, Mr. Chairman. Why have we not referred the B.B.G. and the C.B.C., if that is our desire, to a committee of this house? Is this government so ineffective they have not been able to decide for themselves what changes in policy they wish to make in this field, and for that reason have not been able to establish a committee? Is it because there are enough committees of this house and this is not an important matter? I feel the government has a responsibility to tell us why they have neglected to establish a committee on broadcasting. Then, the question of cable television could have been referred to this committee. I believe there are things that we could improve, and certainly there will always be things we could improve. The B.B.G. could give us the benefit of their experience in a broadcasting committee and make recommendations for the changes they wish made. This opportunity should be afforded. We should not be in a position of attacking them and saying they have not done a job unless they have an opportunity to appear and suggest the changes that should be made.

I should like to close by saying that I believe the C.B.C. has done a remarkable job. They have brought to Canadians over a widely scattered area television and radio programs that are a credit to the nation. It would be safe to say there is not anyone in this house who does not violently dislike some program on the C.B.C. I believe it is safe to say also that there are Canadians who have a particular program and they will go to a great deal of effort week after week to watch it closely. One of the members referred to the field of culture, and this applies to rural Canada. There are many farmers who will make an extreme effort to take advantage of the opportunity to watch certain programs because they are of value in their farming operations.

I think we should be very careful, Mr. Chairman, about blasting the C.B.C. because of a particular program. I am quite happy that those who are responsible in parliament for the C.B.C., not only in this government but in previous governments, have rejected the idea that members of parliament should be able to discontinue a program on the C.B.C. just because it is objectionable to them, personally. This matter should be decided by responsible people. If the C.B.C. is not doing the job, then we should collectively look at all the problems of the C.B.C. and make the changes that are necessary. Then, once we have made them, they should be enforced. If we start telling the C.B.C. what type of program to put on, what the content of the program should be and when it should be put on, how much of the time of the C.B.C. should be allotted to culture, then I believe that medium will lose its effectiveness in Canada and will disappear as an influence on the Canadian way of life. I believe the majority of Canadians are proud of the C.B.C. and want it to continue. They should demand that members of parliament give the C.B.C. an over-all policy direction as to the extension of services into those areas that do not have service now, and continue to supervise in a general way the operations of the C.B.C., as has been our practice for a number of years.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a few minutes to express to those who are responsible for the administration of the C.B.C. some of the views of the middle class citizens who pay part of the expenses incurred by this corporation.

The C.B.C. costs the federal treasury close to $100 million a year. Though this amount is large—very large indeed—this is not the only aspect with which the public at large finds fault.

As regards this budget matter, I believe that parliament—that is the representatives of the Canadian people—should be able to scrutinize the expenditures of the C.B.C. Should these expenditures be justified, nobody would object to their examination or, for that matter, to taking the advice of those who, after all, pay the shot.

The other aspect upon which the people at large would like to make observations is even more important. I am referring here to the programming, the choice of commentators, the selection of the ideas that can be suggested to our people by means of radio, and especially television. I must say, right now, that far be it from me to ask the government to control the programming or the appointment of radio and television commentators.

What this government—or this parliament—can and must do is to require that the board of directors and top officers of the C.B.C. should have good moral standards, in addition to intellectual and physical qualifications, so that they in turn may demand the same qualifications from their senior employees.

In this regard, I wish to repeat that the government, or parliament, should require the directors of the C.B.C. to be of strong moral fibre, in addition to their intellectual and physical qualifications, so that they might be able to see by themselves what is defective and what might mislead the people.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Chairman, we are aware of the influence of the corporation on public opinion.

Through the means at its disposal, the C.B.C. may form or deform public opinion. Through its programming and the commentators it selects, it may induce the majority of the population to be for or against someone or something.

If the officials of the C.B.C. possess the required moral qualities, it will not be necessary to tell them what to do. On the other hand, if voluntarily or through negligence, those persons in whom parliament rests its trust, do not assume their responsibilities, then parliament will have to interfere so the moral level of our population be not lowered through the influence exercised by broadcasting media.

In my opinion, the first duty of this crown corporation consists in giving news. The second should consist in raising the intellectual and moral level of our population, and the third, in offering varied programs for the healthy enjoyment of its listeners in their moments of leisure.

The function of a news service is to inform the people. What we expect from the C.B.C. is that it informs the Canadian people objectively on political, economic and social activities. You realize, Mr. Chairman, that if one day the C.B.C. wanted to give the people a false impression of a politician, it would be quite easy because day after day through its news service, it could spread the idea that this politician is a public enemy. On the other hand, if they wanted to build up another politician it would be quite easy for the C.B.C., with its large means of broadcasting, to gradually and slowly push up another politician.

Therefore, what we are asking is that in the political field—and this goes for parties as well as individuals—the C.B.C. through its broadcasting system should give objective facts. It should objectively inform the Canadian people on the opinions of political parties or on statements made by politicians.

I think that the C.B.C. should try to raise the intellectual and moral level of the people. Nowadays there is much talk about education, particularly in my own province. I welcome the efforts made by our school boards and our governments to give the people a higher intellectual level.

We know that the C.B.C. is providing popular education, but there again the accent should not be put only on intellectual education. There are three kinds of education: intellectual, physical and moral. Nowadays, advanced intellectual education is provided, but moral education related to that intellectual education is too often overlooked.

If we consider only that we are living in a more realistic environment, that people are able to decide for themselves whether a program is good or bad, to distinguish between good and evil, and if the C.B.C. network puts on educational programs which may lead some people to feel that today everything is permitted, this will be disastrous.

On the other hand, if our population has a very high intellectual level but no moral education, I suggest we are still better off with a population whose intellectual level is lower but has a really solid moral education. Remember the days of our forefathers when people only went to school one or two years but were nevertheless receiving such a solid moral education that we could be sure they would make good citizens.

Mr. Chairman, people will say: but you cannot point to any C.B.C. program which is trying to put over an idea. For example, we heard recently some politicians, for instance the secretary of the province of Quebec, say that ideas expressed through certain publicity media are ideas always favouring the left. Am I right or am I exaggerating?

Of course, when a public organization wants to feed a new idea to the people, a new idea which is contrary to what they have learned and to their moral principles, it can proceed a little at a time. For instance, by instilling daily a drop of vinegar into the minds of the people, they may be convinced that they no longer have to respect authority which is only established to enslave the population.

