First, I would like to remind the Premier of Nova Scotia that in Nova Scotia alone there are six subagreements that have not been renewed; $721 million in cuts in Atlantic Canada alone. That, Mr. Premier, is a cut. Second, he should check the books and Hansard and he will find out that the ACOA program in Atlantic Canada has been extended from five years to seven years. It does not take a mathematical genius to know that that is a 25 per cent cut, Mr. Premier, in the money that is available in Atlantic Canada.

What about VIA Rail and the cuts that have been inflicted by this Government in Atlantic Canada? There is also the closure of the route from Truro to Sydney. In the Halifax area alone the reduction of service could cost 321 jobs. That, Mr. Premier, is a cut. The At and East program, as stripped down in the last federal Budget, could see 297 individuals who work at the grain terminal in Halifax lose their jobs. Mr. Premier, that is a cut.

Does the Premier not know a cut when he sees a cut? Perhaps before he gets up the next time and sticks his proverbial foot in his proverbial mouth he can give me a call at (613) 995-9378 and I will straighten him out.

• (1410)

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should give the Premier equal time. However, he is not with us.

The Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Cowichan.

FISHERIES

B.C. SALMON AND HERRING INDUSTRY

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, thousands of jobs are at risk.

Last week, representatives from the B.C. fishing industry came to Ottawa to plead with the Government not to cut domestic processing requirements for B.C. salmon and herring. They spoke not only for their own communities and their own families but also for the thousands of workers in Atlantic Canada who are being lined up for the chopping-block by the Government to satisfy the U.S. appetite for unfettered domination over Canadian resources.

On Thursday, the Minister went so far as to call B.C. fish processing jobs "archaic". There is nothing archaic about maximizing the value of our fishery for the benefit of Canadians. There is nothing archaic about ensuring that Canadians get jobs from our resources. There is nothing archaic in the desire of the men and women of the B.C. fish processing industry to want a pay cheque instead of another rain check on the Minister's promise to protect the B.C. and Atlantic fishing industry.

The Minister has become sinister. B.C. fish jobs are not archaic. I would urge the Minister to retract these words—retract or resign.

CANADA DAY

DESIGNER OF NATIONAL POSTER

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, in a few days, Canadians will join together to celebrate Canada Day. The people of Scarborough always take pride in celebrating Canada Day. However, this year they will take even greater pride in honouring Samuel Yip, an 11-year old Scarborough resident who designed the national Canada Day poster.

Samuel's design, called: "Working in Harmony to Build a Peaceful and Loving Canada" was selected from thousands of submissions.

On behalf of all Members of the House and the people of Scarborough, I congratulate Samuel Yip. His theme captures the true meaning and the bright future of this country. Together we build Canada—tous ensemble Canada.

THE ECONOMY

ATLANTIC CANADA—DEVELOPMENT OF REGION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, once again, Atlantic Canadians have been insulted by a Government which makes a habit of saying one thing and doing another.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was all sun and roses in Halifax yesterday. He told Atlantic Canadians there is no threat of recession in their region. He told them not to worry about the Summerside base being closed and the 1,300 jobs lost to the Island because that would "obscure the larger accomplishments".

Just what are those larger accomplishments?

Fishing communities throughout the region are facing collapse. In Newfoundland and Nova Scotia up to 9,000 jobs could be lost over the next few months, thanks to the do-nothing policies of the Prime Minister and his Conservative Government.

The only things that this Conservative Government has accomplished for Atlantic Canadians are higher unemployment, lower unemployment benefits and greater poverty. It is a shame.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

NATIONAL FORUM ON PREVENTION

Mr. Brian O'Kurley (Elk Island): Mr. Speaker, from June 18 to June 21 the federal Government will be hosting a national forum on the prevention of family violence.

Family violence is a serious and widespread problem affecting the lives of countless Canadians. An estimated one in ten women and tens of thousands of children and elderly people are the victims of violence. The scars, both physical and emotional, can last a lifetime. The forum is being held as part of the federal Government's initiative to deal with this serious problem.

"Working Together" is the title given to the forum. It brings together about 400 individuals from all across Canada who are involved in the prevention of family violence. They represent health and social service agencies, voluntary and non-government organizations, provincial and territorial Governments, women's groups and community groups, native organizations, the business community and the legal community.

It is only by working together toward a national strategy to reduce family violence that we can expect to find long-term solutions.

I would like to wish the participants a busy and productive three days.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

THE PASSING OF THE MAYOR OF BEAUPRÉ

Mr. Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, the town of Beaupré was in mourning during the weekend, following the death of Mr. Antoine Bélanger, for nearly 20 years the mayor of this sizable municipality in the riding of Montmorency—Orléans.

As mayor, Mr. Bélanger was very much involved in the development of Mont Sainte-Anne, now an internationally known ski centre.

At the federal level, Mr. Bélanger sat in the House of Commons from 1962 to 1969 as the Social Credit Member for Charlevoix, which then included the town of Beaupré.

With all the people of Beaupré and the former riding of Charlevoix, I wish to pay tribute to this man of action and extend my sincere condolences to his family and friends.

IRAN

REMEMBRANCE OF TEHRAN MASSACRE

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on June 20, 1981, half a million people were gathered together in the city of Tehran to take part in a peaceful demonstration in opposition to the suppression of democratic rights in Iran.

In response to this protest, the Iranian regime led by the Ayatollah Khomeini, ordered guards to open fire on the marchers. Hundreds were killed or wounded. Those who escaped the gunfire were arrested and transported to the Evin Prison where the firing squads continued into 1988 with their mass executions. To date, the number of those executed without just trial is reported to have reached over 90,000.

On the eighth anniversary of this bloody massacre I urge the Government of Canada to communicate to the new regime of Iran its horror at the flagrant human rights violations that have now been going on steadily for eight years, and its intention that if this trend continues Canada will seriously reconsider its trade and diplomatic relations with that country.

TAXATION

"TAX FREEDOM DAY"

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, I noted with interest in the newspapers today that July 3 is tax freedom day, the day on which Canadians finally start working for themselves.

Tax freedom day has been moving back further each year as taxes increase. The middle-class of Canada feels quite burdened by the taxes that they have to pay now. At the moment the middle-class is tired of paying an excessive amount of tax for debt servicing.

Thank goodness that Canadians can look forward to an equal, equitable and fair tax system which is contemplated for the future.

Thank goodness there is one rate, fair for all with no exceptions.

FINANCE

THE NEW SALES TAX—MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

For two years, the Minister has been telling us, and I quote: "Sales tax reform will eliminate the hidden taxes paid by consumers when they purchase goods." And another quote: "The tax will not be unlike the retail sales taxes operated by the provinces." And another quote: "The amount of tax will be readily apparent, as it should be. Consumers will be aware of how much tax they are paying." End of quote, Mr. Speaker.

That is what we have been hearing for two years, and it just isn't true! The Minister was forced to admit today that the new national sales tax will not appear on the bills for the billions and billions of dollars worth of items to which the new federal sales tax will apply.

Why did the Minister of Finance mislead Canadians on this issue for two whole years?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the result of sales tax reform is that it will eliminate the very important hidden nature of the manufacturers' sales tax which is buried deeply into the price of any product that is taxable today. Under the new sales tax system the tax will be at the retail level. Thus it will be much easier for an individual to tell how much tax will be paid.

I want to refer the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to page 25 of the booklet entitled The Goods and Services Tax. It states:

> —the government will want the advice of consumer groups on:
> how best to ensure that consumers know the amount of tax they are paying on their purchases while, at the same time, maintaining the simplicity of the tax system;

We want to ensure that consumers are made fully aware of the impact of the new tax system on them. At that time we will be having consultations with the Consumers Association, the Retail Council and other interested organizations to ensure that the visibility of the tax is as transparent as possible.

• (1420)

POSITION OF MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Consumers Association of Canada said today that the Minister's response is not good enough, that consumers have a right to know the amount of tax they are paying.

I did not think the credibility of the Minister of Finance could sink any lower. He says that he will replace one hidden tax with another hidden tax. For two years he swore in the House and across the country that the new federal sales tax would not be a hidden tax. Now he claims to journalists, apparently, that he has no constitutional power to force retailers to add the sales tax to the sales slip. That is absolute nonsense.

If he had such a legal opinion, why did he not say so two years ago, or is he claiming that officials hid that legal opinion from him for two years? If he did know, did he just choose not to say so during the election campaign?

Is it not the real truth that the Minister is now desperately trying to find a way to justify a hidden tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is correct. The Government of Canada does not have the constitutional right to impose its will on retailers as to whether or not it will be tax included pricing or tax excluded pricing.

We have said very clearly that this tax will be much clearer to people than the tax on manufactured products which is buried right at the manufactured level, not at the wholesale or retail level. It is right down at the manufactured level. This tax will be quite clear at the retail level.

I should point out to the Leader of the Opposition that if we had a national sales tax, then the provinces would have been part of that and we would have made our views very clear at that time.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the quotations that I took from the Minister's document on the goods and services tax, dated April 27, 1989, was published and deposited in the House of Commons after the Minister told us that the provinces no longer agreed. The citations I gave about no hidden tax are after he knew that the provinces would not go along.

The simple fact is that the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister chose the ultimately cynical course of gouging Canadians for billions and billions of dollars and not having the guts to tell them how much they are being gouged. This is the Minister who promised that he would not have a hidden tax. He now has taken the absurd position before the House that Canadians could easily figure it out because it would be on the retail level.

Since the Minister figures it is so easy, let me put to him a situation in which the average Canadian consumer will find himself. On a retail purchase of $112, for example—

Some Hon. Members: Order Paper.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —of which $37 is not taxable, you have a provincial tax of 8 per cent and a national tax of 9 per cent. What will the national tax be on that purchase? That is the decision the average Canadian consumer will have to make on the spot. Maybe the Minister of Finance can tell us how smart he is?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let us be clear. The Consumers Association, and consumers as a whole, may wish to state their views to retailers and to people who are selling goods at the retail point of sale to make it quite clear that it is important for that tax to be quite visible and quite clear in terms of dollars and cents.

The point I stress with the Leader of the Opposition is that we cannot force this. We have said very clearly in this document that was released on April 27 that the Government will want the advice of consumer groups on how best to ensure that consumers know the amount of tax they are paying on their purchases. That is very clear. We will be working with the Consumers Association, with the Retail Council and others to assure that that objective is followed through.

CANADA–U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

CLOSURE OF BENDIX CORP.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Since the signing of the Free Trade Agreement we have seen a consistent procession of Canadian industries moving their jobs into the United States sun belt or into the Maquiladora zone of Mexico. The latest example is the 400 high skilled jobs of Bendix Corporation in Collingwood moving to Alabama and into the Maquiladora region.

Considering that his own officials consistently have refused to take any actions to plug those loopholes by which Canadian industry can evade the content requirements and can seek out areas of cheap labour, what will the Government do to stop this leakage of Canadian employment into those areas, denying Canadians the right to work and denying Canadian industry the right to grow? Does the Government have any plan to deal with this clearly serious problem for this economy?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has been trade critic long enough to know that what he is presenting to the House now is completely spurious and false.

This loss of jobs at Bendix in Collingwood, Ontario is most regrettable but it has nothing to do with the Free Trade Agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: It has nothing to do with the Free Trade Agreement. The business produces auto parts and it has been under the Auto Pact for 24 years, since the Auto Pact came into being in Canada. Under the Auto Pact there is free trade in original equipment, automotive parts, between Canada and the United States. The company would have been free to make this decision at any time in the last 24 years or anytime in the next 24 years, but it is not permitted or given any grounds for making the decision, nor is it assisted in coming to such a decision by the U.S–Canada Free Trade Agreement. It is a matter of the Auto Pact. The hon. gentleman knows that. He is dishonest in attempting to suggest that this is a result of the U.S–Canada Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have been trade critic long enough to know that any answer from that Minister is totally spurious. It is unfortunate that a Trade Minister of the Government is not aware that under the Free Trade Agreement the content requirements under the Auto Pact were changed, requiring North American content, not Canadian content. That is what makes a difference.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada itself refuses to undertake any monitoring of this major leakage of Canadian jobs. The Canadian Government, in discussions we had today with U.S. customs officials, has refused or has been negligent in requesting U.S. customs to take any monitoring or inspection of those matters. When will the Government take serious action to deal with the serious problems resulting in a serious loss of jobs for this country?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we know what the theory of the Official Opposition is, because it was given to us by their finance critic: "Every sparrow that falls will be blamed on the U.S.–Canada Free Trade Agreement". He said: "The trade deal will be blamed even if it may or may not be to blame". There is the photograph of the person. He is sitting just down the aisle from the you, Mr. Speaker. The Free Trade Agreement had nothing to do with this situation, but we are monitoring what is happening.

For every incident that the hon. gentleman can cite, I have two or three which show that because of the Free Trade Agreement more plants and manufacturing companies are expanding in Canada. For example, Dupont Canada purchased a site in Trenton to manufacture food containers for frozen meals, and the reason given was the Free Trade Agreement. The same is true in Windsor, Scarborough, Mississauga, Smiths Falls, Montreal—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

THE NEW SALES TAX—ELECTORAL PROMISES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Here is a Minister who cannot keep the promises he made regarding his new sales tax.

First of all, he promised the tax would be revenue neutral, which it will not be. And second, according to the Minister the tax would eliminate existing hidden taxes, which is not going to happen. Third, we are now witnessing the violation of his third promise: the new tax itself will be hidden.

Could the Minister explain why he has once again broken a promise he made to Canadians?

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no promises have been broken here. I just want to remind the Hon. Member that before she gets too far out on a limb she should reflect back on the tax probe of her Party which said: "Our analysis has led us to conclude that the current federal sales tax is so unfair, unaccountable and administratively complex that it should be abolished".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Perhaps the Hon. Member has some way of bringing in a sales tax that can achieve that. Obviously her Party says that it should be abolished.

I have responded to the Leader of the Opposition on the same sort of question, but let me say to her that the new tax will be at the same rate at the retail level on all taxable items across the board. Therefore it will be much, much easier for consumers to know how much tax they will be paying, even if the tax is included in the price.

We are not saying today that it will be included or excluded. What I said to the Leader of the Opposition was that we do not have the power to enforce that, but we will be working with the Consumers' Association of Canada and other organizations to find the best way of achieving that very important element of visibility for the consumer.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister severely criticized the existing sales tax system. I would remind him that the existing hidden sales and excise tax costs every man, woman, and child in Canada $268 a year at this time. The Minister said in 1987:

> Many Canadians are unaware of this tax because it is normally applied when a produce is manufactured and is hidden in the price of goods— By the time it reaches the consumer, a dollar of tax paid by a manufacturer can raise the price to the consumer by a lot more than a dollar, and the purchaser does not know much.

I would like to ask the Minister to tell the House how the new sales tax is going to differ from the old sales tax.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to do just that because the Hon. Member is absolutely right.

I have roundly criticized the existing tax as has her Party, as has the Liberal Party. It is a bad tax. The reason why it is a bad tax is that the existing tax is buried deep in the production of the particular product. When it reaches the retail level, the tax may be 3 per cent, it may be 5 per cent, it may be 10 per cent, or it may be 13.5 per cent. Surely that is an unfair tax.

What will happen with this tax is that it will be 9 per cent on all taxable goods at the retail level. That makes it much fairer. That makes it much clearer to the consumer. That is one of the key reasons why we are supportive of this tax. It is one of the key reasons why I believe her Party should also be supportive of this tax.

Ms. McLaughlin: Canadians cannot be that easily fooled. They know that a hidden tax is a tax that can be raised without them seeing where it is going to.

IMPACT OF NEW SALES TAX

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, a new 9 per cent tax is supposed to mean a break for consumers on the price of manufactured goods such as cars, household furniture, and appliances which are currently taxed at 13.5 per cent after the recent Budget.

If this tax remains hidden, how can Canadians be sure that they are getting this break that he says we are going to get in the new sales tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we will be making that quite clear when the technical paper is released.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me remind the Hon. Member of another reason why her Party should be fully in support of this tax. The New Democratic Party says that loopholes for the rich are bad. One clear element of this sales tax is that there are no loopholes.

Any time persons purchases a product that is taxable, they pay that tax. The rich cannot tax plan themselves out of this. They cannot hire lawyers or accountants or anybody like that to tax plan them out of paying that tax. It is payable by everyone. Furthermore, there is an offset to low income Canadians which ensures that this tax is a fair tax for low income Canadians.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSURE OF CFB SUMMERSIDE—IMPACT ON SEARCH AND RESCUE

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in the House yesterday the Minister of National Defence stated in his response to my question on the search and rescue component now at CFB Summerside that search and rescue was identified on budget day and that that was still the policy and direction they were prepared to take.

Will the Minister confirm, more specifically, that search and rescue will not only remain in Prince Edward Island as stated on budget day, but that it will remain in Summerside since it will cost many millions of dollars to have it placed elsewhere?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that the necessity to close CFB Summerside was to bring about a savings to this Government because of the lack of operational need of that base. I want to repeat what I have said before, that the search and rescue squadron will continue to operate on Prince Edward Island as a detachment of a base in the Maritimes.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, if I recall correctly, what the budget statement said was that it would be located in Prince Edward Island, that it would be located in Charlottetown.

The Minister said that he was saving money by moving the search and rescue to Charlottetown and that it would cost many millions. It seems to be a contradiction in terms, that it is going to remain in P.E.I., in Charlottetown, yet it is not going to even be on the Island. Will the Minister please explain?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on budget night the backgrounders that were put out clearly stated that the search and rescue squadron would continue to operate on Prince Edward Island as a detachment of a base in the Maritimes. That gives the Department several options to consider. When those options have been considered, there will be a decision made.

However, the Hon. Member knows that to maintain partial use of CFB Summerside certainly would not affect the savings that are necessary so that we can continue to use those dollars to buy equipment for the men and women who serve Canada.

FISHERIES

IMPACT OF FREE TRADE AGREEMENT ON ATLANTIC CANADA

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Egmont of course is dead right when he says that the Government ought to be increasing not decreasing surveillance, particularly over fishing.

I have a question for my good friend, the Minister of Fisheries, about the overfishing which is devastating the Atlantic economy. Yesterday we learned that Fishery Products International, FPI, suffered a $7 million loss in the first quarter, that it is buying fish from South America and Alaska, and then processing it in the United States.

Is FPI's policy of purchasing fish in other countries and processing it in the United States just the latest example of what free trade is going to mean to Atlantic Canada—creating jobs in the United States instead of here in Canada?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made certain allegations. I am unaware of the factual basis on which those allegations are made. I would certainly want to look into that question before I would accept any assertion made by the Hon. Member opposite on such a question.

I also note that the president of Fishery Products International only yesterday was quoted as saying that he was very optimistic about the outlook for Fishery Products International in terms of returning to a profitable position by, I think, the third quarter of this year.

Mr. Simmons: What allegations? That there is overfishing? Does the Minister not know that there is overfishing? Does he not know that FPI has lost a bundle this year and that it is buying fish abroad?

CRISIS IN ATLANTIC INDUSTRY

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the same Minister. The crisis in the Atlantic Fishery is having a devastating vicious chain reaction. Fishing incomes are down or wiped out. Shipyards are laying off people. The construction industry is in a tailspin. I could go on.

Is it necessary for the people of Atlantic Canada to beg this Government for help? Where is the plan the Minister promised this House three full weeks ago, the plan to help those people caught in the middle of the Government's mismanagement and kowtowing to the foreigners.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I believe I made the observation last week, but I will make it again today. The Hon. Member should apologize to the people of his area and of Atlantic Canada for spreading totally unjustified alarm and fear. The inshore fishery of his own region is only beginning to get under way for the 1989 fishing year.

Under the last four successive years of fisheries management by the Government, employment in the Atlantic fishery and income have continued to increase to unprecedented levels.

SPORTS

PRESENCE OF NICK PRICE AT CANADIAN OPEN GOLF TOURNAMENT

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport.

The Canadian Open Golf Tournament takes place this weekend. The Minister will be aware that South African golfer Nick Price, travelling on a British passport of convenience, is attending the tournament. The Minister will also be aware that this is in complete contradiction of the policy the Canadian Government announced last year.

Will the Government enforce its own policy and prohibit Nick Price from entering Canada to participate in the tournament? Will it call on the Royal Canadian Golf Association to withdraw its invitation to Mr. Price?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, Canada's policy in the area of sport contact with South Africa is derived from the 1977 Gleneagles Agreement. As the Member has mentioned, there has been a review of that policy as applied in Canada less than a year ago and a tightening up of the policy. Since then there has been a further review of how the policy now applies in Canada to consider further ways in which we can tighten it up.

Mr. Price is coming into Canada under a passport from the U.K. I am sorry to say that in those circumstances Canada is not in a position in which we can question the legal documents that have been put out by the Government of the U.K.

However, I will add that I will intervene personally with the Royal Canadian Golf Association and invite it to decline from inviting Mr. Price to play in its golf tournament.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Government is not too late. It has had notice of this situation for some time.

UNITED NATIONS BLACK LIST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister also aware that seven golfers, including yesterday's U.S. Open Champion Curtis Strange, Lee Trevino, Ben Crenshaw, Ken Green, and Nick Faldo, who have thumbed their noses at the UN boycott of sports contacts with South Africa and who, as a result, are on the UN register for sports contact with South Africa, intend to participate in the Open?

Will the Government enforce the UN black list and will it act to preserve the threat against the Commonwealth Games in Auckland and Victoria and in order to preserve Canada's reputation on the issue of apartheid?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, as you will know, this is a very important issue for the Government of Canada and that is why there was a tightening up of the policy less than a year ago. One of the things we did at that time was to deny visa to those athletes, whether professional or amateur, attempting to enter Canada for sporting events. Even though there was that tightening up, we are looking at ways now in which we can do more things.

The difficulty we have in the very specific situation of a professional event is that they come under legal documents put forward by other countries. That obviously sets a limit on our level of action, but we will be speaking with those sport associations which have this type of activity to encourage them not to invite these athletes and to maintain Canada's position of having one of the strongest policies against sporting contacts with South Africa.

IMMIGRATION

ASSISTANCE TO CHINESE NATIONALS IN CANADA

Hon. David MacDonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration and concerns the tragic events the past few weeks in China.

As Members will know, some thousands of Chinese citizens, many of them students, have found themselves caught in a most difficult situation here in Canada. They are quite concerned about what their future situation will be with respect to staying on in Canada.

Does the Minister intend to take further steps to assist these people? If so, can she indicate to the House what those measures might be?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I have said in the House before, we are constantly looking at our policy with regard to Chinese Nationals in Canada. There are two important things that I would like to clarify today. One of them is a new step which we are prepared to take.

First, immigration officials in our many offices across Canada have been actively approaching community organizations to ensure that the public is aware of the measures they are taking. Public information sessions have been held at various locations, and I would encourage people with questions to get in touch with them.

Second, one of our first steps was to extend visas by 60 days for those who are in Canada. I would point out that the visas of many of the people who are in Canada right now do not expire for some months. However, I would encourage those who feel they need an early decision to approach our offices because we are prepared to give sympathetic consideration at this time to extending those visas for a year.

UNEMPLOYMENT

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE IN CERTAIN MONTREAL NEIGHBOURHOODS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Today, Montreal's commission for economic development published a report indicating that the unemployment rate in 23 neighbourhoods in Montreal is over 15 per cent, while in 6 it is over 20 per cent. For instance, in Park Extension, the rate is 21 per cent, which is more than Sept-Îles with the same population, and in Plateau Mont Royal, it is 18 per cent, which is more than Abitibi with the same population.

Mr. Speaker, considering these circumstances, when will this Government be ready to implement a special economic program for Montreal, in order to create jobs and reduce poverty? When?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course, since September 1984, 315,000 jobs have been created in Québec, and many of these in Montreal. Since we came to power, the unemployment rate has dropped from 13 per cent to 9.8 per cent, a decline of 3.2 per cent. The other day, the Premier of Québec, Mr. Bourassa, mentioned that the economy of Montreal was in better shape now that it had been in decades, and I think he is right. There is investment. Things are happening in Montreal. The boom is strong and sustained, largely thanks to investment brought about by the unusual degree of co-operation between the federal Government and the Government of Québec, which has generated a considerable number of jobs.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I suggest the Prime Minister read the report that was published in Montreal this morning.

The report says that the situation is worse now than it was in the recession of 1981 with over 400,000 unemployed in 23 Montreal districts. This was confirmed by the January report Deux Québec dans un and the recent report of the Canadian Council on Social Development.

On June 7 the Minister of Labour, who is responsible for the City of Montreal, said that the Government had no special programs in mind for the City of Montreal. In view of the report tabled today in Montreal, would the Government now reconsider that approach and take steps with the City of Montreal and the Government of Quebec to reverse this deplorable situation in that city?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend mentions the year 1981 involving his Government. During the term of the last Liberal Government, in almost five years, 55 months, there were 40,000 jobs created in Quebec. In four years there were 315,000 jobs created in the Province of Quebec under the Progressive Conservative Government.

Mr. Allmand: Read the report.

Mr. Mulroney: That is a big difference, 315,000.

My hon. friend points out that there are areas of economic difficulty in some areas of Montreal. I agree with him. We are trying to work very closely with the Province of Quebec, the City of Montreal, and the private sector to try to alleviate difficulties in those various sectors. However, generally speaking there has been a remarkable improvement in the economy of the Province of Quebec and in the growth of the City of Montreal. My hon. friend is a Montrealer; he is fully acquainted with that.

Under this Government jobs have been created in the Province of Quebec at a rate eight times faster than jobs were created under the previous Liberal Government. My hon. friend should be celebrating that tremendous contribution to Quebec's economic well-being rather than being a doomster and a gloomster like he has been all his life.

HOUSING

ABOLITION OF RRAP FOR RENTAL HOUSING

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Housing. Yesterday in Montreal, the provincial minister, the mayors of Montreal and Québec City, the president of the provincial municipalities' union and others denounced the abolition of RRAP for rental housing as an act of blatant discrimination against Québec. My question is: Was the Minister aware that by cutting this program, he was hitting the poorest in the Province of Québec hardest, because they received 50 per cent of the funds under this program? If the answer is yes, why did he single them out, and if the answer is no, is he prepared to revive the RRAP for rental housing immediately and without delay?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with Québec's problem. The RRAP for rental housing was used more in Québec than elsewhere in Canada because 65 per cent of Québecers are tenants. In the rest of Canada, only 38 per cent of the population rent their housing.

Yesterday, I told this House that I hope to form a tripartite federal-provincial-municipal committee which will find a solution to this problem. The question was raised yesterday by the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi. Unfortunately, the Hon. Member was not here at that time.

[English]

ABSENCE OF CONSULTATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, by cutting the program, the Government not only cut an essential program; it cut it without consultation with the provincial Governments concerned. The tripartite idea flown here yesterday has not impressed the provincial minister of housing, nor the mayor. The provincial minister said yesterday that he was going to take the Government to court. He said that the Government broke a federal-provincial agreement.

The total absence of consultation is breaking federal-provincial agreements. It is breaking the Government's word. Is that the way the Government intends to pursue the housing crisis in this country?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware of the difficulties we have with the fiscal situation in this country. When a program is not funded unfortunately there is no money to carry it out.

I regret that and I know that all members of the Government regret that fact. I am looking forward to working with the Hon. Member and all the Hon. Members in the House from Quebec and across the country to find some solutions to that problem.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

IMPACT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, over 26,000 jobs have been lost by Canadian workers, men and women, to the United States and Mexico since the free trade deal has been instituted.

In answer to the question the Minister was asked about another 400 jobs being lost in Mexico, the Minister attacked the Liberal Party.

Does he have something to offer concretely in the terms that the Prime Minister said, that we would have the best programs of readjustment on the Free Trade Agreement of anywhere in the world? What does he specifically have to offer the 26,000 people who have already lost their jobs? Another 400 jobs are going to Mexico because of your bungling of the Free Trade Agreement?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has not come up with a sparrow. He has come with an albatross—

An Hon. Member: You are the albatross.

Mr. Crosbie: —and it is hanging around his neck. There are no such 26,000 jobs. There have been 1.4 million jobs created since the Government came into office. From time to time I am able to give other examples of jobs which have been created as a result of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

There is Alcan Aluminium, a $48 million modernization and expansion in Kitimat. That is in British Columbia. There is Cargill, a $50 million slaughterhouse in High River which will employ 480 by mid-summer 1989. That is a slaughterhouse. There is Novacor Chemicals of Calgary, $600 million in an ethylene plant near Joffre, creating 200 permanent jobs. There are no 26,000 jobs.

MAQUILADORA PROGRAM

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hands a document which comes from the Commissioner of Customs in the United States. It indicates that goods brought into the United States from the Maquiladora section of Mexico will be treated under many circumstances as having U.S. origin.

What is this Government going to do to plug this loophole and to safeguard thousands of jobs right across this country?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have had sparrows and we have had albatrosses. Now we have a canard or several canards.

There are clear provisions in the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. You have to show, in order to get the benefits of the agreement, that the goods originated in the United States or in Canada.

I do not know what obscure little document the hon. gentleman has from the U.S. Customs. However, their documents do not matter to us. It is our documents which matter to us. Our Customs will not allow such goods to come across the border subject to the U.S.-Canada tariff arrangements unless they show the goods originated in the United States, not in the Maquiladora, not in Mexico, and not in anywhere south of the border.

Oral Questions

THE BUDGET

POSTAL SUBSIDY CUT-BACK

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, as part of its promise to the Canadian voters that culture would not be on the free trade table, the Government undertook that postal subsidies would be maintained for at least five years.

In spite of that promise, the Budget Papers state that the postal subsidy will be cut by $10 million in 1989–90 and $45 million in each subsequent year. At this pace the program will be totally wiped out before the next election.

My question is for the Minister of Finance. While we know where the first $10 million is going to go that the Government is going to cut, we want to know what will be affected by the next $45 million? Over how many years is it going to take place? Where will the Minister stop, when the total $164 million infrastructure program is completely gone?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is well aware that this infrastructure program has been in place for a long period of time. It has not had much by way of review over the last many years.

What we are doing as a part of the budget process is reviewing all aspects of this program. The Hon. Member knows that there are publications which should not be getting this subsidy. It is those publications which will be identified, and they will cease to get the subsidy.

The Minister of Communications, working with the Minister responsible for the Post Office, will be coming up with proposals in that regard.

Mrs. Finestone: It is very clear where the $45 million cut is going to stop.

ACCESS TO PROGRAM

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister.

Could the Minister tell us why the Government has chosen not to support cultural magazines, ethnic magazines and not to support third language newspapers, community newspapers and daily newspapers when the Department of Communications study has shown that these subjects, supplementaries, and subsidies are absolutely fundamental to the survival of these particular magazines and newspaper?

It is important to small town Canada and rural Canada. Why is this Government not giving fair access to all Canadians across Canada?

• (1500)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this normally is not the style of the Hon. Member to distort what we are trying to achieve with a program.

Mrs. Finestone: No. I am telling you the reality.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What we have said is that it is about time governments reviewed all forms of subsidy. This is one of those which we think it is important we should be reviewing.

Mrs. Finestone: The Italians, the Hungarians, the Greeks—everybody will be happy!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Minister of Communications will be coming forward with proposals in this regard but clearly the Hon. Member is falling into the same trap of not wanting to review where moneys are spent. Keep the deficit running up. Keep the debt of the country running up. Forget about the impact that this has on interest rates, the impact of those interest rates on the very people about which she is concerned. This is what we are doing as a government and we feel it is the responsible approach to take.

My colleague will be bringing forward proposals which will demonstrate clearly that we are sensitive to a number of the concerns that she has raised.

FINANCE

CONSTITUTIONAL POWER TO TAX—LEGAL OPINION QUESTIONED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have two short questions for the Minister of Finance. Is he aware that the federal Government under our Constitution has the power to tax from all sources? Having that power he has the power fully to administer the tax including the power to describe the amount of the tax on any good affected by the tax. If he has a contrary legal opinion, would he table it in the House of Commons?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is a former Minister of Justice and he knows that that is something that is quite contrary to tradition in this House. Ministers do not table legal opinions that are provided by the Public Service. But the Right Hon. Leader is fully aware—and he has a little smirk on his face, Mr. Speaker—that this is something not within the domain of the federal Government.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am smiling because the Minister is again hiding the truth from Canadians.

NATIONAL SALES TAX DISCLOSURE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance had this position documented by legal officers of the Crown, why did he not reveal the position two years ago instead of promising Canadians for the last two years that the new national sales tax would not be a hidden tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I addressed that point in a previous answer. Two years ago we were working on a national sales tax which would have involved the provinces. If it had involved the provinces then clearly we would have had the ability and the capacity to do that sort of thing. Once we moved away from a national sales tax to a federal only sales tax, then we lost that control. But as I have said, and I have underscored this very clearly in this House, we are concerned about the visibility of the tax. We are concerned that consumers understand the impact of that tax on them and we will be working with various organizations to ensure that that does take place.

POINT OF ORDER

COMMENT IN QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, you may have noticed during the voluminous verbiage by the Minister for International Trade that he in the course of his remarks suggested that my response was dishonest. At page 106 of Beauchesne it specifically describes that as an unparliamentary term. I would ask the Minister to withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister may want to respond. At the moment I am not going to make any ruling until I have a chance to look at Hansard. The Hon. Minister?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what term the hon. gentleman is referring to but I certainly want to withdraw it. Anything that Lloyd objects to I would naturally withdraw.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I again rise on a point of order. I want to take the Minister at his word. Will he withdraw the Free Trade Agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, may I anticipate withdrawing whatever I may say tomorrow?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that I am leaving the Chair.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: You are withdrawing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

WAYS AND MEANS

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (for Mr. Loiselle) moved that a Ways and Means Motion to amend the Income Tax Act, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, the Old Age Security Act, the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and a related Act, laid upon the table on Monday, June 12, be concurred in.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion which was agreed to on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved that Bill C–28, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Federal–Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post–Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, the Old Age Security Act, the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and a related Act, be read the first time and be printed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Soetens: Mr. Speaker, I understand that there has been consent among the three Parties that I present to you a report of the legislative committee on Bill C–19.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard (Lac–Saint–Jean) that Bill C–22, an Act to amend the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by commenting on the main theme point in the Speech from the Throne in which the Government told us that the environment and its preservation for future generations were the Government's top priority.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Members who wish to carry on a conversation will please converse behind the curtains.

Mrs. Catterall: I noticed that by the time the Throne Speech had faded a bit and we were into the Budget, suddenly the title of the Budget was not sustainable economic growth but sustained economic growth with no reference to sustainable.

That brings me to some of the points that I am concerned about with regard to this Bill. I do not believe any of us dispute the purpose of the Bill. I do think we have some concerns, however, about the commitment to the intention of the Bill and to the actions that are needed to go along with it. The reason we are being asked today to approve this Bill, and with minimum debate because of its urgency, is to allow the Government to implement its stated intentions to reduce the production of CFCs and their release into the environment.

We have no question in our minds that the environment, in particular the atmosphere, is the main issue that confronts society in Canada and around the world today. It is quite simply a question of whether there will be anything left to breathe a few years from now. If there is not, there will be no life on earth. For that reason, we have to question some of the weaknesses in the Bill. We have to question the lack of national standards that can be implemented. We have to question why, if this is such an important issue, the enforceability of this Bill is weak. We have to question why we are doing the minimum in targets for the reduction of CFCs being released into the atmosphere.

By contrast, I look at the actions of the Ontario Government which has introduced a package to eliminate the use of CFCs in Ontario completely. I note that part and parcel of Ontario's announcement was a commitment to commission and to fund the research and development necessary for a safe and efficient destruction method for CFCs.

We have heard and we will continue to hear in this House, at least from this side of the House, about the lack of commitment to science, research and technology development in this country. That is particularly important in the case of the CFC legislation and in the case of all environmental programs. This type of control, when it is only there as a mandatory kind of thing and not as part of a total commitment to the soundness of the environment, to improving it for future generations and certainly not to damaging it, is tokenism at best.

I am concerned that this Bill does not mean an awful lot. Over the last few years there have been reductions in research and development in energy conservation and the development of energy alternatives. There has been a reduction by 75 per cent of control of fertilizers and a lack of commitment to add resources to control the approval of pesticides and, in fact, to go back and review pesticides that have been approved and are now in use, based on our current knowledge of the environment and of the damage that pesticides can do both to the environment and to humanity.

I anticipate the same problem with CFCs: no commitment to research and development for alternatives, no commitment to the research and development necessary for the safe destruction of CFCs. Therefore, there is a minor effort to control CFCs, and perhaps this is a little too harsh, but I suspect no real commitment, if one looks at the record of the Government over the last four years, to other similar environmental areas.

As we look at this year's Estimates as well, we see a lot of words in terms of commitment to the environment, but no real commitment. Real commitment means you put your resources where your words are. That simply has not happened with the Estimates put forward by the Government this year. We see cuts in the commitment to inland waters, to fisheries, to atmospheric research, all those things which are part and parcel of the problem that this Bill purports to address; that is, the problem of CFCs, the problem of the deterioration, the destruction and, if we are not very careful, the imminent death of our atmosphere.

We see no commitment to municipal infrastructure. We all know that we need to do more to treat water supplies so that the circulation of water out of rivers and lakes and back into them is done in a way that does not deteriorate those bodies of water. We have the technology now to improve the way we return water to the rivers, but we have poor and small municipalities unable to afford to implement that technology. Every province across this country is prepared to cost-share the improvement in the treatment of water, but this federal Government refuses to participate in it.

Looking back over what the Government has done with PCBs only reinforces my concern about its commitment to this Bill and to the protection of the atmosphere. Four years ago there was a PCB spill in Kenora. There was a great uproar. The Government was going to do something, but it was quietly forgotten for three years until St. Basile le Grand had a tragedy with PCBs fortunately just before an election. That jolted people into action. However, if we look at what has happened since, is there one federally-owned PCB site that has been cleaned up? Is there one federally-owned PCB deposit that has been destroyed? I think not.

Vehicles can still be purchased by the Government without emission standards. This Government has failed to use its power of spending to achieve the needed improvements. We will be speaking about that later today when we look at Bill C-3 to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology. But the Government has tremendous purchasing power amounting to billions of dollars every year to determine what products will be produced by the private sector for consumption in this country. Its very purchasing power gives it the ability to influence manufacturers to develop alternatives to CFCs. Yet it is not doing that. There is no policy within this Government to determine that we will not purchase products that are unsafe to the environment. There is no Minister who has the authority to ensure that such a policy is implemented.

This Bill ignores completely the fact that the CFCs we have already put into the environment will not cease doing their harm for another 16 years. The atmosphere will continue to deteriorate as a result of the products that we used yesterday. This is damage which is predictable, and it is treatable if we are committed to doing it. But we know that by continuing the use of CFCs, we continue their damage, not for tomorrow or for the 5, 10 or 20 years we continue to use them, but for a full 16 years beyond that.

It is good that the Bill is here. I wish I felt that it were part of a real, ongoing and well understood commitment to consider our depletion of the earth's resources and our contribution to cleaning up the earth in everything we do. However, that is not what we have in front of us, that is not what I have seen from the Government in the last four years or in the last six months.

It has been said, and I guess it is a bit of a cliché, that all that is needed for evil to prevail is for good men to do nothing. I think it is a shame that the Government had to be forced by the courts to obey its own environmental guidelines. I thought that when we passed guidelines or laws to impose on other people it was because we believed in them and that we did not have to be forced by courts or anyone else to abide by them ourselves. I am a firm believer in "Do as I do, not as I say". It is a little hard for us to tell private industry to clean up if we are not prepared to clean up ourselves.

In passing this token legislation I challenge the Government to look at every aspect of our operation as a government and every aspect of the projects which we choose to fund here and abroad and consider what it is doing to the world that we are leaving to the next generation.

We need nationally enforceable standards and, more than that, we need a national and universal commitment by government to act on that which we all now know, that is, that unless we change our way of living we will not have a world to live in.

Mr. Stevenson: Mr. Speaker, I welcome an opportunity to make a comment in this debate today. As a Member, I object to the actions of certain Members who work extremely hard to make the environment into a very strongly partisan issue. It is clear to anyone that every Member in this House would do the most possible to ensure that our environment is indeed safe. I am sure that you, too, Mr. Speaker, would agree with that.

Canadians use about 2 per cent of the total world production of CFCs. Certainly we are part of the problem, but obviously not a huge part of the problem on a world-wide basis. From outside our borders Canada is looked upon as one of the leaders in establishing legislation and taking actions to control chlorofluorocarbons. We need look back only as far as the Montreal Protocol to see the leadership which Canada has taken. We took part in that agreement and since that time it has been recognized that rather than only cutting by 50 per cent we must basically eliminate the use of chlorofluorocarbons in Canada.

The Government has put out a report for public perusal on the deadlines in various usage areas. I have no doubt that as soon as practical alternatives come along significant action will be taken and members of this Party, as much as Members of the Opposition, will work very hard to ensure that the necessary action is taken to control this very serious environmental problem which we, individually, have been watching for some time and on which we will demand action.

I am not sure that this particular Member mentioned, as others have, that we should take action on alternatives immediately. Quite frankly, some of those alternatives are not yet proven. What alternatives exist in the area of household refrigeration, for example, to convert household refrigeration appliances if we suddenly removed chlorofluorocarbons?

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, it is fine to say that we all want to do our best. I cannot help wondering why the Government seems to believe that it should be left totally to market forces to develop these alternatives. Surely the Hon. Member must be aware of the need for government investment in research and technology that is to the benefit of all society. We cannot simply wait for the vagaries of the market. I did mention that the Government has an ability to influence the market in a positive way by refusing to purchase certain products. As long as we spend Canadian taxpayers' money on harmful products there is no incentive for anyone to develop alternatives. I challenge the Member to take that back to his caucus and suggest that there are more positive things that can be done.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment with regard to the remarks made by the Member. Too many are tending to play politics with the very serious subject of the environment, and I refer particularly to the Rafferty–Alameda Dam. A lot of people have made statements in this House, to the press, and in other fora, who have no knowledge of the project. These types of statements do not help to build a better environment which will be sustained for future generations. All political Parties have supported this dam. In fact, a past Minister of the Environment under the Liberal Party, who is now the Governor General, instituted a report in 1974 which commended the Rafferty–Alameda Dam. The NDP have built six projects, smaller dams, on that basin system. Every government has supported the direction taken in that.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that the privileges of the House protect us from making statements that may be found to be in contempt, but I think that if the Speaker will review the comments which have just been made he will find that the Member is moving dangerously close to contempt of court. There was a court judgment which came out specifically in the case of the Rafferty–Alameda Dam which has nothing to do with any political party. Heaven knows that Ministers of the Crown who have commented in the past on court judgments have found themselves out of a job. I know that the Member would not want to be found in contempt of court so I am sure he would want to withdraw his comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will review the comments of the Hon. Member for Souris–Moose Mountain (Mr. Gustafson) with our law officers during this debate. I would hope that if this does involve a court proceeding the Hon. Member will tread lightly.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I certainly implied nothing which would infringe upon the courts. I did mention the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party. This has gone on in a very serious way which is challenging a most important project. It is very, very important that we have a clear understanding of what we are going to deal with if we are going to have a fair balance of dealing with environmental issues that we are all concerned about which will enhance the development of the environment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa West would like to rebut, please.

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure how relevant the comments are, either to the issue or to my statement. I think the Hon. Member has made the point very well.

The court has made a decision that a project was not subjected to the environmental assessment when it should have been. The statements from the Hon. Member opposite simply reinforce my concern that having laws on paper is no commitment on the part of the Government to live within the letter and the spirit of those laws. The case he cited was an excellent example.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Comments are now terminated. Debate. Is the House ready for the question?

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa South.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to intervene in this debate very briefly. This is a Bill which we support. We support the objectives of the Bill in creating a legislative framework in which to enact regulations respecting the manufacture and expansion of CFCs and to implement the agreements of the Montreal protocol.

This is a very small Bill. Unfortunately, I take seriously the remarks of one of my Conservative colleagues that the environment is not really a partisan issue. It is an issue which is of much too great importance to debate merely on partisan grounds.

In this case, though, there are some things which should be said in response to the Government's proposition of this Bill at this time. It does indicate that the Environmental Protection Act was enacted last year in what was more or less a death bed conversion on the part of the Government to put together a major piece of environmental legislation in the final months before an election, when Decima told them it was the biggest issue on anyone's agenda in the real world.

We see a case of poor drafting in a statute that was hurriedly put together and needs to be amended before any other regulations have been proclaimed just in order to comply with the Montreal protocol which has been around for some years now.

I want to reflect on the importance of this Bill as a symbol of what we need to be doing here in this Chamber. In my few months here, we have debated the Free Trade Agreement with the United States. We have talked about the Budget and budget leaks. We have talked about the Constitution, things of great importance to many of us and to many Canadians.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that what we are talking about today in this one-page Bill is the most important matter to come before us in the months of this Parliament.

What we have discovered in recent years, to our dismay, is how interrelated human activity truly is. For all those years when we, without a thought, used the CFC propellants in our aerosol cans, we never once thought of the long-term damage we were causing to the global environment. We have the evidence of the destruction of the ozone layer. It is not evidence which was easy to come by. According to an article in Time Magazine in 1987, they wrote:

> For several years NASA's scientists failed to accept data on the Antarctic ozone hole that was before their eyes. The reason: Computers pre-screening data from monitoring satellites had been programmed to dismiss as suspicious presumably wild data showing a 30 per cent or greater drop in ozone levels. After British scientists reported the deficit in 1985, NASA went back to its computer records, finally recognizing that the satellite data had been showing the hole all along.

As we talk about the global crisis in the environment, Mr. Speaker, it is often that we hear these expositions of concern and worry dismissed as being panic-mongering or worry-mongering. Those dismissals have occurred before by elite scientists, as sophisticated and as well trained as those of NASA. They were proven to be wrong. Deterioration of the ozone is of special concern to those of us who find the sun somewhat difficult to bear as it is. The evidence is clear. I speak as someone with a bit of red hair and with two children with red hair. The evidence is clear that many of us are going to be prone to skin cancers in the years to come as a result of ozone deterioration. That is maybe the least of our problems.

The evidence is also clear that the agricultural product is going to be reduced. Productivity will be reduced as ozone deteriorates. Further, sea life is in peril as the plankton in some areas are killed by the ultraviolet rays. Once the food chain is affected, what we have on our hands is a serious, serious problem in a world in which we are already having difficulty feeding our population. That is why I say that perhaps this little one-page Bill is the most important thing we have brought forward in this Parliament.

A few weeks ago, my 10-year old daughter came to me with a poem which she had written. She read it as a rap. It was kind of read to a beat. She gets up earlier than the rest of us and it was something which she sat down early in the morning on her own and produced. It was about the environment. She wrote a little poem about how we were messing things up.

I think the question that we all have to ask ourselves, as we carry on our duties as Canadian parliamentarians, is what do we say to the children? How do we explain to them that the world in which they are growing up is imperilled in a very basic fundamental way? Our abilities to sustain life are in peril because of our greed.

I think that this amendment is a good one. It is good that we are moving forward on the Montreal protocol. There are some criticisms that maybe the regulations should be sterner and maybe, as the Friends of the Earth in a press release issued today have said, we could reduce the CFC production more rapidly. We could make a greater contribution. I would urge the Government, if that is the case, to make every effort to expedite the reduction of CFC production.

That is not really the point. I think the point is that we have discovered in this global interrelatedness of our economy, of our energy policies, of our finance and of our environment, that we no longer live in a world separated by international boundaries. We are one another's neighbours.

We have a stake in the destruction of forests around the world. We have a stake in the economies of those countries whose poverty is driving them to destroy the very resources that they and the world needs in order to carry on. We have a stake in those countries who are so threatened by global warming that they may not continue to exist as nations if present trends continue.

I give you the example of the islands of the Maldives which will not exist in the world in 50 years' time if present global warming trends continue. I give you the example of the state of Egypt where 10 million of its people live at an B latitude less than one and one-half metres above sea level. If current global warming trends continue, that entire population will be forced to relocate. We, as Canadians, have a stake in these crucial world problems. We have contributed our part to the creation of these problems. We are called upon in our sophistication, in our higher education and in our wealth to contribute to their solutions not just within our own boundaries but world-wide.

I return to the question that I posed earlier somewhat rhetorically. What are we going to say to the children?

[Translation]

How to explain to the children of the world that we took too much—

[English]

That we were too greedy and that their future is in peril.

Mr. Waddell: I wonder if the Hon. Member would like to comment on the matters raised in this debate. He spoke on the ozone layer. Also the Parliamentary Secretary raised the problem of Rafferty–Alameda Dam. Would the Hon. Member agree with me that that was one of the biggest scams for which this Government has ever been responsible in the sense that it went ahead with that without an environmental study, through a quick deal behind the doors, a backroom deal with the Premier and Deputy Premier of Saskatchewan with the consent, I would say, of the present Parliamentary Secretary who should think perhaps about shifting his portfolio away from environment. This, as the Hon. Member would know, caused the resignation of one of the senior staff members of the previous Minister of the Environment who blew the whistle on that gang of environmental crooks.

Would the Hon. Member comment on that? The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is heckling me. But surely the Canadian Federal Court showed what a scam the deal was.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope the Hon. Member would put the question.

Mr. Waddell: I am putting the question, Mr. Speaker, if the Parliamentary Secretary would let me do so. He is very, very sensitive to this scam that he, Devine and Berntsen made. The Federal Court of Canada had to overrule and caught them through some honest person in the Minister's office. It is a scam. Every environmental group in Canada is upset over the way the Government acted.

I want to ask the Hon. Member who just spoke and spoke very well on having some ethics in environment. Would the Member agree with me that this is not the way to approach environment through backroom deals, but we do need environmental assessment of projects so this kind of environmental degradation cannot happen?

Mr. Manley: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. What we can be grateful for in this sorry history is the Federal Court of Canada and the decision it rendered.

The question points out the truth of what the Brundtland Commission itself stated when it considered the problems that we have in trying to interrelate various aspects of policy making in a very complex economic environment. The Brundtland Commission in speaking of the challenges to link the aspects of policy making together in sustainable development stated:

> The challenges are both interdependent and integrated, requiring comprehensive approaches and popular participation.
> Yet most of the institutions facing those challenges tend to be independent, fragmented, working to relatively narrow mandates with closed decision processes.
> Those responsible for managing natural resources and protecting the environment are institutionally separated from those responsible for managing the economy. The real world of interlocked economic and ecological systems will not change, the policies and institutions concerned must.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not trying to make things hard for you. I just want to point out that I made a mistake and referred to the Parliamentary Secretary when I was talking about what I consider a scandal over the Rafferty–Alameda Dam. I meant the Hon. Member for Souris—Moose Mountain (Mr. Gustafson), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister, who is the one responsible for this scam.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member just makes the point that I made earlier. The minute we start to play politics with the environment, to play politics with a sensitive issue we begin to—

Mr. Riis: Keep politics out of Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre (Mr. Laporte)—AGRICULTURE—Provincial soil agreements; the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi)—Canadian Aviation Safety Board recommendations—Air traffic controllers; and the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. Proud)—Occupational Health and Safety—Closure of Centre—Government position—Rights of Canadians to information.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INDUSTRY, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-3, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, as reported (with amendments) from a Legislative Committee

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are six motions in amendment standing on the Notice Paper for the report stage of Bill C-3, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to repeal the Department of Industrial Expansion Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 1 and 5 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr.Langdon) cause the Chair some procedural concerns. Subsection 6(2) of the Bill limits the Minister's powers to regional economic development in Ontario and Québec only. It therefore seems that by seeking to broaden the Minister's powers and duties to include all of Canada, the mover is seeking to amend the Bill in a way that goes beyond what the House had in mind when it approved the Bill in principle. Therefore, in accordance with Citation 773(1) of Beauchesne, motions Nos. 1 and 5 will not be selected.

[English]

Motion No. 2, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa South (Mr. Manley), is identical to an amendment that was moved, debated and negatived in the legislative committee which studied Bill C-3. Accordingly, pursuant to Standing Order 76(5), this motion in amendment will not be selected.

Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy) is acceptable and will be debated and voted upon separately.

Motion No. 4, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa South (Mr. Manley), although similar to an amendment that was moved, debated and negatived in committee, is somewhat different and, consequently, I shall give the Hon. Member the benefit of the doubt and allow the motion to be debated and voted upon separately. Motion No. 6 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon)—

Motion No. 6 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) is in order and it will be debated and voted on separately.

• (1630)

[English]

To recap the ruling, Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 5 will not be selected. Motions Nos. 3, 4 and 6 are acceptable and will be debated and voted upon separately, and I shall now put Motion No. 3 to the House.

Industry, Science and Technology

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast) moved:

That Bill C–3 be amended in Clause 7 by adding immediately after line 17 at page 3 the following:

"(d) ensure an equitable distribution of economic benefits throughout the various regions of the country."

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to bring into line the functions of the Minister of Science and Technology. The Department of Industry, Science and Technology is a new Department. The legislation deals in Part I with the very important issue of trade, commerce and science and the objectives of the Minister are to strengthen the national economy, increase the international competitiveness of Canadian industry and encourage the fullest and most efficient and effective development and use of science and technology.

My amendment would add to that that the Minister ensure an equitable distribution of economic benefits throughout the various regions of the country. A Minister responsible for industry and commerce will have a lot of power. I believe that one of the objectives of the ministry should be to ensure equal distribution of economic benefits throughout all of Canada.

Part II of the legislation deals with science, and we understand that the Minister is to have power over science and research. Part III deals with regional development in Ontario and Quebec. I believe that because of this, the Minister could look more leniently at Quebec and Ontario, but I would like him to deal with Atlantic Canada and the West the same way. That is why I have moved this amendment.

I believe this is a reasonable amendment. It would put into perspective the Minister's objectives. As I said, one objective would be to ensure an equitable distribution of economic benefits throughout the various regions of Canada. As a westerner and as a person who feels that the Department of Industry, Science and Technology will be a very important ministry, I believe the Minister should have that as an objective as well. That is why I am putting this motion to the House.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, if I could, I would like to very briefly indicate our support for this amendment. We tried with several amendments in the legislative committee and before the House, amendments which were considered to extend the scope of the Bill unduly, to get the same sense of equity put into the legislation. We wanted a commitment on the part of this ministry to have some kind of over all function with respect to economic equity in Canada.

In Canada, there are now essentially three quite disparate and often unco–ordinated agencies which are trying to achieve regional development. There is ACOA, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, which has one set of policies it is pursuing with respect to Atlantic Canada. There is the Western Diversification Office which has a completely different set of policies it is pursuing with respect to western Canada. As the legislation before us presently stands, there is also this ministry which will be taking responsibility for Ontario and Quebec. Talking of balkanization within a country, I think this is the most glaring example one could possibly see with respect to one of the most important functions of Government, its responsibility to achieve greater economic equity throughout the country.

If this motion is passed, it will have the effect of indicating the significance of this concern. It will not do as much as we would like to see done. We would like to see the responsibility clearly set out for the ministry to give some co–ordination to regional development efforts right across the country. In the absence of that, this motion would at least recognize that part of the responsibility of the Minister will be to work toward greater equity in economic opportunity throughout Canada.

Let me illustrate some of the problems that are coming up in the present situation. At the moment, the constraints which have been imposed on ACOA have led it to focus its assistance very much on small–scale business in Atlantic Canada. I personally think that makes sense, but at the same time, the Minister responsible for western diversification, when he testified recently before the Standing Committee, Industry, Science and Technology, Regional and Northern Development, indicated that he himself was putting the emphasis on larger scale projects in western Canada. In fact, the great bulk of money provided through his office for western diversification has gone to large scale projects. In fact, much of it has gone to foreign owned projects which are the subsidiaries of large, extremely rich multinational corporations which, quite frankly, do not need subsidized loans from the Government of Canada in order to provide enterprises throughout the country. In the case of western diversification, the emphasis should be on westerners, western Canadians, small and medium scale entrepreneurs who want to see development in their communities and are prepared to take steps to attempt to achieve that.

Because of a lack of over-all responsibility on the part of this Ministry for benefits for the future and a sense of equity in these benefits, we have diversion in terms of policy taking place.

If this were diversion with respect to tourism policy, for example, we might not be so concerned. Our tourism policy would give us a policy which differed depending on the part of the country. However, here we are talking about very important concerns for the country in the future and the desire to get some type of regional equality of opportunity for people and for communities. Instead of greater equality being recognized as something that is being sought in this legislation, as it stands at the moment it is not a responsibility of the Minister.

This amendment comes from the Conservative benches. It is an amendment which we certainly support, because it at least goes some distance in putting into effect some of what we had hoped to accomplish. I very much hope that my fellow Members of the House in the Liberal Party will also be able to support this amendment. Frankly, I hope that it will be unanimously accepted by the House as a constructive addition to this piece of legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Willowdale.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): We in the Liberal Party propose to support this amendment. We congratulate the Hon. Member who has moved it. It is critical that we claw back from the Government some of the territory that it has taken away from the regions of Canada. It is critical, because the Government is cutting the funding in Atlantic Canada. It is cutting the funding for development in the West. It is cutting the funding in northern Ontario. It is cutting the funding to the regions of Quebec.

The Government is content to close down small-town Canada. The opportunities that the people in those regions have are being pulled back from them by the Government.

This amendment gives us one opportunity to remind the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Andre) that he has a responsibility to the regions of Canada.

It is with enthusiasm that we support this amendment. We wish that it were not necessary, but in light of all the other attempts by the Government to get rid of its responsibilities to help the people in the regions of Canada who need it most, this type of amendment is critical.

For example, in my own province in northern Ontario, industry is a major industry. Because of the 15 per cent tax, we have seen seven sawmills close, laying off some 2,000 people from work. Hopefully, with this type of amendment, we can take steps to redress this inequitable situation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 4.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South) moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-3, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to repeal the Department of Regional

Industrial Expansion Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be amended in Clause 8 by adding immediately after line 27 at page 4 the following:

"(i) develop, implement, and promote national policies to foster economic development that is environmentally sustainable;"

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion to amend the Bill to create the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, is intended to bring within the provisions of that Bill the requirement that the Minister, in exercising his duties as Minister, develop, implement and promote national policies to foster economic development that is environmentally sustainable.

This amendment goes to the very core of what the Government has been stating about its interest and concern in the environment. It goes to the core of the Prime Minister's praise for the work of the Brundtland Commission. This amendment seeks to take this Department of Government, which is a key economic Department, and put within it the responsibility to look to sustainable development as a key aspect of economic policy. This is entirely consistent with the proposals of the Brundtland Commission. I submit that it is entirely consistent with what the Government has been stating. Remember the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, wherein the Government proclaimed that the environment was to be one of its first priorities?

I have a series of press clippings here: "More priority for environment is promised by new minister"; "Environment No. 1, Bouchard says"; "Environment comes first in new projects: Bouchard"; and "Environment to get top priority, minister says". This is to be the top priority. An article in The Globe and Mail on February 1, states in part:

The new federal Environment Minister, Lucien Bouchard—said the new government's thinking is in keeping with the concept of sustainable development: that the prevention of present and future harmful environmental effects has equal priority with other economic and social goals.

This is consistent with the recommendations of the Brundtland Commission. I also wish to quote from the Brundtland Commission report which states:

In the past, responsibility for environmental matters has been placed in environmental ministries and institutions that often have had little or no control over destruction caused by agricultural, industrial, urban development, forestry, and transportation policies and practices. Society has failed to give the responsibility for preventing environmental damage to the 'sectoral' ministries and agencies whose policies cause it. Thus our environmental management practices have focused largely upon after-the-fact repair of damage: reforestation, reclaiming desert lands, rebuilding urban environments, restoring natural habitats, and rehabilitating wild lands.

The ability to anticipate and prevent environmental damage will require that the ecological dimensions of policy be considered at the same time as the economic, trade, energy, agricultural, and other dimensions.

The Science Council of Canada in its report entitled Environmental Peacekeepers makes the same point. Again, I quote:

Global environmental deterioration has been spawned in large measure by science and technology applied to unsustainable economic growth and development in the industrialized countries. It is worsening as those Third World countries that can do so accelerate their economic development in order to raise their living standards—

The role of science and technology in undoing the global ecological crisis—if it is to be undone at all—is of paramount importance.

The Science Council of Canada goes on to recommend that the Department of Industry, Science and Technology take a leading role in the environmental renewal that the world calls for us to have.

• (1650)

This is a challenge to the Government. This is its commitment to live by the intent of the Brundtland Report. This is its opportunity to embark on an exciting adventure. Let us say now to Canada and the world that our key economic development Department of the Government of Canada is going to take into its heart and soul concerns about the environment.

I know what the response in the legislative committee on similar amendments was. It was: "Well, there is an environmental policy committee of Cabinet to review these things". Is that not the Canadian way, Mr. Speaker? We will turn it over to a committee. Committees are well known for the types of decisions they make.

Let us take environmental concerns and put them under the responsibility of the Minister who is going to carry out policies whose very implications could be threatening to the environment. That is where it belongs. That is the challenge to the Government.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, first, I want to say a brief word of congratulation to the Hon. Member for Ottawa South (Mr. Manley) for having taken this very fine initiative. Second, I wish to say that if any Member of the Progressive Conservative Party were to vote against the amendment now proposed by the Hon. Member,, they in substance and in spirit would be voting against their own Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), their own Speech from the Throne and statements made at home and abroad by their own Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

I will explain to you why, Mr. Speaker, I say that. The amendment being proposed reads simply that the mandate of this Department should also "develop, implement, and promote national policies to foster economic development that is environmentally sustainable".

What the Hon. Member for Ottawa South is proposing is what the Prime Minister proposed at the United Nations in June of last year. Do the Progressive Conservative Members in the House want to vote against what their own Prime Minister said abroad? If that is not enough, would they want to deny a major paragraph contained in the Speech from the Throne which states: "My Government will pursue sustainable development as a major thrust in the policy development of this Government in this Parliament"? Is that not what it states in the Speech from the Throne?

On April 27, when the Minister of Finance delivered his speech in this House he, in his own words, said he also wants to have economic development that is consistent with sustainable development.

The Minister repeats the old chestnut that his colleague the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Andre) brought up in committee when he said: "Oh well, do not do that because the development and environment Department should do it". That thinking belongs to the caveman. It has been put aside at a number of places where Canada participates and in organizations of which Canada is a member, namely, the OECD, the United Nations, and through two members of the Brundtland Commission—everywhere we have agreed to the principle that we should now integrate the economy with the environment.

We have even reached the point of adopting and sponsoring the notion that the environment ought to be made the responsibility of every Department. Now is the opportunity to practise the theory that has been embraced by the Prime Minister at home and abroad, by the Minister of Finance and by some Members of Cabinet who attempt to do it and, quite understandably so, within the realm and powers given to Cabinet.

What the Hon. Member for Ottawa South is proposing is really an additional step, but a very practical one. The first practical opportunity to implement this practical step within the Government's structure is by saying that the formation of a new Department which, among other responsibilities, has the responsibility to ensure that the fostering of economic development be also environmentally sustainable.

It is a beautiful amendment. It is a great opportunity for Members on the Government side to practise what their Prime Minister preaches abroad and at home, and also what some of their own colleagues in the environment committee have been saying for weeks and months now. They also support and quote Madam Brundtland, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa South has just done. It would be a contradiction of their own policy, of their own credo, of their own statements and beliefs if they were to vote against this amendment.

This is where the political crunch is. We are anxiously awaiting the moment when you call the vote, Mr. Speaker, to see that there is consistency in the beliefs of the Progressive Conservative Government when it comes to sustainable development.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa South is offering Members opposite a unique opportunity to practise what they preach. It is not good enough to go to the United Nations and make a great declaration. It is not good enough to go to The Hague as the Prime Minister did in March and make another declaration. It is not a matter of a declaration here. It is a matter of putting into legislation a very sound and basic principle, one that is being proposed by the Hon. Member for Ottawa South. We congratulate him.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, with respect to our Party we want to say two things. First, we wish to extend our congratulations to the Hon. Member for Ottawa South (Mr. Manley) for his continuing efforts to put this idea before the Government, both in the legislative committee and now here in the House. He is absolutely correct when he says that the position which has been so strongly put by the Brundtland Commission is something which we in this House should feel a sense of enthusiasm about and a sense of commitment to.

I hope very much that Government Members will take this amendment seriously, look at it, listen to some of the points which have been made and on the basis of their consideration of the substance of it end up supporting it. It is interesting to look at the clause to which the Hon. Member wishes to add this notion of environmental priority. The clause contains perhaps the greatest collection of motherhood statements that have ever graced a piece of legislation in the House of Commons.

The Minister is to develop, implement and promote national policies to foster international competitiveness in industry. It would be most remarkable if a Minister of Industry for Canada were supposed to promote international lack of competitiveness for our industry.

He is supposed to enhance industrial, scientific and technological development. Again, it would be absolutely bizarre if the Minister of Industry were given the task of reducing industrial, scientific and technological development in this country. He is supposed to improve the productivity and efficiency of industry. We would be amazed to see before us a clause which states that the Minister is supposed to promote inefficiency.

The Minister is supposed to develop and implement national policy to foster entrepreneurship, start-up growth and expansion of small businesses. Again, it would be remarkable if he or she was supposed to spend time undercutting small business in this country. This is a set of motherhood commitments.

Frankly, with all due respect to my hon. colleague, what the Hon. Member for Ottawa South (Mr. Manly), whom I have already congratulated, has suggested here tonight is a motherhood statement as well. It is a statement that the promotion of national policies to foster economic development should be environmentally sustainable. Surely this is not something radical and excessive to suggest in 1989 when the Great Lakes in Ontario have levels of toxic chemicals that threaten communities like mine, and the St. Lawrence is being the subject of tremendous government expenditures even during a time of restraint in order to reduce toxic dumping into that river system which so threatens people down river within the St. Lawrence. If we are going to recognize the motherhood principles within this clause, surely it makes equally as much sense to recognize the importance of our environment.

When I first heard the Government begin talking about the environment, I put tongue in cheek and waited for the inevitable failure of the Government to follow through. I will not say that I have been convinced, but I must say that the Government is proving to have more seriousness with its commitment to environmental concerns. I give credit to the Minister for some of that, but I give credit to the Cabinet itself for recognizing the importance which public opinion has begun to give to environmental concerns. With that sense of environmental commitment which exists across the country, an amendment like this is not just a subject for celebration on the part of the House, or just a subject for easy and unanimous support, but something which is so straightforward and understood within the rhetoric of the Government's own thinking that there should be no question that this amendment would be adopted by the government side and those on this side of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to add a few words. Motion No. 4 by the Hon. Member for Ottawa South (Mr. Manley) is certainly an excellent one. It deals with the problem of the environment. I think that today the Government itself realized the importance of the environment. That is why I will vote for this motion and I hope that other Members will do the same.

[English]

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to make a brief intervention in the discussion on this amendment to Bill C-3. I want to add to the compliments of our industry critic for the New Democratic Party and commend the Hon. Member for Ottawa South (Mr. Manly) for moving this amendment. It is important that we in the House begin to understand the mechanics involved in bringing sustainable development into legislation and Acts of this land.

All too often, governments like the one opposite and perhaps others ask how they are supposed to achieve sustainable development. I believe this amendment is the first practical way to begin making the steps toward a sustainable development policy in Canada.

What could be a better place to do it than in Bill C-3, with the creation of a new Department that in Ontario and Quebec will help manage resources like forestry, agriculture and others?

It is an important subject for us to follow because, unfortunately, just in the last week and a half the Conservatives have voted against the environment, voted against VIA Rail, voted against education, and if some of the comments opposite are any indication, when we vote on this amendment tonight the Conservatives will vote against sustainable development.

It is time that the Party of the Members opposite practiced what their Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) preaches. As the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) said, "What we have across the way is not the Progressive Conservative Party, we have the negative Conservative Party. Government Members have been voting against all of the progressive amendments and motions that Members on this side have been presenting to this House. It is a shame, but it will be remembered by the voters when it comes time to consider this in the future.

Further, on sustainable development, as your Honour would know, we hope soon to see introduced in this House legislation to create a full department of forests. I have spoken about that a number of times and I know it is of importance to other Members. I would like to put yourself, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister of State (Forestry) (Mr. Oberle) when he is in the House, on notice that I trust the Government will bring in legislation that will have the concept of sustainable development built into it. If it is not, I suggest that we will be the first to present an amendment to that legislation to see that it is brought in. We need that legislation and we need it soon. However, we do not just want some kind of airy-fairy framework. We want to see some substance in that legislation. I believe this amendment is an example of that.

Furthermore, if I could just put in some comments about what the concept of sustainable development means. How do we deal with that concept? It has been written about, and I would like to quote a few comments from the 1988 Ombudsman Report from British Columbia which I recommend to Members of the House to read and to whom I would certainly be able to provide copies. One section here deals withpart of the problems that we have in British Columbia in forest resource management and resource conflict. The Ombudsman has spent a great deal of time resolving those problems. The interpretation that I place on sustainable development is that before we proceed with a project and with development that all Parties sit down and work out how that can be best managed and developed.

I will conclude with just a few comments from the Ombudsman Report.

> —a duty is placed upon the decision maker, insofar as is reasonably possible, to appreciate fully the significance of and the foundation for the various individual or group interests.

These groups would include environmentalists, loggers, fishermen, fisher-people, whoever is involved in that resource, to see that those decisions are made. We need a structure.

I was just in Alberta last week. If there is a place that needs a structure for proper environmental assessment of all those major pulp mill projects going on, Alberta is the place. We also need some objective assessment criteria.

In the Forestry Committee some two or three weeks ago, we asked the Minister to provide to us the criteria he is looking at when he attends, presumably next Monday and Tuesday, a Forestry Ministers' Conference in Ottawa. "What is the criteria that you are looking at when you sit down to, hopefully, re-sign those forest agreements, the six that have expired and the ones that we are looking for in the future? Is sustainable development part of that?" We do not know. Is reforestation part of that intensive silviculture? How many years are we looking at for this? The Minister refused to provide the committee with that information. Unfortunately, on partisan lines, the committee voted to refuse to ask the Minister to provide it. That is a point that is made in this report. You need that information to make objective decisions. The independent assessment is critical. We need to avoid the process whereby experts are retained to present data in a fashion which will advance only the interests of their client.

One other point that I believe is critical, not just on questions of sustainable development or the forest department legislation or even this legislation, is policy guidelines. Rules and regulations should be clearly defined in plain language.

Most Members probably know that in Toronto there is a plain language centre. We should send some of the legislation rules of this Government through their plain language grinder to come up with some legislation and policies that everyone can understand. Often it is very difficult to understand.

I will conclude with the forest resource development agreements. That is a particular interest of mine. It is an area where the question of sustainable development can be applied. Let us have a framework when we renew those agreements. Let us have a framework of sustainable development so that we can reforest our lands, so we can accommodate the interests of others—integrated resource management, pest control that is environmentally sound. This amendment is calling for the framework of sustainable development. This amendment will give some practical edge to the implementation of the policy that this Prime Minister talks about. For that reason, Members opposite should support this amendment. We certainly will. I congratulate the Member for bringing it in.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I think the fact that this motion is even here for debate is a crying condemnation of the Government's real commitment to sustainable development. It is in fact a blatant demonstration that Members of the Government on the committee that considered this legislation do not even understand what sustainable development is. They failed to understand that the whole message of the Brundtland Commission, the whole message of sustainable development is that the economy and the environment are inextricably linked. We cannot continue to use the earth's resources, deplete those resources, to return them to the earth filthy, to the air filthy, to the water filthy, or to use them up faster than they can be replenished and hope to have an economy that will continue to provide us with the goods and services that we require.

We cannot afford to export the kind of wasteful, destructive, economic activity that we have enjoyed in the developed world to those countries that are just now developing. That is the whole message: the economy and the environment cannot be separated. That is why the motion of my colleague from Ottawa South (Mr. Manley) is one that should enjoy the unanimous consent of this House.

How can one foster tourism, foster entrepreneurship, foster competitiveness and not look at the resources that we draw from the world to create that entrepreneurship, to draw those tourists, to feed the industries, to support the competitiveness? How can we fail to preserve those very things that drive the economy? Therefore, how can the Minister himself say that the mandate of this department is developing economic strength? Does he really not understand and does every Member sitting across the aisle not understand that the strength is based on the resources of the earth. If you do not use them in a way that ensures their preservation, you do not have resources on which to build your economy. It is an integral part of the mandate of this department. It must be, or there will be no reason for this department to exist.

Far more important, it is essential that this concept be absorbed into every department within Government. At the Environment Committee, we have been discussing how to achieve this at meeting after meeting. Here is our first opportunity to do so.

The Minister responsible for the Department of Industry, Science and Technology (Mr. Andre) said that the Department of the Environment has the responsibility for those things. He was talking about sustainable development. He said that this amendment and spreading the responsibility for sustainable development to other departments do not contribute to better Government. That is precisely what must happen. It must become the responsibility of everybody who works for Government, everybody who directs any program of Government, to ensure that the work they are carrying out is in conformity with our commitment to the future of the world. We owe it in fact to the quarter of a million of people who work for the Government of Canada to make sure that they have that message. There are citizens out there who are concerned, as your polls tell you, that our Government, and we individually, take action to preserve the environment.

There are citizens who want to know what they can do in their workplace to contribute to a better world. If that leadership is not there in every department, from the top down, they will not get that message. We will go on spending over $100 billion a year in our procurement of goods and services, on products that are damaging to the environment instead of using our purchasing power to influence what the market produces and how safe it is.

If the Government is wise, it will spread that influence to other public spending. The provincial governments across this country spend that much and more every year. The municipal governments collectively spend 25 per cent more than the Government of Canada. What a magnificent economic tool to harness and foster the growth of environmentally safe products.

Another thing that rejecting this amendment does to the mandate of the Department, in fact to the responsibilities of the Minister, is to ignore some very excellent opportunities for economic development, for economic growth, and for competitiveness for new small businesses. One of the key opportunities in the next few decades will be for nations that know enough to see the problems of the world and develop solutions to them. Canada is ideally situated, both climatologically and environmentally and in terms of our stage of development, to be one of the world leaders in developing solutions to environmental problems. There are few countries in the world that have the capacity, the natural strength to do it as this country has. If sustainable development is not part of the responsibility of this Department, then that opportunity will be missed.

The question of sustainable development of environmental consciousness is not a little jewel to be put in a box and brought out for press conferences and to show our international friends on international junkets. Yet that seems to be the impression of the Minister who said in committee that "the Government's direction is to want an economy that is of high quality in terms of sustainable development, to preserve and enhance the environment that provides for things that are not immediately of tangible value but have some higher values; poetry, music, what have you." The Minister obviously fails to understand that we are talking about the survival of the world and of human life in this world. These are not nice little extras to have, they are essential to human life. If we try to treat the environment like a jewel that we put in a box and trot out and admire and flash around when we want to look good, we will find that what we have in fact is a Pandora's box.

My colleague from Ottawa South said that this amendment is a challenge to the Government. I say that it is more than that, it is a challenge to the conscience of every person who sits in this House, a challenge to their commitment to the future, and to whether they really mean what they say when they talk about the environment, or are they just mouthing pretty words?

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this concept. I am not a member of the Environment Committee as is the Member who just spoke, or of the technological committees of which Members have been speaking. However, I have a great deal of interest in the environment.

About 15 years ago I was associated with the Berger Inquiry on the Mackenzie Valley pipeline. We went to examine the social, economic and environmental implications on the people of the North of the building of the massive megaproject. Before we really started the inquiry, I had the honour to go with Judge Berger to New York to the United Nations. We went to see the United Nations environmental people to find out what other countries had done. As the Member from Ottawa West (Mrs. Catterall) who previously spoke said, Canada had to show the lead. We were surprised to find out that no other country had ever looked at the environmental implications of the building of a megaproject before the project was built. A lot of them could see it afterwards but no one had looked at it before. Canada was a pioneer in this.

I have watched this environment issue develop over the years. This is an interesting motion, it is to amend the Bill to add "develop, implement and promote national policies to foster economic development that is environmentally sustainable". The Brundtland Commission speaks, I believe, of sustainable development. What is sustainable development? I am a layman, not a member of these committees and not one directly involved in environmental issues. I know that sustainable development has been defined by some Members here today but it still seems to me like nailing jelly to the wall.

Let us be honest, what is sustainable development? I talked to someone who looked at all Canadian government programs to try to find examples of sustainable development under the widely defined terms of development that is good for the future, that does not destroy our resources but keeps them for our children and our children's children. That is much the way in which native people speak of developing resources. This is the western liberal technological equivalent to the native holistic view of being at home with the forest and the land and keeping them for their children. The same thing is luckily and finally happening here for us and it may be the key to saving this planet.

Given that broad definition of sustainable development, I asked people whether we could find any existing government programs which fit into it. We found one program, and that says a lot for what past and present governments have done. The program we found was the Fish Habitat Program developed during Mr. Speaker Fraser's tenure as Environment Minister, I am pleased to say. That program provides for the replacement of fish habitat that is destroyed by a construction project.

For example, let's say you were going to add a runway to the airport in Vancouver. You would have to prove, first, that that is a productive construction approach, that it would add to our productivity. One could easily make that argument, two runways would contribute to more economic development and so on.

The second aspect is that you have to replace the fish habitat. If the runway goes into the Fraser River, for example, you would have to find alternate habitats. The development would have to be sustainable to the surrounding environment, specifically the fish habitat. That is an example of sustainable development. The developers may have to find more fish habitat in another part of the river and develop it. That is the only program we could find, of all the programs of the federal Government. That says a lot, doesn't it?

The second point I would like to raise is that we need some way of measuring sustainable development. It is all very well to say that the Minister shall develop, implement and promote national policies to foster economic development that is environmentally sustainable. How do you measure it? Well, that can be done as well. I understand that there are some people in the World Bank working on new ways of measuring sustainable development. In the 1930s we had to invent new ways of looking at the world when Keynesian economics came along and so on. They invented Gross National Product. As an example, Canada's GNP grew by 5 per cent last year, our goods and services. Had we cut down and logged all the trees in Canada, our Gross National Product might have grown by 9 per cent, but we would have lost the trees so we would not really have made progress. Certainly that development would not be sustainable. I understand that they are working on a measurement to measure sustainable development.

That will mean we have to do an inventory of all our resources. Then we will have to measure how much we use them without replacing them. This is going to be a very interesting figure. We will be able to set targets. We can set a target for the year 2050, or a target for the year 2080 or whatever. We can tell whether we are doing development that is sustainable on our planet or whether we are losing the resources of our planet.

I think I have spoken enough on this. I just find it a fascinating, interesting area for all of us in the House. It is an area which is hard to define. It is worth supporting this motion. However, let us not kid ourselves, we still have a lot of work to do. It is all very well to say that yes, we develop, implement and promote national policies to foster economic development that is environmentally sustainable. We have a lot of work to do to define what that is, project by project and inventory by inventory of every part and every sector in the economy from forest to fish to minerals and so on.

We have just taken, as one Chinese politician once said, the first step in a march of a million miles. It is going to be a long march to get to what we actually mean by sustainable development. At least this is a start.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think it is particularly appropriate that we are speaking about this particular amendment to Bill C–23 on the same day that we have been dealing with the amendment in respect of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act.

As has been very ably pointed out by my colleagues, the Member for Ottawa South (Mr. Manley), the Member for Ottawa West (Mrs. Catterall) and the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), the amendment which has been proposed by my colleague is in keeping with the spirit of sustainable development which we thought was launched by Brundtland and was embraced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). No less than the Prime Minister. We heard the Prime Minister in the House vaunting the work of Gro Harlem Brundtland and vaunting it to the point where he was very pleased to have accepted the award which he took in Washington, et cetera. This is the first time that outside of the context of the Environment Committee we have an opportunity at a departmental level to incorporate in the raison d'Être of a newly established Department. We have the capacity to build in the implementation and promotion of national policies to foster economic development which is environmentally sustainable.

Anybody who took the time to read our common future would understand that for any minimal accomplishment of sustainable development it has to be applied across the board in various Departments. I cannot believe the statement of the Minister, who stated that: "So regarding adding that clause, this is the clause that has been proposed with respect to sustainable development. The recommendation simply does not fit directly with this Department. I suggest we have a cleaner"—it is a rather Freudian point, Mr. Speaker—"more reasonable approach to things, leaving the responsibility for the environment with that Department."

Surely, the whole purpose of the Brundtland report was to wake up the world to the fact that we cannot departmentalize environmental questions. The question of sustainable development must permeate every decision made by the Government insofar as where we promote industry, where we develop our science policy and where we in fact spend the money that would lead to a policy of industry, science and technology.

In this particular case, we are repealing the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act. We are basically saying where we are going to put our financial clout over the next number of years. That decision cannot be made in a vacuum, without putting the environmental questions in context.

Every single thing which we do in this House of Commons, and every single Act which is carried out by Parliament has a potential environmental impact.

Next week, July 1, is Canada Day. At this point, the National Capital Commission, which is responsible for the promotion of Canada Day activities on Parliament Hill, will be committing environmental folly by releasing 10,000 balloons into the environment.

The Province of Nova Scotia has already banned the release of balloons because they recognize that the effect of a burst balloon on the ecosystem is such that when, for example, fish, sea whales, sea turtles and whales eat rubber, which is the product of the burst balloons, they can actually have their normal eating habits impaired because they think they are full when they have basically swallowed a piece of a balloon. It sounds somewhat comical, Mr. Speaker, but it is a reflection that every decision which we make, whether it is as minor as organizing a celebration to release balloons on Parliament Hill, or as major as a decision to proceed with the hydroelectric project cannot be taken without environmental consideration.

I have here in my hand a copy of the hydroelectric resistance program which was produced by the Grand Council of the Crees of Quebec. It is a voluminous document. It points out the crying need for a federal environmental assessment in respect of a potential decision to proceed with a second phase of the development of the hydroelectric project on James Bay.

In fact, this particular Department, the Department which we are about to launch, oftentimes the Department of Industry, Science and Technology will put forward financial backing for these types of projects. Whether it be financial backing by way of an interest–free loan to Lavalin to go off and develop a light rapid transit system in a Third World country, or whether it be in relation to a specific regional development project in Canada, there are potentially environmental implications.

If we look at the specific decision now, for example, in the Province of Nova Scotia, to proceed with a new technology for the extraction of energy from coal, that again involves environmental implications.

The amendment which was moved by my colleague, the Member for Ottawa South and supported, I might add, by a Conservative Member of Parliament who recognizes that it simply embraces and endorses all of the promotion of the environment which we have been talking about since the arrival of Brundtland, surely any Member in his or her right mind who would not support this motion cannot call themselves an environmentalist. I heard the—

—the Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin) this afternoon, when we were talking about protecting the environment, accused me of being a politician, of playing petty politics with the environment. He accused me of petty politics. Today, Mr. Speaker, we have a bill and a motion that can be supported by all Members. All we ask, Mr. Speaker, is to include the comment made by Mrs. Brundtland. The Prime Minister talks a lot about Brundtland. He is crazy about Brundtland. All we ask is to have the legislation reflect the Brundtland proposals, in other words, when we create the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, we recognize the fact that the department's terms of reference should include to develop, implement and promote national policies to foster economic development that is environmentally sustainable. How can anyone argue against this amendment? If we want to be known as environmentalists who do not play petty politics with the environment, then we have no choice but to vote for this very effective, very short and very sustainable amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—South (Mr. Manley).

• (1740)

Instead of pointing the accusing finger and saying that Members are playing politics, I wish Hon. Members would realize that Canadians are sick and tired of politicians who talk about policies but are not prepared to put those same words in the Bill and the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, do I have a little more time or just ten seconds?

We all know that this Bill, this amendment is an opportunity to incorporate, not just the environmental spirit but also the Kind of legislation that will protect us. If we do not take advantage of this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, I think we can safely say that to the Conservatives, the environment is just a word that has no meaning as far as the legislation is concerned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8) the recorded division on Motion No. 4 stands deferred.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor) moved:

That Bill C-3 be amended by deleting Clause 23.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that it would not be necessary to move this amendment. But, in the absence of willingness on the part of the Government to reflect the important national role this particular Department should have with respect to regional development and to regional equity across this country, my only option is to suggest that we do not repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act but keep the Department in place.

I want to make two points with respect to this Bill in front of us now to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology which represents a further step in the process of this country turning its back on equitable regional development. I think that it is an extremely unfortunate set of steps that we have taken.

If we go back to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, there we had a ministry which had as its single and sole purpose the expansion of regional development throughout this country. That was something we, in this Party, have always seen as an essential commitment that Ottawa should be making to all of the people of this country, a commitment which also should be made by the provinces. DREE itself was done away with. Then we had the establishment of DRIE, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. Within DRIE we had two functions together. We had the function of industrial development for the entire country and we had the function of regional development for the country as a whole put together.

There was some serious difficulty in trying to mesh these two differing functions together within one ministry. It functioned and it operated within two separate sections of the ministry. One section dealt with industrial development and the other dealt with regional development. With this Bill we have the elimination of any national commitment to regional development within our country. If this Bill is passed as it stands there will not be a single ministry within this Government that has the commitment to see that there is fairness and equal opportunity in different regions within Canada.

If we were Luxemburg, even The Netherlands, or Switzerland, this might not be something for us to be concerned about but we are not. We are an incredibly large diverse country with remarkable differences in terms of the economic base of livelihood from which people start.

An exciting thing about being a Member of Parliament is the chance to see many different parts of our country. It is both exciting and stimulating, but it is also terribly distressing to see in central British Columbia, for instance, unemployment rates of 15 per cent, 16 per cent and 17 per cent, to see in northern Saskatchewan unemployment rates of 13 per cent, 14 per cent and 15 per cent, to see in parts of northern Ontario unemployment rates of a similar magnitude and to see in Atlantic Canada, especially in parts of Atlantic Canada, unemployment rates that are at real levels once you take into account where people really stand with regard to the labour force. Real unemployment rates are often over 50 per cent.

People from Newcastle, New Brunswick have told me of unemployment rates in their part of the country in real terms that reach over 50 per cent. The same is true in parts of the outports of Newfoundland. In fact, there are parts of Newfoundland where one finds unemployment rates in which the percentage of people who are at work is significantly less than the percentage of people who would like to be within the work force. One can see the same thing in other parts of Atlantic Canada.

• (1750)

We see the same thing happening in the Province of Québec. In some parts of Québec the unemployment rate is far too high for a developed country like ours.

In the Eastern Townships, for instance, in the textile and clothing sectors, the unemployment rate can be as high as 30 or 35 per cent.

What we are seeing, Mr. Speaker, is not just unacceptably high levels of unemployment, we are seeing a situation where many workers cannot find jobs, and as result, they decide that they better stay home because there are no jobs available.

[English]

That is the reality of regional disadvantages which exist in parts of Canada. Since the Government has not been prepared to bring amendments to this Bill, amendments which would give the Department some responsibility to co-ordinate and work toward regional fairness, it is necessary to keep the Regional Industrial Expansion Act as it presently stands.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 6 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more that five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at the report stage of the Bill now before the House. Call in the Members.

• (1820)

And the division bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 3, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr Kindy).

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 43)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I think you would find consent at least from the majority of the Members—I do not know; I cannot speak for the Member for Calgary Northeast, but I can certainly speak for this caucus—to apply the result of the vote just taken to the next motions, if you insist, in reverse.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I would like my name to stand. I am voting in favour of the motion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa South.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the House agree that the division just taken can be so recorded?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in the application of the votes I am not sure that the words "in reverse" would apply to any of the votes on the motions. That would perhaps apply when one gets to concurrence in report stage but not at the motion stage since the Government is not prepared to accept any of the motions.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I would like the guidance of the Chair. Members on this side have noted a very serious matter to which we would want to draw the attention of the Chair, that is, that the Minister of the Environment has been straining to get to his feet and has been stopped by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. We suspect that he wants to vote for an amendment on sustainable development.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the House agree that the division just taken will be recorded as applying to the remaining motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Accordingly the next vote is on Motion No. 4, standing in the name the Hon. Member for Ottawa South.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

Is it also agreed that the division just taken will be applied in reverse to the motion for concurrence in the Bill at report stage?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kindy: I am abstaining on Motion No. 6, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Lewis (for the Prime Minister) moved that the Bill, as amended, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

It being 6.40 p.m., pursuant to Order made June 13, 1989, the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Government appreciates that should we go to a Private Members' Hour now there would only be 20 minutes for the Private Members' Hour.

In order that the matter before the House has a full opportunity for debate, we would suggest that there be one full hour for Private Members' Hour and that Orders of the Day be called again at 7.40 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

TRANSFER PAYMENTS

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should restore funds cut from federal transfer payments to the provinces for post-secondary education and complete an agreement with the provinces to provide assured levels of funding commensurate with the increased costs of universities' operations and the need to enhance the availability of resourceful humans for economic development and full employment.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it has become almost trite these days to observe that Canada, for a force, must shift from a resource based economy to a knowledge based economy if it is to compete in the new economic circumstances that exist in the world. It has been said, and it is true, that we can no longer depend upon our forests, our land, our minerals, and the fish from the sea to sustain this modern nation in present circumstances.

This was an observation that underscored a remark made by the Prime Minister back in 1983, which I can merely paraphrase. He said that if there was not a dramatic improvement in Canada's performance in the area of research and development, Canada would play in the minor leagues of the competition in this world in economic terms. Just yesterday the Prime Minister made a similar remark. He said:

> Either we meet the challenge of competitiveness and ride the crest of the technology wave into the 21st century or we exhaust ourselves in the rip-tide of history, fading inexorably backwards.

So far all we have managed is to be inundated with rhetoric while there exists a virtual drought in action. The Prime Minister, I note, made another remark. He said that a recent survey of 13 countries ranked Canadian high school students eleventh in biology, eleventh in physics, and twelfth in chemistry, "the very subjects on which the knowledge industry depends".

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the deplorable performance of our high school students cited by the Prime Minister is really a reflection of the quality and the character of the teachers that we are producing in universities which have fallen into a disgraceful state.

Right now in this country we are spending something in the order of $13,000 on an average per student while in the United States the average expenditure per student is $20,000. That is an average. Canadians recognize, as a matter of fact Canadians consistently observe that the quality of education in the United States is so much worse than ours. This is just a recognition that there are some states, Mississippi, Alabama and so on, in which the quality of post-secondary education or education at any level does not meet the quality which we think exists in Canada. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that those figures which I cited are averages. In fact, in some states of the United States four to five times as much money is spent per student as is spent in Canada.

Beginning just after World War II the federal Government began to provide financing for post-secondary education in the forms of grants to veterans. Then in the year 1966 or 1967 the federal Government entered into an agreement with the provinces to provide 50-50 sharing for the funding of post-secondary education. This worked out quite well, and I think that many of us in this House will recall that this was the most significant period in terms of developing accessibility and building the university and college system in Canada. These were halcyon days from 1967 until 1977.

In 1977 the then Liberal Government negotiated with the provinces something which is still called Established Programs Financing that covers transfers to the provinces for both health and post-secondary education. Subsequently legislation has been passed which assures that those portions of EPF which are allocated to health indeed go to health. However, since 1977 there has been no assurance that funds provided by the federal Government for post-secondary education indeed go to post-secondary education and that those funds are matched in any way by the provinces.

The situation as it has evolved since then is such that the vast bulk of the cost of post-secondary education, both in colleges and universities, is paid for by the federal Government. It is notable in that context that only the Province of Quebec matches the federal contribution for post-secondary education on the 50-50 basis which characterized the decade after 1967.

Not only has there not been an equivalent contribution from the provinces, there have been cut-backs in the amounts transferred from the federal Government to the provincial Government for post-secondary education.

Mr. Friesen: Be careful how you say it.

Mr. McCurdy: This has occurred as a result of decisions taken by both the Liberal Government and the Conservative Government. I know that to resort to history on this is bothersome, but let us understand what we are talking about here. The undertaking in 1977 was that the growth in post-secondary education transfer payments from the federal Government were to grow in the same measure, based on three-year averaging, as the growth in the Gross Domestic Product. That applied to health transfers and to transfers for post-secondary education.

In 1982-83 the Liberal Government imposed the 6 per cent and 5 per cent rule, which was broadly applied to wages and so on, to be transferred to post-secondary education costing the system something in the order of $400 million over that period of time. Then in 1986 the Conservative Government, arguing as my colleague across the way just did, did not cut post-secondary education by $1.6 billion from the period from 1986 to 1991. It just cut the expectations of the system by $1.6 billion in respect to post-secondary education.

We know that those on the other side will use whatever semantic arguments they may choose to try to convince themselves of the obvious, that is, that the undertaking made by the federal Government to the provinces, to post-secondary education, and to the youth of this country was reneged upon.

As if it were not enough, even as every significant examiner of the situation in this country with respect to post-secondary education said that there was going to have to be an increase in expenditures, this Government has proceeded in the last Budget to impose yet further cuts, which beginning in 1991 will accumulate over the next five years an additional cut of $1 billion in transfer payments for post-secondary education.

My colleague across the way will say: "Oh, well we didn't cut; we are just not going to give them as much". When we have a system which between 1977 and 1987 occasioned a real decrease in real dollars of 10 per cent while student enrolment rose by 30 per cent, I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that is a cut. It certainly is a failure to fulfil a promise. It is a failure to respond to the needs in this country which everyone by now recognizes.

It is an absolute outrage that in a period of time when this country should be developing the means to respond to the demands of an international knowledge based industry the Government should be cutting expenditures for post-secondary education, while at the same time refusing to increase expenditures for research and development.

There are classes in our universities with as many as 5,000 students. There are seminars which are supposed to be for small groups, intimate, close, and Socratic in which as many as 50 students are expected to benefit from the intimate examination of knowledge and are intended to learn.

There is not a criterion of economic success with respect to the knowledge based economy in which we do not finish last or near last. Every institution, every commission, every committee within this House, at the federal level, at the provincial level, or anywhere has recognized that there is going to have to be a change. There are going to have to be substantial increases in expenditures for post-secondary education and the mess that exists at this time, in which the federal Government and the provincial Governments dispute how much of a share each is paying, has to end.

It has to end. If it does not end, we are going to deny not only our future prospects for economic growth but opportunity to thousands of students who want nothing else but the opportunity to build a particular vision of Canada which is not borrowed from elsewhere.

What is the solution to this? The solution has been clear. It has been debated repeatedly in this House. It has been debated in the Committee on Science and Technology. It has been debated in the Committee of the Secretary of State. It has been debated in the Senate. It has been considered by the National Advisory Board for Science and Technology. It has been considered by the Bovey report. It has been considered by the Al Johnson report. It has been considered by so many people that even this Government ought to be able to understand what is necessary.

What is necessary is for the urgent call of a First Ministers Conference. They should not be allowed out of a locked room until they have agreed on a basis for the shared funding of post-secondary education which will ensure that both levels pay their share. Nothing else will do. We can no longer burden ourselves with petty jurisdictional disputes while our country and our youth suffer. They are suffering now, and they will suffer yet more. To suggest that the burden of a deficit is going to be an overwhelming burden is ridiculous as compared to the kind of burden which will be their inheritance if we do not begin to catch up.

It is impertinent nonsense for the Prime Minister to condemn our schools for their failure to produce the level of literacy in science, as he did, while at the same time refuse to do what is necessary and to fulfil the promise he has made.

When we stand before you, Mr. Speaker, to support this motion, it is very simple and very clear. The funds which this Government has cut should be restored. The deficit and the allocation of funds to post-secondary institutions will breed a deficit so huge in the future, an intellectual deficit, an economic deficit, and a deficit in jobs, that it will be far more serious than a self-created deficit which this Government seeks to defend at odds with itself, as it has continued to do.

Second, in recognizing the mutual responsibility of both the federal and provincial Governments, they should, as I said before, through the calling of a First Ministers Conference come to an immediate resolution of this issue. Otherwise the future will look, indeed, as if this country in the economic league will be playing not Class C but sand lot.

An Hon. Member: Bush league.

Mr. McCurdy: Bush league is too high for what will result from the continued travel along this route. Let me say another thing which is not contained in this motion but which I think is necessary. This country has no policy focus with respect to any level of education.

I do not think that there is anyone who does not understand that there is something wrong when one-quarter of our population is functionally illiterate. This does not reflect the role of universities. This reflects the role of the elementary and secondary institutions. All need some policy focus. All need initiatives which will relate the nature of our curriculum at the lower levels and the functions of the institutions at the higher levels with our economic priorities, as well as our social priorities. This is a country in which the economic imperatives do not outweigh and ought not to outweigh the social imperatives. We should develop the necessary models without encroaching upon particular jurisdictions which will permit our institutions of education at all levels to provide the kind of knowledge that will enable all Canadians to exercise the kinds of creativity and the intelligence of which Canadians given the opportunity are capable so that we will be seen as not only an economic success but a social success and a model for the world. It is almost too late.

I know, Mr. Speaker, by the way in which you are posing your hands that you are concerned and anxious for the Government to get on with it. I am sure that you are waiting to hear a positive response with respect to the required initiatives.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was listening to the Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party, and what struck me in nearly all the speeches by Opposition Members, whether they represent the New Democratic Party or the Liberal Party of Canada, what struck me was the constant and increasing demand for money, without considering the broader context of our national economy. Money is needed for post-secondary education, for the provinces, for this and for that, but no one bothers to consider this country's main problem, and that problem is what we refer to as the national debt and the deficit. Mr. Speaker, as you know, our national debt has now reached $320 billion. This year, the annual deficit will increase by an additional $6 billion because of rising interest rates. However, since 1984, the Progressive Conservative Party has done a tremendous job of controlling and dealing with our national debt. In 1984, the debt increased 24 per cent. In 1989, we have managed to keep the increase down to 10 per cent. Even at that, we still have this national debt which is increasing and we have a deficit that is still too high. We hope, and I believe we have taken the necessary steps to bring the deficit down to approximately $16 billion by 1993-94.

The last Budget, like all other Budgets, was a serious exercise in restraint, and I think the Minister of Finance is to be commended. We managed to reduce spending and programs, and we raised income tax and certain other taxes so that this year, the Government will be able to collect $5 billion and next year, an additional $9 billion, which will be used to reduce our annual deficit and control our national debt, a process that is already underway.

Mr. Speaker, when we consider the specific issue the Hon. Member was discussing this evening, and I am referring to transfer payments to the provinces, there are, in fact, two distinct types of payments. I am referring to equalization payments and so-called established programs financing. As you know, Mr. Speaker, equalization payments are made to certain provinces on the basis of their revenues and according to a pre-established formula. The April Budget in no way interfered with equalization payments. We are not decreasing the amount allocated for established program financing, but we are reducing the percentage increase, which is something else. As a result, established program financing in 1988-89 was $18.7 billion; in 1989-90, it is $19.8 billion; and in 1990-91, it will be $20.8 billion. So we see that the annual amount of established program financing given by the federal Government to the provinces is increasing. We only reduced the percentage increase. Equalization payments in 1988-89 were $6.9 billion; in 1989-90, they are $7.3 billion; and in 1990-91, they will be almost $7 billion. Once again, Mr. Speaker, you see the annual increase provided.

I will go further, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the best way to look at how the Canadian Government operates is in percentage terms. For 1989-90, we will spend—the Canadian Government will spend $103.5 billion; 10 per cent of that is grants for businesses; 10.8 per cent is for national defence; 4.6 per cent is for Crown corporations; 2.4 per cent is aid for developing countries; 31.5 per cent is for individual Canadians, for old age security, etc.; and 23.2 per cent is for the provinces, which means that 23.2 per cent of the money spent by the Canadian Government goes to the provinces in cash. And to that, I must add $10.5 billion in fiscal transfers. A total of $34.4 billion annually goes from the federal Government, the Government of Canada, to the ten provinces and two territories.

Mr. Speaker, that's not peanuts! These astronomical figures, I think, show what this Government does for Canadians' welfare and also the interest the Conservative Government has in every province giving its citizens the goods and services to which every resident of every province is entitled.

You see, Mr. Speaker, I could go on giving figures and point out among other things that with respect to the increase in established programs financing from 1979-80 to 1983-84 we are talking about $54 billion. From 1984-85 to 1988-89, Mr. Speaker, the amount was $83 billion. And our estimates for the years 1989-90 to 1993-94 amount to $107 billion, almost $108 billion for established programs financing alone, funds which will be paid by the federal Government to the ten provinces and the two territories.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest these figures speak for themselves. However, we must not lose sight of the April 1989 Budget which urged all Canadians to tighten their belts and keep in mind the current economic situation of the country. The potential is there, whether we are talking about raw materials, labour or skills, but all that cannot be put to contribution and create jobs if we are saddled with a serious economic problem, if our country is debt-ridden. You know how things were, Mr. Speaker, because you were a Member of the House when interest rates peaked at 22 per cent and you made some comments about that situation. From the outset we had—we still have—to get a handle on threatening inflation. For the first time in years, Mr. Speaker, we have an inflation rate of 5 per cent. This is why we need interest rates to stem the current inflationary trends, and this will automatically guarantee that the country will steer the same course it has been following over the past four years.

I am thinking of the kind of job creation we have seen over the last four years, due to this Progressive Conservative Government's sound management.

Within that overall context, Mr. Speaker, the Budget had to make difficult choices in terms of tax increases, of certain program cuts, and also in terms of transfers or rather of increase of moneys to be transferred once more by the Canadian Government to each and every province.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe the motion now before us does not recognize the economic reality across the land. And when it comes to the Budget, when it comes to managing a nation like Canada, we should not look at a small square only, a single card, because there are 52 different cards in a deck!

We must therefore look at the overall Canadian picture, before making our choices. This is what the April Budget did. I see you are signalling my time is up, so let me conclude by stating that the motion in my view is not warranted within the overall Canadian economic situation.

• (1910)

[English]

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak on this motion. It provides the Government a wonderful opportunity to correct its ways, to give renewed hope to our youth, to women, to the poor, to the unemployed, to older workers and to all Canadians who wish to upgrade and improve their skills and education at a university, a community college or a number of various other sources which increase literacy. This provides an opportunity for Canadians to become more competitive, to contribute more to Canadian society, to find a more secure future for themselves and for their children.

This is not only an opportunity for renewed hope but also an opportunity to ensure that education, training, retraining and research and development become the cornerstones of our economic development, of our competitive edge. Let us stop this massive financial retreat undertaken by the federal Government when it comes to post-secondary education and related matters. Let us ask ourselves what is the financial situation regarding post-secondary education.

First, I would like to contest most strenuously the figures used by Government Members. They use figures like $6.9 billion, $7.3 billion, $20 billion, $103 billion or 23 per cent of such and such. Those Canadians who are listening to this debate simply do not have the experience of dealing with millions, let alone with billions. The suggestion has been made that there is massive support for post-secondary education, but if one looks at it in context, that is not at all an accurate description of what is occurring.

What is the financial situation regarding post-secondary education today? In 1986 $8 billion, not $8 million, was reduced from transfer payments to the provinces for health and education. In 1989, $4 billion, not $4 million, was reduced. Those are rough figures, but they are very, very close.

Quite apart from that, there has been a $700 million reduction in training and retraining. Then the Government adds another $800 million to it and tries to pretend that it has increased funding for training and retraining. It has said this without looking at increases in student enrolment, without looking at increased programs, without looking at needed new equipment or any of those variables. Quite apart from that, there are plants and equipment that are getting older and require more dollars for maintenance. That is being drawn from general revenues.

The Government neglects to point out that there has been a 30 per cent increase in enrolment in universities in the last decade. In that decade, there has been an increase of only 8 per cent in the teaching workforce at those universities. It neglects to mention that professors need to deal with large, overloaded classes and it is becoming increasingly difficult for educators to give the kind of education to which our youth are entitled.

Let us look for a moment at student aid. The cost of living criteria has not been changed since 1984. Because of increases in salaries, that means that the student must pay a greater proportion toward his education. Those parents who support their children who are going to post-secondary educational institutions are also paying more.

Current levels of funding have in fact been frozen. The program for an increasing part-time student population has been a disaster, and that has been acknowledged by all Parties. In this Budget, current overall levels for student aid have been frozen.

Let us look at research and development. One half of our Gross Domestic Product is devoted to research and development. That is one half of that which is devoted to it by our major competitor, the United States, and it is roughly one half of what is contributed to it by Japan, Sweden and a number of countries that are smaller than Canada and overall have fewer riches than Canada does.

We have not even looked at the hidden costs, and there are many. One example is postal subsidies. It would appear as if postal subsidies available to learned journals and scholarly books will no longer be available. This will be an additional financial burden on those institutions and on the educational system in general.

This massive retreat will increase regional disparities. The poor will have to pay more, and by the poor, I mean the citizens and the poorer provinces. There will be fewer graduates from those areas of Canada that are poor and therefore regional disparities will increase.

I would argue that it is quite appropriate to target funds after consultation with the provinces. I am sure that there can be some accommodation made, but we need to come through with the funds in order to support that infrastructure that will either make us competitive or not competitive, not only with the United States but on the world scene.

Spending on education, training, retraining and research and development needs to be looked upon not only as an expenditure but as an investment. If Hon. Members doubt what I say, they should look at the number of investments made by the United States, Japan and a number of other countries in the area of education, training, retraining and research and development. There are such things as good debts and bad debts. A good debt is one that returns on the investment made and a bad debt, of course, is one which does not make that return. I would submit that with education, training, retraining and research and development, there is a great deal of return on the investment.

We are losing our competitive edge. There have been numerous cuts. What has the impact been? It has meant extra costs for provinces, students and their parents. Our young people are losing hope.

Laid-off workers, especially older ones, are driven to despair. The Canadian people are confused. They realize the deficit must be reduced, but on the other hand they question this Government's priorities. This should be a tremendous opportunity for the Government to discharge its responsibility as regards post-secondary education. Let them do so, and let them do it now! Let them give postsecondary education its due!

[English]

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the speech of the Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair (Mr. McCurdy). I thought it was well delivered, and obviously the Hon. Member cares about the youth of Canada. It needs to be said, however, that all of us care about the youth of Canada. All of us want to find the right combination of actions which will end up securing a very promising future for those young people. It is in that spirit of caring about what comes next, of caring about the next generation, that the federal Budget was framed. I really believe that. The Hon. Member talked about the burden of the deficit, and that economic imperatives should not outweigh social imperatives. That is an interesting concept. I agree with the Hon. Member that in a perfect world we should invest whatever needs to be invested for research and development and education. As the Hon. Member well knows, we are not living in a perfect world.

I would like to make a couple of comments on the motion the Hon. Member has put before the House. When the Government came to office in 1984, it was quickly realized that we had a serious debt problem. The Government has been on a course of action since then to attempt to get the debt problem under control. There has been some success. The debt has been reduced from 24 per cent in 1984 to less than 10 per cent now. Is that good enough? No, not by any means is it good enough. Still Canada faces a serious problem in the future. The Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in April accelerated us on the road to being more responsible in terms of debt control and management.

The Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair (Mr. McCurdy) would have to agree that the key point in maintaining our social programs is maintaining our ability to fund them. That is pivotal. We can talk in the House about how we are not spending enough in different areas, programs, agencies, on education and on R and D. However, unless we have the facility as a country to make good on those promises, what is said here contains empty words. We need to be more realistic about what we can and cannot do.

The debt that Canada has accumulated and the debt service costs which make that debt rise on a daily basis threaten our economic ability to sustain prosperity. The Hon. Member has to agree with that. We are spending $30 billion a year on debt service payments. Imagine what $30 billion a year could do to funding education. It would be wonderful to be relieved of the burden of financing this debt, but we are not.

What steps can the Government responsibly and realistically take to get the debt monkey off our backs, and at the same time try and maintain a caring and human face to the Government? I submit to the Hon. Member that we are attempting to find that formula. It is important to remember that we are not looking at absolute cuts in funding here. The Member's motion is flawed in its wording, because it talks about restoring funds cut from federal transfer payments. That is not exactly true.

Transfer payments to other levels of Government from the federal Government amount to 24 per cent of government spending. That is a significant amount of money. In absolute dollars it is $34 billion which is transferred from Ottawa to the provinces. If the Government wants to become more responsible about how it is spending its money, it cannot ignore those transfer payments; it cannot ignore a budgetary item so large. Therefore, the Government is correct in looking at this.

Established Programs Financing contributions amount to almost $20 billion in 1989–90. The next largest federal transfer program is equalization at $7 billion, and the Canada Assistance Plan at $5 billion. On a per capita basis, that represents $750 for every single Canadian in this year. Therefore, it is a significant amount of money.

Of course, federal assistance through EPF helps the provinces, as the Hon. Member has stated, meet their responsibilities for health and post-secondary education. EPF also forms the largest part of federal support for health and post-secondary education. Federal transfers under EPF arrangements are indexed to grow annually, and they take the form of a block fund. Federal assistance is not linked to how much provinces spend in a particular area.

The 1989 Budget announced that the growth rate of those transfer payments will be reduced by 1 per cent. That is not a cut. There will continue to be a rate of growth and the funds will continue to grow and get larger year after year. Therefore, there has not been a cut in transfer payments to the provinces. Over the next five years EPF is expected to total nearly $108 billion. That is an increase of $24 billion. How can that possibly be a cut when it is going to increase by $24 billion? EPF transfers to the provinces will match or exceed the rate of inflation. When something is growing by $24 billion, when it is exceeding the rate of inflation and getting larger, how can it be a cut?

I might point out to the Hon. Member that for Ontario, the province that he and I are from, the hard numbers indicate that in 1989–90 the estimated EPF and equalization transfers to Ontario will be $7.2 billion. In 1991 they will be $7.6 billion. That is an increase in one year of $429 million. It is not a cut.

This year for the Province of Quebec, transfer payments will be $8.1 billion, and next year they will be $8.5 billion. That is $421 million more, which is an increase. The Province of Alberta will receive a $103 million increase year over year; British Columbia will receive a $133 million increase. Those are not cuts.

I submit that the motion before the House has been improperly drafted by stating: "the Government should restore funds cut from federal transfer payments". Those funds have not been cut.

On top of this, the equalization program provides substantial additional federal assistance to lower-income provinces to help them in providing services to the public. Equalization payments are unconditional transfers to the provinces. Provinces can also use those funds to finance important services such as education.

Robust growth in overall provincial revenues, together with strong economic growth in Ontario, has substantially increased these payments. This year they are expected to exceed $7 billion.

Not only are EPF transfers continuing to grow, but so are total major transfers to provinces. In 1984–85 they were $25 billion. By 1989–90 they will have increased to $34 billion. That is an increase, a growth of $9 billion. It is not a cut.

EPF is the largest single program of assistance to post–secondary education, but it is by no means the only form of help that the federal Government gives to the provinces. There are student loan programs and granting councils.

The Liberal Member who spoke a moment ago talked about good debt and bad debt. I will concede that the Hon. Member made a good point in that there is a differentiation in the type of debt incurred. However, there is another type of debt which shackles and can destroy whole nations. Canadians need only look south to other countries that have travelled the road of excessive spending leading to mounting debt problems to see where the road ends. I remind the Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair that this road ends in the inability of a country to fund the social programs he has defended and spoken to so eloquently.

I share his concern for the youth of this country. However, I say to the Hon. Member that we have to clean up our financial house, get it in order, get Canada back on a solvent basis, and then we can have the caring, kind, and humane face to this country that the Hon. Member and I would both like to see.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few words to what others have said on this motion. The Member who brought the motion forward and I are kind of partners in crime in this whole business of education. Therefore I think we both have a right to speak on it. However, I wish he would not leave the Chamber at this point. I have a few things I would like to say to him.

Mr. Riis: That's why he's leaving.

Mr. Friesen: He used the term, one which I wrote down when he said it, "self–created deficit", as though it is some mysterious object that all of a sudden appeared on the scene and now we have to ignore it in order to get on with important matters like education. I want him to know that education has always been important. However, there were a few intervening actions which occurred that created this mysterious self–created deficit that we are all so concerned about now.

First, let us go back to 1972 and 1974, the period of a minority Government. David Lewis was the leader of the Party of the Hon. Member. The Liberal Party was very anxious to maintain its hold on the Government for as long as possible. Thus there was a convenient arrangement made between the governing Liberal Party and David Lewis and his operatives so that they could have a temporary coalition in order to stay in office.

During that time some things came into being, mysteriously, such as the Mackenzie Valley Pipeline Commission headed by Tom Berger. That Commission managed to stall energy operations in western Canada for a good many years. In fact, that part of it has not done well since. In fact, in terms of threats of oil spills on the West Coast of Canada, we would not have had to worry about them if they would have allowed the pipeline to be built.

Then there was a little corporation known as PetroCan created. It was born as a result of this coalition that came into being between 1972 and 1974. PetroCan was supposed to be a window on the industry with just a small cash infusion of $500,000—an insignificant amount. However, the window went on to become a bay window. It kept getting bigger and bigger until the corporation is now monumental. It is a multi–billion dollar corporation with a glass tower in Calgary known as Red Square. This $500,000 company was begun as a result of the coalition which created this self–created deficit.

Then, Mr. Lalonde, who was the Minister at the time, bought a foreign oil company that was operating in Canada. He paid $1 billion too much for it, something which inflated the whole price of Petro–Canada. Now, a few years later, we have to think of how we are going to pay back the debt that was incurred by the loose spending of that loose coalition which seemed so innocent and so human at the time. The most human thing it could have done would have been to think about education. It was profligate in terms of its spending in those days. Deficit spending was thought to be a buzzword, an in word for people who were in this coalition. It was good because it thought of the people. That deficit is now robbing 30 per cent of our income. We cannot spend it on education anymore. We cannot spend it on health services the way we would like to. The Hon. Member now sees that as a self-created deficit. The Member who was an educator wants to see us ignore the deficit.

Incidentally, as my colleague just pointed out, the Hon. Member who proposes the motion talked about cutbacks and cuts in spending. Between 1979 and 1984 Established Programs Financing hit a peak of $54.929 billion. From 1984 to 1989 the figure rose to $83.354 billion, an increase of nearly $30 billion as I read it. However, the Hon. Member calls that increase a cut. Between 1989 and 1994 it is expected that Established Programs Financing will rise to $107.865 billion. Is that a cut? That figure is double what it was between 1979 and 1984. Yet the Hon. Member persists in calling it a cut.

I know that money is important in education. Without it we cannot get into all the areas that we need to get into such as research in microbiology, space research, sound—all of the matters that universities have to get into if we are to become world leaders in these areas. However, they all cost money. Everything in education does not cost money. I wish the Hon. Member as an educator himself would have said something about the place of curiosity in education, the place of working one's way through school and giving oneself an incentive in education.

Mr. Fisher: Did you?

Mr. Friesen: Yes, I did. It didn't cost the Government of Canada one red cent for my seven years of university training.

Mr. Fisher: Of course it did. Your tuition does not pay the full cost by any stretch of the imagination.

Mr. Friesen: That is right. However, I was not trained in Canadian universities. When I went to state universities I paid double tuition.

Mr. Flis: That explains it.

Mr. Friesen: The Hon. Member has it.

I wish the Hon. Member would have talked about something about which I think he is probably very competent in, that is, the role of the teacher in inspiring curiosity in students. I think he was probably very good at that. However, somehow it all boils down to money. If the growth is not quite as high as it was the year before then somehow the students and universities are being defrauded. I do not think that squares since those other ingredients have to be fed back into the system.

I hope the Hon. Member who has put this motion forward will do some sober thinking about self-created deficits. What we borrow today we have to pay back tomorrow. The interest payments we are paying today could have been better spent on universities as opposed to paying it to the banks and Wall Street. We cannot rely on continued deficit financing in order to keep the system going.

Mr. Nicholson: That is the point where the Hon. Member got up and left.

Mr. Friesen: Exactly. That is when he got up to leave. It was when we talked about deficit financing. It has been the darling ploy of the New Democratic Party.

While I have some sympathy for this motion, I am afraid that I cannot support it. It has an open-ended criterion to it.

There is one other factor in dealing with the cost of education. It is cost control. At the present time we are asking the federal Government to pay out, but the federal Government has absolutely no control over what it costs. Somewhere in the balancing of the books there has to be also a balancing of the costs, not only the asking for more funds. Somewhere along the line we have to get that equation worked into the system. I hope that the Hon. Member will do some more thinking about this motion before he ever proposes it again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to recognize more Hon. Members on debate. However, the time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

Pursuant to Standing Order 96(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

• (1940)

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, before we commence debate on Bill C–8, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find unanimous consent to have Bill C–22, which we debated earlier this afternoon, referred to the Standing Committee on the Environment rather than to a legislative committee as had been proposed to the House earlier this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR ACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C–8, an Act to amend the Department of Labour Act, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are four motions on the Order Paper and Notices offered in amendment to Bill C–8, an Act to amend the Department of Labour Act, all in the name of the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. Proud).

Motion No. 1 is similar to a motion that was debated in committee. However, the Chair is of the opinion that the motion is sufficiently different that it will allow it to be put to the House.

Motion No. 1 will therefore be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 2 is identical to a motion that was moved and negatived in committee. For this reason it will not be selected.

Motion No. 3 causes the Chair misgivings because the amendment is attempting to add a definition of a "Consultative Council Board". This is a new concept, a concept that was not envisaged in the Bill when it received second reading. It is my view that the amendment goes beyond the scope of the Bill as read a second time by the House.

Paragraph one of Citation 773 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition stipulates that: "An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the Bill, beyond its scope or governed by or dependent upon amendments already negatived".

Consequently, the motion is out of order and will not be selected.

Motion No. 4 is in order and will be debated and voted on separately.

To recap, Motions Nos. 1 and 4 are in order and will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 2 and 3 are out of order and will not be selected for debate.

The House will now deal with Motion No. 1.

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough) moved:

That Bill C–8 be amended in Clause 1 by striking out lines 11 to 14 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"ions, employees or employee organizations, for the purpose of making provision".

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise today to speak on this motion. Specifically, the motion calls for Bill C–8 to be amended by striking out lines 11 to 14 at page 1 and substituting this motion. Clause 5(1) of Bill C–8 would now read:

> Subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, the Minister may enter into agreements with provincial Governments, employers, employer organizations, employees, or employee organizations, for the purposes of making provision.

Bill C–8 is an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, enabling the establishment of the Program for Older Worker Adjustment, otherwise known as POWA.

It has been more than three years since the Government announced its intention to create a program for older worker adjustment and, finally, the Government has brought forward legislation. It is important to note that this announcement by the Government came directly on the heels of its decision to cancel the Labour Adjustment Benefit Program in the Government's February 1986 Budget.

During the debate at second reading of Bill C–8, I addressed this matter and I want to reaffirm that my colleagues on this side of the House are very upset with the Government for taking more than three years to bring this legislation to fruition.

Given the time frame that the Government had to produce legislation that could greatly benefit older workers, what we see here is legislation that is a step in the right direction, although a minor step forward at best.

I say that because during the three years that older workers have been waiting for a new program there have been approximately and still are 636 applications involving thousands of older workers. They have been waiting a long while and my colleagues and I on this side of the House do not think that they should wait any longer. They had been promised a program by the Government; they were promised benefits and assistance.

Throughout the legislative committee hearings this theme was constantly brought forward by the witnesses. Although they felt that there were inherent flaws in this particular legislation, substantial flaws, they still felt it was important to support this legislation. A major concern was the involvement of financial institutions in the administration of this program.

The Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Labour Market Productivity Centre, and the Canadian Council on Social Development raised this concern during the hearings. That is why I am proposing this motion in the House today.

The Canadian Labour Market and the Productivity Centre suggested that a better model for administering income maintenance could be through the Canada Pension Plan and proposed that this program somehow be administered through Health and Welfare Canada. In terms of the annuity model, they proposed that instead of privatizing the delivery of this program, systems already in place could take care of the same issue.

The Canadian Council on Social Development questioned how the program administration with the financial institutions, and more specifically with insurance companies, would actually work in practice. During the legislative committee hearings the Canadian Council on Social Development stated:

> We question the appropriateness of business firms making adjustments to the benefits payments, once the initial benefit level has been established by POWA. How will private firms monitor changes in annuity holders' employment and income status without reference to personal information on these annuity holders' income tax returns?

The Canadian Labour Congress had reservations about the involvement of financial institutions in the administration of this program. One concern was the transfer of work from unionized public workers to non-unionized private sector workers. Another concern raised by the CLC was that the purchase of annuities virtually guarantees that the provision of income security to older workers will be administratively segregated from the other aspects of an integrated adjustment program, which include training, job counselling and job placement. To summarize the feelings of the CLC, I think it is safe to say that to turn over the income situation of POWA beneficiaries to financial institutions was, according to them, totally unacceptable.

Given the concerns raised by these notable organizations during the legislative committee hearings, I propose that the House consider the adoption of this motion that is before us today.

These organizations have a very strong insight into the concerns with respect to older workers in this country. The dilemmas facing older workers today, and in the past, are not new to these organizations, for they have researched this area for many years and have provided us, as parliamentarians and Canadians, with very thorough studies. I trust that this motion will receive positive consideration by the House.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favour of the motion. The major reason why I do so concerns an element of privatization to a portion of the Government, and perhaps the involvement by the private sector in government at all. The concept of the delivery of the benefits of the Program for Older Worker Adjustment being delivered by private insurance institutions is one I find particularly abhorrent. The struggles I have had with insurance companies in the delivery of workers' benefits for sickness, accident and long-term disability pale in comparison to the struggles the Opposition is having with the Government. So you can quite well imagine how enormous the problems are which people are having with private insurance companies insofar as the delivery of these programs are concerned.

Can you imagine an employee on long-term disability from a plant that is designated within this program, the employees of which are entitled to receive benefits under POWA, an employee who is most likely at two-thirds of the previous salary? POWA stipulates that the benefit levels are 60 per cent of previous salaries.

Once the enterprise has been designated under this program, I would suggest that there would be an enormous amount of pressure by that insurance company to force the levels which it was previously paying out of its own pocket of 66 per cent down to the 60 per cent and foisting the cost of that worker on to the taxpayers of the country.

I do not think it is possible to view some of the problems associated with this concept in any other way. There is absolutely no reason for insurance companies to be involved in this kind of a program at all. What we see here is simply a continuation of what was begun several years ago by this Government but which has accelerated since the return of this Parliament and certainly as a consequence of this Budget; that is, the privatization of as many services which can be provided to people ostensibly by the Government as possible.

The Government claims that the reason for doing it this way is that it is cheaper. If the Government puts these things out for tender and the cost to the Government as a result is cheaper, and they have said that it will be as much as 70 per cent, the difference in cost is quite easily explained.

As the previous speaker pointed out, and as the mover of the motion pointed out, what is happening is that the people who will be implementing this program are now going to be in the private sector and will be more poorly paid than Government workers. I would suggest that the insurance companies are able to provide the cost at somewhat less than the Government, but even on that basis what the Government is really doing, as is the case in most privatization efforts, is being penny-wise and pound-poor. If the people who are providing this service were to remain within the Government, well paid workers within the Government earning decent salaries, paying income tax and spending the money in the community, the basic overall return to the Government would be just as high as if these services were not provided by private companies.

I agree with the previous speaker that what we have here is a pale beginning of something which should have become full blown long before now, something which we have waited three years for the implementation of, the pale beginnings of something which has to occur. Older workers are at a tremendous loss within our society to find jobs for themselves. Even the services provided to them under the Labour Department are insufficient in helping them to find jobs for a variety of reasons.

For the time being, I would simply like to point out that while we will be supporting this motion and supporting the concept of POWA, it is with a great deal of concern and sorrow that we recognize that it does not go much farther.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-8 is to provide income assistance to older workers who have lost their jobs and who, because of their age, cannot find work again. In the Bill older workers are defined as those people 55 years up to and including 64 years. This proposal to provide income assistance to older workers is of course subject to conditions. I will discuss those conditions when we come to a later amendment.

Let me say that it is obvious that one of the conditions is that the older worker must have exhausted his unemployment insurance. Therefore, what we have here is a Bill which will provide income assistance to a worker over 55 who cannot find work, who no longer has unemployment insurance. He has to have some kind of income assistance until he gets old enough to get the old age pension. That is the purpose of the Bill.

The amendment to the Bill, which we are discussing now and which has been proposed by my colleague from Prince Edward Island, is to strike out that clause of the Bill which provides that income benefits to the unemployed older workers come from private financial institutions. For some reason or other, the Government has decided to finance and provide this income assistance to older workers by making agreements with private companies and with private financial institutions.

We cannot understand why. We don't finance old age pensions by some sort of an agreement with private financial institutions. We do not provide family allowances by making a contract with private insurance companies and private finance companies to make those payments to families for family allowances. As a matter of fact, I do not know of any kind of social programs where the Government makes a contract with a private, profit-making company to provide benefits to Canadians. We have in this Bill such a provision.

The witnesses before the legislative committee recommended that that is not the way to do it. They said that these benefits should be provided for and financed like other social benefits through Government agencies such as the Canada Pension Plan,old age pensions,family allowances and so on.

The Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Council on Social Development recommended that we strike out this provision that says that the benefits will be financed and provided by financial institutions. That is what my hon. colleague is doing in this amendment.

We urge Members of this House to support the amendment so that these benefits will be financed and provided for like all other social benefits and income support benefits.

It is surprising that the Government announced this program in the Budget of February, 1986, and yet it took the government members more than three years to produce this Bill. After abolishing the previous program, they finally came forth with this Bill and program for older worker adjustment. Despite the fact that we support the goal of the Bill, it is hard to understand why there are so many flaws in the Bill such as the flaw before us. I urge the House to support this amendment put forward by my hon. colleague.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to add my support to the motion tabled here before us by the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. Proud). It is a very important amendment. More and more we are seeing in our constituency offices people who have lost their jobs and specifically between the ages of 55 and 64. My hon. friend before me referred to them as the older workers. I would like to refer to them as the more senior workers. Because they have experience, they can offer a lot to the country, perhaps for another 20 years or more. Yet firms are reluctant to hire them. That is why I think this Bill is a good one. It does provide protection for such workers who find themselves unemployed. It has a traumatic psychological effect on people to find themselves unemployed after working for 20 or 25 years. That is not an easy thing to live through. It is unfortunate that it took the Government three years to bring in such a Bill.

I hope the Government is listening and will vote for the amendments which our side is introducing because their purpose is only to improve the Bill. The Government is following a trend of cutting the public service and moving toward privatization. It has brought in the free trade Bill, the effects of which we have already seen. Plants are moving to Mexico where workers work for $4 a day. This displaces workers in Canada in the age group of 55 to 64. I know you want to get on with the debate, Mr. Speaker, and I would urge all Members of the House to support this amendment.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the proposed amendment, if adopted, would eliminate a key component of the program, a component that has played a major role in all our negotiations with the provinces on their participation in this program. Adopting this amendment would require a new series of negotiations with the provinces and might mean considerable delay in providing the assistance that older workers need. Earlier, I heard the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. Proud) say there had been too many delays already, and my point is that adopting this amendment would only make the situation much worse.

As for cancelling the previous program, I can inform the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) that we have not yet terminated the previous program. In fact, it has been extended for one year, and this was a program his Government had expected to expire in 1985.

Mr. Speaker, by striking out, as proposed by the Opposition, the words "or other such persons or entities as the Minister considers appropriate", we would in fact deprive the Minister of the option of using any other legal entity in the job environment that might be useful in facilitating adjustment payments. This would mean it would take at least one or two or maybe more years to put in place the government bureaucracy required to dispense these payments, and it would also reduce the amount of money available for the workers in question.

I therefore ask, Mr. Speaker, that the House vote down this amendment.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8) the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough) moved:

That Bill C-8 be amended by adding immediately after line 14 at page 2 the following new clause:

"2. (1) Three years after the coming into force of this Act, a comprehensive review of the provisions of section 5 of the Department of Labour Act, as enacted by this Act, shall be undertaken by such committee of the House of Commons as may be designated or established by the House for that purpose.

(2) The committee referred to in subsection (1) shall, within a year after the review is undertaken or within such further time as the House of Commons may authorize, submit a report on the review to the House including a statement of any changes the committee recommends."

He said: The last motion that I have the pleasure of speaking on today in reference to Bill C-8 is a motion proposing that the Bill be amended by adding, after line 14 on page 2, the following new clause numbered 2(1), and I quote:

Three years after the coming into force of this Act, a comprehensive review of the provisions of section 5 of the Department of Labour Act, as enacted by this Act, shall be undertaken by such committee of the House of Commons as may be designated or established by the House for that purpose.

There are a myriad of concerns with respect to this legislation, as I have addressed in previous comments to the House and throughout the legislative committee process. Obviously these concerns have been shared by my colleagues and by numerous organizations and individuals throughout the country.

As previously mentioned in this House, my colleagues and I support this Bill in principle. By that I mean that older workers need assistance and they have waited long enough for such a program.

I would briefly like to highlight some of the concerns that have been raised pertaining to the legislation. I believe that, although it is definitely an improvement to have a program for older workers' assistance, this legislation has an unusually high degree of selectivity, arbitrariness and subjectivity.

The criteria for eligibility is very broad and does not take into account older workers who may fall between the cracks so to speak. What about older workers who are not part of a major permanent lay-off as designated by the Minister? We still have no idea what the Government will consider as being a major lay-off. Will the Government judge by the number of employees laid off in a region or by the severity of an individual's situation? These lay-offs are to be assessed on a case by case basis.

Given the loosely worded criteria for deciding who qualifies, it is left totally to the discretion of the Minister of Labour as to what constitutes a major lay-off and thus who will be eligible for assistance. The motion I have proposed today will ensure that if the concerns are raised in this area strongly enough to warrant review that the House will do so.

With respect to the federal-provincial partnership of this program, the Government is saying that it will be 70-30 cost shared. It is important to note that Ontario is the only province that has not agreed to participate. British Columbia has recently entered the program. Why has Ontario not agreed to participate? We haven't been given any reasons for its reluctance. Does this mean that older workers from Ontario will not have the same rights and opportunities as older workers from the other nine provinces?

Another concern is how the program will mesh with the UI proposals. How will the design for programs for older workers under the labour force development strategy mesh with POWA? Will they be used to test eligibility for POWA? Will older workers have to exhaust all alternatives in order to qualify for the Program for Older Worker Adjustment?

During the legislative committee hearings a multitude of concerns were raised, some of which I outlined a few moments ago and some of which I will outline now. POWA continues to be a passive approach to labour adjustment for older workers. Some of the witnesses at the hearings believed that it is better to put resources into training and retraining older workers rather than only providing income supplementation. The LAB program had worker and employer representation in the decision-making group built into its administration, unlike this Bill. The program should be made more consultative by including workers and employers in its administration. Under this proposed legislation there are very low yearly benefit levels, with the maximum about $13,200 in 1989 which is about the same as Statistics Canada poverty lines.

How would a lay-off be judged eligible? According to the legislation it must be a major permanent lay-off, but it could be refused if considered a minor permanent lay-off.

As we can all see, there are a variety of concerns with respect to this legislation. Thus I believe that the motion I have proposed today will ensure that these concerns will be dealt with and that other concerns that may arise will be dealt with in an effective manner. I urge the House today to support this motion which I have put forward.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, there are several very good reasons for supporting this motion, not the least of which is that there is a lack of regulatory authority within Bill C-8 itself. That highlights more than ever the necessity for a review. I cannot think of a better vehicle for reviewing this legislation than the House itself and a committee set up by it.

It needs a review process because all it says really is that the Minister will enter into negotiations. There is not any major evaluation of what the final program will look like. All we really have at this stage before it becomes law is reference to some Department of Labour documents which are not very extensive in their exposition of what the program will entail.

The motion will also provide a public review of the program for older workers. Related to what I have already said, this program contains the vaguest of references and operates largely upon the goodwill of the Government. In light of what we are experiencing in relation to this Government at the present time, how can we have any assurance that the designations of major lay-offs are going to be fair? It is absolutely essential that the public have some input. It might possibly be that three years is too long a period of time. It is absolutely essential that the public have some ability to be able to review this program after it has had a chance to operate for a while.

The third reason that it is essential that we have the review is that when it comes to older workers, they face many problems within society as a result of losing their employment which other age levels do not experience. Not the least of which, Mr. Speaker, is the inability to be able to find work at the age of 55 to 64. It is almost a given within our society that people of this age are going to have difficulty finding employment.

In addition, a review of this very situation is going to be essential because the older worker, the 55 to 64 year-old age group, while they are becoming a larger portion of Canadian society are becoming a smaller proportion of the labour force, indicating something in reverse to what one would hope to see happen.

Since that is the case, with a review three years from now we will be able to take a look at where this trend is leading us and be able to make a very good assessment as to whether or not programs should be put in place to supplement this one and the degree to which this one should be augmented if that should be the indication.

I can only say in relation to the whole program for older workers that it is a pale semblance of what we ought to be having. It is a beginning. Let us hope that it is the beginning of a program which takes care of not only these people from 55 to 64 years of age who find themselves at odds with their society because they are unable to find work, but also there are developing serious problems of people even at lower ages. A review three years from now may also include the problems of workers who are even younger than 55.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. colleague said, the purpose of this amendment is to require a review of the legislation after three years. That amendment was proposed to us by witnesses before the legislative committee. The reason that they proposed this review after three years is because they wanted the Bill to go through now, but they said it was subject to many flaws. They felt that the flaws should be dealt with in due course.

For example, the Bill contains no appeal procedure. In the former legislation, the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program, there was an appeal process which workers or firms could use if they felt the administration had not treated them properly. There is no appeal procedure in this. There is no consultation procedure written into the program.

The Minister has almost total discretion under this Bill. He can do pretty much as he likes. Many of the individuals who spoke to us felt there should be a consultation process whereby the Minister would have to consult with labour and with management with respect to this whole process for older workers.

Another flaw is that the benefits payable under this legislation are higher than welfare but lower than unemployment insurance. It is somewhere between unemployment insurance benefits and welfare benefits. This means that while it will be better to receive assistance under this Bill than under provincial welfare schemes, it will be less than some people would receive under unemployment insurance. There are flaws in the Bill. As a matter of fact, there is very little in the Bill. The Bill is only two pages. Most of the program that relates to the administration of the Bill, the criteria and so on, are in directives which are internal in the Department. We have the directives and we are able to read them but they are not in the Bill. This is another flaw.

The Government itself has put a similar provision in other legislation which is brought before Parliament. This Conservative Government has used that type of clause before, that legislation should be reviewed after three years or after five years. When we were in power, we did it with the Freedom of Information legislation and the Privacy legislation. We did it at that time at the request of the Conservative Party. They had proposed it in the House, such as we are doing tonight and we agreed to it. That legislation was subject to review. A parliamentary committee studied it and made a report on improvements.

I would urge the Minister of Labour to take this proposed amendment seriously. It does not change the legislation as such now, but it will require that the legislation be reviewed in three years' time by a designated parliamentary committee. The parliamentary committee can propose improvements to the law at that time on the basis of three years' experience. I have already mentioned some of the flaws in the Bill.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I too support in principle the amendment that is proposed, which basically renders this legislation reviewable after three years. It seems to me that it is a good move to review the purpose and effect of this particular legislation and the impact it has in Canada generally.

Having said that, I would like to indicate my very serious concerns with respect to the fundamental problem that Bill C-8 purports to address. That fundamental problem, Mr. Speaker, is one that you, I and every Member of the House of Commons encounters almost on a daily basis in our constituencies. That is the older workers who find themselves unemployed through no reason of their own.

We know all too often major plants and minor employers for economic reasons, whether it is because of free trade or because of other economic considerations, decide to close their plants. The closure of a plant or the closure of a place of employment has brutal effects on workers, especially those workers who are older. This particular Bill deals with workers who are between the ages of 55 and 65.

Regardless of what age one may be, the impact of losing a job is very severe and especially when the person losing his or her job is the major breadwinner in the family. Having said that, the problem is even more acute when we are dealing with older workers. As their Member of Parliament, I have older workers calling me in desperation looking for some type of employment. They find themselves somewhat short of 60 years of age when they would qualify for a reduced Canada Pension Plan, or several years away from Old Age Security. The impact is devastating on a family where at one moment there is an income and the next moment there is not.

Bill C–8 tries to address that particular problem and although the Bill ought to be supported, especially in view of the great number of applicants—I understand there are 636 applicant groups that apply for benefits under this legislation—but this is not the answer. It is simply ad hoc, it is piecemeal and it is also discriminatory. If you are 54 years of age, you do not qualify. What is the difference between a 54 year old worker with three or four children, a mortgage to pay and other expenses to meet and a 55 year old worker with four children, a mortgage to pay and expenses to meet? What is the difference between the two when they lose their jobs? There isn't any.

Unfortunately the Government has arbitrarily chosen age 55 as being the operative age after which benefits may be payable under this legislation. That is a fundamental flaw in the legislation in that it only applies to older workers beyond the age of 55.

What the Government of Canada ought to be looking at is not an amendment to the Department of Labour Act, Bill C–8—here it is 8.20 p.m., a few weeks before we are adjourning to fulfil a commitment made by the Government in 1986—but it ought to be addressing the fundamental problem in a serious and comprehensive way. What I am speaking of is a form of guaranteed annual income or an income supplement program available to all Canadians. There comes a time when we have to talk about the ultimate social program. In Canada today we have a myriad of programs, whether it is at the provincial, municipal or federal level. There are welfare programs, unemployment insurance, Canada Pension Plan, mothers' allowance, all kinds of ways in which the Government tries to assist those in need. At some point in the future the Government will have to realize that each and every Canadian, regardless of where he or she lives, regardless of being male or female, whether he or she is 65 years or 25 years of age, people are all entitled to a certain minimum standard of living. That is the least we can do as a modern, prosperous and civilized nation.

I see that not only my colleagues in the Liberal Party are supportive of a comprehensive review of all welfare systems in Canada—the beginning of a discussion of a guaranteed annual income program in Canada—but I note the Minister himself and other Ministers of the Crown nodding in agreement. Indeed, various backbenchers agree as well. I would hope that all those who agree will urge the Minister, the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to give serious consideration to addressing the root problem that this Bill purports to address.

I note that I am permitted to speak on the motion and I understand that third reading will follow when my beloved colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), the deputy whip, will speak. Not so long ago he was not a member of management. Now he is and he is telling me to speed up. I will conclude by saying—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: I see there is considerable support for me to continue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: My colleagues are so appreciative of my submissions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief. Let me say that the Hon. Member who just spoke and I do not have the same understanding of the applause that went on while he was speaking. I gather it was more an encouragement to put an end to his speech than to what he was saying.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Corbeil: I think that this Bill is a tribute to both my predecessors, the Hon. Member from Vaudreuil, the Hon. Member from Kindersley—Lloydminster and the officers of the Department of Labour, who have put together a new program that is a monument of flexibility that will fill the need that is so important for the older worker.

The program is flexible and will also provide the necessary help for older workers. This is a joint federal–provincial program and it would be in keeping with the consultative nature of this program to review activities with the provinces. Moreover, Members of Parliament have the opportunity annually to examine the activities under the Department of Labour Act through their annual review of Labour Canada's Estimates. Also, a committee has been put together consisting of representatives from the provincial Governments, the federal Government, labour and employers to make sure the program fits the needs for which it was designed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 4 negatived.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, there have been further consultations among all Parties in the House of Commons and I think if you were to seek unanimous consent you may find that the House is prepared to vote on Motion No. 1.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. Proud).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 1 negatived.

Mr. Corbeil moved that the Bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Corbeil moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, in my share of time this evening on these two motions and on the motions I put forward I want to say that this Bill is going to pass. We have said throughout the hearings that people have been waiting for this legislation. We are not totally satisfied and as my colleagues have said, there are other ways to look more in depth at these social programs. I hope that many of our concerns about who will qualify, about what is a major lay-off, concerns I have put forward today, in committee and at second reading stage, will be addressed. I look forward to seeing the results of this Bill as it becomes law.

• (2030)

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, during the debate in the House over the last three or four days, I have kept hearing references to the Budget made by government Members. Government Members are claiming that a great deal less is really a lot more, but that in the odd case where there is more government control it is really less.

In the final analysis the program for older workers is the same. In 1985 under the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program, which I grant did not have as wide an application as POWA, more people were covered. They were covered at higher levels and they received more money.

There is somewhere in the neighbourhood of 73,000 people who are in the age group of 55 to 64. The Program for Older Workers, under the best of circumstances, cannot cover more than 10 per cent of those people who may be potentially affected by becoming unemployed at that age. That is one of our major concerns. What will happen to that 90 per cent of people who will potentially find themselves out of work with no possibility whatsoever of being able to avail themselves of the Program for Older Workers?

It is true that the sooner this Bill gets passed, the better, but it is also true that there are many older workers who anticipate benefiting from this program who will not. They will not benefit from it because they will find themselves in what is identifiably a major lay-off which, under the terms of this program, terms that are certainly vague enough, will not be a lay-off that is deemed to be severe enough. Therefore, they will be excluded from receiving the benefits of this program.

This Bill will be implemented. We in the New Democratic Party will not vote against it. However, we would ask government Members to look at it again. I cannot for the life of me understand why they would object to having this program reviewed after three years. If it will be as good as they say it will be, I would think that they would welcome the initiative of the Hon. Member from Prince Edward Island who moved the motion that there be a review after three years.

The legislation is fraught with many problems. It does not go far enough. However, some people will be helped, though not enough. Let us help those who need the help.

[Translation]

Mr. Corbeil: Mr. Speaker, this amendment would provide some very necessary and useful assistance for older workers who have lost their jobs as a result of major and permanent lay-offs and have no prospects of re-entering the labour market. These workers are some of the most deserving people in this country.

[English]

In third reading stage of this Bill I would like to thank the members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party for the constructive perspectives they offered during the hearings of the legislative committee and for their co-operation in ensuring the speedy passage of this brief legislative amendment to the Department of Labour Act.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I wish to make one or two other points with respect to Bill C-8, a Bill which purports to address the problem of unemployed older workers.

First, the Bill does not go far enough. It is somewhat discriminatory in that it applies to a certain group of older workers, those between the ages of 55 and 65. I hope the Minister has sought and received the advice of law officers of the Crown to determine whether this legislation complies with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. As the Minister knows, under Section 15 of the Charter, it is prohibited to discriminate based on age.

As I indicated earlier, this Bill does discriminate. It discriminates in a positive way in that it provides benefits to a certain group of people. However, it discriminates in a negative way against those who are not between the ages of 55 and 65.

People who are 54 years of age will be discriminated against by this legislation. In my respectful submission, the Bill is contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. However, the Minister nodded when I asked him if he received the advice of lawyers on that point.

A general point has been made by a number of my colleagues on several occasions with respect to the arbitrary age at which the Government of Canada tells workers that they must retire or become eligible for benefits. I am speaking of two programs in particular. Under the Canada Pension Plan, people become eligible for reduced pensions at the age of 60 and they become eligible for full pensions at the age of 65. With respect to the Old Age Security Program, a program which up until recently was open to all Canadians but for which the Government has now introduced a claw-back, workers who turn 65 years of age become eligible.

There is nothing magical about turning 60 years of age or 65 years of age. At some point in the past a Government in its wisdom decided that that was the age when people had to consider themselves old, when it was time to be removed from the workforce. I would ask that parliamentarians, particularly the Minister and government Members, give serious thought to those arbitrary ages which were selected for the Old Age Security and the Canada Pension Plan.

The age of 65 is not a magical age. There are workers who are 55 and wish to retire for health reasons or other reasons. Surely, in a modern, prosperous, affluent country like Canada, we can find the resources to permit older workers who wish to retire the opportunity to do so with a pension from the Government of Canada, keeping in mind, of course, that when an older worker removes himself or herself from the workforce, whether voluntarily or involuntarily, a position opens up for another worker. Those are the other two points I wish to make for the record, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN TRANSPORTATION ACCIDENT INVESTIGATION AND SAFETY BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (for the Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C–2, an Act to establish the Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express to the members of the Standing Committee on Transport my appreciation of their excellent spirit of co–operation in the study of the Bill. As I look around at the audience tonight, I see several members of the Transport Committee present. On behalf of the Minister, I wish to thank them for their co–operation.

Political partisanship was set aside, and a real spirit of co–operation was demonstrated by all. I wish to thank all members of the Standing Committee for that.

The key point is that the Bill which emerged is much better legislation. Co–operation in the pursuit of improvements has shown its value in the end product. For this, members of the Standing Committee can be justifiably proud.

Obviously we did not in the end satisfy everyone completely. I do not believe that this is ever possible, and some ideas for changes to the Bill could not work without totally changing the concept of the proposed Bill.

I am reminded of one definition of a camel: a camel is a horse designed by a committee. The members of the Standing Committee avoided that pitfall. Instead, they took a reasonably good work horse and made it into something closer to a thoroughbred.

Among the amendments to the Bill, the addition of oil and gas pipelines to the board's jurisdiction deserves mention. Those pipelines were not initially included in the Bill, because they have not traditionally fallen within the scope of transportation, the subject of this Bill.

Members of the Standing Committee noted, however, that there exists a perceived potential for conflict of interest when the regulators of oil and gas pipelines are also the accident investigators. It is therefore only logical that accidents involving oil and gas pipelines, as well as pipelines carrying other commodities, be investigated by an independent board.

The object of the board was also expanded by amendments. The Bill now provides that the board may pursue its over–all objective of improving transportation safety by conducting special studies and investigations on matters pertaining to transportation safety.

In line with this, the board's objective of improving transportation safety was reinforced by adding the word "safety" to its title. It will be known officially as the Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board.

The Government has agreed with these changes. However, I would like to add one point of clarification. The board is responsible for conducting accident investigations and studies, and it is accountable for the quality of its recommendations to improve transportation safety.

The responsibility for the safety of the transportation system itself rests with the Minister of Transport. The Minister is accountable to Parliament and to the people of Canada for transportation safety. I know that the new board, in its operation, will understand and respect the role and responsibilities of the Minister, as I know the Minister will understand and respect the role of the board.

Witnesses before the committee expressed a number of concerns that were dealt with by amendment. Many interested parties that would be affected by the board's work, for example the railway companies, sought assurances that they would be consulted on the regulations and policies of the board.

The Bill was amended to confirm that regulations will be pre–published for 90 days in The Canada Gazette. Another amendment requires the board to make public its policies regarding which accidents to investigate and how to conduct investigations. This guarantees that any interested party can have easy access to these policies and comment on them.

I expect that the board will consult with interested parties on the development of those policies in any event. Consultations will ensure that the policies are fair, reasonable, and workable. Consultation also recognizes the interest and responsibility for transportation safety shared by interested parties, especially carriers and their employees.

Representatives of the rail and marine industries also expressed some concern that the investigators' power to quarantine an accident site would unduly interrupt essential transportation services. The first and foremost priority of the board must be to find out what caused the accident in order to improve safety in the future. Without compromising this principle, it is possible for the investigators to have regard to the other objectives of the national transportation policy, namely, efficient and effective operation. The Bill was therefore amended to instruct the investigators to have regard to the desirability of minimizing the disruption to transportation service.

Thus, essential transportation services will be resumed as soon as practicable after an accident, for example, by replacing damaged rails so that trains may again pass through the accident site or by allowing a ship to continue its voyage as soon as possible.

Representatives of labour asked that the privilege accorded to air traffic control recordings be extended to include traffic control recordings in the rail and marine modes of transportation. All members of the Standing Committee agreed, and the appropriate amendment was made.

These amendments and a number of others adopted by the standing committee have improved Bill C–2. The Bill represents a major step toward maintaining the safety of our transportation system. It is the final piece in a series of safety related legislative initiatives in the past several years.

I would therefore like to reiterate my appreciation for the co–operative spirit shown by Members from all sides of this House in studying and debating the provisions of the Bill. I hope that they will now support it on third reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Crosby): The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants has a point that he wished to raise.

Mr. Nowlan: I wish to endorse what was stated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. I do not wish to interrupt the flow of debate on Bill C–2, but as chairman of the committee to which the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary referred, in my relatively brief experience as chairman of the Transport Committee, and in my longer experience as a member of the Transport Committee both in opposition and in government, I have never seen a Bill that has moved through a committee in a non–ideological and more positive way and with the assistance of Members from all sides. I wish we could have had a video of how the Bill worked through the committee as an example for other committees on other Bills that do not have partisan involvement as to what can be done.

In conclusion, I wish to compliment the Vice–Chairman, the Hon. Member for St. Maurice, the other members of the committee, and my friend, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon. I commend all members. In the McGrath spirit of reform of committees there are many things some Members still wonder about.

• (2050)

In terms of the example presented in Bill C–2, I want to compliment all Members from all sides of the House. I have never participated in any committee on any Bill on which there has been a healthier and more constructive consideration by more intelligent and competent Members from all sides of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Crosby): I am sure that Hon. Members will appreciate those good words and govern themselves accordingly.

I now recognize the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I concur with what the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary just said and my friend and colleague who is the Chairman on the Standing Committee on Transport just said. It was very enjoyable working through the process of this legislation. It was made enjoyable because of the people who showed such dedication in preparing themselves for the committee meetings. I thank them very much for the co–operation that they showed to the Members on this side of the House.

Having said that, there are some issues to which we still take exception. I will very briefly touch on those tonight. In our judgment we feel that the amendments which we proposed to this legislation should have been entertained with perhaps a little more seriousness. We wish even today, as the Bill is in its final stages in the House, that these amendments would have formed part of the legislation.

I might add that the proof of that will come to light to those of us who sometimes practise law when we go to our law libraries at different times and pick up statute citators on this particular legislation. We will look at the legislation and see those areas of the Bill that may have been adjudicated by the courts in this land for interpretation. In summarizing those issues time will tell whether the legislation is in fact operative or whether we should have spent more time on it.

It is interesting to note that this Bill was introduced and read the first time on April 7. It was then debated at second reading stage on April 17 and April 18 and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport on April 18.

After hearing from 45 witnesses the committee reported the Bill to the House, with amendments, on June 8. As I mentioned, we heard from over 45 witnesses, most of whom had many valuable comments, observations, and suggested amendments to contribute to the committee's analysis of the Bill. Yet, despite this wealth of evidence, we were unable to weigh it effectively. We were not able to discern which witnesses presented the most salient, cogent and prudent evidence or the best recommendations.

Within 24 hours of hearing the final witnesses the committee began its clause by clause consideration of the Bill. It was not possible to reflect on the evidence presented and assess which witnesses on balance presented the strongest evidence. Instead, we had to give a cursory review of statements and proposed amendments.

One would have thought that given the importance and implications of this Bill that the Government would have realized and appreciated the merits of giving this legislation more thoughtful consideration, something which could only have been achieved with less stringent time constraints. If the Government were adamant about having this legislation passed before June 30, why was the House convened on April 3? Moreover, why was the Government so intent on passing this legislation before June 30?

As you know full well, Mr. Speaker, Justice Estey is currently conducting a judicial review based on the Gander incident looking only at the four corners of the evidence. Does it not make good sense to postpone the passage of this Bill until the Minister receives a report and the Standing Committee on Transport is given the opportunity to examine the findings and the recommendations, if any, stemming from it?

Let us not be fooled, the Gander crash was most instrumental in prompting the drafting of Bill C–142 which died on the Order Paper in the last session of Parliament and which now forms Bill C–2, the legislation presently before us.

Granted, we are creating a multi–modal board which, along with aviation, will be responsible for investigating rail, marine, and commodity pipeline accidents. However, if it were not for the differing opinions and personality conflicts which made the Canadian Aviation Safety Board inoperative following the Gander crash, I doubt that the Government would have proceeded with such urgency to create this multi–modal board.

In essence, this legislation permits the Government to put an end to the dissension and conflicts which were making the Canadian Aviation Safety Board inoperative and drew greater attention to the controversies surrounding the Board than those surrounding the Gander crash.

Replacing the Canadian Aviation Safety Board with this legislation effectively permits the Government to get rid of those persons who were trying to bring the public's attention to some of the irregularities in aviation accident investigation in Canada.

In fact, these individuals have already received their notice. Would it not make good sense to wait to see if the Estey review sheds any light on why so much dissension surrounded the accident investigation assessment process? We can learn from this, correct our mistakes, and not allow them to happen again.

Many have said that it was personality conflicts which prompted the dissension. How many Canadians do you know, Mr. Speaker, who would be willing to put a $80,000 a year job on the line simply because they did not like someone else? These individuals did what they did as a matter of principle. I compliment those who were the dissenters on the Gander crash. They saw irregularities. They reported them, and now they are being silenced.

If there indeed were irregularities with the investigation of the Gander crash, then this legislation should not proceed. We will not know this until Mr. Justice Estey submits his report which is anticipated in another two weeks. Only then will we be in the position to proceed with the legislation that holds so much importance for accident investigation in our country.

Based on the evidence submitted to it, the committee concluded that the problem area lies more in the realm of the structure and the methodology of accident investigation rather than the number of board members or the powers of the chairman, although the latter are significant. Difficulties with the Gander crash point to problems with how the accident was investigated and how those investigators brought their findings and conclusions to the Canadian Aviation Safety Board for the consideration of the board members and the board panel.

Yet, in dealing with the legislation before us today, there was never an opportunity to examine the regulations of accident investigation. These, I would pose, were the root of most of the difficulties incurred by the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, not personality conflicts. If it were simply a matter of problems with the personnel, replacing them would have resolved any difficulties. While they are being replaced by the current legislation there is no guarantee that the same problems will not be revisited by this new legislation that will be passed because the regulations dictating the investigative assessment process have not been examined.

On May 26 I attended the non-evidentiary hearings of the Dryden crash inquiry in Toronto. Justice Moshansky was appointed commissioner on that investigation. He will be examining as part of the scope of his authority the structure and methodology of accident investigation in Canada, along with determining the cause of the Dryden crash.

As I mentioned earlier, given the importance of such an examination, our Party moved an amendment to Clause 63, which was approved in committee, which will see that this legislation, that which is before us today, will undergo a comprehensive review in January 1993. I am pleased to say that this will allow whatever findings and recommendations which come out of the Dryden inquiry to be considered as they relate specifically to the legislation before us. I would also assume from that amendment that we will be able at that time to look at the recommendations, if any, from the Estey inquiry, and any recommendations which should come out of that inquiry will also be incorporated into the legislation.

I am disappointed in certain areas of this legislation. We proposed a number of recommendations and amendments that we thought were substantial, including the number of members on the board that would make up the multi-modal board. We are still convinced that one of the real problems on the previous board, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, was the lack of delineation between the powers of the chairman and the powers of the board.

Try as much as we did in this new legislation to delineate the powers of the chairman and the powers of the board, we were unsuccessful in doing so. The question of confidentiality presented us with some problems. We discussed confidentiality in the previous legislation dealing with the Department of Labour Act amendment.

We have great respect for the institution of the collective agreement. We on this side of the House were concerned that the collective agreement was being used in the investigative process. We believe that the confidential statements made between the employer and the employee should remain confidential. If the investigators want any other source of information, they should take their own course rather than rely on those statements given pursuant to a particular clause in the collective agreement. It is our view that the sanctity of the collective agreement in our society should not be touched, for whatever reason or purpose.

We found it difficult to accept another clause. It concerned the acceptability of evidence after it was presented. According to the processes that are outlined and still in this section of the Act, it appears that the reverse onus is one that my colleagues on this side of the House feel even today would not stand the test of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That causes us some concern because, as my colleague stated earlier in the debate, we all try for the benefit of all Canadians to bring in the most operative piece of legislation to look into the investigation process within our country.

With those remarks, I am sure my colleague is happy that I will not go into any more detail. We compliment all members of the committee who worked on this legislation. It was an interesting process. Time will tell whether we were successful in the committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Crosby): I should clarify for the purposes of all Hon. Members that I recognized the Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) on a point of order, and that the Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi) had unlimited time. I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) on debate.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in third reading of Bill C–2, an Act to establish the Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board. Like the chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport, the Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan), my experience as what turns out to be one of the most senior members of the Transport Committee leads me to believe that this was a very good start for the work of the Transport Committee. We had a Bill that was non–partisan in nature. We all agreed with the intent of the Bill to provide a mechanism to investigate accidents in transportation modes.

There were some disagreements, not just between caucuses but within caucuses in terms of the final substance of that Bill. We must recognize that part of the reason we were able to do that was because of the spirit in which the Government, particularly the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin) and the Parliamentary Secretary came to the committee ready to listen and learn. They were not locked into the existing wording of the Bill.

As with many other Bills, we all like to think that we are planting seeds by asking specific questions and raising particular points. First, we hope we are indicating an interest, and second, hopefully, we are trying to pull from the witnesses the ammunition necessary to make changes that are appropriate to the legislation.

Of the total amendments that were moved and accepted, 19 of those were authored by Government Members. One amendment authored by a Government Member failed, and I will deal with that later. However, it was an indication that the Government was prepared to listen, at least in those areas.

I agree with the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi) that there were areas in which the Government did not listen, even when it was clear some of its own Members supported a point of view different from that of the Government.

We attempted to make some changes and we lost a particular vote on a tie. I hoped the Government would return with a recommendation at this point to make the change dealing with the size of the board, but that did not happen. That is unfortunate. Time will tell whether this will be an appropriate number for the board.

I want to deal now with some of the specifics of the Bill. I spent a lot of time dealing with the issue, both as it related to the Bill and as transportation critic for my caucus. I am pleased that my colleague from Alberta, our energy critic, is in the House because one of the key changes we made was to ensure the purity of the legislation.

The basis of the legislation was that we separate the people who regulate a transportation mode from the people who investigate any accidents. Initially, Bill C–2 included an exemption for pipelines covered under the National Energy Board Act. We began to wonder why and considered that to be very inconsistent with the spirit of the legislation. We moved to change that, and an amendment I put forward was accepted by the committee, in effect by the Government, because it did not in any way attempt to block that change. That is a very important decision that was made not by the Government but by a committee of this Parliament.

The second major change, which deals less directly with the Bill than with all of Parliament, was an amendment I moved that changed the Bill in 22 different places. It is the first time in Canadian law that this has occurred. It is the first time in British Commonwealth law that instead of a chairman of the board we now have a chairperson.

It is to the credit of the Transport Committee which decided to accept that recommendation. I encourage all other committees, as they deal with legislation, to establish or amend boards to change the terminology to reflect the reality of the 1980s and 1990s.

Mr. Speaker, let me go through a couple of the other changes that were made because they are important. No longer does the new Board report to the Minister of Transport. Part of the problem that we found within the Canadian Aviation Safety Board was the perception of conflict of interest. After a lot of thought and bouncing around of ideas as to whether it should be the Minister of Justice, the Speaker of the House of Commons or the President of the Queen's Privy Council, the committee opted to send it to an individual, a Minister who does not have any hands-on responsibility for the operation of transportation, but who is a Member of Cabinet and who can fight for the Board on behalf of the Board for necessary funds in person-years to allow them to do their job. But more importantly, it separates transport from the Investigation Board. That is extremely important because the public has to feel confident that the Board will tell it like it is as opposed to trying to water it down or hide it away; very clearly a separation of powers.

The other change, and this is one of those other examples where there were differences of opinion on the committee, and in fact my colleague and good friend, the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin) and I disagreed on this particular one. That was over the name of the agency. It is now called the Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board. We did not fight about it, but I voted against it because as the Parliamentary Assistant stated very clearly, it is the Minister of Transport and the Department of Transport that is responsible for safety in this country, safety of air, rail, marine and pipelines.

By putting the term safety into the Accident Investigation Board, we may in fact be misleading the people of Canada to think that this agency is the one responsible for it. It will have the responsibility for investigating accidents and making recommendations to the Minister of Transport, and anybody else for that matter, but it is up to those other bodies to make the decision as to whether those changes will be made. Ultimately, the responsibility is with the Government. We differed on that, but so be it. That was the nature of the debate that we had in committee where Members of the Government caucus differed from time to time. I cannot remember whether any Members of the Liberal caucus split on any particular motions, but certainly the option was there. It was very appropriate that we approach it that way.

One of the other areas that we worked on, and it goes back to part of the problem with the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, and that was the personality conflict. There were members of that Board who did not see eye to eye but who were all appointed by the Government of the day, but with no public process, no mechanism to say to the aviation industry that it would have two people on the Board and asking who it would it like to propose. The same thing for marine and for rail. My colleague and I put forward a motion. If it had been accepted, it would have provided for the establishment of a selection committee for each mode. Then we would get people who had the confidence of the transportation areas they would be investigating.

I alluded to this earlier. We wanted to change the number of members on the Board from five to seven because we thought that unfortunately there was more than enough work in Canada to investigate all of these modes of travel and that seven people would be more appropriate. It was lost on a tie vote with the chairman voting for the status quo as is his responsibility. We also attempted to put in place some temporary members so that from time to time, when the workload became too heavy, the Minister could pull in some additional people for the Board to help out.

We also made a number of other changes throughout the Bill, but in a couple of key areas there was a lot of concern expressed. Again, it was over the conflict within CASB in terms of who was to give the chairperson of the Board the power. Should it come directly by legislation or should it be passed on from the Board itself to the chairman? In other words, the five-member Board collectively would decide what the powers of the chairperson would be. The Government Members opted to maintain the existing structure, which is that through legislation the powers are given to the Chair. The reason that we wanted to make it a conscious decision is that if there are problems in the future with a new Board, if we do get fundamental splits, that at the very least we know that the Government of the day had a chance to change it so the power was collective rather than singular, and they would have to accept the responsibility.

The other thing that we tried to do in that same mode was to make sure that the directors of investigation were appointed by the Board rather than the chairperson. Again, we think it is part of the ownership that the Board has to feel good about the decisions and the investigation that is being conducted on their behalf.

Another amendment was to change the reporting system so that the reports would come directly to Parliament rather than going through the Minister and without the necessity for the Minister to have time to respond. A number of other amendments were put forward. We had a lot of discussion and by no means was there a consistent view in terms of whether or not there should be draft reports.

For those of you who are not aware of what the Act says, it provides that a draft report from the Board shall go to Ministers and to interested parties. They have a period of time in which they can respond and point out technical errors. It does not include the recommendations. A number of people argued that there could again be the perception of conflict of interest by allowing the Minister of Transport or a pilots' association or an aircraft company to come back to the Board and get them to change the report. Therefore, we tried at first to delete that reference so that the Board would create a final report and it would become public. That failed. So then we attempted to, at the very least, have appended to the report a list of the changes that were made and why they were made and who they were requested by or, if they were not changed, the fact that they were requested. Everything was above board once again with people feeling confident in what the Board was doing.

In addition to the draft report, there is an interim report that can be requested by any Minister responsible for a department having a direct interest in the subject matter of the investigation; primarily the Minister of Transport, but it could be the Minister of National Defence. Perhaps it could even be the Minister of the Environment. But they can request an interim report when they feel it is warranted because of lapse of time and they know the investigation has gone to a certain point. We wanted to make sure that any observers would also have the opportunity to get that report. It was decided that that did not make sense.