Unfortunately, that is what we can too often observe in certain informative programs or in the views of certain commentators who speak to the general public through the C.B.C.

There are also, Mr. Chairman, certain things that we must point out. If the C.B.C. were endeavouring to break up the present family concept, they would only have to show on the television screens continuous disputes between couples, divorces or matrimonial triangles in ever family depicted in the programs shown. Thus they would succeed in having our people think that disputes and divorces are natural and that it is normal that one day a couple has to separate.

To make up for these programs which seem to imply that family life is over, we should have more programs and more commentators outlining what a united family is, what is established order in a family endowed with moral sense; then the people would notice that not only matrimonial triangles are successful but it is nice to see harmonious families where all work together, not only for their personal happiness but for that of the community as a whole.

It is the duty of the C.B.C. to fill the leisure of their audience in a sound way with varied programs, joining pleasure and profit.

I met one day a school teacher who told me: "Nowadays, with television, it is very difficult for us to teach our young people to respect their parents, to be honest, to live in keeping with the established order. When, from his earliest childhood to the time he is an adult, a youth sees on the television screens murders, thefts, friends at variance, he gets used to that and thinks those are normal things."

This teacher added: "Usually, a man has not the mishap to witness more than one serious automobile accident in his life. This man will probably not see more than one normal love, he will probably not witness more than a bank robbery with his own eyes. With television coming into our daily life, young people constantly see movies where murders are committed as a matter of fact, where someone robs a bank when in need of money and where attempts are made to break the law."

The C.B.C. should broadcast more and more educational and moral programs so as to compensate for those programs which seem to disrupt society.

In conclusion, also in connection with the C.B.C., I should like to mention something which happened on June 26, 1964.

I said earlier that the C.B.C. should follow a new policy in order to inform the public, both on the economic and the political level.

On June 26 last the farmers of the province of Quebec organized a march on the provincial parliament. On that occasion, 18,000 farmers asked the provincial government for a better fate, or new laws to raise their standard of living.

On the same day I left the house, after the question period, to listen to the C.B.C. news. At that time nothing at all was said about what was happening in the provincial capital. I went out to lunch and, before coming back to the house at two o'clock, I listened again to the C.B.C. news bulletin. Again nothing was said about this very important demonstration in the capital city of the province of Quebec.

I immediately telephoned the news director of the C.B.C. in Montreal to ask him if something was happening in the city of Quebec. By this, I did not mean separatists causing a disturbance. He replied: "Yes, there is a farmers' march." I inquired: "Why don't you mention it?" He said: "The fact was mentioned. We are going to mention it again, but it has already been mentioned."

Mr. Chairman, I immediately communicated with the C.B.C. to find out how many times between nine o'clock in the morning and two o'clock in the afternoon, at the time of this march, the C.B.C. had mentioned the march of the Quebec farmers on its news network; I was told that between nine and two o'clock it was mentioned three times in short news bulletins. In these short news bulletins the people were not informed why the farmers were marching on the provincial parliament. It was simply stated: Mr. Lesage will receive the farmers at such or such time, and Mr. Lesage had the farmers informed that unfortunately he will be absent and will not be able to receive those thousands of farmers who will be there.

I am saying this to show the contrast between June 26, 1964 and what happened some time before, when a march was organized by the peace marchers at La Macaza. There was a similar march a few months afterwards, and on that occasion the C.B.C. showed on the television screens the peace marchers getting ready for this La Macaza march. One could see small groups of five or six people on lawns in the city of Montreal preparing themselves to resist the policemen, in case they should tell them to get out of the way. I have seen that myself on the television screen. And then, the C.B.C. went to this area, so as to show the public a few hundred people who were protesting, and rightly so, for they had a right to protest; I am not criticizing the stand of the peace marchers who were protesting against nuclear arms. The viewers were shown a group of objectors, but I wonder why the C.B.C. did not give the population at large more details and information when the farmers marched on Quebec, at which time 18,000 persons were also protesting who had every right to protest?

Those then are the questions we ask ourselves. Of course, we will be told that news was given, that we were told what the farmers obtained. Yes, we were told: that the farmers obtained this and that from the provincial government and, in this news bulletin which I have before me, we were even told that the farmers obtained a 25 per cent decrease in school taxes, and an increase of 20 cents per 100 pounds of milk. But, the city-dwellers who heard these news bulletins had to pay the next day or the following day, 1 or 2 cents more per quart of milk, for which they tended to blame the farmers.

Instead, the population, the consumers should have been told why the farmers of Quebec had marched on parliament to explain their situation and to assert their rights with regard to the important matter of land taxes. The population should have been acquainted with the reasons which led these men to march on the provincial parliament.

I would therefore ask that the C.B.C., through its news service and general educational program, attach more importance to the field of agriculture. Every Sunday, the French network of the C.B.C. has a half hour program entitled: "Les travaux et les jours". We need more of these programs to show city people how our agricultural structures and organizations helped the country, to show the urban population what tremendous wealth agriculture represents in Canada, where it has supplied work directly or indirectly to more than 35 per cent of the labour force.

That is all I wanted to say about the C.B.C. and, for a few seconds, I should like to deal with another subject. My remarks are meant for the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé).

Last week we attended the fortieth convention of the U.C.C. in Quebec city, where we met hundreds of farmers who asked for immediate action from the provincial and especially the federal government with respect to the dairy industry. Today I put a question to the Minister of Forestry and he told me that no date had yet been set for a meeting between the federal authorities and members of the Catholic farmers' union.

Last July I made a proposal to the federal government in which I asked for a guaranteed minimum price of $3.50 per cwt of industrial milk and for a subsidy, retroactive to May 1, of 35 cents per cwt of milk for the first 100,000 lbs. Some members or ministers found that suggestion ridiculous. Well, today, farmers are not content with a minimum price of $3.50, but they are requesting $4 per hundred pounds of milk and ask the provincial government to provide a further subsidy of 40 cents per hundred pounds.

What I now ask the Minister of Forestry, who is largely responsible for agriculture in eastern Canada, is to show great diligence and not in 15 days or in one or two months, but immediately, take the necessary steps to increase the standard of living of eastern farmers and more particularly those in his province, that is the province of Quebec.

If we make these requests and reiterate them to the government, it is because farmers have asked us to make representations. You may be sure that if the Minister of Forestry is to announce in the house some concrete measures to increase the standard of living of farmers, we will not be surprised at all. On the contrary, we will applaud him, because for more than a year and a half now we have been hoping that the minister would make a statement as soon as possible, and the sooner the better.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak about the human person, the priority of man, the individual and his institutions. Our society recognizes only the institutions—

An hon. Member: This is a free country.