The other thing we wanted to do was to build in an appeal mechanism for when the Board came down with its report, with its recommendations.If a particular group feels that it is not sufficient, or they are not happy with the work that was done—perhaps as was suggested with Gander that they did not look at certain things—currently there is no way formally that they can request the matter to be re-opened. The Board, in its own wisdom, if it gets new evidence, can re-open it, but what we had proposed was a recommendation that they could get in touch with the Minister who in turn would automatically request the Board to re-examine it. So there would be at least a mechanism for their participation once again, just so there would be no way that it could be left hanging.

One of the key amendments that was accepted—in fact the final version was a draft put forward by the Government—was to ensure that communications in all modes of traffic would be treated the same. Initially, the Bill dealt with air traffic control or the air mode, but it was not as concise in terms of rail and marine. So we have changed the Bill to ensure that any communications, whether from the cab of a locomotive or from a vessel to the Coast Guard, are protected under this Act.

One of the unusual things that we did in terms of the railway mode was that we had both the railway companies and the railway unions, two groups that have tended not to see eye to eye on very much, come to us with a concern about the use of the investigators' reports of the statements taken by the Board investigators. They were worried that those could be used in disciplinary hearings between the company and the employee. They agreed that they should not be used, that they should remain confidential. The committee and the Government agreed with that change.

Many other amendments were put forward. I think the key is that we do have a better Bill. It is considerably better than what we started with. We learned a lot. Perhaps in three or four years when we get to the review process I and my colleague, the Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin), will once again say "I told you so" as we find that something we had tried to do on Bill C-2, which was not accepted, actually would have made things better. However, that is the process we go through.

The only negative concern I have is that we did rush things a bit too much. We had a problem with regard to preparation of amendments because we wanted to find out what the Government was prepared to do in order that we would not duplicate effort. Because of that, some of the amendments we submitted were not translated into one of the official languages. That caused a delay and I can say in retrospect that we probably should have built that into the process to ensure that everything was presented to the committee at the same time and in the same way.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, as we did at second reading we will be supporting third reading of this Bill. It is a good day for transportation. I have not dealt with the issue of highway transport but I am sure my colleague will because it is an area of great interest to him. I look forward to seeing the new Board in place. I would encourage the Government to look carefully at who it appoints to this Board to ensure that it has the best possible people available and that they be appointed in a spirit of non-partisanship rather than using it as a resting place for tired old political war-horses. We need some good aviation, marine and rail individuals on this Board to take a good hard look at accident investigations in this country. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleagues on the Transport Committee for all their hard work.

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, we have before us today government Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board. At the outset there was some resistance by some Members of the esteemed Standing Committee on Transport during clause-by-clause consideration of the Board to not incorporate the word "safety" in the title of the Act. However, through the insistence of opposition Members we directed the Government's attention to the mandate of the Board, which is found in Clause 7, that is, that "the object of the Board is to advance transportation safety". The Government eventually saw the wisdom of our suggestion and, despite the committee chairman's observation that the title, in his words, "lacked sex appeal" or something very close to that, the TAIB or Transportation Accident Investigation Board was amended to include the word "safety".

I want to make it clear that I do not disagree with the intention of this Bill. In addition to aviation occurrences, the new Board will consolidate and be responsible for investigating occurrences in the modes of rail, marine, and pipelines transportation.

It must be noted that Bill C-2, when enacted, will replace CASB, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. That was a good idea. CASB did its job, conducting close to 700 investigations a year. It gained a solid reputation in aviation circles around the world. However, a grievous split developed in a most controversial case, Canada's worst air disaster, the crash of an Arrow Air chartered DC-8 at Gander, Newfoundland, in December, 1985, which claimed the lives of 248 U.S. soldiers and eight crew members.

Enter CASB. Four of nine board members, all of them intelligent, capable and knowledgeable, with full credentials, disagreed with the report of the Board which concluded that a thin layer of ice on the planes' wings was responsible for the crash. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) endorsed the report which then prompted the four dissenting members to call for public inquiries, not only into the controversial finding that icing caused Canada's worst air disaster, but into air traffic control problems as well.

In light of this and other problems, including the resignation of the Assistant Deputy Minister in charge of Canadian Aviation Safety, who resigned in the midst of controversy over the crash at Gander and the Air Ontario crash at Dryden, the Minister of Transport, instead of attempting to rectify problems that existed within CASB, chose to create a new board, virtually sweeping under the rug any outstanding questions in relation to Gander, Dryden and other problems the Government failed to deal with immediately in air transportation.

So we come to Bill C-2. While there are still many unanswered questions, are we guaranteed that this new Board will address them? Will Canadians ever get any answers? Although multi-modal in design, the new Board is entrusted with responsibilities and authority similar to those of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. Canadians are no more assured of increased safety now than they were in the past. There is nothing in Bill C-2 to prevent a repeat of the circumstances which led to the end of CASB.

What incredibly convenient timing, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transport appoints an eminent outside authority, Mr. Justice Willard Estey, to review the Gander accident investigation and appoints Mr. Justice Virgil Moshansky to conduct an inquiry into the Dryden accident. However, before he is prepared to hear the reports from Estey or Moshansky, important information by the way which could be incorporated into this legislation, we find ourselves here today on a strict government timetable pushing Bill C-2 through the House of Commons.

On the subject of power, it was the contention of many witnesses who appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport that too much power will be handed to the chairman of the multi-modal board. Under Bill C-2 the chairman will have the power to hire and fire investigators, all the financial power, power to set the agenda, and the power to decide what Board members will do what work; all this power in the hands of a single individual. Let us not perpetuate the problems that existed under CASB where the powers were vested in one individual rather than in the Board as a whole. The chairman must be responsible to the Board.

In the overall scheme of things, the public lost its confidence in CASB because a group of Board members had to move out from under the umbrella of the Safety Board in order to publish their own minority report because a powerful chairman attempted to silence them. We can learn from this, Mr. Speaker. The very essence of democracy means to consider many points of view. We welcome and in fact look toward the divergence of opinion in order to judge effectively. Dissent is healthy. This House is a good example of that, Mr. Speaker. The multi-modal Board must make room for dissenting points of view and accept the variety of opinion. It all works toward ensuring that transportation, whether by air, rail, marine or pipeline, is as safe as it can be for all Canadians. That is the ultimate goal.

The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan), the chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport, is, I must say, a modest man. He speaks of co-operation and the spirit of constructive, non-partisan discussions which led us to this Bill. Well, aside from the cigar smoke, our effectiveness was fresh in its approach and a model for other committees to follow, due in large part, I might admit, to the Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants.

I look forward to the new challenges which will come before the Transport Committee. I look forward to the nature of the positive co-operation we received from the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin), as well as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) himself. These of course are precedents which must not be forgotten.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, I have been wooed, coaxed, pleaded with, and begged with, to not say anything, or asked how quick could I be? I thought to myself, on legislation which I agree with in principle, there has to be something wrong especially if it is brought forward by the Government.

Mr. Speaker, since you and I are getting close to our twenty-first birthday, and I wish we both looked it and felt it, however, I do want to say on this matter that it is something that for seven Parliaments that I have had occasion to get up and speak about, fight about and argue about, and that is the whole issue of safety in transportation. In my years on the railroad, and my father was a railroader, I had some experience on the issue of transportation accidents. In fact, in my years in the railway as a telegraph operator and a station agent, I had to be at the scene of a mishap. There was one in particular which was particularly serious, two passenger trains. There were three people killed and 27 injured in conditions and circumstances that not only all the employees but the officers of the company knew there were some fundamental errors in the operations of the system. I remember that it was about 28 below zero, which I guess is about 20 below Celsius. I was copying train orders on the side of a telegraph pole when we arrived at the scene of the accident. I remember helping pick up some bodies and luggage out of the snow. I remember—

Mr. Flis: On a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park.

Accident Investigation

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I did get up wanting to debate the Bill but I think you recognized the Hon. Member prior to me because he wanted to make a statement or ask a question. I would like clarification. Is he asking a question or is he debating?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): He is on debate.

Mr. Flis: On debate. I thought you were recognizing me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No. There were two Liberals prior to you and there is now the NDP. This is debate.

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, so that we can listen to the Hon. Member, I was hoping that you could draw the attention of this little hot stove league here in the House to the fact that they could go behind the curtain and do their business so that we can hear the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. If you would just depart behind the curtain, please. The Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden has the floor.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Parkdale–High Park (Mr. Flis)is what is called a recidivist. Like a reformed sinner or a born again Christian, he has not learned any better the second time in this place.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying before I was so rudely interrupted that I have been there on the ground and I know the terrible experience and feeling when you go through something like that. I have also been through the experience of being summoned to a coroner's inquest. The railway lawyers and the Crown prosecutor took statements from us, interviewed us and cross–examined us on a witness stand.

I will never forget the instructions from the CPR lawyer from Montreal. This was in Calgary in the winter of, would you believe, Mr. Speaker, 1949–50. I will never forget his instructions to us. "Don't volunteer any information they didn't ask you for". It is a good instruction if you have a half decent lawyer. Do not volunteer any information.

Yet when I got that instruction, and I say to my good friend, the chairman of the Transport Committee, I wondered what would happen if I said some things which needed to be said. Then I realized if I did, I would be out of a job. I kind of liked the job. I worked hard at it and I was very conscientious about it. It was one of the reasons, I guess from my own background, why I was so concerned about Clause 24, for example.

I was concerned about statements taken from employees, and who they are taken by and what circumstances they are under because I have been there, damn it. I guess I kind of resented the expertise from legal eagles from the Department of Transport and some of the highly paid consultants and legal eagles who were there on behalf of a few of the witnesses we had. They have never had to do it.

It was the unanimous consensus of the committee in the first five minutes that this was the kind of legislation which we all wanted. One of the concerns we had was that this board must not only be independent but is seen to be. That was the problem which I and some of my colleagues had with Clause 24. I was very proud of the Railway Brotherhood which said they do not want any part of being sent a copy of the draft of the final report to comment on.

The Board should make its report without any comment from anybody. Once it has seen the evidence and heard from its investigators and once it has cross–examined witnesses and heard from the employer, the airline or railway, and have heard all the evidence, it makes its report. Every observer and participant in the hearings will have had his chance to have his say.

Once the Board has heard all the evidence, it makes a report and submits it to the Minister as specified in the Bill. Then if somebody disagrees with the findings of the Board, disagrees with evidence submitted by an investigator or any witness, he can go to the Minister and say: "We would like you to review the evidence". It is in the Bill. But you cannot have an airline, railroad, steamship company, a pipeline company, the Minister or any other Minister who has a direct interest in the matter—that could be the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) and a few others I could think of, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais)—making interventions on a draft report unless the Board will include those interventions and comments in its final report so that the public will know that this is a full and open public hearing. There will be nothing hidden and nothing secret. I still do not understand why the Government did not accept our Motion No. 10 at report stage, why it would not accept a similar amendment in the committee. It seems to me that it will come back to haunt us if at any time somebody can make some comments and send an intervention and a request to the board based on a draft of a final report.

Once it becomes publicly known that that intervention was made, particularly if it comes from a member of the Government even if the board totally ignores that intervention, the integrity, independence and openness of the board is in question. Why we are passing an otherwise good Bill that leaves that possibility there in the legislation passes all understanding. Why the stubbornness of the Government on this item is beyond me completely. Why would a Minister of any integrity, honesty and reputation even want to have the opportunity? At least the Railway Brotherhood said: "We don't want any draft report. We will have our chance with the observers that we have at the scene of the accident or incident. We will have an observer at all the hearings. We will have all our opportunities to make our representation to protect our members. We don't want access to a draft of the final report".

This one item in this Bill flies in the face of the bitter experience we had with previous accident investigation boards. The Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Keyes) raised the matter about the CASB. When he mentioned Hamilton I thought to myself, let's not dredge that up again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: We do not need to dredge, but let us learn something from that experience of the CASB. I think through this Bill we have learned something.

I wish the Government would have reconsidered, because I do not think anyone should get a draft of a final report. I know the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) is going to get one about VIA Rail. If he does not like it, he will send it back. He will get three or four reports by the time this is over. In fact, I am wondering if this is going to be a report from Mr. deBelleval or Mr. Lawless or are we going to get a two-headed report.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, I invite everyone in the House to come to the Transport Committee tomorrow afternoon. We have Mr. Lawless from VIA Rail appearing before the committee. You know that coyote who is in charge of the chicken coop. Why the Government would want to have that provision in this Bill escapes me entirely.

Something else I must express tonight because I am a little bitter about it. I went through this matter with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy), with Jean-Luc Pepin and with the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie). The matter had to do with air traffic control, the safety issue and inspection of aircraft. Once they are more than 10 years old you have to go over them with a fine toothcomb and you have to do it often. We did it during all the debate about airport congestion and airline safety. We did it when we came to deregulation. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre was the guy who started it. He became Minister of Transport because his predecessor was against deregulation. Jean-Luc Pepin made himself very plain in that matter. I can understand why the Liberal Party does not have the Member from Winnipeg as the critic on transportation. That is a perfectly logical thing for the Liberals to do because they would have a little trouble having him there.

The whole scenario for these many years has been to keep the airlines, railroads and shipping companies happy and profitable. What we have done with the laws in Canada is to force otherwise honest and reputable companies to cut corners. They have no choice when the bottom line is what tells the tale. If you have a jet engine that should be overhauled after 2,000 hours, well, we hear it said let's go 2,500 hours. In 99.9 per cent of the time you would get away with it. What if you have a bad order railway car that is tagged by a car inspector and put on the siding and the supervisor comes along, takes the tag off and the car gets put back on the train again? Any time that happens or is even attempted, you are asking for work to be done by the Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board of Canada.

All the protestations I have heard here for 21 years next July 25 about safety being the priority I have heard ad nauseam. As the farmer says "If you've never had manure on your boots, you really don't know what the hell you are talking about", and that has been the problem with the 12 Ministers of Transport I have known since I was first elected to the House of Commons. We should have a revolving door on the office of the Ministry of Transport. The amendments we moved at report stage were not moved just for the heck of it. We did not move them because we were Liberals, NDP or Conservatives. We moved them because we knew what the hell we were talking about, and we knew why we were talking about it.

I hope that what I am worrying about will not happen. If it does, I will still be here when the review period expires, but if you are lucky, Mr. Speaker, I will not be here. Surely then someone will make the corrections in the legislation that should have been made at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not like to have to interrupt the Hon. Member because he is making a great speech, but his time has expired. In fact, he has gone a little over his time. On questions or comments, I recognize the Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a simple question, and I am sure that—

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Baker: Did you hear the hon. gentleman behind me asking me not to ask a question?

I would ask the hon. gentleman, if he could just listen for a moment, if he could tell us very simply what improvements there are in this Bill over the previous legislation as far as accident investigation is concerned, keeping in mind that Canada's worst disasters have occurred in the last couple of years. Under this Bill, will there be an improvement in the investigation process as it related to the disaster at Gander, Newfoundland, that saw 258 people killed and the absolutely outrageous report made by the previous board? Does the Hon. Member see an advantage in the Bill before us or have we moved ahead at all?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend. He can be sure that in the back of the minds of all the members of the committee was Gander, Dryden, Cranbrook and others. I am sure those incidents influenced the feelings and thinking of all Hon. Members.

I think the Bill is an improvement in the sense that the wording of this Bill contains elements of recognition of errors made in the previous legislation. Quite a bit of this Bill is nothing more than a duplication of the previous legislation, but there were enough modifications made to show that the Government itself recognized what was lacking in the previous legislation. We will only find this out once this Bill becomes law, but I also think that the Government recognizes that it needs to triple or quadruple the number of qualified inspectors and investigators, not only those who act after the fact but those who act while railways, airlines, pipelines and marine operations are in operation. Without that in place, the accident investigation board will have a hell of a lot more to do because there will be no reduction in accidents.

I got the feeling, and I hope I am not wrong, that the Government recognizes this and that beginning in 1990, a substantial amount of money will be provided in the Estimates for the recruiting of bodies with the expertise to enforce the laws that are already in place. If the Government does not do that, I know we will hear from the hon. gentleman and we will hear from guys like me because that is something we have been fighting for for the last many years. Deregulation just compounded the problem three or four times over.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. I recognize the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Flis).

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I could go on for 20 minutes on this issue, but rather than do that, I would refer Hon. Members to Hansard of April 18 when I spoke on this Bill at second reading stage. I said it all at that time.

I am rising today because I have received new and additional information since I spoke in the House the last time. I agree with the intent of this Bill which establishes the Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board, but I do not agree with the hidden agenda behind it. The hidden agenda is to cover up the truth about the cause of the accident in Gander which killed 258 American soldiers.

The other hidden agenda behind this Bill is to dismantle the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, the members of which are doing an excellent job now. As we know, five members of the board submitted their report stating that the cause of the accident was icing on the wings while four members of the board with the highest qualifications in aeronautics in Canada submitted a minority report stating that it was not caused by icing on the wings but was caused by some explosion or other force.

Last night I saw colour pictures taken the day after the accident. A helicopter had followed the path of the plane that crashed taking pictures every step of the way. If you saw those pictures, Mr. Speaker, you would see that there was no indentation in the ground where the plane crashed. If the crash was caused by icing on the wings, then as the plane came down, there would have been a gouge in the earth. There is no such indentation in the earth. The pictures show small fragments of the airplane scattered all over the bush. Trees are clipped off from where the plane first started coming in, but there is a row of trees standing while parts of the plane are scattered all over. The only way those parts could get there is if the plane somehow disintegrated in the air and came falling down. One part of the plane has a gaping hole in it. The picture clearly shows that this hole was caused by some explosion, not by icing on the wings.

I would not feel right, having been sent here by my constituents, knowing this information and not sharing it in the House. I share it now before the Bill leaves this House. I know it is going to the Senate and I urge the Senate to conduct a full investigation before giving the Bill Royal Assent. The Senate has the power to call in additional witnesses who were not called under the previous investigation. I invite the Senate to look at the pictures I saw last night and I think it will probably come to the same conclusion to which I came which is that Mr. Justice Estey should be given full powers to reopen the investigation and hear witnesses who were not called before. Then and only then should we pass Bill C-2.

I was the Parliamentary Secretary who passed the Canadian Aviation Safety Bill, Bill C-163. In the debate at that time, we felt we should go with a unimodal safety board and iron out the kinks before we brought in a multimodal board. The Government has not demonstrated that it can manage the nine members of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. The Minister accepted the report of the five and immediately ordered a secret investigation into air safety. Why did he do that if he believed the report? I highlight that I agree with the intent of the Bill. I do not agree with the two hidden agendas of the Bill. I invite the Senate to do a full investigation before giving approval.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Leader of the Government in the House of Commons rises on a point of order.

Mr. Cooper: I believe you will find that there exists within the House unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) to make some remarks on this Bill. I gather the Hon. Member requires approximately five minutes. Then we will wrap up and also quickly deal again with Bill C-4, the energy Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls.

Mr. Baker: I would like to have equal time with any Hon. Member who rises on this point just raised.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

Mr. Boudria: If there is not unanimous consent, then perhaps we can deal with the situation in the following manner. We could not see the clock until the completion of the speech of the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). Perhaps we could further consult with Members on the government side and on the opposition side in order to determine whether a slight amount of time is required beyond that. We will speak about that within the next few minutes. Meanwhile, with your agreement, Mr. Speaker, perhaps you could seek unanimous consent to not see the clock for the duration of the speech of the Member for York South—Weston, for the time being.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: You asked for unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe in open-ended unanimous consent at this time of night. If you allow the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) to speak, he could have 20 minutes plus 10 minutes for questions and comments. I believe that we should not see the clock until 10.15 p.m. If there is an agreement negotiated before that time, it is agreeable, but at 10.15 we will see the clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for York South—Weston.

Mr. Nunziata: I am not asking for special consideration. I am simply asking for the opportunity to exercise my rights as an elected Member of the House to speak on this Bill.

If the House Leaders or the representatives of the three Parties want to negotiate any type of deal, I do not want to preclude any other Member, whether it is my hon. colleague here or others, from speaking.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Chair will do whatever the House decides. If we can continue until 10.15 p.m., I will recognize the Hon. Member for York South—Weston, if that is what the House would like and there is agreement. We can then decide at 10.15 whether we should go to the late show.

Mr. Baker: Could you elaborate on what you have stated, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe there was a request to extend the hours until 10.15 to allow the Hon. Member for York South—Weston to say a few words, and perhaps also the Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls. If we could wind up by 10.15, fine. If not, there will be further discussions or we will go into the late show at 10.15, or carry on after discussions after 10.15.

Shall I recognize the Hon. Member for York South—Weston?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Then we can decide what we will do at 10.15.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, while I regret that we have gone into overtime with respect to the business of the House, I believe it is more important that we deal with the legislation than attempt to rush through a piece of legislation that is considered flawed and a cover-up by a Member who sits on the Transport Committee.

I want to make it clear that I was not a member of the Transport Committee that considered this particular piece of legislation. I did not speak at second reading stage of this legislation, but I have followed the debate tonight. I have reviewed various provisions of this Bill and I have some concerns. My concerns are compounded by the fact that certain members of the Transport Committee have expressed concerns about Bill C-2. When I asked my questions of various Members of the House, including the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Belsher) about a provision in this Bill under Clause 3, I was not given an explanation as to what it meant.

Some people would like the Senate to give this Bill more consideration. I commend my colleague, the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Flis) for expressing the concerns that he has expressed and through the public record, through Hansard, he has requested that the Senate give this Bill some serious consideration. However, I see other flaws in the legislation.

While Members consider passing this Bill, and Members have stood up and complimented one another on how great it was to deal with it in the spirit of non-partisanship, I would submit that there have been some oversights that ought to be addressed. At the very least, I would like to discharge my responsibilities by putting my comments on the record. Hopefully, again, the Senate will consider my submissions and the submissions of any other Member in its deliberations on Bill C-2.

To get to the point with respect to my concerns, we know that the purpose of the Bill is to establish a new board to investigate accidents in Canada. That is fair enough. The Canadian Aviation Safety Board had a lot of problems over the last number of years. It embarrassed the Government on a number of occasions with respect to the Gander crash and the near misses at Pearson International Airport. There was a need for a more comprehensive board or commission. That is fine.

Clause 3 tries to define the purpose of the Bill, or how the Bill applies. Specifically, I will only address the situation of air disasters, when there are crashes involving aircraft. Clause 3(1) states:

> This Act applies in respect of aviation occurrences—

The clause goes on to describe three situations to which the Bill applies. First, it is when the occurrences happen in or over Canada, including the international waters of Canada and the territorial sea of Canada. That is pretty straightforwrd. If an airplane crash occurs somewhere in Canada or within Canadian jurisdiction, then this Bill applies to that particular crash.

Clause 3(1)(b) deals with occurrences in or over any place that is under Canadian air traffic control.

The clause then goes on to state:

(c) in or over any place, if

(i) Canada is requested to investigate the aviation occurrence by an appropriate authority,

That, presumably, refers to a foreign Government which can say to the Board which is established by this Bill: "We want you to investigate. Come in and investigate".

Then it goes on to state that the Bill applies if the aviation occurrence—and we are talking in simple terms of a crash—involves an aircraft in respect of which, or that is operated by a person to whom a Canadian aviation document has been issued under Part I of the Aeronautics Act. I have asked the Parliamentary Secretary and the Chairman of the—

Mr. Nowlan: You got an answer, so speak truthfully.

Mr. Nunziata: I did get an answer.

Mr. Nowlan: What was the answer, my friend? Come to the committee some time.

Mr. Nunziata: I did get an answer. The answer was not satisfactory.

Mr. Nowlan: To your ego. The answer was factual and correct.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) has the floor.

Mr. Nunziata: The point I made is—

Mr. Nowlan: You got the answer.

Mr. Nunziata: Perhaps I can address the point.

Mr. Nowlan: Well, you can address your ego. That is what you are doing here.

Mr. Nunziata: The Hon. Member advises me that this clause with respect to the Canadian aviation document, the reference, refers to a Canadian plane, let us say, an Air Canada plane or a Canadian pilot. If the aircraft happens to be a Canadian plane or there is a Canadian pilot manning the aircraft, that is fine. In such circumstances I would submit that the Act should apply. What if a plane that departs from Canada, that has over 300 Canadians on board, crashes off the coast of Ireland? Does the Act apply?

Mr. Holtmann: That is not hypothetical.

Mr. Nunziata: It isn't hypothetical. We all know that on Friday of this week it will be the fourth anniversary of the crash of Air-India, when over 300 Canadians perished off the coast of Ireland. To this day there has not been a Canadian investigation into that accident.

In Canada we have had a Royal Commission of inquiry investigating the conduct of a Cabinet Minister. We have had a Royal Commission of inquiry investigating the Ocean Ranger disaster off the Atlantic coast.

Mr. Nowlan: It happened in Canada you silly idiot.

Mr. Nunziata: We had a Royal Commission of inquiry that investigated the Hinton rail disaster. Yet we have not had any type of investigation in Canada with respect to an air crash disaster that occurred, fine, not within in Canada, offshore—

Mr. Nowlan: Not driven by Canadians.

Mr. Nunziata: So what, I say to the Hon. Member. Just because the plane did not have a Canadian pilot, just because it said Air-India instead of Air Canada, notwithstanding the fact that there were over 300 Canadians on board on that plane, the Hon. Member, the chairman of the Transport Committee, is saying that we do not investigate. He is saying we do not have jurisdiction. Well, my friend, they were Canadian lives.

You say this Bill is not flawed? You want to investigate accidents that happen elsewhere just because there is a Canadian pilot on board, but the Transport Committee, of which that Member is chairman, does not want to investigate and the Government has refused to investigate over the last four years a deliberate accident caused by a bombing that involved the lives of over 300 Canadians. The Air-India flight originated in Canada, in Montreal. It flew to Toronto where it took on passengers and baggage. Before it landed, it exploded in the sky. The Member, the chairman of the committee, the Parliamentary Secretary and others are saying that this board that is being established under Bill C-2 should not have the jurisdiction to investigate that aviation disaster.

Under normal circumstances one can overlook, on the eve of our summer vacation, a flawed piece of legislation in the haste to pass legislation. However, I submit to you that we have an obligation to ensure that when we pass legislation we do not worry about getting home at ten o'clock at night, we worry about whether this legislation will serve the purpose it is supposed to serve.

I know it is late and Members want to leave. It is 10.15. We are at third reading stage and all the House Leaders want this legislation passed. I say to you that the Bill is flawed. I hope that the Senate will take the time to look at the Bill, think about the Air-India disaster, think about the great disservice we have done to the families of those on board Air-India flight 181, and ask ourselves whether we should be rushing this Bill through the House of Commons.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, June 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp that Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Energy Supplies Emergency Act and to amend the Access to Information Act in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There is agreement among the Parties that we will deal with C-4 right now. I think that should be stated before you actually start the debate. Just as a matter of precedent we have agreed among the three Parties to have a very short debate on Bill C-4.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is agreed and so ordered.

Mr. John MacDougall (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, on June 5 of this year the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) introduced Bill C-4 as reported in Hansard at page 2542. I would like to refer the said Bill C-4 to a legislative committee as soon as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 is deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—PROVINCIAL SOIL AGREEMENTS

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, on June 9 I questioned the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) on the status of water and soil conservation accords and agreements with the Provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. My question was a follow-up to one asked by my colleague, the Member for Regina—Qu'Appelle (Mr. de Jong) on May 3. At that time the Minister stated that the agreement with Saskatchewan had not been signed because certain criteria had to be satisfied. However he did not specify exactly what these criteria were. The other possibility is that the Minister is not being factual with the House and in that case there is some underlying reason which has not been made clear to the House. I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to explain if that is the case. I find both of these possibilities hard to accept but I ask the Parliament Secretary to please tell this House and the people of Canada which one it is.

I would also like to know to what criteria the Minister is referring. They must be very important criteria since in the case of Saskatchewan he has had five months to study the agreement and the criteria. It appears to be criteria so important that no one seems to know exactly what the criteria are, criteria so important that the provinces do not know about them. Criteria so important that his own staff does not seem to know about them, criteria so important that perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary himself does not know about them.

I do trust, however, that since the Minister has seen fit to send the Parliamentary Secretary to the House to answer the question he has taken time at least to brief him on these criteria. I am beginning to wonder whether the Minister himself knows what the criteria is to which he is referring. I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to please explain to this House what criteria the Minister referred to in his answers of May 3 and June 3.

I trust and hope that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will not take the arrogant approach which has become a trademark of the Government and not answer this part of my question.

Finally, I and many people across this great land would like to know when these four agreements are going to be signed by the Minister. The Government speaks in glowing terms of the environment, it says that the environment is an important part of its mandate and an important part of the work that it is going to perform over the next four years. Certainly soil and water conservation is an integral and important part of the environment. If this is an example of how the Government is going to act with respect to the environment, Canadians should be warned that the commitment to the environment which the Government pretends to have is nothing more than an elaborate fraud.

Every region of this nation needs soil and water conservation accords from potato farmers in Prince Edward Island to wheat growers in Alberta. Typical are the residents in the Outlook area in my own riding who need some assistance from either the provincial or the federal Government in this important area.

In conclusion, I will simply reiterate my points. First, why is the Minister stating that there are negotiations going on while, at the same time, his staff is denying it? Second, to what criteria was the Minister referring in his answers of May 3 and June 9? Third, when will these agreements be signed? Those are three simple questions, the answers to which are very important to the future of this nation.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the concern expressed by the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre (Mr. Laporte) on federal–provincial soil conservation efforts. There is a growing sense of urgency among Canadians that we must act to protect our soil and water resources in order to ensure the long–term viability and prosperity of our agriculture and food industry.

The Government of Canada and the provinces have agreed to work together to safeguard these resources. This commitment was spelled out in the National Agricultural Strategy signed by the federal and provincial Ministers of Agriculture in 1986.

The National Agricultural strategy calls for a co–ordinated soil and water conservation program adapted to meet the particular needs of each province. It was agreed that the program should include awareness and education programs, improved extension, technical and advisory services, more on–site demonstrations of conservation techniques and additional research.

In December, 1987, the federal Government responded with the National Soil Conservation Program that made funds available for a new nation–wide push to conserve and improve Canadian farmland. This three–year, $150 million co–operative effort between the federal Government and the provinces will encourage long–term soil conservation measures.

As envisioned in the National Agriculture Strategy, the program will involve on–farm technical and financial assistance, demonstrations, research and monitoring.

• (2225)

This approach recognizes that it is the farmer who is on the front line of the soil conservation battle. The program will also work to increase public awareness about the need to conserve our soils.

Program components will be tailored to reflect the nature and extent of problems in each region. Federal funding will be distributed based on the extent of soil degradation problems and the availability of matching funds in each province.

The federal Government has successfully reached basic soil and water accords with the provinces. These accords give us a framework for future consultation and planning on all agriculture soil and water issues.

We are now working on actual agreements for soil conservation activities under the national soil conservation program. We are also working out the financial and administrative arrangements with each province.

Negotiations have taken place with the provinces. The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre has expressed his particular concern about the agreement with Saskatchewan.

In the case of Saskatchewan and the other western provinces, factors such as last year's drought had to be taken into consideration and changes made to the original proposals.

We have done that, and we expect the agreement with Saskatchewan to be concluded in the very near future. This Government recognizes the importance of conserving our soils. Once the agreements are signed, we are prepared to move quickly to put in place the national soil conservation program.

AIRPORTS–CANADIAN AVIATION SAFETY BOARD RECOMMENDATIONS/AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I intervene this evening due to my growing frustration over this Government's inability and its unwillingness to respond to the safety deficiencies at Pearson International Airport.

I am here to pursue a question which I asked on April 5, 1989. It is absurd that after a full two months, we are still waiting for this Government to address in an effective manner, the safety problems at Pearson Airport.

An article in the Globe and Mail on June 1, 1989, entitled, "Making Canada's Airports Safe" said that: "A lack of safety in air traffic control is being blamed for near collisions at Toronto's Pearson Airport". The article goes on to say: "—the safety problem at Canada's largest airport, like the problem that plagues other major Canadian airports, boils down to economics—Airline deregulation, with the major opportunities it has provided for lower air fares and significant increases in airline travel, this deregulation has posed no problem for the private sector. Private suppliers have provided more planes, more in flight meals, more stewardesses, more pilots and more fuel to respond to the increased demand for air travel. However, no corresponding expansion has occurred in the supply of airport facilities—" This is a failing of this Government, Mr. Speaker.

I informed this House two months ago that a Department of Transport document clearly outlined in June, 1987, that the Government totally failed to make adequate effects on airline deregulation. More specifically, I advised the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) on April 5 that Canadian travellers cannot afford to play Russian roulette with air passenger safety. I asked the Minister: "What are you doing about controllers at Pearson so that the safety of Canadian air travellers can be assured?" This Government has a very difficult time in answering questions about air safety. Every time I have made an intervention in this House, I have been given a response relating to air traffic delays. It is precisely because I do understand the difference between safety deficiencies and air traffic delays that I continue to raise this issue, obviously in vain.

The Minister of Transport, for example, responded to my question saying: "People who are surprised at the delays at Pearson should understand that the directives are quite clear. We handle the number of flights that our air traffic controllers can handle". Delays, Mr. Speaker, are a symptom of the unsafe condition. There are not enough air traffic controllers at Pearson.

If conditions at Pearson were safe, we would not have experienced the three misses, one on December 20 and two on January 10, which happened within three hours of each other.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that time is running on. It is half past the hour. It has been a long day. Let me just close by saying that perhaps the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary may wish to explain to Canadian air travellers why this Government, in light of its self proclaimed commitment to safety, has chosen to reduce funding to air traffic control services by $3,575,000, or 67 person-years as outlined on page 2–57 of the 1989–90 Transport Department estimates for this year.

Is this an example of this Government's commitment to safety? If it is, we are in serious trouble. In light of these facts, will this Government stop giving Canadian air travellers false assurances? Will this Government undertake to inform air travellers using Pearson International Airport that there are safety deficiencies that do exist? It is their duty and obligation to do this.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi), I would like to begin by assuring Canadians that the skies are safe. The specific reference to Lester B. Pearson Airport in Toronto, I would remind the Hon. Member that the Ministers of Transport have recently completed extensive consultations which will lead to the development of a comprehensive plan for the whole of southern Ontario air space. An announcement will be made in due course.

I would like to emphasize that while we do have a shortage of air traffic controllers at Toronto, the traffic flow is always matched to the controllers' ability to safely handle the traffic. This means delays, not a decrease in the level of safety.

I would also like to assure Members and the travelling public that every conceivable effort is being made to rectify this shortage situation. I want to assure Canadians that the training program is proceeding at full capacity. Day and evening training is being conducted to maximize the time available for simulation training. The content and length of the basic ATC training course is being examined to safely maximize the number of trainees that can be accommodated.

Members will also know that a special emphasis has been put on recruiting Canadians with previous civil or military experience as Air Traffic Controllers. Such experienced people are able to benefit from an abbreviated training course so that they can get their on-the-job training as quickly as possible. As well, the Department of Transport has entered into a program to hire up to 45 foreign experienced controllers who will be employed in four-year term positions. At this moment there are 14 American former controllers presently training on the job in Toronto. One American has recently qualified and seven more are very close to doing so.

As the Minister has indicated on many occasions, he intends to avail himself of the expertise of both industry and government to assist him in ensuring that we have the right resources and that they are used in the right way in order to meet the changing needs of the future. To this end a task force has been established and work is ongoing.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY—CLOSURE OF CENTRE—GOVERNMENT POSITION—RIGHT OF CANADIANS TO INFORMATION

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, when I first came to the House I heard Members talking about the late show. Now I know what they mean.

I rise pursuant to a question I asked on June 13 regarding the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety. In reply to my question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Corbeil) regarding the federal Government's elimination of funding for the centre by April 1, 1991, I was told that the centre would not close.

This, in my opinion, is difficult to believe given this Government's fiscal plan for the centre. Unless the centre becomes self-financing by 1992, it will in all likelihood be forced to close.

At the present time the federal Government contributes approximately $8 million a year to the centre's operations. For the fiscal year 1989-90 the funding for the centre has been cut by $1.5 million. This is only the beginning. In 1990-91 the funding will be furthered reduced by $4.6 million and by April 1, 1991 the centre will be entirely cut off from federal funding. This certainly puts the centre's survival into question and the good useful work of the centre, as described by the Minister of Labour, in jeopardy.

The centre was created in order to promote the fundamental right of Canadians to a healthy and safe working environment by creating a national institute concerned with the study, encouragement and co-operative advancement of occupational health and safety. Since the centre's inception in 1978, the centre has done just that by providing the Canadian workforce with valuable information regarding work place hazards.

The centre's statistics are impressive. In 1988–89 alone, the centre answered by phone and mail over 26,000 requests from individuals for occupational health and safety information. Its newsletter had an international following of over 35,000 readers and it distributed over 350,000 publications in response to requests.

These statistics represent the fact that the centre is providing a useful service to Canadians. In the wake of its increasing popularity, the Government has introduced unprecedented cuts to the centre's funding with the goal of self-sufficiency by April, 1991. In keeping with this, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Corbeil) has asked the President and Chief Executive Officer of the council to produce a plan for alternative funding for the centre.

There are funding alternatives that have been presented so that the centre will not be forced to shut down come April, 1991. The centre could raise money through fund-raising projects, from a capital loan from the Government, by charging for present services, from provincial grants or through assimilation into a federal Department. The Minister has, however, ruled out federal funding, charges to ordinary users and assimilation into Labour Canada. None of the funding alternatives which have been proposed could alone meet the financial needs of the centre.

Given the alarming statistics regarding occupational health and safety in Canada, we know there is indeed a need for the services provided by the centre. Over 800,000 work days are lost annually by Canadians due to disabling injuries and over 440 lives are lost yearly due to industrial accidents. It is as a result of this that over $7 billion is spent annually to cover medical expenses, compensation for lost earnings, pensions, insurance and loss of production.

These statistics are disturbing. How can the Government justify these cuts, particularly since it has made such a strong contribution to the cause of Canadian workers only to leave them with absolutely nothing? Workers deserve Government action in eliminating occupational hazards in the workplace. In this vein, the Canadian Occupational Health and Safety Centre must continue as an independent national tripartite organization.

The centre provides a necessary service to Canadian workers and should extend this information service, not have it curtailed by fiscal restraint. In the meantime, alternative funding mechanisms should be investigated so that some products could be developed in order to increase revenues. These mechanisms should not, however, be permitted to impair the reliability of the centre's information work or the flow of information to the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety. Canadians have a right to this information and they should get it. What is the Government's intention for the health and safety of Canadian workers and for the future of the centre?

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to reassure the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. Proud) and this House that the planned reductions in the funding of the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety will not result in the closing of the centre. The reductions merely reflect the Government's belief that the centre is now a viable enterprise capable of becoming more financially self-sufficient. The centre has already demonstrated that it is able to recover some of its costs. In the last fiscal year, for example, it recovered $440,000 while in this fiscal year it plans to recover $1,400,000. I have no doubt that the centre can earn even more of its income from its operations.

For 11 years since its creation in 1978, the centre has been provided with the financial support it needed to establish itself and to develop a variety of useful information services. Today, the centre is able to provide a full range of services. They range from technical bulletins to a set of compact discs containing volumes of information on every aspect of occupational safety and health. This latter product is called a CCINFO disc. It is an innovative use of compact disc technology which has received international attention.

I am convinced that most of its clients, especially corporate ones, are prepared to pay the centre for the true value of creating these and other products. Although the centre will have to charge for its products, I want to assure this House that all Canadian workers will be able to receive the information they need through their employers to do their jobs safely. Please allow me to explain.

The Pan-Canadian workplace hazardous materials information system and other federal, provincial and territorial occupational safety and health legislation gives workers the right to be informed of the hazards associated with their jobs. It is the duty of employers to provide their employees with this information. This legislated requirement will provide the centre with a considerable market for its information services.

In closing, I believe that the planned reductions in the centre's funding will neither close it down nor deprive Canadian workers of essential information.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY WEEK

PROMOTION OF SAFETY IN THE WORKPLACE

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, June 18 to 24 marks Occupational Health and Safety Week. This year's theme is "Safety Takes Teamwork". In this effort the Canada Safety Council, the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety and the Canadian Standards Association have joined forces to promote safety in the workplace. In doing so they help to promote safety awareness among Canadian business, industry and government.

Notable advances in occupational health and safety have occurred in Canada over the past decade. The inception of the Workplace Hazardous Material Information System by governments throughout the country ensures access to data and instruction on how to handle dangerous material by workers. The creation of the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety in 1978 was also a positive step. The Centre gives access to information regarding hazards in the workplace.

Despite these efforts the rate of accidents in the Canadian workplace is still substantially high. However, we must continue to build on these improvements so that some day all Canadians can work in a healthy and safe environment.

INDUSTRY

OPENING OF PLANT IN PICKERING

Mr. René Soetens (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, last week on two separate occasions I rose in the House to advise you of some very positive investments taking place as a result of good government policy. One investment was in the pharmaceutical industry in Whitby and the second was in food processing in Trenton. I would like to inform you that another company has just opened a new 50,000 square foot plant in the town of Pickering employing some 50 people.

A British company, David Brown Gear Industries, required a new distribution facility for its products in Canada and wanted to open a warehouse as well in the United States. For your information, Mr. Speaker, I have paraphrased the comments of Mr. Brown, the Chairman of the Board, at the opening ceremonies of the new facility in Pickering. He said, although we had planned to open a new facility in both Canada and the United States, because of the Free Trade Agreement we decided to take advantage of the opportunity provided by the FTA and built a larger facility in Pickering.

He also advised me that because of the healthy economic environment for business in Canada they may also open a manufacturing facility here in Canada. It is encouraging to see the results of good Conservative policies creating jobs in Canada.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ARMED FORCES DAY

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, this coming Friday morning at ten o'clock the ceremonial guard will perform the changing of the guard on Parliament Hill. Today in Ottawa over the lunch hour the Dominion Carilloneur provided a traditional salute to the Canadian Forces.

On behalf of my colleagues and my constituents from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception I wish to convey our thanks and appreciation to the men and women in uniform of the Canadian Forces for the professional and effective way in which they continue to maintain Canada's safety, sovereignty and security, and for working so successfully with our allies to maintain global peace. I would also like to include our DND civilians whose dedication and support are fundamental and essential to the success of the Canadian Forces.

Armed Forces Day will be observed this year on Saturday, June 24, and many Canadian Forces bases will be open to the public. I encourage everyone to visit our military and meet the men and women of the Canadian Forces who serve us so well.

HEALTH

VANCOUVER'S NEEDLE EXCHANGE PROGRAM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, Vancouver's Needle Exchange Program is a courageous initiative by Mayor Gordon Campbell and Vancouver City Council. The program not only provides drug users with clean syringes, but it dispenses educational literature, condoms, advice on safe sexual practices and materials to clean syringes.

The program is working. The response rate from drug users is six times higher than expected. No new people are known to have started taking drugs as a result of the program. Indeed, the opposite has happened; people have started seeking help for their drug problems and the program has undercut the black market for drug paraphernalia.

The federal Government has so far refused to provide financial assistance to Vancouver for the program. That is wrong, and I have already written to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) to tell him so. I understand some Canadians' prudish attitudes, but we have a crisis on our hands. AIDS causes pernicious pneumonia, cancer, wasting syndrome, brain lesions, seizures, spasms and death.

We are long overdue for a national strategy to help prevent the spread of AIDS and to treat people living with AIDS with dignity. Vancouver's Needle Exchange Program is exemplary. I urge the federal Government to begin to provide funding for that program. This is not just a municipal issue or a Vancouver issue, this is a national and international tragedy and it is about time that the Minister of National Health and Welfare got off his butt and responded to the situation.

HOUSE OF COMMUNS

CANADIANS AND THEIR SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT–AUDIO VERSION

Mr. Guy St–Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you and to congratulate the Public Information Office of the House of Commons, as well as the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, who together produced the talking book which you presented yesterday and which is the spoken version of Eugene Forsey's Parliamentary Guide on Canadians and their system of government.

This work, which contains a wealth of information on the Parliament of Canada, is recorded on audio–cassette and is part of a special series for the disabled.

Mr. Speaker, as you rightly said, whoever does not have access to information these days is left behind. We live in an information society and the House of Commons has shown its commitment to the full and equitable participation of the disabled.

Mr. Speaker, all Members thank you for your remarkable initiative.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CRISIS IN CHINA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian ambassador to China has returned to tell the story of its Government's war against its youth, a story made more compelling by the personal pain of his experience. Yet he suggested that economic sanctions directed against that country would be ineffective because of the size and the essential economic autonomy of China.

Will the Canadian people accept this so–called conclusion of such a rational analysis? Does the power and size of a nation provide for a contemptible government immunity from tangible expressions of international contempt? Should Canada and the International Community of Nations be bullied into apparent acquiescence to infamy? I think not. I believe the Canadian people think not.

I pray that the Canadian Government will think not and that for Canada and China it will not be business as usual.

AGRICULTURE

PLANT BREEDERS' RIGHTS

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (St. Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to impress upon the House and on my hon. colleagues the importance of the plant breeders' rights legislation. Canada is one of the very few agriculturally developed countries that does not have a legal mechanism to protect the inventors of new varieties of plants.

Consequently, Canadian research is left to universities and government agencies rather than the private sector. This situation puts Canada far behind most developed countries. In order to compete on the world market, Canadian farmers require hardy, high-producing plants that are disease and pest resistant.

The realization of plant breeders' rights would enable Canadian farmers to compete in global markets. I would like to add that consumers will also benefit from lower prices. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

THE ENVIRONMENT

RAFFERTY-ALAMEDA DAM PROJECT

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak out on behalf of my constituents in support of the Rafferty-Alameda dam project. Southeastern Saskatchewan needs this project.

The overwhelming consensus of area residents is that this project represents a practical plan for sustainable development of our region.

We are upset that our future is being jeopardized by those who are unfamiliar with our region of the country. It is unfair that we have opposition from people who have not seen the project firsthand, which is not a productive valley.

As a long time resident of the region and as chairman of the federal task force on drought, I can testify to the great need for water management. Few people in this country understand the dominant role which water plays in controlling the future of this area.

While opponents of the project make the point on the environment, I would like to remind the House that sustainable development, as defined by the Brundtland Commission—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, the Hon. Member's time has expired.

HOUSING

CMHC FUNDING FOR PRINCE CHARLES PROJECT

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, we are seeing attempts by government Ministers to play down at least four donations totalling $4,800 made to the PC Fund and to two Conservative ridings, including that of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) from moneys laundered by Patricia Starr from CMHC guaranteed funds.

These donations came from the capital bank account of the Toronto section of the National Council of Jewish Women controlled by Patricia Starr. The source of some of these funds, which the Minister of Housing (Mr. Redway) has confirmed in this House on Monday, included CMHC guaranteed funds meant to be used for consulting fees on the Prince Charles housing project.

As neither the Minister of Employment and Immigration, nor the Minister of Housing understands the seriousness of this matter, I call on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to realize that the integrity, not only of the public contracting system, but that of his Government is at stake, and for the Prime Minister to ask for an open investigation into the involvement of the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the use of CMHC funds in the Prince Charles project in Toronto.

Oral Questions

LIBERAL PARTY

LEADERSHIP STAKES

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, they are at the post and they are off and running in the longest Liberal leadership stakes.

The former Member from Shawinigan Farms is the early favourite but he has been running hard for the past five years and is carrying excess baggage to go the distance.

The current Member from Lasalle–Émard Stables had a disastrous debut in the House of Commons and is not expected to hold the pace.

The grey gelding from Windsor is an old work horse and outclassed in this field.

The western entry from Winnipeg soft centre is just coming off an injury suffered in a dispute with a provincial stable mate and is not expected to show.

The young Island entrant from Humber—St. Barbe has not matured well and is not expected to put up a challenge.

The nag from Hamilton was making much noise in the paddock but was scratched before entering the gate.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

DISARMING OF NUCLEAR SHIPS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, the Soviet Union and the United States are taking a small step towards disarming the seas. They will be sending warships to each other's ports which will be disarmed of their nuclear capacity.

Two weeks ago, the Neptune report, released by Greenpeace, demonstrated the absolute insanity of arming our seas with nuclear weapons and nuclear powered vessels. The report demonstrates that since 1956 there were nine nuclear reactors and 50 nuclear warheads lost on the ocean floor as a result of accidents at sea. Many more accidents and fires involving nuclear material have also occurred.

On June 8, 1989, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) stood in this Chamber and stated: "When there are nuclear weapons there are going to be accidents". There is only one answer. Let us prevent accidents by preventing nuclear weapons in Canadian waters.

I call on this Government to follow the example of New Zealand and ban all vessels with nuclear capability from Canadian ports.

MULTICULTURALISM

APPLICATION OF POLICIES OF BILINGUALISM

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, no mission is more challenging or important to the Members of this House than is the building of our country in unity and in harmony within the concept of diversity as represented by our two official languages and our several cultural origins.

No province has demonstrated more successfully the spirit of humanity, tolerance and goodwill that is the essence of this unique Canadianism, than has my own Province of New Brunswick over the past many years.

Therefore, I take particular pride in the results of a poll released yesterday that reflect clear and continuing support by the large majority of New Brunswickers for the fair application of Canada's policies of bilingualism. I would respectfully urge all of the provinces of our nation to pursue the principles of respect for minority rights which have long characterized the quality of life in New Brunswick.

Canadian unity, with every province at the table, is the goal we must all seek. Nothing less will ever suit, as our heritage to future generations of this country.

FINANCE

THE NEW SALES TAX—PREVIOUS STATEMENTS BY MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like the Minister of Finance to explain to me why, in answer to my question yesterday, he denied saying two years ago that he was considering imposing only a federal sales tax, although that is just what he said in his speech to the House of Commons two years ago.

Why did he say two years ago that with a sales tax that excluded the provinces, the hidden tax would disappear, when he tells us today that he does not have the constitutional power without the provinces' agreement?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in June of 1987, the White Paper that we published set out three proposals. One proposal was a national sales tax which would involve the provinces, a federal–provincial sales tax. That was the objective which we have been working towards up until just before this last Budget.

• (1420)

IMPACT OF NEW TAX

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to let the Minister get away with this because here is what he said. Yesterday he claimed that his reason for misleading Canadians two years ago was that all along he assumed that the provinces would be part of a sales tax proposal. Two years ago in the House of Commons on June 18, 1987 this is what he said:

> Two federal–only sales taxes are also being considered: a Goods and Services Tax and a Value–Added Tax. Sales tax reform will eliminate the hidden tax in the prices consumers pay.

Why, yesterday in the House of Commons, did he misrepresent what he said in the House of Commons two years ago. Why did he not know then when he proposed two federal–only taxes that he did not have the constitutional powers he now maintains will force retailers that ascribe the tax to add the tax to the sales slip?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me give it to the Leader of the Opposition very clearly. Our proposal is to replace a 13.5 per cent tax which is buried deep in the production process. By the time it reaches the retail level, nobody in this country can tell just what the precise retail tax impact is.

Let me give the Hon. Member some examples from the White Paper of June 18, 1987. For household furniture there was a variation of five points between the high effective tax rate at the retail and the lowest effective tax rate. For kitchen utensils, seven points; for garbage bags and paper plates, six and a half points; for lubricating oil and grease it is a seven and a half point spread.

The point that I am making is with the new tax it will be the same for all products across the board that are taxable. That is why I say that this tax is very clear. It is very visible for the consumer whereas with the old tax one could not tell because of that huge spread between the high effective rate and the low effective rate.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that does not disguise the fact that two years ago he told the House of Commons that there would no longer be a hidden sales tax.

The Minister claimed yesterday in the House of Commons in response to my question that his reason for changing his mind about the sales tax, and whether or not it would appear on sales slips, was that he had lost the constitutional power. I want to quote what he said to us yesterday:

> Two years ago we were working on a national sales tax which would have involved the provinces. Once we moved away from a national sales tax—then we lost that control.

That is not what he said earlier. He contemplated two federal–only sales taxes and he said they would eliminate the hidden tax. Two years ago he said he would eliminate the hidden tax with or without the provinces.

Once again I ask the Minister to explain why he has changed his mind. Why did he disguise the true situation to Canadians and why he is now welshing once again on a promise he made to Canadians two years ago?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no changing of minds. There is no welshing on promises, as the Hon. Member has said. That is the normal nonsense that we get from this man.

What the Leader of the Opposition has stated is that I said that it would not be on the invoice. I would like him to show me where I have said that at any time that this would be in the invoice. I have made it quite clear that it would not be—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Caught again.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I said it would be very clear to Canadians what the tax would be. There will be a sign in stores—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Isn't that nice?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There will be a sign in stores that will say—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —9 per cent goods and—

Mr. Nunziata: That is a joke.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, there will be a sign in the stores which will say that there is a 9 per cent goods and services tax included in the price of the item.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How do you have the power?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member says how do I have the power? It is generally accepted by retailers that this is what they will be doing. There is agreement among the Retailer's Association, the Small Business Association and the Consumers' Association in that there should be a sign in the stores.

An Hon. Member: That is stupid.

IMMIGRATION

EXTENSION OF STUDENT VISAS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Immigration. It concerns the deteriorating situation in China.

Earlier today we were all shocked and dismayed to learn that three students were the first to be executed by the Chinese Government for their role in the demonstrations. Moreover, our Canadian Ambassador to China yesterday informed the External Affairs Committee that in reference to Chinese students in Canada, and I quote:

> I'd keep a very low profile. The struggle is important but don't get yourself photographed.

Since a policy of ruthless revenge seems to be the response of the Chinese Government, and since Chinese authorities in Canada are monitoring and pursuing the actions of Chinese students on Canadian soil, I ask the Minister rather than simply extending the student visas of these students, is the Government prepared to establish a special program that would allow these students to make application directly for landed immigrant status in our country?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I assured the House yesterday that all those Chinese citizens who are in Canada as visitors, in whatever form, students, temporary workers, tourists, need have no fear that they will be asked to leave Canada as long as the situation in China remains threatening for them.

I think at this stage that we are doing everything we can on behalf of Chinese citizens in Canada and we will continue to do so.

REQUEST FOR LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS FOR CHINESE NATIONALS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. I think everyone in the House appreciates the action of the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: In light of a possible wave of executions, which have already begun, is the Government is prepared to go the extra step? In the past in natural disasters, such as the 1980 earthquake in Italy, the Government reacted by allowing families here to sponsor individuals to come to Canada and visitors were allowed to make application for landed immigrant status. The precedent is well set. The situation in China makes other situations pale by comparison.

I am asking the Minister once again. Rather than suggesting there should be no fear because people will not be returned now with the possibility that they would have to return at some point, why cannot the Government say to these 4,000 students "We will give you the voluntary possibility of having permanent landed immigration status in Canada while you are here". What is so wrong with saying that, Madam Minister?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is anything wrong with saying that. I think that what we have done so far is indicate that we want the Chinese citizens in Canada to have as much flexibility as possible. That is why I have encouraged them to go to our office. That is why we have extended the visas even though many of those visas do not yet expire. We have not ruled anything out. What we are doing is looking at the situation every day, both in our offices across Canada and in the Government to ensure that we are doing everything we can to be helpful.

NATIONAL REVENUE

CHARITABLE STATUS OF GROUP

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I am forced to pose this question since the official muckraker for the Liberal Party seems incapable of doing so.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Rodriguez: My question is for the Minister of National Revenue. When the Toronto section of the National Council of Jewish Women first applied for charitable status in 1986, it was denied because the Department ruled that the Foundation did not appear to be providing housing exclusively for those who needed charity. Four months later the Department reversed its decision and charitable status was granted, contingent upon housing at the Prince Charles complex being provided exclusively for charitable cases. Why did the Department reverse its decision?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it is normal procedure for the Department of National Revenue to work with any and all applicants for charitable status licences. This was the case with the National Council of Jewish Women, Toronto section. The Council co-operated at that time in changing its regulations to comply with the laws, as it is co-operating now with the investigation under way. That is why we are satisfied that all corrective action by that council has been taken in accordance with the rules and regulations of its charitable status.

MINISTERIAL CONTACT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are concerned that in fact a charitable organization got taxpayers' money because the Minister of Employment and Immigration intervened and in turn got a contribution to her political campaign. My supplementary question—

Mr. McKnight: Now you're the number one muckraker, John.

Mr. Rodriguez: —is directed to the same Minister. Can the Minister of National Revenue confirm that the Minister of Employment and Immigration contacted the Department to support the application for charitable status for this organization?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I understand that in the normal course of events the Minister's office makes routine contingency inquiries on the status—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, sure.

Mr. Jelinek: They say: "Oh, sure". My office in the Department of National Revenue receives between 6,000 and 7,000 inquiries from Members of Parliament on both sides of the House, including from the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

If he is suggesting that Members of Parliament should not represent their constituents, then I am suggesting that he should resign his seat and go back to doing whatever he was doing before.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: I am asking questions of the Minister, and he is refusing to come clean and straight with us.

MONITORING OF PRINCE CHARLES COMPLEX

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question for the Minister. Surely he cannot say that there is a Santa Claus, Barbara, because there is no Santa Claus.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mrs. Starr has confirmed that only 60 per cent of the housing at the Prince Charles Complex is for charitable cases. Can the Minister tell us what monitoring was done to ensure that the housing at the Prince Charles Complex was provided exclusively for charitable cases?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, in the absence—

An Hon. Member: Not you.

Mr. McDermid: Well, I am sorry it does not satisfy the Hon. Member that I am answering the question, but I am going to answer it anyway.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: In the absence of the Minister responsible for housing, I can tell the Hon. Member that the housing put up by this group is non-profit housing. It followed the rules and regulations set out by the Government in co-operation with the provincial Government and the non-profit housing program. They followed the rules.

FISHERIES

CLOSURE OF INSHORE FISHERY

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

The disaster facing thousands of people in southwestern Nova Scotia is now more real with the proposal put forth yesterday by the Minister's advisers which virtually shuts down the whole industry by next Thursday for the rest of the year.

The Minister has been warned by the inshore alliance, the Minister's advisers, and others that the consequences of closing down the inshore fishery will be unprecedented hardships on the communities. I therefore ask the Minister to review his policy before the people choose desperate means to protect their livelihoods.

Will the Minister intervene and do something? Will he perhaps listen to the people of these many communities of southern Nova Scotia?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, while I am certainly as concerned about the plight of the communities of southwestern Nova Scotia as I am of those in all of Atlantic Canada, the problem we are facing this year is one of sustaining the fishery for the long-term future.

It is a fact that the quotas in the Scotia Fundy region have been declining persistently each year over the past decade because more fish have been taken from the water each year than our regulations have provided for. If we are to sustain that fishery and manage it in an orderly way for the long term, we must also manage the quotas. I would discourage anyone who might consider fishing in excess of these quotas when the inevitable closures do occur.

REVIEW OF QUOTA MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. With the offshore fishing on Brown's Banks in the very waters of Scotia Fundy to which the Minister just referred, at a time when the inshore fishermen are not allowed to go in these waters adjacent to the coast, and the fishermen know that there are lots of fish. They just have to look at the catches that are now being caught. The Government is again supporting big corporate interests over the many concerns of the communities across the Province of Nova Scotia.

Will the Minister now review the quota management system that he has used for the last five years, a system with many injustices? Will he review it and at least set up a new policy?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, first I want to point out that the inshore fishery of southwestern Nova Scotia is not being closed down.

In fact, 2,300 of the licensed fishermen in the inshore fishery who fish with fixed gear, gill-nets and long line, will be able to fish through the entire season, and 250 of the larger draggers that have grown and replaced small boats with larger vessels over the last several years will be closed down, because they have already caught more fish by this time this year than they caught by this time last year and they have exceeded their quota.

The comments about the offshore sector are superfluous because they relate to an enterprise allocation scheme which the Hon. Member's Government enacted following the Kirby task force in 1983, something which was confirmed and renewed with the advice of all Atlantic fisheries Ministers and the industry in support of those initiatives.

AGRICULTURE

COMPENSATION FOR INPUT COSTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and concerns the crisis in the Canadian dairy industry.

Last summer the Government adopted a new formula for setting the target price for industrial milk. This formula provided for no indexation for input costs such as rising costs for interest rates and fuel. In the new dairy year starting August 1, I wonder if the Minister will put in place an indexation mechanism to compensate farmers for input costs.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Hon. Member is convening a meeting to discuss the crisis in the dairy industry. I think the crisis in the dairy industry is in the mind of the Hon. Member.

The fact is that last August and again in February, if we were to have stuck to the formula, there would have been a reduction in the target price for industrial milk. The Government, giving due consideration to the fact that there may be an increase in input costs, agreed to waive the cost of production formula and indeed maintain the price at the current level, notwithstanding the fact that it should have been reduced by $1.89 in August and 14 cents in February. I think that shows the kind of flexibility that is generous and compassionate with the dairy farmers, and we intend to continue that way.

On another point, I have indicated to the dairy farmers of Canada that this particular issue, the cost of production formula indexation, the issue of the trade negotiations and discussions with regard to the renewal of the five-year dairy plan, are things that I am prepared to discuss with them in a formalized way under a proposition which we would refer to as a dairy task force.

We are inviting dairy farmers and other participants to engage with the Government in trying to sort out a deal with all these very important issues. I hope I will have the support of the Hon. Member in that regard.

INCOME OF FARMERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that diary farmers are very concerned that the Government has agreed to a deal whereby their prices can go down but their prices and incomes cannot go up until 1991.

The Minister has not indicated in his answer that he is prepared to put in place an indexation mechanism until 1991. Why would the Government agree to a deal whereby farmers' incomes can go down but cannot go up until the year 1991?

• (1440)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I just told the Hon. Member, the actions of the Government do not support that proposition. When the cost of the production formula was to trigger a downward price in the target price, the Government of Canada ignored the reality of that and maintained the price level. We still have that same flexibility under the arrangement to which the Hon. Member refers.

I invite the dairy farmers of Canada and others, including the Hon. Member, to participate with us in working out this very important issue, the trade issue, the future of the five-year dairy policy, the cost of production formula, the transferral of quotas, and all those things that have an effect upon the dairy industry in Canada.

We would like to work at it from a constructive basis, not the destructive course that the Hon. Member is on.

FINANCE

THE NEW SALES TAX—REQUEST AS TO WHETHER MINISTER IN AGREEMENT WITH MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Mrs. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I am sure the Minister would agree that his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, is a man of integrity. On Saturday June 10, when he spoke at a meeting of the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs told a Toronto newspaper that the new sales tax would not be hidden. I quote:

[English]

"Visibility, I think, is the only way to ensure that consumers in the end don't get ripped off".

[Translation]

The Minister was right. We know that. Consumers know that. I therefore want to ask the Minister of Finance whether he agrees with his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, that the only way to ensure that consumers are not ripped off is to make the new sales tax a visible part of the price.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me remind my hon. friend of what I stated in a previous answer. When we have an existing sales tax that is buried deep in the production process it results in a spread between the high effective rate and the low effective rate.

Let me again give some examples: household appliances six and a half points; watches, four points. There is no consistency with the existing tax. The effective rate of tax at the retail level may be 3 per cent, 5 per cent, 10 per cent, or 13.5 per cent.

With this new tax it will be quite clear that on all taxable goods and services it will be 9 per cent. We will be moving away from the hidden tax that we have today, the manufactured sales tax, to one that is quite transparent for the consumer to see.

WITHDRAWAL OF HIDDEN TAX—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, it will still be a hidden tax. It will still be easy to raise that tax without the consumer being aware of it.

Whether it is special charitable tax status for their friends, windfall profits for tobacco companies, or tax deductions for free traders, when it comes to tax breaks the average Canadian gets the short end of the stick with this Government.

Will the Minister defend the interests of average Canadians and withdraw this ill-conceived "now you see it, now you don't" sales tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member states that the consumer will not be aware. If there is ever a change in the sales tax, the consumer will be very much aware of that. The rate at the retail level will be the same for all goods and services that are taxable.

The Hon. Member talks about the average Canadian, and do we have an interest in protecting the average Canadian. Yes, and that will be very clear when this technical paper comes out.

In that technical paper the Hon. Member will see that we have enhanced the value of the refundable sales tax credit for people in the low and lower middle income brackets. We are ensuring the objective that we set out in the Budget of families earning less than $30,000 being better off after this sales tax reform.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CFB CALGARY—COMMITMENTS OF DEPARTMENT

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Defence. Canadian Forces Base Calgary is on land owned by the Sarcee Indians of Alberta. In 1985, DND signed a document with those Indians that gave certain conditions. One was free access to a portion of the land by the Indians, and the second was ensuring against environmental contamination. DND has breached both conditions of that legal document.

Will the Minister personally intervene to see that DND lives up to the commitments that it signed in 1985?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member makes a statement that is not factual, that there has been a breach. What there is is a misunderstanding or a misinterpretation. There is a misinterpretation on behalf of one of the parties that negotiated the lease.

We have offered to have discussions with the Sarcee Band. As a matter of fact, I believe earlier this week there was, or later this week there will be, a representative of my Department in Calgary to discuss with the Sarcee Band what this misunderstanding may be. We will discuss it through the usual channels.

Two parties signed a contract. The contract was negotiated by people who understood the language and the terms and conditions. We hope to be able to settle it, as other individuals would between two contractors.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL MEETING WITH SARCEE BAND

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the Indians certainly understand, with legal advice, that there is a breach of the legal document signed in 1985. They are not prepared to meet with officials. They want to meet with the Minister.

Will the Minister personally meet with the Sarcees in an attempt to resolve this dispute before it goes to court?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, before I can answer the Hon. Member's question, I would like to have the advice of my official who today, tomorrow, or yesterday was or will be discussing with the Sarcees the agreements in the lease.

The Hon. Member is asking for the Minister to become involved in what is a dispute of legal terms. If the Hon. Member wishes to provide information in a legal sense to his friends, he can do so. I don believe that I am capable of that.

NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

ESTABLISHMENT OF AGENCY

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology. As the Minister may be aware, the people and Government of the Northwest Territories are currently engaged in a major economic planning process.

While northerners are attempting to set their own agenda in terms of economic strategy, we will continue to require sizeable federal support to assist us in the development of our economy for the foreseeable future.

Since a stronger northern economy means a stronger Canada, will the Minister agree to the establishment of a development agency for the North?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, there is a whole Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Therefore, there is a Department that has the responsibility for northern development.

Mr. Anawak: The attitude of the Minister betrays the ignorance of the Government.

EXTENSION OF TOURISM AND SMALL BUSINESS AGREEMENTS

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. The Minister's Department has tourism and small business economic subagreements with the Government of the Northwest Territories that will be expiring soon. The Government of the Northwest Territories has requested an extension of those agreements.

Will the Minister give an undertaking today to extend those two agreements which are so important to the economy of the Northwest Territories?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question. I must confess that I entered Question Period today hoping that I would get a question, since I have not had one in this session.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, our Department is in constant negotiation with the Governments of both the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory. The status of agreements between our Governments are constantly under review and are regularly being negotiated.

At the eleventh National Northern Development Conference held in Edmonton last October, the territorial government Leaders agreed that their economies were among the strongest in Canada. This economic resurgence was further in evidence at the Prospects North '89 Conference which was held in Yellowknife in June of this year.

I would like to suggest the evidence is very clear that the policies of the Government have been extremely favourable to economic circumstances in the Northwest Territories.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONFIRM A NEWS ITEM

Mr. Jacques Vien (Laurentides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

Today's edition of La Presse reports that the Québec Minister of Transport never received the memorandum of agreement on Highway 13.

Could the Minister of Transport confirm this statement by his provincial counterpart's parliamentary secretary?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when the memorandum of agreement was signed in March 1988, the Minister of State (Transport) at the time, the Hon. Member for Rimouski, transmitted the memorandum of agreement, which sets the funding amounts of the agreement between Ottawa and Québec, to the Québec Minister of Transport who has had the memorandum for the past fourteen months.

So I believe the Québec Government has had the document for well over a year.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REMARKS OF CONSTITUENT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post who last week in this House singled out by name and residency one of my constituents. That constituent is Mr. Edward Kjargaard, the RM of Douglas, who wrote to me to say that he was misrepresented by Canada Post and the Minister in his remarks in the House.

An Hon. Member: What else is new?

Mr. Taylor: Is the Minister responsible for Canada Post prepared to take this opportunity to apologize to my constituent for that misrepresentation?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the ad in question placed by Canada Post contains the signatures of municipal leaders across the country. They signed documents supporting this statement and releasing the Post Office to use their endorsement for whatever purposes.

If the endorsement of the Hon. Member's constituent is in keeping with the results of the Gallup poll which showed that 97 per cent of rural Canadians—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: —think the postal service has improved, I guess we can put the Hon. Member in the 3 per cent minority.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC RELATIONS ACTIVITIES

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister.

It appears, as my constituent says, that the Post Office was more interested in his signature than his opinion.

If Canada Post is misleading the public in this situation, are we to believe that Canada Post is trying to mislead Canadians in all its public relations activities?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member should go back to his constituent and ask him why he signed a document he did not know the contents of.

VIA RAIL

REINTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

In 1986 the Government bragged about its VIA legislation, Bill C-97, but then allowed it to die an ignoble Tory death. Given the current crisis facing VIA, will the Government now commit itself to reintroduction of that legislation to guarantee the independent survival of VIA Rail?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well that we are in a process with VIA Rail which will result in its presenting to me in a few weeks its report concerning the new reference levels which have been given to the company.

I do not believe that it is relevant at the present time to talk about any type of legislation. First, we will look at the proposal dealing with the new reference levels.

Mr. Dionne: I can assure the Minister that the travelling public thinks that it is relevant.

COMMITTEE REVIEW OF BUSINESS PLAN

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared to turn over to the Transport Committee for public scrutiny and review the business plan of VIA Rail so that the committee can review it and pass comment on it?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is very obvious that I do not intend to make any other commitment than to consider the proposals that VIA Rail will make concerning its ability to live within the reference levels that we set for it and, from that, to make recommendations to the Government. There is no question of making any commitment on legislation or a reference to the Transport Committee.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

IMPACT OF NATIONAL FORUM—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Brian O'Kurley (Elk Island): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It relates to the issue of family violence and, more specifically, to the National Forum on Family Violence which is in progress.

Since this is an extremely important subject to many Canadians from coast to coast, will the Minister please tell us what the federal Government has done and what it is planning to do in dealing with this serious problem?

As well, what effect will the conference have on legislation and government policy?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this is indeed an important question on an extremely important issue.

The federal Government has two key initiatives. The first deals with family violence, which involves some six different Departments of Government at a cost of some $40 million. The other deals with child sexual abuse, which involves some $25 million.

Among the initiatives being taken on family violence is a major increase in the number of shelters for battered women and their children. This conference will help to provide to the Government information to develop a national strategy which will involve the federal Government—

Ms. Copps: How about some money?

Mr. Beatty: The Hon. Member says: "How about some money?" Sixty-five million dollars is a considerable amount of money.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: It's a drop in the bucket.

Mr. Beatty: Only a Liberal would say: "What is $65 million?"

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Just two days ago in Halifax the Prime Minister finally came clean with Canadians. He finally acknowledged the sorry state of Canada's technological efforts.

The record of the Government is abysmal. We are among the worst performers in terms of research and development among any industrialized country in the world.

Over the past five years, during which time this Government has been in office, the level of research and development in Canada has actually declined.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Peterson: In spite of this the Government refuses to increase its already abysmal level of investment in Canadian—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Peterson: —jobs for the future.

Will the Prime Minister tell us when his Government will do even its fair share in order to create a level playing field for Canadians, a level playing field at least in research and development.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for an excellent question on a very important matter involving Canada's well-being.

In fact, he will be interested to know that Statistics Canada figures show that the federal Government funds about 85 per cent of all public sector R and D in Canada. The federal Government spends 10 times more on research and development in Ontario than does the Government of Ontario.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Where was the Government of Ontario on Bill C-22?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend makes a good point in regard—

[Translation]

M. Ouellet: That proves to you that you are not spending enough in Québec.

An Hon. Member: Remember Bill C-22, André!

Mr. Mulroney: Yes, the Hon. Member tells me— The Liberal Member for Papineau tells me about Québec, while the Liberal Party was opposed to a bill that resulted in $1.4 billion being spent in Québec. The Liberals were opposed to it. This Government took that action in favour of a sound research and development policy for Canada.

THE ENVIRONMENT

SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT AND THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister and concerns sustainable development and the environment.

[English]

The Science Council of Canada, in its report entitled Environmental Peacekeepers, recommends a very active role for the Department of Industry, Science and Technology in promoting the goal of a clean and healthy environment and sustainable development. This is entirely consistent with the recommendations of the Brundtland Commission report, which the Government has also praised.

Will the Prime Minister explain to the House why Canadians should take seriously his claims that the environment is the first priority in light of the fact that the Government has refused to give a legal onus to the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology in seeking to achieve this goal of sustainable development?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I got the full—

Ms. Copps: There was an amendment last night that was not passed.

Mr. Mulroney: —the full drift of the question—apart from a legislative change in the last 24 hours—but there is nothing at all that has taken place by this Government today or yesterday or at any time, specifically yesterday and last evening, at variance with what Prime Minister Brundtland said herself.

Ms. Copps: False.

Mr. Mulroney: In Washington, Prime Minister Brundtland said of Canada that if all the nations of the world conducted themselves with regard to the achievement of sustainable development as Canada has, with the leadership that Canada is providing, all of us would be much further along in achieving ultimately the goal of sustainable development around the world.

FISHERIES

IMPORTING OF LIVE BAIT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister is aware that until the signing of the Free Trade Agreement it was illegal to import live bait into the Province of Ontario. The Minister is also aware that at the present time truckloads of live bait are entering northern Ontario, threatening the fishing industry in Ontario and northern Manitoba. Why has the federal Government done absolutely nothing to protect our stocks?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what free trade and the trucking of live bait has to do with protecting our live stocks in Lake Ontario and in the Ontario fishery, which are administered under an agreement by the Province of Ontario. I will certainly look into the question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan on a short supplementary. That will be the last question.

TRANSPORTATION

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister will know that VIA's first quarterly report shows that revenue is up, more people are using the trains and costs are down. Will the Minister go back and tell Cabinet that it was misled and in fact there are 1.45 billion passenger miles per year of usage in VIA Rail? Will he go back to Cabinet to say the Government made a mistake, it is in error and wants to keep VIA? Will he do that?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is 3.05. No.

PETITIONS

OFFSHORE HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition, thanks to the work of Greenpeace, on behalf of residents of Salmon Arm, Vancouver, Sicamous, Enderby and Tappen. There are hundreds and hundreds of people who point out that they are very concerned that the Government is looking at the West Coast as a place to do drilling. They point out that the West Coast of British Columbia is Canada's most earthquake prone region. The Queen Charlotte's basin has even higher earthquake activity than the San Andreas Fault.

Fundamentally, they do not want any more hydrocarbon exploration activities to take place in our coastal waters, be they initiated by the public or private sector, nor do they want the Government to pay for such activities from this day on.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table hundreds of petitions that have been found in order by the Clerk of Petitions. The petitions, provided by the work of Greenpeace, are from Calgary and other communities in Alberta and throughout British Columbia who are concerned about the 1988 agreement creating the South Moresby National Park Reserve. The federal Government has now committed itself to spend $20 million or more to explore for minerals and hydrocarbons in this first national marine park. They are concerned that exploring for hydrocarbons in the waters around the Queen Charlottes, particularly Hecate Strait and Queen Charlotte Sound, would be unwise because of the earthquake prone nature of the area and the fact that there is extensive earthquake activity from the San Andreas Fault and that the waters surrounding the area are the roughest and the most unpredictable in the world. Therefore these hundreds of petitioners ask that there be no further consideration of hydrocarbon exploration activities in the coastal waters of British Columbia and that there be a permanent moratorium placed on such offshore hydrocarbon exploration and development.

EXTRADITION LAW AMENDMENTS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, evidence is mounting that Canada is perceived by criminals in the United States as a safe haven. Our extradition laws offer them many years of sanctuary from capital punishment in the United States as we weave our way through a maze of court appeals.

My petition today represents the signatures of 2,152 people from Peterborough, British Columbia, Alberta, Ontario and Nova Scotia. These people are asking the Government of Canada to revise its extradition laws in order that we prevent Canada from becoming a haven for escaped convicts from the United States.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE ORCHESTRA

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise to plead with this House to consider petitions that have been submitted by hundreds of people who appreciate the quality of our National Arts Centre Orchestra.

The undersigned have written that they consider the National Arts Centre Orchestra to be a world class one that has brought fame to Canada and to its capital city. In fact, it is the jewel of Canada. They believe that the National Arts Centre Orchestra is in imminent danger of being damaged or even destroyed, and they consider the present management have proved themselves to be incompetent, or if not, inadequate in artistic matters. They call upon this House as a matter of priority to ensure that the National Arts Centre maintains its Orchestra at its current size, not cut, and at the present standard of excellence.

The petitioners wish to ensure that sound, cultural credentials are maintained as a criteria for any new appointments to the National Arts Centre Board of Trustees.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table several petitions concerning our national orchestra which for many years has build up an impressive record based on the quality of its performance and its importance in the cultural sphere.

The people who signed this petition are from my own riding—from Rockcliffe, New Edinburgh and Sandy Hill. These are people who go regularly to the National Arts Centre and would like Parliament to urge the administration of the NAC to act quickly to ensure that our national orchestra will continue to exist and pursue its outstanding work in the music field.

[English]

EXTRADITION LAW AMENDMENTS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, following what my colleague from Peterborough has presented to the House of Commons this afternoon, I have here, pursuant to the Standing Orders, a petition that will bring in excess of 50,000 signatures to the attention of the Government of those people who are extremely concerned about our present extradition laws. No longer do we feel in this nation that we can provide a safe haven for criminals who are alleged to have committed atrocious crimes in the United States and yet who can hide behind the judicial system in this country. My petitioners humbly pray that the Government address this problem immediately.

OFFSHORE HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition similar to those of my colleague's with respect to offshore exploration. These are signatures from Argentia, British Columbia and a number from the ridings of Vancouver Centre and Vancouver South.

The petitioners claim that the West Coast of British Columbia is Canada's most earthquake-prone region, that the Queen Charlotte basin has even higher earthquake activity than the San Andreas Fault and that the Hecate Strait has some of the roughest and most unpredictable seas in the world. Therefore this petition, gathered by Greenpeace, implores the Government and the private sector not to do any exploration activities in that area and especially in the national marine park of South Moresby.

IMMIGRATION—REFUGEE CLAIMANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition from over 100 residents in the City of Toronto, duly signed by the Clerk of Petitions and certified. The petitioners are concerned for the refugee claimants who came here before 1989 and who are now in the backlog, as it is called.

Many of these people have been denied work permits. They are also concerned that in the humanitarian evaluation of their cases, which will begin next month, the Minister should use fair and reasonable criteria. For example, it should include the presence in Canada of relatives. It should include successful establishment in Canada and special consideration should be given to those refugee claimants fleeing war zones, oppressive governments and natural disasters.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 78, 79, 80 and 81.

[Text]

ACQUISITION OF HELICOPTER

Question No. 78—Mr. Simmons:

1. Has any action been taken by the government relating to the concern expressed by the Auditor General in his 1988 Report to Parliament over the acquisition of a surveillance helicopter, including inadequate assessment of the number of days when conditions would permit the helicopter to fly and, if so, (a) what was such action (b) what additional costs, if any, were involved in modifying fishery patrol vessels to make them suitable for landing?

2. What action, if any, has been taken to acquire the expertise in this area either on a staff or a contract basis, as recommended by the Auditor General?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1(a) In response to the need identified, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has established a system, including the appointment of a regional Trials Officer and the introduction of a data collection format to assess the number of days, on average, a helicopter would be permitted to fly.

1(b) The helicopter is based on the FPV L.J. COWLEY which was designed for helicopter operations. The modification cost was $48.7K for the purchase and installation of a second beacon on the vessel. The Department has delayed modification of a second fisheries patrol vessel until a full assessment can be carried out after the trial period, which ends this fiscal year 1989-90.

(2) When contracting out aerial surveillance needs, the Department has relied, and continues to rely, on the expertise within other Government departments (DSS, MOT). This was the case in the most recent acquisition of a helicopter for South West Nova Scotia in which DFO worked extensively with the National Search and Rescue Secretariat (NSS) in identifying our requirements. In addition, NSS was fully involved in the evaluation of the bids received for this contract. This approach has proven effective to date.

ACQUISITION OF VESSELS

Question No. 79—Mr. Simmons:

1. Has any action been taken by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to avoid the past difficulties experienced in the acquisition of 42 ft. patrol vessels?

2. Has the Department taken whatever steps that are necessary to monitor adequately the effects on stability, handling, or operational capability in future acquisitions of such vessels?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. Yes, the Department has rectified these problems by rigorously monitoring vessel construction, crew training and professional marine management of vessels. Safety of vessel operations is always closely monitored, particularly with new vessels and in this case all problems with the 42 foot vessels were identified and rectified immediately.

2. All major and minor vessels acquired by the Department must be tested for stability by a qualified Naval Architect and must have a Canadian Coast Guard, Ship Safety Directorate approved Stability Booklet onboard prior to final acceptance and issue of a Voyage Safety Certificate. In the case of the 42 foot vessels, a series of mathematical models have been conducted in two phases to simulate sea-keeping in various sea states. Results indicate that these vessels behave normally and are safe to operate up to sea state 4, the maximum that can reasonably be expected. It is also intended to verify and correlate the mathematical derived data by conducting full scale sea-keeping trials on one of these vessels during 1989.

FISH INSPECTION PROGRAM

Question No. 80—Mr. Simmons:

What action, if any, has the Department of Fisheries and Oceans taken to resolve the problems, as outlined in the 1988 Auditor General's Report, that the fish inspection program faces considerable pressures in that the training for inspectors is insufficient, there are inconsistencies in standards and procedures, manuals are often out of date, and that weaknesses in management control exist?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): While the Department, through its 1986 reorganization, had taken steps to focus time and energy to ensure inspectors have the best possible training and tools for their work, one should also consider the Auditor General's statement regarding the inspection program in which he stated "we were impressed throughout the audit by the high international reputation of Canada's fish inspection program. Few other countries have such a comprehensive system.

Also noteworthy is the department's work with industry to improve fish product quality." The public can have confidence in the fish inspection system due to its multi-facetted nature involving inspection of vessels, unloading practices, raw product, transportation, plants processing practices, and final product. While the Department is taking, and has taken, action to ensure that the Canadian fish inspection system remains as one of the best in the world, the multi-facetted approach provides assurance that the fish now on the market meets standards in spite of the limitations of any one aspect of the inspection program. Any problems that did exist resulted from a lack of central direction and control. In 1986 the Department undertook a major reorganization that, among other things, centralized authority and accountability for the inspection program. As noted in the report, many initiatives to improve management of the inspection program were being planned or were under development at the time of the audit, but at the time of the audit the improvements had not had an impact at the inspector level. Since the audit, a Fish Products Inspection Manual has been issued to inspectors and results are being felt at the field level.

The following outlines the action taken to date in response to specific comments regarding fish inspection which the Auditor General made in his 1988 Report.

–Sampling. The Auditor General raised concerns regarding the Department's sampling plans. The Department has been evaluating an alternative internationally recognized sampling plan for two years and is now implementing major pilot projects to test the new sampling plan under practical conditions. If the pilot projects prove that the new sampling plan performs as expected, the new plan will be introduced early in 1990.

–Inconsistencies in standards and procedures. The Department issued the "Fish Products Inspection Manual Policies and Procedures" to all inspectors in February of this year. While the "Fish Products Inspection Manual Standards and Methods" is scheduled to be released this year, six (6) specific product standards and methods chapters have already been forwarded to the field for use and other standards and methods will be released shortly. By the end of 1989/90 more than 80 per cent of all fish products will be covered by newly revised standards and methods.

The "Metal Can Defect Manual" will be published this month. The Facilities Inspection Manual will be released as a first draft by July.

These new manuals and standards will complete the task of reissuing a revised set of instructions to all staff.

–Training. The Auditor General raised concerns over training. The Department has been developing national training packages for some time. Inspectors will be evaluated in 1989/90 to determine their specific training needs. Training will be delivered in 37 training modules. Twenty (20) modules are now complete and training will commence in 1989/90. University level courses in sensory evaluation for inspectors started in 1986/87 and are continuing.

–Inspector Testing. Inspector testing continues with respect to tuna. A series of workshops will be held in June to lay the groundwork for testing inspectors evaluations of other products. Work on chemical indicators of spoilage is continuing and will help in the testing of inspectors. A national inspection laboratory was established in 1988 in Ottawa and is now equipped and staffed to assist in work on chemical indicators of spoilage.

–Management Weakness. Management weakness in information systems and program control are being addressed through the development of a comprehensive Management Information System (MIS) that will indicate where effort is spent and what results are achieved. Portions of the MIS will be completed in 1989/90 and in conjunction with the work on manuals and audits will provide improved management control.

–Field Reviews. Audits of field application of standards and compliance to policies and procedures will start in early 1990.

–In–Plant Quality Control. The Auditor General questioned why the Department does not use existing company in–plant quality control systems to help assure that standards are met. The Department is now moving ahead with implementation of a comprehensive Quality Management Program that will involve coordinated company and government action to ensure that standards are met.

EXTENSION OF LEASE

Question No. 81—Mr. Boudria:

1. Does the government intend to extend its rental lease with the Campeau Corporation for Tower C, Ottawa, Ont. and, if so (a) at what cost (b) what is the estimated cost to the government for the (i) asbestos clean–up (ii) air conditioning and heating retrofit of the building?

2. Did the government receive bids for other leases and, if so, from whom and what was the amount in each case?

3. Did the government plan to vacate the building and, if so, what were the anticipated costs of such a move?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): 1. The Minister of Public Works is investigating the feasibility of a proposal to the Treasury Board to enter into a medium term arrangement with the owner of Tower C, Place de Ville, which is one of the buildings currently occupied by Transport Canada. Since the final lease arrangements have not yet been finalized with the Campeau Corporation, the total occupancy cost, including the government's share of the refit costs, are still not known.

2. In December 1988, a lease proposal call was advertised for 80,626 m2U to provide accomodation for the National Headquarters of Transport Canada. Twenty–one lease proposals were submitted, resulting in 14 qualified bids, with rates for each five years of the proposed twenty-year term. Listed below are the names of the Offerors with the rates for the first five years of the term:

Seltzer (Gloucester) Development		$365.94
Bourque, Pierre et Fils Ltée		231.50
795009 Ontario Ltd. Angevin Group (disqualified)		(1152.00)
Les Entreprises Duroc-Lachapelle Inc.		234.00
Les Placements Alize Quebec Ltée (disqualified)		(127.89)
Calmar Quebec Ltée (disqualified)		(160.94)
Campeau Corporation (2) (1 disqualified)	$363.15	(350.00)
Glenview Corporation (2)	275.14	249.13
Les Développements immobiliers Gamelin Ltée		244.00
Lithwick Family Holdings Inc.		289.05
Les Entreprises H.L.P. Inc.		251.10
Minto Corporation (2)	352.38	363.14
Matthews Group Limited		239.77
Perez Corporation		299.78
W.D. Laflamme Ltée (disqualified)		(297.00)
Marchant Development (disqualified)		(355.20)
Ossory Canada Inc. (disqualified)		(299.00)
Rampart Building Corporation		262.50

3. To consolidate the Headquarters of Transport Canada, a lease proposal call was advertised; but the Government decided, within the context of the April budget, not to proceed with it. In this scenario, the estimated moving and fit-up costs were $1,000,000.00 and $15,000,000.00 respectively.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

MOTION THAT DEBATE NOT BE FURTHER ADJOURNED

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) I move:

That the debate on the motion for second reading of an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Employment and Immigration Department and Commission Act and on any amendments proposed thereto shall not be further adjourned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 7, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Employment and Immigration Department and Commission Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Allmand that:

The motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "that" and by substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Employment and Immigration Department and Commission Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has applied closure to the Bill and closed off debate. It has locked out the unemployed of our country and told those without a job in Canada, "We don't have any more time to talk about you". That is the type of hammer that the Government has applied against the unemployed in Canada.

This debate is about how we as a nation treat people who, through no fault of their own, have lost their jobs. This debate is about whether or not we believe that governments at all levels, particularly the Government in Ottawa, have a commitment to help Canadian workers when they need that help the most, when they become unemployed.

With this legislation the Government is pulling out of the most basic of our social programs, the most fundamental element of the social net of Canada, the unemployment insurance, protecting as it has for more than 40 years the unemployed of this country, as a matter not of discretion but as a matter of right, and as a matter going to the pride of every Canadian worker, and not a matter of welfare. By pulling $2 billion out of the unemployment insurance program, leaving it merely to employers and employees to finance the program, it is privatizing unemployment insurance. It is privatizing the most fundamental social program in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is part of the same agenda through which we have seen privatization everywhere: we suffer the dilution in the privatizing of our transportation infrastructure, selling off Air Canada, the public air transport in the country, closing down rail transportation and passenger service at VIA Rail, closing down the rural post offices and the rural postal routes, abandoning regional economic development, shutting down rural and small-town Canada, and now destroying our social programs by privatizing them and leaving the unemployed to their own resorts.

We now see the Americanization of our national policies in full flight as a result of the trade agreement, as a result of the philosophy of the Speech from the Throne, as a result of the philosophy inherent in the Budget, and now, of course, as a result of this legislation cutting unemployment insurance.

We have known for some time, and we have brought it to the attention of the Government, that the American government has always considered unemployment insurance an unacceptable subsidy offending the meaning of its trade legislation, the 1930 Trade Act, the 1974 Trade Act, and the omnibus trade bill passed by the Congress last year. This Government pulled out of unemployment insurance before the negotiations on the definition of subsidy ever began. It knuckled under once again to the American government. As part of the trade agreement, it privatized unemployment insurance at the expense of the Canadian worker in favour of American business.

The Tory solution as to how Canada should treat people who lose their jobs, through no fault of their own, is to cut $2 billion out of the unemployment insurance program, to make unemployment insurance more difficult to receive by extending the period needed to qualify for benefits, and by making the benefit period shorter. It is like throwing an anchor out to a drowning man.

This Bill reflects an attitude that considers people who lose their jobs not as powerless victims of economic circumstances but as lazy, good-for-nothing bums who don't deserve our help and support. As was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) on June 6 here in the House, our Party agrees with the need to reduce the deficit but never at the expense of the unemployed, the sick, the disabled, the poor and the destitute.

The Conservative Government does not agree. It believes that the best way to reduce the deficit is to do so at the expense of the weakest and neediest members of our society.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is why it has decided to reduce unemployment insurance benefits. It is easier to run roughshod over people who can't defend themselves, people without influence, the underclasses, people who are powerless in their own country. The same attitude is reflected in the Government's approach to the new sales tax, in the cuts applied to childcare expenses, the reductions in transfer payments for education and health and the incredible tax increases this Government has imposed on Canadian families since 1984, families on low and middle incomes, while at the same time providing tax relief for the rich.

[English]

This Bill is the further implementation of the Tories' right-wing agenda, an agenda they kept hidden and secret during the election campaign. They kept it secret because they knew that the vast majority of Canadians would simply not accept such Draconian and cowardly measures. The Tories did not merely keep silent about that agenda, they did not merely keep silent about their real intentions, they went one step further. They deliberately misled Canadians by saying they would never touch unemployment insurance.

I want to take Members to a scene before a whole host of Conservative supporters at the Hotel Newfoundland in St. John's on October 13. In response to reporters, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) stated: "The federal Government has no plans to make changes to the unemployment insurance program". Those were the words of the Minister for International Trade. Of course, in St. John's the reporters know him well, so they asked him if he had checked this with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The Prime Minister was in the same room with him speaking to the same gathering of Conservatives. In response to that question from reporters, the Minister stated: "You're damn right I asked him about it and he said no, no one is planning any changes in the unemployment insurance program". That is what was stated by the Minister for International Trade on the authority of the Prime Minister of Canada a few days before the election.

To put it bluntly, either the Prime Minister did not tell the truth to the Minister for International Trade, or the Minister for International Trade did not tell the truth to the Canadian people. I suspect that neither of them told the truth to the Canadian people.

Everyone in the country knows that this legislation will shift people off unemployment insurance and onto welfare. As reported in Hansard on June 6, at page 2677, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) stated: "Nothing could be further from the truth".

How does the Minister of Employment and Immigration respond to the Tory Premier of Nova Scotia, Mr. Buchanan? He had this to say about the changes announced by the Minister: "This is of grave concern to me because that means there is a transfer of funding for these people from the unemployment insurance books to our social service books". The Premier is absolutely correct.

We have asked for the impact studies on which this legislation is based.

In fact, the Government has given no thought at all to the potential impact of these measures on the unemployed, let alone the provincial governments. The changes made within the program will also have the effect of taking money out of the pockets of the unemployed to put it into training programs.

Our Party wants training and skills upgrading programs, and it has demanded those for years. We need more of these programs. However, we always took the position that funds earmarked for training programs would come out of the country's general Budget or be provided jointly by business and the government.

Now today, after cutting training and retraining programs for four and a half years, the Government discovers that training is important. However, instead of creating new ways to finance training programs, the Government takes money from the unemployed to pay for these programs.

What will happen is that poorly paid workers in labour-intensive industries will finance the training of skilled workers who hold highly technical jobs in industries that do not employ many workers.

The new programs, which have not yet been announced, will not apply equally to all regions and are not transferable. An unemployed person in Newfoudland cannot be trained to be an auto worker. People who lose their jobs in regions that offer no other employment opportunities will have their unemployment insurance benefits reduced to pay for training programs in which they cannot take part.

And to justify these brutal changes, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) says that the unemployed do not pay for unemployment insurance, that only those who have a job pay into it, and that therefore, the Government is not taking money from the unemployed.

Of course, the opposite is true: the unemployed will pay for these cuts. They will pay by receiving less money than they would be entitled to under the present program. It is completely wrong to say that the unemployed will not pay.

Unemployment Insurance Act

[English]

The Minister of State for Employment and Immigration (Mrs. Vézina) told the House last Friday: "We are not cutting our programs, we are making them more effective and more productive".

How does the Minister explain that to an employee of a small trucking company in Moncton where the unemployment rate is now 11.3 per cent? How can she explain that it is "more effective", to use her words, to be required to work four weeks longer to qualify for any unemployment insurance benefits, and that it is not cutting the program when they will be entitled to seven weeks less of insurance payments?

What does the Government say to the clerk in Corner Brook where there is an unemployment rate of 17.6 per cent? How is it more effective for that person to receive three weeks less in unemployment insurance cheques?

How does the Government explain to the miner in Sudbury, where the unemployment rate is 8.5 per cent, that working six more weeks to qualify and then receiving five weeks less in benefits is not cutting benefits?

What does the Government tell the unemployed lumberman in the Kootenays, where the unemployment rate is 12.1 per cent, who will now need three more weeks work to qualify and who will receive eight weeks less in unemployment insurance?

What does the Minister and the Prime Minister suggest unemployed parents tell their children when there is not enough money to put food on the table, or to buy proper clothing, or to find an adequate and decent place to live?

We are seeing here a Government that ascribes to the big lie theory, practised by so many deceitful regimes around the world to justify their actions. The method is simple. If something is said often enough and loud enough it eventually becomes the truth.

Here is what the Prime Minister said during the French television debate with myself and the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). "We shall maintain all our social programs, without fail. There is nothing in the Free Trade Agreement that will prevent us from fulfilling these obligations, nor in the future, and we intend to spend more on these programs".

Is cutting $2 billion out of unemployment insurance and making people wait longer for fewer benefits how you would describe the way a Government would maintain "all our social programs without fail", Mr. Speaker? Mr. Speaker, would you say that that was how you would "spend more on these programs"? Of course you would not, Mr. Speaker. That is what the Tory Government says. That is what it expects Canadians to believe.

Canadians no longer believe this incessant propaganda of the federal Government. What they are now seeing is the Government's agenda being completely unmasked. The unemployment insurance cuts, the Budget, the trade deal and the Throne Speech make that perfectly clear.

The agenda is clearly laissez-faire, but markets run the country. Members of the Government have been following a cynical and calculatedly callous public agenda aimed at cutting everything for the average Canadian to make way for the market forces which will benefit the rich and powerful among us. It has become and is becoming the law of the jungle. It is a world in which only the strongest and richest will survive.

We have said in the House before that there is nothing wrong with business—but the business of business is money and profit, which is fine. The business of public life is people. The mistake this Government is making is that it confuses the two and does not make a distinction between them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have said before that I believe in market forces and in competition. I believe in rewarding success. I believe in entrepreneurism. However, Mr. Speaker, you know and I know that the country would not have been built solely on market forces. We built this country east and west and north by resisting the overwhelming continental market forces of the United States. That is why we built a national railway, a national highway, a public broadcasting system, and a national health care system. That is why we had a national public unemployment insurance system paid for by the people of Canada and contributed to by employers and employees alike.

We did those things because we believe as Canadians that the role of our Parliament and the role of our Government is to defend those who cannot defend themselves. I believe that the vast majority of Canadians share this point of view. These values are reflected in programs of fairness that we have built over 122 years.

I am confident that these values can endure. I am confident that Canadians want these values to endure. That is why we will continue to give a voice to those values, to help Canadians understand what is really behind the Tory agenda, what is really behind the philosophy of this Bill, what the Tory Government is doing to make this a very, very different country from the country that we have known.

We have just been present at a vote, the results of which will apply closure against this Bill. Members opposite have the majority. We alone in the Opposition cannot defeat this Bill, which will rob unemployed Canadians of the means to support themselves and their families. Therefore, I want to ask every one of the Conservative back-benchers to consider in his or her conscience just what they are doing here. I want each and every one of the Conservative back-benchers to consider the unemployed in their own riding, the potential unemployed in their ridings and to consider the devastating impact this measure will have on families across the country, in their ridings.

There is no monopoly on unemployment. There is no monopoly on suffering. I want to appeal to the Conservative back-benchers to consider just what they will do at 1 a.m. tomorrow morning in this vote. Each one ought to ask: Is it fair for a federal Government, justified by this Parliament, to make unemployed workers pay the cost of new training programs? I want every one of the Conservative back-benchers to think about whether they really want their constituents pushed off unemployment insurance and onto welfare. I want every Conservative back-bencher to acknowledge that there is a fundamental difference between being on unemployment insurance, a right of citizenship, and being on welfare. Anyone who does not know the difference between the two does not know what Canada is all about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): A fair and fully funded unemployment insurance program leaves the unemployed with a degree of pride. No fault is attached to the accident of unemployment. No degree of blame isput on those who, through no fault of their own, find themselves without a job. Compare that with the indignity and shame of having to go to a food bank, or having to line up for welfare, and then people will know what we are talking about on this side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, you do not solve problems of unemployment by taking money away from the unemployed. We cannot solve the problems of poverty by taking money away from the poor. We cannot solve the Government's problems of the deficit by attacking the people who can least afford to bear that burden. We do not build a better country by tearing down the rights of the disadvantaged.

We have seven hours of debate left on this Bill. I want to ask every Member of Parliament to use every bit of time given to us as freely elected members of the people to bring these issues to the highest court in the land. The greatest privilege any Canadian citizen can have is the one shared by Members of Parliament to represent the weak, the disenfranchised, the disenchanted, those who have not been getting the same opportunities as so many of us have.

I urge every Member of Parliament to join with us at 1 a.m. tomorrow morning, to stand up for the rights and the dignity of Canadian workers, to stand up for the rights of citizenship of a publicly financed unemployment insurance scheme, to stand up for the most fundamental of our social programs, to stand up by voting against this Draconian, repressive, regressive piece of legislation. That is my plea to Members on all sides of the House.

• (1620)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing (Mr. Axworthy).

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, in the five minutes remaining to complete my remarks, I want to continue in the same vein indicating the tragic consequences that will arise as a result of these Draconian measures included in the changes to the unemployment insurance legislation.

The people in my riding see the unemployment rate increasing rather than decreasing and it is not satisfactory to them that their benefits under UI are decreasing when there are no job opportunities for them.

Also, the money which may come from the savings the Government will be making by taking funds out of UI are not likely to be introduced into far-sighted programs but rather into the same short-time shortsighted programs that have existed to date.

The proposals do not make it clear exactly how the Government can justify its hope that the private sector, which in the past has done a woefully inadequate job of retraining and educating workers, will take up this retraining torch and do anything other than look after the private sector's own short-term interests.

The Government's figures indicate that some of the 300,000 Canadians who are currently eligible for UI benefits will not be after these changes take effect. Three hundred thousand Canadians will be thrown on the welfare rolls rather than have the opportunity to obtain UI benefits to which they have contributed throughout their working lives. Without access to the impact studies which the Government must surely have conducted, it is difficult to be precise. Even using these figures, the cost to local economies across the country will, of course, be tragic. The Government's action represents in particular a clear attack on the regions, including the interior of B.C., rural Alberta, the Atlantic Provinces, the North, northern Ontario, north and eastern Quebec and, of course, Saskatchewan. All these areas of the country will suffer an inexcusable and vicious attack.

To compound the problem the federal Government is also banning its support for regionally extended benefits and in so doing is denying any responsibility for regional differences in employment rates which frequently are a direct result of failed federal Government policies. At the present time we are also finding increasingly that federal Government policies are attacking the regions rather than assisting them. This one-two punch is completed when we consider that the Minister of Finance's Budget cuts large amounts of funding destined for many one-industry towns. Entire regions are placed in jeopardy by the Government that sees only balance sheets and accounting formula rather than people.

It is clear that the Bill is a product of the Government's neo-Conservative philosophy rather than any thoughtful government planning.

There are some areas of this legislation which are positive. For example, recognition of the rights of natural parents under the unemployment insurance system is a positive step. But the Government can hardly be said to be visionary on this matter. So too are improvements to sickness benefits which now enable individuals to file for benefits regardless of when, during their claim, they become ill. Another positive step is the change to benefit access afforded to Canadians over 65 years of age.

Once again the Government fought this every step of the way and only after court decisions against the Government did it move to correct these problems.

On behalf of my caucus colleagues and all those across the country who fought long and hard to convince the Government that injustices were being done under the UI system, I think we owe our deepest congratulations for their efforts which have helped move this Government a few steps closer to understanding the need for legislation which is both sensible and sensitive.

I want to conclude by saying that this Bill is more about dividing and conquering than it is about improving the unemployment insurance system. Time after time and clause after clause this Government pits region against region, worker against worker, for an ever shrinking number of dollars.

I do not recall the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) travelling around the country during the election telling people: " Vote for me and I will cut your UI benefits. Vote for me and I will cancel the child care plan. Vote for me and I will cut the amount of money you get through EPF. Vote for me and I will harmonize our nation's social programs with those in the United States. Vote for me and I will make the biggest tax grab in Canadian history".

I do not remember him saying those things, but in the end that surely is what he should have said if he was going to be straightforward and honest with the Canadian people.

These are some of the first shots in the harmonization battle, a battle, I am sad to say, my Party predicted would take place. I will predict that in the weeks and months ahead other similar pieces of legislation will be placed before this House and, as with Bill C-21, the New Democrats will stand firm in their opposition to this kind of regressive legislation. In closing, the Government must start to put people first. For example, the over 12 per cent unemployed in Saskatoon want jobs, not cuts to UI benefits of $1.3 billion a year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair would like to thank the Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing (Mr. Axworthy) for allowing the Chair to recognize the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), technically in the middle of his speech.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise in the House today and express my views of Bill C-21, the views of a parlimentarian who knows the meaning of the terms training, job creation, regional disparity and competition.

Mr. Speaker, since the measures of the labour force development strategy have been discussed extensively, I will merely recall some of its most important aspects.

I would also like to take this opportunity to respond to the criticism from Hon. Members opposite, who in their enthusiasm were at times inclined to misrepresent this Bill.

First of all, I think we should look at the background of this labour force development strategy. Since it came to power, this Government has always put great emphasis on job creation. We believe that a nation's wealth starts with universal access to the labour market.

There is another, equally important principle. Canadians want to work, as long as they are given the means to do so.

[English]

As it turns out, the opportunities in the labour market are reducing for workers with minimal education and professional training. Faced with competition, new productivity methods, more complex equipment, which in turn changes the nature of the jobs offered, Canadians must acquire different skills and more varied skills in all sectors of the economy.

[Translation]

This Bill, with the measures it entails, will help Canadians be better prepared to meet the challenges of the twenty-first century. It is not just a matter of adjusting to the realities of free trade. It is also a matter of being able to take advantage of the enormous potential of Europe in 1992 and of competing with Asian countries.

Beyond all economic considerations, Mr. Speaker, there are men and women to whom a steady, paying job means a better quality of life. And that is exactly the purpose of this Bill.

Throughout the debate on these issues, I was astonished, to put it mildly, every time our friends opposite claimed that Canadians would have more trouble paying the rent or buying food. Mr. Speaker, these are just more scare tactics. Should I say: Once again, our neighbours across the way are going on a witch hunt.

We have $12 billion to spend in the unemployment insurance fund, and we will spend those $12 billion. Not a cent will be saved as result of this reform. All Canadians who are entitled to benefits will receive them. In addition, they will have access to further training and thus acquire additional tools to work their way out of the vicious circle of low-paying jobs, unemployment insurance, welfare, and back to low-paying jobs again.

Something had to be done, Mr. Speaker. Canada may soon be facing a serious shortage of skilled labour. Across this country, I have met entrepreneurs who were desperate because they were unable to find skilled workers. In the circumstances, this Government realized that it had to find the means to turn the situation around.

Mr. Speaker, we didn't do this as a favour to the unions, to employers or to Canadian voters. We did so because we had to pursue the policies of a responsible Government, a Government that is building the future of this country's economy, a Government that believes in the intelligence and creative skills of its workers.

[English]

This reform, to be entirely successful, must be backed by the private sector in terms of concrete measures. Employers have a primary responsibility to train our workforce. The $230 million which we intend to inject into increased training must encourage employers to do their share. It is in the best interest to do so as well as in the best interest of workers.

• (1630)

In this debate on Bill C–21, we also heard our colleagues opposite say that the economically weak regions would be the hardest hit. Mr. Speaker, they obviously do not know what kind of parliamentarian I am. They forget that I have always fought so that regions like mine could be treated in a way that reflects these social and economic characteristics.

Of the $230 million for increased training in the private sector, $50 million will go to help communities whose economy has been affected by market changes. This money is in addition to the $148 million that my Government is already spending on job creation. The Unemployment Insurance Plan will not only be more active, it will also play a role in development.

The Opposition also accused us of perverting the Unemployment Insurance Plan. Such statements obviously show a misunderstanding of Bill C–21.

Take for example the $50 million more for the Canada Assistance Plan so that welfare recipients can acquire skills and experience to get a job. This is a very important target group. They are very often young people of 18 to 25 who dropped out of high school and are marginalized, with no future.

Including money from the provinces, there is $200 million more a year to put welfare recipients back to work. In fact, 20,000 of them will be able to improve their training. Is that what the Opposition calls perverting the Unemployment Insurance Plan? I would call it making the best possible use of the resources available.

Mr. Speaker, with the rhetoric that has been characteristic of this debate, the Opposition has claimed, without explaining why, that Bill C–21 was unfair and misleading. It is not that way at all. Just think about what we are doing for new parents and people who are 65 and over. We propose to allocate an extra $450 million to special benefits. The combination of maternity, parental and sick leave will be increased from 15 to 30 weeks.

These improved benefits will give parents more generous income support while helping them to reconcile professional goals with family responsibilities.

[English]

This represents one of the most progressive measures proposed by any Government. As Minister of State responsible for seniors, I dream of a society free of all forms of discrimination based on age. The Labour Force Development Strategy addresses certain injustices of which persons aged 65 or more are victims. In the future they will be protected by paying UI premiums and having access to benefits when needed.

This measure not only complies with Charter requirements, it also responds to the wishes of thousands of Canadians who want to stay in the labour market and for whom reaching the age of 65 often coincides with the start of a new career.

The Opposition also accused us of cynicism and of wanting to make Canadian workers more docile by penalizing those who leave their jobs without a valid reason. Mr. Speaker, I prefer to reduce the unemployment insurance benefits of workers who leave their jobs voluntarily, in order to help the unemployed who want to work.

I would remind the former of the basic principle of the Unemployment Insurance Program: to provide temporary help for those who had the misfortune of losing their job. That is our definition of the safety–net concept.

At the present time, more than $1 billion in benefits are paid to people who leave their jobs without a valid reason. And I would like to take this opportunity to remind Hon. Members that there are precedents to define those valid reasons and that it is not our intention to oblige people to submit meekly to sexual harassment, racial discrimination or attitudes of that sort. I may also remind Hon. Members that I am the Minister responsible for the employment equity policy and, as such, very much aware of these situations.

What this measure says is that Canadian workers and Canadian employers no longer want to pay as much for people who decide to stop working of their own accord.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, we are offering an improved unemployment insurance plan to this House and to all Canadians. The plan will continue to help those who lose their jobs, in addition to helping them to obtain training.

The unemployment insurance program has ceased to be a passive institution. It is now an active source of additional tools and holds out the hope of a better future to thousands of Canadians who are now unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, we want to create jobs. We want to create opportunities, and training remains the cornerstone of this important social objective. It is a bold plan, but it is commensurate with the challenges my Government intends to meet.

Mr. Speaker, it would be irresponsible to postpone implementation of the labour force strategy. Canadians want these dynamic and effective measures. They don't want to wait six more months. They have waited long enough as it is. Canadians want to work.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Ms. Campbell)—no questions or comments.

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to see this debate today on the Unemployment Insurance Bill, which is intended to give taxpayers control. It is shocking to see that the Minister of State for Employment and Immigration (Mrs. Vézina) is not aware of the cuts that will affect some people—

Where are the Opposition Members, where are the Members representing ridings like South West Nova?

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say, to begin, that we are now debating closure. We only had one day of debate on this Bill. Only three Liberal Members and two New Democrats spoke—

The Minister may say that the Opposition's concerns are not justified, that it is not really what this Bill will do—

[English]

This Bill wants to privatize the unemployment insurance program. I would like to expand on some of the comments made earlier today by my Leader and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) when they spoke on this legislation. This is legislation which will see more than $50 million per year taken out of the economy of Nova Scotia beginning in 1990, taken from seasonal workers who want to stay there to work, who would like to have a year-round job, but due to the seasonality in Canada, it is impossible everywhere to have a year-round job. Perhaps the Minister represents an area where employees can have full-time jobs. She is lucky. The real Minister of Employment who is from Toronto is lucky that she comes from the boom area of Canada.

I would like to talk about the commitment to training contained in this Bill over which the Government and the Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) (Mrs. Vézina) have congratulated themselves for having made some tough choices. Among other things, Bill C-21 calls for the transfer of some $800 million from the main unemployment insurance account, that pool of money into which Canadians deposit about $13 billion annually, for a variety of public and private sector retraining initiatives. This is what the Government is planning.

It is a basic moral obscenity when the Government reduces training funds by $700 million from 1984 to 1989, and turns around and taxes those least able to afford it in order to demonstrate some long-term commitment to their employment welfare.

We in the Opposition have long demanded more generous training programs, both as a principle of good labour-market management and in response to the challenges that the Government sees in the Free Trade Agreement. But never in our darkest imaginings could we have foreseen the spectre of a Canadian Government taking away the hard earned benefits of those who through no fault of their own find themselves out of work, in order to reconstitute a training regime or program which it was responsible for gutting in the first place.

The training initiatives provided in C–21 also clearly constitute an unfair transfer of resources. The jobless are being told to pay the freight for those who wish to upgrade their skills when in fact those on unemployment insurance tend to lack the literacy skills and level of comprehension of UIC procedures necessary to take full advantage of the training programs on which the Government prides itself.

If history is any guide, it is the large companies like IBM, which already administer effective training programs, that will fully utilize these incentives, leaving some poor displaced worker, who would use UIC benefits to pay for basic food and shelter, seeing his or her money go to pay for the computer skills course of some well–heeled middle manager.

The design of the proposals contained in C–21 also demonstrate once again the Government's time–honoured habit of ignoring the recommendations of its own studies. Let me refer to Mr. Jean de Grandpré's Advisory Council on Adjustment which recommended shifting priorities within UIC away from income maintenance and toward employment promotion or training. However, his council did not counsel any lowering of the financial safety net. I quote directly from the report:

> The Council recognizes that the safety net is important and that it may be more important to Canada's regions which may not participate in our fast–growing economy.

Where are the government MPs who are not here to protect their ridings? They should be here because they also have slow growth areas within their ridings which this Bill is going to hurt.

The Government commissioned another study which it did not follow. Claude Forget's study on unemployment insurance called for an approach to reform, loosely along the lines of C–21, but only if an income supplementation program for lower income workers was in place. Like Mr. de Grandpré, he felt that Unemployment Insurance reform should seek to enhance the safety net and not reduce it. This Bill is doing just the opposite. It is creating fear in areas where there are no jobs. It may bring the workers to Ontario, but Canada has seen that before and it did not work.

What galls me most in all of this, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government prides itself, indeed preens itself, on its ability to make tough decisions, but it refused to demand greater participation by the private sector in our national training effort. And it is the private sector, after all, which stands to benefit most from any training regime. This is especially surprising given the attention which the Government has lavished on the training question for the last half decade.

For most of the Government's term in office we have been witness to a good deal of debate and governmental hand–wringing about the training gap that exists between Canada and our major trading partners. For example, Canadian businesses spend about $1.4 billion per year on formal training, about half that of the United States on a per–employee basis. We provide an average of one hour per year of ongoing training while the Japanese provide about 200 hours per year. We do in fact have one of the worst private sector training systems in the industrialized world.

The Government did not go after that group to help on the training. It went after the weakest part in this country, those people who need unemployment insurance benefits because of the seasonality of the country.

C–21 tells us that the Government plans to "encourage" the private sector to do more through a process of consultation and the setting up of public–private sector consultation boards, the total bill for which is about $230 million. This approach has never worked in the past. Indeed, Mr. de Grandpré believed that "the private sector will not increase its training effort simply because it is exhorted to do so". In order to compel compliance, he recommended the imposition of a 1 per cent payroll tax on those companies which do not have a comprehensive training program with a provision for refund should compliance follow.

This Bill tells us that despite all its tough talk the Government did not have the intestinal fortitude to tax those who are really responsible for maintaining the competitive edge of the Canadian economy in training and high technology. Maybe the Government thought that putting a tax on the very people who bankrolled its victory in the November election was too tough an alternative. Or perhaps the Tories felt that it is time to get tough with the poor, the uneducated, the powerless, those who do not have enough economic votes to cause the Government any real electoral concern. Or maybe the tough talking Tories felt that after all the years of seeing the rich subsidize the poor it was just about time to see the poor start subsidizing the rich.

This is bizarre logic, Mr. Speaker. I hope there are other reasons for this but it comes out clearly that this Bill is affecting the poorest and least powerful group of Canadians. If that is the logic, it is inconsistent with the values which we Canadians have long cherished, but it is the only logic of which the Government appears capable.

Bill C–21's provisions for training are, of course, not its only misguided element. As a Nova Scotian and the representative of a predominantly rural constituency largely dependent on seasonal industries, and I refer to fishing, forestry, farming and tourism, I am keenly aware of the negative impact that the changes in entrance requirements will have. Employers in seasonal industries will find it difficult to extend the number of weeks of employment with the likely result that provincial and municipal welfare roles will expand.

It is ironic that part of the purpose of this Bill is to take people off of welfare and retrain them. These people have jobs, they are needed seasonally. More ironic, we all know that the problem currently being experienced in the fishery is that there is not enough fish. Give us the fish and the people will work year–round. Get rid of some of the attitudes of the present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) toward the East and we will probably have a longer season of fish processing.

Last week the coalition from the West came in and told us that their unprocessed fish had to go to the United States to be processed. The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) stood up in the House and said that that does not hurt. Indeed it does hurt. It means that those jobs are not staying in Canada, it means that those workers are not getting longer employment in a natural resource which is renewable and which is Canadian. The fish is caught in Canadian waters. It is landed, they say, and they say that that will not offend GATT or the United States. We will see if it offends the United States. They will probably turn around and use the omnibus trade Bill against us as they did on hogs and as they are trying to do in intellectual property.

I have a lot of relatives, like a lot of us in here, from the United States. When the United States says something they do it. When Canada says something, it does not do it. It shies away from standing up against the United States.

If we had fish, we would have jobs. We would not need the UIC. My people in South West Nova need fish. They need longer tourism seasons. They would like to finish their natural resources further. Maybe if the Government put effort into finding ways to produce longer,we would have full time employment, like the Minister before me was saying that we in the opposition are so pessimistic about it.

The fact is that this Bill will affect the people. It does away with the three–phase system and it brings in one phase. If we go by the unemployment insurance statistics in Nova Scotia in 1988, where you have an average unemployment rate of 10.2 per cent, and an average beneficiary of 50,180, and an average weekly benefit of $193.37, the total pay–out in 1988 was $527,395,520.

What is the impact of the changes? Cost per beneficiary, because the average loss is probably five to nine weeks is $1,160.22. That is per beneficiary. The cost to the province is $58,219,839.

You cannot tell me, Mr. Speaker, that that is not going to hurt, and that if you retrain them and send them to Ontario that the people are going to have a better quality of living by moving into downtown—well, they could not move into downtown Toronto, they could not afford it. They would have to take a tent. Perhaps they could be moved into rural Ontario and they would have to work. It did not work before. It is best to find the money to keep the jobs there, or to find a change in direction, like in fish, which is going to give jobs to the communities and produce longer working times in these rural communities.

However, we cannot, as this Bill is doing, take away from the seasonality of Canada, cut back those seasonal workers and leave them in a worse position than they were a year from the time that it starts. Starting in January, 1990, and with closure on this Bill, it means that this Government is serious about how it is going to affect it. Those people will be in a worse position than they were the previous year.

The only time that this Government has said in the Bill that it will put money into it and retain the three–phase system is if the unemployment rate is over 15 per cent. There were four areas in Canada, two in Newfoundland, one in Cape Breton and one in the Okanagan Valley, Kamloops or somewhere in that area, last year. There were only four areas which had an unemployment rate above 15 per cent. That is the only time that the old system will work if that unemployment rate is above 15 per cent.

Now you tell me, Mr. Speaker, that those people are not going to hurt, and that the Minister of Employment and Immigration's (Mrs. McDougall) retraining package for Ontario and rural Ontario is going to help retrain people who already know how to cut fish. They know how to go out and work in a mill. They know what the tourism trade needs. We have an excellent tourism industry.

I see my time is coming to a close. I would just like to end by saying that the use of closure after one day of debate is about the worst type of procedure that I have ever seen in my time in Parliament. The use of it to end a debate on a Bill which is so important, maybe not to downtown Toronto or downtown Vancouver, but to all the people who rely on the unemployment insurance program without an alternative from this Government. Look at what de Grandpré said. We could bring in what he wants. That is not what the Government did. However, it does not provide a safety net for those rural people. Forget said the same thing, provide a safety net for those areas which are not in the urban centres where there is a high unemployment rate.

I hope that when the Bill goes to committee that all Canadians will write to all their Members of Parliament and show their dissatisfaction with the direction of retraining and no supplement to the people who are going to be hurt more next year. I hope they write to every one of the Government Members and particularly the Ministers. We have the summer, hopefully, unless they are going to close this Bill. If so, it will be an experience to sit in this House to see the most important piece of legislation for my constituency come into this House and be closed after one day of debate on second reading. It is unheard of. It is unconscionable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Don Valley West.

Hon. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-21 is an important piece of legislation. It always astounds me when I listen to Members of the Opposition on Bills like this. We wonder where the real world ever enters into any of their thinking.

There is not a program, apparently, according to the Opposition which is touchable if those touches make it better. The essence of the argument which we have heard throughout the conversation about the Bill is as follows. The Opposition states that they support retraining, provided no changes are made to the unemployment insurance system. If we translate that, that means, provided that somebody finds some way to get somebody else for more money to pay for the training through Government. If we do not know after all those years of the Liberal Government what the consequence of that would be, which would be simply to put more people on the unemployment insurance rolls by driving the cost of Government up again, then we have not learned lessons from the 1960s and 1970s. That is ultimately, I guess, the difference between the kind of policies which come from this side and the kind of policies which came from the other side. I suppose if the economic solution for the fishermen is to make a case that we need more fish, and to argue somehow the Government's purpose is to invent fish, when in fact what the Government's whole policy is about at the moment is attempting to conserve the existing stocks so that—

Mr. Milliken: Mismanagement.

Mr. Bosley: This Government did not mismanage those stocks. It happened before this Government got into office. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) knows full well that that is the case. It has been since this Government came into place that conservation efforts have begun and pushed. Do we find any support from the Hon. Member and his Party for that? No. We find such arguments as, the economic solution for the fishermen is to invent fish. Well, if it could be done, it would be. It cannot be.

If we are going to try and do something for the fishermen in this country, it seems to me we do exactly what this Bill says, we say that because they have a problem the procedures for self employed fishermen will not be touched by these amendments. Not touched.

Nevertheless, Opposition Members, I suspect, and other good friends of mine from Nova Scotia will probably make the same speech later claiming somehow that what is going on in here affects the fishermen of Canada, when it is not. However, if that is the way the debate wants to be held, that is the way it will be held.

The issue for this country remains the same. Governments have had to face this fact, that it is not a question any more of being able to with credibility say to the people of Canada the solution for our problems is to find more money from Government and throw it at the problem. What we have to do in this country, and it has begun finally under this Government in the last five years, is figure out how to use money smarter in order to put people back to work who want help. The solution is not to spend more money on unemployment insurance for the unemployed. The solution so clearly is to use unemployment insurance moneys and other moneys for those people who are unemployed in order to get them permanent work.

Every time we have made that case, Opposition Members have risen in this House to say that it will not work. The predictions have been dire. Whatever change we make and whatever tax policy change we make, we are told consistently, hundreds of thousands of people will go out of work as a result. The evidence is in this country. It does not need to be repeated. I say to the Members opposite, that exactly the same thing has been happening in this debate. We are being told that hundreds of thousands of people will go off the unemployment insurance rolls onto welfare and all the misery which that implies because of a change in a $13 billion program to take $800 million and spend it on training people better than we now do.

Surely it is self-evident, when one looks at the consequences of leaving people on unemployment insurance, if you deal in the world where we come from in Toronto. People must not be left on unemployment insurance assuming they will get some training. Those days have to go. It ought to be self-evident to Members here—and I think it is to Members on this side, Mr. Speaker—that the proposal from the Minister is in line absolutely with the labour adjustment policies of this Government in order to bring not only this program into the 21st Century but all of our labour adjustment programs into the 21st Century.

The Hon. Member opposite is a good friend of mine. He was with me last week in Europe. We were there examining what is going to happen in 1992 in Europe. What happens has significant consequences for us in the competition this country will have to face.

There are no arguments among the countries of Europe about rationalizing and harmonizing the support programs for those who need help in order to be retrained. These people know it is self-evident. We apparently do not. It is to our shame if we do not understand the importance of this kind of policy change. The Europeans know full well that they are going to have to rationalize and harmonize their standards in order to be competitive in the market. So have we. I do not see this, as some Members opposite would claim, as the be all and end all. Of course not. Nor does the Government. It sees this Bill as an essential part of all of its developments in the labour adjustment strategy, the most important of which will be the final elimination of the barriers to trade and activity between the provinces of this country so we at least in this country can have a common market.

It is about time we got to that if we really want to put people to work. I hope we will not be impeded by the consistent and everlasting resolution of some provinces not to be involved in that for reasons that have historically to do with sovereignty. I hope we will recognize the international world we now live in and that we will come to the global competitive position that we have to.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) referred earlier to the UIC program. The ground shifts, I notice, for Liberal leaders. This is now the most important social program in Canada. A couple of weeks ago it was medicare, a couple of weeks before that it was something else. It is a serious program. The Leader of the Opposition accused us of letting the market function. You bet we are going to let the market function. That is what makes the work for people who get off unemployment insurance by the creation of jobs. That is the only place it will come from. My family was Liberal before the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) was born. We laughed over these issues. If Liberals still believe that you are going to drive the engine of growth and job-creation in this country with government programs, then they are living in pre-Keynesian, 19th Century ignorance that this country deserves to be protected from.

Mr. Milliken: That is rubbish.

Mr. Bosley: It is not rubbish. The whole consequential issue of what this Government has done is to say that there is a place for the safety net. It is protected here. It is fine-tuned and adjusted here to be useful, more useful than it now is. The concept that we will just keep taking out of the public pot, more and more out of the economy of the country to put into needed programs, that I hope—even for the Liberal Party—is a passé policy. Otherwise the Liberals will be where they deserve to be, in oblivion.

An Hon. Member: Never.

Mr. Bosley: We will watch with interest all of the various candidates for the leadership of that Party tell us where they stand on these issues.

One of the most interesting books to come out is from the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Mr. Mills). I hope some Members of his Party read some concepts in it because there are some good ones having to do with letting the market function, recognizing that you cannot constantly be interventionist yet create wealth and work for people.

An Hon. Member: Did he get a Canada Council grant?

Mr. Bosley: I understood the Member did not apply for a grant from Canada Council to get the book published, in which case he would be unusual in his Party, but there it is.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bosley: In a riding like mine where nearly 20 per cent of the citizens are over 65 years of age, one of the complaints for years has been the difficulties that people approaching their senior years face who want to carry on working.

Court charters and other challenges notwithstanding, one of the things in this Bill that I think the Opposition ought to identify as a good thing is what it will do for older workers. Let us remind people what it is the Opposition says it is going to vote against with regard to senior citizens and senior workers of this country. They claim this Bill ought to be shot down and torn apart.

An Hon. Member: Not just for that reason.

Mr. Bosley: The Opposition always has a reason. In this case the Liberals will go back to doing all the good things in this Bill and spending more money on the other things. Isn't that amazing? In an election campaign, we used to get that from people who called themselves the Albanian Communist Party. That group of people campaigned in every election, on every program. It was make the rich pay, make somebody else pay, make more money available by taxing somebody else, get more money into the system for the programs. I never thought I would hear that whole policy shift from the Liberal Party of Canada, but we hear it again. It was just voiced. Make somebody else pay for it. Is that the consequence of the new Liberalism? I do not have to worry for our successors. Members here will see what will happen in following elections if this is the new policy direction of the Liberal Party. Maybe I am not getting it. Maybe it is not that the old policy was good enough, the new Liberal Party wants to go even further and spend even more money. That would appear to be the new Liberal solution.

Mr. Walker: Check the Budget.

Mr. Bosley: An Hon. Member says check the Budget. I stood in this House and listened to Allan MacEachen, now practising his ways in a different place, argue that the solution to unemployment in this country—which is what this Bill is about, at least the safety net portions—is to raise taxes, raise the deficit at the same time and raise the spending of the Government. As a consequence of that for program spending—not interest payments—the consequence of increasing the share of GNP taken by government would enable the GNP to grow.

An Hon. Member: Your policy?

Mr. Bosley: No, it is not our policy. You will find that under this Government the proportion of debt and of debt servicing and the share of GNP carried by the debt burden is in decline. This is the only way in which to put more money in the hands of private entrepreneurs to create work. That was not the Liberal policy of the time. The Liberal policy of the time was dead clear. Tax more, take more, and somehow the economy will grow more. The evidence was right before us.

I think Canadians are far too sophisticated now to believe again the rubbish that was attempted to be perpetrated on them by predecessor governments of the Liberal Party. I think when Liberals still sit on the other side saying "Oh, no, we'll keep the good parts, you like the older worker parts, good for you. We'll keep the good parts. We'll simply throw more money at training programs. We'll throw more money at this and we will throw more money at that". That old Liberal policy is thoroughly invalidated.

I do not like to throw money at programs that have been proven to be inefficient. The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) is showing his usual capacity for keeping his ears closed and his mouth open.

Charlie, I will listen to your speech when you speak.

Mr. Caccia: I have had enough.

Mr. Bosley: We do not have the American practice, but since the Hon. Member for Davenport is exercised, I would be happy to cede the floor to him for a few minutes. It might get it out of his system.

Mr. Caccia: Wait for 1992.

Mr. Bosley: Oh, we do not have that practice. I will stay and listen to the Hon. Member for Davenport if he will listen to me.

Mr. Caccia: I have had enough.

Mr. Bosley: Oh, you have had enough? Well, the people have had enough of the kind of policy the Hon. Member for Davenport supports.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: Wait for 1992.

Mr. Bosley: I am perfectly happy to wait until 1993 and the next election.

The Hon. Member is convinced. Old Cabinet Ministers forget that they may remain old Cabinet Ministers if they adopt the same old policies that they adopted when they were new Cabinet Ministers years ago. They adopted policies that are utterly discredited by every economic institute in this country.

What this is about is clearly and simply a recognition that some of the issues in terms of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the unemployment insurance program can be used in more efficient ways to do more good for those who need that help. That apparently is such a novel idea, so threatening, that Members opposite claim somehow that the poor or the powerless are hurt by an improvement in the training programs for those same people.

An Hon. Member: Training for what?

Mr. Bosley: Training for what, says a Member? Training for the jobs of the future. What is the Member's alternative? Is it no training? I suppose the Member opposite has never done what some of have done, which is sit in Manpower offices and offices of the Commission listening and dealing with constituents who are trying to get every little bit of training out of the Commission they can get because they do not want to remain unemployed. They do not want to remain unemployed, whether they are 45 or 65, young or old, women or men.

• (1710)

One of the issues opposition Members ought to be raising, an issue I want to speak about briefly—

Mr. Walker: You only have three minutes.

Mr. Bosley: That is all it takes. It only takes three minutes. I have spoken to the Minister about this and I am sure this issue will be addressed. It is whether or not there is humanity in the officers at Manpower to do the matching that needs to be done. I believe that 99 per cent of the people who work at Manpower on the training program side are about as well-intentioned, generous and kind as can be, but they are so overworked in some ways that sometimes they do not have the time to do—

Mr. Caccia: Because of your cuts to the Department.

Mr. Bosley: Because we do not yet have the funds for the training programs, which is why this is changing so we will have more funds for the training programs. One then hopes that we will be able to use those funds in a more humane way. We have always known that we did not have enough money—

Mr. Caccia: You don't know how to spell it.

Mr. Bosley: I don't know how to spell it? The Hon. Member for Davenport is in his usual mood.

Mr. Caccia: Right.

Mr. Bosley: I accept that.

Mr. Caccia: Spell it for us.

Mr. Bosley: Spell it? S-u-c-c-e-s-s, j-o-b-s, w-e-a-l-t-h. Work for people, that is where this is going.

Mr. Caccia: The word "humanity".

Mr. Bosley: The word "humanity"? Humanity is that I wait and listen to the Hon. Member when he speaks but he does not have the humanity to be quiet when someone else is speaking.

I know that as a result of these changes, two things of some consequence will happen. We will contribute to the continuing reduction in the number of permanently unemployed, particularly those who wind up for sad reasons being repeaters in the UIC program because they do not have enough training. If we are successful doing that alone, we will have made an enormous impact, particularly on the urban poor.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)): No, it doesn't affect anybody.

Mr. Bosley: The Hon. Member doesn't know what is going on in downtown Toronto.

Second, I think we will see when we revisit this in about three years that all of the predictions we are making about more jobs and employment for those who need it will again have come true.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by saying that I enjoyed listening to the speech made by the Hon. Member who just spoke. However, if he had dealt directly with the issues at debate before us today, he might have answered three questions. He might have answered first why it is that the Government, after just one day of debate, has decided to shut off debate on the principle of this important Bill. He refused to deal with that question.

The Hon. Member might also have answered why it is that, despite the fact that the Department of Employment and Immigration has carried out and completed impact studies to determine what will be the effect on different parts of the country and different groups of people of these changes, the Department refuses to release these studies and has in fact stated so by letter in its refusal under the Freedom of Information Act. Why is this so if the picture that is to be painted by those impact studies is so grand and glorious, as the Hon. Member has suggested? Why is there an attempt to first ram this Bill through so quickly and, second, to suppress crucial information which should be before us when debating the principles of this Bill?

Third, I would have thought that the Hon. Member himself might have dealt with the real principle here, which is not the question of whether or not Members on this side of the House or on that side of the House are concerned about training. The Hon. Member knows full well that all three Parties have made commitments to both the principle of increased training for people who are unemployed and to particular ways to put that principle into effect. That is not the issue. The issue is whether it is right to take beyond that $800 million which is being given to training, a further $1 billion out of the unemployment insurance fund and effectively put it back into the coffers of the Government because the Government will not in the future pay for regionally extended unemployment insurance benefits. That is the real principle.

The real principle, though the Hon. Member might wish to deny it, is to shift a large amount of money which in the past the Government has been responsible for when it let unemployment rise above 4 per cent. It will no longer provide that money to the unemployment insurance fund and, instead, contribution rates will be increased for those who are unemployed and for employers.

That is the real issue. If government Members had the courage to participate directly in questions and answers during this debate, as they would have to do if they had not put closure into effect, that is the issue they would have to answer to. However, they have now succeeded in being able to simply make witty, interesting but ultimately incorrect and unacceptable interpretations of the legislation before us.

This legislation is very clear-cut. In at least 30 different ways, this legislation makes it significantly more difficult for people who are not able to find employment to get the support which they as contributors to an insurance fund have surely the right to expect when they face what they have insured themselves against, the condition of unemployment, and we will demonstrate that in committee.

I could point out that this piece of legislation goes against everything the Government promised during the last election campaign. Frankly, though, that would be nothing new. That would not be a novelty. Ever since the Government was re-elected on November 21, it has completely turned its back on every promise it made to the Canadian people in order to win re-election. Whether one takes the promise of a vast program of child care, the promise of a tremendous defence of regional development expenditure, the promise that none of our social benefits would be affected by free trade, one finds that ever since its election the Government has made a complete U-turn. To put it bluntly, it has spit in the eye of the Canadian electorate and stated: "We don't care what we promised you. We think we are going to be here for the next five years. You can like it or lump it, but you are going to have to take it, and we are going to give it to you as hard and as viciously as we possibly can".

As the previous Member attempted to suggest, the issue is not a question of us on this side of the House saying let us give everything we can to the people of the country without worrying about who will pay for it. That is not the question. The question is, who pays for what is crucially needed in the country? Who pays for what we said during the election campaign was crucially needed, a program of adjustment, a program of training, and a program of help for those people who would be hit by the free trade deal? Who pays for that?

Do we do as those countries in Europe the previous Member talked about? Do we make the companies that will benefit—or so we were told during the trade deal—so immensely from that deal pay a somewhat greater increase, a 1 per cent levy for training? Even such an obviously radical socialist as the head of Bell Enterprises, Mr. de Grandpré, suggested that companies should have to pay a training levy within the country. Do we do that in order to finance the crucial adjustment assistance that is needed?

Instead, do we do what the Government has decided to do? Do we take the group which is the most vulnerable, the weakest, the most up against it, those who are unemployed and have been unemployed for significant periods of time and often live in poorer regions of this country, and say to them: "I'm sorry, but for the good of Canada please be patriotic. For the good of our country's economy, accept the sacrifice and tighten your belts. We know you are close to starvation and your level of assets has been reduced tremendously by this period of unemployment, but we think you have still got something to give Canada. You have still got something to give to the corporate elite in this country. So we are going to ask you, you who are unemployed in Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, the interior of B.C., northern Saskatchewan, northern Ontario, or even in parts of our major metropolitan cities such as Montreal, Toronto, and Vancouver—where there are pockets of significant poverty and unemployment—to pay the cost of adjustment". That is what this piece of legislation tries to do.

Or do we take a position that has some sense of equity, social justice and fairness within it? Do we take a position that, at the very least, those who are somewhat better off in society should be the people who end up paying for the adjustment costs that are there as part of putting the trade deal into effect?

For those of us on this side of the House there is no question how that choice is answered. It is answered by stating that it is not the poorest in our country who should pay. It is not the people who are out of work. It is not the poorer regions that should pay for something which will benefit the large corporations.

Instead, we suggest, and have suggested again and again, that the adjustment costs and the training benefits which are crucial for the future of this country should be financed by the corporate sector and by taxpayers who are better off. It should not fall on the shoulders of those people who are the poorest within this Canada of ours.

It seems to me so self-evident and clear-cut that that is the just way to go about doing things which all of us in the House want to see done: an expansion of training, training for those who are out of work, training for those who are not officially unemployed but are out of the labour force, training to give them an opportunity for the future. The payment of those costs should not come from the mean, nasty and vicious attacks on the unemployed which are part of this legislation, but from those people who have the resources and the opportunities to be able to make a contribution to those increased costs.

That is not what we have in front of us. Despite the absence of any promise in the pages and pages of promises the Government made in the last election, despite the absence of anything in those pages about a squeeze on unemployment benefits, we have an attack on those who are out of work. In the past I have called it "Thatcherite" in its philosophy. That is why I was a little surprised to hear the previous Member speak so roundly in its favour. But I suppose it is necessary to work one's way back into favour by giving a sense of support to things which are surely insupportable by any of the

What we have is a set of changes which in cities such as Sudbury, Yorkton, Edmonton and in areas such as King's County in Nova Scotia, the Eastern Townships of Quebec where, in the past, one was able to get up to 21 weeks of support as an unemployed person after 11 weeks of work, one will not be able to get any support whatsoever now. After 17 weeks of work in those areas one used to be able to get 37 weeks of support. Now it will only be possible to get 24 weeks in terms of benefits.

In other areas such as Montreal, the lower Fraser Valley of B.C., Victoria, Cumberland and Guysborough Counties in Nova Scotia previously after 10 weeks one could receive 34 weeks of support to try to help one to find a new job. Now one will receive nothing. In those areas previously 16 weeks of work would get one 40 weeks of support. Now it will get just 27 weeks in which to try to find a new job. These are in areas where it is difficult to find employment.

In an area such as Fredericton, New Brunswick, 10 weeks of work previously would get one 38 weeks of support. Now one will receive nothing. It is an area in which 15 weeks of work would entitle one to 43 weeks of support. Now one will receive just 30 weeks of support.

In fact, in 90 per cent of the 48 unemployment insurance regions the number of weeks one will have to work to qualify for UI has increased, and increased significantly. In over half the regions the entrance requirement will increase by six weeks.

Some 20 per cent of all people who receive unemployment insurance take more than 20 weeks to find new work. Most of these people will be unable to claim unemployment insurance in the particular areas in which they live under these changes.

This is a measure which will hit people, and hit people hard. Across the country there are groups speaking out against this move. They are saying that this approach is not just or right and certainly not what the Government promised. Yet in the face of this opposition the Government comes to the House today and wishes to slam through this legislation using its majority with no sense of the importance of having a full debate on the principles involved here.

Frankly, the Government should be ashamed of itself for not presenting to the people of Canada the chance to debate and consider these issues in principle over a significant period of time. This is dangerous damage to the people of Canada. It is an abuse of power. It should not take place. I hope that the people of Canada will stop it from taking place in the future.

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to add a few of my thoughts and words to the debate on Bill C–21. In listening to Members opposite I have not agreed with many of the conclusions which they have come up with. However, there was one exception. It was in the closing remarks of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). He said the greatest privilege available to Canadians is that of standing up in this House to represent the views of other Canadians.

Those of us who sit in this Chamber are privileged. We are privileged to sit here and participate in debates. However, that privilege takes with it a responsibility, a responsibility not only to our own constituents but to all Canadians. In our deliberations we must represent the diverse thoughts and feelings of other Canadians and hopefully arrive at a conclusion that will benefit the majority of them.

Within each of our constituencies are many strong and diverse opinions. It is our responsibility to listen to these opinions. We have to reflect on them. Finally, we have to represent them to our colleagues and enunciate them in the House. In some ways each of our constituencies reflects the nation as a whole. Just as Canada contains many different values, opinions and ideas so does each of our constituencies.

We have to represent that entire constituency. We have to make decisions on behalf of those we represent. These decisions that we arrive at will affect not only the people in Red Deer, Moncton and Vancouver but all Canadians.

Unemployment insurance is one of those issues that has generated many and varied opinions locally, regionally and nationally. The unemployment insurance issue has been well studied. It has been well reported.

The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) implied that the Government is doing something sinister in keeping an impact study secret. That is not the case. In appearing before the committee the Minister informed us that it would be released at the committee stage of the Bill. It is my understanding that that is normal parliamentary tradition and the normal time to release an impact study.

I would like to suggest that if the Hon. Member had bothered to read the letter he was waving around in front of us, he would have seen that the request for information on the study was exempted under Section 26 of the Access to Information Act. That section states that if a study is going to be released within a three-month period, then it is exempted from being released at the time of the request. I would suggest that if he read the letter he would know that there is nothing sinister about withholding it at this time.

All of us have heard representations from business and labour. Those who were here in the previous Parliament had a chance to study another report. Those of us who were working elsewhere listened to our co-workers, our neighbours and our friends. There were a great many suggestions and a great many ideas about what should be done to the unemployment insurance program. There is no one answer to this program that will address all the needs, wants and desires of Canadians.

This Bill does not address every concern. However, it is an important step toward improving the program by allowing for more skills training and other measures that will assist claimants to adapt successfully to changing labour market conditions.

In my conversations, I have been told many things about the existing program. There are those who say that what we have is no longer insurance. Others say: "Why should I pay? There is no way I can collect". There are others who look at the program, see people who abuse it and get mad. They consider those who would work, the lack of skills and training and say that it could be better. It will get better, and this Bill will help it.

We as Canadians are a caring and compassionate people. As a nation, we are willing to provide help to those with legitimate need. We also hate waste. We do not like others to take advantage of our generosity. This principle applies to many situations. It definitely applies to unemployment insurance.

I can think of no one who is not prepared to assist someone else who, through economic circumstances, loses their employment. We want to help those people get re-established and re-employed. However, most Canadians draw the line at supporting those who are uninterested in working or who use or abuse the system for their own convenience.

Unemployment insurance is not welfare. It should not be considered a wage subsidy. It should be a program to provide a temporary buffer and assistance to get back into the work force. We have a responsibility to make our unemployment insurance program as efficient and fair as possible. While maintaining the program's essential income support function, these amendments and changes reduce elements in the program that act as disincentives to work.

As the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) said when she opened second reading debate, the small minority who simply choose not to work at various times should not be encouraged by a system paid for by all Canadians.

We also support provisions that increase penalties for those who quit their jobs without just cause or who fraudulently collect benefits. We want a system that will help those who genuinely need help, but we and the people who have to pay for the Bills that we approve do not want to support those who simply do not want to work.

These changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act form part of the Government's over-all Labour Force Development Strategy. That strategy was tabled in the House on April 11 by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Bill C-21 should not be looked at in isolation, but looked at in conjunction with the Canadian Jobs Strategy which is designed to help individuals and groups adjust to change through a variety of options, including retraining.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy itself is a success story. As most Members know, it is based on three basic principles. The first is that help should go first to those who need it most. We as a nation have limited resources in spite of some of the statements we hear. It is essential that we put our resources to the most effective use by assisting those who can best benefit and those with the greatest need.

Second, programs and services should be used that best meet the needs. Third, decision making should be done at the local level.

The closer decision makers are to the user, the more effective the program is liable to be. Made–in–Ottawa solutions do not always meet the needs in Red Deer, Yellowknife, Moncton or any other region of Canada. Since the Canadian Jobs Strategy was introduced in September, 1985, 1.3 million people have benefited from the program. Its success is not because of the wisdom of Government or the wisdom of bureaucrats, it has succeeded because of the involvement of the providers and the users, the training and educational institutions, business and labour, some of the same groups that are going to make this program successful. These are the people who know where the needs are and they are in a far better position than we to effectively plan, implement and utilize the program.

Canadian business knows that it will need a well trained workforce as we prepare for the next century. Our workers are very much aware of the importance of skills and extra training in today's workforce. They know that the workplace is changing and they want to be prepared for those changes.

My own experience backs up the result of a Decima survey that was taken last year, where fully half of the workers polled indicated a willingness to reduce wage demands in return for additional training. The Canadian worker knows about technological and job changes, and wants to be ready. They do not want to be unemployed, they want the necessary skills to continue working and contributing.

There are some businesses investing in skill development, but far too many are not investing the money and training that we think they should. We in Canada have not developed a tradition of training. All too often, businesses and government have reacted to skill shortages after they become evident when, in effect, they should have been able to anticipate, prepare for them and avoid them.

All too often Canadians have left it to Government to devise and fund programs which have not met the needs of business and labour. But these programs were used simply because government money was available. We placed our priorities where the money was rather than where the skills were needed.

We have to stop trying to impose government solutions. We must let those who know what the needs are participate in the planning process. Local input is what has made the Canadian Jobs Strategy so successful and it will make this program successful.

A major objective of the new Labour Force Development Strategy is to allow business and labour groups more participation in skills upgrading for the labour force. This summer, six task forces set up by the Minister of Employment and Immigration will be writing discussion papers on various aspects of the Labour Force Development Strategy. The Canadian Labour Market Productivity Centre is organizing five symposia for this fall at which these discussion papers will be presented. A final report will be ready this November.

There is a role for Government in skills training, but that role is to work co–operatively with those in need. It is obvious that our current efforts have not been adequate to meet the demands of the economy. The skill shortages that we see across the country will get worse unless we take action.

As we move into a highly competitive service oriented economy, a grade 12 education will no longer be adequate. By the year 2000 almost one half of the jobs created will require more than five years of education and training beyond high school. Sixty per cent of our supply of workers for the year 2000 have already graduated and are out of school. Unless there is retraining on a large scale, Canadian employers in the year 2000 will be hard pressed to find properly trained people.

Even now we have a problem. Some 36 per cent of the members of the Canadian Manufacturers Association and 43 per cent of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business report that they now face shortages of qualified labour. Statistics Canada has reported that 14 per cent of all Canadian manufacturers are facing production problems due to a shortage of skilled labour.

Other members have talked about the fact that we lack a strong tradition or culture of training among Canadian business. We spend half of what is spent in the United States in training for an employee. I believe that the average Canadian worker and businessman knows what skills they need to be competitive. The private sector must become more involved. The Government's objective is to stimulate an additional private sector training effort of $1.5 billion per year by 1994. I am confident that business will rise to this challenge. They will accept it and it will work.

Much has been said about where the money is coming from and whose money it is that funds the program. I submit that we should not differentiate between what comes from the worker and what comes from the Government. There is no such thing as government money. In the end, it all comes from the taxpayer. Every dollar that we spend comes out of their pocket. We owe it to them to make sure that we spend it as effectively as possible.

Taxpayers in my riding have been letting me know that they do not want to pay people not to work. They do not want to fund make-work projects, but they do want meaningful employment. They do want training that leads to useful employment, and most of them think they are more capable of determining what they need than some politician or bureaucrat. I am confident that Canadian business is prepared to meet the challenge of this Act and invest in private sector training.

The Government announced in the Budget papers that after January 1, next year, unemployment insurance will be funded solely by premiums paid by workers and employers. As a result, premiums will increase slightly, but to a level that is still below where they were two years ago. In a situation where the unemployment insurance fund goes into a deficit, the Government will still be there as a back-up.

When talking about incentives, we cannot afford to support people who only want 10 week jobs. Changes to entrance requirements and to the duration of benefits will encourage the unemployed to find work. In high employment areas where more jobs are available, unemployment insurance will be harder to get and will be available for a shorter period of time. That is as it should be.

We cannot afford not to help those who want to be trained and gain the skills they will need to find secure and long-term employment. Therefore, the Labour Force Development Strategy places a greater emphasis on providing assistance for retraining. Unemployment insurance recipients will find it more to their advantage to retrain themselves than to sit at home.

It has been said by some Members opposite that this program will force more people onto welfare. I submit that it will help people off welfare and into the workforce.

Since 1986, the federal and provincial Governments have undertaken joint initiatives to help social assistance recipients acquire the skills and work experience needed to become self-sufficient. These programs have had a success rate of better than 50 per cent. Three months after participating in the program, over half the participants are still working in the jobs they were trained for.

• (1750)

The Thomson Report presented to the Ontario Government by the Social Assistance Review Committee, supports this type of initiative and adds statistical proof that these types of programs do help social assistance recipients enter the mainstream labour-market. They are working and it has called for an expansion of them. This report adds proof to my feeling that Canadians do want to work. We as a group are productive people who want to work and to contribute.

The Government will be making an additional $50 million available out of the Canadian Jobs Strategy fund, not out of the unemployment insurance fund, for social assistance recipients to help them gain the skills that they need to improve their employment prospects and to find employment rather than remain on the social assistance rolls. Together with $50 million from the Canada Assistance Plan, we hope that the provinces will meet this dollar for dollar, making an additional $200 million available for this initiative.

This $50 million will come out of the Canadian Job Strategy budget, not the unemployment insurance fund. This Bill will not throw more people onto the welfare rolls. Rather, it should encourage a greater participation in the labour force, and thereby reduce unemployment.

Talking about youth, times are changing and so are employment patterns. Unskilled jobs are diminishing and the demand for highly skilled workers is going to rise dramatically in the years ahead. Young people will need to be better trained in the future. Students need to be encouraged to remain in school and gain the necessary skills to compete in the workforce of the 21st century.

Through the Labour Force Development Strategy, the Government proposes to quadruple funding to co-operative education, particularly at the secondary school level, to help reduce the dropout rate and unemployment rate of youth entering the labour market directly out of high school. The Government is also proposing a major new program for entry level training to help young people make the transition from school to work. Together, these two initiatives for co-operative education and entry level training will receive an additional $100 million.

At the opposite end of the workforce, we are also concerned with older workers. The Labour Force Development Strategy proposes to increase current services to displaced older workers by a further $100 million. In accordance with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, unemployment insurance benefits will be extended to those 65 years of age and older. Seniors will now have the choice to stay in the workforce on the same terms as anyone else.

There has been among my constituents much discussion about this provision. As a result of it, we lose the provision that allows workers to receive a three-week lump sum payout at age 65. However, in order to meet the provisions of the Charter, those over 65 must be allowed access to unemployment insurance if they so choose, and the potential cost must come from somewhere. We cannot have it both ways.

In conclusion, the Bill is a positive step toward improving the unemployment insurance program. The overall cost is going to remain the same. Greater emphasis is being placed on more active measures to help the unemployed improve their job prospects through skills training, self-employment and relocation assistance. As well, special benefits like maternity, parental and sickness benefits are being expanded.

Canadians are productive people. They do not want subsidies for doing nothing. They do not want make-work projects. They want the opportunity to work and the skills needed to work effectively and contribute.

All of us want to help the unemployed. Contrary to the perception enunciated by those opposite, we are sympathetic, we are concerned, but the unemployed want jobs, not welfare, and the provisions of this Act will help them accomplish just that.

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the introduction of Bill C-21 openly demonstrates the fact that Election '88 was the largest and most obvious act of political deception ever inflicted on Canadians. The regressive Conservative Party, its Leader and its Ministers told us repeatedly that Canada's unemployment insurance, regional development, farm and social programs were safe with them and were not incompatible with the Free Trade Agreement.

With the pre-Budget and Budget decisions, it is very obvious that Canadians were not being told the truth during the election campaign because unemployment insurance, regional development, farm, defence and social programs have borne the brunt of the Budget cuts. Government Members who bragged during the election campaign about what great financial managers they are, have shown themselves to be the greatest embezzlers in Canadian history.

Riding the wave of international prosperity, reaping unexpected revenue because of the booming economy, the Government squandered, wasted and dissipated those revenues to the point where even after the largest budget cuts and the largest tax increases in memory, they find themselves with a projected deficit of $30.5 billion. Instead of continued prosperity as promised under free trade, Canadians find themselves being hammered as never before with new taxes and new program cuts.

In the Atlantic provinces the feeling is that war has been declared upon them by their own Government and that the Canadian version of the scorched earth policy is being implemented. This is how Atlantic Canadians feel. Believe me, the case is not being overstated.

A few days ago the House voted on the Government's borrowing Bill. It gave itself permission to borrow almost $25 billion. Where is that $25 billion going to be spent? The Government has not told us, but I know where very much of the $25 billion is not going to be spent and that is in Atlantic Canada. Hundreds of millions of dollars are not going to be spent on our transportation system. VIA, as we know it in the Maritimes, will be decreased to the point where even the VIA bus from P.E.I. to Moncton will be cut. We in Prince Edward Island have not had passenger rail service for 20 years, but we thought we would at least be able to keep the bus connection to Moncton where we could transfer to the railway. Approximately 600 jobs will be lost and Islanders will be

This Government is not going to spend much of the $25 billion on agriculture. Since it was elected in November, the most truthful statement that the Government has made was contained in the Speech from the Throne where it was stated that farmers are costing the Treasury too much money. Henceforth, the Government began to slash agriculture programs with a ruthlessness never witnessed before in this country. The indications are that it will continue to do so.

The Government immediately broke the long-term dairy policy. It agreed with the United States and asked GATT to cap for 21 months any increases in input costs to dairy farmers in Canada. At the same time, GATT gave substantial increases to Great Britain and other GATT partners. Canada seems to be the only country that abides by the GATT rulings. Canada is the good boy in the GATT gang.

The Government then eliminated the interest subsidy under the Prairie Grain Advanced Payments for Crops Act. There will be minus $27 million in that program. Seven million dollars will not be spent in the skim milk subsidy. Six million dollars will not be spent on the commodity board loans program. Seven million dollars will not be spent on the dairy special export program. Nine million dollars less will be spent on new programs from the Farm Credit Corporation, and the Government will renegotiate the Crop Insurance Program with the provinces to save $200 million over the next two years. All these subsidies just happen to be included in Annex 785.4 of the Free Trade Agreement.

This Government is not going to spend much of the $25 billion on Established Programs Funding. It is going to cut $200 million out of that program in 1990 and 1991 alone. However, the biggest and cruelest cut of all is the cutting of $2.7 billion out of the budget for the Department of National Defence. The Government White Paper on Defence turned out to be a sham. Instead of rebuilding and refurbishing our defence capabilities, the Government has turned our military into the joke of the free world.

The cruelest cut of all came with closing of CFB Summarised and to a lesser extent, CFB Portage la Prairie. In the process, 3,000 jobs will be lost in Summerside which will raise the unemployment rate there to 36 per cent. This will leave the gulf region with no aerial reconnaissance, no airborne environmental and drug surveillance and a delay in the response of search and rescue operations. In addition, the Government has so mismanaged the fishery in Atlantic Canada that fish plant after fish plant has closed while foreign overfishing continues and even, it seems, is being encouraged to continue.

To top everything the Government, after hacking its way through every economic sector including tourism, and creating even higher levels of unemployment throughout Atlantic Canada, is now going to make it more difficult to qualify for unemployment insurance. This is an example of the new government mathematics. It states that less plus less equals more. The Government is going to cut $2.9 billion out of the unemployment commission moneys.

I would like to take a few minutes now to show how the new unemployment insurance changes will affect Prince Edward Island. First, the new changes will have a negative impact calculated by the Government to be 10.3 per cent. This can be compared to our sister Atlantic provinces where the negative impact will be only 4.6 per cent and to Canada as a whole where the negative impact will be 5.2 per cent. These are the Government's own figures. As you see, Mr. Speaker, Prince Edward Island will suffer twice the negative impact of the country as a whole and twice the negative impact of the other Atlantic provinces, and the Government calls this fair and equitable treatment.

I have three questions I want to address concerning unemployment insurance. They are, one, what role does UI play in the provincial economy of Prince Edward Island; two, what impact will the proposed UI changes have on Prince Edward Island; and three, what is position of P.E.I. on the proposed changes?

Today unemployment insurance is one of the most important programs in Atlantic Canada, and it is especially so in Prince Edward Island. In fact, in 1988, Prince Edward Islanders received more than $138 million in benefits, or $1,076 for every man, woman and child in the Province compared to $422 for Canada as a whole. Further, the UI program provides more money to the provincial economy than some of the industries in the province. For example, last year an average of 11,000 persons received UI benefits in P.E.I. out of an average labour force of 62,000, which is 18 per cent. In other words, approximately one out of five Islanders in the labour force relied on UI benefits at some time during the year. This is due primarily to our seasonal economy.

Clearly the direct impact of this program is very far-reaching. There are also significant indirect impacts. Islanders spent their UI benefits as consumers which, in turn, creates spin-off employment and thus impacts, not only on those who receive benefits, but also on the retail trade and on the service sectors. That is why UI plays such a vital role in a seasonal resource-based economy such as P.E.I.

Allow me at this time, Mr. Speaker, to describe the economy of P.E.I. to you. There are 128,000 people living on Prince Edward Island, and natural resources are the backbone of our economy. We are blessed with good, arable land, so agriculture is one of our major industries. We are an island so we have access to fish stocks such as lobster, cod, scallops, herring, oysters and so on. The beauty of our island is another natural resource, one that attracts more than 700,000 visitors each year. These are our basic industries; land, fish, and natural beauty. The industries which utilize these resources are, by their very nature, seasonal. There are, of course, other industries in P.E.I., but a significant percentage of our labour force is dependent on these seasonal industries.

The UI program supports the needs of those employed in seasonal jobs while at the same time supporting the needs of private sector employers in the rural areas of our country.

Why is UI so important? It is because you cannot fish lobster or process fish during the winter. We have a slight problem with ice around Prince Edward Island during the winter. It is because potatoes cannot be grown during the winter and it is because our tourist resort areas become like ghost towns during the winter. That is why we require UI, in order to supplement the incomes of those Islanders who cannot find work as well as those who cannot find full-time work.

The proposal to increase the number of weeks worked to qualify for UI benefits is based on the erroneous assumption that there are more weeks of employment available and that people just do not want to work them.

P.E.I. has a very short tourist season. July and August are the high season tourist months with a shorter season in June and September. What are Islanders supposed to do to get the number of required weeks if their employer only operates 10 weeks a year? Does the federal Government expect those employers to stay open longer when there are no tourists and there is no income? We cannot ask our tourists to ignore the fact that they cannot swim in May or October. We cannot ask our potato farmers to harvest their crop in December. Our economy is a seasonal one.

The role UI plays in our provincial economy is one of tremendous importance. The proposed changes will significantly impact on Islanders who can least afford it. The question is, what is the real impact of the proposed UI changes? The impact can be described in one word, "devastating". We know that our province will be the one most affected by the proposed changes.

We have, with the data available, calculated some of the repercussions for P.E.I. Given the increase in the number of work weeks required to draw UI benefits, P.E.I. could lose as much as $18 million. A reduction in the length of benefits could mean a loss of another $6 million. The impact on provincial government programs such as welfare assistance has not been included in these estimates but they will add to the increase. In total, based on a conservative estimate, and I do not use that word in a pejorative sense here, P.E.I. could lose as much as $27 million in UI benefits alone which would result in very significant spin-off losses as well.

One of the arguments made in defence of the changes is that P.E.I. will lose benefits but gain additional dollars through the Labour Force Development Strategy. In order for this argument to apply, the federal Government would have to do two things; first, it would have to institute an extensive and comprehensive job creation program. There is no point in training people for jobs which do not exist unless they want to force people to move to central Canada. Second, it would have to negotiate extensively with provinces to ensure that the programs are responsive to the uniqueness of each region in this country.

The diversity of this country must be recognized in the Labour Force Development Strategy. The new strategy should not be solely driven by private sector training. The whole thrust of the Canadian Jobs Strategy is to involve the private sector in providing training. P.E.I. has a very small private sector, one which can only do so much training. How many times can you ask the same employer to train the unemployed for jobs that do not exist? It is not feasible to expect the limited private sector in our province to provide more meaningful and effective training for the unemployed, especially if they have to absorb a significant portion of the cost.

The federal proposal to change UI will substantially reduce benefits to Islanders but the program proposed to replace them will not substantially benefit Islanders unless the programs are sensitive to the provincial economy. The training programs must be geared towards a growth that will provide long-term jobs with a large number of private sector employers. Unfortunately that does not describe the current economy of P.E.I.

The final question to be addressed is the position of P.E.I. on the proposed UI changes. P.E.I. has a unique economy. The current UI program recognizes and complements that uniqueness. This country is made up of diverse regions. Indeed the success of the country is based on recognizing the strengths and weaknesses of each region. We rely on UI in our region. We sincerely wish that we did not have to do that. All provinces, especially P.E.I., would like to have a booming economy that creates full-time jobs. However, the reality is that we do not. Programs must recognize and deal with the reality of each province. Each province is unique in its own right. In fact, Canada is diversity. Therefore, all programs must be both receptive and responsive to the needs of all Canadians. The current UI program has been successful in respecting that criteria.

This is not to suggest that there are not some positive proposals in the Labour Force Development Strategy. The Maternal Parental Sickness Benefits Program will in fact benefit Canadians. The proposed arrangements will provide more generous income protection for those Canadians involved. Furthermore, providing benefits to those over the age of 65 corrects an inequity which existed within the UI system.

Permitting workers on sickness or maternity benefits during a labour dispute to receive benefits also eliminates an unfair situation for those workers. While there is some merit in some of the proposed UI changes, however, I must say clearly and unequivocably, P.E.I. does not support increasing the number of weeks required to draw benefits and decreasing the number of weeks those benefits can be collected.

There is another aspect of the Government's proposed UI program with which I strongly disagree, and that is the Government's decision to withdraw from the funding of the program. It would seem that the federal Government has a responsibility to Canadians from Vancouver to St. John's, Newfoundland. We cannot shirk that responsibility by suggesting that employers and employees should absorb the total cost of a program designed and administered by the federal Government.

I would also like to address another critical issue in our province, and that is the announcement in the federal Budget of the closure of the Canadian Forces Base at Summerside. Closure of this base would have a tremendous effect on Prince Edward Island and on the Summerside economy.

There are more than 1,300 direct jobs at stake, as well as 2,000 indirect jobs. This represents 4.4 per cent of employment in the province. Our unemployment rate could increase to 60 per cent or higher. This would be a most devastating blow to our province. If Ontario or Quebec were to lose the same percentage of jobs, it would represent over 200,000 jobs in those two provinces.

There would not be enough ink in the newspapers in Upper and Lower Canada to tell the people of the country how devastating this would be, and how they would force the Government to change its mind if any government was going to take 200,000 jobs out of the economy of Toronto or Montreal.

How would a federal Member from Ontario feel if that number of jobs were lost? How would their Premier feel?

People in Prince Edward Island are for just and equitable treatment. I urge this Government to reconsider its decision. Our economy cannot absorb such a tremendous increase in the number of unemployed. The closure of CFB Summerside will further increase regional disparity. We will become more and more the poor cousins of Canada.

My request is simple and clear. Change the decision. Do not increase the number of weeks required to draw unemployment insurance. Do not reduce the number of weeks of benefits which can be drawn.

P.E.I. cannot accept closure of Canadian Forces Base in Summerside. Our economy in Prince County depends on the base for its survival. It contributes more to the economy of Prince County than the fishery. Our feelings run so deep on this issue that doubt is now being cast by our Premier on his support for the Meech Lake Accord.