Mr. Latulippe: —to the prejudice of the individual. Should we recognize both, or give priority to each individual? Should we allow each individual to have access to science, progress, institutions, vital economy, intellectual, moral and social development? When we speak about the good of the people, social welfare, common good; we speak about groups of people; we speak in the abstract, and this leads us to forget that in reality, in practice, all groups are made of individuals, human beings, living persons, made up of flesh, blood and spirit.

When one says that the common weal must have priority over individual interests, one also forgets that the common good is the sum of the individual, personal private good.

When a group of persons is visualized as a unit it is only under the form of an abstraction.

Thus a nation, a country, Canada are only abstract terms or an idea which actually represents all human beings living in a determined area of the world, or a part of the world specifically outlined by the process of the human mind.

What can a beast know about Canada? It is part of a herd. A forest is made up of individual trees. God created the earth, the world and mankind. Men divide the earth into continents, countries, provinces, cities, parishes and territories.

God created man as a human being, but men are the ones who establish families, groups, societies, companies, communities, churches, corporations, associations, and when a legal entity is given to those groups, it is still through a process of the human mind.

In reality, those groups are composed of living and concrete units of human beings.

The family group is itself a group of distinct individuals, of living persons. The family as such only exists as a concept of the human mind. The family is always only a group of individuals of human beings.

In everyday language when we say that public good comes before private welfare, it does not mean that in search of private welfare, the individual well-being of the other people living in the same group, should be taken into account because the public good, per se, has no real existence, it is made up of the welfare of individuals.

This distinction in the language is so essential that confusion in the meaning of the words private good and common or public good, or perhaps social well-being, is responsible for all the social mistakes which complicate the general operation of our modern economy.

Such great importance has been given to this evolution of the social pattern, the company pattern, that today nearly all legislation is intended to promote the progress of the group to the prejudice of the human being, of the individual.

Companies are prosperous, make huge profits and accumulate lots of money while individuals are getting poorer, more deprived, lost and ignorant. The latter have to put up with inadequate housing, while the former are installed in vast manufactures or 500-feet high structures or 50 storey skyscrapers.

During the daytime the individual works in the best of sunlit skyscrapers, 10 or 50 storeys above the ground, but at night he must go back to small, inadequate and overcrowded lodgings or even to a damp basement.

Children are crowded into narrow and unsanitary slums, thus preparing a new generation of people who will have to be given hospital care at the government's expense or rather at the expense of their fellow citizens.

The state itself is but a group of living human beings. Will we ever understand that?

When a country like Canada enacts laws, erects monetary, economic and political systems, why do we allow institutions to pay a lesser amount of income tax on profits, why do we allow banks, for instance, to accumulate over and above the declared and permissible reserves as depreciation or for other reasons, secret reserves which are not taxable?

If large corporations must accumulate such a large amount of reserves, profits and capital, why do our monetary, economic and political systems ignore that human beings and families also need the same proportion of reserves, profits and capital?

Why did we neglect the human being in this race toward wealth, in this thirst for progress, in this desire for profits?

Over a period of two years, between September 1962 and September 1964, the 754 big companies listed on the Montreal stock exchange have seen their capitalization increase from $44 billion to $72 billion, a $28 billion capital profit in two years, 24 months, a 62 per cent capital appreciation for the few people who can afford to invest money in stocks while so many citizens of this same Canada go hungry and are living in poverty. Why?

Why so much poverty in the midst of so much abundance?

When I hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) say that Canada is a prosperous country, that it enjoys unparallelled prosperity—well yes, it is prosperity for those who handle the finance of the country. They are the ones who go up the ladder, but the others go down. Only because the common weal has precedence on the personal weal, only because one has forgotten that the common weal is the sum of personal welfare and that one has succeeded, by all kinds of economic sophisms, to cause people who are not as learned as our university trained economists to believe that things must be so because the Lord said that there will always be poor people and rich people among us.

Poor people—perhaps? But we do not have to put up with the idea of poverty-stricken people, of destitute persons.

Poverty compared to wealth means to own little instead of owning much, while indigence has nothing and lacks the bare necessities of life.

In any event, in the ordinary life, our monetary, economic and political systems are only instruments of administration, of production and of distribution of material, intellectual and spiritual goods and services among human beings, considered either as groups, families or single people, as living units, or as family or social groups.

All groups are made up of unities. All chains are made up of links. All our monetary, economic and political systems are able to operate and to provide decent means of living to all human beings in Canada merely through a new organization of the leadership.

Hence the strength of our institutions depends upon the strength of the unities, of the people making up our institutions, governments, banks, manufactures, communities, universities, churches, provinces, municipalities, school boards, colleges, corporations, co-operatives, associations with material, intellectual or spiritual aims.

All institutions are the product of the human mind, are conceived by the human intellect in the same way as the constitution of a country.

Do animals have constitutions, governments, companies, co-operatives, unions, except in La Fontaine's fables? And there again, they are imitating men.

When I speak of the evolution of our way of thinking towards our monetary, economic and political organizations, I do not want to take anything away from anybody. I do not want to change anything in our principles of operation. I do not want to creat anything new. I am only trying to consolidate the past, I rely on the present, and I look ahead to the future, to the future of every group constituting our country, Canada, and I want to give more to everybody, without taking anything away from anybody. I want to give something more to everybody, to each and everyone, child, teen-agers or adults, forgetting no one.

When I speak of evolution of our way of governing our country and our institutions, I am not blaming anybody. I am not trying to displace anybody. I only want to improve customs established on old and outmoded basis which were once useful but which our own progress made obsolete; I only want to improve the way of thinking which served the progress of humanity but which are threatening to destroy that very progress, if we adhere to the status quo.

The present progress is not the final stage of the evolution. Having brought a tremendous boon to humanity through its scientists and university men, this progress must now reach to the social classes less favoured by nature or by society.

I am not attacking any particular classes, not even directors of banks and of important concerns, professors and university graduates, but my words of warning are meant for them, because it is their responsibility to adapt their systems to a more humanitarian progress to give greater consideration to the human being as well as to the needs of each unity constituting the nation and the higher institutions.

The head must remain the head but one must not neglect the fingers.

The head must remain the head, and no longer neglect the arms.

The head must remain the head, and no longer neglect the limbs.

The head must govern the whole, and no longer neglect the units.

The head must govern the whole, and no longer neglect the various parts.

That is what everybody admits in principle, in abstracto, in the conception of ideas; but most of all, that is what facts must express in concrete action, in present monetary, economic and political terms by present governments, by present ministers, by the present Minister of Finance, who controls and holds all monetary, economic and political machinery as regards money circulation, that means of exchange, that social instrument which is used for all transactions between men in the material, intellectual and spiritual fields nowadays.

All this renovation of leadership toward the progress of the unit, of the human person, of the individual as a component part of the whole can and must be carried out within the regular frameworks of our present monetary, economic and political machinery, within the framework of free enterprises, of private property, under the powerful and able leadership of a truly democratic government, that is devoutly dedicated to the service of the people while protecting the interests and capital of large private enterprises.

A careful study of the program I am introducing today under the title "Personal Vital Right", will be sufficient to convince the most apprehensive masters and the most fervent devotees of our present tradition.

All the rights of man must be expressed in dollar signs.

That is the central point of all consolidation of acquired wealth.

The "Personal Vital Right" is a simple technique, a very simple formula of administration which requires no new legislation, no new institution, no new mechanism; it can be worked out within the normal monetary, economical and political mechanisms used at present.

I do not profess to have invented anything new.

I do not profess to have discovered anything miraculous.

I do not profess to have dethroned the present scientists.

I do not profess to have superseded the present politicians.

I do not profess to have overthrown the present financiers.

I simply want to impart to you the results of my research and my findings while I watch you all.

The conclusion is quite simple. Do keep acting the same way, each one of you in his own place, in the same institutions, having in mind solely the new mentality, and striving, with your enlightened intellect, toward unity, the human being and his needs, at the same time aiming in your institutions at the capital gain.

All this may be done without changing anything almost without anybody noticing it. Everything takes place in the mind of the administration. If you belong to such administration, you alone are concerned, and nobody else. Other people will benefit from the result and congratulate you when the time comes. But the administration has to prepare the implementation of the program, of the technique, of the formula, which consists only in aiming at unity in order to reach the whole, in aiming at the human being to reach the whole, in aiming at the progress of each individual to attain prosperity for the country, the nation, your institutions.

If you hunt geese, you have to kill the birds one by one in order to get the flock. To milk a herd of cows, you have to milk them one by one. To build 1,000 Buick cars, even through mass production, you have to build them one by one. Every figure is a series of units, even in economy. A million is made up of dollars.

Even if the intelligentsia and the millionnaires are used to abstract calculations in real life we have to abide by the unit. The spirit is willing, but the flesh is slow.

Even the most learned, the most famous doctor—

The Chairman: Order. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member, but it is six o'clock.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

[Text]

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the acting house leader whether there is any change in the government's plans for tomorrow, to carry on with interim supply?

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will carry on with interim supply. I hope that will be completed reasonably early in the day so that we may go on with our consideration of the main estimates, departments of citizenship and immigration, forestry, national revenue and industry.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to ask the acting house leader a question? Would the government not consider calling at an early date, tomorrow, Friday or Monday, the resolution preceding the Canada pension plan? As the government knows, that debate is limited by our new rules to one day and we would lose no time in getting the bill before us by following this course.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I may say that his suggestion will be given every consideration, but I must point out to the house, as I have done before, that at the moment nothing is of more urgency than interim supply.

Mr. Knowles: Does the minister not realize that the way this debate is going it would not delay the passing of interim supply if we took one day out for this important measure?

Mr. MacNaught: I think there is every probability that the debate will conclude tomorrow.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 29, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACINNIS—PRESS RELEASE RESPECTING FLAG COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I rise on a question of privilege. Earlier, Mr. Speaker, I spoke to you about two questions of privilege I wished to raise, and it was agreed that because of the short sitting hours on Wednesday one of them should be brought forward at ten o'clock.

However, the question I wish to raise at this time affects all members of the house, the integrity of each and every member in relation to the tasks they assume when serving this house. It is based on a press release, prior to the report of the flag committee, which was issued in the name of one of the hon. members of that committee. I feel this constitutes an obvious violation of the duty which this committee took upon itself when meeting in camera, to withhold any and all information which might develop in the course of those meetings.

This press release is a deliberate violation of that undertaking. It is a disgraceful performance, reflecting on every member of this house who undertakes to do a job which is assigned to him by the house. This release to the press is, without doubt, one which was prepared well in advance, and I cannot understand how any such detailed report could have been prepared without the prior knowledge and consent of at least one or two of the hon. member's colleagues. The whole procedure following developments within the flag committee has taken on, with this release, the aspect of deliberate plants throughout these hearings, plants that are put before the Canadian people as the choice of the flag committee, which nevertheless in my opinion, now confirmed by this report, were a deliberate move—I do not think necessarily the workings of one man—on the part of the government to imply to the people of Canada that this was being brought about by efforts on the part of the flag committee. The report that the A.Y. Jackson flag had been accepted as the national flag, and other similar reports, followed by this particular report, certainly convince me that everything that has been done within that committee has been done deliberately by the government, and this release would support that contention.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): How much did he get paid for the article?

Mr. Pearson: —the remark by the hon. member that everything that was done in that committee by the Liberal members was done under the instructions of the government, or under any pressure from the government, is 100 per cent, completely false.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: How much was he paid?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Let us get on with the business before the house.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. Reference was made a moment ago by the hon. gentleman opposite to a story released in the paper today, which indeed I did write. I prepared it in the committee this morning. I can assure the house that it was not prepared with any help from any other member, or indeed with the knowledge of any other member; and I did so knowing or expecting that the papers would be released later this day, after the report had been filed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deachman: If I have caused any embarrassment to the Chair I do indeed humbly apologize.

Mr. Bell: You embarrassed the government.

Mr. Lambert: It is still a lousy trick.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I also rise on a question of privilege. The hon. gentleman has stated that this article was prepared this morning. It is interesting to note that it has been copyrighted, so that certainly there has been fast action since the committee met this morning.

Flag Committee Report

This article, sir, to which reference was made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, is one that cannot be excused in any way. It is a violation of the responsibility of members of parliament. That committee met throughout in a spirit that is not in keeping with this hon. member's statement here, which is one more serious than I would like to describe at this moment; in fact it constitutes a complete dereliction on his part and is a matter of serious importance to this house.