In conclusion, Canada is a great country. We are admired throughout the world for our ability to respect diversity. We respect the uniqueness of our provinces. This principle forms a foundation of our country. Programs such as UI and defence spending respect that principle. Changing the number of weeks required to draw, and reducing the duration of benefits, as well as the closing of CFB Summerside violates that principle. We must not let that happen. The Government is sowing the wind, and they will reap the whirlwind.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Member for Egmont (Mr. McGuire) as he spoke on unemployment insurance and the care that he has for his constituency in Prince Edward Island.

I commend him for doing his best to represent the needs of his constituents. I would urge him, however, to think again before making a speech like he did now. When he uses terms like scorched earth policy, it is the kind of language which works once, maybe twice, but after that not only does the language lose its effectiveness, but the Member who uses it loses effectiveness.

People watch to see what happens afterward. They look for a scorched earth policy and they find that after all it is not a scorched earth policy. Then they do a little bit of a double-take. They say: "Look, we heard this man say it".

I commend him for thinking of the variable needs of Canada, the regions. He said, and I think I quote him accurately, "the policy ought to reflect the regions of Canada". This is exactly what unemployment insurance does. It reflects the needs of the regions of Canada. There are variable unemployment rates across Canada. The Bill recognizes those various needs across Canada. The Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) was a Member of the Government when that whole concept was brought in. I am sure he voted for it, as a good Member of the Government at the time.

The whole idea of variable entry programs was brought in 10 or 12 years ago, based upon the varying needs of the regions of Canada and the employment needs of those regions. I would encourage the Member for Egmont to keep that in mind as he speaks.

I would point out to him at the same time that if he wants to do that, he should also listen to the party line as espoused by his party leaders on the subject, because his finance critic just three months ago tomorrow, to be exact—

An Hon. Member: What time?

Mr. Friesen: Well, I do not have the hour. I could get that for the Member. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren) said: "The Government has few options"—relating to the debt—"if it doesn't take tough action such as cutting unemployment insurance benefits and the cost of social programs". That is what his own finance critic, his leader, said on the subject. I would think that if he believes in any kind of cohesiveness, in terms of his Party line, he would follow his finance critic on that subject.

The whole concept of unemployment insurance is now 49 years old. The Bill was first passed in 1940. If Members reflect on the conditions that existed in Canada in 1940, they will remember that we were just entering the war years. Unemployment was still very high. The country was still suffering from the plague of the Depression. There was need for the kind of a support system which would help those who were unemployed and found it very difficult to find work.

But unemployment insurance has changed radically over the ensuing 49 years. There have been a number of changes.

I ask Members to reflect on why it has changed. It is simply because the country has changed. Working conditions have changed. Those were the days when the unemployed which were affected by these conditions were largely blue collar workers. They were usually unorganized and usually had no union leadership.

In the ensuing years, labour has become organized, thankfully. Not only do the labour unions work largely for the blue collar workers, but they also have trained economists on their staff, economists with M.BAs and so forth. The conditions have changed.

We have tripartite agreements and arrangements. Conditions have changed, maybe not the way we want them yet, but the circumstances are different. The unemployment insurance Bill is designed to be flexible enough to meet the changing conditions in Canada.

I ask Members to read a book like "Mega Trends", which was published a few years ago, and is simply a composite of magazine and newspaper articles. They are statements from opinion makers from around the world outlining what the mega trends are for the world, and therefore, for each of the economies in the world.

By and large, the message of that book is that the labour force, particularly in the western world but certainly in the other countries too, is changing. Conditions are changing. We have moved from an industrial society in the western world to an information society. There are entirely different kinds of working conditions. There are entirely different kinds of labour contracts.

An Hon. Member: Unemployment is still the same.

Mr. Friesen: Unemployment hurts just as much as it ever did before. It sure does. That is why we need the protection that unemployment insurance gives. Unemployment insurance is not the insurance people need the most. They need the opportunity to get a job. If the workforce does not change along with society it will not matter how much insurance a person has. If workers do not change to the needs of the workplace they will still be unemployed. We need changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act to enable workers to change to the circumstances that exist in our society.

• (1820)

I know that my conservative friends in the NDP want nothing to change because they are the most conservative people in this House. They want nothing to change. If something is entrenched, keep it that way, because we might lose something. There is no risk involved in that Party. The NDP do not want risk at all.

Mr. Caccia: What are you for?

Mr. Friesen: I support the ability to change. Does the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) do that? The people on the other side want to keep things as they are. If it were up to these folks it would still be the same Bill we had in 1940 because as far as they are concerned things never change. The only thing that changes over there is their leadership. If Members opposite wonder why they were rejected last November, they should listen to what their Leader said when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) introduced his first economic plan for Canada. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said "This thing will lose us 50,000 to 100,000 jobs". People in Canada remembered that. They said, "Hey, we remember there was going to be gross unemployment because of the financial picture that the Finance Minister was planning for Canada". Instead the reverse happened and rather than lose 50,000 jobs we gained over one million in four years. Not bad. For this group to paint the Government as the enemy of the workers when we have created 1.4 million jobs for the people, they are not the ones to talk.

Mr. Volpe: You are not even up to recession levels.

Mr. Friesen: Not even up to recession levels? I will tell this wizard from—

Mr. Sobeski: That's why manufacturers cannot find people to work. Because they need training and that is what this Bill will do and you know it.

An Hon. Member: Come on.

Mr. Friesen: Some day I will get back into the debate. I think this is my show.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Friesen: What this Bill does is provide a labour force development strategy for Canada.

Mr. Caccia: Right on. That's good.

Mr. Friesen: The Member for Davenport is happy now. That was music to his ears. He knows that the unemployed—the few that there are in Toronto—

An Hon. Member: What will it do for your unemployed constituents?

Mr. Friesen: It means jobs.

Mr. Caccia: Tell us how.

Mr. Friesen: If a worker is 45 or 50 years old and loses his job because of technological change in my riding, he is going to benefit from this Bill because he will be retrained and be able to get a job. He does not want to sit at home. He wants to work. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has often said, "The best social program is a job". That is what this program does.

Mr. Milliken: He is from Alice in Wonderland.

Mr. Friesen: At least I have the attention of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Maheu: Tell us—

Mr. Friesen: I did not hear what the Member said but I can tell her what the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren) said. Would you like to hear again what he said? He said, "the Government has few options if it does not take tough action, such as cutting unemployment insurance". I want the Members opposite to know that we are not talking about cutting the insurance. We are talking about making it possible to use those programs to give the unemployed more opportunities. We are not going to cut the insurance the way the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North said we should do it.

What we want to do is use that money in such a way that people can adjust to changing circumstances. The Members opposite think circumstances never change. They want things to stay as they always have. When you are in a leadership role, as this Government is, people recognize that circumstances change. We have technological change here in Canada. The sooner Members of the Opposition wake up to that, the better off they will be. They will start representing the workers as soon as they recognize that.

The Bill introduces a labour force development strategy. Workers who are unemployed can retrain themselves, use their talents and apply them in a new way in the workplace and get the jobs they want. Not only do workers have to adjust, but so do employers. Opposition Members may want to heckle me on some points but I think they will agree with me that in Canada employers need to get behind the whole concept of training and retraining employees. Canada lags behind the industrial countries in this case. It certainly lags behind the United States. It is time for our industrial leaders to think in terms of their employees and adapting them to changing circumstances.

The private sector now has to assume a leadership role in the training of workers as it has done in other industrialized nations. We have to do this in Canada. We want to make training in skills an every day part of our workplace so that the worker on the job knows that there is a future for him, that he can adapt and that the employer has his best interests at heart.

Mr. Fisher: That would be something new.

Mr. Friesen: The Hon. Member from Saskatchewan who thinks in terms of class conflict constantly because that is the mentality of his Party—it is them or us—cannot ever envisage there might be a change in the mindset of the employer. To the Member it is still the old sweatshop bosses of the industrial revolution days. But there is a change in the workplace, Mr. Speaker. There are employers who have the best interests of the employees at heart. If the Member wants to carry on with his old theories of class conflict, let him do that. But the worker will suffer if that is case. The employer will manage but the worker will suffer.

The Government is proposing to increase the resources available for training under Section 26 of the Act and the new Section 26(1) of the Unemployment Insurance Act. The primary tool of the program will total $800 million for the retraining of employees.

Mr. Caccia: Over how many years? Tell us.

Mr. Friesen: And it will provide income support. How many unemployed are there? How much does it need? The Bill is revised now to meet the needs of the unemployed, don't you think it will be in the future, Mr. Speaker?

We are proposing that UI recipients with vital business plans can capitalize on their ingenuity by taking benefits to help defray the costs of start up in a business.

Mr. Caccia: Reducing the benefits.

Mr. Friesen: The Member for Davenport says reducing the benefits. That is what his friend from Egmont said too. If the Member reads the legislation he will know that is not true.

Mr. Volpe: What do you mean?

Mr. Friesen: The first requirement is to be accurate. It is not reducing the benefits, it is giving the employee, the worker, the unemployed some flexibility and some credit. Maybe he has an idea the worker wants to embark upon. It is not necessarily the employer who has all the good ideas. A worker maybe an entrepreneur who wants to start up his own business. Doesn't the Member think a former employee who is now unemployed is capable of changing and adapting to society? Do Hon. Members not think that he has any good ideas? Give him some credit. This will help people to start up businesses.

• (1830)

Mr. Caccia: He needs an income, that is what he needs.

Mr. Friesen: In some cases it will help them to relocate to places where there are better job prospects.

The man from Davenport is sitting comfortably in a Toronto region with an unemployment rate of about 4 per cent. He can talk, but if he were to come to some of the other regions he would not be quite so glib. The unemployment rate has dropped in some areas from 17 per cent to 13 per cent. In British Columbia it has dropped 14 per cent to 11 per cent or recently even 9 per cent. I would hope that the Hon. Member for Davenport would see that as a success in the program. He can sit on his smug employment figures for Toronto, but give the rest of the country a chance and let the people capitalize on the variables that exist in the new legislation.

We want to adjust the Act to reflect the realities of today's workplace. It will reflect the realities of the Charter. I do not have to, but for the benefit of Hon. Members I will list some of the changes.

Mrs. Maheu: Tell me how it will affect immigrant women.

Mr. Friesen: There will be 15 weeks of maternity benefits available during the period surrounding the birth of a child, and 10 weeks of parental benefits will be available to natural and adoptive parents for either mother or father or shared between them.

Mrs. Marleau: What about—

Mr. Friesen: Now I hear the Member from Sudbury, I believe it is. Is it Sudbury?

Mrs. Marleau: Could be.

Mr. Friesen: Oh, close enough. She has something to say. I am only saying that we are trying to update the legislation to meet the needs of the Charter. Does the Hon. Member believe in that kind of equality, or does she want to heckle me on that too?

Mrs. Maheu: What about equality for immigrant women?

Mr. Friesen: Oh, she accepts equality. That is terrific. They are being enlightened and have now come to the equality part of the Charter. That is comforting to know.

There is another variable involved in the legislation, and that has to do with other changing needs. There are people across Canada who are saying that if there are areas of Canada with low unemployment, why should people have the privilege of quitting a job and qualifying within 10 weeks? They are saying that they thought this was an insurance program for times of calamity.

An hour ago I heard the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor say that in areas like the Fraser Valley it used to be that people could enter the program at 10 weeks, and now there is nothing. That is not even true. There is something. It is longer than 10 weeks, but they can enter. It is not that there is nothing. This man from Essex—Windsor aspires to leadership, by the way, but he does not even quote the provisions of the Act properly or accurately.

Mrs. Marleau: Brainwashed.

Mr. Friesen: Yes, he has been brainwashed. Is it right that if there is an area with high employment, where people are begging for workers, that on the spur of the moment a person should be able to quit a job and draw unemployment insurance? Why should people be able to do that? It is supposed to be calamity insurance, I thought.

It is true that in areas of high employment the people will have to work longer to get benefits. Are Hon. Members saying that it should not that way? Do members of the Liberal Party say that it should not be that way? I would like to hear from them. If there is good employment in the area, it seems to me that the people should have to work longer before they draw unemployment insurance benefits.

I note that you say my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I know that will disappoint Members opposite. I want to assure them that Canadians who deserve support have support under this legislation. It exists and will continue to exist. The unemployed of Canada can count on it, and I know they will count on the kind of support this program gives to them.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we just heard from the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock (Mr. Friesen) a glib, shallow and incoherent intervention. He supports this Bill because it is change for the sake of change. He is asking the unemployed of his riding to read the speeches of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to find comfort when they are unemployed and run out of benefits. He is an embarrassment to his own Party and to this own colleagues, coming as he does from an area of high unemployment.

Earlier, I was surprised by the intervention of the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) who spoke with his fat cat view of the world. The Hon. Member for Don Valley West and the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock, I am sure, share the same basic philosophy. They believe in the market-place, and the Hon. Member for Don Valley West made a speech underlining the importance of the market-place.

When it comes to the unemployed, when it comes to the little people, when it comes to those who cannot defend themselves in the market-place, he believes in the importance of the market-place. However, when it comes to large corporations, when it comes to giving subsidies to large oil and gas companies, when it comes to giving support to megaprojects, all of a sudden there is a conversion; then he believes in subsidies and he no longer believes in the market-place.

How can one be consistent, convincing and politically in line with the thinking of Canadians with such a contradiction in terms? How can one be convincing in the eyes of one's constituents by speaking such profound, basic nonsense? The market-place has to work for the little people but, my gosh, they believe in subsidies when it comes to the corporate world.

The Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock and the Hon. Member for Don Valley West will draw unemployment insurance after the next election. They will get a taste of it when their turn will come. I am sure that the former Member for Prince Albert, Mr. Diefenbaker, will be turning in his grave with rage if he heard the speeches made by those two Progressive Conservative Members. He was the great defender of the small people, of the weak in society. He would turn in his grave if he heard that kind of nonsense.

What is Bill C-21 all about? It is not a question of the deficit. That is a smoke-screen. It is not a question of believing, as we have been accused of, in throwing money to the unemployed in order to solve the question of unemployment. It seems to me that the issue is the integrity of a key social program which has served Canada very well over the last 50 years.

Why do we on this side say that? We are the architects of that social program. It is our product. We made it better over the years. We see the program as being intended as a bridge for people who are between jobs, people who have no control over the vagaries of the market-place, that great market-place in which the Hon. Member for Don Valley West believes so strongly. People do not have control of that and therefore can lose employment and do not know when they will find other employment.

Second, we believe that the program stabilizes the population and provides stability. It prevents Canadians from moving and eventually living in 10 or 11 urban centres. Therefore, it is a very important social role.

Third, it reduces the burden on the provincial treasurers because it takes on responsibility for the unemployed rather than saying as does the Bill: "You take over this burden. Once you run out of your time, you go to the provincial social and family services and ask them to help you".

Fourth, we believe that it facilitates labour market requirements. It would take a lengthy intervention to go into details, but it is obvious that a good unemployment insurance scheme provides for a number of services and economic aids at the moment when needed for people who move from industry to industry, or sometimes even from region to region. We believe it is better to bring the jobs to the people than have the people move to the jobs.

Finally, it provides economic shock absorbers to certain segments in the workforce. For instance, the older workers on which my colleague the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) spoke so eloquently last night. It is a very important economic shock absorber for the older worker. Therefore, we would want to ensure that an older worker who becomes unemployed is not forced to turn to public assistance unduly and too soon, but rather has the dignity of economic support through unemployment insurance until his or her employment situation is hopefully resolved.

Those are the five central pillars of ideology that have so far driven us in the evolution and the development of the unemployment insurance system, in which we believe profoundly. This is why we are here fighting against this measure of closure and the spirit of the Bill itself.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I read with great interest a folder prepared in cooperation with the Regroupement de chômeurs et chômeuses du Québec entitled Solidarité populaire Québec and sub-titled, "Unemployment Insurance: $1.3 billion less, 200,000 beneficiaries cut!"

I found some examples on page 3. There is an example that I would like to bring to your attention because it is so typical, it is so well prepared, it describes a kind of working woman that can be found throughout Canada.

It says:

> After working for 25 years without interruption in a Montreal candy factory, Christine, 55 years old, earns $333 gross a week. She is no longer able to meet the increased rate of production that her boss requires.

That is very important!

> She quits her job. The Commission rules that she does not have a valid reason for quitting her job.

Now, under the present plan, Christine can receive a 6-week penalty and after 6 weeks, 44 weeks of benefits at the normal rate of 60 per cent of her salary.

But after the change with the coming into force of Bill C-21, Christine will have a 12-week penalty and during that time, Christine will not even be entitled to welfare; then she will have 37 weeks of benefits at a reduced rate of 50 per cent of her salary.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if that is social progress, if that is what the Conservative Party which calls itself Progressive has in mind for the Canadian people? I ask you that, Mr. Speaker!

[English]

At this point I would like to draw attention, very slowly, but it is necessary, to what will happen to people who become unemployed from British Columbia to Atlantic Canada, for the benefit of those back-benchers of the Tory Party who do not seem to know what will happen when this legislation comes into effect, judging from the speeches that have been made, some of their interventions, and some of their questions.

Starting with British Columbia, in the Kootenays under the present system a worker who becomes unemployed could receive benefits for 42 weeks. When Bill C-21 comes into effect, it will become 34 weeks. In the Kelowna region, the drop will be from 42 weeks at the present time to 33 weeks; in Kamloops from 42 weeks to 37 weeks.

To those Members who come from the Prairies, it is interesting to note that in southern Manitoba under the present system the unemployed worker receives 26 weeks of benefits, and that will drop to 21 weeks. In southern Saskatchewan it will drop from 26 weeks to 21 weeks. In Yorkton and Prince Albert it will drop from 32 weeks to 27 weeks. In the northern part of the prairie provinces it will drop from 42 weeks to 34 weeks.

Mr. Sobeski: What is it for Davenport?

Mr. Caccia: In the Liberal Party, we tend to embrace the whole country. We care for the unemployed no matter where they are. An unemployed person in the Yukon is as of much importance to us as if that person were in our own riding. We are responsible to everybody. That is our mandate.

In the remainder of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta the drop is 8 weeks, from 42 weeks to 34 weeks. In eastern Ontario the drop is from 22 weeks to 17 weeks, that is one month and one week less. In Belleville and Peterborough the drop is from 28 weeks to 21 weeks. In Sudbury it is from 29 weeks to 24 weeks; northwestern Ontario, from 28 weeks to 21 weeks; Windsor, from 22 weeks to 17 weeks; and Sarnia, from 25 weeks to 19 weeks.

This is where the unemployment is. This is where we have to concentrate our attention. These people do not have control of the economy of their own region. When they become unemployed they cannot go off to the next employer across the street, because there are not that many employers.

Let us deal with Quebec.

[Translation]

—in Trois-Rivières, it will go from 40 weeks now to 33; in the Eastern Townships, from 28 to 24; in the Gaspé, from 42 to 36; in northern Québec, from 42 to 34—

[English]

There are also some pretty drastic drops in Newfoundland. In the Avalon Peninsula the drop is from 42 weeks to 33 weeks. I ask myself, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure you do the same: How can the unemployed men and women in Avalon seek alternative employment in that part of the world?

This is where the greatness of the system comes into play. It provides economic stability and economic insurance, unless one wants to go to Toronto. Perhaps the plan of the Progressive Conservative Government is that all Canadians should live in 11 or 12 cities.

In Prince Edward Island it goes from 42 weeks to 33 weeks. In Halifax it is from 28 weeks to 21 weeks. I am selectively reading, Mr. Speaker. If I were to read every line my time would be gone, and you would not want to miss the rest of my speech.

In Saint John, New Brunswick it goes from 38 weeks to 30 weeks; in Fredericton, from 36 weeks to 30; Madawaska—Restigouche, from 42 weeks to 36 weeks. This is a sketch across the nation of what this measure will do.

I wonder what are the feelings and what goes through the minds of Members such as the Members from Abitibi, Mercier, Annapolis Valley—Hants, South Shore, Témiscamingue, Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup, Manicouagan, the Gaspé, Pontiac, Peace River, Red Deer, Charlesbourg, Lévis, Richmond—Wolfe, Trois-Rivières, Cumberland—Colchester, Timiskaming, Matapédia—Matane, Beauce, and Bonaventure.

• (1850)

Mr. Sobeski: Dispense.

Mr. Caccia: Yes, it hurts. You would like to have it dispensed with.

What goes through the minds of the Members from Brome—Missisquoi, Fundy—Royal, Jonquiere, Chicoutimi, Parry Sound—Muskoka, Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia, and Crowfoot, just to mention a few Tory ridings? They have not been very vocal in this debate. Actually, they have been strangely silent. I wonder why. Perhaps I am naive.

Perhaps Bill C-21 does not leave much to write home about. That is why they have not been so vocal in this debate. That is why this Bill is coming to a vote tonight in a hurry, fast, because we would not want to have trouble in the back benches of the Progressive Conservative Party. We want to prevent that. When the penny finally drops, when they finally catch up with what is written in Bill C-21, then perhaps they will wake up. However, then it will be tomorrow. It will be too late. That is why there has been such silence.

While the defence budget under the Tories is going up this year, and while subsidies to fossil fuel megaprojects are going up and being maintained to the tune of billions of dollars as a policy of the Government, the Progressive Conservative Government attacks the little people. That is the bottom line of this Bill. In the process it is making a sham of a fine key social program which has served several generations of Canadians so well.

My colleague from Egmont who spoke earlier reminded us that there is not only that but that the Tories have decided also that there is no room for the public sector any longer in the unemployment insurance program. When this Bill comes into effect the Government of Canada will drop its participation in this fund. That is really a sham, a disgrace. It is backward.

The country has been served very well by tripartite forms of government. Unemployment insurance has made progress over the decades because the Government, on behalf of the public, has participated in it with business and labour. Only the Government can speak for those who are not organized. Only the Government can speak for those who are not in business. Thus the tripartite formula is a good one. However, now it will be closed down. This is the end of it. It will be run by two parties—labour and business.

Guess who will run it eventually? I will leave it to you, Mr. Speaker, to guess and to tell us who in the end will run the unemployment insurance program. It does not take a genius to imagine who will do that once it is left to business. Therefore the future of this scheme is doomed to become weaker and weaker. It will not serve the little people who need it and use it and who have so far benefited from it.

I will conclude on this remark. It is quite revealing that a Conservative Premier in the country—not a Liberal but a Conservative from Nova Scotia—was quoted as saying on Bill C-21: "This is of grave concern to me because that means there is a transfer of funding for these people from the unemployment insurance books to our social service books". Those are the words of Mr. Buchanan, not a wide-eyed radical. This was not a Liberal Premier but a Tory Premier in the Province of Nova Scotia. That is the most severe indictment of this measure that could ever be expected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murray W. Dorin (Edmonton Northwest): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity in tonight's debate to address some of the issues before us. I must say that I really was not looking to speak in this particular debate on unemployment insurance, but I am prompted by some of the remarks of Members of the opposition Parties, including the one who just spoke, to do so.

I think their remarks really demonstrate how they are caught in the trap of being prisoners of their own rhetoric. They are hostages of the past. They refuse to learn from the mistakes that they have made and fail to recognize the changes that have been taking place in the labour force in Canada.

I would first like to mention a couple of things prompted by the speech we just heard a moment ago by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). He said that the Government was maintaining support for energy projects while refusing support for unemployment insurance. I will take the remark as it was stated without debating it, for a moment. We see the viewpoint of someone who for some reason or another would prefer to have people receive unemployment insurance than work in a productive capacity.

I know he has concerns about energy megaprojects and some of the environmental considerations connected thereto. However, I want to tell him that while I recognize those concerns I would certainly have to think that supporting projects that employ people in a positive way, a way in which they can contribute to the economy, has to be of more value than simply paying them not to work. That is what the reforms of this program are all about.

I also want to take a bit of a look at the past because he raised these issues in this way and mention at the start just a few of the things that that former Government did. I am not sure if he was a part of it then, but a look at history is always important.

The unemployment insurance program was created in 1940. One would think that any program created by government from time to time should be reviewed to see whether or not it is meeting the current conditions. In 1971 there was such a review. It was conducted by the Government under the Prime Minister of the day, Mr. Trudeau. His Government overhauled it. When it was changed the most noticeable change we could see was that the costs were doubled. It went from a cost of $900 million per year to $1.8 billion one year later in spite of favourable economic conditions. Presumably, then, this was not something that one would have desired, that is to say, not necessarily the question of the cost but the fact that more people were seeking unemployment insurance. It was becoming something which was seen as an opportunity for income as opposed to working and seeking productive employment.

In 1974 the Liberals decided to make some amendments. I think the changes they made then demonstrate the hypocrisy of what we heard just a moment ago. After being re-elected in 1974 the Liberals decided it was time for belt tightening and introduced three major Bills to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. The purpose of these measures was one only—to save money.

Bill C-79, which was introduced at that time, took away the right of workers 65 and older to participate in the unemployment insurance program. It reduced the special benefit payment for claimants with dependants. the Bill before us today we are returning the right to persons over 65 years of age to participate in the unemployment insurance scheme. We are reversing a change that was made in 1974 by the government of the day, supported by the Party of the Member who just spoke, which took away the right of workers over 65 to participate in the system, as a cost-saving measure.

• (1900)

Bill C-27 increased the number of weeks of work needed to collect benefits from eight to between ten and fourteen, depending on the region. It was obviously recognized that there were differences in the regions of this country and therefore a change was made to save money, but done in a way that it affected the regions differently.

Finally, Bill C-14 reduced the maximum amount of benefits from 66.6 per cent to 60 per cent of wages earned, and penalized repeaters who were mostly seasonal workers.

When we look back at those facts, it is difficult to listen to some of the rhetoric we heard a moment ago with any seriousness at all. Either they have had a mass transformation or they simply adopted what has become the habit of defending everything, to refuse any change, refuse to seek any change and propose no solution.

I want to return to why I believe this Bill should be supported. We do not necessarily gain by looking back 15 years. Rather, we want to look to the future and decide whether what we are trying to do is consistent with society of today and the society we expect in the future.

This Bill is worth supporting primarily for two reasons. First, it is an important step in making the unemployment insurance system responsive and efficient. I believe the changes make it a better program for all of the country, because it gives recognition to the changing nature of our economy.

As Members know, the proposed amendments and the proposed Labour Force Development Strategy are designed to address skills training and employment. The Unemployment Insurance Act amendments are a part of a series of changes in an attempt to make our employment programming more effective. By including the private educational sector and individual employees, the federal Government is making a concerted effort to change the direction of unemployment insurance from an attitude of the Government looking after one's interest to an attitude whereby the Government and industry will help you to get on your feet again soon.

Mr. Fisher: The Government is not doing it any more. They are paying for it themselves.

Mr. Dorin: The Member says the Government is not doing it any more because they are paying for it themselves. We heard earlier from a Member of the New Democratic Party who suggested that because the Government was restructuring the way the program would be financed—

Mr. Fisher: After January, 1990 funding will come out of the workers' pockets.

Mr. Dorin: It was restructured in the way the program would be financed and it will be financed essentially from the premiums. There will not be contributions from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Mr. Fisher: That is right.

Mr. Dorin: The Member states that, and it is true. What that seems to imply is that somehow those contributions were coming from somewhere else. It is a game typical of Members in that Party who somehow think we can have more and more and nobody has to pay. They think there is someone else who is paying the bill. The fact is that the unemployment insurance program is either going to be funded by premiums or by income tax or some other tax. If it is funded by income tax, whether the pay cheque deduction at the end of the month is on the line marked unemployment insurance, or the line called Canada Pension Plan, or the line that says income, the person receiving the cheque—

Mr. Fisher: Unemployment insurance is for income support, not for training.

Mr. Dorin: For the person receiving the pay cheque, it does not really make a great difference whether the deduction comes under the fine print of unemployment insurance, CPP or income tax. I suggest that it does not make a difference.

Mr. Fisher: You have never been unemployed, then. I guess you have never been unemployed.

Mr. Dorin: We are not talking about the unemployed.

Mr. Fisher: That is precisely who we are talking about.

Mr. Dorin: The people who are paying for the program are not the unemployed. The unemployed are receiving the benefit. The people who are paying for the program are the employed, the people who are working, earning wages, paying taxes and paying UI premiums.

We can talk all we want, the fact is that a change to paying it from the premiums rather than it simply being taken from the income tax that is deducted from the cheque will give employees an opportunity to see what the program is costing them. It may help them decide whether the program is giving them the value for their money.

I cannot believe that some people would suggest that the money comes from somewhere else. It comes from the same people. There is only one group of taxpayers in this country, and they are either going to pay it in one form or another. I reject the suggestion that changing the system so that premiums will pay the cost of the program will have an adverse impact upon it. The alternative would be to raise income tax or some other tax that Canadians will have to pay in any event.

Mr. Fisher: Maybe corporate tax. How would that be?

Mr. Dorin: The corporate tax is being raised because the corporate premium is being raised. If you want to talk about getting it from the corporations, the corporations will be paying it through the premiums.

It is a sharing of cost by the corporate sector and the employees for a benefit to be paid to people who find themselves out of work for one reason or another.

Let me return to the question of education and training. While we all recognize that in Canada there is a significantly well trained labour force, probably the second best trained labour force in the world, we also realize that other countries are increasing their skill levels, increasing their productivity and their competitiveness. It is important for us to respond.

One way to respond is to give people whose skills may no longer apply to today's market an opportunity to become productive again. Surely, using the unemployment insurance program to do that, rather than simply giving them funds to look for jobs that no longer exist, has to be a step in the right direction.

The day after the Labour Force Development Strategy was discussed on national television, I was contacted by an institution in Edmonton. They were ready to start training more workers immediately, if the Government was willing to help. I know they are hoping for a sound outcome to this debate and the consultations this summer.

The reason for my support of this Bill is based on a simple premise. That is, Canadians want to work. I am convinced that if we offer them the training and upgrading or the financing to go to work, they will take it.

Ms. Black: What about jobs?

Mr. Dorin: For jobs that will be available in new ways because we know that the world is changing. The Member can talk about trying to keep people employed in jobs that no longer exist.

I grew up in a small town. Every small town had a railway station, a bakery, a butcher shop, livery stable and a whole range of businesses that no longer exist today. We will never go back to those days. We will not be able to remain where we are. People have jobs today, jobs that will not exist one year, five years or ten years from now. Those jobs will no longer exist. We cannot try to maintain those jobs in a changing world and the man for the products and services they produce is no longer there. What we have to try to do is to find new jobs for those people and ensure that they are adequately trained to fill them. Five million Canadians a year change jobs. So job change is not the issue. Neither is trying to hold onto jobs that are no longer relevant to today's society. Surely what we want to do is train people for the society of the future.

I want to make a few comments about the capitalization and lump sum payments and how they reflect a commitment to change. Really these are an important statement for individual entrepreneurship. There can really be only three classes where workers go on unemployment insurance. Either they are unemployed for reasons beyond their control, they are temporarily out of the workforce for family reasons, or they have chosen not to work.

In the first scenario, when the person is unemployed for reasons of technology or economics, the proposed changes are improvements. Currently the rationale of the UI program is simply that you will continue to receive benefits until you find another job for which you are qualified, or until you go on another form of social assistance. This is not an exceptionally efficient use of finances, as I said earlier. It is a waste of the workers' time and talents, especially since they may be in a situation where there is really no hope of finding the kind of jobs that they have been doing in the past. By encouraging the person to get additional education or start a new business venture, we are making an unemployed worker into a better and more productive one.

The second scenario, where employees leave for family reasons, is also being improved with these amendments. Expanded maternity leave and a recognition that adoptive parents as well need time to adjust to the additional person in their lives will make for a more responsive program. With women an increasingly important part of the workforce, these revisions help ensure fairness in the system. The same holds true for older workers who do not want to retire at age 65. By extending benefits, the Government is making the system fairer for those older workers who want to continue in the workforce. That is an important measure because while in the past 20 years we have seen high levels of unemployment, these are in large measure the result of the baby boom after the Second World War with those people coming into the workforce.

In the next 10, 15, 20 years the reverse is going to be true. As these people grow older and begin to reach retirement age, we do not have the numbers coming into the workforce. Therefore, while the problem of the 1970s and the 1980s was one of high unemployment, the problem of the 1990s and the years beyond, in my view, is going to be one of shortage of skilled workers. Therefore, I think it is quite appropriate that whereas in the past we were encouraging people aged 65 or even younger to retire from the workforce, for those who wish to continue we should we give them every opportunity to do so.

I would like to make mention of the people in the third category, those people who choose not to work. There is also a group of amendments and increased penalties for those who abuse the UI system. These are also an integral part of an efficient and fair approach. They make it clear that the UI system is for workers and not for conscientious objectors in the workforce.

I want to talk about fairness in the program. I have a great many constituents who come to see me with various complaints. These amendments move to solve some of the problems, but unfortunately not all of them. For example, I suppose that under the current system, like the old one, it will still probably take several weeks for the contributor to receive the benefits to which he or she is legitimately entitled. That it can take months to receive a cheque strikes most of my constituents as unfair, especially since they are often receiving benefits for which perhaps they have paid over many months or years in the past. I have also heard from workers who could not collect benefits, and I am pleased to see that that issue is being addressed. I have also heard from people in the taxi industry and in the Armed Forces who currently do not believe the system is fair because they pay premiums and do not receive benefits. At some future time I would like to see that addressed.

On a positive note, the current amendments include a series of provisions to address current changes in the labour force, current factors of regional differences in the country. There is really no reason why we should offer the same level of benefits in an area where they have virtually full employment as we offer to an area in which there is less opportunity to find jobs. We know that in some areas of the country people can find work if they wish to. Again, this introduces an element of fairness.

I could speak longer on this topic, Mr. Speaker. I wish I had the opportunity. Maybe I will get that later tonight, but in the meantime I thank you for the time allotted to me and I will complete my remarks another day.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak against the proposed changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I am really saddened by these changes for I believe that these changes strike at the very heart of some basic social tenets in Canada.

Canadians have clearly indicated that the principles of social justice are important to them. Yet somehow the Conservative Government has decided to turn its back on these principles. Canadians have worked very hard to develop a compassionate and dignified social system. We know the worth of a good job. We know the dignity of being able to provide for our families. We are horrified by the images of the poor and the homeless in Canada. We are horrified by the images of people lining up at food banks in our society. Over the past decades, we have made a conscious and a committed decision to ensure an economically viable means of support for all Canadians.

There are times when a person suddenly loses his or her job, and it can be for a variety of reasons. It can be for a simple reason, such as incompatibility with the workplace. It can be for a very complex reason, such as the shutdown of a factory in Ontario or the shutting down of fish processing plants in my province of British Columbia. It can be for reasons that are more repugnant than these. It can be because an employee must quit her job because she has been sexually harassed by her employer. That is the reality of unemployment today in Canada. It is demeaning and it is debilitating. Ask any one who has been unemployed. It attacks your self-worth, it traumatizes your family, it makes you unable to provide for your family. That is the reality of unemployment today.

Now, this Government has decided to attack unemployed Canadians. This Government knows what the face of unemployment is in Canada today. It is young people, it is women and it is visible minorities.

My question is, why is it always these groups that always get the raw end of the deal from this Government? Why is it always the disadvantaged who pay the price? In my riding of New Westminster—Burnaby these changes will have a big impact on the health of my community. Many of the jobs in my riding are dependent on the resource sector. It is important to cushion the lives of these workers during the boom and bust cycles. Right now people work 10 weeks in order to receive unemployment benefits. That is not a lot of time. It is in fact often difficult to accumulate much money during that working time. For those who work for minimum wage, you can be assured that little, if any, money has been put aside. If this person happens to lose his or her job, there is at least at this time the safety net provided by unemployment insurance benefits.

The benefit money is well used. With benefits many families are only able to cover the basics of every day life. Their discretionary income is little, it is slight, and people depend on these benefits to provide food, clothing and transportation for their families. The benefits must also cover the cost of their housing. As you know, the cost of housing is very high in the lower mainland of British Columbia where I come from. These changes are going to impact very heavily on British Columbia where the unemployment rate in April ranged from 9.2 per cent in the lower mainland to an astonishing 15.4 per cent in Kamloops. There never have been enough jobs to go around.

I have some disturbing examples of the impact that the changes in qualification periods will have on the people in my riding. Under the old system, if someone worked 10 weeks they would be entitled to 32 weeks of unemployment insurance benefits. For those people who are fired after this Bill comes into effect with only 10 weeks of work, they have my heartfelt sympathy because they will receive nothing. Under the old system, those living in my riding and working 15 weeks could receive 37 weeks of assistance. Those people will now have nothing. Only those people who can receive 20 weeks of employment will get any scrap of benefit, but that benefit will be greatly reduced. Instead of receiving 42 weeks of insurance benefits, they will only get 31 weeks of benefits.

These are frightening statistics, Mr. Speaker. They are all the more frightening because unemployment is a plague which does hit the disadvantaged hardest, primarily women and younger people.

An Hon. Member: Are we getting to maternity benefits now?

Ms. Black: Yes, I will. It is difficult for me to observe the Minister's new found commitment to retraining. It does, I suppose, make good headlines and give a capsule of hope to some unemployed Canadians, but let's look beyond the headlines and the catch phrases and look into the reality of these retraining proposals.

Canada does need a strong commitment to retraining. We need to remove women from the pink ghetto jobs. We need to give young people the opportunity to learn a skill, and we should offer hope to those who want to pursue non-traditional occupations. We must prepare ourselves for the changes that are brought about by technological change. Canada must make a commitment to a viable and productive retraining program.

Instead, what has the Government pieced together? It has made a commitment to retraining which is based on a suspect system of funding. It has decided to force the jobless to pay for those who want to upgrade. The Minister will shift $800 million from the UI fund in order to fund retraining. This money should not be coming from the jobless. This is a group which faces many battles already; they have few savings and sometimes have low literacy skills, and we are telling them to fund those who wish to upgrade.

An Hon. Member: You want to keep them at home rather than send them to school.

Ms. Black: This is unpalatable. What is to prevent a large corporation from using these funds to pay for upgrading programs for their middle and upper-level employees? I have seen no guarantees in this legislation that would prevent this. There are no guarantees. How will we go about retraining all those displaced by the free trade deal? We need a cohesive policy to face this challenge, not a piecemeal shuffle of funds from one program to another.

Why is $32 million of this money being used to pay for student on-the-job training? This money should be used for what it is intended for, the support of those who are unemployed. When will the Government make a responsible commitment to retraining?

The unemployment insurance cuts, as with every action that the Government has taken in this session, hits the disadvantaged the hardest; women and young people, native people, all of those who experience high unemployment levels. These are the people who are being most short-changed by this attack on our unemployment insurance system.

The unemployment rate for women is 7.9 per cent, higher than that for men which is 7.2 per cent. Women are in and out of the labour market more often than men. It is women who bear the brunt of the responsibility for child rearing and family responsibilities. Why is the Government attacking women further with its changes to the unemployment insurance program?

Women's groups cried out that the Mulroney trade deal would hurt social programs like unemployment insurance, they cried out that it would hurt women the most. The Government has proven those women's groups right. Immigrant women who are losing their jobs in the textile and clothing industries because of free trade now have only half an unemployment insurance program to turn to. They are paying for UI benefits and for training now through their premiums and they will not have access to these benefits that they deserve. They will not even be able to access the job training due to the Government's discriminatory language training practices. Many immigrant women are condemned to job ghettos or to unemployment by the Government through its deplorable sexist discrimination in language training.

As a sweetener to this mess, the Government introduced parental leave and tried to take credit for it. The credit really belongs to Mr. Schachter who took the Government to court over another Tory discriminatory practice which forced natural mothers, out of economic necessity, to stay at home and take care of infants even if the couple had agreed that it would be the father who would take on this responsibility. It is Mr. Schachter who won parental benefits for natural fathers. The Government was forced to bring in parental leave through his actions.

At the same time, the Government has reduced adoptive parents' leave by five weeks. It has gone from 15 weeks to 10. The previous speaker tried to take credit for adoptive parents' leave. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) brought in these changes to parental leave knowing full well that many provincial labour laws do not guarantee that parents will be able to take that leave. This is just another way the Minister can attempt to score a few political points.

The fishing industry is a very important industry in my home province of British Columbia. After successive years of both Conservative and Liberal mismanagement the Canadian fishing industry is really at risk now, both on the East Coast and the West Coast of Canada. Why are they in danger? This is because the Conservative Government decided to put the needs of the Canadian people and the Canadian workers last.

On the East Coast, overfishing has meant massive lay-offs. Those who fish have lost their incomes. Fish plants are shutting down, processing jobs are lost. What has the Government done to help these laid off workers? It reduced their benefits. The Minister talks about retraining but, Mr. Speaker, retraining for what? Where are the jobs in these small coastal communities?

The Minister knows that 70 per cent of those who are employed in the fish processing industry are women and many of them visible minority women. Why has the Government chosen to attack the regions of Canada, attack the fragile resource industries of our country? Why has the Government allowed these jobs to be stolen from Canadian working women? The Government has introduced changes to our unemployment insurance program which may force these women and their families on to the welfare system.

It was in 1988 that Pat Carney told this House of Commons that fish would be landed, inspected, graded and quality- controlled in Canada. That has not happened. Instead, we have seen the present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) gut the whole Canadian industry. The whole B.C. fish processing industry has been gutted and those jobs are going. These job losses could not come at a worse time for Canadians. Not only have we lost control over our own Canadian fish, our own resource, we have now lost control over Canadian jobs. We are losing control today over Canadian social programs.

I wonder whether the Government thinks that it is some kind of accident that the countries with the most progressive unemployment insurance programs also have the lowest rates of unemployment? Countries like Sweden, Austria and Switzerland, all with truly progressive unemployment insurance programs, have unemployment rates of less than 5 per cent.

An Hon. Member: And the citizens have the highest tax rate in Sweden, too.

Ms. Black: Why has the Government again found it necessary to finance its agenda on the backs of the average and lower-income Canadian families? What benefit can come of this for Canadian people? None. Working people pay more when the Tories are in power and they receive less and less. We have a Government which said social programs were a sacred trust. We have a Government which chooses not to inform Canadians during an election of its plans to slash our social programs. We have a Government that invokes closure after only one day of debate on such a fundamental change to our social contract in Canada. This is flawed legislation. It is a sad time for all Canadians.

• (1930)

Mr. Brian O'Kurley (Elk Island): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to continue the debate on Bill C-21, regarding the Government's proposed changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. We in this country are faced with a monstrous deficit. In times such as this what is required of the Government is responsible restraint.

What is required, especially now, is for the Government to strike a balance between what we must do and what we can afford to do. While this is anything but easy, it is the responsibility of this Government to address the realities of our current situation.

These proposals are a good attempt to reflect the balance which is required at this point in time. They address the limitations which our deficit has placed upon us, but more important these proposals ensure the system continues to provide assistance to those who are in need.

These proposals, in many ways, have sought to improve the current system without losing sight of the fact that we are faced with a deficit of crippling proportions. The time has come for us to try to accomplish more for less. Only in this way can we address all of our responsibilities.

The origins of our unemployment insurance system can be traced back to the period immediately following the Second World War. Faced with the possible spectre of severe unemployment, the Government of the day devised a system which ensured that the basic needs of the returning soldiers would be met. The seeds for what we have today were planted in 1971 when the system was reorganized.

We must ask ourselves, has it gone beyond what it was intended to do? Can it be improved? Can the unemployment insurance system do more to help those who are truly in need?

Can the system continue to support those who need it without serving to some as a disincentive to get back to work? Of course, unemployed workers should continue to receive benefits, but the system must be flexible enough to assist them in getting work.

There are many who want to work but, through no fault of their own, find themselves without jobs. The spirit of the Act is to support people while they look for work and to assist people with special problems so that they too can obtain work.

There are abuses of the system. The people who abuse the system are not dishonest. The truth is the system allows for, and in many cases, encourages these abuses to take place. We all know people who do not feel like returning to work because they are entitled to more weeks of benefits. Many people do not have any objections to spending the summer collecting unemployment insurance. I think people realize this.

Never in the history of mankind have changes to society been more dramatic than they are now. The new legislation addresses the unemployment problems which are the result of this changing world: a world which finds women re-entering the workforce, a world which finds older workers displaced by changing job requirements, younger workers trying to crack the workforce, seasonal workers in and out of jobs and those facing the toughest challenge of all, the long-term unemployed.

Let us discuss for a moment the federal Government's new labour force development strategy announced in April. This will build on the success of the Canadian Jobs Strategy, and in consultation with business, labour and the provinces will provide new ways of responding to the needs of the Canadian labour market in this changing world.

Let us take, for example, the plight of many older workers. I meet many who want jobs while travelling in my riding of Elk Island. These people are accustomed to work. In fact, their pride demands that they put in an honest day's work. These older workers will benefit from the $100 million earmarked to retrain them.

For those who are in danger of losing their jobs, the new industrial adjustment service will be doubled to $30 million to help retrain workers who might otherwise be laid off. These are commonsense ideas which prevent workers from being displaced, which identify the special concerns of the older worker or those who are without skills.

I would like to speak for just a moment about young people. I have four children. How this country competes on the world stage in the future depends on how well they are prepared to meet the challenges. Support will be quadrupled through co-operative education, providing high school and college students with valuable hands on experience. Over the next four years, it will rise to $34 million. Many young people making the transition from school to the labour force will benefit from the new entry level training programs. One hundred million dollars will be spent on this and up to 50,000 new workers will receive assistance from this program.

Forty-five million dollars will go to unemployed Canadians for increased self-employment, so that they can set up their own businesses and create more jobs. This lump sum form of benefits will also allow workers to move if they wish to seek jobs somewhere else.

This is not all. A national skills development advisory board will be set up to tell the Government what the private sector is looking for. Human resource planning will receive $65 million to further develop a national job strategy. This will expand Employment and Immigration's current human resource services. It will help industries and occupational associations plan for changes in their personal needs, using EIC programs and services. To further strengthen this plan, money will go to building networks of industry associations, unions and training institutions so they can work toward building more jobs for Canadians.

The Labour Force Development Strategy also proposes to make the system fairer by including these benefit provisions: Special unemployment benefits which will include 15 weeks of maternity benefits, 10 weeks of parental benefits and 15 weeks of sickness benefits. This will cost $450 million annually.

The system must be fine-tuned so it works best for those who need it most. We must ensure the system continues to help those who are in need, while recognizing the need for fiscal restraint. We must try to accomplish more for the people the system was originally designed for. We must try to make the system better. This is why the proposed changes are in line with regional disparities. Where there is high unemployment, people will not have to wait as long to collect benefits. They will also be able to collect for longer periods.

Seasonal workers will be helped under the proposed changes too. The Government proposes to eliminate the repeater clause. A seasonal worker who is forced to collect a second time in a year will not need to have the extra weeks of work the second time. These measures simply reflect the reality that it is tougher to find a job in the interior of B.C. than it is in southern Ontario. If we really are going to get more for less we must simply make the system work better. One way of getting more for less is by enlisting the support of industry. Since industry, both large and small, provides these jobs we must match its need for skilled labour with the need people have to work. Instead of mobilizing a huge government bureaucracy to take care of this retraining, why not let industry experts do this? Compared with other industrialized countries, our industrial training programs lag far behind.

The Government's objective is to stimulate an additional private sector effort of $1.5 billion per year by the year 1994. This will bring the total to approximately $3 billion per year by 1994, a level which would take us up to par with industry training programs in the United States. This will help Canadians who are unemployed, Canadian who face unemployment because their skills are becoming obsolete, young Canadians who are beginning their careers, Canadians who will be helped to escape the prospect of long-term unemployment and Canadians who want to work.

We all know what many opposition Members are saying. They say the money belongs to the workers. I say the money not only belongs to them but to the unemployed workers as well. I say that when the system is being abused then money is being taken out of the pockets of all Canadians, especially those who need the money the most, those who are looking for jobs.

What do the people of Canada think of the UI system? The results of a Gallup poll that were made public recently in The Gazette confirmed what the Government is attempting to address with these proposed changes. The poll revealed that 74 per cent of Canadian citizens felt that many people are abusing the unemployment insurance program. Almost three-quarters of those polled felt that many people use the unemployment system as a form of paid vacation. Is this fair to Canadians who pay into the system? Is this fair to the unemployed Canadians who have a real need for assistance? Isn't the aim of the system to help these Canadians find work? Don't training and retraining programs do precisely this?

In summary, some Hon. Members seem to think we can solve a problem by throwing money at it. This is not a responsible way to spend Canadians' hard earned money. The intention of these proposals is to improve the UI system while keeping in mind the necessity of restraint. These proposals represent a creative way of achieving both. These proposals do not lose sight of our responsibilities to unemployed Canadians. These proposals are designed to provide jobs.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to participate in this very important debate on this very important Bill C-21, which amends the Unemployment Insurance Act. It is an important debate taking place here today because this Bill, which is badly flawed and unacceptable on its own for many reasons, most of which we have already heard throughout this debate, is even more repugnant when one looks at the backdrop of events that have taken place prior to the introduction of these changes.

I want to speak for a while about some of the changes as they affect Atlantic Canada. The Hon. Member opposite may have a chance to speak a little later, so perhaps he could listen to me first and speak more intelligently a little later.

Canadians will remember that during the recent election campaign on many occasions when the Liberals and the New Democrats told the people that they believed major changes were coming once the Tory Government got re-elected, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the Minister for International Trade said as eloquently as he possibly can, as all Newfoundlanders do: "Unemployment benefits are safe with the Conservatives". He went to the extent of saying that he confirmedwith the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that there were no problems at all all. He said that all this was fearmongering from the Opposition in an effort to get votes.

Shortly after the Tories were re-elected, after a few leaks, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) had to come to this House prior to Budget night and tell us that there would be major changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. She stated in this House, as many other other members of the front bench opposite did at the time, that the changes were consistent with the statement that had been made by the Minister for International Trade during the election campaign.

We kept asking the Prime Minister, the Minister for International Trade and the Minister for Employment, how could they speak out of both sides of their mouths? Was it not true that statements made were misleading to Canadians during the election campaign? Members opposite insisted all along that that was not the case.

Just recently the Minister appeared at the Labour Committee and was asked whether or not certain changes were being considered to the Unemployment Insurance Act prior to and during the election campaign. The Minister did not rule out or unequivocally say no, that was not the case, that no changes were being considered. She said: "I suppose there were some evaluations going on in the Department but nothing specific. Therefore, in my view, I think the statements made during the campaign were correct". I think Canadians know a flip-flop and a shim-sham when they see one. This particular exchange and these comments made in the House were exactly that. It was an effort to gain votes. It was an effort by a desperate Party during a desperate campaign to try to hide the true agenda in order to get re-elected.

That was the backdrop. It showed the depth of deception of the Party opposite when it was campaigning for votes. Since the election, the Tories have come into this House and talked about the great commitments toward national reconciliation, wealth creation, job creation, and economic prosperity which they would inflict upon Canadians.

There are a number of programs which Canadians have come to respect and expect, especially from our neck of the woods in Atlantic Canada. Initially these were called regional development agreements. Then the name was changed to the general development agreements. This was a method by which the federal Government took the vast resources of this country and redistributed them, took the concept of equalization, that it did not matter where you lived in this great nation, you had a right to expect and enjoy a certain standard of living. The GDAs did this. The ERDA process which replaced it in 1984 did it. That process took money from the wealthiest parts of the country and redistributed it to places like Atlantic Canada.

During that same election campaign in November, 1988, members of this Government seeking re-election and election went on and said: "Regional development programs are safe. That is a sacred trust". Well those GDAs and subsequently the ERDAs contributed billions of dollars toward the economy of Atlantic Canada. On March 31 of this year, the Government, under its true agenda, allowed $721 million in general development agreements or ERDA agreements to expire in Atlantic Canada alone. It is telling that the Government hid the details of this of this for as long as it possibly could.

Then there was a leak in the press and the Government had to come clean with the Canadian public. The Minister opposite from my home province, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. MacKay) who is responsible for ACOA, would shake his head many times. He should have been hanging his head in shame because he allowed his colleagues in Cabinet to take $721 million in very necessary investment in Atlantic Canada and shuffle it off under the guise of deficit reduction. That is shameful.

By March of next year, if this pattern of uncaring, this true Tory agenda, continues unabated, there will be $1.221 billion worth of development agreements that may not be renewed. An Hon. Member opposite is shaking his head. He should talk to the Premiers of Newfoundland, P.E.I. and New Brunswick who are on bended knees asking the Government to honour its commitments to Atlantic Canada and to renew those agreements that have been allowed to lapse.

Mrs. Sparrow: What about Hibernia?

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): An Hon. Member asks about Hibernia. What about Hibernia? The deadlines placed by the Government to have that deal signed and the production modules in place has passed. Just last week, we heard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) say that he did say in a speech he gave that they would have to reduce the cost of Hibernia. He said that they may take those jobs that were supposed to be created in Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada off-shore because because they might have to produce the production platforms off-shore. They are exporting the jobs. That is what the Government is doing with Hibernia, so do not give me any of that crap about Hibernia. The people of Atlantic Canada know exactly what is happening with Hibernia. It is the same type of game the Government has played with ERDAs and all the other development programs that have been canned.

Through this cruel game with ERDAs, the Government cut off some very important development programs in things like the fisheries, forestry and the tourism industry. I will deal first with the tourism industry. The Minister from Nova Scotia keeps saying that while he is negotiating, these agreements are not dead, but it may take a little longer. He says that they may reprofile the moneys. I think we should reprofile the Minister. We should put him back on his woodlot in Pictou County. He is not doing his job on behalf of the people of Atlantic Canada.

The tourism sector of Atlantic Canada is one of the industrial sectors that has the potential for true growth, the creation of thousands of jobs and new wealth in Atlantic Canada. That was recognized by this Government, by previous Governments and by all the Governments of Atlantic Canada.

The tourism sub-agreements for Atlantic Canada expired and the Government played a cat, mouse and shell game with the Premiers. Perhaps, through a slip of the tongue, the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. Hockin) spit out last night or the night before that they will not review the tourism sub-agreements, they are dead. That is what he said. We on this side of the House knew it and the people of Atlantic Canada knew it, but once again, we had to squeeze it out of a Tory before we were told exactly what the Government is going to do and how it will devastate our region.

In the forestry industry, there have been hundreds of millions of dollars put into silviculture for the 30,000-odd private woodlot owners of Nova Scotia alone. In Nova Scotia and Atlantic Canada, there are tens of thousands, perhaps over 100,000 jobs directly and indirectly related to the forestry industry. The Government of Canada, in co-operation with the Governments of the Atlantic provinces, were using that money for silviculture so that forestry was truly a renewable resource. It created jobs. Yes, they were seasonal jobs but they were jobs. They left people with their dignity. When people were laid off, they would go on unemployment insurance. That program has not been renewed and there will be thousands of individuals in Nova Scotia who will not be able to work in the forestry because the Government, in its gutless approach to regional development, has refused to renew those agreements.

For what the Government has done to the fishery, all Members opposite, particularly those from Atlantic Canada, should hang their heads in shame. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) likes to pretend that he even knows where the East Coast is. I do not think he would know the Atlantic Ocean if he fell in it head-first. Every time he is asked about the East Coast fisheries, the Minister tries to mimic the Minister for International Trade. He is certainly no match for anyone from Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, P.E.I. or New Brunswick. We know the fisheries in those provinces. We know the devastation that has been wreaked by the mismanagement of the fishery by the Minister.

The Government has taken a dwindling resource and allocated it to the foreign fishing fleet. Time after time, people say that we have to look after fishermen and fish plant workers, those very individuals who work in a fragile industry, a seasonal industry. What has happened to the fishery? A headline in The Chronicle-Herald of Friday, May 12, 1989, says: "NatSea pulls plug". Where will the fish plant closures occur? Seafair Enterprises Limited, Wood's Harbour, closed, 60 seasonal workers lost their jobs. Medway Fisheries Limited, Port Medway, closed, 50 seasonal workers lost their jobs. NatSea Canso, closed altogether, 625—

An Hon. Member: What about full-time jobs?

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): Do you want to know where they have lost full-time jobs? I will tell Hon. Members that if they will just listen. NatSea in Canso, closed June, July, reopens August and will close for good, and 625 full-time jobs will be lost. There is a fish plant in Lockeport that has been closed by the Government's mismanagement of the fishery. Lockeport closes June, July, reopens August, September, permanent closure October 1, 450 full-time jobs lost. The Hon. Member wants to know where the job losses are. I will send this over and maybe he can edify himself. He will be able to tell where they are kicking the you-know-what of the people of Atlantic Canada. The fishery policy has put in jeopardy those very jobs that the ERDAs sought to protect and the Government has refused to renegotiate those deals.

In ACOA, $1 billion of new money was supposedly put in, announced with much fanfare by the Prime Minister on his way to Europe in 1987. He announced in Newfoundland a five-year program, $1 billion in new money. After the Budget came down and after the Minister opposite could not hide the real figures from the Opposition and the public any longer, we found out two or three minutes before he appeared before a committee that he changed the rules on ACOA. He told us that there would be minor modifications. He took a five-year program and stretched it out into a seven-year program. That is a cut of 25 per cent in the moneys available on a yearly basis, and it is a reneging on the commitment the Government made to that program for Atlantic Canada.

I have talked to people in the industrial sector, individuals who were looking to take advantage of ACOA dollars. They wanted to create real wealth in Atlantic Canada. Those individuals will not be able to do that any longer. There will be more unemployment in Atlantic Canada as a result of the policies of the Government.

Let us go a bit further and talk about the base closures that have taken place in Atlantic Canada. In Summerside, 1,300 employees will lose their jobs, devastating the economy of that small island. The people of Prince Edward Island spoke when they re-elected a Liberal Government and left only two Members in opposition. This Government would not listen. It has plugged its ears. It does not want to hear the bad news. It knows that the job it has done is a dirty deed and it does not want to fess up to it.

The Government has inflicted more despair in places like Barrington. The Hon. Member opposite has done his very best to try to keep the people of his riding from going down the tubes, but his own Government does not listen to him. Over 300 jobs were lost at CFB Sydney. Those are the kind of economic policies the Government has been inflicting on Atlantic Canada since it was re-elected. I could go on forever. I could talk about Established Programs Financing and about the $15 million that are gone in Nova Scotia as a result of the cut-backs in education transfers and transfers for hospital care.

I could also talk about the At and East program. There is a Bill currently before the House which, when passed, if it does pass, will jeopardize 295 jobs at the Halifax grain terminal. Those employees will be on unemployment insurance, if they qualify under the new regulations.

The Government is stripping and gutting VIA Rail. It is pulling up the tracks on VIA Rail. Nowhere will that be felt harder than in Atlantic Canada. For Members opposite who do not think that 300 or 400 jobs are a lot of jobs, I ask them to look at how big Nova Scotia is. It has 875,000 people. I have probably already chronicled approximately 2,000 jobs lost in Nova Scotia as a result of the Government's policy. If that was translated into Montreal or Toronto, the Government would not have the nerve to pull that off in those centres because it would be thousands or tens of thousands of jobs lost.

However, it picks on the Atlantic provinces where government Members think that they can just plug their ears and do not have to listen to people from the Atlantic provinces, and that they will deal with the centre. That is exactly what the Government has intended all along. This Government is going to dismantle the country piece by piece and it started in the Atlantic region.

That was the backdrop before Bill C-21, amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, was introduced. This Bill tries to help reduce the deficit that the Government has brought upon itself on the backs of those Canadians who can least afford to pay for the Government's mismanagement.

The Government thinks that there are cheaters in the system. I ask government Members to check the statistics from their own Departments. The number of people who have abused the unemployment insurance system is extremely small. Every time a Minister opposite rises to talk about the changes, the first thing he states is that he is trying eliminate abuse of the system.

Mr. Arseneault: Less than 1 per cent.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): My hon. colleague states that it is less than 1 per cent. Therefore, 99 per cent are pummelled in order to get rid of 1 per cent. Not one Canadian believes the Government for a second. Nobody in Atlantic Canada does, anyway.

Under this Bill the Government is going to increase the qualifying period and decrease the benefits in Atlantic Canada. It is going to decrease the amount of time that unemployment insurance can be drawn. But, by God, when things get so bad that the unemployment rate jumps up to 14 per cent, 15 per cent, or 16 per cent, the Government will be a little less tough and a little nicer. However, what will be done in the meantime? After the fish plants have been closed, the people working on the military bases have been thrown out of work, virtually shut down the tourism industry in Atlantic Canada, put in peril the fisheries in Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, P.E.I., and New Brunswick, and VIA Rail has been shut down, the Government comes in and cuts the safety net that was supposed to be there to ensure that Canadians are not pushed off a diving board into a pool with no water. The very social safety net has been cut with the changes proposed in this Bill.

At the same time, the Minister opposite states that the Government is going to put some of that money into retraining. Time and time again she was asked if $200 million in benefits is taken out of Atlantic Canada, was she prepared to rise in the House and tell us that $200 million in new training dollars will go in? The Minister has yet to give us that assurance, because the political will is elsewhere. She has been asked a number of times in the House, as has the Prime Minister and we cannot receive that commitment.

I could go on for days about what the Government has been doing to the economy of Atlantic Canada. I certainly hope that Members opposite will listen intently and find it in their hearts, if they can find their hearts, to say that this Bill is the final act of humiliation by a callous and cruel Government hitting those people who can least afford to look after themselves, and hitting those regions that can least afford to be kicked in the manner that they have been kicked.

I urge Members opposite to get hold of themselves, come to their senses, and to say no to this dastardly Bill.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary Southwest): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate this evening. I was interested in some of the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth (Mr. MacDonald), on the other side of the House.

We certainly do realize that there are areas within the regions of Canada that have more difficulties than other areas. That is exactly what the Government has been striving to overcome in the past four years.

Atlantic Canada has had the greatest economy during the past four years since World War II. Over the past four years there have been 108,000 new jobs created on the East Coast. Since we came into Government the unemployment rate has fallen in P.E.I. from 13.8 per cent to 11 per cent; in Nova Scotia it has fallen from 13 per cent to 9 per cent; in New Brunswick it has fallen from 14 per cent to 10 per cent; and in Newfoundland it has fallen from 24 per cent to 13.5 per cent.

In 1984 the Liberal Government that was then in power put $185 million into Atlantic Canada for regional development. This year the Progressive Conservative Government will be contributing $420 million. That is almost three times the amount that the Liberals put in. Equalization payments are up 40 per cent in Atlantic Canada. Over the past four years, we have increased equalization payments by 40 per cent.

There are other areas in Canada that also have difficulties, it is not only Atlantic Canada. I want to tell Members what we have done in western Canada. In August, 1987, we developed the Western Diversification Fund. This Government set aside $1.2 billion to be used for diversification. Up until today, we have approved 1,006 projects for a total of $574 million. That is going into Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia.

Mr. Arseneault: When?

Mrs. Sparrow: They started at Christmastime in 1987, nearly two complete years ago. It is continuous and extremely successful.

In 1984, when we came into power the unemployment rate in my Province of Alberta was 13 per cent. Today it is down to 8 per cent. We have created 70,000 new jobs in the Province of Alberta, and I am proud of that.

There are also areas such as the Husky upgrader where we are investing moneys to refine heavy oil so we can then ship it as light crude either to eastern Canada or to the United States. We are also putting funding into the OSLO area in which we will be able to utilize the oil sands in regard to security of supply.

Over the past four years, CIDA contract awards going into my Province of Alberta have more than doubled. Procurement contracts that we never had before we are now starting to receive. We are now building the infrastructure so that we in western Canada can also participate.

It is a privilege for me to speak on Bill C-21, a Bill that provides statutory authority for the implementation of certain provisions of the federal Government's labour force development strategy. I was reviewing the labour force development strategy and how we are reinforcing private sector training through human resource planning and training. We are putting in an increase of $65 million to expand the current services. Obviously, as science and technology change, and as our jobs and our goals change, we have to develop the human resources.

For entry level skills development, there is an additional $100 million for training, including a new program to meet the needs of growing industries, especially those in the service sector. It is very interesting how we note that the service sector will be far more important in the years to come. For too long we in this country have rested on our laurels. We have been a resource driven country. Canadians have developed and depended upon their resources to maintain and improve their standard of living. We have oil and gas in the province from which I come and also a great deal of coal. In Canada there is a great deal of nickel, gold and iron ore. There is uranium in the Province of Saskatchewan. Of course, there are fish on the east and west coasts which, too, are natural resources. Our forestry areas also represent a tremendous resource.

In Canada we have been doing so well that we have not been looking ahead at how we will meet the markets as far as efficiency and global trading in the next decade are concerned. I guess what I could say is that we have not been sharpening our wits. We have to change our habits. Changing our habits is as important as changing the UI program and setting aside funding to retrain people so that they can meet the demands of the next decade. In this way we can go into the 21st century competing with our colleagues, not just those south of the border but those internationally.

We have to change our habits. We have to re-educate ourselves and change our direction. As I said, the best way to change our direction is through training. That must be the main way.

Another interesting development that has happened over the past few weeks is in terms of Bill C-3, which had to do with the development of the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology. We can see that the Progressive Conservative Government along with our Minister of Industry, Science and Technology (Mr. Andre) and the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Winegard), who is in the House tonight, are very much aware of how much science and technology, and research and development mean to the future development of our country. I do not know whether the Minister has ever said this, but I think he means that they are probably the weapons that will maintain and improve our economy. The Minister would very much like to see alliances formed with the Government, universities and industries right across Canada, working together to spend better what moneys we have. We are under deficit reduction. All of us on this side of the House realize how important it is to bring down the deficit and, indeed, the debt. It is not "our problem", it is everybody's problem. We do not want to be spending today, putting that on the backs of the youth of tomorrow.

In terms of initiatives to help the unemployed and in terms of training for the unemployed we have increased funds to $350 million under Section 26. The Government will consult. It will consult with the private sector and with the provinces on how best to implement this proposal. This is something we have been doing over the past four and one-half years. Instead of making unilateral decisions, national reconciliation and co-operation with all levels of Government, be they our provincial counterparts or municipal counterparts, are very important. I was pleased to hear the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) say that she will work with these particular areas.

Through employment assistance in the Canada Centres for Employment we will offer more intensive assistance to unemployed workers by directing job seekers to the services that they need and at an earlier age in an area of unemployment. There will also be help for social assistance recipients. There will be an additional $100 million made available which is contingent, of course, upon matching allocations from the provinces.

There will be help for displaced and older workers to the tune of $100 million. This money will be for special measures to assist displaced and older workers to re-establish themselves in the labour force.

In terms of self-employment, entrepreneurship and mobility assistance there is a provision for $45 million for UI recipients to capitalize benefits in one lump sum. This money could be used for start-up costs, subject to a viable business plan, or for mobility assistance up to a maximum of $10,000. This is exactly the way we should go in terms of assisting people in different regions of our country who are at different levels of employment, people with disabilities and people who have to move in order to obtain jobs.

When this country of ours was created geologically some of the regions received some resources which turned into tremendous wealth benefits. Other regions did not receive any. Therefore people have to go to where the jobs are. We will try to assist them in every way that we possibly can.

As I said, I am very pleased to speak on this Bill that improves the unemployment insurance program. As Members of the House are aware, these adjustments are an integral part of the Labour Force Development Strategy. This strategy signals the Government's determination to help Canadians, both employed and unemployed, as well as to help Canadians adapt to a changing labour market. Fundamental to making the transition is mobilizing and preparing our human resources.

It has been estimated that by the year 2000 almost 80 per cent of Canadian jobs will demand professional, white collar skills, compared to today's figure of 40 per cent. The traditional blue collar job is disappearing. Even those people on the shop floor are now being expected to have reading, writing and numerical skills to deal with the complex, high-tech machinery around them. We have seen that over the past five to ten years cash registers which have been computerized and which provide stock taking as well. It certainly makes conducting inventory a lot easier. However, again, we recognize that people working in the retail area will have to be better educated and better trained. That is why the thrust of this strategy is to improve the amount and quality of training and, in the private sector, to help Canadians attain skills in demand. In this regard the co-operation of business, labour and Government is essential.

Through this strategy we are encouraging the private sector to take on a leadership role in training, as the private sector has done in many other countries. The example in many other countries has proven that businesses must constantly help their workers to upgrade their skills in order to keep their businesses competitive. For instance, 1987 figures show that while U.S. firms spent about $30 billion annually on formal training and retraining, the Canadian private sector devoted only $1.5 billion a year to skill development activities. Adjusting for the relative size of our economies and differences in survey design, the result is indisputable that Canadian firms spend barely one-half of what their American counterparts commit to improving the skills of their employees. Herein lies the rub. We certainly have to call upon the private sector to partake in more of the retraining and, indeed, in the cost of retraining people, for people are the greatest resource of the country.

As we move into the next decade and the next century it is up to all of us, not just to the Government, to be retraining our best resources. We have to do better if we are going to be successful and compete in the international market. In this way we can ensure that Canadians will continue to enjoy one of the highest standards of living in the world.

Almost 50 years ago, when Mackenzie King's Government passed the first Unemployment Insurance Act, the intention of UI programs was to encourage industrial stability and social security. Today, the purpose of unemployment insurance programs is the same. The goal of our Government is still to protect people out of work and to maintain economic stability.

In 1989, however, the structure of the labour market is changing before our eyes. No longer does our economy depend almost entirely on a resource based industry. No longer does a high school education ensure a young person a good job.

If Canada is to keep up with the pace of expanding global markets and world competition, it is imperative that we prepare for it now. It is evident that our unemployment insurance programs, while continuing to protect workers, must evolve with the times. The Labour Force Development Strategy means a shift toward programs and services that in the future will help Canadians get back to work as quickly as possible. Clearly, training and other active employment programs are the key to preparing Canadians for the future and, to that end, the Labour Force Development Strategy outlined a wide range of initiatives designed to help these people get back to work.

Some of these programs which I outlined earlier include entry levels skill development programs, human resource planning and training programs, the Industrial Adjustment Service Program, Community Futures. These are initiatives to help the unemployed. These are all very meaningful ways that we will assist people get back to work as quickly as possible.

The amendments in Bill C-21 give effect to these changes and will see the resources committed under the UI program for active assistance increased from $405 million available today to more than three times that, an estimated $1.4 billion in the first full implementation year. These funds will be used to train and provide financial assistance to help UI claimants get job training, experience, or work.

Since 1977, some unemployment insurance money was used to provide training for those receiving benefits. Last year, for example, 74,000 claimants were trained under Section 61 programs.

The Labour Force Development Strategy proposes to extend training to an additional 60,000 trainees. Funds will be earmarked for skills training and education upgrading for displaced and older workers. This strategy recognizes that training involves much more than school costs.

Government programming has long ensured that adequate income support is available to those who need training but encounter financial barriers related to dependants, care or travel and commuter costs. We will also be making funds available for relocation assistance for an expected 5,000 claimants so those who want to travel out of town to look for work or those who want to move where job prospects are better will have income support available.

The Bill also considers those claimants who want to start a business. Assistance will be available to support the entrepreneurial ideas of those on unemployment insurance. As well, some UI funds have been set aside to provide incentives to the unemployed to find work quickly. This may be in the form of bonuses or temporary earning supplements.

Forty-nine years ago the Unemployment Insurance Act was passed to help workers in a changing labour market. Today, market transformation is again our impetus for amending the Unemployment Insurance Act. Providing a safety net for unemployed workers remains paramount. The unemployment insurance program continues to be an integral part of Canada's social system. The size of the over-all UI program will not change. What is different is the direction of our unemployment insurance program.

Out in the domain of the unemployed, life is getting more difficult and the strategy is based on the principle that a more pro-active approach is needed by business, by government and by labour to address these needs. Clearly, the positive steps we are talking about today address the needs of workers and of the market. This will ensure Canada's prosperity tomorrow.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this evening to take part in the debate on Bill C-21.

[English]

Bill C-21 should be renamed the Tory broken promises Bill, because it implements once more the exact opposite of what the Conservatives promised the electorate during the last election campaign.

Lest one thinks that I am merely making a partisan remark, let me remind Members opposite what the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) said during the last election campaign.

On October 14, 1988, as quoted by the Evening Telegram of St. John's Newfoundland, the Minister for International Trade said: "No one is planning any changes in the unemployment insurance program. There hasn't been any change proposed to us since we dealt with the Forget Commission and we are not contemplating any changes".

Of course, one has to bear in mind that this particular statement was made by a Tory. When quotes are made by Tories, sometimes one has to interpret them as being exactly the opposite of what was said. As Winston Churchill once put it: "The opposite to the truth was never stated with greater accuracy".

The Tories have been reducing funding for job development since they came to power.

Mrs. Sparrow: That is not true.

Mr. Boudria: A Tory Member across the way is shouting that is not true. The Tories have reduced funding to the tune of $700 million. Now it is claiming that it is contributing $800 million, but that is almost the amount it took out. Furthermore, this does not take into account the fact that the $800 million they are contributing is being taken from the funds of the workers. They are taking it out of the UI fund.

The Member across says that is not true. Let me give her a few examples of what is happening in my constituency this year. I ask those Members to pay close attention. In the great constituency of the Glengarry—Prescott—Russell here in eastern Ontario we had a job re-entry project in Rockland, Ontario and one in Hawkesbury, Ontario. This year they applied for four smaller programs under job re-entry.

For those people who may be listening to this debate, the job entry and job re-entry programs are designed with a particular emphasis on women who have not been in the workforce for some time or who have never formed part of the so-called active workforce. It is designed to give them skills to find a job.

Those programs in my constituency have a success rate of 90 per cent to 100 per cent. The program at the high school in Vankleek Hill had a placement rate of 100 per cent. Every woman who started the program finished and got a job. I congratulate the people who put this program together for my constituency.

This year we applied for four smaller programs totalling slightly more than what was applied for last year. Three of those programs have been refused because of lack of funding. That is the kind of commitment we see from the Tories who say that they want to train workers in order to get jobs.

About a month ago the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) sent us a large press kit inviting us to inform the population of our ridings about the great new co-op program with the schools. The very same day that I received this press kit on my desk I received a refusal from the same Minister for one of those co-op grants. It is the only one for which we applied in the constituency that I represent. That is the Government's commitment to the riding that I represent to assist toward retraining and the training of people to find productive jobs.

Let us look at what the Conservatives have done for the great region of eastern Ontario. There is a misconception that just because Toronto is doing very well economically, all of Ontario does extremely well and there is no such thing as unemployment in our great province.

That is not true. For instance, the riding I represent in Prescott County has an unemployment rate that nears 14 per cent. That is only about 60 miles from Parliament Hill where we are standing right now. The unemployment rate in my area is very high.

I think I heard someone across the way suggest: "Why don't they get a job?" That is very typical of the sensitive Tories. It is surprising that they got 19 per cent of the votes last time in my riding with that kind of a mentality. That is all they received and it is about 15 per cent more than they deserve.

Let me read from the Throne Speech wherein in indicated:

> The new federal approach to regional development is working.

That is very debatable. The Throne Speech of April 3 continued:

> Decentralized decision making, through the regional agencies in Western Canada, Northern Ontario and Atlantic Canada, has been instrumental in stimulating both entrepreneurial endeavour and business investment. Funding for regional development in Quebec and for these agencies will be continued, and the government procurement policies will become increasingly responsive to regional considerations.

Do you notice something missing from that statement, Mr. Speaker? eastern Ontario is not there. Now under previous programs there was the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board, a component to assist high unemployment areas of eastern Ontario such as my riding. Under the Industrial Regional Development Program, IRDP that expired last summer, northern and eastern Ontario were considered equally.

They were considered because both of those regions have economic difficulties. This time the words "northern Ontario" appear, which is fine, but the words "eastern Ontario" are missing from the Throne Speech. That was the first indication that eastern Ontario to get a kick in the pants from the Conservatives across the way.

I would like to recall, Mr. Speaker, the doctrine formulated by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who said, a few days after the last election campaign, that because Eastern Ontario voted for the Liberals, it could no longer expect anything from the Conservative Government and would get nothing from a Conservative Government. That was the Conservative philosophy and attitude expressed in no uncertain terms a few days after the election campaign by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. We now see that this theory is being applied, that this statement is becoming fact, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Let me give a few indications of what this Bill would do to the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. As I said previously, the unemployment rate in the National Capital Region is in the order of 5.6 per cent to 5.7 per cent.

[Translation]

I say: good for the people of Ottawa if things are going well in the National Capital region, with an unemployment rate of 5.6 or 5.7 per cent. The trouble is, Mr. Speaker, that the National Capital Region is grouped together with neighbouring regions into one economic zone. In other words, the ridings of Stormont—Dundas, Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, Renfrew, Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington, and so forth, and the City of Ottawa are considered as one unit. Statistics Canada takes the figures for this region and uses them to calculate the regional unemployment rate. So on that basis, the unemployment rate for Eastern Ontario is 5.7 per cent.

This may be true for the region as a whole, but it certainly is not true in Hawkesbury or in Prescott County which has an unemployment rate of 5.7 per cent. In Cornwall, Stormont—Dundas and Glengarry, the unemployment rate is 10.9 per cent. It does not apply either to the Renfrew area, which unfortunately has an unemployment rate as high as 11 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, Ottawa has been regrouped with the neighbouring regions, even regions that are pretty far away, for the purposes of these statistics.

I raised this point in a question in the House of Commons on April 17, 1989, and I received an answer that was not very encouraging, I would even say frivolous, from the Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) (Mrs. Vézina). A few days later, I spoke in the House during the adjournment debate, and I again asked the Government to give me guarantees that they would revise the map of economic zones before implementing this legislation. This is what the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Kempling) told me:

[English]

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration whom I see sitting across the way, as reported at page 955 of Hansard, said:

> With respect to regional boundaries, I want to inform the Hon. Member about the study initiated by the Hon. Minister of State for Employment and Immigration (Mrs. Vézina) in August, 1988. I can assure the Hon. Member that this study of regional boundaries is still taking place. I am positive it will be completed long before the legislation passes the House.

Does the Member across the way remember that? I see him nodding his head. Presumably he still believes that that is true, and he at least remembers having made the statement.

I want to draw the following to Your Honour's attention. At the Standing Committee of Labour, Employment and Immigration one of my colleagues asked the officials of the Department about this very topic that had been raised in the House by the Parliamentary Secretary in answer to one of my questions. This is what he said:

[Translation]

Mr. Barry Carin, Assistant Deputy Minister, Strategic Policy and Planning, Department of Employment and Immigration, said, and I quote:

> If it is at all feasible, our intention is to complete the study in time. The way I believe it will develop is that there will be more regions than we currently have. We will probably move to somewhere in the low 60s from 48, so our intention is to complete the study and, if at all possible, to do the implementation.

It wasn't all that clear. Further on, Mr. Speaker, the same DADM said, and I quote:

> Then there is a second stage, where Statistics Canada has to draw a new sample frame for their survey. They have to decide what the design of the survey ought to be in order to produce very reliable results. The existing labour force survey is based on the existing boundary structure. It is a complex matter and there is a lot that depends on this coming out right, so Statistics Canada will want to do this right.

Mr. Carin went on to say that it might take three to six additional months, which means even later, after this Bill is passed. The Government expects to get second reading through the House in a few days. The Bill would then be considered during the summer and passed next fall.

So you see, Mr. Speaker, that the answer I got from the parliamentary secretary, although he probably thought he was telling the truth, was wrong. Either the Minister or the Department gave the parliamentary secretary information that was inaccurate, and he passed it on to the House.

[English]

I am not the only one who is concerned about the effects of this particular Bill on eastern Ontario. The Town of Renfrew is nowhere near my riding. It is approximately 75 miles from where I live. It adopted Resolution No. 89–4–77 which in part reads:

> WHEREAS the inclusion of Regional Municipality of Ottawa–Carleton in the same Employment and Immigration Canada Economic Region with such Counties as Lanark, Leeds & Grenville, Prescott & Russell, Renfrew, and Stormont, Dundas & Glengarry implies that the level of local economic activity characteristic of metropolitan Ottawa is also characteristic of these Counties; and
> WHEREAS the level of local economic activity characteristic of metropolitan Ottawa is not characteristic of the Counties of Lanark, Leeds & Grenville, Prescott & Russell, Renfrew & Stormont, Dundas & Glengarry;—
> NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED THAT the Council of the Town of Renfrew hereby petitions the Hon. Barbara McDougall, Minister of Employment and Immigration, to revise the boundaries of the Eastern Ontario Economic Region to more accurately reflect the economic realities of Eastern Ontario; and
> BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT the Council of the Town of Renfrew further petitions the Government of Canada, as an interim measure, to afford the same treatment to employers located in, and the municipalities and residents of, the Counties of Lanark, Leeds & Grenville, Prescott & Russell, Renfrew, and Stormont, Dundas & Glengarry as that enjoyed by other parts of Canada with comparable levels of local economic activity;

In other words, the Town of Renfrew was asking for relief for its area which has high employment, as does mine does, and not to be considered with Ottawa–Carleton for the application of this Bill.

I will tell the House what the effect of this Bill would be on the riding that I represent, why I am so upset about it, and why the Town of Renfrew and all the other municipalities, which have signed the resolution I have in hand objecting to these changes, are so upset about this. The unemployment rate in Ottawa is supposed to be 5.7 per cent. The new rules lengthen the number of weeks that a person must work before receiving UIC. Perhaps there is some validity to that in an area with very low unemployment, sometimes but not all the time. On the other hand, the Bill proposes that the number of weeks of unemployment insurance that a person can receive will be shortened.

Here is the case, Mr. Speaker. Under the current system the number of work weeks needed is 14. Under the new proposed system one will need to work 20 weeks before receiving unemployment insurance. The number of weeks of benefit right now is 46. Under the new system it will be 45, all because the zones are tightened up.

Let me say what would happen if the Government were to amend these rules to recognize the true unemployment situation of Hawkesbury in my constituency. Hawkesbury has a rate of unemployment ranging between 13 per cent and 14 per cent. The highest rate on this schedule is 11.7 per cent. I know it offends the Member across the way when I speak of eastern Ontario, but she can pay attention and she will learn something from it.

If the rules were applied properly, my constituents would be eligible for 50 weeks of unemployment insurance benefits; not by applying a different criteria, just by recognizing the reality, just by recognizing that Hawkesbury does not have the same unemployment rate as Ottawa or Toronto. I am not asking for special consideration. I am just asking that what is there be recognized by the Government across the way and that instead of being eligible for 35 weeks of unemployment insurance benefits my constituents would quality for 50 weeks.

In terms of the number of weeks to qualify the rate would go from 20 back down to 14, which it was before this new Bill would apply. Some Tories ask what that would do. That would create a situation whereby my constituents would not have to go on welfare. That is the important thing. My constituents are fed up with that kind of a situation. They are fed up with seeing the Government take away what they have had for so long. Why should these benefits be cut back from my constituents?

And the Tories opposite keep telling us that they are going to allocate additional funds for manpower training. Well, that is not true, Mr. Speaker. They cut funding, but they are going to put back the funds they cut, and we are supposed to be ecstatic! We are supposed to be eternally grateful to the Tories. Well, we are not, because it is not enough. What we want Mr. Speaker, is to play according to the rules of the game, and "we" means the constituents of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, for starters.

Furthermore, we need a regional development program for Eastern Ontario that recognizes the economic realities of the region I represent. Until the Tories decide to do that, Mr. Speaker, they will never enjoy the support of the people I represent.

[English]

If this keeps up, not only will the Tories be extremely unpopular in my riding but "Tory" will become no more and no less than a four–letter word.

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed very much the lecture of the Member for Calgary—Southwest (Mrs. Sparrow). I found it very interesting that she gave us a litany of program titles. I think it would have been very nice if she had talked about the UI Bill and about real people.

She said that traditional jobs were disappearing, and she is absolutely right. High skilled, well paid jobs are very much disappearing. They are being replaced by jobs in the fast food industry and low paying jobs, many of them still reasonably high skilled.

I will use my industry as an example. In the printing industry, due to technological change hundreds of journeymen and women printers who have spent four and as many as six years serving apprenticeships and were extremely highly skilled are finding themselves, in increasing numbers, unemployed and deskilled. In fact they have gone from highly skilled men and women in highly skilled jobs to being button pushers.

Some Hon. Members: Not true, not true.

Ms. Langan: I obviously struck a chord with Members opposite, Mr. Speaker, because they are finding it necessary to tell me that I do not know what I am talking about.

Have they ever worked in the printing industry? Do they know anything about what has happened in that industry? Do they know what is happening with technological change across the country to men and women who have worked for 20, 30 or 40 years in highly skilled jobs and are now finding themselves in deskilled jobs?

Mrs. Sparrow: Then they had better be retrained.

Ms. Langan: Yes, they had better be retrained, but what are we going to retrain them for? We are going to retrain them to work in fast food restaurants. We are going to retrain them to work in the service industry. We are going to retrain them during the very best working years of their lives, the last five or six years before they retire, to work in low paid jobs in the service industry. I thank very much those on the opposite side of the House who have made my point for me.

It is important that we talk about the sweeping changes announced on April 11 which we are debating tonight. The strategy includes massive cuts to UI regular benefits, an expansion of UI training benefits, a new 10–week parental benefit, the stacking of sickness, pregnancy and parental benefits, and an expanded role for labour and business in labour adjustment.

Clearly the most important feature of the Government's strategy is the proposed massive cuts to regular UI benefits. Regular UI benefits account for 86 per cent of the $10.9 billion in UI benefits claimed last year. The Government has estimated that the new benefit structure will cost $1.3 billion from regular UI benefits. Workers will not only bear the cost of UI changes in reduced benefits, but beginning January 1, 1990 the entire cost of UI benefits will be financed from worker and employer premiums. Worker premiums will be increased from the current level of $1.95 per $100 of weekly earnings to $2.25 per $100 of weekly earnings to replace the nearly $3 billion per year which the Government contributes, or did in the past, for regionally extended benefits. The 15 per cent increase in worker UI benefits will cost a worker making $400 a week $62.40 in increased UI premiums.

The Government will also increase the penalties for fraud by workers or employers. There are about 200 fraud cases a year out of 3.2 million claimants. This is clearly part of the Government's broader strategy to create public hostility toward UI and UI claimants. The Government's justification for massive cuts in basic benefits is to reallocate 10 per cent, or $1.3 billion, of UI funds to training and to cover charter cases; $750 million to training; and $500 million to cover the Charter cases which the Government lost.

The cuts in regular UI benefits are not necessary to finance those changes to UI. At the current premium rate of $1.95 per $100 earned, UI premiums would generate $900 million more than the expenses currently charged to premiums. Had the 1988 rate of $2.35 remained in effect this excess or surplus would have amounted to $4 billion. Premiums could still have been substantially reduced while providing improved special benefits and better training coverage for UI claimants.

Certainly it could have happened if the Government had not chosen with the introduction of this Bill to opt out of unemployment insurance. A feature of the Government's strategy is to shift the cost and burden of unemployment and adjustment to workers, including unemployed workers. In shifting the burden, the power of employers will be increased in shaping conditions of work and wages. A more subtle aspect of the strategy is to highlight penalties of voluntary quits to create a public impression that unemployment is voluntary and to whip up public hostility to the program.

The proposed restructuring of regular UI benefits threatens the viability of UI as a social insurance program for which it was founded. Millions of workers will be required to pay premiums to a plan in which they will never be eligible to receive benefits because of the increase in required weeks to qualify. Workers who most need the benefits for a long duration will have their benefits terminated prematurely.

For example, older workers, to whom the Member from Calgary referred, who have very long spells of unemployment will have little protection because of the very sharp reduction in the duration of weeks of benefits. Well over half the claimants who qualify for UI will have their maximum weeks of entitlement reduced by 13 weeks.

The 1971 Unemployment Insurance Act struck a difficult but workable balance in sharing the burden for unemployment among workers, employers, and the Government. This balance was reflected in the UI benefit structure and in the formula for financing those benefits. The current benefit structure has three phases. The first two phases relate benefits to a claimant's weeks of work. When I say "current", I am talking about the one we are about to vote out of existence tonight by the other side of the House. The third phase extends UI benefits by two weeks for each half point the regional unemployment rate is above 4 per cent. The three-phase structure worked and worked well.

The over-all maximum duration is 52 weeks less a two-week waiting period. The maximum duration of benefits for most workers in the 48 UI regions has been 40 weeks to 52 weeks over the past 15 years because the unemployment rate in very region except two, Toronto and Kitchener, in recent years has been well above 4 per cent. Currently, as of March 1989, the entrance requirement in 22 regions is only 10 weeks for the same reason. The regional unemployment rate has been very high through the 1980s.

Under the new program, in Mission—Coquitlam, my riding where unemployment is 9.8 per cent, the number of weeks needed to qualify will go from 10 weeks to 16 weeks, a 60 per cent increase in the entrance requirement.

In addition to increasing the entrance requirement, the Government is reducing the duration of benefits. The duration of benefits will still vary with the regional rate of unemployment. Under the current system, a worker with 15 weeks living in Mission—Coquitlam, for example where the unemployment rate is between 9 per cent and 10 per cent, could collect 39 weeks of UI benefits.

The same worker, under the proposed system, does not even qualify. Sixteen weeks would be required. If the worker is able to get an extra week to qualify, the maximum weeks of benefits under the Government's proposed system is 27 weeks, 20 weeks less than the current system. A worker in Mission—Coquitlam at the current regional unemployment rate with 52 weeks of work, under the proposed system, I repeat, is limited to 49 weeks, one week less than the 50 weeks under the current system.

The closest we have come to defining a full employment measure in any Canadian statute is the 4 per cent unemployment rate used in the Unemployment Insurance Act to determine the number of weeks UI benefits should be extended as unemployment increases.

It also defines the portion of the Unemployment Insurance Program which should be financed from general government revenues. It explicitly accepts that when unemployment is high the unemployed worker will have a longer job search and that the cost should be borne by government which should manage the economy such that the unemployment level not be greater than 4 per cent. In insurance parlance, it is a form of third party liability. It is a form which is about to be removed.

Much has been made about the extent of training under this program. I just want to say briefly that despite the strong consensus on the need for training—and I agree that training is needed—the Government training programs have been dismal failures. If we talk to anybody who has gone from a well paid job into a training program to being trained for jobs that do not exist or for low paid service industry jobs, they will tell you that first of all the wait is too long, that second the jobs are not there when they are done and, third, that they cannot live on the salary they earn in those jobs. Most Canadians, although they believe that the Government has a responsibility for training, are becoming very cynical. They do not trust that the Government is serious about filling the training gap.

The Government has not been satisfied with getting the so-called free trade deal through. The Government now launches an attack on the very workers whose jobs were lost by making huge cuts in the length of benefits workers are eligible to collect and increases in the time these workers must have worked to qualify for unemployment insurance.

The most offensive is that these same workers are forced, along with employers, to pay the increases in premium for the decreased benefit. Why? It is because the Government is getting out of the unemployment insurance business.

It is interesting that at the same time the Government is running around the United States, the corporate U.S., saying "Canada is open for business", it is running all over Canada saying "the Government of Canada is getting out of business".

Let us examine how Canada is going out of business. The Government is getting out of the UI business. The Government is getting of the passenger rail business. The Government is getting out of the airline business. The Government is getting out of the oil business. The Government is getting out of the post office business. The Government is going out of business in area after area, and now it is telling Canadian workers: "Tough beans".

In my community, rail workers have been laid off because of cut-backs. Airline workers have been laid off because of mergers from deregulation. Child care workers will be laid off because of lack of funding. Help care workers will be laid off because of lack of transfer payments.

I would like to go on to the forestry workers. The Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Oberle) and the forestry workers in my riding and a number of other ridings in British Columbia are losing their jobs because of the abysmal record of this Government. It promised a full Ministry of Forestry, and we did not get it. It is not in the Budget.

There are hundreds and hundreds of jobs in my riding, including hundreds of forestry jobs. I would invite the Minister to join me in my riding, to visit those forestry workers, and to tell them the sky is falling.

It is a cruel joke. It is vicious and it is vindictive. However, most of all, it is a complete abandonment of a social contract entered into between the Government and the Canadian people.

There is impact on the municipalities, for example, as employers. The Hon. Member for Calgary Southwest referred to infrastructure. Let us talk about what the Government is forcing municipalities to do as employers. Taxes, that is what it is forcing them to do. What about small business and unemployed workers? For example, the Surrey municipality will face an extra expenditure of $814,000 due to the increased UI premiums. This includes the municipality and the school board. In effect, the changes will result in a shift in the tax burden from federal to municipal government.

An Hon. Member: That is the Tory plan.

Ms. Langan: That is the Tory plan.

I would like to close my remarks by setting a scenario. Many of us have taken the opportunity in the House of Commons, those of us from the House of Commons, to go out on to the lawns of this great building and watch the light show. It is not the night show; it is the light show. I would like to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, if you recall, any of you who have been out see it, there is the rock, the forest, the river, and Queen Victoria.

The rock says:

"I'll tell you what was aggravating. The Great Depression was aggravating."

Voice 1 says:

"The man in charge actually shot one of the men who came in looking for work!"

Voice 2 said:

People cannot be left to starve to death with suicide as the only alternative.

The parliamentarian said:

Conditions are such that men are getting out of control and anything is likely to happen.

Voice 3 said:

I saw about 150 labourers hanging around the door of the Salvation Army waiting for a crumb of bread while millionaires were feasting five minutes walk away.

The parliamentarian said:

What ferments of hatred are growing in the hearts and minds of Canadians of all races.

Voice 4 said:

Surely these are wonderful conditions when the police have to guard the city's dump to keep Canadians from living there!

Voice 5 said:

I feel afraid of what another winter may bring, especially if these awful dust storms continue. Rain might at least give us food.

Mr. Oberle: The sky is falling in.

• (2100)

Ms. Langan: The Hon. Members might want to listen to this. The parliamentarian said:

Strict economy on the part of this Government will mean less work and more unemployment—more hunger, more destitution, more want, more disease, more crime, more insanity, more suicides and more human deterioration.

Mr. Oberle: More socialism.

Ms. Langan: I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, those words are as true and real today as they were as this great country was being depicted by the Light Show. I think it is a very sad statement that we can laugh and say the sky is falling in and joke about the plight of the unemployed as we snatch away benefits and withdraw from the business of a social contract. Rather than laughing, Hon. Members on the other side of the House should be apologizing to Canadians, the working men and women, the unemployed, who they are now disregarding.

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for giving me an opportunity to speak in this debate on Bill C-21, the Conservative Government's mean-spirited and ill-conceived reform of our unemployment insurance system.

During the 1988 election campaign, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) said that his Government was not planning nor contemplating any changes to Canada's Unemployment Insurance Act. The Minister said one thing and his Government did another. The list of broken promises keeps getting longer and longer.

The purpose of the Bill we are debating today is to cut back our unemployment insurance system drastically. The Government's proposed reforms are designed to place the entire burden of Canada's $12.6 billion unemployment insurance program squarely on the shoulders of this country's employees and employers.

Both labour and business groups have predicted that the inevitable result of this Bill will be higher unemployment. Nowhere will this effect be felt more strongly than in Atlantic Canada. It stands to reason that in times of austerity or economic downturn employers will think twice before hiring workers if they are forced to contribute a greater amount of money to unemployment insurance.

The Government plans to turn its back on the workers of Canada. Its arguments for doing so do not stand up to the crucible of careful analysis and reason. The first argument used to justify this reform is the alleged necessity of reducing the deficit. All this rhetoric about deficits plaguing the Canadian economy is just a smoke and mirror screen used by the Government to hide its true agenda, which is to cut social spending. Economists do not even agree among themselves as to whether or not the deficit and debt constitute a serious problem for our country. Moreover, a careful study of history tells us that our country in the past lived with high deficits and high ratios of debt to gross domestic product.

The second most obvious reason for the Government's introduction of the legislation is that as part of its delivery system for the Free Trade Agreement it has given in to the Americans who believe that our unemployment insurance system constitutes an unfair trading practice and that it should, therefore, be curtailed if not completely eliminated.

We of the Liberal Party warned Canadians during the last election that the Conservatives would dismantle the essential public services in this country for the sake of free trade. The Government's actions have confirmed our dire warnings. It has cut regional development grants, unemployment insurance tonight, provincial transfer payments, grain transportation subsidies, CBC funding, VIA Rail, and the list goes on and on. The Government made cuts to social programs as well as to a variety of other services in order to create conditions which would permit American businesses to compete with their Canadian counterparts on what the Conservatives call a level playing field. If a level playing field means plant closings and hundreds of people thrown out of work, including 975 workers at Northern Telecom in Aylmer, Quebec, 139 workers at Pittsburgh Paints, 600 Gillette Canada employees in Quebec and Ontario, then I would suggest the Government has succeeded very well indeed.

What Canada needs right now to deal with all the lay-offs caused by free trade is a more progressive and compassionate unemployment system. Instead, the Government tables this legislation which makes it more difficult for displaced workers to obtain unemployment benefits. Where is the logic in all of this, Mr. Speaker?

The third excuse which the Government uses to denigrate Canada's unemployment insurance system is that it believes workers to be fundamentally lazy and that a progressive unemployment insurance system encourages this nasty tendency. For anybody with at least a modicum of common sense and understanding of human behaviour, this argument is nothing more than vapid rhetoric. Individuals take pride in and get satisfaction from gainful employment. People use unemployment insurance benefits out of necessity, not choice. If the Tory Government does not understand this, then it had better do some more homework.

Statistics show us that only an infinitely small percentage of unemployment insurance claimants either cheat or abuse the system. According to figures supplied by the Department of Employment and Immigration, only 5,507 people were caught cheating in 1987-1988. During the same period, 6,215 people refused a job while receiving unemployment insurance benefits and thereby lost their rights to the benefits.

If you tally up these figures, the number of people who either cheated or refused a job while claiming benefits is negligible. Only 0.45 per cent of all claimants can be said to have abused the system. Think of it, Mr. Speaker, that is less than 1/2 of 1 per cent of the 2.4 million people on unemployment insurance. If the Government thinks a progressive unemployment system encourages laziness, then I would have to say that the Government's thinking is muddleheaded because figures do not lie.

There is absolutely no relationship between a progressive unemployment insurance system and a high level of abuse and cheating. In fact, countries which have the most progressive unemployment systems, as the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) said in this House on June 6, have the lowest rates of unemployment in the world. For example, Sweden, Switzerland, West Germany, France and Australia all have unemployment rates of less than 5 per cent. Moreover, the average rate of unemployment in Canada between 1965 and 1980 was 5.6 per cent, a very low figure indeed. Therefore, it is a fallacy to assert that a progressive unemployment insurance system encourages sloth.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Unemployment Insurance Act was brought in by Mackenzie King's Liberal Government in 1940, following the great economic crisis of the 1930s. The basic purpose of this law was to ensure that all Canadians could meet their essential needs when they were laid off against their will. Unemployment insurance is only one of the features that makes our society more compassionate and fairer.

The Bill that we are debating today is clearly contrary to the spirit of that law. The Government intends to reduce its contributions to the Unemployment Insurance Program by $1.3 billion. Furthermore, it will use this money to offset the cuts of over $700 million that it made in the last five years. Instead of using funds from general revenue, the Government will take this money from the Unemployment Insurance Fund. From now on, all workers will have to pay for the special training programs.

Mr. Speaker, we completely agree with the principle that the unemployed should have access to better training programs. Nevertheless, the Government should not take money from the Unemployment Insurance Fund to finance these programs.

The present Unemployment Insurance Act provides that 2 per cent of the Fund is to be used to finance special training programs. With the reforms proposed by the Government, the main burden of financing these programs will fall on the Unemployment Insurance Fund. This is a regressive tax. Everyone will lose: workers who receive training, companies hiring the workers so trained, and the economy which benefits from these new skills.

A crucial problem arising from this ill-conceived reform is that the Government can give people in regions of high economic disparity no assurance that they will benefit from this training. Will New Brunswickers who receive high technology training be able to work in their province or will they have to move to Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver?

Mr. Speaker, I get tired of hearing the Government say that it is creating all sorts of economic opportunities while the Atlantic provinces are getting a very raw deal. The Government is closing military bases, abandoning rural post offices, thumbing its nose at regional development agreements and drastically slashing VIA Rail's budget. This Government is deliberately laying off hundreds of workers and it has the nerve to say that it is contributing to this region's economic development. To top it all, the Government is limiting access to benefits.

To set the record straight, Mr. Speaker, unemployment in the Atlantic region remains much higher than the national average. Many of our young people must leave this region if they want to have interesting careers. I know that this suits the Conservatives very well. But the people of the Atlantic provinces want this exodus to stop.

[English]

The national unemployment rate is 7.8 per cent, down from 11.7 per cent in 1984. However, this 7.8 per cent comes five years after the last recession. There are still over one million unemployed Canadians. With all the Government's claims of jobs, jobs, jobs, one would think that it could have brought that level back at least to where it was before the recession, 7 per cent. Need I remind Hon. Members that in the 15 years prior to the recession, under a Liberal Government, the average unemployment rate was 5.6 per cent?

The rate of unemployment in Atlantic Canada is staggering. For all their fine promises, the Tories have let Atlantic Canada down. Instead of helping the region with a more progressive system of unemployment insurance, the Government has hardened the blow by increasing the number of weeks needed to qualify for benefits, by reducing the duration and by increasing penalty periods.

The Government's proposals for reform are terribly short-sighted. It has increased the number of weeks needed to qualify because it believes that work, any work, is easily available. I hate to break it to the Government, but that is simply not the case for Atlantic Canada. In many instances, work is seasonal and when it runs out, there are only two alternatives, unemployment insurance or welfare.

The changes proposed by the Government will be devastating to the Atlantic region. Failure to obtain the number of weeks needed to qualify for unemployment insurance will mean that many people will be forced on to the provincial welfare rolls. That is not a very pleasant prospect, I assure Hon. Members.

The unemployment rate in the riding of Restigouche, which I represent, is 15.6 per cent, nearly twice the national average. Under the current system, people need 10 weeks of work in order to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. The duration of benefits is a period of 42 weeks. Moreover, the penalty for people who quit without proper reason is six weeks. The revisions the Conservatives are proposing will considerably alter the system. The duration of benefits will be reduced by five weeks, from 42 to 37 weeks. Finally, the penalty period for people who leave their jobs without proper reason will be 12 weeks.

The Government tells us that its reforms will benefit workers. What effrontery. Will workers benefit from longer qualification periods, shorter durations of benefits and training for jobs that do not exist? Certainly not.

Money from the unemployment insurance fund is very beneficial to Canada's less developed regions. The money that is spent goes back into the community and helps local businesses. The Government's proposed unemployment insurance reform combined with cuts to regional development programs, post office closures, army base closures and VIA Rail cuts will be devastating to the Atlantic region.

Unemployment insurance benefits have always served as a stabilizer in communities where there is high unemployment. Reforms to this system should be to improve, not worsen economic conditions.

The Government is clearly shifting its share of the financial burden to the provinces. They will be forced to extend their make-work projects in order to permit workers to obtain the necessary work weeks to qualify for benefits. Failing this, the provinces will be obliged to increase their social assistance programs in order to provide for those individuals who are unable to find enough work to qualify for unemployment insurance.

In both cases, the provinces will be forced to make additional expenditures without any prior warning. The Government has not done any impact studies to ascertain how many workers will be harmed by the changes. Two provinces, British Columbia and Quebec, have already acknowledged that the Government's proposed changes will result in increased social assistance expenditures.

Changes to the unemployment insurance system will seriously harm the economy of rural Canada. Local industries which employ seasonal workers long enough to permit them to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits will be faced with the choice of either laying off workers who do not have enough weeks to qualify or retaining these employees long enough to permit them to qualify. The additional weeks needed for workers to qualify will force these firms to make additional wage expenditures, thereby reducing and limiting their competitiveness. Since these companies will have to compete more and more on an international basis, they will be severely hampered by these increased costs.

The Government has said that the main thrust of its reform was to provide more training. While we believe job training to be very important, we also believe the Government's initiative to be seriously flawed. In many cases, rural communities have only one main industry, and the options workers have are very limited. It is more than likely that the training the Government wishes to provide will force these workers to move out of their regions to find employment. Instead of creating a comprehensive regional development policy, the Government has chosen to increase mobility funds to help workers relocate to regions where employment opportunities are plentiful, away from Atlantic Canada.

I believe this Bill to be very important, and it should be examined as fully as possible. However, the Government seems oblivious to this notion. First, it sabotaged a decision of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration to travel throughout Canada to consult broadly on Bill C-21. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) said that she did not consult nor did she intend to consult. Second, after only a few Members had spoken in the debate, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) gave notice that he intended to invoke closure. Not only does the Government not care about unemployed workers, not only does it use spurious arguments to justify its heartless reforms, it is making a mockery of Parliament and democratic debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we looked at the reasons the Government uses to justify its reform of the Unemployment Insurance Act and we must conclude that these reasons make no sense. It has built a house of cards to excuse its harsh treatment of workers. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the house of cards does not stand up. So I must force the Government to reconsider the Bill and do all it can to provide the workers of Canada with a decent unemployment insurance system.

[English]

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to have the opportunity to participate in this debate. Unemployment insurance, regrettably I must say, is an extremely important part of the economy of Atlantic Canada, and indeed of Nova Scotia and the South Shore which I am honoured to represent in the House.

Unemployment insurance has an extremely important role in our society, serving as a safety net in the social system of any civilized society of which ours is one. There are three characteristics which, in my judgment, typify an effective unemployment insurance program. First, the recognition that it is, first and foremost, insurance. It is not the same type of program that we have under the Canada Assistance Plan, for example, but it is insurance. It is something of which one never wants to take advantage. I have absolutely no desire whatsoever to collect on my life insurance— I cannot, of course, speak for my wife. I have no desire to collect on my automobile insurance, and similarly I have no desire to collect on my unemployment insurance. It is insurance. It is something that properly structured and organized is something that we do not want to have to use, but regrettably and unfortunately from time to time we have to use.

Second, it is important to recognize that an unemployment insurance scheme is but part of a network of support systems that exist within a sane and civilized society. It is the particular one that responds to the circumstance that people find themselves in from time to time when they are faced with what one would hope to be a temporary situation of unemployment. The unemployment insurance scheme should not be looked upon as the panacea that will solve all the social evils in society, but should be recognized as performing a function of providing support and assistance to individuals who find themselves in an unemployed circumstance.

Third, an unemployment insurance system is intended to be temporary. It is not supposed to be the basis for a lifestyle. The idea is that if people find themselves unfortunately unemployed for a period of time, there is a safety net to assist them until they have the opportunity to find themselves usefully back into an employed circumstance.

In this context, what role does unemployment insurance play in Canada? I believe, first and foremost, that the intent of our unemployment insurance system is indeed, as I have suggested, to serve as that safety net for persons who find themselves unemployed. That is the primary purpose of our unemployment insurance scheme, and that should remain the primary focus and purpose of our unemployment insurance system.

If we examine the history of this country in recent years, we will find that it also serves a second purpose. It serves as an income support system. My hon. friend opposite was just speaking about the role it has played as an income support system in Atlantic Canada in recent years for people who find themselves unemployed on a regular basis. It is particularly true in Atlantic Canada that some of the industries that exist function on a seasonal basis. For example, fish plants operate on a seasonal basis. Employment within our forestry and agricultural sectors operate on a seasonal basis. Of course, fishermen are only able to seek to harvest the seas for limited periods of time during the course of the year.

This income support function is an extremely important function, not only in Atlantic Canada but indeed in many parts of Canada. It would be my hope that we will see the day in the not too distant future where the unemployment insurance scheme will be reserved as an unemployment insurance scheme, and that there will be another more appropriate type of income support, such as a guaranteed annual income system, put in place in this country. However, for the moment we do not have such a system and we must therefore continue to see and recognize the legitimate role of the unemployment insurance program as an income support system for Canadians who have need of that assistance on an annual basis.

What should be the key objectives of an unemployment insurance system? I have already made the point that first and foremost it should provide a safety net, or protection against the circumstance of unanticipated and undesired unemployment.

Second, an effective unemployment insurance system must be readily accessible to those with a legitimate need to take advantage of it. I cannot stress the importance of that. It is no good if a person cannot get it when he or she needs it.

Third, it must provide a reasonable level of support. Not a level of support that is so attractive that people ask themselves whether or not they should continue to work diligently and hard when the alternative arrangement is to work for a certain period of time and then go on the unemployment rolls, relax and enjoy life or follow other pursuits. It must provide a reasonable level of support for people who legitimately require the assistance that is provided through that system.

As with any form of insurance—and let us not forget that first and foremost we are talking about a system of insurance—it should be essentially self-financed. It should not be put as yet another service provided at the cost of the taxpayers. We join it, just as we choose to have automobile insurance, life insurance and various other forms of insurance. This is a form of insurance and insurance is something that we have to pay for. We have the good fortune in that the unemployment insurance scheme that exists in this country is not totally paid for by the individuals who benefit from it, but indeed employers contribute, and contribute substantially, to that system. From time to time, as the costs of the system go up, so also does the cost of the premiums, and they have to be met. We have seen in the Budget, which is not directly related to this Bill, increases in those premiums.

From time to time I have heard suggestions made, spurious suggestions I might say, that the increases in the tariffs for unemployment insurance are to be borne by those who are unemployed. One does not have to study the situation very carefully to realize that those who are unemployed are drawing the benefits. They are not paying the premiums. The premiums are paid by the people who are employed, as well as by the employers. That is the way it should be, so there is no disadvantage. Premiums should be raised to reflect the costs of providing the service, but they should not be put upon as a burden for those who have the unfortunate circumstance to have need of the service and the assistance it is providing.

Fifth, participation in the unemployment insurance scheme should be mandatory. I thought long and hard about this. I used to work for the teachers' union in Nova Scotia. Some of us were very annoyed when participation in the pension plan was made mandatory. After a while, I came to realize that if it was not made mandatory people would rather use the money for some other purpose, and the same would apply to insurance. Then the time of retirement comes and they do not qualify for a pension and they are extremely disappointed.

I have a friend who is a life insurance agent. I am sure a number of Members have friends who are life insurance agents. When I was going to buy life insurance I told my friend that my wife said we did not need any more life insurance. She does not want me to be paying any more premiums for life insurance. He said to me: "I tell you what, you go back and tell her this. I have been an insurance agent for more than 30 years. I have met a lot of wives who did not like paying life insurance premiums, but I have never met a widow who did not think it was a valuable way to spend money".

The same thing applies with unemployment insurance. We cannot take a chance on people being short-sighted. It is too easy in the short term to say: "I can use those extra few dollars", and when the problem occurs you find yourself unable to meet the demands. At that point, there is an interest in society as well because people who have not protected themselves appropriately then become a burden on society.

The sixth point that should typify an unemployment insurance scheme is that it should not be readily open to abuse. How often have we as Members of this House had constituents come to us and say: "I know so and so who is cheating on unemployment insurance. I know so and so who is drawing pogey"—as we call it in the Maritimes—"who could be out working". A good, effective scheme seeks to eradicate abuses. It has stiff penalties for those who want to cheat the system. After all, when they cheat the system they are cheating every single one of us who honestly and with integrity contribute to that system. They force our premiums up. That is certainly not fair.

Similarly related to that is the seventh point I would make. It is that the system is one that should not encourage people to quit. There should not be incentives for people to quit their jobs so that they can go on a paid vacation compliments of the unemployment insurance scheme.

A friend ran a company in northern Nova Scotia which pulled up rail lines. He told me he had a devil of a time. People were employed for 12 weeks, then they would sit down on the job or go home. Maybe they would go hunting or do a little farming. They had no interest at all in working beyond the 12 weeks. They would sit down, wait for him to fire them and then go and draw unemployment insurance. A system that is effective should not be conducive to that form of behaviour.

Mr. Volpe: .02 per cent are cheaters.

Mr. McCreath: We should have a reasonable expectation that people will in fact take advantage of the system when they find themselves in the condition of being unemployed and that they will reasonably seek alternative employment during the time that they are unemployed.

Something about which we hear a great deal is that people are drawing unemployment insurance but that they are not seeking alternative employment. A good scheme is one which not only protects the individual while they are unemployed but provides incentives, encouragement and assistance to get them back into the labour force as soon as possible.

The next point I should make is that the system itself should provide assistance to individuals to assist them in finding alternative employment. Indeed, if there is no readily available alternative employment, it should provide them assistance and opportunities for retraining so that they can prepare themselves to qualify for other useful long-term employment opportunities.

Mr. Volpe: So you have an employment strategy?

Mr. McCreath: One example that we have in our social systems and our social nets in our country to which I think improvement needs to be made is with respect to disabled persons. I have the privilege of serving as a member of the Standing Committee on Human Rights and the Status of Disabled Persons. Yesterday, we visited Toronto—I almost hesitate to say the word. We visited Toronto and heard from a significant number of groups which came before us to talk about the difficulties and the challenges faced by persons who for one reason or another have to learn to live with disabilities. One of the frustrations they had was that if they seek to overcome their difficulties and find alternative employment, even if it is only on a part-time basis, they are penalized for doing so by the social system and the tax system.

These people should be encouraged. They should not, as should no person, be encouraged to continue in a condition of unemployment if in fact there is an opportunity for part-time or otherwise employment. We need to have incentives built into the system in that regard.

Finally, any system has to be a fair system. It has to be a system that reflects equally the needs of all Canadians, that provides equal access to all Canadians and that effectively provides equal benefit to all Canadians. We must not make it attractive for people to look to unemployment insurance as a preference to satisfying self-fulfilling and, indeed, financially rewarding employment within Canadian society.

Nevertheless, the best way to deal with the problem of unemployment is exactly what I might say this Government has done for the last four to five years. It is to have a sound economy, to have approaches from Government that facilitate the creation of jobs. We have seen the creation of a million and a half jobs during the less than five years that this Government has been in office. I might say that the same applies in my own area of Atlantic Canada. I hope we will continue.

We have some problems in Atlantic Canada with our fisheries. The Government cannot create fish. However, this Government is doing a marvellous job in providing incentives to create jobs. For example, we have seen in the last four and a half years of this Government the creation of over 108,000 jobs. I am not talking about make-work projects. I am talking about the creation of jobs, jobs that give people sound incomes, secure futures and a sense of self-fulfilment and self-reliance. At the same time we have seen a reduction in unemployment.

My hon. friends opposite raise some skepticism about this. However, the facts can speak for themselves. What have we seen during the first term of this Government? We saw a reduction in unemployment in Prince Edward Island from 13.8 per cent to 11 per cent. We have seen a reduction in New Brunswick from 14 per cent to 10 per cent and in Newfoundland from 24 per cent to 13.5 per cent. Indeed, in my own Province of Nova Scotia, we have seen a reduction in the unemployment rate from 13 per cent to 7 per cent. That is the kind of performance that we need. That is the kind of performance that goes together with an effective social network to assist Canadians.

Let me take a look at the Bill before the House and assess it against those criteria that I have set forward. What are the principal thrusts of the Bill and what are their implications? Let us face it, the unemployment insurance system is a living organism, like any other system of Government. These things are not set in time intended to be there forever and ever. As circumstances and times change, development opportunities occur. The first and most important thing is that this Government has recognized that unemployment is not supposed to be a permanent way of life but that people must have an opportunity to get themselves back fully participating in the labour force. Consequently, we see a greater emphasis on retraining and on assisting individuals to find alternative job opportunities.

As I said before, we see also a targeting attempt to deal with the abuses that have been present in the system that have drained some of the funds from time to time. There are stiffer penalties for quitters. There are penalties for those who seek to avoid work. There are stiffer penalties against cheaters. That is as it should be. This may not apply to my friends opposite, but I will tell them that in the part of Canada I come from we believe that a person should do a day's work for a day's pay. We do not believe that systems like unemployment insurance exist to be ripped off by those who do not share the values that we hold high and that are the basis of what is good in Canada.

This Bill and the budget that goes with it seeks to make this system more self–financing which, as I said before, is the way any insurance system should be, noting that those premium increases that come with the budget are not going to be burdened upon those who are unemployed. The unemployed do not pay the premiums. Those who can afford the premiums are being taxed with them.

There are some changes. There will be an increase in some qualification periods. There will be reduced periods during which people can collect. That is exactly the way the system should go.

First, the extended periods of qualification are to be applied to those areas that do not suffer from extreme or high unemployment. Similarly, studies have shown that the people who draw to the extent of the system are the people who are not really intended to be served by the system.

Once again we find that the amendments to the Act being brought forward are clearly in accord with common sense, propriety and wisdom. They preserve the safety net which is the fundamental important aspect of an unemployment insurance system. I am not saying that there might not be a need for a little bit of fine tuning along the way.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCreath: I look forward to the fact that we may see some of that done at the committee stage. Indeed, I may have a word or two to say about it myself.

However, on the whole, what we have here is a revision of the Act that moves it in the right direction. I see Mr. Speaker waving to me so I must wind up briefly. How will this affect Atlantic Canada? Unemployment insurance will continue to respond to the regional disparity circumstances that affect Atlantic Canadians. The increased qualifications will not hit Atlantic Canada, providing we have changes in some of the boundaries by which the unemployment insurance rates are computed. That is absolutely essential, and I am sure the Government has heard what many Members, particularly rural Members, have said in that regard. Implementation of the Bill should not precede the implementation of the change in those boundaries so that they will reflect actual unemployment rates in different parts of Canada.

The unemployment insurance system, while one of the most controversial aspects of Canadian life, is an extremely important aspect of Canadian life. We must continually mould and modify that system so that it meets the needs of Canadians and remains consistent with the priorities of Canadians. That is the direction in which this Bill goes. I am proud to support the Bill and commend the Government for its introduction.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to express my objections to the legislation before the House, Bill C–21, which contains proposals for major changes in the unemployment insurance program. Unlike my colleague from Nova Scotia who just spoke, I believe that these changes are certainly not what is best for the people of the Atlantic provinces.

Over the years, the unemployment insurance program has been able to provide families in the Atlantic provinces with some measure of security. Of course we would rather work, we would rather have jobs, we would rather work all year round instead of working only 10,12, 15, 20 or 25 weeks. We would like to work all round, year first, because it pays better, and second, because we want to work and we enjoy working. However, since the jobs just are not there, the unemployment insurance program provides families with income security. This means that families can depend on a fairly stable source of income every month. It means that families that are not as well off as their neighbours can still have a decent standard of living. It isn't luxury, but we have food on the table, clothes on our backs, a roof over our heads and we can heat our homes. It means that our children, the children of families that are less well off, can go to school with other children without feeling any different. The kids from poor families have to go to the same school as kids from rich families. They have to buy the same books and of course they want to dress the same as everybody else, and that costs money. And in many cases, in the Atlantic provinces the unemployment insurance program has been able to provide these families with a secure family income.

If you visit the Atlantic region and happen to go to Beauséjour, stop at the corner store and ask the clerk what the unemployment insurance program means to him and to the families who are his customers. He will tell you those families are able to live decently thanks to the unemployment insurance program.

It is often said that people abuse the program. Some people do, but they are a minority. There will always be people who abuse the system, it doesn't matter what kind of program we come up with. I repeat, these are isolated cases. And I think the unemployment insurance program should continue to provide families in the Atlantic region and across Canada with this form of family income security. Mr. Speaker, thanks to this program, our people managed to survive the recession in the early 1980s.

This was followed by a period of economic recovery in Canada generally, and of course the Tories who came to power in 1984 are inclined to take a certain amount of credit for this prosperity.

However, if we look at the Atlantic region, what do we see? Our unemployment rate went down a little. Nevertheless, there is still a gap between the standard of living of people in Canada's more prosperous regions and people living in the Atlantic region, and this gap is unacceptable because it is far too wide.

Throughout this period of prosperity, as I said just now, the unemployment rate went down somewhat. However, we still lost jobs, many of which were subsequently replaced by part-time jobs—the money wasn't as good, but it still helped to reduce the unemployment rate.

Then in 1988, we had the election campaign and all those wonderful promises. It was fantastic, what they were going to do for us in the way of regional development. There was going to be more money. If I remember correctly, the great—

[English]

The great J.C. himself told the people of Atlantic Canada: "There will be no changes, no cuts to unemployment insurance. Maybe later, in two years, we will look at the program but there are no changes planned in UI".

Mr. Speaker, the 1988 election campaign will be known as the great lie, because we were led to believe all kinds of things.

And of course, the Tories were re-elected. Then we got the Wilson Budget, which was all over Ottawa before it was tabled in the House. Well, that was a disaster. Cuts, cuts, cuts. Regional development programs, the Atlantic Opportunities Program, which was supposed to get $1 billion over five years, new money that was going to be put into regional development and was going to create jobs. And now we find that they are going to dilute that billion dollars to extend it over 7 years. That means a lot less money.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) told his Cabinet colleagues: You will all have to cut your budgets. Of course, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Ms. McDougall) said: Sure, I could cut funding for the unemployment insurance program. The Government doesn't have to be involved in the program any longer. And here we are discussing the program and the proposed changes. This Budget, gave us a raw deal, but the Minister told us not to worry because even if there were changes, the people who needed unemployment insurance would get it.

We were talking about regions and the Minister was aware of the problems we had in the regions, as defined for the unemployment insurance program. Here I want to talk about rural regions and urban regions because we are affected in our area.

In the Beauséjour region, the unemployment rate is between 15 and 30 per cent in the rural part. But in the neighboring city, Moncton, the unemployment rate is steady at around 8 per cent. When the urban and rural rates are combined, we get 11, 11.4, 11.5, which means that according to the law, we must have worked 16 weeks.

Last June, the Minister assured us that she was reviewing the whole matter, because she realized that combining urban and rural areas could cause problems in some regions.

I asked several times and always got the same answer: the matter was under review. When the Minister announced the unemployment insurance program, she also said that a study was being done and should be completed by January 1990, when the changes to the unemployment insurance program would take effect. But we read in the newspapers recently: U.I. Boundary System may miss deadline.

Once again, people are disappointed. They are promised changes that will benefit them, but the studies are not done and there is foot-dragging. However, the Government cannot say that it was not aware that such a problem or problems existed. People had been promised that the necessary changes would be made, because for us, the difference between 10 and 16 weeks and between 10 and 14 weeks, as this Bill proposes, is a major problem. Why? For the simple reason that we depend greatly on fishing. And where we live, fishing is seasonal. The lobster season in my part of the country is only 10 weeks. There is no question of making the season longer, because if the season were extended, it would be disastrous for lobster stocks; the same thing is happening in the crab industry where this resource was used as the basis for income support programs. This resource was used to provide weeks of work. This year, there was no more crab. There had been overfishing. So the people working in the factories were not even able to work their 10 weeks.

All this to tell you that where we live, fishing is very, very seasonal. Of course, if the fishermen can only fish for 10 weeks, the factory workers are also limited to 10 weeks, not in all cases, but in many cases.

So this change from 10 to 14 weeks as proposed in this Bill is a major change that threatens some families and the stability of their income.

Of course, maybe only one person in the family will be affected, but in our area, as here and in many families, both parents have to work to "make ends meet".

And if one of the two can't qualify for unemployment insurance, they will have to live on one income because it also means you can't qualify for welfare benefits either. Which means that the family's income will be cut in two, when their income was already stretched to the limit, so we can't ask these people to make do with less money. People would rather work!

The proposed legislation is supposed to enable the Government to put a lot more emphasis on training. That is fine with us. If you are unemployed and you qualify for an unemployment insurance program or a training program, this is as good as a winning ticket and in fact they should literally offer you a ticket so you can move to a more prosperous part of this country.

Why? Because, Mr. Speaker, you can have all kinds of training programs, but if you can't get a job after all that training, you are back to square one.

In fact, one of the shortcomings of this program and all these changes is that there is no full employment strategy. But what did they do? Instead of giving us job opportunities, they went and cut the programs that could have helped us create jobs.

Earlier, I mentionned ACOA, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had promised $1 billion over five years. And now we find it isn't five but seven years. The money for development agreements and sub-agreements on fisheries, forestry, tourism— Today I heard that the sub-agreements on tourism won't even be renewed and that the amounts earmarked for these sub-agreements will now come out of ACOA funds.

It was supposed to be new money for all regional development programs, and now the few opportunities, the few resources we had to create new jobs are being eliminated.

Earlier, I heard my colleague from Nova Scotia say people were abusing the system and that changes were necessary.

Mr. Speaker, people in the Atlantic region would prefer to work if we could at least give them some way of creating jobs that would then help them take advantage of training programs. However, it's no use training them if there are no jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I tell you that without a ticket, because it takes a ticket, by the time the workers are trained, VIA Rail will no longer be there. They will not be able to take the train to leave. Because that was also cut. Just in our area, the Province of New Brunswick, over 250 jobs will be lost because of the VIA Rail cutbacks. Add to that the 1200 jobs that we lost in the CN shops last year, although we were promised that they would not be cut!

Mr. Speaker, you understand why I must oppose this Bill, because, Mr. Speaker, this Bill is contrary to the best interests of my constituents, the people of Beauséjour. That is why I support the amendment of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), who wants to amend the Bill, so that Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Employment and Immigration Department and Commission Act, is not now read a second time but is read a second time six months from today.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this Bill with some unhappiness and discontent with the fact that we have to be debating it because it is going to wreak havoc on the people of this nation. This Bill comes from a Government which says it has compassion for Canadians, that it is caring of Canadians, and that it is acting in the interests of all Canadians. The Government is certainly not a friend of the underprivileged in this country, the workers in this country, the seniors in this country, and certainly not of students in this country. In fact, Canadians right across the land are very concerned about this Bill.

In fact, with regard to students, a student by the name of Christopher Wayland from McGill University in Montreal, certainly nowhere near my riding, is so concerned about this Bill and is so fundamentally opposed to it that he made a point of contacting the House tonight to ask that his name be put on the record of this House as being publicly opposed to this Bill. That says a lot for Mr. Wayland and a lot for Canadians right across the land.

This Bill reflects the true agenda of the Government. To paraphrase an old saying, this is a Government by the privileged few, of the privileged few and for the privileged few. Twenty minutes is only time to barely scratch the surface of the effects that this Bill will have on Canadians.

I would like to talk about the Free Trade Agreement. Before the election the Government was stating that the Free Trade Agreement would have no effect on social programs, would create a level playing field on which our social programs would be secured, that they would be not touched. Yet this Bill has, in effect, lowered the standard of social programs, it has affected the unemployment insurance program. Our unemployment insurance system is vastly superior to the United States but this Bill brings us much closer to harmony with the U.S. The Government is quick to say that every sparrow that falls is going to be blamed on the Free Trade Agreement. Well I think a jumbo jet is crashing on the nation today.

Just to give two examples, in the lower mainland of B.C. where the unemployment rate is approximately 11 per cent, unemployed people formerly received 50 weeks of unemployment insurance and they will now receive 39 weeks of insurance. What a surprise to find that if you go south a few miles to Seattle you will find that unemployed workers in that area of that country receive 39 weeks of unemployment insurance benefits. Workers who quit or are fired from their jobs will lose seven to 12 weeks in benefits. Their insured earnings will be cut to 50 per cent from 60 per cent. This again is in harmony with the U.S. As the free trade Bill takes effect, as the free trade fall-out falls upon us, we find our playing field sinking down into the mire. This is exactly what the Government said would not happen.

I have been listening to the comments which some Members opposite have been making. I am appalled at some of the comments. The Member from South Shore (Mr. McCreath) indicated that there have been increased numbers of jobs and that this Bill will work toward increasing jobs. I do not know about his region of the country, but I certainly know that there are actually 15,000 fewer people living in the Province of Saskatchewan. We are losing population because of the lack of jobs and the lack of commitment of the Government to regional job development.

The Member for Elk Island (Mr. O'Kurley) says that his Government knows that Canadians will take advantage of the opportunity not to work. The Member from South Shore put it even more bluntly, he said that he did not like to see the unemployed rip off the country.

I would like those Members and other Members who have the same attitude to tell that to the working poor of this country, to tell that to the 40 per cent of families living below the poverty line who have both husband and wife working. They are not ripping off the country. They are trying to survive. Tell that to the people who are living below the poverty line and are paying taxes. I think it is outrageous that people who live below the poverty line actually have to pay taxes. Is that a compassionate government? Is that a government that cares for people?

Less than 1 per cent of the unemployed are so-called ripping off the system. The unemployed in this country have a better record at not committing fraud than the members of the PC caucus, a far better record. The Member may be tired of unemployed ripping off the country, but the people of the country are tired of the PC Government ripping off the country.

A Member opposite made the comment that Canadians want to work and I certainly agree with that, certainly with respect to small businesses. I would like to focus on that group for a few moments. Small businesses create more jobs than does any other sector of our economy. Small business people often work 50, 60 and more hours a week to make ends meet. They are the industry in this nation that is, in many areas, keeping the economy moving. And what thanks do they get from the Government? Small businesses are suffering under high interest rates. In my region of the country small businesses are having a difficult time and high interest rates are certainly making it more difficult. That is true in other regions of the country as well. They have been hit with bank charges. The Government has introduced a Bill supposedly to deal with bank charges but it certainly did not think of small businesses when it dealt with bank charges. The governing Party says that it is a friend of small business. Well, you do not need many friends like that.

That Party should take a lesson from this Party, the New Democratic Party, which is in fact looking after the interests of small business. It is our Party which recently introduced a motion calling upon the Government to make small business its first priority. It was this Party that introduced a motion recently which received the unanimous consent of the House, which called on the Government to make small business the first priority of the Federal Business Development Bank.

That is a direction that the Government could take. It could begin to implement some changes to help create some jobs in this country, because Canadians do want to work, but they need the opportunity to work. Unless the Government is going to create an environment in which there are opportunities, then people will not work, and certainly small business needs opportunities. Small business often works on a low-profit margin and works long hours. Small business is the industry in this country which is creating jobs, they are the ones who should be having some advantages.

We are waiting, Mr. Speaker. We hope that the Government will take some direction regarding our motion with respect to the Federal Business Development Bank. We are still waiting. We are not holding our breath but we are waiting.

In the meantime, what has this Party done to small business? It has introduced an unemployment insurance Bill and budget cuts which are going to directly affect small businesses. We have heard all sorts of speeches and all sorts of very valid comments about the effect that this Bill will have on the workers in this country and about the disadvantaged in this country. Certainly small business fits into that category.

This is a Bill which is going to put the burden of social programs directly on the backs of workers and small business employers. That is a sad comment to make in this day and age. This is a government which is cutting some $3 billion that it took from general revenue to put into the unemployment insurance program. That is where the money should be coming from. It was a distribution of income and funds which were transferred more equitably across this nation. That is now gone.

Small business will not notice it immediately because the unemployment fund has a surplus. That is simply because the rates were increased last fall. When the rates go up the following November, it is going to be the workers of this country and it is going to be the small business employers who are going to be fuelling that increase directly and dramatically.

The Government will say that it is throwing hundreds of millions of dollars of new funds into job creation. These are neither new funds, nor are they for the benefit of small business. The Minister of Finance removed these funds from the unemployment insurance program when he brought down his Budget. Small business is not in a position to take advantage of those programs. They are designed for big business. They are designed for the friends of the Party opposite. It is tragic for the people of this nation.

If this Government would like to do something for small business, then it should be acting in a manner which is going to be responsible to small business. It should consider passing legislation that is going to allow small business to survive in this country. It should be creating an environment whereby small business can function. It should be using the Federal Business Development Bank to provide loans to small business. It should be having an unemployment insurance program whereby the employer is not burdened with carrying the weight of the social programs on their backs. It should be providing an interest rate policy which is going to assist small business.

This program affects dramatically the very regions of our country. This is not unlike other Bills this Government is passing. Certainly there have been tremendous cuts in provincial transfer payments. There have been tremendous cuts with respect to regional programs.

There have been base closures. The base closures alone are a disgrace. The Government has closed the base at Summerside in Prince Edward Island which employed some 1,100 people. These are 1,100 direct jobs lost in a city of some 8,000. That is going to be devastating for that community.

In Portage la Prairie, Manitoba, the Government has taken a town of some 15,000 people and removed 700 jobs. What is the response of the Government opposite? The Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight) said: "We are not in the business of creating regional jobs". The Minister from Calgary Centre said that we have to look at the bottom line. This is a nation which has been built on regional development. This is a government which is turning its back on the regions of this country with cuts to VIA Rail and the whole transportation system. This is a government that is ignoring the regions.

This Government states that this Bill has some benefits for this country. It does have some benefits. It points out that it will enhance the maternity, the paternity and the sickness benefits. It is going to improve benefits to those over 65 years of age. That is true.

This Government opposite would like us to believe that the reason that those aspects of the Bill were implemented was because of its compassion for this country and its desire to help Canadians. This was one of the slickest moves which I have seen this Government do. This is a Party which is very good at being slick. It runs a slick operation.

The reason that these measures were put in place was because they were going to be forced on the Government anyway. He was already facing court actions on many of these areas. It simply decided to cut their losses and put them into this program to try to embellish itself and appease Canadians for these dastardly cuts which it has made in other areas.

I do not believe that Canadians are that gullible. I do not believe that this Government is going to get away with this. This Bill may pass but this is a Government which is now in a second majority mandate and it is feeling a little comfortable and a little arrogant. Those are attitudes for a government which finds itself in trouble when an election comes by.

This Bill affects the regions of this country. It affects Atlantic Canada. It affects northern Ontario and northern Quebec. It affects western Canada. They have all suffered under this Government. This is a Government which is failing to regard the welfare and the needs of this country.

I am truly sad to be in the House this evening because we will be voting on second reading of this Bill in a very short time and unfortunately, with a majority government on the opposite side, we are going to lose this vote.

Canadians will long remember this. Canadians will not forget this. Certainly we on this side of the House will do our best to remind Canadians of the dastardly approach and the dastardly deeds which this Government is perpetrating on this nation.

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are very fortunate to live in this high-tech era. We can enjoy wonders of technological ingenuity today that were inconceivable even to the last generation.

Personal computers, VCRs, word processors; all of these conveniences have become part of our daily existence. They are the result of technology which was non-existent 30 years ago.

This technology is enhancing our personal, lives but it is also affecting us in the workplace. Canadian workers must meet an unprecedented demand for skills. That demand will only increase in the years ahead.

That is why I support this legislation to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. Bill C-21 is a major component of the Government's Labour Force Development Strategy. The key to this strategy is that it will help train Canadians in the skills they need now and in the future.

Bill C-21 has three objectives. The first is to prepare Canadian workers for existing and future labour market challenges. The second is to right some longstanding wrongs by ensuring that the Act meets the Government's commitment to employment equity and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The third is to ensure that UI benefits are improved and preserved for those who need them most.

I would like to concentrate my remarks on that third area, Mr. Speaker. This legislation proposes fundamental changes to the UI program which affect the amount of time people must work to qualify for UI benefits and how long benefits will last. It also introduces new control measures. Canada is a very generous country. This generosity extends to its social programs, including unemployment insurance. As it now stands people need only work 10 to 14 weeks to qualify for benefits depending on the local unemployment rate. These entrance requirements are among the lowest in the world. In Japan and France people must work 26 weeks during the previous year in order to qualify. But the generosity can sometimes have detrimental repercussions.

As a Member of Parliament in my riding of Simcoe Centre many constituents often tell me that this is the case with the UI program, that our UI system is a disincentive to work. Many people believe that UI encourages some people to work just long enough to qualify for assistance who then quit and collect benefits for up to a year. Now I know that the vast majority of Canadians do not fall into this category and I would never imply that they do. But it is an irrefutable fact that some people are trying to take advantage of this system and those that do think that they are beating it.

We are proposing to increase the number of weeks of employment needed to qualify for UI in most areas of the country based on a local unemployment rate. My constituents in Simcoe Centre believe this is a very reasonable approach. This means, for example, that people living in communities where unemployment is at 6 per cent will need to work 20 weeks to qualify for UI instead of the current 14 weeks. At the same time the Bill remains sensitive to the needs of those people in areas of high unemployment. People living in areas where the unemployment rate is more than 15 per cent will need only ten weeks to qualify. Where the unemployment rate is 10 per cent only 16 weeks is needed to qualify.

For seasonal workers these new provisions may sound threatening. Let me assure them that they have no reason to be concerned. You see, Mr. Speaker, seasonal workers by the very nature of their employment often collect UI twice within the same 52-week period. A current clause in the Act requires people who have already collected benefits within the past year to work from 16 to 20 weeks in order to qualify again. This is six weeks more than when they first qualify. This is known as the repeater clause. It was an onerous condition for seasonal workers and we are now eliminating it entirely. This means that seasonal workers will, generally speaking, now find it easier to qualify for UI.

This move will of course simplify administration of the UI program and as you can imagine anything that simplifies the complex administrative structure of a program like UI is welcomed by everyone involved. In fact, this legislation contains other measures that will make the program run more smoothly. One of them involves calculating the duration of benefits. The present method used to determine how long people will receive benefits is a very complicated three phase system based on a week's work and the local unemployment rate.

The proposed legislation fortunately will streamline this progress. It continues to base the duration of benefits on the number of weeks worked and the local unemployment rate but it eliminates that three phase complexity and substitutes it with a straightforward table.

We have also made necessary adjustments to the number of weeks people can collect benefits. These adjustments are again dictated by the unemployment rates in different areas. A person in Barrie where prospects abound should not need to collect UI benefits for 50 weeks. Someone on Cape Breton Island where opportunities are limited is entitled to as much income support as possible.

As well, the Government is proposing measures to deal with people who quit their jobs without just cause. It may surprise you to know that more than a billion dollars is paid out every year to people who quit their jobs without just cause. Obviously we must do something about this. The legislation deals with people who quit their jobs voluntarily, who are fired for misconduct or refuse to take a job. Under current legislation these people lose their benefits for six weeks. Under Bill C–21 they stand to lose them for between seven and 12 weeks. When they begin or resume collecting benefits they will also find their benefit rate lowered from 60 per cent of their weekly insurable earnings to 50 per cent. I think it is very appropriate that I bring up EIC at this time. As you know EICs, Canada Employment Centres, have an exemplary record in finding jobs for people and people for jobs. In my riding the staff work diligently to provide guidance and to arrange interviews and training course for clients.

Some clients do not take advantage of these opportunities and those who do not will find their benefits cut off for one to six weeks under the legislation. I must also tell you that people who find jobs before their disqualification period is up may receive a surprise if he or she collects UI down the road. The Bill also allows for any weeks of a disqualification period not served because work was found to be carried over to any future benefit period over the next six years.

Let me add that these disqualification periods may be deferred if the claimant is eligible for sickness, maternity or parental benefits. Let me also make it clear that people who quit their jobs for valid reasons such as hazardous working conditions or harassment will not be subject to these penalties.

We are also introducing new measures to discourage UI fraud. It is a matter of opinion but perhaps the worse abuse of the UI program is perpetrated by those who knowingly give false information. Unfortunately it is a fact of life and it must be dealt with. Under the Bill, employers who submit false employment information will now be penalized up to nine times the maximum benefit they pay weekly. Also anyone penalized for minor infractions can have the penalties deducted from future benefits they receive over the next six years.

As you know, people who commit major acts of UI fraud are subject to prosecution. In the past anyone convicted of the crime received a maximum $500 fine, six months in jail or both. The new legislation raises the fine to a much stiffer maximum of $2,000. These are necessary measures which will serve to make the UI program fairer and more efficient. Instituting these measures will free up $1.3 billion that will be rechannelled directly into the UI program in ways that I have indicated before. It will help thousands of Canadians who are willing to work. That is what the labour force development strategy is all about.

I have just outlined the benefit structure and control measures proposed in Bill C–21. We hope to implement the new legislation early in 1990. Only then will the funds for training programs and the new charter improvements be accessible. I trust that my colleagues in the House and the Members of that other place will give it full and due consideration.

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said, "We shall maintain all our social programs without fail." At the same time, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) promised that there would not be any changes to the unemployment insurance system. Let me read an October 14, 1988, article in the St. John's, Newfoundland newspaper, The Evening Telegram:

> Changes in UI Program? 'Nonsense', retorts Crosbie.
> The federal government has no plans to make changes to the unemployment insurance program, Trade Minister John Crosbie said Thursday.
> "It's complete nonsense", he replied to questioning by reporters at Hotel Newfoundland following a Progressive Conservative rally for Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.
> But Mr. Mulroney was quoted by the Financial Times as saying the Tories will take another look at reforming the $10.4 billion a year unemployment insurance system if it wins the Nov. 21 election.
> Mr. Crosbie said that he had asked the prime minister about the report and he said no the government has no plans to make changes to the plan.
> "You're damn right I asked him (prime minister) about it.

Once again, there is another broken Tory promise. The Government has broken its promises and has cut back on unemployment insurance benefits.

Mrs. Dobbie: We have not.

Mr. Speller: Of course, they have been cut back completely.

Mrs. Dobbie: They have not been cut back.

Mr. Speller: They have been cut back. The Government is using this money to replenish the programs it cut back over the last five years by $700 million. Rather than using funds from general revenue as is normally the case, the Government is taking it away from the unemployed. I call this shameful.

This means that all workers will pay for training without any assurance that they themselves will benefit from that training. It means that labour-intensive industries will subsidize training for high-tech industries which are often capital intensive. It means that low-paid service workers will help pay for the training of high paid-high tech workers.

The Government is hypocritically using the pretext of adjustment to finance its deficit reduction plan at the expense of unemployed Canadians. The Prime Minister and his Government are taking away $2 billion from unemployed Canadians. While the unemployment insurance expenditure reduction will be effective almost immediately, the entry level training program will be phased in over a four-year period.

Under the present unemployment insurance program, workers in firms pay into a fund knowing that money will come back to them in the form of benefits if they become unemployed, sick or pregnant. Now, under this proposal, they have no assurance that money will be paid back or that any money will come back to them at all.

According to the program, for example, $230 million will go for training activities in the private sector. Part of this money, $65 million, is for human resource planning. This is a good thing and one wonders why it has not been going on over the last four or five years. Once again, money will be used from the unemployment insurance fund, money that was available for workers when they were laid off, to pay for the human resource planning.

A strong labour force development strategy depends on a sound full employment policy that supports research and development, post-secondary education and literacy initiatives. The more basic education a person has, the easier it is to train him or her. That is just common sense. Given that, in the near future, almost half the new jobs will require more than five years of combined education and training beyond the completion of high school. The Government should be developing a comprehensive full employment policy and increasing, not decreasing, its support for research and development, post-secondary education and literacy.

The Government has announced new training initiatives without consulting with the provinces and without any kind of mechanism to monitor this training. Without such consultation, the Government cannot satisfy Canadians that the training programs will meet the needs of the economy and that the quality and standards of the training will be high enough to meet the challenge.

The Government is shifting the financial burden to the provinces. This is clear throughout this Bill. The provinces will be required to extend their work projects in order for workers to become eligible for unemployment insurance benefits or will need to extend social assistance to those unable to find additional work to qualify for unemployment insurance. In either case, the provinces are faced with additional expenditures without any prior warning.

The federal Government has yet to make available impact studies which would indicate the number of workers who will be adversely affected by these changes. It is no wonder. I believe that the numbers would be staggering.

Already, British Columbia and Quebec have acknowledged that the changes could result in increased social assistance costs. Mr. Buchanan from the Province of Nova Scotia has said that this will definitely increase his province's costs.

The changes to unemployment insurance will adversely affect the rural Canadian economy. Let us take, for instance, my riding of Haldimand—Norfolk. There are towns in my riding in which the unemployment rate is staggering. It is nothing like the southwestern Ontario unemployment rate of somewhere in the neighbourhood of 8 per cent. There are places in my riding with unemployment rates of anywhere between 15 per cent and 20 per cent. Under this Bill, my riding is considered to be part of the Niagara Peninsula so the number of weeks required for eligibility will be increased. That is shameful and nowhere in this Bill is this problem addressed.

These additional wages that firms will pay because of this Bill will increase their costs, and as a result will increase the cost to consumers. These firms will be less competitive as well. If they compete on the international market, firms could suffer economically because of these increased costs.

Unemployment insurance benefits have always served as a stabilizer in communities where there is high unemployment. Unemployment insurance benefits stimulate local economies and keep local businesses alive. A reduction in these benefits will adversely affect local businesses and entire local economies.

While training is a good thing in itself, one cannot train someone for a job that does not exist. Often in rural communities, there is one industry. Alternatives are not available. If these people get trained, they will have to move out of the regions to find employment. The Government has chosen to increase mobility funds to help workers move to areas where there are employment opportunities rather than to create a comprehensive regional development policy. As my friend from Dartmouth said today, the Government is asking people to move west or to Toronto, to move where the jobs are, instead of bringing in creative, innovative programs which will help address the needs of the unemployed. The Government should have examined the entire unemployment insurance program in depth and considered changes in the context of comprehensive income security instead of adopting such punitive measures.

On page 30 of the budget papers, the Government stated that it will continue to contribute to the financing of programs in difficult economic times when it is inappropriate to raise premiums and prudent to allow deficits to build in the unemployment insurance account. We should not have to point out to the Government that we are in poor economic times now and that to aggravate the situation, the Government is shirking its responsibilities by absolving itself from contributing its share to unemployment insurance benefits.

Let us examine current employee–employer contributions and then compare them with the changes announced in the Budget. Currently employees pay $1.95 per $100 of insurable earnings to a maximum of $11.80 per week. Currently, employers pay $2.73 per $100 of insurable earnings to a maximum of $16.52 per week.

As of January 1990, the Government will no longer contribute to the unemployment insurance fund. Employees and employers will pay extra to cover the increased costs. In 1990, employee contributions will increase to $2.25 per $100 of insurable earnings to a maximum weekly contribution of $14.29. This maximum weekly contribution is $2.49 more than employees are currently paying or $129.48 more per year.

In 1990, employer contributions will increase to $3.15 per $100 of insurable earnings to a maximum weekly contribution of $3.48 more than employers are currently paying or $180.96 more per year. We know who is paying for the mismanagement of the economy over the last few years. It is the employers and the workers of the country, and that is shameful.

Let us analyse the situation in light of the new changes. The premiums paid by employees and employers have increased substantially. The Government points out that the increase from $1.95 to $2.25 per $100 of insurable earnings is still lower than the rate employees paid in previous years. That is true. It was $2.35 over $100 of insurable earnings paid in 1985, 1986, 1987, and 1988. However, the Government has failed to show that it has also substantially increased the maximum weekly insurable earnings so that the maximum weekly contribution by employees will increase substantially. This is shameful.. Employees will now be paying almost $130 more per year in unemployment insurance premiums.

The Government predicts that the cost of its unemployment insurance expenditures for 1989 will amount to approximately $2.9 billion. By abdicating its responsibility to pay unemployment insurance contributions, the Government is forcing $1.2 billion in additional premiums to be paid by employees, and $1.7 billion in additional premiums to be paid by employers. By eliminating its contribution, the Government has stated to people in regions most in need, and particularly to fishermen, that it can no longer contribute to their well-being. The Government has cut adrift those most in need.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth (Mr. MacDonald) explained that quite adequately in his speech earlier. I thought it was a wonderful speech, and one of the best that we have heard in the House on this matter.

During the 1988 election campaign, Tory Members of Parliament went across the country and stated that social programs would not be affected, that free trade would have no effect on our social programs or on our unemployment insurance program. We have seen the results. This Government brought in a program which, quite frankly, I believe was made up by the Minister for International Trade at the whim of the Americans who stated that we could not have government contributions to the unemployment insurance system in Canada. The Minister for International Trade said: "Yes, Sir, Mr. President". Once the Government had made all those promises, the promises are broken.

Employees will now pay higher premiums and receive benefits for a shorter duration. Typically, with the Government it is now pay more for less. It is Tory math.

Ordinary Canadians cannot afford this increased burden. Those Canadians earning less than $30,000 a year paid 58 per cent of all employee premiums in 1986. Those earning $50,000 to $100,000 paid only 7 per cent of all employee premiums in 1986. Is that what the Government calls fair? I do not call it fair. Again, the Government is reducing the deficit on the backs of those least able to pay, and on the backs of those regions less able to vote in the number of Members that will help defeat the Government. That is Toryism. The Government picks on eastern and rural Canada. Those people will be most affected by this program.

The unemployment system is regressive by nature. In 1990, the premiums are capped when income reaches $33,020. Even with this range, the tax is not progressive, since it is set at a flat rate.

Instead of increasing the rates on low and middle-income workers, the Government could have funded the unemployment insurance program by removing the cap on the premium rate, so that a person making $100,000 would pay $2,250 a year in premiums instead of the current $784. We believe that a person who makes $100,000 should not only have to pay $784 as a maximum premium.

Where will corporations get the money to pay the tax? From reducing payments to shareholders? Not likely. Raising prices and getting it from customers, or cutting costs and getting it from employees seems more realistic. Those in the weakest economic position will bear most of this tax. Of almost $7 billion of tax increases, including the unemployment insurance changes, less than $1.5 billion are progressive. The rest are regressive, and sometimes seriously so.

The Government and the Prime Minister have termed social programs as a sacred trust. The Prime Minister has now reneged on his word with a brutal attack on the unemployment insurance system. It has taken $1.3 billion from the unemployment insurance fund and has not said how many workers will be affected. We have not seen any studies. I doubt if the Government knows what the studies show. In fact, I do not know if the Government has conducted any studies. Perhaps the Government is hiding them.

How many will lose benefits? How many will go without unemployment insurance? The Government has not stated what regions of the country will be hurt the most.

It is interesting to note that between 1984 and 1989 employment and training programs were cut by some 30 per cent by the Government, from $2.2 billion in 1984 when the Liberals left power, to $1.5 billion in 1989. That is a reduction of some $700 million.

On April 11, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) announced that she was putting $800 million back into the program, almost the same amount that the Government had taken out. We have yet to see a penny. The Government is fixing a problem that it created in the first place.

Time after time Members of the House have heard petitions from one coast to the other that we ought not to proceed with the proposed changes to the unemployment insurance fund which will disentitle up to one million Canadians from receiving unemployment insurance benefits.

Canadians are opposed to the so-called harmonization of unemployment insurance to conform with the Free Trade Agreement. This will destroy the historic role of unemployment insurance in this nation. Our system is the envy of many countries around the world, including the United States. The present Government is dismantling the foundation of our social structure which was built upon a sacred trust.

Canadians will not forget what the Government is doing. Next time at the polls, Canadians will not let the Government forget what it has done to them.

Mr. Ken G. Hughes (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise this evening to speak on this most important piece of legislation.

Last fall, as I campaigned throughout my riding of Macleod, people frequently asked me: "When is the Government going to do something to reform the unemployment insurance system?" I am proud to be able to say to my constituents in Lundbreck, Pincher Creek, Vulcan, and other communities that the Government has taken positive, concrete, and well-considered steps to change the UI system to make it more responsive to the real needs of Canadians.

Bill C-21 in a very progressive way changes the nature of our unemployment system. Now, unemployment insurance will be used to train and prepare workers for a job. As the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated: "The best social program is a job". My constituents and I fundamentally believe that this is an essential principle.

The world is changing. I know Members and colleagues opposite do not like to admit that, but we are entering a time of truly global change.

We are entering a truly global economy and Canada's workforce must be prepared to meet those challenges. In coming years Canada is going to require a highly skilled workforce. We are going to need a well trained and highly productive labour force if Canada is to achieve her rightful place in the global economy.

My constituents recognize that we need a better educated work force and more skilled employees. However, according to a study performed by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business last year, almost one-half, about 43 per cent of Canada's small businesses complain that they cannot find appropriately skilled help. Indeed, Canada currently spends half as much on training and skill development per capita than does the United States. We cannot allow this situation to continue. We must begin a vigorous program to educate and help Canadians train themselves so that we can compete with the rest of the world.

Bill C-21 goes a long way toward addressing this very serious problem. Currently only 2 per cent of UI expenditures are on training Canadians and preparing them to find a job. This Bill proposes to shift the spending priorities of the UI fund to direct up to 15 per cent of spending to preparing Canada's labour force, giving individual Canadians the chance to learn, to build their future through training and skill development. That is for moms, dads, sons, and daughters. I think that is a very positive initiative.

Indeed, through our labour force development strategy the Government will work with and stimulate the private sector to double its commitment to training from $1.4 billion to nearly $3 billion by 1994. That is double the investment in Canadians, double the investment in skills. That is a real commitment to people.

We are talking here about reallocating UI funds. We are talking about renewing Canada's priorities and looking to the future. I know that my colleagues opposite do not always like to look to the future. They like to paint a much more bleak future. We are talking about preparing Canadians for the challenges that a competitive workforce is going to create.

This Government is not creating that international competition. It is simply allowing Canadians the opportunity to respond to the pressures which we face internationally.

This Bill proposes to change the schedule of benefits under UI to make it more responsive to varying regional unemployment rates. Not only will this legislation achieve this goal, but it will also free up resources within the UI fund to be spent on training. Almost $1.3 billion will be redirected toward training, providing benefits to older Canadians, and increasing maternity or parental benefits. I am sure all Members of the House will agree that these are important and laudable goals.

At present, once an employee reaches the age of 65 he or she is no longer eligible for assistance from the UI fund. Indeed, if an employee turns 65 while collecting benefits, those benefits are immediately cut off. My constituents have expressed to me that they found the situation intolerable. I am pleased to see this Bill before the House since this unfair and previously discriminatory provision in the UI system will finally be removed. This Bill will extend UI coverage to older Canadians who choose to delay their retirement.

More than this, the changes as a result of this Bill to the UI system will enable the Government to develop a $100 million program to help displaced older workers. We will be assisting older Canadians to advance their skills, to retrain, and, if necessary, to upgrade their education.

I cannot stress enough how important this issue is. I have talked to constituents on the streets of High River and other communities in southern Alberta. I cannot count the number of people who have mentioned the special difficulty faced by older Canadians seeking work. This is a very fair, compassionate and practical measure.

This Bill will also provide much needed assistance to Canadian families. These are challenging times in which to raise children. I know that the Government should continue to provide support to Canadian families. Changes to our tax system have allowed parents more flexibility in choosing how to care for their children. This Bill and the changes it will bring to the UI system reflect the Government's continuing commitment to help strengthen Canadian families.

A full $450 million has been earmarked for maternity or parental benefits. Like other initiatives the Government has taken, parents will have more flexibility in how they choose to care for their new-born baby. Canadian families will be able to count on having as much as 30 weeks of UI benefits to help them through the financial struggle of having a child. It will also provide more flexibility to the system so that potentially both parents will have an opportunity to be with their youngster during those exciting first few weeks.

Mr. Wappel: What a joke!

Mr. Hughes: My colleague mentions jokes. I note this for interest because colleagues opposite talk of how reallocating UI funds is not acceptable to them. It is nothing new. The Opposition which today is so strongly against this idea are members of the Party which was involved in changing the allocation of UI funds in the first place.

Let us go back to 1976. The Minister of Manpower, Bud Cullen, said: "Amendments will also allow us to take a more positive approach to unemployment through resource allocation. It will permit experimentation with the use of unemployment insurance funds for programs of training, work sharing, and job creation". Today, the crowd opposite tries to oppose these very kinds of principles. It is remarkable.

I turn my attention to another important aspect. As part of this Government's efforts to assist areas experiencing unreasonably high unemployment, the Community Futures Program was developed. In my riding of Macleod, just as one example, there are areas, as there are in other parts of the country, in real need of economic development and diversification. The Government has made long-term substantial commitments to provide assistance to these areas.

For example, in the Crowsnest Pass, which includes a number of communities, the Government has committed over $2 million to the Business Development Centre of the Crowsnest Pass Economic Development Board.

The Government has also committed $400,000, approximately, to the Crowsnest Pass through the Self-Employment Incentive Program, a very practical program designed to help unemployed workers test new business ideas.

In the northern end of my riding, the Highwood Economic Development Corporation, which serves the Municipal District of Foothills as well as the County of Vulcan, is administering and investing $1.9 million over five years from the Community Futures Program. These programs are providing realistic responses to genuine needs.

The Government has renewed and invigorated its commitment to the Community Futures Program. The changes we are proposing to the unemployment insurance system will result in an extra $50 million every year for the Community Futures Program. This will ensure that this very important program will continue to provide areas of higher unemployment with assistance to diversify and develop their own economies.

I know how important this program has been in my own riding. I am sure that all Members of the House are pleased that the Community Futures Program will now have more resources.

I confess, my constituents have often told me that they feel the UI system is being abused. This is regrettable. They feel cheated and angry when they see some Canadians quitting their jobs without just cause and taking advantage of UI benefits.

• (2300)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hughes: These voluntary quitters cost the UI fund and the people of Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Come on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order.

Mr. Volpe: Even the Speaker is cutting you off.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I know it is the summer solstice and I realize that this will be the longest day. I hope we could get finished without getting too warm in this Chamber. The Hon. Member for Macleod has the floor for another nine minutes.

Mr. Hughes: This may be the longest day, but this will not be the longest speech.

It is regrettable that Canadians should feel cheated and angry when they see others taking advantage of the system. I think the people of Macleod are justified in getting angry.

This Bill will amend the Unemployment Insurance Act to make it more difficult and less tempting for people to take advantage of the system.

An Hon. Member: Less tempting?

Mr. Hughes: The Bill proposes that workers who voluntarily quit their jobs will not only have their benefits delayed, but they will also receive a reduction in the over-all level of benefits. As a result of this Bill, people seeking to take advantage of the unemployment insurance system will be disqualified from receiving benefits from seven to twelve weeks. Once their disqualification is over, they will receive benefits of only 50 per cent of their insurable earnings.

This Bill also substantially increases the penalties for both employers and employees who try to defraud the UI fund. This is as it should be.

When the unemployment insurance system was set up in the 1940s, it was designed to provide temporary assistance to unemployed workers. The UI fund was not created to replace other forms of social assistance. It was created to assist workers in getting through tough times of unemployment. This Bill represents a return to some of the fundamentals of the unemployment insurance system, and the people of Macleod whom I represent are pleased that these changes are taking place. They are pleased that there will be less abuse of the system. They look forward to the training programs, the economic development programs, and the maternity parental benefits provided by this Bill.

They are pleased that the UI system will no longer discriminate against older Canadians. They are glad that the Government has had the guts to undertake these reforms and start to put the UI fund to work for all Canadians.

The people of Macleod firmly support this important initiative of the Government. The Government is taking positive steps with these unemployment insurance changes. We are talking about investing in individuals. We are talking about investing in moms, dads, sons, and daughters. We are talking about Canadians who have aspirations to get ahead and use their own strengths to earn a living and meet their own challenges by investing in themselves to make a constructive and a real contribution to Canadian society.

If Canadians seize this opportunity and take up this challenge, the result will be that all Canadians will share in a greater wealth and a stronger future.

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, I rise to debate the Bill before the House of Commons today. It is with great sorrow that I witness one of the cornerstones of Canada's social fabric dismantled, or should I say destroyed, by the Conservative Government. It is painfully clear that the purpose of Bill C-21 is to cut back radically on Canada's unemployment insurance system and, in effect, privatize our oldest social program which has served Canadians well since 1940.

One must not forget that the UI system was brought into being as as result of the devastating effects of the Great Depression of the 1930s on our society, to ensure that no Canadian would have to suffer such hardship ever again.

It is because of this compassion toward the human condition that Prime Minister Mackenzie King instituted this national insurance scheme. Unemployment insurance was brought into being to make absolutely certain that no one would starve, lose their home or loved one as a result of losing a job. This deep caring for humanity is deeply embedded in the Liberal Party tradition.

It would be wrong to say that we in the Liberal Party do not want the Act changed, amended or improved. In fact, Mr. Speaker, in 1955 and 1971, under Liberal Governments, amendments were made to bring this legislation up to date with the needs of the time.

However, Mr. Speaker, that is not what this Bill proposes. As presented by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, this Bill threatens one of the main pillars of this country's social security network. Indeed, the Minister dares to go ahead with this Bill, even after she claimed in the last election campaign that if she and her party were returned to power, no social program would be privatized.

Mr. Speaker, it is really a shame that Canadians have been misled by this Minister and her party, and I can assure you that next time, they will not be fooled.

[English]

Millions of Canadians are asking themselves why the Government has decided to go back on its election promises. People are asking themselves why Canada's sacred trust has lost its sanctity with the Progressive Conservative Party.

In my opinion and that of my Party, there are three reasons why the Government has adopted this policy. The first reason is rather clear, given the contents of the Minister of Finance's leaky Budget. In an inappropriate manner, the Government is using the proposed Bill C-21 as a means of cutting Canada's national debt, 50 per cent of which was accumulated during the time the Conservatives have been in power. That is a fact Members opposite would conveniently like to forget.

We have frequently seen the Government's total lack of caring or understanding of average Canadians. The provisions of this Bill are the worst example of that fact. What the Minister is doing, along with her colleagues in Cabinet, is attempting to cut the deficit on the backs of the unemployed. Instead of strengthening the Canadian unemployment insurance system, the Government is cutting its commitment in a futile deficit reduction exercise. Instead of choosing a more logical means of cutting the deficit, such as taxing profitable corporations and cutting back on waste and inefficiency of government, the Minister is attacking those Canadians who have the least to offer.

The Minister is taking the money that would have gone to pay for the rent, food, and other basic necessities and allocating it for training programs. I would have been supportive of the creation of new skill training programs, but not at the expense of funds that are supposed to help people survive while looking for employment.

It is a strange set of priorities that the Minister is displaying. Instead of understanding the cyclical nature of poverty and the fact that basic assistance is needed to sustain life while individuals are unemployed, she is offering obscure and abstract training programs that will some day enable people to sustain themselves. What these people need is assistance to get by until they can find real jobs with real potential.

• (2310)

The second reason this Government brought forward this Bill has unfortunately become too clear following its election. Undeniably, Bill C–21 is a first step leading to a plan for the giants of the business world to move to free trade. By withdrawing from the unemployment insurance program, the Canadian Government is doing what the American Government wants, because the U.S. Government will not be able to take reprisals against us on the pretext that Canada uses unemployment insurance to subsidize its workers.

[English]

The Bill will be even more damaging when considering it in the light of free trade. By pulling out of UI, the Government of Canada has asked Canadian workers and employers to fill the $3 billion void caused by its absence.

This will result in either a higher unemployment rate, caused by employers reluctant to pay this hidden payroll tax, or it will lead to a powerful lobbying effort on the part of big business to be exempt from paying the unemployment insurance premiums because of their need to have a balanced playing field with their United States counterparts.

While corporations get larger and more profitable, average Canadians have to pay the price in terms of wages and social insurance. Knowing how close big business is with the Conservative Party, one can only wonder how long it will be before unemployed Canadian workers will be asked to foot the entire bill for unemployment insurance.

The last reason the Government has decided to implement this new unemployment insurance policy is its misguided Conservative ideology. Unfortunately, the majority of the Members opposite believe that a caring and compassionate social welfare system will lead to a greater degree of laziness. This archaic view of individuals who must take advantage of various social schemes is reprehensible in a country like Canada.