Some hon. Members: Shameful.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We have been wondering where all these leaks came from. No doubt this will have been cleared up now by the production of this article in advance of the house being apprized of the recommendations made by the committee. Indeed, it is a contravention, I believe, of the arrangement made in the committee, if I understand it correctly, namely that nothing was to be revealed of the course taken in the committee. In other words this is an ex parte statement made by an hon. gentleman designed to exculpate himself and apparently others associated with him in a course of action which is inexcusable in the extreme.

Mr. Speaker: I have not seen the article and the Chair is taken by surpise, but I will look into the matter.

CANADIAN FLAG

PRESENTATION OF SIXTH AND SEVENTH AND FINAL REPORTS

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the sixth report, as well as the seventh and final report, of the special committee on a Canadian flag, in English and in French.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I ask that the report be read?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I am advised that it is not generally the practice to read the report of a committee at this time but with the unanimous consent of the house it could be read. Does the house give unanimous consent to the reading of the committee's report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pearson: Both reports.

[The Clerk Assistant proceeded to read the sixth report, as follows:]

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

The special committee on a Canadian flag has the honour to present the following as its sixth report.

1. Pursuant to its order of reference of September 10, 1964, your committee has before it, for consideration and report, the flag question.

2. On September 15, 1964, the House of Commons designated 15 members of the committee: Mrs. Konantz, Messrs. Batten, Cadieux (Terrebonne), Deachman, Dubé, Flemming (Victoria-Carleton), Langlois, Lessard (Lake St. John), Macaluso, Matheson, Monteith, Pugh, Rapp, Ricard and Scott.

3. A subcommittee on agenda and procedure was appointed. The members were Messrs. Batten, Deachman, Monteith, Ricard and Scott.

4. Your committee held 45 sittings in camera and heard 12 witnesses in the fields of history, heraldry, protocol, art and design. The members of the committee express their gratitude to these witnesses for their efforts in providing detailed information and also to the nearly 2,000 Canadians who submitted flag designs and suggestions.

5. Your committee considered the following motions:

(a) For a national plebiscite—motion defeated by a vote of nine to five (9 to 5);

(b) The adoption of only one national flag—motion carried fourteen to zero (14 to 0);

(c) That the Canadian red ensign be the national flag for Canada—motion defeated ten to four (10 to 4).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why did you bring in two flags, then?

[The Clerk Assistant continuing:]

6. The designs received by the committee, together with those previously submitted, were grouped into three categories, namely:

Class A—those containing three maple leaves;

Class B—those containing one maple leaf;

Class C—those containing the union jack and/or the fleur de lys.

Elimination by an agreed procedure left only one design in each category. A vote for the retention of each finalist was then taken with the following results:

A—The three maple leaf design was retained by a vote of eight to six (8 to 6);

B—The single maple leaf design was retained by a vote of thirteen to one (13 to 1);

C—The design containing the union jack and/or the fleur de lys was rejected by a vote of nine to five (9 to 5).

A vote was then taken to determine the committee's preference between the design containing three maple leaves and the design containing one maple leaf. The single maple leaf design was retained by a vote of fourteen to zero (14 to 0).

As previously agreed, a vote was taken to determine whether or not the final selection was acceptable as a national flag for Canada. The result of this vote was in favour, ten to four (10 to 4).

7. Your committee, therefore, recommends that the flag to be designated as the national flag of Canada be a red flag of the proportions two by length and one by width, containing in its centre a white square, the width of the flag, bearing a single red maple, or, in heraldic terms, described as gules on a Canadian pale argent a maple leaf of the first.

8. The committee received and discussed a motion that it submit to the House of Commons two reports as follows:

Report No. 6, being the report herein, dealing with the national flag and final report No. 7 dealing with a flag to symbolize Canadian membership in the commonwealth of nations and Canada's allegiance to the crown. This motion was carried by a vote of nine to five (9 to 5).

It was moved and seconded that the sixth report of the special committee on a Canadian flag be now adopted. The motion was carried by a vote of ten to four (10 to 4).

Respectfully submitted,
H. M. Batten,
Chairman.

[The Clerk Assistant proceeded to read the seventh and final report as follows:]

The special committee on a Canadian flag has the honour to present the following as its seventh and final report.

Following its decision on the recommendation regarding a national flag for Canada, your committee then considered the question of a flag to symbolize Canada's membership in the commonwealth of nations and her allegiance to the crown.

It was moved "That the government be authorized to take such steps as may be necessary to provide that the Canadian red ensign may continue to be flown as a symbol of Canada's membership in the commonwealth of nations and of her allegiance to the crown". An amendment was moved to substitute the words "royal union flag, generally known as the union jack" for the words "Canadian red ensign".

The amendment carried by a vote of seven yeas, two nays and five abstentions. The motion as amended then carried by a vote of eight yeas, one nay and five abstentions.

Your committee, therefore, recommends that the government be authorized to take such steps as may be necessary to provide that the royal union flag, generally known as the union jack, may continue to be flown as a symbol of Canada's membership in the commonwealth of nations and of her allegiance to the crown.

It was moved and seconded that the seventh and final report of the special committee on a Canadian flag be now adopted. The motion was carried by a vote of eight yeas, one nay and five abstentions.

Respectfully submitted,
H. M. Batten,
Chairman.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the leader of the house or the chairman of the flag committee when it is intended to move concurrence in the report that has just been presented to the house?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as leader of the government perhaps I could answer that question. It will be recalled, I think, that on September 10, when I reported to the house in regard to the discussions held by the party leaders on the procedure to be followed in setting up the flag committee, I said at that time that once the flag committee had reported to the house I would invite the party leaders to meet me again and we would discuss the procedure to be followed in the light of the report. I have already invited the party leaders to meet me tomorrow morning. However, it is not convenient for one party leader to be here tomorrow, so I hope we will have the meeting on Monday morning.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED IN DEALING WITH AMENDMENT METHOD

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question will not have to do with the flag committee or anything of that kind. We have had a full revelation from the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra; therefore no questions are necessary.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question in regard to the repatriation of the constitution. When the address is placed before the house to embody the proposed amendment, will the British North America Act in its present form be brought before the house and dealt with section by section, or how does the government intend to bring about the right of the parliament of Canada to deal with the amendment of its own constitution?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be making a statement on this matter, or if I am not in my place the Minister of Justice will be making a statement very shortly on the procedure to be followed in this matter.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is related to the question just asked by the Leader of the Opposition, and it is likewise to the Prime Minister. Is there any difference between the proposed constitutional amendment agreed to by all the provinces with respect to the delegation of powers to the provinces and the proposal of the Conservative administration in 1960, which is generally called the Fulton formula?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, in so far as the delegation of federal powers to the provinces is concerned there is no difference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A question of law cannot be answered in the house, and I want to say at the same time that what the right hon. gentleman has said is not correct. It is quite different, because section 91 (1), involving matters of federal jurisdiction, is now going to come in part under the provincial legislatures, and this was not so in the formula we put forward.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman has disputed my right to answer this question, and has also disputed the accuracy of the answer. In case he has some doubt about accepting my word may I quote what the premier of Manitoba said the other day on this matter. I refer to the Winnipeg Tribune of October 24, where Mr. Roblin is reported in quotes as saying:

"The delegation provisions of the draft are exactly the same as under the Fulton formula. That is why those who say it was a put-up job are completely wrong."

Including my right hon. friend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I say at once that is not a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I also say at once that the words uttered by the Prime Minister are false. The fact is that the premier of Manitoba made no reference whatever to me in the course of his remarks. That is false, and the Prime Minister knows it.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I would not like to do any injustice to my right hon. friend. When I quoted the remarks of the premier of Manitoba, the quotation as taken from the Winnipeg Tribune ended with the words:

That is why those who say it was a put-up job are completely wrong.

That was the end of the quotation. When I said "including my right hon. friend" that was my observation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And, Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister could have got way with that falsity he would have done so.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pickersgill: Temper, temper.

Mr. Monteith: Who is getting red in the face?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Minister of Transport must not get annoyed. Doctor's orders.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I say I had expected an interesting afternoon, but not quite as exciting as this.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NON-PARTICIPATION BY INDIANS IN DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister, relating to the dominion-provincial conference taking place today on Indian affairs. Has the right hon. gentleman knowledge of any objections by native Indian organizations and people to the fact that this meeting is being held without their presence? Further, I ask whether he does not think this is justification for opening the meeting to native Indian people so that at least, in accordance with their rights, they may attend as observers?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the normal procedure in meetings of this kind is being followed, but I shall be glad to look into my right hon. —my hon.—friend's question and see if anything can be done.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the right hon. gentleman for my promotion.

COMBINES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING AUTOMOBILE PARTS AND ACCESSORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to ask the Minister of Justice. Has the minister received an appeal from the automotive retailers association of B.C. urging immediate action to correct abuses in the distribution of gasoline, tires, batteries and accessories and, if so, is he considering taking action on this urgent appeal?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have received some representations in this respect, and I am pleased to state that the matter is receiving active consideration. I expect to be in a position in the near future to make known the policy of the government with respect to the recommendations of the restrictive trade practices commission in its tire, batteries and accessories report.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): As a supplementary question, does the minister realize this question was first asked of Hon. Lionel Chevrier in May, 1963, and a report has been promised ever since that time?

Mr. Favreau: I realize this, Mr. Speaker, but I hope the hon. gentleman will also realize that I recently said I would be placing certain recommendations before my colleagues, and I am pleased to add that they are presently before the cabinet.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR FROM NOVA SCOTIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Since he seems to be in a rather good mood today may I ask him whether he is in a position to announce today the appointment to the C.N.R. board of directors of a representative from the province of Nova Scotia? By way of explanation to the minister may I say I pose this question again as the result of strong representations from prominent members of the Liberal party in that province.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, although I am not quite sure whether this is an altogether appropriate question under the rules, I may say—

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): It was allowed the other day.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, it was allowed the other day; I noticed that in Hansard.

Mr. MacEwan: When you were away.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, when I was away.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): On a point of order, the Speaker is in his seat, not over there.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I was answering the hon. gentleman. I was going on to say I had some doubt in my mind whether this was the kind of question envisaged in the rules given to Your Honour by the house some time ago, but I would like to have the privilege of answering it anyway, and to say that it is the intention of the government to appoint a director to Trans-Canada Air Lines, or Air Canada, from the province of Nova Scotia. I think the hon. gentleman will appreciate why, on the balance of advantages, it was thought at this particular time that this would be a more appropriate appointment for that province.

TRANSFER OF HOTEL MANAGEMENT TO PRIVATE INTERESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport and ask whether consideration is being given to the transfer of the management of the Fort Garry hotel in Winnipeg, or any other C.N.R. hotel? If so, will Canadian companies be given a chance to put in competitive bids?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): By "management" does the hon. gentleman mean ownership?

Mr. Chatterton: Management.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a matter for the management of the railway. I would not know anything about that.

Mr. Chatterton: Then would the minister inquire from C.N.R. and advise the house?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be glad to make some inquiries, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice what progress is being made with respect to the study relating to juvenile deliquency, and whether he is in a position to report.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a question requiring an answer far too large to be given at this time. Would the hon. member put it on the order paper?

Mr. Howard: May I rephrase it and ask the minister whether the committee has completed its study.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the committee has made a first report and is considering issuing a final report before the end of the year.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—REQUEST FOR EARLY CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell us whether the government has given consideration to the suggestion I made at adjournment time last night that very early—today, tomorrow or Monday—we take up the resolution stage of the Canada pension plan? As the right hon. gentleman knows, that could be debated in one day under the new rules and it would not delay the passing of interim supply. Has consideration been given to this suggestion?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, but it is considered important to get interim supply passed before we proceed to any other business, however important it may be.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question, has the government considered that if we take a day out of the present interim supply debate for this it will not change the final date at which interim supply is agreed to?

Mr. Pearson: By the same token, the postponement for a few days of the resolution to which my hon. friend refers will not postpone the application of the bill to which it applies.

Mr. Knowles: That has been the story for the last 18 months.

Mr. Churchill: Then why do you support them?

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles: Because the answer to my question about the scheduling of the debate on the Canada pension plan was unsatisfactory, I should like to give notice that I will raise the matter in the overtime period.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO APPLICATION OF ARDA PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister responsible for the application of ARDA in eastern Canada?

Can the Minister of Forestry tell us in which areas of the province of Quebec the ARDA program, or the minister's program, is applied at the present time?

[Mr. Favreau.]

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a question for the order paper.