The majority of Canadians are tired of listening to the rantings of the dinosaur club and its talk of welfare bums when the actual number of people abusing the system is far below levels articulated by Members of the Government.

The statistics speak for themselves. The number of individuals caught cheating on the unemployment insurance was 5,507 out of 2.4 million Canadians who use the UI system. This represents only 0.2 per cent of the total number of Canadians who use the system. This is to edify the Hon. Member for South Shore.

Only 6,215 people have refused jobs found for them through UI. This represents only 0.25 per cent. Both these categories together represent less than half a percentage point of all individuals using the system. Despite this fact, the Conservative Government is still intent on characterizing by its statement that abuse is rampant in the system all people dependent on government assistance as ungrateful welfare bums.

That ideological bend is a major force behind this Government's withdrawal from unemployment insurance and a strong motivater for the severity of this Budget. This Government should learn from international examples that progressive unemployment insurance schemes go hand in hand with low unemployment rates. Social democratic countries such as Sweden, Austria, and Switzerland have some of the most progressive UI plans in the world and an unemployment rate below 5 per cent.

In fact, the average unemployment rate in Canada during the 15 years of Liberal Government preceding the global recession was 5.6 per cent. That puts into real perspective the fact that the Conservatives have not been able to bring the unemployment rate below 7 per cent once in the five years they have been in power. So much for the Government's record. The only place in Canada where full employment exists is in the overheated economy of Metropolitan Toronto.

It seems that this Government would be more than pleased if people from Corner Brook and Sydney moved to Halifax. They would be more than pleased if people from the Gaspé and the Saguenay moved to Montreal. The provisions of this Bill will make staying in the economically depressed regions of the country even more difficult.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration has stated that Bill C–21 still maintains the regional sensitivities to allow people from remote areas of Canada to stay in their homes. This is simple nonsense. If we look at the figures, we can see that in every region of the country the requirements for eligibility have increased. Also, the Tory Government seems to be sending an odd signal. In previous years, in an area of low unemployment, one needed 14 weeks to qualify for benefits. Now 14 weeks will qualify one only in regions where the unemployment rate is between 11 per cent and 12 per cent. How absolutely scandalous. Instead of facilitating an easy transition back into the workforce, the Tories are going to penalize you if you do not take the first employment opportunity that comes your way. It does not matter if you are a skilled professional, the Conservative Party would rather see you flipping hamburgers than looking that little bit extra longer for work that will lead you to a career in which you will be best able to contribute to Canadian society.

When is this Government going to create those jobs that will help sustain families at a decent level, instead of perpetuating their misfortune and increasing the number of working poor?

[Translation]

Now see how Bill C-21 will affect Québec. Under the present system, Québecers paid $2.5 billion in premiums and collected $3.3 billion. Obviously, on looking at these figures, we must revise and improve this program. By withdrawing from the unemployment insurance program, the Government is forcing employers with a large labour force to make up the difference.

In Québec, this will mean $100 million more will have to be spent by the Government, given the large number of employed workers.

Mr. Speaker, again, taxpayers, particularly those in Québec, will pay the bill for the lack of federal financial assistance in this area. All employers in Québec will have to pay more, to compensate for the measures in the Bill.

[English]

No matter which way we look at it this is a bad government policy. By shortening the number of weeks for benefits and increasing the necessary time for people to qualify, the Conservatives are offering Canadians more options.

When benefits are cut and the person is still unemployed, he or she will either have to go on provincially funded welfare programs or join the increasing number of Canadians who must rely on bread lines and soup kitchens for food and shelter. Unfortunately, that is going to be the legacy of the Conservative Government.

I know that Members opposite are going to claim that I am against job training programs. Nothing could be further from the truth. Liberals are not opposed to job training. In fact, from 1984 to 1989 the Tories have cut the funds for training programs from $2.2 billion to $1.5 billion. It is only now that they have taken from the funds designed to pay for the necessities of life that the training spending is back to its original level. As a concerned citizen I find this option most regrettable.

In an interview the Minister for International Trade said last October that the Government had no intention of cutting the unemployment insurance system. He even told the press that the Prime Minister was in full agreement with this position. I would like to know from the Hon. Minister what has changed between then and now to prompt such a devastating attack on our social programs.

It is obvious that the Conservatives have broken yet another of their election commitments. Might I add that Canadians will not forgive them again. The people of this country are tired of listening to the empty rhetoric of this Government. Canadian people need a Government that cares about their needs and is willing to respond not merely through words but through actions.

Bill C-21, if passed, will be disastrous for Canada. It will contribute to a greater division between the rich and the poor and will lead to a tremendous burden on our provinces. It creates a situation in which government is withdrawing from UI and, by doing so, privatizing one of the most important aspects of Canada's social security network.

• (2320)

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, and I conclude on this point, the only recourse, the last resort for Canadians will be welfare. It is scandalous, Mr. Speaker, to force people to such a solution!

[English]

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, we are here tonight to debate Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Employment and Immigration Department and Commission Act. First reading of the Bill was on June 1 of this year. We in the New Democratic Party oppose this Bill and will oppose it with all that we have throughout this debate and for as long as we can. Of course tonight closure has been imposed and in just a few hours we will be voting on second reading of the Bill.

The Government has introduced what I believe to be two very important and negative pieces of legislation since I was elected on November 21. The first of those important and negative pieces of legislation was the Bill to implement the free trade deal. I remember standing in this House about nine o'clock on one of those evenings before Christmas speaking to a lot of Canadians who I know were not watching because of the time of day. Once again I find the same thing on a very important piece of legislation affecting a great number of people. I am standing here in the House late at night debating something that the people of Canada should be hearing during the normal course of the business day.

I am very happy to be talking about this Bill because there are a lot of things that I think need to be changed which are not addressed in this piece of legislation. I am a very active Member of Parliament. I have a lot of contact with my constituents. I deal with their cases on a very personal basis, be it unemployment insurance, immigration, visa matters or even social assistance cases. I am more than happy to sit down in my office and help them through their problems.

I have dealt with quite a few people who have difficulty with the unemployment insurance program. I have a lot of contact with the unemployment insurance offices in my riding, one in North Battleford and one in Meadow Lake, Saskatchewan. The people who work in those offices are very dedicated individuals working hard to administer a very difficult and flawed program. This legislation is going to make their job much more difficult, and it is going to make the people they are dealing with much more angry.

I have listened to quite a number of speeches tonight from government Members who have talked about the need to change the legislation because of the way in which the current system is being abused. I have heard Members on this side of the House correct Members on the other side of the House by indicating that the abuse rate of the unemployment insurance program is less than 1 per cent. I know from dealing with people in my office that the people who are having difficulty with the unemployment insurance program as it exists today are not abusing the program. They are in desperate need of the program, and they are in desperate need of improvements to the program.

I want to cite a particular case with which I am just finishing. It first came to my attention on April 27 of this year. A young woman in my riding had left her place of employment in early April. She had a very good reason for leaving her place of employment, but there was some difficulty in communicating that information to the people at the Canada Employment Centre who were administering the unemployment insurance program. To make matters very simple, it was a dispute with her employer.

On April 27, after a couple of weeks of receiving no satisfaction in dealing with the office and getting her claim settled, she finally achieved eligibility for benefits under the program but was disentitled in her first week of benefits because the workers at the unemployment insurance office questioned her about her child care arrangements in her family circumstances. She lives on a farm a few miles out of town and on one day she had difficulty getting a caregiver to look after her young infant when she had a job interview. Canada Employment disentitled her for benefits because, they said, she had inadequate child care arrangements. That was on April 27 when she came to see me.

After we investigated her claim and discussed it with the people at the Canada Employment Centre, she was put back on the benefit roll, but because of her disqualification she was penalized four weeks. Since she could not serve the disqualification at the same time as the disentitlement, she served the four weeks from April 28 and then had to serve another mandatory two-week waiting period, which has to be served by all UI claimants before the benefits would be paid.

If we add this up we find a young woman in an area where jobs are hard to find with a young child at home, unemployed, with no income at all for 10 weeks as a result of the problems with the existing program. She is back on benefits and she will get her first cheque on June 23. The Canada Employment Centre has recognized that she is entitled to benefits and she should have been entitled to them on April 27.

The current program has failed this individual and the changes in this legislation would further penalize my constituent, whose case I am only now managing to get on to the entitlement roles. Clause 21 refers to subsection 30(1) of the Act. It talks about penalties for disqualified claimants, and we find that they have increased substantially. We also find that in a case of sexual harassment if a person quits without complaining loudly, simply walks away from the job because the person does not want to go through the hassle of laying sexual harassment charges, the penalties are imposed even though this is considered a good enough excuse to quite one's job. Under the old system the maximum penalty was six weeks. Under this Bill the maximum penalty is from seven to twelve weeks.

My constituent, a young woman with a child, living on a farm, looking for employment in an area where employment is hard to find, would have been without funds not just for 10 weeks but maybe up to 20 weeks. I think that is a very mean-spirited and horrendous situation. That is what the Government is doing to some people in this country.

I listened with interest to some of the speeches which were made on the other side of the House tonight. The Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. McCreath) earlier mentioned about those who cheat the system and the necessity of stiffer penalties. The problem is that if there are people out there who are cheating the system, we should have people who are employed by the system to find the cheaters and deal with them. Nobody in this world or in this country believes that cheaters should profit.

What we have is a public service which is not well supported. It is dealing with a very poor program, with too many people. It does not have time to deal with those people who are cheating the system. We should not penalize the needy in order to find those who are abusing the system. We should maintain the system, improve the system, and go after those few people in this country who are abusing it. If less than 1 per cent is abusing the system, we should not make it difficult for the other 99 per cent who need the program.

The speaker who spoke before the speaker ahead of me made an interesting comment. He said that this legislation was going to benefit all Canadians. I certainly hope not because that would mean that the Tory policies are working and we all be unemployed. There will be 100 per cent unemployment in this country. If that is what the people on the other side are looking for, then certainly they need legislation to benefit all Canadians.

There are quite a number of things I wanted to say tonight for the benefit of some of the people in my constituency who I know are very interested in what this program is all about. I have a few things to mention on the development of the Unemployment Insurance Program in the country. Before doing that, I wanted to remind the House of the words of my Leader of not too long ago, the New Democratic Party Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). He said that it was funny the way this Government operates. You have to give money to the corporations to keep them working, but you have to take it away from the poor to keep them working. It is an interesting comment which fits right into the nature of this legislation in front of us today.

The Unemployment Insurance Program in Canada was originally introduced in 1935 with the Bennett Government's Employment and Social Insurance Act. The Act was struck down as unconstitutional in 1937.

In 1940 a provincial agreement was obtained to have the measure accepted as a federal responsibility. From that point on, 1940 until the early 1970s, the program generally expanded with new criteria such as regional benefits, sickness and maternity benefits, and other benefits added to the program.

From the mid to late 1970s the Liberal Government began to undermine that program. General benefit levels were reduced. Family benefits were eliminated, and obstacles placed in the way of new entrance and re-entrance to the workforce.

Not surprisingly, prior to the Conservatives taking over from the Liberals in 1984, the Conservative Government made no mention of the unemployment insurance system during its successful 1984 election campaign. The present Prime Minister's strongest statement on social policy at that time was made during the Leaders' debate when he indicated that no programs protecting people would be touched by a Government under his control.

After the election the unemployment insurance system became more important to the Government and was mentioned both in November in an economic statement and in the May 1985 Budget. The 1984 economic statement sliced $300 million from the program through changes to definitions of income and other changes.

In July 1985, the Government announced the creation of the Forget commission to provide an assessment of alternatives to the unemployment insurance system. The commission had both business and labour representation. When the commission reported in December 1986, it was utterly split with the labour representatives submitting a minority statement of unprecedented proportions at that time.

The two key recommendations from the commission's majority were the loss of regional benefits and the annualization of benefits. The commission claimed that these changes would make the system fairer by giving all Canadians access to 50 weeks of benefits. These benefit levels would be based on average weekly wages over the past year, rather than on average wages over the previous 10 weeks.

The actual impact of these changes would have been drastic cuts in benefits. This system would have seen an over-all cut in benefits of 30 per cent. Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island would have seen their benefit levels fall by more than 50 per cent. We have heard some statements tonight about the impact of this current legislation on Atlantic Canada. The commission suggested that these cuts be replaced by a completely undefined set of income supports.

The Government was clearly not comfortable with these recommendations or its timing. Its major power base in Quebec would have lost $1 billion under those proposals presented. The Government reacted by referring the recommendations to a standing committee which completely rejected the commission's proposal in its March 1987 report. The committee Members had to go home to their constituencies and face real problems with real people. They actually recommended improvements in the system.

In the end the Government whose mind was focused on an impending election did nothing. Not surprisingly, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) also chose not to make the Forget report nor unemployment insurance reform a part of his election platform in 1988.

The New Democratic Party position on unemployment insurance is reflected in a presentation by our colleague for Nickel Belt to the Forget commission entitled Back to the Future. That document generally called for the liberalizing of the program and an improvement of benefits.

We have also called on the Government to pay for the training programs out of general revenues and not out of the funds submitted by employers and employees. To a large degree, unemployment insurance is an insurance program paid for by workers and employers. As a tax measure to pay for other programs it is extremely regressive and should not be used.

The New Democratic Party supports both of the cases which came out of the courts and led to some of the changes which we support within this legislation. We previously opposed the elimination of those over 65 from the program. We have consistently called for better parental benefits as they are envisaged in the Federal Court decision dealing with the rights of natural fathers.

I touched briefly on the insurance program. Let us make no mistake that at its core unemployment insurance is an insurance program. It is not a social assistance program. It is designed to ensure that working Canadians are able to look after themselves and their families during personal difficult economic times. It is with this in mind that employees have permitted money to be deducted from their cheques.

In so doing working Canadians believe that just as the money they contribute to pension programs will be there when they retire, money they contribute to the Unemployment Insurance Program will be there for them and their families should they lose their job. It is also with this in mind that we should examine carefully all that is within this Bill C-21 now before us in the House of Commons.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak tonight, Mr. Speaker. I see you are motioning that my time is up. I appreciate the opportunity to speak. I wish everyone well here tonight in convincing the Government to withdraw this Bill and go back to the drawing-board.

[Translation]

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise in the House this evening to speak to Bill C–21, even if it is already 11.40 p.m. and today happens to be my 20th wedding anniversary. However, my wife said I could work late.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for giving me this opportunity to speak to the House.

Bill C–21 is adapted to the 1990s. It is adapted to today's needs.

Since 1984, this Government has been working very hard and very sensibly on training and job creation programs. Since 1984, we have created 1,500,000 new jobs in Canada. This proves our Government is doing the right thing, and I can assure you that Bill C–21 is a piece of legislation that will pursue this sensible approach, as we said during the 1988 election campaign.

• (2340)

I want to congratulate the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) who this legislation has given a new stimulus to job creation, and I will explain why in a moment. Canadians want to work. Canadians don't want to be on the pogey and they don't want to be on welfare. Earlier, I heard the Minister for Saint–Laurent say that only 2 per cent—

An Hon. Member: The Member!

Mr. Leblanc (Longueuil): The Hon. Member for Saint–Laurent (Mrs. Maheu) told us only 2 per cent of the unemployed did not want to work and were constantly shifting from unemployment to employment and would rather be on the pogey than work. However, 2 per cent of the unemployed equals $1.1 billion the federal Government can save. And I think these people don't deserve to be on the pogey. As a Conservative Member, I say that is very important and I think it is worth considering.

Mr. Speaker, for better or for worse, we are part of a system that is undergoing major technological changes. I say for better or for worse, and unfortunately, jobs are being lost as result of advanced technological change, but on the plus side, we need more highly qualified workers.

I will give you an example of administrative jobs. Typists are often replaced by computers or word processors, and of course these jobs have to be replaced. But where? Is there any connection? There is, in that computers have to be manufactured.

However, different skills are needed to build and manufacture computers. That is why we have to retrain people who need jobs, and the problem also appears in the manufacturing sector. In plants, machines are replaced by robots, lathes are replaced by computer–operated lathes, and so forth.

This advanced technology enables Canadians to have a better quality of life, but it also has a number of drawbacks. As I said earlier, we must adjust to these realities in our present society.

Bill C–21 enhances our quality of life. We are all proud of the fact that we can earn a decent living, and our pride arises from the work we do.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian markets and international markets are becoming more and more open, and that is a fact of life. We are experiencing problems from time to time, and that is because to a certaine extent we have to do business with countries like Japan, the Common Market, Korea and many other countries. If we want to continue to sell our products and compete with the rest of the world we need highly skilled labour so we will be in a position to produce goods at competitive prices, otherwise our market will be flooded with foreign products. It stands to reason that Canadians will go for products available at the best possible prices. It is therefore imperative that our workers be able to face the challenge and turn out good products.

Free trade with the Americans has to be the best opportunity Canadians have ever had. Take the Montreal region, for example, and draw an 800–kilometre circle around Montreal or Longueuil and you have a population of 75 million consumers, 75 million people who would buy Canadian products, particularly products made in the Montreal region. Imagine the opportunities which free trade affords us to sell our products and to create jobs. We will be able to create hundreds of thousands of jobs. But, again, only on the condition that we can compete. We will be competitive if our workers are properly trained. And it is for that purpose that Bill C–21 is aimed at retraining our workers with a view to providing business and industry with competent employees.

Bill C-21 will enable us to upgrade the skills of workers to meet business needs. We need first-class employers, teachers and workers or else we are doomed to failure.

We absolutely must base our efforts on training; otherwise, unemployment and social assistance will go up and we will see more poverty and more social problems in our beautiful country. We will have a vicious circle and our economic system will suffer tremendously.

You know that if more people are unemployed, more companies make less money and our governments will probably collect less tax. If we collect less tax and have more unemployment, we are headed straight for an economic recession. That is why it is very important to retrain our workers so that we can produce and be competitive and keep our businesses thriving.

Mr. Speaker, another advantage of this Bill C-21 concerns workers aged 65 and over.

Many people who are 65 or older are in very good health, have great talent and a lot of experience, but they almost had to stop working. With this Bill, we let these people continue to work, to contribute to unemployment insurance and to collect UI benefits. These people 65 and older will be treated like anyone else. And that is a great advantage for our businesses that need these talents, these experienced people 65 and over who will be treated like ordinary citizens—like first-class citizens, in many cases.

We will convince private enterprise to invest more, and that is in the Bill, we will try to convince private companies to invest one and a half billion a year to train their workers, and I quite agree.

We will also try to work a little more with labour, business and the provincial governments. This is really essential in today's world in which we live, with the tremendous competition that we face. Labour, management and the provincial governments, the three of them together with the federal Government, must work together to develop low-cost job creation strategies.

• (2350)

We will also allow people 45 and over—because you know, Mr. Speaker, a lot of people 45 and over come and see me in my office. They have lost all hope because they have no jobs anymore and often they are not re-employable. They are told they do not have the skills needed and there is no way they can find a job. Why? Because they are told they only have grade 9 or grade 8. But 20 years ago grade 9 was pretty good. And now, they are expected to go back to school, to go through the five years of high school. They are asked to go back to school for three or four years. You know, Mr. Speaker, nobody 45 or over has the courage to go back to school for three or four years.

So what we want to achieve with Bill C-21 is provide programs that are adapted to those people. Instead of starting over high school, they can learn, retrain directly on the job. The motivation and the rewards will be much greater for those people.

Mr. Speaker, we know of course there is a natality problem, there often are family problems. We will provide for an increase on UI benefits and medicare benefits, which was not allowed before, medicare benefits, in terms of maternity leave and sick leave. Now, this will be increased from 15 weeks to 30 weeks.

This project will cost the federal Government $450 million. I think it is worthwhile— I warn the Opposition they should mention it every time they make a speech because it is a unique measure that will help our professional workers who want to keep their jobs while raising a family.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is adapted to today's world. That is basically what the Bill is all about. It is adapted to today's society. The Opposition said earlier that no changes should be made in the Bill because historically, it had served Canadians well. However, bills are made to be adapted, and I can inform the House that this Bill is truly adapted to today's society. It is a Bill for today's people and today's businesses.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much, and I am proud to support this Bill today.

[English]

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, this is truly a sad day in parliamentary history. Not only is the Government ravaging one of Canada's major social policies, but invoking closure. Only allowing seven hours of debate on this issue is an insult to every working man and woman in Canada.

I have just heard Government Members say that we must become more competitive. Why is it then that the Government has reduced R and D funding, has cut training and retraining programs over the past five years, and has cut post-secondary education payments? What has it done for people and for small businesses? It has taxed, taxed and taxed.

Bill C–21 represents another in a long list of broken promises by the Government. Unemployment insurance was called a sacred trust by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie). In fact, three days before the election, they promised Canadians that it would not be touched.

Bill C–21 also represents another attack on working men and women. Free trade was the first; higher taxes was the second and this is the third.

We also heard a Government Member indicate that the reason these changes are necessary is because those who are receiving unemployment insurance benefits are nothing but a bunch of cheats and people who do not want to work. That is representative of an 18th Century philosophy that the Government wants to move into the 21st Century.

Bill C–21, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, is, I suggest, an attack by the Government on the very social fabric of the nation, one that distinguishes us from other countries, particularly the United States. We are a more caring and compassionate country, as evidenced by our history, and we have over the years built social pillars with programs and policies that form the foundation of this great land.

The withdrawal of federal Government funding to UI and the abdication from the program and its responsibilities is reprehensible. The Government is washing its hands of its responsibility to bridge the gap for the men and women of Canada who are in between jobs and are looking for jobs. On the one hand, the Government wants to take all the credit for creating jobs, but on the other takes no responsibility when its policies cause the hardship of unemployment and causes unemployment itself to increase.

Most men and women must work to maintain their standard of living and the quality of their lives and their children's lives. No one wants to lose his or her job. One's financial and psychological security depends on it. However, through no fault of their own, individuals are sometimes laid off as companies close their doors or move to new locations. Unemployment insurance is there to help on a temporary basis. It is not welfare, as some Government Members would have us believe. It is there to soften the financial blow and to aid in the transition period that occurs when one loses one's job and has to find another. It is there as a safety net.

Let us not forget that the workers pay in part for this insurance plan. Yes, it is an insurance policy one hopes to never have to collect. Business, as a partner in this social contract, also pays a part of this insurance policy for its employees. What has the third party, the federal Government, done about this social contract? It has absolved itself of any responsibility and in so doing is now telling the workers that they must pay more and that the employers must also pay more.

Small business, the engine of our economy, is already faced with high costs due in large part to the Government's support for high interest rates, high taxes and a mountain of Government red tape. Small business, which now contributes to more than 50 per cent of our Gross National Product and provides over 60 per cent of the jobs, cannot now be asked to pay the Government's share. A payroll tax raises the cost of labour. When premiums increase, the relative cost of labour rises and this induces employers to reduce the costs by substituting capital for labour, or by moving to a lower–cost environment.

In short, any way one looks at it, the Government is increasing unemployment and is not becoming more competitive but is becoming less competitive. There is no doubt that the system can be improved because, let us face it, any system can be improved. However, let us improve it, not gut it. If those who quit voluntarily without just cause are a problem, then make some changes, positive changes, to deal with this specific problem. If people are refusing to take jobs that are available, or if people are not available for work, then let us make the positive changes that would correct the program.

Let us look at the figures. There were 6,215 people who refused jobs and therefore lost their benefits. This is out of 2.4 million beneficiaries, which means that .25 per cent were disentitled because they refused jobs. The Hon. Member on the Government side indicated that all people on unemployment were abusing the system. If it is cheats we want to deter, make those changes so that it is impossible for them to take advantage of the system. The figures point out that there were 5,507 claimants who were caught cheating under the unemployment insurance system. That was 5,507 out of a total of 2.4 million beneficiaries. That means that the number of cheats represented .2 per cent of the total number of beneficiaries in that year. That is a very low number.

If the Government wanted to change the system to make positive changes, then it should not punish the majority of honest, hard-working men and women who want to work, need to work, and need the protection if some unforeseen problems arise. Furthermore, employers should not be punished after they are invited to be good corporate citizens by hiring as many people as they possibly can. Do not ask partners in this social contract to pick up the whole tab after the Government has enjoyed the fruits of their labour.

For instance, in London, the new regulations indicate that a person who loses a job through no fault of their own will have to work longer to qualify, will receive fewer benefits, and will receive those benefits for a shorter period of time. That is not fair and equitable to honest working men and women, especially at a time when there will be massive changes due to the Free Trade Agreement, and as companies restructure. These proposed changes are punitive and discriminatory to honest working men and women.

The Government insists that it is shuffling money from unemployment to training, and that some $800 million will go to training and retraining. The Government's new found responsibility and interest in training is truly amazing. After cutting training and retraining programs by $700 million in the last four years, it is now putting back what it took from those programs over the past five years.

Did Canadian workers not need training in the past four years? Did employers not need skilled workers over the past four years? The Government wants to take from the unemployed, and it wants all workers and employers to pay for the training programs without having to give any assurances that they themselves will benefit from that training.

Where has the Government been for five years? Waiting lists for training and apprenticeship programs have ballooned, while government funding has dried up. Employers have had severe problems finding skilled workers, yet welfare rolls in most municipalities have remained high. All this is at great economic and social cost to society. Where has the federal Government been for those people? Where has the Government been for older workers when their plants were closed down with no adjustment programs? Stringent requirements were needed to qualify for retraining, yet few spots were available in any case. Most people found themselves at the bottom of a long waiting list.

A strong labour force development strategy depends on a sound and full employment policy. That includes not only strong emphasis on training, retraining and worker adjustment programs, but on strong support for research and development, education, and literacy programs for our people. Unfortunately, all those positive steps have been cut back by the Government in the past, or have little token support now.

The Government should not move on its unemployment insurance plan as it is now written, nor should Parliament approve this Bill until such time as the Government has tabled the boundaries for the new labour force economic regions. There are indications that those new boundaries will not be ready in time and that there are certain to be inequities.

Second, the new training programs that government Members speak of have not been tabled, nor have there been any consultations with the provinces. These changes will likely result in shifting additional financial burden to the provinces and in turn to municipalities at a time when we should be looking at ways to make the three levels of government more efficient and co-operative in a collective manner in order to make the maximum use of all moneys collected by way of taxes from our citizens.

If the Government wants to introduce positive changes to unemployment insurance, benefit packages to improve its effectiveness, and if the Government wants to introduce measures that will improve the special benefits for maternity and paternity leave, sick benefits and old age benefits, we on this side of the House will look favourably upon those changes. However, if the Government insists on dismantling and cutting down one of the most important social pillars of a country that has reached our level of maturity and social well-being, then we will have absolutely no part of it.

We know that we cannot stop the Government from passing this Bill on second reading tonight. Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we on this side of the House intend to fight tooth and nail during committee meetings, as we cross the country from west to east to hear from working men and women, municipal leaders and small business people, and we intend to let them know exactly what the program and the changes will do to them.

In Canada, 80 per cent of the people who qualify for assistance programs receive those benefits. In contrast, in the United States only 25 per cent of the people who qualify receive any benefits. I do not have to tell Members to look at the increasing problems the United States has with crime, drugs, homelessness and dying on the streets. Is that the type of country that the Government wants us to become? Good social policy is good economic policy. I do not believe that Canadians want to go backward, either.

Mrs. Dorothy Dobbie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise this evening, even at this unearthly hour, to speak on this most important topic. I am particularly pleased to speak this evening after hearing such a lot of contradictory balderdash. I have never heard so much confusing rhetoric and contortion of the facts in my life.

The fact of the matter is that we are dealing with a very simple issue, one that has to do with people, and I would like to put it into perspective. The saddest thing in the world is a healthy, productive individual who is unable to work but wants to. The only thing sadder than that is a healthy, potentially productive individual whose will to work has been sapped by a forced diet of social assistance. These are the hopeless and defeated souls who have forgotten the joys of self-sufficiency, who have been actively discouraged from efforts to be productive by counter-productive programs of social assistance which attempt to make work less attractive in terms of take-home dollars than existing on the efforts of others.

Earlier I heard one of our friends opposite speak with a great deal of eloquence about the sanctity of our unemployment insurance system. I concur with my hon. friend, and agree with this. The unemployment insurance system makes a lot of sense. It is a reasonable and commendable way to provide sustenance for those who lose their jobs through no fault of their own.

However, surely the thrust of an unemployment insurance program should be to encourage re-employment in industries and jobs that offer security from future gaps in employment because the employee now has the skills or the ability to acquire those skills to grow with the job and adjust to healthy change in the workplace.

Such a program is the one being introduced by the Government today. This program offers hope for self-sufficiency. It offers hope for new horizons to thousands of unemployed people who are aching to get back into the productive and rewarding workplace. This is a program which sees Canadians as having the potential for independence and having the potential to be productive members of this society. This program is one that sees Canadians as having the potential to learn to change, to grow, to do better, and to improve their lifestyles.

Hon. Members opposite have a very sad, distorted and negative view of the Canadian worker. I say shame on those Hon. Members. To hear them tell it, our workforce is incapable of doing anything but going from one dead-end job to the other, with lengthy periods of unemployment to spare in between. That is what they say. As a consolation prize for the lack of a plan, for the lack of the creative energy to solve the problem, Members opposite would offer only easy, insensitive and uncaring answers of a few more bucks.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Dobbie: Money is a cheap answer. Money does not answer the long-term problem.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): But it puts food in your belly and a fire in your stove.

Mrs. Dobbie: To continue, sadly, there is never enough money to serve the needs. There never can be enough money, as my hon. friends very well know, to make up for the lack of hope, the desperation, the loss of dignity and the erosion of self-worth that comes from not having a job and, worse, that comes from knowing that one will never have a job because one lacks the skills and training to compete in the job market.

Ms. Clancy: Or there is no market where you live.

Mrs. Dobbie: This program offers that hope. This program addresses the underlying problem of the chronically unemployed.

Currently, more than one million Canadians indicate that their lack of skills is a significant barrier—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think if the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary would be able to complete her speech we might be able to hear a couple more speeches before 1 a.m. I hope Hon. Members will give courtesy to those who are speaking between now and 1 a.m.

Mrs. Dobbie: Mr. Speaker, I am glad my hon. friends opposite have wakened up. I must be saying something right.

Currently, more than one million Canadians indicate that their lack of skills is a significant barrier to finding employment. As one of my colleagues mentioned earlier, this is backed up by a number of studies done by, for example, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business which found that 50 per cent of its members cited a shortage of qualified labour as a problem.

In addition, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association found that 36 per cent of its member manufacturers expressed difficulty in finding skilled trades people. As one who has spent time as a printer, a small manufacturer, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, from my own personal experience that this is very true.

What we are trying to do is address this problem. The number of people who are currently trained under the UI program number 75,000. It is our goal to double that to about 140,000, or about 5 per cent of UI beneficiaries.

To make sure that this training is relevant, we will be seeking the advice of labour and business, which is an appropriate thing to do, in the further design of UI support for training.

We are hearing a great deal from Hon. Members opposite about so-called mythical cut-backs to the UI program. I do not know from where they are getting this. The total funding for the program remains the same. It is not being reduced.

Mr. Allmand: You have not read the Bill.

Mrs. Dobbie: What we will do is make training more effective by allowing for a longer duration of training periods—up to three years—and by assisting persons who are on UI to obtain high school equivalency certification to allow them to qualify for available jobs or to pursue a skills training program.

Mr. Speaker, you have heard the facts and the figures over and over again during this debate. However, there is one area that seems to continue as a question of misunderstanding by members of the Opposition who seem to have a hard time understanding a number of things. This one has to do with the number of weeks of work required in order to collect insurance. I would like to set the record straight by saying once and for all that people living in areas of high unemployment above 11.5 per cent need only log 10 weeks of employment in order to trigger benefits. That is to say that a person in one of those areas must only work two and a half months to collect. That is as it was before.

Second, another point which should be registered with those who have a hard time absorbing information across the way, is that those people in seasonal jobs—in fact, most of the people who rely on UI most frequently and who trigger benefits more than once in a 52-week period—will find that the qualifying period is unchanged. Construction workers in Manitoba, for example, who collect more than once in a 52-week period must work 18 weeks in order to collect. This is no different from what it was before.

Ms. Clancy: How about the fish plant workers?

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mrs. Dobbie: The program has been made more relevant and more responsive to today's needs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) on a point of order.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, we are here discussing a Government Bill and there is not a single Minister of the Crown in the House. I think that there should be a Minister—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member is out of order. There are Ministers in the House.

I would like to bring to the attention of Hon. Members the fact that there has been an agreement made here. There are Ministers in the Chamber, whether they are in the Chamber or outside. There are also other Members outside the Chamber. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands should know whether or not he should bring to the attention of the House who is or who is not in the Chamber.

Mrs. Dobbie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken). He could see that I was growing a little tired and needed a rest.

Mr. Wappel: You need a long rest.

Mrs. Dobbie: Unemployment insurance at its best and in its purest form is a program that permits people to bridge the gap in tough periods. It allows them to do that without attaching the stigma of welfare to their temporary misfortune. However, let us not kid ourselves for one minute into believing that we can hide welfare programs under the umbrella of unemployment insurance for very long. We are not fooling anyone, least of all those poor souls who are forced to eke out their existence in short-term, dead-end jobs that ultimately land them back on the UI rolls. They know that their sustenance is predicated on a form of welfare, no matter how euphemistically pretty the label given to it.

Therefore, the Government's revised program makes good sense. It offers hope to countless Canadians for a better tomorrow. It holds out a promise to all who despair in finding work for lack of qualifications. It holds out a promise that they, too, can share in Canada's bounty and that they have not been abandoned or forgotten.

I commend the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) for her courage and far-sightedness in devising a strategy that respects Canadian workers and offers a new hope to the many who have none today.

This is an excellent program. I am proud to be a part of a Government that has the honesty and integrity to deal with the real needs of Canadians and to deal with the needs of the unemployed by seeking to help them in a manner that leaves them with their dignity and provides them with hope for the future.

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this legislation. However, I must begin with a confession.

Before being elected, my occupation was senior policy analyst in the UI Analysis Directorate of Employment and Immigration. That places me in the dubious category of being the only Member in this House, I think, who has had three Tory Ministers as former bosses.

Some Hon. Members: And you're still alive?

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): My discomfort at this blot on my past is eased somewhat by the election of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken).

I want to say that although the unit in which I was previously employed was probably involved in the analytical work for Bill C-21, I would not want that to imply any collaboration or even support for this legislation on my part.

• (0020)

Quite the contrary. However, the background may be useful in terms of the perspective I can add to the debate this evening. Several of my colleagues have raised some of the more obvious flaws in the legislation. They have said, for example, that Canadian workers will pay more for less unemployment insurance protection under the Minister's proposed changes. That is true. When we see the increase in the premiums and the fact the Government is withdrawing from the program, combined with the new benefits schedule proposed by the Minister, there is less UI protection and higher premiums that workers will have to pay.

The second obvious flaw with the package is that the extra weeks that will be needed to qualify will cause major hardships in many of the rural communities in Canada. In my riding of Cape Breton Highlands—Canso, many communities depend on industries which are basically seasonal in nature. All that sustains these industries in the off season is unemployment insurance which provides income support for the people who work in the industries, and provides income to the businesses that are in those communities to keep the economy moving. Without unemployment insurance during that off season, unemployment would spread throughout the communities. Furthermore, there are no alternatives in those isolated communities to unemployment insurance protection.

That brings me to the third obvious flaw in this legislation. It concerns the training programs which have been offered by the Minister as a substitute for UI protection. These training programs are fine for the urban areas like Toronto, where someone who is unemployed can train for a multitude of other industries and sectors. However, for someone living in eastern Nova Scotia who is unemployed, the only option is to leave home for somewhere else, either in Nova Scotia or in another part of Canada. It means giving up one's home and moving to another part of the country.

Since the Minister claims to be so confident about the benefits of her training programs, why does the Government not finance these programs from general revenues? Why does the Government place the risk of the success or failure of the training programs on the unemployed worker? Why will the unemployed worker have to pay for the risk associated with these training programs? If the Government is so proud of these training programs why does it not finance them from government revenues? It is essentially an admission of the failure and lack of confidence of the Government in its own programs.

The fourth obvious flaw concerns the Budget more than the changes to the unemployment insurance program that were announced by the Minister. It is the move to finance the total program out of employee and employer contributions. This is clearly a regressive tax measure. It is a tax on jobs which will apply to workers and which will discourage companies from hiring. It will also increase costs so that the tax not only contributes to unemployment but to inflation as well.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is supposed to be a well respected economic manager, at least until the release of the Budget. I cannot understand why he would allow such a measure to pass.

Another criticism to the changes to the UI program is that it essentially privatizes unemployment insurance. This is consistent with the Government's move to harmonization with the United States in the wake of the Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Reid: What are we changing?

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)): Let me instruct the Hon. Member about what the unemployment insurance system looks like in the United States. The unemployment insurance program is a state financed program. States compete with each other in the United States to attract industry by offering lower unemployment benefits. Benefits in the United States are significantly less generous than in Canada.

Mr. Reid: How do you attract industry if the state offers less money?

An Hon. Member: It sounds like harmonization to me.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): A third characteristic of the program is a feature known as experience rating. Industries or firms whose workers use the unemployment benefits more than others pay higher premiums over time.

Mr. Reid: In this country the state pays for it. There is no corporate responsibility.

Mr. Volpe: Go back to sleep.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): I ask the Member to consider for a moment how experience rating would work in Canada. In Atlantic Canada with our geography and industrial base, we use unemployment insurance benefits relatively more than the rest of the country. This means we would pay astronomical unemployment insurance premiums for less benefits. Is that the system the Government wants to move us toward?

Mr. Reid: No. It is quite clear that it is not.

Mr. Volpe: That is exactly where you want to take us.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): They have taken the first step—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso has the floor.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): The Government has taken the first step toward the American unemployment insurance system by withdrawing government support for the program. The program has always been a tripartite financed system in which there were three partners in financing unemployment insurance. They were the employers, the employees and the Government. We use the unemployment insurance program in our system to stabilize our economy and put income in areas of high unemployment. That is done through regional extended benefits, which are being withdrawn by the Government.

Mr. Reid: Absolutely not.

Mr. Thompson: You are dead wrong. That is the same speech you gave last fall.

An Hon. Member: No it isn't.

An Hon. Member: Good morning.

Mr. Wappel: Put that man on a VIA train.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please there is still 30 minutes remaining. I would like to hear the Hon. Member's speech.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): The flaws that I just outlined are obviously worth repeating because I believe Hon. Members opposite have not fully understood them yet.

Mr. Reid: That is where you are wrong.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): If they would speak to their constituents they would realize what this program means to Canadians. I would like to focus my remarks on some less obvious weaknesses in the program. It is interesting to note the lukewarm reception that the Minister's proposed changes have received from the business press. It is the business press that has been clamouring for UI reforms, clamouring to make the UI program more efficient, for ending abuses in the program, for making it more strict. It has been clamouring for this Government to make major cuts and changes to the unemployment insurance and to root out the so-called abuses in the program. It is interesting to note the kind of response that the Government has received. For instance, The Financial Post says that the reforms missed the target. The Financial Times says: "McDougall's plan may wind up satisfying neither those who want UI reform, nor people demanding expanded benefits for the jobless."

• (0030)

Claude Forget, who argued strongly for reform in his report, expressed amazement that the Government would introduce these changes without an appropriate rationale. In fact, the Minister's changes not only make major cuts to the program; they do nothing whatsoever to correct any of the adverse incentives and inequities that motivated reform to UI in the first place.

Let us look at a few of these changes. First, let us look at the benefit structure. One of the criticisms that has been made of the UI program by those claiming that it encourages instability in the labour market is that one of the identified targets is the regional extended benefits and the variable entrancerequirements.

What has the Minister done? He has expanded the variable interest requirement. At the same time the regions of the country where UI benefits are the most difficult to get and where the economy is the least resilient, they have increased those minimum interest requirements substantially and widened the gap. Therefore, the unemployed worker is caught between a rock and a hard place. They reduced the number of benefits.

The second aspect is the repeater provision. The Minister has claimed seasonal workers will be better off because of the abandonment of the repeater provision. I would just like to enlighten Members on how much the repeater provision will affect unemployed workers. Essentially, with the changes in the benefit schedule, what it means, combined with the withdrawal of the repeater provisions, is that very few people will fall into the repeater category anyway. The benefits are more strict for everybody and the Government has—

Mr. Reid: The penalty is gone?

Mr. Leblanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Yes.

Mr. Reid: Well, the penalty is gone.

Mr. Leblanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): And everybody else faces higher benefits. So it nullifies the advantage that repeaters might have got.

Mr. Reid: Of the parts of the country that need it.

Mr. Leblanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): You do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. Reid: Please enlighten me.

Mr. Leblanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Let us compare the new rules for the fishing communities. Let us compare the application of these new benefit rules to the fishing communities. We know that there is a crisis in the Atlantic fishery motivated by this Government's failure to manage the fishery, the failure to prevent the overfishing by Europeans and a whole litany of problems associated with the Government's management of this fishery. We have a crisis in the fishery and we can expect massive layoffs in this industry. They have already begun.

How does the UI program play in those communities? First, fish plant workers are going to face substantially higher entrance requirements and reduced benefits. However, self-employed fishermen will be treated the same way. They are not affected. What we have are two classes of unemployed, the fish plant workers and the self-employed fishermen.

Mr. Reid: Where is the change?

Mr. Leblanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Over the years there has been substantial objection to providing benefits to self-employed fishermen and self-employed individuals generally. What can we expect from this Government? Are we going to expect that the other self-employed workers like small businessmen, truckers and farmers will now receive unemployment insurance benefits? No.

Mr. Reid: Would you take it away from the fishermen?

Mr. Leblanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): That is what we expect that you will do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There are still 25 minutes to go and there is a full moon outside. Let us enjoy ourselves. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso.

Mr. Leblanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): The last point I would like to make has to do with older workers. The proposed changes will allow workers beyond 65 years of age to contribute to and to draw UI benefits. Several speakers opposite have made mention of this provision as if it was something that came out of the goodness of the Government's heart. However, I want to remind Hon. Members that this is really a very tardy response on the part of the Government to the parliamentary task force report on equality entitled Equality for All. It called for this part of the UI program to be changed in order to bring it into line with the Charter of Rights. Therefore, the Government has taken four years to implement that report.

I would just like to say a bit about UI for older workers in general. As we all know, Canada faces an aging workforce. At the same time we have a country where we will face major adjustments which are going to impact and cause layoffs among many of our older workers. We all know that older workers have a more difficult transition when they have become unemployed than the younger workers.

The Minister's statistics on this, I am sure, will bear this point out. However, the UI protection for someone who has been laid off at 45 or 55 is the same as for someone who has only been employed for 20 weeks. Someone who has worked for 20 years and becomes laid off does not receive any more protection than someone who has only worked for 20 weeks. I ask the question: Is this fair?

I suggest that dealing effectively with this aspect of the program would be a start toward developing a more comprehensive and humane package of changes. It might be a legislative package that would be taken seriously. Instead the Minister has offered us a Bill that gives us the worst of all possible worlds, a major reduction in UI protection for everybody and no improvement in the structure of the program. The changes do not follow from any thought of the role that the UI program should play in Canada's social safety net. What it is is a jerry-built contraption designed simply to save this Government money.

If the Minister is unwilling to withdraw this Bill now, my recommendation is that she let it die a mercifully quiet death over the summer. In the meantime, she should go back to the drawing board with her officials. If she cannot come up with a set of changes that address the real needs of Canadian workers in the 1990s, then she should follow her predecessor's lead and leave well enough alone.

• (0040)

Mr. Al Horning (Okanagan Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that Hon. Members opposite are motivated by the same desires as are we who sit on the Government side, namely, to build a solid economic and skills foundation in this country that will carry Canada with confidence into the 1990s and beyond. I also understand that

Hon. Members need assurance that Canadian men and women are not being left behind, that they are not slipping through our social security safety net as they go about building and adapting to post-industrial economic realities.

However, I would suggest to them, Mr. Speaker, that we are providing a greater service to everyone when we shift our energies from simple income maintenance schemes to training and retraining opportunities that will allow people to participate fully in a thriving economy. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that we can best ensure a strong and competitive future for our country through an investment in human capital, and that is what the channelling of more funds into skill development measures represents.

We cannot disregard the change that is taking place in our economy. We must recognize that complacency in a highly competitive world amounts to a prescription for disaster. We have always insisted, both inside this House and in public fora across the land, that it is folly to underestimate the demands of a constantly changing and interdependent global economy. Indeed, we have always maintained that the failure to preserve a competitive workforce would have dire consequences for Canada's economic prospects.

That is why we have dedicated more dollars to job training and skill enhancement than any government in the history of Canada. The changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act are part of the dedication to training people to take advantage of the opportunities that are at hand.

We have not merely focused our resources and attention on those Canadians blessed with the wit and wisdom to attend our institutions of higher learning. We have also devoted resources so that people faced with the dead-end prospects of welfare can see a way out of their unhappy condition. These are people who, given the right kind of retraining and re-entry assistance, can get back into the job market.

We all know of examples in our own communities, such as my riding of Okanagan Centre, of single mothers anxious to get back into the workforce; of young people, often from disadvantaged backgrounds, who have dropped out of school and now face a bleak and troublesome future; disabled people with obvious intelligence and ability who are held back by the prejudices of an unappreciative job market; visible minorities and native peoples who too often face major barriers in joining the workforce. These are the groups that have been traditionally left by the economic wayside, but these are the people who need some timely and effective intervention to help them become part of the economic mainstream.

The training and retraining funds available through this strategy and in existing programs are designed to help overcome the barriers that exclude people from the labour market. Each of the many components of current programming has targeted groups such as women, social assistance recipients, aboriginal people, visible minorities and people with disabilities. These groups have been identified to ensure that they receive the relevant training that will give them a chance to become part of the permanent labour force.

We are dedicated to helping these target groups gain access to the labour market so they can fully participate in Canadian society. That is a major motivation behind the federal funding of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. We see it as an investment in our future. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if we merely give passive income support, without providing the prospect of joining the post-industrial economy, we are condemning people to remain on the outside of our social and economic system.

In order that Hon. Members appreciate our commitment to the development of a training ethic in Canada, I would like to outline some of the principal features of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. I will begin with the job entry component of CJS, a program that has served as an important means of getting people in our target groups back into the workforce. It provides, for example, on and off-the-job training and work experience for young people having difficulty making the critical transition from school to work.

Program co-ordinators under job entry have included businesses, public and educational institutions, municipal governments and Indian band councils. These co-ordinators are responsible for developing, designing and administering training plans that are designed to meet the specific needs of the job entry participants. They are responsible for identifying and recruiting the participants, selecting suitable training sites, monitoring the participants' progress and paying allowances to the participants.

However, the program is not exclusively designated for young people. The job re-entry component of the CJS has also been used to assist women who have difficulty making the transition from home to work outside the home. Both entry and re-entry provide training for those people who face significant barriers in securing and maintaining employment.

In particular, job entry serves people who have been termed "severely employment disadvantaged". These are people who have had difficulty entering the job market because of functional illiteracy, poor social and communication skills, motivational problems and poor work habits, or people who have been institutionalized for long periods and have difficulties adjusting to the realities of the world of work. Special assistance is provided to people whose disabilities have been a barrier to entering the workforce. Funding may be used to provide services such as sign language interpretation, Braille reader services, or the provision of information on audio cassette.

The various components of the Canadian Jobs Strategy provide help where it is most needed and many of the objectives in the various components of CJS have, in fact, been exceeded. However, the willingness of the provincial and territorial governments to join with the federal Government in using CJS to enhance the employability of social assistance recipients is probably the best testimony to the usefulness of CJS programs. All provinces have entered into CJS agreements with the federal Government since the policy was first introduced. Mr. Speaker, the program is a great asset to my constituency of Okanagan Centre. Considering the results that CJS programs are generating, the eagerness of the provinces to join forces with the federal Government is understandable.

All participants in the various CJS programs are surveyed three months after they leave their project or training course. They are asked whether they found a job and whether the training provided under CJS was relevant to that job. Mr. Speaker, the results of our latest surveys are most encouraging. What is most encouraging is the "impact rate" of the CJS programs. The "impact rate" refers to the percentage of participants who are either employed or involved in further training three months after their involvement with CJS. Job entry was found to have an impact rate of more than 60 per cent and the skill utilization rate, or the percentage of participants using skills acquired during the job entry, was more than 64 per cent.

These CJS programs are already having an impact in the job market and as time goes by I am certain they will have an even greater influence for the good of the participants. The economic prospects for the people targeted under the Canadian Jobs Strategy clearly rest on our ability to train and equip them to enter a highly competitive job market. If we skimp on the investment in human capital that the CJS represents, they will likely never be able to secure lasting employment. The Canadian Jobs Strategy is a human capital investment that we all can be proud of.

It represents a major commitment to job training and retraining of the Canadian workforce. The changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act are designed to direct more resources to such training and retraining measures. Three hundred and fifty million dollars more will be available for training UI recipients for the job market. With the Labour Force Development Strategy, we have dedicated $100 million for entry level skill development to help people get into the labour market, an additional $15 million to an industrial adjustment service, to assist firms and workers facing major changes due to technological reorganizations, an additional $50 million for the community futures program, which is now being implemented in my riding of Okanagan Centre, an additional $50 million for social assistance recipients, and $100 million for displaced older workers, and the list goes on and on. Hon. Members are surely familiar with it.

The new improvements to the Unemployment Insurance Program maintain the existing safety net. They improve special benefits to certain target groups like older workers. Most important, they devote needed resources to the preparation of the unemployed for labour market opportunities they never dreamed possible. In other words, we are providing a foundation for building a strong and competitive future for Canada and my riding of Okanagan Centre.

Currently, older workers have access to EIC programs and services through the Canadian Jobs Strategy and employment services. In November, 1988, the Minister announced new services tailored to older workers. In my riding of Okanagan Centre, we have a lot of older workers. I am proud to be able to tell you about this program at this particular time. These include retraining programs, job-finding clubs and an expanded self-employment incentive option within the community's futures program.

The Labour Market Development Strategy proposes to increase current services to displaced older workers by $100 million. The continuing employment option may receive an additional $40 million to provide up to three years support to employers who hire and retrain displaced workers. Some $50 million will finance skills training and educational upgrading through Section 26 of the UI Act in co-operation with the provinces.

Other avenues of assistance include the IAS, re-employment incentive pilot projects which subsidize early re-employment at lower wage rates, and Labour Canada's POWA program. In addition, older workers will be targeted for self employment and mobility assistance.

Currently, self-employment and entrepreneurship are supported mainly through community futures, a Canadian Jobs Strategy Program. This program is active in more than 200 non-metropolitan communities across Canada. Participating communities have access to business development centres, which provide technical advisory services to small businesses, and which can also fund loans of up to $75,000; and the self-employment incentive option, which gives unemployed persons who are trying to become self-employed $180 a week for up to a year, in lieu of social assistance or unemployment insurance.

Current mobility assistance is also provided through the Canadian Jobs Strategy. Workers who are in danger of losing their jobs or who have already lost their jobs because of technological or market changes can collect up to $5,000 to aid in relocation.

In 1988-89, as of January28, 1989, 4,308 workers received assistance for a total cost of about $6,369,000.

Earlier, the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Fontana) suggested that 2 per cent of UI payments are voluntary quitters without just cause. He implied that this is an insignificant matter. However, the cost to the UI account annually of voluntary quitters without just cause is $1.1 billion. That is 10 per cent of the entire UI account.

The Liberal Party of Canada calls $1.1 billion insignificant, but Members on this side of the House have more respect for the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have a chance to speak, for what time is available to me, against Bill C-21, this Bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Employment and Immigration Department and Commission Act. In fact, this Bill will do great harm to working people in Canada. It is a Bill which is important to the people of Trinity-Spadina in Toronto.

Some people have said that unemployment is low in Toronto. However, that is of course according to Statistics Canada which in fact leave out certain blind spots. They do not count the homeless, of which we have many in Toronto, because they are not at home to be telephoned by the pollsters to find out whether they have been looking for work that week. They do not count many of the people who have given up looking for work there. They do not count many of the under-employed or unemployed housewives who are not qualified to be called unemployed statistically. They do not count those who are seriously underpaid, particularly in the immigrant communities. They do not count the illegal immigrants who of course are punished for being illegal by being underpaid if they are able to work, but who are nevertheless considered very useful by many of the employers in Spadina. They do not count those who are hindered from working, and perhaps even from being counted statistically for lack of the English or French language. They do not count the fact that unemployed are quickly expelled from Trinity—Spadina and from downtown Toronto by the extraordinarily high cost of housing there. It is very difficult for an unemployed person to live in downtown Toronto, even if on unemployment insurance. We have all those people in Trinity—Spadina.

We also a few years ago had the story of a local junk dealer with his horse who used to make a small living for himself and the horse by collecting junk to sell it. The price of food and oats went up faster than the price of junk. He had to start cutting back a few grains a day on the horse's oats until one day he gave him no oats at all.

The next day when he went to the shed and found him lying on the floor, he said: "Look at that ungrateful beast, just when I taught him to live on nothing he goes and dies on me".

That is about the effect of this Tory unemployment insurance scheme. They did not consult the unemployed about it. They did not consult labour about it. They were very careful not to. The Minister of course made that point when she met with the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. They did not dare issue the impact studies which they had done prior to presenting this law because they knew, of course, that it would provide ammunition to people who objected to the law. They did not dare allow the Standing Committee of Labour, Employment and Immigration to do any travelling to visit the people of Canada to discuss the Minister's proposal before the debate in the House, which would have been the normal way to approach it.

In the previous Parliament, they made sure that the Minister violating the Standing Orders of this House gave no comprehensive answer at all to the very thorough report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration evaluating the Forget report.

It is clear that this Government, by refusing to consult the people most directly affected by this Bill, have decided it is not interested in helping the working people of Canada. It is interested in controlling them. That, of course, is the goal of many, many lobbyings by business groups such as the Business Council on National Issues which wanted this Government for years to cut back much more severely on unemployment insurance. In fact, it was cut for political purposes, not for budget purposes. If they wanted to save the deficit, they could have brought down the interest rate. They were rather more interested in increasing the wealth of the rich and in controlling the workers with meaner regulations than have been seen in this country since the Great Depression.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (M. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 67, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the amendment and the main motion now before the House.

[English]

The question is on the amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Allmand) which was negatived on the following division:

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

STRIKING COMMITTEE—ELEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the eleventh report of the Striking Committee. If the House would give its consent, I intend to move concurrence in this report later. We would ask that at that time that we dispense with the usual reading by the Clerk as it is simply membership changes.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCE—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting in both official languages, the first report of the Standing Committee on Finance, in relation to Canada's monetary policy.

[Translation]

The Finance Committee therefore recommends:

1. That the Bank of Canada moderate its monetary policy and not resist downward market pressure on interest rates, whatever the consequences for the value of the Canadian dollar abroad.

2. That the Government consider the advisability of relying less on short-term debt by considerably modifying its debt structure in favour of the longer term, as market conditions permit.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find there is unanimous consent for the following motion to be put immediately and voted upon without debate.

I move:

That immediately upon adoption of the motion to concur in the Supplementary Estimates (A), for the fiscal year ending 1989–90, the Appropriation Bill based thereon shall be introduced; and

That, notwithstanding Standing Order 71, the said Bill may be advanced through two or more stages in the same sitting; and

That, no later than two hours after the introduction of the said Bill, the Speaker shall interrupt any proceedings then under way, and every question necessary to dispose of the then remaining stage or stages of the Bill shall be put forthwith and successively without debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

STRIKING—CONCURRENCE IN ELEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, relating to the consent earlier given by the House, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), that the eleventh report of the Striking Committee presented to the House earlier this day be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have the unanimous consent of the house to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

IMMIGRATION—REFUGEE CLAIMANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty and my pleasure to present a petition duly certified by the Clerk from over 200 people in Trinity—Spadina and other parts of Toronto who are concerned about what may happen to over 120,000 people now in Canada who are in the refugee backlog from previous years because some of them do not have work permits with which to maintain themselves or they want to work. They will all be examined in a way that may be unfair or inadequate on humanitarian considerations, the grounds of humanitarian or compassionate consideration to include the presence in Canada of relatives and the successful establishment of refugee claimants in Canada. They want special consideration for those refugee claimants from war zones, under oppressive Governments and affected by natural disasters.

REQUEST THAT THE GOVERNMENT INCREASE ITS CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE PROVINCES TO FINANCE HEALTH SERVICES AND HOSPITALS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of tabling today, on behalf of many constituents in the riding of Papineau-Saint-Michel, a petition signed with great enthusiasm, at the request of our colleague, the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). The undersigned are asking the Canadian Government to increase payments to the provinces to help finance hospital care, and more specifically, to earmark $4 billion for research on cures for AIDS, cancer and heart disease and to help Canada's hospitals acquire the equipment and instruments they need to alleviate the suffering of their patients.

OPPOSITION TO CERTAIN CHANGES CONCERNING THE UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PROGRAM

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which it is my privilege to present on behalf of the constituents of the riding of Papineau—Saint-Michel, who signed this petition at the invitation of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand). The undersigned believe that the Government of Canada erred in its proposals to make considerable cuts in unemployment insurance benefits, to impose stricter conditions for eligibility and to reduce the benefit period.

The undersigned are particularly incensed that the Canadian Government will stop paying its share of $2.9 billion into the unemployment insurance fund, leaving the program's financing up to workers and their employers.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE ORCHESTRA

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from constituents of Ottawa—Vanier and from many communities within that riding to the effect that they consider the National Arts Centre Orchestra an excellent world-class orchestra which has brought fame to Canada and its capital city.

Whereas the petitioners believe that the NAC orchestra is in imminent danger of being damaged or even destroyed, and whereas they consider the present management to have proved itself to be incompetent and inadequate in artistic matters, the undersigned petition this House that, as a matter of priority, to ensure that the National Arts Centre maintain its orchestra at its current size and present standard of excellence, and ensure that sound cultural credentials be the main criterion for any new appointments to the NAC board of trustees.

LEBANON—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting a petition signed by more than 4,000 people from Montreal, asking the Government to do something about the terrible situation in Lebanon.

The undersigned are worried about their relatives and friends who are still living in Lebanon, in these difficult circumstances.

For Lebanese citizens, life is a daily struggle. A shortage of medical care, electric power and even drinking water makes life very difficult and sometimes intolerable.

The undersigned are asking the Government to bring pressure to bear to stop the useless killing in Lebanon and to demand the immediate withdrawal of all non-Lebanese armed forces and militia from Lebanese territory.

I wish to join the undersigned in asking the Government to show support for the independence of Lebanon and the security of its citizens.

EXTRADITION LAW AMENDMENTS

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to present a petition containing 3,370 signatures certified pursuant to Standing Order 36, which are to be added to some 53,000 already submitted by other Members of this House.

The petitioners behind these thousands of signatures call upon the Government of Canada to revise its extradition laws in order that we may prevent Canada from becoming a haven for escaped convicts, convicted murderers and those charged with a commission of atrocious crimes in the United States.

The petitioners humbly pray that the Government of Canada address the problem immediately.

OFFSHORE HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, considering that today there is a massive rally taking place in British Columbia against the logging of Carmanah Valley, I think it is appropriate that I present this petition on behalf of a number of British Columbians who are also concerned about another environmental issue, namely, the exploration and development of oil and natural gas off the West Coast of Canada. They are calling upon Parliament to do whatever we can to encourage the Government to prohibit any type of exploration for these kinds of activities off the West Coast.

Point of Order—Mr. Heap

VICTIMS OF VIOLENCE

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am very honoured today to rise in the House under Standing Order 36 to present a petition supporting the victims of violence. My petition represents signatures of 1,267 residents from across Canada who call upon the Government for tougher laws under the criminal justice system.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE ORCHESTRA

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add to the already hundreds of people who have pleaded with the House to pay close attention to what is going on with the National Arts Centre orchestra, a world-class orchestra which has brought fame to Canada and its capital city. I would remind Hon. Members that the orchestra was created at the instance of the House and belongs to the people of Canada.

Whereas we believe that the National Arts Centre orchestra is in imminent danger of being damaged or even destroyed, and whereas we consider the present management to have proved itself to be incompetent and inadequate in artistic matters, the undersigned add their names, and ask that as a matter of priority, we ensure that the National Arts Centre maintain its orchestra at its current size and present standard of excellence, and they wish that we ensure that sound cultural credentials be the main criteria for any new appointments to the National Arts Centre board of trustees.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

CLARIFICATION OF STANDING ORDER 57

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I would ask your assistance in clarifying a point concerning what happens at the closing of debate under closure, Standing Order 57, which says that no Member shall rise to speak after one o'clock.

Last night, I rose to speak at about two or three minutes to one with the understanding that under that Standing Order, I would be able to complete my 20 minutes. Some of the rowdies on the Government side were yelling time, time, time. The Speaker caught my eye and was making wind-up motions with his hands, so I asked him how much time have I left. He did not answer me but he spread his hands as much as to say, you know, no more. So foolishly, I sat down rather than force him to stand up and answer my question.

I would like a clarification for myself and for others who may be debating close to the one o'clock hour during closure as to whether it is correct to interpret that as meaning that I could have finished and should have been told by the Speaker that I could finish my 20 minutes.

Mr. Speaker: First, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina (Mr. Heap) for letting the Chair have notice of this matter. I have, as I am sure others have, looked at Hansard and what the Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina relates does not show up in Hansard. However, I have made inquiries this morning and I understand that the question asked by the Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina with respect to whether he had more time or not does come through on the tape.

The point the Hon. Member makes is an important one. I would ask his co-operation to let the Chair consider the matter, and I will report back very quickly with respect to the situation.

I also want to point out to Hon. Members that I thank the Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina for the way he has put his point of order. He is asking for clarification, and I am grateful that he is not putting the Chair in the position of having to contemplate whether or not the vote that followed is invalid. I think I can advise Hon. Members that the vote would have to stand, but I appreciate the way the Hon. Member has put the point of order, and I will come back very shortly with clarification.

STATUTE LAW (SUPERANNUATION) AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-24, an Act to amend certain legislation respecting superannuation and other pensions, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to introduce the second reading of Bill C-24, a Bill that proposes to remove from a number of Public Service superannuation laws, the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act and the Pension Act as it applies to disabled veterans, certain restrictions on survivors' benefits based on age and marital status.

First of all, I would like to point out that the tabling of this Bill at the beginning of the second session of Parliament testifies to the Government's sustained interest in and commitment to the reform of our pension legislation.

[English]

Bill C-24, entitled the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, would amend the superannuation plans for federal public servants, members of the armed forces and the RCMP, certain non-career diplomats and Members of Parliament. It would also amend certain provisions of the Pension Act which apply to disabled veterans. Because the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Merrithew) will speak to the effects of this Bill on veterans' pensions, I will confine my remarks to the changes the Bill proposes for the Public Service plans.

The first change proposed under the Bill would remove the provisions which suspend or terminate a surviving spouse's allowance in the event that the surviving spouse remarries. Removing this provision would confer lifetime entitlement to a survivor's pension on an eligible recipient.

Second, the Bill removes in four of the Public Service plans provisions calling for a reduction in the amount of a surviving spouse's pension when a survivor is 20 or more years younger than the plan member. Third, the Bill removes the provisions which disentitled the child of a deceased plan member to a student allowance if the student is married after reaching age 18.

A fourth change which has very limited application removes the provision under the RCMP Pension Continuation Act and the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act that a son's entitlement ceases at age 18 whereas an unmarried daughter retains benefits until age 21. The Bill provides that the children's benefits continue until age 21 regardless of marital status.

Under these pension plans, some surviving spouses elected, when they remarried, to receive a lump sum instead of having their benefits suspended. Since these benefits will now be reinstated, the lump sums paid will have to be paid back to the pension fund accounts. I can assure Hon. Members that everything will be done to ensure that the reimbursement process is handled with sensitivity and compassion. We would like to see the regulations provide for a reimbursement process similar to that being used now to recover overpayments from other survivors. This means that 10 per cent of the reinstated pension would be collected to pay for the lump sum payment, and there would be no extra charges. However, individuals may opt to increase or decrease this percentage, depending on their financial circumstances.

The Government estimates that about 2,200 surviving spouses will benefit from the elimination of the provision on remarriage which was part of the Public Service plans. The other changes will affect a smaller number of people. There may be as many as 500 surviving spouses receiving reduced benefits on the basis of an age difference of 20 years or more. The Government estimates that the additional benefit payments to be paid annually as a result of these changes will total $11 million.

Mr. Speaker, I believe all Hon. Members will be pleased to hear that the Bill provides, as of the effective date of the legislation, for the reinstatement of suspended or reduced benefits in the case of individuals who were affected by these provisions. I would like to point out to the House that those responsible for operating the pensions plans in question will make every effort to find every individual whose benefits were suspended, reduced or terminated as result of the provisions that the present Bill is supposed to eliminate.

[English]

It is a pleasure to present a Bill of this nature which complements other major pension reforms that the Government has brought into being through substantive amendments to the Pension Benefits Standards Act, the Canada Pension Plan, and the Judges Act.

On a final note, I am aware that there are number of outstanding and important pension issues which need to be addressed in the public service plans. Agreement on some of these matters has already been reached with plan members, while other matters need further consultation. The Government will resume, where it is appropriate, consultations with plan members, their representatives, and pensioners. Public service pension reform is a priority matter with me, and I look forward to returning to the House with a comprehensive pension Bill in the not too distant future.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise this morning to extend my compliments to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) for doing the honourable thing for the widows, widowers, and children of federal pensioners.

After four long years, he has managed to overcome the inertia of his Government and table a Bill that is a first step toward bringing federal pensions in line with the equality provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. At last, the survivors of those who worked for the people of Canada will not have to choose between "living in sin" to continue receiving income they relied on for their retirement years, or remarrying and forgoing a pension to which they are entitled.

In 1985, the report Equality for All recommended that federal superannuation legislation be amended to remove the discriminatory provisions that offended Section 15 of the Charter, on the basis of marital status, gender or age.

Specifically, the report recommended the repeal of provisions terminating pension benefits for a surviving spouse who remarried, for surviving children who married, or reducing pensions to survivors more than 20 years younger than the pensioner, the so-called "sugar daddy" clause. These are the recommendations the Bill before us today finally implements.

In its response to the report in 1986 entitled Towards Equality, the Government stated that it was studying these amendments as part of the public service pension reform process then taking place. In fact, for other pensioners, it did implement those changes. The Canada Pension Plan was amended effective January 1, 1987, and the Pension Benefits Standards Act of December 1985 covering agencies under federal jurisdiction also ensured the continuation of benefits upon remarriage.

Yet when the report on public service pension reform was tabled by the Minister in June 1986, it left the discriminatory features in federal superannuation legislation for future consideration by a yet non-existent pension management board. Future consideration may be acceptable in trading hockey players. It is not acceptable when dealing with people's livelihoods.

The next stage in this saga was the introduction of the infamous Bill C-33 to reform public service pension legislation. It removed guaranteed indexing from federal pension plans, but did nothing to remove glaring inequities based on marital status, gender, and age. That Bill died on the Order Paper two years later as the Government faced an election and the wrath of a quarter of a million public service employees across Canada.

In bringing forward this Bill today for second reading, the Minister is doing more than correcting contraventions of the Charter. He is also saving the taxpayers of Canada a very hefty legal bill. Lest anyone believe that this Bill is motivated by a new spirit of generosity or concern for the deprivation of widows, widowers, and children of federal pensioners, let me draw the attention of the House to the more likely motivation. A court case was launched on April 13 of this year by the Federal Superannuates National Association.

The association has applied to the Federal Court of Canada for a declaration that the termination of pension benefits based on marital status is unconstitutional. In the case of the particular plaintiff, the application seeks reinstatement of the pension, reimbursement of lost pension benefits, costs, and "such further and other relief as the honourable court deems just".

The Minister has moved wisely and quickly to avoid a lengthy legal battle that would be both costly to the Government, embarrassing, and could have had even more far-reaching results than the Bill before the House today. A guarantee of fairness is an essential element of a good pension plan. Bill C-24 is a long awaited and positive step in that direction.

No one can disagree that those changes are necessary, long overdue, and deserve to be passed without delay. After so many years of inaction, surviving family members are finally getting the benefits to which they have been entitled for so long. They are finally being treated with fairness and without discrimination.

Another change which may not elicit as much attention, but is nonetheless welcome, is the removal of gender based language in the Acts. The law will now recognize that pensioners and survivors may be either men or women, that a child may be either a son or a daughter, and should be treated equally regardless. It will recognize that even Senators—heaven forbid—may be survived by a spouse who is not necessarily a widow.

However, I have several concerns I wish to raise which prevent me from heaping too much praise. First, there is no retroactivity provision in the Bill before us. Benefits will be reinstated from the day the Act comes into force with no compensation provisions for the time benefits were suspended. This means that a surviving spouse, regardless of whether he or she was without benefits for 20 months or 20 years, will get no restitution for past injustices.

Conversely, where a lump sum payment was arranged for survivors in lieu of ongoing benefits, that money will have to be entirely repaid either in a lump sum or by regular monthly deductions, again with no compensation for how long the discriminatory effect was experienced.

I have sought and received the assurances of the Minister, and I am pleased to hear them repeated today, that the regulations to be introduced will allow beneficiaries a wide choice of how they can make the repayment, so that it will not be an onerous obligation, eating away at their restored income.

There are other inequities that still need to be addressed, including the status of common law spouses, discrimination based on age at the time of marriage, and different levels of benefits among different groups of pensioners.

Another essential to survivors' benefits pension reform is the one basic, long awaited change, still unfulfilled—an increase in benefits. Survivors of superannuants in Crown corporations have, for several years now, enjoyed an increase in their pensions to 60 per cent while those of federal pensioners still receive only 50 per cent.

This can perhaps be likened to the story of the shoemaker who provides customers with high quality footwear and careful service while the employees work barefoot. It is all too easy to be cynical about this omission and to believe that the Government is holding this basic entitlement back as a bargaining chip for future pension reform measures which may not be as well received.

If the world were a predictable place with all trends, economic and otherwise, following a clearly defined pattern, then pension plans would be relatively simple and non-contentious. However, many of us in this House know all too well that things do not always go the way we expect them to go. Pension plans by their very definition are the means to guaranteeing a secure future for ourselves and our families when we retire.

Given the unpredictability of our world, this process involves a delicate balance of understanding past trends and educated crystal ball gazing, all the while keeping in mind the best interests of all the contributors and remembering that they have bought and paid for the benefits accrued from their investment. Certain guarantees must be built into any plan to ensure it does not become simply a forced saving with no worth-while investment value. Thus I would like to reiterate some basic principles which must be guarded jealously in future pension reform.

First, the terms "indexed" and "pension" can never be far apart in a discussion of pension reform. We in the Official Opposition believe that an unindexed pension is no pension at all. Without indexation the investment value is simply an illusion for contributors.

Second, the federal pension plan must be credited with a rate of return at least comparable to the best managed private pension plan. This is not the case now. Existing rights and benefits must not be forfeited in exchange for equity and return on investment.

Last, the pension fund must be managed jointly by the employer and the contributors. This will ensure the recognition that all parties "own" the fund.

Bill C–42 is a positive first step on the long road to federal pension reform. I commend the employees and the pensioners for their persistence in seeking equity. I also commend my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his unwavering support of their cause, and the Minister for acting before the courts forced it upon him.

However, I must remind the House that this is an area in which the Government has a long way to go towards properly providing for its own employees. The shoemakers are far from taking proper responsibility for their employees and for paying proper attention to the needs, wants, and working conditions of their workers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, first, it is a pleasure to speak in a positive manner from the opposition benches on this Bill. The Government is to be commended for bringing forward these long overdue provisions to ensure that surviving spouses are included.

This long overdue reform restores benefits to about 6,700 surviving spouses of public servants whose benefits have been discontinued upon their remarriage. Reform to survivors' benefits is especially important to women in Canada. Some 60 per cent of women in Canada aged 65 and older live below the poverty line. A majority of these women, approximately 70 per cent, live their final years alone. The reality is that women are most often the recipients of survivor benefits, and women have the most need for legislation to protect those benefits.

In its 1985 report, the parliamentary committee on equality rights recommended the repeal of the provisions of the Canada Pension Plan and federal superannuation plans which required the termination of benefits to surviving spouses upon remarriage, and the reduction of benefits for survivors 20 or more years younger than the deceased contributor. To terminate benefits for survivors who remarried and to reduce benefits for survivors more than 20 years younger than their spouses clearly discriminated on the basis of marital status and age in violation of Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

In its response to its report the Government indicated that these changes would be introduced to the Canada Pension Plan to take effect in January 1987, and that they would be studied in the course of the public service pension reform process. It has been almost four years since the committee on equality rights first tabled its report, and more than a year since the recommended changes were introduced to the Canada Pension Plan. While the reforms contained in Bill C–24 are certainly welcome, we must not forget the frustrating period of delay which preceded the introduction of this Bill.

The frustrations of the delay prompted action. In April of this year the Federal Superannuates National Association, which represents 250,000 Canadians who receive federal pensions, launched a Charter challenge based upon discriminatory provisions of the survivors' benefits legislation. The FSNA should be congratulated for its hard work on behalf of federal superannuates and for launching a challenge which provided an impetus for the legislation now before the House.

It is important to note, however, that in the statement of claim filed with the challenge, the federal superannuates asked not only for reinstatement of survivor benefits which had been terminated upon remarriage but also for full payments of all benefits lost as a result of the disentitlement. I refer specifically to the case in the Federal Court of Canada, Trial Division, Nona Horswill v. Her Majesty The Queen in the right of Canada.

In the statement of claim, specifically paragraph 8(d), judgment for such amount of the annual allowance as the plaintiff has not received as a result of the payment having been suspended is asked for. In other words, in that particular case retroactivity is being asked for. Bill C–24 makes no provision for such retroactivity. If we are to recognize the entitlement of remarried survivors to future benefits following the passage of this legislation, we must also recognize their entitlement to past benefits denied by the present legislation.

It is disappointing that the Bill does not provide retroactive payment of benefits. It is also disappointing that the Bill does not address the other issues of concern to federal superannuates.

Another recommendation of the parliamentary committee on equality rights was to repeal the provisions of federal superannuation plans disentitling surviving spouses to benefits when the marriage took place after the contributor's retirement or, in the case of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Canadian Forces Superannuation Acts, after the contributor reached 60 years of age. Again, these provisions are clearly contrary to the Charter, I would suggest. Where survivor benefits are provided, they should be available regardless of the date of marriage.

Bill C-24 does nothing to adjust the rate of survivor benefits. Amendments to the Pension Benefits Standards Act, which took effect in January 1987, require the provisions of survivor benefits equal to at least 60 per cent of the contributor's retirement benefit. While the Canada Pension Plan was amended to reflect this requirement, federal superannuation plans provided a survivor benefit equal to only 50 per cent of the contributor's retirement pension. It is time that the Government brought federal superannuation plans in to line with the Pensions Benefits Act.

Further, this legislation does not address the plight of common law spouses. Some superannuation plans allow Treasury Board full discretion in awarding a survivor benefit to a common law spouse. This means that a survivor benefit may be denied to a common law spouse of a contributor, even where there is no other person claiming to be the spouse.

As required by the PBSA, superannuation legislation must be amended to recognize common law relationships. Both common law and legal marriage must be fully recognized as giving rise to spousal pension rights, such as the splitting of pension credits and entitlement to survivor benefits.

The splitting of pension credits is another important issue which must be addressed. Ex-service wives are especially disadvantaged by the present discriminatory provisions of the Canadian Forces superannuation plan. Ex-service wives often find themselves in situations of dire poverty even if their ex-spouses agree to full diversion of pension credits. Unlike the PBSA, there are no provisions currently in the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act to enable a splitting of pension credits to take place upon marriage breakdown.

The wives of Royal Canadian Mounted Police personnel may also find themselves without a survival benefit upon the death of their spouse because the original legislation did not provide for survivor benefits.

While a separate fund was established to allow members of the RCMP to contribute to the provisions of the survivor benefits, there is no mechanism to provide survivor benefits to the survivors of RCMP members who either did not pay into the fund or who withdrew their contributions to the fund.

While the Pension Benefits Standards Act covers workers in federally regulated industries throughout Canada, the largest federal employer in the country, the federal Government, is yet exempt from its provisions. The PBSA deals with important pension issues, including portability, vesting, locking in, pension splitting upon divorce, and early retirement. Treasury Board has responsibility to address these issues in any superannuation legislation it introduces.

The PBSA requires that both full-time workers have access to pension plans after two years of employment, and part-time workers with earnings above $9,000 per year. The right of workers to participate in a pension plan is an important right which must be fully protected. However, all workers should be entitled to participate in a pension plan regardless of their annual level of earnings.

The PBSA requires that benefits be vested after two years participation in a pension plan. Government has a responsibility to ensure that employers honour their pension obligations by vesting pension benefits. The vesting provisions of the PBSA are important ones which must be thoroughly applied to public service pensions.

Bill C-33, which died on the Order Paper in the last session of Parliament, was to address some of these issues by establishing a joint pension management board. However, Bill C-33 empowered Treasury Board to override the decision of the board. It also included the abolition of guaranteed indexing for public service pensions.

Reform of public service pensions is long overdue. Reform must address all of these issues through a system of joint management with equal representation from employees, present retirees, and management. However, it must make no attempt to deny or withhold full and guaranteed pension indexing for all present and future public service superannuants. On the whole this Bill before the House is desirable, but in my remarks I have attempted to show some of the matters we should look at in the future.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly not my intention to hold up unduly the debate and timely passage of this Bill today, but I want to thank my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), and indeed all my colleagues for their co-operation in ensuring that a number of spouses of veterans will also benefit from this welcome legislation.

The House will know that pensions are paid to veterans and their survivors as compensation for death and disability incurred during wartime service or as compensation for the time spent as a prisoner of war. As is the custom in a number of programs, remarriage causes surviving spouses to forfeit ongoing pension rights. In the case of our veterans, we are more generous in that we give a one year lump sum to the surviving spouse before the pension is terminated. Of course, this was a special privilege awarded to survivors of that very special group of Canadians, our veterans.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the amendments made to the Pension Act by Bill C-24 will not only help surviving spouses but will also protect the pension rights of children, brothers and sisters under 25 who choose to marry.

[English]

We estimate that an average number of 100 surviving spouses of pension veterans remarry each year. In addition, those who have lost their pension over the years through remarriage will, of course, be eligible to apply for reinstatement. We estimate there are some 4,500 surviving spouses in this position. Once this legislation is passed we will do everything we can to let them know the good news. We estimate the cost to be approximately $28 million annually.

In conclusion, I very much the appreciate the co-operative gesture that has been made by both opposition Parties so that we will have swift passage of this piece of important legislation. It will certainly give great comfort to our veterans and indeed to other retired members of the Public Service.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand from discussions that if you were to ask you would find unanimous consent to have this Bill referred to Committee of the Whole House immediately upon completion of debate, and officials could be invited to appear before the House at that time. Possibly the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier could indicate whether that is his position.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we agree to proceed with all stages of this Bill today, including third reading.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we encourage support of that suggestion. We have a number of questions to put to the Minister, so I think it would be in order to move to Committee of the Whole as soon as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate. As was just said, an Opposition Member does not often have the opportunity to say that legislation under consideration is good, that we support it without any reservation and that for once the Government is presenting legislation that we think corrects existing inequities in the laws and that perhaps it should have made these corrections years ago.

I think this Bill C-24, after too much delay, rectifies some discriminatory sections in the pension legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the allowances now paid to surviving spouses of government pensioners, whether they were Public Service employees, veterans, Members of Parliament, Senators or members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, cease when they remarry; allowances paid to surviving children aged 18 to 25 who are students cease when they (re)marry.

In some cases, the allowances paid to the surviving spouse are reduced if the surviving spouse is more than 20 years younger than the contributor. The Bill before us corrects these inequities. Bill C-24 eliminates these sections. Allowances will continue to be paid to a surviving spouse who remarries. Surviving children aged 18 to 25 who are full-time students in a school or university continue and will continue to receive the allowances to which they are entitled, even if they marry.

And third, the allowances will not be reduced for surviving spouses who are more than 20 years younger than the contributor.

Mr. Speaker, I find it somewhat unfortunate, though, that the Government did not choose to bring in these amendments at the same time that it presented a similar law which we passed in 1987, Bill C-88 for the surviving spouses of judges. As we know, the Bill resulted from a recommendation of the Guthrie Commission in 1986, whose mandate was to study the salaries and benefits of judges.

In this report—and to clarify somewhat the Minister's statement that the Government is making this amendment as part of an overall plan, let us say frankly that constitutional considerations forced the Government to meet its obligations. I just want to quote a paragraph of the Guthrie Report: failure to amend the Judges Act (judges were the issue, but it can apply to federal civil servants) to permit continuation of survivors' benefits upon remarriage may raise serious legal questions involving equality rights. We therefore recommend the repeal of subsections 25(3) and 25(3.1) of the Judges Act.

Mr. Speaker, that is what the Government did. In my opinion, what was good for the judges, as I said in the debate then, is also good for public servants, military people, RCMP officers and all the other servants of the state who I think were considered second class citizens, because nothing was done for them.

That being said, I am for passing this Bill because it will finally bring our laws into line with section 15 (of the Charter) and also satisfy the recommendations of the Parliamentary Committee in Towards Equality, a report published in 1985 on the subject. I will not read all the recommendations, but anyone interested can refer to the document. It contains a whole series of recommendations that the Government bring the pension legislation into line with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which took effect, as we know, in 1985.

I shall come back to that shortly, because I think that the Government was at fault in refusing to make it retroactive to the proclamation of the Charter in 1985.

Mr. Speaker, on examining these pension plans, we see many deficiencies, inconsistencies and rather disturbing features still in the legislation.

I admit that the Minister told us that a more thorough and complete study of pensions would be done and that more comprehensive legislation might be presented in the fall.

• (1200)

[English]

I would like to draw to the attention of Members my preoccupation, and that of some of my colleagues on this side of the House, with certain other laws before us today to be amended in regard to re-marriage and the rights of the children of a married pensioner. There is a section entitled Pension de retraite des Forces canadiennes. I guess it is called The Armed Forces Superannuation Act or some wording of that nature.

[Translation]

Clause 33 contains provisions which I find absolutely unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

In the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act—

[English]

I will read the Superannuation Act concerning military personnel, Section 31(1), because I think this is something that Members will want to correct. Section 31(1) deals with marriage after 60 years of age.

> Notwithstanding anything in this Act, the surviving spouse of a person is not entitled to any annual allowance under this Act if that person was over sixty years of age at the time of his marriage, unless, after that time, that person became or continued to be a contributor.

Another section that bothers me, Section 31(2), says:

> Notwithstanding anything in this Act, except as provided in the regulations a child who was born to or adopted by a person or who became the stepchild of a person at a time when that person was over sixty years of age is not entitled to any annual allowance under this Act, unless, after that time, that person became or continued to be a contributor.

Those two amendments are required to get away from these regressive and absolutely unacceptable Sections which fly in the face of constitutional rights that Canadians have.

Section 15, as we all know, came into force in 1985. Yet today we have a Bill that says that one could discriminate because of age, or marital status, and discriminate even though a person may be 60 years old and have a child from a marriage following retirement or following the death of the eligible contributor. However that child is not entitled to receive any benefits of the pension.

I believe that the Minister should really look at the possibility of amending that Act when it comes before us. There are divorce laws in this country. We have in Ontario the Family Law Reform Act which deals with separation. Any obligation incurred to support the children remains. In the Divorce Act of Canada it is mandatory that both parents contribute to maintenance, according to each person's ability to pay. The obligation cannot be wiped out. Every relevant piece of legislation that I looked up, for every province, has as a prerequisite that the best interest of the child is of paramount concern. As it should be. Why do we allow inequities to stay on the Statutes of Canada? We know that in some provinces there are laws dealing with the Family Law Reform Act, et cetera. Yet inequities are still maintained.

I would like to ask the Minister to look at all these pension laws. I focused on only a few here because I did not have enough time to research the whole spectrum of pension entitlements. But I know that when the Government came before the House in 1985 with amendments to the Pension Benefits Standards Act, they corrected all those things for Crown corporations. It made sure that the 60 per cent entitlement to pensions for the spouse was included. We still do not have that for the Public Service, the RCMP or the Armed Forces, et cetera.

I am saying to the Government, if we all accept that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms came into force in 1985, why not allow retroactivity for those who were hurt, possibly severely, through no fault of their own, by a lack of concern on the part of the employer? Why do we not allow rectroactivity to at least start with the adoption of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in 1985. It would not seem to me to be very costly, to be somewhat considerate and understanding of the need to go back and provide retroactivity.

I have correspondence from the Superannuation Association. I have letters that I could read to the House concerning people who have lived through these difficult situations. For example, I have a letter here from a pensioner who tells me that if he lived common law, he would have been able to transfer his entitlement to his surviving spouse. However if he marries, no, he is not entitled to it. It does not make any sense. So let us look at these things and make sure that we deal with them in the Fall.

I just want to touch on one last item. Because of the aging population of Canadians, a lot of people in Canada have federal pensions. They will go to their lawyer and the lawyer will say, "Give me power of attorney over your pension in case you fall sick, or need some assistance, or need to have some expenditures looked after while you are indisposed." You cannot do that in this country. A lawyer cannot have a power of attorney over a federal pensioner's pension. There are arguments for and against, but I think we need to have a debate in this House because our population is aging and we need to look at the rights of these people. Perhaps we should have less bureaucracy and more understanding as to what we can allow in terms of having pensioners give power of attorney to their lawyers, such lawyers as they trust and who would operate under professional standards.

Having said all that, I congratulate the Government for its effort on the question of Bill C–24, wanting to correct some anomalies and some inequities. There are still lots of things to do. We have done a bit. We have gone a short way down the road toward parity, equity and justice, but we have a long way to go yet on many of these Bills before we reach equity and justice for all Canadians who receive pensions from the federal Government.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask you to now seek the unanimous consent of the House to move to Committee of the Whole and permit officials to be present so that we can now proceed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I just want to make a correction. In my speech I said that the Charter of Rights came into effect in 1985. I meant that Section 15 of the Charter of Rights was proclaimed or came into effect on April 15, 1985. I think I may have over-stretched it.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-24, an Act to amend certain legislation respecting superannuation and other pensions.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On Clause 3—

Mr. Gauthier: Clauses 3 and 4 are the two operative clauses of the Bill. Both of them, if I am not mistaken, do away with the discrimination under Section 15. Am I right?

Mr. Crosby: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Not to mislead the Member, if you put all the clauses together, the net result is that the prohibition with respect to remarriage is eliminated and the consequential provisions are removed so that in the result the prohibition is terminated. And this is repeated throughout the Bill with respect to the other legislation involved.

Clauses 3 to 22 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 23—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary why in all our legislation, including the retiring allowances for Members of Parliament and defence services and Canadian Forces pensions, the provision dealing with the rights of children still contains the following:

> is eighteen or more years of age but less than twenty-five years of age and is in full-time attendance at a school—

In Clause 23, we see that—

[English]

—Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Contribution Act, we have changed it. It is 21 years of age or more for the RCMP but less than 25 years. Why 21 years for RCMP and 18 for all the others?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if I can answer the question in exact terms. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Continuation Act, to which the provision relates, is an Act of very limited application and it goes back in time. I cannot account for all the cases involved, but basically it applies to RCMP personnel who were recruited before 1949. My mathematics are not that great, but if you work it out from there I think you come up with the answer, and if you don't, let me know.

Mr. Gauthier: I am going to let him know that I have not come up with the answer yet. Maybe he is a better calculator than I am. Please tell me the answer. Why is it different for them than for the others?

Mr. Crosby: It is simply that it goes back to 1949, the provision was in force in 1949 and there is no particular reason to change the age provision. It is proper to say that it would not apply to anyone. I do not know if it could even in theory.

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Chairman, I would like to know why a benefit continues for a child who has been in university continuously since the death of a parent, but not to someone who goes back to school six months hence or a year hence. Did the Government look at that provision at all and consider changes to it or is it part of what will be considered in future reform?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Chairman, the question is valid. The policy was simply intended to gather in as many as possible, bearing in mind the balance of the grant of rights, or restoration of rights if you prefer, in relation to the expenditure that would accumulate. The group that is in university at present, in a sense, can be identified and targeted. If we were to permit persons to return to university we would have a group of indefinite number which might cause people to take a course of action which they are not now pursuing.

I recognize that that may well be a valid consideration but it will have to await a broader-based reform of the pension law when more investigation is available and more specific documentation of the potential liability can be ascertained.

• (1220)

Mrs. Catterall: May I have further clarification Mr. Chairman? As I read this section, in fact we may have two surviving children in university, one of which was out of university perhaps to support the family while the parent was in a last illness, and is now back in university. That child is ineligible for a pension, but another child who never took that year away and went straight to university from high school is eligible. Is that the case?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Chairman, my understanding is yes, that situation could arise. I have already indicated that it is a matter being considered and would be part of a further pension revision. At the present time, the President of the Treasury Board and the Government are simply trying to extend the benefits as far as they can, knowing the obligation which might be incurred. We appreciate the Member's attention and I am sure it will be noted for the future revisions.

Clauses 23 to 29 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 30—

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Chairman, my question probably should have been posed on an earlier Clause. Could the Parliamentary Secretary tell me why there was no particular action taken, back in 1984, and again in 1987, when we had a commitment from the Solicitor General and the President of the Treasury Board that Canadian Correctional workers would be allowed to retire after 25 years of service. It was a bit of housekeeping. It was not in Bill C-33. Consequently, it was going to be brought in as an amendment to Bill C-33 but we know what happened to Bill C-33. It would have fit in this kind of an Act. I just wonder why it is not in there, particularly.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the President of the Treasury Board and the Government would want me to indicate that the purpose of the Bill now before us is simply to correct what is now regarded as unfairness in past legislation with respect to the disqualification because of remarriage. While it is amending legislation, it is only intended to deal with that specific situation. The concerns of the Member are noted.

I understand the specific concern which he raises about prison workers and members of the Correctional Service. It will be taken into account in future proposals for pension reform. The Government and the President of the Treasury Board is certainly aware of the commitment mentioned by the Member for Saskatoon—Humboldt. It is now part of the record, so there is another reminder on record.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 31 agreed to.

On Clause 32—

Mr. Gauthier: On this question of recovery of lump sums pursuant to appeal provisions, if I understand the Clause:

> A spouse or other person was paid an amount as a final payment pursuant to Section 59—before the coming into force of this section, the Commission may retain that amount by way of deduction from any subsequent payments on account—

Any lump sum amount paid to a person as a settlement, because of his or her ineligibility to receive the spouses' allowance because of the remarriage, does that mean that that amount itself will have to be collected in total, that is, all of it, or it will be spread over a period of years?

Could you tell me if the repayment of the sums of money would be based on an actuarial formula, or will it be strictly pay-up and that's it. Because, if it is pay-up, whatever one got eight or nine years ago, I am sure a lot of those people would not be able to cope with it. I am just asking the Parliamentary Secretary what kind of message he will give these people to satisfy, I would think, an element of justice and equity?

Mr. Crosby: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier's question relates to the Pension Act which deals of course with veterans. The Minister of Veterans Affairs will address that particular concern.

In broader terms, as it relates to the restoration of other pension benefits in the other legislation, there will be a provision for part repayment. That is to say, the repayment of the amount previously received will be spread over a timeframe and that will be the subject of regulations or ministerial directive.

The intention is that the amount that was paid out will be repaid, interest free, at no extra cost to the recipient of the pension benefits over a timeframe. I think the timeframe will be extended so that it will not be a great burden.

I asked the officials before to give us an average, and I understand that the average benefit that will be paid out on it on an annual basis will approximate $4,900. The average payments which will be required will be, on average, $800, just to give you a ratio of the benefits to be received.

Sorry, I made a mistake. The benefits on average to be received are in the nature of $4,900 annually. The repayments to be retained, that is to say, previously paid out and now recovered, will be in the area of $1,800 on average. There will be no interest. You can see from that that it is a pretty good deal.

Mr. Gauthier: I just want to be reassured. Will it be based on an actuarial form? In other words, if the person is 75 years old, will you be requiring him or her to pay more quickly than someone who would be 62 years of age or 63 years of age, whose life expectancy and capacity to meet and cope with that may be longer. Will there be any consideration given to that?

Mr. Merrithew: Perhaps I could comment on this. This refers essentially to the benefits for the veterans and their survivors. One should understand that veterans have always had preferential treatment under the Pension Act. While the benefits to surviving spouses would cease immediately, with many of our other pension programs, veterans are given a lump sum payment for the following year. I realize this calls for repayment of that.

I think your question is, will it be demanded of them in one lump sum payment. No. It will be done according to the survivor's status. As you probably know, the Canadian Pension Commission deals with that and the applications go through them. They have always been very caring, very compassionate and very understanding of the personal circumstances of both the veterans and their survivors. Under no circumstances, would undue hardship be impacted upon the survivor.

Mrs. Catterall: I have two questions. One is very directly on the last point. My understanding was that, in fact, that pensioners would not have to rely on anybody's compassion or solicitude for their well-being, but that they would have the option as to how they chose to make these repayments beyond a certain minimum. Could I have a clarification on that?

Mr. Merrithew: As I mentioned before, the commission has always dealt directly with the pensioner. They report to this House through me. They are independent. They have always had the care and compassion for the circumstances of the recipient. They do have the administrative discretion to make arrangements which are in the best interests of the survivor. If there has been an overpayment, it is the duty of the Crown to try to recover to what extent it can. We have not had any great number of complaints of the commission being unduly harsh on the repayment schedule required.

Mr. Butland: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure if this is the appropriate timing of this question, but I have been approached by several public servants in the community of Sault Ste. Marie with regard to whether there has been any consideration at all of some window in time, as in other professions, to offer some incentive for those to take an early retirement, given the fact that there has been reduction in the Public Service in the past. I understand that trend will continue in the future. For instance, for someone at age 54 with 27 years service, the penalty is 15 per cent. Has there been any consideration at all to opening this window of time without such an onerous penalty?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the Member's concern. It is beyond the immediate scope of this Bill which as I have said and repeat deals with the restoration of rights lost as a result of remarriage.

I may respond in two ways: first, the President of the Treasury Board and the Government are well aware of similar programs utilized in other provinces and places. One of the views that has been expressed and bears merit is that the federal provisions are already fairly generous. They permit retirement at age 55 with 30 years service. I can speak from experience that 55 years of age is pretty young to retire. I hope that it is, otherwise I would be out of here. It will be looked at in terms of a broad pension reform. Early retirement certainly has its merits, and I am sure it will be given consideration.

Mrs. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I have a concern that I would like to express on behalf of one of my constituents who is a widow of a war veteran. She understood about a year and a half ago that she would be able to remarry and still claim her widow's pension. She remarried without notifying Veterans Affairs. She has now found out from Veterans Affairs that she was receiving payments "illegally". This woman of strong moral value and conviction had a hard time remarrying. Now she is going to divorce because she and her second husband cannot afford to survive without her receiving this veteran's pension.

Will the Minister review her case and assure her that the Department will not claim the payments that she received which unknown to herself were considered "illegal"? I find this such a difficult case to deal with that I think it deserves compassion.

Mr. Merrithew: I am not sure whether I completely understand the point made, Mr. Chairman. I understand the widow married and is now going to divorce and I suspect to continue living common law.

Mrs. Stewart: I don't know.

Mr. Merrithew: Nobody knows. Uniquely in veterans' pensions if the second marriage failed there was always a provision whereby the surviving spouse could reapply for the survivor's benefits, so she will be covered at any rate. If I can have more details I will be glad to give a very specific answer.

Mrs. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Minister. I will forward information to him about this case and hope that he will deal with it compassionately.

Clauses 32 and 33 agreed to.

[English]

On Clause 34—Resumption of allowances to spouses

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions perhaps dealing with the matter of retroactivity of these clauses.

As I noted in my speech there was no provision for retroactivity or retroactive payments to those who have remarried up until now and have had to forgo their payments under the survivor pension benefits. Is the Government planning to deal with the question of retroactivity? If so, when is it planning to deal with it?

Will the Government be filing a statement of defence in the action to which I have referred, that of Nona Horswill vs. Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Canada, dealing specifically with Clause 8(d) with reference to the retroactivity? Has the Government calculated the cost of such a retroactivity of payment provision in looking at this and making a decision?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Chairman, let me begin to answer the Member by saying that with respect to the cases now before the courts, I think the Government's position is that it would be inappropriate to make any comment at all that would have any effect whatever on those cases. I realize the Member is concerned about the eventual outcome of them, but it is not something with which we can deal.

I want to point out to the Hon. Member first of all that in the past cases where remarriage benefits were reinstated there were no retroactive payments. That would be under the Judges Act and the Canada Pension Plan legislation. I would have to say that there has almost been a precedent established that retroactive payments are not made. Governments are always looking at cases, but the apparent view is that retroactive payments are not appropriate in these situations, both for cost reasons and just simply in terms of the balance of rights.

I want to take the opportunity to mention, because the Hon. Member mentioned the retroactive aspect, that there are cases where payment has been made to a recipient requiring repayment of the basic method of recovering, that is, a minimum of 10 per cent of the monthly pension. In cases where that imposed a hardship, a further reduction of 5 per cent would be considered. I want that to be on record.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Chairman, first, I am afraid I cannot accept the answer with respect to the court case. I have not asked for comment on the court case. What I have asked specifically, I believe as a lawyer, can be answered.

Does the Government intend to file a statement of defence? I do not think that jeopardizes the court case or any part of it and, if the Government does, when?

Second, with reference to the problem that was mentioned and with which he has just dealt, it seems to me that there are discretionary abilities within Departments to forgive in the case of hardship. I know of some personally. I dealt with four clients in the past that have been forgiven based on hardship. Perhaps the Minister might have a look at that.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Chairman, I think the Minister of Veterans Affairs may want to deal with the hardship aspect. I understand that a statement has been filed in the case to which the Member refers.

All I can do is repeat myself and say that is not really part of our consideration. I think the Member should know that there will be other opportunities to raise the problems with respect to that case. I am not attempting to cut the Member off at all. I am just saying that I do not really have the resources to answer to that case. I understand that a statement of defence has been filed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I would like to get some clarification on the numbers. How many people are affected or could be affected? What is the amount of money anticipated? Finally, with regard to surviving spouses, in a press release put out by the Minister he said that there are approximately 6,700 surviving spouses covered by the remarriage provisions of the eight Acts.

Could the Parliamentary Secretary confirm that indeed that is the number and what is the total output of funds necessary to correct this inequity?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Chairman, I will have to organize myself to get all these statistics. I am not good at these acronyms and whatnot. I know in broad cost terms that $11 million is the estimated cost to reinstate benefits under the legislation, other than the pension benefits to veterans. The cost of restoration with respect to pension benefits to veterans is $28 million, and the Minister may wish to confirm that.

• (1240)

Regarding the total numbers of people who may be involved in this process, for veterans it is 4,500 and those under all the other legislation involved, and I think the Hon. Member knows the specific plans, the figure is 2,200, so it is a total of 6,700 persons involved.

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Chairman, this relates to provisions in all Acts affected by the Bill, but I would appreciate some rationale for why, if the provisions are not retroactive at least to the time of the coming into effect of Section 15 in the Charter, there is full collection back of a lump sum that was intended to replace benefits to which the person is now entitled and to which, under the Charter, they have theoretically always been entitled.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not want to quarrel with the Hon. Member. She may put on record whatever arguments she thinks are fair and just, but I would put that in the category of double recovery. If the spouse of a pensioner were to receive a lump sum payment at the time of remarriage to compensate for loss of pension benefits and then were to receive those pension benefits, the spouse would be getting two benefits and some would regard that as double recovery.

Others would say that that is not double recovery because the spouse missed pension benefits for a time, but the decision has been taken, in continuing prospectively pension benefits to persons who have remarried, to offset that with the collection of the past payment. It is as simple as that.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 34 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 35 and 36 agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Chairman, before you rise to report the Bill, I think all Hon. Members would want me to thank the officials who assisted me and through me them: Ms. Sharon Hamilton of the Treasury Board and Mr. David Steele of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Bill reported.

Mr. de Cotret moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. de Cotret moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I just want to put on record the fact that in the pension structure this Government and the previous Government made a commitment to the correction workers of Canada for a change. This change has been put off since 1984 or in fact since 1977. I hope that the Government will make a commitment to deal with the concerns of correctional workers.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) made that commitment on March 23, 1987. I hope that the commitment will be honoured.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

MUSEUMS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, May 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Masse that Bill C–12, an Act respecting museums, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak in favour of Bill C–12 which restructures the national museums of Canada into four autonomous arm's length corporations.

Museums are important to our society. They are vital institutions which remind us of where our society has come from and which shed light on where we are going. They are our collective memory with a broad appeal that most do not realize.

As the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) stated just two weeks ago at the parliamentary committee, more people attend museums in Canada than professional sporting events. He stated that 20 million Canadians visit museums. Unfortunately, he is a bit behind in his figures.

According to Statistics Canada many more visit our museums and related institutions. In fact, there are over 90 million visitors each year. Even the Minister's predecessor, Flora MacDonald, was aware of this figure when she spoke just a year ago at the Cultural Tourism Conference in Montreal.

Museums are more than just statistics and people going through turn–stiles. The real impact is on our appreciation and awareness of our society as a multicultural society. As we enter free trade with the United States, we need more than ever institutions which reinforce our sense of place, being and community. That is the unique role of museums. I know this because I have had the opportunity to work in this field. In the mid–1970s, I worked on Canada's Discovery Train, a travelling museum which demonstrated our rich and diverse cultures.

Today, museums in this critical period of our history face enormous challenges to serve a diverse, complex and growing audience. I have a vision of the museum world of the year 2000 which is vibrant, rich and accessible to a broad public, not a limited few.

There has never been a more significant need for museums and for the services they provide, from partnerships with public schools to outreach, to non–traditional museum goers, and to the incredible opportunities to develop exhibitions, collections and educational programs that reflect the depth and variety of our cultural experiences. We have the chance to see museums greatly enrich our society in ways never before experienced.

This is the challenge facing us, both in restructuring the federal museums through this Bill and also in implementing a new federal museums policy to which the Government has committed itself. This a time of change and it is time to assist these important institutions in their service to our society.

• (1250)

As Dr. Louis Lemieux, former Director of the National Museum of Natural Sciences in Ottawa stated: "Museums, as traditionally defined as institutions devoted to the procurement, care, and display of objects of lasting interest of value, are outdated and inadequate."

Today, we have the opportunity to permit our museums to grow and to serve a wider public, as well as to preserve and study our collections. Bill C–12, and the proposals for a new museums policy will encourage growth.

The first museum in the world was a government institution. It was part of the palace of King Ptolemy in Alexandria which, in the 3rd century B.C., housed the library of Alexander the Great. It was called by the Greek term museion or temple of the muses and was the world's chief centre for learning in its day.

In the centuries that have elapsed since the founding of the Museum of Alexandria, the concepts of what a great museum should be and what it should do have undergone many changes. Fundamentally, a museum is still an institution, not only for collecting and preserving objects, but also for the study of them and the use of them for education and enjoyment.

Almost 1,200 years after the Alexandria Museum was destroyed by war, the National Museum of Canada had its beginnings. In 1842 the geological survey of Canada was established in Montreal and grew into our National Museum in Ottawa. Incidentally, the New Brunswick Museum in Saint John was started in the same year in the Mechanics Institute. From those early starts, museums in Canada have grown steadily so that we virtually now have museums in every community in the country. There are now almost 2,000 museums and related institutions in Canada.

The national museums had precarious beginnings. Indeed, their whole history has been marginal. They have been switched among government Departments, placed in basements or ill-suited buildings, and even in condemned buildings.

In 1981 the then Prime Minister Trudeau announced that proud new homes would be built for two of our national museums, the National Gallery and the Canadian Museum of Civilization. These are the first properly designed homes for these institutions in their histories. For the first time these museums will receive professionally acceptable storage facilities for their multi-million dollar collections and will also be properly displayed. The new home for the National Aviation Museum is also a reality.

Sadly the other national collections remain in inadequate facilities. The National Museum of Science and Technology is in an old bakery, and the Museum of Natural Science is relegated to half of the Victoria Memorial Building, as well as 13 other locations throughout the National Capital Region. The War Museum has actually lost 40,000 square feet of space, and its needs are legendary.

Bill C-12 will not solve those problems, but it will start a process of greater direct control over the management of these important treasures. It will give them far more independence from government, will reduce bureaucracies, and will permit them to retain the funds that they raise. These directions are consistent with many studies, including the task force led by Clement Richard and William Withrow. As well, the Canadian Museums Association held a series of regional meetings in 15 locations which concurred with the Richard-Withrow recommendations. Further, the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture supported those recommendations in its unanimous report of January 1987.

The restructuring of the National Museums by Bill C-12 is essentially a housekeeping Bill, but it will result in more efficient operations in their own destiny and guided by their own missions. I am pleased to see the mandates of the museums articulated in this legislation.

However, I am disappointed that the Government has not yet moved on the other half of reforming museums policy for the rest of the country. The National Museums are all located in Ottawa. I firmly believe the Government has a role in assisting the other museums across Canada. In 1987 the former Minister, Flora MacDonald, pledged that a new policy would be developed. Extensive and extended consultations were held, but the Government has not yet introduced this broader policy, nor has it honoured its commitment to even increase funding by some $2 million saved from the Mobile Exhibits Program.

The grants program for museums has remained static since 1972. The Museum Assistance Program remains unchanged, even for inflation, at $8.5 million. I cannot think of a more neglected yet deserving program. These funds are returned to government via taxes from the economic stimulation created by millions of visitors who attend museums each year in Canada. That is a great return on our investment, but one that I believe can be improved even more.

Our museums, art galleries, historic sites, and science centres contain millions of objects, and for every object there is a fascinating story. We need to tell these stories to more people. Because budgets are so tight in museums, little to no money is available for proper marketing. More money needs to be made available. Other government agencies should become involved such as tourism and the CBC. The rationale for having culture located within the Department of Communications is to see more cultural programming on television, in films, etc.

When was the last time someone saw a show about our museums? On Tuesday, officials of the National Gallery told the parliamentary committee that they approached the CBC to do a show on the gallery at the time of its opening last spring. The CBC declined.

Canada's heritage is not all in Ottawa. It is located in every part of this country. We need a new vision and a new concept so that our national heritage abounds in all museum collections. The artefacts of the Campbell River Museum in British Columbia and of the Yarmouth Firefighters' Museum in Nova Scotia are part of our national patrimony, as are the great collections in the National Gallery.

Finally, I would like to salute the thousands of volunteers across Canada who contribute their time and energy to preserving our great resources of cultural heritage. I make one last plea for greater marketing support to promote these museums across Canada. I believe that the Government is missing an even greater return on this existing investment because of its attitude toward its lack of marketing support.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Leader of the Government in the House of Commons.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I believe you will find unanimous consent for us to continue past one o'clock, through the hour normally reserved for the lunch period, in order to allow us to complete second reading of Bill C–12, the museums Bill, and to complete report and third reading stages of Bill C–6, the radio Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On debate, the Hon. Member for Mission—Coquitlam.

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, today, museums are cutting back on people in the same manner as many other areas of our society. Museums are about our culture and about our achievements. People should be very much a part of our museums. Without people, museums are very much a graveyard of our society. It takes people to bring museums alive. They should be vibrant places of our culture, our history, and places that look to our future.

Exhibits should not only be displays, especially in the areas of science and technology. Items that have been used by generations of Canadians or by generations of peoples around the world should be displayed in such a manner that we can feel them, touch them, and try them, particularly with our new technology. Machines are not made to be looked at. Machines are made to be used and to be handled. Our museums need to reflect those human touches, and for that we need funding and a commitment to the human element in our society.

Many museums remove the human element by having free days on a Thursday or a Tuesday, without consultation with the community or without consideration of when people work and when people are free to attend museums. Therefore, museums are further restricted particularly to those people who cannot afford to go to a museum and would like to have their children exposed to our culture. Those people need access. Museums have to reflect and consult with the community in terms of accessibility, including those museums located in Ottawa. There is a movement in France which is trying to put people back into museums. It is one which we should be looking at in Canada and trying to emulate.

Free trade has further attacked our culture and our industries. With them already under attack and with museums being a reflection of our culture, then are not museums under attack, too? Some museums are just for a tiny minority of people. They really are not a great reflection of our culture. For example, many museums do not have displays celebrating the labour movement in Canada, which movement helped to make the country what it is today.

Many museums do not have displays which reflect the ethnocultural nature of Canada. Many museums do not have displays which celebrate the environment.

Our museums need to reflect the true strata of Canada, its peoples, the environment and the assets which make Canada great.

In an independent study of the museums' workforce it was found that there are two major sources of inequality that are closely interdependent in the museums. It comes down to who staffs our museums. Museums are gender–based and institutionalized–based organizations with great differentiations in the labour force. Simply put, women make substantially less money working for museums than do men. We have checked and found this to be true even after the major alternate explanations of income differences, controls and all of the other factors are taken into account. In other words, significant income differences remain between the sexes even after education and experience levels are held constant.

Although there are virtually identical over–all labour force participation rates for men and women, over 70 per cent of employees in the relatively disadvantaged and smaller institutions are women. When the Government moved to dismantle or reorganize the largest, most advantaged museums, we learned that those women who had achieved senior positions were, in many cases, shut out of significant positions in the new structure. New Democrats have raised concerns about equality in our cultural institutions for many years. Our national museums have a very poor record, a record which may now indeed be improving but at a disappointingly slow pace.

If I can use the analogy that museums reflect our history, surely their management practices should reflect our present and our future.

The new Museum of Civilization is geared up with many new staff for its opening later this summer. Roughly one-half of its employees are women. However, only four of the 15 top jobs are held by women. It is very hard to believe that there are only four women in Canada who have the qualifications to aspire to and expect to sit in those top jobs. In the same museum we find women in the traditional roles, the pink collar ghetto, but only 26 per cent of the scientific and professional category with average earnings in excess of $35,000 are women. Some 86 per cent of the administrative support jobs with an average salary hovering around $20,000 are filled by women. I think it is absolutely vital that we consider these figures and think about what our policies should be, not only for museums but when it comes to funding these organizations.

It is important that I include here thanks to the museum for so promptly providing me with these figures.

I invite the Government to review these concerns regarding museums and to report to the legislative committee studying this Bill on its plans for remedy.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-12 before the House today arises from a recommendation made by the task force responsible for examining federal museum policy, a committee chaired by Clément Richard and William Withrow.

I had the honour and the privilege of knowing the director, the former Secretary General of the Corporation, Mr. Léo Dorais, who at the time objected very strongly to this recommendation, claiming that administrative costs were twice as high as they would be if the task were delegated to the four main museums.

Mr. Dorais made his mark with his very substantial contribution to the National Museums of Canada as their administrator. Mr. Dorais has served Canada and the National Museums well.

We have now reached a new phase.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak in this debate because of the very strong connection with the riding I represent, Ottawa—Vanier. As you know, the National Gallery of Canada is in Ottawa—Vanier. I also have the honour and the privilege of representing several other museums that come under either the National Museum of Natural Sciences or the Canadian Museum of Civilization, and we are very proud of them.

Mr. Speaker, although I am in favour of independent museums, I am also concerned about what will happen to language equality in those museums. It is an issue I certainly want to raise today, and I take this opportunity, since the Minister is here, to ask him once more to give us the assurance that the policies on language of service and language of work will be maintained, even if the museums are decentralized and even if each museum becomes an autonomous entity.

Mr. Speaker, official languages have never been a priority for our museums. A special report submitted by the Commissioner of Official Languages shows that French takes second place in active offers of service. In fact, according to the Commissioner's report, security staff was unilingual and French information material was inadequate. In some museums, publications in French were more expensive, sometimes as much as twice or three times the price of the same publication in English.

As far as language of work is concerned, the situation is even worse. In fact, there is no option. The report shows that English is the only language of work and that in professional circles, Francophones have to draft their reports in English to be understood by their superiors.

The National Museums Corporation took a step in the right direction by signing an agreement with Treasury Board. Now we must make sure the agreement continues to be applied in each museum.

Only the Secretary General, Mr. Edwards, was accountable to Treasury Board for attaining federal objectives for official languages in the museums.

However, section 4 of the Memorandum of Agreement, signed by the Museums and Treasury Board with all the requisite flourishes, provides, and I quote:

> If the National Museums of Canada Corporation is dismantled while the Memorandum is in effect, museum directors have the option of maintaining the Memorandum of Agreement, amending it through negotiations or signing a new agreement with Treasury Board.

Mr. Speaker, I must admit this is of special interest to me as the official languages spokesman for my party, and I am looking forward to seeing the results of these negotiations if and when they take place. We intend to monitor negotiations in this area and make sure that the decentralized museums, if we can use that term, implement language policies that are acceptable to all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the other topic which is of some interest to me is the question of marketing these museums.

As Hon. Members would know, the national museums are a basic facet of our community's cultural development because they are the repository of the collective wealth of our people. Whether we talk about founding nations, native people or New Canadians, our museums mirror the history from which future generations will draw inspiration. This is why they ought to accommodate as many visitors as possible and display the exhibits likely to attract them.

Last December 23 I wrote to the National Museums of Canada Secretary–General to suggest that a tourist passport be issued, something likely to interest a great many visitors because it would open the doors to all museums without the need to pay an entrance fee. It might also enable NMC management to put some of the less popular museums on a sounder financial footing and, I am sure, make museum tours somewhat less expensive for visiting families.

My contention was that lower entrance fees through a tourist passport giving access to all museums might be implemented. I was glad to learn that the secretary responded by saying that the matter would be considered!

Just recently I got a letter from the head of the National Capital Commission in which she stated that she had endorsed the suggestion and that a tourist passport would be available to gain access to museums and other National Capital Region institutions, and perhaps to historic sites and other points of interest to visitors.

[English]

Our museums are sometimes our best kept secrets. When I refer to the marketing principle, I refer to a method by which our museums are promoted for Canadians to visit and appreciate. While we welcome the revamping of the national museums structure, we need to ensure that more Canadians are aware of their existence. There should be a good marketing plan to encourage tourism by making the airlines, railway and the media more interested in promoting the great contribution that our Canadian museums can make.

One year ago the Government issued a discussion paper on policy for all museums. This document described the status of museums across Canada in the dawning of the 21st century, and encouraged all interested parties to hold relevant discussions on the future of museological institutions. However, that policy lies dormant in the Department of Communications.

This new policy is needed to revitalize the non–federal museums across Canada, permitting more public programs, exhibitions of Canada's heritage and culture, and conservation of collections. It will make a greater appreciation of Canadian culture available to all regions of our land.

The Government should address this policy of marketing very soon. Our national museums are a source of Canadian heritage, culture and pride. They are a visitor's delight and they enrich our national capital. They make Canadians proud of the capital.

John Edwards, the secretary–general of National Museums of Canada did a good job and I congratulate him on his work in restructuring the museums. I hope Mr. Edwards goes on to his just rewards and I wish him continued success in his career, but I hope that every museum, independent as it will be, will make sure that Canadians, be they French or English, receive adequate service in their language on an active basis. It should be a policy of all museums to offer that service on an active basis.

Second, the Government must address the question of marketing. I hope it sees fit to introduce a good policy on marketing that will make our museums much more interesting and encourage many more Canadians to see them.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to make a few comments on this Bill. I am pleased also that the Minister is in the House and I hope he will take note of the comments made by Members in the House today about the importance of the museums they have in their ridings as well as the museums here in Ottawa.

Our Party supports in principle the legislation which would provide the museums with a mandate that makes them more independent.

As a Member from British Columbia, I have lived quite far from the nation's capital. Since coming to Ottawa I have had a chance to tour a couple of the museums. Of course, I look forward to the opening of the new museum next week.

I took my mother through the new art gallery and, while she did not think all of it was art, we all have open minds about what is art and appreciate the importance of cultural development in this country through our museums.

I want to expand somewhat on the comments about museum policy made by my colleague, the Member for Mission—Coquitlam (Ms. Langan). One particular area that I am interested in is the need for a policy to clearly state the criteria and responsibility for museums both in the capital and in many of our smaller communities. I am particularly concerned with museums in many of our small communities throughout the country, including some of the many positive initiatives that are taken in my riding. The purpose behind the co-operation between federal and provincial Governments in developing a museum policy is to preserve and understand the history of our country. That history is very important in terms of the artefacts and documents relating to our past.

I remind the Minister of the commitments made by his Government. The museum policy was recommended in September, 1986, but we do not have one yet. I am not too critical of the Government because I think the museum community would be very grateful for an indication from the Government about the direction the Government and the provinces want to take with a museum's policy.

There are a couple of museum projects in my riding. I am a member of the Prince George Railway Museum, and smaller communities like McBride and Valemount are attempting to save their historic railway stations. We are aware of the legislation regarding heritage railway stations, but it is those kinds of projects that have missed many of the opportunities which we sometimes take for granted when we go between Parliament and the wonderful buildings we have here. Some attention should be given to those in small community-sponsored museums, not necessarily in the form of large grants, but for such things as sewer, water and electricity, or a bit of landscaping. That is the kind of extra help those smaller communities need because in most cases there is considerable volunteer effort given to these projects.

I believe there was an attempt in British Columbia to sign a communications subagreement under the economic development umbrella. I wrote a letter to the Minister on that matter because that is a vehicle to develop some of the co-operative agreements and sharing of revenue that can go toward some of the museums in our province. I would encourage the Government to seriously consider taking advantage of the upcoming expiry of some of these subagreements that we have.

• (1320)

In closing, I want to say that the museum community and all Members of the House would look forward eagerly to a policy from the Minister. We would see from that some specific direction, I hope, in terms of the mechanics of implementing a policy like that. In particular, my message is the concern that a lot of these smaller museums and similar types of operations have across the country. I thank you very much for this opportunity to speak.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the speeches of the last two speakers for the New Democratic Party and I am commenting as my Party's Culture and Communications critic. I too am pleased to see the Minister in the House.

[Translation]

I hope the Minister will be able to attend Question Period.

[English]

A very good point was made by the Hon. Member for Mission—Coquitlam (Ms. Langan), who represents a neighbouring riding to my own in British Columbia. She is a tireless fighter for the interests and rights of women. She pointed out that at the new Museum of Civilization, while half the employees are women, only four of the 15 executive type positions are held by women. We keep repeating the same pattern. One would hope for some employment equity in the federal Government by which we could get women into senior positions if they are qualified for them. There should be some gender balance in these positions.

I would like to comment on some of the remarks of the Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. Gardiner).

If I could describe Ottawa today for people in other parts of the country who perhaps are watching us, it is a very hot, muggy June day with many tourists on the Hill and in Ottawa. We have got some magnificent museums here in Ottawa. The Minister opened one on political caricature cartoonists. No doubt we will all be in that museum. If one has a big nose, one's nose gets bigger in one of those cartoons, or a big chin, it becomes huge in one of those cartoons. The Minister, myself and the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) do not have to worry because we are just ordinary Canadians in that way.

Some Hon. Members: You're short.

Mr. Waddell: I am short.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that my good friend from Moody—Coquitlam will understand if I rise on a point of order. First, about these caricatures, when anybody does my nose, believe me, I worry about it.

However, the point of order I would like to make is that it is not often that students are able to travel on cultural programs all the way from northern Alberta to visit this place. I would just like to draw the Speaker's attention to a large group of students from St. Andrews School in High Prairie, Alberta, who are seated in the public gallery.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope they will visit the museums.

Mr. Waddell: That really is not a point of order the Hon. Member raised, but it was well smuggled in. I am sure the students are learning parliamentary techniques from their Member.

Getting back to the museums, it is true that we are opening two magnificent museums. We opened one just a little while ago, the National Gallery, and I believe next week the Museum of Civilization is to open. They are magnificent museums, even though there were some problems with contracts and various things with one of them.

What the Hon. Member from Prince George—Bulkley Valley was saying, is that we need a museums policy regarding museums in other parts of the country as well. We have spent a lot of money in Ottawa to get these two museums going, but let us not ignore the rest of the country. It is not everyone who can come from Alberta to Ottawa. These students are very lucky, and I hope they will visit these new museums. However, let us spread it out. I think that is the message of the Hon. Member from Prince George—Bulkley Valley, and I totally agree with him.

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly respond to the remarks and comments made by Hon. Members, for which I thank them. I support all the points they made, especially the need for more women in the administrative, management, research, development and scientific aspects of museums , conservation, and the same point made on the matter of participation by francophones.

Also, a very important item in the legislation needs be emphasized, among others: the leadership that should be exercised by Crown museums. Instead of being a mere administrative and functional structure for the national capital area, they should exercise leadership in the Canadian museum community as a whole. It is my hope that the directors of those museums will take note of the comments made by Hon. Members and ensure that Canadian collections are exhibited throughout the country rather than only in the capital area.

It is clear that we are now reviewing the Canadian museum policy, and hopefully in the near future I will be in a position to complete the review, consultation and discussion process with interested parties and make an announcement.

I also believe as I said on a number of occasions that the Canadian Government's financial commitment to museums is not up to the Minister's expectations, which I indicate on behalf of all those who are interested in canadian museums, and that a stronger financial commitment should be made.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the Hon. Member for British Columbia in his suggestions. I was privileged today to officially open the Canadian Center of Caricature, which to me is a recognition of the excellence of our cartoonists throughout our history. It also testifies to the quality of the freedom of speech and freedom of thought we enjoy in Canada. In these times where the basic principles of democracy are so easily trampled, few governments found a way to honour those who make a career out of criticizing the actions of politicians in the name of freedom of speech. To that extent, it is my hope that the action taken by the Government of Canada in recognizing both the excellence of our cartoonists and the significance of their contribution to freedom of speech, will set an example for other countries to follow and that they will also honour through their cartoonists, the quality of their democracy.

[English]

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to bring, through you, to the attention of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), how much I would have enjoyed being there to enjoy the caricatures. Unfortunately the orderly disorganization of the House today has kept me here. I hope that we can finish this Bill and see the museums Bill go to a legislative committee.

I would also like to suggest that we congratulate ourselves on the development of an additional museum which will bring great joy and pleasure and I hope a lot of fun as we poke fun at each other in good sense and good judgment here in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

RADIO ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-6, an Act to amend the Radio Act and certain other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before we get into the Bill, there are three motions on the Order Paper and Notice Paper offered in amendment to Bill C-6. All are in order and all are standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

Motion No. 1 will be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 2 and 3 will be grouped for debate and voted on separately.

The House will now proceed with Motion No. 1.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moved:

June 16, 1989—That Bill C-6 be amended in Clause 4 by adding immediately after line 32 at page 9 the following:

"7.(1) The Governor in Council shall make regulations to require that radio authorizations may not be issued and renewals of radio authorizations may not be granted to applicants of the classes described in subsection (2).

(2) The classes referred to in subsection (1) are as follows:

(a) persons who are not Canadian citizens or eligible Canadian corporations; and

(b) governments of countries other than Canada or of political subdivisions of countries other than Canada and agents of such governments.

(3) For the purpose of this section, an "eligible Canadian Corporation" is a corporation

(a) that is incorporated under the laws of Canada or a province,

(b) of which the chairman or other presiding officer and each of the directors or other similar officers are Canadian citizens, and

(c) of which, if it is a corporation having share capital, at least four-fifths of the shares having full voting rights under all circumstances and shares representing in the aggregate at least four-fifths of the paid-up capital are beneficially owned by Canadian citizens or by corporations other than corporations that are controlled directly or indirectly by citizens or subjects of a country other than Canada, except that, in any case where, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, notwithstanding the fact that the corporation is one to which subparagraphs (a) to (c) apply, the corporation is effectively owned or controlled either directly or indirectly and either through the holding of shares of the corporation or through the holding of a significant portion of the outstanding debt of the corporation or in any other manner whatever, by or on behalf of any persons, body, or authority of a class described in subsection (3), the corporation shall be deemed not to be an eligible Canadian corporation.

(4) Notwithstanding subsection (3), a corporation that is

(a) one to which paragraphs (3)(a) to (c) apply, and

(b) in the opinion of the Governor in Council, effectively owned or controlled by a corporation to which paragraphs (3)(a) and (c) apply and subsection 3(b) does not, shall, for the purposes of this subsection, be deemed to be an eligible Canadian corporation if

(c) at least four-fifths of the directors or other similar officers of the owning or controlling corporation, including the chairman or other presiding officer are Canadian citizens; and

(d) the Governor in Council is satisfied that it would not be contrary to the public interest to grant a radio authorization or the renewal of a radio authorization to that corporation.

(5) With respect to any shares of a corporation of a particular class that, according to the relevant records that the corporation is required to keep under the law of the place of its incorporation, are held by individuals each of whom holds one per cent or less of the total number of issued shares of the corporation of that class, the Governor in Council may, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, accept as evidence that such shares are beneficially owned by Canadian citizens, a statement signed by the president, secretary or treasurer of the corporation, or by any other officer or persons thereunto duly authorized by the board of directors or other governing body of the corporation, indicating

(a) that according to those records the individuals who hold the shares are individuals having addresses in Canada; and

(b) that the persons by whom the statement is signed has no knowledge or reason to believe that the shares are not beneficially owned by Canadian citizens.

(6) An applicant for the renewal of a radio authorization that was outstanding as of the date of the enactment of this section may not be granted such renewal, but by virtue of this section shall be deemed, for the purposes of that application only, not to be an applicant of a class described in subsection (2) if the Governor in Council is satisfied that it would not be contrary to the public interest to grant the renewal applied for by the applicant.

(7) Nothing in this section shall be construed as limiting the power of the Governor in Council to direct that amendments of radio authorizations may not be granted to applicants of a class described in subsection (2) or that radio authorizations may not be issued and renewals of radio authorizations may not be granted to applicants of classes other than a class described in subsection (2).

She said: Mr. Speaker, my amendment to Bill C-6 comes out of a deep concern for Canadian control of our communications and cultural industry, particularly with the changing economic environment and international investment patterns which we are witnessing in today's global society. Whether from Europe, Japan, or the United States those investment patterns are very significant, and I suggest that they must be taken into consideration.

Foreign investment in this country should contribute to economic growth rather than to any kind of control of our cultural industries. That was the thrust of the Free Trade Agreement, that we would not touch our cultural industries, and that goes for any other country which wants to come in here, not only the United States.

We have learned the hard lesson. Some 97 per cent of our film industry is foreign controlled, 75 per cent of our domestic book industry is foreign controlled, and 71 per cent of our periodical market consists of imported foreign product. Some 85 per cent of our domestic sales of records and tapes manufactured here in Canada come from imported master tapes. We do not control, as we should, the levers of our economic power that are found in the cultural industries. If we do not control our cultural industries and our telecommunication industries, what will continue to define us as a people?

We have just finished debating the museums Bill. That indicates that we have an historical record. Let us ensure that we have an historical record in the future that is ours, not brought in from the outside.

We do not want a repetition of these foreign ownership realities. Presently Canadians control 80 per cent of their telecommunications and broadcasting industries. This amendment would ensure that we maintain this level of control of these industries. Furthermore, it brings transparency and openness to the Government of the country and it allows for fairness of opportunity. It would require, by law, that those who acquire any radio authorization, that is any licences, be 80 per cent owned and effectively controlled by Canadians.

For example, this would require that those who hold licences for cellular telephone networks, microwave links, radio relay stations, paging transmitters, mobile data systems, air and marine radar systems, satellite communications, and citizen band radios would have to be 80 per cent Canadian owned and controlled.

This is a very normal request and a consideration of importance. In this new era of evolving technology the use of our precious commodity, that is spectrum and ownership, must be conserved in Canadian hands. It is part of the infrastructure of Canadian communication strategy. Others may use our facilities or rent our facilities, but they should not and may not own those facilities. I think that is the least that we as Canadians owe ourselves.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications has indicated that ownership of the Canadian communications infrastructure is an important issue. The Bill contains a general enabling power which gives the Governor in Council the authority to make regulations prescribing the eligibility of those who may hold certain kinds of radio licences. These eligibility criteria could include citizenship, ownership or make-up of the board of directors.

It is precisely these issues, that of controlling the eligibility by Governor in Council regulations, that concern me. The process by its very nature is secretive. It is hidden. It leaves many to wonder at times whose agenda is being served. It potentially does not provide all interested players, Canadians, in the game with the same opportunities or with clear rules, and it can allow for manipulation.

By placing ownership requirements in legislation the rules are very clear and, if the rules are to be changed, the process is open and transparent for all. That is why we are here, to legislate the kind of Canada that we want to maintain now and ensure for tomorrow in charge of its telecommunications and cultural industries that include the needed infrastructure found under the management of the Radio Telecommunications Act.

This amendment is modelled from a direction to the CRTC by the Governor in Council under the provisions of Section 22 of the 1968 Broadcasting Act.

The direction we can see in this motion is relatively complex but very precise. It includes as basic requirements that broadcasting undertakings be 80 per cent Canadian owned and effectively controlled. This direction resulted in a number of divestitures and today all broadcast undertakings, whether cable or television, are Canadian owned and controlled.

I think that we have achieved a goal of significance. The reason I bring forward this amendment is to ensure that all radio communications infrastructures are so protected through the legislative process rather than through the discretionary use of regulations and Governor in Council directives. This country has enough regulation; this country has enough Governor in Council rights. I think it is time we put into legislation the will of the people, and the will of the people is that we control our cultural levers, our telecommunications levers, and ensure that they are in Canadian hands.

This view has been supported by the task force on broadcast policy which the Minister put in place. The Caplan-Sauvageau task force made it very clear that 80 per cent ownership at minimum must be maintained. As well, the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, in its sixth report in May of 1987, Legislative Provisions for New Broadcasting Legislation, made a unanimous recommendation that the key components of what constitutes ownership and effective control, that is 80 per cent owned and effectively controlled by Canadians, be written into new broadcasting legislation.

When the Minister considers bringing broadcast legislation into this House, as he might consider bringing in telecommunications legislation, as he is now revising radio communications after so many years, he must ensure that his vision and the vision that we legislators have for Canada is ownership and control of these sectors. That is what defines who and what we are. No one should control it but Canadians. Anyone else is welcome to rent it, to borrow it, to use it, but never to own it or to control it. I hope that has been made very clear. I would like to have it written into the legislation.

Therefore, I believe that this concept is a logical step for the Radio Communications Act which we are studying right now. I suggest that the cabinet direction to the CRTC, which I have had examined by legal counsel and have had adapted to suit the contents of the Radio Telecommunications Act, has a solid and proven record. It is for these reasons that I believe that this House should give its support to this amendment.

This is the first opportunity for the Government, since free trade and the big argument that culture was not on the table, to indicate clearly and unequivocally that culture, cultural industries, and anything else that touches that aspect of our lives are going to be owned and controlled by Canadians, whether through free trade or any other mechanism or market looking for a place to put their money. I would ask Canadians to flex their muscles for now and for tomorrow.

• (1340)

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say briefly on behalf of the New Democratic Party that we would support this amendment in that, as the Member said who presented it, the amendment would give regulating power so that these institutions could remain Canadian.

I just want to take up one thing which the Member said about whether culture and Canadianization were on the table at the free trade talks. The Government said that they were not. Of course they were. The film Bill, which was withdrawn basically at the request of the Americans, was a good example.

Last night, the Minister and I and various other people went to see a movie called Jesus of Montreal. It is a great film. One of the big problems is that it will not be seen by most Canadians because, as the member of the Liberal Party said, 97 per cent of film distribution is controlled by foreigners, mainly Americans. This is a great tragedy. We cannot see our own films in this country.

The Government has to have the guts to enact a film Bill with real teeth in it. I would be less than human if I did not suggest my own Private Members' Bill, which was the Government's original Bill. It would put some teeth and guarantee a slice of the market for Canadians. Of course, the Government cannot do that because it has signed a free deal deal with the United States. That will harmonize our industries and there will be non-discrimination clauses. The Government is stuck. It cannot do anything. It is going to Americanize Canada.

That is a longer debate. It is a debate I have consistently put before this House. I am glad the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) has now taken up the debate and mentioned all these statistics about how many of our cultural institutions remain essentially in foreign hands. No country in the world can exist independent, like that. We have fought and struggled in this country to have an independent Francophone culture and an independent Anglophone culture. So far as this amendment assists in that grand battle for freedom and independence of Canadian culture, we will support it.

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, my two hon. colleagues stated their proposed amendments very eloquently. I am sure there is a great deal of validity and the points they made are very intelligent. But under the circumstances, we believe that this amendment goes too far and would be neither practical nor useful. The Government still believes that it is better for the regulations to have the flexibility required to meet my colleagues' laudable objectives, Mr. Speaker, so that we must refuse these amendments.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mrs. Finestone: Negatived on division.

Motion No. 1 (Mrs. Finestone) negatived.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-6 be amended in Clause 6 by striking out line 8 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"(ii) mailing it by registered mail to the accused the".

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-6 be amended in Clause 6 by striking out line 26 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"delivered or mailed, where there is evidence of such delivery or receipt, does not enter a plea".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Both motions are to be debated together.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, if there were not such time constraints, I would have wished the Minister would have been a little more forthcoming on the reasons why he could not accept the first amendment.

With respect to the second amendment, it is a pretty straightforward, simple one. I do not have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, about the potential for erratic mail service. As a matter of fact for those Members who want to read today's business section of The Ottawa Citizen, which has a very fine cover story on Canada Post, I was amused with one comment. Then I thought to myself: "Well, isn't this perfect timing for the Bill in which I am presenting what would seem to me a perfectly logical amendment?"

My amendment essentially states that if you are going to mail me a summons or a ticket that is going to cost me money because I supposedly broke a law, I at least ought to be entitled to a registered letter. That is what I am saying. I just bring to the Hon. Members' attention that Mr. Jim Bennett, the General Manager of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which represents 80,000 medium and small companies, calls these claims of wonderful productivity and fine new delivery performances on the part of Canada Post a little, hollow victory.

He states: "We are a major mailer. We are having as much trouble as we ever did. The profit is being raised on the backs of consumers and businesses by more than doubling postal rates, not necessarily increasing its efficiency."

If I am going to get a ticket because I have broken a law, which is what the Government has provided in this Bill, I would suggest that the Minister consider—and Motion No. 3 is just a consequential amendment—under the offences listed on page 11 of the Bill, where it can have very serious consequences both on business and on the individual who buys a product or uses a product, the least the person is entitled to is that the information may be laid after the ticket is delivered or mailed. Let us make sure that it gets mailed in an efficient manner. My recommendation for the amendment in a simple word is: "registered mail". With that, I leave it for the Minister to comment.

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, again, we believe that those are excellent suggestions. But the Government believes that it would be too restrictive to specify "registered mail" in the legislation, thus implicitly forbidding all other types of certified mail.

The Government might even deprive itself of the ability to use specialized services that have not yet been developed if such a limited expression as "registered mail" were used.

In this regard, the Government feels that the amendment does not take into consideration new services that might be available and it rejects the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 2. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mrs. Finestone: On division.

Motion No. 2 (Mrs. Finestone) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 3. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mrs. Finestone: On division.

Motion No. 3 (Mrs. Finestone) negatived.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Masse moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, this is the first major revision of the Radio Act in 50 years. This is an instrument which the Department of Communications uses to promote the use and orderly efficient development of radio communications in Canada. In this regard, the Department has three principal regulatory functions: first, planning and standards development; second, licensing of radio apparatus; and third, enforcement.

Through this legislation interference is controlled as well as the maximum number of users. In addition, it assures users access to the radio frequency spectrum and to all the benefits of radio communications. While Bill C–6 is technical and essentially a regulatory Bill, it goes far beyond a technical systems oriented approach because of whom and what it affects. It is directed primarily to the benefit of the individual in the home or at business. It impacts upon some rather common place devices which everyone takes for granted but which, in fact, only perform properly when they conform to the necessary regulations. Here I am speaking about everyday items such as the radio, television, and telephone to name just a few.

One principle of this Bill is to promote access and enable any individual to enjoy all the benefits of communications technology without one technology interfering with or reducing the benefits from another technology. That sounds pretty fundamental, but it makes sure all things work on their own and in an environment filled with other technologies. It is the kind of thing one has to explain to children and to adults. Although technology and terminology is very complex, it does have a role to play in our lives. What we are dealing with today is very important. It sets out the administrative rights and remedies which enable us to use the system.

In practical terms this legislation permits the Department of Communications to set technical standards where necessary for manufacturers, importers, and distributors of radio equipment to ensure consumers obtain safe and trouble free equipment.

The 1938 Act only allows the Department to act if it finds substandard radio equipment actually being used. Under Bill C–6, the Government will be able to stop the importation, manufacture or sale of substandard equipment. This new power will match regulations in the United States, the United Kingdom, and Australia.

Buyers of radio equipment will not be the only consumers to benefit from the new Bill. The Bill for the first time deals with electro–magnetic immunity, the ability of radio and non–radio electronic devices to reject unwanted radio signals and to operate normally in their presence. This is an important change as radio signals can cause malfunctions in such non–radio electronic equipment as heart pacemakers, railway crossing gates, computers, and stereos. We have all heard about viruses. The change is vital and key in terms of what has to be done.

Finally, it is with a great deal of regret that the bureaucratic input has prevented the Minister from using what I consider would have been his good judgment. He would acknowledge that to ensure 80 per cent ownership and control would only have made good sense now for his children, my children, and our grandchildren. It would have prevented for Canadians the kind of history lesson that we have in all the other cultural industries I outlined at report stage of this Bill.

I am really distressed that the Minister was not allowed to use his ministerial discretion in this instance. From my point of view the ability to ensure fairness, openness and to reduce the amount of regulatory procedures by Governor in Council would have been in the interests of all Canadians.

Although I welcome the presence of the chairman of our standing committee who should have influenced the Minister, it is with the deepest regret that I see what the Minister was unable to do because of the bureaucrats.

I have three more minutes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Finestone: Don't die, the Bill is going to the Senate. You have been rushing me all morning. I am going to have my last say. Ian, are you speaking?

Mr. Waddell: Yes.

Mrs. Finestone: I will give him one minute, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Finestone: To ensuring fairness and due process, the Minister said no. To ensuring openness and transparency in government, the Government said no. To saying yes to Canadians and to 80 per cent Canadian ownership cent, the Minister said no. I regret all that. That is what we have. The Bill has to go, and off we go.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, that last minute and a half was the best speech I have ever heard from the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: The Member should put herself under that deadline more often. I am glad she is allowing me to speak for one minute. She said that I could speak for a minute. I would hate to be one of her children.

Mrs. Finestone: They are well bred and well read children.

Mr. Waddell: They must get fairly tough discipline.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: I am sorry. I said "children", not grandchildren.

Mrs. Finestone: I have those, too.

Mr. Waddell: That is nice to know. I would never have suspected that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Before I put my foot in my mouth, I had better finish off.

On behalf of the New Democratic Party, we are agreed to the passage of this Bill. It is long overdue. We have to update technologically ourselves.

The Hon. Member for Mount Royal mentioned heart pacemakers, computers, and so on. I, too, wish that there would be more measures to protect Canadian culture, which I think is in great need of further protection if we are to develop and remain independent as a country. That has to be in another Bill and another place. I hope the Minister will bring the Broadcasting Act back soon to the House.

Mr. Masse: This afternoon?

Mr. Waddell: Not this afternoon, but in the fall. Again we can see that expression of the Minister's commitment to Canadian culture, arts, cultural institutions, and CBC if I dare say that, as well as to the CRTC, and so on. We will look at the Bill to see how much the Minister has changed, to see whether he is still committed to those institutions.

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, I just want to take a moment to thank all who participated in the debate in this House and in the committees and all who worked on drafting this legislation with the Department of Communications, in many consultative meetings. In closing, I would like to emphasize the importance of the spectrum management group in the Department. Although it is important, it often does not receive the publicity or discussion that other groups in the Department have, as in the cultural field, for example.

I wish to thank them for their day-to-day work to provide Canada with a very efficient spectrum management service, for the benefit of all Canadians.

THE ENVIRONMENT

ELIMINATION OF DIOXINS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the most toxic poison with which we have managed to foul the environment are dioxins. Their elimination from all sources should be an urgent priority of this Government.

We are threatened by dioxin producing industries such as the Woodfibre pulp and paper mill in Howe Sound. However, what does the Government do in this case? It closes the fisheries, not the polluting mill. The Government chooses to deal with symptoms, not causes.

Yes, the Minister has promised tough regulations on dioxins, but not coming into force until 1990. In the meantime, why does the Minister not use the powers he has and issue an interim order to apply the regulations immediately? The cause of the problem lies with the pulp and paper mills. They should be closed, not the fisheries. To protect fisheries, the Minister must deal swiftly with pulp and paper mill pollution.

If Canadians are to take seriously the proclamation of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on sustainable development, the Minister must act, for actions speak louder than words.

NATIVE RIGHTS

CONVENTION 107—INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—St-Michel): Mr. Speaker, a Canadian Government delegation in Geneva is being accused by native groups from several countries of attempting to undermine an international covenant on native rights.

The 150-nation International Labour Organization, a UN affiliate, is currently meeting to revise its Convention 107 on the rights of indigenous peoples, originally passed in 1957 and now considered outdated. A number of the amendments presented by the Canadian Government are objectionable. Native leaders are objecting more precisely to 25 amendments proposed by Canada because they believe they weaken attempts for a strong statement in the revised convention.

• (1400)

In view of Canada's image as a promoter of human rights, surely the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) should review this situation and instruct the head of the Canadian delegation to changes these unacceptable amendments.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LETTERS TO CHINESE AMBASSADOR

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, June 20, I witnessed the profound effect the recent tragic events in Beijing have had on young Canadians when I met with teacher Miriam Smith and her grade 5 class at Raymer Wood Public School in Markham. It is been an especially difficult time for some of the students who have relatives living in China.

The following are excerpts from some of the letters the students wrote as a class project to Chinese Ambassador Zhang Wenpu deploring his Government's actions in Tiananmen Square.

Christopher Reid wrote:

> What is your government doing ordering your army to attack innocent people?—all they want is to discuss democracy with the government.

Ilana Shamoon's letter read:

> —the people just wanted a discussion—it wasn't right for him (Mr. Xiaoping) to have them killed.

Anthony Latchman wrote:

> I can't believe that your government said to kill people. The students weren't even armed.

Renée Pecham expressed the hope of everyone when she said:

> I hope Mr. Xiaoping will come to his senses.

These young students, although 10 and 11 years of age, have come to realize the democratic system we so freely enjoy here in Canada should not be taken for granted but should be cherished and nourished.

FINANCE

NEW SALES TAX

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), hides behind the constitutionality question to say that he cannot make the new sales tax visible to Canadians. I see today that constitutional experts are saying that that is nonsense.

Who should we believe? Should we believe the Minister of Finance? He said he would remove the personal surtax, but now he will not. He said he will keep the tax revenue neutral but now he will not. Finally, he said he would make the tax visible to Canadians so that everyone would know exactly how much tax they are paying, but now he will not.

Why should we trust the Minister of Finance? Does he know what it is like to have to worry about the extra $10 or $20 it will take under his new sales tax to buy a new winter coat? The Minister should withdraw his plans for the new sales tax and bury this burden in a black hole where average Canadians would like to see it go.

TRANSPORTATION

RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE

Miss Deborah Grey (Beaver River): Mr. Speaker, I believe that Canadians are looking for better ways of dealing with the problems of rail passenger service. The Opposition seems to endorse permanently subsidizing a losing operation. The Government advocates starving the public monopoly to death while VIA Rail bureaucrats dither over how to ration out their dwindling supplies of cash.

This week in Yellowhead, Preston Manning unveiled the Reform Party's alternative to this situation. Transport Canada should, in consultation with affected communities and labour organizations, prepare public "request for proposals" for operation of rail passenger service on a line-by-line basis. These would be solicited from potential alternative operators including VIA Rail. Contracts would be awarded to the respondent capable of doing the best job most cost effectively. This would be a formal process, free from political interference or political connections.

I would be happy to provide additional information to anyone who is interested.

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

SPECIFICITY OF QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, as a French-speaking Quebec Member of this House, I will have the great pleasure of sharing with my fellow Québecers the Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day's celebrations.

Yet, this year, I will take part in these celebrations with a touch of concern in my soul. With the Meech Lake Accord, the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, had given back to us, Quebec men and women, a feeling of great pride and satisfaction because he had secured from all provincial premiers the recognition that Quebec was indeed a distinct society.

Now, we feel that this recognition to the effect that we, as Québecers, are equal although somewhat different as partners, is shifting away from us. Some potential party leaders are even trying to reach the top at Quebeckers' expense.

While the last two undecided provinces still have almost a year to recognize this fact, let me remind you that although a federation is built on compromise, do not ask Quebec men and women to renounce their identity!

FRANCE

BICENTENARY OF REVOLUTION

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians join with their cousins to celebrate the 200th Anniversary of the French Revolution.

Without it, Mr. Speaker, the evolution of Mankind would have been different. We would not have understood the thirst for freedom of these young Chinese in Beijing, if France had not been the first to abolish racial, religious and social discriminations.

We want the whole world to know that the efforts made by the revolutionaries who stormed the Bastille prison, and by the legislators who worked during the States General to ensure the triumph of the ideal of equality, liberty and brotherhood were not in vain.

Mr. Speaker, we continue this fight and come in a not so distant future, we shall overcome.

I therefore ask the House and all Canadians to join with me in wishing the whole French nation a happy 200th Anniversary!

AGRICULTURE

ADVANCE PAYMENTS PROGRAM

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, the interest free aspect of the advance payments program has been eliminated. A representative of Agriculture Canada reported to producers at a recent meeting on Prince Edward Island that a producer group in western Canada advised the Minister that advance payments impeded the marketing of canola. Out of concern, the Minister axed the program.

This same producer group has advised that it never made representation to the Minister, that its markets were not affected by advance payments and that advance payments actually complemented their marketing efforts. I submit that the excuses Island producers were given are invalid. I further submit that American demands for subsidy free agriculture in Canada are the hidden reasons behind the removal of this program. It seems that the Minister is more concerned with pleasing his American counterparts than with pleasing Canadian farmers.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

MINISTER'S REMARKS AT CONFERENCE

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for the Status of Women told a family violence conference yesterday that a change in attitudes would stop family violence and that transition homes were not the answer. This sounds remarkably like a justification for why the Government is spending only $10 per year per battered woman. It is waiting for a change in attitudes so that the problem will go away.

Of course attitudes must change, but the Minister knows that one out of two battered women coming to a transition home is turned away because of lack of space. Battered women cannot afford to wait around for attitudes to change as the Government is doing. Battered women need support and services and they need them now.

ST. JEAN BAPTISTE

TRIBUTES TO FRENCH CANADIANS

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the opportunity at this time—we obviously won't be sitting tomorrow—to say that June 24 is a very important holiday for us French-Canadians throughout Canada.

For us, St. Jean Baptiste Day speaks of our pride in belonging to the two great founding people of this country. For a number of years, we have taken this opportunity to raise our profile in this great country of ours.

I would also like to wish a happy holiday to all French-speaking Canadians. June 24 is a significant day and we have a reason to be proud. Together, we will celebrate throughout the country a holiday which marks our presence in North America for over 300 years. We are here to stay!

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR BAN ON PHARMACIES SELLING TOBACCO PRODUCTS

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, a recent full-page ad sponsored by Physicians for a Smoke-free Canada reads: "Tobacco kills, smoking is a major cause of disease, disability and the premature death of 35,000 Canadians a year". This is quite true. Then the ad asks people to boycott those pharmacies that sell tobacco products. As well, the Canadian Medical Association last month asked its 46,000 members to send patients to smoke-free pharmacies.

• (1410)

The goal of smoke-free pharmacies is a noble one, and many across Canada have already removed tobacco from shelves. However, the Canadian Medical Association policy is totally inappropriate as long as it says nothing to patients who go to doctors who smoke. I submit that consulting a doctor who smokes is more a contradiction to good health than is buying a product in a drug store that sells tobacco.

I will accept the Canadian Medical Association boycott only after all 46,000 Canadian physicians are non-smokers.

SOCIAL SERVICES

PROPOSED CUTS IN SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in Nova Scotia the allocation of social assistance is the responsibility of the municipalities. Recently, the Halifax City Manager has proposed cuts in the amounts and eligibility for assistance. For example, it will deny the working poor, unemployed with no children, and some single parents basic assistance for food, clothing, and shelter after three or four months; it will deny all special needs assistance to the disabled, single parents, and the elderly; it will deny all special needs except prescription drugs; and it will cut shelter allowance by $50 per month.

The reneging on promised child care funding allocation by the federal Government leaves many parents unable to work because of the lack of adequate, affordable child care. The federal Government has a responsibility to ensure that its commitments to child care are met, that the obligations of the Canada Assistance Plan are enforced, and that the poor and the disabled in Halifax and in other Canadian communities are not abandoned in the name of deficit reduction.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SUBSIDIES FOR PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, just over one year ago, the Communications Minister of the day announced that the postal subsidies program would remain unchanged for the next five years.

James Warrilow, President of MacLean-Hunter, said that this announcement ended the uncertainty plaguing the publishing industry. He stated that publishers would be able to plan their distribution costs for the next five years.

However, the recent Budget announced the intention of the Government to reduce postal subsidies by $10 million during 1989-90, and by $45 million each subsequent year.

These measures pose a direct threat to the publication of research and other scholarly works. The Social Science Federation of Canada indicates that this will grievously undermine the dissemination of scholarly publications in Canada.

On behalf of this organization, and the 14,000 researchers who belong to more than 65 post-secondary educational institutions across this country, I call on the Minister to renounce these restrictions on postal subsidies.

This Government should live up to its previous five-year commitment.

NATIONAL ARMED FORCES DAY

THANKS TO THE MEMBERS OF THE CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, National Armed Forces Day will be celebrated on June 24. I encourage all Canadians to visit these military facilities and to meet the men and women who work there.

Once a year, on National Armed Forces Day, we give Canadians the opportunity to thank members of the armed forces who represent us with such distinction in Canada and all over the world. THE LATE HON. WILLIAM HAMILTON

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine—Lac-Saint-Louis): Mr. Speaker, from 1957 to 1963, the riding in the west end of Montreal named Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, was represented in the House of Commons by the Hon. William "Bill" Hamilton. He was an exemplary political campaigner, visiting bus and streetcar stops early and late, and in all weather conditions to meet his electors. As a young Conservative, I was proud to work on his enthusiastic campaign team.

He served admirably as Postmaster General in the Government of Prime Minister Diefenbaker, and as a business leader in Vancouver. He became a member of the Macdonald Royal Commission that studied Canada's economic future.

Following his recent death at 70, all Canadians join with his family in celebrating a life of service, and expressing thanks to Bill Hamilton.

INCOME TAX

QUALIFICATION FOR DISABILITY DEDUCTION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter which I believe is of concern to all Members of the House.

A deduction due to a disability is something that has been in place for a number of years in our tax system. However, the Government has set up a system which makes it extremely difficult for individuals to qualify, and could lead to discouraging people from applying for this very legitimate deduction.

The Government has set up a disability determination section in Ottawa to make decisions on the claims local Revenue Canada officers do not feel are clear-cut. However, I have a large number of files in my office of individuals, some of whom have been waiting a year or more to obtain a ruling on their deduction for disability. When one calls the local Revenue Canada office, it will not give the number for the disability determination office in Ottawa. When I called the Department of National Revenue in Ottawa, a member of the Minister's departmental staff had not even heard of such an office.

I do not think that it is legitimate for Revenue Canada to expect people to wait for a year or more before receiving an answer, thus causing disabled individuals increased stress and anxiety. I urge the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek) to move immediately to put some speed into this snail-like system and stop penalizing the less fortunate members of our society.

FINANCE

NEW FEDERAL SALES TAX

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Contrary to his earlier and repeated assurances that the new federal sales tax would be plainly visible to all consumers, the Minister has stated that the Government has now learned that it does not have the constitutional right to make it clear to consumers how much tax they are actually paying.

Yesterday, among others, the Minister of Finance for Saskatchewan stated: "Our constitutional people strongly disagree with that. It is our view that he, the federal Minister of Finance, does have that power".

Would the Minister now state clearly, whose constitutional advice he took, and how he arrived at his remarkable conclusion? Will he table a statement indicating how the Constitution limits the ways in which a federal tax is administered, including the procedures necessary to make it clear at the cash register what sales tax consumers are actually paying?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one of the principal motives of the Government in sales tax reform is to make it much clearer than it is under the existing sales tax system precisely what amount of sales tax consumers are paying.

Under the proposed system, the goods and services tax, we will be bringing the sales tax to the retail level in order that everyone will know that on taxable goods, they pay 9 per cent tax at the retail level. As I indicated yesterday, that is simply not the case today. People do not know what federal sales tax they are paying. Under the goods and services tax we are taking a major step forward in the awareness that consumers will have of the existing tax.

The Hon. Member asks if we have the legal right to do this. Our legal advice is that we do not have the legal right to require a retailer to impose the tax extra to pricing, or to include it in the pricing. That is an option for the consumer.

Under the technical paper that we will be making available shortly, it will show very clearly how the federal Government will encourage the much greater awareness of consumers of the sales tax that they are paying.

• (1420)

VISIBILITY OF NEW SALES TAX

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has indicated that the greater visibility that he has promised will be in the form of a small sign that will hang in a shop indicating that sales tax will be paid on some or all of the products sold in that shop. In failing to ensure that the new federal sales tax will be clearly visible, he is leaving the provinces with no alternative but to collect their provincial sales tax on top of the federal sales tax. This double taxation will give the provinces a windfall of almost a half billion dollars of taxpayers' money.

Will the Minister now keep his promise to Canadians by taking immediate steps to ensure that the new federal sales tax will be added at the cash register, as it should be, so that one tax is not being piled on top of another tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me expand on my comment which I gave in answer to the first question to illustrate the point that I made.

A study done of the 12 per cent rate—and not the 13.5 per cent rate that is in place right now—shows that the highest effective tax rate at the retail level is 12.67 per cent. Under the same tax the lowest effective tax rate is 6.05 per cent. The consumer does not know whether it is 12.67 per cent or 6.05 per cent, or anything in between.

Mr. Gauthier: And he still won't know.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member says that he still will not know. He will know that on that product there will be a 9 per cent tax regardless of where he buys it, who he buys it from and what the brand name is. It will be 9 per cent and it will be very clear to Canadians that it will be 9 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROPOSED TAX CREDITS

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows perfectly well that under his present plan a consumer shopping in a supermarket will pay tax on certain items in that supermarket and not on other items. He knows perfectly well that that will confuse and obfuscate the collection of taxes at the retail point.

The Minister has promised that the new tax will be clearly visible. It will not be. He promised that it will be revenue neutral. He knows that it will not be. He promised that surtaxes on income tax will be removed when the new tax is introduced. He knows that they will not be.

Can the Minister now assure the House that the substantial tax credits, which he has promised continually to the Canadian people to offset the regressive nature of the new tax, will be in place and will be of a character to ensure that the poorer people in our society are not paying an undue amount of this tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated very clearly on a number of occasions that answers to questions related to the awareness of consumers of the tax, the impact on our revenue position, the impact on low-income people and the benefits to be gained from the refundable sales tax credit will all be very clear when we make available the technical paper.

The important point that needs to be made here is that what the Hon. Member is saying about the hidden nature of the existing tax underscores quite clearly the reasons why we have to move to a new sales tax system and why his Party—and I believe he himself—has supported the fact that we must change from the existing sales tax system to the new sales tax system. I appreciate the support of the Liberal Party of Canada to moving forward to the goods and services tax.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DISASTERS

AIR INDIA FLIGHT 181—INVESTIGATIONS OF CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, four years ago tomorrow, on June 23, 1985, Air India flight 181 en route from Toronto to London was bombed before it reached London. Some 329 people were murdered, most of them were Canadians.

The Canadian Government has bungled the investigation from day one. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police was involved with erased tapes. The Canadian Security Intelligence Service has also been involved in some false affidavits.

Today, a new book alleges that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service has been investigating and, in fact, investigating at length a link between agents of the Indian Government and the bombing.

I would like to put my question to the Prime Minister. Is he aware of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service investigating this link?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I understand why my colleague asks the question, in view of the long delay. But I believe that I already informed the House several weeks ago that the RCMP is still conducting a criminal investigation. The Commissioner informed me about it.

You know all that is involved in this affair, Mr. Speaker, and any further statement at this time, while criminal investigations are underway and civil cases are before the courts—Unfortunately, I feel it is completely inappropriate at this stage to comment further any way whatsoever on this case, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, that is nonsense. For four years we have been told the same story. Time and time again the Government of Canada says that the investigation is ongoing and charges are imminent.

We have had a royal commission of inquiry in Canada into the conduct of a Cabinet Minister, Sinclair Stevens. Another one is going on into the conduct of an Olympic athlete. Here we have the most hideous and horrific crime ever in Canadian history. For some reason the Government of Canada refuses to initiate a royal commission of inquiry.

Is the Minister refusing to initiate a royal commission of inquiry because of the bungling of his Government, because of the false affidavits, because of the erased tapes, because of the advance warnings that the Government had? Or is it because of the link with the Indian Government?

I would like the Prime Minister to stand up. He has an obligation to the families of the victims to stand up in the House of Commons and to tell us exactly what was behind the Air India bombing.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, these questions were raised just a few days ago in the Standing Committee. The RCMP Commissioner informed those in attendance that more than thirty RCMP officers were now working on the case. Obviously, it is most unfortunate. Many people died. This type of investigation takes a lot of time to get all the facts.

I was assured by both the RCMP Commissioner and the Director of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service that the two agencies cooperated and did all they could to move this investigation forward. It is making progress.

Unfortunately, it seems to me quite inappropriate to raise this issue or to bring up the investigation in the House of Commons. Mr. Speaker, we must let the RCMP continue this investigation. It has committed all the available energy and resources required for this purpose.

COMMITTEE REPORT ON MONETARY POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It refers to a Finance Committee report issued on monetary policy. It was issued this morning.

The Minister is now aware, of course, that we have a national consensus which includes the 10 Premiers, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, the small business community, the farming community and the Finance Committee of this House which represents all three Parties, which states that interest rates must come down, and must come down now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: In light of the fact that the Finance Committee report states: "Monetary restraint can be too tough and too long" and makes the primary recommendation that the Bank of Canada must relax its stance on monetary policy now. I want to know from the Minister of Finance whether or not he agrees that enough is enough, that it is the time to act, and that he instruct

John Crow to bring down the bank rate and bring it down now.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that the work that is being done by the Finance Committee can be a useful contribution to the whole discussion of monetary policy.

However, I have to draw to the attention of the Hon. Member the fact that just this week we have had an indication of the tremendous strength in the economy over the past couple of years, and the fact that we have had an upward adjustment in the amount of growth in the economy which puts Canada right at the top of major industrialized nations in economic growth over the past two years. That, together with the ongoing high levels of inflation we have also seen this past week, in face of the increased level of the Canadian dollar and the high interest rates we have been encountering over the past number of months, indicates quite clearly that the Governor of the Bank of Canada, whose position has been fully supported by the Government, has been correct in maintaining the monetary policy he has been following. If we had not followed that policy, we would have had a much more serious inflation problem.

• (1430)

If the Hon. Member needs to be reminded, that is what got us into the mess we had in 1981 and 1982 when we had the most serious recession this country had seen since the 1930s.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister of Finance is sounding more and more like a clone of Allan MacEachen every day.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Mulroney: How could you stoop so low?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has struck a tender cord.

Mr. Nystrom: I suppose I have also insulted the Senator in the other place, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR LOWERING OF BANK RATE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, it is now eight weeks since the Minister promised in his April 26 Budget to lower the interest rate set by the Bank of Canada. Mr. Speaker, we now have the support of Opposition Members on this side and Government Members on that side for reducing the rate.

Is the Minister of Finance prepared to say this has gone far enough, to do his duty and tell John Crow the time has come to lower interest rates in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, according to the rules of the House, I believe I would have to give you notice at the earliest possible opportunity of a question of privilege after the Hon. Member's descriptions of me in his preamble. It is slanderous and I cannot accept that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member says that he would like to see lower interest rates. The Government of Canada would like to see lower interest rates. We believe that we have put in place a Budget which will lead to lower interest rates. That is the position I set in the budget speech itself, as well as on a number of occasions since that time.

However, markets must be allowed to work. The Governor of the Bank of Canada cannot wave a magic wand, nor can the Minister of Finance. Markets have to work to allow interest rates to come down.

If they are brought down artificially, it will result in precisely the problems we went through in the 1970s when the Government of the day ignored the problems of inflation, which led to the mess we got into in the 1980s. That is something that we on this side of the House are determined to avoid, even though the members in the New Democratic Party are quite happy to return us to the mess we got into at that time as a country.

WITHDRAWAL OF PROPOSED NATIONAL TAX—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows very well that one of the problems with the high bank rate has been the inflation rate, which has been created in part by the taxes of the Government opposite.

The proposed national sales tax will add at least 2.5 to 3 points to the Consumer Price Index. When the CPI goes up, Governor Crow usually responds by jacking up the interest rates.

In light of the pigheadedness of Mr. Crow, will the Minister of Finance make a commitment today to withdraw the proposal for a national sales tax, bring down interest rates, and strengthen the economy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I presume the Hon. Member is saying that he wants us to withdraw the goods and services tax and return to the hidden tax, that existing federal sales tax and all the problems it has caused. He is also turning his back totally on the tax probe of the New Democratic Party which stated that the existing sales tax is a mess.

Mr. Nystrom: Answer the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me address the substance of the Hon. Member's question about what will be the response of the Governor of the Bank of Canada to that short-term, one time only inflation impact.

The Governor of the Bank of Canada has indicated to me that he just does not look at the nominal numbers of inflation but at the underlying performance of the economy and what is happening to the underlying rate of inflation, to the growth and demand in the economy. He looks at what is happening to capacity utilization and monetary growth rates. All these things form monetary policy, not the one single item of the raw figure for inflation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOFT TARGET

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Today's release of the book Soft Target reveals the elaborate and covert operations of the India Government in Canada to discredit and destabilize the Canadian Sikh community and the manipulation of the Minister and his Department in this scheme.

Given that CSIS has confirmed to the authors that a special investigation was conducted into the behaviour of Indian diplomats in Canada, and that a report was submitted to the Minister's Department in 1986, will the Minister inform the House of the details of that report? Will he confirm or deny that he refused to act on that serious and sensitive report because he did not want to jeopardize a $1.9 billion pipeline deal between Canada and India?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I try to keep up with current literature, but I have not had the opportunity yet to read the book to which the Hon. Member is making reference. I will take a look at that. I will treat his question with the seriousness I usually accord to his questions.

Let me deal with the last implication in his question. That implication is false.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, there are also allegations in the book that officials from the Department of External Affairs knowingly got involved with the Indian Consulate in Toronto that paid informants to spy and oversee the actions of various members of that Canadian Sikh community.

Given the Minister's own track record with this community, the letter to the Premiers, the intervention in Sikh refugee cases, the attempted blocking of the Canadian chair of Sikh studies in Vancouver, and the Minister's refusal to appear before the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism to justify his actions, is the Minister concerned about this unholy matrimony between the Government of India and the Government of Canada, when the rights of Canadian citizens of Sikh origin in this country are being violated? Don't you have any respect for their citizenship in this country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is exceeding even his low standards in some of the allegations he is making. We make Canadian policy for Canadian reasons. We place as a priority of Canadian policy the interests of Canadian citizens.

We also maintain relations with friendly Governments. If those friendly Governments engage in any activities, including intelligence activities which are inappropriate, we deal with them directly, we reprimand them directly, and we require the removal from the country of people involved in those improper activities.

The Hon. Member should not abuse his position as an elected Member of this House of Commons to try to raise these kinds of allegations.

TRANSPORTATION

VIA RAIL SERVICES – MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister has stated on several occasions that only 3 per cent of Canadians ride the train, but he has never gone on to say that only 4 per cent of Canadians ride the bus and that only 7 per cent travel by air, while 85 per cent of Canadians travel by automobile.

Why is the Minister so determined to run VIA off the rails rather than support the corporation as he should be doing?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the best way to help a corporation and a country is to ensure that both the corporation's and the country's finances are in good shape. That is exactly what we want to do with VIA Rail. I did not say that 6 per cent of Canadians travel by bus because I was talking about VIA Rail and about the ridership of VIA Rail. However, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the funds allocated to VIA Rail in the last Budget reflect the frequency with which Canadians use this transport mode, and it is on the basis of this information that we intend to apply the present budgetary restrictions.

• (1440)

USE OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, today the Minister has said that he will use Orders in Council to slaughter VIA Rail.

Why has the Minister decided that democracy in this country no longer matters? When will he stop using the math of the Minister of Finance and the truth of the Prime Minister to deal with this House?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, what I have said, and I repeat it, is that in the budget of April 27 there are many proposals or possibilities to deal with the VIA Rail budget.

One of those proposals could be abandonment of routes. If it happens, we could consider different options. Within the options is one is to go directly, by Section 64, to Order in Council. However, it will be done when we know if there are abandonments. Until that period of time I believe it is just speculation.

CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

STATUS OF PRINCE CHARLES PROJECT

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning Patricia Starr and the Prince Charles Housing Project in Toronto.

The Prime Minister knows the charitable status of this building depends on it being exclusively charitable in the judgment of Revenue Canada. This charitable status was only obtained with the intervention of the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Can the Prime Minister explain why charitable status has been continued when such needy persons as Mrs. Starr's son and a staff member of Premier David Peterson's office were both residents of this complex?

Why are Liberal and Conservative Party connections the main requirements for tax subsidized housing at Patty's Place?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, let me say first that the National Council of Jewish Women of Canada, the Toronto section, has co-operated fully with Revenue Canada in its ongoing investigation. I think that should be made very clear off the top.

Revenue Canada is conducting an investigation into their operations. We are having co-operation from them. I think we should wait until that investigation is finished before the Hon. Member jumps to some of the totally unfounded conclusions he has jumped to.

PC CANADA FUND

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Prime Minister.

During the 1988 election, the PC Canada Fund received $2,000 from the Starr charity for dinner for the Prime Minister.

Does the Prime Minister consider himself to be a charity worthy of a $2,000 donation for a meal?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, people buy tickets to events. If any moneys have come into the hands of the PC Canada Fund or Members of Parliament that are not rightfully there, they will be returned.

PAROLE

CHANGES IN THE REGULATIONS CONCERNING SEXUAL DELINQUENTS

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine—Lac-Saint-Louis): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General.

According to an article which appeared this morning in the Globe and Mail, the National Parole Board Regulations will be changed to prevent the premature release of sexual offenders.

Could the Minister explain why these changes were not made before and how they will affect Bill C-67?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member said, this Government adopted Bill C-67 for the purpose of preventing dangerous criminals—this is a very important issue which affects all Canadians, Mr. Speaker.

Canadians are concerned about dangerous criminals and especially about the fact that they might be released before serving their full sentence. There was still one major point that my predecessor submitted to a task force, namely, the severe harm that might be caused.

I asked officials in my Department, the Deputy Minister responsible for the National Parole Board and Correctional Services, to come up with a more restrictive definition of severe harm, which we did quite recently. As a result, and Canadians will be pleased to hear this, now that we have tightened up the criteria for evaluating severe harm, our system will be able to offer better protection to all Canadians. I think that is good news.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

REMOVAL OF EXPORT TAX ON LUMBER

Mr. Bob Wood (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, my question is for the Prime Minister. He will know that 1,300 employees at the G. W. Martin Lumber Ltd. are some of the latest victims of the Government's softwood lumber agreement which really has devastated the industry in northern Ontario.

The Minister for International Trade has said that he agrees that the export tax is unfair because of the increase in exchange rates and should be removed. Is the Prime Minister prepared to undertake that his Government will end this tax?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada is involved in consultations that we hope will allow a regime to be put in place that would remove the necessity for that tax. I am not in a position to give details on the extent of those negotiations.

Mr. Wood: I certainly appreciate the Minister's answer.

ALLEGED DOUBLE STANDARD

Mr. Bob Wood (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister.

The Minister for International Trade is willing to go to the GATT to have an unfair U.S. import tax on oil imports removed to help the energy sector, but he is unwilling to stand up to the Americans on the lumber issue where an unfair export tax which we are collecting is costing thousands of Canadians their jobs.

Why this double standard? Will the Prime Minister explain this sell-out of workers in northern Ontario?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no double standard. There is certainly no desire to do anything but help workers in northern Ontario and elsewhere in the country.

What is at issue here is the necessity to have in place some agreement between Canada and the United States that will take the place of a tax whose history is well known to Members of this House. Those discussions involving Canada and the United States are going forward, and there are consultations with the Canadian industries affected.

TOURISM

ECONOMIC REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENTS

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for tourism. The Minister has decided not to renew or, rather, abandon the Economic Regional Development Agreements for tourism in particular, and especially for the eastern provinces.

Every provincial Ministry of Tourism in the country has clearly indicated that the Government has no real understanding of the tourism industry, no plans, and now diminishing means to assist in a marketing strategy for the provinces.

Can the Minister explain how his Ministry is so totally at odds with every other tourist Ministry in the country?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, unlike the premise in the Hon. Member's question, the Government in fact is coming to terms with modern realities.

We had in the past ERDA arrangements which funded up $246 million with the provinces. They have produced a great deal of product and they have on the whole contributed largely to the regional development of those economies.

However, there were problems with the agreements. They were cumbersome. Decision making was sometimes difficult. Also there was not enough emphasis on marketing instead of product development.

We are going to put a new regime in place with the regional agencies. I will, in consultation with my colleagues, bring this whole program up to modern standards rather than keep it in the old world.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CALL IN PROVINCIAL COUNTERPARTS

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, considering what I have heard from most tourism departments in Canada, could the Minister, before he introduces a new system, perhaps inform the House whether he intends to at least call a meeting of provincial Tourism Ministers to keep the situation from deteriorating any further?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I met three weeks ago with the Ministers of Tourism of the various provinces and made it clear that the ERDA policy context was not the appropriate one for the future but that a new policy context could be put in place. They are looking forward to discussing this with me.

The new context will come to terms with our needs to advertise the product we already have and to put together a program that crosses provincial boundaries and does not just encapsulate this program within the provincial-federal context but makes it a wider program and a more dynamic program.

CULTURE

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON BOOKS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The sales tax will apply to books and magazines. Every country in the world and every province in Canada maintains a policy of not taxing books.

Why is the Minister of Culture going to impose a tax on reading?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Minister responsible for culture has no business imposing taxes at all. Second, in the weeks and months to come, Canadians will have every opportunity to discuss this issue and I am sure the Government will be listening to Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Minister could at least stand up against that tax.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. I know that he is here today, perhaps only for decoration.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Why are you here?

Mr. Mayer: You're not here for decoration or any other reason.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has boasted about his program to combat adult illiteracy. He has boasted about helping Canadian publishing companies. He has boasted about making Canada a more civil and tolerant society.

Then why is his Government, unlike any other Government in the western world, putting a tax on reading material? Is this not totally inconsistent?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is right—I had not planned to be here but when I heard he was running for Leader I came down immediately. I want to wish him well, and I say that on behalf of a unified, generous and tolerant caucus.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The points raised by my hon. friend are very valid. I think he will recognize that we have all contributed to building that kind of a country.

He raises a series of concerns with regard to the artistic community. These will be looked at very carefully. A technical paper will be released, all of the concerns will be analysed, and the Minister of Finance will bring in definitive recommendations.

I thank my hon. friend for the question; it is one of the most cogent of all from the leadership candidates around here.

MINISTER'S APPEARANCE BEFORE DUBIN INQUIRY

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, as all of us in this Chamber are quite aware, the eyes of the world are focused right now on the Dubin inquiry.

My question is for the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport. Is the Minister prepared to testify before the Dubin inquiry? If he is prepared to do that, is he prepared to call Mr. Justice Charles Dubin and inform him of his desire to do so?

Mr. Dick: Typical Liberal, phone the Judge.

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague is absolutely right that the eyes of the world are on Canada and the Dubin inquiry.

I can tell him quite frankly that Mr. Justice Dubin has all the powers necessary to call witnesses if he feels it is necessary. We gave him those powers. If he asks me to testify before the Dubin inquiry, I will be happy to do so, as will the previous Minister.

The Member should be warned about calling judges. He may want to consult one of his ex-colleagues about that.

Mr. Keyes: The Minister may find some humour in all this, but I fail to find any humour in this situation.

APPEARANCE OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE BEFORE DUBIN INQUIRY

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer the question which was whether he expressed the desire to appear before the Dubin inquiry. He says "if he wants to call me, I'll go ahead". We are sinking to a new low here, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keyes: Where is the Minister's sense of responsibility? It is incumbent upon the Minister to tell the inquiry what he knew about the use of illegal performance enhancing drugs in Canadian amateur sport.

My supplementary question was going to be directed to the Minister of National Revenue, but in his absence maybe the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport can do me a favour and pass on my question to that Minister.

Is that Minister prepared to testify before the inquiry and, if so, would he be willing to inform the Justice of his desire to do that?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, if there is anything that has been quite clear since the beginning of these incidents, it is that the Ministers of the Canadian Government have been up front and frank. All the information we have has always been given, whether or not we were asked to testify. That has never been an issue for us. We put out all the information we had in all circumstances. That has always been very clear.

On the issue of sinking to new lows, I think my hon. colleague has just won a few prizes himself. He has certainly won a bronze medal in the area of sinking to a new low in criticizing and partisanship.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLICY ON SPORTS CONTACTS WITH SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is a follow-up to a question I asked on Tuesday of the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport.

Yesterday, despite the clear admonition of the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, it became very clear that U.S. golfer Curtis Strange and others who are here to compete in the Canadian Open are completely unrepentant about travelling to South Africa to prop up the regime there. Mr. Strange says that he does not care about the politics of apartheid.

Will the Minister make it absolutely clear to Curtis Strange and these other golfers that regardless of what they think the people of Canada care about ending the system of apartheid? Will Canada enforce the UN register, and will the Minister take this opportunity to outline the long awaited policy on sports contacts with South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question put by the Hon. Member. It is a matter of concern to us.

I will certainly use this opportunity to make clear the views of the Government of Canada with respect to apartheid to any professional athletes. There is a distinction between making our views clear and having a means by which we can affect their behaviour in Canada.

We are near the end of a process of working out a detailed policy I hope to be able to announce next week, which will involve co-operation with professional athletic organizations in Canada and the sponsors of some of these sporting events, to ensure that we are able to give the maximum effect possible to Canada's opposition to apartheid.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, last year the Minister, along with the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, made a very clear commitment to the international community that loopholes which allow South African citizens travelling on foreign passports to come to Canada to compete would be plugged.

Will the Minister not complete the promise made then and actually provide some substance rather than just good wishes?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we intend to do that. As I indicated a moment ago in the House, we expect to have a detailed policy which I will be able to announce some time next week. I am not sure it is within our power to deal with all of the loopholes which might exist. Certainly, every loophole which we can close we shall close.

TRANSPORT

PROSECUTION OF ROUTE CANADA

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and concerns Route Canada which is the former trucking arm of Canadian National and formerly employed 3,500 people.

It is a known fact that in the case of Route Canada the officers of the company allocated union dues, income tax deductions and pension funds, utilizing them to keep the company going rather than keeping them in trust or paying the Government.

Would the Minister explain why the Crown would prosecute and fine a bankrupt company rather than going after the officers and directors of that corporation?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this question was discussed at length in the House last year. I believe the Hon. Member is aware of the fact that an investigation or an inquiry is being conducted pursuant to an order arising from the Bankruptcy Act, and I have always said, as I told the Transport Committee this morning, that it was better to wait for the findings before intervening in any way at all, bearing in mind that this company was sold in the normal way by Canadian National to Route Canada.

PLIGHT OF ROUTE CANADA WORKERS—REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE REQUESTED

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my concern is with the workers. My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Given the plight of the Route Canada workers and their loss of pensions and loss of benefits, would he be prepared to refer this matter of the plight of the workers to one of our standing committees of either Justice, Transport or Labour, Employment and Immigration?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for Moncton that the Department of Labour has been very active in this case to protect the rights of workers, and after a number of presentations, we managed to get severance pay and annual leave for these workers, which represents an amount of over $2 million, and we are still monitoring this case very closely to ensure that the rights of workers are respected to the extent that the financial resources are available.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

VESSEL REPLACEMENT REGULATIONS

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. As the Minister knows, the new vessel replacement regulations for Atlantic groundfish vessels have created concerns and confusion among many fishermen and boat builders in Nova Scotia.

In light of the Minister's meeting yesterday with representatives of the Inshore Fisheries Concerned Citizens Alliance, can the Minister clearly state how the policy affects fishermen wishing to replace their vessels, and whether in fact fishermen are required to replace their vessels with ones of a smaller size?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. colleague for South Shore for the dedication he has given to the fishermen and boat builders of his area, not only in this respect but in many related matters.

As a consequence of some two years of discussion with the industry and Atlantic provinces, we have decided to essentially put the lid on the overbuilding of the inshore vessels of his area. I can undertake, and I did so with the members of the Alliance group which the Member brought to see me last evening, that vessels which presently exist will be replaced on a cubic metre for cubic metre basis, or a volume for volume basis, provided the owners of those vessels can prove that those vessels were of a particular size, dimension and volume. We therefore ask the fishermen to co-operate in this respect.

MR. OUELLET—WORDS OF THE HON. CHARLES JAMES MAYER

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, during oral Question Period, the Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oil Seeds) (Mr. Mayer) accused me of having called a judge before, and I am sure the Hon. Minister is anxious to correct this unfounded accusation, because if he checks his facts, he will realize that I was convicted of contempt of court but certainly not for having called a judge to try and influence his court decisions.

An Hon. Member: Even if you were right all along!

Mr. Ouellet: I would appreciate it if the Minister would remove the erroneous impression he gave of past events.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask the Government to share with us the coming program of legislative measures it intends to put to the House. Before the Prime Minister leaves, I wonder if he could just take under consideration the request we made last week, that given that we are going to be celebrating the 200th anniversary of the French Revolution, the Bicentenary of France, and we did pass a resolution last week congratulating the Americans on their bicentenary, could we have a House order that we do the same thing for the French?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend made a very useful suggestion earlier this week at the time that we passed the motion to celebrate the bicentenary of the House of Representatives in the United States. We are indeed looking into my hon. friend's suggestion vis-à-vis the French Revolution. We will be getting back to the House soon. I wanted to reply directly to that request, Mr. Speaker.

I would point out vis-à-vis the work of the House that we have indeed made excellent progress this week with the Bills on the Order Paper. That progress is due to the co-operation of the Opposition Parties and indeed all Members of the House.

Speaker's Ruling

I would refer the House to the projected order of business, items which we hope to complete by the time the House rises. We would anticipate dealing with those in the order in which they are shown. There may from time to time be adjustments to that order of business and, indeed, additions or deletions which will be worked out with the Opposition Parties.

POINT OF ORDER

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: This morning, as Members will recall, the Hon. member for Trinity—Spadina (Mr. Heap) raised a matter with the Chair asking for clarification as to the time allowed at the closing hour after a closure motion. Hon. Members will remember that as recorded by the Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina at the hour, the Speaker in the chair at that time rose and apparently the Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina was trying to send a message, or send a question as to whether or not he could continue because he would still have had 15 minutes of his 20 minutes speaking time.

As I say, I have looked at the Hansard record and that does not show up. However, there is an indication that indeed the Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina did try to ask a question, at least that is what appears on the tape. It would appear that that was not heard by the Chair at that time. The Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina is asking a narrow but important question, and that is that if something like this does happen again, does the speaker who has the floor have the right to use up the still existing part of his or her 20-minute speech.

I draw the attention of Hon. Members to the Annotated Standing Orders which have been brought out recently, on page 196 in the second paragraph, and I think that this is helpful.

> All questions necessary to dispose of the closured business will be put no later than 1.00 a.m, or as soon as possible thereafter, to allow any Member who might have been recognized before 1.00 a.m to finish speaking. No Member shall be given the floor after 1.00 a.m. to debate the question. When the Speaker interrupts at 1.00 a.m. or shortly thereafter, any bells summoning Members to a recorded division to dispose of the question or questions—

Et cetera.

So I think that clearly sets out the situation. I would draw Hon. Members to a ruling of the Speaker as recorded in 1964. Speaker Macnaughton was in the Chair and this exact point was raised. I might read this.

> Objection was raised by the honourable Member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) who proposed a motion "That the Right Honourable the Leader of the Opposition be now heard". We have had a vote on that motion. Therefore, I now have before me an Order of the House directing the Chair, according to my view, that the Right Honourable the Leader of the Opposition be not now heard but that the Right Honourable the Prime Minister be now heard. I must have regard to the effect and terms of citation 167, paragraph 2, of Beauchesne which is in these words: "If a Member has taken the floor at 12.55 o'clock, he is entitled to speak for 20 minutes, but no Member 'shall rise to speak' after one o'clock.

I hope this helps to clarify the situation for all Hon. Members. Again, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Trinity–Spadina for the careful way in which he assisted the Speaker by putting the point of order to me this morning.

CANADIAN EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. McKnight (for Mr. Epp) moved that Bill C–19, an Act to amend the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. McKnight moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I place before you today the third reading of Bill C–19, an amendment to the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program. The purpose of this Bill is to implement the decision announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his recent Budget to terminate CEDIP incentives on April 27, 1989, except for certain activities under way or required to be undertaken pursuant to written agreements in place as of that date.

CEDIP was created in March, 1987 as a temporary financial bridge to assist the oil and gas industry in adjusting to a precipitous decline in world oil prices. Oil prices have dropped from $30 U.S. a barrel to $10 U.S. a barrel in a very short period of time. The Government of Canada was sensitive to the disruption in the cash flow and investment caused by the rapid fall of oil prices. CEDIP was brought in to assist the industry in maintaining upstream investment and employment. It provided cash incentives to maintain exploration and development activities. The program was primarily intended to help the smaller to medium–sized companies, the part of the sector that was facing the most difficulties.

Current projections are that the program would provide $1.25 billion in assistance to the industry. The program will have supported over $3.7 billion in exploration and development activity, the bulk of it in western Canada. For 1987–1988, the first year of CEDIP and the only one for which the deadline on applications has lapsed, industry will have been provided with roughly $500 million dollars in incentives.

The decision to terminate CEDIP, I would again stress, was not an easy one. We know that the oil and gas industry is upset by the lack of notice provided on this decision. But coming to grips with our deficit problems means making difficult decisions.

The termination of CEDIP will save the Government of Canada $80 million. We have instituted grandfathering provisions in order to honour activities under way or committed to underwritten agreements. This grandfathering regime will cushion the impact of program termination. Incentives will be provided on grandfathered activities through to December 31, 1989 when the program will be completely terminated. The grandfathering will help many companies. We fully realize that by asking the oil patch to contribute $80 million toward the deficit, some companies will have more difficulty than others in adjusting their investment plans to take into account the Budget decision.

I would hope that the decisions taken will be accountable for and will help the Government of Canada in its very difficult deficit position.

At this time I would like to thank the members of the legislative committee who co-operated with the Minister and myself to ensure that we could get passage of this Bill.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I take great exception to this Bill because I think it will do a great deal of harm. I take great exception to the way the Department of Energy has handled this whole question. It has continued to mislead the public by refusing to state exactly how damaging this is going to be and to admit that the smaller companies for which this program was brought forward have received very little of the benefit of this program. Although it is a program to aid small companies, the smaller companies have received less than 15 per cent of the money. In fact, 90 per cent of the applicants under this program received less than 15 per cent of the funds. This has been substantiated by the Government's own information.

In a news release dated June 20, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources states: "The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Monday presented detailed information to the House of Commons Legislative Committee studying the Bill to terminate the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program, Bill C-19, which revealed that 56 per cent of the money available under the program went to small and medium-sized firms and applicants. CEDIP will provide $1.5 million", and so on. Then the release goes on to say that only 44 per cent will be paid to large companies.

More than 85 per cent of the funds under this program will be paid to large companies. Yet small companies are being used as a scapegoat for the cancellation of this program. If this Government reduced the ceiling from $10 million to $1 million under this program, 90 per cent of the applicants could have their applications honoured and the Government would save 65 per cent of the funds. On the one hand, the Government is saying that it will save $80 million. On the other hand, the Government is saying this program will cost $1.2 billion. Yet the Government is only saving $80 million for the rest of the term, which would be from April 27 to the end of December this year. This would be 33 per cent of the length of the program if the program were allowed to run its complete course. Why is the Government only saving $80 million if two-thirds of the program is going to cost $1.2 billion? There has to be a very big discrepancy.

The Department is also saying that to date it has spent $663.6 million, which is half of what it proposed the program will cost. I know a lot of companies will have to file later than this particular date, but certainly half of the $1.2 billion being estimated will not be requested after the actual program is cancelled. The Government is exaggerating the cost of this program. Once again it is putting the blame on the backs of the small oil companies for something that is not their fault and it is not a program under which they will benefit to anywhere near the extent the Government is predicting.

That being the case, what is going to be the situation? We heard from some very good witnesses: the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada and the Petroleum Services Association of Canada submitted briefs. We heard some very interesting remarks and statements which all indicated that activity in the western sedimentary basin is declining at an alarming rate.

The brief presented by the Petroleum Services Association of Canada indicates that this year, 25,000 people will be involved in the service industry in the western sedimentary basin. In the last two and a half years alone, that is down from a total of between 40,000 and 45,000 workers. In two and a half years, 20,000 jobs have been lost in the service industry in the western sedimentary basin, an alarming decline in activity.

Drillers have told us that in the second quarter of 1989, there will be only 100 rigs in use. That second quarter is almost over so there is not much guesswork involved. That is down from the second quarter of last year when there were 171 rigs in operation. However, the price of oil this year is higher than it was last year. The situation is not a reflection of oil prices, it is a reflection of the fact that major companies are merging. They are getting their reserves through mergers. They are paper shuffling, not drilling or exploring. Yet the smaller companies that want to drill and explore are not able to get the funding from the banks. Now this program is being taken away from them without any advance notice whatsoever.

The Petroleum Services Association told us that although there will be 100 rigs operating in the second quarter, they need 200 rigs for there to be any kind of profit margin for the petroleum services industry. Only 50 per cent of the rigs required for a profitable period are in operation. That is incredible.

The petroleum services industry and the drillers are also telling us that they need between 40 per cent and 60 per cent activity on the rigs, yet these 100 rigs only represent 20 per cent of the rigs that are available for use in the western sedimentary basin.

The Government would have us believe everything is hunky dory with respect to the conventional oil and gas industry. That is not true. The Government is talking about megaprojects. It is allowing and in some cases even encouraging the mergers of these companies. Yet it is walking away from one of the best employers in Canada, the conventional oil and gas industry. It is doing this without any regard whatsoever for the people involved or the companies involved. Some of the companies involved have been in business for decades, have been handed down from one generation to another. These companies are in trouble. The companies in the drilling industry and the service industry, the small explorers and developers, are the companies that are in difficulty. Jobs are continually being lost. In the last two and half years, 20,000 jobs were lost and thousands more could be lost before the end of 1989.

What has the Government done? It brought forward a program called the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program, mainly for mining companies. It provides good incentives for mining companies, but because of the retroactive provisions of the exploration definition clause under the Tax Act, the oil and gas industry will not be able to take advantage of this program. A company could drill a well, find oil, receive funds under CEDIP and then have to pay those funds back later on when another well is drilled and it is determined by the Government that the well for which they got the funds was not an exploration well. Not only would the company have to repay the money but it would have to pay interest on the money received.

The Government has levelled a large corporation tax against small companies in the oil and gas sector. I think a large corporation tax has benefits and there is a need for it, but not one imposed on small companies that are not operating. These companies have to pay the tax whether they are operating or not, whether or not they are making a profit. As long as they have assets of over $10,000, they have to pay a tax. This is an asset tax which the small producers have said is much more despicable than the PGRT ever was.

Let us return to the program at hand, the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program. When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) was in Calgary on April 5, he said that this program would extend to the end of the year. On April 17 in the House of Commons he said that date would not change. Yet on April 26, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) cancelled this program immediately without any notice whatsoever, even though the Act itself contains a stipulation that any change in the rate of pay would require six months' notice. Not only was the rate of pay changed from 25 per cent to zero per cent, but the whole program was cancelled. However, no notice was given.

The small producers, drillers and those in the service industry had been planning on using this program until the end of the year. This is immoral. Just because the law allows the Government to do this, there is no way it is justified in cancelling a program without any notice when the Act says it has to give six months' notice. This is the treatment that is being given to the oil and gas sector. This is the treatment that is being given to the western sedimentary basin and to the western part of Canada when thousands of jobs are being lost.

We are losing six months of the program and I think that has to be rectified. For that reason, I would like to propose a motion. With respect to the motion for third reading of this Bill, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier):

> That all the words in the motion after the word "that" be deleted, and the following substituted therefor:
> "Bill C-19, an Act to amend the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Chair finds the motion acceptable.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, speaking on the amendment, I would like to say that in the interests of Alberta in particular and western Canada in general, the New Democratic caucus wholly supports the amendment. Obviously, the effect of this amendment would be to keep the program operating for close to the full term of the original CEDIP, and I say again in the interests of Alberta in particular and western Canada in general, the New Democratic caucus fully supports this amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the amendment standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed to the amendment will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(9), the recorded division on the amendment will be deferred until Monday.

CANADA–LUXEMBOURG INCOME TAX CONVENTION ACT, 1989

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill S–2, an Act to implement conventions between Canada and the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg and Canada and the Polish People's Republic and an agreement between Canada and Papua New Guinea for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of any government Member commenting on this Bill, I would suggest that the Bill is one that we would want to support. It should follow the established procedures and go to a legislative committee where, I trust, it will receive prompt consideration and support.

The tax conventions with other nations of this nature have some aspects that are of interest to some of my colleagues. I trust that with second reading this Bill will go to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of Bill S–2, an Act to implement conventions between Canada and the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg and Canada and the Polish People's Republic and an agreement between Canada and Papua New Guinea for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

I was wondering if, before the Bill is sent to committee, some Member on the government side would not think it proper to explain to us what a Bill of some 66 pages will ask from Canadians in terms of sacrifices, or indeed what is the purpose of the Bill. I would be sure to give my consent if someone would rise and give us a few words of explanation.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to speak briefly on the purposes of this Bill. Essentially, the Bill relates to trade relationships between Poland and Canada. These tax treaties are directly related to international trade. Therefore, they have a significant impact on Canada's domestic economic performance. We believe that they will be of substantial benefit to the Canadian business community, as well as to different Canadian individuals.

What we are dealing with here was started in 1980 in negotiations between Canada and Poland. Those discussions have gone on for some time, and there have been discussions across the country with various people whose interests may be impacted upon by this Bill. We have asked for feedback, and the feedback that we have received is very positive. That is why we have co-operation from the House on this Bill.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could point out an important distinction. Canada has trade Bills with various countries designed to remove trade barriers and facilitate them. In the case of one trade Bill that we have, it opens up Canada to everything that the Americans want to do here.

The Bill presently brought before us does not deal with trade. It is a convention or an agreement dealing with the elimination of double taxation between our two countries. This Bill follows the OECD model. It is one of a significant number of agreements that have been entered into by Canada with other countries since the 1970s in an attempt to ensure that when business is done, double taxation does not apply.

It sets out in very clear rules which jurisdiction is entitled to tax the income arising from particular transactions.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the previous speaker that the Bill is intended to implement tax conventions between Canada, Luxembourg, Poland, and Papua New Guinea. As the previous speaker stated, it is a standard Bill of which there have been others like it. In our opinion, it will benefit those taxpayers who are perhaps operating a business in more than one jurisdiction.

We must do everything we can to ensure that there is not double taxation for our citizens, and therefore we support this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

INDUSTRY, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (for the Prime Minister) moved that Bill C–3, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that there is any need for me to go into great detail about Bill C–3. We have looked at it on more than one occasion in the House. A fair amount of time was spent on it the other night at report stage.

It is an important Bill that will have a significant impact on research, science, technology, and those areas that are very important to Canadians.

I do not want to delay the Bill in any manner. I want to give an opportunity to opposition Members to make a few comments, and the Bill can proceed tothird reading.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, Canada is facing very difficult times ahead in terms of our productivity and in terms of our ability to compete in the world markets.

All of the indicators by reputable national organizations point out that although our productivity is increasing somewhat, it is increasing at a much slower rate than that of other countries in the world. For example, the Organization for Economic Co–operation and Development, in surveying its 22 member countries, has pointed out that those OECD countries have an average productivity increase of 1.6 per cent a year. Canada's productivity increase over the last four years has been at the rate of 0.9 per cent per year.

What does it mean if our productivity is declining compared to that of other countries? It means that our ability to sell goods in world markets will decline. It means that the goods that we produce in Canada will be less competitive; that we are going to be able to sell fewer of them. Ultimately this means two things for Canadians. First, we will have fewer high paying jobs here in Canada.

• (1540)

Second, it means that Canadians will have a declining standard of living. In terms of the economic programs of the Government, there can be no Bill that is more important than Bill C–3, a Bill to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology. I say that because it will be charged with the task, among others, of making Canada strong economically.

There are many aspects to creating a strong economic environment here in Canada that we on this side of the House have put forward for consideration. The first of these concerns human resources. If the Canadian worker is not among the most competitive in the world, then our economy cannot be strong.

What are the problems we face? First, fully five million Canadians are functionally illiterate. We have seen coming from the Government no programs to deal with this functional illiteracy. If people cannot read then how will they be able to learn new jobs? How will they be able to read manuals in order that they can see how machines will function and how computers will work? How can they educate themselves in a world that is rapidly changing in terms of the way we produce goods?

Even more disturbing, we have seen among those who are literate in Canada for every year over the past four that there has been a declining number of students who have gone into the sciences and engineering. We have few engineers and scientists compared to our major competitors in the world such as Japan. We have far more lawyers than we do engineers and scientists. That may be a statement about our society.

What has the Government done about creating more opportunities for students to study science and engineering?

Mr. Milliken: Nothing.

Mr. Peterson: My colleague says: "Nothing". I disagree with him. The Government has done something. It has actually cut back in the funding that is available for scholarships, programs and research—all the things that are necessary to create these highly educated students who will be critical to determining whether our businesses and our industries can compete.

For example, just last year there was a major decline in the number of fellowships that were granted by NSERC, the funding council for science and engineering graduates.

We on this side of the House have been stressing something else as well in order to be competitive and to have high levels of research and development. Studies carried out in the United States show that fully 70 per cent of its growth since the Second World War has been attributed directly to innovation, new technologies, discoveries that people have made and the new products that have been brought on the market for sale around the world. This has been the result of a high level of funding for research and development.

What do we see in Canada? What is the record of this Government? In the last four years under the Tory administration the National Research Council has had its budget cut by $20 million—$20 million actual dollars, which does not take into account inflation factors. The Government has cut its share of expenditures on research and development in Canada from 37 per cent to 30 per cent. The Government has cut its funding of industrial research and development to a point where the United States Government is now at a level that is twice as high as the level here in Canada.

How are we going to compete if we do not have the latest in technologies, if we do not have the bright people coming through our universities, technical schools and community colleges, people who are skilled in new ways of doing business, in the information technologies, robotics and the new biosciences? We will not be able to compete. We will be dependent on foreign countries which are investing in those areas. We will have to buy this technology and know-how from them if we hope to keep any jobs here. We will be dependent on foreigners for our future economic growth.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has responded to our accusations of underfunding and a lack of commitment here. The Prime Minister and the Minister responsible for industry, science and technology have told Canadians that the Government cannot do it all. We have never asked that the Government do it all. All we have asked is that the Government do its fair share so that Canadians can have a level playing field when we have to go into international markets and when it comes to creating jobs in Canada for the future. We do not think that our young people should be handicapped because the Government is not prepared to do as much as other Governments in the world are prepared to do in terms of creating the technological base and the research and development which is critical for us.

Another issue to which we take great exception concerns the Government's inability, or its hypocrisy, in terms of dealing with another major economic issue for the future. I refer to the whole issue of sustainable development. Sustainable development has been recognized by the Brundtland Commission, by environmentalists throughout the world and by the Government in its Throne Speech, as well as in declarations by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard). They have said that the environment will be considered in every Department. It will be on the agenda at the Cabinet table when everything is considered, including economic development.

What was their response when the Hon. Member for Ottawa South (Mr. Manley) proposed a couple of days ago to this House that part of Bill C–3 concerning the mandate of the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology include a simple mandate to ensure that the economic implications be considered, along with the environmental considerations of development? He simply wanted a recognition of what the Government has been calling for in its pious statements here in Canada and around the world as it accepts awards which must now to the donors appear hollow. Why? If they had to give those awards again to our Prime Minister, they would take them back. They were hypocritical. They would not allow the simple mention of the environment in this particular Bill.

Another area with respect to which we on this side of the House have difficulties in terms of the Government's approach to future economic development in Canada is the regions of Canada. We on this side of the House believe that Canada cannot be strong economically unless every one of its regions is strong economically. We proposed a simple amendment. As a matter of fact, I commend the Tory back–bencher who proposed it. It is a simple amendment which states that in considering economic development for Canada the interests of the regions and fair treatment be taken into consideration. It is innocuous. Give them an equitable share. Treat them fairly at the table when economic development is being considered. Why did the Government refuse to allow such a simple measure to go into a Bill? While it may not be an important consideration to the Government, what about the people in Canada who are disadvantaged, including the people in northern Ontario where the 15 per cent tax on softwood has caused seven mills to close and 2,000 people to be laid off already?

At the time we debated the constitutional amendments, we included a provision for fair economic treatment of our regions. The Government makes pious declarations about treating the regions fairly, but it does not even include mention of the need for regions to be supported in this particular Bill.

The Government also refused to deal with labour market adjustment in the Bill. When the Macdonald Commission recommended free trade, it set as a priority before entering into free trade the implementation of programs to provide for the massive readjustment and training that will take place because of the dislocation caused by free trade.

It has not been quite six months since free trade came into effect and we have already seen at least 25,000 Canadian workers laid off. Has there been one provision to allow for labour market adjustment? Has the Government entered into one program to help the industries where people have been laid off because manufacturing has been transferred to the United States? Absolutely not. The Government would not even allow mention of the need to have labour market adjustment programs in place to help our workers be retrained and to find the new jobs which even the Government admits they would have to find because of the adjustments that would be necessary under the Free Trade Agreement.

Another cause for concern in this legislation is the question of control over Canada's economic destiny. Will that control lie in the hands of Canadians, or will it be conceded to any foreign company that wants to buy Canadian companies?

Let us consider why ownership and control in Canada is important. First, Canada has the highest level of foreign ownership of any nation in the world. Fully 47 per cent of our jobs in manufacturing are foreign controlled, and 34 per cent of all our industries are foreign controlled. Some may say: "So what?" We know from all the studies that have been done over the years that if the real head offices are not in Canada, the top jobs are not in Canada. The decisions about which branch plants are closed are not made in Canada for the benefit of Canadians, they are made abroad for the benefit of foreign headquarters.

Second, research and development is not done in Canada if the Canadian companies are foreign controlled. Excellent studies from the past indicate that the level of research and development done in Canada by foreign controlled firms is a miniscule percentage of the research and development done in Canada by Canadian controlled firms. We have the lowest level of research and development of all industrialized countries and the Government is permitting more and more foreign control in our key sector industries. That will mean less research and development conducted here in Canada.

Canadian branch plants do not do research and development. The Minister of Industry, Science and Technology said recently that branch plants just do not do R & D.

The export market is another reason why our young people must be concerned about where they will get their jobs, be it the high paying executive positions or the jobs in R & D for which they get training at great expense to taxpayers in Canada. Will those exports be created by a branch plant in Canada which is designed to serve only the Canadian market or will they come from the head office plant that is trying to service the world market? We have the recent example of Lumonics, the third largest manufacturer of laser equipment in the world. That Canadian company was sold to the Japanese company, Sumitomo. It was not even a joint venture for marketing the technology, but a 100 per cent purchase by Sumitomo.

That proposal went to Investment Canada. Yesterday, Investment Canada officials admitted to us that they had done nothing to find Canadian capital to help increase the equity base in that particular corporation. As a matter of fact, Investment Canada is a joke. From 1982 to 1985, when the Foreign Investment Review Agency was in effect, about 3,600 take-overs of Canadian firms by foreign firms were reviewed. In that process, some 700 of those applications were either rejected or withdrawn. FIRA was doing its job of ensuring that if foreign control is coming to Canada it must be for the benefit of Canada.

Let us look at the record of Investment Canada. Since July, 1985, until today, there have been 651 applications to FIRA to take over Canadian firms. The number of applications that have been rejected because of preliminary discussion is a paltry six. Not one of those 651 applications have been turned down. Investment Canada officials admitted to us that they had discussions with a number of firms to ensure they will benefit Canada, but how many undertakings are they prepared to take from those firms? They told us with pride that the average number of undertakings per take-over application is down to about two. That is far less than what took place under FIRA.

Only six person-years out of all the employees in Investment Canada are available to enforce the undertakings. Investment Canada likely does not even need that many because it is insisting on so few undertakings when take-overs occur.

Under the Government and Investment Canada, we are open for business and up for sale entirely. The Government is pleased to see us sold out.

Why should Canadians be concerned? I have talked about the jobs, export markets around the world, research and development and head office jobs. The problem is even more insidious. The figures show that in the 10 years from 1978 to 1987, the net foreign investment in Canada was $1.2 billion. In other words, foreigners taking over Canadian firms invested over $1.2 billion. However, what did they take out? During this period they took out fully $73 billion in payments to head offices. Furthermore, the net book value of their investments in Canada increased by $55 billion. That is who is benefiting from taking over Canada. There was $73 billion going out to these companies. They brought in $1.2 billion and their net worth has increased by $55 billion. So much for what it does to help Canada over the longer term.

• (1600)

In opposing this Bill, Mr. Speaker, we want to put it to you that we have a very different concept of where Canada's economic future lies. We feel that if Canada is going to be strong, the Government has a role to work in partnership with the private sector, to give, in a co-operative effort, to business here in Canada the ability to go into the market-place internationally and compete head on. Every other multinational with which we are competing has much better support from their own public sectors. This means more R and D, more education. It means sitting down with the private sector, with our financial institutions, with labour, with management, with our universities and planning for our economic future.

It means that if we are going to tackle the problems of being competitive over the long term, we are going to have to go about it in a different way. Cutting back on transfers to education, to the provinces, cutting back and capping our R and D expenditures is not going to create for us a good economic future. The Government is wrong and I hope Canadians discover it before it is too late. We must oppose this Bill. We must oppose the way in which this Government is headed. When will this Government learn that to be competitive, they have to work at the fundamentals to make Canada strong, to make Canadian companies strong, to build the Canadian multinationals? When will they put Canada first?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF MULTICULTURALISM AND CITIZENSHIP ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence) (for Mr. Mulroney) moved that Bill C-18, an Act to establish the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto be now read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pride that I rise to open today's debate on Bill C-18, an Act to establish the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship. The central responsibility of this department is to strengthen the solidarity of the Canadian people by ensuring that all Canadians participate fully and without discrimination in defining and building Canada's future. This is a responsibility which reinforces commitments made in the Speech from the Throne to foster a caring nation, a confident society, a country proud of its unique national identity.

[Translation]

It is a fact that Canada today ranks among the most dynamic, the most pacifist, and the most challenging nations of the world. It is a fact that Canadians, men and women alike, give the highest priority to the need for tolerance, compassion, and fairness. Yet it is also a fact that the new department will assume its mandate at a time when Canada is facing major challenges.

[English]

This is a time of change and transition in our nation, a time when the evolving cultural and racial diversity of contemporary Canada presents a new image of what we are as Canadians. It is a time when we are seeking to ensure that all Canadians receive fair and equal treatment, that all Canadians have the same chance to participate and to achieve their dreams.

A society which denies any of its citizens a sense of belonging and which fails to utilize the skills, the talents and the potential of all its citizens cannot grow in greatness and stature. A black teenager taunted by racial slurs on the way to school each day is diminished bit by bit into a lesser person. A man or woman denied legal protection or a fair trial under our justice system, for whatever reason, is robbed of fundamental human rights. An adult who lacks the ability to read and write lives with daily shame and frustration. Such incidents are not mere speculation. They are happening in small and large communities across this country. When they happen, they diminish us all. They undermine the best of what we are and what we can be as Canadians.

It will be the job of the new department to take a lead role in eliminating such incidents, to create and organize a ministry that will see on a day-to-day basis that the barriers of racism, of injustice and of illiteracy are broken down. It will be the job of the new department to re-affirm the inherent worth and value of every citizen so that we are all strong and secure in our sense of what it means to be Canadian. Too often we Canadians take the many benefits of our citizenship for granted. We need to respect and protect our rights and freedoms on a daily basis, to keep them strong. Any challenges to these basic freedoms, at home and around the world, must be recognized. Promoting the need for this kind of vigilance will be a key aspect of the citizenship mission of the new department.

[Translation]

Therefore the Bill before us today is not aimed solely at establishing a federal department. It is more than a simple administrative measure designed to organize and combine compatible programs with a view to strengthening the natural link between multiculturalism and citizenship. Rather it is a means through which we will invest in the Canadian people and in the future of our country. This is why I am very proud to open the debate today.

[English]

In the course of many stages of debate on the Canadian Multiculturalism Act, my colleagues and I on this side made it clear that the Government opposed the establishment of a separate little stand-alone Department of Multiculturalism. Rather than isolating multiculturalism, the Bill before us today has a wider, more dynamic perspective. The Government has looked carefully at the commitments of the Multiculturalism Act. It has looked at the concerns of our different cultural and racial communities and it has looked at the concerns of ordinary Canadian citizens in all parts of the country. What resulted from that process is an agenda for change and for progress that will strengthen and enhance our common citizenship, our solidarity as a people and our vitality as a nation.

• (1610)

Just two weeks ago, following a discussion with House Leaders, my colleague, the Minister of Justice and Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis), announced that a new standing committee, a Standing Committee on Multiculturalism and Citizenship, would be established in the autumn. This new committee is part of our agenda. We listened to those who have made proposals and we have taken their advice. This committee will play a key role in monitoring the application of the Multiculturalism Act and I look forward to working closely with its Members.

[Translation]

This Bill creates a very important department in terms of the way we Canadians look at ourselves and how we intend to prepare for the 21st century. Much as the Canadian Multiculturalism Act, this Bill concerns all Canadians and relates to the contribution and cultural wealth of a good many different legacies.

Allow me to recall that the Canadian Multiculturalism Act was unanimously endorsed last July because, as parliamentarians, citizens of this great country, parents and individuals we all want a Canadian society which is better for and fairer to ourselves and our children. In addition, since we want a society where we are all full-fledged citizens, the new department will be a determining factor in that respect.

[English]

At the core of the Department's mandate are two major purposes. The first is the promotion of Canadian pluralism, a pluralism which recognizes and values the full diversity of the people of Canada. The second is the promotion and encouragement of an active and informed citizenry, a citizenry that values the dignity, the freedoms and the responsibilities that we share.

We must encourage the kind of self-confident and compassionate Canadian citizen who recognizes the vast potential of our multicultural identity, the many benefits of our two official languages and the special characteristics of being Canadian. Citizenship means participating in the life of this country, respecting our fellow Canadians, playing an active role in the community and helping to safeguard our principles of justice and equality for all.

In the coming year the Department will grant citizenship to an estimated 94,000 individuals. They, too, will be part of our dynamic Canadian family and contribute to our nation-building.

[Translation]

Multiculturalism must now be recognized as a vital resource in the on-going creation of our society. What I mean is that we must recognize the vitality, strength and vision of all Canadians. There are many ways of being Canadian, expressing the unity derived from our common values and citizenship. We have succeeded in creating unity from unbelievable diversity.

[English]

Unity is what multiculturalism is all about. Our many cultural heritages and traditions lie at the heart of what we are and what we have become as an independent nation. Together they form our distinct and individual identity.

The new Department responds to the diversity of our society. For me, that means that every Canadian must have the chance to participate in our society on an equal basis with the same chance to progress through our education system, to get a job, to run for public office, to have equal access to social and health services, and receive fair treatment under our justice system. In this sense, Canadian diversity means setting a standard for the quality of life of all Canadians in all parts of this country.

[Translation]

Promoting the dignity and well-being of the Canadian people is promoting the well being of all peoples, in view of our common humanity and of the deep respect we share for human life. But if Canadians today and tomorrow are to efficiently work within the global community, we must start at home. Ensuring active participation by and equality of Canadians in a diverse society in the area of language and heritage is something that will not happen by itself.

[English]

And so the Government must work with all sectors of society to bring about change. It must encourage the contribution of the voluntary sector which plays such a vital role in the practice of our freedoms, reminding us again and again how much Canadians can help other Canadians.

Last September 15 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced his intention to establish the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship. He gave me the responsibility to develop it. It has been one of my greatest privileges to do this, to nurture this concept and help find ways in which Canadians can work together to shape the Canada of tomorrow.

Let me remind you of the Prime Minister's vision of this new tomorrow when he spoke to Canadians from Baie Comeau on election night. He said then:

> —the confederation of tomorrow, the Canada of the 1990s (is) a land of promise, a people of hope, a tolerant society, a prosperous country uniquely blessed among the nations of the earth.

[Translation]

As mentioned in the Throne Speech, all Federal Ministers have a duty to help prepare the emergence of that viable and dynamic Canada. The legislation now before us is the symbol of that vision and the way in which, as a nation made up of people from all over the world, we will meet the challenges of a new century.

[English]

This Bill is about the future of Canada. The Department that it will establish will seek the best and encourage the best of what we are as a people. It is with great pride that I begin this debate, Mr. Speaker, and I urge Members on all sides of the Chamber to join with me in support of this statute. I pledge to all Members that I will work with them, listen to them, co-operate with them in genuine partnership, and I seek the assurance of all Members to do the same.

I hope that we can move rapidly here today and get this Bill to a legislative committee before we rise for the summer. Over the course of the summer months members of a legislative committee will have the opportunity to start thinking about how they will proceed in the fall to review it and return their report as soon as we come back in the fall.

We are here as citizens of a democratic and pluralistic society. Each and every one of us in this Chamber is here because people in our communities look to us for leadership. We are here as parliamentarians who have the opportunity to assist in building a better, stronger and more confident Canada. This is a task that must be accomplished together.

[Translation]

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, as multiculturalism spokesperson with my colleague for Broadview—Greenwood (Mr. Mills), I am pleased to rise in this debate today. This debate is vital to Canada's happy and peaceful future. Indeed, the debate on Bill C-18 is more than a debate revolving around the establishment of a department of multiculturalism. Not only must we establish the administrative structure needed to implement the policies and programs to promote multiculturalism, but we must provide them with the legal framework with which to exercise its true mandate.

Today, nearly 40 per cent of Canadians stem from ethnic origins other than French or British, while in the 40's the proportion was around 20 per cent. So it increased two-fold in a matter of 40 years only. Of those, more than 6 per cent belong to the so-called visible minorities.

• (1620)

That new multicultural reality is therefore a major asset and a tremendous challenge for Canada. A major asset because Canada as a whole can benefit from that multicultural diversity, both in terms of our economy and cultural riches.

Canada's future therefore is based on its capacity to recognize and promote that Canadian mosaic. The recognition and promotion of that basic Canadian feature implies developing mechanisms, policies and programs that will enable our Canadian society to establish healthy inter-racial relations, based on mutual respect and equal participation in this country's growth. Such is the challenge of Canadian multiculturalism.

A failure to rise to this challenge would seriously jeopardize our future. One need only imagine what our country would be like if it were only ruled by intolerance, racial tensions and discord. Canada would be faced with an extremely serious crisis.

As early as the 1960's, Mr. Speaker, Canada examined this increasingly multicultural reality. The Royal Commission on Bilinguism and Biculturalism, also known as the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission, dealt with this issue in Book lV of its report entitled The Cultural Contribution of the Other Ethnic Groups.

On page 7 of the this book, one can read the following statement dealing with the Canadian society, and I quote:

> But Canadian society, open and modern, should be able to integrate hetorogeneous elements into an harmonious system, to achieve "unity in diversity".

Multiculturalism

On page 9, dealing with the diversity of cultural groups:

> To deny their existence would be to shut one's eyes to the Canadian reality.

Because the Liberal Party of Canada of which I am a Member has always recognized this multi-ethnic component of Canada, Mr. Speaker, we had adopted in the early 1970's a policy on multiculturalism in Canada which gave rise to the many legislation aimed at recognizing and enhancing this mutlicultural aspect of Canada.

Since then, the Liberal Party has always supported in a non partisan fashion the legislation put forward by your Government which it felt was valid in the area of multiculturalism.

To remain true to our sincere commitment to the ethnic communities in Canada, we therefore support the Government's Bill to create a Department of Multiculturalism, although I intend in committee to move amendments which might possibly improve it.

[English]

The Bill, as proposed by the Secretary of State, has certain basic flaws which I hope will be amended in committee. The establishment of such an important ministry must be done with the utmost care so as not to pass a Bill that is poorly drafted.

My first concern is the fact that the Bill does not have a definition section. Simply put, it does not define who the Minister responsible for the Department is. The Secretary of State may think this is obvious, but unfortunately, the implementation of multicultural policy is also in the hands of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall), through the Employment Equity Act, as well as the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), through the implementation of multicultural policy in broadcast and print media.

A second technical modification is the definition of the word "department' so as to clarify the confusing situation which would arise whenever the full name of the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship is not used in the Bill.

These are two simple, minor technical modifications I would like to see added to the Bill. However, Bill C-18 has one major flaw. It is disturbing to see that in the specific duties assigned to the Minister of Multiculturalism and Citizenship, the word "multiculturalism" is mentioned but once in a list of duties relating to citizenship as well, while citizenship on its own is mentioned in three specific subsections.

I feel that a greater degree of attention should be paid to the multicultural section of this Bill than is accorded to it in its present format. I feel that an amendment of the legislation is needed to ensure that future Ministers of Multiculturalism and Citizenship actively cover both areas of their mandate.

The need for a Department of Multiculturalism has been there for many, many years. The fact that nearly 40 per cent of Canadians are of neither British nor French heritage accentuates the need for such a department. In fact, this policy was started under former Prime Minister Trudeau who recognized the ever-changing Canadian mosaic. No longer is Canada an exclusive haven for Europeans and Americans. It has become home to peoples of diverse cultures from all over the world representing hundreds of linguistic and ethnic groups.

The variety of people coming to our shores in ever increasing numbers makes Canada's multicultural policy a living rather than a static entity. We all hope for the day when racial, linguistic and ethnic relations will be at such a state where no official body is needed to facilitate these ends. At such a time, a universal cultural ministry would be a more appropriate mechanism to facilitate Canada's diverse cultural heritage.

Unfortunately, such a state does not exist in Canada today. For that matter, it still does not exist in areas of government jurisdiction. If we look at certain departments, we see that the percentage of visible minorities represented is far below the percentage in the general population.

The CBC, Canada's main cultural vehicle, only has 332 visible minority employees representing only 2.5 per cent of the corporation's total workforce. This is utterly unacceptable when the percentage of visible minorities in the Canadian population is closer to 8 per cent.

How does the Minister expect a greater degree of understanding to be portrayed through the broadcast media if the CBC does not have the staff who can best represent our multicultural heritage? Mr. Anthony Manera, senior vice-president of the CBC, stated that he was not satisfied with this pitifully poor representation of Canadian visible minorities in his corporation. Do you know what else he said, Mr. Speaker? He said that the CBC has been downsizing and will continue to downsize and therefore its ability to change the complexion of the CBC will be extremely limited.

It is nice to make fancy speeches and establish departments but that is simply not enough. The Minister must recognize that without greater representation of our minorities on television, and specifically the CBC, a more tolerant public attitude toward various groups will be long in coming.

If the state of things on Canada's national network are so far from the desired targets of both the Employment Equity and Multiculturalism Acts, one can only imagine the status of affairs in the private sector. It has been clear in recent months that ethnic violence and racism has been on the rise, particularly in urban areas. We have been seeing more and more ethnic youth violence in Montreal, as well as the rise of the skinhead movement which attempts a sick mimicry of early day Nazism. The League for Human Rights of B'nai Brith Canada released a major study relating to racism against the Jewish community in Canada. The number of anti-Semitic incidents during 1988 increased by over 100 per cent over 1987 and represented the highest level since 1984.

According to this organization the main factors contributing to the rise was the negative images portrayed by the media concerning the intifadah and the the trial of Ernst Zundel here in Canada and the Demjanjuk war crimes trial in Israel.

The number of incidents of vandalism against the Jewish community tripled in the past year and this included attacks against synagogues and cemeteries. The most disturbing incident occurred in Calgary where two alleged members of the KKK were apprehended before they were able to plant a bomb at a Jewish high school. Mr. Dimant, Vice President of the B'nai Brith said, and I quote:

> This study makes us painfully aware that we are still a vulnerable community and that multiculturalism, acceptance and tolerance are still far from reality in Canada.

I am sure that the Secretary of State (Mr. Weiner) is particularly concerned with these issues and I am sure he recognizes that we must confront this kind of hatred straight on or we will be left with this plague for years to come.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, racial tensions within other communities are also on the rise. During the hearings of the Sub-committee on Multiculturalism, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) emphasized that racial tensions between the white and Asian communities had increased in Vancouver.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, we have a lot of work to do. The creation of a single Department of Multiculturalism will promote better understanding and result in the elimination of racism and bigotry. Because of the evolution of the multicultural reality, the establishment of an independant and influencal department has become a necessity. We, as Liberals, feel therefore that this department should serve to promote our multicultural heritage.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, this new department could influence the attitude of Canadians by adequately funding the various groups on the basis of their services to their communities. Unfortunately, judging from the this year's estimates, it seems that there will he cuts in these organizations' grants.

[English]

While over-all the budget for multiculturalism has gone up, the funds for community support and participation have decreased by $400,000 this year. This represents a full 15 per cent cut in the funding for such groups as the Canadian Ethnocultural Council and various others which act as co-ordinating and community liaison organizations which help various communities to communicate among each other and with the various levels of government.

It seems that this Government is moving toward a more project-oriented rather than an organizationally oriented program. This, quite frankly, raises several concerns that must be addressed. The danger that arises from a greater project oriented subsidization program is that it is a band-aid approach to solve a very complex problem. When groups are funded they are able to act in unison to co-ordinate progressive and ongoing activities that build upon each other for greater racial and ethnic harmony. This is not to say that I feel projects should not be financed. Quite the opposite is, in fact, true. However, I feel that to orientate in that direction would take away from a concentrated and co-ordinated attempt at addressing the problem.

I am also concerned about whether or not this trend to cut operational support is for one, two or three years. If this is the case the effectiveness of the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship to combat racism effectively in Canada will be adversely affected.

I also found that none of the groups affected by the cuts was ever consulted by either officials of the Department of Finance or those from the Secretary of State. But then again this is perfectly consistent with the way this Government has handled all aspects of the budgetary process. Hopefully the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship will be more responsive to the groups and organizations that represent the various cultural groups of Canada. The Department needs to co-operate closely with these organizations so that it can monitor the situation out there in the real world.

We cannot let bureaucrats here in Ottawa decide in a vacuum what the reality of Canada's multicultural dimension really is.

[Translation]

We all know that the Canadian fabric is the result of our population and our immigration policy. That is why we must keep a multiculturalism policy flexible in order to accommodate new arrivals and ease their transition into Canadian society; this implies making Canadian society prepared to accept them.

[English]

Until 1967 Canada's immigration laws were somewhat restrictive, following the closed door policies practised by our Government during the First and Second World Wars and the Depression. Between 1947 and 1967 most non-British and non-French immigrants to Canada came from war torn southern and eastern Europe. By 1984, immigrants from Asia, Africa and the Caribbean constituted 62.5 per cent of the total number of people coming to Canada.

As parliamentarians we must find a way to facilitate a greater understanding between groups that in their homelands may be traditional rivals. We must ensure that Canada does not become a new theatre for old wars. The way to achieve this is not through reduced immigration. We must have our doors open to all people who are fleeing tyranny and oppression. The way to achieve this ethnic harmony in Canada is through a direct dialogue between all communities in order to foster and facilitate a better understanding of ourselves as Canadians.

As we proceed to the creation of this ministry, I cannot help but worry that it will be nothing more than window dressing set up as a fulfilment of an innocuous promise during the previous election which, incidentally, the Liberal Party advocated as well. If we look at the past record of this Government in the implementation of multicultural policies, it leaves much to be desired. It is nice that the Secretary of State (Mr. Weiner) is able to travel all across this country proclaiming that much work is needed. However, if he looked in his own backyard, he would see that much improvement is needed.

At Air Canada only 2.9 per cent of employees are members of visible minorities; at CN 2.7 per cent, at the NCC 1.4 per cent and, as I mentioned earlier, only 2.1 per cent make up visible minorities at CBC Radio Canada. It is obvious that the requirements of the Employment Equity and Multiculturalism Acts are a fair distance away from being implemented.

In December, the annual report to Parliament on employment equity stated that 34,970 members of visible minorities were employed under the Act.

In mid-May we were informed that the actual figure was 29,520, a full 5,550 less than what the Government claimed in December. These discrepancies occurred in the mess that this Government calls a post office. Instead of 11.6 per cent of the workforce at Canada Post being made up of visible minorities, only 4 per cent of the employees were actually members of this group. I hope we will see amendments to the Employment Equity Act that will ensure that the changing face of Canada be represented in areas of federal jurisdiction.

I hope the Secretary of State ensures through his duties in the new Department that the provisions of real equality are implemented and that a blunder of this magnitude never happens again.

Bill C-18 is going to establish the framework under which the Multiculturalism Act will be implemented. Unfortunately, the Act only confirmed the status quo. It put into law the goals and values which were born in the 1960s and 1970s. I hope that the Multiculturalism Act will be strengthened and improved through the introduction of meaningful amendments. It is only at this time that the Department established by this Bill will gain important status.

I would like to remind the Minister that the House is anxiously awaiting new legislation on citizenship. The provisions of the present Act are outdated and need to be changed. Hopefully the provisions of the new Citizenship Act, in concert with amendments to the Multiculturalism Act, will make the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship a mainline ministry that will be able to achieve the highest degree of tolerance for all Canadians.

• (1640)

I applaud the Government for the introduction of this Bill. I hope we can see the amendments I have proposed accepted or worked out in committee. In order to promote a multicultural heritage, the establishment of such a ministry is indeed a positive step. I only hope that the Minister and the Government strengthen various pieces of legislation to ensure that the real mechanisms of equality remain intact.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I want to stress the importance of creating such a department. Twenty years ago, we did not have to consider the various armed conflicts in the world like the one in China. We must revise our immigration policy and our policy to integrate citizens of those countries. We are a people that is proud of its legendary hospitality and we must continue our efforts in that direction.

For the future, I see a multiculturalism department that is even more important than the one this Government is considering creating. That is why we support this initiative. Over time, the importance of such a department has been felt and I believe that we cannot delay establishing it.

I wish to point out, however, that we in the Liberal Party will try to improve this Bill in committee. It needs many corrections and I will be very vigilant in this regard.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to give Canadians following this debate this message: It is also up to you to help set up this department. After all, it is not just there for new arrivals—it is also there for you. With your help and support, we will make our society proud and prosperous, at peace with itself and with its people.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak to Bill C-18. As my colleagues have said, the Bill establishes a new Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship following on the earlier Multiculturalism Act which established objectives for multicultural policy in Canada. The Department will have a Minister and possibly a Deputy Minister, though it is not quite clear whether it will have a Deputy Minister.

Previously, these responsibilities were administered by the Department of Secretary of State. There is still not a completely clear line drawn between those respective responsibilities.

The new Department will have power over most matters relating to multiculturalism and citizenship. It will have the responsibility to enforce implementation of multicultural policy as outlined in the Multiculturalism Act within all government Departments and within government institutions. I think this is one thing that is not spelled out clearly enough in the Bill. Its specific duties as outlined are to promote national policies and programs with respect to multiculturalism and citizenship, to provide services for acquisition of citizenship, to promote the values of Canadian citizenship, to promote an understanding of human rights and to make grants in support of programs. Special programs on race relations are included.

I would like to commend the Government and the Minister because, during this time of decreased funds in many areas, the Government has increased funds to promote race relations. We feel that this is very important. I cannot say this without also condemning the cuts in funds which have occurred and have caused great hardships for ethnic, native, the disabled and youth organizations, particularly for the advocacy groups.

We will be supporting this Bill. We hope it will be improved during committee stage and third reading. We support it because it has been a part of New Democratic Party policy for some time. We feel it is quite important to carry out the objectives of the multiculturalism policy and it was strongly recommended by the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism in the last Parliament. As well it has been supported across Canada by ethnocultural groups.

I have several concerns about the ability of the new Department to carry out its mandate as stated and its objectives which are outlined more specifically in Bill C-93. The present staff members who are to be transferred from the Department of Secretary of State are not sufficient to carry out the responsibilities of this Department. Clause 5(a) states that the responsibility is to initiate, recommend, co-ordinate, implement and promote national policies and programs with respect to multiculturalism and citizenship. This is a very large responsibility and certainly more staff members are needed, as are more resources for community groups.

Extra staff members from very diverse backgrounds are needed. We need people who are sensitive, come from the grass roots and understand what the communities need. These kind of people can then influence the Department, the Minister and the Government. It is very important that staff members who are culturally sensitive to multiculturalism are hired, and it is very important that there be additional funding for community programs as well. If there is not, the new Department of Multiculturalism will simply be window-dressing. It may be political tokenism on the part of the Government unless the funds exist to carry out the job. That will be the test. I do not doubt the sincerity of the Minister, but I do question whether the Government will really put any teeth into the multiculturalism policy by providing adequate resources.

I have spoken many times about my Party's concern that funds for multicultural organizations have been cut by 15 per cent, and over three years, this will accumulate to a 50 per cent reduction in funding. These are the groups that speak for ethnic communities. They are the advocates that help us and give us advice on policy. One such group is the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, and it is very important that these groups have adequate funding in order to help us do our job and help the Minister do his job.

I was very concerned to learn that funds for the Citizenship Instruction and Language Textbooks program, referred to as CILT, have been cut by 50 per cent and this program will be eliminated by 1990. I do not think many people know about this. It is very difficult to get information about it. I think it is an extremely serious situation which contradicts the commitment and obligation of the Government to citizenship development. This is a major abrogation of the federal Government's responsibility under our Constitution. The federal Government has an obligation to assist immigrants to integrate into Canada and to promote citizenship generally, both with immigrants and with Canadians.

We must have funds for a very wide range of language classes for those who come to Canada speaking little English or French. Many of them are homemakers, and if they do not learn English or French, they will never become a part of Canadian society. Without such programs, new immigrants will not integrate readily and there will be increasing mistrust and resentment within the communities. We have seen too much of that in recent years.

A few minutes ago, the Minister said that every Canadian must have the same opportunity to participate. I hope he is listening to me, because I say to the Minister that if he is to eliminate the CILT program for language training, he will very definitely deny immigrants equal opportunities. They will not have equal opportunities, nor will their children if they cannot learn the languages that are so essential to function well in Canada, to find good employment, to progress and to support their families and adequately educate them. That is very important. I hope we will see some action in this area.

• (1650)

In the Bill, the Minister knows very well that the Act states that it is his obligation to promote an understanding of the value of Canadian citizenship and to encourage participation in the social, cultural, political, and economic life of Canada. How can the Minister achieve this goal if there are no funds for language training under this Act? It is absolutely appalling that this essential program is being cut for the broad masses of immigrants. I am not talking about the programs related to employment. Those are also inadequate, but we want language programs in this Department. I hope that the provinces will take a very strong stand and protest to the federal Government that it is abdicating its constitutional responsibility in this regard.

When the Bill was tabled at first reading, I raised the question of the re-establishment of a separate Standing Committee on Multiculturalism. This was promised by two past Ministers responsible for multiculturalism. It was done in order to provide a mechanism within Parliament to monitor the implementation of the Multiculturalism Act, and the implementation in all government Departments, Crown corporations, and federal institutions.

As multiculturalism critic for the NDP I lobbied in committee, in the House, and individually with House Leaders to re-establish a separate committee. I am sorry to say that, in committee, Conservative members and one Liberal member disagreed. However, I am pleased to hear that the Government House Leader has now reconsidered. I would ask that the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons (Mr. Lewis) make an official announcement before the end of the session, in order that a separate Standing Committee on Multiculturalism and Citizenship will be established by next fall.

It is essential that the chairman and committee members of this committee, which is very closely tied in with the new Department, have a deep understanding of multiculturalism, if we are going to work together in an effective and non-partisan manner to carry out important responsibilities in the area of multiculturalism.

We, like the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, feel strongly that we still need a Commissioner of Multiculturalism. This position would be similar to the Commissioner of Official Languages. It should be a step removed from Government. Until this is accomplished, it will be very difficult to ensure that the Multiculturalism Act is being enforced.

In its usual efficient style, the Canadian Ethnocultural Council has made a number of comments about the Act that are very helpful, and hopefully we will hear from its representatives in Committee. It feels that the new Act does not specifically state that the Department will lead in implementing the Canadian Multiculturalism Act; that it is somewhat vague in its alignment with the Secretary of State which needs to be clarified because of the confusion in the minds of the public. The Council also calls for a Commissioner of Multiculturalism. It also raises many other points, both positive and critical.

In considering this Bill to establish a multicultural Department, it is important that we refer to Section 3(1) of the Canadian Multiculturalism Act. This is the Section that outlines the multicultural policy of Canada, and it is very important. It seems irrational to me to have a Bill to establish a Department without including in that Bill why we want to establish the Department. I feel that we should go back to the statement of objectives in the original multiculturalism Bill and that there should be a reference to that in the Act.

Very quickly, I wish to refer to the 10 policies outlined under Section 3(1) of Bill C–93. It includes references to the cultural and racial diversity of Canada, to multiculturalism as a fundamental characteristic of Canada, to full participation in all aspects of Canadian society, to equal treatment and protection under the law, to multicultural content in Canadian institutions, to cross–cultural relations, appreciation of cultural diversity, and heritage language preservation that is in harmony with official language policies of Canada.

The NDP views equality rights as the primary objective of multiculturalism. Long before we talked about multiculturalism in today's terms we, and our antecedents, starting with J. S. Woodsworth have spoken out strongly against the injustices toward ethnic minorities and the infringement of human rights that regrettably are in Canada's history. We have advocated redress and redress policies in regard to some of those communities.

We continue to protest the injustices in our present immigration policies. I know my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) will be elaborating on that. We continue to deplore and ask for action to remove systemic discrimination in employment against visible minority people. It is upsetting to think that this is discrimination within our own Public Service and within fields of federal jurisdiction, as well as private employers. This we have to change.

We also feel very strongly about the growing incidence of racism in Canada. I raised this in committee in relation to some racism in the media, and have asked that this be a priority. It has to be considered a priority both by this Department and by the Standing Committee.

On June 2, in my private Member's motion on the subject of recognizing multiculturalism as a fundamental character of the Canadian nation in the preamble to the Constitution, I raised a number of constitutional concerns. There is a growing awareness and a growing anxiety in many ethnic groups. In my area of Canada, in Vancouver, it comes from the Chinese community. They feel that the notwithstanding clause does not allow protection of their rights and that there must be major changes to ensure that their rights are protected under the Charter.

On June 2, my speech outlined our Party's concerns that there be greater protection of minority rights under our Constitution, as well as recognition of multiculturalism as a fundamental characteristic of Canada. There is not time to go into those issues today. However, I know my colleagues will be speaking on some of them, and we will speak on them later as the year goes on.

I wish I had more time to elaborate on multiculturalism and citizenship in Canada. The more one moves into this area, the more deeply one feels how important and enriching it is. Multiculturalism is a fundamental characteristic of Canada, whether or not it is expressed in our Constitution. More than one–third of Canadians have come from origins that are not aboriginal, French or English. This number is rapidly increasing. Together they form the largest majority in the Canadian population. In many western communities the non–English or French descendants are actually in a majority. It is rather an interesting difference between eastern, western, and central Canada.

People from Europe, Asia, and other countries bring a rich cultural heritage, as well as contributing to Canada's economic and social development. In recent years, immigrants have come in increasing numbers from Asia, the Caribbean, the Middle East, and from the Latin American countries. Canada has become a very rich and colourful mosaic and a haven for many people—not enough—from developing countries. We must be more generous in opening the door to those people. Most of the so–called white majority in Canada who originated in Europe have welcomed this change. However, there are many who have serious concerns. They must recognize that all Canadians are Canadians and have equal rights. We want no skinheads promoting fascist ideas in Canada. Multiculturalism policies must ensure these rights and eliminate discrimination and racism against persons of colour. The new Department of Multiculturalism must have appropriate, sensitive staff who have an ethnic background themselves which would prepare them for this job. There must be adequate funds for community organizations to achieve this goal.

• (1700)

Perhaps even more important than multiculturalism when one begins to think about Canadianism is the importance of promoting an appreciation of Canadian citizenship, an identity with Canada and with all our people as a whole that supersedes but also includes the specific ethnic heritage of individuals.

It was only in 1977 that we dropped British citizenship to become Canadians first. We brought home our Constitution to Canada in 1982. We are proud of this glorious land, and proud of being Canadians from diverse origins. However, we are still in the process of defining our identity. It is only the last generation which has overcome a certain complex that we had in relation to our southern neighbours.

[Translation]

For Québecers, the process was more internal. The Quiet Revolution and the nationalist movement for independence contributed to Québec's evolution. Our present policies recognize Québec as a distinct society whose culture and language must be protected.

[English]

The free trade debate helped Canadians to distinguish the important values we hold that are different from those of the Americans. For those of us who oppose the Conservative sell–out of Canadianism to the United States, I think our emotional commitment and our pride in Canada was renewed.

Our commitment to social programs show that we are a caring nation, not only interested in the almighty dollar. We care about people. We share and want all people to have security, whether they be a single mother on welfare, an elderly person on a pension or a person who is unemployed.

We are committed to regional development and to a mixed economy that allows for government intervention when this is appropriate. We are committed to preserving our environment and our resources for future generations, and to adequate planning, which means that there has to be an appropriate, well–planned role for governments.

We are also committed to social as well as economic development, not just to the market–place but to planning for people and helping our economy to provide adequate jobs to meet the needs of our population. Of course, we are committed to multicultural policy. I cannot say that these were commitments made by the Government. I can certainly say very strongly that these are commitments of the New Democratic Party as social democrats.

New Canadians and old Canadians must become much more conscious of the wonder and the freedom of being Canadians. I appeal again to all Canadians to experience the richness of getting to know their neighbours from whatever background they come and enjoying the inter–cultural activities that we can have in our communities and our neighbourhoods. This Government must restore funding for citizenship classes and must increase funding for language classes to strengthen Canada as well as to promote multiculturalism.

We must also have a new multiculturalism Act. I think some of the groundwork was laid in a previous Parliament. A Department of Multiculturalism will be of little use if there are no resources to implement multiculturalism and to promote Canadian citizenship.

I look forward, as do my colleagues, to presenting amendments in committee and to working with the Minister to make it the most effective Department possible to carry out the important policies of multiculturalism in Canada.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this afternoon's debate on a subject that is very dear to the hearts and souls, hopefully, of all Members of the Chamber. Let me start by congratulating our chief critic on multiculturalism, the Member of Parliament for Saint–Laurent (Mrs. Maheu), who I believe articulated the thoughts of our caucus colleagues. She articulated the principles by which the movement officially began in 1971. Obviously and formally, the creation and building of a nation by people from all over world began much before then.

There are those among us in our country who would suggest that the creation of a separate ministry would be paramount to ghettoizing people, concepts and ideas in a dark ugly corner. I take a somewhat different view from that, as long as we know the directions in which we are going and the final concepts at which we wish to arrive for a cultural statement on Canada and its peoples.

Like every policy, every piece of legislation evolves in terms of ideas and evolves through different times and generations. For instance, we have an evolving Constitution. There is an ongoing debate on the Meech Lake Accord which tries to amend and build upon the foundations of our federal statutes. A few months ago there were amendments to the Official Languages Act which were introduced in 1969.

To a certain degree the process that we are undergoing today is simply a modification, an adaptation to the current standards, or perhaps to the evolving standards that people place on the legislation that governs ourselves and our country.

It is important to underline the condition that we as Liberals attach—at least this Liberal—to the whole question of that evolution. That is to say that as long as we can say that this an intermediate step, that this is a bridge from where we were in 1971 to perhaps a single ministry of culture, then I think we can win those hearts that we talked about a few moments ago. That is to say that the challenge for multiculturalism is to try to bridge the different definitions that we all bring and attach to that word "multiculturalism".

The policy may mean a very different set of criteria to my father as compared with the definition I attach to it. However, which definition is more relevant? Is it my father's from an earlier generation, or is it mine? As a younger Canadians are my views more relevant? I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that both views are relevant. Both views are dynamic in their own sense of the word. Both views ought to be respected for what they are—definitions of who we are and what kind of country we have. Therefore, the challenge for multiculturalism today is to try to reflect in our policies both those views, both those generational forces that come to meet somewhere in the forum of this great Parliament.

To have a multiculturalism which simply ignores one of those two generational forces would be inadequate. That is why I believe this step to a separate ministry should only be seen as one step in that evolution, one step to a separate or single ministry of culture, so that we would be sending out a signal that multiculturalism is for all Canadians, not only for a certain segment of society, or depending upon where one comes from, or what year one arrived in Canada. In fact, it is part of our fundamental foundation as a people and as a country.

I believe it has to be seen in the long-term for us to embrace it and for us to expect the younger generation to embrace it as well. If it will not go to that final chapter, then, yes indeed, critics would have legitimacy in saying that it is short-sighted and that it will simply ghettoize people.

We have to see this measure as a sure step rather than an attempt to take a giant leap which goes nowhere. Notwithstanding that, I think the Minister and the Government have a number of shortcomings inherent in their policies and approaches to multiculturalism that have to be addressed and cannot simply be admitted to as being addressed by a Bill or by the Act.

For instance, what happens to the financial support that dwindled for those community groups? Before the election these community groups were showered with gifts and promises. Why is there one agenda before the election and a different one after the election? That will only breed cynicism, that will only breed criticism of those who suggest that somehow multiculturalism is being politicized. It is not the people of Canada who are politicizing it. It is not the ethnocultural groups who are politicizing it and selling it short. It is being circumscribed by the Government in having two different agendas, one before the election and one after the election.

What happened to the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism? A few months ago, in the last Parliament, the Minister said we do not need a commissioner because there will be a full Standing Committee on Multiculturalism to review and monitor the progress of the Multiculturalism Bill. Now we do not have a full Standing Committee on Multiculturalism but a hybrid, together with four or five other subjects. If we are not going to have a full Standing Committee to review and monitor in an efficient and vigorous way, then the Minister ought to review the whole question of the official commissioner position.

On the one hand there is an Official Languages Commissioner who reports to the House and, through the House, to Canadians. But that seems not to be good enough for multiculturalism. The Secretary of State (Mr. Weiner) is prepared and pleased to have an Official Languages Commissioner but is saying that multiculturalism is perhaps not good enough to deserve that same kind of commissioner status.

I ask him to rise and explain to Canadians why there is that double standard? If it is fine to have a Commissioner of Official Languages who does not report to a Minister or a government that will simply hide a skeleton in the closet, why should multiculturalism be different?

We have suggested and reiterate that an official commissioner is valuable because that commissioner would go through the federal civil service and report to Parliament, and through Parliament to Canadians, rather than leaving it to the Minister to tell Canadians what he wants to say and not tell Canadians what is obviously very embarrassing. The Minister is playing with a double deck by operating with an Official Languages Commissioner on the one hand while not admitting that the same concept would be valuable and reliable for the multiculturalism policy.

We have seen evidence this afternoon with respect to the treatment of the Canadian Sikh community. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) sent a letter a few months ago to the Premiers suggesting that they should not associate with certain organizations in Canada. The Secretary of State for External Affairs interjected into the refugee applications of certain Sikh applicants. The Secretary of State for External Affairs tried to block a chair of Canadian Sikh studies in Vancouver. I am suggesting that we cannot divorce ourselves from these types of issues because these issues are also embodied by that word we call multiculturalism.

It is not good enough to simply stand on a soap box at a picnic and extrapolate on the virtues and then come to Ottawa and have a very different and drastically reduced priority.

What about Meech Lake? Did the Minister talk about Meech Lake and try to explain that the opening paragraph of Meech Lake is supposed to define a country? I thought we had four fundamental variables to the equation we call Canada. One is the English, the second is the French fact, the third is the aboriginal and the fourth, if you will, is multiculture. When we put those four variables together we have the equation that defines who we are and what we are.

Why did the Government only stop on two of those variables, where it talks about the linguistic duality of English and French? What about the other two variables? The Government added them at the end of the Constitution.

People are asking, why move that to the back of the bus? If we accept the four variables as fundamental building blocks to our country, as I believe this Party does because we moved amendments to that effect but they were refused, why move them to the back of the bus?

The Government suggests that it does not matter where one sits on the bus because the entire bus is a constitutional bus. I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister, if they followed that to its logical conclusion were they prepared to put the English and French linguistic duality at the end of the Constitution and put the aboriginal and multicultural clause at the beginning of the Constitution? The answer was no. I suggest with all due respect that if it is not good enough and not respectful enough to put the English and French linguistic duality at the back of the bus, which I do not want to see, why is it so right to put the other two variables at the back of the bus? That is objectionable. That raises cynicism. It raises skepticism, but not in the people of Canada or the communities or groups, but in the Government. Those are the issues.

The whole question of anti-Semitism was raised. On Canada Day in Minden, Ontario, there will be a meeting organized by the neo-Nazi Party. In Minden, Ontario, in 1989, hundreds of people who subscribe to a neo-Nazi philosophy are expected to meet. Skinheads, only white people, will attend on Canada Day. The theme is: "Let us save Canada".

The Government has said nothing about that. It is a difficult situation, and sometimes one must decide whether to give more promotion and credibility to these people by standing up and talking about it, or addressing that very cancer which is apparent in all societies. I would like us to do the latter.

We cannot divorce ourselves from those issues. We cannot divorce ourselves from employment equity, from a government that called it an national emergency when only 300 people came to our shores some summers ago when we had invited thousands upon thousands individually? Is the Government trying to educate Canadians or excite them by that?

Mr. Speaker, we have some good things to say about this Bill, but the Minister fails to recognize that he must do better than simply give a 20-minute speech in the House or attend a cocktail party, a picnic or celebration, as important as they are, and read a prepared text. It is also time that we go beyond the 15-page speech or the 25-minute press conference, and try to address the very issues that we have addressed in the Liberal Party, the New Democratic Party, and which Members opposite have begun to address. Only then, when we attach priority to the full essence of multiculturalism in Ottawa and in Parliament, will we do justice to the feelings that we are trying to communicate to the country. Only when we stop to think what it means to people and groups will we try to embrace the very essence of what they are doing on a voluntary basis in the community, out of a belief and deep conviction.

Sometimes it hurts to see the corridors of power here in Ottawa out of whack with what is important to families, individuals and communities across the country. I draw the Minister's attention to some of those issues and advise him that we will be raising these issues in committee until such time as he takes this issue and this policy as seriously as we do.

• (1720)

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I noticed the Hon. Member made quite a strong point of the advantages of having a separate Standing Committee on Multiculturalism, and I know as a past critic that he was in favour of this. At least I assume he was since the committee as a whole were in favour and felt very strongly about this matter. I wondered if he was aware that when I raised this in the form of a motion at the standing committee that the present critic of multiculturalism of his Party voted against this idea, voted against bringing this matter back to the House to ask for reconsideration to establish a separate committee? In fact, the multicultural critic felt that this would be a way of ghettoizing multiculturalism. I appreciate knowing whether or not he agrees with that position, and if he does not, has he talked with his critic and tried to educate him?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I think the Member does no justice to herself in trying to divorce oneself from purely political partisanship in a debate that goes much further than that. We in the Liberal Party do not have to take any lessons from the New Democratic Party who preach and suggest that they have a monopoly on virtue. When we were in government, we did the appropriate things. We moved on appropriate things. We will continue to do that in Opposition and look forward to doing them in government in 1992.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question on another subject. In my remarks I mentioned that the Government has cut back 50 per cent on the SILT Program, which is essentially a program of language classes for adult immigrants. I wondered if he was aware of this and what the impact is in his community.

In British Columbia, for example, the elimination means that 23,000 students in British Columbia, or 83 per cent of the adult immigrants, will not have access to ESL classes, a very serious thing. Of course, in our schools in British Columbia over 50 per cent of the students now in elementary and high schools throughout the province do not have English as their primary language. They also need classes. As I said in my remarks, I think this is a real undermining of the whole principle of citizenship and certainly of developing an effective multicultural policy.

I would be interested in the Hon. Member's views and whether he had any more information in this area.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I realize that we have a couple more speakers who wish to put their views on the record. Therefore I will try to be very brief.

Suffice it to say that the Member from Vancouver raises a very legitimate and lamentable point in terms of English as a second language and training.

It is my view, and I have raised it in the House and I have raised it with my caucus colleagues and in the Chamber, that all Canadians would want the Government to spend as much as it takes to train new-comers, immigrants, in both or either of the official languages. It is a shame, particularly when we talk about English or French training for our immigrants and new Canadians, that it is largely the visible minority women that are left behind in terms of the language training deficiency. A lot of times, unfortunately, it is the major bread-winner, and in some groups it happens to be the male, who has access to language training facilities. The children through the process of going to school and the dynamics of playing with their friends learn one of the two official languages. However, quite often it is the woman who is left behind, whether at home or with poor economic opportunities without any hope for vertical mobility because of language deficiencies.

It is time that we grew up in this country to realize one thing, that whether it costs x millions or y millions to provide language in either English or French, it is money well spent. We cannot put a value on what it means when people are having difficulties in communicating with one another within Canadian society. It would help everyone's sense of Canadianism if we attached the proper financial investment. We would reap benefits that far outstrip the value of the dollars that we would put at the beginning of the equation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no further questions, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North on debate.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to speak on Bill C-18, an Act to establish the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto. Multiculturalism is an idea that we are still striving to fully achieve in Canada involving as it does the official recognition of the different cultures and the values of a pluralistic society that accompany them. Multiculturalism does ask to enshrine the principles that all our ethnic groups, that is, all Canadians are equal, that all of our cultures deserve respect and dignity and that cultural pluralism must receive official support.

The establishment of a Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship is an important step in the right direction and an essential instrument of national unity. A separate Department for Multiculturalism and Citizenship is necessary to ensure that these two areas are not neglected or ignored as they would be if included in a super ministry.

I must point out however that there are problems with Bill C-18 which are a cause of concern. Perhaps some of the concerns will be addressed when the Bill reaches the legislative committee.

First, there is no provision in the Bill that states that the new department will be responsible for co-ordinating the implementation of the Canadian Multiculturalism Act. It is not enough that the Bill includes general statements about the policy of multiculturalism. It should be clearly stated that the new department will be responsible for implementing the Multiculturalism Act.

Second, there is no provision for an independent commissioner of multiculturalism and therefore the effectiveness of the department will be limited. An independent commissioner, as called for by the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism in 1987, is necessary because such a commissioner would be able to monitor the Act across the Government without—and I emphasize "without"—political interference. Not only would an independent commissioner monitor multiculturalism in all departments—Justice, Immigration and Employment, to name a few—but the commissioner would also be able to initiate and carry out investigations into the implementation of programs and delivery of services by various departments.

A commissioner would be a non-partisan watchdog who would be especially effective in protecting the values of multiculturalism and citizenship in all governmental departments in ensuring compliance with the Act.

The Minister in introducing the debate on this Bill has indicated that a Standing Parliamentary Committee will be struck this fall. I believe in his sincerity and we anticipate that at least we have that second best.

It is not merely these two very specific problems with Bill C-18 which worry me. I am concerned about this Government's approach to multiculturalism in general. On the one hand, the Conservative Government has introduced this Bill to create a Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship. On the other hand, the Government has cut funding for operational support to the very groups that the Department is being established to represent and protect. To me, this is a contradiction in policy, or is it the Government's philosophy? This contradiction in policy demonstrates this Government's lack of real commitment to furthering the cause of multiculturalism in Canada.

There is another disturbing example of this Government's lack of consistency in regard to ethnic issues. The Government has said that is supports an increase in immigration although it has not set a target. Yet, in Toronto on April 4, 1989, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) made statements which included hints of a policy change on immigration levels that have caused great concern to the Canadian Ethnocultural Council. I would like to indicate at this point that it was my pleasure to have served on the executive of this Council before my election to Parliament.

• (1730)

The Canadian Ethnocultural Council has pointed out that the Minister of Employment and Immigration said that increasing immigration levels cause tensions in the areas of multiculturalism and race relations. Is the Minister not attempting to lay the groundwork for a reduction in the levels of immigration? The Government must clarify its position now and not just before election time. We must recall that immigration has been the genesis, the origin of citizenship for new Canadians.

I would like to point out one final area of concern. The federal Government reported last December that 6 per cent of workers covered by the federal employment equity law were members of visible minorities. However, in the month of May it reported that only 5 per cent of those who work for federally-regulated employers are members of visible minorities.

There is a 6.3 per cent employment rate of visible minorities in the general workplace. It is not acceptable that the Government, which should be setting an example, is failing even to keep its employment policies in line with the private sector. It is the responsibility of government to ensure that all Canadians are equal and that laws and programs exist which effectively ensure this equality.

Multiculturalism is a fundamental characteristic of Canada. Eight million Canadians, that is close to one-third of our total population, are of non-aboriginal, non-francophone, non-anglophone origins. These 8 million Canadians are truly a contributing part of our great nation.

We must embrace and act on the concept of equality in diversity. Let us again recall that the underlying principle behind our Citizenship Act is that of equality, that those born in Canada are equal to those who chose Canada to be their country. But, while outlining the principles of cultural and racial equality and discussing the need to respect the different nationalities which make up our country is important, it is not enough. The Government must commit resources to promoting the cultural pluralism of Canada if the principle of multiculturalism is to be strengthened and made a fundamental reality and principle of our country.

I think it must be a fundamental principle because it is such a vital one. As I stated when speaking on the private Members' motion on multiculturalism debated in the House on June 2, multiculturalism is about many things. It is about tolerance and racial harmony. All Canadians should be able to pursue their individual dreams and goals with equal freedom regardless of differences in appearance, accent and traditions.

Multiculturalism is about employment equity. It is about a dynamic affirmative action program, and this program is based on the principle that merit is the basis for employment; colour, creed and physical characteristics should not be considered. Multiculturalism is about equal access to affordable housing and it is also about human rights.

Given the vast and vital nature of multiculturalism and the importance of citizenship, I am pleased that a separate new Department is being created to deal with the concerns that fall within these areas.

I hope that this new Department will strive effectively; one, to promote the dignity of Canadians of all nationalities, two, to protect the rights of all of us and, three, to ensure that we achieve social harmony through strengthening our cultural mosaic. Only then will this new Department become a genuine milestone in Canadian history. The ethnocultural community in Canada has waited and fought for so long for this new Department. We shall watch the Government. Muticulturalism is truly a living fabric of our Canadian society.

Multiculturalism

Mr. Maurizio Bevilacqua: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Minister for being present here today. I am sure that by the various speeches made by the Official Opposition he has probably noticed that there are indeed longer-term goals in our society that we must be able to face. I believe that his job as Minister of Multiculturalism is indeed a very challenging one because he must cope with the ever-changing make-up of this country.

The debate we are having today is a very important one. We are not simply addressing Bill C-18, an Act to establish the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship, but are indeed speaking to the contemporary cultural reality that is Canada. More important, this debate will bring to the forefront some very fundamental questions related to the cultural policy direction that the country is willing to take to the 1990s and the 21st century.

During a period of our country's history when we are challenged by the definition of our cultural identity, it is very important to begin to review the role that multiculturalism plays in our society, indeed what necessitated the implementation of a Multiculturalism Act, what this Act is in fact responding to and, hence, what the purpose is of a separate Department. As a Canadian elected to the House of Commons, I firmly believe that I have the moral obligation to attempt to define what is Canadian culture, what is our Canadian identity.

In this nation we are often faced with a multitude of terms to define and express what is, in cultural terms, our Canadian society. Terms such as "bilingual", "multicultural", "diversity" and "pluralism" are but a few of the expressions that we have used in an attempt to come to grips with who we are and what we are. As far as I am concerned, I view our Canadian cultural reality in multicultural terms, however, not necessarily in total accordance with the traditional meaning of multiculturalism or its usage.

There is no question in my mind that contempory Canadian culture is indeed multicultural. The very essence of this reality can be seen in the many faces of our Canadians citizens. I stress "Canadian" because if we were to examine the terminology used in the description of various Canadians of different heritages, for example, Japanese-Canadians, Chinese-Canadians, Greek-Canadians, Italian-Canadians, French-Canadians and Portuguese-Canadians, we see that indeed the common point of reference, the focal point, is that they are Canadian. That is what brings all these people into a common fold.That is our common denominator.

In my past experiences I have noted that the multiculturalism policy was embracing all Canadians with the exception of the English, French and native components of our nation. That is indeed the national perception. I feel very strongly that if Canada's multiculturalism policy is to be a truly national policy, we must be able to safety state that it represents everyone. The present direction of the policy has resulted in a form of societal differentiation creating the community concept of English, French, natives and others; others being "multicultural".

• (1740)

Canadian culture is undoubtedly a sum of all parts. Multiculturalism is its essence.

I am very proud to be part of a Parliament whose objectives recognize and promote the understanding of multiculturalism, the cultural and racial diversity of Canadian society and acknowledges the freedom of all Members to preserve, enhance and share in their cultural heritage.

I am very proud to be part of a nation which recognizes that multiculturalism is a fundamental characteristic of Canadian heritage. How serious we are about this is questionable when we view for example, the Meech Lake Accord. Why was the multicultural characteristic of the country not in the preamble as were the English and French components?

We tend, if we look at the issue very, very closely, to become a bit cynical. In the spirit of optimism, we should perhaps look at ways to salvage the beauty of a truly multicultural society.

Multiculturalism per se can in fact provide and is, in fact, an invaluable resource in shaping Canada's future. A nation which promotes the full and equitable participation of individuals and communities of all origins in the continuing evolution and shaping of all aspects of Canadian society and assists them in the elimination of any barriers to such participation should be applauded. We also ensure that all individuals receive equal treatment and equal protection under the law, while respecting and valuing their diversity.

Obviously, if one is following my speech, there are terms which must be defined. I could proceed to expand on the various objectives and the positive objectives of the Multiculturalism Act but we cannot argue that the majority of the points mentioned in the Act are important statements.

The problem I have is that perhaps they are indeed just statements. When all is said and done, I think with this Act more is said than done. We must be able to look at the Act itself and the one thing which we will notice is the use of very vague language such as promote, enhance, facilitate, encourage and so on. In reality, there is really no mechanism set in place to bring to fruition these very noble and necessary progressive ideals. I am very much puzzled by how the Department is going to better address the somewhat vague Act which lacks a true sense of objective and focus.

I have many questions about this Department. For example, are we to assume that this Department is going to give so-called ethnocultural groups greater access to justice? How will they benefit? What is the ultimate goal of this Department? Is it a Department which we want today for the 1990s, or is it a Department which is part of a vision which will take us to the 21st century. Will the rights of ethnocultural Canadians be better represented?

Are they not going to receive, in essence, the same protection which they would normally receive under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Criminal Code, the Citizenship Act and the Canadian Human Rights Act? Where do we see the improvement?

There is no question in my mind that the Department will have to view the Multiculturalism Act as the cornerstone of its policy implementation. Quite frankly, with an Act which lacks direction and substance, I am wondering how the policy direction and enforcement will be carried out by the Department.

It is very obvious to anyone who has read the Act that indeed it does not give any additional rights of citizenship to people, nor does it erase the barriers of discrimination or racism. It is quite evident that it has failed at that.

The Act states the obvious ideals. They are simply on paper. How do we take the myth and how do we make it become reality? That is the issue at hand.

However, if and when this Department will be set up, I firmly believe that it should not turn out to be solely a financial clearing house, or grants for folklore dances and sing a song and that sort of thing. This country has grown up. The reality is a very different one.

If I may make a recommendation to the Minister who has kindly stayed for this speech, I would like the ministry to devote the majority of its resources in sensitizing Government agencies and Departments right across the board. I think an excellent start would be the Ministry of Justice so that they know that there is a new reality out there, that Canada is no longer a bicultural country but indeed the official culture is multiculturalism. Perhaps in Immigration and Employment, where we have the issue of employment equity and affirmative action. Sensitizing Government to the new reality is crucial. However, I must state that this should have been started with or without a Multiculturalism Act or Department. It is a responsibility of the entire Government and elected officials to keep up to date with the changes which take place in our society.

A true multicultural country will only be achieved when the political, economic and social structures of this nation will reflect its cultural diversity, a diversity that should concentrate its energies not only on the retentions of one's cultural heritage and background but also in the development of a true Canadian culture whose essence is multicultural.

Citizens of this country have listened to quite a bit of rhetoric about multiculturalism. This empty rhetoric should be sincerely and seriously examined. We must be able to, and begin to differentiate between the myths and the reality of multiculturalism. If this Department were to solely depend on the Multiculturalism Act as its cornerstone, and may I add, if our human rights were to solely depend on the Multiculturalism Act as its cornerstone, then I predict that it will not succeed in aiding the definition and development of Canadian culture.

The ultimate goal if we are going to get serious about building a nation, and if we are going to get serious about developing a nation that we can call Canada and bring everyone together under the spirit of nationhood, is that we must eventually, not tomorrow, but in the future be looking at the establishment of a ministry of culture which recognizes everyone equally. In all our great policies and Government policies, I think that nation-building should be paramount. Nation-building should be our focal point. Multiculturalism should be treated no differently.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make some brief submissions with respect to the Bill before the House today, entitled "An Act to establish the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto".

• (1750)

As you know, Mr. Speaker, last year the Parliament of Canada passed a Multiculturalism Act. That was the first Act on multiculturalism in Canada. It was a declared policy of the Government of Canada to have multiculturalism as its official policy.

I have some very serious difficulties in understanding what multiculturalism means. I would submit to you that it does not mean what it is supposed to mean in practice in Canada according to the dictionary definition of multiculturalism. Permit me the opportunity to explain.

Multiculturalism means multi, many. It should mean everybody. It should mean anglophones and francophones and those with Italian origin, Greek origin and German origin. That is what it ought to mean in the pure sense of the word. Unfortunately, since the introduction of the policy of multiculturalism in Canada, it has come to mean something different and that is what causes me considerable concern. It has come to mean that if you have origins other than French or English then you are multicultural, you are an immigrant, an ethnic. I regret that very much that as a policy of the Government of Canada there is a clear distinction between francophones and anglophones on the one hand and the multiculturals or the immigrants and sons and daughters of immigrants on the other hand.

I would not have any difficulties if we all considered ourselves part of the multicultural community but we do not. That is a reality. If you ask average Canadians what multiculturalism means, they certainly exclude French Canadians and English Canadians. I would suspect that if the Government of Canada were to do a survey or conduct a poll asking Canadians what multiculturalism means, I would suspect that the large majority of Canadians who answered such a poll would define it as being anything other than French or English.

The policy of multiculturalism in practice is divisive in my view. It has been rendered divisive. It renders a certain group of Canadians to be a different type—and I don't want to use the term second class or third class—it renders them different. It puts them on the periphery.

I was reading the Multiculturalism Act passed by Parliament last year. In the last recital, it states:

> AND WHEREAS the Government of Canada recognizes the diversity of Canadians as regards race, national or ethnic origin, colour and religion as a fundamental characteristic of Canadian society—

Where have we heard that term "fundamental characteristic of Canadian society" before? We heard it in the Meech Lake Accord. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and 10 First Ministers got together, they tried to define what Canada means, what it means to be a Canadian. They referred to certain fundamental characteristics and the language is here, used in the Multiculturalism Act. When they talk about fundamental characteristics in the Meech Lake Accord, they refer to French-speaking Canadians and English-speaking Canadians as if to suggest that those were the only fundamental characteristics of Canada.

My mother, an immigrant to this country, does not speak fluent French. She does not speak fluent English and by implication, therefore, she is not a fundamental characteristic of Canada. Nor are the hundreds of thousands of other Canadians who have origins other than French or English.

I argued and others argued at the time of the Meech Lake debate that if you are truly defining the essence of Canada and what Canada is, you surely must include as fundamental characteristics the immigrants who came here and chose Canada as their homeland. The First Ministers did not include the immigrants, the multiculturals, as part of the fundamental characteristic of Canada and there was another very serious and grave omission, the aboriginal people.

Why were they not included as a fundamental characteristic of Canada, Mr. Speaker? All 11 First Ministers in their haste to come together to decide on something excluded the aboriginal people and the 38 per cent of Canadians who have origins other than French or English.

I look now at the Multiculturalism Act and the words appear in the recital talking about the diversity of Canadians as regards racial, national or ethnic origin as a fundamental characteristic. If it is a fundamental characteristic, enough to put in a recital of a Bill of Parliament, why was it not enough to include it in a constitutional amendment that will be there forever and a day until further amended?

Let me give another example of the concern I have with respect to what multiculturalism has come to mean in Canada. A few years ago the Government of Canada had to address the question of Japanese-Canadian redress. The Japanese-Canadians were dealt with in an unjust fashion in the two World Wars. The Government of Canada decided that something should be done about it. We agreed. But the Government handed that responsibility over, not to the Minister of Justice, not to the Prime Minister's Office but to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Weiner). If that is not the ultimate insult, I do not know what is. Just because Japanese-Canadians are not considered francophones or anglophones on an issue involving them, it is"give the matter to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism". What in God's name does the trampling of the human rights of the Japanese in the Second World War have to do with multiculturalism?

The mind set here in Ottawa, in the legislatures across the country as well as in the minds of a lot of Canadians is that if you are not French or English you are multicultural. What would the reaction have been in Canada if the issue of war criminals were handed over to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism?

Mr. Milliken: It would never have happened.

Mr. Nunziata: Right. It would never have happened, my colleague says. It ought not to have happened with respect to the Japanese-Canadian redress question. That is an example of the problem with multiculturalism.

My time is almost up, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to continue my comments when the House reconvenes in consideration of this legislation.

I was born in this country. My parents are immigrants. I am not a francophone, I am not an anglophone—at least I do not consider myself a francophone or an anglophone. But what am I? A lot of people like to refer to me as an ethnic Member of Parliament or part of the multicultural community. In terms of the powers that be, one often refers to the linguistic duality. It is referred to in the Meech Lake Accord: French-speaking, English-speaking. At some point in time this Government—and I am speaking of this Parliament—has to come to realize that there is more to being a Canadian than being French or English. There is more to being a Canadian than being a francophone or an anglophone. I consider myself just as much a Canadian as any francophone or any anglophone in this House. As long as we keep talking about hyphenated Canadians, Italian-Canadians, Japanese-Canadians, francophones, anglophones, we will forever keep people on the periphery, on the outside. Rather than talk about differences, whether it is the distinct society or—

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-31, an Act to amend the Governor General's Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-32, an Act to amend the Advance Payments for Crops Act and the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to grant the Minister leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY FROM WINDSOR—LAKE ST. CLAIR TO WINDSOR—ST. CLAIR

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-254, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Windsor—Lake St. Clair.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, the reason for this Bill is quite simple. The title Windsor—Lake St. Clair is by comparison to Windsor—St. Clair more difficult to say. Perhaps more important is the fact that there are no constituents living in the lake.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCurdy: It is preferable, therefore, to have the title of the riding correspond to the fact that my electors are land based.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PETITIONS

ALLEGED MILITARIZATION OF ECONOMY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to present a petition from a number of constituents of Kamloops, British Columbia.

The petitioners are very concerned about what they perceive to be the Government's support for the growing militarization of our economy. They want Canada, through Parliament, to cease all government involvement in the expansion of the international market for military and policing equipment. They wish that the Government would take action to ensure that countries which violate human rights are not permitted to arrange purchases of military and policing equipment from Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I present another petition on behalf of constituents of Kamloops, British Columbia.

The petitioners are concerned that the Government has, in a sense, severely abused the Unemployment Insurance Act by expecting training programs to be funded in large part by funds contributed through the unemployment insurance package. They are asking Parliament to move immediately to adopt the recommendations presented to it by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration in its first report to the thirty-third Parliament, second session, and to reject any proposal to fund these retraining programs from the unemployment insurance fund.

HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition on another matter. Petitioners from Kamloops, British Columbia are concerned that the Government may in fact be supporting the exploration of minerals and hydrocarbons off our West Coast.

The petitioners are making the point at some length that this would be inappropriate and are therefore simply calling upon Parliament to stop any hydrocarbon exploration activities off the West Coast of British Columbia.

EXTRADITION LAW AMENDMENTS

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions pursuant to Standing Order 36. They concern the extradition of criminals out of Canada.

The petitioners want the laws of Canada revised so that people can be extradited for crimes committed elsewhere.

PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, once again I rise to present petitions signed by Canadians who are concerned about the future of the Port of Churchill.

The Port of Churchill is crucial to the health of the economy of the prairie provinces. Already, the result of the reduced grain shipments through Churchill is beginning to show. An astounding 83 of our 185 track maintenance workers on the railway lines in northern Manitoba are being told that their jobs will be abolished in the next five months.

Petitioners from Winnipeg, Churchill, Ilford, The Pas, all in Manitoba, and from Hudson Bay in Saskatchewan call on the House of Commons to ensure that, at the very least, 3 per cent of Canada's annual grain shipments be shipped out of Churchill.

Only by stabilizing the flow of grain across the Prairies to Churchill can we stabilize the economies and the communities of our prairie provinces and maintain the jobs of the track workers there.

PENSION LAW AMENDMENTS

Mr. Ross Reid (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present to the House today a petition signed by nearly 6,000 teachers in the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador, members of the Newfoundland Teachers Association under the presidency of Mr. Keith Coombs.

These teachers are concerned that the anticipated changes to the Canadian laws affecting pensions will directly and significantly affect their pension plan and the pension benefits they have negotiated with the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador over a period of time, provisions that have been negotiated as part of a broader compensation package, a compensation package that reflects the realities of teachers and the realities of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Their prayer is that the Government either abandon these amendments or make the amendments suitable to accommodate the particular realities of the pension plan.

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of submitting a petitionin signed by several hundred of the electorate from my part of the country. These petitions have been properly certified according to Standing Order 36.

All of the signatories condemn the Government for its emasculation of VIA Rail and its intention to cancel routes across Canada. The petitioners point out that this is an unreasonable thing to do in the context of the need for a reconstructed system of transportation.

They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain, improve, and modernize VIA Rail in those area of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound and energy efficient alternative to other modes of transportation.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to answer Question No. 77 today.

[Text]

CROWN-GRANT LOGS

Question No. 77—Mr. Gardiner:

1. For the past ten years, how many applications to export Crown-grant logs from the "E & N" lands have been received from (a) MacMillan-Bloedel (b) British Columbia Forest Products (c) Fletcher Challenge (d) Canfor (e) Canadian Pacific Forest Products?

2. Were such bids made by B.C. manufacturers and, if so, (a) how many (b) what was the comparison with bids made to export lumber by smaller manufacturers?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of International Trade): From 1986 federal statistics show over 400 applications were received for the export of Crown-grant logs. Specific information about companies is of a commercial and confidential nature.

Prior to issuing export permits, bids are solicited from interested log buyers by notification in the "Canada Gazette" and/or directly to potential buyers to determine whether or not shipments are surplus. The determination of whether logs are surplus is made by the Timber Export Advisory Committee (TEAC) consisting of federal and provincial authorities, and industry experts. Record of the bids is maintained by TEAC and are retained by the provincial government authorities. Federal records of permits are retained for approximately one year as permit validity is restricted to 120 days.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Hon. John McDermid (for Minister of State (Finance)) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. McDermid (for Minister of State (Finance)) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments on Bill C-17. When the Bill was presented earlier, we indicated our support for this legislation.

As the finance critic for the Opposition indicated in his remarks earlier, we are concerned about the question of importation of pornographic materials. Although we recognize that the extension that is provided for in this Bill will be helpful, it is to be hoped that greater certainty be established through either regulation or by legislation to provide for a more structured means by which the importation of pornography can be controlled.

We recognize that there have been efforts made in this area. It is not an easy task to deal with such a situation, but this extension will be helpful.

It is clear that those changes, although they have been welcomed by Members on both sides, point out the need for further refinement in dealing with customs tariff areas.

Although this is a beginning, the Government will need to look more closely at some of the items involved here, particularly with respect to pornography.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff. This Bill does several things, largely administrative in nature, but it makes certain amendments to eliminate the tariff on certain goods which are not produced in Canada, to change to some degree some of the remission orders, and to remove duties from certain products such as time recorders, vessels for scrapping, and checking fixtures imported temporarily for manufacturing production equipment.

Duty is also reduced on low alcohol beer, and excise and duty sales taxes are raised to align the treatment of imported lower alcohol beer into line with domestic beer. It also extends the authority to restore the pre-harmonized system tariff rates. In large part, the Bill is administrative in nature. We have no objections to those sections.

One section of the Bill deals with customs tariff prohibition on pornographic, hate, treasonable, and seditious materials. On December 31, 1989 the current regulation is scheduled to expire. This Bill proposes that no longer will it be necessary for annual review of this section in Parliament. In 1985 when this section was implemented as the result of a court case, it was decided that it was important that Parliament have a chance to review this particular amendment on an annual basis.

Since that time, through the Ministry of Justice, there have been Bills presented to the House, which have not gone through owing to the election last fall, to deal with the more serious issue of the definition of pornographic and seditious material, hate literature, and so on.

The customs Department and its officers find themselves making decisions based on an ill-defined definition of materials upon which they have to make judgments. In the Salman Rushdie The Satanic Verses case, customs officers made a decision to withhold the importation of that book for several days based on an interpretation of this particular Act. That then led to a fairly large controversy on the ability of customs officers to make those choices on the law as it stands. Clause 25 of the Bill is not highly explanatory and states:

> Code 9956 in Schedule VII to the said Act is amended by striking out the words following paragraph (d) thereof.

Basically that means that rather than having to come back to Parliament on an annual basis to discuss this issue and to seek further extension, it will be included in the Act for an indefinite period of time.

We raised this question in 1985 when it was originally instituted, and we still have considerable problems with it. Admittedly, much of the problem rests with the Ministry of Justice having to define this and to set the policy. Customs Tariff obviously implements the policy and makes the decisions. However, the responsibility for the definition rests with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis). This is a major unfinished piece of business. The Criminal Code must be examined in relation to this area.

As I stated, there continues to be a problem in this area. There was the recent case to which I referred concerning the Salman Rushdie book. We do not know what other cases may arise of a similar nature. The place that this must be addressed is within the Criminal Code by the Ministry of Justice.

However, this time it is not going forward, at least in this session of Parliament it would appear, and for that reason we will oppose the Bill based on Clause 25 specifically, because of our concern that until this issue is clarified in the Criminal Code it should come before Parliament on an annual basis for review.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. Hon. Members know that the Act is a legislative response to changing circumstances. The needs of the business community for exporters and importers make necessary a number of technical changes to the Customs Tariff.

I might suggest to my friends in the New Democratic Party that an annual review by Parliament, referring to the section on the importation of hate literature, seditious materials, and pornographic materials has nothing whatever to do with the Customs Act specifically but more with the Criminal Code. In fact, that is where the review should take place as to definition and not, if I can put it this way, to the policing of the Criminal Code which Customs has to do.

Examining this on a yearly basis is a superficial examination, as the Hon. Member knows since she was in committee. More properly, it should be addressed by the Ministry of Justice. I hope Members opposite would reconsider their opposition to this particular Bill.

Finally, I would like to thank the members of the legislative committee who dealt with this matter in a very thorough and expeditious manner. I look forward to the passage of Bill C-17.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

• (1130)

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Recognizing that the New Democratic Party has forced the vote, Your Honour will find that there is unanimous agreement among all Parties to defer that vote until 6 p.m., when there is another deferred division scheduled.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, what I think the Whip of the New Democratic Party is trying to do is save the House a little bit of time. If the bells were to ring, then we would defer the vote until this evening at 6 p.m. when there are other votes scheduled. However, if we can do it without the ringing of the bells, and with the concurrence of all three Parties, then on this occasion I think that that would be appropriate.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I thank the chief government whip for that very specific detail. The bells have not started to ring. Therefore, we can do anything with unanimous consent. However, if the bells had started to ring I would have invoked Standing Order 45(5), which gives either the official opposition whip or the chief government whip the privilege, I could say, to approach the Chair and to ask Your Honour to defer the vote until 6 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed that we shall not ring the bells and defer the vote until 6 p.m. this day?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jean Charest (for Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the National Energy Board Act and to repeal certain enactments in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am rather disappointed that the Government has not seen fit to have someone from its side to introduce this Bill, particularly since this is second reading.

It is a very important Bill, although the Government would have us believe differently. The Government describes Bill C-23 more or less as a Bill to do some housecleaning points with respect to the National Energy Board. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that it is a great deal more than just a few housekeeping points with respect to the National Energy Board.

Bill C-23 has tremendously far-reaching implications for our country. It will change dramatically the way in which we will allow exports of electricity from our producing provinces into the United States. To a large extent it will affect the regulations and the conditions under which consuming provinces will be able to receive electricity from the producing provinces.

In the past we have had certain rules and regulations, a strong presence in the National Energy Board, regarding this point. I think the system has worked quite well. With respect to the National Energy Board, we are also making some changes to the Board itself. We are getting a few significant changes with respect to the export of oil and gas from Canada into the United States and presumably other countries, if we are going to be in a position to sell oil to other countries.

I think the major issue here is electricity. The Government has altered drastically the means by which we are going to export electricity into the United States and the conditions under which we can assure our interconnecting utilities, that is, other provinces connected to the producing provinces, of at least a portion of the electricity from the producing provinces at a comparable price.

To begin I would like to talk about the situation as it was which gave the National Energy Board a very strong presence. The Board, which was first recommended by the Borden Commission in 1958, has been a marvellous organization which has served the country extremely well. Even today the National Energy Board is comprised of very competent individuals. They have done the job that has been asked of them extremely well. I think it is one of our best agencies.

First and foremost the National Energy Board has had the jurisdiction to approve or to turn down the export of oil and gas and electricity into the United States. With respect to electricity there were certain guidelines under which the Board operated.

The first was that the producing provinces had to be able to pay the cost of producing the electricity before the Board would allow it to be exported, something which makes a great deal of sense. Also, the producing province had to include in its cost of production certain indirect effects of that production. The foremost effect was environmental. If there were environmental effects as a result of the production of electricity then, of course, there would be a cost not only to the producing province, but a cost to the federal Government as well, which should be compensated for in the price of electricity. That is to say, the price should be able to allow for the reimbursement of the province and the citizens of the province the cost of producing that electricity, and the cost of bringing back the environment as much as possible to the state it was before the actual production of electricity took place.

The second point is that if it was being sold into the United States it could not be sold below the least cost alternative. That is to say the National Energy Board insisted that if we are going to sell electricity to the United States it could not be below the cost of the other form of energy which was the cheapest in the United States. For instance, if natural gas was cheaper than all other fuels in the U.S., then the price of electricity, the comparable energy value of electricity, could not be cheaper. It could not be sold more cheaply into the U.S. than the equivalent of the cost of natural gas.

Third, if electricity were to be sold into the U.S. then interconnecting utilities, in particular other provinces, had the right to make application to the National Energy Board to have at least a portion of that electricity sold at a comparable price. This was considered fair for two reasons, the first being that it would be natural to assume that we would first look after the interests of other provinces in Canada before we looked after the interests of foreign countries.

Some of the other provinces, and I think in particular of the smallest province, Prince Edward Island, was absolutely dependent upon getting its electricity from Quebec through New Brunswick, which made that province very vulnerable. With that in mind, the Board protected all the provinces to ensure that they were looked after in that regard and that the price for which the electricity would be sold to these other provinces would be the same as it would be sold in the United States, thereby not creating hardship for the producing province. Of course, there would be different cost depending upon the cost of transmission of the electricity. If it went to a province that was farther away than the American market, of course it would be more expensive to that province because of the transportation charges. That was a benefit for all of Canada and was considered to be a very strongly held principle by the former Liberal Government.

However, there were some objections which I think have to be looked at and considered. Some of the producing provinces were concerned, and I think with some justification, that if they sold to interconnecting utilities then those utilities in turn would sell that electricity into the United States at a higher price, thereby making a profit for electricity that was not theirs. All they would have done was take it from one province and sell it into the United States, thereby making a sizeable sum of money on electricity which was generated in another province. That made the generating provinces somewhat upset, which I think is understandable. It was something that was in the forefront of the Government's mind when it brought forward this legislation. While it has dealt with this, in doing so it has created many problems within the Bill itself.

• (1140)

This legislation is not suitable for the country. It is a cop out on the role of the federal Government on its responsibility to Canada. It is abandoning its role with respect to jurisdiction over the export of electricity and control of the environment to allow the provinces to do what they want.

Of course, there are provincial laws with respect to energy. Electricity, perhaps more than other forms of energy, lies within provincial jurisdiction. That has always been recognized and must continue to be recognized. The provinces have their own responsibilities and jurisdiction.

Bill C-23 is an Act to amend the National Energy Board Act, but as I said earlier, it is considerably more than that. Clause 58.19 states:

> For the purposes of sections 58.2, 58.21 and 58.22, a law of a province is in relation to lines for the transmission of electricity from a place in the province to another place in the province if the law is in relation to any of the following matters;

One consideration is:

> (c) assessments of their impact on the environment;

This is, to be solely within the jurisdiction of the province. Transmission from one part of the province to another part of the province, and concerns regarding the environment, are a provincial concern. That is not overly disturbing because the province will have to take responsibility for any decisions regarding transmission lines that are offensive environmentally within that province.

Clause 119.06 deals with licences and the export of electricity to the United States. It states:

> (2) In deciding whether to make a recommendation, the Board shall have regard to all considerations that appear to it to be relevant, including—
> (b) whether the exportation of the electricity would result in the contravention of or failure to comply with environmental requirements of the Government of Canada;

I will return to that clause later, but the point I want to make is that the Government has addressed the transmission of electricity from one part of the province to another part of the same province, as the responsibility of the Department of the Environment of the province, and the export of electricity to be the jurisdiction of the federal Government, but the Bill does not deal with the interprovincial sale of electricity. There is nothing in the Bill dealing with who has control over problems with the environment when electricity is sold from one province to another. This major omission has been brought to the attention of the Government but it has not dealt with it.

Rather than making a simple omission, I believe the Government has done this intentionally. Let me refer to a speech made by the former Minister of Energy, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) in 1988. He said:

> It is inevitable that provincial regulations will be applied to the determination of the detailed routing for international power lines. National Energy Board regulation of the detailed route is hence unnecessary except, perhaps in the case of a line traversing more than one provinces that is not supported by all of the provinces in which it will pass.

He made that point in his speech but there is nothing in the Bill to deal with that matter. He went on to say:

> The detailed routing and land acquisition provisions of the National Energy Board Act will therefore not apply to international power lines except when: (i) the line passes through more than one province; and (ii) a sponsoring province so requests.

Even though a licence for routing power lines is extraterritorial as far as Canada is concerned, the former Minister said that the federal Government can only take into consideration the environmental questions when a line passes through more than one province and when the sponsoring province so requests. That is completely unacceptable, particularly when one considers the importance of environmental factors today and the attention being given to the environment by Canadians today.

The Minister went on to say:

The Government of Canada will now seek to develop—

That is within the legislation before us today:

—in co-operation with the provinces and the electrical industry, environmental guidelines and standards applicable to electricity generation and transmission. The goal would be a co-ordinated nation-wide effort designed to achieve a consensus on environmental norms, while providing flexibility on how these norms are to be adapted to local circumstances and on how they are to be achieved.

There is no consensus in this legislation. There is no consensus brought before us in the House today. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) will tell us that the consensus exists, but to my knowledge and according to my information, no consensus has been reached between the provinces on the one hand and the federal Government on the other.

Let me turn to Clause 58.29(4). It states:

The appropriate authority may grant leave under this section after construction of the proposed work has commenced if the appropriate authority is satisfied that the work was urgently required and, prior to the commencement of construction, the appropriate authority was notified of the intention of the holder of the permit or certificate issued in respect of the line to proceed with the proposed work.

I suggest this actually encourages the start-up of construction of power lines before approval is given. The Government is acting irresponsibly in making such an insinuation.

Clause 58.39 states:

The Governor in Council may make regulations for carrying into effect the purposes and provisions of this Part, including regulations—

Let me illustrate some of the stipulations of the regulations:

(a) prescribing matters in respect of which terms and conditions of permits may be imposed:

(b) respecting the information to be furnished in connection with applications for permits:

(c) specifying considerations to which the Board shall have regard in deciding whether to recommend to the Minister that an international power line be designated by order of the Governor in Council under Section 58.15; and

(d) prescribing the form of elections filed under Section 58.23.

This brings us to a very important point regarding this legislation. Regardless of the fact that it has many clauses, it is merely shell legislation. The Government has intentionally made the Bill so innocuous, bland and ineffective that we cannot say what it will accomplish unless we have a complete list of the regulations before us.

The legislation is very indefinite and uncertain, yet we are being asked to comment on and approve it at second reading. The Bill is too sketchy. What the Government is doing of course, having intentionally made the Bill as sketchy as it possibly can, is trying to bring in after the Bill is passed the meat of the whole process of the export of electricity in regulations.

I would like to go to what I consider perhaps the key to this Bill. How are we going to regulate the export of electricity into the United States? This Government has come through with a novel concept. It talks about permits and licences. You can export electricity based on licences or you can export electricity based on permits.

If you read the Act, it does not give you a great deal of information other than to say that the National Energy Board can agree to the export of electricity into the United States via a permit without a Board hearing. That is, the National Energy Board will decide if it wants to allow the export of electricity from any province of Canada into the United States and give a permit for this export, but there will be no hearing involved. That means that there is no way really that we have a chance to get the full disclosure of the actual export.

Then it goes one step further and says that if the National Energy Board feels that there should be a hearing, which is the National Energy Board's right and which it has done up to the present time very effectively—albeit some applications have taken a long time to be approved, but that could be remedied with changes in procedure—but it can give a permit without a hearing. However, if the National Energy Board finds that there should be a hearing, they have to make this recommendation to the Governor in Council. The Governor in Council decides whether there should be a hearing or not.

Therefore, it really is not the National Energy Board that is controlling the export of electricity, it is the Governor in Council and the federal Government. It decides, be it for political reasons, leverage or whatever, without giving any kind of answer or explanation as to why, whether there is going to be a review or not. If there is a hearing or a review and the review is approved, then of course there is a licence issued. If the Governor in Council says no, there is not to be a hearing, then the permit is given.

This is a complete abdication of the principles of review that have been so important in dealing with Canada's energy self-sufficiency and the export of energy into the United States. I do not doubt that the sale of electricity is very important to the provinces. I frankly do not see many reasons that exist for denying applications, but still it is a federal responsibility. It is a federal responsibility, but Canadians have the right to look at the applications and get some idea of what it is that the Government is doing by way of commerce with the United States.

The Free Trade Agreement has already ruled out the second rule of thumb. That is, that energy can only be sold into the United States at no less a price than the least cost alternative. The Government seems to be saying in this Bill that the price is purely within the realm and jurisdiction of the province and that it does not want to interfere in the provincial domain regardless of whether the domain in which the provincial government is acting is a federal domain or not. What the federal Government is saying is, if the provincial Government has made regulations, the federal Government should not interfere. It is a travesty of the rights of Canadians. It is a travesty as far as this Government's responsibility to fulfil its role in the export of energy into the United States.

Just let me give an example from that same speech that the then Minister of Energy made in September of 1988. He said:

> As I have already noted, this regulatory approach does not explicitly take account the fact that Canadian utilities are already comprehensively regulated by the provinces. The new policy does. It can be summarized very briefly.

Four of the points that he makes in his summary are:

> Approval will be by permit, except in those cases designated by the Governor-in-Council. Permits will not require a public hearing or a review by the Governor-in-Council.
>
> The Governor-in-Council may designate an export for licensing or a power line for certification if there is any reason to believe that regulation by the sponsoring province is insufficient.
> Designations will be made on the advice of the Board, and such advice will be made public.
> Proposals that have been designated by the Governor-in-Council will be reviewed by the NEB through the public-hearing process. In considering the application, the Board will have regard to all relevant matters.

The reference to all relevant matters will be the matters set down in the directive of the Governor in Council in the regulations which we do not have at the present time and dealing with the licensing of the application that really the Governor in Council will dictate, not the National Energy Board.

I want to look at another point which I think is very important. At that time, approximately September 2, 1988, we have an example of what the Government of Canada was looking at in a letter to Mr. R. Priddle, Chairman of the National Energy Board. The former Minister of Energy said:

> Where appropriate, the Governor-in-Council may designate exports and international power lines for licensing or certification procedures. Once designated, an application will be considered by the Board through a public-hearing process and any authorization will require Governor-in-Council approval.

It is very strongly stated that there is not to be a hearing unless the Governor in Council says that there is going to be a hearing. With this whole realm of abandoning the responsibility over jurisdiction of exports of energy, and particularly in this case, electricity, we cannot see this Government actually requiring a hearing in any situation.

The former Minister of Energy, the present Minister of Communications goes on to say:

> Designations will occur in instances where there is reason to believe that provincial review procedures are insufficient for determining whether a proposal is in the Canadian public interest.

What provincial review procedures? Today the provinces get a contract and they sell. Those are the review procedures, and to say that the review procedures are not sufficient really does not differ one case from another. As I have said, we are just going to have a complete abdication of responsibility by the federal Government in this regard.

Where we had the most concern, and this is something to which I alluded earlier, was whether the interconnecting utilities would be affected by the sale of electricity into the United States. There is considerable progress to be made in that regard. Subsection (2) of Section 119.06 says:

In deciding whether to make a recommendation, the Board shall have regard to all considerations that appear to it to be relevant, including—

(c)(i) informs those who have declared an interest in buying electricity for consumption in Canada of the quantities and classes of services available for sale, and

(ii) given an opportunity to purchase electricity on terms and conditions as favourable as the terms and conditions specified in the application of those who, within a reasonable time after being so informed, demonstrate an intention to buy electricity for consumption in Canada—

There are a couple of things there which I think are important. First, the province that buys the electricity from the exporting province must show that that electricity is going to be consumed in Canada. That is easy for a province such as Prince Edward Island because Prince Edward Island is not in the position to export electricity. However, when provinces generate electricity from coal, nuclear power, or perhaps co-generation, how do we determine which electricity that second province would in turn export into the United States in breach of this provision?

• (1200)

There has to be some determination by the National Energy Board of who would be breaching that guideline. We cannot put the burden of proof back on the province that buys it. If the words "the purchasing province, within a reasonable time after being so informed, demonstrate an intention to buy electricity for the consumption in Canada" are questioned, it then becomes an argument between the two provinces.

The other question is when this electricity agreement has to be entered into. What if there are disagreements and that struggle drags on and on? Who then has the power to intercede? I think that there are questions which are not going to be healthy in the dealings between one province and another.

I would like to point out as well that there is a tremendous amount of latitude with the Governor in Council and I want to mention again that there are two systems. The National Energy Board can issue a permit without an investigation, but if it wants an investigation it has to ask the permission of the Governor in Council. Permission is given under Clause 119.07 which says:

The Governor in Council may make orders

(a) designating an exportation of electricity as an exportation that is subject to the issuance of a licence under section 119.08;

(b) specifying considerations to which the Board shall have regard in deciding whether to issue such a licence; and

(c) revoking any permit issued in respect of the exportation.

Therefore, if the National Energy Board wants to have a hearing it has to get approval from the Governor in Council. The Governor in Council not only says whether or not the hearing will be approved but, if it is approved by the very Act itself, the Governor in Council specifies considerations to which the Board shall have regard in deciding whether to issue such a licence. That takes all the power away from the National Energy Board, the agency which was set up by a former Government of Canada to regulate the export of electricity and oil and gas into the United States.

We have come a long way in reducing the powers of the National Energy Board. We did so, of course, through the Free Trade Agreement, and we are going to do so again through this Bill. We are going to have to study this Bill very carefully.

One thing of which I am glad with regard to Bill C-23 is that it will not be going to committee until the fall when we will have a chance to question at length officials and the Minister regarding these provisions.

It is also important to talk to the National Energy Board and the various provinces to get their opinions. We are going to have to take a very hard look at this. We also say in this Bill, with respect to oil and gas, that the Board does have the power to regulate price in the sale of oil and gas, except in the case of the United States.

I am wondering if this may not be the start of a continental energy policy with the United States. The Government says not; it says that the Free Trade Agreement does not give a continental energy policy. In fact, the Government, quite correctly, still has the power to assure that energy not be sold into the United States at a price cheaper than that at which that form of energy is available in Canada. However, if that provision holds in this Bill and the Government abandons all authority and all provision for regulating any price at which energy is sold into the United States, we will have in fact entered into a continental energy policy with the United States.

This Bill is a real problem for this House. It is going to be a problem for Canada. It is going to be a further abdication of federal government responsibility, which the Government does better than anything else it takes on. I hope that we can give this Bill a full study. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we will not be agreeing to this Bill until some very significant changes have been made.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend has already mentioned, there are a number of interesting, if somewhat arcane aspects to Bill C-23, all of which are worthy of some attention.

I would like to devote my remarks today to those parts of the Bill which deal with its principal goals, the guts of the Bill which seek, simply put, to make it easier for provincial jurisdictions to export electrical power to the United States of America. However, before getting into those particulars I would like, if I may, to take a few minutes to review the history of electric production and regulation in Canada in capsule form.

The Canadian electrical industry has long been subject to regulation at both the provincial and federal levels. This is largely for historic reasons. The industry began as a collection of small hydraulic plants serving isolated loads at the beginning of the century and developed into a vast interconnected network that now spans the country. Because provincial power networks were developed in isolation, and because electricity service was commonly viewed as an essential prerequisite to economic development, individual provinces were keen to retain the exclusive jurisdiction that the Constitution Act had given them in 1867 over what was then termed the "development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy".

Not surprisingly, given the monopoly position of many electrical utilities, most provinces eventually decided to place electrical utilities under provincial ownership or, at very least, under close provincial control in terms of rates charged to consumers and satisfying the province's needs and export commitments.

In my Province of Alberta we have, for example, the Public Utilities Board, the principal government agency overseeing the electrical industry. We have as well the Energy Resources Conservation Board which has some jurisdiction in the area and, most recently, the Electrical Energy Marketing Agency which is the provincially created agency for the pooling of electricity rates charged to Albertans. I believe we still have, however, four power companies operating in Alberta, two of which are publicly owned.

The provinces thus have interests that cover both provincial concerns and concerns of export, and these interests are those which often overlap with federal interests. In fact, this overlap was virtually guaranteed by that same Constitution Act, 1867 which granted authority over international trade and commerce to the federal Parliament.

As a result, the regulation of electricity exports and the regulation of international power lines clearly fall within federal jurisdiction. The regulation of the electricity industry in Canada has reflected the growth and evolution both of the industry and the country itself. Industry has long been regulated by both the provinces and the federal Government. This has been a fact of Canadian life.

The federal Government, from the outset, attempted to ensure that any exports of electricity were surplus to Canadian needs. This has really been the hallmark of federal policy for decades. In fact, even prior to the establishment of the National Energy Board in 1959, export prices were reviewed and exports were regulated to make sure that hydro-electric resources would not be alienated from Canadians. This focus persisted after the Royal Commission on Energy recommended the formation of the NEB. As the then Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Hon. Gordon Churchill, put it in 1959:

> In the case of electricity, it has been the policy in the past to grant only annual licences for export, so as to prevent permanent alienation of power.

The National Energy Board Act of 1959 extended the maximum export licence period from one to 25 years, but there was a clear expectation that long-term licences would be granted only in exceptional circumstances. As the National Energy Board report of 1987 put it:

> The rationale—appears to have been that, if Canadian energy were to be sold to export customers at prices lower than those at which it were sold to Canadians, it would undermine the competitive position of Canadian industry vis-à-vis its American competitors and be unfair to Canadian consumers.

I think it worth while to recall what the then Prime Minister, the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker, a fine and historic western leader who was possessed of a great wisdom to which this House should still pay heed, said when the details of the NEB Act were debated in Parliament in 1959. He outlined what had been the preoccupation of federal policy for years. In referring to the NEB Act of 1959, he said:

> As to the price to be charged for gas and power, it must be just and reasonable in relation to the public interest. With the implementation of this legislation.
> No longer will there be any suspicion that the Canadian consumer is being forced to subsidize the foreign markets or that Canadian industries will be asked to pay higher prices for their energy than those paid by foreign industries using Canadian energy— The Bill protects not only the industrial future of Canada but the producer and the consumer.

The statement of national power policy released in 1962 by the then Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, represented a significant policy departure from the past. It stated that under certain circumstances, it would be in the national interest:

> —to licence the export of large blocks of firm power to United States utilities to permit the development of large scale remote hydro or other power projects which would not be viable unless supported by the export for long periods of a significant proportion of the power generated.

In spite of this change, which allowed facilities to be built mainly for export, the regulation of electricity exports at the federal level remained important in Canada for a number of reasons. Indeed, there have historically been several reasons for the close regulation of electricity production and sale internationally and between the provinces at the federal level.

These are political and economical reasons. They include, for example, ensuring the security of supply for Canadian consumers and ensuring quality of access regardless of the region in which one lives.

The official opposition critic mentioned earlier the case of Prince Edward Island which has no electric generating capacity itself but relies on imports from other provinces.

A third reason is to assist in regional development. As well, there is the question of balancing interests of investors with over-all public interest. These interests may from time to time diverge. They may in fact compete.

For example, electric monopolies are shielded from competition and can raise prices well above the cost of supply. They can engage in price discrimination between customers. They can prevent competition for export markets by denying access to transmission systems. An electrical generation project may be profitable from the perspective of investors but may be undesirable from a national perspective once all of the associated costs, such as the flooding of huge areas of land, are factored in. A project may be desirable from a provincial perspective but not from the perspective of other provinces.

For example, if a province chooses to generate large amounts of electricity through the construction of a very large coal fired generating plant, that can result in airborne pollutants being carried away to a neighbouring province.

Of course short-term perspective may cause future generations to pay higher prices than would otherwise be the case. For example, the exploitation of our most favourable, most easily accessed, most easily developed hydro sites now for export, leaving distant, costly sites for future development for domestic use later.

All these concerns are legitimate. All should be addressed by any responsible federal Government. None should the take the back seat to short-term political or economic considerations or to facile ideological arguments. This is especially important given the critical nature of electricity in Canada's economy and energy future.

It has been argued by some that electricity is a commodity like any other; that like oil and natural gas it should be deregulated; that it is a value added product, indeed a manufactured good in essence; and that it should be deregulated as the oil industry was in 1985 and as the national gas industry was in 1986.

Surely we can agree in this House that electrical energy is not a commodity like any other. The NEB has recognized this in its report on the regulation of electricity exports released in 1987, where it noted:

> An essential commodity might be defined as one on which a country's security, economic health or the well-being of its population depends heavily and for which there are no close substitutes readily available at reasonable cost. The Panel believes that electricity qualifies as an essential commodity in most uses.

National Energy Board

> Over time, alternative energy forms could replace electricity in some applications; however, in most applications, there are no reasonable substitutes for electricity, even over the long term.

Even the previous Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), took great pains to emphasize the importance of electricity in his speech on November 26, 1987 to the Board of Directors of the Canadian Electrical Association, wherein he said:

> Electricity's importance cannot be overestimated. It is essential to our civilization. Without it, we would not be lighting our buildings by merely flicking a switch. Our advanced medical treatment systems would not exist. There would be no radios, no television, no computers.

All the more important, one might add, to have a policy that will protect the interests of Canadians now and into the distant future.

The existing system of electrical export regulation has been clearly outlined in a background paper issued by the Minister of Communications last September. It is the system which has been in operation for many years now and has served Canada well thus far. It features, in summary, the following elements: the board issues export licences and orders for periods not exceeding 25 years; the board authorizes the construction and operation of international power lines, which are lines connecting a place in Canada to a place in the United States; in cases designated by the Governor in Council, the board regulates interprovincial power lines, which are lines from a place in a province to a place in Canada outside that province; and the board regulates the detailed routing of international and designated interprovincial power lines.

The procedure for exports and the procedure for power lines are essentially the same under the current legislative and regulatory regime. Except in very minor cases, the board conducts a public hearing and has regard to all relevant considerations. If the board finds that the proposal is in the Canadian public interest, it recommends to the Governor in Council that it be approved. Otherwise, the board denies the relevant authorization.

With respect to exports, there are two criteria which the board now focuses on: first, whether the export is surplus to reasonably foreseeable Canadian requirements and, second, whether the export price is just and reasonable.

With respect to power lines, the board focuses on the economic and technical viability of the line, on socio-economic considerations and on the environmental impacts associated with the proposed route.

In addition to assessing applications with respect to the above criteria, the board also ensures that proposals adhere to relevant environmental standards and that export authorizations do not exceed 25 years in duration.

This regulatory regime will be changed by Bill C-23 in four principal aspects. First, and in many cases the most important, the provincial jurisdiction will now be the jurisdiction at which the advisability of export applications is determined. It will now be at the provincial level where the questions surrounding the proposed export are dealt with and some kind of recommendation devised.

• (1220)

Second, on the basis of this provincial work, the National Energy Board will routinely grant export permits in most cases. It is expected that in only a few cases will licences in the case of electricity exports or certificates in the case of power lines, both of which would occasion public hearings, be required. So long as the sponsoring province has complied with relevant federal environmental processes and so long as provincial regulations are deemed to be sufficient, exporters need only obtain a permit and can thereby usually avoid a federal public hearing.

Third, the maximum duration of export licences and permits will be increased from 25 years to 30 years.

Fourth, the National Energy Board will be required to begin to recover its costs.

How will these changes affect electricity trade over the decades? It is difficult to make firm predictions, but a number of concerns must be addressed. Let me elaborate.

First, public hearings for export applications will be rare because of what will now be the usually routine granting of permits. There is no compelling reason for making public hearings less frequent, especially given the importance of electricity to our national energy future. There has been no good evidence presented to the effect that the public hearing process has been overly burdensome in the past. Real duplication in the public hearing process is likely a rather rare thing and certainly not routine between federal and provincial agencies involved. Public hearings address issues of national importance as distinct from items of provincial importance.

It is very difficult to anticipate all aspects of national interest based upon review from the provincial perspective. For example, it is conceivable that a utility or a provincial Government and its neighbour would both be in favour of a given export proposal, even though it may not be in the national interest in the long term. The NEB would be placed in the difficult situation of trying to anticipate these national interests without a national hearing. In fact, some provinces have review processes that can only be considered rudimentary.

A closed process seldom serves the public purposes well. It is not surprising that some utilities find the current process inconvenient, troublesome, even vexatious at times, although it should be remembered that the NEB has never refused an export application. Granted it has forced some alterations in applications, but it has never refused one.

It is possible under the new regime that the occasional export contract might be held up, even lost, but in our democratic system there is no good substitute for open public fora to protect the public interest. The process proposed in Bill C–23 forces the NEB to address the concerns of the public in a way that is not open, in a way that is inadequate, and in a way in which the criteria of the people of the country cannot reasonably be represented. The process that we now have forces the NEB to address the concerns of the public in the open using criteria that are clear and obvious to everyone.

Second, the Bill could politicize the making of decisions regarding whether to grant simply a permit or hold public hearings. Under the proposed system, the NEB would recommend to Cabinet that a public hearing be held if there is any reason to believe that the proposal may not be in the public interest. So far so good. However, the final decision on this is made by the Cabinet, not the NEB. This means that a decision made under this system is much more likely to be made on political grounds, and this could threaten regional interests. For example, a small province with few votes and few seats in Parliament could suffer if the Cabinet backed the export application of a more powerful neighbouring province for political reasons.

This could threaten the national interest. For example, Cabinet could side with an exporting province regardless of the national interest, if Cabinet saw that it was politically advantageous for some reason or other to do so.

This could certainly threaten the NEB. For example, if Cabinet reverses an NEB recommendation, vis–à–vis an important export proposal, if but once the NEB recommends to Cabinet that on a particular proposal public hearings must be held, and Cabinet says "no", the likelihood of Cabinet not accepting a given recommendation in future would likely figure prominently in the NEB's deliberations.

In other words, it would hobble the NEB as an effective regulatory body. Once overruled by Cabinet, the credibility of the NEB would be shattered and its future considerations would always have to be taken under the cloud of that disapproval. This would spell the end of the NEB authority as we know it.

Third, the maximum duration of export licences and permits will increase under these amendments from 25 years to 30 years. There has been no good justification for this increased alienation of a valuable Canadian resource. Until one is provided, the current duration of 25 years should remain.

I would like to note that those who are familiar with the speeches of the Hon. Minister of Communications, as I am becoming increasingly, will have noted his fondness for commencing each speech with a quote from some famous authority or person of letters. I will spare everyone here the detailed experience, but he began his speech of November 26, 1987 by outlining the proposed policy changes with a quote from Montesquieu as follows:

> No alteration should be made in a law without sufficient reason.

No sufficient reason has been given in this case for the increase from 25 years to 30 years of the maximum duration of export licences and permits. I challenge the Government to provide one or to withdraw this part of the amending legislation.

Fourth, the National Energy Board under this Bill will be forced to recover its costs. Presumably this means from the utilities requesting export permits or licences. This will likely mean higher electricity rates for consumers in Canada, which is another form of regressive taxation.

Fifth, the Government's strategy of making electricity exports easier is all the more worrisome, given the proportionality clause in the Free Trade Agreement. Reducing public hearing processes to increase exports would be bad enough in itself, but this is made more serious by the fact that electricity exports come under the proportionality clause of the FTA. In times of energy emergency, we will be forced to export the same proportion that we exported from Canada for the previous three years. Meanwhile the Government is keen to increase this proportion by reducing the review process here in Canada.

Sixth, making exports easier also runs the risk of Canadians paying higher, not lower, prices for electricity in the future. As Tanis Mathers, of the Consumer's Association of Canada put it, as reported in The Montreal Gazette for September 8, 1988:

> Canadians could could wind up paying higher prices because utilities could lock themselves into long-term contracts, making future electricity supplies scarce for domestic consumers.

He said directly, and I quote:

> The fear is that—new projects needed to fill the demand at that time may be more expensive and increase electricity rates for domestic consumers.

This view is echoed by the NEB in its report on the regulation of electricity exports from 1987, where the board noted:

> Unlike many manufactured products, most Canadian electricity production may be subject to increasing costs. Utilities generally develop their more favourable hydro sites first. Thus, if any but the costliest sites were developed to service the export market, the selling utility would have to develop a more expensive hydro site to service Canadian demand earlier than without exports. This means that, because of exports, Canadians would pay more sooner for their electricity. Similarly, nuclear safety and siting is expected to become increasingly costly over time, so that more rapid development in the short-run may mean higher prices for Canadians sooner than otherwise.

Those are the major concerns with the Bill as presented to us. Those are the concerns that we will be addressing in committee.

There are other questions as well. I think the principal question that the Government has yet to answer is: Why are we doing this? Why are we changing the statutory and regulatory regime governing the export of electricity from Canada to the United States, and why are we doing it at this time? There are those uncharitable souls among us who would offer the perhaps jaundiced view that this indeed is a pay-off to Mr. Bourassa, the Premier of Quebec, in return for that individual's—let us be kind—tacit support for the current Government at the last federal election. It can be noted that the Bourassa Government of Quebec maintains no independent regulatory agency of hydro production, transmission and export in that process, leaving just Quebec Hydro and the Quebec Government as the regulators of future exports sales from that province to the U.S.A.

• (1230)

Just recently we saw a massive new sale of Quebec Hydro power to the United States at a time when most industry forecasters are saying that Ontario is facing increased electricity needs over the next while which could necessarily occasion the construction of new, large and perhaps numerous nuclear plants in Ontario. This is at the same time as cheap Quebec Hydro power is going to the United States. Question No. 1 is why are we doing this at this time?

Question No. 2 is of much greater detail, if Hon. Members will bear with me.

What status is the current first price guideline in this Bill? Under the National Energy Board Part VI regulations, subsection 6(2)(z)(i), an applicant is required to demonstrate that the export price "would recover its appropriate share of the costs incurred in Canada". This ensures that all costs, including the indirect costs that are difficult to quantify, that Canada incurs as a country but which are not borne by the exporting utility are taken into account in the export price. How are these costs, including extra-provincial impacts of a facility, for example, to be quantified and addressed under the provisions of this Bill? We do not know.

Finally, there are some miscellaneous considerations that the House may wish to entertain as it continues to consider this Bill. Because of the provisions of the Free Trade Agreement with the United States which require we sell to the United States under conditions identical to those under which we sell in Canada, it is virtually impossible for Canada to spur economic diversification and regional development using the natural advantage of the plentiful electrical power we can generate in Canada.

As well, the emphasis of this Bill is toward supplying an ever greater amount of electricity to the United States, toward supplying or attempting to supply an apparently insatiable demand. Supplying this demand obviously brings with it benefit for Canada in terms of jobs and economic activity. It also brings environmental and other problems.

It needs always to be remembered that curbing demand can create jobs as well, and it is this focus that will lead us toward a more sustainable future. Random examples of this are light bulbs that use less electricity or producing electrical appliances for export that use much less power.

We must think of acid rain, nuclear waste, flooding valleys and the greenhouse effect when we think of electricity exports. In this context, electricity will be seen to be ever more strategic in nature. Natural gas, alternative fuels and hydroelectric power will be seen to be clean by more and more people and will be more valuable and in demand in the future. It will be more essential to the maintenance of a clean, environmentally healthy nation.

The Government, unfortunately, appears to want to alienate a greater share of one of our most valuable, most strategic natural resources, our electrical power. It is indeed ironic to reflect on the speech made by the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) to the B.C. Hydro's second annual energy forum held on May 11, 1989, when he said:

> To ensure that we continue to have one of the world's highest living standards, we will need to increase dramatically the amount of electricity we generate—over the next 25 to 30 years, Canada will probably have to double its present electrical generating capacity.

This is from a Minister who is overseeing a Bill through this Parliament that will make greatly easier the export of our hydroelectrical power or electrical power generated through other means to the United States.

There are too many problems in this Bill. There are too many questions it leaves unanswered. Until those problems are addressed and until those questions are answered, we cannot support this Bill.

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur State) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to my two colleagues, the critic of the Liberal Party of Canada the and Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) and the Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey), who have presented, I presume, their party's position on Bill C-23. You will not be surprised if I tell you straight off that the Government does not share the opinions of my colleagues from the opposition parties. I am sure the public will not be surprised to hear this either, except that there are some arguments which, I think, should be voiced with great caution.

I am thinking, in particular, of the argument put forward a few minutes ago by my colleague from Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey) which is in fact an argument we frequently hear when a bill presented in the House of Commons does not please everyone; obviously, it must be Quebec's fault, this must be a favour to Robert Bourassa. That is not a very original argument, Mr. Speaker. It lacks depth and I would even say it is somewhat lacking in good will, especially this week as we will soon be celebrating our country's anniversary. Anyway, that is not the kind of argument I will use put forward to introduce Bill C-23.

[English]

The purpose of the Bill is twofold. First, it gives effect to the Government's policy respecting the regulation of electricity trade announced in September of 1988. Second, it provides for a number of minor changes in the National Energy Board Act that will reduce costs to the Government and will clarify the responsibilities of the board.

The critic for the Liberal Party and the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey) mentioned that this legislation was first enacted in 1959. By virtue of its age, I think we could easily draw the conclusion that legislation enacted in 1959 and revisited in 1989 would normally require modernization to make it more responsive to the needs and energy problems of the 1990s leading up to the new century. It is quite obvious that this legislation needs to be revisited since it deals with a sector in which activity is so intense and the pace of change is so rapid.

National Energy Board

The National Energy Board's present regulatory responsibilities with respect to electricity may be briefly summarized as follows: First, the board issues export licences and orders for periods not exceeding 25 years. Second, the board authorizes the construction and operation of international power lines. Third, in cases designated by the Governor in Council, the board regulates intraprovincial power lines. Finally, the board regulates the detailed routing of international and designated interprovincial power lines.

In describing how the system of regulating works, it is useful to distinguish the board's procedures from the board's review criteria. The procedures for reviewing export applications and the procedures for reviewing power line applications are essentially the same. Except in very minor cases, the board conductsa public hearing and has regard to all relevant considerations. If the board finds that the proposal is in the Canadian public interest, it recommends to the Governor in Council that it be approved. Otherwise the board denies the relevant authorization.

With respect to exports, there are two principal criteria that the board now applies. The first is whether the export is surplus to reasonably foreseeable Canadian requirements and the second is whether the export price is just and reasonable.

With respect to power lines, the board focuses on the economic and technical viability of the lines, on socioeconomic considerations and on the environmental impacts associated with the proposed route.

There are two main reasons that this Act needs to be changed. The first is that the regulatory procedures now in place are capable of improvement in several important ways. Second, the criteria the board applies in assessing applications are no longer as pertinent as they were when the Act was introduced in 1959.

• (1240)

The problem with the existing procedures is that they result in an unwarranted duplication of provincial regulation. In 1959, most provinces did not have mechanisms in place to regulate electricity exports. Today, all exporting provinces regulate their exports in one way or another. This means that federal regulations should focus on complementing rather than duplicating what the provinces already do.

The problem with the criteria that the board applies in assessing applications for electricity exports and international power lines, is that it does not adequately reflect today's realities. I can give two examples of what I mean.

In 1959 when the National Energy Board Act was introduced, most provinces did not regard themselves as exporters, and several anticipated that they might become electricity importers. Hence, there was a need for the National Energy Board to pay particular attention to whether a proposed export would be surplus to Canadian requirements. Today, all provinces are self-sufficient in generating capacity, and nine provinces regard themselves as electricity exporters or potential exporters.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) of the Liberal Party referred to Prince Edward Island a few times during his remarks, quite justifiably so, and I would tend to guess that the only province that would not consider itself to be a potential exporter of electricity would be the Province of Prince Edward Island. However, today, all other provinces, contrary to 1959—and that is the difference—consider themselves, if they are not already exporters, as potential exporters of electricity. That has been a great change since the Bill was first brought in.

This does not mean that surplus considerations are now irrelevant. Quite the contrary. However, it does mean that it no longer needs to be one of the two or three dominant factors determining whether or not an export application is in the Canadian interest.

A second example, and perhaps the most important one, concerns the environment. The existing Act does not mention the environment in the key section that lists the considerations that are to be examined by the board in its determination of whether a proposed export is in the public interest. This is unsatisfactory in light of what we know today about the importance of environmental protection. In this context, it is evident that a new approach to electricity regulation is required.

I would now like to identify the fundamental principle upon which the new system of regulation is to be based. The essence of our federal system of Government is the distribution of powers between a central legislature and distinct provincial legislatures such that each is autonomous within its own sphere of jurisdiction. Unfortunately, the practice of federalism is often not a very easy one, as the Hon. Member for Edmonton East knows very well. Spheres of jurisdiction sometimes overlap, and this tends to lead to a duplication by two levels of Government. Such duplication, where it is unwarranted, is a burden that the public should not have to support.

Under the Canadian Constitution, the provinces have jurisdiction over electricity generation, except for nuclear power, and intraprovincial power lines. The Government of Canada has jurisdiction over electricity exports, international power lines, and interprovincial power lines. Jurisdiction over interprovincial electricity trade is shared by both levels of Government.

However, because of the manner in which the Canadian electrical industry has evolved, those matters formerly within the Government of Canada's jurisdiction, tend to be extensively governed by provincial policies and laws. It is the provinces that decide whether electricity will be produced for export. It is not the federal Government, but the provinces. It is the provinces that decide the extent to which their utilities will engage in interprovincial trade. It is the provinces that govern the management of the provincial electrical grids. It is provincially-owned or provincially-regulated entities that initiate and conclude electricity trade transactions.

These facts suggest that the Government of Canada should design a system for regulating electricity exports that will function by exception. Where provincial regulation is sufficient to protect the Canadian public interest, federal regulation is not warranted; where provincial regulation is insufficient, the federal Government must have the full authority to act. In other words, the National Energy Board should complement and not duplicate measures taken by provincial Governments. This is the basic principle underlying the amendments contained in this Bill.

I now wish to describe the new regulatory procedures set forth in this Bill as they apply to the regulation of electricity exports and international power lines. The regulation of interprovincial power lines, which I shall come to later, will be different in certain important respects.

National Energy Board

Applicants for an export authorization or authorization to build an international power line will continue to submit their proposals to the board. Upon receiving the application, the board will ensure that notice is published in The Canada Gazette, and in such other media as are likely to be seen or heard by interested parties. The board will then carry out an initial screening of the applications. If the board is satisfied that the assessments carried out by the sponsoring provinces have adequately addressed all relevant concerns, the applicant will receive Canadian government authorization in the form of a National Energy Board permit.

A permit will not require a public hearing, nor will it require Governor in Council approval. However, and this is the important point to make, if there is a need to complement the measures carried out by the sponsoring provinces, then the board will recommend to the Governor in Council that a public hearing be carried out. Thus, the full authority of the federal Government will remain. It may be of some comfort to Members of the House and the public to know that the board's advice will also be made public.

If the Governor in Council accepts the board's recommendation, there will be a public hearing. Any such hearing will be conducted by the National Energy Board, and the board will have regard to all relevant considerations. Once the hearing is completed, the board will either deny the application or else recommend that a licence, in the case of exports, or a certificate in the case of power lines, be issued. Certificates and licences will not be issued until they have been approved by the Governor in Council.

In addition to those changes regarding the procedure for the authorization of exports and power lines, there will also be changes in the way that the detailed routing of international power lines is determined. The National Energy Board will, in all cases, authorize the general corridor through which the line will pass. The precise location of the line within this corridor will then be determined by provincial regulatory procedures and any expropriation that may be necessary will also be carried out under provincial laws.

The only exceptions to this general procedure will be in cases where the applicant elects to have federal law govern precise location and construction of an international power line. Upon such an election, the line will automatically be designated for a certification proceeding. Applicants seeking to build power lines will therefore always have the choice of whether provincial or federal law will govern detailed routing and land acquisition. It is anticipated that most will choose provincial law in order to avoid regulatory duplication. However, there may be instances where the applicant would prefer that federal law applied. This could happen, for example, where a line is opposed by one of the provinces through which it is to pass. That is consistent with the role that a federal Government would want to play in the area of energy: to be there and to be able to intervene as an arbiter in such cases where from time to time there are difficulties between provinces. We know that at any time there may be those types of difficulties, but the Act does enable us to intervene in such a case.

It is proper that the National Energy Board should conduct a public hearing to determine whether construction of the line should be authorized. The board should also have the power to ensure that the line, once authorized, can in fact be built. The board's powers regarding the detailed routing will thus be retained for just this purpose.

The procedures for the regulation of interprovincial power lines are unchanged from those set forth in the present National Energy Board Act. For the most part, such lines will be regulated by the provinces through which they pass. However, the Governor in Council may make orders designating that the line be certificated by the National Energy Board. When such an order is made, the detailed location and construction of the line will be governed under federal law.

I have already mentioned to you, Mr. Speaker, the basic principle governing the new policies that there should be no unwarranted duplication of federal and provincial regulations. It follows that the National Energy Board should concentrate on those aspects of a proposal that may not have been sufficiently dealt with by provincial regulatory procedures. The Bill states that in deciding whether there is a need to complement measures carried out by the provinces the board shall have regard to all considerations that appear to it to be relevant. This means that the board's purview will not be limited in any way. That is a very important point for this House. However, in order to give some guidance to applicants, the Bill does cite three specific criteria not limited in any way that we will want the board to look at.

To begin with, the board will consider any impacts that a proposed export or international power line might have outside the sponsoring provinces. The second criterion will be the environmental impacts of the proposal and in particular whether it complies with federal environment standards. Finally, the board will consider whether Canadians wishing to buy electricity to serve their own domestic needs have been able to do so on terms no less favourable than the terms being offered to export customers. Thus I think the Hon. Member from Edmonton will be happy to know that the words of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker which he cited would still find some effect in today's legislation. I can only assume that the Hon. Member from Edmonton would be happy that the policy put forward by the Conservative Government at that time is still respected, something for which he wished in his speech.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Edmonton East has also mentioned his concerns regarding the fact that under this legislation we could authorize the period of export, that we could issue periods of more than 25 to 30 years.

And the Member for Edmonton East argues that he does not know, that he has no idea why— Well, it's really quite easy to understand! The reason, Mr. Speaker, is to enable us to undertake large projects, hydro-electricity projects requiring massive investments, several billion dollars worth of investments. And there is no great mystery in that, you don't have to look very far, you only have to look at the energy sector, the oil sector, which also require considerable investments. If you're going to drill in the ocean, that requires considerable investments. Those investments have to be financed.

Mr. Speaker, we in Quebec know a thing or two in this area, thanks to Hydro-Québec. We have financed several mega-projects in the last several years and it takes a certain time to amortize the costs and reimburse the loans. It's as simple as that, that's not so difficult to understand, except we thought that a 25-year period might be a bit tight and, without necessarily coming up with the perfect measure, because the financial markets also change a lot, we said to ourselves: We'll extend it to 30 years, that will give us extra leeway and enable us to better finance the mega-projects we are considering throughout Canada. Some of these projects will be developed in Quebec, unfortunately for the Member for Edmonton East who does not like Quebec nor Mr. Bourassa very much, but other projects are planned for other regions of Canada, namely in British Columbia and in Alberta. We want to be able to take advantage of this natural resource everywhere in the country.

So, that is why we have decided that the permits should be valid for 30 years instead of 25. There's nothing very complicated in that!

[English]

I would now like to summarize the amendments that do not relate specifically to electricity. These are being introduced to reduce costs, to streamline the board's operations, to reflect the reduced level of regulation that has resulted from a more market-based approach to energy policy and to make other minor improvements to the Act. I was hoping there would not be a great clamour when I used the words "more market-based approached". It looks as though members of the Opposition were able to resist commenting on those words.

First, the number of board members is being reduced from 11 to a maximum of nine. The associate vice-chairman positions are to be eliminated.

Second, the board is to be given cost-recovery powers consistent with our over-all approach to deficit reduction announced in the Budget.

Third, the powers of the board with respect to such matters as accident inquiries, accounting practices and repairs are to be clarified.

Finally, a number of other minor changes such as the redefinition of certain terms are introduced to facilitate the application of the Act.

This Bill demonstrates that despite what the critics of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement have been saying, Canada's energy interests are still fully protected. Electricity exporters must continue to obtain authorization from the National Energy Board. The amendments state quite explicitly that an application may be denied if it has unacceptable extraprovincial effects, if it has significant adverse environmental impacts and if Canadians wishing to buy electricity have been denied fair access to the electricity. The Bill thus proves that the Free Trade Agreement does not undermine the National Energy Board's ability to protect Canadian interests.

The Bill also demonstrates that the federal Government will not compromise its responsibilities with respect to international or interprovincial trade. All international power lines and all electricity exports will continue to require National Energy Board authorization. The Governor in Council will retain the power to designate interprovincial power lines as lines requiring a National Energy Board certificate.

As regards the detailed routing of power lines, the amended National Energy Board Act will state that while in most cases the relevant procedure will be provincial, applicants can, if they so wish, elect to have federal procedures apply. The Bill asserts that the federal Government will continue to exercise its authority to protect Canadian energy interests.

The amendments contained in the Bill will also provide a powerful incentive for the provinces to develop more rigorous environmental protection procedures. Because new exports and international power lines account for only a very small portion of Canada's total electricity supply system, federal export regulation in the past has proven to be an ineffective way to ensure that adequate environmental standards and procedures are applied to new electricity projects. The federal objective is to ensure that all electricity projects, not just those few designed for export purposes, also obtain rigorous environmental scrutiny.

This Bill will give the provinces a strong incentive to apply such scrutiny by putting standards and procedures in place that are equivalent to federal requirements. The provinces will avoid having their export applications subjected to a second regulatory proceeding.

All of this sounds pretty logical to me. Maybe it is something a little foreign to the political process. However, I think this Bill stands out as a good example of the necessity for change in our society. This Bill would amend an Act enacted in 1959, which Act deals with an area of our national life that has been very turbulent. It has gone through a great many changes in a very short period of time. It has affected our national life. It has become part of our national culture. It is a piece of legislation that needs to be updated and changed. It needs a new focus. That is what this Bill is about.

It is a piece of legislation that also reflects the way our country works and how it has evolved. In 1959, most provinces did not regulate electricity. Now they do. So is it necessary for the federal Government to also leap aboard and be there with them to over-regulate the regulators? Could we not play a role that is complementary one to the other? What this Bill is about is good Canadian common sense. We recommend it to this House very highly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Sudbury after 3 p.m.

It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

THIRTHIETH ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDATION

Mr. Denis Pronovost (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, today we celebrate the 30th anniversary of the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway, a real triumph over geography.

[English]

From Thunder Bay to Sept Isles ships may travel freely through nine locks, canals, and channels, by climbing the equivalent of a 62-storey building.

[Translation]

The St. Lawrence Seaway remains one of the finest works of engineering in the world. The 20,000 workers who built it over a five-year period removed 210 million cubic yards of rock and earth.

The St. Lawrence Seaway has supported the economy of several regions of Québec and Ontario for 30 years. We pay tribute to the workers who built it and to those who operate it today for their significant contribution to the Canadian economy.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

EXPORT OF WHALES

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my constituents who reside in the Mackenzie Delta were interested to learn of the federal Government's probable assistance to the Governor of Illinois when he personally requested that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) allow three whales to be exported from Hudson Bay to an aquarium in Chicago.

Northerners believe these projects should be justified on their economic and scientific merits and should not depend on a Minister's whim.

Residents of Aklavik in the Northwest Territories have been working on a different kind of whaling proposal, but when they asked for assistance from the same Minister, he advised them he would not help and that they should negotiate on their own with authorities in Alaska.

Similarly, other northerners have been requesting assistance from the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs for at least the last two years to acquire an export permit to remove some reindeer to points within Canada. They have not only received no permit from the federal Government, they have not even had the courtesy of a response.

We cannot all live in the States. At some point the Government is going to have to treat Canadians as well as it treats Americans.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIOLATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN CHINA

Mr. Gus Mitges (Bruce—Grey): Mr. Speaker, I, along with Alliance for Life and 26 other pro-life affiliated groups with over one million supporters, wish to express our utmost horror and dismay at the recent violent suppression of lives and human rights in China.

Equally important to this abhorrence is the coercion of Chinese mothers into killing their children by abortion. This involves the use of forced abortion and infanticide against families that exceed their child quotas of more than one child.

The United Nation's fund for population activities has been promoting such activities in China and in other countries to the tune of millions of dollars every year. The United States, formerly one of the chief supporters of this program, has ceased its funding because of the coerced abortions in China.

Canada, however, continues to be a very generous contributor to this fund. I firmly believe that most Canadians want no part of it, either directly or indirectly.

I therefore call upon the Government to withdraw support of any or all such organizations which contribute to the destruction of unborn human beings by depriving them of their human rights.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

PRIVATIZATION OF CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, the latest annual report of the Construction Industry Development Council, submitted to the then Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, made a number of recommendations.

The recommendation to contract out construction work to private industry will undoubtedly outrage workers across the country. The council reported:

> Contracting out of construction work delivers known costs, timely completion, guaranteed performance, quality assurance and an increased tax base. This compares favourably to the unpredictable costs of construction work when public employees and equipment are used.

This theme of contracting out or privatizing is rapidly gaining momentum in the Canadian workplace. Recently, the aforementioned council, in conjunction with Industry, Science and Technology Canada, produced a pamphlet entitled Can you Afford not to Contract Out. Does this mean that the Government supports the recommendations of the council?

TOBACCO PRODUCTS

BAN ON SALE IN DRUG STORES

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, recently the Canadian Medical Association released a statement which reads in part:

> The (CMA) will encourage the public to buy prescription drugs and other health products from drug stores that do not sell tobacco products. In the opinion of the CMA, the selling of tobacco is incompatible with the primary purpose and role of the pharmacy. The pharmacist is a respected and trusted health care professional, not a seller of products that, when used precisely as intended by the manufacturer, cause disease and the premature death of over 35,000 Canadians a year.

I would like to commend pharmacies in the Kitchener area which do not sell or have stopped selling tobacco products. They include the Hoegler, Riepert, Queen South, Forest Hill, and Heritage Park pharmacies.

I would also like to encourage other drug stores in the Waterloo region and across Canada to follow their example by ceasing to sell tobacco products.

FORESTS

FEDERAL–PROVINCIAL AGREEMENTS

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, Forest Ministers from across Canada are meeting with the federal Minister today. Canadians are anxiously awaiting renewal of the six expired federal–provincial forestry agreements that have provided a significant contribution to reforesting our denuded forest lands.

The Minister has said previously that he would have signed agreements in place by this week and would release the bargaining position of the federal Government.