INDUSTRY

LOCATION OF PROPOSED SECOND HEAVY WATER PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Since invitations to bid on the second heavy water plant have gone out to six companies, is it the intention of the government to name the site, as was done for the first plant in Cape Breton, or will the company making the lowest bid choose the location where it can operate at the least cost?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is not a matter within my administrative responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: It is also a question for the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question to the question directed by the hon. member for Macleod to the Minister of Transport. When he was asked a question with respect to the location of the heavy water plant, the Minister of Transport said this matter did not come within his jurisdiction. Why, then, did the Minister of Transport claim responsibility for placing the first heavy water plant in Cape Breton?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am glad to have the credit for it.

Mr. MacInnis: A further question to the Minister of Transport. Did I understand the minister to reply from his seat in respect to my last question to the effect that he was glad to take credit for the heavy water plant in Cape Breton?

Mr. Pickersgill: No; I was very glad that the government of Nova Scotia gave credit to certain of the members on this side of the house for seeing that that was done.

Mr. MacInnis: A further supplementary. Would the Minister of Transport care to read the second column on page 7430 of Hansard where the Minister of Industry, the minister responsible in this case, had this to say:

I would point out that the choice of location—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a question. It is a statement.

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Is this question of privilege an attempt to make a statement or is it really a question of privilege? The Chair is trying to help the hon. member, but there is a limit.

Mr. MacInnis: My question of privilege is intended to establish once and for all responsibility for the location of this plant, and to deny the claim made by the Minister of Transport by the words of the minister responsible, the Minister of Industry. In order to clear up this matter it will be necessary for me to quote the responsible minister, the Minister of Industry.

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand that the hon. member wishes to attribute the success of this venture to one minister rather than to another?

Mr. MacInnis: I think it is my privilege to know what the Chair has ruled, but I failed to hear the ruling because of the noise from the other side of the house. If Your Honour would repeat your question I would attempt to answer it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member can read it in Hansard. I still do not know what the question of privilege is.

Mr. MacInnis: It involves myself. It is a personal question. I wish to clarify the statement of the Minister of Transport in regard to the question I asked, in reply to which the Minister of Transport made a complete denial of what was said by his own colleague, the Minister of Industry. There is a conflict here between two ministers, and I think it is the duty of the Chair and of the two ministers concerned to clear it up to the satisfaction of the house and to my personal satisfaction. The Minister of Transport wishes to maintain credit for the establishment of this plant—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a complaint, surely, not raising a question of privilege. If he wants a detailed answer, let him put his question on the order paper. I am sure he would then get a detailed answer.

Mr. MacInnis: I am not looking for a detailed answer. I am looking for a truthful one.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED COMMUNIST INFILTRATION OF FRENCH NETWORK

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Since his recent statement, has Mr. Arsenault, a member of the Quebec provincial government, given to the R.C.M.P. the names of those he claims are communists in the C.B.C., or has he presented evidence of communist activity in the C.B.C.? Or, to use the English expression—

[Text]

I would simply like to ask, have the mounted police asked Mr. Arsenault to put up or shut up in this regard?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I will take this as a suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Did the R.C.M.P. ask Mr. Arsenault to supply them with a list of the supposed communists or with evidence of communist activities within the C.B.C.?

Mr. Balcer: The Liberal federation?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I am evidently not in a position to answer that question. All I can say is that, to my great satisfaction, whenever an investigation must be made in the public interest of Canada, it is always conducted in an efficient manner. However, I may add that if it is in the interest of the house to know the answer to that question, I can inquire.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not according to Mr. Arsenault.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Inasmuch as the answer given by the Minister of Justice is rather vague and that charges were proffered by a member of the Quebec government, I believe that the minister should at least tell us if the R.C.M.P. is conducting an investigation, following the statement made by Mr. Arsenault to the effect that the C.B.C. would be harbouring communists. Is the R.C.M.P. conducting an investigation in this matter?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I just said that I was not in a position to reply to that question. I answered in a general way, and I will naturally find out if an investigation is required.

[Text]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXTENSION OF INCREASED AID DURING INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATION YEAR

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Could the minister tell the house whether the government is considering the establishment of a special foreign aid program to mark the international co-operation year?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the hon. member's question, but I shall read it in Hansard tomorrow and give a reply later.

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, I might repeat my question now if it would help the minister.

I asked him if Canada was considering the establishment of a special program to assist foreign countries, since the United Nations declared 1965 the international co-operation year?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member no doubt knows that a voluntary committee is being set up for that great event and I take this opportunity to remind the hon. member that a few months ago, the federal government considerably increased its foreign aid program.

[Text]

UNITED NATIONS

POSTPONEMENT OF MEETING OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether a decision has been taken by the United Nations to defer the meeting of the general assembly from November 10 to a later date. If the decision has not been taken, perhaps the minister could tell the house what progress the secretary general is making in this respect in his attempts to convince the other nations.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The next meeting of the general assembly has been postponed to December 1.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the Chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $740,710,974.77, being the aggregate of

(a) two twelfths of the total of all of the items to be voted in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, as reduced, except finance item 15, mines and technical surveys item 25, national research council item 10, and transport items 15 and 25 for which the proportion is one twelfth and atomic energy item 5, external affairs item 20, forestry item 25 and legislation item 20 for which no proportion is being released, $651,829,576.84;

(b) an additional two twelfths of the amount of public works item 70 (schedule A), of the said main estimates, $666,666.67;

(c) an additional one twelfth of the amount of fisheries items 5 and 10, legislation item 5, mines and technical surveys item 70, post office item 1 and public works item 40 (schedule B), of the said main estimates, $20,263,800.00;

(d) two twelfths of all of the items to be voted in the supplementary estimates (A), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except national defence item 56a, and loans, investments and advances items L12a, L17a and L37a for which no proportion is being released, $20,612,522.50;

(e) an additional two twelfths of the amount of transport item 103a (schedule C), of the said supplementary estimates (A), $872,966.67;

(f) nine twelfths of the total of the items to be voted in the supplementary estimates (B), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $46,215,108.75;

(g) two twelfths of the amount of transport item 103b (schedule D), of the said supplementary estimates (B), $250,333.34;

be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, last night when the house adjourned I was saying that society is only made up of individuals, human beings, human persons whose actions are either taken personally, or as a family or a company, or all sorts of associations.

By saving the institutions we are not saving the individuals. But by saving each and every individual we are saving the institutions, especially those which are useful to the human persons.