The Minister should live up to his word, the Government should live up to its word, and release the details of the new agreements and the bargaining position of the federal Government to Parliament. In short, failure to act now means that the future of our forests are threatened.

S. O. 31

TRADE

INTERPROVINCIAL BARRIERS

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, it is time to break down the barriers to trade between our provinces. Canada's Constitution and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade prohibit restrictions on the free movement of goods between provinces. Yet, in Canada today, our internal trading practices ignore our international obligations and defy our Constitution.

Barriers to trade between provinces reduce industrial efficiency, distort capital investment, adversely affect the international competitiveness of Canadian exports, inconvenience citizens, and strain national unity. Our national economy is Balkanized into ten smaller markets.

Provincial Governments have set up other less visible barriers to trade by imposing different labour standards, establishing procurement restrictions, and giving tax and industrial incentives to companies based within their borders.

The four western provinces have taken steps to alleviate this situation and have signed their own agreement to reduce trade barriers and provide open tendering for government purchasing. This is an excellent beginning.

It is ironic that while this country has negotiated an outstanding Free Trade Agreement with the United States, barriers to trade within our own country remain. In the last two years a joint federal–provincial committee has reached an agreement in principle on opening government procurement, but it requires the approval of the First Ministers.

There is no reason for further delay. We are strong enough to compete in the global market–place. We can surely compete at home.

FINANCE

NEW SALES TAX

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) assures the House that the new sales tax will not be a hidden tax and Canadians know about it, he should ask himself the following questions:

Does he know how much federal tax he paid the last time he filled his gas tank? Can he tell us what federal taxes apply to gasoline and what rates? Does he believe that 90 per cent of Canadians have any idea how much tax they pay at the gas pump? I expect not because the tax is built into the price of the product.

How will the Minister keep his promise that Canadians will know exactly what they are paying in federal sales tax?

I have no doubt there will be a massive propaganda campaign undertaken by the Minister. No matter what that campaign costs, Canadians will still not know how much sales tax they are paying on their children's music lessons or dental bills. There is no doubt that we will see the expenditure of millions of dollars before an information blitz will be allowed to die a quiet death when the Government will then be free to increase and expand the tax behind the veil of secrecy.

SPORT

VAL D'OR REQUEST TO BE PART OF THE QUEBEC MAJOR JUNIOR HOCKEY LEAGUE

Mr. Guy St–Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on October 29, 1976, the Municipality of Val d'Or applied for membership in the Québec Major Junior Hockey League. On May 26, 1987, the Val d'Or drill operators took over this application. Abitibi–Témiscamingue has contributed 530 players to Québec hockey at the junior, college, university and professional levels. Forty–four of these players went on to the National League, like Jacques Laperrière, Serge Savard, Rogatien Vachon, Pierre Larouche, Jacques Cossette, Réjean Houle, Robert Ritchie, the late Michel Brière, Eric Desjardins, Pierre and Sylvain Turgeon, to name only a few.

Some leaders of this major junior hockey league in Laval, Trois–Rivières and Shawinigan seem to be afraid to face a team and an organization from Abitibi–Témiscamingue. Mr. Speaker, if the Val d'Or drill operators are refused a team for Val d'Or on August 11, I suggest that the league change its name to the Québec Monopoly Junior Hockey League (QMJHL).

THE ENVIRONMENT

VISIT OF U. S. SENATOR MITCHELL

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, Canadians across this country were pleased to hear the news that the United States would bring in new laws to protect our mutual environment. This is certainly something that we are looking forward to. Parliamentarians in this House are delighted to see our American counterparts taking a genuine interest in our concerns over acid rain.

Tomorrow is especially remarkable since Canadians will welcome Senator George Mitchell, the majority House Leader in the U.S. Senate, to our capital. As a member of the Environment Committee, I look forward to his appearance at our committee hearing on Tuesday. We have in Senator Mitchell a politician who is not only determined to cleaning up the environment but, because of his position, he is also capable of making it a reality.

The Senator has long been deeply concerned with the preservation of a quality environment. He is well aware of the damages acid rain can inflict. His state, the State of Maine, has long been a target of SO2 and NOx emissions. It is gratifying to see an ally in the driver's seat in the Senate.

I join all Canadians in wishing him every success in this important mission as he brings these proposals into law and as he visits Canada for two days where he will be making a major speech in Toronto on Wednesday.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CANADIAN NATIVE ARTS FOUNDATION

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Native Arts Foundation was founded in 1985 by John Kim Bell, the first native North American symphony conductor.

The foundation provides scholarships to help native young people pursue studies in the arts. Since 1985, $250,000 in scholarships have been awarded to promising native students.

In October of this year, the foundation plans to take a successful ballet The Land of Spirits on national tour. This ballet showcases the richness of native Canadian cultures and deals with the devastating problems of alcohol. In addition to regular audiences, the foundation plans to provide special matinee showings to 18,000 native young people from reserves across Canada.

To date the foundation has raised $1.1 million from private sources and has sought support from the Secretary of State and from the Department of Communications for matching funds.

The proposal has been backed up by four cabinet Ministers by letter and by a former Minister of Indian Affairs.

I call upon the Secretary of State (Mr. Weiner) and the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to act immediately so that matching funds will be made available to this project prior to the tour taking place in October.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

IMPACT OF SUPERMAILBOXES

Mr. Maurizio Bevilacqua (York North): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post Corporation recently announced its first profit in 30 years as a result of over charging Canadians and reducing services.

In my riding of York North door-to-door mail delivery in all new subdivisions, whether in Vaughan, Aurora, King City or Richmond Hill, have been replaced by supermailboxes. This policy seriously affects all residents in my riding and particularly the blind.

As a Member of the parliamentary Standing Committee on Human Rights and the Status of Disabled Persons, I cannot accept a corporate plan that does not provide boxes large enough for Braille transcripts or talking book material. The blind residents must cope with the dangers of heavy traffic at the supermailbox sites. I am requesting that the Government immediately guarantee home delivery for all blind, visually impaired, and other gifted Canadians.

The Government's obsession with profit making has created two classes of citizens: those who receive door-to-door delivery and those who collect their own mail.

The Government must return to a corporate plan that once and for all places people first.

POLLUTION

CANADA–U.S. STUDY

Mr. Ken Atkinson (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, newspaper reports over the weekend stated that a Canada–U.S. Government study shows that PCBs, Mirex, and 28 other hazardous chemicals are accumulating in higher and higher concentrations in the Niagara River as it flows from Lake Erie to Lake Ontario.

The study also shows that seven of the chemicals including PCBs and mercury are showing up at the river's mouth at Lake Ontario in concentrations exceeding government water quality standards.

This study is to be considered by officials from both countries at a meeting on Tuesday, in connection with the 1987 Protocol signed by the Governments of Ontario, New York, the United States, and Canada, which approved a 10–year plan to cut in half the volume of chemicals polluting the Niagara River.

This joint report serves to illustrate that the time for talk is over. The four Governments must now take steps to see that this problem is corrected as soon as possible, in order to protect the health of the people in southern Ontario and upper New York State.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

REQUEST FOR REVISION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I would like the House to take a moment to think about Jenny Swanson, a constituent. She is in her early sixties, unmarried, and formerly a waitress. Displaced by younger workers, she is on the Canada Pension's early retirement provision and receives a paltry $65 per month. Her friend, the same age, is married, has never worked, never contributed to Canada Pension Plan, but has a husband aged 65. As a result, she collects more than twice as much as Jenny does each month.

Surely it is time for the pension system in this country to be revised with a view to providing a liveable pension for the many, many Jennys in Canada who are trying to exist on their Canada Pension Plan. Instead of talking about equality and fairness, the Government has to act.

ABORTION

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the issue of abortion remains unsettled. When the Supreme Court struck down the previous law, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gave us in this Chamber the opportunity to vote freely on this very important matter.

Unfortunately, nothing was resolved by our vote on the motion and amendments presented to us at the time. Then the appeal of the Borowski case was dismissed by the Supreme Court on the grounds that it was moot. Their decision stated that:

> The Court would, if it exercised its discretion, pre–empt a possible decision of Parliament, by dictating the form of legislation it should enact.

The ball is clearly in our court, and the Canadian public is expecting us to come to grips with this matter. Let us not fall into the trap of those who say we do not need a law. I say: Let us get on with it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EVENTS IN THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA–INDIGNATION OF CANADA–GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On the weekend, I met several leaders of the Chinese community in Vancouver and a number of Chinese students who are currently in Canada for their studies. I am concerned about the fact that our country has yet to translate the general indignation expressed unanimously by the House of Commons into concrete action. What has happened to the plan to have the United Nations intervene to express international sentiment against the repression in China? Where is the resolution for a Canadian initiative? And similarly, why has the Canadian Government not yet taken concrete steps to have the international business community take retaliatory action against China, especially in the high tech industry?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe that last week, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition had an opportunity to speak directly to our ambassador in China, Mr. Drake, who was recalled to Canada for consultations. Mr. Drake met several Members of this House. Following our consultations with Mr. Drake and with others we had a national forum with a number of Canadians, including China experts—the Government is now preparing the next phase in its response to the events in China. I hope to have a chance to inform the House of the details of this position later this week.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have the utmost respect for Earl Drake, whom I have known for 25 years, and I know his views on the bilateral relationship between China and Canada, but I believe that we must explore above all the possibility of collective action in the economic sphere.

[English]

FUTURE OF HONG KONG

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the Government carefully. I have not heard Canada yet call for strong international action from the International Monetary Fund or from the World Bank. I have not heard Canada talk about cutting off economic aid. In the Minister's own words, we cannot have business as usual.

• (1420)

In that context, I have recently raised with the Minister on the floor of the House of Commons the issue of Hong Kong. My constituents, in particular, and members of the Chinese Canadian community across Canada are very concerned about the future of Hong Kong.

Will the Government, through the Minister, place on the next agenda of the meeting of Commonwealth Heads of Government the issue of Hong Kong which is destined to fall under Chinese jurisdiction in 1997?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is a very interesting suggestion and I think that the only appropriate thing I could do in the moments after the suggestion has been made is undertake to consider it seriously.

If we think it would be possible for a constructive discussion to ensue at the meeting of the Commonwealth Heads of Government we will do that. As the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows, that meeting will in fact be in Asia this year, so it may well be a particularly appropriate venue for that kind of discussion.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister pursues that, and I thank him for his constructive answer.

SPECIAL PROGRAM FOR CHINESE STUDENTS IN CANADA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my final question, if I might, on the same general subject to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Again I stress that the Opposition has attempted to support the Government in its reaction to China as best we can in a constructive way here in the House of Commons. However, the Minister's program for Chinese students living in Canada is totally confusing to the students with whom I met again this weekend. They do not understand the Minister's multiple option program. With all the chaos in China the least these students can expect is some clarity in Canada.

I want to ask the Minister a question that she has been asked on a number of occasions here in the House of Commons by my colleagues to which she has not yet given, in our opinion, a satisfactory answer.

Why has she not yet introduced a clear, unequivocal, categorical, special administrative program to deal with Chinese students living in Canada? She should eliminate the confusion, suggest a response to them rather than give them this loose series of options, and somehow give them some feeling of security in a very uncertain situation.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, our Department has done a number of things. The Right Hon. Member could assist us in one regard. We have been setting up information seminars across the country for Chinese nationals, not only the students but other Chinese nationals in the country, who want to consider their choices.

I, too, met with leaders of the Chinese community and with Chinese students this weekend. We took the further step of establishing continuing consultation with the National Council which is working very closely with nationals in Canada.

I believe that the answers we gave them met their requests to their satisfaction. However, that does not mean that there is not more that we can do. That is why the information seminars have been important. We are prepared to extend that in terms of providing additional information.

The reason for the visa extension is to ensure that all the Chinese nationals in Canada have the time to make an appropriate decision. Until we consult as fully as we can, I think that we have done a good job, but we are prepared to do more.

FINANCE

NEW SALES TAX—GOVERNMENT'S GOAL

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, until quite recently the Minister of Finance kept repeating that the present federal sales tax had three basic flaws, including the following one, which I quote from his folder, published under the title: Goods and Services Tax:

> The current federal sales tax is hidden.

Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Finance is this: Is it part of his Government's hidden agenda to use this hidden tax, which can be increased at any time, unilaterally and invisibly, in order to empty the pockets of Canadian taxpayers in the years to come?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. I think I have made it very clear that the existing tax is hidden. There is a 13.5 per cent rate and it is buried in the middle of the production process. The new goods and services tax will be levied at the retail level at 9 per cent, and it will be very clear to Canadians what that tax rate is.

Let me remind the Hon. Member of the current effective federal tax rates at the retail level. For household appliances the lowest rate is 6.05 per cent and the highest rate is 12.67 per cent; for kitchen utensils the low rate is 3.82 per cent and the high is 10.72 per cent.

The point I am making is that currently the consumer cannot know what the tax burden is. Under the new system it will be very clear; it will be 9 per cent.

VISIBILITY OF NATIONAL SALES TAX

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, all the proposals for tax reform have called for a visible national sales tax. The only thing visible about the present position of the Minister of Finance is that because provinces refused to be coerced in April to accept a take it or leave it deal, the Minister decided to do the sneaky thing; in other words, do the deal and then hide it from everybody, all the time publishing pamphlets and insisting that it is going to be visible.

Will the Minister stand in his place today and demonstrate that he is capable of keeping his word and tell us unequivocally that the tax will be visible, that he will do what he said he was going to do as late as April 27 in his own pamphlet?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the 9 per cent tax rate will be quite clear. It will be 9 per cent on all taxable items for the consumer. Let me give another example to the Hon. Member. On office furniture today the low rate is 7.32 per cent and the high is 10.77 per cent. It is quite impossible for a consumer to know what the tax burden is today, but the tax burden under the new system will be 9 per cent.

RELEASE OF TECHNICAL PAPER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance.

The Minister of Finance has made frequent reference in this House and outside the House to a technical paper which he hopes to have released by the end of this month. In fact, in Hansard of June 13 he is reported as saying, in response to a question from my Leader, that the technical paper would be out very shortly. He said:

> That will be set out very plainly later on this month.

Since he said this technical paper would be out before the end of the month, I want to know whether or not the Minister will keep his promise. Will that technical paper be tabled here in the House of Commons before we recess later this week?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we will not be able to make the end of June date. We expect to have the paper out in a very short period of time, but we are not going to be able to make it for the end of this month. We believe that it is important to get the technical detail correct, and that is the reason for the delay.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister and his Department have been planning the tax for many, many months, indeed over a year. He has been promising to have this technical paper available before the end of the month.

Is the real reason he is not going to table it in the House of Commons not that he wants to avoid the heat of an opposition attack and the heat of an attack by the people of Canada by tabling it in the middle of the summer?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member realizes the importance of a technical paper. It is complex. It needs to have the right detail for the practitioners to be able to base their conclusions and judgments on when they provide us with advice which we will use to develop the final legislation. That is the reason for the delay.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the only reason for the delay is that the Conservative Party wants to keep this invisible from the people of Canada.

[Translation]

MINISTER'S ALLEGED POLITICAL COMMITMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has now broken three political commitments: first, the national sales tax was to be visibile; second, it was to be revenue neutral; and third, the personal surtax was to be eliminated.

Can he confirm now that he has just broken the fourth political commitment, which was to make his technical document public before Parliament adjourns?

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member suggests that we are trying to hide this. There will be plenty of time during the course of the committee hearings, which I understand the finance committee chairman is proposing to have before legislation comes to the House. Then there will be the debate at the time the legislation is in the House.

There will be all sorts of opportunities for the Hon. Member and his colleagues to debate this matter fully.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW FOR REFUGEE CLAIMANTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. This morning Members from both sides of the House heard very moving testimony from 50 refugee claimants living in Montreal. They came to Ottawa as representatives of the 125,000 people trapped in this huge backlog. Because of the prolonged delay in reviewing their cases, the claimants have been separated from their families and children, some for up to periods of four to five years.

Given that this is but one of the human dilemmas in this backlog, and given that a case by case review, which can take up to two or three years, is lengthy, expensive and a taxing review on the country, will the Minister consider a middle ground, an administrative review, so that families will not have to wait seven to 10 years to be reunited.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to point out that where the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees or a Canadian visa officer is of the opinion that an individual is in danger, measures can be taken to bring that person to Canada. However, as a general rule in processing the backlog cases, we intend to deal with the claimant in Canada before making any decisions concerning dependents abroad.

I would remind the Hon. Member that we have insured that those who are in Canada can work, which should help them in terms of supporting their families at home. We intend to move on the backlog as expeditiously as possible.

REQUEST FOR ACTION ON BACKLOG

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, that is what the Government said two or three years ago, move expeditiously. Now at the very best, that backlog processing will not start until probably the late summer or fall.

The Minister fully knows that these claimants have been in Canada for years, have established themselves in this country and formed the workforce backbone of many key sectors in Canada. I therefore ask the Minister, is it logical to spend taxpayers' dollars and go through the long exercise of removing and deporting these people when in fact levels may be increased next year and may possibly bring these people back? Is it not better to have an administrative review so that the Government and Ministers can say no to those who are clearly unworthy, and yes to those who are deserving and who are contributing to Canadian society?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member that one of the reasons there is a backlog is because the Members of his Party delayed the legislation for so long.

Let me say as well that there are many people in the world who have expressed an interest in coming to Canada. It is very important that people who come here come under the same rules, whether they come in the refugee stream or they come in the immigration stream. This country welcomes people coming to Canada as genuine refugees and as immigrants but we expect them all to come under the rule of law.

DISASTERS

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and it concerns the Gander air crash.

As the Minister will know, the internationally respected American Air Line Pilots Association has now said that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board probe into the Gander air crash relied on evidence that was "fabricated, faulty, erroneous, and more to the point fabricated".

In light of this crucial new information from one of the most respected air safety organizations in the world, is the Minister now prepared to do the right thing and to finally call for a judicial commission of inquiry into the Gander air crash, the most tragic air accident ever to have occurred on Canadian soil? Will he do that now?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Member knows very well that about three months ago we referred the case to Mr. Justice Estey who is looking at all the documentation and at all that has been said or done about Gander air crash. Mr. Justice Estey normally should have recommended something to me this week, but he asked for an extension of his mandate for about one week. Within the next couple of weeks I should receive the report from Mr. Justice Estey, who will deal, if he wants, with the report given by the U.S. pilots association.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I think that the House deserves some clarification. The Minister should be able to tell us today at least whether the Estey Commission, which is not a full commission of inquiry, will have the authority to review those documents, that is, the documents ALPA, the American agency, provided for us, and if so, is that the reason for the delay of several days, so that Mr. Estey can consider that highly important report on this very tragic accident?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, of course Judge Estey has the opportunity to consider the report you refer to here. He has the full power to do so in whatever way he likes. Is that the reason why he specially asked for an extension of about a week? I don't know! One thing is clear: he is completely free to consider the report, to use it or not, and once that is done, he will make the recommendation that he wishes to make to the Minister of Transport.

[English]

NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

ALLEGED CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, better known as the former Prime Minister.

In light of information obtained under the Access to Information Act, Bill Neville, the Tory tobacco tout was given advance drafts of the regulations governing the Tobacco Products Control Act. This allowed him, through his lobbying efforts, to water down the health warnings to consumers in Canada while the health community did not become aware of the regulations until November, 1988. Can this Government justify one of its closest cronies, as a paid lobbyist of the tobacco industry, using his personal connections with the Government to influence their decisions? Is this not a clear case of conflict of interest?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the facts were at all as the Hon. Member presents them, I would be very concerned myself. The facts are not however.

The Government has a very clear policy of sending out draft regulations for comment by the private sector, by industries which are affected and also by public interest groups which may have an interest in responding. An information letter was sent out on November 7 of last year. It was distributed widely, encouraging various groups to make presentations to the Government with regard to the draft regulations. Among the groups which did so was the Non-Smokers' Rights Association, whose brief dated November 16, 1988, dealt specifically with this.

If Mr. Neville was so effective in this case in influencing the Government's actions, perhaps the hon. gentleman could explain why tobacco taxes went up $4 a carton in the Minister of Finance's Budget earlier this year.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the deputy Deputy Prime Minister. Last year, 35,000 Canadians died prematurely from tobacco related illnesses. Tobacco is the only product in use today in Canada which causes death when used exactly as described.

How can this Government put the success of Bill Neville's lobbying activities ahead of the health concerns of Canadians?

• (1440)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is very simple. We have not. Canada has the stiffest anti-smoking legislation of anywhere in the world. If the hon. gentleman disputes that, let him simply tell the House which country he believes has legislation more progressive than Canada's.

What is more, this afternoon, we will be asking for unanimous consent from all Parties to pass Bill C-27. I hope the Hon. Member will be there to ensure that it gets passed by this House of Commons this afternoon.

THE ENVIRONMENT

CONTAMINATION OF NIAGARA RIVER

Mr. Ken Atkinson (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. There are reports that a study prepared for a meeting between Canadian and U.S. officials on Tuesday shows that PCBs, mirex and 28 other hazardous chemicals are accumulating in higher and higher proportions as the Niagara River flows from Lake Erie to Lake Ontario. It is assumed that the toxic dumps on the U.S. side and the discharge pipes along the shore add these chemicals to the river. A protocol signed by New York State, Ontario, the U.S. Government and the Canadian Government calls for the volume of chemicals in the river to be cut in half by 1997.

Can the Minister tell the House what action the Government intends to take in order to see that this goal is met?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, Canadian and U.S. environmental agencies are committed to the Niagara River toxic management plan in order to identify the sources of pollution in the river and to develop adequate remedial strategies.

From 1982 to 1987, New York State and Ontario respectively have reported 88 per cent and 60 per cent reductions in discharge from municipal and industrial facilities. It is suspected there are other sources involved as far as pollution is concerned in this river, mainly hazardous waste sites. Both agencies are committed to identifying new sources and are reporting publicly a review of the progress.

NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

CHANGES TO RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In June last year Parliament passed an excellent Bill, the Tobacco Products Control Act. Shortly thereafter and up until the last election—and I would like the Minister to be conscious of the time—on several occasions, not only in November but in July and August, Mr. Neville, former Principal Secretary to former Prime Minister Clark, speech writer for Prime Minister Mulroney, and President of the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers' Council, intervened on several occasions and had his way in eliminating two important recommendations.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Pagtakhan: Did the former Minister or the current Minister know of secret interventions taking place, that health groups were specifically excluded and that health officials did indeed cave in to the intervention by Mr. Neville?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member cited Mr. Neville's curriculum vitae, he overlooked one important element of his past. He was also Executive Assistant to the Hon. Judy LaMarsh, the then Liberal Minister of Health. He has reformed since that time.

Mr. Allmand: How many years ago?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Clancy: Everyone has some good.

Mr. Beatty: There were no secret meetings. A bulletin was distributed widely both to the industry, to people, the Non-Smokers' Rights Association and others, inviting them to make recommendations with regard to draft regulations. That is part of the established procedure for regulation making. Indeed, two meetings were held with the Non-Smokers' Rights Association in order to get its input. On November 16, during the federal election, the Non-Smokers' Rights Association submitted a brief to the Government—hardly clandestine, hardly improper, quite effective as it turned out.

REQUEST FOR CHANGES IN LABELLING

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Non-Smokers' Rights Association has indicated that cigarettes be labelled as addictive. Second, that the arrow circle symbol be included on the package. These are two important considerations, Mr. Minister. Yet, following the intervention by Mr. Neville these two important considerations were omitted.

Will the new Minister now give an assurance to the House that the Non-Smokers' Rights Association, other health association and the public at large will be given equal access as Mr. Neville to rebuttal?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that not only will non-smokers' groups be given equal access, they have been.

The Hon. Member raises the question of whether or not a warning should state that tobacco is addictive. He apparently is not aware of the fact that in January of this year my Department was in touch with the Royal Society of Canada asking it to do a study precisely on that.

Ms. Copps: You don't know if it is addictive or not?

Mr. Beatty: In August this year we will be receiving the results of that study. There will be a second round of regulations later this year, and depending on the results of those recommendations the second round of regulations may well include just such a warning on packages.

TRANSPORTATION

POSSIBLE SALE OF VIA TRANSCONTINENTAL SERVICE

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Last week at the Transport Committee meeting Mr. Hugh Horner, Vice-Chairman of VIA, told the committee that he gave his personal assurances to western tour operators that VIA would be a continued service in the West even if it meant privatization. Today we have learned that the Government is considering selling the VIA transcontinental service to a luxury company for wealthy tourists at the expense of average Canadians who want, need and use this service. I did not think that the Government needed to be told this, but in Canada travel is not a luxury, it is a necessity.

Would the Minister please inform the House exactly what its plans are for VIA, will it be protected, or is this Government putting VIA on the auction block to the highest bidder and to hell with all Canadians?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Member knows very well what I have repeatedly said in this House, that VIA Rail will propose some options. This will be done, I hope, within the next couple of weeks. When it is done the Government will decide about any route in Canada. Once again, it has to be within the proposal which will be made by VIA Rail.

Dealing with the question of private ownership, if it is option by VIA Rail, the Government will consider that option, of course.

Mr. Speaker: I, of course, will recognize the Hon. Member for a supplementary and I ask him that he confine himself to the appropriate language in the House.

Mr. Fontana: I do apologize, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC HEARINGS ON CANCELLATION OF ROUTES

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): I say again the report will come to this House conveniently after we have left. It is very clear that with some new rolling stock and a little creative marketing many of VIA's routes can be very profitable. In fact, VIA's own statistics point out that the system is well used on an average of 54 per cent to 60 per cent across Canada.

Will the Minister now assure this House that no route will be cancelled through orders-in-council until public hearings are held? Or is the Minister now telling Canadians that even if you use it you are going to lose it?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, obviously I will not give a guarantee of this kind.

Ms. Copps: Why.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): What I will say is there are many options which could be proposed. One option is by order-in-council. Another option is the National Transportation Agency. We will do our best to give the best service but once again there will be no guarantee of any kind to this Hon. Member.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I direct my question to the Minister of Justice.

Pattigate continues to grow. On Friday the Premier of Ontario was forced to call a judicial inquiry into the relationship between the Tridel Corporation, Patricia Starr and any member or official of his Government.

The federal Government has jurisdiction in the Starr case in the issuing and abuse of the registered charity number, the improper contributions to the Liberal and Conservative Parties and candidates, and the diversion of CMHC funds into Patti's political slush funds. Will the Minister of Justice now order a parallel judicial inquiry into all federal matters pertaining to the Patricia Starr case?

• (1450)

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Department of National Revenue, upon finding out that there were some irregularities taking place by individuals within the organization, immediately instigated a full federal audit with total and absolute co-operation of the council itself. Since then, of course, there have been numerous provincial investigations, one a judicial inquiry, called as recently as last Friday by the Premier. At this point in time, I believe it would be improper for anyone else to make any specific comment on the matter in order that it not prejudge or prejudice the inquiry now in place.

I can tell the Hon. Member and the House that the co-operation is a two way street. We are receiving full co-operation from the council, and we, of course, in the Department of National Revenue, will continue with our audit and will obviously co-operate fully with the provincial inquiry.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is again directed to the Minister of Justice. There has been a Revenue Department review and it issued a charity number. There has been a CMHC review and it could not be detected that funds were being misappropriated into a political slush fund. This involves more than one federal government Department. In view of this, why will the Government not now start its own judicial inquiry.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, a number of points in the Hon. Member's question are erroneous. First, it is not CMHC money. Second, when he talked about a federal review or audit, that was during the course of time in preparation for giving the council its charitable status which was several years ago. The new audit only commenced in May. That audit continues and will of course be co-operating with the provincial inquiry as well.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CELEBRATION OF TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF DEPARTMENT

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Supply and Services. Recently, it was reported that the Department of Supply and Services has budgeted $200,000 for twentieth anniversary celebrations over the summer. We have also learned that the Minister's Department is launching a new graphic look to project the image of a modern, dynamic Department. In light of the Government's stated commitment to spending restraint, could the Minister please outline how and why this money is being spent on a twentieth anniversary, and what are the costs associated with the design and eventual implementation of the new Department of Supply and Services logo?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Supply and Services is currently in Winnipeg on government business. I will take the specific question as notice for the Minister, who I am sure will be able to answer in a more detailed manner. However I can tell the Hon. Member, as a former Minister of Supply and Services, that that Department, as do all the others, continues to co-operate with the Government-wide effort of fiscal restraint and fiscal responsibility, something that we did not see on the other side of the House when they were in Government.

Mrs. Gaffney: Mr. Speaker, with an answer like that, I think that the Department of Supply and Services needs more than just an image makeover, especially since its only client is the Government itself.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister justify spending taxpayers' money on this kind of fluff when personally he has claimed that the deficit reduction is the number one concern of his Department?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, with questions like that from Members on the Liberal side, I think they need an image workover more than the Department of Supply and Services.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: The fact is that the Department of Supply and Services has hundreds of thousands of clients in the form of businesses, small, medium and large, across Canada and the Department is constantly working on trying to open itself up to being fairer and more equitable and straightforward when doing business with all those clients. The Hon. Member should do her homework before she asks further questions on this matter.

DISCHARGE FROM PULP AND PAPER MILLS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Almost one year ago, his Department published a 600-page document which was an absolutely damning indictment of the tragic state of pulp and paper discharge in Canada. We now know that over the last year, the Minister has not acted on the report and in fact, recently his colleague, in response to the problem of pulp and paper discharge on the West Coast, did not close down the mill but closed down the fishing industry. Most specifically, what has the Minister and the Government done to implement the specific recommendations contained in this 600-page report published by his Department almost a year ago?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Department of the Environment is now completing a nation-wide sampling program to establish the level of pollution by furans and dioxins. I announced, and I do so again today, Mr. Speaker, that this is the first step towards the implementation of a set of regulatory measures that will control very strictly, starting next year, the levels of dioxin and furan emissions in Canada's pulp and paper mills.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the situation in Canada's pulp and paper mills is a crying shame!

[English]

POSITION OF MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a specific question for the Minister. He says that he will prepare new regulations. Can he explain why, according to information we received today from his own Department, every single pulp and paper mill in British Columbia was in violation of current discharge requirements over the past year? Since this report was published a year ago, every single pulp and paper mill in British Columbia has been in violation of the current laws. Why does the Minister not charge the companies instead of making the fishermen pay for it?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's emotional reaction is no substitute for the facts, which are very well known. We have a set of regulations that were adopted under the Fisheries Act in 1971, which is not effective and does not apply to the majority of pulp and paper mills in Canada. We are now drafting long-awaited regulations after 15 to 20 years of Liberal inefficiency and neglect. We are trying to fill that gap, Mr. Speaker, and within the next two years, we will have the strictest measures ever to control pollution by pulp and paper mills.

TRADE

CONTINENTAL FREE TRADE AGREEMENT – MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Is the Minister aware of the push to include Mexico in a continental free trade agreement? That push is being led by two U.S. Senators, Connie Mack and Richard Lugar, as well as a group of Canadian businessmen. What is the Minister's position on whether or not Canada agrees with an integrated economy through an extended Free Trade Agreement between Canada, the United States and the Government of Mexico?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the hon. gentleman goes to bed with nightmares of free trade with various countries ringing through his consciousness. The hon. gentleman reads The Sunday Star which says that pressure is mounting for free trade pact to include Mexico. I can tell the hon. gentleman that pressure is not mounting. There is no pressure. There is an absolute zero pounds per square inch of pressure on the Mexico question.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, the nightmares and the pressure are not on me, they are on the Canadians who have already lost their jobs to Mexican workers because of the trade agreement.

EXTENSION OF FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, two American Senators, Senator Lugar and Senator Mack, are both pushing for an extended Free Trade Agreement. Both are powerful Senators. If there is a Free Trade Agreement between the United States and Mexico, goods made in Mexico will be allowed to come into Canada under the existing Free Trade Agreement. Will the Minister assure us that Canadians will not lose jobs because of that provision in the Free Trade Agreement?

• (1500)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it does not matter to us how many powerful U.S. Senators are for free trade with Mexico. They do not determine the policy of our country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: We do not care if Connie Mack is for free trade with Mexico. We do not even care if Harold Ballard is for free trade with Mexico. We are quite an independent Government.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CHANGES IN PLANS UNDER THE BUDGET

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The White Paper on National Defence made a tremendous commitment to defence in Canada. Unfortunately, one of the tragedies of the Budget was that some of the plans had tremendous changes made to them.

There was an estimate that roughly $54 billion was planned to be spent in the next 15 years. The present plans are anything but that.

Specifically, plans to modernize the Navy have been scrapped; plans to buy new main battle tanks for the Army have remained in the trenches; plans to procure the Maritime patrol aircraft and for the CF-18 attrition aircraft are in orbit. It is very unlikely that we will have 65,000 primary reserves in 15 years.

Can the Minister of National Defence tell the Canadian people, in view of the gap between the plans and the promises and the present commitment, where are we heading with defence policy? Are we going to change the roles and commitments of the Canadian Forces, or are we just going to rust out?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has apparently changed his opinion on the naval plans enunciated by the Government on the SSNs. I suggest that he sits in the Party that initiated rust-out for Canada's military.

I can bring to the Hon. Member's attention the fact that right now we are looking—

Ms. Copps: How are the new uniforms?

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East obviously does not want me to answer the question. I would like to address her colleague.

The Hon. Member knows that the announcements that were made when the Budget was announced identified several projects that would not go ahead as enunciated. He is accurate in assessing the amount of some $54 billion that were to be spent over the next five years, which reduces our 15-year plan by approximately $20 billion plus. Therefore, the initiatives that this Government can take in some procurements are delayed, some are cancelled, and some are put on pause.

We are going ahead with the second phase of the frigate program. We are going ahead with 12 mine countermeasure vessels, for which the project definition was announced a few days ago. We are going ahead with low-level air defence. We are going ahead with building the primary reserves. We may not be able to meet the announced—

POINTS OF ORDER

21ST ANNIVERSARY OF MEMBERS ELECTED IN 1968

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) on a point of order.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that 21 years ago yesterday 72 very distinguished Members of Parliament were elected in 1968.

Nine of the those Members are still in the House of Commons. The group not only includes the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent), but yourself, the Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House. There were also other distinguished Members, the Lieutenant Governor for the Province of Ontario, a former Premier from Newfoundland, a former Speaker of the House of Commons, many Senators and many Members.

However, most important are the nine survivors. Besides the Deputy Prime Minister and the Leader of the NDP and yourself, the Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House, there is the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin), the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), and one other Member whom we call a premature, the Hon. Member for Papineau—St-Michel (Mr. Ouellet), who was elected in a by-election in the fall of 1967.

I know that every Member in the House would want to congratulate those most distinguished Members of Parliament for surviving so long. We wish to express our appreciation to the Speaker for tendering such a lovely luncheon for such a distinguished group today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Foster: We know that every Member of the House will want to wish those nine survivors a very happy birthday on their 21st anniversary.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I want to thank the Hon. Member for Algoma for bringing it to our attention.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. As one of those gallant nine survivors of the Class of '68, I wish to say that although it was our 21st birthday yesterday, none of us look it or feel it. However, I would counsel all other Hon. Members to come to any of the nine of us for sage advice about surviving.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT—VERIFICATION OF COMMENTS REQUESTED

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could indulge the Chair with a request that the June 22nd Hansard be verified at page 3557. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) stated: " —that the present critic of multiculturalism of" our "Party voted against" the idea of forming a separate sub-committee or standing committee on multiculturalism.

I have never done that. I request that the Chair verify the comments in order to see in what context the remarks were made and, if need be, that they be retracted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Chair has taken note.

BANK ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, June 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Loiselle that Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Bank Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, and the amendment of Mr. Rodriquez:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Bank Act, be not now read the second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence".

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in opposition to Bill C-9, the amendments to the Bank Act. This Bill, with the exception of including small businesses in the Bill, is basically the same as Bill C-140 which died on the Order Paper with the last federal election.

I want to point out to the House that although I was not a Member of the debates and did not take part in those debates, my colleagues in the New Democratic Party opposed that Bill forcefully. Our opposition remains steadfast in light of this new piece of proposed legislation.

There are a number of reasons why we oppose this Bill. First, the Bill provides few guarantees for customers and small businesses against unfair service charges that have been applied by the banks. It does nothing to keep the fees and service charges under some degree of control.

We oppose the basic thrust and the basic principle of the Bill which is that the banks themselves can actually be trusted to keep service charges in line. The Bill is proposing that the banks police themselves. To a great extent, that is like asking the fox to guard the chicken coop.

• (1510)

The Government took the same position on interest charges on credit cards. Although the charges did come down initially when Parliament first put on the pressure, those charges have climbed right back up, if one cares to look at what has happened in the credit card industry. The concept of voluntary compliance or voluntary policing is a very weak concept. It has shown to be very ineffective.

I would like to point out some basic weaknesses in the Bill. With respect to voluntary compliance, the legislation does not force the banks to do anything about their service fees except to disclose the charges and to notify their customers about the increases and the new fees. In the case of small business, the banks are not required to disclose all their charges but only those that are defined in a core list.

I must say that the Government seems to be basing this approach on the assumption that the disclosure in the notification of charges will sort of open up the competition. However, I would like to point out that this really has very little impact in terms of a customer's ability to move from one bank to another. For example, if somebody has a mortgage or an outstanding loan and finds they have had a service charge applied to that item, it will be very costly for them to pull up stakes and move the business elsewhere. They are locked into the mortgage or the loan. They would just have to grin and bear it. There is very little latitude for the small business owner or for anyone who has a mortgage simply to pull up stakes without cost to themselves or to their business operations.

In that respect this Bill does very little in terms of opening up the concept of competitive rates between banks. The past record of the banks in terms of voluntary compliance has not been very good. The Royal Bank has a net income of over $700 million. The income of the Bank of Nova Scotia last year was some $506 million. The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce had record earnings of $591 million. Despite these massive profits the banks did not hesitate to raise their service charges.

I will give an example of that, Mr. Speaker. The Royal Bank of Canada raised 15 of its service fees on November 1 from 4 per cent to 6 per cent. It raised the cost of writing an NSF cheque up to 12 per cent despite the fact that it had a banner year last year in terms of its profits. The Bank of Nova Scotia and the Imperial Bank of Commerce have also raised their service charges, again despite banner years in terms of the banking industry.

Those types of charges are tough on small businesses. I have spent quite a bit of time talking to small business owners in my constituency, the constituency of Okanagan—Shuswap. There are two major concerns that the owners and partners in small businesses have. The first is with respect to high interest rates. The second is with respect to the many hidden charges that are foisted upon small businesses. They are very concerned about the fact that the banking industry does not seem or appear to be the friend of the small business person. They do not appear to be there to help in making the small business sector flourish.

There is a lot of concern in my constituency, and probably in the constituency of every Member of this House. The small business community is concerned about the high cost of borrowing money from the banks and of the high cost of simply doing business. As you will know, Mr. Speaker, just about every small business across Canada is in some respect reliant on the banking community in order to operate.

In 1987 five major banks, the Scotia Bank, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, the Royal Bank, the Bank of Montreal and the Toronto–Dominion Bank, collected over $1 billion from bank service charges from the small business community, the investment community and people who have mortgages. That is a great deal of money. I would suggest that that level of profit–taking indicates that perhaps the service charges are too onerous and have to be brought down. In fact, they are unfair to the business community and to the taxpayer.

I wish to deal now with the charges that the Bill before us does not seek to remove. I refer to charges for deposits and withdrawals. To me, and I am sure to most Members, those are core services of a bank. One deposits money for safekeeping. When the time comes at which the money is needed, it is withdrawn. It is a core service. There should be no reason to apply service charges to this fundamental level of service that the bank is established to allow.

In terms of the service charge for cashing an NSF cheque, I remind the House that this charge was called offensive by the last Minister of Finance. Yet the banks, such as Toronto–Dominion, did not agree to comply voluntarily. It still charges customers for unknowingly cashing an NSF cheque. When a business cashes its cheques it has no idea which cheque will not be sufficiently funded. Yet that business is penalized by the bank for submitting such a cheque which in all innocence fails to be negotiable security.

The Bill does not protect the small business community from being charged. Quite frankly, in some areas of the country where the economy is marginal, some small businesses have a number of NSF cheques. Thus it becomes a burdensome charge on small business to have to pay a penalty for processing NSF cheques.

The legislation before us does not remove the charge for closing the account. This is also something we consider to be a core service charge of a bank. There are charges for going below a minimum balance and for providing the current balance of an account. If an individual or a company representative comes into a bank and wants to find out what their current account level is, why should they be charged? That too is a core service.

Customers are being charged for errors made by the bank itself in the administration of an account. There is no reason that a service charge should be applied to that. The Bill does not prohibit any of these charges. It does not force the banks to provide a basic no-frills account which would provide these services free of charge.

The third point I would like to touch on is self-monitoring by the banks. One of the difficult aspects of this Bill—in fact it is a farce—is that the banks monitor themselves to see whether they have complied voluntarily in bringing their services into line. Again, it is a case of the fox being charged with guarding the chickens.

How can one expect the level of accuracy to be what it should be in terms of whether or not they have in fact complied? If customers are not happy with the way their complaints are dealt with, they should be allowed to contact the office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions in Ottawa. However, this is not a real guarantee because the Superintendent of Financial Institutions does not have a mandate to protect consumers. The Bill would only create more pressures for an agency which is already overworked and in fact is not established to do that kind of job. The Superintendent's job is to ensure that the banks stay in business, not that they satisfy consumers. In that respect, it is almost a conflict of interest.

Those are three critical areas of weakness in this legislation. Because of those weaknesses, I think the legislation should not see the light of day and in fact the Bill should be withdrawn.

We must accept the recommendations of the Finance Committee which has done a commendable task in uncovering many of the problems we are having with respect to the commercial banking industry. We should accept the recommendation to require the provision of a free basic, or core banking service which is, after all, the main reason why the banks were established originally. We should accept the recommendation to prohibit certain unfair charges which I have already mentioned, including minimum bank balances and charge backs for cashing NSF cheques.

We agreed with these recommendations but we also feel they do not go far enough. We would like to propose additional recommendations to those made by the Finance Committee. There should be a freeze on all bank service charges for one year. Bank service charges have increased over the past five years at an annual rate of 19 per cent, far above the inflation rate. That is far above the necessary rate of increase in order to simply cover the increased cost of living. It is unjustifiable.

The banks generate about $1 billion a year from these service charges. Therefore a very strong argument can be made that the banks have overcharged Canadian consumers and the small business community in Canada. I believe they should be required to give Canadian businesses and consumers a fair break.

Also, we would recommend the establishment of a financial services ombudsperson who would be empowered to perform customary advocacy and referee services as well as to referee and develop long-term policy advice. I think it is an excellent suggestion in light of the fact that we have seen very strong evidence that the banks have been guilty of overcharging Canadian consumers.

In the last Parliament my colleague, the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), proposed legislation that would involve many of these recommendations by the Finance Committee as well as the proposal for a one-year freeze on bank charges and the concept of a financial services ombudsperson. The Bill would have extended these guarantees to all consumers and small businesses. Based on those recommendations, we would like to see this current legislation withdrawn. The appropriate amendments and valued criticisms that the Finance Committee has developed should be implemented into the legislation so that we can develop the kind of protective mechanisms for which the small business community has been asking and which the banks have been guilty of not providing.

BANK ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Loiselle that Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Bank Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Rodriguez (p. 3601).

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, when one listens to the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party speak about the required changes to the Bank Act, it is amazing to realize that we have to raise in the House of Commons something that should have been regulated in law many years ago. If there is any legislation that should be rigid, it is the Bank Act.

For all practical purposes the banks have a form of monopoly that has been given to them by the Government. Yet year after year in the House we have to bring up the abuses by the banks in this country.

I have been a victim of service charges on many occasions. Recently I received four NSF cheques, each with a service charge of $15. Yet when one attempts to call the bank on which the money is drawn to see if there is enough in the account, the bank will not give the information about whether the person has sufficient funds. It is necessary to go to one's own bank, get on one's knees and ask them to call the bank to see if there is sufficient funds before depositing the cheque. It is a catch-22 situation.

The rate at which service charges have been creeping up over the years is a disgrace. No matter what government is in power, it should immediately ensure that the Bank Act is the most rigid of all legislation because it deals with one of the most fundamental aspects of our democracy.

The core services provided by the banks operate on a very basic principle, the cost of doing business. If the banks cannot provide the service, why don't they get out of the business?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I know that many of my fellow citizens have noticed that after going to the bank for whatever reason, their statement indicates a charge of $1, $1.50, $5 or $7. When you enquire, the bank says those are fees for this or that service, but these are fees that should not even exist.

And then we have to come here to argue this issue and say: This is abuse! Of course this is abuse, and if there ever was a place where such abuse should be stopped, that place is right here!

The Bill before the House today I must say am not familiar with the other attempts to legislate the matter in the past but I can inform the House that the Bill before it today is only an attempt to deal with the issue but at least we should respect the principle that any Canadian who receives a service from the bank—and don't forget that the bank gets its charter from the government so it is a kind of monopoly, and it gets very rigid.

No bank should have the right to decree unilaterally that it will charge fees for certain services. It doesn't make sense at all. And just the same, we have to come and argue this issue in the House.

• (1530)

[English]

Everybody deals in good faith. Of course there are exceptions. Why is it not understood that with our banking system, fundamentally small businesses have been complaining about the charges on NSF cheques and others? The fact remains that the banks should not have the latitude to charge for any service to citizens of this country. This Bank Act is not rigid enough.

It is very simple. We have to get down and start from zero. The banks must be called to task and we must settle the problem once and for all. How many small business organizations, how many consumers have been heard on different news programs, on open-line radio programs telling us stories about creeping service charges that have increased through the years? Yet we cannot come up with an Act to right a wrong within what is a fundamental aspect of this country, our banking system.

I do not have to go into detail about banks' record profits, let alone the hundreds of millions of dollars in write-offs because of poor investments in Third World countries where it was thought the banks were going to make a mint. These proved to be failures. Yet they wrote them off, of course, against the taxpayers. It is an amazing coincidence that when the news was getting out that they were going to have to write off hundreds of millions of dollars of their loans to certain countries, all of a sudden the phenomena of the creeping charges came in. The charges escalated out of proportion.

It is very simple. I think we should put this Act aside, sit down again and take the recommendations from the committee on finance. We should call the banks to task and say: "You are not going to set the rules. We are going to set the rules when it comes to charges."

Basically our job is very simple. You can talk to any Canadian or to any small business organization and it is only common sense, they will tell you, that there should be no bank charges. That is obvious because it is their service and their cost of doing business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the amendment of Mr. Rodriguez. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I think that you would find that there would be consent to defer the vote until the other votes at six o'clock so that we can continue with Bill C-27.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Agreed and so ordered.

NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-27, an Act to amend the Non-Smokers' Health Act be now read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to explain to the House the proposed amendments to the Non-Smokers Health Act.

As you know, this legislation was the result of a Private Members' Bill introduced by Lynn McDonald, the former Member for Broadview—Greenwood. The health of Canadians is something that concerns us all, and you will recall that Bill C-204 received the support of Members on both sides of this House and of the Senate.

All Parties being agreed, Bill C-204 received royal assent in June 1988. Once again I want to congratulate the Bill's sponsor for her remarkable achievement in difficult circumstances: obtaining Parliament approval of the concept of regulating the use of tobacco in the work place.

However, the legislation has not yet been promulgated because it contains a number of aspects that as difficult to administer and to enforce.

Being a Private Members' Bill, the legislation did not designate a specific minister who would be responsible for its implementation and enforcement. Pursuant to Order in Council of December 7, 1988, the Minister of Labour was made responsible for the Bill as it affected the work place, while enforcement on public carriers was assigned to the Minister of Transport.

Subsequently, Mr. Speaker, closer scrutiny of the legislative text by the two responsible departments together with Health and Welfare Canada revealed that in its present form, the legislation presented some enforcement problems. Personally, I think it is important to provide for an inspection mechanism and an enforcement process, both of which were lacking in the existing legislation. Obviously, when there are any doubts that its provisions will be observed, legislation loses its impact and effectiveness.

My concern for the practical aspects of enforcement led me to question the shortcomings in the current legislation and ask for permission to amend it. I would like to stress that the amendments being proposed today still observe the initial spirit and scope of the legislation adopted last year.

I firmly believe that these amendments which are intended to fill the gaps in the legislation and to make it easier to administer the Non-Smokers Health Act, will give the text more teeth and make it more effective. The amendments will not only correct a number of technical and drafting problems, they will also create an inspection and enforcement system that will make the legislation more meaningful.

[English]

The amendments provide for a system of inspection which will involve Labour Canada and Transport Canada inspectors and which they will carry out in addition to their ongoing duties. It is not anticipated that there will be any requirement for additional resources to undertake this work. Inspectors will carry out the provisions of the Act within the context of their ongoing inspections.

Indeed, I should point out that under the Act, employers have a responsibility to ensure that persons do not smoke except in designated smoking rooms or smoking areas. If an employee contravenes the Act, the employer would be expected after due warning to take disciplinary measures against that employee consistent with standard employer-employee disciplinary practices without recourse to the inspector. I believe this kind of infraction will prove to be the norm, and in large measure, the legislation will be self-regulating.

[Translation]

A parallel enforcement method is suggested, based on a system of fines, to complement the current mechanism. The system of fines was selected for the following reasons: It allows contravenors to plead guilty voluntarily, pay a fine and thus avoid summary proceedings; fines are used by other jurisdictions in Canada and abroad to enforce no smoking rules and also within the federal Government, more specifically by the Departments of Fisheries and Oceans and the Environment.

The Law Reform Commission of Canada recommends this approach to reduce the number of summary proceedings.

The fines will be similar to those applied in the case of traffic violations. Amounts will be determined by the regulations but will not exceed the limits stated in the legislation, which will remain unchanged.

[English]

There are also a number of drafting and technical problems with the Auditor General Act. These problems will be corrected through the amendments. For example, in the Act as it was passed, there is a requirement that the employer provide a smoke-free environment. The concept of a smoke-free environment implies a system of measurement. However, it is not technically or administratively feasible to measure concentrations of tobacco smoke to determine whether the environment is smoke-free or not. We need to have a practical and enforceable alternative that still retains the spirit and the intent of this original requirement. The amendments therefore will instead place a requirement on employers to ensure that persons refrain from smoking in the workplace except in designated smoking rooms or smoking areas.

[Translation]

Since it is easier to allow smoking in certain areas than to provide for a totally smoke-free environment, the concept will allow for more uniform and more effective implementation of this legislation.

[English]

However in the spirit of providing a smoke-free environment, designated smoking rooms in buildings, the construction of which commences after December 31, 1989, will need to be independently ventilated. Designated smoking rooms in older buildings will need to be independently ventilated to the extent reasonably practicable. Detailed technical requirements such as ventilation rates will be specified in regulations that will be developed in consultation with management and labour representatives.

• (1540)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, representatives of employers, employees and health groups support these amendments. I only hope that I can count on all Hon. Members of this House to support them just as much so that we can implement this Bill as soon as possible. The original Act was given Royal Assent nearly a year ago.

That is why I propose in clause 16 that the law take effect six months after the amendments receive Royal Assent, which I realize will give just enough time to put the necessary regulations in place.

This Bill is an important piece of non-partisan legislation which deserves to be applied effectively, in keeping with its original spirit and intent. It is a major step towards a healthier work environment for Canadians. I therefore count on the support of all Hon. Members of this House to pass this Bill.

[English]

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to speak on this Bill although there was equal demand to be in my constituency where I was to hear the presentations of citizens respecting pension reforms.

The Liberal caucus supports the quick passage of Bill C-27. In fact, I would have given the Government an excellent rating for introducing Bill C-27 which proposes amendments to the Non-smokers' Health Act except that in stalling for a year the Government almost killed the initiative of a private Members' Bill. The Non-smokers' Health Act, Bill C-204, sponsored by Lynn McDonald, was introduced and given first reading on October 6, 1986, almost three years ago. The Bill was given Royal Assent on June 28, 1988, but was not proclaimed. Thus, the Non-smokers' Health Act has been in limbo for almost a year now.

This is not surprising given the Government's initial lack of enthusiasm for Bill C-204. When introduced, Lynn McDonald's private Members' Bill was apparently opposed by the federal Cabinet. However, opposition Members of Parliament teamed up with government back-bench Members of Parliament to force the passage of the Bill, a true example of non-partisan approach when it comes to the fundamental issue of health care and health safety.

Yet, after the Bill was given Royal Assent, the Government did not move quickly enough to proclaim it. Members from all Parties had to continually urge the Government to take action to proclaim the Bill or to introduce amendments to it. I myself, Mr. Speaker, urged the Government to make the Non-smokers' Health Act law when I delivered a statement under Standing Order 31 on the occasion of the beginning of the National Campaign for Action on Tobacco on May 16.

By neglecting the Non-smokers' Health Act for almost a year, the Government has illustrated its inability to translate the scientific evidence of a major epidemic into a corresponding appropriate political action and response. Moreover, the Government's reluctance to proclaim the Bill after it was given Royal Assent proved the Government's arrogant tendency to make a mockery sometimes of the decisions of Parliament. This delay also illustrated the Government's lack of concern for the health of Canadians when the lobby from tobacco industries became very strong.

As I have mentioned to the House before, Mr. Speaker, last year more than 35,000 Canadians died prematurely from diseases caused by tobacco. This total is greater than the total number of people who died as a result of accidents, suicides, homicides, AIDS, alcohol and alcohol-related totalities. Despite such statistics the Government postponed dealing with Bill C-204 for almost a year. In a sense this allowed continued health risks to occur.

The old cliché that it is better late than never does not quite hold true in this case. We expected more leadership on this vital issue from the Government. The Government's lengthy inactivity in regard to the Non-smokers' Health Act causes us to question the credibility and ethics of the Government which does not seem to have the grace to respect the will of the House promptly.

By delaying action on this Bill, the Government allowed continued health risks to occur and thus set a poor example for the country. If justice is delayed, justice is denied. If a good cause is delayed, a good cause has been denied.

It is disturbing to realize that the Government cares so little about the welfare of Canadians that it would allow a good cause, restricting smoking in the workplace and therefore protecting the health and rights of non-smokers, to be denied for so long.

I am relieved to note that the Government has finally acknowledged its responsibilities and introduced Bill C-27 which proposes amendments to the Non-smokers' Health Act to provide for inspection and enforcement clauses which the original Bill, being a private Members' Bill, did not have the opportunity to include.

At this juncture I am delighted to laud the Government on the new structure of the Bill. Bill C-27 is organized so that the definitions are all at the beginning of the Bill, the enjoinders and the inspection clauses are in the middle, and the regulatory-making powers of the Governor in Council are at the end.

I would also like to congratulate the Government for removing Clause 3(6) from the original Bill which state: "Nothing in this Act affects any rights to protection from tobacco smoke at common law or under any Act of Parliament or of a provincial legislature". This provision would have allowed for the possibility of provincial variations in the application of the Non-smokers' Health Act.

Clause 6 of the new Bill states:

> "Nothing in section 4 or 5 affects the operation of any other Act of Parliament or regulations thereunder or any rule of law in relation to the protection of persons from exposure to tobacco smoke.

This will ensure more consistent application in all the provinces.

The amendments made to Clause 5 are also to be commended. Whereas the original Bill included provisions for removal of smoking passengers from non-smoking aircraft, the new Bill also includes provisions which extend this rule to buses and trains.

An additional positive feature of Bill C-27 is that under Clause 14, peace officers and persons employed to act as inspectors for the purposes of this Act may serve tickets to people who are smoking in non-smoking areas. This is important because there are certain workplaces where an employer does not have authority over all the people in the workplace. For example, it is difficult for a bank manager to order a customer to stop smoking. Now the customer will be deterred from smoking in non-smoking workplaces by the risk of getting a ticket.

I would like to point out, however, that there is still a problem with the provision on ventilation, it is still a vague clause. Clause 3(4) of the original Bill stated: "Every employer shall make reasonable efforts to ensure that a designated smoking room is independently ventilated". The clause in the new Bill reads as follows:

> "Where an employer has designated a room for smoking under subsection (2) in a building or portion of a building the construction of which commenced before January 1, 1990, the employer shall, to the extent reasonably practicable, ensure that the room conforms to any requirements of the regulations respecting independent ventilation of designated smoking rooms."

Now an employer can argue not only that efforts to provide ventilation would be unreasonable, but that they would be impracticable as well. We should ensure that this does not happen.

The new Bill also results in a time delay for when rooms designated as smoking rooms have to be independently ventilated in newly constructed buildings.

• (1550)

The old Bill required buildings constructed prior to January 1, 1990 to have ventilation in smoking rooms only if this could be done with reasonable effort. The new Bill allows the reasonably practicable clause to apply to all buildings, the construction of which began before January 1, 1990, regardless of when construction is finished.

In addition, in the new Bill the requirement for independent ventilation is removed from the legislation and put into the regulations. I urge the Department, now, to make sure that they follow through with this so that it does not become a future concern.

It is a relief to see that the Government is finally taking steps to make the Non-smokers' Health Act law, given the serious effect of smoking on health.

Smoking poses a health hazard for all Canadians, not only for adults, not only for children, but equally for the unborn.

As noted in the Library of Parliament paper entitled "Tobacco Smoking", smoking during pregnancy has been found to retard the growth of the unborn child and to lead to increased risks of stillbirth, neonatal death and low birth weight. Smoking while pregnant also leads to congenital malformations and can have long term effects on the child, such as mental retardation or cerebral palsy.

The 1979 U.S. Surgeon General's report linked smoking with sudden infant death syndrome. The 1980 report surveyed studies of men and women suggesting that cigarette smoking may impair fertility.

There is a great cause for concern about the prevalence of cigarette smoking among children and adolescents because nicotine inhibits physical as well as intellectual growth, is addictive and causes long term health risks.

Studies show that the risk of coronary disease, stroke and lung cancer are substantially higher for cigarette smokers than for non-smokers.

According to the report of the Surgeon General on the health consequences of smoking, smoking is responsible for an estimated 30 per cent of all cancer deaths, including 87 per cent of lung cancer, the leading cause of cancer mortality; 21 per cent of deaths from coronary heart disease; 18 per cent of stroke deaths; and 82 per cent of deaths from chronic obstructive pulmonary disease.

Among young men who smoke two or more packs of cigarettes a day, the risk of heart attack is more than seven times higher than for non-smokers. The risk of heart attack for women under 50 is 10 times greater than for non-smokers of the same age group.

The longer a person smokes and the more cigarettes one smokes, the higher the risk of contracting lung cancer.

Data reported in the U.S. Congressional Quarterly, March 24, 1989 editorial research report shows that the average male smoker is 22 times more likely to die from lung cancer than a non-smoker.

Research also links cigarette smoking with increased risk of chronic bronchitis, emphysema, cancer of the mouth, larynx, oesophagus, bladder and pancreas. Peptic ulcers are also more common among smokers.

I would also like to point out that nicotine is addictive, which is something tobacco manufacturers attempt to deny. However, the addictive nature of tobacco cannot be denied. Indeed, former U.S. Surgeon General Koop announced in the spring of 1988 that nicotine is more addictive than heroin.

Dr. Ronald Davis, director of the office on smoking and health at the Centres for Disease Control in Maryland stated: "—the best piece of evidence that smoking is an addiction is that 80 per cent of smokers say they would like to quit but can't do so."

The tobacco industry has protested that cigarette addiction is like other ingrained habits, like watching television or eating cookies.

The U.S. Tobacco Institute has ridiculed the concept of a physical withdrawal from nicotine, stating: "Any feeling persons might have upon giving up smoking are those that would be expected when one is frustrated by giving up any desired activity."

This is obviously the attempt of industry to twist facts to suit their own vested interests and I would hope that Governments would recognize and condemn this.

Our Government has not been able to do this. As I will discuss in more detail at the end of my speech, this Government bent to the will of the tobacco industry when the tobacco industry lobbied to nullify the requirement that cigarette packages include the warning that tobacco is addictive. This Government seems more intent on appeasing the industry than on safeguarding the health of Canadian citizens. This is unacceptable, especially when the addictive nature of nicotine is well documented.

As Dr. Jack Henningfield, scientific editor of the Surgeon General's 1988 nicotine addiction report stated, when nicotine withdrawal is compared with withdrawal from an array of drugs, it is almost similar to withdrawal to cocaine, but it is worse.

Researchers are now discovering that nicotine changes the very structure and function of the brain. I quote now from the U.S. Congressional Quarterly editorial research report of March 24, 1989: "Nicotine controls the release of hormones from the pituitary gland in the brain and from the adrenal gland in the body. It stimulates adrenalin, which may produce the same symptoms as physical and psychological stress. Nicotine also stimulates the release of dopamine and noradrenalin, which may produce feelings of pleasure. Autopsies have found that heavy smokers develop additional nicotine receptors, sites on the surface of brain cells that provide entry points for nicotine.

These changes in the brain, if permanent, might explain why some smokers say they never regain their abilities of mental concentration years after quitting. Another possibility is that such smokers are suffering some form of long term withdrawal.

What is also important to note is that the earlier one starts smoking, the longer one will smoke. Thus it is important to stop smoking before it starts with the young people.

According to a survey conducted by the U.S. National Institute on Drug Abuse, over 25 per cent of the high school seniors who ever smoked had their first cigarette by Grade 6, over 57 per cent had their first cigarette by Grade 8 and 94 per cent had their first cigarette by Grade 11.

According to the same survey, the highest rates of initiation into daily smoking are among children who are 12 to 14 years of age.

Cigarette smoking is the future No. 1 killer of today's teenagers. According to an article in The Journal of School Health every day more than 2,000 American adolescents smoke their first cigarette and a proportionate number of Canadian adolescents equally do the same.

Over the lifetimes of these children, a significant number will die.

Twenty-five per cent of the teenagers who start smoking today will eventually die from diseases caused by this addiction.

This Government must accept the responsibility for supporting programs that will prevent our children from becoming addicted to nicotine and being lifetime smokers.

This is the Government's responsibility because smoking does not just pose health hazards to smokers themselves, it also puts non-smokers at risk because of the negative effects of secondhand smoke. Therefore, smoking is not just a personal health problem, it is also a social public health problem.

As a social public health problem, and in the interest of the common good, there are grounds for the Government to intervene to try to protect non-smokers from the ill effects of cigarette smoke.

Research has shown that the spouses and children of smokers have increased risk of serious health problems. One study found that children whose parents smoke have much higher rates of respiratory illness such as colds, influenza, and pneumonia and reduced lung capacity.

Of particular importance to the Bill we are now debating is the following statistics reported by the Canadian Health and Welfare study. A non-smoker who is exposed to secondhand smoke in the workplace for 20 years suffers the same negative effects as someone who has smoked 10 cigarettes a day for 20 years.

This is not only totally unfair to non-smokers, it is almost criminal. As a medical doctor, I am appalled that this Government has stalled so long before introducing amendments to a Bill which is so obviously vital to the welfare of Canadians.

• (1600)

There are also adverse economic effects of cigarette smoking. It is society that pays when a person is ill, is absent from work, or dies young and leaves dependants. Depending on the country, the direct health cost of dealing with smoking-related illness varies from 3 per cent to 5 per cent of all health care costs.

Health and Welfare Canada has estimated that the cost associated with smoking is twice as high as the revenue from tobacco taxation. The Health and Welfare study found that the economic costs of tobacco use in terms of mortality, disability, fire damage, direct hospitalization and physicians' fees is over $7 billion compared with only approximately $4 billion in economic revenue from the tobacco industry.

It seems to me that most people would welcome this law banning smoking in the workplace except in designated areas. It has been enthusiastically supported by groups such as the Canadian Lung Association, the Non-Smokers' Rights Association, the Canadian Cancer Society, Physicians for a Smoke Free Canada, the Canadian Council on Smoking and Health and the Public Service Alliance of Canada.

Finally, I must point out that this Government does not have a good record when it comes to implementing legislation regulating smoking and tobacco. As noted in The Globe and Mail today, this Government allowed the tobacco industry to succeed in its lobby to remove two fundamental recommendations from the Tobacco Products Control Regulations, regulations which were to provide a serious warning system for tobacco.

First, this Government removed the requirement that every tobacco package should display messages identifying tobacco as addictive.

Second, the Government also removed the requirement that packages have an arrow circle display symbol which would draw attention to the risks of smoking.

This has seriously weakened the Tobacco Products Control Regulations and shows us that this Government cannot be trusted and that we must be careful to ensure that the Government takes its responsibilities to the citizens of Canada more seriously. It is obvious that the Non-smokers' Health Act is one that is necessary to help protect the good health of Canadians and to alleviate some of the negative and economic aspects of smoking.

With this new Act, hopefully the Government can redeem itself and show the people that truly the safety of Canadians is paramount and never can be subservient to the interests of the tobacco industry.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues and say it is a pleasure to participate in this debate. What becomes very clear is that this Bill is indeed a victory of parliamentary reform.

The Non-smokers' Health Act, known as Bill C-204 in the last Parliament, was a victory for the role of Private Members. It was the first controversial Private Members' Bill selected as a votable item to succeed its passage through the House of Commons. Its eventual passage was certainly a testament to the determination of its mover, Lynn McDonald from the constituency of Broadwood—Greenwood. It was her incredible work that focused on the need to change the attitude of Canadians toward smoking, to show parliamentary leadership in terms of what could be done to clean up the Non-smokers' Health Act.

What we are debating today is a reflection of the success of that Private Members' Bill and indicates the diligence of the health community, particularly the Non-Smokers' Rights Association, the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Cancer Society and the Canadian Lung Association. There are other groups and hundreds of thousands of individuals who became involved in attempting to move parliamentarians to take action on this very, very critical issue.

I must say the willingness of back-benchers from all sides of the House, members of the New Democratic Party, Liberal and Conservative Parties, set aside partisan differences in moving that Private Members' Bill through. They voted for a cleaner environment and voted against the work of the tobacco lobby which if it had had its way would have us all smoking and smoking as much as we possibly could. That is a testament to how successful this place can be. All Members of Parliament deserve to be commended, those who voted in favour I might add, because there were still some who bowed to the pressure of the tobacco lobby and voted against a smoke-free workplace, if you can imagine, Mr. Speaker.

In the intervening months we have seen unanimous support for this initiative and now it seems incredibly Draconian to think that Members wanted to encourage people to smoke and encourage young people to begin the practice.

Unfortunately, the Bill did not emerge from the House unscathed. During very often acrimonious committee review, sections of the Bill were reworked and redrafted without the guidance of those who knew what elements were needed for the law to be enforceable. As a result, the Bill was more of a statement of principle than a framework for regulation. We all remember that Bill C-204 received Royal Assent almost a year ago, yet it has never been proclaimed. It has not been enforced. It has never been able to become an act of law because administrators felt that it was unproclaimable until rewritten in a more enforceable framework. Fair enough. We are seeing the results of that effort today.

Earlier this year the Department of Labour, through the initiative of the Minister, entered into discussions with various employers, employee groups, health groups and, I suspect from recent news, tobacco interests and we worked the Non-smokers' Health Act into the version before us today. In the process a few changes were made to the principles involved but essentially preserved the integrity of the Act. Whereas Bill C-204, Lynn McDonald's Bill, gave workers the right to a smoke-free workplace, Bill C-27 before us imposes on employers the responsibility to ensure a smoke-free workplace for their workers. Those and other changes go to show that there is more than one legislative way to skin a cat.

What we know in the context of this legislation is that for more than a generation smoking kills people. I do not think there is any other way to put it. If you smoke excessively, chances are that you will die prematurely and that smoking will cause illnesses that every year lead to the death of many people. The most recent statistics—almost unbelievable—show that 35,000 Canadians die prematurely each year from diseases caused by tobacco smoke and illnesses caused by tobacco smoke.

We have only recently learned that the number of deaths caused by involuntary smoking, breathing the air which contains second-hand smoke, causes deaths as well. Last week the Environmental Protection Agency in the United States reported that environmental tobacco smoke was the greatest source of indoor air pollution in the U.S. Obviously, the same situation would apply to our own country. It is also reported that second-hand smoke was the greatest source of exposure to carcinogens. In other words, second-hand smoke exposed non-smokers to more cancer-causing chemicals than any other aspect in their daily lives. I do not know if you are aware of it, Mr. Speaker, but there are 32,000 chemical agents in tobacco smoke, over 50 have been identified as likely carcinogens.

Health and Welfare has provided us with estimates that 330 Canadians die each year from lung cancers caused by breathing tobacco smoke-contaminated air in the workplace. This means that every year on average 330 Canadians die because people around them smoke. They do not, but the fact that there is smoke in the workplace causes 330 people to die.

We can all be very proud because this Bill, once it passes, will save the lives of at least 330 people every year. Bill C-27 flows out of Private Members' Bill C-204 introduced by Lynn McDonald.

There are a number of items I wish to refer to specifically, and one is the whole idea of a designated smoking room. Under the previous Bill, common carriers would have had to provide a separate room for smokers. Now they need only to set aside a separate area. That is essentially the situation that exists on airlines and buses now, as only a few rows of seats are made smoking seats, but the second-hand smoke still affects non-smoking passengers and employees on common carriers. I have a number of questions I want to put to the Minister on that issue in Committee of the Whole. As a matter of fact, to move this matter expeditiously, I should wait and make those comments and raise those questions during Committee of the Whole stage.

With that, I want to say that it is a delight to participate in this debate. All of us are concerned when we see young people encouraged to smoke by their peers or by advertising. We have taken steps in another way to pull back on those kinds of initiatives. I hope, through this legislation and related legislation, that we can encourage people not to smoke or to stop smoking. We should encourage people to rethink what the tobacco lobby has been successful in encouraging them to think, and that has been to remove some of the impact of the warning on cigarette packages. I think both sides of a cigarette package should simply say that smoking will cause premature death—

Mr. Beatty: It is 20 per cent on both sides.

Mr. Riis: The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) is indicating that it is already on there, but I would like to see the entire side of a cigarette package taken up with the warning. If people want to find out what brand it is, they can look along the edge of the package.

Let us move on with the passage of this Bill. I will have more comments to make in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think you will find that if you were to ask for consent, there is the consent of the House that we take this Bill to Committee of the Whole rather than to a legislative committee so that we could complete all stages of the Bill this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Agreed and so ordered.

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, though I am given only a few minutes to speak on this Bill, I do wish to bring up a point of view that is expressed by those in my riding of Haldimand—Norfolk. My riding contains one of the largest numbers of tobacco growers in the country. It is a tobacco growing region where farmers have most felt the impact of Government policies in this area.

I rise knowing that all three Parties have indicated their support for this Bill and that numerous cancer associations and anti-smoking groups have also supported the Bill. However, I do want to bring up the point that issues affecting the farmers of Haldimand—Norfolk have not been addressed in this debate. The tobacco companies about which everyone seems to be talking with Mr. Neville speaking on their behalf do not speak for the tobacco farmers, so I want to say a few words in this regard.

When we talk about this issue, it seems that we sometimes forget about the rights of the rural tobacco farmers to sustain themselves and to create livelihoods for themselves and their families. I am not placing the economic well-being of some Canadians ahead of the health of other Canadians, but I do want to point out the shortcomings of the Government's policies with regard to tobacco farmers. These policies were greatly discussed when this Bill went through committee the last time. The committee recommended that something had to be done for the tobacco farmers to help them get out of the industry and get into alternative crops.

I feel that the Government's programs relating to alternative crops should be condemned by the House. The committee reviewed the situation of tobacco farmers and indicated that tobacco farmers should be compensated adequately. However, the recent Budget shows that money going toward the orderly rationalization and diversification of the tobacco producing industry was cut.

The tobacco farmers realize the situation they are in. They have worked for many years to develop the industry but they realize that there will be a need for them to move to other areas. However, they expect that a Government with programs which directly affect them should help them to grow alternative crops.

In the Budget there was a decrease of some $6 million, from $10 million down to $4 million in funds to help tobacco farmers grow alternative crops. I condemn that outright. I think—

Mr. Crosbie: So vote against the Bill.

Mr. Speller: I will, thank you. I feel that the Government made a commitment. In fact, during the election the Deputy Prime Minister, the part-time Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski), came into my riding and to a number of surrounding ridings, including the ridings of Elgin and Oxford whose Members are not present for this debate, and said that he would support tobacco farmers and would help them get into other areas of production. We see that this is not the case.

I want to read into the record a little note I received, and I know the Hon. Member across the aisle will want to listen to it. It is a note from a tobacco farmer, a lady who lost her husband. She is indicating the situation she is in. Granted, this is a letter from just one family, but I can show Hon. Members the numerous letters I have received which essentially discuss the same thing.

Mr. Crosbie: Quit beating around the bush, just tell us where you stand.

Mr. Speller: I am not beating around the bush and the Hon. Member knows that. Someone has to stand up for the tobacco farmers of Canada. The Government does not seem to be doing so.

Mr. Crosbie: You stand up for them.

Mr. Speller: I do not see Government Members here. In fact, I do not see any other Members representing tobacco areas here discussing this Bill. Where are the Government Members?

This is a very serious case of a farmer who has been adversely affected by the Government's policies. I know I only have a short time in which to speak, and if the Hon. Member would keep his interjections to himself I could outline to the House the seriousness of this issue and how it is affecting individual families in my riding. The letter reads:

> I have a very hard time making my living of $350 every two weeks with three children still at home—
>
> I am writing this letter you to realize how hard life is after I sold my quota. Sometimes I feel like I am going to have a nervous breakdown. Even my children are suffering. They are nervous because they see all my hardships and problems. Last year my 19 year-old son underwent a terrible surgery for a bleeding ulcer. The specialist even said that he couldn't understand how such a young person could get such a bad ulcer. Without surgery, my son would have died.
> I was forced to sell my quota because of financial problems, and my means of living have been destroyed. I feel that it is unfair and very wrong that we get treated different than the people who sold their quota under the redux later.

That is a whole other issue, one which the Government has yet to address. I hope the Government will help these people who originally sold their quotas and were treated unfairly by the Government. The letter goes on:

> What about my family's health? What about my own health, or others in the same situation as me?

I do not know if Hon. Members realize this, but the suicide rate in the tobacco area is outrageous. It is much higher than the national average. In fact, there is a great deal of suicide, family break-ups and general poor health. This is a product of the Government's policies, or of the Government not directing proper policies to help those people who have been adversely affected by the Government's decision to implement certain programs. I am referring not only to programs like this Bill but to the Budget cuts the Government has brought in.

I know I have been given only a couple of minutes, so I will end my remarks. This Government's policy with regard to tobacco has been completely wrong and unfair. The Government should be providing programs for those farmers. They are good farmers and good people and they deserve better than this Government's programs with regard to tobacco.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

[Translation]

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

[English]

On Clause 3—Duty of employers

Mr. Riis: I have a couple of questions, Mr. Chairman, and I suspect that Clause 3 is as good a place as any to ask them. We seem to be moving expeditiously. Perhaps I will ask one question at this point and raise others.

My question relates to the whole matter of designated smoking areas on board buses and airplanes. Presumably, at the moment where there are smoking flights, a certain number of seats are designated for smokers and other seats for non-smokers. All of us who have been on those flights or on buses that do it in a similar way realize that smoke blows all over the place and that does not seem to be a very satisfactory manner, if we are serious about providing a smoke-free area.

Would the Minister give some assurances that the regulations that will be passed associated with this Act will protect passengers and also people who work in those environments from environmental smoke as a result of the different seating arrangements?

Mr. Corbeil: I am informed that there will be provisions concerning the regulations, and that will be done in consultation with the labour movement and employees' groups.

Mr. Riis: It could be exciting to see how that will actually be done. I have to accept the Minister's words that it will be done. I have a related question. Obviously, from time to time, employees will be required to enter areas that are smoking areas. An example could be caretakers who have to go in and clean up rooms where people have been congregating to smoke. Therefore, we are requiring employees to go into a dangerous area by the way it has been described.

Would the Minister's deliberations at the regulation stage take this problem into account as well, and ensure that there is some way to deal appropriately with those workers who will be required to go into a smoke-filled or a dangerous environment in terms of a smoking area?

Mr. Corbeil: I take notice of the Hon. Member's remarks. I will certainly take them into consideration when we draft the regulations.

Mr. Riis: I appreciate the response of the Minister, and I do not want to be difficult. I appreciate the position the Minister is in. However, it is not much satisfaction when the Minister states that he will take these into account when the regulations are being drafted. Is the Minister in a position to be a little more forceful, or at least sound a little more committed to dealing with these critical issues? As I say, I am not attempting to be problematic in terms of the issue, but I do believe it is serious enough that we need to hear more than it being something that will be thought about or raised during the deliberations at regulation stage.

Mr. Corbeil: Any worker who feels that he or she is being asked to work in unsafe conditions can, under the regulations of Labour Canada, refuse to work.

Mr. Riis: One would assume with the regulations being what they are that an employee who was asked, for whatever reason, to go in and perform duties in what would be determined by the employee to be an unsafe place because of the smoking environment, would have that right to refuse and be under no obligation to do otherwise.

Mr. Corbeil: Part II of the Canada Labour Code already provides for employees, under those circumstances, to refuse to work. Part II of the Canada Labour Code will continue to be applicable to employees who refuse to work under those circumstances, and they will have available to them the ordinary grievance procedure.

Clause agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 4 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the title carry? The Hon. Member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: Since we are at the title now, this is the last stage. Perhaps I can use this opportunity to seek clarification from the Minister. I beg your indulgence, Mr. Chairman, but I recognize that this is not the appropriate place to ask this question, but having missed the appropriate place, I would like to ask it now.

The previous saving clause mentioned: "no limitation of rights under common law, provincial, or federal statutes". We understand why reference to provincial law has been removed. Obviously, it is a federal statute that will evolve. However, why have the rights at common law been replaced by rule of law? Is this is a lesser protection of existing rights to a smoke-free environment? Perhaps the Minister could provide at least a clarification of that change.

Mr. Corbeil: I am informed that we have been assured by the lawyers who have reviewed this legislation that this drafting has the same meaning.

Mr. Riis: I have two further questions and will perhaps pose them both at the same time. In the original Bill, that was going back to the Lynn McDonald Bill, the Bill ensured that smoking rooms in new buildings would be separately ventilated, and that makes sense. However, in this Bill that section is removed. It seems to me to be an obvious provision to have in the Bill that, if a smoking room is built where people smoke, it would be separately ventilated, but the Bill removes that. I am curious to know why that would have been done. What I am seeking from the Minister is an assurance that these new regulations that will flow from this Bill will provide that separate ventilation is guaranteed for smoking rooms in buildings to be constructed in the future.

• (1630)

Second, is the Minister satisfied that we as a country are indeed heading rapidly toward a situation in which no federally regulated worker will be exposed to tobacco smoke against his or her wishes? I realize in a sense that that is a repeat of a previous question.

Mr. Corbeil: Mr. Chairman, in response to the concerns of the Hon. Member with regard to the ventilation of smoking rooms, I would like to state that the draft regulations to be discussed with industry and labour representatives in the next few days will include provisions for the air to be exhausted to the outside without being recirculated for designated smoking rooms. New buildings will need to meet the specific technical requirement for independent ventilation. Designated smoking rooms in older buildings will need to meet it to the extent reasonably practicable.

As far as the second question is concerned, I will repeat my answer. Part II of the Labour Code of Canada provides that any employee who finds that it is unsafe for him to work in an area where people have been smoking will have the possibility of refusing to work, with the proper grievance procedure to be applicable.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say on behalf of the New Democratic Party that we appreciate the responses and the assurances that the Hon. Minister has given us.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Corbeil moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By unanimous consent, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Corbeil moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party is very pleased that finally the Government has seen fit to bring back this legislation which has been in limbo for almost a year.

Once and for all Parliament is recognizing that the safety of Canadians from the hazard of smoking is truly there. It is known that smoking affects not only the growing child and adults but that it affects equally the unborn child in the womb of his or mother.

One particular point I would like to emphasize is the matter of addiction to cigarettes. It is one of the fundamental harms that can come from smoking. With this harm comes a series of harms. One of them is the propensity or determination of the smoker to continue to smoke. In fact, he finds it difficult to stop smoking.

With these continued habits we know, as I indicated earlier, that the cost to Canadians is measured not only in terms of costs to physical health and costs to mental faculties but as well there is a tremendous cost to our health care system.

That this Bill would have been delayed for a year tells of the lack of commitment of the Government to such a fundamental concern as the health safety of Canadians.

A national campaign on tobacco was started last month. I hope that the Government in trying now to redeem itself from its hesitancy to proclaim this Act for a year would utilize every resource to ensure that the very intent of this law is carried out. One of the challenges to the Government will be to introduce and to provide programs that will help our teenagers in the many schools across the country. The real challenge to Government is to provide funding for our schools so that education against smoking and its hazards is given to all teenagers and other school children from coast to coast. The Government cannot be allowed to make the interest of industries paramount over the safety of Canadians.

I am delighted indeed that the Non-smokers Health Act will finally become law. Hopefully, we will start to see a decrease in the number of deaths which ensue from this serious health hazard, smoking.

Smoking is a scientifically proven health hazard, according to the advertisement by the National Campaign for Action on Tobacco. There is no longer any scientific controversy about tobacco being a proven health hazard. Tobacco causes many diseases which lead to serious illnesses, disability and death.

Again, I am very pleased to say that, finally, the Non-smokers Health Act is about to become law.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I too rise to support this important Bill.

As we have known for a very long time, smoking is very dangerous to the health of anyone who smokes. Many people have attempted to quit smoking in recognition of this health hazard. We are told that 30,000 Canadians died prematurely from diseases caused by tobacco smoke. There is one disease that we know of, lung cancer, which can be prevented by the cessation of smoking.

What we have learned recently, and part of what this Bill attempts to address, are the results of involuntary smoking, in other words, inhaling second-hand smoke. More and more we see studies which indicate that this is a hazard, both to the person who does not smoke but who inhales the smoke and perhaps to women who are pregnant, to their foetus, and has many severe consequences beyond just those for the smoker themselves.

Last week, the Environmental Protection Agency in the United States reported that environmental tobacco smoke is one of the greatest health hazards to indoor pollution. Therefore the kinds of recommendations that are made in this Bill to address adequate ventilation to ensure that it is done in a way that does not contaminate further the air where there is access to smoking rooms, to protect those employees who work in areas where there may be smoking, and to protect those employees, such as those on aircraft, who have long been exposed to second-hand smoke and so on are welcome. In that sense we are very pleased to see this Bill. We know that there are about 32,000 chemical agents in tobacco smoke and over 50 of them have been identified as likely carcinogens. It would be very difficult not to support anything that would reduce this risk to Canadians.

I listened carefully to the Hon. Member who spoke about the concerns of his constituents who are tobacco farmers. One of the important facts to recognize in this case is that the responsibility of the Government in enacting legislation like this, which I believe is responsible legislation to protect the health of Canadians, is to also make sure that the burden for this kind of good legislation does not rest on the workers and farmers. The Government should ensure that adjustments are made for workers and farmers in this industry. That is the responsible way to deal with this type of positive legislation.

I hope the Government will consider those kinds of adjustments so that the workers and the farmers do not bear the economic burden of making these real and positive changes.

Finally I want to give credit to a former New Democratic Member who first brought this to the House. Lynn McDonald, the former Member for Broadview—Greenwood, worked very hard on this issue. Through her determination and work within her own New Democratic caucus, through the committee and the House, and the work she did with her private Member's Bill, she deserves a lot of credit for the legacy she left not just to this House and Parliament but to Canadians as a whole. We in the New Democratic Party support this legislation.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I too want to rise briefly and express my support for the legislation before us. It is rather ironic that we are dealing with a Bill to amend the Non-smokers' Health Act on the same day that we learned of the continuing, persistent and unwanted lobbying of the kind we heard about this afternoon during Question Period with respect to a former highly-placed Conservative, Bill Neville, doing everything he can to prevent health warnings from being published predominately on cigarette packages.

I had an opportunity to work on the committee that originally introduced the Non-smokers' Health Act, for which I too would like to give credit to the former Member for Broadview—Greenwood, as well as for Bill C-51 in respect of smoking more specifically. We have heard expressions of concern from various communities and groups, including the Non-Smokers' Rights Association and the Canadian Medical Association. Mr. Douglas Geekie, who was very instrumental in getting this issue brought to the fore, is watching this legislation very closely.

We also heard from people whose livelihoods were directly affected. We heard from the Haldimand—Norfolk Tobacco Producers' Association who had very specific concerns about programs that the Government is ignoring. That was alluded to by my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Haldimand—Norfolk (Mr. Speller).

It seems that only one association, the Tobacco Council, came to the committee to try to convince us that smoking does not cause cancer. Every other group and organization, including the tobacco producers and the Town of Haldimand and the regional representatives from that area were quite forthcoming with the committee and basically pointed out that if they had known 40 or 50 years ago what they now know about the potential dangers of smoking, they would not have been so quick to license tobacco as a legal product, advertise and encourage its distribution.

In light of the information we now have, I am amazed that the tobacco manufacturers actually appeared before a Standing Committee of the House of Commons and tried to convinced us that tobacco smoking did not cause cancer. I am one who has most recently in my own family experienced a direct cause/effect of the relation of cancer to a smoker of many decades who has had part of a lung removed. I know how painful it can be to have to break the habit, but it is certainly something that smokers and non-smokers alike understand, except for the tobacco manufacturers.

I was surprised to hear in the House today the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) refer the question of addiction to the Royal Society. Perhaps I misunderstood him, but I took from that statement that the Minister is confused about whether tobacco is an addictive substance. He referred to the fact that he was having the question of addiction referred to the Royal Society for scientific reasons. He seems to be casting some doubt as to whether tobacco is an addictive product. One only has to travel through the hospitals of this country to see people who have just had part of their lung removed, suffering from emphysema and hooked up to oxygen but desperately craving tobacco to realize that no further studies are needed to tell us that it is an addictive substance.

Last week most of Canada's newspapers published a story that was a very powerful indictment of the addictive capacity of tobacco. It was a picture of a young man in British Columbia, I believe, who was in hospital suffering from the after-effects of surgery related to tobacco smoking. It was a picture of him walking along a city street in his bed clothes, hooked up to an I.V. with the needle running through his nose. He was being stopped by an RCMP officer wanting to know what he was doing wandering the streets hooked up to an I.V. He was going to buy cigarettes because the hospital in his neighbourhood had passed a resolution to no longer sell tobacco products. This addicted individual was pushing his I.V. drip along the street because he was desperate for a cigarette. Obviously tobacco is addictive.

If the Minister is truly concerned, and not simply endorsing the Neville phenomenon of doing as little as possible, he should not be asking the Royal Society to examine whether or not tobacco is addictive, he should be drafting specific legislation to inform consumers directly about the dangers of tobacco when they purchase the product.

I am pleased that we are passing this Bill today. I think it is ironic that we are doing so on the same day that we see the machiavellian internal machinations of the Conservative Party come to light with respect to the watering down of specific legislation. I would ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare in particular to reconsider his view that the Royal Society should be considering the question of addiction. It is an addictive substance and I wish he would govern himself accordingly.

[Translation]

Mr. Corbeil: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. On the third reading of Bill C-27, I would like to thank Hon. Members on both sides of the House for kindly agreeing to pass the amendment to the Non-smokers' Health Act without delay.

This cooperation shows us that all Members of this House care about the health and welfare of Canada's working men and women.

Mr. Speaker, you will allow me in closing to express my astonishment every time I hear Members of this House become indignant that those who might not agree with all the legislation that the Government brings forward are criticized for stating their opinion. I think that on the contrary, for the health of democracy in our country, all should have the opportunity to express themselves on everything that interests them and to make their opinions known.

I think that in the end, this helps us pass the best legislation for all Canadians and in closing, I do not hesitate to join in praising the former Member who presented this Private Member's Bill to the Parliament of Canada. This shows once again that our democracy is alive and well!

NORDION AND THERATRONICS DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, June 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. McDermid that Bill C–13, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Ltd., be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at 3.06 p.m. Friday, June 2, 1989, there were nine minutes left remaining in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mrs. Catterall). I would now recognize Hon. Members who wish to continue the question and comment, but since the Member is not here, I am afraid I cannot do that. Debate.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C–13, the Nordion and Theratronics Divestiture Authorization Act. It is something in which I have a great deal of interest. I do not believe that the privatization of these two companies is similar to a normal privatization which the Government would carry out. These are two very special companies. I believe the Government would be making a very severe mistake if it proceeded with the privatization of these companies, and I will relate why I feel this way.

In order to put my views across, it is very important to go back to the founding of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and to the beginning of the nuclear industry in Canada. It began approximately in 1947 when the NRX reactor was developed in the Chalk River laboratories. Very soon thereafter, we had radio isotopes. These radio isotopes became very important in the treatment of cancer. When AECL was formed in 1952, it was logical that a branch of AECL called Commercial Products would become a separate division of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Thereafter AECL and Commercial Products continued to develop their technology for fighting cancer in Canada and eventually throughout the world, becoming more and more dependent upon the Cobalt–60 isotope. This became a world famous treatment.

With respect to that, Commercial Products, which in the early 1970s became two divisions, has developed most of the world's supply of Cobalt–60. AECL has secured a large portion of the world market for industrial units in fighting cancer and in the utilization of Cobalt–60. AECL has provided 71 of the 132 units in operation in the world today.

In the late 1970s, Commercial Products, because of its success and because of the fact that it was entering into the Medical Products Division and having some difficulty in marketing these newer products, Medical Products was split into two different groups. The company which dealt with the radio isotope and Cobalt–60 became the Radio Chemical Company. The unprofitable ventures into medical accelerators resulted in the formation of the Medical Products Division of AECL which looked after the accelerator work, the Cobalt therapy, the medical simulator treatment, planning and manufacture. After it was split off, these accelerators, treatment and therapy units became profitable.

So we have as recently as last year the two divisions, Radio Chemical and the Medical Products Division of AECL, being profitable. In fact, the Radio Chemical Company accounted for 80 per cent of the net income of AECL, the most profitable aspect of AECL. This should count for a great deal because we have heard from this Government that it wants the nuclear energy industry in Canada to thrive, to grow and to be solid. They want it to be secure and they want the people in Canada to have confidence in this industry.

In spite of this rhetoric, the Government has done absolutely nothing to secure these results in Canada. It is reducing the money that is being put into AECL and being put into the Atomic Energy Control Board which regulates the atomic energy industry in Canada. The Atomic Energy Control Board in fact has said in committee that it needs 100 per cent more funding if it is going to do the necessary supervisory work in the nuclear industry, if it is going to fulfil its obligations to find final depositories for high–level nuclear waste and for the other very important jobs that it must do.

Therefore we have these two arms of AECL as recently as last year: the Medical Products Division which became profitable, and the Radio Chemical Company which accounted for 80 per cent of the net income of AECL.

What did this Government do? It decided that it would break these two divisions away from AECL. It put the two divisions under the Canada Development Investment Corporation and changed the names from Radio Chemical Company and Medical Products Division to Nordion and Theratronics, two entirely different corporations divested completely from AECL.

I mentioned earlier the reduced role of the Atomic Energy Control Board. I would like to talk about the problems within AECL itself. AECL was told by this Government: "We are going to cut back your budget. We want you to get into new areas. We want you to develop new technology." AECL has done that. There have been a lot of spinoffs from AECL which can be spun off into the private sector.

It would be unreasonable to say that all of the new technology that AECL has developed should be kept in AECL or should be kept in a separate Crown corporation. To do that would be asking the private sector to fund AECL and to be in competition with them. That would be highly unfair. There are a lot of companies that could be spun off.

The fact is that AECL has done what the Government has asked it to do. The only requirement that I would make to the Government is that when it splits off these areas from AECL and there are technological breakthroughs, that they at least put the money back into AECL. It is AECL technology that has led to these developments. If it wants AECL to look after itself, the Government cannot on the one hand say: "You have got to sell off these profitable arms", and on the other "put the money into the consolidated revenue account."

That being the case, generally I would say that new technology developed within AECL should be spun off into the private sector. However I make exceptions in the cases of Nordion and Theratronics because these are two unique companies. They deal first in health-related matters. They deal in matters that have been under the arm of AECL for many years. In fact, Radio Chemical, the radio isotopes and the Cobalt-60 technologies go back to before the actual coming into being in 1952 of AECL itself.

AECL is dependent for 80 per cent of its net income on Nordion and its predecessor branches. If those two companies are spun off, AECL will not be able to rely on that income from them. In addition to not being able to rely on the funding, AECL will not be given the sale price of the two companies. It is estimated that $150 million will be brought in for the sale of Nordion and that Theratronics will bring between $50 million and $70 million. As far as we know, that money will go into the Consolidated Revenue account. AECL is going to lose its source of income year after year and will not be the recipient of the sale price of these two very important companies.

The Government believes, of course, that it can blunt any criticism about the sale of these two companies by taking them away from AECL before the actual sale and putting them in the Canada Development Investment Corporation. It did so to try to make these sales more palatable. The problem is that that cannot change the facts. These two companies are very important to AECL, they are very important to the future of AECL and they are very important, through the future of AECL, to the health of the nuclear industry in Canada.

Whatever your feelings about the nuclear industry, it is going to stay. We are not going to spend the billions of dollars in Ontario, New Brunswick and Quebec which would be needed to replace the nuclear reactors which exist and are providing that power. First and foremost, we must ensure that our nuclear industry is healthy. We keep it healthy by properly financing the umbrella that looks after the technology of our industry, that being AECL, and we make sure that our supervisory branch, the Atomic Energy Control Board, is properly supervised.

There is another reason why we should not be selling Nordion. That is,because Nordion has now developed the technology for irradiated food and they can sell this technology throughout the world. The problem is that there is a great deal of concern about irradiated food, not only in Canada but in countries throughout the world. There is a great deal of work to be done to ensure that this technology is further enhanced and is developed to remove the concern.

We know that the major problem with nuclear products is the concern of the public. It does not matter how good the technology is or how acceptable the product is, if we continually have to deal with apprehension by the public the nuclear industry in Canada is going to be inhibited, it is going to be a problem for government and is going to be a problem for the country. We must have the technology necessary to assure that irradiated food is brought within the realm of acceptance of the Canadian public, not through jingles or through public indoctrination but through fact and acceptance through the normal channels.

Canada and Nordion are so far ahead of the rest of the world in this technology that if we sell Nordion and its irradiated food technology, a private company could get its money back without doing any further research in this field. It could absolutely milk the technology for which the citizens of this country have paid over the last 37 years and we would be the losers. The world would be the loser. The countries where spoilage and bacteria of food supplies are a problem would be the losers. The Third World would be a very severe loser. We are playing with benefits which will come ultimately not only to Canada but to all mankind. If we can develop this technology it will be a source of tranquility for the world in general.

If there is no further technology, we will not have that assurance and we will also lose the edge that Canada has in this very important technology. Most important, we are playing with the health of Canadians and all citizens of the world. These are health-related companies. There is nothing that says we have to abandon every Crown corporation we ever had. There has to be some logic, some responsibility when dealing with the privatization of Crown corporations. Surely to heavens, companies that deal in products which affect the health of Canadians and people throughout the world must be kept under the federal umbrella to ensure that the technology dealt with is brought to a stage acceptable to Canadians.

The Government says that it handed out irradiated cookies to children and they could not taste the difference. What kind of an experiment is that? What kind of an assurance is that? If those parents knew that their children were eating those irradiated cookies there would be one heck of an outcry. The Government has not been able to say which children ate those irradiated cookies, but that is not the way in which the Government of Canada is going to be able to sell irradiated food to this country.

It is vital that the Government keep this technology within the framework of a Crown corporation or agency so that it can maintain the development, so that this technology will not be aborted and will not be commercialized by a private company in order to make a fast profit, thereby scaring the rest of the world and making this technology forever taboo. This is vital, Mr. Speaker. It is absolutely vital that the Government maintain the technology.

We have been told that the Government cannot retain the technology in Nordion because Nordion is under AECL and you know how long it takes for AECL to make any decisions. Well, it is the Government that takes the time in making decisions. If the Government wanted to make decisions more quickly with respect to Nordion and Theratronics, it could do so through its own actions. It does not have to pass any legislation, it does not have to coerce the business community, it does not have to frighten the Canadian public, it can do it through its own operations, its own management facilities, through a more efficient administration. It does not need to get rid of the company.

Some say that if the private sector is involved in Nordion we have a better chance to raise capital. Who is going to give the capital to AECL to replace the money it is losing if Nordion and Theratronics are privatized? The Government says that it wants a healthy nuclear industry in which the people of Canada have confidence. It is doing the opposite by privatizing these two very important and very lucrative Crown corporations.

I ask the Government to reconsider the privatization of these two corporations. I hope that second reading will be all we will be able to attain before we adjourn for the summer in order to give the Government the opportunity to rethink what I think would be a very serious mistake, that being the privatization of Nordion and Theratronics.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Renfrew (Mr. Hopkins).

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us today is obviously one on which the Government wants fast passage. I was afraid for a moment that you were not going to recognize me out of the corner of your eye. I consider this Bill on radio-medical isotopes and Theratronics International dealing with cancer research to be one of the most important Bills that we will see before this Parliament in this session. It should never be passed over lightly.

As my colleague has just stated, the Government of Canada has come up with two Crown corporations and passed them over for sale.

• (1710)

This Bill will pave the way for that sale of the radio medical isotope industry in this country, and of the cancer therapy units and all its related research to private enterprise in this country. All this research that is now up for sale by this Government has been created by public funds. It has been created through the excellent research and development over the years by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

Of all the comments we hear about radiation and nuclear energy today, it is without a doubt the most progressive factor and factors which have happened in our modern day society. The research was done basically at Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. The radio medical isotope industry became very profitable. We have produced 60 per cent of the world's supply. We sell around the world. We are well known for a first class product.

The cancer therapy units are also well known around the world. All we have to do is take a look at the background of these two companies which have been created in those two medical areas and we will find that the sales are basically international. All this research which was done in the background, we are selling it to private enterprise. What is John Q. Public getting in return? What is Atomic Energy of Canada, as the senior parent company, getting in return? They are getting absolutely zero. That is a crime.

This Government is stealing from the Canadian public by selling these two Crown corporations with nothing to show in return. This is a government which says to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited: "You have to pay your way or we are not going to give you any money. However, while you are trying to pay your way what we are going to do is take away all those profit-making ventures which you have created on your research money over the years". Then the Government turns around after robbing the bank and says: "Now pay your way." It is like sending someone out to the bank on behalf of the Minister responsible for the Treasury Board, taking out his entire bank account and saying: "Now you've got to pay your mortgage".

This Bill today, with these two very important medical institutions being sold to private enterprise at large, is a sin.

Theratronics International Limited has done fantastic work in research on cancer and on the treatment of cancer. It is well known around the world, well tried and safe, in spite of all the gossip we hear to the contrary about the nuclear industry today for peaceful purposes. Atomic Energy of Canada deals in it for peaceful purposes. Radio medical isotopes are used in many areas of the medical field. Indeed, they are used in other areas as well in the form of isotopes.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sent a telex into my constituency during the election campaign of 1984. He stated that not only would the government under his prime ministership keep paying and keep contributing to research and development in Atomic Energy of Canada Limited at the same level, but it would consider improving it. That was his commitment in 1984. In February of 1985, when the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought in his Budget, what did he do? Condoned by Cabinet, he brought in a $100 million cut for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. That was the way the Prime Minister of Canada kept his promise.

Then, as the Government kept taking money out, it not only took that $100 million out—it still has a year or so to go on it depending what decision the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) gives here—but it also lifted $70 million out of the reserve fund to the company. Not only is the Government selling off two very profitable areas, set out on life by AECL, but it is also taking money right out of the bank of the corporation itself. Then the Government turns around and has the nerve to say: "Pay your way". No businessman can run an operation in that way. These people are supposed to be business heads over here. I do not know where they got their experience with that kind of philosophy floating around today.

Listen to this, Mr. Speaker, on March 31, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made an announcement that he and his deputy minister and the acting president at the present time, who is an outstanding public servant, were forming a special committee to liaise with the Board of AECL in order to bring in a new management and a new type of direction for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Here is what he said: "Let me state clearly that the federal Government fully supports the Canadian nuclear program." Fully supports. However, on page 1 of the same letter, which went out to all employees of AECL across the country, he said: "The sources for continuing the necessary level of research and development funding are uncertain."

At the same time that this Government is tremendously in support of research and development, it is uncertain where the money is going to come from. There is not an aggressive, forward looking industrial nation on the face of this earth, except this Government now in Canada, who is saying to its research and development organizations: "You pay your way." Those governments are making a public commitment to them. Japan is making a public commitment to them. The United States makes public commitments to them. Great Britain makes public commitments to their R and D organizations. However, what do we say to them here in Canada? We say: "If you make a buck, we are going to rob the bank. We are going to take everything out of your bank and then if you create a profitable company, we are going to take it over and we are going to sell it, and we are going to put the money"—as my hon. friend has just said—"into the treasury of Canada, the Receiver General of Canada." For what? How can you ever go out and complain about a company not paying its way in research and development when you are taking away its bank account?

The action taken in 1985 clearly mapped out the road that this Government was taking. It failed to give support to science in this country. The Government said: "Pay your way, yet I am going to take away your profitable parts."

What about these private enterprise companies that are going to purchase these two companies, Nordion International, which produces radio medical isotopes, and Theratronics International on cancer equipment and cancer research? Mr. Speaker, can you imagine a government selling off stuff like that when it has been such a success where it is right now? The Government is going to say: "We are selling it off to private enterprise."

It is a continuation on the part of this Government. It has already proven itself to be friends of the drug companies. Now, it is the friends of the people who want to take away the cancer research and the cancer equipment which has been produced in this country, free of charge, research done with public funds. At the same time, the Government also wants to sell off to its friends the radio medical isotope industry in this country. I say, shame on it.

Public funds provided all kinds of good research and development in Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Now, what is happening here? My hon. friend has just stated that not only is Atomic Energy of Canada being cut back—and I do not mean just cut back, it was 50 per cent, Mr. Speaker—but also the Atomic Energy Control Board is being interfered with. If there is anything that is needed more to build confidence in the nuclear industry of this country it is to have a strong well-equipped Atomic Energy Control Board to do the job that will give all Canadians confidence in the industry. The people across the way are destroying that. This Government has already proven itself to be the friend of the drug companies and now it wants to befriend other big enterprises by selling off these research and development arms.

• (1720)

What is going to happen in the future to these well-founded institutions? Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has produced Candu reactors for the production of hydroelectric power in this Province of Ontario and in other provinces of Canada. If it were not for that we would not be enjoying the standard of living that we are enjoying as Canadians today, because that hydroelectric power feeds half the industry in Ontario, to say nothing of the production of the jobs that are there because of the research done by AECL.

We now have a special committee looking into how the industry is going to fund itself because the Government has made a big decision that in no way will it support the industry. The Government is going to wave a flag and say "We do love you. We are in favour of you. The Government is fully in support of you, but you get out and raise your own money after we take the money you have already and after we take the profitable assets that you have and sell them off". What terrible business management, Mr. Speaker.

The future energy projections in this country are very obvious. We have heard about recent updates of the energy needed in the years to come. Maybe there are people who do not think this is related to this Bill. What I am saying, what my colleague has said, and what my hon. friend from Newfoundland said on the first day this Bill came before the House is that this industry must be kept going if we are to meet the energy needs for the future. A lot of the waterways in this country have been used up. Are we going to move into northern Ontario now and block up James Bay, because we are not putting money in from the profitable areas of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, these two crown corporations that the Government wants to sell via Bill C-13? I know the Members across the way cannot see this because they have tunnel vision when it comes to discussing these things known as energy, radio-medical isotopes, cancer therapy units and all related equipment thereto, namely, the research done by the parent company.

I said on May 1 in this House, I am saying it again today and I will keep on saying it, that I wish this Government would come to its senses, retain these two Crown corporations and let the funds from them go back into research and development so that things can continue. The Government has its source. What will it have after it sells these two profitable companies? Your income ends right there.

Mr. McDermid: Speak to the employees.

Mr. Hopkins: The Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs (Mr. McDermid) says speak to the employees. I have spoken to them.

Mr. McDermid: When?

Mr. Hopkins: They are worried that if the corporation does not get sold out the Government will close other operations down and they may well become the victims.

Mr. McDermid: That is not what they are afraid of at all.

Mr. Hopkins: The Hon. Member does not want to hear that. He does not understand that part of it.

I am absolutely firm in my stand that the profits from these offshoots that originated with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited should go back into the parent company to help finance them. There will come a day, if the Government lets this corporation go down the drain, if it is reduced, if it cannot operate, when someone will have to pick up the tab. You cannot let it go down the drain because reactors have to be serviced. You cannot turn off the tap in industrialized Canada. If you do, you are turning off the tap on the dollars that this Government needs to gobble up for projects under way.

The Government wants all the money it can get and yet it is selling off some of the best assets we have in Canada.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Mr. Hopkins: The Minister says "nonsense". What kind of nonsense is it to have two Crown corporations sold off that are making money for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, to take the money out of the reserve funds, to cut the Budget and then turn around and say "You guys pay your own way"?

Mr. McDermid: They are being bled to death by the parent company. That is why.

Mr. Hopkins: That kind of logic has got through to him. He is suddenly thinking. If there was one thing I wanted to do in this speech it was to start the thinking process within the mind of the Minister for privatization. I hope he continues to think about this all night. I hope the Government decides to do so as well because it is cutting off some of the finest products ever produced with public funds in this country.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense. They are being cut off.

Mr. Hopkins: That public funding is needed to continue sponsoring Atomic Energy of Canada Limited so it can continue its role in research and development in this country as one of the gems of research, not only in the medical field but in the energy and in many other fields as well.

I was quite interested in the Minister's letter. I hope that he will come out with a very positive program for this corporation. It will be very interesting to see how this whole matter is turned around and how the Government will continue to tell Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to "pay your own way. But if you make a buck we want it for the federal treasury. Once we get it in the federal treasury you are not getting it back because we are not going to fund you any more. You have to pay your own way". That is Tory logic.

How anyone is supposed to cope with that kind of mentality, I do not know.

I simply want to say in closing that this Government is permitting the biggest offence to research and development and the continuing of good research and development as it passes this Bill than has ever been committed in the past. That is really saying something, Mr. Speaker.

I implore the Government not to sell these Crown corporations. Let the money go back into further research and development. The country will then be on a solid basis.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments in regard to this legislation. Before I begin I would like to say that I thoroughly enjoyed the speech of my Liberal colleague who just had the floor. I think the points he made were extremely salient. The arguments he made were well developed and I certainly concur wholeheartedly with him.

This legislation is going to permit the Government to privatize Nordion and Theratronics, two wholly-owned subsidiaries of the Canada Development Investment Corporation. Nordion, formerly a radio-chemical company, and Theratronics, are both world leaders in nuclear medicine. Over 90 per cent of their sales come from export markets. When we look at the companies, we see that Nordion had annual sales of $90 million. Nordion is a leading global supplier of industrial sterilization systems and medical diagnostic products. Theratronics had annual sales of $40 million. It produces and markets Cobalt therapy machines to clinics and hospitals, not only in Canada but throughout the world. Together those two companies employ almost 700 people.

• (1730)

These are two very profitable, successful companies which are spin-offs from Atomic Energy of Canada. This is a demonstration that a Crown corporation can pay its own way. As soon as these two subsidiaries were showing that they could hold their own and pay their own way, that they could turn themselves into profit-seeking ventures, the Government sought to privatize them. It sought to give what has been years and years of Canadian investment of taxpayers' money and public interest in the development of a nuclear industry and nuclear technology away to the private sector. This is after Canadian taxpayers have taken the risk in developing these companies.

It seems to me to be illogical for the Government to say that it does not want any longer something that is working well. Everyone agrees that if Crown corporations can become profitable, that is great, but the Government cannot have its cake and eat it too. It cannot have a profitable corporation and then, because it is profitable, give it away to the private sector. How can we expect a Crown corporation to continue with profitable spin-offs when as soon as it develops one, it is taken from it? It is like the old saying, if it is not broken, why fix it. That is clearly the case with these two companies.

The private sector will milk all the advantages of the risk taking and development of technology that has occurred through the structuring of these two companies. The private sector will reap the advantages of those years of public investment.

Something that is also of concern is the fact that through privatizing these two corporations, the Government is closing a window of opportunity to maintain a level of influence, control and direction in the high-tech industry, particularly in the field of nuclear medicine. It is a very important window to maintain control through. It is an area of expansion in our technological evolution, and I see no reason, nor do my colleagues, for giving up the kind of leverage we could maintain by holding on to these companies in the public sector. Once we give up that leverage, we will have less ability to direct that technological evolution which Canada must be at the forefront of if it wishes to maintain its position in this industry.

Privatizing these companies will inevitably open the door for the potential for American control of Canada's nuclear medicine industry. I want to point out that this is the first time a nuclear company is to be privatized. In recognizing that decision, we have to question the health and security risks that go along with the privatization of such a firm. Of real concern is the fact, for example, that Theratronics will not be protected from any foreign investment control. It would be a mistake to see Canada's nuclear industry and nuclear technologies become controlled or owned outright by other than Canadian hands. I would submit that in light of the Free Trade Agreement, that potential exists.

It is also important to recognize the philosophical direction the Government has taken. It has continued its mindless following of the corporate agenda, to try to pare down the size of Government, to try to privatize all the Crown corporations that have been developed through the risks taken in the public sector using taxpayers' money. The Government is willing to throw that away because of pressures brought on by the corporate agenda. It is a mistake, in light of the importance of this industry to the future of Canada and the future of technological evolution, to lose control of those industries.

In light of those arguments, I would like to conclude by saying that I cannot over-stress the importance of maintaining that control. I cannot over-stress my feeling and that of my colleagues on this side of the House about the dangers of privatizing these companies, particularly in light of the Free Trade Agreement. I believe it is a serious error. I maintain that these are two profitable companies that demonstrate amply that a public utility or a Crown corporation, if run properly with good management, can become profitable. Why throw it out? If it ain't broke, don't fix it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the motion of Mr. McDermid. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure that if you were to ask the question of the House, you would find that there would be an agreement to defer the vote to six o'clock along with the other votes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Agreed and so ordered.

JUDGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-30, an Act to amend the Judges Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have had consultations with the other Parties, and I believe that you will find that there would be consent to refer this Bill to the Committee of the Whole House rather than to a legislative committee so that we could complete all stages this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Agreed and so ordered. Accordingly, the Bill stands referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to put some facts on the record with respect to Bill C-30, an Act to amend the Judges Act. Hon. Members will know that with respect to the number of provincial governments and appointments to the bench, there is a need from time to time to increase the size of the Superior and County Courts in all the provinces. Over the past few years, the demands on the court system have increased significantly. The workload of federally appointed judges across Canada has reflected this increased demand, and for this reason, we are appearing today with this Bill to try to adjust the number of possible appointments to take care of that demand.

The Judges Act provides for a specific number of judicial positions for each Section 96 Court. At the present time, there is a provision for a pool of 49 unassigned judicial positions so that additional judges may be appointed as the provinces and the territories increase the size of their courts between periodic amendments without the need to amend the Act for each individual judge.

• (1740)

Bill C-30 will add 35 judges to the specified authorized levels in six provinces and the Northwest Territories, in response to increases in the size of their courts which have occurred since 1985. The courts affected include provincial courts of appeal, and trial courts at both the superior court and county court levels.

Of the 35 positions which the six provinces and the Northwest Territories have created, the Governor General has drawn on the "pool" provision in the Judges Act to make appointments to 21 of those positions since 1985. An additional 14 positions, therefore, would remain to be filled as a result of the amendments contained in Bill C-30.

Bill C-30, consequently, will also "replenish" the Judges Act "pool" by re-enacting the relevant Section to make contingent provision for future increases in the number of judicial positions.

Another important aspect of Bill C-30 is that it will implement three more of the recommendations of the 1986 commission on judges' salaries and benefits, which was established pursuant to the Judges Act and is commonly referred to as the Guthrie Commission after its Chairman, Mr. H. Donald Guthrie, Q.C. The report and recommendations of the Guthrie Commission were tabled in this House by my predecessor, the Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn, on March 11, 1987.

In 1981 the Judges Act was amended to provide, with effect from 1979, an accountable annual allowance for judges in the amount of $1,000, separate from salary, "for reasonable incidental expenditures that the fit and proper execution of the office of judge may require". This incidental allowance applies against the cost of repair and replacement of court attire, the purchase of law books and periodicals, membership in legal and judicial organizations and other similar expenses not recoverable under any other provision of the Judges Act.

This $1,000 allowance is obviously inadequate. It has not been changed in 10 years. The effects of inflation will be well known to the House. Therefore, we are increasing that to $2,500. It is a modest increase and we think that it will do the job.

Bill C-30 will also extend to retiring judges of the Supreme, Federal, and Tax Courts of Canada, and to the surviving family members of judges of those courts who die in office, the benefit of a removal allowance to cover moving expenses to facilitate their relocation outside of the National Capital Region, which is where judges of those courts are required to live. In order to qualify for the allowance, the judge must have been resident outside of the National Capital Region before his or her appointment to the court in question. This removal allowance must be utilized within two years of the judge's retirement or death. This removal allowance was recommended by the Guthrie Commission, and we are also pleased to put it into effect.

The third big change is when a judge dies in office, a lump sum "gratuity" equal to one-sixth of the judge's annual salary at the time of death is currently payable to the surviving spouse pursuant to a series of Treasury Board minutes that date back to 1965. Bill C-30 will convert that lump sum payment which was on an ex gratia basis to a statutory entitlement, which was another recommendation of the Guthrie Commission.

Bill C-30 will increase from $4,000 to $6,000 the northern allowance provided to judges of the Yukon and Northwest Territories Supreme Courts, to compensate for the higher cost of living in the territories.

This is what might be called a housekeeping Bill. I appreciate the opportunity to consult with my colleagues opposite and the co-operation which they have given to us in allowing us to pursue second reading, Committee of the Whole House, and hopefully third reading stage today.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I see that there are 15 minutes left and we hope to get the Bill through all three stages by 6 p.m. The Minister summed it up well when he called it a housekeeping Bill. It is that.

I have read the provisions and I am satisfied to offer the support of the Official Opposition.

I only wish that the Minister were more ambitious and that we were doing more than housekeeping in the justice area. His predecessors saw that Canada was suffering from a drug epidemic and attempted to do things about that. They referred to pornography as an epidemic, and they were going to do something about that. We have witnessed law after law, some passed by the preceding Parliament, struck down by courts at various levels, and there has been no response.

I want to take this opportunity to urge the Government to not only be a housekeeper, not only take orders from the provinces and deliver them in Parliament, but to do something substantial in the way of law reform and in the way of advancing the interests of a good system of justice in Canada.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, we too are pleased to support this Bill on the basis that has already been put forward. However, we do not wish to let this occasion pass without making some additional comments. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) has stated, the Minister might have been more ambitious.

Perhaps the Minister could advise us whether he has taken the opportunity, since the meeting of the Justice and the Solicitor General's Committee to read the report by Professors Peter Russell and Jacob Ziegel from Toronto on federal judicial appointments, an appraisal of the first Mulroney Government's appointments. At that committee meeting, which was approximately 10 days ago, the Minister stated that he had not read the report. Apparently, he at least had noticed the clippings in The Globe and Mail because he had well formed views on the subject, without having read the report. I would hope that in the interval he has read the report. The report is a searing indictment of this Government's approach to judicial appointments. It is essential for the integrity of the judiciary that the Government decide that it is going to make its mark in Canadian history and be the first Government in the history of this country to make judicial appointments on a non-partisan basis.

The Minister stated before the committee—my Liberal friend from Kingston asks: "What do you think we were doing?" I have to give the Government credit for at least improving on the Liberal system.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Brewin: Again, I have lost my friends to my right, and I have the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) on my side.

The Hnatyshyn system at least added a veneer of review of the qualities of judicial appointments. It is clear that the Russell and Ziegel study shows that the Government has failed in its objective of cleaning up judicial appointments in this country. It is essential, if the public's overwhelming desire to see that our judiciary's integrity is preserved and that justice is not only done but seen to be done that the Government and Parliament take a very serious look at how judicial appointments are made.

The Government can, if it wishes, it has the freedom to do so, choose to continue to abuse judicial appointments and the judicial process. However, if it wishes to survive through the views of the electorate in the next election, it will have to take this issue far more seriously than it has. Judicial appointments are absolutely critical to how our system of justice works. It has been one of the travesties of Canadian history that repeated Governments have used judicial appointments to reward their friends.

The present system involves a number of groups in vetting judicial appointments, but it still has allowed the Government far too much latitude to pick and choose its friends. We have, therefore, comments coming from the professors along the lines of: "We see no reason why Canadians should acquiesce in a system that seems bound every year to produce a few really bad appointments to the higher courts of this country."

Mr. Milliken: Who?

Mr. Brewin: Last year the federal Government set up a non-partisan vetting committee in each province to rate would-be judges. The criteria for applying have received scant publicity, and it would appear that most of the candidates now being assessed by the committees came through the old networks that brought names to the attention of the Minister.

• (1750)

Mr. Milliken: Name them.

Mr. Brewin: My Liberal friend wants me to name them. That is the old tactic. The Canadian Advocate produced a study which is severely critical, as are many lawyers in the country, of the capacity of many judges.

That fact can be ignored if the Government and the Liberals wish to do so.

Mr. Milliken: It does not mean that they are Party hacks.

Mr. Brewin: The studies suggest that, in fact, it is the partisan nature of the appointment that is the source of the few really bad appointments.

It is interesting, is it not, Mr. Speaker, and I can see the Minister of Justice smiling as the Liberals leap to his defence, that in the system of patronage—

Mr. Lewis: I was smiling at you.

An Hon. Member: We cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Brewin: We cannot have it both ways? I think we are all consistent. The NDP has consistently stood for the independence of judicial appointments. The Liberals and the Conservatives appear united in speaking against it. It is time for judicial appointments to be taken out of political patronage.

We remember the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the 1984 debate scoring so many points with the public by leaving the impression that he was going to clean up the patronage system. He has simply not done that in the area of judicial appointments. The Minister can choose to ignore that if he wishes, but he will do so at the peril of the judicial system and the administration of justice.

I think the time has come for us to vote on this particular Bill and for all Parties in the House to pledge to do what we can to clean up the system of appointments in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 14 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the bells were to commence ringing at 6 p.m. and ring until 6.15 p.m. I imagine that it would be with consent that the bells should ring until 6.15.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Agreed and so ordered.

CANADIAN EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp that Bill C-19, an Act to amend the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act, be read the third time and passed; and the amendment of Mr. MacLellan:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> "Bill C-19, an Act to amend the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 6 p.m., the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the amendment of Mr. MacLellan.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. MacLellan), which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the amendment lost. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I think you would find unanimous consent in the Chamber to apply the vote just completed but in reverse to the main motion on Bill C-9 at second reading and to the main motion on Bill C-17 at third reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House agrees to apply the division just taken in reverse to the motion for second reading of Bill C-9, An Act to amend the Bank Act.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Loiselle that Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the House also agree to apply the division just taken in reverse to the motion for third reading of Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 6.38 o'clock, pursuant to order made Tuesday, June 13, 1989, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

On a point of order, the Hon. Minister of Justice, the Hon. House Leader.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in order that the Member whose Private Members' Business it is should have the full hour for his or her Bill to be debated, we would suggest that that full hour take place and that the Private Members' Business take until 21 minutes to 8 o'clock this evening.

CANADA SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches—Woodbine) moved that Bill C-244, an Act to protect and enhance the quality of drinking water in Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Those who wish to have conversations could do so behind the curtain. The Hon. Member for Beaches—Woodbine.

• (1840)

Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation as well to the Government House Leader for clarifying the length of time that we have to make some remarks on my Private Member's Motion.

This is one of several times that I have presented exactly the same Bill for debate in the House. I think an equal number of times the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard), and previous Ministers of the Environment have subsequently assured the House and the Canadian public that it is the intention of the Government to bring in legislation to do exactly the same as what this Bill will do.

I have been here for nearly ten years and I have heard these same assurances from the same Ministers. I am still waiting for the legislation. Hopefully, I will have the support of Members on all sides of the House tonight not to talk this Bill out, but to ensure that it is referred to an appropriate legislative committee so that all Members on can have input into the legislation and certainly the Canadian public can also have input.

Over the last couple years it has become politically popular for politicians to talk about the environment. It is as if suddenly many politicians have discovered that Canadians, and indeed people around the world, are seriously concerned about the abuses that we as human beings have been perpetrating on the environment and the ecology.

I do not want to sound too cynical when I make these remarks because I welcome that new-found interest. In doing that I think the Government should take an enlightened view toward this Private Members' Bill presented for the consideration of the House and allow it to go to a legislative committee for further consideration.

The Bill has four main elements. One, it would provide opportunities for public involvement in the making of regulations to set maximum permissible levels for contaminants and other substances in drinking water applicable to both public and private water systems.

Two, it would establish a water review board to monitor the safety of our drinking water.

Three, it would establish an expert water advisory council to apprise the Minister of current research related to drinking water quality, contaminants, substances and their effects. It would also promote new research into drinking water quality.

It came as some surprise to me when this Bill was in the draw and was drawn for debate. It went before the committee which makes the decisions on which Bills receive one hour of debate or six hours of debate followed by a vote of the House. Prior to my appearance before that committee my office had received a number of telephone calls from the Law Branch of the House of Commons to the effect that it did not feel that this Bill was properly before the House, that the responsibility for water quality rests with municipal governments and to some extent provincial governments. That came as a surprise to me because I never heard that argument before. This Bill has been in the House previously on at least four or five occasions. At no time did any government Member or a Minister raise that kind of objection. It came up under the present Government and a prior Liberal Government, so it came as a surprise to me to hear that kind of argument being made for a number of reasons, Mr. Speaker.

Water quality clearly falls under federal jurisdiction in some respects. That is why we have an International Joint Commission. That is why we have international agreements, particularly with the United States, which govern the water quality in the Great Lakes system and other water bodies across the country.

I understand the argument and accept it that municipal governments have the clear responsibility of supplying safe drinking water to the populations they serve, namely, the delivery of systems. Surely to goodness, the federal and provincial Governments have a clear responsibility for the quality of water before it comes under municipal jurisdiction, such as in Lake Ontario. Millions of people live around Lake Ontario. They rely on Lake Ontario for a safe drinking water supply. But that water is supplied by the Niagara River which is under joint jurisdiction between Canada and the U.S. How can an argument be made that the federal Government has no jurisdiction over the water quality? I say to the House as I have said in committee that there are all kinds of studies which have been made and which have concluded that water quality falls under federal jurisdiction.

For my purposes I make the argument that the federal Government has jurisdiction over the Great Lakes through the international joint agreement with the U.S.

I do not want to get too far off the arguments that the Bill presents, but on the best statistics alone, it is reason enough to believe that the federal Government, the House of Commons if you will, has a clear responsibility to give guidance and if that guidance is not forthcoming, the power to provide legislation to enforce the quality of drinking water across Canada and to work preferably in co-operation with provincial Governments to ensure that that happens. In the absence of that co-operation being established, I think that we at the federal level have the responsibility to act on behalf of Canadians to ensure that water quality is maintained at levels we would expect from our water resources.

I just want to give some background information about the seriousness of the dangers that are presented through our water supply, not only in Canada but internationally as well.

Canada has less than 1 per cent of the world's population yet we possess an estimated 25 per cent of the world's fresh water. The Great Lakes contain 18 per cent of the planet's surface fresh water. Canada's rivers have a combined flow of some 68,000 cubic metres per second, enough to fill all the country's bathtubs every ten seconds. On a global scale, fresh water constitutes only 0.2 per cent of the total water supply. Until the first decades of the 20th century, water borne diseases such as typhoid fever, claimed the lives of many Canadians. Although modern medicine has advanced to the point where this disease is no longer a serious threat, new forms of water borne disease are emerging.

The World Health Organization indicates that in the Third World diseases associated with dirty water kill 50,000 people every day, more than 80 million per year. As long as bacterial contamination of Canadian waters is allowed to continue, Canadians cannot assume that the same kind of effect could not happen here because it certainly could. I recall a month or so ago—it was in the news again several days ago—hearing about a community in New Brunswick where the total water supply is so contaminated by industrial pollutants that it is a sewer. It is not known for sure but the authorities in that community do know that the water is no longer drinkable. The people of that community have had to have bottled water shipped to them because their source of drinking water has been cut off by the contamination. I do not think that that is anything that we as Canadians either should tolerate or should continue to tolerate.

Several years ago, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) the former Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni, Ted Miller, and I along with several others, formed a task force which went to the Niagara Peninsula to look at the problems about which the people were voicing concerns regarding the Niagara River and the Great Lakes. In the course of that four or five day visit, we had an opportunity to look at the toxic dump sites which string the New York side of the Niagara River. There is absolutely no question that from those chemical dump sites, toxins are leaching into the Niagara River.

One of those particularly dangerous toxic chemicals is dioxin. It is the form of dioxin that was used by the U.S. Army in Vietnam for the purposes of defoliating trees so that bombers and similar equipment could more clearly see what they perceived to be the enemy on the ground. Years after the Vietnam war, the U.S. Government is finding that many military personnel are suffering from different kinds of cancer because of being exposed to that defoliant, Agent Orange, I believe it was called, in addition to effects felt by the poor people who were the victims of that kind of military attack.

Suffice it to say that one of the dumps on the New York side of the Niagara River has, I am told, tonnes of this stuff buried in it. It is that dioxin which is leaching through the dolomite rock of which the Niagara gorge is made. Dolomite rock is a very porous rock. Over the years, these companies have bulldozed the earth out to the surface of the rock and dumped the chemicals in. Some tell us that they lined the dumps with clay to keep the chemicals from leaching, but I have my doubts that that was the case. Even if that was the case, these chemicals are leaching out the walls of these dumps, going down through the porous bedrock and the groundwater into the Niagara River. Traces of this dioxin have definitely been found on the face of the Niagara Gorge.

There used to be an environmental scientist who worked with the Department of the Environment of Ontario, and I believe his name was Doug Hallett. He was a very respected individual. Doug Hallett told me, as he has said publicly in the media, that in his estimation, one shovelful of that dioxin waste, thrown into Lake Ontario, would kill that lake for thousands of years. Just one shovelful of that stuff would kill the entire lake, yet there are tonnes of this stuff buried in these dumps on the New York side of the river.

I know that various Canadian Governments have expressed concern about those dumps. There have been attempts made to convince the American Government that the only safe way to dispose of these chemical wastes is to excavate these dumps and destroy the chemicals either by incineration or by some other means. To date, as far as I know, we have not been successful in concluding these negotiations in a satisfactory way.

Hon. Members would be interested to know that after we had completed our examination of the Niagara River and surrounding area, we drew together a report on our findings. At that time, several years ago, I tabled that report in the House of Commons. If any Hon. Member is interested, I would be happy to provide a copy of that report.

The findings we made then are still true today. Nothing has changed. In fact, we have drawings that pinpoint the location of every one of these dump sites and every one of them contains a chemical soup. That chemical soup poses a day-to-day threat to the safe drinking water supply of the people who rely on Lake Ontario to provide that safe drinking water.

I urge the Government and Hon. Members to realize the reality of that threat. Even if Hon. Members do not pass this Bill, we should at the very minimum ask the appropriate House of Commons committee, whether it be a standing committee or a special committee, to take a good, hard look at the threat those chemical dump sites are posing to our water systems, especially in southern Ontario. It would also be worth while to take a look at some of the contaminants that are being poured into the rivers across Canada, whether by sawmills in British Columbia or by whatever caused the problem found with the blob in the Lake St. Clair area.

I see that you are indicating to me that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker. I thank you for your patience. At the very least, I would ask the House to seriously consider establishing such a committee.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I welcome this opportunity to speak to you about the safety of our drinking water, an issue that is of considerable importance for the health and well-being of all Canadians and thus an issue that the Department of National Health and Welfare takes very seriously. I am much encouraged by the decision made by the Hon. Member for Beaches—Woodbine (Mr. Young) to table Bill C-224 which concerns the safety of our drinking water. I would like to inform the Hon. Member that I would indeed appreciate receiving a copy of his research papers, as he so kindly offered during his speech.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should recall that this Bill is similar to Bills C-212, C-266 and C-276 which were tabled in recent years. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has pointed out on a number of occasions the importance of safe drinking water for public health. For this reason, the Department of National Health and Welfare has a primary responsibility, at the federal level, for the quality of our drinking water.

When Bills C-212, C-266 and C-276 were presented, we indicated that the Government intended to introduce its own legislation on safe drinking water in Canada.

We must not forget that both levels of government, federal and provincial or territorial, have important roles to play in distributing drinking water that is absolutely safe to drink. The Department of National Health and Welfare fully realizes the extent of the responsibility provincial governments have always had for water treatment for the purpose of producing and distributing drinking water. In fact, the provinces are imarily responsible for protecting and monitoring the water resources that provide our drinking water supply. Generally, authority has been delegated to municipalities, and the public utilities responsible for treating our water supply, to produce drinking water and provide for its distribution in their respective communities. The standards or guidelines for the quality of this water are set by the Department of National Health and Welfare, in co-operation with the provincial governments.

• (1900)

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Department has been actively involved in setting guidelines for drinking water quality ever since 1923, when an order in coucil was passed to regulate the bacteriological content of drinking water on board ships supplied with continental water. In 1968, the Department published the first statement of standards and universal objectives for drinking water in Canada, which set the standards for a substantial number of toxic chemical products, radioactive substances and micro-organisms. These standards were completely revised in 1978 by a federal-provincial committee. Canadian Guidelines for Drinking Water Quality in 1978 provided guidelines regarding 51 parameters, 42 of which concern chemical substances.

Since that date, new scientific data have revealed that water contains a host of chemical products, as the Hon. Member for Beaches—Woodbine mentioned, and that some of them are the result of the treatment process itself.

Considering these new findings, the Department has acknowledged the need for revising the guidelines for drinking water quality in Canada; a new document, published in 1987, is now available upon request.

This edition of the guidelines includes 41 pesticides, 31 of which had not been considered previously. The guidelines include 15 new organic parameters, while we have re-evaluted 9 inorganic and organic substances, including an assessment of the need for setting guidelines for PCBs and dioxins, which have aroused the interest and concern of all Canadians.

The Department of National Health and Welfare intends to revise this document at regular intervals. As in the past, revision is always done in cooperation with the provincial governments and with their full participation under the auspices of the Federal-Provincial Advisory Committee on Environmental and Occupational Health. Given the importance of safe drinking water and the rapid advancement of knowledge, a standing sub-committee has been established so that we can continue to keep the recommendations up to date and to deal with other important issues related to the supply of drinking water.

Drafting guidelines is not the only thing the Department of National Health and Welfare is doing with regard to drinking water. A safe drinking water supply can only be assured with a much broader approach. Overall, the Department's long-term goals for drinking water are: to ensure that all Canadians are supplied with drinking water that satisfies the recommendations for drinking water quality in Canada; to ensure that commercially sold water treatment devices used at point of consumption are safe, this being established by laboratory tests and by actual use, so that potentially dangerous devices are taken off the market; also, to ensure that all chemicals and materials that come directly or indirectly into contact with drinking water when it is produced, distributed or stored are assessed for potential danger, in order to guarantee their safety.

In view of the concerns expressed about the quality of some drinking water, it seems that some Canadians have lost confidence in their municipal drinking water to the extent that they have turned to other sources of supply or feel obliged to further purify water for their own use. Annual sales of bottled water by the soft drink industry alone are estimated at around $15 million. There is also spring water and other kinds of water sold in containers—

I do not know whether you are aware, Mr. Speaker, that in my riding of Argenteuil—Papineau, mainly in the Mirabel region, we have the best drinking water in Québec, if not in Canada, and we have a drinking water bottling industry that creates many jobs.

I also think—you are indicating to me that my time is nearly up, Mr. Speaker—that the Government of which I am honoured to be a part has acted and will continue to act. Recently, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) said that he was about to prepare documents to improve our quality of life.

I know what the Hon. Member means, because lately I went out onto Lake Ontario myself. I was very surprised to learn that most homes on the shores of Lake Ontario have practically no pollution control equipment. On the other hand, I was told that the U.S. Department had been on the lookout for several years and that things were improving. But with respect to the Great Lakes and the Niagara Peninsula, you can be assured, Mr. Speaker, and I would like the Hon. Member for Beaches—Woodbine to know, that Government Members from that region are very vocal in our caucus to make us more aware of this most important matter.

Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to go on, I had taken some very important notes, but unfortunately, my time is up. I would like to assure you that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is following this issue with great interest and that of course we will act to protect the health of Canadians, so that we may always have good, safe drinking water in Canada and leave it as a heritage to our children.

[English]

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I cannot follow up on the bragging done by the Parliamentary Secretary about having the best drinking water in my province. Unfortunately, the water in my municipality suffers from a slight odour problem because it has too much hydrogen sulphide in it. Last weekend, I was visiting with the Mayor of the Town of Bowden who was very proud of the fact that an independent panel, which included the Minister of the Environment of the Province of Alberta, chose the water from Bowden, Alberta as being the absolute best in Alberta.

I am very pleased to have this opportunity to discuss the subject of safe drinking water, which is a topic that is most important to the Department of National Health and Welfare, and to all concerned Canadians. The initiative of the Hon. Member for Beaches—Woodbine (Mr. Young) in introducing Bill C-224 concerning safe drinking water is most encouraging. As the Hon. Member stated in his introduction, similar private Members' Bills, Bill C-266 and C-276, have been introduced during the past few years.

Canada has as yet no national drinking water standards mandated by or enforceable through legislation. This contrasts with most other developed and even many less developed countries. Under the Canadian Constitution, resources, including water, are considered to be the mandate of the provinces. It follows that the provision of drinking water and the legislation of standards and regulations are the primary responsibility of provincial governments rather than the federal Government, with certain exceptions.

The development of national guidelines for drinking water quality has therefore been undertaken mainly on a collaborative basis between the federal and provincial levels of government with the Department of National Health and Welfare fulfilling a role of health adviser as prescribed under the Department of National Health and Welfare Act.

• (1910)

Measures designed specifically to protect the public health, such as the drinking water guidelines, are normally undertaken under the auspices of the Conference of Deputy Ministers of Health. A permanent sub-committee on drinking water, comprising representatives from all provinces and territories and from the Department of National Health and Welfare, develops and revises the guidelines on a continuing basis. Officials of the Department provide advice through their position as secretariat to both committees.

I had the privilege of sitting as a member of an elected municipal council for some 17 years. During that period of time I chaired our environmental health services committee, the group that had the responsibility for the provision of clean water to the municipal system. I have to confess that only when reading for this Bill did I become aware of the federal involvement. We worked with provincial guidelines and provincial people.

The first comprehensive Canadian drinking water guidelines were published by the Department of National Health and Welfare in 1968. They were revised first in 1978 and again in 1987. A fourth revision is in preparation.

The guidelines are not legally enforceable unless promulgated as regulations by the appropriate provincial agency. The guidelines are the primary means of assessing the safety, from a health perspective, of drinking water supplies for lifetime consumption. The guidelines also take into consideration aesthetic parameters such as colour, taste and odour.

However, the guidelines are not enough to ensure that the problems with drinking water arising from our modern society are adequately addressed. Canadians from all provinces have recently become increasingly concerned about the quality of the drinking water which their municipalities deliver. In fact, a survey conducted by a major Canadian magazine found that 44 per cent of all Canadians indicate that they believe tap water will not be drinkable by the year 2001.

Although major epidemics of typhoid and cholera are a matter of history in Canada, we cannot afford to let ourselves become complacent about the presence of pathogens in drinking water. Giardiasis became a serious concern in western Canada, a few years ago, when an outbreak occurred in one of our major resort areas.

There have also been outbreaks of viral diarrhoea and occasional outbreaks of typhoid. These have all been traced back to plant failures, cross-connections or flooding of wells, but still serve to demonstrate the potential public health significance of organisms that may escape sanitary barriers. The current emphasis on chemical contaminants and drinking water, therefore, should not divert our attention from the need to control microbial pathogens in drinking water.

Over the last decade scientists have identified, and the media have reported on, more than 1,000 organic chemicals that have occurred occasionally in drinking water. Fairly frequently a dozen or more chemicals have been detected in a single water supply.

We do not want to unduly alarm people since this has usually occurred at relatively low concentrations, in the parts per billion range or less. This detection has resulted largely from significant advances made in our ability to measure such low concentrations. In most of the cases, the concentrations are so low that they do not represent a health hazard, but at the same time they should not be ignored. Guidelines or objectives are needed to enable an assessment to be made of possible harm to health.

We know that the general public is concerned that conventional water processes, which are designed primarily to control bacteriological contamination and to remove inorganic contaminants, may not adequately remove certain trace organic contaminants. This concern has been manifested by the purchase of home-use treatment devices. It is believed that in-home devices to treat or filter municipal water supplies are used in about 3 per cent to 10 per cent of Canadian homes.

Although many of these water treatment devices may be safe and useful, it must be noted that the quality and safety of these devices is not regulated by any government Department, and considerable excesses in advertising have been known to occur. It is apparent that some control of these devices is required. Requests for government control have been expressed by consumer groups, provincial agencies and the public.

It is now known that some compounds generated in drinking water during treatment may also present health hazards. One of the most widely used treatment chemicals is chlorine, which is used as a disinfectant. Some concern has been expressed that chlorination can give rise to the formation of chloroform and other chlorinated by-products, some of which may be toxic under certain conditions.

The benefits of chlorination far outweigh these concerns, however, and a look at alternative disinfectants suggest that the well proven chlorination process should not be abandoned yet since there is very limited knowledge about the alternatives. Two alternatives being considered are ozone and chlorine dioxide. Ozone is becoming increasingly popular in Canada, particularly in Quebec. Ozonation reaction products are still relatively unknown, but are being studied by scientists in the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Chlorine dioxide does not give rise to the undesirable by-products formed during the normal chlorination process. However, a major disadvantage is the production of chlorate and chlorite which may be of health significance when ingested regularly at high concentrations.

Some chemicals may enter our drinking water indirectly, as a result of the use of piping, paint, coatings or other lining materials used in water storage and distribution systems. Chemicals may be released in small amounts as the material ages, or contaminants of the original material may be released. Concern is expressed about some of our distribution systems utilizing asbestos-lined pipe. Any new legislation should address the problems of lack of mechanisms to evaluate and regulate drinking water contaminants arising from both direct and indirect means.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the recent Speech from the Throne included a commitment from the Government to introduce legislation on drinking water. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) intends to introduce a safe drinking water Act for Canada. Already, officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare are working with the Department of Justice in mapping out the areas to be covered by the Act.

Quality guidelines for drinking water, including microbiological, physical, chemical and radiological characteristics will be established and published in the Canada Gazette. For reasons outlined previously, these guidelines will not be mandatory standards unless made so by the provinces, as is the case at present.

The present system for establishing guidelines has worked well for the past 20 years, thanks to the continuing high degree of co-operation demonstrated by all the provinces and, in the last few years, by the territories as well. Thus there would be no change in legislative status, but current practice would be given legislative authority.

Consideration is, however, being given to making drinking water quality objectives, based on the guidelines, mandatory for areas under federal jurisdiction. This would apply to drinking water on all federal passenger carriers, including airlines, railways, ships and interprovincial buses. It would also include community drinking water systems in native communities and reserves that have not yet reverted to control by native people themselves or by the province. Individual wells or supplies serving only a few people would not be included for reasons of practicality and cost.

Consideration is also being given to regulating devices sold for home water treatment. At present there are no control requirements or performance standards to ensure both efficacy for the purposes claimed and the protection of human health.

The new legislation will contain provisions for making regulations to cover chemicals used in water treatment facilities, as well as concentrations of contaminants which may be present in these treatment chemicals. The new Bill would also include authority to prescribe standards for the composition of system components and surface materials that come into contact with potable water. This would also alleviate problems that have arisen concerning both direct and indirect contamination.

I notice that you are asking me to wind up, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to discuss the safety of drinking water, a very important subject for the Department of National Health and Welfare and all Canadians concerned. The initiative of the Hon. Member for Beaches—Woodbine (Mr. Young) in presenting Bill C-224 on the quality of drinking water is encouraging. We recall some very similar Bills, C-266 and C-276, that were presented in the past.

Water is as essential to life as food and air. It is one of the most abundant terrestrial resources and is present in the air, on the ground and in the earth. However, pure water does not exist in nature. Water carries a great number of substances for which it acts as a solvent. For example, it contains gases absorbed from the atmosphere and natural organic and inorganic substances obtained by dissolving rocks and earth. In fact, it is this mixture of chemicals that gives water its pleasant taste. Everyone who has drunk chemically pure water will agree that it is insipid, bland and tasteless.

Unfortunately, water can also contain many toxic substances. The presence of bacterial and viral pathogens in public water supplies was all too obvious in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, when water-borne diseases were common in Canada and among the leading causes of death. The use of effective disinfection methods led to the virtual elimination of these diseases from our society and contributed to a major improvement in public health.

Mr. Speaker, although major epidemics of typhoid and cholera are a matter of history in Canada, we cannot afford to let ourselves become complacent about the presence of pathogens in drinking water. In western Canada, giardiasis has now become a serious concern and also causes problems further south, in the Adirondacks in New York State. There have also been outbreaks of viral diarrhea and occasional outbreaks of typhoid. These have all been traced to plant failures, cross-connections or flooding of wells, but still serve to demonstrate the potential health significance of organisms that may escape sanitary barriers. The current emphasis on chemical contaminants in drinking water, therefore, should not divert our attention from the need to control microbial pathogens in drinking water.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I may recall that over the last 20 years, scientists have identified more than 1,000 organic chemicals in drinking water, at relatively low concentrations. This has usually been in the parts per billion range or less. This detection has resulted largely from significant advances made in our ability to measure such low concentrations.

We know that the general public is concerned that conventional water processes, which are designed primarily to control bacteriological contamination and to remove inorganic contaminants, may not adequately remove certain trace organic contaminants. According to a poll carried out recently by a major Canadian magazine, 44 per cent of the population believes that tap water will no longer be drink able by the year 2001. This concern has been manifested by the phenomenal rise in sales of home-use treatment devices. In a survey carried out in 1984 by the Department of National Health and Welfare in metropolitan areas in Canada, it was found that 3 per cent of Canadian homes used some type of in-home device to treat municipal water supplies, and it is estimated that this figure has now increased to 10 per cent. About 70 per cent of these devices use active carbon filters, about which the Department has some reservations because of the problem of bacterial growth on the filters. We may also point out that other treatment devices, such as those based on reverse osmosis and distillation, also have their drawbacks.

Most small communities and homes in Canada's rural areas use ground water as their source of water supply. Generally speaking, it is assumed that this water is free from contaminants and requires only minimal treatment before consumption. However, this assumption may no longer be correct since organic compounds such as pesticides and industrial solvents have been discovered in ground water in most states in the United States. We have only spotty information on Canadian ground water, but we do know there are problems in some communities such as Joliette and St-Hyacinthe, in the province of Québec, where drinking water has been contaminated by the pesticides aldicarb and atrazine, respectively.

It is now known that some compounds generated in drinking water during treatment may also present health hazards. One of the most widely used treatment chemicals is chlorine which is used as a disinfectant. Some concern has been expressed that chlorination can give rise to the formation of chlorofom and other chlorinated by-products, some of which can be toxic under certain conditions.

Mr. Speaker, a look at alternative disinfectants suggests, however, that the well-proven chlorination process should not be abandoned yet since there is very limited knowledge about the alternatives. Ozone is becoming increasingly popular in Canada, particularly in Québec. Ozonation reaction products are still relatively unknown, but are being studied by scientists in the Department of National Health and Welfare. A wide-ranging study that will cost about $1 million, financed jointly by the Government of Québec, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of the Environment and the federal Department of Supply and Services, is presently underway on the water distribution system in the municipality of Sainte-Rose, near Montreal.

Chlorine dioxide does not give rise to the undesirable by-products formed during the normal chlorination process. However, a major disadvantage is the production of chlorate and chlorite which may be of health significance when ingested regularly at high concentrations. That is why the Department of National Health and Welfare, in co-operation with the province of Alberta, recently sponsored a study to evaluate various disinfectants used in the treatment of drinking water. The Department of National Health and Welfare and the Ontario Department of the Environment also sponsored a study co-ordinated by the Canadian Public Health Association, which included a critical study of the quality of water from the Great Lakes.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has also helped the Province of Ontario as a consultant on contract work concerning the effectiveness of activated charcoal treatment in a Niagara Falls pilot plant. The Department of National Health and Welfare is also cooperating with Environment Canada and the four Atlantic provinces on a major four-year study to determine the extent of contamination of municipal water distribution systems by organic substances. This study is now in its fourth year.

It is clear from what I have just said that the Department of National Health and Welfare is doing research on drinking water in every region of the country and that a large part of the work sponsored by the Department alone or with the provinces is contracted out to industry or the academic community.

Perhaps we should ask exactly what we should do to make our drinking water safe. Of course, the water quality guidelines or standards implicitly define what is acceptable for health.

"The recommendations for the quality of drinking water in Canada, 1987" are used to determine if water under federal authority is fit for consumption. They are updated almost every year and have been adopted by several provinces which have included them in their own quality objectives. Alberta, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland use these federal-provincial recommendations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, I just have a few words on this very important Bill before the House today that deals with the quality of drinking water in Canada. The reason why it is so important is that too many communities—hundreds of communities and thousands of people in Canada—are drinking contaminated water. It is perhaps the single cause of a great deal of sickness, especially with children in many of our rural communities throughout Canada. In fact, if one were to examine the rationale used by municipalities in Canada seeking financial assistance for water systems from the provincial Governments and provincial authorities, one would discover that the chief reason listed is contaminated water. In other words, a municipality today, or water authority depending on which province you are in, would seek financial assistance from the provincial administration, because it is handled through the provincial Governments, for funding or permission to borrow based on the fact that the water they are drinking is contaminated.

You can see this throughout Canada, especially in the rural areas. Unfortunately the smaller the community, the greater the difficulty it has in obtaining funding for an adequate water supply. The reason is that municipal financing in Canada is based on the principle of loans. In other words, a municipality either gets the authority to borrow, a guarantee to borrow or borrows from provincial administrations. Therefore, when you have a small community, depending on the province, and certainly all provinces in Canada are alike, there is no funding in the form of grants to put in a water system. There is no mechanism in place today in Canada to provide grant money, not loan money, to put in a water system. There is no provincial administration in Canada where you can get money to construct a water system and not have to pay back that money. If you have to pay it back, then you must have the guarantee of the provincial Government or you do not get it through the banks.

That stands to reason, and that is why a tragic error was made about five years ago by the Government of Canada when it classified all of its works programs in Canada as training programs. You cannot get money any more to build a water system in Canada through the Department of Employment. The current works programs in Canada that the Government brags about every day were changed when the Government came to power. Therefore, you cannot get money any more to put in a water system in Canada to alleviate the problem of children and parents drinking contaminated water.

How many times can you train somebody to put down a pipe? How many times can you train somebody to dig a ditch with a pick and shovel? So the Government of Canada says: "All works programs in Canada are training programs, and if you cannot train somebody for an occupation, you cannot have the money." Today there are communities with contaminated water in their water systems and they cannot solve that problem because the Government of Canada has changed the rules. It has said that unless you are training a worker for employment that he can have for the rest of his days, then you cannot get any money.

Just imagine what a foul act that was. What an absolutely outrageous act by the Government of Canada—hundreds of communities in Canada today with pipes under the water leading from a pond or a lake. There has been $200,000, $300,000, $400,000 spent on a pipe under the ground and they cannot continue the construction. Why? Because the Government of Canada changed the rules midstream and said: "You cannot have money any more unless you are training everybody for a job that they can have in the future and a job that is needed in your area."

The local authority says: "Well, I want to put in a section of water line." The Government says: "No, no, you have got to prove that that ditch digger is being trained to dig a ditch so that he will have a job in the future."

That is what the criteria is for every works program in Canada today. For every job creation program funded by the federal Government today in Canada, the only criteria is that you must be training somebody for a job that is needed in that area and that you are going to give him training so that he is going to be able to work after that job is over. That is all job creation projects in Canada today, including the Job Development Program, the Job Strategy Program and Section 25 which is employment under the Unemployment Insurance Act. So all jobs in Canada funded by this Tory Government areonly for training. They say: "To heck with what it does. Who cares", says the Government of Canada, "if people are drinking contaminated water? Who cares if children are getting sick every day? Who cares if they have got half their water line under the ground?" A small community with $200,000 or $300,000 spent in water line under the ground, and it has been like that for five years since the rules were changed by the Government of Canada.

Then the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) stands up in the House and brags about it and says: "Look how many people we are training for jobs in Canada."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 96(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND THE EXCISE ACT

MOTION THAT DEBATE NOT BE FURTHER ADJOURNED

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved:

That the debate on second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-20, and on any amendments proposed thereto, shall not be further adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

EXCISE TAX ACT AND THE EXCISE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, June 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Loiselle that Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When Bill C-20 was last before the House, the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières had the floor and had completed his speech.

The question and comment period following the Hon. Member's speech is now available to Members, otherwise the Chair is prepared to recognize an Hon. Member for debate.

Since there are no questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Cambridge on debate.

Mr. Pat Sobeski (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, contains legislative amendments required to implement the federal sales and excise tax and duty changes announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his April Budget.

The Budget proposes tax increases across the range of major revenue sources: sales tax, excise levies, personal income tax, and corporate tax. A major element of the Government's revenue strategy is the replacement of the existing manufacturers' sales tax with a new system on January 1, 1991. Sales tax reform will be implemented in a manner consistent with the projected medium term debt plan.

Canadians will hardly be surprised that the largest single item in the budget expenditures consists of the public debt program, which provides for the interest and servicing costs of the public debt and for the issuing cost of new loans.

In the Budget the Minister of Finance identified Canada's large and growing public debt as a serious obstacle standing in the way of our continued economic and social programs. The Minister of Finance spoke of the need to address the problem of our accumulated debt so as to maintain our capacity to achieve our economic potential in the years ahead and to meet the social and cultural priorities of Canadians.

As most Canadians are aware, public debt charges are forecast at $39.4 billion for 1989–90. That is an increase of some $6.4 billion from the Estimates for 1988–89. This is an increase of nearly 20 per cent in only one year and reflects the recent surge in short-term interest rates both here in Canada and abroad.

This illustrates, as dramatically as any words, the extent to which our huge debt has left Canada exposed and why we must bring the debt under control. It will require all the debt control measures the Minister of Finance announced in the Budget, as tough as they are, to offset or almost offset the projected increase in debt costs. Taken together, our expenditure reductions and revenue increases will produce $5 billion this year and $9 billion next year. As a result, by next year the public debt will stop growing faster than the economy for the first time since the 1970s.

The second major category of spending comprises fiscal transfer payments to the provinces. The great bulk of those payments are made under the fiscal equalization program. This consists of the unconditional transfer payments made to ensure that provincial Governments have sufficient revenues to enable them to have reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

Even with the tight spending controls dictated by the debt burden, this Government's support for a wide range of vital national services through these transfer payments is growing. Equalization transfers account for $7.3 billion in the 1989–90 Estimates.

This enabling legislation, Bill C–20, contains a number of important revenue raising measures, including increases in the existing federal sales tax rate and increases in the excise levies on tobacco products and gasoline.

Pending the implementation of sales tax reform, the existing rates of federal sales tax will be raised as follows: the 18 per cent rate on tobacco and alcohol increases to 19 per cent. The fiscal impact is to increase revenues because of this measure by $55 million in the 1989–90 fiscal year and by $70 million in the 1990–91 fiscal year.

A second measure is the 10 per cent rate on telecommunication and programming services will increase to 11 per cent. The fiscal impact will result in increased revenues of $80 million in 1989–90 and $110 million in 1990–91.

The 8 per cent rate on construction material and equipment for buildings will become effective January 1, 1990 and this increases to 9 per cent. As a result of this measure, the fiscal impact will be $40 million in 1989–90 and $255 million in 1990–91.

Finally, the 12 per cent general federal sales tax rate will increase to 13.5 per cent. The fiscal impact will increase revenues in 1989–90 by $1.140 billion and in 1990–91 by $1.6 billion.

Since the new goods and services tax will be implemented on January 1, 1991, the Government will not proceed with the interim measures proposed in the February 1988 Budget relating to the treatment of marketing and distribution costs and to wholesale licences. The fiscal impact on revenue measures will be a reduction in the estimated revenues, because of not proceeding with the interim measures, of $520 million in 1989–90 and $370 million in 1990–91.

In order to protect low income Canadians against the impact of these sales tax increases, the refundable sales tax credit for adults will be increased from $70 to $100 in 1989 and to $140 in 1990. The credit for children will be raised from $35 to $50 in 1989 and to $70 in 1990. For a family of four that will represent in 1990 a sales tax credit of $420.

The income threshold at which the credit begins to be phased out will be increased from $16,000 to $18,000 in 1990. As the refundable sales tax credit is paid through the personal income tax system, personal income tax revenues will be lowered by $135 million in 1989–90 and will be lowered by a further $465 million in 1990–91.

• (2030)

I would also add that further enhancements of the refundable sales tax credit will accompany the introduction of the goods and services tax reform in 1991. The following changes in excise levies are also proposed. In the area of fuel tax increases Bill C–20 implements increases in excise taxes on gasoline of one cent per litre effective April 28, 1989, and an additional one cent per litre as of January 1, 1990. These increases will yield $215 million in 1989 and $640 million in 1990 in additional revenues to be used to address the problem of the public debt.

The excise tax on leaded gasoline and leaded aviation gasoline is increased by a further one cent per litre effective April 28, 1989, to discourage the use of leaded fuel. This increase in tax on leaded fuel will accelerate the decline in the use of this type of fuel in recognition of the hazards to the environment and the health of Canadians caused by lead emissions from gasoline.

The excise tax on diesel fuel is not being increased.

There is also a fuel tax rebate program. Bill C-20 extends the sales tax portion of the fuel tax rebate program for primary producers for one additional year to December 31, 1990. The fuel tax rebate program was established in the fall of 1984 as a temporary measure.

Under the program, farmers, fishermen, hunters, trappers, miners and loggers are entitled to receive rebates of federal sales tax and excise taxes on vehicle fuels used for off-highway production purposes. Under the new goods and services tax to be implemented on January 1, 1991, all commercial users will be entitled to recover federal sales tax on business inputs. The rebate of the federal sales tax to primary producers in respect to fuels used for off-highway production purposes will be extended for one additional year pending implementation of the goods and services tax.

Thus, in 1990, farmers will continue to receive sales tax rebates of 3.5 cents per litre in respect of gasoline and diesel fuel for off-highway production purposes. Other primary producers will receive rebates of three cents per litre. The cost of this extension is estimated to be $125 million.

The excise tax portion on the fuel tax rebate program will expire as scheduled on December 31, 1989.

There are also taxes on tobacco products which have been increased substantially.

These measures will raise approximately $900 million in 1989-90 and $970 million in 1990-91.

I would like to conclude my remarks with the words of a tough talking Finance Minister who rose to preach of his belt-tightening Budget. He said:

> We intend to continue severe restraint—our experience this past year, and the prospects next year, force us all to recognize the essential problem of the control of public expenditures in Canada today.

Those words ring as true today as they did on October 22, 1968, when Finance Minister Edgar Benson delivered the first Budget of the flower power and just society Trudeau Liberals.

The rhetoric of restraint will always be the same, but this time this Government will take hard action to back it up.

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise this evening to speak on Bill C-20, which implements various budget measures previously announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Indeed, after the recent comments of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) I feel renewed vigour in taking this opportunity to participate in the debate this evening.

Bill C-20 contains the legislative amendments required to implement the federal sales and excise tax and duty changes announced in the Budget. During the debates in the House on the Budget, even though I was on the Speaker's roster, due to the number of Members wishing to speak I never did have that opportunity. Thus I am doing so this evening.

My comments this evening will incorporate my reflections on both the excise tax Bill and the government Budget.

All Canadians today are concerned with the annual deficit and the national debt. However, with respect to this Budget and, in particular Bill C-20, the result is very disappointing. Whatever objective the Government had in mind, the Budget has failed to set up a proper course.

In particular I want to address this Bill in the context of three possible budgetary objectives, objectives which the Government espoused in its Speech from the Throne, namely, fiscal responsibility and deficit reduction, social fairness and investing in Canada's future.

By any measure the Government has not only failed to make progress on these fronts but seems to be going backward. The Government's budgetary approach is full of contradictions, half measures and false starts. One example is the impact of the manufacturers sales tax on the average Canadian family through the imposition of this tax increase from 12 per cent to 13.5 per cent. This is the most insidious form of taxation, one that is hidden and one which particularly hurts lower income Canadians.

In terms of fiscal responsibility, the Government has slashed some programs, raised taxes and with what do we end up? A deficit that is $1.6 billion bigger than last year. It is almost comical.

By end of next year the total national debt will be $350 billion. In 1984 it was $200 billion. Thus in little over five years the Government will be well on its way to doubling the national debt.

What is more astounding is that these five years have been a period of strong economic growth, ones in which government revenues have increased by over $30 billion annually. Yet the Government has failed to apply this increased revenue against the deficit. Obviously, we have a Government that was taxing us to the limit while continuing to overspend.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) now seems to have decided the culprit is in interest rates, conveniently ignoring the fact that the Bank of Canada's fiscal policies are largely set as the result of government direction. Any inflationary feelings we are having in the country today are due to the high interest rates that his own Government has imposed on Canadians. Yet when we hear of the Government spending $2.7 million on ads to educate the public about the Budget or $25,000 to count rose bushes in the PM's backyard one begins to wonder if there are not other reasons.

In the area of social fairness both inside and outside the country we are backtracking on our commitments. Foreign aid has been cut back by $360 million directly contradicting our stated commitment to increased funding levels to 6 per cent of the Gross National Product.

The closing of Armed Forces bases across the country will particularly hurt the economy of regions such as the province in which I grew up, Prince Edward Island. To take 1,300 jobs out of the economy of P.E.I. is equal to taking 35,000 jobs out of the economy of Quebec, or closing the auto plants in Ontario. If one does not think that Ontarians and Quebecers would be up in arms if we took those jobs out of their economies then one would be in for a surprise.

The relative burden of tax on lower to middle-income Canadians continues to rise. A family with an income of $32,000 pays $680 more in taxes than it did in 1984, while those with incomes greater than $100,000 pay less. With the implementation of the regressive 9 per cent federal sales tax in 1991 matters will only get worse. The Government continues its short-sighted approach toward investing in Canada's future. The new federal sales tax will create an administrative nightmare for small and medium-sized businesses.

Despite the Government's stated commitment to science and technology, it is continuing to cut back or eliminate some of the most successful programs used by small and medium-sized high-tech firms. The Defence Industry Productivity Program, of great assistance to defence related industries, will be cut back by $25 million in 1991. Worse still, the Unsolicited Proposals Program will be eliminated entirely. What was previously called an integral part of the Government's contracting out policy in science and technology, the UPP, is to be phased out. In one fell swoop, the Government has wiped out one of the best ways of assisting the start up of small and medium-sized high-tech firms. I am beginning to think the Government does not know the difference between investment and expenditure.

The Budget will mean fewer jobs for Canadians. The Conference Board of Canada predicts that 97,000 jobs are being lost and they predict that unemployment will rise from 7.7 per cent to 8.5 per cent.

What are the serious effects of the Budget? First, post-secondary education and health cases are being seriously affected with the Government's failure to continue its commitment to fund our colleges, universities and hospitals. Taxes on a traditional family with one income earner and two children have gone up more than seven times faster than families with high incomes. Taxes on families with children have increased more than families without children. The Budget discriminates against families in which one parent is the primary income earner.

The Budget is an attack on the elderly. The so-called claw-back of old age security benefits is one area that definitely warrants further attention. At first glance, the claw-back provision seems reasonable, but when one begins to assess it, one suddenly realizes that the old age pension benefits will be taxed back at a rate of 15 per cent on individual incomes over $50,000, rising to 100 per cent for incomes reaching $76,000.

According to the Government, this measure will affect only 4.3 per cent of seniors. As one senior's organization put it to me, however, this is but the thin edge of the wedge because the $50,000 threshold is to rise at a rate of 3 per cent less than inflation. Claw-back will start at $36,000 by the year 2,000, and in 20 years it will start at $28,000 and affect two million Canadians.

Furthermore, the whole approach is full of anomalies. One income earner families with salaries over $50,000 will be taxed, but a wife and husband each earning $50,000 or less will not. High-income seniors will find themselves paying more tax than individuals under 65 earning the same income, while seniors who live permanently outside Canada will not be taxed on their old age security cheques at all. Add this to the new sales tax slated for 1991 and cuts to federal funding for medicare, and the result is an unprecedented tax grab on the seniors of this country.

This Budget is an attack on the dairy farmers as well. Our farmers have been told that there will be a capping of their milk quotas for the next two to three years. Milk capping means no new revenue, yet their costs will continue to escalate. Who would want to be told that their salary will stay where it is for the next two to three years?

In addition, after 1990, farmers will be charged excise tax on farm gasoline when the sales tax reform is implemented.

All Canadians are concerned and most anxious to see the deficit reduced, but not on the backs of low-income people, families and our adult population. There is a great concern in the country today as is reflected in the amount of mail that is coming into my office from people in my riding of Nepean alone. They are stressing the points I have mentioned in my speech today. They are extremely worried about their future and the future of their children and grandchildren.

I ask, indeed, beg the Government to reconsider some of the measures in its Budget proposals and to try to have compassion for Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to ask a few questions and to make a speech in the House this evening, particularly when the Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs (Mr. McDermid) is present, as is the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South (Mrs. Dobbie), because during my last speech in the House she kept heckling me and I found that rather challenging. Perhaps she will have an opportunity to do so again this evening.

[English]

In my submission, Bill C-20 is a bad Bill and should be rejected. I want to talk about some of the more pernicious tax increases contained in the Bill. First, let me summarize its effect briefly. The rates of federal sales tax are increased from 18 per cent to 19 per cent on alcoholic beverages; from 10 per cent to 11 per cent on telecommunication services and telecommunication programming services; from 8 per cent to 9 per cent on construction materials; and from 12 per cent to 13.5 per cent on all other taxable goods.

The Government maintains that those tax increases will generate an additional $2 billion in its first full year of operation. That is $2 billion more in tax revenue to help feed the insatiable appetite of the Government for public spending which it has done on a most impressive and continuous scale of increase, despite its phoney protestations to the contrary.

The tax increases the Government has proposed, along with the others it has implemented since it was first elected in 1984, represent the largest tax increases any government has imposed on Canadians in our history. Frankly, it is a shocking record of financial neglect, financial mismanagement, and ministerial incompetence on a scale we have not witnessed since the Diefenbaker Government in the 1950s and the early 1960s. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South (Mrs. Dobbie) laughs. I recognize that laugh, a nervous laugh of those who realize that defeat is imminent. The Minister of State for Privatization (Mr. McDermid) is getting into the act.

They may feel comfortable in their majority in the House, but they are worried. They know that Members like the Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy) will be deserting the Party on crucial votes in the House.

Sooner or later, people will come to their senses on the other side and desert the Government in sufficient numbers that bad Bills like this will be defeated on the floor of the House of Commons and we will go to the people to let them decide whether a Bill imposing these kinds of taxes is what they want.

I want to deal with Bill C–20 in the context of the leaky Budget that Members will recall was introduced in the House on April 26. Let me refer to some figures prepared by Global Economics Limited, an Ottawa based economic consulting firm which did an in depth analysis of the income distribution implications of the Budget. They have developed a new social policy simulation data base and model. Apparently Statistics Canada refers to it as "a powerful new tool with which to analyse the impact of tax and social policy changes". So it is widely acknowledged to be an extremely effective computer model which is quite useful for doing the kind of economic analysis which is helpful in determining the effect of the tax changes that have been introduced.

When this Budget has been fully implemented—the Hon. Members should try to contain themselves. I know they will want to make speeches later. I know the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South will want to speak in this debate, because her constituents will want to see her views on this Budget. They will want to know how much she supports this kind of Bill that taxes them to the hilt. I do not believe they are in favour of these tax changes, and she may want to remember that come next election.

When these budget measures have been fully implemented, the additional tax burden per family will on average across Canada be $382 per year more out of people's pockets. Let us hear the really unjust part. If you do not think that is unfair, Mr. Speaker, of that $382, $151 of it will be in personal taxes; that is, in income type taxes. The remaining $231 will be in consumption taxes, sales taxes, the kind we are discussing in this wicked Bill tonight that the Government is suggesting that we pass.

I want, as a passing note, to remark that this Bill, having been debated once in this Chamber for a matter of hours on Tuesday morning, June 6, is now being brought forward for debate starting at about 7.40 p.m. tonight under closure. This Government is trampling on the rights of Parliament in order to force this unpopular Budget on the people. A Liberal Government has never used closure on any budget bill. This is a complete breach of parliamentary practice. It is a shocking display of the inability of the Government to come to grips with the fact that it was elected to be responsible to this House of Commons. That is what it was elected to do and it is not being responsible. It is trampling all over this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Milliken: Hon. Members laugh at the trampling of the rights of Parliament. Eighty–three per cent of Canadian families will see their after tax income drop as a result of this Budget. Indeed, half of those whose earnings are less than $25,000 a year will see their after tax incomes drop.

This Budget is particularly hard on the elderly. One million, three hundred thousand elderly Canadian taxpayers will experience a decline in 1990 in their after tax income as a direct result of this Budget and of the tax measures contained in Bill C–20 that we are discussing tonight.

An Hon. Member: It is not funny.

Mr. Milliken: It is not funny, and indeed I just today had three letters from constituents of mine complaining about these claw–back provisions. I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Cooper) is finding this amusing. I do not find the harsh treatment of seniors by the Budget a laughing matter. I think the Government should be ashamed of itself for the tax changes that it has proposed in this respect.

I had three letters today from constituents who are seniors and who had contributed through Old Age Security—I wish there were not so many interruptions, Mr. Speaker. It is disconcerting to continue with a sensible speech when Hon. Members opposite continually heckle. I see that the Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy) has disappeared and I know he agrees with everything I am saying.

I had three letters today from constituents in Kingston complaining about the fact that they have contributed money for years through the Old Age Security tax to the old age system. Now they are being deprived of the income that they would have expected to get but for the claw–back provisions contained in the Budget. They maintain it is unfair. I maintain it is unfair and Hon.

Members opposite obviously are ashamed of that tax. That is why they are doing all this yelling and interrupting because they do not want to hear how bad this is.

Mr. McDermid: The Liberal Party suggested that. The Member from Etobicoke suggested that.

Mr. Milliken: Let me read from a speech given at the time of the introduction of this Bill by the Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Loiselle). Hon. Members opposite will want to hear these pearls of wisdom from their own front bench.

He said, as reported at page 2640 of Hansard:

> The federal sales tax is also the centrepiece of another key element of our strategy to strengthen Canada's economy and preserve essential programs.

Of course their idea of essential programs and everyone else's apparently are different. We have cuts in VIA Rail which we consider exceedingly important. We have cuts in defence spending which we did not in every case consider quite so important, but in certain cases we consider extremely important, and we have unfair tax measures. Those are what are called essential programs apparently by the Minister of State (Finance). He went on at page 2642 of Hansard, and referring to the Budget, he said:

> It recognizes the need to build on our progress to date and to take firm action at this time to ensure that we can pass on to the next generation the ability to protect and strengthen the fundamental values that are so much a part of life in Canada.

I wish we knew what were the fundamental values that the Minister of State (Finance) thought were so much a part of Canadian life. It seems to me that this Government has done irreparable harm to all those values in this Budget. One of the values that we as Canadians have cherished for years is the element of fairness in the tax system, and I suggest that the changes proposed in Bill C-20 that hike that most regressive of taxes is hardly what could be called fair. Indeed, it is contrary to the values of Canadians who believe that fairness in the tax system is an essential principle upon which our country operates.

I do not want to let my hon. friends on my left think that I am ignoring them. Of course their views on the subject of budgets are very important, too. I had prepared this speech to deliver on the day that we started discussing this measure, on June 6, and I had a very timely newspaper account that I had received that day which I thought was going to be of some assistance. I realize it is a bit dated now, but the New Democratic Party always tries to blame tax changes on us. We heard it earlier today where they were maintaining that there was some kind of alliance between this Party and the Progressive Conservative Party. Everybody knows that is rubbish and nonsense. It is more frequent, it seems to me, that the New Democratic Party agrees with the Progressive Conservative Party. They often agree on various things because once you get around the circle of political spectrum, the right and left tend to meet, and that is what is happening here.

I want to read a quotation from The Winnipeg Free Press of June 4, 1989. It was a report of a speech that was being delivered by their Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). I guess he was making what was to be his swan song before the Manitoba Liberal Convention—sorry, not the Liberal—the Manitoba New Democratic Party Convention. There is more mention of Liberals and Conservatives in this than there is about NDPers. But then there are more of both in Manitoba, I am told.

This is apparently paraphrasing the Hon. Member for Oshawa:

> While the Conservatives talk about the sacred trust during elections and break that pledge in power, the Liberals talk like New Democrats when wooing votes and act like Conservatives after the polls close.

An Hon. Member: When?

Mr. Milliken: This is what the Hon. Member for Oshawa said. He continued:

> One happens to be in power. The other happens to be in opposition.

The thing that is peculiar about that, Mr. Speaker, and you will see in a minute why, is that he was speaking in a province where the New Democratic Party had been in power, and it was suddenly no longer even in opposition. It was reduced to third-party status. The reason it appears that that happened was that the New Democratic Party government began to act like a Conservative Government while it was in office. It started raising taxes the way this Conservative Government is doing here in Ottawa. The people of Manitoba had the good sense to give them the heave ho. I will read the rest of this excellent article. The article continues:

> Broadbent also had soothing words for the Manitoba party, turfed last year from power in a provincial election that gave the NDP a humbling 12 seats in the legislature.
> All movements suffer losses and the electorate punishes mistakes, but people eventually see where their best interests are, he said. "They'll go back very quickly to the NDP in this province."

Now, the polls certainly do not indicate that they are returning to that particular fold. Indeed, the polls indicate that they are turning with renewed enthusiasm and interest to the Liberal Party. The Hon. Member from Portage—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann), who obviously has problems in his own riding, had the good sense to abstain on one of the votes on the Budget because he knew what a disaster the Budget would be for him electorally. I am surprised that the same thing has not occurred with more Hon. Members opposite. The Minister of State for Privatization (Mr. McDermid) must be shaking in his boots. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South (Mrs. Dobbie) must be shaking in her boots, because she must know that her chances in the next election are slimming fast. Those are the Minister of State's new boots, presumably purchased for the Budget.

• (2100)

Judy Wasylycia-Leis, on talking the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) out of resigning, said:

> I don't expect to succeed, especially now that Ed Broadbent has been offered a full-time job with the Royal Canadian Air Farce.

That is a quotation from the Winnipeg Free Press. And here in this Budget the Government opposite is cutting back on the CBC. How can the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) take his position with the CBC when the Government is cutting back its budget? How can the Royal Canadian Air Farce appear as regularly as it ought to?

We have here an illustration of the kind of problem that the New Democratic Party gets into whenever it gets into office. It starts to act the way this Government is acting; it hikes taxes and it pays no attention to the wishes of the people. Liberal Governments, on the other hand, in general—there has been the odd exception but it is a very odd exception—have tended to fairness in the tax system. The record indicates that we, as a Party—and of course I do not claim to have been a member or supporter of any of the Governments in terms of being a supporter in this House in the past—but as a Party we tend to have introduced very fair and reasonable tax changes, not the kind of unfair, regressive, harsh and improper measures that are contained in Bill C-20.

Mr. McDermid: What about Allan MacEachen?

Mr. Milliken: The Hon. Minister of State for Privatization refers to the former Minister of Finance, Mr. MacEachen. He was an excellent Minister of Finance, indeed there was a string of excellent Ministers of Finance under Liberal Governments. I would like to refer him to Mr. Benson whom his colleague from Cambridge was quoting a little while ago. He was one of my predecessors as Member for Kingston and the Islands and he presented excellent budgets in this House. No one has stood up here and dumped on those budgets to date. I know that the Conservative Party ranted and raved a bit at the time, but nowadays his budgets are held as reason and light compared with the leaky budgets we are getting from this Minister of Finance. Canadians never objected to the taxes imposed by Mr. Benson the way they have opposed the huge taxes that have been imposed by this Government, and Mr. Benson's budgets were occasionally balanced. He did not bring in a string of budgets over a five-year period that doubled the national debt and led to a complete breakdown of the financial management of the country.

In this Budget we are witnessing a complete failure of a Government to deal with the debt problem. Government Members keep talking about how much they are going to do about the national deficit but in fact they have done nothing, the reduction has been minimal. In fact, the deficit increased this year, and the Minister of State for Privatization knows that. All his pious posturing comes to nothing in this. He must realize that the largest tax increases are being made in this Budget and yet the reduction in the national debt is zero; it has gone up, very significantly up.

Mrs. Dobbie: No, no.

Mr. Milliken: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South shakes her head. Obviously she does not read the Government's own figures because it is perfectly clear that the deficit was $29 billion last year and it is $32.5 billion this year according to the Minister of Finance. That is my recollection of the figures. I may be out a billion or two but not by much more than that.

Mr. McDermid: What's a billion to a Liberal?

Mr. Milliken: What's a billion to this Minister of Finance? With a $340 billion national debt, what is one more billion? It obviously does not matter to him and it obviously does not matter to the Hon. Members opposite. The only person who seems to care is the Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy) and I congratulate him for his good thinking.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: I wish, Mr. Speaker, that he were more persuasive than I and was able to convince some of his colleagues to vote the way he has.

I know that you would like me to conclude, Mr. Speaker. I know that Canadians reject this Budget, they reject this Bill, and I suggest to all Hon. Members that when the vote comes at one o'clock tomorrow morning we vote against this Bill and reject it.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether we are witnessing a debate or a live performance of the Royal Canadian Air Farce. I listened to the Member on the Government side moments ago reading dispassionately, almost with the numerical enthusiasm of an accountant, a list of all of the taxes, with no emotional content at all, except his glee that the numbers were so big. That was followed by a little giggling on the other side, only starting, however, because the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) had not yet taken full flight of his senses and referred to the New Democratic Government of Manitoba in what I would say were scurrilous terms. He did not say anything about the small thinking that characterizes the Liberal Government of Ontario. A presidential candidate in the United States talked about a thousand points of light, in Ontario they had only one "Starr".

This is the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker. This is supposed to be the place where the will and desire of the common people are to be reflected. I know that you will be saying that the nomenclature is to draw a distinction between the inherited nobility and the others. There is a new nobility in this country and that nobility was not established by the Conservative Government, it had its beginnings in the Liberal Government.

We have a situation in this country where it is perfectly clear that there is a relatively small number of people, powerful people, monied people, and their lawyers and accountants, who make huge quantities of money advising that new nobility how to avoid taxes. Indeed, they tell Governments, both Liberal and Conservative, how they can not only write tax laws so that the new nobility will not suffer, but as well how to convince the ordinary, average Canadian—who is not a part of that clique of old-school ties and monied network—that this is the best of all possible worlds, that he and she is being treated very fairly and that even if they are collecting unemployment insurance or welfare, they had better be seriously concerned about this deficit.

The Government of the people has been taken away from the people. It has been taken away in the form of taxes which are imposed most heavily on the poor and the middle class while those who have consistently filled the coffers of the Conservative and Liberal Parties have continued to be spared.

• (2110)

The analysis is a very simple one.

Mr. Milliken: That is drivel.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, he will probably argue that there was no Carter Commission and that Mr. MacEachen's attempt to produce a truly equitable tax system was not turned down by a Cabinet that he would certainly defend, no doubt.

Mr. Milliken: You opposed the Budget, too. Don't give me that nonsense.

Mr. McCurdy: The evidence is clear. What we have before us is a piece of legislation which will add a further burden on ordinary Canadians in the form of regressive taxes. I am sure I do not have to explain that to the Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken). He seems well educated on the nature of the tax system. I do not know why he did not say something about this, instead of engaging in this silly little tête à tête with those Members on the other side who do not really give a darn anyway about the effects of this Budget on ordinary people.

Let us make sure that we have this firmly in our minds, because I want the Canadian people to have it firmly in their minds. Between 1984 and 1988, the average family of two parents and two children were burdened with an additional $1,300 in taxes; $900 of that was in the form of consumption taxes, in the form of regressive taxes, taxes that will constitute a higher proportion of the wages of those who earn relatively little as compared with those who earn a lot.

If somebody is making something in the order of $10,000 a year, the regressive tax increases which have been provided by this Government would hit him to the extent of 11 per cent.

However, if somebody is making $40,000, it hits him to the extent of 7.7 per cent. And if somebody is making real money, it probably will not be noticed at all, because it is not going to amount to much more than 4 per cent. That is what a regressive tax means. It means that a higher proportion of the wages of the poor and the middle class is paid in the form of taxes because when they make the purchases of those things they need—and I am not talking about a cabin on the lake. I am not talking about a yacht. I am not talking about a Cadillac. I am not talking about a BMW. I am talking about the ordinary necessities of everyday life. If somebody is making $10,000 a year, that is 11 per cent of what is spent, because just about everything is going to go on consumption taxes.

Then we have this piece of legislation which we are dealing with this evening, Bill C–20. That adds even further to the burden. Depending on whether you smoke a lot or drive a lot, you will be paying an additional $500 to $700 more in consumption taxes, in sales and excise taxes. That means a total of an additional $1,500 for that average family of four which I was talking about. That is supposed to be fair?

This is being imposed upon the poor and the middle class. They just do not have the power, the influence, the newspapers, the editorial columnists and the accountants to protect them. So long as that is true, governments like that across the way and Liberal governments before who started this business will get away with it unless people begin to realize that they are having it socked to them. They had better be getting so mad that they are not going to take it any more. I am sure that the evidence is mounting to the point where the people in Canada are not going to take it any more. They are not going to have this money stolen out of their pockets to benefit the few, while nothing is done to improve this country as far as they are concerned in terms of their security and jobs for their children.

An Hon. Member: They are all going to vote NDP.

Mr. McCurdy: The hon. gentleman over here said that they are all going to vote NDP. There may be some changes in the winds of Canada such that ordinary people are not going to take this any more. They are not going to be the constant source for every little increment in taxes intended to spare the burden on those who have already got too much.

Listen to the litany of new taxes. Can you imagine this, Mr. Speaker? The Government is going to increase the tax on construction materials and equipment from 8 per cent to 9 per cent. We desperately need more taxes on construction materials. We need to increase the cost of housing. That is dreadfully necessary. That is a significant contribution to the welfare of the economy.

The Hon. Member across the way thought it rather peculiar that the Member for Kingston and the Islands was criticizing the increase in the sales tax on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products. However, there is something, I suppose, to be said about taxing the sins of the people. One might say, however, that the Government is making life so difficult that even with the increased tax they may be pushed in the direction of paying that extra money just to get some surcease from the sorrow imposed upon them by this Government.

Let us go on. An increase in the sales tax on telecommunications from 10 per cent to 11 per cent. I understand from the comments of the Member for the Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) that this alone will cost something in the order of $4 million additional in the Yukon. We have no estimates of the increased costs for long distance calls for those who live in rural communities who are dependent upon long distance telephones for communication. Who is going to pay? The great mass of ordinary Canadians will pay a far higher percentage of their incomes in paying for that than will those who this Government represents.

The Government is going to increase the sales tax on all goods from 12 per cent to 13.5 per cent. There is to be two increases in the excise tax on gasoline. One cent a litre now, one cent a litre later. That is a really popular tax in Windsor. We like the idea of it costing more to drive automobiles, so we sell fewer of them. That is a good idea, too. Yes, this Government is full of good ideas, good ideas which generally affect those who have the least power and those who cannot respond to the influence of those who want to maintain positions of wealth. I know, Mr. Speaker, that you are going to say that we have a deficit. That is true. We have a deficit. I would submit that much of this deficit is caused by the silliness that has been pursued in the constant effort to spare those who ought not to be spared from paying their fair share.

We have heard that the deficit is caused because there are too many expenditures on social programs and all kinds of nonsense. Of course, in response to that kind of statement and belief—I am not so sure it is really a belief, I think it is just a little bit of propaganda that the very wealthy get away with and the Government is pleased to carry forward. However, the notion out there is that social programs are what contribute to the deficit. Of course, we have these rearrangements in the UIC to increase by 50 per cent the payments that workers are going to have to put in even though the outcome of all of this will be fewer benefits, longer qualifying periods and shorter periods during which they will be able to collect it.

I could cite any number of taxes on social programs intended to respond to this notion that the deficit is really about too many expenditures on social programs. We know better, Mr. Speaker. Consider a drop in the marginal rate of income tax from 43 per cent to 29 per cent. I would suggest that that must have made a significant contribution to the deficit.

Considering that in the last 20 years the contribution to income tax by corporations has dropped from around 50 per cent to 11 per cent, I would think that would have something to do with the deficit as well. We have this interest rate thing and that is an interesting one, too. Interest rates have gone up by about 4 per cent. That accounts for about $6 billion in the deficit. In other words, there are alternatives that could have been chosen to get rid of the deficit and maintain some fairness in the system. The New Democratic Party is bound and determined that this country will have a system of taxation which will be fair, not to the special interests and the new nobility that the Government is proud to represent, but a system that will ensure that people will pay their fair share and get their fair share.

I am sure that there are those on the other side who will say that the New Democratic Party has expressed concern about the manufacturers' tax. We are concerned about the manufacturers' tax. But we do not see that a solution to the manufacturers' tax is adding yet another 9 per cent, upping the ante from some $23 billion to $40 billion in consumption taxes, amounting to another $1,000 taken out of the pockets of the ordinary Canadians, the poor and the middle class. That is unacceptable. This is a tax that is peculiar in a number of ways. First you see it, then you don't. You may see it and maybe you won't. The Government has not made up its mind if it is going to be secret. It would prefer to have it secret, but my God, it would have to break a promise. Oh, well, it hasn't had too many problems with broken promises in the past.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this new goods and services tax, the other shoe to drop in the so-called tax reform, should be wiped from the boards and a whole new approach used that will eliminate this constant push for imposing more and more regressive and hurtful taxes on those who are least able to pay so as to ensure that those who have the money in their pockets pay their fair share. We have a number of suggestions in that regard: optimize the rate on high income earners; impose a minimum tax, a good left wing socialist minimum tax on corporations like that introduced by Ronald Reagan in the United States.

Let us talk about an addition to a fair marginal rate, an increasingly marginal rate of income tax if we are to ensure that wealth is equitably distributed, not punitively distributed, but equitably distributed. We should choose a tax that will not offend the notions of encouraging investment. So let us talk about a tax and not wealth. Let us talk about a tax that taxes what should be taxed, what you have, not what you get each year. One per cent a year is $20 billion to $30 billion a year in new revenue. Some of the wealthiest of the nobility have, in fact, suggested that that would be a good, innovative and fair approach. That is what we should pursue.

There is no way in this world, not under any circumstances, could any member of the New Democratic Party support this Bill before us tonight. There is no way a well-informed citizen of this country, making less than $50,000 a year, could vote for this legislation. We represent those people.

An Hon. Member: Well, a few of them.

Mr. McDermid: Come on.

Mr. McCurdy: We in this chamber represent those whose interests we will ourselves to represent, whether they vote for us or not. We are strong on principle. We stand on a principle of fairness and fairness says that Bill C–20 should be rejected.

An Hon. Member: He is ranting and raving.

Mr. McDermid: What a pious pomp.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker has said it very well. I am not sure what I can add, but I want to make a few comments on Bill C–20, the Bill on excise and sales tax. We could be calling it an example of sorry Tory tax reform, part 2.

First, we are debating a piece of legislation, the results of which to some extent taxpayers are already feeling the bite. Some aspects of this legislation came into force on June 1, 1989. Other aspects came into force on April 28. Taxes on cigarettes were increased in April and are due to increase again on October 1. This is interesting, as we have already learned that distributors made huge windfall profits on the first hikes on cigarettes which was based on inventory and on which they subsequently charged the new tax.

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek) has admitted that he is concerned enough about this possibility of people making profits, basically speculating on the Budget, and he is concerned enough that he will take these concerns to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Whether they will be addressed by October 1, we do not know. Again it is the taxpayer, the ordinary Canadian about which the previous Member spoke so eloquently, who pays the price in the end.

As for the stock market, those who choose to speculate do it knowingly and I am sure that some businesses can speculate on tax increases. This is hardly something that can be considered fair and hardly something which taxpayers can feel is an equitable burden.

There is the question of the manufacturers' sales tax, a tax which the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) on June 6 called seriously flawed. There has been much discussion in committee and in the House on the evils of the manufacturers' sales tax and why the proposed goods and services tax of the Government will redress those evils. What does the Government do about this seriously flawed tax? Did it make an attempt to make it fair? Did the Government make an attempt to address the flaws? No. The Government ensured, by increasing the manufacturers' sales tax by 1.5 per cent, that it would deal with this seriously flawed tax by making it worse. This characterizes much of the Budget planning and policy of the Government.

The people who are the consumers are those who see an increasing tax bite out of their pockets and we see more and more people living day to day on that average salary.

I was speaking earlier to my colleague from Saskatchewan. He pointed out to me that in a survey he saw recently more than half of the people in one of the communities he was looking at in Saskatchewan were living below the poverty line. These are the ones who suffer the most from this kind of hidden and regressive tax system. These are the people who will feel that 1–cent increase on gasoline the most. Not only will it affect them personally, but they will see it in public transit and everything else.

I mentioned before that in dealing with the flawed manufacturers' sales tax the Government has chosen to take the tack of entrenching it as opposed to redressing it. Then the Government tries to tell us that the proposed sales tax on every purchase, the goods and services tax, will be good for us, that it will make things fairer and change the inequities of things like the manufacturers' sales tax. During the debate on the Budget leak, the Minister assured the House that no profits would be made as a result of this leak. He assured us that when tax reform came into effect, the personal surtax would be removed. Later he said he would not be doing that. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) also explained that the new sales and service tax would get rid of the hidden aspect of the taxes we are discussing under this Bill. Now we learn that they will not be visible.

• (2130)

In fact, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Valcourt) said on June 11, not very long ago, that he felt that visibility in a tax system is the only way to ensure that consumers in the end do not get ripped off. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was speaking to a meeting of the Consumers' Association. We would agree with him, but in this Bill, there is an increase in taxes without redressing the inequities and unfairness.

This is one of the great concerns regarding the hidden aspect of consumption taxes. I cannot accept a sign on the wall as visibility. Everyone would need to have a calculator to calculate 9 per cent or 10 per cent of the price. When consumers see a tax at the bottom of the bills, they know exactly what they are paying. They know what percentage of the purchases go toward tax and they know when the tax is increased.

An article appeared in The Financial Post today written by Michael Walker, a columnist. He was addressing the issue of visibility of the tax in an article entitled: "I withdraw my support for sales tax". The point this columnist makes confirms the point I am making about the importance of taxpayers knowing what they are paying on each purchase. He makes the point that not having this tax visible to the consumer results in a less open and responsible Government.

This Government has not been open with the Canadian people about the tax system. There are loopholes for corporations, those 60,000 profit-making corporations that still do not pay any tax. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair (Mr. McCurdy), mentioned the need for a minimum corporate tax, something we have advocated for some time. That would show the people that everyone carried a fair share of the burden of taxation.

It has been my experience that if people know their tax dollars are going to provide essential services, whether health services, education services or other public services, they are willing to pay the price. However, they want to know exactly what it is they are paying for and that they are not paying a disproportionate share of the tax burden.

Since the Government came into power, every man, woman and child in Canada is paying an extra $268 in sales and excise taxes, in hidden taxes. Taxes on gasoline have increased by over 7 cents a litre. Taxes on construction materials are now going up by another 1 per cent.

The Government says that it wants to and needs to raise taxes because of the deficit. It seems it has just discovered the deficit and the debt. We did not hear much about it during the election campaign, perhaps because the debt has increased by $100 billion since the Government came into power.

Mr. Milliken: More than that.

Ms. McLaughlin: Probably more than that, my colleague says. Regardless of that, the Government has felt it necessary to spend another $2.7 million to tell Canadians that we have a deficit, a ridiculous expenditure if in fact the Government were serious about using tax dollars wisely.

The Government has also not presented to Canadians that there are many assets owned by the Government represented in the debt, investments in schools, hospitals, roads, municipalities, northern territories and services for the disabled, the elderly and families, all of which cost money. These are investments in Canadians, in a Canadian society that we want to see as being compassionate.

We in the New Democratic Party do not accept increasing wage gaps with more and more people becoming impoverished. We see now that one in six children live in poverty. This is totally unacceptable. The Government says it is working toward tax fairness but that is simply a joke. It is not tax fairness, it is a tax grab which takes from those people who are the most powerless to protest and benefits those who have the most wealth and the most power.

I would like to talk about a few of the specifics in this Bill which are particularly onerous for people who live in remote areas but also have an impact on people in urban areas. In an area like the Yukon, it is much tougher. One of these is the telecommunications tax.

Last year when the 10 per cent telecommunications tax on long distance calls was brought forward, it had a very severe impact on those in the Yukon, the Northwest Territories and other rural areas. There are many people in those areas who use mobile and radio phones for business and also for ordinary, everyday use. All those calls then became taxable. It is a good example of people in one area with one perspective formulating a law without knowledge of people in other areas. I am sure many of those who formulated that tax do not use radio or mobile phones and had not even thought of that particular injustice.

The telecommunications tax has increased significantly the cost to small businesses and to governments. In the end, the taxpayer has to pay for that as well.

As an example, I would like to mention a study that was done in March 1989 by the Public Interest Advocacy Centre on northern consumers and telecommunications policy. The centre noted that a study done for it about eight years ago in connection with Bell Canada rate hearings found that Bell subscribers in the Northwest Territories, northern Quebec and northern Ontario spent on average between $625 and $650 a year on toll services, long distance services, as compared with an average of $206 for subscribers in the Bell territory as a whole. That is a very significant difference which represents not simply figures on paper but a lifestyle and a dependency on long distance in northern and rural areas. A discrepancy of some $400 per year is an indication of the effect this additional 1 per cent to the telecommunications tax will have in those areas.

In this study, the group related the onerous effects of a tax like this on low income groups and mentioned, for example, that the per capita income for Inuit in the Northwest Territories was only 53 per cent of the average for the general Canadian population. In northern Quebec, it was only 40 per cent of the average for the general Canadian population. These are the people who are most affected by this type of hidden, regressive tax that is a burden to the low-income person and the middle-income person, but largely does not affect the high-income person who can afford to pay an extra $10 or $15 on a telephone bill every month.

• (2140)

In the end, as consumers, we pay double. We pay the cost of the additional tax, and then we pay the cost that businesses will add to cover their costs. Therefore, this type of hidden sales tax is never a one-time effect. It has an effect both at the payment level and as a consumer at the level that business will raise their services to compensate for the tax. Clearly, that is the concern of associations such as the Conference Board of Canada when it reviewed the proposed goods and services tax and forecast the increase in inflation as well as the increase in unemployment that that will cause.

The Bill under discussion tonight is simply an example, a poor example albeit, of what is in store for us as we move toward the goods and services tax.

I would like to say a word about higher prices, because this clearly leads to higher prices and higher prices generally mean inflation. At the end of last week the Finance Committee, of which I am a member, made a unanimous recommendation to the Government to consider having the Bank of Canada reduce interest rates to deal with the question of the inflationary effect of high interest rates.

I rarely speak to business people in my area, and the majority of business people in my constituency have small businesses, who do not feel that these high interest rates are just killing them. Small firms with a small margin of profit create the most jobs in Canada and contribute much to our economy and our communities and they are affected the most by high interest rates.

This Bill does not represent any attempt to address issues of economic policy. It simply continues to add to the tax burden. It does not deal with the basic issues of tax inequities. It does not address the issue of a lack of tax fairness. Whether it is adding to the burden in the construction industry, which again affects many of our areas, or Canadian exporters, Canadians will see that this Bill is simply adding to the burden of the average Canadian taxpayer.

There is no way that I or anyone in my Party could support this Bill or the type of philosophy that underpins this Bill. When taxpayers have seen that in 1985 a family whose assets were valued at $6.2 billion received a $500 million tax break, and some 6,000 upper-income Canadians paid no tax at all, it is easy to see why Canadians will say about this Bill and this Government's tax policy that it is unfair, unjust, and they will reject not only the Government's policy but the Government.

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, in listening to some of the comments this evening, one of the things that struck me throughout the discussion of so-called tax reform, and I am assuming because the process was undertaken some time ago that the Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act are a part of that process of the Government, it is often difficult to tell exactly what the process is because there does not seem to be a great deal of continuity in what the Government is attempting to do. However, this Act reflects very well the philosophy of the Government in that it is obviously very comfortable with hidden taxes.

The amendments we are dealing with tonight are part of a continuing pattern of a tax grab that is obviously under way from now until January 1, 1991.

One thing I want to reiterate that many people on your left have stated, Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions, is that the one promise that we believe the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will keep over the next 18 months will be that the imposition of the goods and services tax on January 1, 1991 will in fact be revenue neutral. The catch to all of that is that from the time when the taxes were announced until they are to be imposed in 1991, the Government obviously intends to take every penny it can out of the Canadian taxpayer by whatever means possible. That includes an increase in the manufacturers' sales tax from 12 per cent to 13.5 per cent. It also means this plethora of taxes we are being asked to vote on tonight, and as my colleagues have indicated previously we will oppose. Canadian taxpayers have to understand that this is part of a plan. The plan is not to reform the tax system. The plan is to attempt to bail out a Government that has doubled the national debt in the last four years.

We hear talk from members of the Government with respect to the deficit, and we hear talk about the national debt. There can only be one of two explanations as to why there has been this discovery over the last couple of months. If we give credit where credit is due, one has to take as a granted that the people in the Department of Finance last fall were prepared to support their Minister in an election campaign by stating that it was possible to implement $16 billion in promises that the Conservative Party was putting forward to the people of Canada out of existing structures and out of existing revenues. Now, all those programs have been cut or scrapped, or they were just commitments and not promises, and a lot of semantical arguments have taken place.

People who were looking forward to day care, or an enhanced program for military equipment acquisition for the armed forces, or people who were interested in seeing the agenda of the Conservative Party, have to try to to fathom what has taken place. If the people who made the projections last fall were honest, then they made grievous mistakes and somebody should pay, not only the taxpayer of Canada, who always pays the Bill in the final analysis, but those people who made those projections, who are responsible for them, and who backed up a series of arguments, including those of the Chairman of the Finance Committee who correctly pointed out last fall that the promises could not be kept and would result in a serious blow to the economic and fiscal situation of the country.

If, on the other hand, the people who made the projections last year were not only honest but competent, and in fact the Conservative Party misrepresented the state of affairs that we found ourselves in in this country, that is where push comes to shove. I believe that the people of Canada must, and it is their duty. I recognize that they believe that members of the Opposition, the NDP and the Liberal Party, will simply carp about those things, bring them up, and rehash them.

Canadians have to understand that we are going through a process, a turning away from traditional values and approaches to trying to help those people who need help the most into a Conservative agenda. As usual, the Conservative Party of Canada is running considerably behind events in Great Britain.

The Prime Minister of the United Kingdom came into this very House and praised the Government for its good management, and praised its approach to international trade. We have had the agenda of the former President of the United States, in his second term. There is no doubt that the Prime Minister and the Government have enormous respect for the former President of the United States. He played footsie with the American public through his first term. In the American system the second term is the last term, and that may prove to be prophetic in Canada that the second term for people with a conservative agenda is the last term. There is no question that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) followed in the footsteps of his friend the former President of the United States.

• (2150)

Mr. McDermid: It is a little misleading that in the United States you are only allowed two terms.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): That is what I said. I said that it may prove to be prophetic here—

Mr. McDermid: They have a third Conservative term down there, too, just like we are going to have a third Conservative term here.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): It may prove prophetic that the Canadian people may decide differently here.

I know that the Minister responsible for privatization also wants a gentler and more caring nation. Those are the kinds of things we hear in the Conservative rhetoric. However, the fact remains that Canadians, regardless of their political stripe, must understand what we are getting involved in in terms of what kind of Canada we are going to be living in.

As I looked at the materials that were made available to us by Global Television and assorted other people a couple of months ago, it was uncanny that dated April 27 we saw things and wondered whether it was not some sort of déjà vu in terms of last fall's election campaign. One wondered who wrote this stuff. Why sales tax reform? Because, among other reasons, it is damaging to the Canadian economy. It is a porous tax and an increasingly unreliable source of revenue, in terms of the existing federal sales tax.

Awfully important as well as the third basic flaw is that it is hidden from consumers. Tonight we are being asked to pass a series of tax increases, all of which are hidden from consumers, and all of which I suggest are part of the hidden agenda. It is not just hidden taxes, it is the hidden agenda that was kept from the people last fall that is now coming to light. It is a clear indication of where this Government wants to take us over the next three or four years.

The only visible thing during this session that the Government has put forward, and in particular the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), is that they want to make sure that they hide every possible tax, oras was the case on April 7 when the Minister of Finance met with the Ministers of Finance from the 10 provinces, it was to try to get the provinces on board. On April 7, at a meeting held in Ottawa, the Ministers of Finance of the provinces were asked to indicate an interest to participate in a national sales tax scheme.

I would point out, because I feel it is appropriate at this time, that that national sales tax proposal that is referred to every now and again by Members to your right, Mr. Speaker, which was agreed to by members of the NDP and the Liberal Party in a unanimous report last year, was supposed to be visible. Every time we bring this matter up people suggest that it was a unanimous report and that we should be happy there is a reform going on. However, as usual, it is only part of what was proposed, and that is misrepresented when it is presented to the people.

The provinces refused to participate in the imposition of a national sales tax asked of them on April 7 and then told to them on April 21 by the Minister of Finance who said that we are going it alone. There were no details, no negotiations or anything else. The Government just decided to go ahead. That makes it clear to me that the most important thing was not the imposition of a national sales tax but that the Government had to get the mechanism in gear to raise taxes as quickly as it could and as often as it could until January 1, 1991. That is why I repeat what I said earlier. In fact, when the taxes come into play in 1991 Members to your right, Mr. Speaker, will be able to point very clearly and proudly to the fact that the new tax will be revenue neutral. Taxes will have been raised so much—literally by billions of dollars from a couple of months ago to December 31, 1990—that there will be no possibility of getting any more taxes out of the Canadian people.

The Government will drainthe tax well until there is nothing left in it. I am asking, and I am thinking that Members to your left, Mr. Speaker, are asking the people of Canada to join with us in insisting that the Government respect its commitments. However, if it is unable to do what it promised it would last fall in terms of implementing new programs such as day care and others because of deficits, high interest rates and because of the burgeoning national debt which it has doubled in four or five years, then the least we can ask of the Minister of Finance is that he respect his commitment to make this national sales tax visible.

Tonight, the House of Commons is being asked to authorize the Government to increase taxes on a tremendous series of services and goods that are essential to Canadian people. We all know that they are hidden taxes. The Minister of Finance has said time and time again in the House in response to questions: "People don't know how much they are paying for gas. They don't know how much tax there is on alcohol. People don't know how much tax there is on their telecommunications bill". We agree with that. However, we are being asked to do the same thing tonight.

It is a very strange conundrum that this new goods and services tax will have the result of having little signs in places of business all over the country and that we are going to hit the Canadian taxpayer with another series of hidden taxes. Everyone understands that people only pay taxes so long as they believe the system is fair and that the money is being spent reasonably well. That has always been put in doubt even at the best of times. However, the time is coming when Canadians are saying not only are we paying too much in taxes, and not only is the tax system unjust and unfair, but we cannot trust the people who are collecting the taxes because we cannot even trust them on something that does not cost anything.

The only cost in making the goods and services tax visible is a political cost. There is no financial cost to anyone. There is not a collection cost to the Government. It will not cost the consumer one penny more, but there will be a political cost. The provinces from April 7 to April 21 did not take the Minister up on his take it or leave it deal. They would not get on board and play the game of collecting the taxes, paying the price politically of collecting both the provincial sales tax and the national sales tax, whichever way it was put together. They would use their collection system and their collection points. In other words, they would pay the political price of collecting the taxes.

When the federal Government saw that that would not work it said: "Now we do not want a visible tax. Because we are going to impose the tax and collect it we want it to be invisible".

As we are talking about the excise taxes and invisible taxes, or hidden taxes or regressive taxes, the other thing is that Canadians have to understand what the hidden agenda is. Not only is there a political price to pay for imposing a 9 per cent tax on January 1, 1991, but there is no question in anybody's mind that by 1992 or 1993 with a hidden goods and services tax how simple will it be to raise that to 10 per cent, 11 per cent or 12 per cent. That is the other part of the hidden agenda.

Canadians have to understand that the Bill we are talking about tonight is a clear signal that we are not into tax reform. We are trying to bail the Government out early in its mandate by imposing a series of taxes. Part of the process was to eliminate the personal surtax. We were going to talk about getting more equity in the system. It has been pointed out by some of my colleagues who have spoken here this evening that people in low and middle-income families have seen their taxes increase by $300, $500, $800 or $1,200 depending on the level of income. That has begun to cost too much politically. We know how much it costs the families and how much it costs single parent families in particular. We know how much it costs people with young families who cannot get any day care and there is an added burden on the parents.

Parents in Canada, men and women, children, the poor, the unemployed, the handicapped and the sick have to pay the taxes, be they excise taxes as we are discussing tonight, be they the goods and services tax that will come in in 1991 or be they the taxes that we are going to impose between now and then in various and sundry ways. However, the fact is that the people who will not pay the price are Members to your right, Mr. Speaker. They will not pay the political price of standing up and saying: "We need this much money to administer the affairs of Canada. You have elected us, it is our duty to collect the taxes from the people of Canada. It is our duty to spend the money". However, they won't tell us in a visible way: "We are going to take 9 per cent out of your pocket". The Minister said in the House that his idea of a visible goods and services tax would involve putting a sign up in a store. I will not even get into what that involves now.

• (2200)

One just cannot put up signs in stores now, that is not the Canada we live in. They have to be different sizes. They have to be in different languages, depending on what province one is in. They have to be at the front of the store, the back of the store, or inside or outside. Who is going to decide.

Mr. Benjamin: Hogwash.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): The Member says it's hogwash. It is unfair but it is true.

Mr. Benjamin: Quit appealing to bigotry. You can put up any sign you want in Saskatchewan.

[Translation]

Do you know what is going on here, Mr. Minister? I hear a Member who has been here for 15 years calling me a bigot. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, someone who does not even know what I am talking about now, yet he thinks he understands the true nature of Canada. Unbelievable!

Mr. Speaker, when referring to people who have a pretty fair idea of what is going on in this country, one has to admit that they are talking about siphoning more money out of the taxpayers by levying a general tax on goods and services. It is a matter of really knowing what one is talking about. It takes a lot of nerve to accuse me in this House of entertaining preconceived ideas based on the language spoken in Saskatchewan or elsewhere.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Why did you mention signs?

Mr. Young (Gloucester): I said that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) mentioned signs. I did not mention them. He told us we are going to have to put up signs to indicate whether taxes are visible or not. The sign of the times is that so long as we have a tax that is hidden from the consumer, we are going to have problems that are a lot more serious than we understand.

As I indicated earlier, we are talking about the potential for abuse by a government. If we continue with the kind of deficits that are being run because of the high interest rate policy, where the cost of servicing the national debt is the equivalent of what our deficit is projected for this year, the potential temptation for going after the Canadian taxpayer as a result of a hidden tax that is being set at 9 per cent is too much to imagine.

With the track record of this Government and how it has broken promise after promise after promise, who can honestly doubt that whenever the crunch comes it will be very easy for the Government to change that sign from 9 per cent to 10 per cent, if in fact anybody looks at it.

I hope government Members will recognize that all of the problems that the Government faces at this time are basically because nobody trusts it. Government may not be able to carry out its stated objectives in good faith because circumstances change, realities change, the economy changes. International factors come into play and interest rates are affected by outside pressures. Many things can happen. Canadians are fair-minded.

They understand those circumstances. However, the Government has preached for several years, printed it in its own materials during the Budget process, a fundamental principle that taxation should be open, and visible. For no other reason than it refuses to pay the political price, that tax is hidden. That is what I believe Canadians will not accept.

We are being asked tonight, just before we break for the summer recess from this House of Commons, to pass a series of changes in the Excise Tax Act that will add a further burden to Canadians.

No one on this side of the House will support that. I hope Canadians will think about the hidden agenda of the Conservative Government with respect to the goods and services tax that will begin at 9 per cent, and will see that it's promise of keeping it at 9 per cent and being revenue neutral will be just another promise to break.

Mr. MacDonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I seek the unanimous consent of the House to present the first report of our committee which was unanimously adopted this evening.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Crosby): Does the Member have the unanimous consent of the House to present the report?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

ENVIRONMENT—PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. David MacDonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the first report of the Standing Committee on the Environment, Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Canadian Environmental Protection Act.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXCISE TAX ACT AND EXCISE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Loiselle that Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and be referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-20 will increase taxes on practically everything. This Bill on which the Government just placed closure will affect every Canadian family. It will increase the taxes that every person in Canada will have to pay.

It increases the telecommunication services tax, the tax on gasoline, the tax on construction materials, wine and all such goods.

It increases the tax on aviation fuel and on tobacco, cigars and snuff. It increases the tax on practically everything one can think of because it will affect every single Canadian family.

The one tax being implemented in the Bill tonight should show the Government of Canada the inequity of bringing in a tax on all goods and services at the end of next year. While Canadians understand it, I do not think they fully realize now that at the end of next year the Government of Canada will bring in a tax that is going to mean increases in sales taxes anywhere from 9 per cent to 12 per cent in Canada.

Just imagine, the new tax being brought in at the end of next year will mean that when we go to buy something at the retailer we will be hit with a new tax. We will have to pay anywhere from 9 per cent on the item we are buying or the service we are receiving, to close to 12 per cent, depending on where we live in Canada.

For those who live in the Province of Alberta, it will mean a 9 per cent increase on taxes, but for those who live in Ontario it will mean much more than 9 per cent.

Mr. McDermid: Why?

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Minister is asking why. I will get to that.

For those who live in Quebec, it will mean more than 9 per cent and for those who are unfortunate enough to be buying something in the Province of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick or Newfoundland, they will be really hit. Under this Bill we are passing tonight the Government is increasing the taxes on all long distance telephone charges. Let us examine the long distance telephone bill, as every Canadian has done since the Government took office.

• (2210)

Since last year it brought in a new telecommunications tax, or was it the June before last? It was either last June or the June before. That new tax that was brought in was for 10 per cent. When Canadians look at their last month's long distance telephone bills—they can pick them up this evening and look at them—if the long distance telephone charges are $100 for the month and they live in rural Canada, they can almost count on a pretty hefty long distance telephone bill. This is because they are not living in a metropolitan area where there are millions of people. They are calling just a short distance away and they are calling long distance, usually.

If it were $100, say, this new Tory Government would impose a tax of 10 per cent on long distance telephone calls, but that would go on after the long distance telephone charge. In other words, if it were $100, the telephone company would add on 10 per cent, which would make it $110. Then on top of that it would add on the provincial sales tax.

Mr. McDermid: The provinces did that.

Mr. Baker: This means that everybody outside a province with no sales tax was paying double taxes.

What would that mean if you had relatives in the Province of Alberta? I will tell you what it means, Mr. Speaker, because you are very well acquainted with the Province of Alberta. If you are calling Alberta from the Province of Newfoundland and you have $100 to spend on long distance telephone calls, for goodness sakes get your relative in Alberta to phone you because you will get at least another 15 minutes out of your $100. The reason for that is quite simple: when you call from Alberta, you only have 10 per cent added on to your telephone bill. Therefore it costs $110.

If your call originated from the Province of Ontario to Alberta, then you can add on another 8 per cent, which means not just 9 plus 8 to make 17, but because there is a tax on top of a tax, it means that you are adding on another $10 to your $100 charge.

Let us look at the Province of Newfoundland. You have again your $100 plus your 10 per cent federal tax. Then you add on top of that 12 per cent Newfoundland tax, and you are up to 24 per cent tax on your $100 of long distance telephone calls. By straight arithmetic, you can save $13.34 if your call originated from the Province of Alberta to Newfoundland.

An Hon. Member: What if you reverse the charges?

Mr. Baker: You could save $10 if your call originated from Alberta into the Province of Ontario, and you could save $12 on the $100 if your call originated from Alberta instead of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, or the Province of New Brunswick. That is because there is, of course, no provincial sales tax in the Province of Alberta on long distance telephone calls.

When the Government of Canada says that it is to bring in a 9 per cent sales tax at the end of net year on everything you can think of, it is not 9 per cent. It is 9 per cent in the Province of Alberta, yes, but it is more than 9 per cent in Ontario. It is more than that again if you are in New Brunswick. It is more than that again if you are in Newfoundland.

What is the total effect of that? Under this present Bill, they are increasing the taxes on long distance telephone calls. It means a 1 per cent increase in this Bill. It means that the people in Canada are actually paying in excess of that 1 per cent. That is what is wrong with having a federal tax that applies to all goods and services.

With long distance telephone calls, if you are watching every dollar and you know you can save $13 on every $100 if your call originates from Alberta and not the Province of Newfoundland, that you can save $11.58 if your call originates from Alberta and not Nova Scotia, or you can save $9.98 on $100 if your call originates from Alberta and not Ontario, it would be great if you could figure out a way of getting around the new sales tax so that you could use a reversal like that and the tax would be fair right across Canada. If all your long distance telephone calls originated in the Province of Alberta, then all Canadians would pay an equal tax.

The Hon. Minister said to me a few minutes ago that the provinces were to blame here, that they had a tax on. Everybody knows provincial Governments have varying amounts of sales taxes in effect in their provinces. That is why the federal Government is dealing a grave injustice to Canadians when it comes along and says: "What we did on your long distance telephone calls last year we are now going to do on every single good and service there is in Canada; we are going to add on 9 per cent." Some 9 plus 12 in Newfoundland you would think was 21, but it is 24; 9 plus 11 in New Brunswick is not 20 but is over 21.

On top of that, as if that were not bad enough, if that was not unequal enough, what do we have? Somebody says: "Oh, that is a provincial tax on top of a federal tax." The ordinary Canadian who is watching his dollar, the senior citizen who wants to make long distance telephone calls to his or her grandchildren in western Canada, eastern Canada or up north do not askwhether this a federal tax, a provincial tax or a municipal tax. They just look at it and say: "I have lost $13 out of $100 because my call originated in one province and not another one."

The grave injustice of the system is not knowing that you can actually get around that tax if you originate your calls from the province that has the lowest sales tax. That injustice will now apply to everything you buy.

When you walk into the store on January 1, 1991, you will pay over 20 per cent retail sales tax on every good and service in all of the Atlantic provinces—over 20 per cent. If you are buying a stove or a fridge, imagine the tax you will be paying, but if you pay tax in a province with no provincial sales tax, you do not pay the double taxation that you pay in other provinces.

On top of all of that, the Government of Canada says: "Well, now to soften the burden, we are going to give all Canadians in advance a rebate."

• (2220)

We are going to give Canadians, and I am talking about ordinary Canadians now which is the vast majority, an advance rebate. On what, Mr. Speaker? On the tax that the Government of Canada says they will be paying.

What is being taxed, Mr. Speaker? If you buy an article that is manufactured in one province, every time that it changes hands the tax is put on and then rebated, put on and then rebated. The higher the cost becomes as it goes along, the tax is put on and rebated, put on and rebated, until it gets to the end of the line. They will now pay tax on the transportation of that good. They will pay tax on everything all along the line.

One would suspect that the rebate to the Canadian who lives in Newfoundland or British Columbia, if the good is made in central Canada, would get a higher rebate than someone who lives in the town in which it was manufactured, but oh, no, Mr. Speaker, the rebates are all the same. Consider the logic of saying that we are going to tax everything, every good and every service, your hair cut and everything, but we are going to turn around and give you a rebate.

Canadians who can just barely make ends meet now are wondering how they are going to be able to pay all of that money and live between the rebates. It is fine to say that we are going to do this or that with the taxation system and pay someone a lump sum at a certain point in the year, but how do you live between those rebates? How do you even it out so that the rebates are fair. How do you rationalize that people pay an amount of money equal to whichever province they live in? Just imagine a system of taxation which requires that if you live in certain provinces you pay a higher tax than if you live in another province.

The Government has also announced that it is going to take a crack at relieving the unemployment situation in Canada today. I suppose you heard that announcement, Mr. Speaker. The Government is going to hire thousands of people to collect all of these new taxes. How many are they going to hire? Is it 5,000 or 10,000 people? Imagine, the Government is going to hire a minimum of 5,000 people just to collect taxes, just to make sure that you pay that tax on everything you pay for.

To put it mildly, Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us today and the new system of taxation which the Government wants to bring in are very unfair and unequal. As a result of this Bill telephone charges are going to go up and a telecommunications tax is going to go on.

There is a commercial about telephones saying to reach out and touch someone. The Minister of Finance is reaching out all right; he has got his hand in everyone's pocket. The Bill before us today should be defeated by the House of Commons. The new sales tax that comes in at the end of next year is going to mean the defeat of the Government.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to advise the Hon. Minister of ways in which to abolish it.

Mr. McDermid: Good, that's what I want to hear.

Mr. Benjamin: Well, if you had been listening all these years you would not need to be told again.

First I want to apologize to the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Young). I misunderstood the remark he made about signs, but that was as much his fault as it was mine. I hope he will check the "blues" to make sure it reads the way he meant it. I did misunderstand him and I apologize for that.

My hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls (Mr. Baker), just mentioned something about double taxation. He did not steal my line, but great minds think alike and we ain't foolish about this one. It used to be against the law to have double taxation. In fact, any Government at any level that tried that in this country would be thrown out of court the next day.

We have a tax on a tax. I am a little confused now as to whether the provinces will be taking a tax on the tax, whether the federals will be taking a tax on the tax, or whether they will both be taking a tax on the tax. We need some clarification from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on which is which, what is what.

We have been victimized by federal and provincial sales taxes for many years, including by NDP provincial Governments. When it gets to a point that they put a tax on hair cuts, I feel sorry for the Hon. Minister who is just leaving because he has the same kind of hairdo as I have and there is no way we can get $8 worth from a hair cut. With the tax added on top of that it gets to be a little unfair to those of us who are not as endowed as many people who are older than us.

I want to refer to something I said last year in the budget debate.

Mr. Friesen: Can you remember it?

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, I make the same speech every year and it applies.

Mr. Friesen: Why do you think I don't listen any more?

Mr. Benjamin: John Diefenbaker appointed a royal commissioner on taxation, a fellow by the name of Kenneth Carter, who spent nearly five years going through the entire tax system. He produced the Carter royal commission report of some three volumes, plus all the research papers and everything else. I only waded through the meatier parts.

It is obvious again, for the umpteenth time, what any Government of any political stripe need do. I am not saying that Carter was 100 per cent right, but he was mostly right in terms of the principles of a fair tax system. A buck is a buck no matter how you got it. Whether you earned it or not, if it is income it is taxable, period. He showed how you could lower the effective tax rate to 15 per cent, and not more than 20 per cent for any individual taxpayer or any corporation, and collect more money than the national Government is getting now or ever has since he came out with the report in 1965.

Mr. Carter died of cancer in 1966. He was so fed up waiting for the Government to act on his report that he started to go public. He was something like Emmett Hall with his royal commission reports on health care and a few other things. It is not often a royal commissioner will go public.

• (2230)

Kenneth Carter started to do so and he died unfortunately much too early. He pointed out then, and it is still valid today, that a fair tax system is based on the ability to pay. That has to be the income tax system. Whether it is individual or corporate is immaterial. It is based on ability to pay. It is based on what is the income.

When he first advocated doing away with all exemptions, there was a hue and cry from the economists, the financial experts, the business communities, the boards of trade, the chambers of commerce, and the manufacturers' associations. Of course, the ordinary citizen said to himself: "Gee, whiz, if I lose my exemption, what am I going to get?"

Mr. Carter pointed out: "You get your tax credits, and whether you make $20,000 or $120,000 a year, the tax credit is the same for each one." It seemed to make eminently good sense to a lot of people.

Walter Gordon tried some halfhearted steps at implementing Carter and so did Allan MacEachen. Even the present Minister of Finance made a halfhearted step last year about non-refundable tax credits. At first blush, people thought that they would not get anything for their charitable donations. By golly, it ended up that they got as much or more with the tax credit. I thought to myself: "Gee, maybe there is some hope. Maybe they are going to start to implement Carter." I should live so long.

Unless and until that kind of a principle is implemented by any Government of any political stripe, we are not going to have a fair tax system. It means throwing out all the conventional wisdom, the shibboleths of going back to the 1890s of the tax system in this country. Of course we have to do what we can to get rid of or substantially reduce the deficit and the national debt. There is no argument about that.

The argument is about how we go about doing it, who are we going to collect it from, and how are we going to collect it? Economists, financial experts of all political stripes, and other people of all Parties have agreed for many years that a sales tax and excise tax are the most regressive and that the income tax system is the most fair. Why do then Governments continue to rely so much more, time after time, on more and more sales and excise taxes when they know themselves before they do it that it is a regressive tax.

There has been some mythology peddled that the federal sales tax does not show up on an invoice. The last three times I bought a car, which is over the last 15 years, the invoice I got from my car dealer showed the price of the car, all the options, the provincial sales tax, and the federal sales tax right beside the basic price of the car. I always knew what the federal sales tax was on the car. There is nothing new about that. The Minister of Finance tries to hoodwink us into saying that it is a hidden tax. Reputable manufacturers always showed it as a separate item.

I am not sure about the manufacturers from outside Canada but inside Canada it was the same on any durable goods which I bought. I bought a General Electric stove. I bought a fridge. I knew what the federal sales tax was on it. I admit I have not bought one for about eight years, but the federal sales tax was shown on the invoice at the retail level.

Let us not try to hoodwink people into thinking that all of a sudden the federal sales tax or the federal excise tax was a hidden tax. It was only hidden if the person collecting the tax chose to hide it. In my experience, in most instances, it was not hidden.

An Hon. Member: Even on the gas pump.

Mr. Benjamin: That is one place it is hidden.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Benjamin: It depends on where you are. At least 90 per cent of our debt and our deficit is money which Canadians owe to themselves. Much fuss is made about the present national debt; $8,0000 for every man, woman and child. The day you are born, you owe $8,000. I am relying on 1987 or 1988 dollars. It is probably more than that in 1989. That is a large, daunting figure.

In 1985, the national debt of Pakistan, India and Zimbabwe was $200 Canadian per capita. To follow this argument to its conclusion, just imagine, they were 40 times better off than we are. Their national debt per Gross National Product per capita was $200 a head for every man, woman, and child.

I just wanted to reverse the argument. Maybe Canada should be applying to those three countries for some kind of foreign aid, some way to cancel our bank loans, our savings bonds, our guaranteed investment certificates, our term deposits, or reduce those since 90 per cent of our debt and our deficit we owe to ourselves.

The truth is that the national debt is not a heavy burden which we are passing on to future generations. Posterity will indeed inherit the obligation to make huge interest payments on the national debt. However, that same posterity will inherit all the bonds and investments which 90 per cent of our debt is presently based on, namely, by Canadians.

There is an expression that I said earlier in this Parliament, which I am going to repeat: "Economists are like theologians. Every religion other than their own is the invention of man, whereas their own is an emanation from God." The economics we have been getting from the Minister of Finance is of course an emanation from God. Anything else that anybody else comes up with is an invention of man.

In the past half century, there have been at least two other periods when the Canadian Government incurred budget deficits comparable to the ones we have had in the 1980s.

From 1930 to 1935, during the Dirty Thirties, the debts averaged 3.2 per cent of the country's Gross National Product. It was therefore equivalent to a contemporary annual deficit of $15 billion, that is in 1987 dollars.

Now apart from there being any inflation in those years, there actually was deflation. The Consumer Price Index fell by 19 per cent. Interest rates rose to an horrendous 3 per cent to 4 per cent. From 1932 to 1935, the deficit was equivalent to $15 billion in 1987 dollars. During the war years, which was the first example I wanted to mention, 1942 to 1945, and that is only four years, the average federal deficit was 21 per cent of the Gross National Product. It went up from 15 per cent to 21 per cent of the Gross National Product. This is equivalent to a deficit two years ago of $100 billion. The Consumer Price Index meanwhile rose by less than 2 per cent a year while interest rates stayed under 4 per cent.

• (2240)

The federal deficit in 1985 was three times what it was in 1981. The inflation rate instead of going up went down and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has never explained that to us. His theory and the theory of the head of the Bank of Canada is that unless you raise interest rates inflation will go up. But from 1981 to 1985 it went down. If you remember 1981–82 in comparison to 1985–86, interest rates went down and inflation went down. I do not understand this. I am just an innocent country boy.

The Minister of Finance keeps telling us that you have to raise interest rates in order to fight inflation, but the evidence is in the book. It is there. Higher interest rates bring on inflation. Higher interest rates means that the cost of everything goes up for every man, woman and child in this country and it goes up for every level of government. The Minister of Finance is a victim of his own stupidity. He has given incompetence a good name.

You cannot keep doing it the way we have been doing it. The solution is you have to borrow more money and invest it in this country and challenge the Canadian population as was done during the war. Put people to work building houses and working on reforestation. You can put a quarter of a million people to work over the next 10 years cleaning up our air and water. That is not a deficit, that is not a cost, that is an investment. The return on that investment means that when you reduce unemployment from 9 per cent to 5 per cent, you have recovered $8 billion a year in new increased tax revenue from individuals and corporations. Why not do it that way? We can do it in war time with a declaration of war, which is a matter of destruction. Why not do the same thing with a declaration of peace, which is a matter of construction? Why do we not do exactly the same thing for a much more worth-while purpose and a much more worth-while endeavour that puts Canada's financial position in a much better position that it is now, puts this country to work and reduces the deficit and the national debt.

The democratic socialists are the only ones who have been proposing this solution. In fact, we applauded the Finance Ministers in the days of Mackenzie King, St. Laurent and Pearson for doing that very same thing and I have not heard a single Liberal since proposing it, not a single one of them.

All the Tories could say was: "Do you think that money grows on gooseberry bushes"? The war was declared at the end of the Dirty Thirties. That was when we were asked: "Do you think that money grows on gooseberry bushes?" By golly, they found the bush. There was lots of money. So, Mr. Speaker, as your innocent stubble-jumping prairie boy, why don't we try what I just said?

Ms. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As a new Member, I have to register my absolute shock and horror. Here tonight we have been debating a crucial money Bill and as is well known by all Members of this House, it is a constitutional fixture that members of the Cabinet are responsible and accountable to this House.

I want to make it very clear that I am most distressed that there is no member of the Cabinet in this House during this crucial debate. It is astounding.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I am glad my colleague has raised that point of order because it is a tradition of this House when important Bills, such as money Bills are being debated that not only should one Minister be in the House but three should be here. Tonight not one Minister is here. Not only are we debating Bill C-20 but we are debating a closure motion. This Government is denying Members here the very rights of the constituents who put us here.

An Hon. Member: Here is one cabinet Minister.

Mr. Flis: Here is the Government making a mockery of the free election process and of the British parliamentary system in denying the very rights and freedoms that we entrenched in the Constitution of Canada.

Canadians will remember this and I think the polls are already reflecting the situation.

Let us look at the legislation before us, Mr. Speaker. As the explanatory note for Bill C-20 says:

> Part 1 would implement the Ways and Means Motion to Amend the Excise Tax Act (hereinafter called the "Excise Tax Motion"), notice of which was tabled in the House of Commons by the Minister of Finance on April 27, 1989.

I will not bore Members with all the clauses, but I do want to draw attention to Clause 3(1) which reads:

> —the said Acts are repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> "(a) in the case of wines, and goods on which a duty of excise is imposed under the Excise Act or would be if the goods were produced or manufactured in Canada, at the rate of nineteen per cent;—

Here is a Government—I do not know where else Canadian wines would be produced if not in Canada—that has pretty well wiped out a wine industry. How many other industries will it wipe out?

I cannot complain about the intentions with which the Budget was originally presented. I will not go into the way in which it was presented. We are all aware by now that the language we hear from the other side of the House is that of doublespeak and is not to be believed at all. The latest example isthe description of the new progressive and open national sales tax that will hit this country like a time bomb. The tax will be hidden and we can all expect that the 9 per cent of today will soon merely be a fond memory of yesteryear.

Very few people will dispute the fact that the deficit has to be tackled. Even fewer will dispute the fact that the debt has to be tackled. But no one will agree that the deficit or the debt should be tackled at the expense of the average Canadian in the form of unreasonable income tax hikes, cut-backs, safety nets and a national sales tax that will be hidden.

This morning I met a constituent at the opening of the expressway. I compliment the Metro Toronto Government on a project called the beautification of the Gardiner Expressway. People from all over the world come to Toronto and get an impression of it. When they are driving on the expressway they saw that the sides were completely littered with bottles and everything else. Now the corporations and boroughs have all planted beautiful shrubs and flowers. People who are bidding for conventions in Toronto now get the right impression of the city. At this function I met a constituent and others who were complaining about hidden taxes. They said: "Be honest. Put it out in the open. If I have to pay this much, I will pay it, but do not hide the sales tax".

Another constituent of mine came to see me a month ago wanting advice about a job she was being offered. She was a single mother with two children aged four and six. She was on social assistance. Her problem was that were she to take a job, after paying child care costs as there were no subsidized spaces available and after paying transportation costs, she would net only $9 more a month. However, this was an opportunity of a lifetime, an opportunity to get out of a social and moral rut, so I encouraged her to take the job.

Now I will have to tell this woman that because of the financial bungling of the Government, she will pay more taxes and will be bringing in even less than she would have brought in had she remained on welfare. I will also have to tell her that there will not be any more child care spaces available because of a lack of commitment on the part of the Government to the women and children of Canada.

Some Canadians are carrying as much as 71 per cent of the financial burden created by the Government. This is after all the assurances of the Minister of Finance that by the end of the Government's first term, Canadians would be responsible for a maximum of 25 per cent of the debt load. Since 1984, individuals and families have paid $29 billion more in taxes. This Budget will dramatically increase that number.

A report from the Canadian Council of Social Development shows that the working poor with an annual household income of $24,000 paid 44 per cent more taxes between 1984 and 1988. Upper income earners with an annual income of $122,000 actually paid 6 per cent less in the same time frame. Under this Budget, a person working for a minimum wage will pay $137 more in taxes. A middle-income family making $50,000 will pay $645 more. These are figures that do not take into account the new national sales tax, upwards of 9 per cent. Therefore, the low and middle-income earners will once again be paying more for less.

There is no guarantee any longer that additional child care spaces will be available. The people will be paying more taxes for the loss of a $4-billion child care program promised during the last election campaign, more taxes for cut-backs in transfer payments to the provinces that will affect post-secondary education and medicare, more taxes to support cut-backs to regional development, abandoning the Atlantic and the other regions, more taxes for a total pull-out by the Government from the UI program for decreasing benefits and increasing qualifying periods, more taxes to support the closure of military bases that will devastate local economies in some of the more fragile communities. This is what all the additional taxes the Government will collect off the backs of low and middle-income earners will support, yet the cloud of an economic recession hangs dark and low over our country.

Every day we hear reports that support our position that rising interest rates coupled with higher taxes will lead to a recession. The Conference Board of Canada warned that jobs losses and higher taxes will reduce personal disposable income by $5 billion next year, in large part due to the $2.2 billion that will be collected in additional taxes.

In the words of Mr. Frank, the chief economist, the economy is already on the skids and yet the Government continues to sit back and let Crow get on with the show, a show that will begin when thousands more Canadians lose their jobs.

There is something I think should be very clear each time we refer to the time frame the Government has been in power. It is a misconception to continue to refer only to the last four years because that gives the Government too much credit for being able to cause the amount of damage it has been able to cause over four years in office. The damage it has caused has been over five years and is continuing well into its second term.

When we blame the last Government for the problems we are facing today, we should remember that the last Government was the same Government as today. The honeymoon is over for the Government. It can no longer blame previous Liberal Governments because the previous Government was a Tory Government.

In 1982-83 when the Liberals were in power, there was a global recession and we pulled through the recession better than most OECD countries. Between 1984 and 1988, like other countries, we had four good years of economic boom and in those same four years, the Government managed to accumulate 45 per cent of the current public debt. In September, 1984, the debt stood at $177 billion versus today, $321.2 billion. That is an 81.5 per cent increase in a four-year period that was considered to be good times.

What happened? How did government Members do it? When the times were good, they spent more. They got caught up in their own rhetoric of being the direct cause of the good times. They got caught up in patting themselves on the back for the jobs created because of good times. What else did they do? They sure as hell did not make their rich friends pay more for record profits. No, in fact, they gave away the store. They gave it all away.

Every time there was a profitable corporation which had been built with taxpayers' money so that each and every one of us owned a piece of it, without fail the Government sold it. For what? Crown corporations are accountable to the taxpayers who own them. Why wait until we see some activity and then sell?

Mr. Dionne: If they are in power for much longer, there won't be much left to see.

Mr. Flis: I am glad that my hon. friend from the Atlantic region said that. As far as I know, it does not make good, sound business sense.

An example of this is the Pearson International Airport. Despite the horror stories about the safety elements of the airport, which I may add are in large part due to the Government's deregulation philosophy and its bungling, the Pearson Airport, in terms of profit, is a success. Now a third terminal is being added to the airport and it is being handled by the private sector. Why? Because it is a profit-making project so naturally government Members give it to the private sector instead of bringing those revenues in and keeping the taxes down. Is this because the Government feels that it owes something to its business friends so that in the next election, it may go on the same kind of questionable propaganda spree it went on during the last election campaign? I think the answer is obvious.

Then we have our infamous Canada Post. It made record profits at the expense of the Canadian public. I would have been very concerned if, considering the cut-backs in service and the rise in postage rates, Canada Post had not shown some profit. However, that is not the priority of our essential services. Quality service and a reasonable rate should be.

Tomorrow I will be tabling petitions in the House from constituents of mine who had been serviced by Postal Station V in Toronto. The Government decided to give Postal Station V over to a corner drug store. The corner drug store went bankrupt and so did the postal service so it went back to the post office. The people were happy. They could register their letters and pick up parcels. What happened then? Without any notice from the Minister or from anyone, we see that there is a for rent sign in the post office window. People are up in arms because again because for the second time, they are losing their postal service. Elderly people in their 80s and 90s will have to go three, four or five miles to post registered letters or pick up parcels. Yet Canada Post prides itself that its main goal is to increase service. That is what it calls efficiency in management.

Government Members sit there and gloat about big profits, not caring about seniors losing the service right under their noses.

Mr. Milliken: They don't give two hoots about it.

Mr. Flis: Exactly. Four years of good times, and in those four years, what else did we see from the Government? The Government did not give Canadians a tax break but increased taxes.

Now what do we see in Bill C-20 and in the Budget? We see the Tory philosophy at work again. Middle and low-income earners will continue to carry the largest burden of the taxes, whether the times are good or whether the times are bad.

The Tory philosophy knows no bounds. In fact, it knows no boundaries. It carries over the oceans into the countries that most need our help. At a time when the world is strife with wars and poverty and literally millions of children are starving, the Government is taking the food right out of their mouths.

In 1984, when the Government first came to power, it promised to commit .5 per cent of GNP to foreign aid and development for 1985. However, the percentage of aid actually dropped and did not reach the target of 1986-87. It also promised that by 1995 foreign aid would receive 0.7 per cent of GNP. Again, it reneged on its promises. In the report entitled: "Sharing Our Future" which was released in 1987, the Government pushed back the date for the realization of this target to the year 2000. This time it has cut its commitment once again. It announced a $1.8 billion reduction in foreign expenditures over the next five years. This includes a $400 million cut from 1989–90.

• (2300)

It does not take an economist or a university professor to see the link between poverty, suffering, and conflict. There are countries that are being pushed so hard to pay back their loans or to fight for the very land that provides their sustenance that they have to literally trade the food they grow for arms so that they can trade the arms for money or use the arms to protect the land to grow their food.

Instead of making it easier for those countries by continuing support in foreign aid so that they can make the structural adjustments necessary to get their economies back on track, we cut back and say: "When times are better, we will give you more". Try to tell the mother of a starving child that today her child will not eat, or the child will probably not eat tomorrow. We cannot guarantee that that child will ever have any food in his or her mouth.

The world is getting smaller because of the information age that we as western nations have led the world into. There is no going back to living as a country in isolation. We cannot ignore what is going on around us. We cannot continue to pretend that what goes on does not affect us. It does. It affects us every time we turn on the radio or the television.

This Government has proven time and time again that it cannot be trusted. It has not once lived up to its pre-election, election, or post-election promises. The Government has been indulging in double-speak; it states one thing and does something directly opposite. The latest opinion polls dropping the Tories to their lowest level since the November, 1988 election are giving the Government a clear message: be open in the information to Canadians. They will not accept the Government's hidden agendas. Be above board, forget the hidden taxes, forget the hidden agendas but, above all, to have the trust of Canadians the Government must learn the golden rule that we all learned in elementary school that honesty is the best policy.

Excise Tax Act

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in commenting on Bill C–20, I want to take us back to the Budget of which Bill C–20 is a very small portion, although it is as bad as other portions in this very unsavoury Conservative Budget. I also want to look beyond the Budget to the pre-election period and the promises the Conservatives made to Canadians, and why they made those promises in the context of the Canada–U.S. trade deal.

It is important to look at these Budget measures from the point of view of people such as those in my constituency of Vancouver East. Those people are struggling hard to raise their families or to find a job, many of them being unemployed, and they certainly do not represent the wealthy and powerful people of this country.

I also want to point out how the Tory Budget impacts on all regions of Canada. I want to summarize how the Budget hurts families, and how it is drastically cutting services which are needed and expected and are the right of families and individuals across Canada. These services are a federal responsibility. I also want to discuss what the impact will be on affordable housing. I also wish to discuss the measures that are hitting workers particularly hard by cutting back on unemployment insurance benefits that are attacked in the Budget.

It is important to see Bill C–20 in the context of the Budget. It is the worst Budget that we have ever had in the history of Canada. Let us set the stage first by recalling the promises that were made by the Government as it attempted to woo the voters of Canada to re-elect it. They were false promises which we now have evidence of as we look at the promises that were broken and have been proven in the Budget. Remember the promises, Mr. Speaker?

There was the promise that our programs and services were a sacred trust, and universality is sacrosanct, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said. Of course, he has proceeded to undermine universal family allowances and old age pensions. He stated that the trade deal would not cost jobs. In fact, thousands of jobs would be created. As the Minister of Trade has been questioned in the House we have heard over and over again that the Minister cannot come up with any evidence of all the jobs that have been created that can be attributable to the trade deal. In fact, many people have lost jobs. In my riding of Vancouver East, there is lots of evidence of that. He also said: "Don't worry, folks. Don't worry, Canadians. We won't lose control over our resources. Don't worry about the fish processing industry. We are going to save it, just vote for us, and all will be well". In British Columbia we stand to lose close to 6,000 jobs in the fish processing industry, and many of those jobs are in my riding of Vancouver East.

Again and again the Prime Minister assured us that the trade deal would not affect unemployment insurance or regional development. He then had the blatant hide to immediately bring in a Budget, under the sponsorship of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), which attacked both those programs quite drastically.

Remember how the Tories promised tax reform? They said that their tax reforms would tax the wealthy and help average families. We know now that the reverse is true. More than 60,000 profitable corporations still are tax-free while hidden sales tax will be imposed on unsuspecting consumers. Of course, they are the kind of taxes that are regressive and hit poor people with the same amount of taxation as wealthier people.

These are typical Tory broken promises, and let us not forget that. I hope the voters of Canada and the taxpayers of Canada will not forget it. Those voters believed the Prime Minister and were willing to trust him. They voted for him and they have been betrayed. Every one of those promises has been broken.

The policies that led to the drastic cuts that are evident in the Tory Budget are policies that fit perfectly with the American agenda that was part of the Canada-U.S. trade deal. It is easy to see that now. U.S. businesses stated that we had to establish a level playing field; that we could not have social programs that were far more generous and provided far more security for Canadians than those in the United States. The Americans said that we had to limit unemployment insurance because it was an unfair subsidy, and that we should not protect disadvantaged regions. The business community in the United States has been stating this for years, and the Minister should know only too well that this was the agenda in the trade deal. We should not protect Canadian industries and resources. These are the people who won. The Canadians lost and the Tories' drastic Budget that we are debating tonight, which includes Bill C-20, is proof of that.

The Conservative Budget includes pretty drastic tax measures. The sales and excise taxes in Bill C-20 are only part of these regressive and punitive measures. The tax measures in the Budget will add another $710 to the annual tax burden of the average family in my riding of Vancouver East. There will be another $1,000 added when the goods and services tax is imposed in 1991. That is the hidden sales tax that the Minister states is not hidden.

An average family of four in Vancouver East, an ordinary working family whose parents go out to work, a family struggling with two children, will face the following annual tax increases. At the same time they will be denied affordable child care spaces because the Government has not fulfilled its obligations in that field. They will face a sales tax increase of 1.5 per cent which will add about $273 per year. They will see unemployment insurance premiums increased by 15 per cent which will add $130 per year. There will be a gas tax increase which will add $120 per year. There will be an increase on taxes for cigarettes and alcohol which will result in $100 per year. The federal surtax increase from 3 per cent to 5 per cent will add $120 per year. The new goods and services tax will add another $1,000 per year for a total per year of $1,710 when all these measures come into effect.

How will the Bill we are debating tonight hit Canadian taxpayers? It increases a number of sales taxes which are the most regressive way of getting money from Canadians. Bill C-20 imposes taxes that will affect every taxpayer in Canada. There will be a tax on long distance calls. The telecommunications service tax will be increased to 11 per cent. The sales tax on construction materials will be increased to 9 per cent. There will be a sales tax increase to 19 per cent on the price of wines. There will be sales tax increases up to 1.5 per cent on gas and diesel fuel. Taxes on tobacco, cigarettes and snuff will be increased again. This is at the same time that the Government refuses to introduce the anti-smoking Bill which the Members of my Party fought so hard for in the last session of Parliament. It was passed by the House of Commons and the Senate. Yet the Government has refused to implement it in the interests of the health of Canadians.

Sales tax on laundry detergent will be increased under this Bill. I do not know what the Government has against cleanliness.

This Budget not only hurts Canadians by hiking taxes and using regressive sales tax measures but it also hits them at the same time by cutting back on funds for services. These are needed services, ones which are expected and should be the right of Canadians.

Funds for social services will be cut. Child care services which were promised will not be funded. Citizenship programs will be cut back. Pensions will be taxed back from higher income people. Health and welfare payments will be affected, as will education payments, unemployment insurance, housing, environmental programs, foreign aid and social housing programs.

I would like to give a few more details on these. The Budget will slash essential services that are within federal jurisdiction. It is ironic to think that the Tory Government squandered quite a few dollars to whip up hysteria about the deficit, and then expects the citizens will foot the bill for deficit reduction. The Tories refused to attack the root causes of the high deficit. We are concerned about this as well. However, we are concerned about unemployment, high interest rates and the failure of corporations to pay their fair share of taxes. These should be the measures on which the Government is working.

The national child care program has been abandoned. Family allowances and old age security programs are no longer available. Those with incomes over $50,000 will have their benefits taxed back under those programs. This means that as years go by the threshold will be lowered and universal programs will be eroded continuously. Secretary of State programs which funded advocacy groups for women, for natives and for visible minorities will be slashed by $16 million over the next two years. This means advocacy groups for people who do not have power in our society will be cut by 15 per cent over the next three years. This is an erosion of democracy.

Transfer payments to the provinces for health care and post-secondary education have been cut by 1 per cent. There were native students who protested here on the Hill. They, above all others, surely deserve open access to education, not only for themselves but for the future of their people. We know that they are seriously concerned and have the right to be concerned about this.

Some $400 million will be cut from regional development grants next year. I do not blame the regions, particularly disadvantaged ones, for feeling very strongly about this. However, I do blame them for voting Liberal. They could have chosen New Democrats. Perhaps that will happen the next time around.

Ms. McLaughlin: They did in the Yukon.

Ms. Mitchell: That is right, they did in the Yukon.

The Government talks about environment being a top priority. What did it do in the Budget for the environment? Some $10 million will be cut from environmental programs by phasing out the national conservation and alternative energy initiative in closing the 12 regional conservation and renewable energy offices. That is a great way to expand environmental protection services.

Canadians take pride in the fact that we want to go beyond our borders to assist countries around the world, particularly developing ones. I note that the Minister responsible for aid is here in the House tonight. She should be ashamed that Canada's foreign aid effort will be cut by $400 million to $2.4 billion as a result of this Budget.

Affordable housing is also being severely cut. People in my riding in Vancouver East and in Vancouver generally are extremely concerned about this. There is practically no allowance of units for co-op housing to address a very large need this year. There are thousands of people on the waiting list with only a few hundred spaces in Vancouver. It is the same across the country in the major cities where there are severe housing crises.

RRAP programs have been cut completely. Of all the federal programs, RRAP progams were very practical. They were labour intensive. They restored the housing stock. Yet this is one of the programs being cut. Some $55 million will be taken out of RRAP programs.

The Government promised 5,000 co-op housing starts per year. However, this year's level may go below 2,500.

In the face of a national housing crisis, the Tory Government will build fewer affordable housing units and will terminate a program to prevent existing units from deterioration. It is incredible but oh so typical of the Conservative Government once it is in power.

What is the federal Government going to do with unemployment insurance, something which workers in the country have fought for for years and which is paid for by the employees and the employers? It will be charging more. The workers will pay 15 per cent more in premiums. The benefits will be harder to get and will not last as long. Unemployment premiums will increase to $2.25 from $1.95 per $100 earned. The Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will withdraw entirely from the program to save $2.9 billion. That will destroy the whole purpose of the unemployment insurance program. This program has proven over and over again that it is a very important safety net. We are glad that it now includes some parental benefits and the coverage for workers in seasonal jobs. It is important that the federal Government subsidize those extra benefits, as needed.

• (2320)

Nearly one million Canadians will be partly or completely denied benefits under the new scheme. The rationale of the Government is that this will induce attitudinal and behaviour changes in the unemployed. That is ironic. I am sure the unemployed workers in Vancouver East would not feel this is an incentive when there are no jobs for them in many cases.

In passing, I want to mention the sell-out of the B.C. fish processing industry. That is another burden.

I could go on to refer to many other aspects of the Budget but, in summary, the Government has made many promises and could have chosen other ways to deal with the deficit, including the reduction of interest rates and a full employment program that would contribute more to the income of the country.

However, it has chosen almost every way imaginable to hurt Canadians, particularly average and low-income Canadians. Its tax measures are particularly regressive. The cuts in services are unconscionable and are definitely related to the Government's commitment to the Americans under the trade deal.

This year, 1989 is a sad time for Canadians, but it will get worse. It is a sad time for students who cannot afford post-secondary education. It is a sad time for parents who are struggling to raise a family and cannot get help with child care. It is a sad time for unemployed workers who paid into the plan and expected coverage. It is a sad time for elderly people who have contributed so much to this country and have earned their full pensions. Regardless of their income, there should be a universal old age pension.

It is a sad time for people in remote areas and in the North who are losing railway services. Fuel costs and phone costs are being increased. It is a sad time for minorities, women and native people who need a strong voice.

It is a very sad time for those Canadians who voted Conservative in the last election because they have been betrayed. Tory promises have been broken by this nefarious Budget, the worst Budget in Canadian history.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

During the ringing of the bells

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I seek clarification. I presume the bells are now ringing to draw Members to the House for a vote. If this is what is going on, I want to say that according to my recollection it is the first time in Canadian history that a vote has been called on a closure motion prior to the designated hour at one o'clock.

I think it proves that there was no need for the Government to introduce closure at this point, and that there are a number of time-honoured ways—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I cannot stop the bells now that they have begun.

Mr. Riis: I am not suggesting that you stop the bells. I do have a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are you suggesting that I stop the bells?

Mr. Riis: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have called in the Members. There is 30 minutes for the vote.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Loiselle) which was agreed to on the following division:

DAIRY INDUSTRY

IMPACT OF NEW GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, in recent meetings with dairy farmers from my riding of Northumberland, they have conveyed to me a desperation concerning their ability to survive the Government's new policies.

The recent freezing of industrial milk prices for the next 20 months, along with the budget cuts of $14 million a year from dairy spending, including the dropping of federal export subsidies and the cutting of funding for the Canadian Dairy Commission, all point to the fact that the Government is not interested in preserving the Canadian dairy industry.

Dairy farmers in my riding and across Canada want to know why they are being singled out for income freezes which will not allow their incomes to rise by as little as the rate of inflation.

I urge the Minister of Agriculture to reconsider his destructive policies which are contrary to the Government's own long-term dairy policy that included a complete commitment to supply management. The family farm dairy industry must be maintained.

DAIRY INDUSTRY

NATIONAL MILK MARKETING SYSTEM

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Government of British Columbia has publicly threatened to withdraw from the national milk marketing system. This has caused great concern to the province's 1,000 dairy producers, the majority of whom support the national milk marketing program.

One of the reasons for opting out is that the present distribution of the national market sharing quota or MSQ is completely unfair. British Columbia, with 12 per cent of Canada's population, has only 3.6 per cent of the national quota. Quebec, with 26 per cent of Canada's population, has 47 per cent, while Ontario and Quebec combined hold 78 per cent of the total national milk quota. This is a discriminatory allocation and must be rectified.

B.C. must stay within the national milk marketing system to protect the B.C. Dairymen's Association and to ensure the economic stability of the B.C. dairy industry. The only way to accomplish this is to adjust immediately the milk quota plan and give British Columbia its fair share.

SPORT

THE IMPORTANCE OF MAJOR JUNIOR HOCKEY

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, If the Québec Major Junior Hockey League is important to the central regions, it is also important to the remote regions. The Western Hockey League in Canada covers four provinces and a number of American states. The Ontario Hockey League covers a large territory.

However, in Québec the situation is different. The Québec Major Hockey League is based almost exclusively in the central regions, with the exception of Chicoutimi.

Abitibi and Témiscamingue contribute to the economy of Québec's central regions. Our ore and wood chips are processed in Montreal and Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Speaker, the Québec Government should apply the principles of Canada-Québec agreements on economic development to junior hockey and consider allowing two divisions so that Québec's resource regions would be represented as well.

MULTICULTURALISM

CARRABRAM CELEBRATION IN BRAMPTON

Mr. Harry Chadwick (Brampton—Malton): Mr. Speaker, on July 7, 8, and 9 Brampton plays host to the biggest and best multicultural event in Canada.

For three days, visit the Ming dynasty court; relive the wild days of the Cossack brotherhood; shake hands with a real leprechaun, retrace the voyages of Prince Henry the navigator; dance the hula; meet the descendants of Canada's first settlers; celebrate Octoberfest early; star in a music hall variety show; view the exotic temple dances of India; do the Philippine bamboo pole dance of Tiniklang; hear the skirl of bagpipes and poetry of Robbie Burns; dance the mazurka in a Polish castle; travel with the Croatian people through 2,500 years of history; take a leisurely stroll from the Alps to the rugged terrain of Sicily; do the Zorba dance in an authentic Greek tavern; hear the old legends of the Caribbean Islands; visit the people of the desert in the Arabian pavilion which will take one back to biblical times. All this in just three days at Carabram in Brampton, Ontario.

IMMIGRATION

SELF-EXILED PERSONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, a Chinese citizen in Canada recently applied for refugee status and was rejected and taken to the Chinese Consulate to get his passport for the purpose of deportation to China.

If he was not a refugee before, the Canadian Government made him a refugee by reporting him to the consulate, since Canada told China that he had embarrassed the Government of China by trying to stay in Canada.

Already a Somali citizen, Abdi Aden, rejected by the refugee board and deported to Somalia, has been imprisoned because Somalia has the same sort of laws.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) must take steps to avoid endangering more such innocent persons and to stop violating the United Nations law that forbids forcing a person to return to face persecution.

The Immigration Act has a remedy under the "self-exiled persons designated class", which authorizes the Government to protect citizens of the Soviet Union and five other Eastern European countries whose laws also provide punishment for embarrassing unauthorized departure or absence.

I call upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration to exercise her authority under the Immigration Act to save the liberty and life of Chinese and Somalians in Canada by adding China and Somalia to the countries on the self-exiled persons designated class list.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF FUNDING TO CENTRE

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety, located in the great riding of Hamilton West, is under siege by the Tory Government.

For the last decade the centre has provided Canadians with comprehensive information on occupational health and safety matters. Last year alone, the centre provided Canadians with 350,000 copies of technical publications, had 1,200 Canadian firms communicate over 40,000 times with the centre's data base, and fielded over 100 hot line calls a day.

Obviously, the Conservative Government fails to understand that the centre needs government funding, because it has decided to eliminate the centre's $10 million grant by 1991.

The Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin) attempts to explain it all away by stating that the funding was "seed money for the difficult start-up period". A decade of support can hardly be labelled a start-up period.

Canadians cannot afford to lose such an important resource. I call upon the Government to reinstate funding for the centre immediately.

HISTORIC EVENTS

FORTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF NORMANDY INVASION

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians have been painfully reminded these last few weeks of the fact that many citizens of the world do not enjoy the same basic democratic privileges which we often take for granted. We have also been reminded of the fact that democratic privileges must sometimes be protected from those who would destroy them by force.

Therefore, it is important to pause for a moment on this the forty-fifth anniversary of the Normandy invasion by the Allied Forces to express a few sincere words of gratitude to those Canadians who in the past were willing to fight and to die, if necessary, to ensure the survival of democracy as we have known it.

Yesterday morning I had the opportunity to speak briefly to the delegates attending the thirty-fourth biennial convention of the Manitoba and North-West Ontario Command of the Royal Canadian Legion. On behalf of my constituents, I would now like to say a sincere thank you to the entire membership of the Royal Canadian Legion and indeed to all those veterans who fought in order that we could be free.

We will always be indebted to them.

THE LATE HON. HOWARD CHARLES GREEN

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, today British Columbians and all Canadians mourn the loss of a dedicated politician and Canadian, Howard Charles Green.

Howard Green was born in British Columbia five years before the turn of the century. After attending regular school in British Columbia and graduating from law school in Toronto, he served overseas with the fifty-fourth Kootenay Battalion during the First World War.

In 1935, at the age of 40, Mr. Green was elected to the House of Commons by the people of Vancouver South. He remained an active Member of Parliament until 1963, representing Vancouver Quadra for the last 14 years. First, as Minister of Public Works in the Cabinet of another great Canadian, John Diefenbaker, and then as Secretary of State for External Affairs from June 1959 to April 1963, Howard Green took an active role in international discussions which greatly raised Canada's profile world-wide.

To the family of the late Hon. Howard Green, all in this Chamber extend our deepest sympathies.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with my colleague across the way in paying tribute to the Late Howard Green. He was a formidable Member of Parliament. He was the first Member for the then new riding of Quadra. He held that seat for a long period of time. He was our Member of Parliament when you and I, Mr. Speaker, grew up in Vancouver.

I remember him as one who kept in touch, particularly with young people at the university when we were attending the University of British Columbia. He was also a great Member of Parliament and a first-rate Secretary of State for External Affairs under the Late John George Diefenbaker. His quest for peace and for international comity was well known to the House and the country. He will be remembered with affection and with respect by everyone in Vancouver, British Columbia, and throughout the country.

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, I am saddened by the news today of the loss of a very great Canadian, the Hon. Howard Charles Green.

Howard Green was a son of British Columbia and a great Canadian. He brought with him the spirit of the West, that fighting independence that he took with him into the Conservative Party and into the Diefenbaker Cabinet.

He fought for British Columbia as strongly as he fought for all of Canada. In his role as Secretary of State for External Affairs, Howard Green carved out the last important independent stand, pro-Canadian in international affairs. He had a pan-Canadian view of this country. He loved his Province of British Columbia. We will miss him and we will remember him.

Mr. Speaker: I am asking the indulgence of the House to recognize, as would not normally be done, the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs on this matter.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to add my sense of great regret at the death of Howard Green and words of appreciation for his distinguished career, a career particularly worthy of commendation for two reasons that recommend themselves to the House of Commons.

He was a pre-eminent parliamentarian, a man who understood the House of Commons, had a deep faith and commitment to it, and always conducted himself in accordance with the highest standards of this place.

On the international stage, the late Howard Green served this country with both conscience and effectiveness. He demonstrated that a country like Canada can make a difference in international affairs, and make a difference on those issues of conscience and principle which are important to all of our country.

He is very much a part of our tradition, and all of us mourn the loss of this extraordinary western Canadian and Canadian.

Mr. Speaker: I would also ask the indulgence of the House to allow the Speaker, who cannot speak, to say something on this matter.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I grew up in Vancouver Quadra. Howard Green was always our Member of Parliament. My father—this may come as a great shock to some of you—was a Liberal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: But, this will not come as a surprise to you, he always voted for Howard Green.

I once asked my mother: "Isn't father a Liberal?" She said: "Yes". I asked: "Why does he vote for Howard Green who is a Conservative?" She said: "Your father and Howard Green enlisted together from British Columbia and went to France and fought together in the trenches, and that is all there is to that".

• (1420)

It was, I think, an expression of the kind of faith that people had in Howard Green. It came from a lot of different places, a lot of humble places. He has left us now. However, I think it is appropriate to say that he would be listening with a quiet and perhaps bemused smile to what we are saying.

The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said that he loved this place. He did; but he loved his country more. He loved the people whom he served.

VOLUNTEER FIRE-FIGHTERS

LIMIT OF TAX EXEMPTION

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, there is no question in anyone's mind with respect to the splendid work done by volunteer fire-fighters, not only in my riding of Haldimand—Norfolk but all across Canada.

Volunteer fire-fighters served their municipalities with very little compensation. Generally, they are given honorariums to cover out-of-pocket expenses. I am confident that no one in this House would disagree with such remuneration. One would agree that their service is worthy of every penny.

The Government presently allows them a $500 tax exemption on honorariums that they receive. However, the inflationary costs incurred in the course of duty expenses often exceed the $500 tax exemption limit and volunteers are now being forced to pay income tax on these expenses.

These volunteers are donating their time and often risking their lives on behalf of others. Surely, we owe them more thanks than this.

Tax exemptions for volunteer fire-fighters in Canada should be increased to at least $1,000. This sum should be increased periodically to keep up with added costs and inflation.

This is the least Canada can do to recognize the great contribution these volunteers make to our country and offer some incentive for the civic minded individuals to continue this service to their communities and to Canada.

TRANSPORTATION

REQUEST FOR NATIONAL STRATEGY

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, within a few days we are expecting the business plan for VIA Rail as requested by the Government of Canada. I urge the Government of Canada, in considering its response to this report, to seize the golden opportunity and the need for fiscal restraint present to us and therefore respond with a national transportation strategy design for the next century.

From a southern Ontario perspective, we have Canada's busiest airport in Toronto, the most congested highways in the nation, and the most heavily used rail and bus services in Canada.

Whatever the Government's options on VIA within the vital corridor from Windsor to Quebec City, I urge the Government to study them, not in isolation of rail service only, but within an integrated transportation strategy of rail, air, car and bus traffic.

While considering this strategy I implore the Government to develop it in consultation with the provinces and in a manner that is in harmony with sound environmental considerations for the future.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

IMPACT OF CUTS IN NOVA SCOTIA

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, to be poor and unemployed in the City of Halifax is now going to be tougher than ever. Due to changes in cost sharing agreements the Halifax city Government has its back to the wall.

Cuts in social assistance are being forced that will create hardship not seen in our city since the terrible days of R. B. Bennett—$50 less per month in the shelter allowance alone. All this before the effects of the Government's ill-conceived, all-out attack on Atlantic Canadians through its pernicious Budget are truly felt.

The Nova Scotia Nutrition Council says that the children on social assistance do not receive proper nutrition in our province. They cannot because social assistance does not pay enough to provide it. The situation is now critical.

I call on the federal Government to reverse its search and destroy policy in the Atlantic region. Cuts to UI, to EPF, to ERDAs, closures of bases and fish plants will strain our municipalities beyond their endurance.

Tories, provincial and federal, must stop this wholesale slaughter of our social service safety net.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

THE MEMBER FOR LÉVIS—ALLEGATIONS OF FRAUD

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, we socialists on the other side of the House were shocked and appalled when we read in the papers this morning that the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) was being investigated by the police following allegations of abuse of public funds. The Hon. Member for Lévis has played a very important role in our lives as socialists. When we were plagued by self-doubt and thought that the Government no longer took us seriously, he was always there to remind us that nothing could be further from the truth. We knew he was speaking in affectionate terms when he accused us of being financed by the unions, and we appreciated the kindness and courtesy of his comments. Well, Mr. Speaker, we New Democrats have always kept our hands firmly in our pockets where public funds were concerned, and we hope that the police investigation will show that the Hon. Member for Lévis exercised more discipline and common sense in the performance of his duties than in his comments in this House.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has now expired.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTES TO PAGES

Mr. Speaker: I would like to take a moment to thank some very special people who have made our jobs a little easier in this Chamber, the parliamentary pages.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: This is their last week with us. I have not asked them what they are thinking, nor would I. However, I know that Members would want me to express our sincere thanks and appreciation for all that they have done to help the House of Commons.

[Translation]

In addition to serving Hon. Members efficiently and with great dedication, these young people took part in a number of deserving projects outside the House, including the United Appeal Campaign and the CHEO telethon.

On behalf of all Members, I express my gratitude to the pages and to the page program staff for the fine work they have done for our country.

Thank you very much.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

NEW NATIONAL SALES TAX

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It is about his new national sales tax. You know the tax we are talking of, Mr. Speaker. It is that tax which the Minister says is so simple, so simple that for two years neither he nor his Department can come up with a booklet to explain it. That is the tax we are talking about.

Will the Minister confirm that he is slapping a new national sales tax of 9 per cent on reforestation equipment which is currently exempt from manufacturers' sales tax? At the same time will he confirm that he is slapping a new national sales tax of 9 per cent on pollution control equipment which is currently exempt, and on product safety testing equipment which is currently exempt, and on farmers' irrigation systems which are currently exempt?

Why does the Minister want to discourage anti-pollution equipment, reforestation, and safety equipment?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has asked a number of questions. Let me comment on farmers' irrigation systems. Because of the nature of this tax there will be a total refund of the tax paid on all inputs farmers pay on any of the products they buy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

APPLICATION OF NEW TAX

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is saying that there are some new exemptions, since he has only said food and medical equipment so far, then let us hear a list of those exemptions. The definition of his tax value added includes labour.

Will the Minister confirm that for the first time ever he is slapping a sales tax on safety clothing used in nuclear power plants, for the first time ever he is slapping a sales tax on oxygen air packs used by people fighting fires, including chemical fires? Will he confirm that for the first time ever he is slapping a sales tax on carbon monoxide alarms, for the first time ever he is slapping a tax on life preservers used by loggers? Will he confirm that to the House?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, clearly from the way the Leader of the Opposition has phrased these questions, I do not think he understands the way this tax works. I believe it would be important for him to wait for the technical paper and to read that paper. Then I think he will get all his answers.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Either the Minister will confirm that they are not exempt or he will admit that his paper adds value to labour added and a value added tax that would englobe them. If it is so simple, why do we not have the booklet that he has been trying to produce for two years so that we can we explain it to the House of Commons and the people of Canada.

[Translation]

APPLICATION OF NEW SALES TAX—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister confirm to us that, for the first time, he will hit safety belts, safety cables, safety hooks, safety boots and safety glasses with a new 9 per cent national sales tax? Can he confirm to the House that, for the first time, he will impose a new 9 per cent sales tax on equipment used to control the safety of aircraft and on baby diapers? Finally, can he confirm to us, once and for all, that he will impose a new 9 per cent sales tax on burials and funerals?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again I think we have another example of the Leader of the Opposition trying to ride two horses. For the last two weeks he has been railing away about the fact that this tax is invisible. In fact, it is. But all he is saying to us is that he wants to go back to the highly invisible tax—

An Hon. Member: That he is responsible for.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —the very arbitrary, capricious tax, the same tax that he administered when he was Minister of Finance. He wants to go back to a tax which has 22,000 separate deals between Revenue Canada and individual taxpayers.

Mr. Mulroney: Shame.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is the mess we are trying to get away from. Surely the Hon. Leader of the Opposition understands that.

TOURISM

EFFECT OF NEW SALES TAX

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for tourism. The tourist industry of Canada, Ministers of Tourism in every province and now the respected Conference Board of Canada have indicated that the 9 per cent sales tax will penalize the tourist industry by $1 billion a year. Since 80 per cent of tourist activity in this country is by Canadians themselves, what does the Minister intend to do to prevent such a substantial loss of revenue, the erosion of confidence and international competitiveness in our tourist industry?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that three weeks ago I met with the provinces and the Conference Board made their presentation. It is interesting to note that the Conference Board presentation made it clear that after four or five years the tourist industry will be better off with the goods and services tax. That is even without seeing the improvements that will obviously come in the technical paper as well.

[Translation]

REFUNDS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, we know that the Minister does not intend to renew the marketing contracts or agreements with the provinces, especially the Eastern provinces. Does the Minister at least intend to respond to the requests of the tourism industry for rebates for tourists visiting our country?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that through the goods and services tax we will enhance our exports as a country. One of our exports is, in fact, tourism.

Ms. Copps: Tourists?

Mr. Hockin: In other words, it is an export because we attract Americans, Europeans and Asians to Canada. As a result of the goods and services tax, not only will we be in a stronger position in three or four years after the tax is implemented, more important, there will be special approaches within the tax that the Minister of Finance will announce, which will also address the problem, I am sure.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST AS TO HOW MANY CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS ARE SUBJECT OF INVESTIGATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General.

According to a newspaper today, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is investigating a Conservative MP. According to another newspaper, the RCMP is conducting two investigations regarding two Conservative MPs. And according to a third newspaper, there may be more.

Would the Solicitor General tell the House of Commons how many investigations and how many Members of Parliament?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I am a little surprised by my colleague's question. With his experience, he knows very well that it is not customary for the Solicitor General to comment on investigations that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police conducts from time to time. I can only refer you to what you read in the newspapers. I think that in one case it was confirmed by the individual in question.

Mr. Speaker, I also think that it is quite inappropriate to comment in the House on investigations that are now under way or that might be carried out by the RCMP. We must let the RCMP do its work!

[English]

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION ON STANDARDS OF BEHAVIOUR

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is right. One Member has confirmed this himself. My supplementary questions are directed to the Prime Minister. As early as September, 1985, the Prime Minister promised the people of Canada that there would be "a new standard of ethics package of proposals that would be brought forward at an early date and adopted by a Conservative Government". No fewer than five times leading up to last August, on behalf of my Party, I asked for the Government to move on this promise. Nothing was done.

Given that commitment he made in September, 1985, given the new accusations today in addition to a report concerning allegations of conflict of interest activities concerning a Senator, when will the Prime Minister deliver on his promise to bring in comprehensive reform concerning standards of behaviour for elected Members of Parliament?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has heard the Solicitor General advise that it would be completely inappropriate to comment in respect of any investigation that may or may not be ongoing. Clearly there are difficulties from time to time involving Members of this House, involving members of Houses of other jurisdictions, of other political Parties. Regrettably, this is a fact of political life, and the police conduct inquiries pursuant to information received from time to time, as they should.

In regard to the question raised by my hon. friend, it is our intention to proceed with the appointment of a Royal Commission respecting electoral financing and electoral laws. It is our intention as well to bring forward legislation in the autumn in respect of some of the matters that concern my friend, quite properly, and which we have discussed before in the House.

DEADLINE FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, of course the Government announced this Royal Commission on one aspect of what has been raised. As I pointed out, as early as September, 1985, and subsequent to that, the Prime Minister, the present Minister of Justice and the Deputy Prime Minister promised the House time after time that there would be action. It is one thing to say that there has been wrongdoing in various jurisdictions but it is quite another to sit back and do nothing about it. The people of Canada want some action.

Is it now the Prime Minister's solemn commitment that when the House comes back in September, within say four weeks of returning to Parliament we will have introduced a package of proposals that the Government has been promising since it was elected in 1984?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we introduced a piece of legislation, which passed the House, dealing with lobbyists. I think most people acknowledged that it was a substantial step forward, a first for Parliament.

We introduced other legislation last year in respect of conflicts of interest, declarations by Members of the House of Commons and Members of the Senate in regard to their holdings and so on. There did not appear to be an enormous amount of celerity by the opposition Parties in regard to passing this, as a result of which it did not pass at the time.

• (1440)

My hon. friend makes pejorative references in regard to the conduct of the Government. We went to the people in the intervening period. We were strongly re-elected, retaining the confidence of the people of Canada. I suspect that one of the reasons that we were re-elected is that the people of Canada were expressing confidence in the Government in respect of the integrity of all of its members.

COMMUNICATIONS

RADIO AND TELEVISION SERVICE IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. In the Northwest Territories there are francophone residents who have been trying for the past several years to acquire radio and television service in their official language, but the federal Government continues to delay and postpone its requirements to provide communication services to French speaking people residing in the North.

Will the Minister explain why the Government can spend billions of dollars on bilingual programming and completely exclude Yellowknife, for instance, one of the capital cities of Canada, where it has jurisdiction and the responsibility to provide both official languages on radio and television?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, this morning I met the Fédération des francophones hors Québec, and this is one of the issues that was discussed.

I can inform the Hon. Member that the situation with respect to bilingual services at the CBC, for instance, has greatly improved in recent years, thanks to the use of satellites and CBC stations broadcasting directly.

There is still work to be done, and I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government is taking this question very seriously.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES – REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Northwest Territories will become officially bilingual on January 1, 1990.

They have asked the federal Government's financial assistance in order to implement their action plan. They have had no news so far. It has now been six months since the federal Government promised them $716,000.

Furthermore, there is no French network of the CBC in the Northwest Territories.

The Minister has $21 million to serve outlying communities. Is he prepared to do his share and give the Northwest Territories the money they need so that CBC's French network can provide television and radio broadcasting in French?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, of course the Government is aware of these questions, as are the Members of this House, who know perfectly well that it is not up to the Minister of Communications to issue direct orders to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which has its own mandate and is an independent institution.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

APPLICATION OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES POLICY

Hon. Bill Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence.

The Commissioner of Official Languages stated that the Department of National Defence failed to implement its undertaking to apply the official languages guidelines to all its activities. There are translation delays, and military training in French has proved to be unsatisfactory.

Considering these harsh criticisms, could the Minister explain why his Department has failed to implement the Official Languages Act firmly and fairly and how he intends to ensure equality between Francophones and Anglophones in the armed forces?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member misinterpreted what the Commissioner of Official Languages said. This is a very serious matter and it has been taken very seriously by myself and the Government.

The Commissioner of Official Languages recognized that there had been positive steps made by the Department of National Defence. Bilingual manning was increased in real terms, active offer of service at NDHQ was improved dramatically. The official languages co-ordinator network has been improved and we were subject in the Department, Mr. Speaker, to fewer complaints over the last two years than we had been in the past.

It is important to recognize that the opportunities that we provide in second language training, both English and French, the opportunities to work in one's language, and the location of the different units throughout Canada make it difficult to maintain that second language training which we initiate when people are inducted into Canada's armed forces.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, this particular criticism of the Commissioner is a very clear interpretation. He says that on the most senior management bodies, the Defence Council and the Defence Management Committee, there are 11 Anglophones and no Francophones. That is very clear. Is this not unfair in view of the linguistic make-up of this country? What does he intend to do about it?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, no one would suggest, and I know the Hon. Member is not suggesting, that promotion in Canada's military comes about from the ability to speak one or other of Canada's official languages. Promotion comes about in Canada's military for service and capability and the ability to speak both of Canada's official languages.

I can inform the Hon. Member that in 1983, in the general officers ranks in Canada's military 14.3 per cent were Francophone. Today, 1989, 23.2 per cent are Francophone.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

THE MEMBER FOR LÉVIS—RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE VICE-CHAIRMANSHIP—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It is reported that the Member for Lévis is now being investigated by the RCMP. Now this Member, Gabriel Fontaine, is vice-chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Will the Prime Minister ask the Member for Lévis to resign his position until the RCMP completes its investigation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a question which I suppose affects the operation of the House. The Member in question has already indicated that since he is being investigated, he would withdraw from the Progressive Conservative caucus and I presume that he will also withdraw from other official functions related to the application of the Standing Orders of the House.

[English]

SUGGESTED RESIGNATION FROM TORY CAUCUS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I think the Prime Minister was anticipating my next question. The first question I asked was, in light of the fact that the Member for Lévis is the Vice-Chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections will the Prime Minister ask him to remove himself from that committee?

Second, will he follow the example set by Mr. Grisé and remove himself from the Tory caucus? Will he and any other Member who is being investigated remove themselves from the Tory caucus until such investigation is made public? That is the question I am asking.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says, and I am quoting him, that I was anticipating his next question. Indeed I was because his question in English was exactly the same as his question in French.

Mr. Rodriguez: No it wasn't.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has put his question and the Right Hon. Prime Minister has answered it. I just want to remind Hon. Members that the question was getting a long way away from the administration of government.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

REPORT OF CO-ORDINATING COMMITTEE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

In his March 31 news release, the Minister announced the establishment of a co-ordinating committee consisting of himself, Dr. Hatcher, the Acting President of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Mr. Bruce Howe, Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to consider future directions for the corporation.

Given the importance of energy, medical research and high technology to both the short and long-term future requirements of our country, can the Minister say when that report on the future of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited will be ready for presentation to Cabinet? Will he be making the report public? The Minister will know that there are precedents for such reports having been made public in the past.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct in his facts as to the organization of the work that is being undertaken regarding the future of AECL. He is also correct in terms of the importance of the work of AECL, and he outlined that.

I cannot confirm for him when Cabinet will be discussing the future of AECL. I think he understands Cabinet confidences. But I can say to him, as I mentioned to the Energy Committee when asked whether I would release the consultant's report, that if possible, I would release it. However, I cannot release the report or even consider its release until I have it in my hands.

LETTER TO AECL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, in his letter to the Atomic Energy of Canada employees, the Minister stated that the sources for continuing the necessary level of research and development funding are uncertain. Then, in the same letter, he told them that the federal Government fully supports the Canadian nuclear program.

How can the Minister say that the Government fully supports AECL's medical research, its energy program, its engineering projects such as the Canadarm, and at the same time tell the employees that he does not know where the next dollar is coming from? This is a very key question.

Will the Minister leave the company's profits with the corporation for future research and development, and will he not continue to sell off to private enterprise its profitable assets such as the radio medical isotopes operation and its cobalt therapy cancer treatment production? All of these have been developed with public funds.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that some of the next dollars for AECL will continue to come from the public purse. What I also have to tell the Hon. Member is that AECL, as any other nuclear company, whether privately or publicly owned, are looking for more and more of their resources from the utilities and from the users of that technology.

If he is asking me where I hope to get more money, I hope to get more money from Ontario Hydro. I hope to get more money from the Ontario Government. I hope to get more money from the users of the technology. I would hope that he would want to back that up as well for the very reasons that we are looking for support for the continuation of AECL. Its problem has been that it has not had a relationship with the private sector, and has not been getting money back for the technology that it has developed. I thought the Hon. Member, who also supports AECL as I have done for many years, would understand that and back me up. I hope he does.

Oral Questions

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Miss Deborah Grey (Beaver River): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has said that a Constitution should bring Canadians together and should be accepted by all Canadians.

My question is to the Prime Minister. Since it is now clear that most Canadians outside central Canada reject the Meech Lake Accord and that public opinion will make it politically impossible for certain provinces to accept the Accord, will the Prime Minister now urge negotiation of a new Accord that will address the concerns of these provinces as well as the concerns of Quebec?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear the comment from my hon. friend. The Premiers of Canada met in Edmonton under the chairmanship of the Premier of Alberta, a province represented by my hon. friend. They said in 1986 that it was very important, given the incomplete nature of the work in 1982, that the Premiers request the federal Government engage in what was referred to as the "Quebec round" to bring Quebec back into Confederation.

That having been accomplished, it was their hope and that of the Leaders of every Party of this House, that we would then move on in a second round to deal with those matters of substance and concern to other Canadians. For example, the question of Senate reform is of great interest to the people of Alberta and western Canada. But clearly it was the considered view of all of the Premiers, particularly those from western Canada, as well as myself and the Leaders of the political Parties in this Chamber, that these other matters could not be dealt with properly until such time as the constitutional loop was closed.

Quebec was brought in on terms that were both reasonable and fair. That is what the Meech Lake Accord was all about. That is why it was endorsed by 10 premiers representing four different political parties from British Columbia to Newfoundland and Labrador. That is why it was endorsed very enthusiastically by the Leader of the Opposition, the Leader of the NDP and myself as Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party.

I want to tell my hon. friend that among other things, under the previous Constitution there was an inequality vis-à-vis the provinces where some provinces had vetoes and others did not. Alberta is now a first class province under the Meech Lake Accord and it was not before.

SENATE REFORM

Miss Deborah Grey (Beaver River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In my maiden speech a couple of months ago I said something about executive federalism. Yes, in fact the Premier of Alberta did endorse the Meech Lake Accord. The people of Alberta did not.

We in Alberta are also interested in seeing a meaningful Senate reform proposal from this Government, and we have not seen such to this date. We are looking forward to seeing that.

The Prime Minister will be aware that a recent poll in the Montreal Gazette shows that even in Quebec, only 44 per cent of the people actually support the Meech Lake Accord. Since these are hardly the kinds of numbers necessary to provoke a national unity crisis, why does the Prime Minister not urge the Government of Quebec to also show some flexibility instead of just twisting the arms of the smaller and politically weaker provinces?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says that while the Premier of Alberta endorsed the Meech Lake Accord, the people of Alberta did not. On November 21 last, there was a general election and the Progressive Conservative Government which stood for a strong support of the Meech Lake Accord won 25 out of 26 seats in Alberta. That is a major endorsement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Now my hon. friend refers to a very fundamental question of Senate reform which all of us I think desire to bring about in Canadian federalism. Senate reform can only be achieved if Quebec is brought back into the Constitution. It cannot be done without that condition precedent.

The Premier of Alberta understood that, the Leader of the Opposition understood it, the Leader of the NDP understood it. I think my hon. friend understands full well that if Alberta desires Senate reform, which it does, and if Senate reform would be beneficial to Canadian federalism, which it indeed would, then first and foremost we must find terms on which Quebec can honourably rejoin the Canadian constitutional family. We have found them in Meech Lake, and I urge my hon. friend to strongly defend Meech Lake and endorse it across western Canada.

ENVIRONMENT

GRANTS TO BUILD SEWAGE TREATMENT FACILITIES

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. In municipalities across Canada children and their families are denied access to our public beaches because of pollution caused in many cases by sewage discharge.

In Newfoundland and Nova Scotia raw sewage is being dumped into the Atlantic Ocean. Here in Ottawa–Carleton, sewage is polluting our rivers. In Hamilton the sewage is polluting the harbour.

Given that the Minister is aware of a $200 million grant given to Nova Scotia to build a sewage treatment facility in Halifax, is the Minister and this Government prepared to make a similar commitment to other cities across Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the question of municipal infrastructure and the problems of maintaining it are well known and the solution is well known too. We all know that the price of water in Canada is the cause of the problem and that Canadians do not pay as much for water as they should. If Canadians paid the same for water as our American friends, we would have no problem maintaining sewage and water systems in Canada. The municipalities would have all the money they would need. So the municipalities and the provinces must fulfill their responsibilities in this area.

[English]

ROLE OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT IN MUNICIPAL INFRASTRUCTURE

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, historically the federal Government has played a role that goes back to 1938 as a partner working with the provinces and the municipalities to build and upgrade infrastructure across the country.

Will this Government move today to resume its traditional role and stop the rapid decay of our cities and towns?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government recognizes its responsibility for technology. We are quite prepared to support the municipalities and the provinces in the area of water purification, with research funds and considerable assistance from the federal Government. But responsibility for the environment must be shared. The provinces claim relative autonomy for the environment: they are right, within their jurisdiction. The federal Government must discharge its own responsibilities, but the provinces must also discharge theirs.

HEALTH

CANCER STATISTICS FOR SYDNEY, NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I want to bring to the Minister's attention a health crisis in Sydney, Nova Scotia.

Cancer statistics from the Minister's own Department now show that the alarming rate of cancer mortality in Sydney, Nova Scotia, first noticed among Dosco coke oven workers, has now spilled out and is confirmed among the entire city population at a rate of 76.12 per cent above the Canadian norm. What measures has the Minister taken to deal with this life and death situation?

Will he agree now to take the lead and launch an immediate study and plan of action to clean up the tar ponds and the whole mess that clearly threatens the lives of workers and residents alike?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member raising the question. I will gladly take it as notice and be in touch with provincial authorities as well.

Oral Questions

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

CONCENTRATION OF RADIOACTIVE URANIUM AT CIGAR LAKE

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, because the best way to deal with cancer is to prevent it, I would like to direct my supplementary to the other "A" student in the cabinet, the Minister of the Environment.

In light of the fact that the ore body at the proposed Cigar Lake uranium mine in my constituency is up to 800 times as concentrated and radioactive as the one at Elliot Lake, and since full-scale public hearings are being held in the Northwest Territories with respect to the Baker Lake mine which is not nearly as problematic as Cigar Lake, will the Minister undertake a public inquiry into the Cigar Lake Mine as requested yesterday in Saskatoon by Greenpeace and the steelworkers?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can comment with respect to the Member's direct request but we will look at it.

I say to him that whether one looks at Rabbit Lake or Cluff Lake, and now Cigar Lake, Canada, specifically the Province of Saskatchewan is sitting on a mine of great value for energy for the future. I point out to the Member as well that it was the former NDP Government of Saskatchewan that first started the development of those mines. When we develop those mines we will make sure not only that health and safety is protected but also that Canada's energy future is advanced.

AGRICULTURE

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION REQUIREMENTS—DISCRIMINATION AGAINST ONTARIO FARMERS ALLEGED

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Will he stop discriminating against Canadian farmers, and against Ontario farmers in particular? The Farm Credit Corporation is asking farmers in Ontario to sign covenants when they are negotiating settlements. These covenants are illegal in some provinces.

One middle-aged farmer in my constituency who lost his hands is being asked to sign a covenant for $140,000. He is being charged interest on interest on overdue accounts. He is being pushed to accept a deal that will let him keep his home and 50 acres of land plus a mortgage of $150,000 and a covenant of another $140,000. This is a direct contravention of the Charter of Rights.

Will the Minister stop this cold-hearted action, stop this discrimination and return the Farm Credit Corporation to its rightful place as a credible lender?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the Farm Credit Corporation and this Government has not discriminated against any farmers in Ontario or anywhere else and is not doing so.

Mr. Ferguson: Alberta farmers don't sign them.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member raises a very important matter. I will be glad to look into it personally. I hope he treats it seriously. I will treat it seriously and I ask him to bring the matter to my attention and I will be glad to look into it in detail.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PRESIDENT HERZOG'S VISIT—CONCERN OVER HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS BY ISRAEL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns the visit of President Herzog to Canada.

Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the House whether he has taken the opportunity, or intends to take the opportunity during President Herzog's visit, to express to the President a concern that many Canadians have over human rights violations in the occupied territories by Israel.

I think that many of us felt in the remarks this morning made by the Prime Minister prior to the speech that the Government treaded a little too softly on that issue. I hope the Minister will be taking the opportunity to make absolutely clear the offence taken by Canadians at some of the practices adopted by the Israeli Government in the occupied territories.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member indicated, the Prime Minister raised directly in his remarks in this House the question of the concern of Canadians about human rights situations in the Middle East. Indeed, I found it interesting and important that the President of Israel in his own remarks made reference to the anguish that question causes within Israel, elsewhere in the Middle East and in this country.

The Prime Minister and I took the opportunity at lunch today to speak directly to the President of Israel about questions relating to detentions and, of course, about questions relating to the application in Israel of the Geneva Convention.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs were more forceful in their private conversations and I trust that they will take whatever further opportunities present themselves to make that point over and over again.

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING ELECTIONS IN THE OCCUPIED TERRITORIES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): I would like to ask the Secretary of State a further question with respect to the proposal by the Israeli Government for elections in the occupied territories. It is not clear to me exactly what the Canadian government position is with respect to the proposal by the Israeli Government. Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs say what the Canadian position is on these elections, because obviously there are many important questions that remain to be answered before we could regard this election proposal as a suitable object of the peace process?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, two things. First, the Prime Minister addressed directly those questions of human rights as Members of this House who were present here today know.

Second, I answered a question from the Hon. Member for Calgary Southwest the other day in this House with respect to the question of the Shamir proposal. We believe it is a significant and important proposal on the part of Israel. There are obviously a great many details that remain to be worked out. We think that it does provide a basis for movement toward a peaceful settlement in that region, based upon Resolution 242. In that spirit we support it actively and we will try to continue our efforts to encourage the Palestinians to respond in a positive way to that initiative.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that there will be a question from the Hon. Member for Hillsborough and a very short supplemental, followed by a question from the Hon. Member for Don Valley North and that will close off Question Period. The Hon. Member for Hillsborough.

LABOUR

CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL—GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING CONTRACTING TO PRIVATE INDUSTRY

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In the latest report of the Government's own Construction Industry Development Council, the Council recommended the contracting out of Government contracts to private industry. In other words, privatization.

It appears that the Government has established a general policy of contracting out and that it is encouraging private industry to follow its lead.

Is the Minister aware of the Council's recommendation and, if so, is this in fact a Government policy?

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to restate again that the Minister of Labour, as well as this Government, is very proud of what the Centre has been doing over the past few years.

I am also proud to report to the critic of the Liberal Party that at a recent meeting in Calgary, the Council of Governors adopted the following resolution:

> The President and Chief Executive Officer, with a Task Force representing stakeholders, start the preparation of alternative plans for the future of the Centre which are in accordance with principles of individual free access previously agreed to by the Council of Governors.

We wholeheartedly agree with this resolution.

Point of Order—Mr. Riis

EFFECT OF PRIVATIZATION ON JOB SECURITY

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the same Minister. Privatization of the workplace is driving Canadians toward the poverty line. When an industry goes from the unionized public sector to the non-unionized private sector, workers see their incomes decrease by some 35 per cent to 75 per cent.

The question is, is the Government funding this Council and, if so, what is the financial commitment? Are Canadian tax dollars being spent on ads that may ultimately cost workers their jobs and their security?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I correctly understood the question I was asked. But if the question was whether the Government in the past financed this centre, and we were talking about the same centre, I would recall an answer that I already gave previously. In the first six years since it was created in 1969, under a Liberal Government, it was granted $3.3 million a year. Since it has come under a Conservative Government, it has received a subsidy averaging $8 million a year.

COPYRIGHT

EXEMPTION FROM LEGISLATION FOR EDUCATIONAL USES

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, educators across Canada are deeply concerned about the impact of Bill C-60, the copyright legislation, on their ability to teach mandatory courses and provide students with examples and experiences which are current and relevant.

Will the Minister of Communications be introducing exemptions to the Act which will guarantee educators access to Canadian materials comparable to that which they have to American materials?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Copyright Act is intended to compensate creators while giving users of protected works easy access at reasonable cost.

We have already passed the first stage of legislation and Parliament will soon be presented with a second stage dealing with various types of limited exemption, including those for educational institutions.

In this second stage, we will try in particular to update existing exemptions by taking account of the recommendations of an advisory board set up for that purpose. This board is made up of representatives of the creators and the teaching community.

POINT OF ORDER

CLOSURE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday was the first occurrence in the history of the House that a debate under closure collapsed before the allotted voting hour.

Closure, as the House knows, has been moved fewer than 30 times in the past 75 years. It is designed to shorten debates which would otherwise continue at such lengths as to impede the reasonable progress of the Government's legislative program. It was not designed as a way of extending hours. In fact, it originally cut an hour off the sitting day. The collapse of the debate on Bill C-20 yesterday is clear evidence of the misapplication of the heavy hand of the Government on this House. Before the Government moved closure—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Taking into account all of the circumstances, I think perhaps it is appropriate that Hon. Members listen to the House Leader of the New Democratic Party on this important point of order. The Hon. Member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I will be very, very quick. The collapse of the debate on Bill C-20 yesterday is obviously clear evidence of the misapplication of the heavy hand of the Government on this House. Before the Government moved closure, Bill C–20 had been debated at second reading for less than two hours. It is a very routine Bill.

As parliamentarians, we know that amendments to the Excise Act are proposed following virtually every budget. I do not think the House has shown itself to be very constructive in the passage of these Bills. Quite the contrary. I simply want to make the point that closure is an unpleasant method of running the Government. It is essentially undemocratic in that it seeks to limit dissent. When closure is used in a routine way, as it appears this Government has done on occasion, at least, and when it is used to stampede an opposition that is not even attempting to impede the Government's right to pass legislation, then this is an abuse of the House and an abuse of Standing Order 57.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I note with some humour my hon. friend's comments with respect to the question of closure. It is a legitimate tool which is in the Standing Orders. It is just as legitimate as forcing a vote on the introduction of one's own private Bill, which my friends in the New Democratic Party have done on several occasions in an effort to blow some time.

In an effort to make up for some time, we have used the device of closure. It is much more expedient than time allocation. I would only suggest this to my hon. friend, in a rhetorical way, that had he come to me and suggested that a mere extension of hours would have done the job, we would have done it.

Mr. Speaker: There are occasions in the life of the House of Commons when all Members on both sides should tread with great caution, and this is perhaps one of those afternoons. However, I have listened very carefully to what the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) has said on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I will consider his comments.

I do not think that a ruling is required. He has made clear his grievance and there has been a response from the Government House Leader, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis). However, I am going to examine carefully what the Hon. Member for Kamloops has said and reflect upon it.

TABLING OF THIRD REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON SCRUTINY OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Third Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Scrutiny of Regulations.

[English]

The report concerns the formal documents regulations made under Section 4 of the Seals Act. These regulations specify the classes of public documents which must be passed under the Royal Seals. It is the view of the Joint Committee that the current regulations are invalid in that they were not approved by Her Majesty the Queen as required by Section 4 of the Seals Act.

[Translation]

The predecessor of the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs disagreed with the Committee's views but nevertheless agreed to table a Bill to amend the Seals Act in order to remove the requirement which provides that the regulations must be approved by the Sovereign.

[English]

As noted in the Third Report, "It will be for Parliament to decide whether to amend the Act in this fashion". The only recommendation of the Joint Committee is that any proposed legislation retroactively validate the existing regulations for greater certainty. I invite Hon. Members who wish a more complete explanation of the issues involved to read the Third Report of the Joint Committee.

POINT OF ORDER

THE OFFICIAL REPORT—CLARIFICATION OF COMMENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, one of the recommendations made in the report reminds me that the Hon. Member for Saint-Laurent (Mrs. Maheu) rose yesterday to make a statement regarding the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). I would simply like to reply on behalf of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East to clarify any misunderstanding that may exist regarding her question of June 22, as reported at page 3557 of Hansard, which was directed to the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). When she said that the Liberal critic for multiculturalism would oppose the re-establishment of a separate Standing Committee on Multiculturalism, she was referring to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Mr. Mills), she was not referring to his co-critic, the Hon. Member for Saint-Laurent, who yesterday clarified that she supported a separate Standing Committee on Multiculturalism.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair thanks the Hon. Member.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions with the Parties and I think you would find unanimous consent for the Government to introduce two Bills which are shown on the notice paper. The purpose of introducing these today would be to enable them to be printed and to allow some time over the next few weeks for them to be considered. I am referring to the Bills presently on the Order Paper standing the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), a Bill entitled an Act to amend the Federal Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, and a Bill standing in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Mazankowski) entitled an Act to establish the Canadian Centre for Management Development and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we have noticed the Bills on the notice paper and while we have some concerns with some of them, we will certainly support their introduction to expedite the matter. I would simply like to inform the Government House Leader that we are still waiting for Bills on an ethics package, a federal environmental assessment process, a child care program, broadcasting copyright, bankruptcy law and water quality. There is a whole list of Bills for which we are waiting and I was hoping we could see those on the notice paper today. Perhaps the Minister could give us an indication of when we would see some of these Bills brought forward.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will remember that on November 21, we were elected for five years. During the course of our mandate, he will see those Bills.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm the arrangement to permit the introduction of the two Bills that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) is seeking leave to introduce today. I must say that I agree with my hon. friend from Kamloops with respect to the dilatory nature of the movement on some of these other matters, but that is not a matter that we can usefully debate in the House this afternoon.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-33, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-255, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (lotteries).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, this is an amendment to the Criminal Code which would have the effect, I hope, of reducing the amount of gambling in Canadian society. The way it would work is to prohibit advertising of lotteries.

Gambling is a human weakness. For some people, it is a very serious disease. The Bill makes the point that, while our laws should accommodate those who must gamble, to have legislation in place that allows Governments through advertising to encourage gambling is unacceptable.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BILL C-21—MEMBERSHIP ON COMMITTEE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or other Order of this House, the membership of the legislative committee on Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Employment and Immigration Department and Commission Act, be increased from eight to 14 members;

That the additional members to serve on the said committee be: Mrs. Anderson, Ms. Langan, Mr. F. LeBlanc, Ms. Catterall, Mr. Vien and Mr. Worthy.

That the said committee, accompanied by the necessary staff be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada; and

That the said committee report the Bill no later than Tuesday, October 10, 1989.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. government House Leader have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

MOTIONS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. As the House knows, there has been considerable progress made on the business before the House, thanks to the efforts of all Members of the House.

There is an understanding between the Parties that we will complete the items on the Projected Order of Business in the following order. First, the appropriation Bill re the drought payments; second, Bill C-16, the space agency Act to complete second reading; Bill C-19 to complete third reading of the Energy Act; Bill C-22 to complete third reading of the Environmental Protection Act amendments; and Bill C-15, plant breeders' rights Act second reading.

It may very well be that we will have to invoke closure on Bill C-15, the plant breeders" rights at second reading.

However, on that understanding, I move:

That, when the House completes, later today, proceedings on the motion for second reading of Bill C-15, an Act respecting plant breeders' rights, it shall stand adjourned until Monday, September 25, 1989, provided that

(I) If at any time a Bill or Bills be ready for the granting of Royal Assent, the Speaker may, after consultation with the Government, fix a time at which the House shall meet for that sole purpose, after which the House shall once again stand adjourned in accordance with this Order, and

(II) Further to the Order of the House made April 4, 1989 (respecting supply): the number of allotted days in the period following Labour Day be eleven, with one of them in September, five in October, three in November and two in December; the date in Section "C)" of the said Order be changed to Wednesday, October 11, the date in Section "D)a)" of the said Order be changed to October 11, the date in Section "D)b)" of the said Order be changed to October 18, and the date in Section "E)" of the said Order be changed to Thursday, October 19.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister of Justice have unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

SCRUTINY OF REGULATIONS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move a motion which I think will receive the unanimous consent of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Wood):

That the First Report of the Standing Joint Committee for the Scrutiny of Regulations, presented to the House on Wednesday, June 14, 1989, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have the unanimous consent of the House to move this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not necessarily against this motion. I must say that I am unaware of it. I do not know what it includes. I would like to suggest that we stand it down for a few moments in order to have some consultations.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps Hon. Members could have a discussion. I will certainly hear them both in a minute or two.

I wish to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member for Kamloops the fact that the motion the Hon. Member has just moved is on the Order Paper and does not need consent. However, there is a second motion on which he will need consent. Perhaps we could put that one aside for a few minutes.

Coming back to the original motion, I take it that the House will accept it. The second motion, which has not yet been called, needs consent. Perhaps the two Hon. Members could discuss it and indicate to the Chair when they are prepared to have it called.

Just to keep the record straight, there is agreement on the first motion.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED GOLD MINE IN SHOAL LAKE, ONTARIO

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, with regard to petitions, I would like to congratulate the students of John De Graff School in my riding for gathering together signatures on a petition against the proposed gold mine in Shoal Lake, Ontario, a mine which is to be constructed right in the midst of Winnipeg's drinking water supply.

In that respect I would like to present a petition which represents the concerns of the students and which calls upon Parliament to stop the application by Consolidated Professor Mines until a full federal environmental impact assessment shows the plant to be safe, and to introduce a safe drinking water Act that would give secure access of Canadians to drinking water a greater priority than industrial development.

Mr. Speaker: Before we continue with petitions, I would like to advise the House that there will be a reception for Members in Room 16 starting this evening at 9 p.m.

POSTAL SERVICE—STATION V

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36 I have the honour to present a petition from residents of Parkdale—High Park who wish to save Postal Station V as a full service post office.

The petitioners of Parkdale—High Park oppose the reduced services offered by Postal Station V that forces them to go to the other side of the riding to Postal Station M to receive their mail, registered letters and parcels. They have already had to accommodate this Government's obsession with privatization by having to use postal services at a local drug store which then went bankrupt, wherefore the services were returned to Postal Station V.

They have been assured that at least the reduced services would remain at Postal Station V but they now see a big "For Rent" sign on the post office. The petitioners urge the Post Office to return full service to Postal Station V as it is their right for accessibility to essential postal services.

PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present to the House a petition duly certified correct as to form and content pursuant to Standing Order 36.

This petition has been prepared and signed by hundreds of concerned Calgarians deeply grieved by the tragedy of events in the People's Republic of China.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to condemn the Chinese Government for the recent massacre, to boycott any international activities hosted by the Chinese Government, and to take economic sanctions against the Chinese Government.

CANADIAN MILITARY EXPORTS

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present to the House a petition on behalf of some 40 members of local churches, including Westdale United Church in my riding of Hamilton West.

The petitioners call upon the Government to provide full disclosure of all Canadian military exports, including the type and producers, the vendor, purchaser, transporter, as well as the immediate and final destinations of the exports, to be printed in register form and available to the Canadian public upon request.

PROPOSED NATIONAL SALES TAX—EXEMPTION FOR MUSIC LESSONS

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, I rise today pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present to the House three petitions concerning the proposed new national sales tax and its possible application to music studies.

I believe, as do the petitioners, that with a sales tax on music lessons Canadian children will suffer, talent will be underdeveloped and the future of Canadian music both nationally and internationally will be jeopardized.

I join with the petitioners to call upon Parliament to consider music studies as an educational process and therefore exempt music education from the proposed national sales tax.

LEBANESE IMMIGRANTS—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to encourage the Government to do all it can to facilitate the immigration of those who are still understress in Lebanon. The people are having difficulties daily. We listened this morning to some reports on what is happening there. I ask the Government to do what it can to facilitate immigration.

I would also ask the Government to have an emergency debate, or call upon the UN to have an emergency debate with regard to that issue and the issue in the Middle East.

CLOSURE OF CFB LONDON

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition which relates to the closing of the air force base in London. Several residents have signed this petition. They ask the Government to consider that situation and to please stop the closing there.

CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36 it is my privilege to present a petition signed by people from my constituency of Malpeque. They are objecting to changes in the unemployment insurance system.

The Government is withdrawing its contribution of $2.9 billion to the unemployment insurance fund, leaving the financing to workers and employers, which means an increase in premiums for the employers and employees.

The Government is making other changes to the unemployment insurance system. These changes, along with the closure of CFB Summerside, will mean the loss of millions of dollars to the economy of Prince Edward Island.

PROPOSED NATIONAL SALES TAX—DANCE AND MUSIC LESSONS

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present two positions today. The first one is from constituents in my riding of Prince Edward—Hastings.

They are concerned with the possible tax on fees for students of music and dance. They feel that such a tax would result in the deprivation of some students of instruction in these areas. They ask that students obtaining instruction in dance and music be exempt from the payment of such tax.

NATIONAL CHILD CARE PROGRAM

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, the other petition is from constituents of Prince Edward—Hastings as well. It concerns the cancellation of the Government's promises to proceed with a national child care program.

The petitioners have been shouldering the responsibility for a local program in their community. They have been funding child care centres through various money-making activities such as bake sales and raffles to make child care possible.

The petitioners are asking for the development of a federal policy with appropriate and on-going funding to support the Canadian child care system.

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present petitions on behalf of the constituents living in the London-Sarnia VIA Rail corridor. These constituents come from the Town of Strathroy, the Village of Watford, Wyoming and the Town of Petrolia and other communities within the constituency. As well, they are signed by various municipal officials.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to maintain and upgrade VIA's services across Canada and offer the Canadian people an alternative to highway congestion and airport delays.

CLOSURE OF CFB LONDON

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, in addition to those seven petitions regarding VIA Rail I have the honour to present two more petitions concerning the Canadian Forces Base in London. The petitioners call upon Parliament to rescind its recent decision to close CFB London and to reassure the people of London that CFB London will remain open.

• (1550)

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, before we adjourn I am going to try one last time. I rise under Standing Order 36 with a petition duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions. It is a petition to the Government, asking that it live up to its original pledge to support VIA Rail, to abandon plans for further cuts to VIA's budget, and to provide the necessary resources to allow VIA to operate as a modern, effective transportation company rather than as a museum.

It is my last chance before the Government makes its decision. Please do consider wisely.

CLOSURE OF CFB LONDON

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions containing several hundred names concerning the Canadian Forces Base London. The Canadian Forces Base London represents an annual direct boost to the London economy of more than $60 million and several millions more in direct funds.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind its recent decision to close Canadian Forces Base London, and reassure the people of London that the Canadian Forces base London will remain open.

UTILIZATION OF PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the Port of Churchill. This petition is signed by residents of Flin Flon, Brandon, Beauséjour, Stonewall and Winnipeg. They indicate that they believe the Port of Churchill obviously has great potential because it is Canada's only inland seaport to the Arctic. We also believe it is a situation where the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board must ensure that at least 3 per cent of Canada's grain shipments on an annual basis be shipped through the Port of Churchill, and that the Government aggressively pursue additional ways to utilize this important seaport to ship exports other than grain.

CLOSURE OF CFB SUMMERSIDE

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege today to present to the House the duly certified second and final instalment of petitions from 6,500 concerned citizens of Prince Edward Island. This petition was circulated by Mr. Frank Lewis of Radio Station CFCY, Charlottetown, and Mr. Ken Simms of the Guardian and Patriot newspapers in Charlottetown on behalf of those who wish to retain CFB Summerside as Prince Edward Island's only military base.

Because the socio-economic and emotional impact of this decision is of great concern to all islanders, they request that the Government of Canada reconsider its decision to close the Summerside base.

In addition, the fishermen of Prince Edward Island cannot afford to lose the fishery surveillance role that CFB Summerside now provides, nor can the people of P.E.I. afford to lose the search and rescue surveillance now provided.

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table two sets of petitions today. The first petition has been certified correct according to Standing Order 36, and has been signed by 433 residents of the City of Thunder Bay and surrounding area, along with other passengers on the VIA Rail Transcontinental. They point out that the Conservative Government, like its Liberal predecessor, has refused to provide VIA the necessary support to fully realize its potential to develop the kind of national passenger rail network that Canadians want and deserve. They call upon the Government to live up to its original pledge to support VIA Rail, to abandon plans for further cuts, and to provide the necessary resources to allow VIA to operate as a modern, effective transportation company rather than a museum.

The second petition is signed by 6,839 residents of 72 communities in the Province of Saskatchewan. They basically call for the same thing, that rail passenger service continue to exist as a national network on all main routes in this country and in a manner that provides the best and most desirable travel service for the public in the most efficient way.

CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to table a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 from residents of Kingston and the Islands and the neighbouring constituency of Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington. The petitioners request that the Government live up to its prior election commitments to increase benefits and reduce waiting periods under the Unemployment Insurance Act, and to reverse its decision reflected in Bill C-21, to reduce benefits and extend waiting periods, in accordance with the report originally proposed by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, in its first report in the Second Session of the Thirty-Third Parliament. I table this pétition on behalf of those petitioners.

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition certified correct pursuant to Standing Order 36. My constituents call upon the Government to live up to its original pledge to support VIA Rail, abandon plans for further cuts to VIA's budget, and provide the necessary resources to allow VIA to operate as a modern, effective transportation company.

Furthermore, my constituents would like the Government to keep the Vancouver Island VIA Rail service operating.

CLOSURE OF CFB LONDON

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and privilege to rise again in the House, as I have on numerous occasions in the past number of weeks, to present petitions on behalf of residents of London and area in support of CFB London.

Despite the fact that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight) has indicated to the mayor and everyone else that it is no use calling or coming to see him because he does not intend to change his mind, it is important to note that the people of London and area feel that CFB

London is important to their community. We hope the Government decides to change its mind.

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36 I am pleased to present a petition with some six pages of signatures of residents of Terrace, British Columbia in the northwest, the City of Revelstoke in my constituency of Kootenay West—Revelstoke.

The petitioners point out that the Conservative Party, prior to the election, promised that federal transportation spending priority should be reorganized to put a greater emphasis on rail passenger services. They further point out the alternating positions of the Liberal Party which, when it was in power, also took steps to cut VIA Rail's budget. The signatories call upon the Government to live up to its original pledge to support VIA Rail and to abandon plans for further cuts to the budget and provide the necessary resources to allow VIA to operate as a modern, effective transportation company.

As one who has personally used VIA Rail some 16 times as a paying customer with my family over the previous two years, I heartily endorse the feelings of the signatories to this petition.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition duly certified from residents of my constituency, from the community of La Ronge and surrounding area, calling on the Government to recognize that post-secondary education is something that is theirs by treaty right. They call on the Government to honour and respect the treaties and guarantee a free and unrestricted education for all treaty status Indian people.

PROPOSED NATIONAL SALES TAX—MUSIC LESSONS EXEMPTION

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from people of the communities of Prince Albert, Shellbrook, Stump Lake, Parkside and other communities in my constituency who, like other petitioners, believe the proposed sales tax on music lessons and other artistic lessons will jeopardize the development of Canadian talent. They call on the Government to consider music studies an educational process and therefore exempt music lessons from the proposed sales tax.

PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and honour to rise under the provisions of Standing Order 36 to present to the House a petition signed by members of the Trinity United Church in the community of Vernon, British Columbia. The citizens have been outraged at the recent massacre of innocent and defenceless students and bystanders in the City of Beijing, and horrified that the Chinese Government has deliberately fabricated falsehoods to distort the truth and deflect criticism. They call upon the Government to immediately recall the Ambassador, to break diplomatic relations with the Chinese Government, to discontinue all economic ties, and to offer assistance to Chinese people, in particular students presently in Canada, so that they may not be forced to return to face any danger in China.

CALL FOR WHEAT BOARD ACT TO INCLUDE OATS AND BARLEY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions on two separate items to present to the House today. They were duly certified yesterday and this may be my last opportunity to present them. The first is from people in the northeast of my constituency. They call upon the Government to place oats and barley under the Wheat Board Act in such a way that in the future farm organizations and Parliament must be consulted before changes are made in the marketing of these products.

CALL FOR VIA RAIL TO CONTINUE AS EFFECTIVE TRANSPORTATION COMPANY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the second petition I have calls on the Government to live up to its original pledge to support VIA Rail. The petitioners therefore call upon the Government to abandon its current plans for further cuts to VIA's budget and to provide the necessary resources to allow VIA to operate as a modern, effective transportation company.

OPPOSITION TO OFFSHORE OIL EXPLORATION OFF CANADIAN PACIFIC COAST

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, I have the responsibility and duty to present two petitions from two separate organizations, but both on the same subject. They have both been certified correct by the Clerk as to form. They both express opposition to offshore oil exploration and development in the Canadian Pacific.

The petitioners point out that the area is earthquake zone and that the waters in some of those areas are as rough as any in the world. The petitioners hope and pray that the Government will not permit any offshore exploration in those waters.

ASSURANCE SOUGHT AGAINST EXPLORATION FOR OIL AND NATURAL GAS OFF WEST COAST OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to raise a petition today on behalf of constituents from Kamloops, Denman Island, Cumberland, Black Creek, Courtney, White Rock, Vancouver and Surrey, British Columbia. The petitioners are basically asking Parliament to take steps to ensure that there is no exploration for oil and natural gas off the West Coast of British Columbia.

PROTEST CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, another group of petitioners from Kamloops, British Columbia, are concerned that the Government is making very cruel changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. A million people who would normally be receiving UI benefits will not receive benefits. The Government is saying that these funds will be used to retrain people. The petitioners say that this is an abuse of the fund and an inappropriate way to arrange for training and upgrading.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 67, 68, 72, 73 and 90.

BUDGET

Question No. 67—Mr. Manley:

For each year since 1984, how many copies, including those that were rejected due to printing process errors, of (a) the Budget in Brief (b) other standard budget documents were printed and what security measures were put in place to (i) secure the copies for distribution (ii) destroy the copies that were rejected due to printing process errors?

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): I am informed by the Departments of Finance and Supply and Services as follows:

a) Budget in Brief: 1984—400,500; 1985—707,000; 1986—355,750; 1987—200,000; 1988—291,000; 1989—460,000

b) Other standard budget documents: 1984—64,500; 1984 (Economic Statement)—50,600; 1985—64,500; 1986—80,750; 1987—95,000; 1988—91,000; 1989—110,000

i) Because of Budget secrecy requirements, a wide variety of security measures exist. These include ensuring that personnel who are required to work on the preparation, production and distribution of the Budget have undergone an appropriate security screening; and that the locations where Budget materials are handled, including the printing, distribution and waste storage areas, are in a secure environment.

ii) In accordance with government security policy, all classified Budget "surplus material", including copies that are rejected due to printing process errors, is baled under guard and then held in a secure area until after the Budget is tabled (released). At that time, the now unclassified "surplus material" is turned over to a private sector waste paper disposal firm under contract with the government.

POSTAL SUBSIDY PROGRAM AND MAIL INFRASTRUCTURE PAYMENT

Question No. 68—Mrs. Finestone:

1. For the fiscal years 1986–87, 1987–88, and 1988–89, was any money paid under the Department of Communications Postal Subsidy Program to the Canada Post Corporation in the following categories (a) daily newspapers (b) rural weekly newspapers (c) paid circulation periodicals (d) controlled addressed periodicals (e) foreign periodicals (i) mailed in Canada (ii) mailed and printed in Canada and, if so, what amount?

2. For the fiscal years 1986–87, 1987–88, and 1988–89, was any money paid under the Publications Mail Infrastructure Payment to the Canada Post Corporation in the following categories (a) daily newspapers (b) rural weekly newspapers (c) paid circulation periodicals (d) controlled addressed periodicals (e) foreign periodicals (i) mailed in Canada (ii) mailed and printed in Canada and, if so, what amount?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Concessionary postal rates for books, magazines and newspapers represented an expenditure of $222.1 million in 1986–87 and $219.5 million in each of 1987–88 and 1988–89. For example, in 1986–87 this expenditure is divided into two elements: i) an infrastructure payment of $167.0 million paid to Canada Post through the Minister responsible for the Corporation; and ii) a cultural subsidy of $55.1 million paid to Canada Post by the Minister of Communications. In 1988, the postal subsidy was given the new name of the Publications Distribution Assistance Program.

The table attached describes the allocation of the $222.1 million in 1986–87 over both second class (i.e., the rate codes designed for newspapers and periodicals) as well as the Publishers' Book rate and the Library Book rate. The allocation of the infrastructure payment and the cultural subsidy is prorated across the components of the Program. It should be noted that Code 5, foreign periodicals mailed in Canada, is not a subsidized rate, and that both Codes 5 and 6 have been closed to new entrants since 1984.

FILES ON AMBASSADOR EGERTON HERBERT NORMAN

Question No. 72—Mr. Kilgour:

Does the government have in its possession files on the nature of the relationship between Herbert Norman and any of the state security organizations of the Soviet Union or any other Warsaw Pact member and, if so, is the government prepared to table them and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): The Government wishes neither to confirm nor deny the facts or allegations mentioned in this Question based on the established tradition adhered to by all Governments, not to comment directly on the details of specific security matters and consistent with provisions of section 13.1, 15.1, 16.1(c) and 19 of the Access to Information Act.

CANADA FILM YEAR INC.

Question No. 73—Mr. Mills:

1. For each year since 1987, what was the operating budget of Canada Film Year Inc. and from what source did it receive its funds?

2. For 1989–90, what programs did the organization intend to fund and what programs is it currently funding?

3. Who are the members of the Board of the organization?

4. For each year since 1987, did the government provide funding to the organization and, if so, in what amount and for what purpose?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): 1. Canada Film Year was established to bring Canadians into contact with Canadian films and stars, and to heighten the image Canadians have of Canadian films. From the outset, it was agreed that such a project must be mounted and maintained by the industry itself, and not be government-led. The role of government was to be limited to a supporting one. Industry representatives assumed the development of, and took the active lead in, the Film Year.

Originally it had been intended that the Film Year be jointly financed through a combination of private and public sector funding. However, the private sector's contribution has been less than anticipated. Futhermore, the industry was unsuccessful in securing corporate sponsorship. Telefilm Canada therefore remained the only source of funding for the CFY. There was no operating budget as such established before the decision was taken to discontinue the activities of the Canada Film Year; however, in September 1988, Telefilm Canada committed $2.5 million over three years to the CFY initiative. The Academy of Canadian Cinema and Television was selected as the body which would administer CFY funds, which were committed by Telefilm according to the following schedule:

1988/89	$350,000
1989/90	$1,400,000
1990/91	$750,000
Total	$2,500,000

2. On December 19, 1988 the Board allocated $244,200 for the celebrations of various organizations having anniversaries in 1989. These events were to constitute the launch of CFY. Consequently, la Cinémathèque québécoise received $64,200 for four projects (La Nouvelle Vague, touring of the Unknown McLaren and translation and updating of "The Shape of Rage"); the Academy of Canadian Cinema and Television received $100,000 for "Spotlights" television and radio spots; the National Film Board received $50,000 to assist in touring the seminar entitled "Tribute to the Documentary" and the Banff Television Festival received $30,000 for a tribute to the best of the Banff Festival and the best of the NFB to be shown in local Banff theatres.

These funds were to be disbursed on a set schedule. The initial contribution of 20 per cent of these commitments was provided through the funding allocated to the Academy by Telefilm Canada. Telefilm Canada has agreed to honour the commitments made to the organizations celebrating their anniversaries in 1989.

3. The Board of Directors of Canada Film Year consists of the following industry representatives:

Louise Baillargeon (Association des producteurs de films et de vidéo du Québec)
Joseph Beaubien (J.F.B. Productions)
Aimée Danis (Les Productions du verseau)
Garth Drabinsky (Cinéplex Odeon)
Hannah Fisher (Film Consultant)
Roger Frappier (Max Films)
Harold Greenberg (Astral Bellevue Pathé)
Sam Jephcott (Canadian Film and Television Assoation)
Norman Jewison (Yorkton Productions)
Frank Kettner (Motion Picture Association of Canada)
Stéphane Leclerc (La Cinémathèque québécoise)
Serge Losique (Festival des films du monde)
Danny Weinsweig (National Association of Canada Distributors)
Jacques Matte (Festival du cinéma international)
Peter Mortimer (Association of Canadian Film and Television Producers)
David Patterson (Cinéplex Odeon)
Ken Pittman (Red Ochre Productions)

Stephen Roth (Cinexus)
Walter Senior (Famous Players)
Allan Stein (Stein/MacLean Productions)
Helga Stephenson (Festival of Festivals)

There was one vacancy on the Board as a result of the resignation of Peter Simpson. René Malo also resigned, but was replaced by Danny Weinsweig.

4. In light of Telefilm's mandate with regard to the funding of the Film Year, the Corporation was responsible for the expenses associated with the developmental phase of the CFY. Telefilm therefore paid $87,230 on behalf of the Film Year initiative for expenses incurred prior to the formation of the organizing committee.

Subsequent to the selection of the Academy of Cinema and Television as the agency responsible for the administration of the Year, Telefilm Canada provided the Academy the following sums:

1988	$123,053
1989	$824,356
Total	$947,409

Of this amount, $600,000 has been returned to Telefilm, $176,448 was disbursed on the above-mentioned project launches, administration, travel, equipment costs, office expenses, etc. The Academy will shortly be returning the bulk of the outstanding funds to Telefilm, aside from a small portion which will be held back for winding-down costs. The physical assets (office equipment) of the Film Year will be purchased by the Academy.

ROUTINE OF CARS FROM CHAPAIS AND FARIBAULT BY CNR

Question No. 90—Mr. St-Julien:

From November 25, 1988 to December 15, 1988, did the Canadian National Railway Company, as a result of landslides on the St-Maurice subdivision, route ore-carrying cars or freight cars from the Chapais and Faribault subdivisions via Ontario Northland to the towns of Rouyn-Noranda, Val d'Or, Senneterre, Barraute, Lebel-sur-Quévillon and Matagami and, if so, what was the (a) distance covered by these trains to reach Abitibi-Témiscamingue (b) number of trains sent to Abitibi-Témiscamingue during the interruption of service on the St-Maurice subdivision (c) number of cars in these trains carrying hazardous materials (d) number of days required to effect such transportation?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): The Canadian National Railway Company advises as follows:

During the landslides, when traffic was interrupted on the St-Maurice subdivision for 8 days, no traffic originating from the Chapais and Faribault subdivision was diverted via Ontario Northland (ONR).

VIDEO TAPE OF PRIME MINISTER'S BIRTHDAY

*Question No. 28—Mr. Keyes:

Was a video tape made in honour of the Prime Minister's fiftieth birthday and, if so (a) was the cost $6,000 or more (including directing and editing) (b) was the cost borne by (i) the Prime Minister's Office (ii) the Privy Council Office (iii) the public purse, through any other department or agency (iv) private persons or organizations and, if so, will the Prime Minister make public their name or names?

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Yes, a video tape was made in honour of the Prime Minister's fiftieth birthday.

a) No

b) i) No ii) No iii) No iv) The cost was borne by the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada.

INVESTIGATION OF AMBASSADOR EGERTON HERBERT NORMAN

*Question No. 69—Mr. Kilgour:

Is the government aware of reasons which led to the re-opening in 1964 of the investigation of Ambassador Egerton Herbert Norman, after the House had been assured in the spring of 1957 that his loyalty to Canada was not open to question and, if so, is the government prepared to table the pertinent documents and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): The Government wishes neither to confirm nor deny the facts or allegations mentioned in this Question based on the established tradition adhered to by all Governments, not to comment directly on the details of specific security matters and consistent with provisions of section 13.1, 15.1, 16.1(c) and 19 of the Access to Information Act.

INVESTIGATION OF AMBASSADOR EGERTON HERBERT NORMAN

*Question No. 70—Mr. Kilgour:

1. During World War II did the government sanction any contacts made by Ambassador Egerton Herbert Norman in Tokyo with the Soviet spy, Victor Sorge?

2. Did Norman report to the government (a) these contacts with Sorge (b) contacts with the Soviet spy Kim Philby in Egypt in 1957 and, if so, is the government prepared to table the pertinent documents and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)):Part 1 and 2:

The Government wishes neither to confirm nor deny the facts or allegations mentioned in this Question based on the established tradition adhered to by all Governments, not to comment directly on the details of specific security matters and consistent with provisions of section 13.1, 15.1, 16.1(c) and 19 of the Access to Information Act.

TRANSCRIPTS OF ELIZABETH BENTLEY'S TESTIMONY

*Question No. 71—Mr. Kilgour:

Does the government have in its possession copies of the transcripts of Elizabeth Bentley's testimony of August 14, 1951 before the United States Congress together with covering material from the United States government, internal government responses to transmittals and government responses to the United States government and, if so, is the government prepared to table them and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): No.

INTERNATIONAL BIDDING ON GOVERNMENT SUPPLY CONTRACTS

*Question No. 82—Mr. Jordan:

1. Is there a figure which triggers international bidding on government supply contracts and, if so (a) what is it (b) how is it determined?

2. Under the Free Trade Agreement, at whose intervention and at what interval is the figure re-negotiated?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): International Bidding on Government Supply Contracts

1. Contracts for purchases of goods by Canadian Government departments and agencies which are covered by the GATT Agreement on Government Procurement (usually referred to as the "Code") are open to competition among signatories of the Code where the value of the contract is $213,000 or more. The threshold for coverage is the result of agreement among the Code signatories and may only be adjusted by renegotiation pursuant to Article IX.6.

2. Contracts for purchases of goods by the same departments and agencies covered by the GATT Code are also covered by the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement (FTA). The FTA threshold is $31,000. Contracts for eligible goods worth more than this amount and less than $213,000 are covered by the FTA. There is no provision in the FTA specifically requiring renegotiation of the threshold. Further bilateral negotiations on the FTA procurement provisions in general are, however, called for in Article 1307, but these will not take place until the completion of the current GATT round of multilateral trade negotiations.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers, P-6, P-7 and P-8 in the name of the Hon. Member for Edmonton Southeast (Mr. Kilgour), and

Nos. P–10 and P–11 in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby—Kingsway (Mr. Robinson).

Motion No. P–6

That an humble Address be presented to Her Excellency praying that she will cause to be laid before this House copies of Herbert Norman's correspondence relating to contacts or meetings with the Soviet spy Richard Sorge in Japan in 1940 and 1941 and of Herbert Norman's correspondence relating to contacts or meetings with the Soviet spy Kim Philby in Egypt in 1957.

Motion No. P–7

That an humble Address be presented to Her Excellency praying that she will cause to be laid before this House copies of the transcripts of Elizabeth Bentley's testimony of August 14, 1951 before the United States Congress together with covering material from the United States government, internal government responses to transmittals and government responses to the United States government.

Motion No. P–8

That an humble Address be presented to Her Excellency praying that she will cause to be laid before this House copies of the government's files on the nature of the relationship between Herbert Norman and any of the state security organizations of the Soviet Union or any other Warsaw Pact member.

Motion No. P–10

That an Humble Address be presented to Her Excellency praying that she will cause to be laid before this House copies of all proposals considered at the Vienna Follow–Up Meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe from August 1, 1987 to January 19, 1989.

Motion No. P–11

That an Humble Address be presented to Her Excellency praying that she will cause to be laid before this House copies of all documents and proposals considered at the London Information Forum, the first full meeting held as a follow–up to the Vienna Meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, from April 18 to May 12, 1989 in London, England.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, with regard to Motions P–6, P–7 and P–8, the motions proposed by the Hon. Member are unacceptable for the following reasons: First, the three motions made by the Hon. Member relate primarily to the security of Canada which is the responsibility of the Solicitor General whose reply on the Herbert Norman case is provided in response to Question Nos *69, *70, *71 and *72 answered this day.

Second, the Government's position on the Norman case was provided in response to a question during proceedings on adjournment motion on May 28, 1987.

Third, as indicated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on the matter on April 10, 1987, Herbert Norman was employed by the Department of External Affairs and all information that is permitted under the privacy and freedom of information legislation has been made available. Fourth, External Affairs departmental officials have in the past month re–examined the material reviewed under Access to Information requests received to date. There is no evidence to indicate that Herbert Norman was an intelligence agent of the Soviet Union or any other foreign power.

Fifth, in addition, departmental officials have been instructed to re–affirm that all of the department's documents on Herbert Norman have in fact been collected and reviewed, in other words, to re–affirm that relevant material is not lying unfound on some file in the Archives.

Sixth and finally, this re–examination of the Department's files will be for the entire period of Norman's service with the Department. It is a major undertaking in terms of resources and will take some time. It is hoped that this effort will ensure that history is provided with all possible documents related to Norman's services with the Department.

I would therefore ask the Member to withdraw his motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have a little difficulty with P–6, P–7 and P–8 because the Hon. Member is not in the Chamber. If one of his colleagues would like to transfer them for debate we could do that.

Mr. Cooper: Can I do that, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes.

Mr. Cooper: Then I ask that they be transferred for debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): P–6, P–7 and P–8 transferred for debate.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby Kingsway also was not in the Chamber.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to report the answers to the House and then maybe one of the Members of the New Democratic Party may wish to respond.

This answer applies to the remaining questions, P–10 and P–11. The motion proposed by the Hon. Member is unacceptable for the following reasons: One, the CSCE is an inter–governmental process which always operates under the procedural rules of consensus. Two, lacking a formal consensus on the part of all 35 CSCE countries to do so, the Canadian Government is not in a position to release the formal proposals submitted at meetings such as the London Information Forum. I would therefore ask the Member to withdraw his motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We have the same problem here. Would one of his colleagues like to transfer them for debate? The Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis), transferred for debate?

Mr. Riis: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): P–10 and P–11 transferred for debate.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that other Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the remaining Notices of Motions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1990, laid upon the Table Thursday, June 15, 1989, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. de Cotret thereupon moved that Bill C–35, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1990 be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time and printed.

Mr. de Cotret thereupon moved that Bill C–35, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1990, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

• (1610)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, I have a few brief words on second reading. I would like to respond to some of the questions that have been given to us by Members of the New Democratic Party.

First, people will be aware that some very serious problems have been suffered by the grain business in the last three years. Problems in the first two years were as a result of some pretty drastic falls in grain prices internationally and the Government was in a position to respond with payments based on price. In the 1988 growing season, we suffered some pretty severe weather problems. If you look at the records, the weather during 1988 for parts of the Prairies was as bad or worse than some of the worst years during the 1930s. As a result, there was a very poor crop. If you look at where there were some crops in the Prairies such as the northern part of the Prairies and parts of Ontario and Quebec, they had, in some cases, average crops. So when you see the fall in production, you can realize that there were people that had very little if any crop.

The Government responded by putting in place a drought program based on two criteria: that the money be targeted and directed at the areas that had suffered the most. As I said, there were areas in the Prairies that actually had an average or even a little above average crop.

Second, that it be crop specific, and we did that. The result is what we see here today. I should also point out that this is the third part of the Government's response to the drought situation of 1988. We responded with a water program to assist the livestock producers in the spring of 1988. Second, we responded almost a year ago with a program to assist and encourage producers to produce feed for livestock. Third, we responded with the this drought program that we are here putting the appropriations through for today.

All along we maintained consultations with the producers themselves. We also maintained good consultations with the provinces. We believe very strongly that this type of program, as it has been in the past, needs to be a cost-sharing program. We have worked with the provinces in both developing the program through their crop insurance corporations and we are presently working with them to work out a satisfactory arrangement as far as the cost-sharing is concerned.

We need to mention the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). He has been very good to Canadian agriculture in some very difficult times. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) is here, and the Treasury Board has been very good in terms of arranging for cashflow. We are not able to respond to these types of situations as a Government without the co-operation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the President of the Treasury Board. We want to say publicly that we appreciate the kind of support that we have had.

I have some questions that have been given to me by some of the Members opposite. I believe it is appropriate at this time if I refer to them. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert—Churchill River (Mr. Funk) I notice is in the House. He is concerned that the rules require that an appeal may only be launched by a rural municipality or township on behalf of all landholders within the township. He wants to know why we cannot do this on an individual basis.

There are two reasons for that. First, the recommendation that we receive from producers or producer organizations such as the Western Wheat Growers, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the Ontario Corn-Growers Association, plus the provincial Governments all recommended that we do not run the program on an individual basis, that we run it on an average area basis. The reason for this is quite simple. There is no question that weather was the major problem, but within any region you are going to get variations in the yield based on the amount of fertilizer and the amount of chemical an individual farmer would use. If we went with individual coverage or individual targeting, then you are not giving anyone any credit for the type of management practices that they use themselves. Whereas if you go with an average for an area, you at least take some of those considerations partly into consequence.

Second, while it would be possible to do it on an individual basis, the Member is absolutely correct, administratively it would make it much more cumbersome and it would see the program delayed. Therefore for those two reasons, it was the recommendation of the individual farm groups and the farmers themselves that we use an average area for the reasons outlined, and second, if you look at the administration of it, then you can see that with the number of producers involved that it would lead to some pretty lengthy appeal processes.

I should say something about the appeal process. We are calling them review committees. We have them set up in each of the four provinces. Quebec is being handled a little differently. Of the five provinces, Quebec's money is being channelled through their Crop Insurance Corporation. But there are review committees set up now in the three western provinces and in Ontario to look at the data to see how it looks and how the individual review committees relate the data that we have collected from the Crop Insurance Corporation. Therefore that essentially is the reason. We did consider it and found, for practical reasons, that it would be difficult.

Second, looking at the principles behind it, decided that it would be better to go on an area basis. I should say the area now is a township, not a municipality. So it is a relatively small area. We feel very strongly that once the overall data is in that most of the producers' concerns over the initial maps will be addressed in the final data.

The second question I have is from the Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Althouse) who is concerned, to read at least part of the question, that, "Saskatchewan is the largest recipient of drought aid with more than one-half of the moneys going to the province. Saskatchewan has crop insurance data showing average long-term yield for each quarter section. Why did the Government not take advantage of this existing data to speed the delivery of the drought program?" He goes on to say, "The New Democrats propose such a solution whereby crop insurance holders would have received their extra payment immediately leaving only uninsured producers to apply for assistance. Why that?"

I believe I answered the first part of that question in reply to the Hon. Member for Prince Albert—Churchill River. While it would have been possible, that was not the recommendation of the farmers and the provincial Governments for practical reasons.