If each individual in a country were prosperous, the nation would surely be prosperous. It would not be so, if it were the other way around. Institutions cannot prosper while leaving the majority of individuals in poverty and insecurity.

Heads of families and single persons get equal pay for equal work.

Mothers get no salary for their work as a mother within the family.

Children and students cost a lot of money, and yet they get no personal salary in our present economic structure.

Taxes on company benefits and capital are not as heavy as in the case of private individuals.

If, to figure out economic values, the needs of the human person were taken into account, without overlooking normal capital return for our institutions, everything would become clear and easy in the making up of the national budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), because a national budget is made up of revenues, expenditures and surpluses, just like the budget of any company, any institution, any family, any individual human person.

And why not start with the easiest step in this new orientation of federal, national, provincial, municipal, family and personal administration.

You can see that we always have to come back to the human person. Therefore, let us settle once and for all the budget of the human person, which is the basic unit of the country's economy.

Mr. Chairman, that administration formula should apply everywhere. It is simple and recognized by everybody.

Revenues, expenditures and profits: that is why our 19,300,000 citizens should be assured of their personal subsistance right, guaranteeing each Canadian citizen a minimum subsistence revenue of $1 per day for each child under 16 years of age, $2 per day for each student of 16 years of age and over, $3 per day for each adult dependant, without revenue.

I would ask, Mr. Chairman, that I be permitted to table a more detailed statement—so that I would not have to read it into the record, which would be rather long—which is made up only of explanatory figures.

However, further studies should be made to complete this work, this draft of an administration program based on the needs of a human being while taking into account capital returns of institutions.

I am prepared to briefly expound my argument to the ministers of this government before the Canada pension plan bill is submitted to the House of Commons.

I am very keen on it, because a personal vital right program would, in itself, be sufficient to fulfil the whole unemployment insurance program and that of personal pensions of all Canadian citizens, whatever their age or condition.

I respectfully submit it to you and I ask you to study it in the light of the true interest you show toward the solution of the monetary, economic and political difficulties which affect every person, every citizen of this country.

The economic justice of this nation ranks first among any justice, because it affects the primo vivere of every individual within the regular framework of his daily life, of his daily earnings.

Prime Minister of Canada, Minister of Justice, minister of national, social, family and personal finance, it is up to you to act.

Priority of the individual over the institution: Wealthy, powerful and learned citizens of Canada, do you admit that this country is composed of units—19,300,000 human beings?

Wealthy, powerful and learned citizens of Canada, what use is being made of all our talents, our wealth, our authority?

Wealthy, powerful and learned citizens of Canada, are we thinking only about ourselves, our institutions, or about the 19,300,000 persons who are Canada?

A country does not exist; only individuals have life. A government does not exist. A political party does not exist. A ministry does not exist. Only human beings exist and are responsible or are not responsible.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is the one responsible before the 19,300,000 Canadian citizens.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) is responsible for the administration of justice. Economic justice is the most important of any justice, because it affects the primo vivere of the 19,300,000 citizens of this country within the practical frameworks of life, of daily earnings.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) is responsible for the finances of the 19,300,000 citizens of this country, in the 4,700,000 families of one or more human beings, who have a body and a mind, who have physical, intellectual and spiritual needs which are all paid for in money and which are produced by 7,000,000 working adults who are the only ones to draw revenues through their work and their capital.

The Minister of Industry is responsible.

The Minister of Agriculture is responsible.

The minister of commerce is responsible.

The Minister of Labour is responsible.

The ministry, the government and the political party do not exist. Only human beings have life, intelligence and responsibility.

Let us cease burying our responsibility behind abstract barriers, behind creations of our mind, behind institutions whose responsibility is limited, atrophied, anonymous.

Every individual is responsible for his position and if he does not feel able to play his part, he should give it up to someone else.

Let us stop hiding behind party politics. Every minister should pursue only one policy: the people's policy.

And the people include 7,000,000 children under 16; 1,000,000 students over 16; 1,300,000 dependent adults in all age groups; 3,000,000 mothers without any income; 12,300,000 Canadian citizens without income; 7,000,000 adult producers with an income; 19,300,000 citizens with needs.

Every citizen has a personal vital right, a natural and divine right, attached to his person from his birth to his death, independent even from his ability to work, to earn a living, before God and man.

All groups, all companies or organizations of every type are merely human institutions, legal bodies, private or public, made up of living persons.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Latulippe: Ministers and members of parliament, whether Liberal, Conservative, socialist, Social Crediters, nationalist, separatists—

The Chairman: Order. As much as I regret it, I must inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I have here a table which would prove my point. However, since it is fairly long, I would ask that it be printed in Hansard, if possible, without my reading it.

The Chairman: Order. No, that is not allowed, unless the table is part of the hon. member's speech.

Mr. Latulippe: It is part of my speech, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I am sorry, but our standing orders do not allow such procedure.

[Text]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, in rising today to speak on supply I would point out that we have listened to various speeches in reference to the C.B.C., but I wish to direct my attention to something that arose this afternoon and which I believe affects the whole house. I trust you will bear with me, Mr. Chairman, because I have only had the last ten minutes in which to prepare these remarks.

I have said that this matter affects the whole house, and as the official opposition one of our major duties is to control the spending of money. When there is a privilege which affects the whole house, then it goes to the very root of the function the opposition are expected to perform in this house.

This afternoon we saw a matter which has been brushed aside by the Prime Minister. This afternoon the Prime Minister rose and said that something was false but then made no further explanation, and no other members on the government side said anything in this regard. I should like to refer to what took place on September 10, 1964. On that day the special committee was set up to consider the question of a Canadian flag. The composition of that committee comprised members of the Liberal party, the Conservative party, the New Democratic party, the Social Credit party and the Ralliement Creditistes. Although I was not a member of the committee and consequently have limited knowledge of the facts, as I understand it—and I challenge anyone to deny it at this time—when the committee first met it agreed that it would sit in camera and that if any of its considerations were to be disclosed such disclosure should be made by the chairman.

There now appears to have been a serious breach in this respect, Mr. Chairman. If such a breach occurred in a court of law which was sitting in camera the person guilty of the breach would be in contempt of court and brought before the bar of justice. I suggest that this particular member of the house is in contempt of parliament this afternoon. It is interesting to note that in the Ottawa Citizen—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Tardif): Order. I think the hon. gentleman will realize that he has to relate his remarks, not to an individual member but to the problem under study.