As far as the second part of the question, it is a judgment call. It probably would have been easier to make payments to just the people who had crop insurance, but effectively you would be penalizing people who did not have crop insurance. You will find that the person who had crop insurance would get the drought payment; whereas the person who did not have crop insurance would not be eligible for either of them until later on.

Therefore we decided on that basis that we would try to treat everybody the same and make all the payments at the same time.

Mr. Althouse: And let everybody wait.

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member says that you make everybody wait. That may in fact be true, but if you are going to start splitting up the payments, some people get them sooner and some people get them later on. You will find that the overall process is delayed. When you see what is happening—I think I am relatively accurate in these numbers—only about 30 per cent of producers in Ontario are covered by crop insurance. Whereas if you go to Saskatchewan it is 70 per cent.

Therefore you are going to find some very big discrepancies across the country on the number of producers that would have received payment. So we decided that this program, while it is based on crop insurance numbers and data that we received from crop insurance, that we would use that data to develop the program so that everybody got treated the same in terms of when the payment was made and in terms of the amount of money that was paid.

The third question I have is from the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre (Mr. Laporte). "The announcement on November 10 was based on a $45 an acre payment being received in the case of wheat. Will that still be a realistic expectation for grain producers? How many farmers will be receiving the maximum amount?" How many farmers will be receiving the maximum amount? At the time we announced that the program that for producers—and this was a prairie number the Ontario number may be different than that—for those on the Prairies in a high yield area such as south of Winnipeg, the Red River Valley or in the Regina Plains or Rosetown, Kindersley that consistently have yeilds and high crop insurance coverage with a total loss of crop will have a payment in the area of $40 to $45 a tonne. That was an estimate, and that estimate still stands.

• (1620)

In response to how many farmers would be receiving the maximum amount, we will not know that until we have everybody's applications and are able to add up to see how many people have that maximum amount, whatever it is. But the estimate still stand, but it stands for people who have been in the highest yielding areas which have received little or no moisture have experienced high temperatures and therefore basically suffered a total loss of crop.

The fourth question I have is again from the Hon. Member from Prince Albert—Churchill River (Mr. Funk). The Special Canadian Grains Program's computer system produced an overpayment situation for many producers. Will this overpayment be deducted from the drought cheques and what about overpayments from the Western Grain Stabilization Program?

The answer to the first question is yes, we will be deducting any overpayments made under the Special Canadian Grains Program. From this program we will not be deducting from Grain Stabilization. I forget the number precisely but when you look at the amount of money that has been repaid under the Special Canadian Grains, I think we are down now to about two-tenths of 1 per cent of the number of producers who are still in an overpayment position. It is a very small number, but that amount on the Special Grains will be deducted.

In terms of Western Grain Stabilization, we do not have the ability to cross-reference. It would be a very difficult job to do in terms of deducting an overpayment. The decision was made not to do it.

While there was an overpayment made as a result of the 1987-88 Western Grain Stabilization Act payment, it amounts I think to less than a quarter of 1 per cent of all of the money the program has paid out in the last four years. Of the amount of money that was overpaid, over half has been sent back by farmers and 52 per cent of the money has been received and 58 per cent of the farmers have returned their money. So it is over half in both cases. We are deducting the overpayment under Special Canadian Grains. We are not deducting the overpayment under Western Grain Stabilization.

The fifth question from the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre (Mr. Laporte) is what federal-provincial arrangements have been made to fund future drought disaster programs? For example, we know that Quebec will be applying its drought money to crop insurance to lower producers' premiums. What arrangements are being made with each of the other provinces? The Member is correct, Quebec is using its share of the drought assistance to reduce the premiums in its crop insurance over the next three years. That is the choice the Quebec Government made. It was supported by UPA and that is how the matter is being handled in Quebec.

Second, we are working with the provinces as far as improving crop insurance, to come up with a better crop insurance program. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) has indicated that he is prepared to open the Act to amend crop insurance so that we have more options. Producers ask us if we would like to go from, for instance, 80 per cent to 90 per cent coverage. We respond that there is going to be a considerable increase in premium. The producers say "fine, give us the option". We cannot do that unless we open the Act. We are going through consultations with the provinces now and for almost a year we have had discussions on the over-all safety net system in this country as far as grain is concerned. We have had quite good discussions with the industry and the provinces and that process is under way. While we do not have anything specific, these kinds of things take time. We are in the process as far as making crop insurance more responsive. Hopefully if we get into a situation like this again we will be in a better position to use crop insurance as a vehicle with more producers involved.

It is pretty tough in a province like Ontario to use crop insurance as a drought delivery program when—I think I am right—certainly less than half of the producers in the province take out crop insurance. If we can get a better crop insurance program with more producers enrolled we will be in a better position to use crop insurance in the future. I think that is the aim of of provincial Governments, producers and the federal Government to have these programs more predictable.

Farmers tell us, I think it is a good observation, that given the same amount of money, if we know about it ahead of time, can plan a budget that same amount of money will be more useful in our budgeting process than the same amount of money on an ad hoc basis without knowing far enough ahead exactly what it is. That is the direction in which we want to go and I believe everybody agrees with that.

The next question I have is from the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Althouse). Will the Minister assure farmers that there will be no requirement for part of the drought payment to be used to finance insurance for future years as was the case with livestock. I am not so sure that the premise of the question is correct, Mr. Speaker. There was a requirement that if you are to be eligible for the second half of the livestock feed part of the drought assistance you have to join crop insurance. That was just for one year. I understand what the Member is saying. There was a requirement under the livestock assistance side, the feed security side, of the drought program for producers to enrol. But there is no such requirement on the grains side of this drought payment. There is nothing there.

As far as asking people to sign up for one year, it does not obligate producers to do anything more than join for the present year which is the 1989 growing season or the 1989–90 crop year.

The last question I have is from the Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Humboldt (Mr. Hovdebo). Provincial agriculture Ministers say that they were not consulted prior to the announcement of the drought program. They have since stated clearly that they believe this was a federal program. Why did the Government place this expenditure before the House as two separate estimates when one would have sufficed? Actually the Member has two questions.

First, this has been an ongoing program with the provinces. We wrote to the provinces in the early part of October indicating that we expected the drought program we were developing to be cost-shared. We expected to have co-operation from the provinces in developing it. We have had good co-operation and we are still working with the provinces in terms of cost-sharing. I believe we will be able to reach an agreement that is fair for all of us.

We said again on November 10 when we announced the program—just with regard to that—that "consultations are under way with the provinces regarding program design and cost-sharing". We have said right from the beginning that this is the third stage of the over-all response by the Government to this situation.

I mention the water program, the feed assistance program and drought assistance program as far as grain is concerned. We have said from the beginning and say again that this is a cost-shared program. We believe we will reach an agreement with the provinces to share those costs.

Why did the Government place this expenditure before the House as two separate estimates when one would have sufficed? It is a choice by people at Treasury Board that this was the proper way to proceed. The original estimate of money was there in order that we could cash flow the amount of money we estimated under the initial payment. It comes to a little more than $850 million if you do the arithmetic. There is some money in there for two-price wheat and a couple of other programs. This is the way the Government cash manages. It in no way changes anything from the announcement we made back on November 10 or anything we have said heretofore as far as this program is concerned. This Bill does not in any way indicate that the federal Government does not expect the provinces to contribute. It simply means that the federal Government is putting the money in place so that the program can pay the full amount of money. We expect cheques to begin going in the mail at the end of July so the full amount of money can flow depending on whatever financial arrangements we can make with the provinces on how they will participate.

That responds to the questions, Mr. Speaker. I will just leave a little bit more information in terms of estimates. We estimate that somewhere between $20 million and $30 million will be going to the Province of Quebec; $171 million to the Province of Manitoba; $417 million to the Province of Saskatchewan; about $150 million to the Province of Ontario and about $80 million to Alberta. That total will come, I think, fairly close to $850 million.

The initial payment which we made, we estimated that it would have been $260 million to $280 million, or even up to $300 million. We got out $218 million, for a couple of reasons. The people who applied had smaller acreages than we originally anticipated. For some reason, we still estimate that there are about 4,000 producers out there who would have been eligible had they sent in their application forms. There were less people who applied than we would have thought, based on our maps and based on the amount of applications which were sent out as a result of the phone calls and the requests for applications. There was more money available to be sent out, if producers had sent in their applications forms.

The process is well under way. We have had good co-operation with the municipalities and the district agricultural offices, the AGREP offices. We will be using them in terms of how the review process is going to work. I believe very strongly that when this program is all over, it is going to be seen to have been a very good program. We will have been able to accomplish the two objectives which we have stated, and that is to target the amount of assistance directly at producers who suffered the biggest loss.

Second, we will be doing it on the basis of being crop-specific so that we do not pay a person the same for a bushel or for an acre of oats as we do for an acre of corn in Ontario, or for an acre of canola, as we do for an acre of some of the horticultural crops in Ontario.

I am pleased to be here this afternoon putting this appropriations Bill through so that the money is there in order that we can meet the timeframe and the targets which we set out in this program so that producers will be in a position to receive their share of this program when the cheques start to go in the mail at the end of July.

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am relieved to be on my feet today speaking on this Bill and speaking in support of it. The rural community across Canada was very, very disappointed, needless to say, when the Estimates were tabled in the House of Commons a couple of months ago. We were relieved that this money will be finally coming out to them. Even though it willbe the end of July, we are sure it will be much appreciated.

I had the opportunity to be in Saskatoon yesterday and I was looking at the crops and was very much relieved that they appear in very good shape. They have had adequate rainfall this year. I was talking to many people from across the three Prairie provinces and they are very optimistic as far as their crop prospects are concerned.

In terms of Ontario, we too have excellent crop prospects this year, unlike last year when we suffered very severe drought. We will have an excellent crop of wheat, hay, corn, soya beans.

I want to draw this point to the Minister's attention, that in Kent and Essex Counties, which are not in my constituency, they have had so much rain that they have not been able to get their crops planted this year.

I hope that the Minister will remember the precedent that the previous administration set back in 1984 when a similar situation prevailed in northeastern Saskatchewan. We actually had a drought across the southern part of the Prairie provinces. Yet, northeastern Saskatchewan had a severe weather problem and excess rain. They were not able to get their crops planted. Because of that fact alone, they could not plant their crops, and they did not qualify for crop insurance.

I hope that the Minister will keep an open mind on the situation in southwestern Ontario for these people who have not been able to plant their crops and consequently do not qualify for crop insurance. If they need help later in the summer, will the Government consider this and give them whatever help they can.

I want to also point out that I appreciated my colleagues here in the House of Commons on this side of the House keeping us abreast of what is happening in terms of the areas that are missed. We all know that rain does not start or stop at a township line or a county line, but it goes across one boundary into the next.

I want to thank my colleagues here for keeping us abreast of what is happening in the various areas, as well as the producers themselves. In my particular constituency of Lambton—Middlesex, we had a tremendous response when I asked them if they would more closely identify those areas that are left out and did not show up on the original maps.

Part of the reason for this is perhaps that if a couple of concessions in a township had adequate rainfall, and in some cases they did, and had reasonably good crops, and the rest of the township was severely affected by the drought, the average of the total township would not bean adequate indication of some of the hardships being faced by those farmers.

There were several who assisted us in this, members of the Federation of Agriculture, both in Lambton and Middlesex counties and people in the Soya Bean Growers Marketing Board. They went up and down the concessions and took statements from all of the farmers to identify those areas that were most severely affected and that were not included in the maps.

I refer here in particular to Metcalfe township, Mosa township and part of Ekford. Also, in the northern end of the Middlesex County, we had part of Adelaide and West Williams.

Going across into Lambton, as strange as it may seem, we had a terrific rain there on July 16 last year. We had between nine inches and ten inches in a matter of couple of hours. That was even more devastating than the drought because it came in such a hurry and created flash floods that packed the ground to the extent that the crops never did recover, because it turned very, very dry for the rest of the summer. I have to pay a special tribute to Ron Huctwith and the people in the central and Warwicktownship for gathering together the information on this particular instance, who were able to make a submission to the Associate Deputy Minister who is in charge of this program.

Then of course, over in the boundary line between Sarnia—Lambton and Lambton—Middlesex and the boundary line of MooreTownship and Enniskillen Township, my colleague for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) and I both put forward information as to the area that was missed in that particular area adjacent to Sombra Township that qualified for both corn and soya beans. Yet, right across the town lines they were left out because of the process which was used.

I hope that these areas will be looked at, whether it is by the review committee or by the Minister when the time comes, to make sure that those farmers were not disqualified from this program.

I am also pleased that the assistance is going out to something like 130,000 producers across Canada. Assistance is going out at a time when they have a lot of crop input costs to pay for. It will be prior to the harvest of western Canada but during the wheat harvest in southwestern Ontario.

I hope that from the lessons learned in the administration of this one that we will be able to cope with such an emergency better in the future. I realize that there is a tremendous backlog of people who did not get application forms, and they are very worried, but I have to give credit to the Associate Deputy Minister for trying to put together a program which will meet the needs of those most severely affected.

I do not want to hold up the passage of this Bill. We on this side certainly support it. We want to get this money out in the hands of the farmers as quickly as possible. With those few comments, we will certainly be supporting the Bill on this side of the House.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this Bill to provide approximately $850 million for the drought assistance program. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that it was during the election that this program was announced. There was a whole summer when we sat looking at the prospect of drought. My colleagues and I spent the summer preparing a drought program which we introduced in early September or late August, whereby we proposed a method of payment and the kind of program which could be used to provide some relief for farmers right across the country who were suffering from the drought.

As farmers in Saskatchewan certainly recall, though the program was not as well discussed in the other provinces, the program would have cost something in the neighbourhood of $1.4 billion. In provinces where average crop insurance coverage is 70 per cent, as in the case of Saskatchewan, there would have been a top-up of an additional 30 per cent under this program, and that 30 per cent of average yield would have been provided whether the farmer had crop insurance or not. Those who had crop insurance, because they would have already been inspected and received cheques, would simply have the crop insurance agency in the province issue the additional 30 per cent and their cases would have been completed.

We recognized that that program would have paid crop insurance holders more rapidly than those who had not taken the precaution of having crop insurance, but we justified that by saying that it was in the best interests of all farmers in Canada to participate in crop insurance and we should not provide the kind of program that would discourage people from participating in crop insurance. Paying early, as soon as possible after the crop insurance inspection was completed, we submitted, would have encouraged participation in crop insurance programs.

At the moment, in Saskatchewan somewhere between 70 and 75 per cent participate in crop insurance. Saskatchewan was also the province that had suffered the most damage. Over half of the money in the program would have gone to Saskatchewan so half or little better than half of the administrative problems would have been solved by adopting that program. It would have paid out on a fairer and more equitable basis. In the event that most of a township save a few sections in one corner got rain, that producer in the corner that did not get rain would not be left without coverage, though the program the Government eventually proposed did leave him without coverage.

The election campaign proceeded. After it had been going on for about five or six weeks, I suspect the Government conducted a poll and found it was having some difficulty with its lack of a policy for drought relief. On November 10, about two weeks before the election date, the Government came out with an announcement of approximately $850 million for the program we are debating today. Government Members attempted to sell the program by saying that it was a Government program that had been well thought out, there had been consultations and that the Government had been working on this well thought out move for many years. Many farmers thought that they were finally seeing results from the promises made by the then Minister of Agriculture who said in December 1985 that a disaster program was being planned by his Department so that farmers would not have go through the uncertainty they went through in the previous year of drought.

As the program unfolded, it became very obvious that the Government had not taken precautions and that the bureaucracy was not ready to handle the program as announced. At that time, there was absolutely no data on township average yields or township actual yields on which the program was to be based. The bureaucracy had to commence from scratch to put together a program.

To make the situation worse, expectations were built up very high by government Members who, during the election campaign, said that this was a firm commitment on the part of the Government and that the program could be implemented very quickly. Post–election, the new Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) indicated that cheques would be in the mail. At one point he said that they would be in the mail before Christmas and then he changed that by saying that the applications would be in the mail before Christmas. In fact, we all know that most producers did not receive their applications until well into March. This reinforces my contention that the Government did not do any planning for this program and was not prepared for it. It pulled it out of thin air on the basis of a poll which showed that it would lose certain rural seats on the prairies unless it came up with some sort of a drought program.

That is now water under the bridge. The Government has indicated that it has not managed the program well and that it is incapable of managing such a program. It has not answered questions about the delays in the program to any satisfaction. The civil servants who have been given the task of carrying out the program are now defending themselves by saying that the cheques will be in the mail about the same time as the Special Grains Program payment cheques were in the mail last year, and that therefore the program can be deemed to be a success. We will see. That was not the promise made by the Minister of Agriculture and members of the Government during the election campaign and after the election. They were leaving the impression that payments would be made very quickly.

Government Members also left the clear impression that there was full co–operation with the provinces. That impression began to fall apart very quickly. As recently as March, the Premier of the Province of Saskatchewan who is also the Minister of Agriculture told the legislature in Regina that this was a federal program and the provinces had made no commitment to participate. The question had arisen, of course, because the estimates had been tabled with only half of the money listed in the first draft. Gradually the Government began to admit tacitly that there had been no result from discussions with the provinces that would yield any money, so it introduced as Supplementary Estimates the balance of the funds. Now we have returned to the House for approval from the Agriculture Committee for this amount of money which, in the words of the Minister, is to cover the special drought payments as well as something for two–price wheat and some other programs on which he did not elaborate but about which we expect we will find out more when we go into Committee of the Whole.

In the interests of getting this legislation through the House, even though it provides much less than we thought was necessary to deal with the problem adequately, I suggest that the House now go to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support this Bill, but I have a few comments I would like to make. Having said that I support the Bill, I would also like to say that I am somewhat critical of the Bill and the way it was handled by the Government.

I understand that the intent of the Government is to fine tune this Bill so that it applies to townships rather than to counties or districts. The Government should have faced the reality of the situation and realized how difficult this type of fine tuning was to handle. If it had been handled in the manner in which similar types of assistance programs were handled in the past, farmers would have received their money by now and could have been using it. The money that will go to the producers because of the poor crops last year is money needed by those producers to assist in their cash flow for this year and the purchase of seed. Unfortunately, even with the best efforts of Agriculture Canada and the Minister's office, they are not going to receive that money as quickly as all of us would have liked.

• (1650)

As mentioned by other Hon. Members, the fine tuning of this Bill has caused a discrepancy between farmers on opposite sides of the same concession roads that happen to be in a different township. The crop insurance figures from townships that are being used basically to calculate who gets what are showing discrepancies.

When bringing this Bill into the House today to grant extra funds, the Minister made the comment that this was an ongoing program. However, he must realize that that is not the accepted explanation in that this announcement, as he said, was interestingly made 11 days before the election last fall. The announcement was that the program would be cost shared on a 50–50 basis with the provinces. More than one province has denied that that consultation process took place. I feel that that should have taken place, and some of those other problems would not have happened.

The Minister also made the comment that there are approximately 4,000 producers who would be eligible if they had sent in an application. The Minister may recall some questions that we asked in the House, and also to some of the members of the ministry and the staff. In Ontario in particular, many, many producers did not receive their form until the deadline was past. I put out two press releases in my riding encouraging producers to make sure they put their application in, and that the Minister has stated that he will honour those. I respect and appreciate that fact. However, there were producers who received the application, looked at the date on the application which they sometimes received weeks after the deadline, did not notice the press release, and there was nothing on the application stating that even though the application was received late, it should be still sent in, and now another deadline has past.

We worked hard to advise the producers. That money is needed by the farmers, it is owed to the farmers, and they deserve it. We worked hard, but there were producers who decided that it is too late and there is no use sending in the application, so I lost on that one.

I support the Bill. I am sure in hindsight that the Minister and his staff will look at how this was handled. The phone lines were busy and it was difficult. However, I will not hold up the debate in discussion any longer in order that we can pass this Bill and the farmers can receive their money.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board on a short comment.

Mr. Crosby: By way of a point of order, Mr. Speaker, before we move to Committee of the Whole House and following second reading, I simply wanted to state that officials may be available, but the Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds) (Mr. Mayer) is present to answer questions, and I do not believe it is necessary to have the officials.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-35, an Act for granting Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1990.

On Clause 2—

Mr. Speller: I have a question, and I am not sure if it relates to Clause 2. Clause 2 mentions moneys being drawn out. I wonder if the Minister is aware of the situation in the riding of Haldimand—Norfolk where many farmers in my area have been flooded out. Most of those people have not been able to get their crops in. I wonder if any of these moneys, or if other moneys are available, to help those farmers out of this tough situation. The Minister may be aware that many of those same farmers suffered a drought last year. This year they are facing a situation of not even being able to get on the land. Are any of these funds available, or any future funds available to help out those farmers in Haldimand—Norfolk?

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member for Lambton—Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) raised that issue when he spoke. I certainly take the observation. However, this program is designed for drought assistance. There is no provision in this Bill to assist producers who may now be facing some equally serious problems as far as flooding is concerned.

I stand to be corrected, but I believe that for producers who have decided to take out crop insurance there is a provision in the crop insurance for them to be compensated if they are unable to seed for flooding reasons, or for whatever other reasons. There is some compensation available for producers. I know that that is the case on the prairies. I assume that the same applies in Ontario for producers in the riding of the Hon. Member. There should be compensation if they have in fact taken out crop insurance for the present year.

Mr. Vanclief: I have had discussions with the Minister in the past. There are drought relief committees to be appointed. I believe the Province of Ontario has six, and three that have already been appointed by the federal Government have been in southwestern Ontario. I have had discussions, and I have great concern that no one has been appointed from eastern Ontario, and to the best of my knowledge, there have been no appointees to the other three committees. Horticulture is a major sector of agriculture in Ontario and it is not represented.

What action has been taken on that to date?

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member has raised this question, and the two of us have had private discussions. The Hon. Member makes a very good point. Review committees were designed to assist the over-all administration of the program to serve the producers. There are four in Alberta, four in Manitoba, six in Saskatchewan, and six in Ontario. The six in Ontario are made up by three from the federal Government and three from the provincial Government.

We have been rather disappointed that the province has not seen fit to appoint those three. We are going to have to deal with that issue. The Hon. Member is absolutely correct that we need better geographical representation.

The Hon. Member also makes a very good point in terms of horticultural crops. I understand from his own personal background that he has had a very good career as a farmer growing many kinds of special crops, and if anyone is qualified to make those comments, he probably is, as far as the House is concerned. We take his point, and we will do our very best to address it as quickly as we can.

Mr. Ferguson: I wonder if the Minister could outline for us the amounts of additional funding he has in here. For example, he mentioned compensation for the two-price wheat system, and a couple of other items. Could he elaborate on those, and give us some figures?

Mr. Mayer: There is a whole host of programs that do not add up to nearly the amount of money for the drought program. I mentioned two-price wheat. The Canada Grain Commission has a certain amount of funding in here. Stop-off charges for millers are here. The International Grains Institute is here. Fees for membership for International Wheat Council contributions to the Canada Grains Council—the grain related funding that the federal Government is involved in—is here. For instance, we cost-share with the Canadian International Grains Institute, the Canada Grains Council and other kinds of things, depending on the organization. I believe some funding for POS in Saskatoon is in here as well. Those are the types of things I was referring to.

Mr. Funk: Mr. Chairman, I have a few questions to ask of the Minister.

Before I proceed, however, I would like to pay tribute to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mackenzie, for the work that he has done on this issue. If it had not been an election period and the Government needed to have a separate program from what the NDP was proposing, it might well have been the Hon. Member's proposal that would have been accepted. I think a lot of difficulties would have been resolved if it had been.

I am still concerned about the business of individual producers versus townships. The Minister suggested that management factors played a big part in this. My own experience in my constituency is that in the parkland areas the rain was very spotty. One of the Minister's officials in committee the other day acknowledged that fact. His family farms 12 miles from where I farm. The rainfall was very spotty. Often, most of a township was in relatively good shape but for people on the other side of a forested area or on the other side of a valley it could have been very bad.

I still do not see any mechanism included in this proposal whereby those kinds of real inequities are addressed. The Minister's officials said that fairness, equality and equity were still the objectives of the program. Those individuals caught in this type of situation could be totally wiped out if there is not some mechanism whereby the farmer who has virtually total crop loss falls into a township where the average is relatively good. I am not happy at all. I would hate to see this Bill go through without some assurance that if it is demonstrated after looking at the data that there are cases like this that there might not be some mechanism to address it.

In digging around on this program I noticed that the Minister when talking about the maximum total available per acre still quoted the figure of $40 to $45. I noted that with interest since it has been told to me that there is still a 10 per cent leeway at the top end of the payments here and that if the totals, once they are run through the computer, exceed $850 million, in fact that will revert to a lower level. Can the Minister confirm that this might still be true?

Third, with respect to the question I raised on the overpayment situations under special grains, it would have been proper if people had been informed of that ahead of time in case they were expecting a full cheque to be there, which a lot of people were doing. I think this is the first public acknowledgment of that fact—at least the first I have heard.

I should pay tribute where tribute is due. It was a staff member of mine, a person by the name of Judy Rice, who raised this possibility with me. She has been dealing with special grains and worked for the Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Humboldt for many years. She is now working in our office on this program. I might close my questioning by suggesting that if the Minister ever needs advice again, perhaps he can consult with Judy Rice.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the opening comments of the Hon. Member, this Government has responded in record fashion, both with programs and support, in international trade negotiations and with dollars. We did it in years when there was no election. We responded three years ago with $1 billion and two years ago with $1.1 billion. If the Hon. Member were to look at our record over the previous mandate he would see that we increased agricultural spending by over 400 per cent. In that period of time we spent something in the order of $11 billion in the grains and oilseeds business in Canada.

I know we do not need any coaching or any suggestions from the Hon. Member's side of the House that the reason we did this was for election purposes. Our record is very substantial in this area. We have a Prime Minister who has defended this industry outside of the country. We had a previous Prime Minister who when he came to western Canada gave us the finger and told us to sell our own wheat. This Prime Minister has been raising issues like this in international forums in Tokyo, in Venice and in every forum he has had a chance to do so. I just do not accept some of the things suggested by the Hon. Member for one minute.

As far as targeting is concerned, the Hon. Member raises a fair point. It is a judgment call that we make. We will have to wait to see the final data. We will not be using maps but lists of municipalities with the yields for the various crops. I have not seen them but I know some of the preliminary data has been available to the review committees. One of the people on the review committees has told me that in terms of his own immediate area he thought the data he had now from the final run from information on crop insurance addressed all of the concerns that they had in their own area.

Before the Hon. Member says he is not happy with this, I think he should wait to see what the final data generates. We certainly believe that the way the program is designed we will see most, if not all, of those issues corrected that were associated with the maps. For instance, we knew that when we made the initial payment the only data we had to make the initial payment on was the loss to coverage ratio. We knew that that would not be satisfactory and said so right off the bat.

With regard to the Hon. Member's comment about $45 per acre, that is an estimate that still stands. I can almost do the arithmetic here on the floor of the House. I would be happy to do it with the Hon. Member afterwards.

If one takes a 27 or 28 bushel average yield from a high producing area and gives full crop insurance coverage with no crop, one will get to that $40 or $45 payment. It will depend, as I said, on how the program runs and how the figures are drawn before we see how many people are involved.

I did not make a note of the third point the Hon. Member raised. Can he refresh my memory, please?

Mr. Funk: The figure of 10 per cent.

Mr. Mayer: We are still looking at the program. The formula is there. We have published the value of the crops. I can say publicly that we have had presentations made to us on lentil and some of the legume crops, as well as durum wheat. The one we are still considering is durum, if we can justify a higher price. Hard red spring is set at $160. I think there is a case for durum being slightly higher. That is the one we are looking at. The numbers are there as far as price is concerned.

Once we have the yield data available, that will give us the yield. We do the multiplication and then multiply that by the number of acres and we will get the final payment. Until we have all of that we will not know what the numbers are, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Funk: Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the Minister for the answers he has provided. I would like to pursue two of the points a little further. I appreciate that at this point in time it behoves us to see how it will come out. However, my question remains. If it is demonstrated that there are some real hardships occurring through no fault of the farmer's own management or any other reason but just because of the rainfall, and if they are in serious financial shape because of the township criteria, then might there be an opportunity to review those situations, say, in the fall when we are back here, or by some other kind of mechanism?

The Minister has talked about adding components to the program and making some adjustments to it. If it turns out that more than $850 million is required, would it be possible for the Minister to go to his colleague and top up this money to run the program properly if that is what is required?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, the only thing I said is that the one component we are still looking at is the price of durum. That is the only one we are considering.

We have said from the beginning that the $850 million is an estimate. It could be less, or it could be slightly more. We will have to wait to see what the numbers are. The Government has the capacity to cash-manage with a certain amount of latitude. However, again, we think that the original data we have is valid. We still think that the program is going to run very close to $850 million.

• (1710)

Mr. Speller: The Minister may recall that I sent him a letter in May regarding the situation of red clover in Haldimand. Because Agriculture Canada did not have details of the red clover production, it was considering the use of production figures for soya beans. I sent him a letter from one of my constituents from York, who indicated that he was anticipating 107,000 pounds of seed but only got 2,000 pounds.

People from my area, especially from Haldimand, have sent him figures of their production over the years. Does the Minister have this information and is he considering using it instead of information for soya beans?

Mr. Mayer: With regard to specific crops, we have the capacity to look after applications from producers who have been registered or the commercial seed business that sells and has a record of sales. It will be very difficult for us to handle someone who is in the commercial business that sells farm to farm, or grows it.

Without getting into the specifics of his letter, which I recall in general terms and would be happy to discuss with him later, we are looking for as many ways as possible to accommodate that kind of situation. We will find it difficult to do anything other than for the registered pedigree seed producers. If I said commercial before, I should not have done so. It is the registered and pedigree seed producers of forage crops with which we will be in a position to deal. However, it will be difficult to deal with some of the other commercial ones because we will find it almost impossible to verify records.

If we do not have enough yield data for an individual crop in a township, then we will prorate it or take an average of another crop, whether it is soya beans or corn, in the Member's area. Assuming that a farmer suffers a 60 per cent loss in the production of corn, we would have to make the assumption that it will be somewhat similar for other crops, even if we do not have enough data to go with it. It is a reflective estimate of production in that township.

Mr. Funk: Mr. Chairman, I had asked the Minister two questions, and perhaps he forgot the first part. Once we have looked at all the data, as we should, and the appeal process has run its course, if it can be demonstrated that there are individuals who have experienced serious financial hardship through no fault of their own, is the Minister considering a mechanism for at least a sympathetic response to that situation? Frankly, I hate to stand here and say tough luck.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, as I said, we are being specific down to a township, which is six miles by six miles. We have review committees in place to deal with the municipalities, to look at the data and make sure it is reflective. If there are individual cases, for instance, that are not covered by crop insurance so they would not be in the overall data base, and which can demonstrate that that influences the overall yield in that township, that will be taken into consideration by the review committees.

I do not want to raise false expectations. It can be pretty difficult to deal with an individual farm. I say again that once you see the overall data, I think most people will be very satisfied with the procedure. We will be able to capture a lot of those instances. If there are some special cases, we will do our very best to accommodate them. However, I ask the Member to understand that we cannot go back and review each individual farmer on a case-by-case basis. The Hon. Member from Lambton—Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) estimated some 130,000; we estimate in the neighbourhood of 120,000 to 130,000 cases. Some of the averages may not be exact but I certainly think they would be reflective enough of the situation so that there will not be that many complaints.

Mr. Taylor: I want to expand on the answer the Minister just gave to my colleague. What advice is he providing to the individual farmer? Is he or she to approach the municipalities to discuss the individual claim, and will the rural municipality discuss that with the review committee? Is that the process?

Mr. Mayer: Yes. We will be sending kits to all of the municipalities to deal with this, so that is the procedure. It will be a similar procedure to what went on with the review committees as far as the livestock feed side of the drought assistance. That will be the process.

Mr. Taylor: The Minister also said in response to my colleague that there will be no maps this time around. With the initial announcement of the program, maps with light grey, medium grey and dark grey squares were produced. It gave individuals the opportunity to understand whether or not they qualified for funding under the initial program, whether they would have to wait for payment under the final program, or whether they would receive no funds at all.

The Minister now says that no maps will be produced, only lists. How will the individual producer be able to know whether or not his or her farm is included in this second package?

Mr. Mayer: It will be shown by municipality and township within the municipality, by crop within the municipality. There could be six or seven crops within the township. It will be very difficult to show all of those on a map. We decided that the best way to get the information out is through lists. The producer will have that available to him through agricultural representative offices, municipal offices, district agricultural offices, county offices in Ontario. All that information will be available. I think that kind of system will be much more usable and readily understandable to producers than the previous maps which were used solely to make a blanket payment, regardless of the crop, on an interim basis.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 2 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Carried.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On Clause 3—Purpose and effect of each item

Mr. Althouse: I have some questions arising out of the Minister's comments. During his remarks to the House he said that he could not understand why so many producers had failed to fill in application forms. While I cannot give him an explanation, I know that a number of the several hundred producers who were late applicants under the Special Canadian Grains Program that was completed last year were people who had to go off the farm to work and only got to the paperwork after the deadline arrived to fill out the application forms. As a consequence, they were late.

I suspect that probably most of the several thousand to which the Minister alluded in his remarks were delayed because the farmer was trying to find some other way of making money to put in a crop and the paperwork piled up so he did not get it done.

The announcements as to final filing dates were fairly clear. I expect many of those people thought they had missed it when they did come across the form and simply failed to file. Is the Minister in the process of encouraging these last few thousand to apply? Has he extended the date? What is he doing to make that clear? The second part of the question alludes to the several hundred applications from the last program that are on the desk of the Minister of Agriculture. Will those late applicants receive approval?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the first part of the question, we took out ads in the farm papers across the country. We ran radio ads. I think enough was written about the program and the Opposition was critical enough of it to raise this issue everywhere. In many ways I do not think it is possible to plead innocence or not guilty about not knowing about it. I do not think I said I do not know why they did not fill them out, I said that there are applications that have not come back in. I do not know why they have not come back in. We have been as accommodating as we can on deadlines but there comes a point at which you have to cut it off because if you keep accepting applications it jeopardizes the way the whole program operates. We cannot continue to extend the deadline for applications and jeopardize the people who have already submitted their applications getting their cheques sent to them. We will be as accommodating as we can as long as that accommodation does not jeopardize the overall process.

• (1720)

With regard to the last point the Member makes about previous, that is a year ago. It is going to be pretty difficult to accommodate people who submit applications that are this long in coming. The Special Grains Program was administered over a year ago. We accepted applications from people as long as we could, into the late summer I believe and maybe even later, I would have to look.

I do not know what you can reasonably expect. When people send applications many months after the fact, there comes a time when you have to cut off the program and decide that those applications can no longer be considered. I am not up-to-date on where those ones are in terms of the Minister of Agriculture, but I would be happy to look into that and respond to the Hon. Member at a later date.

Mr. Althouse: I would like to point out that those applications were not as much as a year late. They have been sitting on the Minister's desk for many months and those people would appreciate knowing whether they are in or out, whether they will or will not be receiving consideration. Many of them have been waiting for seven or eight months or more. It is not entirely a question of their tardiness.

The Minister should be aware that in spite of all the publicity, if a farmer is working in northern Canada or in downtown Toronto framing houses all winter and into the spring, leaving his return to seed as late as he can, he is not subjected to the information that the rest of us who live in farming communities are. The only way those people have of knowing about the program is to go through their mail, and mail really piles up after five or six months of absence. It is not easy to get through all of that and to sort out what is important and what is not. As a consequence, people are late in some cases.

I just raised that again hoping that the Minister and his colleagues will recognize that and be a little more lenient about recognizing late payments because there are mitigating circumstances in nearly every one of these cases.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Chairman, anyone who has their application in during the month of June will be looked after. Beyond that it is going to be very difficult. People who are away for five or six months have to come back if they are farming in order to put their crops in. If they have their applications in by the end of this month we will be in a position to consider them. Beyond then it is going to be difficult. It is going to have to be a judgment call on how that will affect the overall operation of the program and the other people who have already applied.

Mr. Althouse: Just to finish this, where can they apply for application forms if they have been lost in the mail, or lost in the pile somewhere in the office? Where do they apply? Is using the phone system adequate for them to hold a spot? There are only a few days left in this month.

Mr. Mayer: Probably the simplest way, Mr. Chairman, is to use the 1-800 number. I do not have it in my head, but that would be the simplest to get it out and back as quickly as possible.

Clauses 3 and 4 agreed to.

On Clause 5—Appropriation charged.

Mr. Althouse: Would the Hon. Minister tell us with some precision how he intends to spend the two-price wheat moneys which are included in these payments? What will the process be? What will the payment be? Who will be eligible for it and how will it be distributed?

Mr. Mayer: The process is under way. It has been paid in one interim payment already, I think only one. There will be a final payment. The Ontario Wheat Producers Marketing Board closes its crop year at the end of this month. The Canadian Wheat Board closes its crop year at the end of July. Part of the money has already been advanced in the form of an interim payment. It will be based on the pooling system. All the grain that is sold in those two areas will be looked after. We are handling it differently in terms of Quebec and the Maritimes. There is some eligibility in the lower mainland of British Columbia but it is all handled basically on the same basis to make up the difference between the market price and $7 a bushel which works out, I think, to $257 a tonne.

Mr. Althouse: Will the payment to producers in the Canadian Wheat Board region be made as well? How will producers in the Canadian Wheat Board region take part in the payment this year?

Mr. Mayer: The money is paid directly into the pool account as any other sale would be and it is worked out on the basis of your sales. Your share is based on your sales.

Mr. Althouse: I only ask that because it had been skipped over and there is some trepidation about how long the two-price wheat system will be continuing. That had been left out in the original answer.

I thank the Minister for his answers. We understand that there is a disposition for this to go further very quickly to make room for some other Bills. This is the end of my questions, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. de Cotret moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to pay tribute to the people who have worked very hard in administering this program. This is a $850 million program. The administration costs are going to amount to a little over 1 per cent, we estimate 1.1 per cent of the total program. Anyone who works in government programs knows that that is a very, very minimum figure. The reason we are able to do that is because of the co-operation we received from the provinces in terms of their crop insurance corporations as well as because of the people who have worked here in the Department and the people who have co-operated with us.

I thought it would be useful, Mr. Speaker, to point out that we do have some very capable people working on the administration of this program and they should be recognized. Testimony to how well they have been running the program is, as I said, the small percentage of money that we are using to administer this program.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, can you clarify what number of Bill you have been referring to?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Bill C-35.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

CANADIAN EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, June 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp that Bill C-19, an Act to amend the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act, be read the third time and passed.

• (1730)

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, as I warned Hon. Members last Friday, they could have either supported the hoist motion advanced by the Hon. Member, the critic for the official Opposition, or failing that, they could hear me yammer on for a few more minutes. The House decided, and here I am.

I would like to say that it is indeed unfortunate that the House seems determined to give third reading to this Bill today to pass it into law. I say this is unfortunate for a variety of reasons; principally because it will hurt the small, independent Canadian oil companies and the independent Canadian companies that supply the oil patch in the Western Sedimentary Basin, especially in Alberta.

It should be noted at the start that the passage of this Bill will in no way affect the large international companies. Indeed, it will not affect the large Canadian companies involved in the patch. Because they already will have made up their allowable exploration and drilling expenditures prior to the termination date set in the Bill, the premature termination of the program. It is the small companies that will have just been undertaking their exploration and drilling programs that will have spread those programs over the four quarters of activity in the year that will be caught short and harmed by the passage of this Bill. In this sense, this Bill is discriminatory against precisely that sector of the industry which most needs and, indeed, most deserves the assistance that the program otherwise would grant.

Right off the top, this is an inequitable Bill. Indeed, it is a harmful Bill from the point of view of the small, independent Canadian sector. There is no question that the Bill will have impact. The Canadian Association of Oil Well-Drilling Contractors states that the cancellation of CIDA will make their prior second quarter forecast of 153 rigs drilling, down 10 per cent from 171, obsolete. In fact that figure will have to be further reduced. They are now talking about the average number of rigs running in the second quarter to be 89 or 17 per cent utilization.

Let there be no mistake that the cancellation of the CEDIP program will have a substantial impact on the Western Sedimentary Basin.

It is not just on the companies themselves that do the exploration. It is on the service companies in the industry that the negative impact will be felt. It is on those industries, for example, represented by the Petroleum Services Association of Canada which appeared before the legislative committee to make plain theirreservations with regard to the Bill.

However, the damage does not even stop there. Indeed, it extends right to the farm gate. As Mr. Bud Bell, the Vice-President and General Manager of Schlumberger Canada and the First Vice-President of the Petroleum Services Association of Canada, when asked during committee about where the people who work for the companies represented by his association, said:

> They come from across Canada, but the majority of them come from Western Canada geographically. Many of them work for the services company in the winter, that are, during the summer, farmers.

This merely reinforces the point that I made at the second reading of this Bill, that many farmers, especially in Alberta, north of central Alberta, rely on farm employment to keep the farm going to tidethem over the tough times of low farm income. This Bill will impact negatively on them as well because there will not be the jobs in the smaller exploration companies and service companies that there would have been had CEDIP been maintained right through to the end of the program, projected for this December.

Therefore, there is no question that the Bill harms the small producers. It harms the servicing companies and it harms, in many cases, farmers seeking farm income who work for those companies.

There is another aspect in which this Bill is iniquitous. That is that the Government is using this Parliament to renege on a promise explicit in the previous legislation. The promise was to give six months clear notice of any alteration in the program.

There is no question that legally the Government can do this. The Government is perfectly free to place a bill before this House, have it passed through and become law and thereby simply void any prior commitment it may have incurred as a consequence of previous legislation. It can do that. The point is that it ought not to do that, especially when, in doing that, it is breaking a promise made and accepted in good faith by hard-working, small Canadian companies trying to do a good job in the Western Sedimentary Basin. It is an improper way to conduct the public business, and for that reason alone, this Bill is unworthy of the support of this House.

As the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada noted in its submission to the legislative committee—they did not appear, but they did supply a written submission—"This measure undermines investor confidence in the integrity of Government." As was noted in its submission by the Small Explorers and Producers Association of Canada, this Bill if enacted constitutes a situation in which:

> The Government violated its own covenant to give six months notice.

This matter has not escaped the attention of the industry. Indeed, those who appeared before the committee stressed over and over again how surprised and how shocked they were that the Government would use Parliament to conduct itself in this fashion.

Last, I would like to make it very clear that it was discovered during the course of the Minister's appearance before the committee that the decision to terminate the CEDIP program was not taken in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, that it was not even considered within that Department. Rather an edict came from the Finance Department, as part of the Budget, that this program be prematurely terminated to save $80 million. There were no impact studies done on the effects of this cancellation on the Western Sedimentary Basin and on Alberta. Apparently no alternatives were even considered. When the question was put to the Minister's Departmental senior staff as to whether or not consideration had been given to radically lowering the cap on the program, thereby saving at least $40 million but allowing the benefits still to flow to the smaller companies, the response was, no, not to their knowledge.

Therefore, we have a Bill that unfairly singles out small companies for punishment, we have a Bill that cancels a promise previously made by the Government, and we have a Bill the effects of which were not even considered prior to its introduction. For these three reasons, I submit the House cannot support this Bill. To do so would be wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean) that Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Canadian Environmental Protection Act be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few brief remarks on the occasion of third reading of Bill C-22. Let me begin if I may by thanking the members of the Standing Committee for the very effective and expeditious manner in which they addressed this legislation before the Standing Committee. I would also like to express my own personal thanks to the several departmental officials who were very helpful in that process.

As the members of the Committee understand, the Bill which is before the House now for third reading is very brief and a very straightforward piece of legislation. It was deemed necessary to rectify some legal difficulties encountered in the original legislation since its passage late last June.

In my opinion, the legislation before the House does indeed rectify those deficiencies. It means that we then will be in a position to enforce the regulations which were designed to come into place on July 1 of this year in order to effect the requirements of the Montreal Protocol. The Canadian Government was very happy to provide leadership at the time of the Montreal Protocol and we look forward to these regulations being in place.

I think all of us understand that the proposed emissions of CFCs by some 50 per cent which is provided for in the Montreal Protocol are no longer accepted as adequate. In fact, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) has already made a commitment that the Canadian Government will move toward the diminishing of CFC emissions by 80 per cent by the end of the next decade. Furthermore, he has accepted as an objective for the Government that we should move toward the elimination of all CFC emissions by the same date.

It is most important that all Parties work together in ensuring that the regulations in place will be effective and I think that is the case with respect to the Montreal Protocol and like all members of the House, I look forward to continuing to address this exceedingly important issue. Members on all sides now recognize the threat that CFCs represent to the ozone layer and the significance of that to the health of Canadians and citizens throughout the world.

I do hope the House will expedite the passage of this Bill as it has done to date.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am most happy to rise in support of this particular Bill. I must admit, however, when the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister invokes the Montreal Protocol he forces me to elaborate a little bit on our Party's position with respect to the whole question of CFCs.

This particular series of amendments was needed. Essentially when the original Canadian Environmental Protection Act was drafted by the former Minister of the Environment, he botched the job and he botched it in such a way that the current Government could not have met its obligations under the Montreal Protocol without a specific interim order unless this legislation went through. We are most happy to assist the Government in getting the legislation through but I was very disappointed that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) on February 16, 1989, stated that the CFC question was his number one priority and that he was going to begin immediately drafting regulations. In fact, we did not learn about the botch-up until May 31, so I have to ask the Minister what he was doing between February and May.

More important in the examination of CFCs, I became aware that 4,000 skin cancers every year are linked specifically to the depletion of the ozone layer, something which most Canadians are not aware of. The single largest contributor to the depletion of the ozone layer is the production of chlorofluorocarbons which are used on an ongoing basis in refrigerants and other particular products.

While I respect and understand alternative technologies in many areas are in the process of development, I do not understand nor do Canadians why the Government does not move immediately to force the recycling and recapture of CFCs currently being leaked into the environment.

Last night in our ministry committee we learned that a company in my own community of Hamilton that makes refrigerators, a Canadian subsidiary of General Electric company, Camco purchases 300,000 pounds of CFCs per year for use in its refrigerators. Those CFCs are now purchased at a paltry sum of $1 per pound. It is very inexpensive and the company tends to use it as an inexpensive commodity. We learned from Camco that 4 per cent of its CFCs are lost immediately during the manufacture and process and a further 10 per cent to 15 per cent of CFCs are leaked into the atmosphere on an ongoing basis during the life of a refrigerator.

We also know that at the moment there are no specific national standards with respect to the development of hermetically sealed air conditioners in automobiles, which is a very large escape source of CFCs. There is no particular national initiative with respect to companies and how they handle CFCs. We even heard by way of a presentation in the committee that VIA Rail, a crown corporation, in the City of Montreal, in the birthplace of the Montreal Protocol—

[Translation]

The Montreal Protocol should take effect in four days. Today is the 27th. As of Canada Day, the Montreal Protocol should take effect in the same place that it began, where it was signed. Every day, Mr. Speaker, a Crown corporation releases CFCs into the atmosphere, CFCs which we already know reduce the ozone layer and cause skin cancer. And what is the answer of the Government and of the companies that are releasing CFCs into the atmosphere?

• (1750)

We heard last night from the officials at Camco that at this very moment it is in the process of doing repairs to 22,500 refrigerators in Canada and its parent company is in the process of doing repairs to one million refrigerators in the United States. When they are doing those repairs, they are deliberately permitting the leakage of CFCs into the atmosphere.

They claim that the technology is not available, even though we produced evidence that such technology does exist and indeed it is portable technology. We even asked the companies whether they would be willing to set aside or forgo their plan for repairs for a few months until they could satisfy themselves of the technology that can be used to recapture. They refused. Do you know why they refused, Mr. Speaker? Their excuse was that they represent a very small percentage of the market-place. Their percentage of the marketplace is 5 per cent. That is one company which is purchasing 5 per cent of all the CFCs in Canada. By their own declaration, the number of Canadians in their company actually working on the issue of recycling, recapture and research is two people. Two people, and they tell a parliamentary committee that they feel that they are doing enough in this area.

The company also told us that they could not move immediately because they wanted to preserve the food for Canadians by proper refrigeration. In fact, we had other methods of refrigeration before the arrival of CFCs in the market-place. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, for every 1 per cent increase in CFCs into the atmosphere, the capacity of the earth to produce food is decreased by 1 per cent. That 5 per cent ratio of CFCs used by that single Canadian company, in the Canadian context is responsible for a 5 per cent reduction in the arability of food for the world. We cannot just think about food in the context of what goes into and comes out of our refrigerator. We have to begin to think about the food in the global context.

We are among the heaviest users of chlorofluorocarbons in the world, and if as a nation we are willing to dodge our responsibility and ignore the exigencies of the Montreal Protocol and the time bomb that is ticking on the very air which we breathe, by passing it off and saying: "Well, we only represent 5 per cent of the market-place", 5 per cent and 5 per cent and 5 per cent and 5 per cent, together a hole in the atmosphere make. That is exactly what we have at the moment with respect to the ozone layer. That is exactly why the federal Government and in particular, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) should invoke his powers under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, under Section 35, to issue an interim order to begin to control the disposition of CFCs in refrigerants across Canada.

I was speaking to an industry person only a few days ago. He told me that at the moment CFCs are so cheap and so available that they use them as a replacement for water in cleaning the coils of their commercial refrigerators. Instead of bothering to get a water hose, they are doing repairs and they merely spray the back of the refrigerant with CFCs, which are going right into the atmosphere, which are creating holes and which are warming the climate.

We are entering what probably will turn out to be the hottest Canadian summer on record. That is not a natural phenomenon. The drought, for which Canadian farmers are still waiting to be paid, is in part a result of global warming trends which can directly be linked to the degradation which is being wrought by humankind on our universe.

Surely, if we can take some small step in Parliament, it should be an invocation of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, of the interim orders to make sure that as well as dealing with our obligations under the Montreal Protocol, which are already out of date, that at the same time we ensure the toughest standards in the world in relation to refrigeration and in relation to the very things which at the moment are escaping public attention.

I asked that question specifically of the Minister only a few moments ago in the Environment Committee. I asked him if he would be prepared as an interim measure to invoke a section of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act to deal with that particular issue. The Minister, once again, was very fluid and flowery with his rhetoric but, once again, he refused to take specific action. He is studying the question. He is looking at other alternatives. This was a perfect opportunity for him to act. I must say that I amdisappointed that he is not doing more.

I am also disappointed in a decision of the committee to vote down a motion which was presented by the Liberal Party that the Bill be presented on recycled paper. It may be a small thing. It may be a nominal gesture in the fight to build a cleaner environment, but when we moved the motion to have the first piece of environmental legislation in this Parliament printed on recycled paper, it was turned down by the Conservatives.

I have to ask myself, how committed is the Government to environmental questions when it will not even recycle the paper which we use for environmental legislation, and it refuses something as simple as incorporating the concept of sustainable development into the mandate of various ministries.

I think in this particular Bill, yes, we have helped the Government and we have tried to expedite the process because we would like to see the Government meet its obligations under the Montreal Protocol.

However, the Montreal Protocol is only a beginning. We heard from Greenpeace that we have the capacity to do so much more. Then when we heard from industry what is not being done in the very specific area of refrigeration, it shocked me to know that one single company in Canada uses 300,000 pounds of CFCs a year and that most of those 300,000 pounds are put into refrigerators and leak out with very little regard to hermetic sealing, with very little regard to making sure that CFCs do not escape into the atmosphere.

I would say that we have a tremendous amount of work to do in this area. The legislation put forward by the Minister to clear up an anomaly which his own Government created is at least a step in the right direction. We will be waiting anxiously for a further report from the companies involved in the use of CFCs across this country, as well as from the Government, in respect of the attitude and implementation of the Montreal Protocol in relation to Crown corporations.

This first step, while welcome, certainly is long overdue and should be accompanied by strong legislation to deal with the hundreds of thousands of refrigerators which we sell to consumers every year and to deal with the thousands of refrigerators which we import from the United States for disposal. They end up in dumping grounds and they end up leaking CFCs into the atmosphere when they are compressed by being squashed on dump sites. At the moment, the Minister who is responsible for the Montreal Protocol, who should be working for a stronger law, is completely ignoring the danger that the leakage of CFCs is already creating in the atmosphere that we need to breathe, and the ozone layer that we need to survive.

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, I listened to our colleague opposite talk about this Bill and I find that she is going a little fast. I think that instead of making all the criticisms that she made now, she should have taken the oportunity to congratulate the Minister of the Environment Minister (Mr. L. Bouchard) who is perhaps the finest Environment Minister this Parliament ever had. I think that we should all acknowledge this and applaud him, because if we take my colleague's line of argument, for example, repairing a refrigerator which contains a minute quantity of CFCs, chlorofluorocarbons, the way she wants, Mr. Speaker, would mean that people would be without refrigerators for five or six months. Mr. Thompson of Camco explained this problem to her in committee yesterday and instead of accepting it, she would prefer to have Canadians do without refrigerators for five or six months so that a very small quantity of CFCs, which are quite a bit less harmful, do not escape into the atmosphere. You want to stop me, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but we have had consultations with the three Parties and I think you would find that there would be unanimous consent for us to not see the clock for Private Members' hour at this point but to give us a chance for the Hon. Member—I think we have two Members from the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and the Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls (Mr. Baker). Then we have a Member speaking from the NDP. We will do that and then we will proceed into Private Members' hour.

• (1800)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand what we have been asked to agree to do. I understood that we agreed to not see the clock for Private Members' Hour because there were a number of speakers yet and, if there are to be a number of speakers, there are certainly a number of speakers from the New Democratic Party who would want to participate in this debate. Perhaps we ought to have some consultation before agreeing to any change.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If there is to be further consultation, shall we then move on to Private Members' Hour?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being six o'clock p.m., according to order made Tuesday, June 13, 1989, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business pursuant to order made Monday, June 26, 1989.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF ELECTORAL RIDING OF TÉMISCAMINGUE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, to speed up proceedings in the time allowed for Private Members' Business, since several Members, including me, are to speak, I would like to have unanimous consent of the parties to withdraw my Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the House agree unanimously to allow the Hon. Member to withdraw his Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill withdrawn.

[English]

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With the permission of the Hon. Member for Fredericton (Mr. Bird), who is unable to be here this evening, I would ask to present his Bill in his absence when his turn comes up in due course. I would like unanimous consent to proceed in that way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there such consent?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we have no difficulty with that. We on this side may have to do the same thing. It has been a long-standing practice that the House accepts the Bill, as long as the Member has introduced it or someone else is willing to do it for him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CHANGE IN THE NAME OF SAINT-LAURENT RIDING

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent) moved: That Bill C-239, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Saint-Laurent, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

She said: Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure and especially a great honour for me to speak on Bill C-239 to change the name of my constituency, Saint-Laurent, to Saint-Laurent—Cartierville.

The federal riding of Saint-Laurent includes the City of Saint-Laurent as well as the northwestern part of the City of Montreal, known as Cartierville and Saraguay.

[English]

The name Saint-Laurent has very strong affiliation with the boundaries of the city. In effect, by having the name of the riding changed, we are removing the confusion surrounding the actual boundaries of the riding with those of the city.

During the last federal election campaign when I was canvassing door to door, many of the people in the Montreal sector of my riding did not realize that they were in the federal district of Saint-Laurent. By changing the name of the riding to encompass both the Montreal and Saint-Laurent sectors of the area, no confusion will arise.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I can say with pride that I have fulfilled one of my election promises. I heard and listened to the people of Saint-Laurent when they told me they wanted the name of their riding to reflect who they are.

[English]

It is for this reason that I tabled this Bill earlier this session. I must express my pleasure with the fact that seven Members of Parliament from all sides of the House have agreed to co-operate and pass through all stages these Bills at this sitting. We must listen to our constituents at all times for it is on their behalf that we sit in this Chamber.

Cartierville represents 25 per cent of the total population of the riding. I am sure that those people will be pleased to see that they will be more openly recognized as an integral part of the new federal riding of Saint-Laurent—Cartierville.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, concurred in, read the third time and passed.

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF MARKHAM CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham) moved that Bill C-240, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Markham, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a real privilege to rise to speak to Bill C-240. During the last election campaign, one of the main promises I made to the local people of Whitchurch—Stouffville was that we would recognize them by changing the name of the riding. Before I say a couple of words on that, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken). We chatted several months ago about a possible way to proceed on this matter.

When the House first reconvened before Christmas, I put in a Private Member's Bill. It was drawn to be debated, but it died on the Order Paper. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands reminded me of the phrase that we are masters of our own proceedings here and tipped me off to the idea that if I could get the the concurrence of the three House Leaders, we could indeed pass such a Bill. I would like to thank that Hon. Member, as well as the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis), the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and our own House Leader, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis).

There are two compelling reasons why the name of the riding should be changed. One is that the riding of Markham actually covers every inch of two towns—the town of Markham and the town of Whitchurch—Stouffville. Making this change would recognize the residents of Whitchurch—Stouffville. As a matter of fact, my wife Sandy and I live in the Whitchurch—Stouffville area. There are about 20,000 people there and about another 140,000 in the town of Markham.

The other reason for the name change is that there is a provincial riding of Markham which covers only the town of Markham. I believe this change will also help to remove some confusion between the two ridings. It is with great pleasure that I speak to Bill C-240.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, concurred in, read the third time and passed.

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF FREDERICTON CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Bob Corbett (for Mr. Bird) moved that Bill C-241, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Fredericton, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported and concurred in.

Mr. Corbett (for Mr. Bird) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that the Hon. Member for Fredericton was unable to be here this evening. He asked me to carry forth the Bill on his behalf before the House. Members who are familiar with the constituency of Fredericton will recognize that the boundaries and borders of Fredericton itself go well beyond the City of Fredericton into both the counties of York and Sunbury.

It is for that reason that the Hon. Member for Fredericton, very realistically, would like the name of the constituency to be changed to reflect the composition of the constituency as a whole. In future sessions that will be well recognized by the House. I appreciate the opportunity to carry forward this message this evening.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY FROM RENFREW TO RENFREW—NIPISSING—PEMBROKE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew) moved that Bill C-245, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Renfrew, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this Bill became necessary because the Electoral Boundaries Commission did not accept the advice that was given to it during the hearings. The name Renfrew refers to Renfrew County and the Town of Renfrew, but the City of Pembroke was left without any identification whatsoever in the riding name. It is the largest municipality between Ottawa and North Bay.

A large part of my constituency includes a large chunk of the District of Nipissing, the eastern half of Algonquin Park and communities such as Whitney and Madawaska. These communities were left without any identification when the word "Nipissing" was dropped from the name of the riding.

I wish to point out that I am not asking for something new in this Bill. I am only asking for what was there before. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that prior to redistribution my constituency was Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke. If we revert to that name, it will mean that the people who live in the District of Nipissing and the southwestern part of the constituency will have identification with the title.

It will also mean that the population resident in the City of Pembroke will also have identification. It has always been that way. Now that the three names are back again, when the riding is mentioned people will realize that it is large. It is approximately 160 miles long and 90 miles wide at the widest point.

In rural ridings people like to have their own identification. Reverting to the original name of the riding will give that identification back to the various regions of the riding. That meant that more people were taken into the riding to include the areas of Whitney and Madawaska.

Those areas were in a constituency years ago with the former riding of Renfrew South which was represented by the Hon. Joe Greene, and for some 22 years by Dr. McCann. Now those areas have been included with the Renfrew County area which includes the original Renfrew North, Renfrew South, plus a large section of the District of Nipissing which used to be in a separate riding. A large part of the Nipissing area was included with the North Bay area. Now it is included in the riding of Renfrew and will become part of the riding of Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke.

In conclusion, I wish to make one further comment. The secretary of the Electoral Boundaries Commission spoke to me on two occasions when I appeared before the Electoral Boundaries Commission. He attempted to get me to justify why I wanted the three names in the riding name. I pointed out to him that it had been there before him. I also pointed out to him on the map where those various sections were located. He was not too easily disposed to giving it back the triple name of Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke, and I could see that. As a result, when the Electoral Boundaries Commission reported back it left it as a single-named constituency.

In future, I would hope that Electoral Boundaries Commission would take seriously the identification of the various areas of large rural ridings when people appear before the committee with the proposition that certain areas of the riding should be included. I do not know how long the name of the riding of the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) is at present, but I recall at one time there were approximately five counties included in the name of his riding, and that applies to others in the House as well.

I am pleased today to have the former name of Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke for my constituency.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, concurred in, read the third time and passed.

MEASURE TO CHANGE THE NAME OF THE ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF RESTIGOUCHE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (for Mr. Guy H. Arseneault) moved: That Bill C-252, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Restigouche, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to take a few minutes to explain why my friend and colleague from Restigouche (Mr. Arseneault) has proposed this change in the name of his constituency.

The wonderful riding of Restigouche, which extends from the limits of the Republic of Madawaska, is a region of New Brunswick that I know very well. It includes several towns and villages such as Kedgewick, Saint-Quentin and Saint-Jean-Baptiste. The main industries are forestry and fishing.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, the region of Campbellton, Dalhousie, Balmoral, Pointe Verte, Petit Rocher and Beresford along the Baie des Chaleurs are quite different from the upper part of the riding of Restigouche and, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to note the reason for the word "Chaleur" which my colleague wants added to describe his riding. It comes from the Baie des Chaleurs, which was discovered, if I am not mistaken—

An Hon. Member: In 1534!

Mr. Young (Gloucester): In 1534! In any event, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues from Québec know the Baie des Chaleurs very well because this region borders the Gaspé peninsula. I can readily understand why my colleague prefers to have his riding known by the historic name of Restigouche, in recognition of the beautiful Restigouche River, one of the most famous salmon rivers in the world, which all of us know very well, and also, of course, by the Baie des Chaleurs.

I want to join the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier in suggesting to my colleagues in the House that it would be most appropriate that the name of this constituency from now on be Restigouche—Chaleur.

[English]

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, concurred in, read the third time and passed.

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY FROM WINDSOR—LAKE ST. CLAIR TO WINDSOR—ST. CLAIR

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair) moved that Bill C-254, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Windsor—Lake St. Clair, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will not speak at great length on this Bill. I think the Bill was adequately explained in my intervention of the other day.

However, the present riding of Windsor—Lake St. Clair is the former riding of Windsor—Walkerville which experienced some minor changes involving perhaps 20 city blocks that resulted in no essential change in the over-all geography of the constituency. Nevertheless the name was changed to Windsor—St. Clair.

The riding is an interesting riding, partly by virtue of the nature of its representation in the House of Commons. It is a riding which I am proud to represent. It is varied in all of its characteristics—demographically, industrially and otherwise. In a manner of speaking it is a prototype for all of Canada in its demographic composition. in the nature of its economy, its industry, and so on.

There is an implication in the name that I find just a little bit unsuitable, that is, the suggestion that there resides in Lake St. Clair any of the electorate of my riding. Of course, that is not true.

The name that I suggest would describe the fact that part of the riding is composed of 40 per cent of the City of Windsor on the eastern side and extends through to Tecumseh, to St. Clair Beach. The name is appropriate in that it calls attention to its circumscription as including those communities.

I hope this Bill will be passed promptly and with great celebration.

• (1830)

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, concurred in, read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

CANADIAN ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on the Environment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin).

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying before the House proceeded to Private Members' Business, if we want to eliminate CFCs immediately without giving companies enough time to find substitutes for this dangerous product, if we want to do so immediately, it would mean that Canadians who have problems with their refrigerators today would have to do without for six or seven months.

As I understand it, the Liberal Member is asking us and asking companies to stop fixing refrigerators in Canada because this might release a small amount of CFCs into the atmosphere which, according to the Hon. Member, would be more harmful than the fact that Canadians would not have a refrigerator for five or six months. I think this shows, Mr. Speaker, how frivolous the requests of Liberal Members can be.

Another point I would like to raise with respect to this Bill, Mr. Speaker, concerns a comparison between the French and English versions of the Bill. The fact is, the Bill contains only two clauses. The purpose of the first clause is to replace the English version of the Bill. There is absolutely nothing that amends the French text of the Bill. Why? Because it says in the English version:

Subject to subsection (4).

This did not appear in the French version. It was explained to us that this was because in French the text can be understood without any further indication and that our Anglophone friends would not understand if it were not included.

Subject to subsection (4).

That is the only amendment to subsection 33(1). In French there is nothing. Then it says:

(2) Subsection 33 (2) of the said Act is repealed.

And here I understand that it is repealed in French as well as in English.

In the second clause the amendments only appear in English and there are no amendments, except for the addition of the word "décret", in French. The Government's language experts explained that this is because our Francophone linguists draft the legislation without consulting with their Anglophone counterparts, and so we get two legal texts which, we hope, are similar. Mr. Speaker, I still say that, to Canadians who are trying to understand the Bill, both versions don't always mean the same thing. As far as I am concerned, when I look at the English text, the words:

—is given an opportunity to provide its advice

doesn't mean the same thing as the French:

—la possibilité de formuler

It isn't the same. I fail to understand how people can draft legal texts that will make it so hard for Canadians to understand them. However, I realize that voting against bills like that may not be enough.

I would like to add that since both the French and English versions of bills introduced in this House have the same authority, this may be a terrific headache for people who subsequently have to interpret these bills. Instead of having Francophone and Anglophone experts each drafting the same bill separately, they should consult each other and work together and thus avoid the kind of situation we have here in this very short Bill with only two clauses.

Mr. Speaker, that is the point I wanted to make, and I think that in the present case it is a fact, and the experts have said as much, that the French version of the Bill gave a far more faithful rendition of the Department's and the Government's intentions than the English version. So as a Francophone, I am of course quite pleased, and I will vote in favour of the Bill. However, I wish that Anglophone and Francophone linguists in the Government would consult when drafting the respective versions of the Bill, in order to avoid these problems.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I would first of all like to say that on this side of the House, we feel that—

[English]

This Bill is very narrow in its scope. It is necessary in order to implement measures that were in the intent and spirit of the law, but we have to take this opportunity to register with the Government the fact that the law known under the name of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act is flawed and must be corrected.

The first reason concerns the fact that the federal Government cannot set national enforceable standards as we experienced in the case of PCBs. The next reason is that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) is the only person in Canada who can seek an injunction to stop a violation of the Act. Then there is the shortcoming that the law, per se, lacks a prohibition clause which does, for instance, exist in Section 33 of the Fisheries Act and which would make the release of any pollutant, not just those listed in the Schedules of the Act, an offence.

Finally, in the event of an emergency, the federal Government cannot move alone but must have consultations with the affected provinces. This, in the case of an emergency, is not a very desirable requirement.

The enforceable national standards were lost in the discussion in committee when the Canadian Environmental Protection Act eventually became law. It was lost in three stages as it went through the legislative committee process. It was in essence a political decision by the Conservative Government which was ready and willing to give up its right to establish and enforce federal regulations. That development was tantamount to the abdication of federal powers to create and allow for the formation and implementation of federally enforceable national standards.

• (1840)

The first practical application came about with the PCB regulations. You will recall that in the aftermath of the Saint-Basile-le-Grand tragedy and disaster the federal Government finally decided to move. The first item on the agenda was safe storage. At that time the then Minister of the Environment was quoted as saying, "The actions I am taking ensure that PCB storage sites in every part of Canada meet high national standards".

Well, within two months nine provinces had sought and obtained exemption from such standards. By May 12, 1989, all provinces except Prince Edward Island and the Territories were granted exemption from the so-called high national standards of the former Minister of the Environment.

In order to be recognized as equivalent standards, the provinces simply have to meet two criteria. The first criterion is that there must be a provincial investigation process similar to the one contained in Sections 108 to 110 of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. Briefly, Mr. Speaker, these two sections allow two individuals to request that the Minister of the Environment investigate an alleged violation of the Act. The Minister must then investigate the allegations and report in writing in 90 days on whether or not charges will be laid.

The second requirement which exists under the Environmental Protection Act is that the regulations in the provinces must be the same as the federal regulations. As far as we can determine there is not a province in Canada which has the same provisions for investigation of an offence as are contained in the federal law.

It is astounding that provinces are not required to have the same penalties and fines as are contained in the federal legislation in order to be granted this equivalency. This makes a mockery of the statements made by the previous Minister of the Environment, the present one, and the Government in general that the Canadian Environmental Protection Act is the toughest legislation in the western hemisphere.

If the provinces are able to supersede federal law with penalties that are a fraction of the federal penalties the concept of national standards is evidently seriously eroded. So while the facade looks very strong, behind the facade there is weakness.

Furthermore, the equivalency provisions of the Environmental Protection Act, as it stands now, and the way that the PCB storage regulations were handled considerably erode our confidence in the commitment of the Government to bring in tough and enforceable national standards for other toxic substances, as in the case of CFCs, dioxins, furans, et cetera.

In their publication Healing the Sky released just a few days ago Friends of the Earth say that under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act the Minister of the Environment has the power to do several things. For instance, the Minister can ban immediately chlorofluorocarbons in aerosols, in rug underpadding and foam packaging. He can ban chlorofluorocarbons in polystyrene foam insulation, solvents for metal cleaning, and flexible foam by July of next year. He can ban the use of chlorofluorocarbons in new car air conditioners which are not hermetically sealed as of the 1991 model year. He can ban chlorofluorocarbons used as solvents in the electronics industry and for sterilization also by July, 1991. Finally, he can require recycling, recovery, system modifications and selective replacement with alternative chillers by the year 1992.

Taken together these five initiatives, in the opinion of Friends of the Earth, could reduce the production of chlorofluorocarbons in Canada by 67 per cent within the next three years. It is important that this publication be somehow brought to the attention of this House because it is relevant to the purpose and the technical intent—but nevertheless the intent—of the Bill we are debating because it relates to chlorofluorocarbons.

But, Mr. Speaker—and this is a big "but"—in order to proceed with these five suggestions and implement them the Minister must utilize enforceable national standards. Allowing provinces to opt out through the equivalency provisions would seriously endanger the success of such a reduction program because the enforcement that the regulations would end could vary from province to province. This is where the problem would arise.

Therefore, whether it is PCBs, chlorofluorocarbons, dioxins or a toxic substance yet to be identified, the Canadian Environment Protection Act will be successful in cleaning up Canada only if it is implemented and enforced nationally. The Minister of the Environment need not grant equivalency provisions to provinces that seek them. We would urge, on the contrary, the Minister to exert the force of a strong federalism in the protection of the environment. He will achieve that end in relation to the chlorofluorocarbons and the five measures suggested by Friends of the Earth and in relation to other substances that are still to be covered in the Schedule of the Bill, on which we hope there will be swift movement on the part of the Government once Bill C–22 is passed, only if he invokes national enforceable standards and makes them the instrument and the priority of the Government when it comes to cleaning up the environment.

Bill C–22 allows an opportunity to deal beyond the narrow technical scope of the Bill itself because behind the proposed changes there is this big and important question of national enforceable standards to which the Government, unfortunately, is not paying attention.

We have had this experience with PCBs. You have heard the description of what happened, Mr. Speaker. We would not like to have that experience again whereby the vast majority of the provinces seek an exemption, apply their own so–called equivalency standards, but do not have in place the same measures for compliance, enforcement and penalties as has the federal legislation. This serious shortcoming must be brought to your attention and to the attention of the Government, Mr. Speaker.

I see that the Parliamentary Secretary is listening very attentively, as he always does, and I am sure that he will register these views in discussions with his Minister. Because he believes in strong enforceable national standards I am sure that he will lend a hand in ensuring that in the toxic substances yet to be detected those standards will not be by–passed by way of equivalency sought by the provinces.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that I did not recognize the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) before the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). It was just an oversight. It is getting late in the afternoon.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I know you were very busy just prior to this debate beginning. That probably had something to do with it.

We are on third reading of Bill C–22 which Members of this House know is rather a short Bill. It amends Sections 33 and 34 of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. The officials like to describe it as a housekeeping matter, but in fact there are nine families of toxic substances on Schedule I of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act that simply cannot be regulated at the moment other than through interim orders which are very difficult and unwieldy.

Of particular interest to the House, and I think to Canadians, is the reason for the urgency in getting this Bill through and why Members of this House are working together so that it can become law and so that substances such as chlorofluorocarbons can in fact be more expeditiously regulated.

Unfortunately what we have learned during the rather brief committee hearings that we have had on Bill C–22 on CFCs is that the approach being taken by the Government of Canada, and particularly by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard), are totally inadequate. As we can see from their most recent publication of April, 1989, called Preserving the Ozone Layer: A Step Beyond, a report on options for meeting Canada's objectives to completely eliminate emissions of controlled ozone depleting substances within the next 10 years, is, by definition, an inadequate response to an extremely serious and severe global problem, namely the depletion of the ozone layer.

In this publication on preserving the ozone layer, the principal culprits or problems that we have throughout the world, and certainly in wide use in Canada, are listed in seven main categories: rigid foam, flexible foam, refrigeration and air conditioning, solvents, sterilants, bromofluorocarbons which are more commonly and widely known as halons, and aerosols. I think the first couple of paragraphs of the publication are worth putting on the record for those who want to have a better understanding of the process that has been gone through by the Government of Canada before I put some other remarks on the record as to what we should really be doing.

> Global efforts to address stratospheric ozone depletion have been under way since 1981. The Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer entered into force on September 22, 1988.
> As of March 1, 1989, 37 countries, representing the vast majority of the industrialized nations of the world, had ratified this Convention. The Convention provides the framework for co–operative activities, including the exchange of data or information related to the ozone layer. This Convention provides for the subsequent creation of protocols (free standing treaties) for matters such as control of specific pollutants or families of pollutants. The first such Protocol created was the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer.

The Montreal Protocol was signed in Montreal, Canada on September 16, 1987. It is clearly a watershed in co-operative and collaborative international undertakings. It introduces many new features never before established in international law.

The Montreal Protocol has two requirements for entry into force; namely, 11 signatures of ratification by countries and these countries must represent at least two-thirds of global consumption of the controlled substances. The Montreal Protocol entered into force on January 1, 1989 and as of March, 1989 had already obtained 33 ratifications, again representing most of the industrialized states of the world.

In May, 1988, Environment Canada published its first Control Options Report titled: "Preserving the Ozone Layer: a first step". This report set out a series of options to implement regulations to meet Canada's obligations under the Montreal Protocol.

The Montreal Protocol calls for a 50 per cent cut back in the 1986 levels of consumption of five chlorofluorocarbons (CFC 11, 12, 113, 114, 115) and a freeze at 1986 consumption levels of three brominated fluorocarbons called Halons (Halon 1211, 1301, 2402). At a series of United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) meetings held in the Hague, Netherlands, in October 1988 the world's leading scientists expressed the consensus viewpoint that the Antarctic hole will remain unless the emissions of controlled CFCs are reduced by at least 85 per cent from the 1986 levels. The target reductions contained in the Montreal Protocol are currently undergoing international review. This review is expected to culminate in amendments that will tighten the Montreal Protocol.

Canada contributed to both the organization and conduct of the UNEP meeting in the Hague and fully supports the notion of reducing consumption further.

On February 20, 1989 the Federal Government of Canada announced that it had set as its objective the complete elimination of controlled CFCs within the next ten years.

It also called on the rest of the world to set as its common target a reduction of no less than 85 per cent by no later than 1999.

As I said, at the brief committee meetings that we have had in the last while, we learned a number of interesting things; in particular that not only is Canada not moving fast enough; most countries and most political leaders around the world are not taking this matter in any way seriously enough.

I pointed out the seven main families of materials in use in our society that need immediate reduction and recycling and re-use. The breakdown in terms of CFCs in Canada right now are aerosols, 9 per cent, rigid foams, 33 per cent, flexible foams, 8 per cent, in the field of refrigeration, 36 per cent, domestic refrigerators composing 3 per cent and solvents, 10 per cent.

As we heard from witnesses, we must move to stop the easy ones. Many of those were identified. We must make the technology available now and make the removal of CFCs, for example, from home refrigerators mandatory. Then, if one needs a reinjection of CFCs, one can take it from other units that are being disposed of for other reasons.

In regard to automobiles, as we heard from witnesses yesterday, they lose up to 35 per cent of CFCs from their air conditioning units within the first couple of years of operation because the units are not hermetically sealed. Then there are the big refrigeration units and so on. There are ways now to immediately and dramatically reduce the amount escaping into the atmosphere. The Government of Canada and the provincial Governments are not taking serious enough action to introduce the technology, to train the maintenance personnel, to make recycling equipment available at auto wreckers, at car dealers, at gas stations and so on, to make sure that CFCs that are escaping or are likely to escape are recovered.

As we heard from witnesses from General Electric last night, one of the problems that is addressable by the Government of Canada is that CFCs right now only cost between $1 or $2 a pound. They are very inexpensive. So in fact there is encouragement to continue to allow the release and the incomplete design and construction of compressors and holding equipment that have CFCs in them.

We heard from the refrigeration people that the foam that has CFCs in it loses 10 per cent of its CFCs over the life of the fridge. As I have said, automobiles lose 35 per cent from their air conditioners. To give some idea of what kind of quantities are in your average size fridge, there are two to four pounds of CFC 11 which is in the insulation and six to eight ounces of CFC 12 which is in the cooling system.

We heard from Mr. John Bennett of Greenpeace before the committee earlier this week who gave an excellent brief called "Stop It Now" which is its response to the Canadian CFC Control Program. Its suggestions are the following: Ban the production of CFCs and halons in Canada; expand the list of controlled ozone depleting compounds and establish a national recycling and recovery program. These seem to me, Mr. Speaker, to be things on which the Government could move if it were listening seriously enough to what the international scientific community is saying, not only about the Antarctic ozone hole but about the holes that are now starting to appear over northern Canada. There may, in fact, be other holes and depletion areas within the ozone layer that simply have not yet been identified. The brief goes on to say:

> There are millions of tonnes of chlorine floating around in the atmosphere destroying the ozone layer. If we do not stop polluting it now we will not be able to protect our children,—

Also included is a rather appropriate quotation from Dr. Klaus Toepfer, Environment Minister for the Federal Republic of Germany. He said:

> "The affluent society is not dependent on CFCs. But even if it were, one would, I believe, have to accept this cut in living standards."

For a CFC control plan the witness from Greenpeace suggested a number of areas that need to be moved on: One, timing. Two, controlled compounds. Three, disclosure of information. Four, environmentally safe alternatives. Under the heading "Timing" we find the following:

> The earth can no longer afford the cost of a slow phase-out of CFC production and use.
>
> The Government of Canada must immediately ban the production of CFCs and halons and limit their use to an extremely few exceptions for life-saving applications.
>
> The Government of Canada must immediately increase its commitment to preserving the ozone layer by substantially expanding the resources it devotes to eliminating ozone depletion and expanding its enforcement capability.
> The Government of Canada must immediately establish national regulations requiring recovery and recycling of CFC refrigerants in all applications until new technology replaces them.

Let me say the proposal made by Mr. Bennett is so obviously capable of being implemented. The compressor technology for removing CFCs from existing units is available. It could be made substantially more compact and movable to be taken out of utility vans into the home. It can be easily moved around in plants where CFCs need to be moved between different pieces of equipment. The technology, the effort and I am sure the will of the Canadian public is there to participate in such a program even if it costs more, Mr. Speaker. We have learned from poll after poll that Canadians are prepared to pay significantly more for a safe, healthy, clean environment. What is missing, the fundamental missing link, is political will. That political will is missing right now from the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) to take the kinds of serious steps he is capable of taking under CEPA. It goes on to say:

> The Government of Canada must immediately establish a national recycling program and not leave it up to municipalities or other governments to operate as indicated in "Preserving the Ozone Layer".

We have heard in this House many times the problems right across the country of cars simply being wrecked with their air conditioning systems in them. CFCs are released. The same is true of refrigeration units and many other things. Under the heading "Controlled Compounds" Greenpeace suggests that the list of controlled substances must be expanded to include HCFCs, methyl chloroform and carbon tetrachloride. We have yet to hear from the Minister of the Environment what his plans are on those compounds.

• (1900)

The Environmental Policy Institute and the Institute for Energy and Environmental Research in the United States examined various scenarios for eliminating carbon tetrachloride and methyl chloroform in addition to controlled CFCs and halons. The study suggests that if emissions of these CFCs decline to zero by 1995, if carbon tetrachloride growth rate was in the middle of the zero to 3 per cent range cited by the World Meteorological Organization and methyl chloroform grew by less than the WMO's 8 per cent projection, atmospheric chlorine levels would increase from 30 million tons in 1987 to over 90 million tons by the year 2000. Alternatively, if carbon tetrachloride and methyl chloroform were phased out by the year 2000, chlorine levels would fall from 30 million tons to 1.7 million tons by the year 2000. It is essential for the Government of Canada to ban carbon tetrachloride and methyl chloroform and to ensure these compounds are included in the international agreements on the ozone layer.

On international activity, Greenpeace states:

> The Government of Canada must support an international fund to aid Third World countries in complying with a 100 per cent CFC ban.
> Secondly, the Government of Canada should promote a vastly expanded international program which includes banning all CFCs, Halons, HCFCs, methylchloroform and carbon tetrachloride.

On disclosure of information, as suggested by Greenpeace, Canada should support Norway, the U.S.S.R., New Zealand and Zambia in calling for the public release of data on a country-by-country and product-by-product basis for all ozone depleters. For anyone who has been around here for a while, or involved in politics anywhere, knows that access to information is absolutely fundamental to getting public support and political action for safe alternatives.

On environmentally safe alternatives, Canada should move completely away from chlorine-based substitutes, as there are a range of serious toxic pollution problems associated with them quite apart from their ozone depleting and global warming potentials. The solution to the CFC problem is in finding the best alternatives that are not synthetic. We come to the "100 per cent reduction, is it feasible?" In the refrigeration sector, a large volume of CFCs are stored in existing commercial freezer and cold storage systems. Much of the demand for CFCs in this sector is artificially created by wastage and could be met by recovery and recycling. As much as 70 per cent of the CFCs used in refrigeration is lost through leaks and other wastage.

As for foam blowing, packaging for hamburgers and fast foods, other presently available products can be substituted. Insulant foam used in building can be eliminated in most applications by use of alternatives without serious technical or cost consequences. CFCs used in solvents can often be replaced by aqueous cleaning, which preceded the use of CFC-113. Some solvent use can be replaced with organic terpenes and "clean mount" techniques. The use of halons can be avoided by installing other types of systems; for example, carbon dioxide or water sprinklers combined with other measures. Recovery and recycling of existing halons could service existing fire-fighting equipment where halons are used in life-saving applications for which no other substitutes can be found.

On ozone depletion, we find that the earth's ozone layer is being destroyed by chlorine and bromine released into the stratosphere by a group of chemical compounds known as chlorofluorocarbons and halons. The depletion of the ozone layer will result in skin cancers, eye damage and crop destruction as increasing amounts of ultraviolet radiation from the sun reach the earth's surface.

Already, British scientists and NASA have identified a hole in the ozone layer over Antarctica and a thin area of the ozone layer over the northern hemisphere has been observed. Alarmed by the rapid depletion of the ozone layer, more than 40 western nations signed the 1987 Montreal Protocol which calls for a 50 per cent reduction of CFC emissions by 1999.

Joe Farman in the New Scientist for November 1987 said:

> A 50 per cent cut in world consumption of CFCs will not be enough to save the ozone layer. The emissions of CFCs are so large that they are accumulating rapidly. If we wish the amounts of CFCs to remain constant, we must cut emissions so that they are equal to the losses, that is to say, roughly 15 per cent of the current level.

Joe Farman, a member of the British Antarctic Survey, is credited with identifying the hole in the ozone layer.

In 1988 the EPA said to maintain stratosphere chlorine at current levels would require a 100 per cent phase-out of the Montreal CFCs with 100 per cent participation. In other words, just to maintain the ozone layer in its present state there must be an immediate 100 per cent reduction of CFC production.

If there is more time, Mr. Speaker, I could go on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

PLANT BREEDERS' RIGHTS ACT

MOTION THAT DEBATE BE NOT FURTHER ADJOURNED

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I move:

Plant Breeders' Rights

That the debate on second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-15, and on any amendments proposed thereto, shall not be further adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion which was agreed to on the following division:

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present in both official languages the first report of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs, a review of the Post-secondary Students Assistance Program of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

ENVIRONMENT—SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. David MacDonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present in both official languages the second report of the Standing Committee on Environment relating to the Order in Council appointment of Raymond Robinson as Administrator in matters involving federal jurisdiction for the purpose of Sections 22 and 23 of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement.

Pursuant to Standing Order 109, the committee requests that the Government table a comprehensive response.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that there have not been discussions among the Parties but we are now debating Bill C-15 at second reading and I want to advise the House that in the event a recorded division is required at the end of debate at second reading of Bill C-15, the Government would be prepared to apply the result of the vote just taken to that recorded division.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader's timing is just a hair off tonight.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: If the Government is going to invoke closure on this very critical Bill, I think it is appropriate that Government Members be forced to stand up and show the people of Canada how they are voting.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is no agreement.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PLANT BREEDERS' RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-15, an Act respecting plant breeder's rights, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to speak to this Bill being brought in under closure at second reading. It is a very complex Bill which will have a profound impact on this country and the potential food supply of this country if allowed to pass in its present form.

I recall as a young child going with my father in a Model A Ford to pick up registered seed grain from a local seed company. I remember him harvesting the wheat the next year when, in turn, he would sell that to other farmers in the area.

The advances in crop technology and plant breeding since that time have more than doubled the yields of those plants. This has been done through research by private companies as well as through the tremendous research and leadership performed by Agriculture Canada and the scientists there.

It is only in recent years that they pushed back the climatic borders by approximately 250 miles for the production of corn here in Canada through plant breeding. Just a few years ago only a certain area of Ontario could produce corn. Through selective plant breeding they were able to push back those boundaries. Those varieties were developed to a large extent by the scientists who work at Agriculture Canada on our behalf.

This Bill disturbs me when I consider all the hunger in the world today, in places like Ethiopia. We have varieties of sorghum that will grow and thrive under conditions there. In fact, it is grown in the Sudan but is not being made available to the starving Ethiopians. In this context, we can only suggest that food is being used as a weapon. If legislation like this is passed without proper safeguards, it is not inconceivable that a few very large companies could hold the world to ransom in terms of their food supplies.

As a result of a previous drug Bill in the last Parliament, Bill C–22, we saw drug prices double in a very few months after that Bill became law, in spite of the assurances that this would never happen. It can happen in this case because this Bill has several flaws that I think have to be corrected, hopefully in committee if the Government intends to put the Bill through.

Let me outline a few areas of concern.

• (2000)

The first is subclause 2(2) and subclause 6(1) wherein there is provision that a country could protect varieties of certain species for 15 years, but in Canada that could be 18 years. I have no problem whatsoever with protecting some varieties for 18 years, but varieties of what? Grapevines or fruit trees, yes, but not seeds, not grain seed or vegetables or other types that mature in a matter of a few months or a year. Many grapevines are over 100 years old and are still producing. In fact, some of them even get better with time.

I could accept the 18–year provision for trees or grapes, but then I find that some of our Canadian scientists, some of whom are working with CIDA in Thailand, have developed new species of trees that will mature in eight years. We also have dwarf apple trees which will produce in a matter of three or four years. In committee we must look very hard at that 18–year provision. The limit for grains must be stipulated in the Bill, whether it is five, six or seven years.

My experience over the years has been that when a new variety of corn, wheat, or beans comes on the market, after six or seven years that variety starts to run out, as they say. It is not as good as it was the first year it was put on the market. Therefore, there must be a constant renewal of varieties, new developments that are disease resistant, resistant to the various types of bacteria, insects, or blights that may affect them.

Another area that I must question is that both federal and provincial Governments must comply with the provisions of plant breeders' rights. Usually what happens within a province is under provincial jurisdiction and what happens in international and interprovincial trade is under federal jurisdiction. I must wonder about why both levels of government must comply. Are we in fact imposing this on the provinces, and will they accept it?

Another area that we must look at in detail is the expansion of farmers' rights. They are mentioned in the Bill. A farmer is only given permission to grow his own seed from that which he has bought. He cannot help out a neighbour by giving him a few bushels to help him get established, or he cannot give some to a son. There was a drought in three of the last four years and farmers are very hard–pressed financially. I think there should be a relaxation of farmers' rights to enable them to give a few bushels to a neighbour or a son or to help someone in need without having to break the law.

This one is a real sleeper because it allows one to purchase seed in another country without infringing on plant breeders' rights as long as one does not plant the seed. I am speaking now of subclause 5(2). This would allow me to go to the State of Michigan in the United States and purchase seed without infringing on plant breeders' rights, but I cannot plant it when I bring it back home. If I cannot plant it, what in the world am I going to do with it? It will be treated with various seed treatments to protect it from insects and various diseases, but what do you do with treated seed? You certainly cannot eat it.

The danger in this clause is that if a multi–national seed company wanted to ensure that we in Canada are not given access to a certain superior variety of seed it can do so under subclause 5(2).

Under subclause 5(4) both the federal and provincial Governments may collect royalties on their varieties. This clause seems to make a great deal of sense until we realize that there is nothing in it that requires these royalties to go back into research in the public interest. The Government has cut research funding dramatically since 1984. I believe that a major portion of any earnings from royalties should be funnelled back into research in the public interest to develop new species and varieties of plant seed.

There is nothing in this Bill to prevent a company from collecting very large royalties under this legislation. In fact in England these fees start out very low and then increase over several years.

It is very simple to see what will happen here. If a company develops any variety of seed, all it needs to do is let a few bushels out on the market for the first few years in test plots and publish the results. It can fertilize these plots very heavily and grow the plants under almost perfect conditions. It can publish the yields and through advertising promote these varieties very extensively. After they are out for a few years and it has done a lot of advertising, it can start jacking up the royalties. There is nothing in this legislation to stop it.

There is nothing in the legislation to stop a company from withdrawing a popular variety of plant from the market-place and replacing it with another on which it can collect a higher level of royalties. I think that is a very dangerous clause to have in the legislation without a ceiling to protect not only the rights of the farmers and producers but, in turn, to give the companies a return on their money.

I need only think back a few years to some of the supposedly new and superior varieties of wheat that were brought into Ontario. They did not originate here. I am not going to name them, but we all know that after a few years of experience with them we found they were not as good as some of our older varieties of wheat that had been on the market for several years. They were more prone to sprouting during a season of more moisture than is normal in Ontario. The heads stood straight up when they were ripe, consequently when the rains hit, the hulls acted as a cup and held the moisture around the germination end of the seed. The older varieties would turn over and shed the rain when they were ripe. A lot of farmers bought these new varieties thinking they were going to increase their yields. Even if they did increase their yields slightly, they ended up with a lot of sprouted wheat.

With regard to the seeds, again I will use the soybean seed as an example. The price of seed went up even though the price of commercial beans dropped dramatically this spring. These companies know that there is a captive market out there, and they charge what the market will bear.

Of course, this is nothing new in terms of farm input costs. For several years one chemical company was selling one particular patented type of herbicide for about twice as much in Canada as it was charging in other countries. I submit that these seed companies will do the same. They will charge whatever the traffic will bear when they get their protective legislation.

Clause 31 permits a variety to be assigned to another person. I presume that a person can be a corporation in the eyes of the law and, of course, if this is the case, there is nothing to stop a company from another country buying a variety and taking it off the market only to corner the market for its own particular products.

In Canada we already have an organization in place to market varieties produced by Agriculture Canada or the universities. That organization is SeCan which collects levies and royalties on the sale of new varieties. SeCan has about 2,200 members and membership is voluntary. In a sense it operates a partial plant breeders' rights system of marketing now, by marketing certified seed, of crops covered by Agriculture Canada's variety registration system.

One thing that is not known at this time is whether the royalties paid by our growers to foreign breeders will exceed or be balanced by royalties paid to Canadian breeders by foreign growers once a significant trade of protected varieties is established. We do not know at this time whether that balance of trade for new varieties developed will be in Canada's favour or will be against us.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if we continue to cut back the research in Agriculture Canada and deprive the research scientists and the plant breeders of the funding they desperately need, the balance will very quickly turn to a deficit trade balance of seed produced in Canada.

• (2010)

We have persons saying that the multinationals will only dominate the industry if the public breeding program is seriously diminished and if the private varieties are superior. However, we have no commitment from the Government that the public programs will continue, with the cut-backs in research involved in plant breeding, if it is left to the private sector outside of Canada.

I have some very serious reservations about this Bill. I hope that the Minister and the Government will consider making some major changes in committee. They have not come up with a dollar cost on the administration of this Bill. I think they should do that and look at the areas of concern that we have here in the Official Opposition.

From my own personal experience—I used to be a registered seed grower a few years back—one of the things we have to look at very seriously is the 18-year protection. Just to recap, it is far too long for any grains or seeds with the exception of grapes, orchard trees or fruit trees.

We should have a system of satellite seed banks established across Canada, not just the central bank here in the Ottawa region. We could keep samples of the various types of seeds that are grown in the Prairies, for example, in an environmentally controlled room. They could be stored for up to 300 years. These should be kept in the public trust so that no company could ever get their hands on them and destroy the parent genes and seeds. There should be satellite banks not just in the prairie provinces, but in British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec, and Atlantic Canada to protect the public interest. The cost of these would not be that great. A single room of about 400 square feet in the basement of any environmentally controlled building would be sufficient. We have also to beef up the farmers' rights and ensure that it is not a criminal act to give a bag of a particular variety of seed to a neighbour or to a son.

The fourth thing that I want to stress—and these again are my own personal thoughts on this matter—are that the royalties have to be directed back into research by Agriculture Canada. This issue is too important to be left to private corporations or the private sector.

We have some of the best research scientists in Canada. They have developed some of the best varieties in the world. Our western Canadian wheat grown out of Saskatchewan is the highest quality of wheat grown anywhere in the world. We simply cannot let those quality factors be diminished by turning it over to the private sector.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speech by the Member from Lambton—Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson). I hope that much of what he said will be attended by the government side.

I do not count myself in any way an expert or even significantly knowledgeable about the impact of this legislation on agriculture in Canada or elsewhere. I do know that there are grounds for significant concern.

I am reminded of the debate on Bill C-22 which bore some similarity to this legislation. This legislation, however, has to do with living material. It has to do with germplasm. What this would do is provide a measure of exclusivity, 18 years of exclusivity, to those who have provided by means of genetic manipulation a plant variety that is sufficiently new, sufficiently distinguishable and sufficiently stable to be distinguished from other varieties or cultivars of that species of plant.

It is interesting that this exclusivity is based on the final product. There is nothing here which meets the test that patents are required to fulfil. It might be of use to refer back to a decision by Lord Duneden in Pope Alliance Corporation v. the Spanish River Pulp and Paper Mill, 1929 A.C. 269, page 281, where he states that a patent represents a quid pro quo. The quid to the patentee is the monopoly. The quo is that he presents to the public the knowledge it does not have.

Of course it is quite notable that in producing a new breed of plant, a new cultivar that has some significant utility, its newness, its distinctiveness, its homogeneity, and its stability as a final product are the characteristics which will determine whether a licence in effect will be accorded and whether exclusivity or a monopoly will be provided.

There is no requirement to describe the process of making those plans which have been used in developing the new breed available to others so that they can build on the germplasm pool that resulted in this new cultivar. In according a monopoly, we are denied the knowledge that usually goes with the patent. We are also denied knowledge of what plants, what germplasm needs to be preserved in the event that that new final product, the new breed of plant, the new cultivar should, as plants often do, lose their characteristics so that the process could in turn be repeated even after the 18 years of exclusivity.

There have been a number of objections raised to this kind of legislation, objections which I think sustain the request, indeed the demand, on the part of many that this Bill be accorded broad hearings so that the public will have an opportunity to make its case.

I think it would be appropriate however to consider just for a moment what is really involved here. I am a biologist. I never really thought that living things should be the particular property of anybody. As we develop these new high-test breeds with fantastic characteristics, with the ability to withstand pests, insects, disease, climates, different soils, and so on, we have operated on the availability of genetic variation that exists within the species throughout the world.

• (2020)

Where did wheat come from? Where did barley come from? Where did potatoes come from? Where did the vast majority of the cultivated plants that serve human needs come from?

They did not come from the major industrial northern nations that now would impose exclusivity on a living thing. Virtually every significant food plant has come originally from the Third World, South America, the Caribbean, Southern Asia, and Africa. From the very beginning, dating from 1492, Columbus grabbed up maize, tobacco and a number of other things. He took them to Europe. In subsequent voyages there was the transport of plants from Africa and Asia back to North America, so there has been established a degree of homogeneity in availability of certain kinds of plants in the tropics. Dating from 1492 the northern industrial first world nations have taken the germplasm from the south to produce the agricultural giants that the northern nations have become.

In fact, right after the Second World War, this process went on to the extent that at the turn of the century 70 per cent of the budget of the American Department of Agriculture was devoted, dare I say it, to stealing the germplasm from the Third World. In contrast to coal, oil, and the forests germplasm was considered to be the calm and property of all mankind. We stand here today talking about taking that very germplasm that was stolen from the Third World and putting a patent on it as it is put into new combinations. Those will be secret combinations and will provide the basis for profit for the corporations. They will argue that they have injected human knowledge into this and therefore they should be paid for it. Well, it is possible if one considers, as I did earlier, the decision of Justice Duneden that there be a revelation of the content of an invention. That might put a different shape on it.

This process, as I have said before, of stealing the germplasm from the Third World continues. Much of the variety of the germplasm exists in the land races that are cultivated in the Third World, land races which can provide the kind of variability and the kinds of genes that can be used to create new breeds. These will have new characteristics which will be advantageous in northern climes.

Let me say something about those land races just for a moment. There are two characteristics to those land races. They display a great deal of variability and a field or contiguous fields of land races may have the capacity to withstand with minor losses all kinds of environmental or biological attacks. They have worked out quite well. Those land races are still being used and will be used by the corporations that we seek to protect in this legislation to produce those new varieties with their secret germplasm content, but those land races did not just jump up there on the soil.

Those land races are the product of human knowledge in the Third World. If it is justified to provide huge profits for exclusive knowledge to First World industrial nation corporations, then why is it not of equal importance to ensure that those poor peasant farmers, who with their traditional knowledge have created something new, be similarly awarded for their contribution through human knowledge?

There is an asymmetry there that is not unusual in this world. It seems to me that this country should be seeking to resolve this situation to the benefit not of the multinational corporations but of humankind and defer to the profit of the Third World. It is of interest to us to make sure that those aboriginal species, those land races and other variations that occur in the Third World be maintained. Perhaps we can find means of ensuring the maintenance of that and find a suitable way of compensating the Third World for its contribution. There is no justice in saying that there is property resident in the industrial nations but the property of the Third World is a part of a common heritage.

This is a significant and serious consideration and I know that you are pondering it with the greatest seriousness, Mr. Speaker. I hope that your colleagues, the Conservative Members on the other side, will similarly consider it.

There have been a number of other more domestic concerns raised about this legislation. Canada has done quite well really in the production of new plant breeds through the involvement of the Department of Agriculture and the universities. We produce breeds of grain, wheat and so on which are quite suitable to the Canadian climate and conditions. We have invested as a nation in this.

One has to ask a serious question: if we are going to open this up according to the multinational's exclusivity, a licensing of an 18–year exclusivity, is there not a danger that given the history of this Government inevitably the private sector will overtake the Government and industrial sectors?

Those areas will be increasingly devoted to basic research while, in fact, the private industry—and read there multinational corporations—will take over by deliberate intent. Remember this is the privatization Government: "We will take over by a deliberate intent the production of new breeds of plants for the farmers of this land".

I do not have to tell you what the implications of that might be because the implications are clear. Monopolies and oligopolies will be established in which relatively few large companies will take over and, of course, prices will rise for the farmer and the cost of food will rise for the consumer. There is another element in this that I think should concern everybody. That concern resides in the list of corporations which are engaged in plant breeding. I am sure that you are going to be very interested in this: Shell, Sandoz, deKopp–Pfizer, Upjohn, Ciba–Geigy, and ICI. That sounds like a list of companies that produce chemicals and pesticides.

I know you are not a devious man, Mr. Speaker, and so you would not want a devious company. I am sure that you can understand that there might be a terrible temptation out there, given the power of genetic engineering, the power of my own field, indeed, biology, to manipulate and that unbeknownst to the farmer those companies might very well be producing plants which are dependent upon pesticides and herbicides. What a trick that would be: sell the plant, you cannot get the new breed from anybody else. You plant that devil and find out it will not grow without 2,4D.

This has been a notion that has been dismissed by some but it is very difficult not to be extremely suspicious when we read the names of the companies which have the greatest interest in all of this. I think that we should know a good deal more about those possibilities before we allow this Government to push this legislation through without considerable thought. We have a good, solid plant breeders' effort in this country right now through Government and the universities that serves the farmer well. If the farmers are served well, the consumers are served well.

I do not see that there has been provided significant justification for a change in that situation, given the considerations involved. So I say to you, Mr. Speaker, not from a position of erudition but of concern, that this is not a piece of legislation which should be passed by one o'clock tonight. I hope that it will be given months of consideration by all of the interested parties, consideration of the interests of Canadians generally, farmers specifically, our role in the world and the interest which we should have as Canadians to ensure fairness not only within our own country but internationally. This would ensure the maintenance of the germplasm so necessary for securing our future and the availability of food, and that nothing will restrict the amount or the availability of the germplasm pool. This is really the common heritage of all of us and not that of Shell, Sandoz or any of those other big guys on the other side of our southern borders.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, following the thoughtful intervention of the Member for Lambton—Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) and the Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair (Mr. McCurdy), it makes me wonder whether there is much that can be added to what has already been put on the record.

On the other hand, some points have to be stressed again, and perhaps some new territory has to be covered. It seems to me that with this plant breeders' rights Bill we are debating what could be described as the heart of the concept of sustainable development, particularly as it affects certain parts of the world.

Once again, this Conservative Government has succeeded in not practising what it preaches. Alas, this measure reveals also the limited understanding on the part of this Conservative Government of global environmental and developmental issues. It is a very distressing conclusion that one has to arrive at, after learning by way of a very interesting process, the implications of this plant breeders' rights Bill. It has certainly been quite a learning experience for me. It seems that a background picture needs to be given in order to appreciate the implications of this Bill.

The genetic resources essential to world agriculture—and I am heavily drawing from material prepared by genetic resources of our world organization—are increasingly controlled by multinational corporations. New crops are developed for economic reasons, including higher yields, uniformity, stability and ease of transportation, at the time and expense of public objectives, including nutrition, environmental protection, Third World development, as others have already stressed, and the protection and preservation of smaller-scale farming.

The new varieties are genetically uniform and therefore susceptible to wipe-out by disease or bad weather. The original varieties are disappearing, resulting in a dangerous depletion of the gene pool, to which the Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair just referred.

What Bill C-15 seems to be doing, if it is implemented, is to reinforce monoculture, chemical agriculture and finally, private control of this precious public resource which is called seed. Plain, important, vital seed. To increase funding to Canada's world-class plant breeding program within Agriculture Canada and the Canadian universities to ensure a truly Canadian response to the environmental and food scarcity problems facing the world today is the objective we would like to see translated by this Bill. However, we do not see it. With the plant breeders' rights legislation, knowledge becomes an industrial secret and research becomes accountable to corporate interests and to considerations related to profit-making. That is not the way to go. In detail, the measure would lead to the use of more pesticides in food and agriculture. In the 1988 edition of The Economist—I do not know which month exactly—it reported and I quote:

> Chemical companies have spent $10 billion or so in as many years buying up seed companies worldwide—

It lists companies such as Pioneer Hi-Bred, Sandoz, Dekalb-Pfizer, Upjohn, Limagrain, Shell Oil, ICI, Ciba-Geigy, Orson and Cargill as the world's 10 largest companies in the business of seed. Seven of these 10 companies are also involved in crop chemicals. That is the important linkage which one has to keep in mind in order to understand the implication and the impact of this measure. At least six of these companies already sell seeds in Canada.

If the plant breeders' rights proposal Bill becomes law, then the trend will escalate. More than 50 per cent of seed research and development within private industry is focused on building the tolerance of new seed varieties to higher and higher concentrations of agricultural chemicals produced by these same companies. That is where the interesting link emerges. Canadian farmers will most likely be forced to bear the cost of seed royalties as well as increased input costs. The increased cost of food production will of course eventually be passed on to Canadian consumers who have already stated loud and clear that they do not want harmful chemicals in their food. Currently there are 4,000 registered commercial and restricted pesticides on the market in Canada.

• (2040)

The second impact of this proposed legislation would be to limit sustainable agriculture. Many farmers see organic farming as being one way to reduce the effects of the current financial and environmental crises facing Canadian agriculture. Fewer inputs are needed in organic farming and costs are much lower. Net income is often much higher in organic farming then in conventional chemical food production. The health of consumers, of the environment, of livestock and of family farm members is, of course, better protected through organic farming. We have seen on The Journal in recent weeks of a farmer who, because of the use of pesticides over a period of time, incurred a form of lymphoma.

If plant breeders' rights are adopted in Canada, organic farmers and converting farmers will not be able to get the seed varieties they need, varieties that are not dependent on pesticides and fertilizers to grow well. That is where the crux of the matter lies.

In addition, there is the decline of the gene pool which has been so well covered by those who have spoken before me. It is important to know that when seed companies develop a successful variety, it becomes a dominating seed on the market, but new varieties, I am told, typically rest on a narrow genetic base. The seeds are genetically uniform. Thus if one plant is damaged by disease, pests or bad weather, the entire crop is likely to be affected, creating widespread destruction or even a world-wide catastrophe. When a variety proves susceptible to a particular threat, breeders' usually go back to more robust, traditional varieties in order to find the genetic material they need to overcome the difficulty. According to some estimates, we have already lost over 50 per cent of the world's major traditional agricultural crops.

The danger to the gene pool is particularly great in the Third World where many of the world's centres of genetic diversity are located. Traditional crops face a triple threat of war, environmental degradation and replacement by the same genetically uniform varieties developed and used in industrial nations. We have no idea what genetic material is being destroyed or of its value to future generations. If environmental conditions change through the greenhouse effect, for example, hardy traditional varieties will be essential to breeding new varieties which can adapt to the new conditions.

Some of the threatened genetic resources from Third World countries are now stored in seed banks located in the industrial countries. However, the integrity of these collections is by no means assured, given inadequate funding and the trend toward privatization in the hands of multinationals. For instance, I am told that the repository at Cambridge University is now the property of Unilever.

The impact on the Third World can be summarized by saying that the crops developed by the multinational seed companies are designed to be grown with capital and technology-intensive farming techniques. In Canada this encourages the decline of the family farm in some cases. In the Third World, it exacerbates economic injustice as large land-holders drive peasants off their small plots of land. Third World countries develop massive debts and balance of payments deficits as the cost of imported agricultural seeds, machinery and chemicals rises much faster than the export price of the crops produced.

It is particularly ironic that the Third World must now buy seeds from the north since the genetic resources on which these seeds are based were taken mostly from the Third World without compensation. Therefore, it would be much better if this Bill were to be withdrawn and Canada were to join in the international debate without committing itself to any single system, especially when these decisions impact so heavily on the economies and the people of the Third World. The changes being considered could also render Third World germplasm subject to patents in the north and additional royalty payments could equal 10 per cent of the total Third World debt per annum.

In response to corporate moves like plant breeders' rights in the industrialized world, the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization is currently reviewing its commission on plant genetic resources and is considering farmers' rights, supplying intellectual property rights for Third World farmers, which could profoundly affect Canada's access to its major source of breeding stock in the future.

It may be fairly said that this is the first time the House of Commons is dealing with life patenting. While the Bill is of course limited to plants, the legislation also pledges Canada to participate in the International Union for the Protection of Variety of Plants. It has already announced that it would alter its system in order to allow member states to accommodate wider forms of life patenting including the patenting of specific genes and of livestock.

Finally, the issue that really brings us to our feet is the matter of exclusive monopoly. The notion of plant breeders' rights goes well beyond offering an opportunity for a return on costly breeding investments through royalty payments. The plant breeders' rights as envisaged in this Bill grants exclusive monopoly over access to a plant variety. The plant breeders' rights in countries where it has been adopted has increased crop genetic uniformity, reduced the quality of innovations in plant breeding and allowed corporate power to become even more concentrated. That is something that we Liberals do not like to see happening.

• (2050)

The problem is that our market is small, much of it is dominated by multinational corporations owned abroad. Effective research and development requires a significant scale of operations. The principal beneficiaries of monopoly rights of plants in Canada are likely to be multinational corporations. This is certainly the case that we have seen with industrial patents. We know that multinational corporations have the resources and the experience to begin claiming breeders' rights immediately and to control the claims of less well-endowed rivals.

With the shift from the public sector to the private sector, another consequence would be that the open exchange of scientific information will be curbed in the interest of commercial secrecy.

In conclusion, plant breeders' rights is a consequence of the development that was set in motion by the Free Trade Agreement. I will be glad to expand on that point at the next opportunity.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise tonight to speak on this Bill. I take it that it is so important a part of the Government's agenda that it invokes closure on such a Bill.

This Bill is much more than an agricultural Bill. Many more people other than farmers are concerned about plant breeders' rights legislation. It concerns all who are concerned with the increasing concentration of power with multinational corporations. It also concerns all of us who are concerned with Canada's food system and the world's food system. That means all of us.

My criticisms of this Bill are based on many things. It is an insidious Bill. The issues are economic, ethical, social, political, moral, and ecological. For tonight's address, I am going to concentrate on three areas. First, I am going to talk about the environmental concerns, then my concerns about the corporate concentration aspects, and finally the international development aspects of the Bill. I hope by then to bring it all together. Although I make each of those three categories distinct for the purposes of my address tonight, they are all interlinked.

First, I will address the environmental concerns. We have heard much from scientific experts, particularly those on the environment committee of the Royal Society about the dangers of mono-cropping. This Bill is pushed by large multinational corporations, those U.S. agri-business firms that have developed mono-cropping to the state of a high art. They are the ones that are behind this. The environmental degradation that goes along with mono-cropping is well known. The vulnerability that exists through mono-cropping is also well known. Yet, the Bill, because of corporate concentration, will encourage mono-cropping.

Not only do we suffer from environmental vulnerability, but financial vulnerability. As many farmers know, if they have only one crop which is devastated then they are out of luck and do not have anything on which to fall back. We have seen this in North America, and we have also seen it overseas where a farmer has only one crop and it is devastated by pests or blight, and then the farmer is out of business for that year.

We must also be aware of the environmental concerns because of genetic manipulation of seeds. Seeds could be manipulated so that they are dependent upon a particular type of pesticide or will respond only to a particular type of fertilizer. Although we have been assured that no corporation would ever do that, there are enough of us who are sceptical about those assurances that we should reconsider this Bill.

The Bill has a history. This is the fourth time that plant breeders' rights legislation has been brought before the House, and it looks like this one will be successful. We must understand the motivation of why now? Why is this legislation being brought in now? Similar legislation was brought before the House in 1980, but it did not get past second reading. In January, 1988 it died on the Order Paper.

We have to understand that the timing is important. Although Members opposite get tired of us talking about the Free Trade Agreement, it is important for us to understand that the U.S. Government has openly argued that food products should be patentable. It has asked Norway for example, to patent food as well as pharmaceutical products. It is all part of the right wing agenda that we have witnessed over the past year. We saw it with the Drug Patent Act last year, and now it is plant breeders' rights. The free trade agenda is implicit in this legislation. It is through the Government's willingness and lying down in the face of U.S. pressure that it has decided to invoke closure on this plant breeders' rights legislation. This brings me to the corporate concentration. It is the U.S. agenda that we are following here, let us be clear about that. This Bill sets a precedent in life patenting, as my colleagues have pointed out. This Bill has an insidious nature. Although it has been put across as an agricultural Bill, as something that we should not worry about, it is much more than that.

• (2100)

Think of what it means to set a precedent for patenting life, Mr. Speaker. Think of where we are going. Think about the path upon which we are embarking and what it means.

Under European and American plant breeders' rights legislation 90 per cent of seed patents are held by a handful of multinationals. After the year 2000, it is forecast that from 10 to 20 major corporations will dominate the seed markets. That does not give me any reassurance since what we are doing is inviting a monopoly situation in terms of controlling not just our food supply but the food supply of the world. I do not like to have large multinational corporations having any more control of my life than they already do.

The type of corporate concentration we have seen in the early months of the Free Trade Agreement will only increase with the passing of this legislation. This legislation should be reconsidered. We should take a long hard look at where we are going, not only in terms of environmental concerns but in our concerns of the path we are going down on life patenting. We are giving over the control of our food supplies to those multinationals which have not exactly shown the kind of sensitivity to the needs of ordinary human beings, whether they be here in Canada or elsewhere in the world.

There is more to this measure than the bottom line. This is where the moral questions come in.

I would like to address my final comments to the international aspects of this Bill. Although Europe and North America were the first to patent genes, the genetic base for major crops originated in what we now call the Third World. Representatives of countries in North America, Europe and the Soviet Union have collected seed in the developing world and brought this germ plasm back home to store in gene banks. As one expert in the field has pointed out, it does not thrill Third World countries to think that their genetic diversity, something which they have given to us, is now subject to patent.

I visited Africa and in particular northern Ethiopia which happens to be where genetic diversity has been so well developed over many centuries. When the Ice Age was occurring, what is now known as Ethiopia was where the seeds were developing. We have taken from that country, or it has given to us freely, and we are now going to be using what they have given to us for profit. The type of vulnerability that is invited by this Bill will hurt us, but it will hurt those developing countries even more.

Large companies are claiming ownership of products which are the result of farmer genius over thousands of years. When I was in Eritrea, in northern Ethiopia, visiting agricultural research farms, I saw the benefit of the genius about which this article speaks. The farmers of that country have a great respect for their land and for the fact that crops must be diversified. They do not believe in mono–cropping or laying out by the hundreds of acres any one crop. Diversification is practised in order to regenerate the land. This is the same lesson that scientists from the Royal Society have been telling us. Yet this legislation pushes us away from that way of doing things.

As a developed country, we have the responsibility to stand fast in opposition to this legislation. The green revolution promised increased food production in the Third World through high yield wheat and rice varieties and the ingredients of modern agriculture. However, the green revolution has failed those countries. We have to go back and learn from their expertise and not be so ethnocentric as to think we know it all. I think that I have enough humility to know that I do not know it all. I just hope that Members opposite in the government ranks will take a little humility and recognize that they do not know it all either.

The crops that are mono–cropped are more vulnerable to total and widespread failure if faced with less than favourable conditions. That is one of the environmental concerns about which we have been talking. Not just the environment suffers, but the ability to feed ourselves is lost.

Canada has an important role to play. We should be standing fast in opposition to this type of legislation for environmental reasons and because of the resistance to corporate concentration, which is certainly not in our interests, and because of our role in international development. Canada has an integral place in the global village. It is the only developed country other than Austria, Finland, Norway and Greece not to adopt plant breeders' rights. We must stand firm against privatization and corporate control, control over the world's food system. That is what we are talking about here. Such control over the world's food system will bring long-term dependence. Dependence on whom? The large multinational corporations. It will bring vulnerability both economically and financially, as well as political instability, not just for the less developed nations but for us. This is a global village. Canada has a role to play as the conscience of the developed world.

I ask that this Bill be reconsidered in that light.

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in this one-sided debate on Bill C-15, a Bill which introduces plant breeders' rights to Canada for the first time. As often is the case, this Bill has been and will spark much heated debate within farm groups, church groups, political parties, provincial governments and even labour unions. This Bill has economic, social and moral implications which have not been adequately addressed. With closure having been invoked this evening, those issues will not now be adequately addressed. Therefore this important Bill will be vehemently opposed by many of our citizens who are disillusioned with the way this Government is addressing their legitimate concerns.

On the surface, the idea of plant breeders' rights makes sense. If an inventor designs a new or an improved type of machine, his time, expense and effort are recognized. The inventor patents his invention. He sells the rights to manufacture his invention to other people, if he chooses not to do so himself, and he collects royalties on the sales of his creation. He is rewarded. His rewards spur others on to develop new advances in a broad spectrum of endeavours.

An author is similarly rewarded, if the product of his pen results in sales, whether great or small.

It is well recognized in our society that people will be rewarded for their labour. Canada has never had this system extended to cover the development of new distinctive living organisms. The development of new plant varieties has always been carried out by Government and universities for the public good and the advancement of plant science. These two agencies have been quite successful in developing improved plant varieties which are suited to the regions of Canada where special types of seed are needed because of our relatively short growing season. It can be said with certainty that the development of the Marquis variety of wheat by a plant breeder in our Department of Agriculture resulted, to a large degree, in the settlement of the Canadian West.

• (2110)

The development of new varieties of rapeseed, hybrid corn, soya beans and potatoes have greatly benefited regions of Canada, and have greatly benefited our farmers and consumers.

Most of our important agriculture crops are subject to variety registration by Agriculture Canada under the Seeds Act of 1923. The Seeds Act covers crop varieties that are made, sold, advertised or imported into Canada. The Seeds Act ensures that inferior varieties, the role of which would be detrimental to Canadian agriculture, do not enter the Canadian market while desirable new varieties can be approved for sale or importation.

Now the Government, with the introduction of this Bill, is extending the opportunity of developing new plant varieties to the private sector who, if their developments qualify under the Seeds Act, would be able to collect royalties for a period of up to 18 years.

The question is: Will the federal Government withdraw its support from Agriculture Canada once the private sector expands its efforts in developing new plant varieties?

Of course, the Government says that it would never do that. But this is the same Government that said during the election campaign of last year that regional development programs would not be affected by free trade. There will be tremendous pressure on any government that is dealing with a large deficit to withdraw from competing with private industry in a duplicating operation, especially if the private industry we are talking about are multinational corporations.

Therefore, there will be pressure from within and without for government to get out of the plant breeding business. The chance is very great that government research will become merely a back-up to private industry rather than a competitor, as has happened in other countries like the United States, that have similar legislation.

Also in the initial stages of private industry entering the plant breeding field, the Government will lose many of its top scientists as the multinationals lure them away with large salaries and other inducements.

I would like to believe the Government when it says it will not abandon the field, but I would rest easier if it were embodied in this legislation so that it cannot abandon Canada's commitment in plant breeding that we have had for over a century.

Second, there is absolutely no commitment to fair play to developing countries where, astonishingly, all of the world's major food crops originated. These developing countries have given freely to us in the industrialized world their rich supply of germplasm for crop variety breeding.

We in the industrialized world are almost devoid of primitive or wild seed supply from which we can tap the strong genetic material needed to develop new strains of seeds. The source of that raw material is diminishing as developing countries copy our mono-culture practices.

What we have been doing for the past number of years is collecting the raw material, the genetic material we need to develop new plant varieties from the developing countries and banking them in temperature controlled gene banks. This ensures our supply of raw material while we encourage the source countries to follow our practice of mono-culture and the larger production which results, while decreasing the growing areas of their wild seeds. What must be incorporated in this Bill is an amendment which prevents these gene banks from falling into the hands of the multinationals. If new large companies gain control and ownership over the genetic supply of raw material, as they are beginning to do in the United States, then we will all, here and in the Third World, be totally dependent on the goodwill of these corporations for our food supply.

Corporations do not have a conscience and if they control seed, fertilizer and pesticide production in one company it will spell disaster, especially for developing countries.

Therefore, vigorous public sector breeding programs and government controlled gene banks are absolutely necessary in preventing monopoly control of plant breeding in Canada. Granted, Canada will have access to varieties of plants from other countries which may have a positive impact on our economy, and Canadians will be able to be rewarded monetarily when our new varieties are exported to other countries. This is not happening now. We are exporting our progress in plant development for nothing.

But there is one thing that will happen for sure, the price of seeds will rise higher than the inflation rate. Farmers will be forced to pay the higher costs or risk being left behind when new high volume crop varieties are developed. This has already happened in the United States since plant breeder legislation has been adopted.

Finally, with the new technologies now being applied to the breeding of new plant varieties and indeed in creating new types animal life, perhaps Canada should defer this legislation in order to have it conform to the results of the UN study on the world-wide implications of plant breeding which is now under way.

[Translation]

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak tonight on Bill C-15, an Act respecting plant breeders' rights.

Several speeches have already been made on this subject tonight and I hope that I will be able to say something of general interest to Members to convince them, especially the Government Members, to vote against this Bill.

[English]

One thing we are labouring under tonight is a closure motion. I could not go on with the Bill without expressing my distaste at the activities of the Government in invoking closure again tonight. This is the seventh occasion in this Parliament that the Government has chosen to use closure to cut off debate on its legislation. No other Government in the history of this country has used closure so frequently as this Government. Frankly, it is a disgraceful performance. The Government is obviously fearful of bringing its legislation before Parliament and having it exposed to the light of public scrutiny.

If I had introduced legislation of the kind the Government has, I would be embarrassed as well.

It seems to be a persistent practice on the part of the Government to move closure at the earliest possible opportunity. This Bill has been debated part of one day, for two and a half hours, prior to tonight's sitting. Tonight the Government introduced closure on this Bill. It did the same thing last night and the same thing on five occasions prior to that. It is becoming a disgraceful habit.

I want to read the words I quoted in the House on December 16, 1988, when I quoted the former Member for Yukon, who said in 1964:

> The procedure of closure has been repugnant to the sense of fair play to the Canadian people. My own personal view is that never in Parliamentary debate should there be a muzzling of free debate.

Tonight we are seeing a muzzling of free debate. I submit the Government is ashamed of the Bill. It is ashamed of most of the Bills it has introduced. It is invoking the closure rule to cut off debate and limit it so the public will not hear about the evils of the proposals it is putting before Parliament. It is time the Government discontinued this practice and made a promise to discontinue its use in the future.

I am not seeking to blame the Government for all the evils of this Bill. I think that perhaps it is the result of some misguiding on the part of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski). He made a credible speech in the introduction of the Bill a few weeks ago. I do not think he took an unduly vigorous approach in supporting it. I can understand why, because he must have some doubts about some of the items proposed in the Bill.

The Bill will allow companies and individuals to patent new seed developments. As plant breeders develop new strains or varieties of seed, they will be able to protect those varieties by a patenting process similar to the patent that is given in the development of new business techniques or instruments of production.

I suggest that this control given to seed companies will lead to a control that can be extended to the whole food production cycle. Let me give some examples to explain why I feel it will lead to the control of the production cycle, not just in Canada but on a world-wide basis. That is a major reason for our concern tonight. If we give away the control of the production of the seeds, which in effect we will do under this Bill, the thin edge of the wedge is in and there is potential for control on a much wider scale of the food production industry of the world.

Hybrid seeds are perhaps the easiest example and so I would like to talk about them for a minute. I want to make it perfectly clear to you, Mr. Speaker, and to all Hon. Members, that I do not claim to be an expert on this matter. I am not a farmer and I am not the son of a farmer, nor am I a seed producer or the son of a seed producer. I am not an expert on these matters at all but I have done some reading on this subject and it has caused me great concern.

Hybrid seeds are produced by the crossing of plants which breed on themselves. In other words, they do not require cross-pollination to produce seeds. The hybrid seed that is the result of the cross-breeding of these two types of plants will result in the growth of a plant that often possesses the best characteristics of the two parent plants. The result of that is that the hybrid seed will normally produce a plant that grows twice as fast.

As a gardener, I have grown things like broccoli and I will use broccoli as an example, because Members will understand that. There are hybrid broccoli plants available and non-hybrid plants. The advantage of the hybrid is that it usually grows faster and usually produces larger heads of broccoli than the non-hybrid plant. The disadvantage of the hybrid plant in normal, everyday parlance is that it does not itself produce seeds that reproduce its strong characteristic. If it produces seeds, they fall back to a weaker plant which will not produce as large heads and will not produce as vigorous growth as would the hybrid parent, if there were such a thing. So you need to keep crossing the two in-bred plants in order to produce the hybrid.

If one of these companies patents its hybrid it will retain the right either to produce the seed exclusively or to licence out the production. In other words, the production of the hybrid seed will be the property of the owner of the plant breeders' right, as it were, in this product.

What is the risk of this? Let us suppose there is one strain of broccoli that becomes the leading hybrid strain and it is sold on a world-wide basis and most growers of broccoli grow this particular strain produced by Company A and its licensed affiliates. The sale of the seed is obviously then controlled by the patentee, the person who has the plant breeders' right on that seed.

If in a particular year that company were unscrupulous enough to withhold all its seed and refuse to sell any of its seed, clearly the world production of broccoli would drop off substantially, presumably in quality and certainly in quantity. This is because there would not be many other seeds around. If there were one dominant brand, people would not be producing other seeds. Also, the other seeds would be for lesser quality plants of broccoli. One can well imagine, therefore, that the price of broccoli on a world-wide basis would substantially increase by virtue of the operation of the law of supply and demand.

Let us look at what would happen the next year. The company has a great supply of hybrid seeds that it has been building up. It did not sell any the previous season. The price of broccoli has skyrocketed. It is clear that the price of the seeds it is offering for sale would then follow suit and skyrocket. I do not hold the grudge against large multinational companies which my friends in the New Democratic Party obviously do, I do not say that everything they do ipso facto is bad. However, we face the risk that an unscrupulous company might control the production of a particular seed for its own profit advantage at the expense of other people. I am also not a believer in the completely free market concept that is espoused by some of my hon. friends opposite. I think they realize their mistake in adopting that position, at least I hope they do.

The other difficulty is that if we agree to this Bill we become part of an expanding world-wide network controlling the production of seeds because most of the other industrialized nations have already adopted legislation similar to this legislation and they are now part of this expanding network. I suggest that if we avoid joining in this particular network we will not suffer any disadvantage. Indeed, a suggestion was made by the Minister that if we did not join we would not then get seeds that are available elsewhere. However, I have never heard anyone suggest any variety or type of seed which is available elsewhere and not available here because of the lack of plant breeders' rights rules. I tell Hon. Members opposite that before I could possibly be persuaded to vote for a Bill of this kind I would want some very firm evidence that its non-adoption would be substantially detrimental to the interests of our country because I have seen no such evidence. I suggest there is no such evidence.

The second reason for looking at this Bill with great skepticism, and indeed rejecting it at this point, is the fact that many of the new strains of seeds being developed today—and I am going away from hybrids and talking about almost any seed or plant that is developed—is developed by large multinational companies which also produce chemicals and pesticides. It is clear that those companies would find it to their advantage to produce seeds that grow better when they are subjected to extensive spray from pesticides or other types of pest controls and/or fertilizers.

The production of the fertilizers and the pesticides is done by these companies for the purpose of earning a profit. If they could produce a seed or plant that was dependent on their particular kind of fertilizer or their particular kind of pesticide, sales would clearly increase because if they can sell the seed they will sell the chemicals with it.

In my submission the sale of both the seeds and the chemicals constitutes something which is, in my view, undesirable. We have many natural occurring seeds or seeds which have evolved through hundreds of years of use in cultivation by farmers and growers of seeds in various plant stocks. All of those are currently available throughout Canada for our use to the extent that we wish to have them. We do not need to grow particular ones with pesticides or with fertilizers. Those help in the growth, perhaps, but they are not essential. Why we would aim for the development of strains of plants that are fully dependent on particular chemicals is beyond me. Yet that could be one of the effects, and I suggest that it will be, of the adoption of Bill C-15. I urge Hon. Members to look at that very carefully before they vote willy-nilly for this Bill.

Mr. Thacker: Has that occurred in the desert countries?

Mr. Milliken: My hon. friend asks whether that has occurred in the desert countries.

Mr. Thacker: The 15 countries that have adopted it.

Mr. Milliken: No, I do not believe it has happened in the 15 countries that have adopted it because, I suggest to my hon. friend, they have not been able to get control on a world-wide basis at this point and thereby take full advantage of the fact that these seeds are then controlled. However, I will tell him one thing that has happened in those countries as a result of the adoption of this kind of legislation, and that is a very significant reduction in public participation in the development of new seeds through government payments and so on. There has been a significant reduction in many countries. Second, there has been a general takeover by the large multinational companies of the small seed development companies in the countries. That has happened on a regular basis. That is an undisputed fact and I hope that when the Bill goes to committee my hon. friend opposite will get on the committee and hear the evidence of this fact and use it to advantage. It may persuade him to vote against this Bill.

The third reason that we ought to consider rejection of this Bill is that the effect on the Third World I suspect will be ultimately devastating.

• (2130)

I think, Mr. Speaker, you are aware that in times of drought or particular problems in the Third World, the industrialized world ships into that area its seeds, its plants, its products to help get things going again. In other words, there is often the situation where there is a complete dying out or destruction of seed stock in one of the developing countries, and we then fill the gap with seeds that have been developed or produced in some other part of the world. If the parts of the world that become subject to plant breeders' rights end up using a limited variety or a number of strains of seeds, then it will be that limited number of strains that will be sent to the Third World for their use. If they require the use of pesticides or fertilizer for their successful propagation, or if they are ones that are not well suited to their growing conditions, it is going to create additional problems for food production in every part of the world.

I suggest that the ramifications of this part of the policy have not been fully explored. We need a detailed study on this. The various groups in this country which have come out against plant breeders' rights have all expressed a very grave concern on this matter. I invite Members to read about and familiarize themselves regarding those concerns because it is an extremely serious risk. There is no reason today for Canada to join the expanding, if it is any longer expanding, group of industrialized countries which feel that this kind of legislation is helpful. I suggest that the only persons who really benefit from it are the seed companies.

I am not opposed, and I do not believe anyone in this Party is opposed, to seeing that persons who develop new seed strains or varieties are paid on a reasonable basis for their important work and effort, but it is not necessary to adopt patents in order to ensure that some such arrangement be made. There must be another method the Government could explore.

In preparing for this speech, I do not want to suggest that I read everything on plant breeders' rights and did all the work myself. I want to say that I have been assisted greatly in the preparation of my remarks by Rick Munroe who is one of my constituents. He lives on Howe Island, one of the islands in my riding of Kingston and the Islands. He is a farmer there, and he takes a very great interest in this subject, but not through any particular axe to grind or anything of that kind. He is just interested in this issue. He has thought about it, read extensively about it, and has written a few notes, or perhaps you could call them essays on the subject. I would like to refer to some of his ideas. I am not going to quote directly from his writing, but I want to mention some of the things that have caused him concern which I believe will cause concern for Hon. Members if they think about these things before they cast their vote on this Bill.

He indicated to me that 15 years ago the southern corn leaf blight threatened the genetically uniform American hybrid corn crop. This is a case where there had been a strain of corn developed on a hybrid basis that was used extensively throughout the United States. He indicated that the blight was halted by breeding in genetic material from a very rare corn variety from Mexico. The question he asks is, if we are going to adopt this plant breeders' rights business and start exporting our seeds abroad and displace the local seeds that are regionally generic, are we then going to destroy those seeds? Are we going to lose the seeds that are generic to a region and replace them with the hybrids that we in fact have developed? If that happens, will we then put these other generic seeds to the point that they are extinct? Will we in fact destroy them and lose the possibility of transferring the genetic material from these rare seeds to our hybrids to save them from this kind of destruction? I do not think that question has been addressed. I do not think it has even been thought of in dealing with this legislation.

Second, he refers to the errors that can occur when one gets into genetic breeding. I see the Hon. Member for Macleod (Mr. Hughes) is here with his cheshire-cat appearance, and I am delighted that he is here because he is very interested in this question. I hope he will vote against this Bill.

The interesting ones that he pointed out as new genetic forms of life were the gypsy moth and the killer bees. He points out that the gypsy moth and the killer bees were introduced quite deliberately by scientists who thought that they knew what they were doing. The mistake was made and these things got out. The Fear is that if we have plant breeders' rights, the plant breeder is liable to make similar mistakes and release a kind of seed or plant that should not be out. If we are going to be rushing through a patent process to get these patents applied for, it may be that there could be errors in the system and that these seeds could be released. We will face the same kinds of problems with these plants as we are facing with killer bees. Maybe we will have killer plants or something that grow up and eat the wheat in the Macleod constituency. I do not know. The risks are there.

I do not in any way make light of them, Mr. Speaker. I think there are risks that ought to be faced by the Government in particular as it considers whether to proceed with this Bill.

I know, Mr. Speaker, you will realize notwithstanding my comments at the outset dealing with the deplorable use of closure in this case, I have not sought to be partisan in my dealings with this Bill. What I am trying to do is persuade the Hon. Members who support the Government to urge their Ministers of Agriculture—there are three of them for Heaven's sake—to take another look at this legislation and see if they cannot do something to stop it or slow its progress so we can have a long, hard look at the proposals and hopefully reject it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. On a point of order the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I think if you seek it, you will find unanimous consent for my friend and colleague from Kingston to continue with his excellent remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am glad for the chance to speak tonight against Bill C-15, an Act respecting plant breeders' rights. The problem with the Bill is that like some of the Members across the way who keep shouting, it does not respect anyone else's rights. The Bill respects the rights only of the plant breeders and wants to push them to the exclusion of all other rights except to the extent that plant breeders are taken over by the chemical companies. That is why we in the New Democratic Party oppose it.

Our principle is a democratic socialist principle that production should be carried on to meet the individual and social needs of people and not primarily for profit. That is why we maintain that it is necessary to curb and control and sometimes even put monopolies directly under democratic public control. In fact what we want to do is democratize the economy. Of course that brings us into collision with the Members opposite whose respect for democracy is so little that they are using closure three times within a week because they do not have the patience to debate the subject when they are sure that they can just hammer it through with their majority.

In other words, their principle is, let the monopolies control. Since the monopolies control their Party through the Business Council on National Issues, naturally they are saying: "Let the monopolies control this country".

This debate is very much like the debate of a year or two ago about the patenting of prescription drugs in which the same Party, the same Government, insisted that the drug monopolies should be allowed bigger profits through patenting than they were already getting.

They promised all kinds of jobs in return for that, but they would not guarantee it, nor would they make that a condition of receiving the profits. Profits were guaranteed and the jobs we can whistle for.

What this legislation wants to do is to patent life forms or to enable those who have the fortunes, the wealth to do research to own life forms and the use of life forms through their patents. This will mean that not only will certain plants become the property or the seed of those plants become the property of a few, but according to the people who are engaged in it, such as the Unionfor Protection for New Varieties of Plants, they will alter their plans to accommodate some aspects of biotechnology, possibly including livestock patenting. In other words, there is no boundary when we get into this field strictly between patenting of plant forms and patenting of animal forms. Nor is there a boundary between the patenting of animal forms and the patenting of human forms. These people are willing to lead right on to try to patent and own human beings in a way that the slave holders of past time never dreamed was possible.

• (2140)

In other words, it is a system of enslavement that these people are pursuing. One of the earliest results of it will be a sharp rise in the cost of seed which will put many farmers in this country and many more farmers in other countries of the world, especially in the south, into a loss position. At present about 4 per cent of the production cost of Canadian wheat is in the seed. Europeans are already spending five times as much but it is predicted that as biotechnical patenting increases, the farmer's share of the cost for the seed and the crop may rise about 50 per cent, 50 per cent of the cost going for seed.

The problem is that these companies producing the seeds are being reduced by takeovers. In the last 20 years there have been over 1,000 corporate takeovers of seed companies. In the 1970s there were about 30 companies that produced crop chemicals. Now there are about a dozen and within a decade the industry predicts there will be only six crop chemical companies. They are the ones which are taking over control of seed production so that in another 10 years or so there may be only 10 or 20 major corporations in the seed market. That is bad news for farmers and it is bad news for people who like to eat. In other words, our eating is going to be controlled by these seed companies and by the chemical companies that control the seed companies.

Some of this is illustrated in a very good book published this spring called From Land to Mouth by Brewster Kneen. It is a study on the food system. He points out some interesting examples. For example, a couple of centuries ago Sri Lanka was self-sufficient in food. When the British Empire came along it wanted Sri Lanka to produce tea rather than the rice and textiles needed. Changes were introduced into the agriculture and now after the British and U.S. changes of bringing in wheat, Sri Lanka is being told to grow things like oil palms for the global market and it is not producing so much of its own food.

A further example he gives is that in the GATT discussions the Canadian representative, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), was not speaking for the ordinary people of Canada, he was speaking primarily for the big trading companies of Canada. They point out also, for example, that under an executive exchange program David Gilmour,a vice-president of Cargill Limited, a Canadian subsidiary of Cargill Incorporated, was on loan from Cargill to Agriculture Canada to assist in drafting agricultural policy for the Conservative Government. Cargill continued to pay his salary when he occupied an office on the top floor of the Carling Building beside the Deputy Minister of Agriculture. In other words, under this Government, Cargill, the great grain company dominating the grain markets of the world, was allowed to dictate Canadian government policy at GATT.

In the past we talked about trade, which means trade between partners. In other words, there is some mutual respect between one trading partner and another. Now the emphasis has shifted to export. It does not matter who the other guy is, push it out at him, push the grain out there, push it to the Soviet Union, to China or to Syria. It is not a matter of partnership anymore. It is just a matter of a one-way street. Now, with plant breeders' rights or so-called intellectual property rights, what we will get is control of world trade and export by the companies which have the wealth to own the patents.

For example, Ciba-Geigy, Bayer, Sandoz from Switzerland, Rhone-Poulenc from France, Cyanamid, Du Pont from the United States, BSAF from Germany and ICI from Britain. The people who are actually growing the food will be working, even half way around the world, for these great companies. The people who grow the food will not set the wages they get nor the prices at which the food is sold. That will be done by these few companies that will try to reach all around the world just for their own profit.

This sort of thing is not all in the future. Mr. Kneen, and I quote from the bottom of page 103, said that in Thailand today farmers are not permitted to grow the native varieties of rice. The Government requires them to grow only the hybrid varieties, the seed of which the farmers have to buy for each crop. In other words, for thousands of years the farmers have been independent and by their own skill were able to maintain themselves and build communities. Now they will, in effect, be employees of some European or North American company from whom they will have to buy the seed every year. They will become totally dependent upon those seed-producing companies.

The problem is that plant breeders' rights are part of an over-all totalitarian approach by the large companies. When some of us were young we joined the Army, sometimes with misgivings—the Canadian Armed Forces, the Army, Navy or the Air Force—because we were told it was necessary to kill in order to stop Hitler's totalitarian push.

Now we are getting totalitarianism of a different sort based on these large companies which want to control not only the land on which people produce food but the food that people eat. It is part of the over-all drive based on the high interest rates and low commodity prices that dominate most of the Third World, most of the non-white former colonies of Britain and North America. In those countries high interest rates and low prices for agricultural products are both fixed by the banks primarily of North America and Britain in which the real interest rates for a decade has been far, far higher than it ever was before. The real interest rate to be calculated isthe difference between the London Inter Bank Offer Rate and the annual per cent change of commodity prices.

For example, in 1981 the London bank rate was 16.6 per cent. The commodity change was a negative 15 per cent. The real difference those countries were paying was 32 per cent. The situation went on like that through most of the 1980s. In 1987 the real interest rate which these countries were paying, taking into account the price differential as well as the bank rate, was about 10 per cent.

For those years from 1981 to 1987 the average actual interest rate being paid by the so-called developing countries was about 15 per cent. No wonder they are in debt. No wonder there are wars as the allies at the banks try to maintain military control in order to get those debts collected.

• (2150)

The problem that we have is an old, old problem, even though there are some new wrinkles to it. It is at least two and one-half thousand years old, as we find if we read the Book of the Prophet Isaiah, Chapter 5, beginning at verse 8. This is a warning to the people nowadays who want to do as they did then and simply take over other people's land.

"Woe to those who join house to house, who add field to field, until there is no more room, and you are made to dwell alone in the midst of the land. The Lord of Hosts has sworn in my hearing, surely many houses shall be desolate, large and beautiful houses without inhabitant."

That, of course, was the Jewish Scripture. It comes in very strongly into what we call the New Testament, the Christian Scripture, in the letter of James, Chapter 5.

"Come now, you rich, weep and howl for the miseries that are coming upon you. Your riches have rotted. Your garments are moth eaten. Your gold and silver have rusted and their rust will be evidence against you, and will eat your flesh like fire. You have laid up treasure for these last days. Behold, the wages of the labourers who have mowed your fields, which you kept back by fraud. Cry out, and the cries of the harvesters have reached the ears of the Lord of Hosts. You have lived on earth in luxury and in pleasure. You have fattened your hearts in a day of slaughter. You have condemned. You have killed the righteous one and he does not resist you."

If we go the way of this plant breeders' rights law, that is what we are asking for: Destruction.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, at some risk, if I were to take seriously the remarks of the previous speaker, I have decided to participate in this debate. I frankly have succumbed to the temptation because I am simply sick and tired of hearing the twaddle and the nonsense coming from the side opposite.

The fact is that the merits of plant breeders' rights have been debated here and elsewhere, off and on for many years. The suggestion that this legislation has not been adequately discussed is ludicrous.

What we are talking about tonight is simply referring the matter to a legislative committee in order that there can be some hearings and the Bill studied in some detail, and back to the House it comes again.

I believe that the time has come for serious consideration and the passage of the legislation. Plant breeders' rights legislation—I am going to call it PBR from now on in the interests of time—is in place in 18 countries in the world.

In fact, Canada is the only major agricultural nation which does not have such legislation. To listen to opponents of this Bill, one would think otherwise, that plant breeders' rights was something new, something unusual and something from outer space. We are talking about killer plants, Mr. Speaker. Maybe we are going to have killer plants which eat Members with red ties. I do not know, it is possible. However, the facts show otherwise.

Why PBR? The intent clearly is to enable plant breeders to collect reasonable royalties for new and distinct varieties which they develop through research. Breeding new varieties is expensive. It costs money. It is a matter of economics and a matter of simple equity that successful plant breeders should receive the return on their investment of time, of expertise and indeed, of money.

The royalties will encourage private sector plant breeders to increase their research activities. Public sector research will also be enhanced by the royalties which will be ploughed back into further public sector research. The result clearly should be an increase over-all in research in this country.

In Canada right now, I believe that we need new varieties which will improve yields and which may be more resistant to pests and diseases. PBR will enable us to have improved and expeditious access to these new varieties.

Bill C-15 will also allow for the injection of higher quality foreign varieties which are adaptable to the Canadian environment. In the absence of PBR, breeders outside of this country are hesitant to market their new varieties here because their product has no legal protection. Canadian farmers are not able to gain access to certain protected varieties which are popular in the rest of the world. This could present a problem to our exporters who find themselves unable to produce the protected varieties which are in demand in some world markets.

Clearly, Bill C-15 will create new opportunities for the export of many excellent Canadian varieties. Without PBR, Canadian breeders may be unwilling to introduce new varieties on which they have spent considerable time and money.

The over-all impact of this legislation will be to strengthen the base for plant breeders in Canada. In the result, the entire agricultural industry in Canada will be strengthened. My Province of Saskatchewan, and my constituency in particular. are heavily dependent on agriculture. PBR will be good for the Saskatchewan food and agriculture industry and that is why I support this legislation. It is also the reason why I hope that my socialist colleagues in the Province of Saskatchewan will see fit to cast aside their philosophical opposition to this much needed legislation.

It is instructive at this point to look at the situation in other nations, the impact of PBR elsewhere. The United Kingdom provides an excellent example. Since their legislation back in 1964, the U.K. has seen a tremendous growth in productivity which has dramatically converted it from being a net importer of cereals in the 1960s to being a net exporter in the 1980s. As much of this growth relates to the improved varieties as it does to improved husbandry and to other increased inputs, the quality has improved as well as the quantity.

British crop varieties are now exported throughout the world. Wheat into Europe. Barley, into New Zealand and Spain, roses and top fruit root stocks, into growers world-wide. As of last year, the British industry, I am told, was comprised of some 52 plant breeders and agents for foreign breeders. The participants range from publicly funded institutes to small private companies, to divisions of multinationals. Dire consequences of multinational take-overs are nowhere to be seen.

If the U.K. has been able to reap these benefits from PBR, imagine that there are indeed similar advances available to Canada through this legislation. With their knowledge, expertise and creativity, Canadian plant breeders have virtually unlimited opportunities.

At this point I would like to examine some of the opposition to PBR. It appears to me that the Liberals as usual are split. Members have made the halfhearted argument that the 18-year period of exclusivity rights is too long. However, the fact is that the 18-year period complies with the international convention for the protection of new varieties of plants.

If Bill C-15 proposed a seven-year or a ten-year period, we would not be able to satisfy the requirements of that international convention, nor would we be able to enjoy the benefits of reciprocity with the many other nations which are bound by the convention.

Further, 18 years is the maximum period of exclusivity. This right can be terminated sooner in many cases, and probably will be. In fact, Section 6, subsection (2) of the Bill provides for the payment of an annual fee to maintain that right. Under Section 35(1)(c), that right may be revoked for non-payment. Thus, the breeder will only retain protection on a variety if there is a sufficient return to justify payment of the annual fee. If the right is revoked, the variety becomes public property.

We have also heard the concern that Government plant breeding programs will decrease as a result of PBR. The Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker—and I should digress here because I think I heard the Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) suggest that there was something wrong with there being three Ministers of this Government devoted to agriculture. The fact that there are three Ministers devoted to this area indicates the tremendous importance which the Government of Canada attaches to the agricultural sector.

The Minister of Agriculture reaffirmed recently the commitment of this Government to the maintenance of public sector plant reading research. In this year alone, more than $23 million will be spent by Agriculture Canada on PBR. In the words of the Minister, and I quote: "Agriculture Canada has been in this business. It is in the business and will continue to be in the business".

Our friends in the NDP, of course, are against this Bill, as they are against anything which departs from the status quo. The NDP are misnamed. There is nothing new about them at all. They are against change. They are in fact the arch conservatives in this country. We on this side are the Progressive Conservatives. We on this side see the need for change and the need to move with the times.

While I am digressing on this point, I must say that I was amazed by the comments of the Hon. Member who spoke previously and referred again to the matter of the pharmaceutical patent legislation. I am amazed by the strange attitude displayed by Members opposite relative to innovation, to invention, and to initiative. I recall the remarks made when we were debating Bill C-60 in the previous Parliament, the copyright legislation. At that time, I heard all sorts of sanctimonious mutterings about the imperative to reward artists, musicians, and writers. That is good and that Bill passed.

What I hear from over there is that if we are talking about a song, music, a play, a book or something that is artistic, it should be given all sorts of protection. They want to recognize it and talk about the creative genius of the artist, his remuneration, and recognition. All of that is good, but why on earth would equal treatment not apply to someone who comes up with a new drug for the benefit of mankind or who comes up with a new plant variety which can benefit all of mankind?

Why is it that the inventor, the builder, the creator in a field outside artistic endeavour is someone to be denigrated as members of the Opposition do? All I can say on this topic is that Members of my Party and I say that we should at least afford to plant breeders the same kind of rights and recognition as has been afforded to the artistic community.

The Hon. Member for Mackenzie has warned us of the dire consequences of plant patents. Under this legislation, we are not talking about plant patents or the patenting of any other life form. Bill C-15 deals with plant varieties in an extremely specific way. It proposes a limited right that applies only to the reproductive material of plants. It is the same legislation that is in place in most of the nations with which we trade in seeds and other plant reproductive material such as bulbs, rose bushes, and the like.

Opposition Members try to imply that Bill C-15 would reduce the exchange of genetic information. They conclude that a plant breeder, having discovered a new and distinct variety, would secrete it away and not allow anyone access to it. Surely this legislation will increase, not decrease, the exchange of genetic information.

Indeed, with the current set of circumstances, potential useful foreign varieties are not available to Canadian producers. With the passage and implementation of Bill C-15, there will be an incentive for foreign plant breeders to share these varieties with Canadian producers. There will be a two-way street. Plant breeders will be able to obtain a financial reward for their efforts and the producers will have new production opportunities as well as increased potential for even greater yields plus enhanced protection from pests.

It is for these reasons that Bill C-15 is supported by a great number of farm and horticultural organizations from coast to coast. They include the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Canadian Horticultural Council, SeCan Association, the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, the Canadian Seed Trade Association, Flowers Canada, the Canadian Ornamental Plant Foundation, the Canadian Nursery Trades Association, the Western Canadian Wheat Growers' Association, the Agricultural Institute of Canada, the Canada Grains Council, and many more. These organizations and their members are fully cognizant of the opportunities they are currently missing.

At this point, it is important to recognize that there is a second way in which this legislation will encourage the sharing of genetic information. The International Convention for the Protection of New Varieties specifically prohibits the monopolizing of the genetic information in plant varieties. Article 5(3) states that authorization by the breeders shall not be required either for the utilization of the variety as an initial source of variation for the purpose of creating other varieties or for the marketing of such varieties. Bill C-15 is written to conform with this convention. The clear intent of the Bill is that plant breeders will continue to use existing varieties for breeding new varieties.

Another opponent of this legislation is the coalition known as GROW, Genetic Resources for Our World. One of its concerns is that this legislation will result in a dramatic increase in the price of seed. One of the outspoken opponents of the legislation has suggested recently that farmers' seed costs will quadruple. What he fails to mention is that farmers are in no way forced to use new seed varieties. They can continue to use their own seed, for example, which is unaffected by PBR, or they can purchase unprotected varieties. Even for protected seed varieties, it is predicted by experts that the increasing costs will be less than changes caused by supply and demand.

As well, one can assume that competition from foreign and new Canadian varieties is expected to hold down price increases. Moreover, improvements in yield, increased resistance to disease, and other positive improvements in available seed stock will far outweigh any increase in seed prices.

Another point that has to be kept in mind is that if a plant breeder is found to be charging excessive royalties or is intentionally keeping the market short in order to collect higher prices, any individual can apply to the commissioner of plant breeders' rights for a compulsory license which would give the individual the right to produce that variety. This measure ensures that all varieties are made available to the public at reasonable prices.

Of course, those on the far left have been telling anyone prepared to listen that this legislation will lead to takeovers of the industry by those nasty multinational corporations. What they fail to understand is that our seed industry is too large and diverse to be effectively taken over by foreign countries or anyone else. To be a target for takeover, a company has to have a breeding program and or protected varieties. At the present, private sector breeding in Canada is a distant third behind Agriculture Canada and university programs. The possibility of a corporate takeover in the industry is simply out of the question.

Furthermore, as indicated earlier, and I invite opponents of this Bill to examine the situation in the U.K., the legislation has been in place there since 1964. There has been plenty of time for this touted corporate takeover, but it simply has not been the case. An examination of other nations with plant breeders' rights legislation indicates that there are many, many hundreds of concerns that are involved in the process.

The opponents of the Bill, GROW, Friends of the Earth, and the like, have raised the argument that the Bill will allow the large seed companies to breed seeds that are dependent upon specific weed killers. This view fails to take into account the reality that the so-called dependent varieties would have a limited appeal to a producer who has the option to purchase public sector varieties or unprotected varieties. It seems to me just common sense that farmers would also shy away from a variety with high input costs as a result of its dependency upon a specific chemical.

Those in the left wing coalition have also raised the argument that plant breeders' rights will lead to genetic uniformity which will inevitably result in future catastrophes, another potato famine. Once again, they fail to grasp the true essence of the legislation before us.

By providing an incentive for even greater investment in plant breeders' programs, both in the private and public sectors, the chances of increasing genetic diversity are enhanced because only those varieties which are substantially different from other existing varieties will be recognized under plant breeders' legislation.

In closing, I want to say that perhaps the silliest and most revealing argument against plant breeders' rights is that put forward by GROW and others in the coalition that the Bill is somehow linked to the Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement. The old free trade bogyman is being dusted off again. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke North, in an unguarded moment, was honest enough to say that every sparrow that falls from the sky will be laid at the feet of the Free Trade Agreement. Here we go with another sparrow.

This legislation has been around in one form or another since 1979. How on earth can it be affected by a 1989 bilateral trade agreement between Canada and the United States? This argument reminds one again of this blind opposition to change, to trade, and to anything new that characterizes the arch-conservatives of Canada, those people in the left wing masquerading as progressive people when in fact they are the most reactionary in this nation.

The Government has great confidence in the people of Canada. We know that with the implementation of Bill C-15, Canadian plant breeders will prosper and so too will producers.

I would like to conclude by saying that there is nothing sinister in the legislation before us. It is a Bill that I believe will increase the level of plant breeding research in Canada, the results of which will enable producers and farmers to stay competitive in a modern world. The legislation does so by providing researchers with an incentive to increase their activities in order to create new varieties with greater yields and enhanced resistance to disease and pests.

Canada is the only major agricultural nation in the world which today lacks legislation of this kind. The time has come for us to get out of the dark ages, get in step, stop talking about PBR, and implement this Bill. Let us get it off to committee where it can be dealt with in some detail. I look forward to the eventual passage and utilization of the Bill for the benefit of all Canadians.

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity this evening to address Bill C-15, the plant breeders' rights Bill. I have profound and grave concerns about this Bill, although I would like to state at the outset that I believe that plant breeders are entitled to certain rights. My concern relates to the implications of how far this particular Bill goes. Another concern is the greater implications of this Bill which I feel are not being well addressed and are not well known by many people who are debating the Bill and who will be voting upon it this evening and at other times.

My concerns with regard to this Bill relate to various areas. One relates to the environmental issues, moral and ethical issues, food security issues, and how those food security issues impinge upon the well-being of Third World countries that represent the majority of the population of our world.

Through this particular Bill we are favouring multinational corporations. In fact, the multinational corporations that will most benefit from this Bill are companies involved in the production of chemicals. These companies have the funds and the wherewithal to finance the research and development of different seeds. In many cases, they pay for that research themselves.

However, it is well known that in various agricultural colleges, departments of research could not well survive without the funds made available from those companies. Therefore, the independence of research is taken away as research is directed into certain areas. The areas of concern to me are where research and development are put into the production of seeds that are dependent upon the very chemicals that those companies produce. If I were a corporate president whose company produced chemicals, I would love the idea of doing whatever I could to promote the sale of the chemicals. What greater thing could a company think of than having a greater dispersion of its chemicals over the lands all around the world?

In Canada, many farmers who buy the product of producers of seed are not aware of the fact that the seed is so dependent upon the chemicals that must be applied simultaneously with the seed purchased.

In this regard, my experience has been in the Third World. I have had some experience in Africa which has experienced serious drought in the past years. As a member of a committee, I helped to select projects that were to receive Canadian funding for production in Africa. We saw the harmful effects of the seeds that were chemically dependent. It was not only the cost of the seed, but it was the cost of the chemicals, the fertilizers, the insecticides, and the fungicides that had to accompany the particular types of seeds that were being made available and which in the end we did reject despite the grave needs of the area, of which we all know.

The poor people of the world cannot afford the seed, let alone the chemicals upon which those seeds are dependent. It is not only the seeds and the cost of the chemicals themselves, it is the cost of the technology to apply the chemicals. Education and knowledge are required in knowing how to apply those chemicals not only in the correct order and timing, but also safely. I have seen many illnesses develop among poor people who were handling chemicals, who did not have the equipment to apply them safely, and who suffered serious health effects as a result.

In one program in which I was involved in Central America, the program was supported by a northern Government, an aid providing Government through the help of a multinational corporation. Very poor farmers in this country had benefited from a very small land reform program. Landless peasants suddenly had some land. However, they were given the land on the proviso that that land would be productive.

Those farmers knew how to produce crops for their own self-sufficiency. They could feed themselves with small resources. Instead, those farmers were enticed, with large resources, to move away from the production of self-sufficient and self-sustaining food crops into cash crops for export. They were given many financial and capital resources in order to divert their production into those areas. They were told that they would receive not only the seed and the chemicals, but all the technical assistance necessary in order to produce productive crops that would bring them good cash income.

Many countries in the Third World have been motivated into producing these cash crops. Countries that were self-sufficient in food production are now finding that they experience crop failures for a variety of reasons and that they are now net importers of the food they need to sustain themselves.

What happened with the program to which I was referring was that the farmers took all the resources. They took out loans in order to cover their part of the bargain, so to speak. They received the seed, the chemicals, and the technical expertise. They got their crop off the fields and it was ready for export. This crop was very labour intensive.

At the point when the crop was to be exported, a review was done of the cropping procedure and it was found that, at one point, one application of a chemical was made incorrectly and the crop could not be exported. The poor peasants lost everything. They found themselves without the food they needed to eat because they had been diverted from that type of production into a cash crop for export. They had no cash, they lost their land, and they were deeply in debt.

That example explains one of my concerns about this Bill in that it supports most particularly multinational corporations that will have more and more ability through this Bill to gain control of Canadian breeders and companies that produce.

This Bill has implications as far as getting patents for life form itself. I believe that germplasm is a basic resource for all mankind. It is global resource. It relates very much to world food security in general. There is a profound distinction that must be made between the applying of patents to intellectual property, to technologies of various sorts, and the technology which relates to the very production of food upon which we are all dependent. We have to make a distinction between the various patents which we are approving and making possible. I believe that we must look very carefully at any patent that has an effect on the food security of our world.

• (2220)

When companies are paying and supporting the research of seed that is dependent upon chemicals, there are profound environmental problems as well. The application of chemicals or fertilizers, insecticides and pesticides has a very deleterious effect upon the soils of our land and upon the waters into which they flow. This is producing seed which is vulnerable to epidemic. Again, this is a food security problem of which I feel we must be more aware.

I hope that when this Bill is discussed in committee many of these issues will be addressed and that we will bring before the committee witnesses who can speak much more profoundly than I to the issues I have raised this evening.

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, of all the debate that we have heard tonight I think the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia (Mr. Wilson) had the most articulate position of any taken this evening. I think he fully described what this Bill will do and what it should do. The bottom line of his position is simply this: it will make a stronger agricultural sector in the country from one end to the other.

That is what this Government has been attempting to do since 1984. It has been attempting to create a strong farming community. This measure is part and parcel of that.

This is evident in some of the figures the Minister of Agriculture has used in some of his speeches over the last number of months. Presently in Canada we have a very strong agricultural sector with only one out of twenty farmers at what we would consider a risk stage as far as finances go. Of all the farmers in the country 60 per cent of them do not need operating loans. The reason for that is very simple. It is because we have looked after the farming community of Canada, something which we will continue to do.

Farmers are extremely hard working and Canadian farmers in particular are very successful. They provide for their families and their communities. They are really the backbone of the nation. They contribute immensely to our economy and to our society as a whole. We do not want to forget that.

This Bill is very important for me. I come from Atlantic Canada where the climatic conditions are different from the other parts of Canada. What this Bill will do is meet some of the needs of a region such as mine. The geography and the climate of eastern Canada, particularly New Brunswick, are somewhat the same as certain parts of Europe. There are certain strains of grains in Europe, potatoes and other root crops which would prove to be very successful in Atlantic Canada. Those particular crops, if we did have the right to use them in Canada, would make us much more successful in Atlantic Canada.

We have to import a great deal of grain into Atlantic Canada. That is subsidized by the federal Government, as most everyone on both sides of this House will realize. Because it is subsidized it means that Canadian taxpayers are actually paying to put grain into eastern Canada. If we could have access to some of those species which would produce a higher grade and survive some of the climatic conditions we have in Atlantic Canada, we would all be better off. For that reason I believe this legislation is very important.

As a Government we feel very strongly that plant breeders' rights legislation is long overdue in Canada. Not having it has been detrimental to the plant breeding industry in Canada. The Member from Saskatchewan alluded to that fact. It has been very difficult without it for a number of people. It has nothing to do, as the Opposition has attempted to point out, with multinational corporations. The fact of the matter is that all the nations of the world that have used plant breeders' rights do have such legislation. There is a multiplication factor present. In other words, it encourages more businesses to get into the business of plant breeding.

The Netherlands, which was one of the first countries to institute such legislation and which did so in 1941, has 983 businesses in plant breeders' genetics. That number has increased significantly every year. It has nothing to do with multinational corporations. There are many small businesses in that area as well.

Denmark and France have the same proportions. The United States in 1970 instituted the same type of legislation. It has 786 companies involved in this area.

We are one of the few industrialized countries in the world that has not gone that route. I feel that it is time that we do so.

Mr. Milliken: Why?

Mr. Thompson: I will answer that question put to me by the Opposition. At the present time it is difficult for Canadian breeders to ensure that their varieties are protected in other countries. It is plain and simple.

In Nova Scotia, a successful plant variety well suited to processing called Shepody was given to McCain's by Agriculture Canada. As you know, Mr. Speaker, McCain's is located in my riding. It is a very important part of my riding. The potato industry is a very important industry in New Brunswick. The company's French office was able to protect that variety under French plant variety protection, thus securing a return on Canada's research investment.

We had to go to another country via the corporation to get protection for that variety. Obviously, it is preferable to pass our own legislation so that we can consistently enter into reciprocity with other nations and not give away our hard work paid for by Canadian tax dollars or private industry. We do not want to give it away.

Similarly, Canadian growers often face problems when trying to import varieties since many foreign plant breeders are reluctant to export their products to Canada, knowing that they are not protected by any comprehensive legislation. This Government understands their concern and knows it is reasonable since a great many varieties of ornamental plants commercially available in Canada have been copied or pirated from foreign plant materials. The horticultural industry in particular needs access to imported varieties, as do potato growers.

In addition, without plant breeders' rights we may not be in a position to face competition from those who have not bothered to invest time, money and energy in plant research and development, be they foreigners or Canadians. Our breeders must be compensated through royalties for investments of millions of dollars.

Plant breeding costs money—a lot of money. It involves a great amount of risk. As you know, Mr. Speaker, it generally takes 10 years to 15 years to select a variety that can be sold commercially. During that period breeders have to cross numerous plant varieties and produce numerous parent lines. Seed is then obtained and varieties tested. From these hundreds of varieties only a few make it to the market–place. It demands great patience and can be subject to many pitfalls, which is why plant breeders must be compensated through royalties. Profit is not a dirty word, although I guess it is if you are a socialist. However, that is precisely one of the reasons why we need plant breeders' rights. If we have a healthy agricultural society and Canadians are concerned about feeding the hungry of the world, one way to do it is to develop the varieties that can be used to create wealth in this nation. We know that the wealth in our nation is shared by many nations in the world and, in doing so, we can secure a food policy for all the people of this earth. We are not being narrow at all when we are looking at plant breeders' rights. We are looking to the good of humanity, not being selfish.

• (2230)

Mr. Milliken: Absolute nonsense.

Mr. Thompson: We cannot underestimate the importance of plant breeding in Canada, and we will not lose this opportunity to strengthen the agricultural sector.

Let us consider the comments of a former Minister of Agriculture, Eugene Whelan, in 1980, when that Government attempted to bring in its own plant breeders' legislation. Mr. Whelan had this to say about plant breeders' rights:

> The basic idea behind any proposed legislation protecting the work of a plant breeder, is to give recognition to the breeder for the work he's done in breeding and introducing a new plant variety. Right now inventors can patent their gimmicks, and writers get royalties on the books they get published. Plant breeders, although they are pretty much the same as authors and inventors, have no way of benefiting from the work they do.

That is a quote from Eugene Whalen, that fellow with the funny green hat. He was not a bad Agriculture Minister after all.

Mr. Whelan went on to state:
