POINT OF ORDER

ALLOCATION OF TIME DURING DEBATE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, if you would ask for unanimous consent, I think you would find that the House is favourably disposed to operate in a manner similar to the rules we followed yesterday. Each caucus makes its own decision as to whether or not it wants to use up their 20-minute time slot in one of the two following methods; first, that the Member could use the traditional 20 minutes, with a 10-minute question and answer period, or alternatively, as we did yesterday, the caucus in question could split up the time into a 10-minute speech, followed immediately by a five-minute question and answer period, followed immediately again by another Member of the same caucus with a 10-minute speech, and again followed with a five-minute question and answer period.

I think you will find, Mr. Speaker, that the House is favourably disposed to this kind of initiative. It is exactly the same as the procedure we utilized yesterday. If the House agrees, perhaps because of the time at which we will be starting, I could indicate right now that if such is the case, our first speaker will be starting with a 20-minute speech because it will be our lead-off speaker.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the suggestion made in terms of today's proceedings. We certainly will co-operate but we have a problem, and that is concerning the normal rotation of speakers. We in the New Democratic Party will not benefit from this change because we likely will only have one speaker today. Our first speaker will also go for the 20-minute and 10-minute period.

One of the problems we have is that there is little benefit in terms of co-operating on a day like today. Perhaps, having flagged this problem, for future opposition days when we are making these suggestions, we could consider that. However, for today, in the spirit of co-operation and more important, a willingness to try some new approaches to debating in the House, we will certainly be co-operating.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that the Government is prepared to co-operate in this as well. Our concern would be that we would like to have the Minister speak this morning before 11 o'clock. That would be our only concern. It does not affect the 20-minute, 10-minute, rule.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I see there is a disposition of the House to proceed on that order.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte) moves:

> That this House condemns the Government for its short-sighted and punitive policies that are designed to eliminate passenger rail services in Canada despite the essential nature of these services to the development of communities in all regions of the country.

• (1010)

He said: Mr. Speaker, as is always the case, of course, the Speaker occupies a position of great authority and, consequently, neutrality in the House, and just as a Speaker should, you read that motion clearly, concisely and dispassionately. Because you read it with the latter adjective attached to it I think it bears rereading since you, Sir, in a very non-partisan way merely put the motion.

What the motion states is:

> That this House condemns the Government for its short-sighted and punitive policies that are designed to eliminate passenger rail services in Canada despite the essential nature of the services to the development of communities in all regions of the country.

We bring this motion to the attention of the House today because the Government of Canada has embarked upon a policy, a short-sighted policy, that not only will deny in the short term the people of Canada a rail passenger service, which in itself is important and devastating for the communities to be affected but, more fundamentally, it is denying Canadians as we move into the 1990s and the year 2000 the future.

Why do I say that? We have a Government which through an arbitrary decision contained in the federal Budget, made a decision to cut back substantially on the amount of money provided to VIA Rail to provide rail passenger service in Canada. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) is a Minister—let no one be fooled—who is no fool. I want to vouch for the fact that the Minister of Transport is a reasonably intelligent individual. He is a reasonably political individual. He is someone who understands the consequences of his actions. He is not a mere puppet in the hands of the bureaucrats, completely without any sense or understanding of the consequences of his actions.

Yet we have the same Minister standing in his place in the House day after day, in committee, before the cameras and before the public saying: "We are not telling VIA Rail what to do. We are not telling it what service it should provide. We are not telling it what services it should cut. We are merely telling VIA it has no money. The rest is up to them". "I want to assure you", says this Minister with his most baleful, honest and sincere look, "the Government of Canada has not targeted parts of this country, such as Atlantic Canada. We have not abandoned the West. We have not shattered our commitments to those rural communities all across this land. We are merely telling VIA Rail that it has $500 million less than it used to have. The responsibility for how it lives within that new budget is its problem, not mine, not ours".

For a reasonably heretofore described intelligent, reasonably aware, reasonably engaging Minister of the Crown to make that kind of foolhardy proposition is an insult to the intelligence of Canadians. Let it be clearly said today that it is not some mindless, faceless group of bureaucrats in some long lost corporation occupying the top floor of some glass and steel ivory tower called VIA Rail that is making the decision to abandon rural Canada. It is the Government of Canada and, specifically, the Minister of Transport who is responsible for the actions that are being taken today. Let no one be fooled.

What exactly is involved in this decision by the Government? So it is on the record and so Canadians know what we are talking about, it is the elimination of some 22 routes. The routes west are Montreal–Sudbury, Toronto–Winnipeg–Calgary, Winnipeg–Edmonton, Victoria–Kootenay, in Quebec, Chaleurs–Gaspé, Quebec–Mont Joli, Montreal–Sherbrooke, North Shore and in Ontario, Kingston–Toronto, Toronto–Sarnia, Toronto–Niagara, Toronto–London, Toronto–Havelock, Toronto–North Bay, and Cochrane–Kapuskasing. The Atlantic routes are Halifax–Dartmouth, Halifax–Montreal, Halifax–Sydney, Halifax–Saint John, Moncton–Campbellton, Moncton–Edmundston and Moncton–Charlottetown. Then there is Calgary–Vancouver, Edmonton–Vancouver, the corridor between Toronto and Montreal, Quebec–Montreal–Hervey, western Winnipeg and Winnipeg–The Pas. Only six of the nine remaining remote routes were left untouched. Only one route was increased. Of 35 routes, potentially 22 are to be eliminated. Six are to be reduced. That is the consequence of the decision taken by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget.

I began my remarks by saying that the Government of Canada is not just taking a decision that fundamentally alters one of the important modes of transportation in this country and abandons communities, in particular, in rural parts of Canada, but that the Government is also denying the future to Canadians. I said that because the Minister of Transport knows, as does the Minister of Finance, that VIA Rail under its former President, Denis deBelleval, a President who was fired, eliminated, vaporized, disposed of by the Minister of Transport, was putting together, along with his officials and with the best advice he found in Canada, a corporate plan for VIA Rail.

It is one that did not envisage in the long term the continued pay-out of substantial subsidies to VIA Rail, subsidies in the amount that are now being paid out but a corporate plan that foresaw VIA Rail being a modern, efficient, competitive, productive and profitable rail passenger service for Canada.

Fundamental to that plan was examining, as has been developed in other countries, notably Japan and countries in Europe, a high-speed rail passenger service. Nobody who is serious about rail passenger traffic in Canada—and this is the argument of the Minister—would argue that the future of VIA Rail is its present or its past, a continuation of the kind and level and quality of service that we have today. Those who are serious about a rail passenger service in the country, including the former President who was fired, Mr. Denis deBelleval, looked into the future.

In fact they looked into the present in Japan and in Europe and saw that a rail passenger service could only be viable and survive if we looked seriously at the concept and the notion of high speed trains. Even in advance of receiving that corporate plan into which a great deal of work, thought and effort had gone, not to mention $4 million of taxpayers' money, the Minister of Finance, with the concurrence of the Minister of Transport on April 27 in his Budget, took an arbitrary decision not only to wipe out the existing rail passenger service but to eliminate even the possibility of Canada looking seriously and soberly at the future, looking at the possibility and the concept of high speed trains.

It must be said that where high speed trains have matured in their development and where they are in place today they are not only efficient, on time and moving vast numbers of people, they are profitable. They have either paid or are paying for themselves. In some cases they are actually being used to cross-subsidize more remote services because of the level of profit involved in the operation of high speed trains. That is the kind of future that Mr. deBelleval and those at VIA today envisage for rail passenger service in Canada. That is the kind of concept which says that Canada in 1989 as a modern and yet, yes, Mr. Speaker, wealthy western nation surely should seriously examine. That is the kind of future which this Government in a short-sighted desire to meet the bottom line objective of the Minister of Finance turned its back on. Nothing less than that was the consequence of the decision by the Minister of Transport.

I come from Newfoundland and in Newfoundland we have some experience with a Government that tells you, "We are not eliminating your service, my friend, we are merely making an adjustment. Actually what we are going to do is make your service better and more productive. Trust us. There is no plan back here on the shelf to eliminate your service entirely. We would never do such a dastardly thing."

I recall the words of the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the Minister of Transport's colleague in Cabinet, when he told Newfoundlanders, "Those who would suggest the abandonment of the rail service in Newfoundland are treacherous. They are traitors to Newfoundland and I will have none of it." Those words still echo in the far corners of this exalted Chamber if you listen carefully. You can listen as hard as you want but you cannot hear the sound of the train crossing the tracks of Newfoundland any more because that train is gone, abandoned. The rails are rusting.

We heard in Newfoundland exactly the same kind of pact, the same kind of deception, the same kind of phoney assurance, the same kind of "my hands are clean and I cannot do anything about it. We merely make the financial decisions, the rest is up to CN or VIA Rail." The same kind of nonsense we heard in Newfoundland we are hearing today about VIA Rail.

Mr. Mifflin: And no compensation.

Mr. Tobin: And no compensation. Canadians should know that when this Minister rises as he will in a few minutes, and he gives them once again those assurances that the matter is not really in our hands it is in VIA Rail's, perhaps through lease and adjustment, but the fundamentals of a service shall be there at least in Canada's best served cities and population areas. When he gives us those assurances, remember, I say to those who listen to his words, that these are the same assurances from the same Government that we have heard about train service in the Province of Newfoundland, a service that is now entirely gone.

These are the same assurances we have heard from the same Government during an election campaign about regional development being a sacred trust. If, Mr. Speaker, there is an election and you need a commitment to regional development you have got it. If there is an election and you need a commitment to no changes to the UIC, well you have got that too. If there is an election and you need a commitment to day care of $4 billion or $5 billion, my gosh, you have got that too. You ask the Prime Minister, "Can you afford all these?" "Every damn nickel has been accounted for", he says. Yes, Mr. Speaker, and as soon as that election is over a budget is brought in by "Mac the Knife" and every one of those commitments are shattered along with—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: That is Mike the Knife.

Mr. Tobin: —dozens of others and so too was the so-called commitment to VIA Rail by the Government.

What is at stake in the decision of the Minister of Finance and defended by his Minister of Transport? Some Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. He ought to be tarred and feathered and run out of town on a rail, transported away from this place.

He has presided over the disintegration of Canada's national transportation systems in a nation that was built on transportation. John A. Macdonald, that great Conservative Prime Minister had a vision of Canada, a great land mass from sea to sea, stretching from Atlantic to Pacific, from the southern boundaries to the north. He said this country can only be knit together by developing transportation systems which allow our people to move freely across our borders, to develop a flow of traffic and people and commerce east and west and not north and south.

That man, John A. Macdonald, who had a dream over 123 years ago, finds that dream being shattered and turned into a nightmare by these cousins, these people who have followed in his footsteps but have abandoned the path that he chose for this nation by destroying our basic transportation systems.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Tobin: I say to the people of Canada that they ought not to be lulled by the phoney assurances of this Government. We have heard them in too many other areas. The people ought to understand that what is being proposed by this Government is the total elimination of our rail passenger service.

The President of Transport 2000, a non-partisan, does not align himself with any political ideology and does not associate with any particular political party. He has but one objective and that is the maintenance of decent transportation systems for Canada, in particular rail transportation. The president of Transport 2000 has said, "It makes sense to me that there will remain only the Quebec City-Toronto corridor". One train to the east and only a tourist train in the west. We can see it coming.

It used to be that being a Canadian citizen was not a guarantee of equality, was not a guarantee that no matter where we lived or how we pursued a livelihood, we would all be equal. No one ever expected that and no one ever demanded that. Being a Canadian citizen used to be a guarantee of equal opportunity and a guarantee that in some fundamental basic areas, while we could not all be equal, notwithstanding our circumstance, citizenship carried with it some services available to all of us in equal measure no matter where we lived.

One of the fundamentals is health care. Another is the opportunity for a good education. Another is the basic rights afforded all citizens under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Another one, because of the very nature of this country's sparse population and its tremendous land mass, is the ability and freedom to move and not be penalized because of where you live.

For many Canadians VIA Rail is a fundamental right not only in terms of freight services but for passenger service as well. For the Government of Canada today to make an arbitrary decision that rail passenger service must be productive, efficient and profitable, after the Government has abandoned it for so many years and has not given it the tools to be productive, efficient and profitable, is an abandonment of the regions. It is an extension of the philosophy which says that if you do not live in the Quebec City-Windsor corridor you are a second class Canadian, because this Government takes its cue from the market-place, and if the market-place does not determine that you should have a certain level of service as far as this Government concerns, you do not exist.

The decision to abandon VIA Rail is not merely a transportation decision, it is an extension of a philosophic view about Canada. It is an idea about Canada that heretofore was foreign to the people of this nation. It is a view that reduces the country to a mere collection of pieces on a monopoly board. It attaches a value to citizenship that assigns the least value to it depending upon how far away one lives from the centre.

We in the Liberal Party cannot accept that view, that vision of Canada. Nor can we in this Party, this forward-looking, progressive, reformist Party, accept that Canada, a country among the nations of the world, must turn its back on the future. We cannot deny the opportunity to examine the technology that exists today to make this a modern and efficient transportation nation. We cannot accept that Japan and western Europe can develop high speed trains, make them productive, paying and efficient, serve their people and that Canada somehow is a backward nation incapable of developing that kind of transportation system.

We cannot accept that, Mr. Speaker. That is why we condemn the Government today. That is why we invite Canadians everywhere to understand the full implications of this decision and to battle this Government. They should make their voices heard to ensure that VIA Rail continues as a viable entity serving Canadians no matter where they live and to ensure that Canada moves into the 21st century in rail passenger service and not turn its back on the future and operate like a dinosaur lost in the forest of decades gone. This Minister of Transport is a dinosaur. This Government has abandoned the regions. This Government stands condemned before the people of Canada for a short-sighted, narrow, and punitive decision.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the approach that the Member from Newfoundland took. Does he or his Party have a specific plan which they believe should be put into place for VIA in Canada?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member for his question. I think it is well known to all Members who have been involved in the work of the Standing Committee on Transport, and indeed all Members who have a particular interest in transportation, that VIA Rail has worked very hard for the last number of years and has expended millions of dollars of funds to develop a plan for VIA Rail's future.

We know that the centre-piece of that plan is a determined examination of the whole concept of high speed trains. I think everybody in Canada, notwithstanding their political ideology, accepts that it is not an appropriate decision nor desire by anybody to see VIA Rail continue to operate at a loss of hundreds of millions of dollars per year. I do not believe the NDP supports that concept. The Liberal Party does not. The Government uses that notion as an excuse to destroy VIA Rail.

Those who are forward looking do not demand the status quo, that is the same low quality equipment, the same inappropriate service, and the very same routes being serviced in the very same way and manner forever. Nobody is looking for the status quo except the Minister. He tells us that it is the status quo or nothing. He makes the case that the status quo is not acceptable, the losses are not acceptable and therefore it is nothing.

He does not give the nation or VIA Rail an opportunity not to promote the status quo but to move beyond the status quo and into the present. We are actually operating a service that reflects the past. It reflects an ageing technology and ageing way of doing this rather than moving into the future.

The Member asked if I have a specific plan. Yes, Mr. Speaker, my plan and the plan of the liberal party, as well as that of all Members, should be to allow the people at Via Rail, who are in this business and who understand that the status quo was not acceptable to the Government and Canadians, to submit to the Minister as they are going to do in the next few weeks a plan that envisaged a role for VIA in the future and looked at the relevance of high speed trains. The plan should not be to throw money at it.

I happen to have a personal belief. I am willing to see VIA's concept challenged. If we in a country with technological ability and relative wealth are not prepared to invest in the future and to look very seriously at the concept of high speed trains, we may as well acknowledge today that we have no role and no ability to be in the rail passenger service and get out of it.

What the Minister of Transport has done is come to that conclusion before he has even seen VIA Rail's brief, before he has even examined the possibility. This Minister has allowed a Finance Minister and his particular wants and dictates at a particular point in time to shape the future in a fundamental way of rail passenger service in Canada. Surely nobody in this House can seriously believe that they can cut $500 million out of VIA Rail's operating budget and expect there is going to be a rail passenger service in Canada. There is not going to be, by any stretch of the imagination, a national rail passenger service. Nor, with those kind of cuts, is there any serious ability to examine a forward, future looking concept, that is, the notion of high speed trains.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Member who just spoke. I understand that if the VIA Rail service through Edmonton is cut, we will lose a thousand jobs in our city alone.

The Member will perhaps know that at Progressive Conservative hearings in 1981 and 1982, we found that each year something like a quarter of a million Atlantic Canadians took the train that goes through Maine. I assume that many of those people were students, many had low incomes, and many were senior citizens.

What does the Hon. Member think it will do regionally to Atlantic Canada? I guess we cannot do anything more to Newfoundland since it does not have a train. What does he think it will do to the Maritime Provinces if the train called "The Atlantic" going through Maine is cut?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member for his question. I was in Alberta last week and I happen to know that there is a great deal of concern in Edmonton about the possibility of Edmonton being dropped, with the loop that now runs into Edmonton being eliminated as part of the package of cuts about which I have just talked.

I can well understand that the Member is hearing the kinds of concerns Canadians are expressing across the country. In asking a specific question about Edmonton, noting Edmonton and then going on to reflect upon the cuts in Atlantic Canada—and given that the Hon. Member comes from the West and that we are of two different Parties; I do not want to be partisan about it—I think he reflects the feeling in this country in particular about the regions. "Region" is a dastardly word. It denotes "afterthought" when policies are made at the centre. This plan will see a run continue from Quebec City to Windsor, but not much else anywhere in the so-called regions.

I think the Member reflects the feeling in this country which goes far beyond merely a transportation issue. The basic contract that we made in something called Confederation was that while we could not all be equal, the concept of citizenship would carry with it basic services that we could all depend upon. It is the feeling in this country that the basic contract called Confederation is being broken.

Via Rail is very much for Canadians who live not just outside of Quebec and Ontario, but those who live outside Toronto, Montreal. It is also for those people in northern Quebec and Ontario, as well as the other eight provinces. They have a feeling that the Government is walking away not only in this area but in so many areas from the basic contract that we bind ourselves to when we stand with pride, put our hands by our sides, and sing O Canada.

What Canada is it when it functions, according to this Government, only by market-place principles and when it functions only between Quebec City and Windsor? Canada is much broader than that, much wider than that, and its heart beats in more places than that, and this Government does not understand.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I would be interested if my colleague opposite would tell me when the provision of rail service to every Canadian became the heart of being a Canadian citizen.

Where I come from, we lost the railway when the Liberals were in power. As I recall, when the railway was set up originally the Liberals opposed it. That was back when John A. Macdonald was setting it up. Indeed, he lost an election over it. The Grits came in and did nothing about building the railway, and when John A. Macdonald came back into power, he finished it.

When did it become a fundamental part of Canadian citizenship? What about all the Canadians who fought wars and have not had a railway in terms of passenger service even since the beginning?

• (1040)

Mr. Tobin: This is the fundamental problem with the thinking opposite. The Member wants to know when did it become a fundamental tenet that every single Canadian ought to have the main line running by his front door. There never was that tenet.

This is how the Government operates. It sets up a ridiculous argument, a nonsensical statement, and then shoots it down. No one is suggesting that every single Canadian ought to have the mail rail line running by his front door. What we are saying is that all of Canada's regions ought to be served, can be served, and should be served. If we are forward looking and believe in this country and our ability to repeat the success of high speed trains, we should at least look at the systems elsewhere in the world. There is no reason that all of Canada's regions cannot have a reasonable level of rail passenger service.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I could reconsider everything that has been said by my friend, but I would need more than 20 minutes and that would not necessarily answer the issue before us today.

When the Hon. Member referred to Newfoundland, I know in the bottom of his heart that my friend is very happy with what we did. For example, there is $800 million in Newfoundland for roads. I suggest to my friend that he make the same proposal to his neighbours in P.E.I., Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. He will see what type of reaction he will have.

The Hon. Member was referring to Europe and Japan. In terms of transportation, the worst we can do is compare Canada with a smaller country such as Japan with 100 million people. There is no comparison. Canada is a very large country with 26 million people. There is no profitable rail passenger service in the world.

Mr. Keyes: Amtrak is close.

Mr. Tobin: The TGV.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): It is not a network. The TGV in France is one of the components of the network.

Mr. Tobin: That component is profitable.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): The network is not working in terms of profits. One only needs to talk to people in France and West Germany.

Mr. Tobin: You are saying that the high speed train is not profitable? Stick to your facts. It is very profitable.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): I did not interrupt the Hon. Member. I was very quiet when he spoke.

Mr. Tobin: I will be as well.

[Translation]

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I think it is good that my colleague presented this motion today because, basically, our discussions of transportation choices must be based on realities. I said many times that I am not fundamentally or viscerally opposed to the rail passenger transportation system. We belong to the same country, we have lived in the same country for 120 years, and I think it is essential to understand that rail passenger service met some needs, particularly in the 19th century, and even until the 1950s or 1960s, essential needs that successive governments of whatever party respected. Nevertheless, people try to forget, or get away from, the reality of the situation the country is in now.

But sooner or later, this reality catches up with us. I refer, of course, Mr. Speaker, to Canada's financial situation. VIA Rail received $641 million (in subsidies) last year: that is $100 for every passenger who took the train. Every time someone boards a train for $20 or $25, it costs the government $100. This transportation system is changing considerably today. Air and road transportation in particular account for 85 per cent of all inter-city travel. Marine transportation, in provinces where this is justified, is developing and subsidies are also growing at the same time, especially for rail transport, again.

Mr. Speaker, this trend with VIA Rail—I shall speak of VIA Rail although it did not exist until 12 years ago, but today it is VIA Rail—began in the 1950s and '60s, when the use of rail passenger services started a two-third decline after reaching a peak just after the war, when highway transportation was much less developed and obviously air transportation was not as big as it is today.

In 1961—not many people know and I think the information would be useful to Hon. Members opposite—a commission of inquiry recommended exactly what we intend to do today, in other words, rationalization of rail passenger service. It was not done at the time, for political reasons. However, it is clear that if that was the situation was like that in 1961, and now, twenty-eight years later, we have the kind of situation we have today, the Government had to act.

Since 1977, $5.4 billion have been spent. Of this amount, more than $1 billion—and this without improving equipment for the last ten years—more than $1 billion or almost $1.5 billion has gone to capital investment in an attempt to improve the quality of VIA's services.

[English]

We have to face the reality today. We could forget the Budget. We could say that there is no problem. It is funny that members of the Liberal Party and the NDP never talk about where they are going to get the money. They spend money, and there is no problem there. They could find a lot of expenditures. However, when the time comes to state from where they will get the money, they are silent. We do not hear anything. We do not know from where they will get will get the money. Everybody knows that members of the NDP have all that money. We have known that for many years. Members of the Liberal Party used to be a little more reasonable, but they are becoming no more reasonable than the NDP.

At the present time the debt represents approximately $34,000 for every household in the country. Twenty years ago the debt cost was 12 cents for every tax dollar. Today it is 35 cents. That is three times what it was approximately 15 years ago.

Everyone must play a part in controlling the debt. Those who need help the most must be protected from the ravages that uncontrolled debt would cause to those who can least defend themselves. We must control the debt to protect our legacy for our children. We believe that it has to be done within all Departments of the Government, particularly where the money that we spend does not represent the purposes for which we have expended that money.

There has been much discussion in recent weeks concerning the level of subsidies that the Government has announced in the Budget. In particular, comparisons have been made with other modes of public transportation in Canada—buses, airplanes, and so on. I would like to address in the House of Commons today the question of cuts.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it would be helpful to review some facts on VIA's performance in 1988. I think that in the public interest and in the interests of Canadians and of this House, we ought to know exactly how VIA Rail is used and why we are facing so many problems.

For the system as a whole, the operating subsidy is over $500 million. Total subsidy payments, which include funding support for capital investments have risen to $641 million. I said earlier that it costs the Government $100 every time a passenger takes the train. For the most heavily travelled segment, which is commonly referred to, as my colleague said, as the Québec–Windsor corridor, the operating subsidy is $178 million for an average of $40 per passenger.

Mr. Speaker, further afield, transcontinental services cost $198 per passenger, and services to remote areas cost $212. Every time someone takes a train in a remote area, it cost $212 per ticket.

It is interesting to note that cost recovery levels vary. The cost recovery level, Mr. Speaker, indicates our ability, when we spend $1, to recover that $1 from the fares paid by passengers.

In some regions, Mr. Speaker, that level is 13 per cent. For every dollar spent by the Government, the passenger spends 13 cents.

We can run a company like that. We can keep convincing ourselves that the need for service means that we should not consider cost increases. However, we must face the facts. Today, it is $641 million. Tomorrow, it will be $800 million. It is estimated that by the year 2000, it will cost us between $6 to $8 billion, without any expansion, just for normal operating and capital expenditures.

Mr. Speaker, Canada can no longer afford this kind of situation. With its expanding transportation network, Canada can no longer justify spending this kind of money.

Mr. Speaker, VIA Rail's results, it must be acknowledged today, are a disaster. Last week, I was accused of refusing to consider ridership rates. We do consider these rates. The ridership rate, Mr. Speaker, has increased by 13 per cent, which means that revenue has increased by about $26 million. The problem is, that expenditures have gone up 15 per cent or $94 million.

I challenge anyone to manage a business that earns $26 million and spends $94 million and to operate that business for more than one or two years. In the case of a publicly-owned enterprise, it doesn't matter. Operating a company or business when it is publicly-owned is not a problem. We can spend as much as we want without worrying about the deficit; it's not important because it's public money.

Mr. Speaker, today Canada must face financial reality because we were not in power when it was time for action. It is because the Liberal Party has, over 20 years, accumulated a debt exceeding $550 billion that Canadians must pay for it today. They did not take a position of conscience and assume their management responsibilities when it was time to do so.

Since 1984, Mr. Speaker, this Government has spent over $2.6 billion. We are accused of being dinosaurs, of not investing money. Yet, we have spent $2.6 billion since 1984, including over $1 billion in capital expenditures. We are told we have not improved equipment. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have improved equipment within our capabilities and our financial means without falling into the same trap as our predecessors and spending left and right without rhyme or reason. Back in 1976, when the present Opposition Leader (Mr. Turner) was Minister of Finance, the Government expenditure growth rate was around 29 per cent while it is between 3 and 4 per cent today. Well, we are now paying the bills they ran 10 or 12 years ago.

Mr. Speaker, rail transport is being compared to other modes of transport. As I said, it accounts for 3 per cent of total. Air transport, which is booming—we only have to look at large airports among others—accounts for 7 per cent of total. Car travel accounts for 84 per cent. Mr. Speaker, we would agree if the Government were to drop all assistance to road construction or if the provinces were to decide to freeze their budgets and concentrate on railroad transportation. However we simply cannot fly in the face of the fact that 84 per cent of Canadians going from one municipality to the next would rather take to the roads. And expansion in the trucking sector these days has to be one of the major components of a leading industry also operating from coast to coast, as much in the Maritimes and in Newfoundland as in western or central Canada. And what is more, Mr. Speaker, twice as many people would rather travel by bus than take VIA Rail.

The figures speak for themselves, Mr. Speaker: Canadians very much prefer means of transportation other than the train, and they have proven that.

Mr. Speaker, this is why we are subsidizing to the tune of $641 million, and this is why people do not travel by train. We live in a country where people are free to decide how they travel from here to there. We have invested $5.4 billion over the past 11 or 12 years, yet the rate of utilization has declined by 20 per cent during the last nine years. It is a pattern. After World War II, ever since the early 1960's, the utilization rate of trains has been falling. Our friends opposite led this country for 20 years. When they became aware of it, they invested heavily. What was the result? An utilization rate 20 per cent lower and again enormous subsidies.

As political men and women, Mr. Speaker, we have decided to be reasonable and to tell Canadians: This is what we can afford; on the basis of available resources, these are the services we can provide you with. That is the reason why we notified VIA Rail that we would reduce its subsidies by $500 million within the next five years.

Mr. Speaker, we do not favour cars over trains. We do not feel that travelling by train is outdated. But for over 20 years now, Canadians have consistently demonstrated a lack of interest for rail transportation. As I said to my Hon. friend on several occasions, everybody wants to keep the train but nobody wants to use it. I do not know just how many times my colleagues across the floor took the train this past year.

• (1050)

[English]

How many times did they take the train in the last year? I am not sure whether a lot of people on the other side took the train the last year, but they want to keep it. Of course we want to keep the train, but we do not have the money, however. The Liberal Party does not care from where we get the money; it does not seem to matter. They have been spending money for 20 years. The country must face the reality of a $320 billion debt and a $58 billion deficit as was forecast by Mr. Lalonde for 1990-1991. The problem is that it does not matter to the Liberals because they do not care about money.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Government is asking VIA Rail, contrary to what my friend from Newfoundland has stated—

[English]

He knows very well that no decision has been made. He enumerated that a lot of routes will be abandoned. I am happy to know about that, because personally I have not received any document. VIA Rail is doing its homework, and that is good.

Mr. Tobin: Is it all VIA Rail's fault?

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): It will have a few proposals for the Government, with recommendations. By the way, we will have the proper plan at the same time, the one by Mr. deBelleval to which the Hon. Member is referring. Mr. deBelleval is not there because he did not share the view we had. He resigned. He decided it was better to let the Government do what it had to do. My friend knows very well what I mean.

I would like to conclude by indicating that the transportation network will have to be expanded in Canada. There is no doubt about it. The Department of Transport has a budget of $3.1 billion. I believe that Canada is a country where money is well expended in terms of transportation, but we have to put forward some corrections. That is what we will do. We want to live within the reasonableness of what we are able to pay. My friend knows very well that Newfoundland is happy today because it will have $800 million—

Mr. Tobin: The Government of Newfoundland wants to renegotiate the deal.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): —for roads for the next 20 years. Newfoundlanders are happy because—

Mr. Tobin: You had better come and visit Newfoundland, my friend.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): —they know very well that to put money into a transportation mode which is not used any more, a mode which is not what Canadians want, would not be wise or good for the future of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being eleven o'clock, the House will now proceed to statements pursuant to Standing Order 31.

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC CANADA GROUNDFISHERY

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the House to the Government's latest bungling of fisheries management in Atlantic Canada. For almost two weeks the under 45-foot fleet of groundfishermen in Prince Edward Island were subjected to an unheard of 2,000 pound daily trip limit. How ridiculous. With a catch of 2,000 pounds fishermen were not even covering costs let alone making any money. At the beginning of May there was a glut of landings in the eastern Gulf. The quota was reduced to 12,000 pounds. Although the glut was cleared, the quota was reduced further to 2,000 pounds. Where was the logic in this drastic measure? The fish were more than plentiful, but the fishermen were not allowed to catch them.

• (1100)

Yes, the quota has been partially restored. But what about the major losses the fishermen incurred during the near two-week period? Can the Minister explain to the House and to Prince Edward Island fishermen—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

FIRST WOMEN FIGHTER PILOTS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Armed Forces has its first women fighter pilots. Captains Deanna Brasseur and Jane Foster have successfully completed a seven-month basic fighter pilots' course at Canadian Forces Base Cold Lake.

The intense training course involved academics, air combat, manoeuvring tactics and weapons deployment.

Following the graduation ceremony on Saturday, June 10, Captain Brasseur will join a NATO squadron and Captain Foster will join a NORAD squadron, both in Cold Lake.

I am told these two women will be the only women pilots in the world in an operational fighter squadron.

The pilots of this House of Commons wish them well, with just a bit of envy, because there is only one seat we would like to sit in as much as our parliamentary seat, and that is a seat in a CF-18.

THE BUDGET

COMMENTS OF ATLANTIC PREMIERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, when protests cut across party lines, we know that something serious is wrong. So it is very significant that all four Atlantic Premiers, Conservative and Liberal, have formed a common front to attack how the Budget is hitting Atlantic Canada.

Yesterday we learned about the latest blow to Atlantic Canada. The Western Diversification Office will be able to keep helping large firms in that part of the country, while the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency has had to put strict regulations on any help to big companies in Atlantic Canada. This means footloose firms will be bribed to go west rather than to the poorer Atlantic provinces, hardly what fair regional development should be about.

The Atlantic Premiers have requested a meeting with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). We believe this should take place urgently.

AVIATION

HOT AIR BALLOONS

Mr. Ross Stevenson (Durham): Mr. Speaker, the headlines say: "Balloons stampede herd".

Hot air balloons are much more frightening to livestock than engine powered aircraft or vehicles, which can be seen and heard approaching and leaving the vicinity. When the burner ignites on the balloon to give more altitude, it frequently fires with a loud bang, like a gun. As in western movies when the rustlers fired their guns overhead, herds frequently stampede.

This past week, 17 balloons passed over several livestock farms in central Ontario. One balloon, bearing the Kodak logo, had its burner started directly over a herd. In just one of the frightened herds, 107 calves less than six weeks old, 160 cows, some close to giving birth, all stampeded. By some miracle, none of the young calves were trampled.

Last year a similar balloon caused a stampede on a nearby farm, and a very pregnant cow had to be destroyed. The unborn calf was saved by Caesarean section.

I urge the Government to properly regulate hot air balloons, balloonists to start policing themselves, and pilots to be more considerate of livestock and property.

IMMIGRATION

CHINESE STUDENTS IN CANADA

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are some 4,500 students from China in Canada at this moment and we recognize that this is a particularly tragic time for them. There are 110 studying at York University, located in my riding of York Centre.

They have sent to me letters and petitions with hundreds of signatures. I have brought them to the House, and I hope Members will want to examine them, urging the strongest condemnation of their Government.

I want to talk about the situation of these students. The Government of Canada has agreed to suspend for at least a two-month period removals to China under the Immigration Act. But there is more that can be done to help these students from China in this time of crisis.

An indefinite extension of student visas would help ameliorate the current state of uncertainty and anxiety which they feel. Similarly, there are financial problems created for these students because financial support for them which has been coming from China may not be forthcoming or continue.

I urge the Government of Canada to make representations to the provinces of our country in order to obtain foreign student fee exemptions or deferments for these students. Finally, the question of political asylum must be considered by the Government and would be appropriate given—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

REDUCTIONS AT CFB PENHOLD

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, Penhold is a small town of about 1,500 people located about 20 kilometres south of Red Deer. Last weekend I had the opportunity to meet with provincial and civic leaders from Penhold, Innisfail, and Red Deer to discuss the formation of a committee to look into ways to offset the impact of the reductions at Canadian Forces Base Penhold.

This committee met again on Wednesday of this week. Calling themselves the Penhold Economic Revitalization Committee, they are going to investigate the full impact of the reductions, discuss alternatives, and develop a plan for the future, using the resources of the Community Futures Program. I salute the constructive spirit shown by these community leaders. They are not shouting and wildly protesting, nor are they sitting back hoping for a miracle cure. They are translating their concerns into concrete, positive action. Their sights are set on the future of their community. I give them my full support. Their dedication bodes well for the future of Penhold.

STATUS OF WOMEN

REAL WOMEN—ALLEGED MISUSE OF PUBLIC FUNDS

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in committee yesterday, when I questioned the Minister responsible for the status of women, she said that REAL women, according to anecdotal evidence she had, had misused public funds.

This was in relation to an REAL conference funded by the Government in which the credibility of every female Supreme Court Justice was apparently attacked, simply because they were women; and serious misinformation about child care, about women in the military, and about lesbians and gay men was disseminated.

Since that conference, I have received copies of letters from the Secretary of State (Mr. Weiner) justifying the funding of the conference, stating that the funding was in every way consistent with the Government's equality criteria.

The Secretary of State refuses to acknowledge that working for equality does not mean telling people that children in child care will become partial psychopaths.

I hope he will at least listen to his own status of women Minister—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member.

THE ECONOMY

DEVELOPMENT OF AID PROGRAM FOR LOCAL COMMUNITIES

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the federal program to assist local community development provides major support for the Abitibi economy.

The Senneterre business assistance centre, which covers Barraute, Lebel-sur-Quévillon, Malartic and Senneterre, has just presented its fourth annual report.

Since its first year, the centre has invested $1,700,000, generating $8,200,000 of investment and $25,500,000 of business and creating 90 jobs and maintaining 143, for a grand total of 233 jobs.

The 1989-90 plan shows no slowdown because 123 jobs are to be created during this period with a subsidy of $879,000, generating total investments of $3,900,000.

Mr. Speaker, that is the excellent work done by general manager Jean G. Gobeil and his staff under chairman Louis Marie Dubreuil and members of the board of directors.

FISHERIES

ALLEGED HARASSMENT BY FRENCH TRAWLER

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I was informed that earlier this week, off Fogo Island, Newfoundland, a French factory trawler harassed several Newfoundland inshore fishermen in their much smaller fishing boats. This vessel, registered in St. Malo, France, came dangerously close to these fishermen and, in at least two cases, destroyed their fishing gear.

Seeing such foreign fishermen as these on the prime inshore fishing grounds is a thorn in the side of Newfoundlanders. The sophistication of these vessels, their size and capability, gives them an unfair advantage.

As if this were not enough, they add insult to injury by disregarding Canadian law and the rights and privileges of Canadian citizens in our own territorial waters. Newfoundland fishermen do not need foreign harassment to add to their litany of existing problems, and they certainly cannot afford to have expensive fishing gear destroyed.

I ask that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), in conjunction with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), ensure that this incident is thoroughly investigated, that decisive action is taken, and that the fishermen involved are fully compensated in a timely manner.

HEALTH CARE

RESEARCH PROGRAM INTO OSTEOPOROSIS

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, osteoporosis is a bone condition that afflicts 800,000 Canadian women. A new recent program in Canada, involving a minimum of $10 million has been announced by Glaxo Canada and Allelix Biopharmaceuticals.
• (1110)

It is GLAXO Canada's first venture into discovery research in Canada while Allelix is one of Canada's major players in biotechnology.

I quote Mr. Jacques Lapointe, GLAXO president: "Bill C-22 was the major motivator in our decision to become involved in discovery research. Had it not been for patent protection, GLAXO would not have considered such research activities in Canada."

However, new Canadian research is not the only benefit of Bill C-22. With the new Prices Review Board, the prices of all drugs will now be monitored, not just the 7 per cent of drugs that are profitable enough to attract generic copies.

StatsCanada has shown that the wholesale prices of pharmaceuticals rose by only 3.8 per cent from January, 1988 to January, 1989, compared to a CPI of 4.3 per cent. Bill C-22 is working.

IMPACT ON ENVIRONMENTAL CONCERNS

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, in January, 1989, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) promised that "where environmental considerations will conflict with economic ones, the environment will prevail."

In March, 1989, this same Minister assured Canadians of his Government's commitment to the environment, stating "I'm having intensive discussions with the Finance Minister and I have been assured that environmental concerns will hold a major part of his next Budget."

Yet, yesterday, in this House, the Environment Minister was forced to acknowledge the hollow nature of these commitments when he admitted that "the position of the Government is that environmental review process does not create any legal obligation for the Government to submit to a prior assessment of budget decisions", and "the Budget is at the heart of the Government's actions. . .It does not have to preceded by an environmental assessment."

In fancy speeches and on international delegations, the Government says one thing. When it comes to the crunch, they turn around and say the opposite. Canadians care about the environment. They are tired of the Government's rhetoric and want real action on the environment. It is long past time for the Government to take its environmental commitments seriously and to put some substance behind its endorsement of the Brundtland Commission report and sustainable development.

THE ENVIRONMENT

ROLE OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the week just ending was very important for all Canadians. As you know, it was National Environment Week. Mr. Speaker, the environment is a priority for this Government, as the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) showed again yesterday in Montreal when he signed a most significant agreement with his Québec counterpart to clean up the St. Lawrence River.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to quote the Minister's words, which indeed reflect the Conservative Government's policy: In the past, companies profited by polluting the environment and only the shareholders shared these profits. The time has come for these companies to contribute to environmental protection. The people do not want speeches or public relations operations. They want concrete action and that is what the Conservative Government will do, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

AGRICULTURE

INCOME OF DAIRY FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, last weekend I met with the Algoma dairy farmers concerning the threat to the future of supply management and marketing board systems for Canadian dairy industry as a result of the Government's action. The Government agreed in April of 1989 to freeze the income of Canadian dairy farmers until 1991 at the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, even for domestically consumed dairy products.

At the same time, the European Economic Community farmers have made an arrangement for their dairy producer returns to go up. The United Kingdom farmers have increased the price of their milk and dairy products by 3 per cent, and reduced the producer levies by 25 per cent. The net result is that the income of Canadian dairy producers can go down for the next 20 months but cannot go up, regardless of input costs.

I call on the Government to keep its election promise to maintain the supply management and marketing board systems that we have in Canada for dairy products and other farm products.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

DETONATION OF DUMMY WARHEAD OFF VANCOUVER ISLAND

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, in Question Period yesterday I was greatly alarmed at what appeared to be reports of a nuclear warhead having detonated in the waters between the Queen Charlotte Islands and Vancouver Island. I asked myself, can this be true? Of course it was not. Instead, it was just another attempt at fearmongering by a Member of the New Democratic Party.

For the record, the cause of the explosion to which the Hon. Member referred was not a nuclear warhead but a dummy warhead which caused no contamination.

Furthermore the incident to which she referred happened 39 years ago. It was made public eight years ago.

We are all concerned and indeed frightened about the prospects of nuclear explosions in Canada or elsewhere. We are all concerned about the presence of nuclear waste in our oceans. However, throwing out red herrings, as the Hon. Member did yesterday, serves no useful purpose. The issues before us demand we remain calm, remain cool and remain rational. Generating fear may get attention but it does not get respect.

THE FAMILY

MISSING CHILDREN'S NETWORK

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, I would like to see us cut across Party lines again. There are hundreds of missing children in Canada today. There is an equivalent number of parents that must suffer the horror of not knowing where their children are or in what situation they are living.

Groups such as the Missing Children's Network provide an invaluable service in their struggle to reunite children with their families.

[Translation]

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Missing Children's Network will have to close in November if the Government refuses to give it financial assistance. These funds are essential for the survival of this indispensable organization.

I ask the Government to open up the purse strings and give the necessary money so that the Missing Children's Network can continue its fight against the problem of missing children in Canada.

THE ECONOMY

THE NEW SALES TAX—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

The Conference Board of Canada has stated in a study that the new sales tax will reduce the disposable income of Canadians by $5.5 billion; will cause the loss of 72,000 jobs; will increase inflation to 7.3 per cent; will increase taxes to an incredible extent and consequently will have a very negative impact on the Canadian economy as a whole.

I want to ask the Minister how he can possibly introduce this new tax at a time when the threat of a recession is greater than it ever has been in the last seven years.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Hon. Member that there was a unanimous report of the Finance Committee of this House, just a shade over a year ago, which supported the removal of the existing sales tax and the replacement by the Government with the new sales tax comparable to what we are proposing in the goods and services tax.

The Hon. Member referred to a Conference Board report. We have some differences with the analysis of the Board's report. We do not believe that it gives sufficient regard to the very positive impact on investment. This new tax is equivalent to a 4 per cent investment tax credit. We do not believe that it gives sufficient regard to the benefits that this tax will have on the service industry by removing the tax on business inputs. The combination of those factors is going to improve the efficiency of the Canadian economy.

Our conclusions are that there will be an improvement in jobs in year one. There will be an improvement in economic output in year one. The benefits are quite clear in the introduction of this tax. This is the replacement of a tax which everybody in Canada says is a very major drag on our economy.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle–Émard): Mr. Speaker, let us have no red herrings. First, the report which the Minister refers to was not on his proposal.

Second, for God's sake, Mr. Speaker, let us not compare the credibility as a result of the events of the last month of this Government and this Minister with the Conference Board of Canada.

During the election campaign, the Minister stated in a speech in which he called his opponents liars that, and I quote: "Canadians will not pay a penny of additional tax as a result of the sales tax proposal".

The Minister states: "Not one penny". The Conference Board says $2.7 billion of additional tax a year.

The Minister said on at least 100 occasions that the tax will be revenue neutral. I quote from the Conference Board which states that: "The 9 per cent tax is not revenue neutral".

How does this Minister justify breaking another campaign commitment by the Conservative Party? How does the Minister justify breaking his word?

• (1120)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, before the Hon. Member gets so excited about this I would suggest that he wait until we see the technical paper that will be coming out at the end of June this year.

I am going to say something which is critical of the Conference Board report. It does not have all the information. Nor does the Hon. Member have all the information.

We have indicated in the brochure entitled The Goods and Services Tax that there are going to be some offsets for housing. There will be some offsets for the small business sector.

The Conference Board does not have the information.

There is other information that the Conference Board does not have that supports the position that we have taken all along in this case. This information will become available and the Hon. Member will see it at the end of June or thereabouts when we provide this information for him.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, the Minister reproaches me for getting excited. I am excited because I am worried about $5.5 billion that is being taken out of the hands of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Martin (LaSalle—Émard): I am excited because I am worried about the poorer regions of this country, as perhaps the Minister ought to be.

At a time when the Government is withdrawing from regional development and is withdrawing from unemployment insurance, how can the Minister justify imposing a tax which discriminates against Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario, western Canada and the Province of Quebec? How does this Minister justify in the name of Heaven imposing a tax which the Conference Board states: "will take the most money out of the hands of poorest Canadians"? That is why I am excited.

Some Hon. Members: Hear hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I stated in my first answer where we have differences with the Conference Board report. I stand by those statements. I think that they are valid. They will be elaborated upon in the analysis of the Department of Finance which will be made available in the latter part of this month.

I also refer the Hon. Member to page 18 of the brochure entitled The Goods and Services Tax. There is a bar chart there which shows that every province, every region of the country is favourably impacted by the imposition of this new sales tax and the replacement of the existing sales tax which is widely regarded as being a drag on the economy.

Ms. Copps: You are a drag on the economy.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member has just said that this tax is going to impose a heavier burden on those who are least able to bear that burden. I remind the Hon. Member that there is going to be a generous refundable sales tax credit. Our goal, as set out in the brochure, is that families earning less than $30,000 will be better off as a result of the reform of the sales tax system.

OFFSHORE RESOURCES

HIBERNIA—INDUSTRIAL BENEFITS

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. A quote in The Globe and Mail this morning states that the modules for the Hibernia construction platform could be constructed outside Canada, "although that would reduce the project's industrial benefits for Newfoundland and other provinces."

The only thing we were getting from the Government was industrial benefits—three million person hours of industrial benefits. We gave up the retail sales tax. We will not receive a cent in retail sales tax. Our royalties start off at 1 per cent. The only thing that we were guaranteed was industrial benefits. Now the Minister is saying that he is considering allowing Mobil to go back on that commitment.

Is this not just the latest Tory broken promise to the people of Newfoundland? How can the Minister, a Minister with integrity, associate himself with a Government that continually breaks its commitments to people who have the highest unemployment rate anywhere in the country?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I respect the Hon. Member. I say to him, as I said to the people of Newfoundland yesterday, I discussed the Hibernia deal with them very fairly. I obviously cannot go through all of the principal issues involved in Question Period. However, let me give the Hon. Member some of the salient points.

First, the federal Government sticks by its commitment on Hibernia. That includes our financial commitment.

Mr. Nault: For how long?

Mr. Epp: There is no time limit. Perhaps the Liberals have one, we do not.

Mr. Simmons: You did before. What happened to March 31?

Mr. Epp: I think that this is serious enough to deal with the Hon. Member in the manner in which I have done in the past.

Second, I said to the people of Newfoundland that if one looks at the statement of principles I would try to maximize the industrial benefits for Newfoundland, but also that we have to make sure that we have a project which is as economically viable as possible.

Last—and I am not trying to violate the time of the House—when I met with the new Minister of the Government of Newfoundland yesterday, I said that the federal Government stuck by its commitments. We would co-operate in whatever way possible. We also said that what we are attempting to do is to bring Hibernia on stream as quickly and as early as possible. Any interpretation to the contrary is not in keeping with what I discussed.

The article that appeared in The Globe and Mail today is accurate as to what I said and how it should have been interpreted.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said that the Government has no time limit. That is not accurate. The time limit was last March. The time limit has expired. We have a time limit. The Government had one and did not keep it.

Because he says that it is a serious problem, and it is, I wish to quote to him the words of the Prime Minister who said in St. John's on July 19, 1988: "This has been the dream of the people of Newfoundland and Labrador for decades. Today, the dream has been realized."

This is a province that has the highest unemployment rate in the country. What we want are jobs, not hand-outs from the Government of Canada. It is dismantling the unemployment insurance system. We do not want unemployment insurance, we want jobs. I want a commitment from the Minister today. If the Minister will not stand up and fight for jobs in the fishing industry, will he fight for jobs in the oil industry?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I said in Newfoundland yesterday. That is what I am saying in the House today.

I said yesterday that the time for rhetoric is over, let us make sure that the deal works. The deal has three components to it. The Government of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada, in my mind, are totally in agreement in terms of maximizing industrial benefits. The consortia wants the deal to go forward. Obviously, there is one question relating to the topside. With respect to the gravity base structure, as the Hon. Member knows, there have been some tenders let on the GBS and on other parts of Hibernia.

What I am saying to the Hon. Member and to the people of Newfoundland is that we have to find an agreement about industrial benefits, getting Hibernia moving forward and having the best technology we can have. If we do not do that we will have a situation in which there might not be other development as quickly because of the cost factor.

My only concern is to move Hibernia forward, to do it as cost effectively as possible and to maximize the benefits for Newfoundland. I do not see how the Hon. Member in any way could have any difficulty with those principles.

CONFERENCE BOARD OF CANADA REPORT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will be well aware that the report of the Conference Board of Canada, an ally up to this point, has pointed out not only will the massive national sales tax imposition see 72,000 jobs lost, inflation increased to over 7 per cent, a reduction in economic growth with certain sectors such as tourism being hard hit, but also a major tax hike for Canadians which the Board estimates will be a $4 billion net increase in the first two years.

In light of a response to a previous question I want to remind the Minister that during the election campaign he had this to say: "The bottom line is that the sales tax will not be used to raise the revenues of the Government of Canada".

Does the Minister plan to keep the promise that he made to the people of Canada during that election campaign that this would be neutral revenue in terms of income?

• (1130)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question in response to one of the previous questions.

Let me just comment on some of the things. On job loss and economic growth our calculations, according to the Department of Finance study on this matter, show that in year one there will be an improvement in jobs in Canada and also in economic growth. Our calculations on inflation are roughly the same as in the Conference Board study.

We also disagree with the conclusions on the service sector. We attach a greater degree of importance to the removal of tax on business inputs for the service sector and believe that the service sector, as is indicated on page 16 of this brochure, The Goods and Services Tax, will have an increase in output greater than the national average increase in output. There is a difference.

As far as the question on this being a major tax hike, to use the Hon. Member's words, I indicated in a previous answer that the Conference Board simply does not have the information—

Mr. Simmons: Blenkarn does.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke): —that we have within the Department of Finance to come to that conclusion. At the end of this month when we release the technical paper, the Hon. Member will see that, yes, we are in fact correct.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister will offer to table those reports to which he has just referred.

NATIONAL SALES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister.

Does the Minister plan to keep the promise he made during the election campaign when he said that the national sales tax would not be used to raise additional revenues? While he is responding to that, could he also confirm that his office is in the process, at this moment, of assembling and staffing up a propaganda office with a multi-million dollar budget at the moment to convince people, using the big lie technique, that this is in their best interest?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, surely the Hon. Member would like us to put out documents—

Mr. Simmons: Don't leak them.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke): —like this one which set out clearly the assessment of the Department of Finance of the impact of this tax. It states how the tax works. It has the economic impact. It shows how the existing tax is a drag on the Canadian economy. The existing tax that was widely criticized by the Finance Committee, of which two of his colleagues were members in the last Parliament, is being replaced.

Furthermore, we are introducing a refundable sales tax credit which is more generous in this new tax and that should be widely regarded and widely praised by members of his Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMPACT ON BUSINESS INVESTMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, is there something wrong with the Minister's hearing? I have asked him whether he would indicate in this House if he plans to keep the promise to the people of Canada that he made during the election campaign. Second, I asked him to confirm that he is in the process of setting up a propaganda office to convince people that this imposition is good for them.

While he is responding, hopefully to those two questions, will he also indicate clearly that the removal of the 13.5 per cent manufacturers' tax as of January 1, 1991 means business investment in terms of new plants and new equipment will not take place between now and then; in a sense that the impact of this national sales tax will not begin in 1991 but in fact will begin to be felt this summer?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me respond to what I think are three questions. The answer to the first one is yes. I have said that we are going to bring in a new goods and services tax which will replace the existing sales tax and will have income tax offsets, including the refundable sales tax credit to which I have just referred. After that there will be no additional money for the Government of Canada. That answers question number one.

Question number two, yes, in fact, we are going to be releasing a technical paper and other forms of information for Canadians so that they can understand what the goods and services tax will do, why it is good for the economy, what impact it will have on various sectors and regions of the country, and so on.

The third question is on business investment. Our estimates are that there will be a significant increase in business investment as a result of this tax. It is equivalent, as I have said previously, to a 4 per cent investment tax credit. However, we believe that the transition to this new tax will not upset business investment over the next two years.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

CANADA–NOVA SCOTIA OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Once again the Government's negligent handling of the $200 million offshore development trust in Nova Scotia has reared its ugly head and caused new controversy.

Given that the Prime Minister said in this House on Wednesday in response to the latest controversy that it was "a proper investment of public funds", could the Deputy Prime Minister tell us what assessments were done on these projects to ensure as per the federal legislation that they were offshore oil and gas related?

Did this process also include seeking the concurrence and approval of members of the federal Cabinet from Nova Scotia, or was this Government so negligent as to hand the Nova Scotia Government a blank cheque with no strings attached?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member's question, I know he alluded only to one of the controversies that has been raised by the Opposition in the House this week on the Canada–Nova Scotia Offshore Agreement. If the Hon. Member does some closer checking, he will find that the widening of the Stellerton–Chief Harbour Highway is well within the responsibility and daily work of a highway department. I will also say—

An Hon. Member: What happens when you hit the river?

Mr. Simmons: Go and have a look at it.

Mr. Epp: Do you want an answer?

Mr. Tobin: The truth.

Mr. Epp: I am giving you the truth, Brian.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, order.

Mr. Epp: You know better than that.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): No, I don't think he does know better than that. It is the same old Tobin.

Mr. Epp: If the Hon. Member checks the record it will be very clear. When the Public Accounts Committee meets, I believe on June 26 and June 27 and this issue is before it, it will find that the widening of the highway was done both properly and legally, and I think the facts will bear that out.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): This Member is not opposed to proper development in Nova Scotia, but I am opposed to the abuse and misuse of this trust to benefit the friends of the Government such as the $2.5 million real estate development that was outlined in the Auditor General's report in December.

PUBLIC INQUIRY – GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my question is again to the Deputy Prime Minister. Given that the Auditor General continues to stand by his statements concerning this fund and its misuse, will the Government now consent to a full, open, and public inquiry into the disposition of this fund, or will the Government continue to be a willing accomplice in the cover-up of the pillaging and mismanagement of the Canada–Nova Scotia offshore development fund?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member can clarify to the House what projects he is in favour of and what projects he is not. I understand that the ones that are in the Liberal ridings are quite okay—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: —such as the Sydport International Free Trade Zone, the North Sydney Industrial Park, Highway 125, the Sydport Access Road, the Woodside Ferry and related infrastructure, St. Martha's Hospital, Northside Industrial Park, Phase II, Cossit Heights Park, Highway 107, East Petpeswick Bridge, and Metro Computer Traffic Control. Those are all projects that are funded out of this program in Nova Scotia. Are you in favour of those or are you against those too?

Mr. Kaplan: It sounds as if the Deputy Prime Minister is using a list of projects to cover up those they cannot defend on proper grounds.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister about the defence. A key element in the defence which the Minister of Public Works has given against conflict of interest was the Minister's claim on Wednesday that there was no benefit. but that in fact there was a detrimental effect to adjoining land owned by him from the road paid for out of the government fund for which he is now responsible.

What was it that convinced the Prime Minister that the Minister of Public Works would not benefit from a road built partly on land for which he was paid out of the fund, which provides improved access to vast holdings of the Minister alongside the road, and which is also used by Scott Paper to execute a business deal between the Minister's company and Scott Paper?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member does not want to leave an impression that I think does not bear to fact. Let us look at that.

Let us look at the widening of the highway. He refers to the Minister and a family member. As I say, the details can come out at the Public Accounts Committee or another time. It was approximately one hectare each, approximately an acre. I think any of us who know anything about highways and the broadening of a highway know that if you take a certain strip of land ten feet or five feet for the broadening, whatever it was, you can very quickly runs up a hectare or a half hectare of land.

Let us not characterize this as if there was some great amount of land that through expropriation was sold or that a flip was made in order that the Minister would receive some money. I think the Hon. Member should re-examine how he is phrasing that in order that wrong impressions are not left.

Mr. Kaplan: The Minister has obviously missed my point.

REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, how could the Minister argue that he would not be a beneficiary of the widening of that road, considering how much adjacent land he owns? If he was able to, as he said, convince the Prime Minister that he did not benefit from the widening of that road, will the Government agree to an independent inquiry to look into the impact of that widened road, that $9 million expenditure, on the value of the Minister's adjoining land?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have given the details as they have been brought to me. I say to the Hon. Member that all of us, and especially cabinet Ministers, operate and function as we should under very strict conflict of interest guidelines.

Ms. Copps: Do you observe them?

Mr. Epp: Yes, we do observe them. That is not right. I think the Hon. Member should remember that the land in question has been held by that family for a long period of time. There are Members on all sides of this House who I am sure have held property for a long period of time.

I am sure there are provincial projects that have gone past that land. There are federal projects that have affected Members' land.

The point that has to be made is very clear. It was done under the legal expropriation agreement of Nova Scotia. I say to the Hon. Member: "Don't use the argument of vast holdings and somehow leave the impression, when half a hectare is going to be affected, that somehow there was a great benefit to the Hon. Minister".

One generally finds that farmers and landholders do not like to give up land for a public works.

TRANSPORTATION

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport a question. He told the committee on Wednesday that he does not have the VIA Rail business report or business plan and therefore he cannot decide anything. All the rest of us know about the plan, that the future of VIA Rail is on the line, and that the Budget is already being implemented by VIA Rail. One of our offices tried to make reservations after for October 15 in Atlantic Canada and was told that no reservations were being accepted after October 15. Will the Minister confirm that all VIA Rail trains will still be rolling after October 15 and that Canadians will still be able to use one of their great institutions, railway passenger service?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the difference between the Member and myself is that he is satisfied with a leaked document. I am not. Normally, I use official documents from Crown corporations.

As to the reservation, Mr. Speaker, if the Member wants an answer he just has to ask VIA Rail.

Mr. Benjamin: We did ask them and they said: "no reservations".

REFERENCE OF VIA RAIL BUSINESS PLAN TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, since VIA Rail was submitting a business report under Mr. deBelleval and now that it is submitting a business report under Mr. Lawless, the President of the CN, the coyote in charge of the chicken coop, are we to take it that there are two reports? Will he give a commitment not to allow the implementation of any VIA Rail business plan until after the plan has been referred to the Standing Committee on Transport that will travel across Canada to get the views of Canadians?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will not give any commitment. The Member knows that VIA Rail is operating its day to day operations. We announced recently that there was a fare increase of 15 per cent. It could happen again. There is no commitment which has to be given as long as I do not receive the report by VIA Rail.

Once again, we can use the document you used; it is usual for NDP to work with leaked documents, but it is not usual for the Government.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL REVENUE

RESULTS OF PUBLIC OPINION SURVEY ON TAX RETURNS

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, a public opinion survey yesterday suggested that 65 per cent of Canadians needed assistance in filing their income tax returns this year because they found them too difficult to complete.

Given the Government's attempts to simplify taxation for average Canadians, I wonder if the Minister of National Revenue could explain yesterday's alarming survey.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, although Gallup polled some 1,016 people on this issue, our most recent statistics and factual information involve some 17,388,795 Canadian taxpayers. These figures categorically conclude that there has been virtually no change from previous years in Canadians going outside for paid tax assistance. It remains virtually at the same level that it has been over previous years, at some 29 per cent.

Further, we have been able to process, up until this Monday, 12,623,000 returns, which is way ahead of last year. We have refunded over 10 million cheques with an average refund of $662 per Canadian. I think Canadians have responded very well to tax reform.

ACID RAIN

INTERNATIONAL MEETING IN MONTEBELLO—PROPOSAL OF QUEBEC PREMIER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment, I suppose I should direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. The governors of the Northeastern States, the Premiers of the Atlantic Provinces and the Premier of Québec are meeting in Montebello to discuss some important issues, including acid rain. The Premier of Québec suggested Canada approve a measure, probably a joint measure, to control nitrogen oxide emissions in exhaust gases. Is your colleague the Minister prepared to endorse today, or as soon as possible, Mr. Bourassa's proposal regarding one of the major causes of acid rain?

[English]

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to remind the Member and advise the House that of course Canada has already made some very significant steps with respect to the reduction of acid rain and with respect to domestic production of it. As the Hon. Member knows, there is a program in place which will lead to a 50 per cent reduction from 1980 allowable emissions.

As the Hon. Member also knows, tighter emission controls are in place with respect to automobiles. This Government accelerated the program to reduce use of leaded gasoline to 1990. I think the program announcement will receive the support of all Members of the House.

However, as the Hon. Member also knows, the greatest source of acid rain in this country originates not here but in the United States. I think all the evidence indicates that there is some reason for optimism because of the program which we anticipate the President of the United States will introduce into Congress perhaps early next week. We hope that will lead to an accord. If the House works together to ensure that this accord will be in the best interests of all Canadians, we will get the type of control we have needed for a long, long time.

AMERICAN LEGISLATION ON ACID RAIN

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I realize that we have to tighten controls, but I suggest that the proposed legislation in California could be considered here. It is very much more rigid than what we have here.

The Parliamentary Secretary mentioned tight domestic controls. At this very moment the Americans are preparing their own legislation on acid rain. The governors are viewing first-hand the death of maple trees in the region I represent, and I have visited the area in the past.

Perhaps the member could convey this fact to the Minister. If we want tougher domestic controls, and we know the Americans are preparing their own legislation, is this not the opportune time to show political will to our neighbours to the south that we intend to correct the problems of acid rain in this country? If we can send the Americans a signal through strict and rigid legislation in the House, they will get the message and we would be on the right road if we had the political will to do it.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first, I remind the Hon. Member that problems such as acid rain are not problems which have originated in this country since 1984. They have originated over an extended period of time. If the Hon. Member is willing to be honest, he would concede the fact that there has been more progress with respect to acid rain and reduction of emissions since 1984 than there was in the previous administration.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): I would also suggest to the Hon. Member that Canada, this Government, and I would include all of Parliament in that process, have provided a significant amount of leadership. I believe that we have led the United States and that we will see some fruits of that leadership in the announcement next week.

SPACE INDUSTRY

SHORTAGE OF SCIENTISTS AND ENGINEERS

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. He must have been as shocked as I was to hear the Prime Minister talk about replacing scientists as easily as buying a new car.

Does the Prime Minister not know that it is the overwhelming opinion of the scientific community and of the space industry that this country faces a crisis in the supply of qualified people for the space program?

Has the Prime Minister even read the report of a standing committee of this House which stated that there was a critical shortage of space scientists and engineers?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, whenever a new agency is established or there is movement of an agency, we are bound to lose some people in that move.

What is important for us, and indeed for all Members of the House, is to ensure that that move is made as effectively as possible and that the people involved in the move are given as much support as they possibly can be given. That is exactly what the space agency is now trying to do.

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is obviously totally unaware of what has been going on, the lack of information made available to these scientists, and the total disregard for their concerns.

Does the Government, as the Prime Minister seemed to indicate on Wednesday, really think it is unCanadian to be concerned about your family, your children's education, your career, and the program to which you have devoted your life?

Why is the Prime Minister insulting those people who have proved their commitment to Canada through their whole life's work? When will he address their problems instead of insulting them?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, discussions have been ongoing as late as yesterday in terms of how this move could be effected with the minimum disruption to the people concerned. There have been special discussions concerning how we are actually to help the people move.

The people of St. Hubert and the South Shore have a committee organized to welcome the people. The universities in the Montreal area have all been anxious to participate in helping those scientists, particularly helping them to get appointments on the staffs of the universities. These discussions are going on and are proceeding.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FOREIGN AID—HUMAN RIGHTS POLICY

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the statement yesterday by the Minister for External Relations that human rights records are not considered when making foreign aid decisions.

This contradicts stated government policy and Canada's focus at the recent Francophonie summit in Dakar where the Prime Minister stated "human rights are inseparable and indispensable from development".

Does the Government have a policy relating to human rights records in foreign assistance? When will the platitudes end and action begin?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, two points: the name is the Francophone Summit.

The second point I would like to make is that I think the Hon. Member owes it to the House to quote correctly what the Minister for External Relations stated.

The Minister for External Relations stated that there is a human rights component in the judgments that are taken by the Canadian International Development Agency. She made the point that already in the last 12 months there has been a decision taken with respect to Haiti that was taken on human rights grounds.

She was asked a question as to whether in the allocation of budget cuts to the aid program there was going to be account taken in that process of the human rights situation. She stated that the process by which the Government is committed to reviewing human rights matters occurs later in the year. It will occur in October or November of the year.

That is what the Minister for External Relations stated. It is quite different from what the Hon. Member alleged. It is entirely consistent, not simply with the actions and statements of this Government at the Francophone Summit and elsewhere, but also with the recommendations of an all-Party committee of this House.

FOREIGN AID BUDGET CUTS

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, given the enormous cuts to the foreign aid budget and the Government's assurances that foreign aid will be made more effective, can the Minister assure the House that the Government will immediately make human rights records a criterion for granting foreign aid, immediately?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member is more accustomed to dealing with issues that are 29 or 30 years old. She asked for us to do it immediately. We did it last year.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

COMPUTER CONTRACT—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation, my question is for the Acting Minister. The Minister and the Government will know of the very serious allegations in the media and in the Canadian Press report whereby the common law spouse of the Director of Materials and Services Contracting Division of Canada Post has allegedly received a lucrative contract to sell $8 million worth of computers to Canada Post Corporation.

Given that that information has been known in the media and by others for some weeks now, has the Government had an opportunity to review the case and to report to the House concerning the very serious allegation in question?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been in touch with the Canada Post Corporation and it informed us that it has, as one would expect, a well established set of guidelines with respect to conflict of interest. I am informed that it has followed those guidelines to the letter in this case, as it does in other cases.

Ms. Copps: They better rewrite them, then.

REQUEST TO KNOW IF CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES HAVE BEEN FOLLOWED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the acting Minister responsible for Canada Post. From the answer the Minister just gave, we know that the conflict of interest guidelines are apparently being followed at this time. Did the Minister or the Government check whether the conflict of interest guidelines were followed at the time the contract was awarded?

• (1200)

[English]

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by Canada Post that not only does it have a set of conflict of interest guidelines but, as far as it is concerned, in this particular instance the corporation says that they set a good example of how to conduct business.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There will be one further question. The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre.

AGRICULTURE

PROVINCIAL SOIL AGREEMENTS

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture.

On May 3 last the Minister told the House that the reason he had not signed the soil and water conservation accord and soil agreements with Saskatchewan was that he wanted to ensure that they complied with all the criteria. The agreements for Saskatchewan, along with the agreements for Alberta, Prince Edward Island, and New Brunswick, are on the Minister's desk awaiting his signature. There are no negotiations presently taking place. In fact the provinces have received final approvals. To what criteria is the Minister referring and when will these agreements be signed?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has his facts wrong. He mentioned Alberta. I am going to be talking to the Minister of Agriculture in Alberta on Monday about the soil and water conservation program. There are still some outstanding details with respect to it. I hope that they will be cleared up soon.

POINTS OF ORDERS

COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to bring to your attention an exchange that occurred during Question Period between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte. I think words were said that were not in keeping with the usual practice of this House, nor in keeping with the habits of the Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte in this House. I think it would be appropriate, if he were offered the opportunity, for him to withdraw those comments.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, if this Minister were as quick off the mark a year ago, we would not have had the embarrassment of Seoul, as he is in trying to be quick off the mark for no purpose in the House. What the Member said, and I submit that the intervention is political and not serious, was "tell the truth" and what the Minister replied was "I am telling the truth". I do not know what is the problem.

Mr. Charest: If the Member needs to have it spelled out to him because he cannot understand any further, his reply was "That's not probable that he is telling the truth". I understand that is the context—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair did not hear the words. Therefore if it is acceptable to Members, we will have a look at the "blues". If something was said that was unacceptable, I am sure the Member from Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte will withdraw it. Perhaps we could leave it at that for now.

On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Kamloops.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, during an exchange in Question Period the Minister of Finance referred on a number of occasions to a number of reports and studies that his Department has completed. I wonder if the Minister would do the time honoured and traditional thing and table those reports in the House so that all Members will have the opportunity to evaluate that information.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would refer the Hon. Member to The Goods and Services Tax brochure dated April 27. A number of elements in it relate to the economic cost of the federal sales tax on page four and on subsequent pages, as well as on the competitiveness and growth impacts which are on pages 15 to 18. I would also remind the Hon. Member that there will be a technical paper which I will be making available hopefully later this month. In that paper there will be further information on the economic impacts.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister of Finance sharing with us some of the comments in the Budget Papers which we have all read and studied. However, he made reference to a number of other documents, particularly economic impact studies that his Department had completed. They were the ones to which I was referring. I wonder if he would table them for all Members to see.

SPORTS

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON ANTI-DOPING

Hon. Jean Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons)): Mr. Speaker, for several months now, Canadians have followed very closely the public hearings of the commission of inquiry into drug use in amateur sport, better known as the Dubin Inquiry.

Before the Olympic Games in Seoul, probably very few people in Canada knew about anabolic steroids. Since the incidents involving Canadian athletes and the appointment of a commission of inquiry chaired by Justice Charles Dubin, the least one could say is that Canadians have become very much aware of the problems of drug use in sport.

For governments, however, the problem of doping and cheating in sport is not a new one. In 1983, after the Pan-American Games when several Canadian athletes who had tested positive were sent back to Canada, the federal Government drafted its very first anti-doping policy.

In 1985, my predecessor, the Hon. Otto Jelinek, announced a major tightening of the policy drafted in 1983. As a result, any athlete who tests positive for anabolic steroids is suspended for life by Sports Canada, even for a first offence.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian sanctions are among the severest in the world.

We have decided to take a firm stand at the national level, a decision that has also led us to try and influence the international sports community as a whole.

[English]

Canada's severe policy in the area of doping in sports obligated us as a country to assume a leadership role in trying to eradicate this problem world-wide. In 1986, the Canadian Minister of Sport was afforded the privilege of addressing the Council of Europe at an assembly of 25 Sports Ministers from Europe. At that time the Hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek) chose to speak on the very serious issue of doping in sport and the urgency of the sport community to act. The importance of an international effort was put into perspective in the following remarks which I want to quote, keeping in mind these words were pronounced in 1986:

> In short, the objective must be universality. The nature of this issue, indeed what may lie at the very root of it is concern that the actions of one country may outstrip the actions of others, thus disadvantaging in the short run at least, those who undertake the strongest action. I do not personally believe in a qualified or conditional code of ethics, but we all know that our athletes however much they may wish to compete in an environment not only of a relative fairness but which conforms to high personal standards of morality, do not want to be faced with the ambiguity and temptations which arise from inconsistent application of rules.

In view of reaching our objective, that Minister had a clear vision of Canada's role. I want to draw from the same speech and quote:

> I believe that Canada's position permits us to make an offer to play the credible broker as between east and west, and among western nations around this table, with the objective of facilitating the eventual adoption of international agreements on the widest possible basis.

During the successful Calgary Olympics in 1988, the Canadian Government, with the IOC, succeeded in convincing Governments from the east bloc and west bloc to sit down together with representatives of sport federations and hold the first world permanent conference on anti-doping in sport.

This conference, held in Ottawa in June 1988 before the Seoul Olympics and co-hosted by the IOC represented by its vice-president, Prince Alexandre de Merode, and the Canadian Minister, was a resounding success. The result of the conference which included 28 countries was the proposal of a world anti-doping charter that proposes among other things harmonization of testing procedures and sanctions and out of competition testing without prior notice.

As a result of this conference, the Government of Canada agreed to head a working group whose mission was to promote the anti-doping charter to other Governments. The IOC under the able leadership of its vice-president, Prince Alexandre de Merode, undertook to promote the charter to the responsible authorities within the international sport community.

Since that first successful world conference the following action has been undertaken. In September of 1988, in the week preceding the Seoul Olympics, I was honoured with an invitation to present the anti-doping charter to the IOC executive committee. The charter was adopted by the IOC at their general meeting and renamed the International Olympic Anti-Doping Charter. The president of the IOC, Juan Antonio Samaranch, in his opening remarks to the IOC general assembly, thanked Canada for having agreed to play a leadership role.

As agreed to between the President of the IOC and the Canadian Government, the anti-doping charter was subsequently presented and supported at the second UNESCO Conference of Sport Ministers held in Moscow in November of 1988. The UNESCO Conference of Sport Ministers was the largest forum of its kind in the world.

• (1210)

Nine days ago, Canada scored a significant victory in the battle against drug abuse in sports. At the sixth conference of European sport Ministers held in Reykjavik, Iceland, representatives of 25 countries officially endorsed the International Olympic Anti-doping Charter. As in 1986, Canada was invited for a second time to address this conference on the issue of doping in sport.

Canada's success at the international level was made possible by our firm resolve to deal directly with the drug problem and show that we are prepared to practise what we preach. The appointment of the Dubin Commission is one example.

Mr. Speaker, today I intend to share with you, and with all Members of this House, our latest achievements. Since the Olympic Games in Seoul and the hearings of the Dubin Commission, the question I hear most often, and this applies to other Members of this House as well, is whether other countries will follow suit. Will Canadian athletes be the only ones to obey the rules? It is still too early to answer yes or no. However, we can say that we have made considerable progress so far.

[English]

The question most often asked of me and other Members of the House is whether Canadian athletes will be the only athletes in international competition to abide by the rules. Will other countries impose upon themselves the same tough scrutiny and discipline that Canada has adopted for itself?

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I felt that it was important to report to you and Members of the House the progress we have accomplished to this date. Canada's resolve to deal directly and openly with the doping problem has been praised by the international community as a bold and courageous step.

Canadians should take pride in the fact that we stood by our principles in the most difficult of circumstances. There is still much work to be done as the Government awaits the recommendations that will eventually be put forward by the Dubin inquiry.

In the meantime, real progress has been accomplished world-wide, in great part because of our collective resolve.

I want to take a moment to thank my critics from the opposition Parties who have shown on this issue and other areas, a good example of co-operation and collaboration in the House.

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, before I begin my remarks I want to thank the Minister for his last comment. Certainly his initiative has gone a long way to creating that spirit of co-operation.

I am grateful for the opportunity to respond today to the statements made by the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Charest).

The endorsement given to the International Olympic Anti-doping Charter at the sixth conference of European Ministers responsible for sport recently was indeed a positive step in the process to establish world-wide adoption of this charter. The charter was originally drafted at the first permanent world anti-doping conference held here in Ottawa in 1988. At that time, Canada accepted the responsibility to promote the charter's acceptance throughout the world. Thus, with the approval of the charter by the 25 European governments attending the Reykjavik conference, we are closer to that goal.

While I am pleased with the European endorsement of the anti-doping charter, I believe Canada must continue to obtain further endorsements from other governments if this charter is to have any weight in the sporting world. Given the tragic events that occurred during the Soeul Olympics, Canada has to display to the rest of the world its steadfast commitment toward eradicating the use of drugs in sport, both domestically and internationally. However, we cannot simply be seen as supporting the international fight against drug use while not taking enough productive steps to eliminate drug use in amateur sport in Canada. Sadly, however, this was indeed the case over the last few years.

Canada should be commended for what has been accomplished at the international level. But our efforts at home have not been as successful. I am concerned by the fact that the Government is eager to display its commitment to eliminating drug use in amateur sport but is not as eager to share in the responsibility for what is going on in our own backyard.

The shock and disbelief that many Canadians felt over what occurred in Soeul has been eclipsed by what we are witnessing from the Dubin inquiry. The inquiry has so far uncovered considerable evidence of the use of drugs and the extent of the problem in Canadian amateur sport. This problem cannot be related to the actions of one single athlete in only one specific sport. The inquiry has shown that a number of athletes and coaches have been involved in the use of illegal performance enhancing drugs and in perfecting measures to escape detection.

Given the revelations of the Dubin inquiry to date, I certainly would like to know, as I believe many Canadians would, how the present Minister for Fitness and Amateur Sport and his predecessor did not know what was going on in our amateur sport system. I find it truly amazing that they were giving funding to a number of our A-card athletes and others who, as their testimony has shown, were using illegal drugs and were involved in an extensive drug program for a number of years. Given the part played by the Government in assisting amateur sport in Canada, it could have been more effective in recognizing and preventing what was occurring.

I do, however, want to state that the majority of Canada's amateur athletes, coaches and officials must not be painted with the same brush. We all know that they contribute a considerable amount of time and honest effort to amateur sport here in Canada and in competitions abroad.

I hope to comment further on the Dubin inquiry after its conclusion and when its recommendations have been released. I also sincerely hope that the response of the Minister to the inquiry's recommendations will be dealt with firmly and expeditiously by the Government in a prudent and satisfactory manner.

In conclusion, I would like to assure the House of my support for Canada's international efforts to obtain world-wide approval of the anti-doping charter. I would also like to remind the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport of my question to him on April 14, when I asked the Minister if he would endeavour to have Canada participate in the joint U.S.-Soviet agreement that allows these countries to randomly test each other's athletes for illegal performance enhancing drugs. The U.S. Olympic Committee said they expected other countries to join in this program. I was happy to learn that on June 3, the USOC ratified the structure of this agreement. Canada's decision to join now would be a further indication to the sports world of our commitment to end drug use in amateur sport.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to stand in the place of our critic for sports, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. Brewin), who is unable to be here. In speaking on behalf of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party, I want to reaffirm our support for the work of the Dubin inquiry and for all efforts to rid sports, indeed all aspects of Canadian life, from the scourge of illegal drugs.

We share the Minister's enthusiasm for the actions of the European sports ministers in endorsing the International Olympic Anti-doping Charter.

There is still a long way to go, as I am sure the Minister recognizes. We await with interest the completion of the Dubin inquiry and its conclusions. We caution all Canadians, indeed the international sports community, from drawing too many conclusions before all the evidence is in.

We look to the Dubin inquiry to examine the role of athletic organizations at home and abroad in inducing athletes to use banned substances, particularly in respect of setting qualifying standards for funding of promising athletes. One might wonder about what seems to have been a long-standing complicity of ignorance about the use of drugs in athletics in Canada that many of us who are involved in sports like track and field knew would be a problem.

We want to look at the "win at all cost" philosophy that seems to have overcome the ideals of sport. We look to Mr. Justice Dubin to shed light on the distinction between dangerous drugs and performance enhancing drugs, because the treatment accorded to athletes in respect of their continued eligibility should certainly be weighed under different criteria for one as compared to the other.

• (1220)

We look also to the inquiry to examine the arbitrary system of discipline which denies athletes at present the fundamental right of natural justice when determining their athletic futures in the face of allegations of drug use.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Victoria has put a motion on the Order Paper calling for a bill of rights for athletes. I commend that motion to this House, to the Government and to Mr. Justice Dubin.

We must deal with drugs in sports. We must do so in a way which is consistent with the high ideals of sports and with fairness, justice and wisdom. The action of the European sports ministers was a step in the right direction.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF THE COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 34, I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the report of the delegation of the Canadian Branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, of the thirty-seventh parliamentary visit to Britain which was held at Westminster from May 3, 1989 to May 19, 1989.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO EXTRADITION LAWS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am presenting a petition today which relates to a very important criminal justice issue that is of great concern to Canadians. I have here signatures of petitioners from right across Canada. There are 1,484 signatures on this particular petition.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to revise the laws of Canada relating to extradition to allow the Justice Minister of Canada to order the extradition of alleged or convicted criminals at any time after their apprehension in Canada, even during their period of incarceration for crimes committed in Canada.

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the honour to present two petitions containing 1,442 signatures on behalf of my constituents of Calgary Northeast in Alberta, which request that the likes of Charles Ng and Joseph Kindler be extradited immediately.

I would like to quote from Hansard, page 2670, where the Minister of Justice states:

> —the treaty clearly states that where there is an extradition arrangement the provisions of the arrangement or the treaty take precedence over the Act.
> The decision whether or not to extradite is a decision with discretion in the hands of the Minister of Justice.

Therefore, I request the Minister to take his responsibility and act swiftly so that justice not be further delayed.

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36. It is my duty and honour to present a petition on behalf of residents of the city of Moose Jaw who are concerned about the future of VIA Rail.

In the petition they call upon the federal Government to ensure that rail passenger services in Canada be retained, modernized and expanded as an important part of our national transportation system.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour under Standing Order 36, on behalf of residents of Canada, to submit a petition to this House regarding the proposed changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act, which is also presently being debated in this Chamber.

The undersigned are grieving the proposed changes which will prevent up to one million Canadians annually from establishing unemployment insurance claims. They are grieving the kind of Draconian changes that are implicit in this legislation and ask for the Government to reconsider in due course.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36, on behalf of a number of people from Kamloops, British Columbia, who are concerned with the Government's intention to change the Unemployment Insurance Act. They recognize it is going to cut out hundreds of thousands of people from benefits that they ought to receive. They are asking the Government to reconsider this Draconian measure.

ARMAMENTS INDUSTRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Another group of constituents from Kamloops, British Columbia, are very concerned about the apparent growing militarization of the Canadian economy being fostered by the federal Government. They are asking the federal Government to come to its senses and back off from this incredibly negative initiative in terms of attempting to enhance and expand the arms industry in our country.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 34 were made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 34 be made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

LOANS OR GRANTS TO SCARBOROUGH WEST

Question No. 34—Mr. Wappel:

For (a) 1984 (b) 1985 (c) 1986 (d) 1987 (e) 1988 did any individuals, groups or corporations in the electoral district of Scarborough West receive any loans or grants from the government, its agencies or Crown Corporations and, if so (i) which individuals, groups or corporations (ii) in what amounts (iii) for what reason were these funds provided?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the Minister's statement, Government Orders will be extended by 16 minutes.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Tobin:

That this House condemns the Government for its short-sighted and punitive policies that are designed to eliminate passenger rail services in Canada despite the essential nature of these services to the development of communities in all regions of the country.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, before my debating time starts, I have a point of order. In the absence of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), who has failed to show up for the questions and comments period—

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Benjamin: —on his speech, can we direct questions to any other Minister in the House?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, unfortunately not. We must resume debate with the Member for Regina—Lumsden.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the Minister of Transport extended his apologies to the two Opposition Parties and indicated that he was not able to be here for the latter part of the debate, although he was here this morning. I just wanted to bring that to the attention of the House.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, that is news to me. In 1977, after studying the establishment of VIA Rail Canada Limited with a $1 item in the Estimates, and after watching its operations for the first few months, I said then: "VIA Rail designed to fail." Twelve years later, what I said then applies now.

VIA Rail was finished before it even sold its first ticket; before the first train started to move it was $100 million in the hole. It started off with the deck stacked against it. It had to pay out, using taxpayers' money, $77 million to CN and CP for that old, worn out equipment.

Twelve years ago, the youngest car was 25 years old. The youngest car now is 37 years old. However, we were assured by six successive Ministers of Transport, and that is how many we have been through since 1976, all of whom said they and their governments were committed to a viable, at least break even, safe, reliable national rail passenger system.

The first three Ministers were from the previous Liberal administration, all of whom are unlamented. Mr. Lang is the one who started VIA Rail with the $1 item in the Estimates. He told us in 1976 and again in 1977 that there would be a VIA Rail and a national rail passenger transportation act.

• (1230)

Then there was Jean-Luc Pepin. He is the fellow who undertook 21 cut-backs. I remember hearing the Conservatives, including the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), raising Cain with the then Government and the then Minister of Transport about cut-backs on 21 routes.

Then there was the unlamented former Minister of Transport, a sitting Member of the House at this time, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy). There is good reason why he is not the transport critic for the Liberal Party.

Mr. Milliken: He has been moved up.

Mr. Benjamin: The Hon. Member says he has been promoted. Transport happens to be the largest Department in the Government. He got promoted down, not up.

With Mr. Lang we did not get legislation. With Mr. Pepin we got massive cut-backs and no legislation. The present Member for Winnipeg South Centre kept the cut-backs, brought in no legislation and no new equipment. The three of them said: "We will re-equip VIA Rail so that it can function the way it should".

Mr. Milliken: What about the LRCs?

Mr. Benjamin: It took four years to get the bugs out of the LRCs before they started operating half decently. All the locomotives had to be overhauled—and they were brand new. I ask the Hon. Member not to tell me about LRCs. If the Hon. Member knew anything about transportation I would not mind his intervening.

Along came 1979 and the Hon. Member for Vegreville, who is also the Deputy Prime Minister and was the Minister of Transport at that time, said on November 21, 1979, "This Government is indeed encouraging the revitalization of rail services throughout Canada". In October, as reported in the Calgary Herald, he said he wanted to bring romance back to VIA Rail, back to train travel. As reported in the Halifax Chronicle Herald on October 11, 1984—and this is after the Hon. Member for Vegreville had his second incarnation—he said: "At long last Canada has a federal Transport Minister who has a vision of rail passenger travel in this country". It was refreshing to hear him talking of high-speed services in the Montreal corridor and between Edmonton and Calgary. It was pleasing to hear him speak of new locomotives and cars for the use of VIA Rail in the Maritimes.

In November, 1984, the Hon. Member for Vegreville said, "We intend as well to put in place a proper legislative mandate that will ensure that it will continue to work providing the type of service that will make all Canadians proud".

In May, 1985 he said as reported in Hansard: "I can assure the Hon. Member that we are committed to revitalizing rail passenger service. We are also committed to putting in new equipment."

In December of 1985 he said: "The drafting of the new Passenger Rail Act is in its final stage. Many attempts are being made to improve the attractiveness and therefore the ridership of VIA Rail".

In February of 1986 he said: "I can indeed reconfirm this Government's commitment to viable rail passenger service in this country".

We have had nothing but a double-cross and a betrayal.

There were two other Ministers who followed in the footsteps of the Hon. Member for Vegreville as Minister of Transport. There was the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) who said in May of 1987: "Because of the additional funding we are now providing for VIA Rail, it will be able to go forward with its plans to construct maintenance facilities in Winnipeg, Vancouver and Halifax". What do we need brand new maintenance facilities for if there ain't no trains running? That passes all understanding.

I agree with the Hon. Member who led off the debate, the present Minister of Transport is a nice fellow. However, he "don't know nothing" about transportation.

When the Minister told us in the House and in the Transport Committee yesterday that the VIA Rail cuts were based on Department of Finance studies what crossed my mind immediately was: where the heck was the Department of Transport? Why are these gnomes in the nether regions of the Department of Transport, who would not know one end of a locomotive from another, doing a study on VIA Rail? Any self-respecting Minister of Transport would immediately go to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and say: "Look, either I am running my Department or here is my resignation". However, he sits passively by.

It is now more obvious than ever that this Government and the previous one never had any intention of bringing in a national rail passenger act. Keeping it as a one dollar item in the Estimates allows the Government and any Minister, as well as VIA Rail, the CNR or the CPR, to do any damn thing they want, any time they want, any place they want.

I am sorry that I have to be somewhat bitter about this. I remember a Liberal Cabinet Minister saying: "Use it or lose it". A Conservative Cabinet Minister repeated that expression, including the Hon. Member for Vegreville.

Despite all the statements that have been made by successive Ministers of Transport, particularly the last three, I wonder how they feel about having the Minister of Finance making liars out of them and the Prime Minister? "Use it or lose it", they said. Mr. Speaker, if you run a train old enough and slow enough and late enough so that nobody will get on it, how could you get anyone to use it? The deck was stacked against the travelling public of Canada from day one. They had no intention of installing a viable rail passenger system.

Since 1976 we have been proposing brand new passenger locomotives, although how they will haul trains with these cut-backs is hard to say. We have received between 30 and 50 of them. Some are still coming on stream. However, we need a minimum of 150 new transcontinental passenger cars for western Canada and Atlantic Canada, from Montreal east. This Government and the previous ones since 1976 have spent more money refurbishing old cars and old equipment than what it would have cost to completely re-equip VIA Rail. These Liberals and these Tories talk about sound business practices. Any private businessman who tried to operate a railway in that manner would have his banker laughing him out of the bank.

Mr. Milliken: We did not support the refurbishing of those cars.

Mr. Benjamin: I want to remind my hon. friend that the Liberal Government, of which Mr. Pepin and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre were a part, supported the refurbishing of cars. In fact, some of these cars are now being refurbished for the third time. If those are sound business practices, then they are a bunch of bone-heads.

Once the new equipment is put in place, what VIA Rail will save in operating maintenance costs will be enough to recover the costs of the new passenger cars in five to seven years. Instead of that, we are refurbishing cars that are anywhere from 37 to 50 years old, some of them for the third time.

• (1240)

You wonder why VIA Rail cannot succeed. You wonder how. You do not need to wonder, now that it is "VIA Rail designed to fail". The only ones that have been made happy about this are the current Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the bus companies. That is about it.

I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that had what I proposed and proposed for all these years been put in place, you would not have between six million and seven million Canadians riding VIA Rail, you would have 15 million to 20 million Canadians riding VIA Rail. You would speed up the schedules.

I have made a thorough study of the VIA Rail national schedules. It takes seven and a half hours from Regina to Winnipeg when you should be doing it in not more than six; it could be done in five hours and 30 minutes. You see that throughout the whole system.

I have in my office, which I invite you to come and see, a copy of the CPR Transcontinental schedule for 1892. The average speed from Montreal to Vancouver was 33 miles per hour and the train had to stop every 100 miles for coal and water and to change crews. The average speed of VIA Rail, Montreal to Vancouver, is 36 or 37 miles per hour—"VIA Rail designed to fail". The Government has deliberately handicapped it to the point where it cannot succeed.

The one president VIA Rail had, Mr. deBelleval, who was finally starting to turn it around, was preparing a five-year plan including a high-speed train corridor that will take several years and $2 billion to $3 billion of investment, but you have got to invest the money before you can get a return on it. You have got to invest the money before people will use it. These guys keep doing it backwards.

I would like to remind the House of another thing, Mr. Speaker. How come the Government is picking on VIA Rail? The Minister says, "We cannot continue to keep throwing all this money at VIA Rail." Why doesn't the Government pick on the St. Lawrence Seaway and all the ports that lose a bundle every year? The Government should do with some of them what it is going to do with VIA Rail. VIA will be operating a passenger train only three times a week. So let us have some of those ports shut down four days a week. They can only operate three days a week. We will close the locks on the St. Lawrence Seaway four days a week.

The juicy one, Mr. Speaker, is Air Transport. Believe it or not, the Department of Transport puts out a document called Self-Supporting Airports and there are nine of them that are supposed to be self-supporting. Well, seven of the nine had losses for last year of over $50 million. The accumulated deficits of those seven so-called self-supporting airports comes to $833 million. I think we have to take Winnipeg, Ottawa, Dorval, Mirabel, Halifax, Calgary and Edmonton and shut them down for four days a week, or they can only operate three days a week. I mean, we cannot keep throwing all this money at those airports. When you add all the other so-called non-self-supporting airports that the Department of Transport operates in Canada, Mr. Speaker, you are looking at deficits of $500 million to $700 million a year, subsidies to air passengers.

What the heck is the Government doing? It does not know and it does not care. The Government deliberately picks on a mode of transportation that millions of people in Canada want to use. In my city the westbound train goes through at two o'clock or 2.30 in the morning and the eastbound somewhere around 3.30 a.m. or four o'clock. It is a great time of the day to entice people and give them the incentive to get on the train. Even so, people in my city are angry about what is going to happen to the rail passenger service.

I often wonder how the Government allocates the air transport tax. By the way, did you know, Mr. Speaker, that losses of the airport do not include the some $25 million it costs for RCMP services? Those services are charged to the Solicitor General and there are a whole bunch of other charges.

All the fines and parking tickets and whatnot that are picked up at airports goes to general revenue. Those funds do not go to the airports nor to the Department of Transport. They go into general revenue.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek) get their grubby hands on it and that is the last you see of it, and that is a few million dollars a year. Why is the Government picking on VIA Rail?

Every mode of transportation since the invention of the wheel has been subsidized. There has never been a totally self-supporting, self-sufficient mode of transportation in history, even since the days of the Babylonians, that paid for itself, let alone make a profit. There never has been and it did not matter whether the system was state-owned or privately owned. The situation applies in both circumstances. It always has and always will.

The problem is that this Government and the previous ones refuse to treat transportation as a public utility. If the private sector will not do the job, then the public sector has to take it over and damn well do it. But it is a public utility. Transportation is something that everyone has to use, directly or indirectly, and until you have national transportation policies that spell that out then the fate of any individual mode of transportation or transport facility is left to the whim of any given Minister of Transport or any Ministry or Government from time to time. And that is no way to run a railway.

I want to move a sub-amendment to the amendment, seconded by the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey):

> That the motion be amended by adding the following words:
> that this House further condemn the Government for reneging on the commitment made by the Deputy Prime Minister, which reads in part, "every step necessary will be taken to ensure that VIA will operate in a safe and reliable fashion in offering good service to Canadians from coast to coast".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will take the amendment under advisement and report back to the House as soon as possible.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the commitment of the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin) to VIA Rail is a sincere and long-standing one and no one in this House would gainsay that. Would the Member tell the House how many jobs would be in jeopardy in Regina, Saskatoon or elsewhere, that he might have figures for, if VIA were to shut down completely in western Canada or in Saskatchewan?

• (1250)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend. Since both Regina and Saskatoon are not division points, there are no crew changes in either of those places. I don't know. I am just guessing. I suspect it will mean a loss of 10, 15 or 20 jobs in Moose Jaw; some at Melville; some at Wilkie; maybe a few in Saskatoon. The only VIA Rail employees we have in Regina are two or three ticket clerks who work in the middle of the night.

It is not a question of employment in my city. However, when you take the situation across the country, not only VIA Rail but what CN and CP are doing, we are looking at tens of thousands of jobs.

One of the abandonments VIA Rail will undoubtedly undertake will be the Montreal-Ottawa-Sudbury run because CN wants to abandon that rail line. That fits in very well with Mr. Lawless' ideas as President of CN as well as what will be his ideas as President of VIA Rail. I suppose you could call that a neat job, a further neat job being done on VIA Rail.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I would ask him if he has been able to do any studies as to not only the number of jobs that will be affected, but the number of Canadians who would not have access to rail transportation if VIA were to be eliminated altogether.

Mr. Speaker, I might say that the Member and I have travelled on VIA. We both travel on it quite frequently, I believe. Has he been able to prepare any material on this matter yet?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend. I apologize. I have been trying to find out from senior citizens' associations and tourist associations but the only thing I have been able to get so far is what is in news reports. Senior citizens in particular do not have the facilities and wherewithal to do a study.

I can say that the last time I took the train with a bedroom from Regina to Ottawa, I did my own survey. I went the length of the entire train and talked to passengers. I found they were in three classes. There were senior citizens who either could not afford a plane ticket—although VIA Rail tickets now are almost as much as a plane fare—or needed the space to move around, have a sleep, or whatever. There were young families with two, three, or four children, who cannot afford plane tickets. One can imagine what it would be like putting them all on a bus for a 600 or 1,000-mile trip. Then there were tourists. Japanese, West Germans and Americans accounted for most of the tourists on the train. They were delighted that they could make that trip. One of the reasons they came to Canada was to travel from Vancouver to Montreal, stop off and see Banff, Jasper, Calgary, and Edmonton and then go on to Montreal. Then they go down south and take Amtrak back to the west coast, or vice versa. The tourist potential on this alone has been barely scratched.

I know my hon. friend is aware of this. All you have to do is talk to the tourist people in Edmonton and Jasper. They will tell you in spades what it means to them.

By the way, I mentioned Amtrak. They have re-equipped Amtrak. It is is doing very well, thank you. At least they had the foresight in the United States to re-equip it. They do not have to pay an arm and a leg to the railroads of the United States like they do in Canada. In fact, if VIA Rail could operate under the same formula as Amtrak does in the United States, they would save $60 million to $120 million a year in what they have to pay to CN and CP.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North on a question or comment.

Mr. Pagtakhan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise and comment. I support the Opposition motion "That this House condemn the Government for its short-sighted and punitive policies that are designed to eliminate passenger rail services in Canada despite the essential nature of these services to the development of communities in all regions of the country."

I also stand and rise to support the amendment that this House further condemns the Government for reneging on its promises to support VIA Rail and provide reliable and safe service across the country.

I would like to reflect the viewpoint of a westerner from Manitoba, although this is truly a national issue because it affects all Canadians from coast to coast.

Let me remind the Government, Mr. Speaker, of a few things, lest it has forgotten that Canada is a country with vast areas, that it is a country with distant and remote communities, that it has one of the harshest climates in the world, that it has hazardous roads in the winter, that it is a country with beautiful scenery and landscape that attracts tourism.

It is also known, Mr. Speaker, that most cultural centres, trained technicians and health and social services are found in the cities of our country. Hence, I submit that VIA Rail offers an excellent tool for tourism in Canada. It offers all year-round transportation for most rural communities. It will ensure amenities for Canadians in the rural areas and countryside. It will ensure access to essential health care and social services that are only found in the major cities of our country. Furthermore, VIA Rail ensures the economic growth of our regions and communities.

I would also like to remind this Government that all Canadians from all parts of this country pay taxes. They will, in fact, stand and fight for this country when the time or need arises. Thus, I would like to pose to the Government the following questions.

Has it forgotten the geography and character of Canada? Does it not believe that tourism is an essential industry of the country? Does it not want to provide safe travel for all Canadians the whole year round? Would it not like to ensure that rural citizens have the privilege to access cultural amenities in major cities? Would it not like to believe that Canadians, wherever they are, ought to be able to access medical and health care services? Does it not believe that Canadians in all parts of the country have a right to move freely and safely?

I honestly believe that the Government will agree that VIA Rail has helped build this country from coast to coast, that VIA Rail will ensure the link to rural communities in Canada and provides safe transportation for all and that it will ensure the economic growth of all regions. If the Government does agree, then it should condemn its short-sighted and punitive policies.

Finally, I submit that a medical doctor, on seeing an ailing patient, makes a diagnosis first. He then ascertains the causes of the illness. He then prescribes the necessary treatment. VIA Rail has an ailment—non-profitability. The causes are outmoded equipment, stiff pricing regulations, and misplacement of maintenance centres across the country.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that the treatment ought to be assistance to procure high-speed bilevel cars for VIA Rail so that it will promote increased usage of this mode of transportation, reduce the cost of maintenance, and decrease the further drain on the treasury of this Crown corporation.

In conclusion, to pursue its present policy and to allow cuts in VIA Rail is no longer neglect on the part of the Government. It will be a prescription of deliberate poison to the distant communities of our country.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has considered the amendment moved by the Member from Regina—Lumsden and thus finds it to be in order. Debate will resume with the Hon. Member for Mississauga West.

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga West): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to this debate with great interest. It is interesting to hear the ills of VIA Rail being compared with a medical disease, a diagnosis being prescribed and treatment being prescribed. With this in mind, I would like to offer my comments with regard to the illnesses of VIA Rail with concern for its ridership.

There is a general impression that government funding for VIA Rail is being cut at a time when the corporation's ridership figure is improving, and that VIA Rail may be turning a corner.

I will admit that ridership has indeed increased from 5.9 million passengers in 1987 to 6.4 million passengers in 1988. However, when we examine those figures more closely, we find that the 1988 ridership is only an improvement on a year-over-year basis from 1987, a year which represents the lowest ridership in VIA's history.

If one looks at the broader picture of rail passenger service in this country, one comes to the inescapable conclusion that VIA's performance has been worsening and not improving. Moreover, since its creation in 1977, VIA Rail has absorbed more than $5 billion of taxpayers' money. As we go through this debate, we have to remember that $5 billion is not a small influx of capital, as has been suggested by some speakers.

During this time the Government has made major investments in VIA to give it a fair chance to prove itself. These investments have improved service and led to savings, but never to the degree expected.

In 1987, after 10 full years of funding, the corporation experienced its lowest ever ridership level of 5.9 million passengers. A more telling comparison is between 1988 and 1981 ridership figures, since 1981 represents the year in which VIA achieved its highest ridership level of about eight million passengers. Such a comparison reveals that VIA's 1988 "improved" ridership is actually 20 per cent lower than in 1981.

The Government did make a commitment to cost-effective, modern, national passenger rail services. In doing so, however, the Government asked Canadians to share in this commitment by doing their part and take the train. This has not happened. The Government made it clear to Canadians that it would apply a "use it or lose it" approach to the funding of rail passenger services.

Since making those statements in 1984, the Government has spent more than $2.6 billion of taxpayers' money on operating and capital expenditures. That is not a small amount, as has been stated by members of the Opposition.

Despite ever-increasing subsidies, rail passenger services currently retain only 3 per cent of the total Canadian inter-city passenger traffic.

At the same time, we must remember that bus service has increased its passenger service to 6 per cent, which is double the train service; air travel has a market share of 7 per cent; and demonstrating Canadian's love affair with cars, automobiles, and trucks, those modes of transportation enjoy the lion's share of the market at 84 per cent. Those figures reveal that Canadians have a definite preference for passenger modes other than rail. They have sent a clear signal of that preference to the Government.

In light of the low-ridership levels for rail passenger services, and the Government's commitment to expenditure reduction and restraint, subsidies to VIA Rail cannot be maintained at the level the corporation is accustomed to. As the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) stated: "Canadian taxpayers can no longer afford ever-increasing subsidies for a mode of transportation with decreasing ridership". By 1988, those subsidies had reached an annual level of $641 million, which translates to an average of $100 per passenger.

A member of the Opposition stated that all passenger transportation modes are subsidized. That is true. GO Transit in my area of Mississauga, Oakville, and Milton is subsidized to the tune of approximately $1.65 per passenger. Everyone can understand that. However, when the subsidy reaches $100 per passenger, something has to give.

When presented with those facts, some opponents of the Government's decision to cut subsidies to VIA Rail point to the fact that ridership performance on some services is improving. This is indeed true for the Ottawa-Toronto route where, between 1986 to 1988, traffic has increased by 29 per cent. However, the improvements made by this service have been more than offset by poor performance on other routes during the same period.

For example, ridership has declined by 15 per cent on the Victoria-Kootenay route in British Columbia, and by 26 per cent on the Moncton-Edmundston route in New Brunswick. This declining ridership is a major factor in the climb of VIA subsidies to an all-time high of $641 million. The fact remains that on a system-wide basis, seat occupancy in 1988 has been determined to be 52 per cent. In other words, for every seat occupied there is a seat vacant. VIA must operate its services in a more-effective and rational manner.

Therefore, faced with such low performance and the prospect of ever-increasing subsidy levels, the Government made the difficult—and believe me, Mr. Speaker, it was difficult—but fiscally responsible decision to take immediate action in light of the pressing need to control the debt and the deficit.

Accordingly, a new policy approach has been adopted for VIA and new funding levels have been established for the operation of rail passenger services. I believe it is worth while reading those funding levels into the record. They are $541 million for 1989-90, $435 million for 1990-91, $394 million for 1991-92, $275 million for 1992-93, and $250 million for 1993-94. That is one-quarter of a billion dollars that will be put into rail passenger service for 1993-94.

Through these new financial limits, VIA's management is being asked to operate in a more streamlined and cost-conscious manner within a new federal Budget reality.

To achieve those objectives as soon possible, the corporation has been directed to submit a new five-year business plan that conforms to the new Budget restraints, and rises to the challenge of providing rail passenger services in a more cost-effective manner within these constraints.

There has been much discussion about truly isolated communities. In recognition of the Government's commitment to service, for truly isolated communities which have no other year-round means of transportation, the Government has asked VIA to maintain service to the truly isolated communities along VIA's remote routes in five provinces. I believe that it is worth while mentioning those routes. They are the following lines: Jasper-Prince Rupert, The Pas-Lynn Lake, Wabowden-Churchill, Winnipeg-Churchill, Winnipeg-Capreol, Sudbury-White River, Senneterre-Cochrane, Montreal-Senneterre, and Montreal-Jonquière.

However, with the exception of protecting the services to isolated communities along the remote routes that I have cited, VIA's management has been given a considerable measure of flexibility in developing a new business plan. In preparing its new business plan, VIA will consider all possible options for operating within its budget, including productivity improvements, increased fares, abandonment of routes, service reductions on some routes, and transfer of service to interested third parties. This has not been an easy thing for this Government to have to face.

Let us go back to the national debt and the deficit. One hundred per cent of Canadians recognize that we have a debt and a deficit problem in this country when 36 cents out of every tax dollar collected must go to service the debt. This is a difficult situation and the Government has taken a responsible action in putting forward a plan and asking VIA Rail to submit a new five-year plan whereby it can operate more efficiently. If only 3 per cent of Canadians want to ride the trains, why should we be asking 100 per cent of Canadians to pay $100 in subsidy for each rider of the train?

Mr. Nault: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a question to the Member for Mississauga West (Mr. Horner). I would like to read a few quotations made during the 1981 debate on VIA Rail and ask for his impression on those quotations. They were made by the now Deputy Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mazankowski). The following statement relates to his feelings toward the then Minister of Transport in the Liberal Government, and it was made in October, 1981:

> He chooses to ignore the traditional process which is part of the Canadian way, the right to hold public hearings, to be heard and have an opportunity to express concern about the criteria of public convenience and necessity.

On October 20, 1981, the present Deputy Prime Minister said:

> There should be improvements in the contractual agreements between the railways and VIA Rail. We should give VIA Rail the necessary autonomy, power and clout to negotiate with the railways in a businesslike manner. The VIA Rail mandate should be clarified and enshrined in legislative form—an investment in new bi-level equipment would decrease operating costs by 31 per cent—we would not have been a country had it not been for the guarantees inherent in the provision of rail services.

The current Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon) stated on October 20, 1981 in regard to energy conservation:

> This means that it is essential for people like the Minister of Transport to start talking trains and increased load factor, rather than dismantling the system, but he must encourage the ever-increasing efficiency of our rail transportation system in Canada.

In 1985, this Government under the Deputy Prime Minister who was the then Minister of Transport presented Bill C-97 to the House, an Act respecting rail passenger transportation for first reading. It never went any further. It died. Does the Member and his caucus still believe what the Deputy Prime Minister said at the time; that is, the reason why VIA Rail is not meeting its objectives is because its hands are tied, that it has not been given the opportunity to be a successful business venture because of a lack of mandate, lack of legislation and lack of commitment by the Government of the day.

Mr. Horner: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I am quite sure that when the Deputy Prime Minister made those statements, he felt they could be accomplished. Believe me, we have tried. We have carried on the subsidies to the tune of $2.6 billion so that VIA Rail could act in an autonomous way.

Regarding public participation and consultation, the consultations have taken place. Canadians have said they are not interested in riding the trains. Canadians have said that only 3 per cent of us want to ride the train. Ridership is dropping throughout the country.

When I was very young there was a railway to my hometown in Pontiac County 50 miles from here. It ran from Waltham, Quebec to Ottawa. It was called the Pontiac Pacific junction but it never became the Pontiac Pacific junction because it never got across the Ottawa River and out to the Pacific. So we called it the "push, pull and jerk"—the PPJ. The "push, pull and jerk" came to Ottawa every morning and went back every night. It was a great mode of transportation for the people of that day. However, we are not in the 19th century.

In the 19th century when Sir John A. Macdonald founded the railroads, they were the only mode of travel. We did not have the highways, the automobiles or the airplanes that we have today. Canadians have made a statement that 3 per cent of them want to ride the rails. Certainly there are railroad buffs in this country. I love to see a steam train but I can see them in the museums where they should be. We are moving into the 21st century. We have to make these cuts in the interests of fiscal responsibility. We hope that VIA Rail will respond and give the service it has to give to isolated communities in this country.

Mr. Laporte: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member is not implying that VIA Rail should resort to steam locomotives for transportation in this country. The Hon. Member referred to a "use it or lose it" philosophy. Does the Hon. Member feel that that "use it or lose it" philosophy should apply to other modes of transportation in this country such as the seaways, which lose millions each year and airports? I believe the only two airports in Canada that make a profit are the Toronto International Airport and the Vancouver International Airport. If he believes in the "use it or lose it" philosophy for all modes of transportation, what approach does he think this Government should take with regard to these other modes of transportation?

Mr. Horner: As far as other modes of transportation, I know they will be subsidized. We have given a commitment and I have quoted the figures on the record of what is being given to subsidize VIA Rail to keep it going and servicing isolated communities. We will always have to subsidize certain modes of transportation.

Canadians have spoken: 84 per cent of Canadians want to travel by automobile, 7 per cent by air, 6 per cent by bus and 3 per cent by rail. If Canadians do not want to ride the trains, then why should all Canadians be forced to subsidize them to the tune of $100 for every ticket? It does not make sense. It is not fiscally responsible. Your reference to VIA Rail going back to steam trains is ludicrous. I don't believe it should, you know it and I know it.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I think Members on both sides of the House agree that aside from myself, the only other Member in this House who has spoken more strongly on VIA Rail in the last number of weeks would be the Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett). We have spoken on behalf of VIA Rail for a number of reasons. The primary reason is the fact that we live in a very rural part of Canada, Atlantic Canada. We do not have the means of transportation that people in other parts of the country enjoy. Rural parts of Canada are deprived of some of the good highways and air transportation enjoyed in areas such as Ontario and Quebec and other parts of the country and larger metropolitan areas. We deserve a means of transportation that is part of our history and still serves a useful function.

We should not get lost in the numbers. There is an old expression: "Lies, damned lies and statistics". It brings home the reality of the railway. You can listen to figures until you are blue in the face, but they do not tell the real story. I am going to tell you why.

In Atlantic Canada there are only two provinces that use the railways. I believe passenger rail disappeared in Newfoundland in 1969 and does not exist in Prince Edward Island. Therefore we are talking only of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

There are approximately 1.5 million people in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. I want to refer to the statistics to point out why they are sometimes misleading. Last year in Atlantic Canada, 224,000 people rode The Ocean with VIA Rail and 240,000 people rode The Atlantic. There are 500,000 people out of a population of 1.5 million who actually use that rail service. In my opinion, that 3 per cent figure is totally ridiculous. This is a figure that certainly justifies a need for that rail line in eastern Canada.

The other point I want to make, especially to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) and the Member for Mississauga West (Mr. Horner), which he addressed as well, is that in certain regions of this country we need a rail line. The subsidization that the Government pays to keep that rail line going in Atlantic Canada is lower than in any other part of the country. The Ocean is subsidized to the tune of $48.86 per passenger, and it is just over $50 for The Atlantic. The subsidy for this form of transportation in Atlantic Canada is far less than the national average.

The cost recovery percentages in relation to The Atlantic Limited indicates that it can be viable. I urge the Government to give VIA the autonomy it needs to be cost efficient and I urge it not to forget about Atlantic Canada. We do need that means of transportation. It is in our roots. It is part of our history. We don't want to lose it. We will continue to use it.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to compliment my hon. friend from Atlantic Canada for those very wise remarks. Those are the issues that we have been trying to impress upon his Government over the last several weeks. I hope that he is more successful than we have been in getting that message across.

I compliment him on having the veracity to do what he just did for the benefit of all those who need rail service in our country.

Today we discussed the future of passenger rail service in Canada. The future is not promising for VIA Rail, for its workers, and the families of the workers. The future is not promising for small communities which rely on VIA Rail for their livelihoods. The future does not look promising for Canadians who rely on passenger trains for their transportation needs. The future is bleak, and unless the Government accepts the challenge that it faces and meets this problem head on, the future of passenger rail in our country is on its way out. We in the Opposition and some of those on the government side, like the Member who just spoke, must convince the Government to be bold, convince it to be imaginative in its approach, convince it to develop a philosophy and concept for the future of rail transportation in this great country of ours. If the Government does not develop this concept, I fear the loss of passenger rail service in Canada.

There can be no doubt that in developing and accepting this new philosophy, we as Canadians must accept the fact that with the exception of water traffic, moving people in Canada by rail is the least expensive way, the most energy efficient and most environmentally acceptable way throughout this great country of ours. Unless we can continue to do this, the question we must ask ourselves in this debate is not whether we can afford to keep this mode of transportation, but can we afford not to have this method of transportation for the people of Canada?

Today is not the day to look at what happened in the past, 127 years ago, with respect to railroads in Canada. Today is not the day to reiterate that the Government and the Minister who spoke earlier today said less than one year ago that insofar as rail passenger services are concerned, the Government's objective for VIA Rail is the provision of safe, modern, efficient rail passenger services across Canada.

During the last federal election, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said: "The plan is for specific capital programs to enhance the quality and reliability of VIA's services. This Government is concerned about what the removal of rail service can do to a community in Canada".

Today is not the day to draw attention to the fact that the Government held public meetings throughout the country to discuss the pricing structure that could make VIA much more competitive and viable than it is today. Before the final hearing was even held on May 1, VIA's fate had been established and determined by the Budget of April 26, and the cuts that were put in place on that date.

We should not discuss today that as late as last Tuesday we were given further indications of just what the Government's direction would be with respect to the future of passenger rail service in our country. An article in The Globe and Mail outlined the intent of VIA Rail's corporate plan, a plan about which we have heard so much in the House today, which was supposed to be released at the end of this month. This five-year corporate plan calls for the elimination of 48 per cent of all VIA Rail's total operations in Canada. It includes elimination of 115 regional services throughout Canada. We also learned the plan includes the elimination of 22 routes, bearing in mind that there are only 36 routes in all of Canada. These include the elimination of four in western Canada, four in Quebec, seven in Ontario and seven routes in Atlantic Canada, unfortunately another blow to that region.

This plan cannot be denied by the Government. Paul Raynor, VIA Rail's chief of media communications, confirmed yesterday that that was the plan and the information contained in The Globe and Mail article was indeed accurate.

If this was not enough to convince Canadians of the fate of passenger rail service, the statements of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) on Tuesday provide ample evidence of the Government's vision of transportation services in our country. He said in the House that he would not give any commitments or guarantees regarding the future of VIA Rail. He then said outside the House that he would consider shutting down VIA Rail in its entirety if that is what the future for VIA Rail would be in its corporate plan.

How can the Government suggest that it is willing to give consideration to a proposal recommending the elimination of passenger rail service in our country? In good government, corporate plans are not created in a void. This corporate plan is being created in a void, without the input from all the experts on the government side and those people who work in Transport Canada.

Political direction must be given and I intend to use the balance of my time today to talk about the political motivation and where we should be going. Let us look at what the future holds for passenger rail service in Canada if we can develop a strong political leadership and develop a vision. Unfortunately, the Government does not have this vision, nor does it have the strong political leadership. The Government offers no alternatives to the position of closing out VIA Rail.

I have a very good friend, Dr. Tom Heringer, who has been a railway buff all his life. I talked to him last night about this very serious problem for Canada and he informed me that this is no longer a sentimental issue about railways in this country.

He said that if the rail system fails in our country, we will lose the link which keeps and has kept Canada together. It is a reason Canada grew from east to west, not north to south. It was one of the main reasons why Canada became a confederated nation. We stand the chance of losing the unity in Canada if we proceed on this road.

To even consider the elimination of VIA Rail shows once again complete disregard for rural and small town Canada. The small and rural municipalities which will be most severely affected by cuts to VIA Rail were not consulted by VIA Rail's master plan. The 2,500 VIA Rail employees who will lose their jobs were not consulted before this master plan took effect.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, if this shows that this Government is truly compassionate in its nature. The Conservatives will say, and naturally so, what would the Liberals do if they were faced with this problem? I say to them that this is not a Conservative problem, an NDP problem or a Liberal problem. This is a problem that faces all Canadians today.

First, let us look at what we have to build on. We have railway routes in all of Canada. We have the tracks and railbeds which are in good condition. We have railway stations. We have a competent and qualified workforce. We have the passengers who want to use the system. What is lacking is the political will, the leadership, the desire and the vision.

Let us be constructive and give the plan to this Government. For a start, I would like to say that the first thing we must do is reactivate a Bill from 1986 called Bill C-97, which gave VIA Rail the opportunity to run its own affairs, a Bill that would have unshackled the hands of VIA and let it run its own affairs like all the airlines were given in Canada.

Then we must look at our resources to provide the only thing that VIA lacks, which is modern equipment to do a good job. How could one imagine Air Canada running today if it were shackled like VIA Rail is shackled and still trying to operate the airlines in our country with DC-3 airplanes?

In Canada we have the facilities to make state of the art engines in London, Ontario. In Montreal, Kingston and Thunder Bay we have facilities to make railway cars. We have enough facilities to manufacture state of the art railway cars. In my riding, we can produce these cars.

I would like to say that if we have the will, the desire and the plan in place, we as Canadians can proceed and make VIA Rail a viable, economic railway for Canada for the next 100 years, as it was in the past.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments, the Member for Scarborough Centre.

Mrs. Browes: I would like to refer the Member to his comment here today that we need a plan of action. I would just like to make reference by way of comparison to a plan of action which this Government put forth in 1984-85. This Government said to Canada Post, which was running at a tremendous deficit, that we wanted a plan of action for them to balance the books by 1988-89. At that time, Members opposite were screaming about this, that we were going to be reducing our postal service and that this was going to be the end of the Post Office. We stuck to our guns and said we wanted to balance the books in Canada Post by 1988-89. It was a challenge that we put forth to Canada Post. What has happened in those four years is that Canada Post, in 1988-89, has balanced its books.

What we have here, in relation to the financial situation of Canada, is that we have set forth the challenge to VIA Rail to bring forth a plan of action in order to reduce the subsidies, to reduce the dependency that VIA Rail has on the Canadian taxpayer. We have set out and said to VIA Rail that these are a few parameters by which we want to reduce the subsidies to "x" number of dollars, and we want them to bring back a plan of action.

I believe that is a very reasonable approach, in light of the Budget restraint that we must put on ourselves and the Canadian taxpayers for the future of Canadians. I ask the Member why he believes that this plan of action, of putting this challenge to some very knowledgeable people who have been working in VIA Rail, would be an unreasonable approach?

Mr. Comuzzi: Mr. Speaker, I welcome that question from the Hon. Member. I thought for a while that we were talking about Canada Post today, rather than VIA Rail. If she was listening to my remarks, I did say what this country needs. If we are going to have VIA Rail continue as a viable entity within our country, it is exactly what she stated; a plan of action.

I say to her that Bill C-97, which received first reading on February 24, 1986, was a Bill designed to keep VIA Rail completely free and to unshackle its hands so that it could operate properly and would not have to go to the National Transportation Agency every time it wanted to change its salary structure or rate structure. It did not have to go to the National Transportation Agency if it wanted to change the cups that it served in its dining cars. It would have its own board of directors. It would have its own management philosophy. It would have its own methodology by which to run a viable transportation system in this country.

That Bill went nowhere, at the fault of this Government. I would suggest to the Member that that was the start of the continuing demise of VIA Rail's future in our country. Without that type of legislation, and if she will recall my speech I said that the first thing we have to do if we want VIA Rail to be viable in this country is to first accept Bill C-97 or its replacement and unshackle the hands of VIA Rail so that it can operate independently.

The second thing we have to do is take a look at the assets that VIA Rail has. I went through the good trackbeds and the stations that we have and the people in our workforce who are working for VIA Rail. There is a lot there to build on. All we have to do is go to those facilities which we already have in Canada, the railway arts in London, Ontario, which can produce state of the art engines, or to Kingston and my own plant, Can Car in Thunder Bay, which make state of the art railway cars and produce subway cars for the world. They are esteemed for their quality. The Go-Train cars, the double-decker cars. I have talked to those people and they can convert those double-decker cars for long term use.

If we do that and adopt some sound business plans which Bill C-97 would give VIA Rail, so that they can buy this equipment and depreciate it like every other normal business in Canada over a period of time, would allow them to use the cars for 20 to 30 years. It would be a viable business. However, they need the opportunity.

Perhaps with that question, our hon. friend would support us in the proposals which we are making for the future of VIA Rail in our country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of Canadians that when we speak of transportation, this country has depended upon leaders with vision. It cried out for a government with a vision to the future and created a blueprint for the future. Instead, where do we find ourselves? We find ourselves led by an arrogant, irresponsible government with the "use it or lose it" attitude.

I would like to state from the beginning that thanks to this Government Canadians are about to lose the lifeline which weaves its way through countless small communities across this great land of ours. Canada is a country that can pull together, and pull together we did when we realized Sir John A. Macdonald's national dream. This resulted in connecting our country from east to west and from sea to sea, and is essentially the reason why we are here today.

This Government is now prepared to do away with VIA Rail at a time when it is still the primary source of transportation for thousands of Canadians. Rail transportation is no less important today than it was 100 years ago. The railway system was created not as a luxury for the people but for quite the opposite. It was seen as an inalienable right of Canadians to travel on a rail system that was theirs and would become part of their heritage. So it has become part of our heritage. However, not as the antiquated system from yesteryear, as the Government has allowed it to become, but as an extremely viable and important part of our transportation network.

For many people, train travel is a major mode of transportation for several reasons. The main reason, of course, is obvious. For those who cannot afford the costly price of an airline ticket or the cost of insuring and maintaining a family automobile, the train is the most practical and affordable way to travel. Of course, for many others airports are far too far away and if they do not have a car how are they even to get to the airport? For many communities at present, if it were not for trains living in remote or rural areas might otherwise be impossible. Travel by train is then a necessity, not a luxury.

The Government is committed to removing itself from the responsibility and duty of providing Canadians with rail service. As I have already stated, Canadians have the right to expect that the Government provide them with rail service instead of leaving them in the lurch to the dictates of the market-place where they will have to shell out large sums of money for either air or ground transportation.

Not only have Canadians been misled by the Government regarding certain commitments made in the last election, they have been misled regarding commitments made to VIA Rail. In 1987 the then Minister of Transport stated, "Over the next five years we will be spending over $2.5 billion on VIA Rail". Less than 24 months later the Government is announcing cuts to VIA Rail by hundreds of millions of dollars.

Realizing that many people rely on VIA Rail for transportation, the Government says it is too expensive to justify. In light of that reality, the Government should attempt to deal fairly with the Canadian public and VIA Rail on this very sensitive issue.

There are many things that the Government should be doing with VIA Rail but it is more concerned with abandoning it. For example, if it is the almighty buck that the Government is truly concerned about, then allow VIA Rail to set more competitive rates rather than allow the National Transportation Agency to set limits on the price of a ticket. Just as VIA Rail is due to submit a financial plan regarding the future of the corporation, the agency's chairman, former Deputy Prime Minister Erik Neilsen, has suspended hearings into VIA's pricing policy, an extremely vital process for the viability of the corporation. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) himself concluded that the report of the hearings would form a part of a comprehensive reassessment of VIA Rail.

Not only would the loss of VIA Rail be devastating to small rural communities in terms of tourism and trade, but it would result in the loss of thousands of jobs. Mr. Tom McGrath, head of the largest union inside VIA Rail, estimates that 2,500 of VIA's 7,000 employees will lose their jobs as a result of the elimination of lines. A leaked VIA business plan obtained this week by The Globe and Mail estimated the job loss figure to be closer to 3,500.

In Moncton, New Brunswick, 1,200 jobs were lost in 1988 because CN closed its repair shops. The elimination of VIA routes would mean the city would lose another 200 jobs, plus $20 million in spin-offs. It is in small communities such as these where workers are being forced by the Government into unemployment insurance lines when they would rather be working on the railroad all the livelong day.

As well, the business plan calls for the total elimination of regional services such as routes from Toronto to Niagara Falls. Again, if such lines are not profitable, why not simply reduce the number of runs per week but keep the lines open for those who really need them instead of calling for their total eradication? In fact, the Government at the very least should have taken the lead from countries such as Britain and France and implemented high-speed trains in the major corridors.

Would it not be wonderful to hop on the train in Montreal and take it to Toronto in just two hours? Major corridor routes would be the answer for high-speed trains.

The next point I would like to address is in relation to subsidies. It is not only VIA Rail that operates with subsidies. We have heard it in speeches before this one. Airlines and bus companies have also operated on a subsidy basis. The federal Government contributes significant funds to these modes of transportation, although indirectly. For example, many buses operate on a subsidized basis because the roads on which they travel are for the major part subsidized by the Government. Each year the federal Government contributes $6 billion to road construction and repair. If VIA Rail were to be eliminated, heavier usage by buses and other vehicles would dramatically and certainly increase this $6 billion figure.

Airlines receive a similar indirect subsidy. This Government not only subsidizes Canadian airlines but it allowed Boeing to purchase de Havilland at a steal. What the airlines receive is the ability to fly in and out of Canadian airports with the assistance of government-paid tarmacs, terminals, hangars, navigation and weather equipment essential to do their business.

If Canadians cannot travel by train, then what is their alternative? The Government tried to answer that question a few years back when it announced the deregulation of the Canadian airline industry. Canadians know all too well the problems with regard to air transportation under this Government. Deregulation and privatization has meant not only relinquishing what used to be the public domain, but has also meant an abdication of authority and responsibility by this Government for transportation.

In the Main Estimates for Transport Canada are included great expenditures which I am sure the Government could get around and perhaps pass on to VIA Rail. For example, at Pearson International the estimates include an additional duty-free outlet at a cost of $572,000, upgrading of floodlights at a cost of $858,000 and a long-term development study at a cost of $402,000. These three features alone total some $1.8 million.

The point I am trying to make is that while it is acceptable to preach fiscal responsibility, it is contrary to the principles of fairness that Canadians should be led to believe another thing.

I see you signalling me that my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker.

Yesterday, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) stated that Amtrak is purchasing 100 passenger cars from Bombardier in Quebec. The catch, of course, is that the purchase is being partly financed by the Export Development Corporation, a corporation of Her Majesty. Why is it that when it comes to an American company operating the same mode of transportation the Government is thinking of phasing out in Canada, it can find Canadian taxpayers' money to finance the operation?

In closing, the strength of our national community is under siege from an arrogant, uncaring and irresponsible Government. I am concerned that 75 years of effort to build a strong, unified federal foundation is crumbling under the destructive policy actions of this Government.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Keyes) would not want to leave the impression with the people who may be watching the debate or reading it down the road in Hansard that the Toronto International Airport is having changes made to its structure as a result of grants being handed out to it. It is well known, if the Hon. Member were to be frank with the House, that Toronto International Airport is a profit centre. Those expenditures, of course, come from the moneys earned at the airport through landing fees and other charges to the various airlines for the facilities they use there. I know he would not want to leave that hanging and that he would want to make sure that it is understood by those watching this debate today.

Mr. Hovdebo: Who built it?

Mr. McDermid: The Government did. Do you know what is going on there now? The new terminal is being built by the private sector. It is not the Government that is putting the money into it and it is working well. The terminal is going up very, very quickly. We look forward to it being opened next year.

Let us get back to VIA Rail, because that is what we are here to talk about today. The Hon. Member said that the Government was arrogant and irresponsible. When we were elected to office, one of the things that was said to me by the electors in my community of Brampton, time and time again, was to take a long hard look at the expenditures of Government and see where you can manage the business of Government much better. When you have a company that is under the aegis of the federal Government, costing the taxpayer hundreds of millions of dollars, I believe it is incumbent upon the Government to examine that, to see if we can improve that situation. Because of the changes that we are going through in our economy and in the structures of managing Government, it is incumbent upon us to examine these things.

Does the Hon. Member think it is arrogant and irresponsible for a Government to look into a company to try and improve the situation where every passenger, whether he or she is travelling from Brampton to Toronto or Toronto to Vancouver, is being subsidized by $100? Is that irresponsible and arrogant?

Mr. Keyes: I am not sure whether I even want to thank the Member for his question, Mr. Speaker, because, yes, it is arrogant and it is irresponsible. It is arrogant and irresponsible when a Government outlines its fiscal plan in a Budget in April in which massive cuts by millions of dollars to rail passenger services in this country are laid on the table before a report, at the cost of $4 million to the taxpayer, is even presented to that same Government. Certainly that is irresponsible, Mr. Speaker, absolutely irresponsible.

The Minister speaks of the Toronto International Airport as well, Mr. Speaker, the terminal building built there. You know what the Government's game plan is. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) says, "Well, now we are considering, since there is a terminal there, maybe we should put a third or a fourth runway there as well." Isn't that terrific? Is that going to ease congestion?

Mr. McDermid: Are you opposed?

Mr. Keyes: Is that going to create more traffic on highways 427, 403? You are darned right it is going to create more traffic. Talk about congesting a congested situation, Mr. Speaker, it couldn't become worse. It just couldn't become worse. The Government has spent all that money—

Mr. Corbeil: Are you opposed?

Mr. Keyes: I am opposed to it because I have for you, sir, a beautiful alternative, a fiscally responsible alternative. We have spent some $50 million odd at upgrading an airport at Hamilton and the Ontario Government has committed itself—it had the vision—to $61 million in road access to that airport. Now here is a vision for you, Mr. Speaker. Can you imagine Hamilton Airport as the alternative to Toronto Pearson International Airport, with an expenditure that would be fiscally responsible? And now, which is set in motion, are the high-speed trains to run between Windsor, bypassing Hamilton Airport, to Pearson International Airport in Toronto, someone could get off his international flight and if a connection has to be made, he hops on a 150-mile an hour train and he is in Toronto in no time. Is that not visionary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. McDermid: Where do you put it?

Mr. Keyes: The Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) has not invited me to his office to hear me out. I can understand that. The Government has a plan. When we consider not only the situation with the airports and not only the consideration of the rail passenger service in this country, Mr. Speaker, can you imagine, up come all those trains and all those passenger routes? What is a person to do? Should he jump in the family car? How many millions upon millions of more cars—

Mr. McDermid: Not very many.

Mr. Keyes: —are going to be on our highways, putting out all this carbon monoxide. It is horrible.

Mr. McDermid: Only 3 per cent take the railway, 84 per cent are in cars now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments has expired. I recognize the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre on debate.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to voice my support for the Government's decision on VIA Rail.

Mr. Comuzzi: What decision?

Mrs. Browes: As my colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) has stated, Canadian taxpayers no longer can afford to pay the ever increasing subsidies to VIA. Last year these subsidies reached an unprecedented $641 million. This represents an average of $100 for each passenger who boards the train.

Mr. Nault: That is not true.

Mrs. Maheu: Talk about the facts.

Mrs. Browes: Subsidies have escalated and the number of passengers has declined. This trend began in the 1950s and 1960s as travellers abandoned rail in favour of other modes of transportation. The number of passengers travelling on rail has declined by about two-thirds since a post-war high in 1947.

Each of us in this Chamber has memories of riding on the train. In 1947 my father was a Member of Parliament and I have very fond memories of taking the train with my parents to come to Ottawa to see my father speak in the House of Commons. It was a short trip. It was only from Cobourg Station in Ontario to Ottawa, but it was a weekly trip that my father took.

When we think of memories we think of just 50 years ago, in 1939, when the late King and the Queen Mother travelled across Canada by train. The Queen Mother, of course, is commemorating that trip by returning to Ottawa on July 5 this year. There will be a very fine reception on the front lawn of Parliament Hill. I invite all Canadians to be with the Queen Mother on July 5 to commemorate the occasion of that trip of 50 years ago.

We as Canadians and as Members of Parliament share those memories of another day. Times have changed. We have to look at the present and look to the future.

In recognizing the problem as early as 1961, a royal commission on transportation recommended drastic rationalization of rail passenger services. Rationalization has been effected over time but clearly, with VIA subsidies at such alarmingly high levels, further measures are indeed needed.

This poor performance is despite expenditures of about $5 billion since VIA's creation in 1977. Of this amount, more than $1 billion went to capital investment in an effort to improve the quality and reliability of VIA's services. Of the $1 billion, more than $600 million has been spent since 1984 on major capital programs. For instance, this Government funded the purchase of 59 new high horsepower diesel locomotives for assignment to the transcontinental routes. The delivery of the first order was completed last summer and the delivery of the second order is under way. The Government also has approved the modernization of up to 100 train cars in the transcontinental fleet. These cars will receive new electric heat and air conditioning systems in order to make it more pleasant for passengers. This will restore the cars to like new conditions.

The construction of a network of equipment maintenance facilities across the country is almost completed. Facilities at Montreal and Toronto cost more than $200 million. They are state of the art in an effort to improve operational efficiency and cut the high cost of maintaining equipment.

Station and track improvements were also approved. For instance, track upgrading between Toronto and Ottawa allowed journey times to be reduced to four hours instead of the five hours that it was.

The investments that are already in place did not, however, yield lower subsidies as had been expected. The Government did its part and VIA did its best to improve the delivery of its product, but the fact is that people did not take the train. Canadians demonstrated their preference for other means of transportation. In fact, rail passenger service represents only about 3 per cent of all inter-city passenger travel in Canada.

While some have pointed to an upswing in VIA's performance in 1988 and suggest that now is not the time to cut VIA's budget, the reality is as follows. While VIA's ridership did increase by 10 per cent and revenues went up by 13 per cent in 1988, the 1988 ridership increase is being compared to 1987 when ridership plunged by 7 per cent to its lowest level ever of 5.9 million passengers. Ridership in 1988 is in fact almost identical to 1986 and 20 per cent less than was the case in 1981.

Revenues for 1988 did increase by 13 per cent, or $27 million. At the same time, operating costs increased by 15 per cent, or $94 million.

The result was the Government subsidies to VIA for its operations alone had to be increased by $68 million in 1988.

This means that for every additional dollar earned by VIA in 1988, the Government at the same time has had to disburse an additional $2.62. Clearly, the Government had to take action.

The decision to reduce the subsidy was a difficult one. It was an unavoidable one.

Mr. Keyes: It was irresponsible.

Mrs. Browes: It was a very responsible one. There was the example that I just mentioned a few minutes ago. It was a very responsible action to have Canada Post put forth a business plan. At the same, time we have asked VIA Rail to put forth a business plan. We are looking forward to receiving it in the very near future.

To demonstrate its commitment to expenditure reduction and restraint and to a new regime for passenger rail service in this country, the Government has decided to significantly reduce the subsidy it pays to VIA Rail from 1989-1990 onward.

VIA's tough but challenging budget limits are $541 million in 1989-1990; $435 million in 1990-1991; $394 million in 1991-1992; $275 million in 1992-1993; and $250 million in 1993-1994. These limits will yield savings of $500 million during the next five years.

VIA has been asked to submit a new business plan by the end of June. It is to set out the course of action with respect to the new Budget realities. In preparing its plan, VIA will consider all options to reduce its losses. Those options could include productivity, improvements, increased fares, abandonment of routes, service reductions on some routes, as well as the transfer of services to third parties.

Under any option, VIA has been directed to maintain service to truly isolated communities along nine remote routes in British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec. Such VIA remote area routes are Jasper-Prince Rupert; The Pas-Lynn Lake; Waboden-Churchill; Winnipeg-Churchill; Winnipeg-Capreol; Sudbury-White River; Senneterre-Cochrane; Montreal-Senneterre; Montreal-Jonquiere. Those are the routes that have been set out as being on truly isolated lines and should be maintained.

There have been no decisions taken yet about the future of any other VIA routes. At the same time, no options have been eliminated. The only constraints placed on VIA are to provide service to truly isolated communities along the remote routes as I have mentioned, and of course to live within its new budget.

The Government is anxiously awaiting VIA's business plan. I am sure they are working on it even today. On the basis of VIA's business plan, the Government will decide how best to proceed.

I support the Government's decision. Clearly, VIA's operations must be rationalized because of the huge burden they impose on Canadian taxpayers. The Government is acting in accordance with sound fiscal management and sound transportation policy consistent with costs and indeed consistent with usage.

Ms. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a comment on the Budget cuts to VIA Rail and announced cancellation in VIA Rail's service on Vancouver Island.

Just three years ago, VIA opened a beautiful new station in Victoria. It is a heritage station that is a credit to the whole community. Now that service is going to be cut.

The effect of that cut is going to be very detrimental on all communities between Victoria and Courtenay. It will have a particular effect on the beautiful little town of Chemainus, which has been reborn as a tourist attraction. It is only about an hour train ride from Victoria, which has its own tourism base. That train provided many opportunities for tourists to access Chemainus.

It also will have a detrimental effect on the towns of Parksville and Qualicum. There are beautiful beaches there. Tourists take the train there. It will have a detrimental effect on Courtenay where the resort community of Mount Washington is. That is a ski resort. All these communities will be affected negatively.

The Government's response to this is that the usage is down. I can tell you why usage is down. It is because previous cuts to VIA Rail has reduced access to the ticket office. The ticket office is only open for two hours each day. During those two hours the line-ups are 50 feet long. People want to use the train, but the Government will not let them.

What is the Government going to do about the communities on Vancouver Island that will suffer the negative impact of the cuts in service? What is the response of the Government to effectively cutting the service so that there is no access to the ticket offices?

Mrs. Browes: The Hon. Member mentioned heritage sites. Canadians can be proud of the beautiful heritage site train stations across the country. Having worked in the Ministry of the Environment for a number of years, I had an opportunity to have some of those train stations designated as heritage sites. Indeed, if they are not being used as train stations, they are being preserved and used as historical sites that many of us can visit and use in other ways.

In relation to operating subsidies that the Member speaks about, I would like to draw to her attention some statistics about operating subsidies that the Government of Canada has put forth in relation to VIA Rail.

In 1984 the operating subsidy was $458 million. In 1988, the operating subsidy was $509 million. The Hon. Member asked the question, but did not wait to hear the answer because she has already left the House. I am a little surprised that a Member would ask a question and within two minutes after—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask that the Hon. Member not comment. There could be any reason why the Member may have left the House, perhaps to go to a committee, or for another reason and it should not be commented upon.

Mrs. Browes: The actual operating subsidy for 1988 was $509 million. Therefore, Members can see that even in the last four years there has been a remarkable increase in the amount of operating subsidies.

As far as capital payments are concerned, in 1987 they were $181 million; in 1988 they were $126 million. We have tried very hard to make this operation work. VIA has tried very hard to make this operation work. The fact is that we cannot turn back the clock and say that everyone should take the train as they did 100 years ago, or as they did in 1947.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands on a point of order.

Ms. Hunter: It may be of interest to the House that the reason I had to leave was that I had a long-distance phone call awaiting me. I was listening on the TV monitor to the response of the Hon. Member.

Mrs. Browes: I know the Hon. Member represents a riding in British Columbia. I do appreciate her returning to the House at her first convenience. I hope she does keep in mind the statistics to which I referred, and the actual increase that has taken place in the last four or five years under this administration and the amount of additional taxpayers' money. Even though we have put forth this additional amount of moneys, at the same time the ridership has decreased.

We have to look at reality. Members opposite have to look at the reality of the wishes of people. They want to travel by road and by airplane. They want to travel by means other than trains. As much as we like the idea of taking the train, as much as we have our memories that this is a wonderful way to travel across Canada and see the beautiful geography, the fact is that people are not taking the train.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): I listened with a great deal of interest to the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes) as she eloquently tried to talk about the complete dissection and gutting of a piece of national infrastructure. If it was not so laughable, I would have been yelling across the aisle.

One of the things I find despicable in the policy of the Government is how it has intentionally misled Canadians about the future of VIA Rail. I want to remind the Member opposite that in 1985 the then Minister of Transport, currently the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) stated: "It is now time to turn VIA into a strong system that is cost effective, national in scope and one which Canadians will be proud to use".

Earlier this year the Government decided, for some strange reason, that there needed to be an inquiry into the pricing structure of VIA Rail to find out whether or not it was lessening competition with the bus lines. This was conducted, even though two or three previous investigations by the NTA had found out that the pricing structure of VIA Rail had no negative impact whatsoever on the profitability of the bus lines. Therefore, the Government set about having, I suspect, a multimillion-dollar task force to go across the country and ask Canadians: "What do you think about VIA Rail? What do you think about its pricing structure?"

I want to remind the Hon. Member opposite that the Chairman of that task force was a former Member of this House, a former Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Erik Nielsen who, in September, 1985 chaired a task force of the Hon. Member's Government.

That task force had already decided on the fate of VIA Rail. The task force stated: "Until the long-term future of its existing services is determined, postpone major capital investments in new equipment for VIA Rail other than that which is essential for transcontinental and remote services". It had already decided to have a self-fulfilling prophecy with VIA Rail. It had already decided not to invest the moneys necessary in order that Canadians could travel in comfort and on time in VIA trains.

The task force also recommended the following for cost recovery: "For the transcontinental services, a cost-recovery target of 60 per cent is to be achieved by the end of 1988 with a reduction in frequency of service where this target is not met." The decision was made long before the task force was ever set up to go about and deceive the Canadian people and pretend that they would have some input into the decision of the Government on the future of VIA Rail.

In essence, we have a government report which suggests that the major capital investment needed to decrease the operating costs be postponed, and that an ultimatum be issued to increase revenue to 40 per cent of the cost or the federal Government was going to pull the rug out from underneath.

In the actions of the Government, what I find particularly disgusting is that it intentionally tried to tell Canadians that things were other than the way they were. It set up a task force which appeared in the Halifax-Dartmouth area. That task force was chaired by Mr. Erik Nielsen, the man who wrote the infamous document which is the death knell of VIA Rail. When the task force appeared in that area, it gave the impression that no decisions had been made.

I want to ask the Member opposite how she can justify the Government setting up this phoney task force for this sham across the country to deceive people on VIA Rail when the Government had already made its mind up to dispose of VIA Rail?

Mrs. Browes: The Member opposite started his remarks by quoting a person I believe to be one of the most outstanding individuals in terms of transportation policy in this country. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister of Canada was the Minister of Transport. That was quoted in 1985, and I appreciate those comments made about the Minister at that time. But the difference between this Government and the administration prior to 1984 is this: Everything was stagnant, remaining the same, doing things the old way. What we have done is to take a look at things in a new way. That was 1985. Things have changed. There has been a lot of water under the bridge since then. We are responding to Canadians instead of burying our heads in the sand and doing things the same old way. That is why in 1988 the people of Canada stuck with this Government. For the first time in 100 years, a Government was re-elected with a majority government. That is a remarkable accomplishment.

I am just surprised that the Member opposite would be quoting from five years ago and thinking it relevant to 1989. We are in a fiscal position that we must look at in a different light in order to balance the books down the line for future Canadians. We will respond to the way people of Canada want to use their transportation facilities.

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to tell Canadians what this Government has not been telling them, that the country's passenger rail service is in jeopardy and will be extinct in a short while like some animals we know. This Government has shown again that its priorities are misplaced.

We keep referring to this country's first Prime Minister because it is very important to go back into history, as the Member opposite has done, to show there was a dream. Individuals in this House are here because they have a vision and a dream of their own. His dream was to link this great land of ours from sea to sea. Surely Mr. Macdonald is turning over in his grave today with the realization that his own Party is destroying his dream of a national railway system. The railway industry has long been seen as a strong symbol of national unity. With one swing of the budget axe, Canada's strongest symbol of unity is being destroyed.

Many towns and cities were built around the railway industry. Whole communities were developed to service the thousands of workers on the rail line. Small businesses, hotels and restaurants sprung up almost overnight to cater to the needs of the railway workers. The national railway system contributed to the development of western Canada. How can this Government ignore the fact that Canada emerge as a great nation as a result of the railway industry?

Canadians learned this week that VIA Rail's corporate plan for 1989–1993 recommends that some 22 routes be eliminated, six routes will see reduced service and only six of the remote routes will be left untouched. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) says he is willing to contemplate shutting down VIA Rail's passenger service. This Government continues to ignore the fact that ridership has increased. It continues to ignore the fact that VIA Rail's profit margin has increased and that a reversing trend after two years of falling performance has begun.

It is quite clear to Canadians that this Government continues the trend of not being up front with them. Prior to the November 1988 election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised to enhance the quality and reliability of VIA Rail service. Once again the Government has gone back on its word. Canadians know that this Government cannot be believed or trusted. What we have here, as I have said on numerous occasions in this House, is yet another broken promise.

The elimination of the transcontinental railroad between Montreal and Sudbury and Toronto–Winnipeg–Calgary cuts right through the heart of northern Ontario and more specifically northwestern Ontario. Many small rural and remote communities depend heavily on passenger rail service to get to major centres. Three towns in my riding will be adversely affected. The towns of Ignace, Dryden and Kenora will no longer have passenger rail service under this proposed plan. These towns will lose approximately 50 jobs as a result. The Minister may say 50 jobs is not a significant number. But 50 jobs in small town Canada is equivalent to at least 500 jobs in a major centre. How many more jobs will be lost as a result of these measures? What will the Government do to ensure that workers in the railway industry will have a job in the near future?

The Town of Ignace is a one–industry town. The Lion Lake Mine will be closing its doors soon, putting many people out of work. Now the Government is slapping this already depressed area in the face by eliminating passenger rail service. The future of the Town of Ignace is questionable. The town council is working hard at diversifying its economy but the elimination of passenger rail service through Ignace undoubtedly will hurt.

This Government is closing the door on northern Ontario. It is telling the people of northern Ontario that it is not prepared to do business, nor is it prepared to protect what is left of this region. Residents in my riding and throughout the whole northern region of Ontario now understand why the Prime Minister failed to appoint a cabinet Minister from northern Ontario. This Government is not committed to regional development.

The Minister of Transport stated recently that the federal Government is considering spending more money on highways to offset budget cuts to the passenger rail system. There is no doubt that roads in northern Ontario need upgrading. As my learned friend beside me will tell you, the Trans–Canada Highway between Winnipeg and Ottawa is in bad need of repair. It should be four–lane from at least the Manitoba border to Thunder Bay. How long will residents in northern Ontario have to wait to see their roads upgraded? Considering the record of this Government, I hate to hold my breath because I don't believe I will be around. This is going to be another broken promise.

The Government could have chosen alternatives. Let me outline a few. VIA Rail has been paying CN and CP to support infrastructure costs of the freight rail system. In the last four years, VIA paid over $1 billion to these two railway companies. VIA has managed to reduce this figure to $100 million a year by taking over the maintenance of its own equipment. It seems to me that the Government could have introduced legislation which it did start to introduce in 1986 but it died where it was after first reading. It would have allowed CN and CP to forgive this annual payment given that the rail industry in this country is subsidized by the taxpayers. This initiative would have given VIA Rail the needed revenues to upgrade its equipment and its service.

Services have already been reduced in my riding contrary to what the Minister has been saying. The Sioux Lookout train which is in one of the most remote areas in northern Ontario has been reduced to two days a week from three days per week. Sioux Lookout is located in northwestern Ontario and serves as the focal point for many of the native communities which can only be reached by air. Many of the residents in these native communities fly to Sioux Lookout and travel by train to points south.

There are many communities in my riding which are not served by ground transportation at all. The only link to the outside world is by train. Communities such as Valora, Allan Water and many others will no longer have access to passenger rail. There are no roads linking these communities. Are they destined to be cut off from the rest of Canada? For many of the communities that have small air strips, there are no commercial flights servicing them. How can this Government justify cutting passenger rail service to these communities?

The only alternative for many residents of northern Ontario is to travel by train. Many students travelling to and from universities use passenger rail service. Many senior citizens travel by train given there is no bus service between communities in northwestern Ontario. How does the Government expect these people to get around? Many of my constituents cannot afford the luxury of flying. Furthermore, the Minister of Transport has done nothing to alleviate their concerns over air safety in our region.

The Minister and Prime Minister are saying that Canadians are not using VIA Rail. Nothing could be further from the truth. Recently a constituent called my office to complain that he has not been able to get a reservation to head north because the trains were booked solid. Canadians are using VIA Rail. So why are they going to lose it? There is no justification for the harsh measures announced in VIA Rail's corporate plan.

The National Transportation Agency was holding public hearings across the country to review VIA Rail's pricing policy. These hearings have now stopped as a result of the Government's measures. The Government has a knack for putting the cart before the horse. It introduced legislation on a new accident investigation board before waiting for the results of the judicial review of the Gander crash and the judicial inquiry into the Dryden crash. It announced policy revisions to the Indian and Inuit Post-Secondary Assistance Program before consulting with the Indian people of Canada.

The elimination of VIA Rail's passenger service in this country is a national tragedy. The one link holding this country together from coast to coast is being dismantled piece by piece. If the Government proceeds with this plan, Canada's century old railway industry will be destroyed. Sir John A. Macdonald's vision of a national railway system will be forever lost in a fog of Tory mismanagement and unwillingness to understand what really is important to Canadians.

I suggest to Members opposite that they give this business a viable chance. There is legislation that could be put into place, and there is a legitimate opportunity for a railway system to work in Canada. But it needs the political will of the politicians to allow it to have a plan that will be effective and cost efficient.

In the last 20 years we have seen nothing of the sort. VIA has not had a chance from the beginning. We know that 60 per cent of Canadians are dead against the Government's proposal. They are in favour of trying to establish a plan for this very viable mode of transportation. If we do that, as parliamentarians, I think Canadians will accept it. They will start to use those trains if they become reliable and efficient as they should have been many years ago.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, does my hon. friend opposite know how much capital it would take to put VIA Rail into that superb world-class condition that he and members of his Party talk about? What does a high speed line between Windsor and Quebec City mean in terms of a dedicated track, with underpasses and overpasses and so on? Where does he propose to get that money?

Of course, there are many competing demands. We need more money for research and development, for education, and for other modes of transportation. Is it the official Liberal policy that they would borrow that money and add it to the yearly deficit, therefore the national debt?

Mr. Nault: Mr. Speaker, I know that is the official Tory line these days. It is the deficit, and to heck with the regions of Canada.

It is interesting that the Member asked the question. I might say that I am surprised that Members from western Canada have not made speeches today on behalf of their constituents because it is very important to those individuals in western Canada to have a transportation system of this nature.

The Hon. Member asked a very intelligent question concerning the source of funds. The Hon. Member should consider why VIA Rail is not cost efficient and why the subsidy is so high. First, the suggestion by the Government that it cost $600 million a year in subsidies for Canadians is not true. The fact is a little over $100 million of that money goes from one Government pocket to the next because it is a transfer for the use of track on CN alone, not to mention CP Rail. It is $100 million for the use of that track. That is a subsidy Canadians are paying which, if removed, would only make $500 million. That is just a start.

The other problem is that VIA's hands are tied. I already stated that legislation was proposed in 1986, Bill C-97, which specifically stated a legitimate way VIA could be put into a management position where it would not have to go to the NTA to change the size of the coffee cups. It would have been able to legitimately do business and make those business decisions to make it a viable operation.

Amtrak has done that in the United States. Its subsidies have been reduced significantly because it has been given a mandate and the ability to run on tracks without having to pay an exorbitant price to do so.

It is important that the Member first learn a little about how VIA's hands were tied and why it never got off the ground. I will admit to all Members of the House that the Liberal Party had a part to play in not putting VIA on a firm base. I might say that now we have a renewed and invigorated membership and caucus and we are looking at new ways to make this viable. We ask Members opposite to do the same and not consider deficit reduction in a vacuum.

It is very important for them to realize that if this operation is given a chance we can make it work. We are not suggesting that it can completely remove the subsidy because we would be kidding ourselves to suggest that. However, I believe that subsidy could be reduced substantially if VIA is given a chance.

The Hon. Member asks how much it would cost to make this a viable operation. Let me quote what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) said the other day concerning VIA's plans for a high-speed link. He said: "It may be kept. A $3 billion high-speed rail link between Montreal and Toronto may survive drastic cuts in the rest of Canada's rail passenger service". Out of what side of the mouth are they talking? First the Tories say there is a big deficit and we must get rid of this railway because it costs too much. How can they spend $3 billion on this one link where these individuals—and I hope I do not offend some Members from Montreal and Toronto—already have a link. They have the ability to go by air. We in the regions do not have a choice. It is either swim or walk.

I suggest that we look at the alternatives to make this operation viable. I know we can do so if there is a vision and a dream as their leader, Mr. Macdonald, had in the very early years of this great country of ours.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The reason some Members may think the question and comment period is short is because it is only five minutes.

[Translation]

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to take part in an historical debate, for we are dealing here with much more than mere cuts to VIA Rail subsidies. We are in fact dealing with the future of passenger train service as well as the overall problem of passenger service which society will have to face in the 21st century.

The Governement of Canada has made its choice. It is going to sacrifice rail transportation which was the Confederation catalyst on the altar of deficit reduction. It has slashed its subsidies to VIA Rail, but has failed to provide the regions which are greatly dependant on this means of transportation with alternate solutions.

Just now, Canada is facing a crisis as far as highway and air traffic is concerned. Both are overextended, so that the safety of Canadians is being jeopardized. One needs only mention the overcrowding of Toronto's Pearson airport and the inadequate number of air traffic controllers everywhere in Canada.

Because this Government is suffering from short sightedness and obsessed with deficit reduction, our country will have to face a massive transportation crisis.

Mr. Speaker, inconsistency is the hallmark of this Government. In spite of the fact that Chairman Lawrence Hannigan claimed in VIA Rail annual report that 1988 was the best year ever in the history of that corporation, the Government has drastically reduced its assistance to VIA Rail. This cut will amount to $100 million the very first year and more than $300 million over five years.

Why is the Government scuttling VIA Rail when the corporation indicated in its annual report that the level of financing of its operations in 1988 will be 8 per cent lower for instance than in 1982, and when VIA Rail is about to achieve financial self-sufficiency?

This year, 500,000 more people used VIA Rail then last year. This 9.4 per cent increase in ridership and the 12.9 per cent increase in revenues contradict the Prime Minister's claims that Canadians don't take the train when they are travelling.

I would like to quote Mr. Hannigan in this respect:

> The improvement which started last year has been sustained. The rising trend with respect to punctuality, ridership and revenues has been clear and constant since the fall of 1987.

And he added:

> Our growth rate exceeds that for the travel market in Canada as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, instead of helping the corporation achieve prosperity and financial independence, the present Government is destroying our national passenger rail service and wasting the public's precious tax dollars, because it will finally kill off VIA Rail if it does not maintain its contribution at a sufficiently effective level.

Taxpayers will have to pay for this Government's stubborness, but the people most directly affected will be passengers and workers. In Montreal alone, nearly 3,000 jobs are at stake. Where are the ministers from Montreal in this Government? They are nowhere. They have been gagged!

In an interview that appeared in Le Devoir, the Québec Minister of Transport said that Ottawa's inconsistency was strangling Québec's transportation industry.

The Minister also informed Québecers about the federal Government's plans to abandon nearly 1,000 kilometres of railway lines in Québec that are dedicated to freight, in addition to the decision to drop VIA Rail's regional services and reduce services in the corridors that include Montreal.

What will happen to workers in the maintenance workshops at Pointe-Saint-Charles? The decline of Québec's railway industry also threatens 20,000 jobs in the small and medium-sized businesses that operate as subcontractors in this sector.

The schedule of cuts that appeared in the Globe and Mail indicates that the 33 lines that make up Québec's regional transportation network will be dropped while all VIA Rail activities in the Maritimes will be shut down.

Jobs in Montreal are particularly at risk, since Pointe-Saint-Charles was the principal maintenance centre for Eastern Canada, ever since the plant we had in New Brunswick was closed.

Once again, for the sake of free enterprise, this Government is destroying, bit by bit, the very foundation of our country. In fact, the present Government has no heart, Mr. Speaker. It is reducing regional development assistance, eliminating regional railway services, and soon the people in those regions will have to leave their homes to move to the main urban centres.

Mr. Speaker, this Government's motto is: If it doesn't make money, close it! No room for compassion. This country was built against all economic principles, but it survived and prospered because of the dedication of Canadians. Today our country is the envy of the whole world.

After the Wilson Budget, it is obvious that this Government's only law is the law of the jungle: The strongest will prevail. It is destroying our social programs one by one, is leaving Canadians to their own resources, and this philosophy also being applied to our country's remote areas. The strongest will survive and the weakest will disappear. At this rate, Canada will soon consist of Montreal, Toronto, Calgary and Vancouver, and the regions will close down one after the other, just like Schefferville.

VIA Rail is so popular among Canadians that 89 percent of them believe that it should continue giving adequate service to the people of this country. This privatization-crazed government is dismantling VIA Rail little by little and surreptitiously.

The budget speeches make clear the government's real motives. It is cutting VIA Rail's budget and asking it to rationalize its operations by increasing its fares, reducing its services and closing or selling off major components of its network. Once again, the cat is out of the bag! As in Air Canada's case, the government is abdicating its constitutional responsibility to ensure adequate transportation services for all Canadians.

According to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), if Canadians do not use VIA Rail, they will lose it. VIA Rail's annual report, which the Minister might be well advised to read, shows an increase in ridership and revenues. For the first time, this corporation is coming to the end of the tunnel and its future is looking brighter. But the Wilson budget puts a damper on this new-found vigour.

How can you possibly expect to attract more Canadians by closing down or reducing services while at the same time increasing fares?

The Government's actions leads me to the following conclusions:

The Ministers from Montréal are not up to scratch. The Government wants to get rid of VIA Rail, thereby abdicating its constitutional responsibility in the area of transportation. The well-being of this country's outlying regions is not a priority for this Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Robitaille) on a question or comment.

Mr. Robitaille: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the speech by the Hon. Member for Saint-Laurent. I would still like to make a few comments and ask her some questions.

The Hon. Member often pointed out to us that the number of users rose by 9 per cent and revenues by 13 per cent. But I think that she omitted a serious fact: operating costs also rose by 15 per cent.

Revenues rose by $26 million, as she said, but operating costs rose by $94 million. As I see it, if you take the difference, subtracting one from the other, there is a $68-million deficit. She seems to announce that as though it were good news. Sixty-eight million more! Operating costs exceeded revenues by $68 million and she says that is good news. I do not see what she finds good about that.

She says that the Government is obsessed with reducing the deficit, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we are obsessed and we will keep on being obsessed. Unfortunately, in the past, the former Liberal Government did not have the same obsession. Otherwise, we would not find ourselves in the kind of problem we have today and must deal with.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member also refers to the Conservative Government's privatization mania. Since she comes from the riding of Saint-Laurent, it seems to me that she should be proud of the Conservative Government's privatization mania. Remember Canadair, Mr. Speaker. When we spoke of privatizing Canadair, here in this House, the Liberals brought out the same arguments for us. Canadair would lose jobs. Look at Canadair's success today, Mr. Speaker. And he talks to us about privatization mania.

Mr. Speaker, I just believe that, as the Minister of Transport said in his speech, $600 million a year to subsidize VIA Rail is $100 to subsidize each user and we are talking about reducing this by $500 million over 4 or 5 years. VIA Rail is being asked to make an effort, as are all Canadians.

I will just ask the Hon. Member a little question: Do you find it is good management and a good solution when, in spite of all the efforts VIA Rail has made, revenues are up by $26 million but operating costs have risen by $94 million, with an ever-growing deficit that now stands at $68 million? Do you consider that good management, Madam?

Mrs. Maheu: I thank the Hon. Member for Terrebonne. I simply wanted to raise a couple of matters. Speaking of deficit, did this Government forget the deficit doubled over the last four years? Have they also forgotten VIA Rail in 1987

Mr. Robitaille: You are not answering my question!

Mrs. Maheu: You expressed concern with the Canadian deficit. Well, let me repeat the question. Who doubled that deficit? Is it not true that VIA Rail, despite its deficits, paid the CN and CP $179 million in 1987 and $105 million in 1988? How is a deficit computed? They suggest the corporation is not profitable. If we are to compare for instance VIA Rail's equipment that on average is 25 or 30 years old with AMTRACK's 16-year-old equipment, then the comparison is based on specifics, otherwise stop comparing.

Moreover, let us turn to your first term, when you were committed to giving VIA Rail a strong cole, a clear mandate. Mr. Speaker, they even tabled Bill C-97, which died on the Order Paper. How could they now make such an about-face and decide that VIA Rail should be closed down. You are not saying so in so many words, but that is the bottom line. You want to close VIA Rail down, but without preparing further answers.

• (1450)

[English]

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to rise on this opposition motion criticizing the Government and raising the whole question of VIA Rail. It reminds me of an incident when I was first elected in 1979. A Budget came before us that had been prepared by Mr. Chrétien in 1978. Of course, we were in Opposition at the time and opposed it. In 1979, because of the nature of the budget process 99.9 per cent of that Budget came back. We presented it as the Government and the Liberal Opposition opposed it even though it was a Liberal Budget from 1978.

What is even more horrible was that we were defeated in December of 1979. The Liberals came back with the Budget they had presented in 1978 and had opposed in 1979. They proposed it again in 1980 and we opposed it. That is what this debate reminds me of.

Mr. Kilgour: It's called hypocrisy.

Mr. Thacker: I think Canadians ought not to be fooled by the partisan politics that go on. The bottom line is that the Government really has to do certain things. I believe VIA is an example of that bottom line.

Let us start with the traffic. How many millions of passengers are there in automobile, bus, rail and air traffic? There are about 333.7 million. What is the percentage who travel by rail? It is 6.4 million for some 3 per cent. Yet for that 3 per cent in very restricted areas of the country we find a subsidy that has been growing really dramatically. In 1980, when the Liberals came back, the subsidy was some $423 million. Over the years it has progressed so that this year it is some $641.7 million. What that means is that about $7 billion has been spent in the last nine years on VIA. It has not worked because the number of passengers has gone from 7.6 million in 1980 to 6.4 million. The question is: Should Parliament allocate billions and billions of dollars that we would have to borrow from the public to remedy that situation? Is there a guarantee that if there was a better service that more people would use it? That is where the debate stands.

I am a bit doubtful myself simply because the nature of the country has changed. We build magnificent highways and then are amazed that people use them.

Mr. Keyes: They are all congested and you cannot get around on them any more.

Mr. Thacker: Let me respond to the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Keyes). I must say he is a fine ball player. If there was one more expansion in the Majors he would be in the Majors for sure. He is a fine ball-player, as the Pages found out. Perhaps the Hon. Member would rise at the end of my remarks. I think when he was making his speech he talked about a subsidy to Bombardier. I think that is what he was saying. I have information to the effect that Bombardier borrowed the money from the Export Development Corporation but at full commercial rates. I am sure that the company would not want to have implications that it is being subsidized, nor would my friend want to leave that view.

Mr. Keyes: Amtrak. You have it a little mixed up.

Mr. Thacker: I want to read into the record a comment made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—South Centre (Mr. Axworthy) in which he set forth his position vis-à-vis VIA. It would not matter even if the Social Democrats were in power. Around the world they have cut railway services. If one goes to Australia, New Zealand and some of the Social Democratic Governments in Europe one will see that they have had to cut railways in certain places. It is not a question of ideology. This is what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—South Centre had to say on July 17, 1981 as reported in Hansard:

> In terms of VIA Rail, how many members on the other side of the House have preached for years about the need for an efficient use of resources—that is what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has put into place. The reason is because we have a Minister of Transport who is prepared to make tough decisions, not to back away, not to hide his head in the sand, not to get himself confused in a web of paranoia and fear, and simply allowing himself to be yelling into a rain barrel, but to make tough decisions, because that is what we were elected to do.

That is really where we find ourselves today. If Canadians will look objectively at the facts they will see that the people are not using the passenger rail service. That is the nature of the beast, just as in the early days they used waterways and then stage-coaches and then railways. Now it is cars and airplanes. Tomorrow it will be travel in space.

I ask Hon. Members to think of what Parliament could have done with that $7 billion. Think of what it could have done in terms of research and development instead of having been spent on 3 per cent of the travelling public. Think of what it would have done for education or for day care. There are so many places to which Parliament could have applied that money. What would $7 billion do in space? Space travel will ultimately do to airplanes what airplanes have done to the railways.

The world is changing. I frankly resent every dollar that we waste in the country subsidizing something where that subsidy has become unreasonable. It is the same as the subsidies to de Havilland became unreasonable. The minute it was privatized our technology started to go all around the world.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Will the Hon. Member explain why the Conservative Party opposed the cut-backs proposed by Jean-Luc Pepin?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not exactly a point of order.

Mr. Horner: The only thing pointed is his head.

Mr. Thacker: I think the Hon. Member has the finest hair-do in the land. I have been attracted to him because of his hair-do ever since I have known him.

Mr. Boudria: Because you both have the same barber.

Mr. Thacker: He does not have a pointed head, Mr. Speaker. He has one of the finest heads, one which I have admired for many years.

May I call it three o'clock?

Mr. Benjamin: There is one minute left on questions and comments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There will be 30 seconds for the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden.

• (1500)

Mr. Benjamin: That will be 60 seconds, Mr. Speaker. We have just heard a litany of the same excuses provided by the Tories as the Liberals provided in 1981 and neither one of them has learned a damned thing since.

Some Hon. Members: Time.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 33(2)(b), it being 1.01 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 81(14), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith all questions necessary to dispose of the Supply Proceedings now before the House.

[English]

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays clearly have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 45(6), the recorded division stands deferred until six o'clock, Monday, June 12, 1989.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Although it is Friday, do you not call for the yeas and nays on both the motion and the amendment?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must proceed with the amendment first and, once a deferred division is taken Monday night, then we will deal with the main motion depending upon the vote.

The Member for Hamilton West on a point of order.

Mr. Keyes: Mr. Speaker, in light of the question put to me by the Member, I am responding for the purposes of the "Blues" to clear up any misconception and to clear it up on the Member's records. Precisely what I said was that yesterday the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) stated that Amtrak is purchasing 100 cars from Bombardier in Quebec. The catch is that the purchase is, in part, being financed by the Export Development Corporation, a corporation of Her Majesty. Those are the precise words, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being three minutes after three o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 o'clock.

The House adjourned at 3.03 p.m.

VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS CORRIGENDUM TO ISSUE OF FRIDAY, JUNE 9, 1989

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding with Routine Proceedings, there is a matter which I feel I should bring to the attention of Members.

I wish to bring to the attention of Hon. Members a Corrigendum which appears in the Votes and Proceedings of Friday, June 9. This was authorized to correct a clerical error in the English version of the First Report of the Standing Committee on Transport presented to the House on Thursday, June 8.

Let me assure the House that this error does not appear in the printed version of Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.

PETITIONS

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I again have the honour to present a petition in the House of Commons concerning the Government's plan to cut back on VIA services.

The people who have signed this petition express their concern with regard to that issue. I point out in presenting this petition that there were 65 students and 14 chaperones from The Pas, Manitoba, who wished to go to Churchill and made bookings in February of this year to go at the end of June. They were told recently that there were no cars available to put them on, even though they had made bookings three and a half months ago. It took the intervention of the office of a Member of Parliament for those students to be able to ride on VIA.

The Government claims: "Use it or lose it". Students cannot possibly use it because the Government of Canada will not provide the necessary equipment.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to present a petition on behalf of a number of people from Kamloops, British Columbia, who are concerned about the Government's intention to eliminate passenger rail service in the country.

The petitioners are drawing to the attention of the Government all the reasons for continuing with passenger rail service. Basically, they are calling upon Parliament now, since the Government refuses to listen, to maintain, to improve and to modernize VIA rail service, particularly in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient and environmentally sound alternative to other means of transportation.

ALLEGED MILITARIZATION OF CANADIAN ECONOMY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition on a different topic. It is from a number of petitioners in Kamloops, British Columbia, who are concerned about the Government's support for the growing militarization of the Canadian economy. They are aware of a number of countries that receive arms, military or paramilitary equipment from Canada, countries in which there are obvious abuses of human rights. They are asking the Canadian Government to stop this process of militarizing our economy.

• (1110)

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions pursuant to Standing Order 36 with regard to cuts to VIA Rail.

People are particularly concerned about the cuts in the Quebec to Windsor corridor because of the reductions in high-speed railway transport.

On the weekend, our most eminent climatologist, Dr. Kenneth Hare, made the point that this is of particular concern because of the environmental impact that the cuts will have. These cuts make absolutely no sense either in a Budget or in an environmental way.

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON OFFSHORE OIL EXPLORATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I have the pleasure to table seven or eight petitions asking the federal Government to continue in perpetuity the moratorium on offshore oil exploration development in the Canadian Pacific. These petitions have been signed and are duly certified.

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present petition No. 342 duly authorized by the Clerk of Petitions. It deals with the concerns people have for the cut-backs to VIA Rail, in spite of Government promises that VIA Rail would be maintained and even enhanced.

The petitioners also express concern with the obvious deregulation of airlines and the subsequent higher expense as well as it being a less safe alternate way to travel. The petitioners ask Parliament and the Government to improve VIA. These are people from Oakville, Toronto, Windsor and so on.

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition signed by a number of residents of London and other parts of southern Ontario who are concerned with the Government's consideration of cutting back or cutting out VIA passenger transportation, contrary to the Government's own promises.

The petitioners point out particularly the need for rail transportation in the Quebec to Windsor corridor, a high density region where high speed railway transportation would be economical as well as environmentally sound. Therefore, they call upon Parliament to maintain, improve and modernize VIA Rail service in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, I ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it agreed?

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989-90

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Marcel Masse (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, as reported without amendment by the Legislative Committee, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: On division!

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Marcel Masse (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre. The Hon. Member for Halifax West.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Point of order, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, I believe I was recognized first by you. I am prepared to initiate debate on third reading. If the Hon. Member has a point of order I would defer to him, otherwise I would like to follow through on the recognition that you made.

Mr. Crosby: On the point of order, Madam Speaker, I was standing in my place. I think Your Honour was looking elsewhere and possibly looking for the accord of the opposition representatives to third reading. I cannot anticipate what was in Your Honour's mind but I was certainly on my feet ready to be recognized. If there is any compelling reason to proceed with the opposition Member, I have no objection. I just wanted to make a few brief remarks on behalf of the Minister, quite complimentary I might add.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I too was on my feet waiting to be recognized. However, because you recognized the Hon. Member for Winnipeg first we should begin the debate with his comments.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I am one of those who opposes this Government with all the energy I can muster. I am also the one who said at report stage of Bill C-11 that it would not be concurred in unanimously. I opposed it at that time verbally. The Opposition is interested in debating anything relating to the borrowing authority of this Government with the utmost of energy.

I saw my colleague from Winnipeg South Centre rising in his seat. We recognize the importance of the Opposition debating these Bills. I did not see the Member from the government side on his feet. I can see why you, Madam Speaker, would see us ahead of the Government. If he has a few remarks to make, as long as they are not too complimentary we will agree.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair must admit that I had not seen the Hon. Member rising. On the other hand, as I imagine he is rising in the name of the Minister it would be normal for the Hon. Member to be recognized first, with the agreement of the Opposition. I can assure the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre will be recognized next. I do appreciate his courtesy.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): There is an expression, "You are darned if you do and you are darned if you don't." If you rise too quickly you get embarrassed by the Speaker, and then something else if you rise too late.

The point is that I simply want to make a few remarks on behalf of the Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs (Mr. McDermid) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who is responsible for the Bill. I want to indicate their thanks and appreciation to the members of the legislative committee who dealt with the Bill in a prompt manner. I noticed the Bill was introduced on April 27 of this year and we are now seeking third reading not too long after. That is appreciated and indicates Parliament and the House can under the appropriate circumstances proceed with some dispatch to deal with the important matter of government affairs.

The co-operation of the committee will assist the Government in moving ahead with the program of orderly debt management by dealing with the substantial cash requirements of the Government of Canada. I, on behalf of the Minister, thank all the Members of the House who co-operated in the manner in which they did to bring this Bill to its present state in a relatively quick manner.

I want to remind the House of the grave financial position of the Government of Canada as represented by the needs carefully outlined in this Bill. We are in a very difficult situation with the $320 billion debt and a deficit in this fiscal year which will run to $30 billion. It is the task of all Members to participate in the reduction of and the appropriate management of this debt.

Canadians, as Hon. Members know, have to make some choices. We would all like to keep every government program intact without reduction, but that costs money and the money can only come either from increased taxation or from piling up additional debt. We want to avoid additional debt. It has become very costly to absorb that over 35 per cent of every revenue dollar which goes to the debt. Therefore, we have to make these choices, but I am sure it is with some reluctance that the Government deals with the realities of the financial situation by reducing government expenditures with obvious effects.

I may point out, as I have on previous occasions in the House, that given the realities of our fiscal situation, some of the regions of Canada which appear to suffer most from any reductions have something to their credit. The Government of Canada has increased very dramatically over the last year the transfer payments to those regions of the country, particularly Atlantic Canada, that suffer as a result of regional disparity.

There has been over $186 million paid into Atlantic Canada as a result of transfer payments. In the case of Nova Scotia, it amounted to 19 per cent more than was anticipated. In the case of Prince Edward Island, it has a balanced budget. In the case of Nova Scotia, it is able to look forward to balancing the budget in the next fiscal year. That is something that the Government of Canada will only be able to achieve after a four or five year period.

There are some rays of sunshine in the financial picture of Atlantic Canada, and I hope that the Government's competent management of the national economy and finances will aid that situation in the future so that at some time, probably many years distant, we will not have to face statutory issues like borrowing Bills for the vast amounts of money the Government of Canada needs to meet its obligations.

As I have indicated, it is the duty of a Government to make the hard financial choices that lead in some cases to tough cut-backs in expenditures, but I am sure that Canadians understand and appreciate that their choice is very simple. They either pay more taxes or receive something less in Government services.

As I talk to my constituents, I find that they do not want to pay any more taxes. They do not want to contribute any more to the revenues of the Government of Canada. They are at the tax limit, so the only hope and prospect for the future of all Canadians is to have better management of the financial situation and the national economy, and that is what the Government is doing, through this very Bill which is now before the House for third reading.

So that Hon. Members will understand that there is hope for the future, particularly for Atlantic Canada, I want to mention the free trade initiative which we think will bring great benefits to Atlantic Canada. Hon. Members do not have to take my word for it. The Premier of New Brunswick who received a unanimous endorsement from the electorate of that province said in a recent speech made in the City of Halifax that Atlantic Canada is now part of the over-all economic picture. Atlantic Canadians now have opportunities that they did not have before. The challenge in Atlantic Canada is to take advantage of those opportunities, as Premier McKenna said. I hope Members of the Liberal Party will pay attention to the words he spoke in the city of Halifax before a group of business people. We have the opportunities and the potential and we have to go ahead and meet that challenge and get the job done. We will improve the economy of Canada through the free enterprise system and through individual entrepreneurship and enterprise. That is how we will get the funds to pay for the services and reduce the need for borrowing.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, first I want to applaud your discretion and judgment in allowing the Hon. Member to speak first. After his presentation, my job becomes so much easier. He has opened up so many interesting lines of inquiry and examination that we could be here all morning simply discussing the first topic alone, the question of the management of the economy.

The Hon. Member sat down two minutes ago. Now he wants to talk again. It is fascinating how slow his reaction time is. He only thinks of what he wants to say after he sits down.

Through this borrowing authority Bill, we have the opportunity to look at the stewardship of the Government, its management of the economy, its so-called economic blueprint, and we have an opportunity to determine whether the heavy requirement the borrowing authority puts on the capital markets of Canada is justified, if it will be an effective, useful and fair rendering of economic policy and management for Canada as we enter into some tumultuous and turbulent times.

This Government has been a bit lucky, both bad and good, because much of the debate in this House has been concentrated on the fiasco of the release of the phantom Budget by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the attempts of the Government to cover it up. Much of the attention has been deflected from the real Budget, the Budget that will have a long-term impact on Canada, the Budget which will fundamentally restructure and reorganize the economic fabric of Canada and our attempts to ensure that there is something called a fair political economy in Canada.

If I may, I would like to begin by challenging the Hon. Member who just spoke on behalf of the Government to prove some of his assertions about so-called effective economic management. I think the first criteria for effective economic management by the Government is honesty, telling the truth, putting the facts before the people. If the Government has any responsibility, it is to ensure that Canadians fully understand the economic conditions they face and the options and choices before them.

Less than six or seven months ago during the election campaign, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) said that the Government would never touch unemployment insurance, that it is sacred for forever. There was a man of honesty and probity, a man we could trust implicitly. Now, however, we have before us a total and complete chopping apart of the unemployment insurance program.

I read all the newspapers. I am told that the Minister of Finance is a paragon of virtue, that he is the most honest Minister in the Cabinet. They say that he is the one in which the credibility of the Government resides. What happened during the election campaign? He was calling everyone else liars and saying that he had the money in the bank, he was prepared to pay for these programs. He said that these were not promises but commitments because the money was already in the till and everything was going fine. Then in his Budget, he slashed every single one of those commitments.

Day care for children is perhaps one of the most important programs for providing a sense of justice and fairness and for allowing women to have a fair share of the job market. The Minister cut that program. Perhaps I missed something. I was so busy campaigning during the election campaign, perhaps I missed the Minister of Finance telling us that he would cancel the day care program.

I recall hearing the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance saying on television that they were firmly committed to day care. Now, all of a sudden, a few short months later, have conditions ever changed. All of a sudden there has been a revelation. On the road to Damascus, the Minister of Finance had a new revelation. He found that he can no longer pay for day care.

Did Hon. Members hear the Minister of Finance, that paragon of integrity, talking during the election campaign about cutting back on VIA Rail, a program that is essential for many of the regions, including the Atlantic Region, about which the Hon. Member just spoke? We just received the secret report. About 89 per cent of the lines will be cut in the Atlantic region and 70 per cent of the lines will be cut in western Canada. For the life of me, I cannot recall hearing the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) saying that six months ago. Is it not amazing what has been discovered in six months? It seems to me that on the level of honesty, fairness and judgment, we could expect the Government to at least be consistent.

The question I asked at the beginning of the debate was: Up until November 21, did the Government know what the economy looked like, the drastic and Draconian difficulties that we faced, and simply was not telling Canadians? In other words it covered up, or was it so stupid and totally blinded that the Government and its officials did not know? Either one, when measuring it against the judgment of a Government, does not look too good.

Mr. Peterson: They are dumb and stupid.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Maybe it was a combination. Maybe the Government did not know, did not care, and did not make the effort to find out.

Certainly there has been nothing that we have seen since this session opened in terms of all the announcements on unemployment insurance, day care, and regional programs from which we got the slightest suspicion or inkling back at the time the Government was asking the Canadian people for an accounting. That is the way the parliamentary system should work. A Government stands or falls on its record. If its record was so good, why was it not honest about it? Why was it not fair about it?

Unfortunately that was not only a problem during the election. It is a problem now. That same sense of camouflage, that same masquerade, is perpetrated on a continuous basis. It is fascinating to look at the Budget which stated that Canadians were going to have to sacrifice. We have a deficit in front of us. Members of the House recognize that it is one of the questions that has to be examined carefully and is part of the economic framework of this country. However, surely Canadians have a right to expect their Government to be honest with them about who is going to bear the burden and how fair the apportionment of that sacrifice will be.

In the Budget Papers there was no attempt to describe in any real way who is going to pay for the Government's mistakes. Who is going to pay for the escalating deficits that have multiplied over the last four years? The deficit has doubled in the last four or five years of this Government. We conducted our own study to find out. We got the StatsCan model developed by the Government and ran the figures in the Budget through to see who would be affected.

Those who are going to carry the biggest burden and who will make the toughest sacrifices are families with children. Is that not a real judgment on behalf of the Conservative Party of Canada? The people who are going to carry the heaviest burden, pay the heaviest tax load, and lose the most income as a result of this specific Budget are working families with two kids. They will have $582 less income under this Budget than they would have had last year. That does not include the four years previous. A family with two children and an income of around $30,000 to $40,000 will have $582 less. That means that eight out of every ten taxpayers will lose a substantial amount under this Budget.

The Minister of Finance stated that this was a Budget that would take from the rich and give to the poor. Somehow I do not understand why a working family with two children and making $35,000 a year is called rich by the Conservative Government. They are the ones who are carrying the burden of this Government's so-called economic blueprint.

The Minister of Finance also stated that the Government is being particularly charitable to senior citizens. The only people from whom we are clawing back and scratching out the living are those who are very rich, the top 4 per cent. I would be glad to send this study to members of the Tory back-benches opposite. They might want to read some honesty for a change. The real impact is that more than half of the senior citizens, over 2.1 million, will be receiving less income under this Budget than previously. It is not 4 per cent. It is 50 per cent. That is a far cry from the declarations of the Minister of Finance in the House day after day. That is a big gap between reality and what the Minister says is the truth. Now, added to families with children are senior citizens who will be paying a substantially heavier burden.

Let us look at the poor. The Government has stated that this is being done in order that extra income can be targeted to give to those most in need. Day after day we have listened to the Minister of Finance saying that he really is Florence Nightingale with the lamp. He is going to go out there and give to the poor. Instead, the same study shows that over 800,000 families earning $15,000 or lower will have less income as a result of this Budget. Can that be considered to be targeting help for the poor? We are targeting them all right. We are putting an arrow right between their eyes. We are targeting their limited income.

This is happening at a time when, according to the Canadian Council on Social Development, there are more than one-quarter of a million homeless in the country. We are talking about taking money from those people who cannot even afford to find a house. That is considered to be the "lady bountiful" approach of this Government. It is incredible to think of the dishonesty and duplicity that is being given to Canadians in the ad campaigns that are being paid for by the taxpayers. They are not being told the truth.

This Budget zeros in on families with kids, senior citizens, and the poor, yet it does nothing at all on the other side. I read nothing in the Budget whatsoever that would give any reassurance that the quarter of a million families who are homeless would receive any form of assistance.

There is an important trend taking place that should set off an alarm bell in every single Member and should be recognized as one of the great tragedies occurring in our so-called modern society. Fifty per cent of those who are now considered poor in this country are younger people, particularly single parents with children. Fifty per cent of those living below the poverty line are younger families. They are no longer only senior citizens. We are now adding substantially to the pool of poor people, especially those with children.

The new Minister of State for Housing must be embarrassed and ashamed. When he was a member of the government side, from time to time he had the courage to rise and ask his cabinet colleagues: "What are you going to do about the homeless? What are you going to do about housing?" Now he has been appointed to that job where one would have thought because of his previous record in the House he would have tackled it with zeal and diligence, he finds that his budget has been cut back. He has less money to deal with the problem than there was before. He knows that his Minister of Finance is taking money out of people's pockets that could otherwise go to pay for housing projects.

What Government with a sense of fairness would allow that type of discrimination to take place? What values are we telling Canadians that the Government represents when it is prepared to take money from families and money from poor people, yet not provide that money for any more targeting, direction, or services?

The Hon. Member who opened this debate stated that Canadians knew what a difficult time it was. Yes, it is a difficult time, because the Government makes it difficult on so many Canadians. It is creating the difficulties because it is not being fair and honest about the economic conditions being faced by Canadians.

That same gap and discrimination, the fact that the Government is creating a two level society, a society of two Canadas, is becoming more apparent in the regions of Canada, the hinterlands of Canada, and the places where people have less power and growth.

For years those regions have relied on fishing, lumbering, mining, or the basic resources of this country which have been the creators of wealth for more than 120 years. Because one lives in northern Manitoba, in the fishing outports of the Atlantic, or in the sawmills towns of British Columbia, one has to provide for periods of very intense work and then an income support for the other portion of the year.

One of the things I recognized when I was Minister of Employment was that the unemployment insurance program was the essential that allowed our resource based industries and our resource based regions to maintain an effective workforce; to keep people in those regions so they could continue to fish, farm, mine and lumber; and to provide those kinds of resources which are still a source of wealth, with some sense of dignity and with some sense of honour.

They are hard working people, but they can only fish for 14 weeks a year in certain parts of the Atlantic and West Coast. They can only mine during certain parts of the year. They can only lumber during certain parts of the year. Therefore, there has to be a balance.

One of the ways we did that in the unemployment insurance program was through a particular commitment of the Government of Canada to guarantee an income base through its own investment on behalf of the rest of us. I considered that a program of real honour, as well as smart economics.

One thing this Government lacks is the commitment to the people of Canada. There is no commitment to the citizens who work in the resource regions across Canada to maintain their families and to keep them there. The real basic underlying philosophy of this Government is that that does not count any more.

The Government is prepared to give incentives to big corporations to put in more machinery, to give these corporations capital write-offs and depletion allowances so they can bring in more machinery and more technology, but they can put the workers on the scrap heap.

As a result, what the Government will do is build up the big cities, increase the housing inflation rates in Toronto by 30 per cent or 40 per cent, have overcrowded roads in the golden horseshoe, create a Canada of three or four large cities, and the rest of Canada will not count. It is a strange, perverted, distorted view of this country. It does not fit with the history, tradition, or even the good economics of this country.

The Government does not stop with gutting the public commitment to the unemployment insurance program. It goes on. It does not stop there. What is the next announcement of that the enlightened Minister of Transport who has had such a string of successes as the Pearson Airport, the Gander air crash, and now the cut-backs in VIA Rail? What did the Minister of Transport do? He has had a singular record of disasters unknown in the history of this country. Now the Minister stands up and says: "I had no responsibility for VIA Rail".

The Minister has never bothered to examine, in the slightest way, what the economic impact will be in cancelling the line between Melville and Saskatoon, the line between Winnipeg and Thompson, or the line on the east shore of Nova Scotia. There is no analysis. There is no impact study to ask: "Do people need that form of transportation? What does it do in terms of making sure there is no monopoly? Are they restricted simply to one bus line, which can then charge a going rate?

There has been no attempt to give us in Parliament or anywhere else an explanation for that severe cut-back, no attempt to hold public hearings, no attempt to talk to the premiers or the local municipal councillors to work out a plan. It is going to be an arbitrary initiative, completely and totally unrelated to the economic reality of those regions.

If that were not enough, it goes on by cutting back the bases, the military budget. Let us accept, for sake of argument, that some cuts have to take place and that Departments have to effect them. Surely one would expect that those judgments that are being made by the Government would be based upon some effective or useful analysis, some judgment based upon reality, some decision based upon whether the bases are good or bad.

I will give an example. I was in Portage la Prairie on Friday. I met with the residents of the area, the Chamber of Commerce, and the municipal councillors. I looked at what was happening in that area. The military people on the base itself have yet to receive any instructions, any orders, or any analysis as to why that base will be closed. The community has yet to receive a visit from the Minister of National Defence or any other Minister. The Member of Parliament has not been seen in that area for six or eight weeks.

They ask the question: "What are you going to do with training?" At the Portage la Prairie base, there are three different forms of training. There is training for instructors, helicopters, and preliminary training. The Government sort of spread it around that it was to privatize the primary training. There was no discussion about what it would do with helicopter training or the training for instructors.

What is the alternative? There are only three other places on the Prairies to go to. The base in Winnipeg is already overcrowded and the air space is cluttered. The Moose Jaw and Edmonton bases have the same problem. Where is the training function of the Department of Defence going to go? No one has the foggiest notion. Obviously the Minister does not know. The defence officials do not know, because they were never asked by the Government to do that kind of analysis or judgment.

The decision was made again in an arbitrary way without any consultation, feeling, empathy, or sympathy for that community which is losing a $50-million investment and 700 or 800 workers. An enormous hole will be torn into its economy, and they cannot even get anyone to talk to them or explain to them what is going on.

That is being repeated right across this country. It is happening in Summerside and everywhere we go. It is simply stonewall. That is the order of the day. The Government keeps a closed mind and closed heart to those kinds of decisions which are being made.

My colleague from York West offered an alternative in a very generous way. He said: "We have a base called Downsview in Toronto. We would much rather turn it into housing for all those people who cannot get housing. Let the functions of that base go to Summerside or Portage la Prairie". The Government does not even listen to him. It just rejects it out of hand and does not even look at the alternative.

I suggested to the Minister of Defence in a letter to begin negotiating with NATO allies to see if they want to do similar kinds of training on these bases. I received a letter back from the Minister of Defence stating: "Sorry, I am not interested". The Minister does not have the least concern about finding an alternative for the people of Portage la Prairie, Summerside, or anywhere else.

I ask why. A Government has some sense of responsibility. The reason the system works is that we are not the same as the private sector. The reason we go through all the rigmarole of having an election and putting people in their seats in Parliament is because the public sector should have a different way of doing things. It should be responsible, accountable, and sensitive to individual needs. The people of Portage la Prairie do not sit in the boardrooms of big corporations. That is why they elect a Member of Parliament. It is so they can have access and feel they have an opportunity to participate in making decisions that are going to affect them in a direct way. I am sure that will be taken care of in the next election. Make no mistake about that.

An Hon. Member: Four years.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Famous last words. There are five Liberal Members of Parliament from the Province of Manitoba from the last election. There will be ten the next time.

By the way, Madam Speaker, for the Member who just spoke, I will not bother sending him a Christmas card for the next Christmas party because he will not be here.

The fact of the matter is that it reflects that this is a Government that has lost its sense of governing, its sense that there is a public responsibility, a sense of public service. When Conservatives make tough economic decisions—and no one says that they should not make them—they should do it with sensitivity and nobility to ensure that the interests of the most defenceless, the least advantaged, are not hurt. What we see time after time in the Budget is that this is simply not the case.

I could continue with examples of the way in which this Government, through its economic decisions, is fostering division and separation of Canada into different classes. It is creating a hierarchy of Canadians—those most privileged with the most access who do not have to pay their share of taxes, and those least favoured, least privileged, who are most separated and most distanced from the centres of power. That is a recipe of disaster because we know from our history that the only way we can hold ourselves together and knit a fabric is by some real attempt by the Government of Canada, a strong national Government with some sense of will, to bring it together.

I want to speak about the question of economic management, which is equally critical. The Government must show some sense of competence and effective management. Again, during the election we were told that the signing of the Free Trade Agreement would open the portals of paradise for Canadians. We were told that we would be ushered into the land of milk and honey, that the moment it was signed unemployment would drop and a vast market would open up, that all the problems with the Americans would be resolved, and that we would live in a land of salvation forever.

According to the Jimmy Swaggart of Canadian politics, otherwise known as the Prime Minister of Canada, we were guaranteed eternal salvation for our souls. Let us see what has happened in the last six months. Interest rates have gone up three points. The dollar has risen by 15 points. Our export market with the Americans is down by 15 per cent, and our imports have risen by 7 per cent. Our current accounts trade balance is the worst it has been in the last 10 years. Those are the hard statistics from the last six months as a result of the Free Trade Agreement that would open up so-called markets. If they are opening so fast, why are the Americans getting them? Why is it a one way revolving door that they come in and we get pushed out?

After the first six months of operation of the Free Trade Agreement, the softwood lumber industry is in dire straits. I see some of the wise sages on the other side shaking their heads. In fact, I can hear them. The fact is that the Minister for International Trade, who was never known for his broad range of views, admitted in the House of Commons that the softwood lumber industry, the largest employer in Canada, is in dire straits because of the Free Trade Agreement.

As a result of the agreement signed by the former Minister for International Trade, the so-called Hawaiian beach pact for softwood lumber, we are now faced with the situation of 2,000 lay-offs in northern Ontario. Sawmills are closing down virtually every day. Export markets are being lost and a major industry in this country is in real trouble. The problem is that the Government signed an agreement and entrenched it in the Free Trade Agreement. Now it cannot get out of that agreement.

Let us look at another regional problem. Just this morning, about an hour ago, I met with unions and workers from the west coast fish processing plants. Again, the difficulty is that the solutions that should have been available to them once the GATT ruling was made is denied them under the Free Trade Agreement. An export tax to protect the right of Canadian workers on the West Coast to process their own product, a recourse perfectly acceptable under GATT, is denied them under the Free Trade Agreement.

Suddenly 2,000 to 3,000 workers are being faced with the harsh reality of losing their jobs because of what the Government wrote into the Free Trade Agreement, thereby surrendering one of the sovereign rights of any country to apply a tax on any export in order to ensure that value added or processing would take place in that country.

Mr. Duhamel: But they made the Americans happy.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Of course, that goes without saying. I expect that promise of paradise made six months ago must ring awfully hollow to those workers in the fish processing plants who are faced with that harsh reality.

One can do an industry by industry study across the country to see where job losses are occurring. Let us consider the printing industry, for instance. There is a small family owned printing operation in Winnipeg which printed the telephone books for 50 years. It is a business which employed 60 workers. It was wiped out because under the Free Trade Agreement a huge billion dollar business in Chicago simply underpriced them and put them out of commission.

The Government's own studies show how in industry after industry, business after business, there are major fundamental structural problems occurring because of the Free Trade Agreement. I am holding a number of studies which I brought with me to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade in order to ask the officials and the Minister how they would deal with these problems. These studies, conducted by the Minister's own Department and the Government, included sound recording, paper products, power generation equipment, paints and coatings, vegetable processing. I asked the officials if they would do something about these problems, and when they would take action.

According to the Budget, there is a dismantling of the programs. As a result of this Free Trade Agreement the Government of Canada has a responsibility to ensure that our industries and businesses can meet those new conditions under which they will have to operate. It will have to ensure that the workers can retrain, that new capital investment can be provided, and that businesses can be defended against harsh and unnecessary attacks. Yet the Government has sat on its hands and refused to take any initiative whatsoever.

The Minister for International Trade has stalled in his tracks. We never see him here because he is visiting the world capitals and bringing the message about how other countries should not sign bilateral trade agreements. I was quite intrigued to read the communiqué signed by the Minister for International Trade at the OECD, which warned against bilateral trade. The communiqué stated: "Ministers firmly reject the tendency toward unilateralism and bilateralism, sectoralism and managed trade".

It is fascinating that our Minister for International Trade, the great apostle of the FTA, is now warning Europeans about the dangers of it. Perhaps the Minister has found his own conversion and that is why the Prime Minister will not let him back in the country or the House of Commons. Perhaps the Minister recognizes what a total flop the Free Trade Agreement is, and the Prime Minister will not let him back to tell Canadians about it. He signed the communiqué and will tell Europeans about it, but he has not yet told Canadians that he thinks bilateralism represents a major threat to world trade.

I agree with the Minister, but we were saying that two years ago. Perhaps he is a late bloomer, or perhaps he finally read the Free Trade Agreement and discovered that it was a mistake. We know that the Government made a mistake, and we are seeing evidence of it every day in Canada.

One of the so-called benefits is to be able to resolve disputes and obtain guaranteed markets. However, there is a major case against the pork producers of Canada, in which the preliminary judgment based upon U.S. trade law is that they will have to pay a new tariff on processed pork products. While that comes as a great surprise, it is even more surprising to realize that rather than give them a resolution to the problem, the Free Trade Agreement created it because according to the FTA we must apply U.S. trade law.

Canadians who read about the hearings before the National Energy Board must be interested in discovering that Canada will guarantee 60 per cent of our natural gas supply to markets south of the border in perpetuity, while our own security of supply and ability to ensure security for Canadian consumers are not equally protected.

Mr. Duhamel: But it will make the Americans happy.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): George Bush said that he wanted a kinder and compassionate country, but we did not think he meant he would buy Canada to get it.

• (1200)

I want to go to one further reference which I think is perhaps the most serious. It appeared in La Presse. It was a study done by a private consulting firm, Venture Economics. It points out that in the first quarter of this year, the number of take-overs and acquisitions equals virtually all the take-overs and acquisitions of the year before. As the study points out, we now have the greatest, largest, single movement of take-overs and acquisitions in the history of this country in the first three months of 1989. What we are facing is the total and complete elimination of Canadian ownership of its subsidiaries. General Electric and Westinghouse are buying back their subsidiaries. That means that our ability to control our own economy and to make decisions in relation to the way we want to operate as Canadians are being closed off. That is part of the agenda as well.

When we look at figure after figure, and argument after argument, we come up with one very clear lesson. One of the hidden agendas in this Budget and one of the cover-ups which is taking place is that this is the next instalment in the Free Trade Agreement. This is the pay-off for the Americans that they did not get in the first round. We have paid them off in the second round in this Budget. All the attacks and eliminations of unemployment insurance, regional development budgets, transportation and agricultural programs are all designed to meet American complaints and concerns before we even get to the negotiating table.

There is this great hoax that there is going to be seven years of negotiation on subsidies. There will not be seven years, we are giving it all away in the first six months of 1989. What have we got left to negotiate, when the Government has already eviscerated and cut off the question of subsidies to unemployment insurance and transportation programs for agriculture? There is nothing left.

We begin to see once again the willingness of the Government, rather than playing it straight and telling Canadians what they really are facing in terms of an economic blueprint, have painted it over and have cosmetics on it. Instead of being forthright, it goes off and takes some more taxpayers' dollars and pays for an advertising program to tell them how great it really is.

It is not that much different from the kind of manipulation and distortion we see going on on the television screens of China this week where they announce that: "No one was really killed." While it is not severe in terms of the taking of human life, it shows the power of government to manipulate and distort, to create the kind of big lie about what is really going on through the power of its own purse and the power of the media. That is why it is so essential that we somehow try to break through that screen and dissipate the fog, to get down to things that are really of crucial concern.

I want to just touch on one other area which I believe has not received the kind of attention it should have in this House because of all the other things that have been breaking around us. That is the way in which this Budget is savaging those least able to help themselves, the most defenceless of people. We have to talk about the way in which this Government is approaching the serious tragedies occurring in the world around us.

Whether it is in the area of international trade or international aid, the Government is showing a callousness which I think is unreported since the Second World War. It takes us back to the 1930s when governments closed its doors to other countries and thought that it could exist in isolation. It thought it could somehow make itself immune from the rigours and the turbulences of the world around it. That is the kind of philosophy being adopted by this Government.

We look at the savage cut-backs to the CIDA program, of hundreds of millions of dollars. I do not care how much the Minister and the Government tries to dance around the issue, there has been a severe undermining of the basic commitment to international aid. This happens at a time when the situation in Third World countries is getting worse and not better. There are more children dying of malnutrition. There are more schools being closed down.

The wages of workers in Third World countries are falling. When the ability of those countries to invest in roads and basic industry is being reduced, this is a government which cuts back in its aid. The reason is because we are absolutely complicit. We are part of the international conspiracy to force many of those countries to pay back debts to private bankers and to use public money coming out of our treasury to the international bank to recycle back to private vaults. As a consequence, we put the most severe extortion on the lives of the people.

If there is any one sort of embarrassment it is that we are so silent about the subject. The Minister of Finance goes off to the meetings of the OECD, or the G-7, all those great international bodies, and whether it is the Brady plan or the Baker plan, they are all designed basically to prop up the private banks of North America and Europe. At the same time, the countries of the Third World are having to totally distort their economies and ruin their environments simply to pay back those bills. We are aiding and abetting in that cause. We then compound the problem by cutting back on aid at the same time.

The North-South Institute, which I think is one of the most respected organizations in this country, and who no one would accuse of being partisan or having a political axe to grind other than the truth, what does it say about this? It says it represents probably the single most important issue to be faced by this Government. It says it both for reasons of what has to take place in the international economy, and also our own economy.

By allowing that kind of failure of the international economic system to continue, Canadians themselves have lost close to $27 billion worth of exports and a 130,000 jobs, simply because we have such a limited perspective and closed point of view. We do not understand that what is really going on in El Salvador, Brazil, or sub-Saharan Africa affects us as much as what happens on the plains of Saskatchewan or in the fishing outports of Newfoundland. We have the same kind of results and the same kind of sense of integration. When we talk about globalization, we are just not talking about big corporations running the world. We are talking about the intrinsic linkage which we have with the seven or eight billion people on this earth, two-thirds of whom are now suffering more this year than they did last year, and more last year than the year before.

One would have thought that under those circumstances and in that kind of condition, that when the Government is presenting an economic blueprint, and trying to foresee the future and look ahead a little bit, it might say: "Look, here is a fundamental responsibility of the people of Canada and through their government we intend to act." Instead, it crashes the Minister of External Aid at the knees, draws down the Budget and goes along with a plan which is designed internationally to extort money from Third World countries, where we take more in than what we give out. We are all guilty by ourselves. We will pay a price in our environment, our economy and simply as our morality as human beings.

That is why the real failure of this Budget simply goes beyond questions of what happens in the fiscal rates next year or next month.

One would have expected in a new mandate the Government would have made some effort to look at the real economic questions. The real economic questions in Canada are not the deficit reduction. That is only a small part of the problem. The real question is the economy of this country, and this country, as part of a much larger system, is undergoing a fundamental restructuring. It is going to require the best intelligence, competence, honesty and openness to bring Canadians to an understanding of what is going on, and by letting them become part of the examination of the problem and part of the solution instead of putting up walls, closing down information, and hiding behind smokescreens. The only way we can approach these very severe economic problems is through a sharing.

Yet we divide the country. There are labour unions which feel that they are totally isolated from any sense of participation in the management of the country. There are people arriving on VIA Rail trains who say that they do not belong to the economy of the country. They feel as if they cannot talk to anyone in the Government. There are Ministers walking out of meetings, refusing to attend others, and not holding public consultations. They try to bluster their way through. They try to crash their way through in the hope that the people will be bought and sold through this propaganda campaign we see on our TV screens every night. It is a campaign which states: "You have never had it so good. The deficit is a problem, and we are looking after it". That just will not fly.

Canadians are smarter than that. They understand. They learned from the last election when we fought out the trade issue. They have an appetite for an understanding that they have a real role to play in important economic decisions. They cannot be bought off by glitz and glamour and heavy public relations or ad campaigns.

Mr. Soetens: That is why they voted for us.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): That is not why they voted for you. The fact of the matter is that in the last election they were bought off.

The tactic of the Government is to try valiantly to cover up that type of opportunity and to use modern techniques of propaganda, manipulation and communication distortion to get around it. It succeeds once in a while. It gets by. A negative campaign can be run. One can go around calling others liars. However, the fact is that it is coming home to roost.

We have seen in the House of Commons the Minister of Finance no longer has a shred of credibility left. No one will ever believe again that Minister of Finance. There is no longer any trust or confidence in this Minister of Finance. The only people who do have that are those who lock themselves in to the Tory caucus room on Wednesday mornings and who, through a succession of psychological cheer-leading, get themselves to believe somehow, that the world around them is all right.

Mr. Kempling: Have you been there?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): I have never been invited. I would be glad to attend. The Hon. Member has just issued me an invitation. Maybe for the first time Members of the Tory caucus would get some straight facts and honest talk if I were invited to attend.

An Hon. Member: Can you make coffee?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): The Hon. Member asks if I can make coffee. No, I cannot, but I am very good at making hemlock.

Mr. Kempling: Then take some.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): The fact is that that is the requirement that we on this side of the House believe has to take place. We really believe at this point in time in looking at the economy of Canada that there is a great deal more to be done than just zeroing in on deficit reduction as is done on the business pages or the Tory caucus room. There are fundamental questions on how to have full employment shared equally across the country in all regions so that people do not feel separated, divorced or that they are being relegated to a hinterland without any sense of concern. Canadians will still be able to have the right to choose jobs in their own region and not have to retreat or migrate to large urban areas simply to support their families.

We believe very fundamentally that we have a major responsibility to deal with a new reality of international trade and international competition. That will create for Canadians perhaps our biggest test economically. How can we get our research, development and training into some type of effective investment across the country so that we can meet those types of needs without cutting back or reducing those programs?

We believe that in terms of the environment there will have to be some serious judgments made about whether we simply promote unqualified economic growth without seeing that all that growth has very severe environmental costs. It will take some economic reform in the way we make things and do things in order to make sure that those costs will not be passed on to other generations. Those are the economic issues of our time. They are the type of things that we have to examine. We received nothing of the sort in the Budget. We have received nothing of the sort in the economic statements by Ministers. We have seen nothing of the sort in the approach taken by the Minister of Finance.

The Government is asking for approval of a borrowing authority. It needs money. What the country really needs is good, serious economic policy. It needs good management and honesty. It needs some sense of fairness.

We open a session of Parliament with certain prayers. It is probably worth it to close my remarks with a note sent to me by a constituent who puts the calamity and tragedy into its proper religious mode. It states:

> Mike Wilson is my shepherd. I am in want. He maketh me to lie down on park benches. He leadeth me beside the still factories. He disturbeth my soul. Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of recession. I anticipate no recovery, for he is still with me. He anointeth my small income with great taxes. My expenses runneth over.
> Surely unemployment and poverty will follow me all the days of my life. And I shall dwell in a mortgaged house forever.

That sums up properly the economic management style of the present Minister of Finance. What it does not set out is the enormous vacuum that exists in all the other areas of crucial economic policy. What the country is crying out for, something which it has an enormous appetite for, is some real choice, some real sense of the judgment that will have to be applied by Canadians in terms of getting our economy right, making it fair, honest and equally shared. That is what the Liberal Party will provide.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of my colleague who has just spoken. I must say that when I was here first today to listen to the opening remarks on the third reading stage of Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority for billions of dollars not exceeding $24.8 billion, I assumed that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would be here to begin the debate. Obviously he was not here. I understand why he is not. I do not think that he has any credibility left. We hear and read in every financial newspaper of the country that he should resign, consider resigning or that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should ask for his resignation. It is not surprising that the Minister of Finance would choose not to introduce a borrowing authority calling for Parliament to support the borrowing of $24 billion.

However, one would then assume that a senior Minister, or any Minister, would introduce and explain what the Government plans to do with this $24 billion, how it plans to use it in an appropriate way or why it is necessary to borrow so much. However, there was not a single Minister here. I ask why would there not be a Minister introducing this legislation on behalf of the Government.

I now realize why. When you look at the Budget Papers it states the following. It states that unemployment is expected to rise in the months and years ahead. That seems to fly in the face of the arguments we heard during the last election campaign when the Government said it would be taking steps to reduce unemployment. However, the Budget indicates that unemployment levels in terms of the percentage of Canadians unemployed will actually rise in the months ahead.

It goes on to state that economic growth will slow. In other words, the economic expansion that the Conservatives promised Canadians is not going to take place. By their own admission economic growth will be curtailed in the months ahead.

It also goes on to state that inflation will increase. We know that if inflation is going to increase—and, indeed, the Budget predicts that it will, interest rates will remain high. We know that with the current government policy of interest rates, if inflation is going to creep up, as the Budget says it will, then interest rates will increase as well.

We have to ask ourselves as Canadians why it is that we tolerate interest rates being 2.5 percentage points higher than they are in the United States when we look at the prime rates comparing one country to the other. Perhaps more telling is the rate on treasury bills with respect to which there is a 4 per cent differentiation between Canadian rates on treasury bills and American rates. Why is it that our rates are so significantly higher in Canada? Can you imagine, Madam Speaker, what that would do in terms of reducing the deficit if we simply had interest rates that were more in line with those in the United States? But the Budget says these rates will go up.

All of a sudden I begin to understand why no Minister is prepared to stand up and explain that economic growth will slow down, inflation will increase and that interest rates and unemployment are expected to rise. Why would any Minister want to do that after all of the promises made in the last election campaign?

I want to share with you two or three experiences that I have just had in the last number of days in my constituency. I visited a cattle ranch which was founded at the turn of the century. It has been in the same family now for three generations. I drove up to the ranch gate and the family was in the yard. I walked up and noticed a sense of despondency. It was very clear. Here was a family with two children, the wife worked part-time off the ranch as did the husband. This was a large cattle operation. The family complained that as a result of the high interest rates which they had to pay on a variety of loans, they were no longer able to continue operating. That day they were expecting the salesman to come to the ranch and put up a for sale sign on it. They thought I was the salesman.

Here is a third-generation cattleman. Three generations that had built, if you like, one of the most reputable operations. They were highly regarded and hard-working people in the community who worked seven long days a week who never took holidays. They could not carry on because of the Government's high interest rate policy. They asked me why the Government continued on with its high interest rate policy. Or, more important, why there were not some programs to ease the pain. In agriculture if you are paying 12 per cent, 13 per cent, 14 per cent or 15 per cent, you know, Madam Speaker, as well as I and anyone here who understands the farming business, that it is very difficult if not impossible to sustain an operation paying such high interest rates. So they are abandoning their ranch and having the usual auction sale in the weeks ahead after three generations and moving into town. That was one experience.

Then I encountered a group of tree planters driving into town who were pulling up their camp. I stopped them and talked to the group of about 15 young tree planters. They asked why the federal Government had decided not to continue on funding its reforestation programs because the Province of British Columbia was prepared to put up a substantial amount of money in that regard. However, the Province had received word that the federal Government was abandoning, in a sense, the whole matter of reforestation, Canada's No. 1 export industry which requires continuing development. These young people understood that when you cut a tree it needed replacement. As a matter of fact, three trees should be planted each time one is cut out so that over time some of the poorer plants can be culled out. They said that presumably the federal Government had decided not to fund tree planting, reforestation, thinning and spacing programs in the future and asked why. Why would that be when obviously reforestation played such a critical role in the long-term development of that No. 1 export industry of the country?.

Then I happened to drop in on an acquaintance who runs a fishing camp. This operator was at his wit's end. He had just been informed by the news media last week that the federal Government was going to impose a 9 per cent sales tax on all of the services that he provides in his fishing camp. He said, quite frankly, that if he has to add 9 per cent to his costs he cannot continue in business. He cannot continue because it is such a marginal and tight operation. It is difficult to get tourism funding these days. Essentially it is an arm of the tourist industry. He asked why the Government would do this when he and others are trying to employ a few people and build a critical sector for the future? Why does the Government want to impose a 9 per cent sales tax on all of the services provided.

I told him that the Government had just announced that it was not going to continue to renegotiate its tourism agreements with the provinces. He could not believe it because here was one small area where the federal and provincial governments work together encouraging the development of new tourism enterprises and the Government has announced it will not continue with the shared programs. Perhaps it will rethink this through the Western Diversification Fund although it is being cut back as well. I said I do not suppose you noticed it in the Budget but the Government has cut out a third of the tourism of Canada funding because it said there is not need now to encourage people to visit Canada. I believe, Mr. Speaker, the Government knows something which the rest of us do not.

Why encourage people to come to Canada when one of the major travel vehicles is VIA Rail. On the one hand the Government is cutting out—gutting if you like—the whole VIA program. The cynicism is evident. When you are a country like the United States and see the tourism ads, Americans are encouraging people to come to Canada and travel by VIA Rail across this great country. At the same time the Government is hacking out chunks of VIA Rail service yet using VIA Rail as a kind of incentive for people to visit Canada. The Government is cutting out tourism advertising overseas, Mr. Speaker, by reducing significantly the amount of tourism funding for federal-provincial agreements. On top of that it is slapping a 9 per cent sales tax on all services provided in that sector. As the Conference Board of Canada study said last week, Mr. Speaker, the tourism sector would be the hardest hit of the economy as a result of the new national sales tax to come into force on January 1, 1991.

I have spoken about the fishing camp operator, the tree planters and the cattleman. I could go through another list of people from last weekend's visit to the constituency who find it incredible what this federal Government is doing to them. Senior citizens have given up. There will be 128,000 senior citizens who will either have their whole old age pension or part of it clawed back. In our discussions they told me that they thought that when you reached 65 years of age you could expect the old age pension as a result of citizenship in this great country, that that is what it means to be a citizen of Canada. But that will no longer occur.

What has happened with this last federal Budget? Some seniors who have worked hard, and who have made investments, setting aside money during their years to provide for their retirement will not get the old age pension. It seems to be a strange motivation to us that if you work hard, save for your retirement and have some modest investments that you will not get that old age security cheque.

It is the same with family allowances, Madam Speaker. There are half a million families affected who will not get all of their family allowance cheques because they will be clawed back. All this happens at a time when tens of thousands of large profitable corporations do not pay any income tax whatever; Alcan Aluminum and Hees International to name two. Tens of thousands of profitable corporations do not pay any income tax but this Government says to old age pensioners like my dad, "we're going to claw back your pension."

People are perplexed. They do not understand why this Government is clawing back family allowances and senior citizens pensions while at the same time Hees International, Cadillac–Fairview and Alcan Aluminum pay no income tax at all in spite of hundreds of millions of dollars in profits. People cannot believe a Government would do that.

When no Minister of the Crown stands up to introduce this particular third reading stage of the debate to tell people what the Government is doing, I can understand that, I do not think I would want to stand up either. I would not want to remind people that day care had been promised especially when there are two million children who require licensed day care in Canada.

If I were the Minister of Finance I would not want to say that I knew we promised to introduce legislation to take care of that, but we are abandoning that commitment and breaking that promise. That is effectively what the Minister has said. He has said that the Government has broken the promise made to two million children that it would provide decent child care. How crass, how cruel, how uncaring can the Government get?

The list goes on and on. I do not recall hearing the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister, when they were travelling throughout western Canada, saying that as soon as they get elected they would start abandoning support for the regions. I do not recall hearing them say that, but in this Budget that is what they have done. They have cut back on the western diversification fund and are eliminating regional development programs in both the West and the East.

To make matters worse, the Government is cutting out many of the benefits that flow from unemployment insurance. A fisherman in an outpost of Newfoundland who fishes for a number of weeks of the year should, because of the state of the regional economy, collect unemployment insurance benefits for a number of weeks, but he will no longer be able to collect some of those benefits, and the same is true for fishermen on the West coast. There are fishermen here today who are trying to explain to the Government the realities of the regional economies. The Government is taking the fairness out of being a Canadian by cutting back on unemployment insurance support. It is cutting back on funding for western diversification and funding for Atlantic Canada.

We have heard a lot about the environment in the last little while. The Minister of the Environment and the Prime Minister say that they have now been converted into environmentalists. All of a sudden they are concerned about the environment. We must have faith in them and believe that they are telling the truth this time. I have a difficult time believing that they are telling the truth.

What did the Government do about the environment? Hon. Members will recall that the Government eliminated the Canada Oil Substitution Program. That was a program that was attempting to see that we are not so dependent on the non–renewable resource, fossil fuels. The Government cut out that program. Then it eliminated the Canadian Home Insulation Program which encouraged people to insulate their homes properly. The Government decided to remove this encouragement, and it did. Then it cut out the Canadian Energy Audit Program. Many Canadians used this program to have their homes audited to find out if they were energy efficient. The Government cut out that program. Then it cut out the Atlantic Energy Conservation Investment Program, the Solar Energy Demonstration Program, the Remote Community Demonstration Program, the Forest Industry Renewable Energy Program, and the Industrial Conversion Assistance Program.

Of all the programs that have been developed over the last number of years to encourage conservation, the Government has virtually eliminated every single one of them. Yet, it has the audacity to say that it supports environmental issues. There is little evidence of that. The proof of the pudding is in what has been done with the environmentally sensitive programs that have been developed over the last number of years. The Government has eliminated virtually every one of them. Now I understand even better why no Minister rose to explain this program.

What about co-operative housing? Anyone who has visited or lived in a co-operative housing project knows that it has advantaged so many people and that the program is sought after by hundreds of thousands of Canadians. It enables people to live in decent accommodation at affordable prices. What has the Government's approach been to ease the housing crisis through a program that exists from coast to coast? Every major community has developed a popular, accepted and admired co-operative housing program. In its Budget the Government is reducing funding for co-operative housing. It is to be capped this year and reduced significantly in the years ahead. That option for future development and growth has been eliminated.

What are some of the ways for the federal Government to assist small businesses to expand, build new product lines, and create more employment? The Federal Business Development Bank management services have been one of the more positive aspects of the Federal Business Development Bank. There have been a number of concerns about its existing mandate as it is being interpreted, but the management services program was sought after by many people going into the small business sector, particularly those doing so for the first time. The Government announced that it would curtail these services. It said that this program offering advice and encouragement would not continue into the future.

On top of that, the Government decided that it was not necessary to maintain support for post-secondary education. We know unquestionably that the economy of the future will be knowledge and information based. It will require sophisticated skills and abilities in research and development through to production, requiring more education than ever. At such a time, the Government is starting to cut back on support for post-secondary education to the provinces.

I suppose the most discouraging aspect of this lately was the Government's decision to cap programs for young native students who want to obtain training at the post-secondary level. Can Hon. Members imagine anything more sinister than saying to young native people who are qualified and want to go on to post-secondary education that the funding will not be there? The thousands of young native people who want to go to universities, colleges, technical schools, and similar institutes will not have that opportunity because the Government is capping funding for these programs.

I see you are indicating that unfortunately my time is up, Madam Speaker. We oppose this Bill as strongly as we can. The Government that wants to borrow $24 billion is telling us that it will increase unemployment, slow economic growth, increase inflation, and keep interest rates high. At the same time, it is telling us that the deficit will actually go up next year and the year following.

I have to say that this is a Government that has not managed its affairs well. This is a Government that has no idea of where it is going. It does not know where it is taking this country. It is simply dismantling it and handing it over to the United States as a result of the trade deal. After 120 years of building, in just a few short months there has been all kinds of evidence to indicate that our country is being dismantled.

In conclusion, I want to say that Hon. Members should not be surprised when we rise in our places during the vote to oppose Bill C-11, the Bill that would provide the Government permission to borrow $24 billion.

Mr. Sobeski: Madam Speaker, I would like to make a few comments about the speech made by the Hon. Member and about some of the misinformation we were given about Old Age Security payments. Old Age Security payments are not being reduced and the Hon. Member knows that. He knows that Old Age Security payments are fully indexed and therefore will increase in future years.

The Hon. Members know that individuals receive their Old Age Security payments monthly and that they all cash their cheques without any means tests. These payments have been subject to income tax for many years. The Budget, as the Hon. Member is also aware, is using the tax system to recover payments from high income Canadians. Those measures will improve the security of our social safety net by ensuring that our social programs provide assistance to those Canadians who need it and do not subsidize high income Canadians who do not need assistance.

At the present time three million Canadians receive the Old Age Security cheques each month. Of that number 4 per cent have annual incomes in excess of $50,000. However, only 1.8 per cent of those Old Age Security recipients, those with annual incomes in excess of approximately $77,000, will pay back 100 per cent of their Old Age Security payments. One can imagine the amount of income that is needed. A person may have a large pension from work and may have $250,000, $350,000, or $500,000 in the bank in order to earn the investment income to bring their earnings up to the $77,000 limit. Perhaps the Hon. Member forgot to cover those in his notes.

I want to ask the Member a question about VIA Rail. Where would the Hon. Member get the money to cover the $600 million subsidy for VIA Rail? He gave us a travelogue when he started his address. I do not think he was travelling by train. I think that his press agent was driving him around by car.

The Member also talked about the plight of a third generation farm. It is probably a corporation. Is that one of the 80,000 corporations that did not pay tax?

VIA's ridership is 20 per cent lower than it was in 1981. From 1986 to 1988, while VIA's revenue did increase 7 per cent or some $15 million, the increase in operating cost was 10 per cent or $66 million. For every dollar of revenue that came in, the operating subsidy increased by $2.62. In other words, VIA's financial performance is worsening and not improving. I ask the Member to indicate where he would get the $600 million to cover the deficit that VIA is running.

Mr. Riis: I appreciate the questions from my hon. friend. I will attempt to answer them, perhaps in reverse order.

Was the cattle ranch that was going bankrupt one of the large corporations that did not pay any income tax? No, because it was not profitable. The 60,000 corporations to which I referred were profitable. For example, Alcan Aluminium, Hees International, and Cadillac Fairview. There are 60,000 corporations like those with profits some years in excess of $300 million that paid no income tax. No, it was not the cattle ranch, because that man was forced to sell his ranch because with the high interest rate policy he could not make any profit.

The Hon. Member asks if I support a means test. I know the Hon. Member supports a means test because he is saying if a person makes more than a certain amount, obviously he or she has the means and does not need to keep the amount of money received in old age pension cheques. I dissociate myself with that view.

There are hundreds of thousands of people from around the world who would love to be Canadian citizens, because they know that there are certain rights and privileges associated with citizenship, as well as obligations and responsibilities. As a Canadian citizen, you can send your children to high school without paying premiums or extra charges. If you are sick, you can go to the hospital and be cared for. Unlike the United States, one does not need to carry a charge card. When a citizen is aged 65, he or she is eligible for a pension.

What we are hearing from the Conservative Government is that this year it is going to claw back the pension from certain senior citizens. It is saying to certain citizens: "You made so much money you do not need a pension cheque." Next year, perhaps the Government will say to certain citizens: "You made so much money you do not need to receive medicare like the rest of Canadians, you have to take your credit card with you, your children now have their high school education paid for through the tax system," or "you have enough money so you can pay extra premiums for your children."

Where does this mentality end? Once you break what it means to be a Canadian citizen, then the whole system begins to unravel. We have to part company at this point and say that Conservatives like the idea of a means test; others of us do not. I do not suppose we can argue to convince one or the other that we ought to change our minds on that.

I now wish to address the matter of VIA Rail. I am sure that my hon. friend did not attend any of the VIA hearings that were held across Canada. If he had attended those hearings, he could have listened to the dozens of experts on all aspects of passenger rail service. They indicated if an enterprise is to succeed, there has to be investment capital to allow it to succeed. If one wants to curtail operations, then do what the Government has done.

When the present Deputy Prime Minister was Minister of Transport, I remember him stating in the House that we can make VIA Rail a viable enterprise. We can make VIA Rail the most exciting transportation system in the world. I remember the speeches time after time of how committed he said his Government would be to develop VIA Rail properly. That would require the proper investment in infrastructure. There has to be decent cars, decent tracks, a decent relationship between CN and CP, and a decent ticketing system. In other words, provide the resources to allow VIA to do the job.

I do not know if my hon. friend has ever ridden on VIA Rail. If he had ridden on VIA Rail, he would know that the frustration that exists with the people who work for VIA is unbelievable. They cannot do the job they know they could do because they have been hamstrung, the resources have been held back, and they have to offer a mediocre service in most parts of the country. Of course, for understandable reasons then, people do not take advantage of it.

As any good business person knows, to be successful there have to be the appropriate investments. The Deputy Prime Minister and previous Minister of Transport knows full well what those investments are. He spent hours articulating them for the previous Liberal Government. He spent hours and hours indicating what had to be done to make VIA a financial success. Then the players changed. The Liberals went to the opposition benches, and the Conservatives went to the government benches, and nothing happened. As a matter of fact, it worsened. There were cuts, cuts, and cuts. It is not surprising that today we find VIA Rail in obviously very serious economic and financial difficulty.

Over the weekend we had the benefit of listening to Dr. Kenneth Hare. He spoke publicly on the environmental implications of eliminating much of VIA Rail passenger service. He pointed out that, particularly in the heavy corridor of central Canada from Windsor to Quebec City, if good passenger rail service is eliminated in that corridor, it is the only transportation system that is virtually guaranteed against the weather. In terms of future environmental problems, we should be developing a modern, first-class transportation passenger service in that corridor. One of the most eminent scientists on environmental matters that this country has ever seen was arguing that the Government should not proceed with its plans to dismantle VIA.

I do not know if I have answered the questions of my hon. friend adequately. In terms of a summary, no, the ranch was not a profitable corporation that was not paying income tax because it had gone out of business. Yes, I do not believe in a means test for senior citizens' pensions. Give VIA Rail the tools to do the job, give it the time, and, I use the words of the Deputy Prime Minister, "it would serve us well." Other than those points, I do not think I can add much more to the questions of the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for South West Nova.

[Translation]

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, I have the honour today to speak on Bill C-11 concerning this Government's borrowing for the current fiscal year.

• (1250)

[English]

I have spoken at second reading and I have had occasion to pick up from that time when I spoke on the Borrowing Bill. At that time I mentioned what this Government will achieve during this fiscal year in hurting the poorer regions of this country. I mentioned the changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act, the financing arrangements with the provinces, and the cut-backs.

An Hon. Member: Hand-outs.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Call it hand-outs. If you come from Edmonton, I am sure you have had a few in the past, too. You may call it hand-outs. I call it what it means to be a Canadian—equalization.

An Hon. Member: You're not going to—

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): I am sorry if that is your attitude; you do not want to hear what Canada is all about from somebody from the East.

However, I would like to say that the fiscal arrangements under the financing program are cutting back moneys to the poorest areas in Canada. As well, at that time I mentioned the fishery policy of this Government.

Today, I had the honour of meeting a coalition of fishermen, representatives from fish plants, and fishermen from the West Coast. They come to us with a very real problem, a problem that, coming from a fishing area in southwestern Nova Scotia, I have to say I can see is a potential problem to the East Coast as it is presently a problem on the West Coast.

What is that problem? The Government instituted a policy that prohibited the exportation of salmon and herring to the United States. If we just take salmon itself, of course we know the history of it. In 1986, the federal trade representative in the United States brought the action to the GATT. GATT said that this was against its principles and that we could not prohibit the export of whole fish.

An Hon. Member: Do you agree?

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Just let me get to that. I am of the opinion that there are times when the national good overcomes any international institutions.

In this case, I can show you where the Americans can talk with one voice about how good the GATT is and how poor the GATT is on the other side. GATT ruled and the Government succumbed. It lifted the prohibition on the exporting of unprocessed whole fish to the United States. Then our federal Government decided that it would at least not offend the GATT by putting in the landing requirement, that is, that the fishermen who caught the fish at least had to land them in Canada.

On the East Coast we are very lucky. In the Free Trade Agreement it is grandfathered that the fish in the inshore must be landed in a Canadian port. However, on the West Coast that is what they are presently arguing with the United States. The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), who speaks for fish and trade, says that we must land the salmon in B.C. for purposes of management and conservation of our stocks. The United States is arguing that point.

I say to you, Madam Speaker, and to the government back-benchers over there who want to laugh at some of the problems of Canada that I have recently seen the American Government use the Omnibus Trade Bill against hogs in Canada being exported to the United States. They used this section to impose a countervail on the hog industry. The Americans would not wait for GATT, that was seized with looking at all agricultural subsidies in our international trade. The United States has agreed to wait for that, as has Canada, under the Free Trade Agreement. They could not wait until the Uruguay Round under GATT for the multi-trade negotiations to have analysed at least what was a subsidy within the international agriculture community. The Americans used that Omnibus Trade bill, the one which we thought before the Free Trade Agreement would never be used against Canada. The Americans used it unilaterally, without any discussions, to put a countervail on the hog industry.

The subsidy happens to come right down to the amount of the stabilization program payment to the hog producers. It is just a coincidence. It tears apart our whole stabilization program in agriculture in one decision in the United States that they would not wait for GATT. They would not even send it to the new subsidy committee, if the co-chairman has been picked for Canada. All the other officials and the mechanism are there to study subsidies over the next five year to seven years. They just did it unilaterally. Bingo. By the middle of July we will know whether it stays on or not.

All this Government is asking for is: "Tell us the means by which it got to a countervail. Tell us how you did that." It used to be they had to look at damage. They had to look and see if there was a subsidy first and then damage. Not now. The Omnibus Trade Bill has been used. It has been used against a friendly trading partner who just entered into a free trade agreement with the United States. It has been used against us.

We see from the coalition of fishermen and fish workers who have come from the West Coast that the Government cannot even put on a regulation without it being challenged, again by the United States, a landing requirement to manage and conserve the stocks within our 200-mile limit over which we have jurisdiction. That is what our trading partners are doing in our natural resources on the West Coast.

When are we going to say to National Sea or to Nova Scotians that they cannot send those 4,400 metric tons that National Sea sent over to the United States unprocessed last year will that be in violation? What will that violate? Let me explain it clearly.

We can presently send unprocessed fish because there is no regulation which says not to send. This is a year of crisis in the fisheries on the East Coast because there is no groundfish. If the federal Government decided to say that we are not going to send our groundfish whole, unprocessed, to the United States, then again it would be in violation because the U.S. would go back to the GATT.

I say to the gentleman over there that I am for anything that protects our natural resources and anything that stops that type of exploitation by the Americans against the most unprotected areas in Canada. Those areas are not run by multinationals. The fisheries is strictly a Canadian fishery, and we certainly should be able to say whether we will process here or not our fish to the finished point. Yes, if it means taking a ban against sending whole fish to the United States, I agree with it.

I certainly hope that the government will listen to the concerns of this west coast group because it is going to happen continually across our great country that our industry is going to be eroded because it hurts some aspect of the United States. They do not even have the decency to wait for the mechanism of the Free Trade Agreement to come into place or, as we have seen in the hog industry, for the GATT negotiations in Uruguay to finish.

The group that we met with today say that "Canada is the world's largest fish exporter but 4,000 B.C. shore workers and an equal number of Maritime workers face lay-offs while unprocessed fish moves south. Our greatest export industry, the mainstay of our coastal economies, is at stake if we fail to act."

I would now like to move to another area. In a few short weeks of governing, as one has to say about this Government which has been governing since November, it brought in a new program for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. A lot of Members find themselves going home on the weekend and sharing the concerns of the people who put in many hours and whose applications were there for almost a year.

May I call it one o'clock, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member can continue after the Oral Question Period.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

MINES AND MINING

MINERS' MEMORIAL DAY IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in 1937 George Orwell vividly described the life of a coal miner in these words: "In the western world the coal miner is second in importance only to the man who ploughs soil".

He went on to say that most of the things one imagines in hell are there; heat, noise, confusion, darkness, foul air and, above all, unbearably cramped space.

Yesterday, June 11, 1989, was Miners' Memorial Day in Cape Breton. We are reminded of the important role coal mining has played in the history of Cape Breton. Although many mining methods have changed since Orwell's time, the unique character of the miner, the courage and strength that Orwell so well described, have not.

The devastating fire at No. 26 colliery in Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, brings home once again just how dangerous a profession coal mining is and how the people of Cape Breton have continually had to struggle against adversity. As we turn back the pages of history we remember the tragic loss of 69 men in 1917 in the methane gas explosion which took place in the Lingan mine, and the explosion in 1979 in Glace Bay. We especially remember the origins of Miners' Memorial Day which arose from a six year series of protests culminating in the strike of 1925 and the death of William Davis.

We can be proud of the coal mining tradition of Cape Breton and at this time we remember the contributions of all miners and all their families and above all, we honour those who lost their lives in those tragic accidents.

RAILWAYS

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, hundreds of constituents in my riding of Northumberland have presented me with petitions and briefs on how the Conservative Government's cuts to VIA passenger rail service will adversely affect our community. Affordable housing and a better quality of life depend on the growth of non-metropolis areas and VIA Rail is fundamental to such growth and development.

In 1988, over 160,000 passenger rail trips originated and ended at the three Northumberland station stops of Port Hope, Cobourg, and Trenton Junction.

Last week I was presented with a motion from the city of Peterborough who, through their Conservative Member, requested a meeting with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) concerning the outcome of their regional line, Toronto to Havelock. They were informed that the Minister is unwilling to meet with community groups.

Canada's transportation system is a necessity to my riding, to Peterborough and to the nation. By refusing to consult with communities, once again we see the Government's disregard for the democratic process.

The constituents of Northumberland, of Peterborough and across Canada, depend on VIA Rail. We cannot allow this necessary service to become derailed.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

EXPANSION OF SANDOZ CANADA INC.

Mr. René Soetens (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, Friday, June 9, was another very positive day for Canada and for my constituency of Ontario.

It was my pleasure to assist in the official opening of a 160,000 square foot enlarged facility in Whitby for Sandoz Canada Incorporated. This plant continues the commitment made by the pharmaceutical industry when the Drug Patent Bill was passed by the Conservative Government in the last Parliament.

Along with outlining the many research and development projects funded by Sandoz in excess of their commitments, their president made additional comments of which I quote:

> The commitment of $17 million has given us the possibility of developing our business in directions which were not open before. Now available thanks to the Free Trade Agreement, the U.S. market could mean a lot to us all. In addition to enhancing our already significant position in the Canadian pharmaceutical industry, we have become a major operation of Sandoz on a world-wide basis.

This is just one example in my riding of good Conservative Government policies creating jobs for Canadians. I look forward to returning here soon to point out many other successes that exist in my riding.

THE LATE CHARLES RUTHERFORD, V.C.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, yesterday Canada lost another of its great heroes. Charles Rutherford, the last remaining Canadian Victoria Cross winner from the First World War, died at the age of 97.

Mr. Rutherford was awarded the Victoria Cross, the Commonwealth's top award for gallantry, for his actions in France in August, 1918. The young Lieutenant with the Fifth Battalion of the Canadian Mounted Rifles first took on three enemy machine gun crews. That accomplished, he then attacked a pill box containing a Lewis gun section. In all, he took 80 prisoners.

Today's story about him tell us that Mr. Rutherford never talked about being a hero. He was just relieved to have survived the horror that was the First World War.

But he was a hero, one of 70 Canadians who were awarded the Victoria Cross in the First World War. They were an inspiration for a nation, the individual standouts in a Canadian force that won so much honour in the First World War.

It has been said that Canada was born as a nation during 1914 to 1918. If so, then we were very blessed in having founding fathers such as Charles Rutherford, V.C.

Our sympathy goes out to his children, grandchildren and great grandchildren.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMMIGRATION

PLIGHT OF REFUGEES

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, this Government is throwing real refugees back into their land of persecution and obstructing justice before the Supreme Court of Canada.

On January 3, the Canadian Council of Churches asked the Supreme Court to declare that the newly amended Immigration Act denies the legal rights of refugees in Canada by violating the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Bill of Rights. The churches' brief shows how 88 sections of the Immigration Act limit or deny a person's right to counsel, subject certain classes of people to cruel and unusual punishment, fail to provide fair refugee hearings, or fail to protect refugees' life, liberty and security of person.

A consensus of constitutional law experts in Canada made these same objections to the House of Commons and the Senate, but the Government refused to answer with any defence.

Now this Government refuses to give any defence before the Supreme Court. Instead, it asked the Supreme Court to deny the Council of Churches the right to be heard in court. On April 26, Judge Rouleau threw out all the Government's frivolous and deceitful arguments and ordered this Government to file its defence in 10 days. Forty seven days later, the Government still refuses to file its defence and cynically appeals Judge Rouleau's decision. Also, it hurries to deport more hundreds of refugees under this unjust and unconstitutional law. Shame on the Government.

MULTICULTURALISM

INITIATIVES FOR IMPROVING RACE RELATIONS

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, last Friday in Vancouver, the Hon. Minister of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship (Mr. Weiner), announced three major initiatives aimed at promoting improved race relationships in Canada. The first will provide funding for the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police for a 10 week summer intern training project in Vancouver for 10 visible minority youth to familiarize themselves with the various facets of police work.

The second project involves commissioning Internal Briefing Associates of Vancouver to develop a national action plan for measures leading to improved relations between the police force and minority groups. This will be developed in close consultation with the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, its police minority liaison committee, the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) and other policing officials. This project will be discussed at the next meeting of federal, provincial and territorial Ministers responsible for human rights in March, 1990.

Finally, the federal Government will provide financial support to the city of Vancouver to establish the Hastings Institute, a training centre aimed at helping local organizations deal with rapid social and workplace changes. Let us all support these bold initiatives to promote unity and equality among all Canadians.

THE PHILIPPINES

NINETY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, today marks the ninety-first anniversary of Philippine independence. On June 12, 1898, the Filipino people courageously proclaimed their national identity and reclaimed their democratic heritage. Recent Philippine history once more demonstrated their commitment to the ideals of freedom; equality, understanding and peace.

Events taking place in other parts of the world right now remind us of the value and the fragility of these ideals. Let us salute and join the Filipino people and Canadians of Filipino origin in their commemoration of this historic day. I am sure that we in the House can share in their celebration by re-dedicating ourselves to improving the workings of democracy in the Philippines and other parts of the world.

NEW AMERICAN STANDARDS FOR CLEAN AIR

Mrs. Marie Gibeau (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to point out to my constituents in the riding of Bourassa who have written to me on this issue and to all my fellow Canadians that today, Canada has passed a major milestone in its fight against acid rain. After repeated representations by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to the U.S. Government for more than four years, President Bush has finally announced new standards for air purity and proposed amendments to the clean air legislation. This initial measure represents the results of many years of negotiations by our Prime Minister and demonstrates his determination to do everything in his power to persuade our neighbours to the South to do their share in the fight against acid rain. I therefore urge our Prime Minister to continue his representations to the U.S. Government, since they have proved so effective.

RAILWAYS

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, Canadians need VIA. I rise in the House today to remind the Conservative Government of that fact.

Let me also remind the governing Party that on August 27 of 1987 they legislated striking railway workers back to work. In defending that decision to the International Labour Organization, the Conservative Government stated the following: "The government stresses the unique circumstances which make the Canadian economy highly dependent on rail transportation: —severe climatic conditions, geographic dispersion, and, in many instances, the virtual absence of viable economic alternatives to rail transportation.

The Government submits that railways have always been and continue to be of critical importance for the welfare of the Canadian public. Numerous small communities are dependent on the railways for their very existence".

Finally, I have a direct quote from the Government of Canada which states: "Without railways there would be and there could be no Canada".

I cannot urge the Government strongly enough to heed its own words, and save our passenger rail system.

U.S. GOVERNMENT ANTI-POLLUTION PROPOSALS

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, as an MP from Atlantic Canada, I applaud the tough anti-pollution proposals being signed by President George Bush which will result in some of the toughest rules ever in the U.S. Clean Air Act. It has taken extensive efforts on behalf of all eastern premiers, New England governors, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and a new co-operative attitude in Washington to achieve this significant step.

Acid rain has damaged thousands of our lakes and many of our forests and it is encouraging to see this united international effort on both sides of the Canada-U.S. border acting in the interest of improving our environment and reducing acid rain.

We look forward to Canada-U.S. negotiations of a bilateral acid rain agreement and urge the Prime Minister to keep up the momentum begun by the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, the Montreal protocol, the Niagara River Clean-Up Agreement, the tough new rules signed today and soon, hopefully, a bilateral acid rain agreement.

OLDMAN RIVER DAM PROJECT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Oldman River, the last free-flowing river in southwestern Alberta, is slated to be dammed for irrigation. A few hundred ranchers will reap the benefit, while the environment, the Peigan Nation and the people of Alberta will pay the costs.

The impact of this dam on the native people and fisheries are sufficient to merit referring the Oldman Dam to the federal environmental assessment and review process, a process now mandatory because of the recent ruling by Judge Cullen on the Rafferty–Alameda Dam.

The Friends of the Oldman River laid charges under the federal Fisheries Act against the Province of Alberta for destroying fish habitat. The Department of Justice took over the case, but has yet to proceed with the prosecution. Why is the federal Government hesitating? Why is the federal Government not living up to the commitments it made to a wide range of environmental issues?

OLDMAN RIVER DAM PROJECT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I also would like to bring to the attention of the House the very serious problem of the Oldman River dam project in southern Alberta.

As in the case of the Rafferty Dam in Saskatchewan, the Alberta Government has made very little effort to assess the impact of this dam on the local economy, the local Peigan people and on the environment generally. The dam will destroy a very precious resource, the pristine wild Oldman River. The dam will destroy wildlife, marshland, fishery habitat, cottonwood forest and archaeological sites.

The federal Government must become more active and more involved regarding the questions concerning native relationships with this valley, including the rights guaranteed to the Peigan people in Treaty No. 7.

Environment Canada should provide important documentation to the organization, Friends of the Oldman River, and ensure adequate public hearings take place into this dam project. This dam issue provides the federal Government with an opportunity to go beyond rhetoric and demonstrate a commitment to environmental issues by demanding a full environment and cultural impact assessment of the dam project.

Let this Oldman River just keep rolling along.

PROPOSED CHANGES TO U.S. CLEAN AIR ACT

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, today U.S. President George Bush announced he is sending to Congress proposed changes to the Clean Air Act which will reduce significantly acid rain emitting from the United States.

When asked at the meeting of eastern Canadian premiers and New England governors this past weekend, John McKernan, Governor of the State of Maine, had this to say of the role of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in bringing about this new acid rain initiative: "Frankly having the support of Prime Minister Mulroney as well as the premiers of the eastern Canadian provinces—has made a big difference in forcing the United States to take this issue more seriously."

I know all Members of the House will join me in welcoming this announcement from the President of the United States and congratulate the Prime Minister for his leadership on this most important issue.

GUATEMALA

NATIONAL DIALOGUE FOR PEACE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—St-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the violent and unstable situation in which the people of Guatemala are currently living, particularly to the dangers threatening delegates of organizations participating in the National Dialogue.

I am making particular reference to Mrs. Marta Torres of Vancouver, who is in Guatemala as a participant in the National Dialogue. Death threats continue to be directed to Marta Torres and to other Canadian and American participants.

I am therefore calling upon the Canadian Government to request that the Government of Guatemala, including more particularly the Minister of Defence in Guatemala, officially guarantee the safety of Mrs. Torres, of the members of the RUOG, Representation of the Opposition in Guatemala and of other participants in this National Dialogue for Peace.

REQUEST AS TO WHETHER MINISTER IS WILLING TO MEET CANADIANS

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, last week, the Minister of Finance announced that the Canadian Government was launching a huge propaganda campaign to explain to Canadians the reasons for his sneak attack on the taxpayers of this country. People all over Canada already realize that this hardnosed Budget constitutes an all out attack on the Canadian family.

I have the following question for the Minister of Finance: If he is so convinced that his budgetary measures are justified, is he prepared to come with me this afternoon to meet Canadians from all parts of the country who have come here to Ottawa to tell him what they think of his Budget?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Hon. Member that, yes, I am quite confident of the merits of the Budget and its importance to the future of our country and its ability to maintain, build, grow and develop the social programs which Canadians feel are important.

We all know that the size of the Government debt is too high. The amount of money which we spend each year on interest costs is too high relative to our over–all spending. It is for these reasons that we must get the annual deficit under control.

The size of the Government debt is something that his Leader has talked about on a number of occasions. This is the direction which the Budget takes. This is what we are trying to achieve. We believe quite strongly that this will lead to a stronger and more prosperous Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, it is clear the Minister failed to understand the question.

[English]

We have a group of people here this afternoon who I am sure would like to hear directly from the Minister why he feels so strongly about his Budget.

EFFECT ON LOW AND MIDDLE INCOME CANADIANS

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): This propaganda campaign launched by the Minister of Finance is an attempt to explain his massive tax grab which will take billions of dollars out of the pockets of low and middle income Canadians, while wealthier Canadians pay much smaller increases over–all.

Does the Minister of Finance think that it is fair that low and middle income Canadians are being forced to pay nearly the entire bill for his mismanagement of the economy over the last five years?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that last statement is a gross misstatement of fact.

• (1420)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is there precisely in black and white in the Budget. In this particular Budget there is $1 billion more tax on corporations. There is a high income surtax on Canadians who are earning roughly $70,000 or more.

The impact of the income tax changes on Canadians is roughly .1 per cent or .3 per cent in the lower income brackets. It rises to over 1 per cent for people who are earning $100,000 or more.

Clearly, we have a very progressive Budget here. It is affecting people in upper income brackets to a much greater extent than is the case with people in the lower income brackets.

Furthermore, there is an increase in the offset to the sales tax changes so that those people in lower income brackets are protected from the changes in the sales taxes in this Budget.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, it is also a fact that the national debt has doubled in the last five years.

JUSTIFICATION OF CERTAIN EXPENSES

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, my last question for the Minister is as follows: The federal Budget has cut funding to VIA Rail, regional development, post-secondary education, unemployment insurance and so forth. The advertising campaign announced by the Minister which will cost millions of dollars, money that, incidentally, will go to fill the coffers of friends of the Conservative Party, will not succeed in making people accept this unfair and petty Budget.

My question for the Minister of Finance is this: Doesn't he think that the money for the advertising campaign would be better spent helping the homeless and those who are lining up in front of soup kitchens across Canada?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure of what publicity campaign the Hon. Member is talking about. We have put out a number of documents that describe the Budget. This is normal practice and something that has been done for many, many years.

If the Hon. Member is talking about the statement made by the Hon. Member for Kamloops, who talked about a propaganda program for the goods and services tax, then let me remind the Hon. Member that there is a unanimous report of the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee dated a year ago February in which there is reference to a public information program in New Zealand to publicize the goods and services tax there.

The report goes on to state that this experience underscores the need for good preparation of both the public and businesses prior to the introduction of the new sales tax.

Recommendation No. 4 states that it is important to publicize the details of the new tax, and the relevant social policy transfers.

There it is in black and white. That is exactly what we are doing in the information program for the goods and services tax. I think that Canadians want that sort of information from their Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

RATE OF GROWTH

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance was really interested in reducing the deficit why did he not propose measures to increase economic growth and promote full employment to increase his revenues rather than cut back on essential programs for the aged, the sick and the unemployed?

With over one million Canadians still unemployed and the Minister himself predicting an unemployment rate of 8.5 per cent in 1990, which the Conference Board of Canada says will make the situation worse and promote a recession, why is he going in the opposite direction? Why does he not promote growth and full employment instead?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must say again that this Budget is designed to avoid a recession. It is designed to put a better balance in our economic policies between interest rate policies and budgetary policies. The result is that this Budget will put in place the flexibility to allow the Bank of Canada to reduce interest rates. Surely that is something that the Hon. Member wants. Surely even he understands that low interest rates will lead to greater economic activity right across the country.

THE PROBABLE RECESSION – MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, are all Canadians wrong, except the Minister? You have the Conference Board of Canada, Wood Gundy and Associates, the churches, the unions, social and community groups that have all criticized the Budget and are predicting an economic recession for 1990.

Why does the Minister insist on following this economic policy, when we will have a recession next year? Why?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that there have been predictions made by other people about economic statements and Budgets that I have introduced but that the projections have been wrong.

The Hon. Member's Leader said of the Economic Statement of November, 1984, and the Budget of 1985, that thousands of jobs would be destroyed. I think his number was 100,000 to 150,000 jobs. His seat-mate, the Hon. Member from Winnipeg, also said 100,000 to 150,000 jobs were going to be destroyed.

What happened? We have had 1.5 million jobs created since we came into office in September of 1984.

I ask the Hon. Member about the unemployment figures of last Friday. What was the unemployment rate? It was 7.7 per cent—one of the lowest rates in about seven or eight years.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, you may also recall the Minister forecast interest rates of 7.8 per cent this year.

Mr. Riis: So much for projections, Mike.

RAILWAY TRANSPORT

VIA RAIL—THE CUT-BACKS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I think that the Minister is aware that many Canadians have arrived in Ottawa today from throughout Canada to demonstrate against the Budget which is unfair, the tax increases and the cuts in services, including VIA Rail.

Mr. Speaker, my question is: Can the Minister now confirm that his decision to cut VIA Rail was made even before the government study of VIA Rail was completed?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, obviously, the Finance Minister's Budget was presented in April and it was always agreed, as everyone has been aware, that VIA Rail would present its report in June.

This report has not been presented, but it should be in by June 30, normally. And when I have the report in hand, I will be able to make recommendations and decisions. Until then, again, I think that this whole kind of question is premature, until we have the relevant documents.

[English]

SUBSIDY TO VIA RAIL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, we have a very serious decision being made before the government commission report itself is even completed.

In light of the fact that I understand that this secret VIA '89 study commissioned by the Government itself says a high-speed link in the central corridor of the country would be environmentally sound, much more economical than air travel and would likely displace around 94 trips a day from Pearson International Airport making air travel safer at the same time, and in light of the fact that I have here in front of me thousands of names on petitions signed by people who are travelling VIA Rail this week, would the Minister now come to his senses and reverse his decision and reinstate the one-half billion dollar subsidy to VIA Rail for passenger service?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my answer will be very brief. I do not have more money today than I had last Friday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance who is probably calling the shots on behalf of the Minister of Transport.

I am sure he is aware that Mr. Kenneth Hare, who is a world renowned climatologist, said that the Government in making these cut-backs to VIA is making a very serious environmental mistake. He predicted that the federal Government will be forced to reinstate full service to VIA Rail within 10 years because of increased pollution from automobiles and airplanes.

In light of that will the Minister now reconsider his decision and reinstate the one-half billion dollars he has cut in his Budget from VIA Rail? Will he do the intelligent thing in terms of sustainable development and reinstate passenger service?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have already said many times in the House and outside that Canadians cannot afford any more to put that much money into a service which is used by 3 per cent of Canadians.

Once again, 97 per cent of Canadians do not use VIA Rail services. We maintain a level of subsidy which has to be viewed in the context of what Canadians can pay.

Once again, we have a transportation system to build in this country. How can we build a system on something which represents 3 per cent of the ridership? It is the kind of policy that could be set up by the NDP, not by this Government.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE RECALL OF THE CANADIAN AMBASSADOR IN CHINA

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it is about the situation in China. I believe that on the weekend, the Minister met a delegation of Chinese Canadians and told them he was considering a decision to recall our ambassador for consultations and also as a sign of protest against the excessive repression exercised by the Chinese army against their own people. Has the Minister made a decision in this respect?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had a very useful meeting with some representatives of the Chinese Canadian Community here Thursday evening. We discussed various issues. They wondered whether it would perhaps be a good thing for Canada to have its ambassador here. I said that I wanted to consider the question. It is now our intention to have Mr. Earl Drake, our ambassador in China, return to Canada for consultations. He will be here near the end of the week. He will have consultations with the Government, and I imagine that the parliamentary committee would like to take advantage of his presence here. I would like to point out that it is our intention to have Mr. Drake return to China after a period of consultations.

CRISIS IN CHINA—REQUEST TO RAISE THE QUESTION WITH THE UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. On June 5 this year, a week ago today, the Leader of the Opposition asked the Minister whether he intended to ask Mr. Fortier, our representative on the UN Security Council, to raise the matter of the situation in China in the Security Council. At the time, the Minister said that he wanted to consult with other countries and other representatives. Have these consultations been completed, and does the Minister intend to raise the matter in the UN Security Council as soon as possible?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, consultations at the UN level are continuing. As the Hon. Member is aware, I think there are various obstacles to raising the issue in the Security Council. First of all, there is China's veto, which it imposed from the outset, and second, there is also the question whether it will really have an impact on the events in China. What we are doing now, in consultation with other Member States of the United Nations, is trying to find ways, through the UN and other instruments available to us, to urge the Chinese Government to respect the democratic spirit, a spirit that was obvious in the demonstrations by the students and other Chinese citizens.

[English]

CHINA—SPECIAL IMMIGRATION PROGRAM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for Immigration, I also direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

On June 6, in response to my question to his colleague in the House, in terms of the need for special immigration measures, the Minister said: "We will pursuing every avenue that we can in humanitarian terms together with my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs."

Now that the Minister and the Government have had a chance of discussing with the Canadian Chinese community the dilemmas and circumstances and have had an opportunity to review the Government's options, is the Government willing to establish a special immigration program that would ease the family and assisted family class criteria so that Canadian Chinese families in Canada may more easily and expeditiously sponsor their relatives from abroad so that they can be reunited quickly in this country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the House and the Member will understand, there are several aspects of our policy with respect to China that the Government wants to consider very carefully. Our preoccupation to date has been with trying to get Canadians who wanted to leave China out of China. To date some 550 Canadians who wanted to leave have left.

I should say in passing that I am very proud, and I think the House should be very proud, of the work that officials of the Government of Canada have done in facilitating the Canadians who wanted to leave China.

We will be looking at longer term policy changes over the next few weeks. In the meantime, announcements have already been made with respect to the visa situation of the students who are here.

Another matter that I discussed with leaders of the Chinese Canadian community on Thursday night was the financial problem that is faced by many of the students who are here. We have initiated discussions with all the provincial Governments to see if there could be some co-operation between federal and provincial authorities to meet that financial problem. I was also very pleased to note that representatives of Chinese Canadian community themselves are prepared to embark upon a fund raising campaign to help meet the needs of Chinese students who are in Canada.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I commend the Government's actions for those who are in this country, but as we have done in the past for man made and natural disasters, we have been very generous with various special programs, and I urge the Minister to apply this equally to the Chinese situation.

INSTRUCTIONS TO EMBASSY IN BEIJING

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In the last few days the Chinese Government has pursued those who were involved in the peaceful demonstrations with vengeance and intimidation, thereby forcing those people underground and even in some cases those seeking refuge in the American Embassy.

Is the Minister prepared to instruct our Embassy in Beijing to consider and accept refugee claims from Chinese citizens who can clearly demonstrate that they are being persecuted by their own Chinese Government for simply participating in what were peaceful and democratic demonstrations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is a question that has broad implications as the Member would know. He and the House would understand that my colleagues and I would want to consider it carefully. We will do that and we will consider it seriously.

UNITED NATIONS DEBATE ON CHINA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I think all of us here are conscious of the fact that the mandate of the United Nations, in particular the Security Council, is limited with respect to the internal affairs of other countries. However, the Minister himself said in the debate in the House that what goes on in China cannot for very long be considered an internal matter given the sheer magnitude of the country.

Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs consider calling for the debate at the Security Council? He has mentioned the veto power. Why not make that call, make it strongly, and if China decides to veto that particular suggestion, then let China do so? Let that be on the heads of the Chinese Government and not on the Canadian Government or other members of the Security Council.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is, of course, an option and we will consider that. I know the Hon. Member shares my view that it is important that the United Nations be effective in actions that it takes.

What we are trying to do now is examine every possible instrument available to us through the United Nations, whether it is ECOSOC, the human rights committee, or some other agency that might allow us to do more than make a statement. The statement has been made by this Parliament and by others.

The statement made by this Parliament has indeed, as the Member knows, been conveyed by the Prime Minister to the Secretary General of the United Nations. I would welcome suggestions as to practical ways in which we can make the United Nations effective in influencing the attitudes of the Chinese Government from this point forward. I give the Member my undertaking that we will consider seriously all suggestions of that kind.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for the Minister to say more about what he envisions these other agencies of the UN doing. Obviously there is a large degree of concern among Canadians in general but particularly within the Chinese Canadian community.

If there will not be a call for a debate at the Security Council regardless of whether or not that call would be vetoed, just what does the Government have in mind? I think the Minister owes us a brief elaboration of what he sees these other agencies, that the consultations are going on about, doing with respect to China.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, obviously part of what we hope to do through the United Nations is create some standards of performance which will have some influence upon the activities of the Government of China. We have to work with the United Nations institution as it is, and we have to take a look at other instruments that might be available to us.

One of the reasons I am calling our ambassador home for consultations is that I think it would be very important for him, for Members of this House, and for other Canadians who are interested in and knowledgeable about China to turn our minds to actions that we can take now, either as Canada or as a member of the United Nations, in trying to effect the course of events from this point forward in China.

I think it will be valuable to have that kind of discussion with the standing committee. I would not intend to limit it there. I am examining the idea of trying to bring together a group of people who have reason to be called experts on China to consider, during the time that the ambassador is home, actions that Canada might take that would have effect.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

THE STATUS OF CANADA–QUEBEC AGREEMENT

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology. The Regional Development Agreement between Canada and Québec was signed a year ago. Despite great speeches by the Québec Minister responsible for regional economic development and his PR operation at socio-economic conferences, where he has thrown money at regional projects under this agreement, could the Minister tell us what the present status of this Canada–Québec agreement is?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the $820-million agreement for regional economic development in Québec is now more than a year old. Unlike previous subagreements signed with Québec, the federal Government has the ability to deliver programs alone. There are also Québec programs and joint programs. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that all federal programs are operational or in the process of becoming so. Unfortunately, the Québec and joint programs are still not in effect. After a year of waiting, we hope that Québec will set up its programs as soon as possible so that they too can concretely support Québec's regional development.

AIR CANADA

OWNERSHIP OF SHARES

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of State for Privatization. In his absence, perhaps I could direct it to the Acting Prime Minister or to my bosom pal, the Minister for International Trade.

The chairman of Air Canada has said that 25 per cent of Air Canada's shares will be set aside specifically for foreign investors. I believe the Minister will agree that this represents a major departure from the original sale agreement which precluded foreign buying until Canadian demand for the shares had been exhausted.

Why did the Government ratify or agree to this change? Does this mean that Canadians will be prevented from buying more than 75 per cent of the shares of Air Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the National Transportation Act provides that no more than 25 per cent of the shares of any transportation company, including Air Canada, can be owned by non-residents. The company has in place a system to control that.

During the course of time since the original offering of Air Canada shares, there has been some acquisition by non-residents of shares of Air Canada. In this particular transaction, the sale of shares that is coming up shortly, we felt it was appropriate to continue to offer shares of Air Canada, always subject to the over-all provision of the 25 per cent limitation.

Mr. Simmons: I thank the Minister for his answer.

MONITORING OF FOREIGN OWNERSHIP

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will be aware that the 25 per cent limit on foreign ownership of Air Canada shares is fast approaching. I would like the Minister to indicate how the Government foresees that Air Canada will monitor the foreign ownership of shares, keeping in mind that shares being traded over the counter can be broken down into smaller batches to avoid detection and thereby slip past the 25 per cent statutory limit. Or, was the Government's real agenda from the outset, to sneak it past the Canadian public while loudly protesting to the contrary like the Minister did in his original answer?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the law is the law, and 25 per cent is the maximum of any transportation company that can be owned by non-residents. That law will be administered by Air Canada in the control of any share transfers that take place in the share register. Air Canada advises us that it has the systems in place to do so, and it will abide by that law.

FISHERIES

WEST COAST REGULATIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I pose a question to the Minister for International Trade. By way of compliment, I would say that I noticed his signing of the communiqué with other OECD members in Paris, condemning the use of bilateral trade agreements as a threat to the international trade system. I compliment him on his conversion on the way to Paris last week.

In the same constructive vein, I wish to raise a question about the west coast fishery. My colleagues and I met this morning with representatives of the 5,000 workers in the fish processing industry. They made very clear that the landing regulations introduced by the Minister and his colleague last April would do nothing to protect against the export of raw fish to the United States and the export of Canadian jobs thereby.

Notwithstanding the position taken by the United States, will the Minister undertake to introduce tougher, stronger, more effective regulations to protect the jobs of processed fish workers on the West Coast and to protect that very valuable industry for Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be back to answer the questions of the Hon. Member from Winnipeg Soft Centre.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: He surely must realize that regulations that were in place up to last April were found by a GATT panel to be inconsistent with the GATT and inconsistent with world trading rules to which Canada has now subscribed since the GATT was originally initiated, with the full support of the hon. gentleman's Party and with the full support of the New Democratic Party.

The plain facts are that we cannot have regulations that simply prohibit the export of raw fish for the purpose of protecting jobs because that is contrary to the world trading system. However, we can have regulations and have enacted regulations that will give us proper management control over the British Columbia salmon fishery and will enable the Government to administer and manage the B.C. salmon fishery properly through these new conservation and management controls. They are in place, and we think they will do the job and are consistent with the GATT.

PROTECTION OF JOBS AND ENVIRONMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well that the people in the industry, the companies and the workers, say very clearly that the regulations will not do the job, that we will lose employment, and furthermore that we will substantially lose our ability to provide for conservation and management of the valuable fish resource on the West Coast. Surely in light of the serious problems we face on the East Coast, we should do something to keep the same thing from occurring on the West Coast.

The Minister has the responsibility to provide for protection for those workers in that industry. Will the Minister bring in effective, meaningful regulations to protect jobs and to protect the environment of the west coast fishery?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Canada is a member of the GATT. We are not proposing to leave the GATT. We propose to observe the fair trading rules that the international organization known as the GATT binds all its members to. We are now engaged in an intricate trading negotiation known as the Uruguay Round with the full support of Parties opposite, and so we must comply with the GATT.

We think the regulations we now have in place are consistent with the GATT and will enable the B.C. salmon fishery to be properly managed and controlled. That, as it is, has been challenged by the United States. We are now going before a panel under the U.S.–Canada Free Trade Agreement which will look at these regulations to see whether or not the panel finds them consistent with the GATT. We think they are, and we hope we will have the support of all Members of the House in our arguments before that panel.

Oral Questions

UNITED STATES CLEAN AIR LEGISLATION

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment, I direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Today the President of the United States introduced so-called clean air legislation which will cut acid rain emissions by less than 50 per cent by the year 2000. This U.S. legislation ensures that our forests, our lakes, and our rivers will continue to die over the next ten years.

Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs accept this half-hearted attempt at acid rain reduction?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my only conclusion is that the Hon. Member cannot take yes for an answer. We have been working for years to get progress from the United States on the acid rain question. We in Canada have taken active leadership to clean our own hands so that we could go with authority to the United States. That has been done by the Prime Minister, by Ministers of the Environment, and by others.

• (1450)

We have had today an announcement by the President of the United States that gives an historic step forward for Canada and an historic protection for our air, lakes, and citizens.

We in the Government are very pleased at this proof that hard work over time by the Government of Canada can pay off to preserve the environment of Canada.

IMPACT ON QUEBEC AND ONTARIO SITES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, some sensitive sites in Quebec and Ontario are presently receiving 40 kilograms per hectare of acid pollutants, while they are only capable of handling 12 kilograms per hectare of acid pollutants. This legislation will dump 20 kilograms per hectare, and is this the Government's response. What is the Government going to do about those sites?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the situation is that before today there was no agreed stated policy by the Government of the United States to deal with the acid rain that it produces.

Today, as a result of active leadership by the Prime Minister of Canada and several representations by this Government over a number of years, the United States has changed its policy to meet Canadian goals. That should be celebrated in this country by people who are serious about the environment.

HEALTH CARE

TRANSFER PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, given that Canada is facing an ever-increasing ageing population; given that a well educated workforce is essential for competitiveness in the industrial world; and given that transfer payments to the provinces is a social contract and essential for health care delivery, post-secondary education, and research, how can the Government reconcile its commitments to care for the health and social well-being of all Canadians, including seniors, and to develop a strong, well educated workforce in Canada, with its decision to cut the transfer payments to the provinces?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has it wrong. We are not cutting. We are increasing substantially our payments to the provinces for post-secondary education and health care.

The Leader of the Liberal Party in Manitoba, Sharon Carstairs, has stated that the reason the Manitoba Government is in a strong financial position today, is because of the size of those transfer payments to the provinces.

Over the next five years we will be transferring to the provinces, in aggregate, some $25 billion more than was transferred over the course of the last five years.

That is a clear demonstration of our commitment to support post-secondary education and health care, but to do it within the over-all constraints of getting our deficit down and dealing with the national debt, which I remind the Hon. Member is a strong concern of his Leader who keeps talking about the size of the government debt. Surely he should support his Leader and our efforts to get the deficit under control.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Government admits that it has reduced the rate of growth of transfer payments to the provinces. By 1994-95 it will amount to an approximate $23 billionm revenue shortfall. This is still a decrease to the provinces.

Is the Government prepared to continue its pachydermous insensitivity to the health care, educational, and social needs of Canadians from all regions of the country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member now agrees that we are not cutting and in fact we are increasing our transfer payments to the provinces.

We have committed to transfer at a growth rate that is no less than the rate of inflation. The areas of health care and post-secondary education are clearly priority areas for the Government of Canada. That is why the growth rate in those areas of spending by the Government will be one of the highest of any area of government.

VIA RAIL

SYDNEY TO HALIFAX LINE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. On December 5, 1986, the Prime Minister stood in his place and stated that as long as his Government was in office there would be no second-class citizens in Canada.

Something has changed. This Government, through its manipulation, is now arranging the shutdown of VIA Rail operations in large sections of the country.

Will the Minister of Transport now pledge that the run from Sydney to Halifax will not be cancelled, thereby assuring that the people of eastern Nova Scotia will not become second-class citizens?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that I made no commitment last week—and I certainly will not do so this week! Especially since the lines—my colleague knows very well that VIA Rail decides which rail lines. The recommendations to be made to the Minister of Transport concerning the future of each rail line—whether to keep it or not—will depend on the corporation and will be made to us by VIA Rail.

So, once again, it is quite obvious that this has nothing to do with first- or second-class citizens, but, Mr. Speaker, with VIA Rail's abilities to manage the routes it will keep.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, VIA Rail will make the decision this Government wants it to make, because it is holding the financial gun to the head of VIA Rail by reducing its budget in the amount of $400 million.

Concerning VIA Rail, the Deputy Prime Minister stated: "Use it or lose it". The ridership on the run from Sydney to Halifax has increased by 20 per cent in the last year.

Will the Government honour the pledge of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister and say now that that run from Sydney to Halifax will be continued?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, what I will pledge here today is that I will face, together with my colleagues on this side of the House, the reality of the financial situation of this country. That is the reason that the Minister of Finance, whom I fully support, has decided to cut $500 million from this corporation.

I repeat what I stated previously that this corporation is not used by more than 3 per cent of the population, even in Atlantic Canada. We face a problem of ridership. The Opposition is talking about a 30 per cent increase. For $26 million more revenue, there were $94 million more in expenditures. We cannot manage a corporation in this manner.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

TIMING OF PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice, and it concerns the Young Offenders Act.

Last Friday, the Minister met with his counterparts in Prince Edward Island. I understand the Young Offenders Act was on the agenda. He will know that I conducted a survey in my riding and 6,000 people replied. Some 99 per cent want changes to the Act.

I would like to ask the Minister what was discussed. What are the proposed changes? More important, what changes does the Minister think he will make and when will he make them?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, federal and provincial officials have been working on amendments to the Young Offenders Act since February.

The Ministers of Justice reached unanimous agreement on certain amendments on Thursday last week. Those amendments relate to transfers from youth court to adult court and specifically to the appropriate sentence for murder.

We are going to begin consultations with the Bar, with provincial Ministers responsible for youth, and with other interested parties.

We think that we should be able to complete those consultations by early fall and have the legislation before the House next fall.

FINANCE

PRIVATIZATION OF PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister if he would confirm, as reported last month, that a meeting took place in March this year between officials of this Government and Rothchild's investment dealers to discuss the privatization of Petro-Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say one way or the other. I am not aware of the meeting. If the Hon. Member had given me the opportunity to check before Question Period, I would have been able to give him an answer.

COMMITMENT SOUGHT FROM MINISTER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this report was precisely set out. It was a report which was carried across the country. I have to ask the Government, since we have already lost tremendous control of our energy policy through the Free Trade Agreement and since we see the chance of further loss of energy policy control through this sale of Petro-Canada, can we get from the Government a clear commitment that there will not be privatization in any part of Petro-Canada which belongs to the people of this country?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have not lost control of our energy. In fact, the Hon. Member should have his attention drawn to the recent decision made by the National Energy Board that did not give the full licensing for export which was requested. It was done on the basis of the National Energy Board's examination of natural gas reserves. So the dire predictions he has made, when the Government moved to a market oriented energy approach, simply is not being borne out. The regulatory agency is there and everyone abides by that, including the companies, and that is the manner in which it should go.

If the Hon. Member feels that energy should not be used as an economic generator for exports to other countries, primarily the United States, for natural gas, oil, uranium or coal, then of course the Hon. Member does not understand a lot about economics and especially does not understand the need to raise money in order that the social programs, at least that this side wants to expand, can be met. That is the undergirding of the national program we have for energy and not the interventionist program which did not work and which the Hon. Member has always advocated.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REQUEST FOR EQUITABLE TREATMENT IN TAX SYSTEM

Mr. David Berger (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. In his absence, I will put it to the Minister of Finance. It is about tax deductions for expenses associated with the free trade debate.

The Minister knows that fears have been expressed that the tax system is being used to punish the opponents of free trade and to reward its supporters. The Minister of National Revenue has said nothing to allay these fears. I would invite the Minister of Finance to satisfy Canadians that both opponents and supporters of free trade are being treated equally.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, to make the suggestion that we are punishing someone or other through the Income Tax Act is absolute nonsense. The Minister of National Revenue made that very clear the other day. He said there are provisions in the Act which provide for the treatment of expenditures and whether someone is for or against free trade has nothing to do with how the application of that particular section of the Act is applied. That will continue. The suggestion that the Hon. Member has made is just ludicrous.

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 83(1) I wish to table copies of a notice of a Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act and several related Acts, and I ask that pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 83(2) that an Order of the Day be designated for the consideration of the said Ways and Means motion.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to formally designate tomorrow as an allotted day for the consideration of an opposition motion.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN TRANSPORTATION ACCIDENT INVESTIGATION AND SAFETY BOARD ACT

The House proceeded to consideration of Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Speaker: Before giving the ruling on Bill C-2, I want Hon. Members to know I have received a request from an experienced Hon. Member in this House to argue some aspect of this procedural ruling. I want to say to the Hon. Member that under the circumstances I do not think it is appropriate, at least at this time. The Hon. Member will know that some of the amendments proposed have been accepted on his behalf. The others that were not had been rejected at committee. I do want to try to stay with the practice which Hon. Members have supported, which is to work these things out in advance and not necessitate procedural arguments on these matters. I hope the Hon. Member will co-operate.

The ruling is on Bill C-2.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I always thought that under the rules and in accordance with the indulgence of the Chair that before the Chair makes a ruling, Hon. Members are entitled to comment about the procedural admissibility or non-admissibility of any given Bill or amendment before the Chair rules. That is all I was asking for, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is, of course, strictly correct. We have been moving toward the adoption of that approach in the interest of proceeding with business more expeditiously. However, I will hear the Hon. Member.

Mr. Benjamin: I will be brief but I want to submit, Sir, that I would fully accept the procedure you initially outlined if there were some consultation between the clerks at the table and law officers of the House and Your Honour with Members involved from all Parties. That would then maybe suffice, rather than doing anything from the floor of the chamber.

I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that I am aware of how you plan to rule on Motion No. 1 and I would draw something to the attention of the Chair in the hope of persuading the Chair to reconsider. I ask the Chair to examine the title of the Bill, an Act to establish the Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board.

My motion No. 1 deals with extra-provincial bus undertakings and extra-provincial truck transport. That means interprovincial and international bus and trucking endeavours. Mr. Speaker, if those endeavours are not part of Canadian transportation, I am a monkey's uncle. It fits within what the title of the Bill says the Bill is all about, namely, Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety. Further, Mr. Speaker, constitutionally interprovincial and international trucking and bus undertakings come under federal jurisdiction. The only thing that has gone on since 1867 is that the federal Government has allowed the provinces to administer the federal jurisdiction over interprovincial and international trucking. Because it is Canadian transportation, interprovincial and international, it therefore is not irrelevant to the Bill and does not go beyond the legislation.

Similarly, Sir, with Motion No. 2. A highway occurrence. For example, we were informed in the committee that if a semi-trailer transport loaded with dangerous goods collides with a trans-continental freight train, there was indecision and uncertainty as to who was going to investigate. Would it be one or two provinces, the federal authority, or all of them? This simply means that a highway occurrence in a federal jurisdiction, whether it is interprovincial, international, within a national park, along the St. Lawrence Seaway or on a federal airport, will be investigated by the Federal Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board.

I have made these points many times before with various Speakers. A precedent does not become one of the ten commandments, because sooner or later precedents are broken. It seems to me that within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada, amendments such as this to any piece of legislation dealing with matters that are constitutionally and properly within the jurisdiction of the federal authority must be at least permitted to be decided upon by a decision of the House of Commons. I respectfully request that there must be some room for the Chair to reconsider. I am asking for that as sincerely as I possibly can.

Mr. Speaker: First, as I mentioned earlier, the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin) is a very experienced Member of the House and on this subject is clearly an expert among us. I have heard him, as is his right to be heard, but I had given this matter very careful consideration. The Hon. Member will know that three of his motions have been allowed but Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 4 are, at least in the opinion of the Chair, not in order. I do not think I have the discretion to go beyond that.

In any event I have heard the Hon. Member. No doubt he will be able to work some of his views into argument on the three motions that have been allowed in his name, and perhaps in others.

I want to render the ruling on Bill C-2, and I remind Hon. Members that there are 11 motions on the Order Paper and Notice Paper offered in amendment to Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof. I am referring to the Bill by its new title.

Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden causes the Chair misgivings because the amendment is attempting to add definitions of "extra-provincial bus transport", "extra-provincial undertaking", "extra-provincial truck transport" and "extra-provincial truck undertaking ", thus trying to bring into the Bill new concepts.

These are concepts that were not envisaged in the Bill when it received second reading. It is my view that the amendment goes beyond the scope of the Bill as read a second time by the House. Paragraph (1) of Citation 773 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition stipulates:

> (1) An amendment is out of order if it is irrevelant to the bill, beyond its scope or governed by or dependent upon amendments already negatived.

[English]

Thus, I have come to the conclusion that the amendment goes beyond the scope of the Bill as read a second time by the House. Further, the amendment is a substantive amendment to the interpretation clause of the Bill. I would refer the Hon. Member to paragraph 10 of Citation 773 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, page 233:

> A substantive amendment may not be introduced by way of a modification to the interpretation clause of a Bill.

In addition, this motion was moved in the Standing Committee and ruled out of order there.

[Translation]

Consequently, the motion is out of order and will not be selected.

[English]

Motion No. 2, also standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden also causes concern to the Chair for much the same reasons as mentioned in relation to Motion No. 1. The amendment seeks to bring into the Bill the concept of "highway occurrence" and this is clearly beyond the scope of the Bill. This motion was also moved in the Standing Committee and was also ruled out of order there.

[Translation]

It is with regret, therefore, that I must inform the Hon. Member that I must rule the motion numbered 2 out of order.

[English]

Motions Nos. 3 and 4, standing respectively in the name of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi) and the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden seek to increase the number of board members and this clearly infringes the Royal recommendation. The chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport ruled both these amendments out of order for that reason when they were moved in the committee and I must tell Hon. Members that the Chair is of the same opinion. Therefore, I must rule Motions Nos. 3 and 4 out of order.

[Translation]

Motion numbered 5 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin) is similar to a motion that was debated in Committee. However, the Chair is of the opinion that this motion is sufficiently different that I will allow it to be put to the House.

Motion numbered 5 will therefore be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motions Nos. 6 and 7, standing respectively in the names of the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden and the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon will be grouped for debate but voted on as follows: a, an affirmative vote on Motion No. 6 obviates the question being put on Motion No. 7; b, a negative vote on Motion No. 6 necessitates the question being put on Motion No. 7.

[Translation]

Motion numbered 8 in the name of the Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin) caused the Chair to reflect since a similar motion was moved and negatived in the Standing Committee. However, the Chair is of the opinion that this motion is different enough to allow it to be put to the House.

[English]

Motion No. 8 will therefore be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 9 and 11 in the name of the Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin) and Motion No. 10 in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden are in order and will be debated and voted on separately.

To recap, Motion Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 are out of order and will not be selected for debate.

[Translation]

Motions numbered 6 and 7 will be debated together but voted on as I outlined earlier.

[English]

Motions Nos. 5, 8, 9, 10 and 11 will be debated and voted on separately.

The House will now deal with Motion No. 5.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden) moved:

That Bill C-2 be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 10 to 13 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"as full-time members persons who, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, after consultation with members of the transportation industry, are knowledgeable about one or more of the following modes of transport

(a) air transportation

(b) marine transportation

(c) rail and commodity pipeline transportation."

He said: Madam Speaker, my experience in transportation both before and after becoming a Member of this House has caused me, along with others, to raise a lot of concern about the ability of members of various boards and commissions to take on that responsibility. We believe there should be at least some provision to ensure that there are board members who have at least some if not complete expertise in each field of transportation accident investigation and safety covered by this legislation.

This will ensure that when a director of investigation makes his or her report to the board there will be at least one person there who is knowledgeable in that field. I am not submitting that we could not get individuals from other sectors of our community, such as the business community, the trade union movement, universities or even from consumers' associations or some individual citizen who has taken many years of interest in transportation matters. Of course we can get someone like that. But this amendment tries to ensure that at least some of them will have some expertise.

We also want the appointment of the Governor in Council to be made after consultation with various organizations, transportation companies and transportation unions. I think of the Centre for Guided Ground Transportation at Queen's University, Transport 2000 and of the Canadian Association of Consumers. After consulting with that wide range I would hope that they would appoint members—and I am not submitting that it should be all of them, but at least some members who come out in one form or another from the transportation industry—who are knowledgeable, not even experts but knowledgeable about one or more of modes of transportation, air transportation, marine, rail and pipeline.

I have seen too many times—in fact we just had one recently when we got the Budget and the cuts to VIA Rail. Was it the Department of Transport and transportation experts who made the submissions on what should be in the Budget about VIA Rail? No, Madam Speaker. It was the gnomes in the nether regions of the Department of Finance, who would not know one end of a locomotive from the other.

There was no knowledgeability or expertise on transportation, and particularly on rail passenger transportation, that went into the decision-making about what would be in the Budget on VIA Rail. Even more ridiculous, as I remember a famous appointment of a person to the board of directors of Air Canada, an alderperson in a city in Canada. When asked what expertise, knowledgeability the person could bring to the board of directors of Air Canada, the person said: "Well, I have flown several times." That ain't good enough. That is just not good enough. If the person had been knowledgeable about air transportation and the operation of airlines from the perspective of The Consumers Association of Canada, fine. But to pick out a citizen for other reasons than knowledgeability of Air Canada's operations, mostly political reasons if not entirely, is surely no way to subject a board or a commission with that kind of personnel on its board.

We have had the same thing happen with Canadian National. That has been one of the problems, particularly with rail transportation in Canada, CN, CP and VIA. The decision-making has been done mainly by corporation lawyers and chartered accountants and very few practising, practical railroaders, whether it was on a board of directors, whether it was in the Department of Transport, Department of Finance or anywhere else.

That is what this amendment seeks to do. It could be an appointment of a good Conservative, a good Liberal or a good NDPer, but provided he had some knowledge and at least a minimal amount of expertise in one or more of these modes of transportation.

I have had some bitter experiences in hearings before the CTC with commissioners questioning us or trying to cross-examine us who knew absolutely nothing about what we were talking about. They were relying on their own legal and accounting staff. That is most frustrating. They did not really know. They had never been there on the ground themselves. In fact, as the farmer said: "They never had any manure on their boots." They had never been there.

When you go in front of a board or a commission with the knowledge that those are the kind of people who are going to hear you out, and know not what you are talking about, it is pretty frustrating. I submit it is very unfair, both to the board as a whole and certainly to the people of Canada. We dealt with this at some length and heard from numerous witnesses in the Transport Committee when we held hearings and when we dealt with the Bill clause by clause. Many witnesses wanted this to be the case. Some did not. Some did not think it was necessary.

I recall most of the witnesses who appeared from all sectors in transportation thought that that should be in the criteria for the appointing of members to the board. I hope that my colleagues will agree. My amendment does not go to the length where it has to be someone who is a real expert with credentials as long as your arm. When we say knowledgeable, that is a word used by the Government in an earlier section of the Bill. It is somebody who has some reasonable, however modest, knowledge about one or more of the modes of transportation that this board will deal with. Surely that is not unreasonable. I do not want to see a board with four out of five, as they say in the railroad, who could not find their backsides in the dark if they used both hands, when it comes to transportation.

I am trying to safeguard that because of the previous experiences I have had, as have many others who have complained to me and to the Government. Certainly the media has, when they looked at the qualifications of appointments made by the government of the day. This is a small and modest attempt to correct previous practice.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Madam Speaker, I rise to support the amendment proposed by my colleague, the Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin). There is no question that the amendment put forward by my colleague is an important amendment. In fact, I would submit it is fundamental to the Bill. Members of the House should be aware that what this accident investigation and safety board will do is replace all other accident investigation boards currently at work for the Government of Canada and on behalf of the people of Canada.

For the moment, we have accident investigators operating independently in the air mode, in the marine mode and in the railroad. Of course, the pipeline mode is handled by the National Energy Board. What we are proposing is to consolidate all of those accident investigators in one body and one authority. Whereas for the moment we have perhaps two or three dozen boards made up of two or three dozen board members, what this new Bill will do is just give us five board members for all modes. Hence, the title multi-modal agency. In that instance it becomes not only important but critical that the board members who are appointed not only enjoy the confidence of the Government in the normal way but also have a level of expertise in at least one of the modes covered by a multimodal agency.

We will be proposing a little later this afternoon an amendment to Clause 12. In that amendment dealing with quorums we are asking that a quorum shall be not only three to five members but that at least one of the three must have some expertise in the area of transportation occurrence that is being discussed. It goes without saying that unless there is a guarantee of expertise to begin with—hence the motion of the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin)—it is pretty difficult for the latter amendment that we have put to have any meaning.

On this side of the House we certainly embrace the notion that the Government, that is, the Cabinet, ought to be directed in this legislation to ensure by legislative requirement that the people who are given these jobs for a period of seven years be not just people who enjoy the confidence of Cabinet but who, after consultation with the transportation industry, are appointed on the basis of recognized and demonstrated expertise. The period of seven years came about as a result of an amendment made in committee.

One would hope—in fact, one would expect—that whether or not this amendment is in the Bill, this Government or any other Government would make appointments of individuals who have that kind of expertise. However, if it is the expectation of all Members that board members will have expertise and will not merely be friends of the Government of the day of whatever stripe, then let us put it in the Bill. Let us ensure that the people who answer ultimately to Parliament and on behalf of all Canadians for the operation of the multimodal accident investigation board are people who are there as a consequence of their expertise and for no other reason.

I submit that given the history of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, given the general level of lack of confidence by the public in that board because of the controversy and split in the board over Gander, it is more important now than ever before that we not only assure Canadians of a qualified board but that we demonstrate it by insisting upon those qualifications in the Bill.

For that reason I support the amendment which stands in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, I want to stand in support of the proposal of my colleague who proposes that board members shall be collectively knowledgeable in the modes of transport covered by this Bill.

I wonder why the Government would not have accepted what is obviously a very reasonable amendment. Why would the Government not accept an amendment that seems so obviously reasonable? That is to say five people to investigate accidents, be they marine, air, rail or pipeline. One would think that it is only logical that the five people appointed by the Government ought to be expert in their field.

That leads one to think what is at the back of the mind of the Government. History will bear me out on this. It wants the ability to appoint a bunch of hacks and flacks to these commissions.

Mr. Blaikie: Like the Liberals did for years.

Mr. Rodriguez: We will get to what the Liberals did in a minute.

I want to say that we were impressed by the appointment to the Air Canada Board of Directors of a person who said her only qualification was that she had a driver's licence. We were all shocked by that. We saw how the Government rewarded all the Tories who did not run in previous elections, or all those who were defeated, finding them little niches on the Parole Board, or on some board or commission paid for by the taxpayers.

We remember Erik Nielsen getting his nice cushy appointment after taking flack in this House over the Sinclair Stevens fiasco.

The Government wants to continue the pork-barrelling politics which it learned from its predecessors in the Liberal Party who were in the Government before.

Mr. Andre: Are you talking about Ian Deans?

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Member mentions one person.

Mr. Andre: How about Stephen Lewis?

Mr. Rodriguez: Does one appointment allow you then to make 5,000 appointments of Tory hacks and flacks?

This is clearly a reasonable amendment. Canadians would wonder why the Government would not accept an amendment like this which comes from someone so well versed in transport matters. God knows that we cannot depend on the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) to give us guidance in this whole question of matters pertaining to transportation. Thus I urge all Members in the House to support this motion because it is eminently wise and well thought out.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Madam Speaker, I too would like to rise in support of the amendment and say how shocking it is that the Government is unwilling to accept an amendment which should be so obvious. It would be unnecessary to move such an amendment if it were not for the fact that the Government has a record of appointing people who do not know anything about anything to preside over something that one ought to have a great deal of knowledge about before one is appointed. This is the raison d'être for the amendment. It is also because the new board arose out of a board that was concerned primarily with aviation accidents. We should make special provision in the legislation that people knowledgeable about rail, for instance, be on this board so that we do not have a bunch of people whose expertise is looking at airplane crashes trying to figure out derailments. I know enough about railroading to know that there are things that only people who work on the railways know about.

What the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin) is about in moving this amendment is ensuring that there are people who know one end of a boxcar from another, and who know the difference between a knuckle and a draft gear, and about what is a hand brake and all the other things that need to be considered when one is trying to figure out what may have happened in an accident on the railway.

Finally, the fact of the matter is that this Government has a record not only in its appointments but in itself of having people who do not know the first damn thing about railways or passenger rail making decisions about the future of this industry. The current Transport Minister is the best example I can think of.

He got up today and talked about people not using the trains. If this guy knew anything about trains, he would know that if he wanted to use a VIA train tomorrow, or if he wanted to use the Supercontinental at any time this summer he would have a very difficult time just booking a coach seat, never mind a sleeper. The trains are packed to the gills with people.

For him to stand up in the House to say that there is only a 3 per cent ridership and that people are not using the trains is a travesty of the truth. It is all the more reason why we should have absolutely no confidence in anything that the Government does with respect to transportation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

• (1540)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the motion is deferred.

[English]

We now go to motions 6 and 7.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden) moved:

Motion No. 6.

That Bill C-2 be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 38 to 43 at page 6 and lines 1 to 11 on page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"5.(1) The Governor-in-Council shall appoint one chairperson who shall have demonstrated an understanding of the role of an investigatory body, have knowledge of law and due process and not be an expert in any individual mode covered by this Act.

(2) The Governor-in-Council shall, in consultation with the Board, designate one member to be the Vice-Chairperson of the Board.

(3) The Chairperson is the chief executive officer of the Board and subject to paragraph (a) hereof, shall have the responsibility for the administration of the Board and such powers and duties as are delegated to him by the Board:

(a) In exercising the powers conferred on him by subsection 5(1), by the Public Service Employment Administration Act, the Chairperson is subject to and shall act in accordance with the general policies, resolutions, rules and regulations of the Board.

(b) In the event of the absence or incapacity of the Chairperson, the Vice-Chairperson has and may exercise and perform all the powers of the Chairperson."

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon) moved:

Motion No. 7.

That Bill C-2 be amended in Clause 5

(a) by striking out line 43 at page 6 and lines 1 to 3 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"sponsibility for"

(b) by striking out lines 6 and 7 at page 7.

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I seek your guidance and direction. I note the ruling of the Speaker that both of these motions shall be debated together but voted on separately. Of course both are a variation of the same theme but, nevertheless, two separate and important amendments. I just seek the guidance of the Chair as to whether or not Members are restricted to a total of 10 minutes on both motions or 10 minutes per motion however debated together. Would The Chair please so advise?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): No. There is a 10 minute total period allowed to each Member. As has been said before, an affirmative vote on motion No. 6 obviates the question being put on motion No. 7.

The Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Madam Speaker, I thought my hon. friend from Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin) made an excellent point. They are two separate motions being debated together and I was hoping that 10 minutes would be proper on each one. However I respect your decision.

May I say this about Motion No. 6. The main thing this motion is trying to secure is that the chairman of the Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board will not have powers delegated to him by the Governor in Council and the Minister of Transport which make that chairperson of the Board a czar, one who can do almost anything he or she wants to do in exercising that supreme authority bestowedby the Governor in Council and the Minister of Transport by regulation.

Surely the fundamental principle of a board is its collectivity, that a decision is by the board and not by somebody outside the board. It is sufficient that the Minister has the prerogative to choose and appoint a chairman. Except for what is in this Bill, surely all other authorities and rules have to be decided by the board as a whole. The chairperson of the board will be governed by those rules, will work within that framework and not be a czar with the rest of the board members merely rubber stamps. There must be a collectivity of the entire board in the devising of the rules of the operations, the rules of investigation, rules regarding the allocation of duties and what not. Without that you end up with one or more rubber stamps on the board.

In relying on some of my own experience years ago appearing before the Canadian Transport Commission, the chairman of the Commission had supreme authority over all members of the Board. I can recall one occasion when we were dealing with transcontinental passenger trains as they were then operated or not operated by CN and CP. A group of three witnesses appeared before the Commission in Regina. The chairman kept interrupting the witnesses, commenting and editorializing on what was in their submission.

An Hon. Member: Was that—

Mr. Benjamin: No, that was Jack Pickersgill. Finally, after continued interruption, the witness who was then speaking said to the chairman said:"What is in this brief is our opinion based on some knowledge, investigation and research. Whether you like or dislike our opinion is beside the point." The chairman of the CTC then said: "Don't you realize I can hold you in contempt?" The witness replied: "Mr. Chairman, I wish you would because that is it exactly."

When you have a person chairing a board of that stature, he cannot be operating without the approval, authority and will of the entire board. Otherwise the Minister and the Government do not need a board, all they have to do is appoint a one-person board. Let him do the whole works. Give him a staff of 300 to 400 people and one person can decide if you follow the present reasoning in the legislation. We also say that the Minister and Governor in Council in consultation with the board will select a vice-chairperson. While we agree with the Bill, we state in our amendment that:

> "The chairperson is the chief executive officer and subject to paragraph (a) hereof, shall have the responsibility for the administration of the board and such powers and duties as are delegated to him by the Board"—

If it would require an Order in Council to make those powers and duties legal, that would be fine, but they are to be designated by the board. Of course there will be consultation between the Minister and the Minister's officials and board members and board staff in arriving at those powers and duties. It should be a collective decision of the entire board, a frame of reference under which the chairman must act.

It seems to me that what this amendment seeks to do is so obvious that there should be no difficulty having it accepted. The amendment of my colleague from Thunder Bay—Nipigon is much shorter than mine, but I think it essentially means almost the same thing. Perhaps it does not mean quite as much, which is why I suspect the Chair ruled that the amendments be debated together but voted on separately. I believe my amendment is more all-encompassing than the amendment of my colleague, but his does go some distance toward accomplishing what many of us on the committee and what many of the witnesses were after.

In exercising the powers given to him by the board, the chairperson of the board still has to take into account other laws that affect the operations of the board, including the Public Service Employment Administration Act, the Public Service Staff Relations Board legislation, the Canada Labour Code and a whole host of other laws by which not only the chairperson but the members of the board will be governed. I hope the Government, having had some second thoughts, will agree that this is one amendment it can accept. It received some discussion in committee and it certainly held the attention of a number of witnesses who appeared before the committee. My colleagues, including the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) who led the way for us in the committee are of this opinion, as are many others in the transportation sector of Canada's economy, as well as experts from outside the transportation sector, including universities and the Consumers' Association. They all think that this is a good, sound way to set up the operations of a board of this magnitude with this volume of responsibility.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I rise to support my motion, motion No. 7, and I compliment my colleague from Regina on his remarks about motion No. 6. That motion is very similar in content and intent.

I suggest that fundamentally what my colleague from Regina is attempting to do and what I am attempting to do today through this motion is to make the wording of the Bill more simple than it is at the present. I agree with the Hon. Member that during the committee meetings, at which we heard many witnesses, one of the fundamental concerns about this Bill was with regard to the dispute under the previous legislation, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Act, as to what the duties of the chairman were or ought to have been and what the duties of the board members were or ought to have been. When we reviewed that legislation, we found that there was some fuzziness and that there was no clear intention given to either one or the other as to what its duties and functions were to be.

My colleagues and I, including the Conservative members of the committee whom I compliment for this, were all trying during our deliberations to come up with something that was workable for this clause of the Bill to allow the chairman to pursue his duties without confrontation with board members and for the board members to perform their duties without confrontation with the chairman, something which I am sure both sides wanted to do under the old legislation. That is what we are attempting to do by moving these motions in the committee.

For clarification and for the benefit of my friends across the Chamber, let me deal with motion No. 7, which is fairly simple. The motion provides that the chairperson is the chief executive officer of the board. Let us deal with the concept of a chief executive officer. How would that be interpreted in a court of law? We are trying, for the sake of clarity, to avoid the kind of confrontation that may occur in the courts if certain clauses of the Bill are taken for interpretation.

I think it is implicit to any of us in this room or to any court that a chief executive officer has extra duties over and above those of a general manager or a chairman of the board. The chief executive officer of any corporation, if we make this analogous to a corporation, has many added duties. Many committees report to the chief executive officer about ongoing activities of the board over which he is the chief executive officer.

We often talk about the president of an organization together with the chief executive officer, but they are separate titles. In this legislation, we are saying that the chairperson shall be the chief executive officer. I think it goes without saying that it is still left for the Minister responsible to make that appointment, and we are not debating that, although there was some discussion about it. If I am correct, the appointment of a member from the five-member board was to come from one who was extremely knowledgeable in administrative matters as they affect public institutional boards.

By calling the chairperson the chief executive officer, the Bill already gives that person substantial powers. We are not trying to take these powers away from the board but from the chairman so that they are vested in the board. We are asking our friends to consider taking away from the Bill the reference to managing personnel matters, financial matters and property matters and all other aspects of the internal management of the board. It is our hope that these activities become the responsibility of the board which in turn, through powers given to it later on in the Bill, can delegate them to those responsible should the board decide that these administrative matters or personnel matters should be delegated. It has the power to delegate them and it can delegate those powers to the chief executive officer or to the general manager.

The fundamental point is that once those powers are delegated, rather than coming back to the chairperson, those matters have to be reported back to the board in its entirety, the chairperson be part of the board. It is a board responsibility for the administration of those affairs and the administration of the Act.

With respect to my colleague from Regina—I know that this is the position of our members—by delineating those substantial powers, not removing them from the structure of the committee but removing them from the chairperson's responsibility and putting those functions into the board's responsibility, whoever is fulfilling those functions must report back to the board, it would go a long way to correcting the problems that, in our opinion, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board had in the administration of its affairs, particularly when it came to the investigation of accidents.

That is the fundamental reason why we discussed at great length the differences in the delineation of powers between the chairperson and the members of the board. It is our position that the board should retain those powers. I hope that my friends and colleagues across the aisle will reconsider their position on that point, see the wisdom of our deliberations and our investigation into this area and grant us this motion.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Madam Speaker, Motions Nos. 6 and 7 that we are debating today spring from the same general concern over the concentration of power in the chairperson of the board. The feeling of members of the Opposition is that the Government would be well advised to consider amendments which distribute this power in a way that would make the board more of a collective decision-making body in reality and in practice.

The concern with the amount of power vested in the chairperson by the legislation as we have it now without those amendments, is that there will be a tendency on the part of board members, staff, and everyone, as has been the case before with other boards, to defer to the judgment, to the desires, biases, prejudices, however one wants to describe it, of the chairperson. In the final analysis, this is destructive of the collegiality and the collective decision-making that we want the board to be capable of. The Liberal amendment and our amendment, both from two different angles, address that problem.

The Conservative Government has a history of talking about the decentralization of power and not wanting to vest any one bureaucrat with too much authority. Here it has an opportunity to live up to its own rhetoric. What is it doing? It is going down the same old Liberal bureaucratic road of vesting all the power in one appointee who no doubt will know very little about that which he is appointed to preside over. He might be somebody rescued from a parliamentary debacle, such as Mr. Nielsen was when he was appointed to the NTA, and there are numerous other examples. I realize that this is an ad hominem argument. However, given those types of people, and the type of authority that this legislation does give, it is an invitation to tyranny which should be repudiated by Parliament.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Madam Speaker, I rise to support the motion of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi), and by extension to support the motion of the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin).

These amendments provide an opportunity for the House to make a straightforward but fundamentally important decision. The decision is, I believe, the crux of the whole debate that we have had in the Standing Committee about this Bill. I submit that the cleanest of the two amendments is the one presented by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi). However, without one of those amendments, simply put, the new multi-modal accident investigation board will be run by a chairman. As the Bill is currently drafted, the chairman of the board will have all financial power, all powers of delegation, will have the power to hire and fire the chief investigators into major transportation accidents or occurrences, will have the power to set the agenda of the board, and will have the power to decide what board members will do what work. In essence, one individual will have all of the legislative authority required to literally completely run an agency with the responsibility for doing an overview or an investigation of four modes of transportation. That is a tremendous amount of power to put into the hands of one individual.

The other four board members of this multi-modal agency will only be able to function at the discretion of the chairman, and to the extent that the chairman shall allow them to function as independent agents exercising their best judgment and consciences in, first, conducting investigations, and second, reporting to the public on causes of major transportation accidents.

These amendments propose to acknowledge a board of five individuals. Hopefully, they will be individuals qualified for this type of work.

However, as the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon proposes, it leaves it to the board, to five, mature, intelligent, dedicated, and qualified men and women to establish for themselves ground rules as to how they will function, to establish for themselves collectively what type of accidents ought to be investigated and in what manner they should be investigated. It also leaves them to establish for themselves what kind of qualified staff should work on behalf of this board and should have the power collectively to hire and fire.

The question is a very fundamental one. Given the history of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, the history of division, the current lack of public confidence that arose out of dissent, do we respond to what was too much dissent that caused a loss of public credibility in the case of CASB and the Gander crash, and the tragic loss of life, by totally eliminating the possibility of dissent? By having a chairman with an iron fist? By ensuring that members, even if they disagree in the most fundamental way with the workings of the board or the conclusions of an accident investigator, are silenced by cutting off their hands or by sealing their lips? Does one respond to dissent by ensuring that there is never dissent again?

Not one single witness who came before our committee suggested, nor would any serious individual suggest, that dissent of and by itself is a bad thing. That is why there is more than one member of a board, because more than one point of view is wanted, and the possibility of a minority or a majority disagreeing with the conclusions or practices of a chairman. That is the very essence of democracy. That is what this Chamber is about. It is a vehicle for dissent in a democratic society.

It seems strange to me that Parliament would concoct, as important as it is, an agency called the multi-modal accident investigation agency and establish it in a way that would eliminate the fundamental of any reputable agency, that is, that there is the possibility of dissent.

That there is the possibility of more than one point of view being heard so that as we sail Canada's waters, as we fly, through jet aircraft or other means, Canada's skies, as we take the rails across this country, as we sit in our seats and travel, we can rest assured that there is a multi-modal agency that has within it a board that has the power of dissent, the ability for more than one opinion, and the most critical analysis possible to ensure safe transportation.

Failure to adopt the amendment by my friend, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi), or the amendment of the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin), leaves us with a possible situation. I am not saying it is certain, but it is certainly possible that one strong-willed chairman will run this board in such a way that it will be the brainchild, the baby, a vehicle for the thoughts and views of only one person and that four other people will act as mere window dressing. As I fly along, as I frequently do back and forth to Newfoundland, I do not find that a comforting thought. I do not believe that Canadians would find it a comforting thought.

If we are not afraid of more than a single point of view being heard on something as fundamental as safety in transportation, let us create a board that is truly a collective board with collective authority. Let us not establish a board with a chairman who reigns supreme, because we know from experience throughout history that that kind of configuration, whether it be for political purposes or in the workings of any kind of committee, leads not to a healthy, open and democratic institution but, rather, to an institution that too frequently ends up resembling the views of one individual. That is not in the interests of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

The question is on Motion No. 6 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte) moves:

Motion No. 8

That Bill C-2 be amended in Clause 12 by adding immediately after line 12 at page 11 the following:

"(3) At meetings of the Board convened for the purpose of discussing a specific transportation occurrence, at least one member of the Board shall be qualified in the mode of transportation which is the subject matter of the occurrence."

Accident Investigation

He said: Madam Speaker, I want to say at the outset in proposing this amendment to colleagues opposite, who are no doubt sitting on the edges of their seat waiting to hear the rationale for this important motion, that I make a genuine appeal to Members to consider the value of this amendment. I should say for Members who are here in the House today but who were not part of the work of the standing committee, that I believe the work of the Standing Committee on Transport on this Bill reflected perhaps more than the work of any other committee in my memory and time here the spirit of reform as proposed by the McGrath-Ouellet-Blaikie committee.

Madam Speaker, I refer to Members' names only in the context of the reform report because what that committee proposed was that in so far as the deliberations of Members are concerned with respect to creating legislation in standing committees—not here in the House, not before television cameras, not in the context of a partisan exchange in an election, not even in the context of Question Period, but in the context of individual Members with an interest in a particular area, in this case transportation—that we really ought to be not Liberals, New Democrats or Conservatives but individual Members exercising their best judgment. That is what the spirit of reform was all about.

In the standing committee, we saw many occasions where both Liberal, New Democrat and Conservative Members disagreed with the Party line. We saw motions proposed by the Opposition defeated, motions that we thought would have carried because they had government support, but because opposition Members did not agree. We saw government motions defeated or opposition Members carried with the support of government Members. It happened repeatedly. The exercise in the standing committee consequently was a very good exercise, not only for Members but for Canadians. They got a non-partisan effort.

I say that because I want Members who were not part of the standing committee to look at the amendments we are proposing in the same light. The amendment, Motion No. 8, proposes to change Clause 12, which essentially sets out the size of the quorum. It states three Members constitute a quorum. We want to add to that by saying that at meetings of the Board convened for the purpose of discussing a specific transportation occurrence—that means an accident—at least one member of the board shall be qualified in the mode of transportation which is the subject matter of the occurrence. In other words, if three members come together to discuss an aviation disaster—God forbid—three out of five, that one of those three must be somebody with aviation experience. It could not be more obvious than that.

If there were an accident on the pipeline side such as we saw in the horrific incident in Russia last week where hundreds, perhaps 1,000 lost their lives, that three of the five who get together to discuss a pipeline occurrence in Canada, one of those three must have expertise in the pipeline area. The same for rail and marine. All we are saying is that if you have a major occurrence in one of the modes, let us not have an aviation expert, a marine expert, or a rail expert discussing pipelines. Let us not have a rail expert and a marine expert, in a third mode, discussing an aviation occurrence. Let us at least require that one of the board members with knowledge and expertise other than the full-time bureaucracy must be qualified to discuss an event.

It seems such an obvious and rational approach to doing the business of the board that it should not require amendment. But I believe it does require an amendment. Everyone would tell us, if Members opposite would stand and speak, that they would not disagree with that. They expect that is the way the board is going to work anyway. It is such a logical thing that no one could disagree. If that is the case, let us put it in the Bill. Let us rest assured that when the board considers a tragic occurrence—and a tragic occurrence translates into loss of life, such as Gander, Dryden, Hibernia oil disaster, to name but three—the job of the board is twofold. It should investigate, tell us what went wrong, and make recommendations so that those kinds of occurrences may never happen again.

Surely, Members using free will and concerned only with making a better Bill, should not be concerned with whether the motion comes from a Liberal, a New Democrat or a Conservative, but concerned only with creating the best legislation possible. They could not disagree with what is such a humble but fundamental proposition necessary to ensure that this Bill is a good Bill, that Parliament has done its job and that the people of Canada are well served.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Madam Speaker, I rise to compliment the Hon. Member for the amendment he has moved. The Hon. Member's motion is in some ways a consequence of my Motion No. 5 on which the vote has been deferred, but can also stand on its own no matter what happens with that vote.

According to the Bill as it reads now, people can be appointed to the board because they belong to the frequent flyer plan. People can be appointed for being a frequent ferry user, a frequent shipper and receiver of freight, a frequent passenger on VIA Rail for however long it lasts. That is not good enough.

The motion would require that there be some qualification for one of the modes of transportation under which the investigation of an occurrence is taking place. Again, reflecting on our experience with previous boards and commissions, one cannot have a chartered accountant deciding what happened in a railway wreck no more than a locomotive engineer, trainman or dispatcher can decide on accounting law. This is so self-evident that I wish the Parliamentary Secretary would get up and state whether the Government is prepared to accept these amendments. Perhaps he can give us the rationale for supporting the Bill in its present form and the reasons for rejecting this or any of the other amendments so that people can decide, in light of our arguments and his arguments, which side may have a case.

All Members will agree that the committee had an excellent session dealing with the Bill clause by clause. We heard many witnesses and dealt with them expeditiously. It was a non-partisan exercise, and there were occasions when members of the committee, from both sides of the table, agreed or disagreed with elements of the original Bill. That is how committees should function under the new regime of so-called committee independence.

The Government has not provided sufficient argument in support of this aspect of the Bill. I recall talking to a member of the former Canadian Transportation Commission who was travelling to another part of Canada to investigate a railway accident. We were on the train from Winnipeg to Regina, when we pulled into a siding. He did not know that eastbound trains had priority over westbound trains, which is a fact known to railroaders from management to the workers on the tracks. He did not know that first-class trains had priority over second-class trains.

He did not even know the meaning of the green board, orange board and red board on the train ordinal signals beside the tracks. He was unfamiliar with such terminology as clearance, "train order", or "meet or run late" and "run ahead of". Yet this person, who is knowledgeable about other things, was on the board investigating a railway accident. He knew nothing about railroads.

My hon. friend's amendment makes eminent good sense. I wish the Parliamentary Secretary would explain why he believes this amendment is not rational. To reject this amendment seems to me to fly in the face of good sense. A board which consists of people who are knowledgeable about the mode of transportation to which there is an investigation would earn more respect from the public. If we ever needed an increase in credibility and stature of an accident investigation board, goodness knows that is long overdue in this country in light of some of the bitter experiences with previous boards and commissions, most recently the Aviation Safety Board. The fact that at least one of three board members investigating an accident is knowledgeable about the particular mode of transportation in question would lessen the likelihood of dissent.

It is true that a majority decision of the board is a decision of the board, and presumably the minority can append their minority opinion, but I believe this amendment would help reduce the number of occasions when there is dissent. The function of the board is to gather the reports on the investigation involved, of which there can be many, to issue interim reports and recommendations, and finally make a decision with recommendations about future policy and, as my hon. friend said, to try to ensure that the likelihood of the same thing happening again is substantially reduced, if not eliminated.

I hope the Government will agree to this amendment. It is worthy of the support of the House. It certainly reflects the view of the many witnesses we heard and I want to make this last effort to persuade the Government to accept the amendment of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Madam Speaker, I would just like to say a few words about this amendment, and about the whole question of safety which presumably this legislation has to deal with. The point has been made that people ought to be knowledgeable about the mode of transportation which they are investigating.

I am just going through my correspondence here and I notice a call that I received from the system's general chairman of the union of Rail Canada traffic controllers whose national office is in Winnipeg. They represent train dispatchers and operators. They are faced with the abolishment by CN of operators, some 20 to 30 so far in Manitoba, and perhaps 50 more by July 31. Their duties are being transferred to dispatchers in the dispatching office in Winnipeg. This is happening across the country. The union had tried to deal with CN in Winnipeg but had a very difficult time in doing so. They feel that safety is being compromised by this policy which CN is pursuing. The additional paperwork which the dispatchers have to do, due to the abolition of the operators' jobs, means that the signal systems cannot be monitored properly, and cannot be monitored in the way which they should be.

They feel that this is a safety concern. They have written to the Department of Transport about this. All they get are answers back saying that this has to do with the collective agreement, et cetera.

I raise this because this is precisely the kind of thing where if there should be an accident as a result of CN's policy of putting too heavy a workload on the dispatchers, it is something that we would want in an investigator. We would want someone who knew something about railroading and something about dispatching, et cetera, and someone who could look back, not only at the circumstances prevailing right around the event but into the policy decisions which have been taken by the company recently which may have contributed to the context in which the accident took place.

I hope in the time since I have heard from this particular union concerning CN's policy that they have made some progress with the company. Knowing what I know about CN lately, I am not going to put much money on it. This is a good example of what is wrong with our transportation system right across the board.

Transportation companies are literally being quite mad in their frenzy to combine jobs and to cut positions.

An Hon. Member: Deregulation.

Mr. Blaikie: Also as a result of deregulation. In so doing it creates all kinds of safety hazards, safety hazards which may not yet have manifested themselves in real accidents. We should be grateful for that. However, they are nonetheless safety hazards which are being created as a result of deregulation and as a result of the irrational obsession of CN and other transportation companies with downsizing and the elimination of positions for the sake of elimination, without regard to the heavier workload which is being put on the employees who remain.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Thank you, Madam Speaker, for allowing me to speak on behalf of the motion put forward by my colleague for Humber-St. Barbe—Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin). I am going to be fairly short, and emphasize a point. I am pleased that the Parliamentary Secretary who attended all of the hearings will understand that the spirit which was prevalent throughout the committee was one of trying to structure and develop a Bill which was truly operative by the intent for which the Bill was designed.

The intent was: First, to investigate accidents in all modes of transportation in our country. Second, through the recommendation by one of the members which we supported, that for the safety aspects to come forward with safety recommendations the genesis did not necessarily have to come from an accident in order for this board to say to transportation agencies in our country: "Look at, we must prepare or do something because we have an unsafe condition here."

I think that was the spirit which prevailed and permeated the entire committee. I am hoping that that same spirit will prevail as these amendments are considered. The amendment made by my colleague is basic and fundamentally sound. It has its genesis in Clause 4 of this Bill. I want to read that, if I may. It shows the reason why this amendment should go through.

Clause 4 states, among other things, when it talks about the composition of the board:

> (2) The Governor in Council shall appoint as members persons who, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, are collectively knowledgeable about air, marine, rail and commodity pipeline transportation.

That now will pass and become part of this legislation. If we have any meaning for Clause 4, subclause (2), why then do we hesitate to add this amendment which says that the people who we appoint, who must have collective knowledge in certain areas of transportation occurrences in our country, should then not apply that collective wisdom at the board hearing which is investigating that occurrence. It just follows that if we believe in what Clause 4,subclause (2) states about the collective knowledge, and it was spoken to at great lengths at the committee hearing to define what collective knowledge meant, then it only strengthens the point that my colleague is making that one of those people who are appointed to the board must be knowledgeable in the area of the accident or occurrence which is under investigation. If they do not approve the amendment, I challenge the wisdom of putting forth Clause 4, subclause (2).

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, this is an eminently wise amendment. What my hon. friend wants to do is to amend Clause 12 of the Bill. Clause 12 simply states that the chairman shall assemble a meeting at the written request by two or more members and that three people will constitute a quorum. What he is saying, Madam Speaker, is that if there has been an accident on the rails, for example, and the chairman calls a meeting, three people can be assembled for the meeting. There is nothing in there which states that any of them shall have any specific knowledge of rails. It seems to me eminently wise that one of the three people ought to have some specific knowledge about the way in which the railway system works.

We have gone through about five amendments, and I am at a loss at the silence which emanates from across the way. I would like to know why the Government would not accept an amendment which seems so commonsense.

The Parliamentary Secretary sits over there reading his notes, but he will not get up and tell us why this particular amendment is not acceptable. I think the Government owes it to this House to respond to the commonsense suggestions of the Opposition. Nothing that has been presented so far detracts from the thrust of the Bill. In fact, it strengthens the Bill. It strengthens the confidence of the travelling public and Canadians at large that, in fact, we do not have the fiascos we had with the air safety board. We all recall that. It is actually the genesis of this Bill.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) was so embarrassed by that whole fiasco involving the air safety board investigating the Gander crash and having five different opinions about what happened that he burned the midnight oil over at the transport building and came up with this new animal. We agreed with the concept. We have no problem with that. There is nothing that has been suggested here by my colleague, my good friend from Newfoundland or my very good friend from up in the Lakehead that is radical, although I would support it if it were. There is nothing here that is revolutionary, although I would support it if it were. That is the extent to which I am prepared to be flexible to accept these pussy-cat amendments. I am prepared to accept them. They make sense to me. I think they make sense to all Members in the House.

However, what do we get from Members opposite? Silence. It is like a tomb over there, Madam Speaker. There is no response. In fact, in committee some of these amendments came close to being passed. The Government owes it to the House to express itself on these amendments.

Does the Government not think it is important that one of the three people investigating a particular accident, whether it be on the sea, in the air, on land or involving a pipeline has to be expert in that particular field? Is that unreasonable?

I am asking the Parliamentary Secretary this. He seems to be a stand-in for the Minister, albeit it a stand-in with a little bit more hair—or a little less hair. I wish there were a 10-minute question period. I want to ask him this. Does he not think that this is a reasonable amendment? What does he say? Nothing.

I ask the Government to think about these amendments honestly. It looks as if it will have a respite at 5 p.m. We would like to support the Bill totally, and make it a better Bill. We believe these amendments would do that.

I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to relay the message to Benoît du lac to take it under advisement. Maybe they will come back and accept the amendments of my colleagues in the Opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 8 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the motion is deferred.

[English]

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte) moved:

Motion No. 9.

That Bill C-2 be amended in Clause 19 by adding immediately after line 33 at page 19 the following:

"(17) An employee statement obtained pursuant to a collective agreement is privileged, and no person shall have access to such statements, except as authorizedin writing by the person who made the statement."

He said: Madam Speaker, one of the Parliamentary Secretaries suggested as an aside a moment ago that we just vote on these motions and save the House some time. I must be an eternal optimist because I continue to believe that one day it is possible that when presented with a sound proposition, a proposition that can be defended by logic and reason, that somewhere across the way there will be Members whom, if they are attacked often enough by both logic and reason, will respond. I am convinced that Members opposite at some point in time, unlike Pavlov's dogs, will not respond automatically like trained animals to the bell that goes off when the Parliamentary Secretary turns thumbs down on a reasonable proposition. One day Canadians will be absolutely shocked and astounded—perhaps some faith in the democratic process will be restored—when Members opposite say to the Parliamentary Secretary when he turns thumbs down on a very sound, reasonable and proper proposition: "No, dammit. We will vote once on behalf of the people of Canada. We are going to do something good for a change. We are not going to take your orders".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: It is with that perhaps vain belief in mind, with that vain hope in mind that I continue to stand and put propositions that I believe are designed to serve the public interest and hope that one day my colleagues opposite will rebel from this tyranny of a Parliamentary Secretary who expects them to behave like puppets at the direction of his thumbs up or thumbs down.

What does the amendment state? I believe that it should be reread. I would like my colleagues from the New Democratic Party to pay attention to it. It states:

> An employee statement obtained pursuant to a collective agreement is privileged, and no person shall have access to such statements, except as authorized in writing by the person who made the statement.

What it states is that in the course of conducting an investigation into an incident, an occurrence, an accident, that in some modes, specifically for the moment in the rail mode, there are provisions in the collective agreement between the company and the employees which prevent statements made by employees to company officials from being made public. In other words, those statements must be kept in confidence.

Members should know that both the industry—these companies in question—and the employees in question on any number of Bills appearing before the standing committee have said that the confidential nature of those statements made by employees to their employers have become extremely important to the safe operation of train companies, that is, CN and CP.

Why is that? It is because both parties know that those statements when given will be kept in the strictest of confidence, that those statements will not find their way outside the employee-employer relationship and that employees making statements having that assurance are completely free to be forthright, honest and above-board.

In terms of safety, because there is a guarantee of the confidentiality of that statement, the value of the information given is multiplied 1,000 per cent in the day-to-day running of the company. Those employee statements are not just information on how the widgets work or on how the technology works, but are also comments on some occasions without prejudice on the performance of fellow employees. As trains hurdle across the tracks with freight and bodies—human beings aboard those trains—we know there is an employer-employee relationship providing for a frank and full exchange of information aimed at ensuring safety.

What this Bill would do unless amended would be to give the investigators the power to subpoena those confidential statements made under a provision of the collective agreement. The second this Bill has the power to subpoena those statements, you can be sure that the nature of those statements will change. Once the employee and the employer knows that those statements are liable to end up as a centrepiece to an investigation, the day-to-day practice and operation of that railroad company, based on the value of these confidential statements, is gone. You will no longer have the kind of openness and forthright comment in those confidential statements that today are a large contributor to the safe operation of the railways.

Now logically the public might say: "Well, you know, if there is an accident I want those investigators to get their hands on every piece of information available. I don't care about a collective agreement.", except you have to be aware that the day you violate the collective agreement those statements no longer have any value. In other words, the kind of material going into those statements will radically change. It will be puffery.

What I propose to do in this amendment is to protect those confidential statements which are part of the collective agreement, to protect the value that they have for the daily running of a railroad not only on the occasion of an accident but day to day, week to week, month to month, year-in and year-out. At the same time, if you look at the wording, it says that the statements shall be protected except as authorized in writing by the person who made the statement. There is nothing stopping an employee who feels that something he has said, some information he has, is valuable to an investigation from making that information available to the Board.

The Bill goes further. What about Clause 30? An existing clause in the Bill says that any information given to the Board by an employee wanting to contribute to an investigation that that information shall be kept confidential from the company. There is already a guarantee in this Bill that if some employee, in any mode of transportation, goes to the Board independently to say: "Look, I think there is information you should have about my company, the way it operates or a fellow employee that is pertinent to an investigation", that that information shall be kept confidential. Again, it is information obtained on a voluntary basis.

If the Bill recognizes the importance of keeping information confidential through Clause 30, an employee who wants to make information available to the Board is given protection as it were, then surely this Bill should also anticipate and recognize the value of the collective agreement clause which provides for confidential statements between the employer and employee and that the value of those statements is lost the day those statements are no longer protected.

Members will well appreciate, although it seldom works as well as we would like, but the purpose of a caucus among political parties is to allow free, frank and open discussion without fear theoretically that that discussion will find itself into the front pages of the newspaper. Occasionally it does. We all know that when it does the nature of our caucus changes dramatically. The same is true with a confidential statement made or with confidential exchanges between an employee and employer. Those are the practical reasons to support this amendment. I have one last point.

Unless we accept this amendment we are arbitrarily and unilaterally, in effect, as a Parliament invading in the most fundamental way on the collective bargaining process. We are saying arrangements that have been worked out and negotiated in good faith by both the employer and the employee are arbitrarily violated by Parliament in the process of drafting and passing this Bill. If that is not a precedent, then certainly it is a very unhealthy and dangerous action. I submit to Members that the Bill is served and, most important, transportation safety is served in accepting this amemdment, in preserving the confidential nature of statements between employees and employers and that ultimately there is within this Bill the power to obtain any information that is required by other means in any case.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Madam Speaker, I rise in support of the motion of by my hon. friend. It does not go far enough as far as I am concerned, but the distance that it does go I fully agree with and support. It will be argued if anyone were to get up on the government side that there is adequate protection in other places for the confidentially—

Mr. Tobin: There is not.

Mr. Benjamin: It was argued by some in the committee that there is adequate protection for the confidentiality of employer-employee statements—

Mr. Tobin: Employee.

Mr. Benjamin: —elsewhere in a collective agreement, in another piece of legislation or even in this one. This one talks about statements taken by the investigators of the board, not the company nor the employers. I want to say to my good friend, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) and the Parliamentary Secretary, that I wish he were spending the entire day earning his keep as a Parliamentary Secretary but so far he has chosen not to. I want to remind him and his colleagues that in spite of what some of them might think—and I know my hon. friend does not think this—the Opposition is not 100 per cent wrong nor is the Government 100 per cent right. We have realized that numerous times in countless committee meetings and in Bills before this House.

I said that I did not think the Hon. Member's motion went far enough because I think an employer should not be allowed to take a statement from an employee until after an investigator of the board has interviewed and taken a statement from the employee himself. In other words, the employee, like the site of an occurrence, is quarantined as far as the company is concerned until after the board has taken a statement.

I submit that a statement taken by an investigator of a board is quite likely to be more forthcoming and open than one taken by the boss. Unless you guarantee the confidentiality of a statement taken by the employer in this legislation, as my hon. friend said, employees will be extremely, shall I say, guarded in how much they say about their own involvement in an occurrence or in the involvement of a fellow employee who might be a good friend. The primary interest of an employee giving the statement is about safety and the protection of all employees and the public. I think the amendment is well made and well taken. May I call it five o'clock, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE COMMITTEE

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn) moved:

That in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Canada Labour Code to provide all regulated workers with the right to create, upon the demand of 10 or more workers, a Technological Change Committee which will be entitled to advance notice of technological change and full information about the impact of proposed technological changes on employment, job content and work processes.

He said: Madam Speaker, it gives me a great deal of satisfaction to be a participant in what I understand to be the changed rules of the House for Private Members hour. When I submitted this motion, I had no idea that the Government would come up with a reference to training ethic, which reference occurs in the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. It is an admission by the Government that the corporate world has some responsibility to society and to its employees.

Training ethic does not express my entire concern insofar as the private sector is concerned. I suggest that the right of employees to become involved in technological change as it affects them, their workplaces and their communities is an extension of the idea of the training ethic into what I think ought to be described as the total responsibility of the private sector.

Motion 225 brings to our attention the fact that the corporate world is not living up to its responsibility when it comes to the introduction of technological change in the workplace. It is not living up to its responsibilities to employees and to the communities in which it operates.

The motion provides that employees should have the right to a Technological Change Committee with the right to be informed well in advance of changes which could affect their jobs, their health, their safety, their earning capacity, the work processes with which they have to become familiar and indeed the content of their jobs themselves. I say they should be informed well in advance. I hesitate to put a time limit on it, but I would suggest that a minimum time ought to be at least 12 months. In short, the motion provides that workers be given full information about the impact of proposed technological changes on employment, job content and work processes.

Employees and the communities in which they live have a right to know well in advance of changes which, as experience has already shown, affect the employees and communities adversely in almost all cases. The situation with which we are faced is contrary to what we were told at the outset of this technological revolution. I am sure everyone here remembers the glowing terms with which the technical revolution was introduced, the stories which purveyors of new technology told us when it was being introduced into society. New technology was to create a society that would be beyond our wildest dreams, a leisure society in which everyone was able to benefit from the wealth created.

There is no doubt that more leisure time has been created. We see it almost everywhere and we see its negative face of unemployment. There can be no question that the technological changes introduced within the last decade have contributed in no small measure to the very high degree of unemployment from which society is suffering. With the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act, I would suggest that the level of unemployment will be even higher and more obvious.

The wealth has been created too. Over the last decade since the major introduction of technological changes, the corporate world has experienced for the most part an even level of return on investment, but that return has not found its way down, as the monetary theories of Milton Friedman, Ronald Reagan, Margaret Thatcher and the like would have us believe. It has not trickled down to the average Canada, or for that matter, to the average person anywhere within the spheres of influence of Milton Friedman's misguided economic theory. Employees have not benefited, nor has society benefited. There are more food banks than one could have imagined at the end of the 1930s and during the economic up-turn of the 1950s and the 1960s. The communities have not benefited.

Motion 225 is an attempt to ensure that the promise of the technological revolution is fulfilled for all Canadians. To that end, it is necessary to look at some of the proposals for employment, job content and work processes in a more detailed way.

First, we must have definition of technological change. This definition must include reference to the work, the undertaking or the business carried on by an employer. It must include reference to any change in equipment or material used in the work, undertaking or business of the employer. It must include any change in the methods utilized in the work, undertaking or business of the employer and it must recognize any change in the way in which equipment or material is used in the work, undertaking or business of the employer.

If we are to protect employees as fully as they ought to be protected from the adverse effects of technological change, we need to have provisions for them to receive adequate notice of the fact that there will be a change in the workplace as defined by technological change. This is important for several reasons. The experience of industrial assistance programs have demonstrated with the more advance notice to employees of lay-offs, and there is the possibility of lay-offs when it comes to technological change and I will deal with that later, the adverse effects on the communities, on the employees and on the employers as well for that matter are far less severe than they are when, as is too often the case, the employees go to work at 8 o'clock in the morning only to be told at 8.05 that their jobs are no longer viable and that by 12 noon they must have cleaned out their lockers, taken their clothes and equipment home and turned in whatever belongs to the company.

As one can imagine, under such circumstances the trauma is insurmountable. The personal loss and grievance suffered are immeasurable. Notice has to be given of contemplated changes, and that is obvious for the reasons I have already mentioned.

There has to be a disclosure by the employer of the nature and the description of the technological changes themselves. There also have to be provisions that the effect of the technological change is made available to the employees. Issues have to be raised, such as the number of employees who will be affected. In cases where a company has more than one place of operation, the location where those jobs will be affected, the job classes involved, as well as those jobs and classifications that will be terminated or redesigned in such a way that retraining may also be necessary.

The effects on employees also has to be part of the disclosure provisions for the protection of employees. For example, effects on such things as skills and whether the skills the employees have will be adequate to enable them to remain at work. Whether they will be able to exercise the skills they have, or indeed whether they may have to acquire new ones.

It is important for employees to know whether the skills and the seniority they have accrued will enable them to remain as employees of the company. There also have to be provisions to apprise the employees of the effects of the technological changes on their health and safety.

Within the terms of disclosure, it would also be helpful for employees to be able to visit locations where the proposed changes have already been put into effect in order that the committee which will be set up will be able to evaluate whether or not in the first instance the proposals the company is making are realistic, and whether or not the disclosure with which they are in the process of being involved bears relation to what is likely to happen.

An important element, and something which all parties concerned should rightfully be aware of, is the matter of confidentiality. Quite often the implication comes forth that if the company is to disclose its innermost secrets in so far as what it is going to do, the employees will spread that information, or perhaps in the first instance the company will, and by definition that is foolishness. Technological change proposals should involve, quite rightly, provisions for confidentiality.

There should be assurances of job security both for those employees who will remain and for those who will be laid off or whose jobs will be significantly altered. There should be a designation in the original disclosure information put out by the company for those employees it considers will be redundant and for those employees who will no longer be able to remain. Once having made those commitments, those who have not been designated should not in any way be considered as being liable to be laid off as a result of the subsequent technological change. In no case should designated employees be let go before the implementation of the technological change, or before the effective date.

As is often mentioned in relation to workers and employees, training is absolutely essential. There have to be major provisions within the technological change language which ensures that those employees who will no longer be able to retain the jobs that they had will be retrained as a right, and if there are choices for jobs which they conceivably could exercise as a result of their seniority or skills, that they be able to exercise that choice on the basis of their own preference and where they would prefer to go. The whole matter of training is predicated on the assumption that it would be the employer that paid for the training.

There certainly are instances where employees are laid off as a result of technological change, and that has been the long-term experience of many thousands of employees in this fair country of ours. They should be able to exercise the option of taking severance in lieu of training or job guarantees. This is in the interest of the employee as well as the company, because there would be no point in the company forcing an employee to stay against his or her will. For one thing, the employee most likely would not be leaving unless he or she had found employment elsewhere. Who would want to deny them that opportunity? Within the provisions of severance there is also the matter of the employee being able to take a portion of the training allowance as severance pay.

Early retirement may also be a provision that some employees would want to exercise when it comes to the implementation of technological change. Certainly, that is something the legislation ought to take cognizance of. That would certainly be a step forward for some of the older workers within our society, and also in the context of having discussed the aids to older workers in the House within the last few weeks.

The committee itself is an integral part of the whole process. It would have to be involved in the review and resolution of such issues as the need or justification for technological change and the evaluation of the appropriate change. I would suggest that that is a wise thing to do. Often the employees on the floor are able to input knowledge into the operation which oftentimes the company itself has overlooked.

The committee would be involved in the matter of adaptation by all to the proposed changes and the impact on employees. In short, the committee would be involved in the whole process, but not to the point where it would have the final say on the resolution. There have to be realistic provisions for some type of a resolution when the company and the employees are unable to agree and the solution may possibly be that the technological change would not be implemented at all. It may also be that arbitration could be considered.

The matter of surveillance is a very important issue to address. Since my time is almost up, I would point out that as far back as 1972 the Government of Sweden enacted a law which prevented some of the most obvious surveillances. For example, the use of microtechnology to monitor workers and their actions, or as a matter of discipline.

In conclusion, I am sure reference will probably be made to the 10 employees within a company asking for those changes. Some people will say that is not a very large number of people, but I would suggest that there are many, many institutions within our society that can implement changes and initiate actions within our society and foundations with small numbers in relation to the whole.

I see that my time has lapsed. I would conclude on the basis that I do hope the House take serious consideration of the matter of technological change and its impact on Canadian workers.

Mr. Ken James (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the motion before the House proposes that Parliament should consider amending the Canada Labour Code in order to provide all regulated workers with the right to create, upon the demand of ten or more workers, a technological change committee. This committee would be entitled to advance notice of the technological change and to full information about the impact or proposed technological changes on employment, job content and work processes.

I welcome the opportunity to speak on the motion. Technological change and the process of adjustment to change are matters of great importance to Canadians as they affect the competitiveness of our industries and the people who work in them. These issues require careful consideration and I commend the Hon. Member for having introduced the motion.

Our economic performance in the world today is of vital importance to the employment and income prospects of Canadians. It will become increasingly so in view of our need to be competitive internationally. Good industrial relations will form an important part of and make a meaningful contribution to our economic performance. For that reason, we should have an appreciation of a number of significant elements of our industrial relations system as set out in Part I of the Canada Labour Code that are pertinent to the motion before us.

The regulated industries to which the motion refers encompasses a broad range of economic and industrial activities. These are the industries covered under the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour Code which include interprovincial and international railways, airlines, interprovincial highways, transport, telephone, telegraph and cable systems, pipelines, canals, ferries, tunnels and bridges, shipping, longshoring, broadcasting, banking and the primary fishing industry. Most crown corporations are also included and certain undertakings that have been declared by Parliament to be for the general advantage of Canada, including grain elevators, uranium mining and processing, and flour and feed mills.

In other words, the motion would affect a large number of industries that are interprovincial and international in character as well as being of consequence to the national economy and to our national well-being.

The motion suggests that we amend the Canada Labour Code. We should, therefore, briefly review the provisions of the Code, including what it attempts to achieve. According to the preamble to the Code, Parliament recognizes the long tradition in Canada of labour legislation and policy designed to promote the common well-being through the encouragement of free collective bargaining and the constructive settlement of disputes.

It is through its principal elements that the Code establishes collective bargaining as the means through which an efficient and equitable system of industrial relations is achieved.

What are some of the principal elements of our industrial relations system? Part I of the Canada Labour Code establishes a legislative framework of rights and responsibilities within which management and organized labour are to conduct their relations.

The Code grants a legal recognition to the bargaining relationship through the principle of freedom of association and through bargaining unit certification and voluntary recognition provisions. It provides for the settling or adjudication of industrial relations issues of a legal nature by establishing the Canada Labour Code Relations Board to oversee the administration of certain of the Code's provisions.

The Code also sets out the important dispute resolution procedures through conciliation and mediation which assist in the settlement of high profile disputes that have a direct impact on the public interest. These procedures are administered by the federal mediation and conciliation service of Labour Canada.

Investigation of disputes involves, first, collective agreements and complaints of bargaining-related unfair labour practices. These important elements of our industrial relations legislation contribute to a high degree of the stability and industrial relations in the federal jurisdiction.

At this point, I would like to make a few remarks about the technological change provisions in the Canada Labour Code. These provisions are not only germane to the motion brought forward by the Hon. Member, but also constitute an important element of industrial relation systems at this federal level.

The introduction of technological change can have a significant impact on individual workers in terms of income and employment effects. While the introduction of new technology may result in lay-offs and lost income, society as a whole benefits from having more productive and efficient economic assets in place.

Under the provisions of the Canada Labour Code, employee involvement in the implementation of technological change is accomplished primarily through collective bargaining. These provisions encourage unions and management to meet, discuss and reach agreement on ways to minimize the negative effects on employees of technological change. Where the parties have not made provision in their collective agreements for managing the effects of technological change on employees, then the statute provides for collective agreement in force between the parties to be reopened and those provisions relating to terms and conditions or security of employment to be renegotiated.

The board may also grant leave to a union to serve notice to commence collective bargaining. The effect of such leave is that the introduction of technological change is suspended until collective bargaining results in a new agreement or the right to strike or lock-out is required.

Labour and management are free to include in their collective agreements provisions designed to resolve and address issues related to the impact of technological change. There is nothing in the legislation to prevent the parties from establishing committees, as suggested by the motion, dealing specifically with technological change.

In general, the Code provides for measures that ensure the implementation of collective agreements and for the comprehensive and flexible system which facilitates negotiation of these agreements.

The Government has sought to encourage private sector initiatives to a much greater extent in the Canadian society and to urge less reliance on the Government in achieving economic and social goals. This approach to government policy places a greater responsibility on management and unions to resolve their differences without government interference. This is precisely the intention of the approach the Government has taken toward labour relations issues in Canada in its support for individual initiative.

In summary, my review of the industrial relations system at the federal level has attempted to illustrate some of the more salient features or relevance to the Hon. Member's motion. In particular, the large extent to which labour and management resolve their collective bargaining differences between themselves directly attests to the appropriateness of our industrial relations policy which seeks to avoid unnecessary intervention.

In this connection, we have to question the need for the introduction of the motion to amend the Code as proposed. We have to ask whether the intervention suggested by this amendment is warranted or justified. I submit that the Hon. Member has drawn our attention to an issue of continuing concern and a matter over which we will want to maintain a watchful eye as the introduction of technological change is an ongoing process with far reaching consequences.

At this present time, I see no evidence that would warrant an amendment to the technological change provisions of the Code.

• (1730)

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise today in support of the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Dundurn (Mr. Fisher). Specifically, the motion requests that the Government consider the advisability of amending the Canada Labour Code. The amendment would provide all regulated workers with the right to create, upon the demand of 10 or more workers, a technological change committee.

This committee would be entitled to receive advance notice of technological change and full information about the impact of proposed technological changes on their jobs, job content and work processes.

The Canadian workplace has been undergoing rapid changes in recent years. This trend will most certainly continue as a result of the Free Trade Agreement. Therefore, it is imperative that Canadian workers are aware of, and receive adequate notice of any technological changes that could have an effect on their respective workplaces.

The Free Trade Agreement is certainly not the only reason that Canada is undergoing a structural change in the workplace. Indeed, there are many forces causing businesses in Canada to alter, as they strive toward recapturing markets and improving productivity. The world is in the midst of a technological evolution brought on by innovations in telecommunications and automation. Coupled with the globalization of markets and financial resources, companies must now learn to operate as they would in one huge, open market.

As a result, companies must adapt to the new global realities or they will fall behind others that do adapt. Technological changes in the workplace could thus have a myriad of effects on the Canadian worker, changes which, in many instances, have already occurred. Mainly, the displacement of particular skills by machines; the displacement of some skills by other skills; the development and expansion of some activities and the decline of others, to highlight a few.

Canadian workers are well aware of these developments and realize that they too must make changes. The point of this motion is that they be made aware of any proposed technological changes, as well as the impact of these changes so they can make the necessary adjustments in an adequate amount of time prior to their implementation. It is important to note that in the present Canada Labour Code, an employer must give a union at least 120 days notice of its intention to introduce a technological change into their place of business, a technological change that is likely to: "affect the terms and conditions or security of employment of a significant number of employees".

After a respective union receives such a notice which must include information such as the nature of the technological change, the predicted date of introduction, the estimated number and type of employees likely to be affected, the union may request more detailed information. The union may then apply to the Canada Labour Relations Board for an order that bargaining take place, and until that is completed, the changes may not take place.

The Hon. Member's motion today applies to adequate notification of technological change to a committee of workers in the workplace. If the workers have direct notification from the employer, they would be in a much better position to evaluate the effects on job retraining and so on so that they can prepare for a smoother and efficient transition. Also, the aforementioned section of the Canada Labour Code does not define what a "significant number of employees" means.

Technological change and the ensuring effect on employment is probably one of the most important concerns of Canadians today. Technological change in the past did not cause significant and persistent high levels of unemployment. Today, technological changes translate into changes in the demand for various occupational skills.

Canadian workers and labour unions are perceived as being against technological change. This perception is based on the notion that workers are worried about their personal welfare by maintaining their jobs and thus security.

I believe workers are well aware of the changes in the global workplace and thus realize that they must change with the times. Not to change would ultimately mean loss of security. What this motion points out is that workers want adequate notice of changes and not last minute notification. Four months notice through their respective unions is not what one would call adequate notice.

In my opinion, workers do not fear the changes in a workplace as much as they are concerned about the uncertainty of these changes. This uncertainty leaves Canadian workers with the feeling of having no influence in a workplace to which they may have dedicated many years of hard work. The older worker, for example, can be left with the feeling that he or she is being dumped for the sake of a more modern way of productivity. We are all well aware that over the past 10 to 15 years there has been a steady decline in labour force participation by older workers, particularly by men in the 50 to 64 age bracket.

When we talk about technological changes in the workplace, a very important variable comes to the forefront. That is education. On average, older workers possess fewer years of formal education than younger workers who are competing in the labour market. Characteristics that older workers possess, such as loyalty, conscientiousness and lower rates of turnover, are often overlooked for the sake of what a new and technologically trained individual can offer.

Older workers are not against change, they just want adequate notice so as to afford the opportunity to retrain themselves and thus maintain their employment status with their respective employer.

In a study undertaken by the Labour Council of Metropolitan Toronto in 1986, financed by Canada's Technology Impact Research Fund, the council found a lack of corporate planning for the technological change process. The study states:

> Only 39 per cent (55 of 140 firms in the sample) report any corporate or strategic plan for the implementation of new technology. Thus, more than 60 per cent of the firms in the sample were ill prepared for the technological innovations that competition supposedly demands.

Other studies concluded that three quarters of employees surveyed were either in favour of technological change, or at least had no opinion against it.

This, I submit, would be because workers came to the realization that a smaller number of relatively secure jobs is better than having to barely survive in an industry that was declining because technological changes were not made.

National studies conducted by the Canadian Paper Workers Union and by the United Steelworkers of America concluded that there was no resistance to technological change. That would seem to be a non issue.

Labour is reasonably open to technological changes that will improve productivity. At the same time, there are some serious concerns about the process of technological change. What is of concern is how technology and the ensuing new work methods are introduced. Inherent in these concerns are three points: First, are the technological changes necessary; second, the minimization of workplace disruption both in terms of displacement of employees and the protection of individual rights and standards; third, the negotiation of compensation for those affected by the displacement of labour.

These are concerns that would be addressed with the establishment of a technological change committee in the workplace. It is important to point out to the House that in a 1985 survey taken by the Ontario Task Force on Employment and New Technology, it noted that consultation with labour on new technology is the exception rather than the rule. More direct and ongoing consultation is needed between the employer and employee.

I believe that the motion tabled in the House today would be a major step toward legitimizing both parties' interests. Thus, I support the motion. I see it as a major step between both the employer and the employee as we move rapidly toward an increasingly competitive global workplace.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Dundurn (Mr. Fisher) for having the foresight to bring before the House the important issue of technological change and innovation.

Since taking office in 1984, this Government has made it clear that it had as a priority the promotion and development of technological innovation throughout Canadian society. We strongly believe that Canada's future prosperity largely depends on the country's ability to use technology to its advantage.

We are indeed committed to improve Canada's future international competitiveness through more effective technological application and innovation. We are convinced that workers too will benefit from increasing our competitiveness.

Let me point out that a series of important initiatives have flowed from this priority. It was translated into the creation of a Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Research, Science and Technology, to provide a continuing parliamentary focus on this vital area of national public policy.

• (1740)

As well, it led to the creation of a national advisory board on science and technology to enhance Canada's standing on the world market and a Department of Industry, Science and Technology with a mandate to work toward a closer integration of Canadian industry with Canadian scientific knowledge and technological skills.

In the last five years, this Government has consistently worked at developing a cohesive and coherent technological policy. In fact, the National Council of Science and Technology ministry was especially created to oversee the implementation of a new national science and technology policy.

Many important programs were established to support this policy. Among the most successful is the InnovAction Program which has focused on such critical areas as: technological diffusion, development of strategic technologies, effective use of technologies, human resources for the use of technologies and public education in science and technology.

A particularly successful program is Labour Canada's Technology Impact Program, TIP, which was designed to study how to deal effectively with the adjustment problems arising from the introduction of workplace technologies. This program stems from this Government's awareness that to maximize the gains from any technological applications, there has to be a greater co-operative effort between those implicated in the change when implementing new workplace technologies. Studies such as those carried out by the Economic Council of Canada and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce Task Force on Harnessing Change have clearly supported our view that this partnership is critical to the effective use of new technologies.

Indeed, the Technology Impact Program was specifically created to provide labour organizations with the financial assistance to participate actively in the process of change. Projects carried out under TIP not only focused specifically on the human dimension of change but also involved the full participation of workers and their representatives in the process of change.

More important, all these projects demonstrated how vitally significant labour management co-operation could be to the effective use of technological innovation.

The funds have been used by labour organizations as well as other groups, such as women, disabled workers and older workers to ease their adjustment to the new technology and to explore creative utilizations which might improve the quality of their lives. These projects have ranged right across all sectors of the economy: The construction and auto industries, fishing, forestry, printing, textiles and clothing, health care, education and municipal and provincial Governments, to name just a few.

This Government has addressed the technological change and innovation issue through its series of national and regional conferences on technology and innovation. As recently as a few weeks ago, an important conference on the workplace technology, The Human Dimension, hosted by Labour Canada, attracted a large contingent of business and labour leaders who shared their technological change experiences and discussed ways of making the new technology work for Canada.

This successful event afforded all the participants the opportunity to review how management and labour have, and sometimes have not, succeeded in dealing with the issues that frequently accompany technological change in the workplace. The human dimension of such change was sharply kept in focus throughout the discussions. Among the human impacts of innovation considered were a broad array of human needs such as worker autonomy, meaningful work, ergonomics, health and safety issues, skill requirements and better communication between all those implicated in the change. Together, the participants also looked forward to future developments and to the new, unexplored challenges of implementation strategies which would promote a renewed labour management co-operation. The Canada Labour Code fosters labour management co-operation. The climate of trust that currently characterizes Canadian labour relations must not be undermined.

The Technology Impact Program and the recent conference on the Human dimension of Technological Change have greatly contributed to current knowledge and understanding of effective technological application and innovation in the Canadian workplace.

These initiatives underscore this Government's view that if technology is to be used to improve our well-being, both in the workplace and in Canadian society as a whole, it must be implemented in a humane way with the co-operation of those implicated in the change.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Madam Speaker, Canadians live in a world of rapid change. We are affected by changes everywhere, in every aspect of our daily lives, and sometimes in very striking ways. The effects of change are probably felt most keenly in the workplace, since new developments in international trade and the changing nature of the labour force are obliging Canadians to adjust and to seek new ways of carrying out their tasks more successfully. Technological change also has a considerable impact at work, and that is why I would like to thank Hon. Members for having brought this very important question to the attention of the House.

Madam Speaker, the Speech from the Throne, the labour force development strategy and the Budget reflect this Government's efforts to ensure that Canada will be able to cope with change and will take the necessary steps to do so. Madam Speaker, here is proof that Canada is forging ahead and that change can be made to work to our best advantage.

The five objectives set by the Government for its second mandate are to strengthen the economy, build a caring and compassionate society, protect the environment, foster values that make Canada unique and continue to promote national unity. Madam Speaker, these are the objectives we are resolved to pursue, confident in the resources of this country and with the conviction that any initiative to reduce the deficit can only further these goals.

Madam Speaker, faced with the challenges and opportunities arising from rapidly changing economic and social conditions, both in Canada and abroad, the Canadian Government believes it is even more important to take advantage of the knowledge and skills, expertise and co-operation of all Canadians. Madam Speaker, the Government is firmly resolved to build and support constructive partnerships in which unions, businesses and the Government will come together.

During the last four years, Madam Speaker, we have witnessed a spectacular change in the relationship between unions and employers in the workplace. We have seen a considerable reduction in the frequency of labour disputes and, also very important, we have seen a new and encouraging degree of co-operation away from the bargaining table. Madam Speaker, unions and employers are finding new and often innovative ways of working together to deal with common issues and concerns. There are new, joint initiatives and a co-operative approach to dealing with problems, and all of this is happening across Canada in various sectors of the economy.

The Government supports these efforts by unions and employers, especially at the sectoral level. In this respect, we have seen the development of a number of new and exciting initiatives by industrial unions to deal with the particular concerns of their activity sector.

The most widely known of these initiatives is perhaps the Canadian Steel Trade and Employment Congress, founded in May 1985 by the United Metal Workers of America and major steel producers. Madam Speaker, Labour Canada helped the union and the companies to set up this joint consultation and research body. The Congress has enabled steel workers and producers to deal jointly with the trade and employment issues affecting their sectors. One of their achievements, and in fact the most obvious one, has been the labour force adjustment program, designed specifically for the sector covered by the Congress with the help of a $20 million grant from Employment and Immigration Canada.

The Congress has also been active on the issue of steel imports, so much so that the Government introduced changes in favour of the industry, responding to its needs. In February 1987, the Congress saw the abolition of the general preferential tariff on steel imports from countries such as Korea, Taiwan and Brazil. Madam Speaker, this tariff was unnecessarily favourable to exports from these countries to Canada, despite the fact that they had become very competitive with our own producers. Later that year, a system for monitoring exports, considered by the industry as a way to control steel exports, especially the transshipment of steel to the U.S. market, was implemented.

In the electric and electronic products manufacturing sector, Labour Canada and Employment and Immigration helped a number of businesses and five unions to develop a human resources strategy for their sector. Together, unions and companies in this industry examined training and skills upgrading programs, including a plan for the joint financing of these activities, strategies for implementing technological change and measures to improve the transition between school and work for young graduates.

Such activities will help the electric and electronic products manufacturing industry plan better for, and adjust to the changes arising from increased competition and rapidly evolving technology. The industry will be in a position to train and retrain workers in order to provide them with the skills they will need today and tomorrow. It will be able to introduce new technology effectively, with a minimum of disruption. It will also be able to recruit new young workers and thus provide for the future of the industry. The Unions and the companies will always work together.

Supported by the Government, Madam Speaker, the International Union of Wood workers of America and a number of producers from British Columbia formed the Western Wood Products Forum, in May 1988. This joint research and consultation organization is now looking into important issues such as market access, worker adjustment and the use of forest products. More specifically, the Forum decided that one of its major priorities was establishing a special agreement on plywood. An agreement of this kind would help companies improve a situation that is currently very precarious, and thus make them more competitive on world markets.

In recent months, Labour Canada has engaged in talks and worked to promote new sectoral initiatives with labour and management in a number of industries that are important to the Canadian economy.

The Canadian Steel Trade and Employment Congress, the Western Wood Products Forum and the joint human resources committee of the electrical and electronics manufacturing industry represent a small group of risky businesses, directed jointly by labour and management, that influence unions and employers throughout the country. They represent a trend to greater cooperation and teamwork to solve problems, showing the ability and determination of labour and management to work together, besides at the bargaining table, on questions and concerns of mutual interest.

Madam Speaker, the Government is determined to continue supporting labour and management, to encourage and facilitate dynamic partnerships between unions and employers. In this way, Canadians will be able to meet more effectively the social and economic challenges that we share.

Technological Change

[English]

Mrs. Louise Feltham (Wildrose): Madam Speaker, I wish to comment briefly on the motion before the House that the Canada Labour Code be amended to allow all federal jurisdiction workers the right, upon the demand of 10 or more workers, to create a technological change committee. It is envisaged that such technological change committees would be entitled to advance notice of technological change and full information about the impact of proposed technological changes on employment, job content and work processes.

Under the Canadian industrial relations system, adjustment to technological change in the federal jurisdiction is dealt with primarily through the collective bargaining process. To support this process, a number of legislative initiatives have been introduced over the years.

Equally important to the impact of railway run-throughs was the issue of the manner in which technological changes were being introduced by management. Recognizing the important labour-management issue involved, the Government of the day established an independent industrial inquiry commission to explore ways to better manage the introduction of technological change in the context of Canada's economic environment and free collective bargaining system.

The approach eventually adopted by Parliament after hearing from both labour and management involved the placement of requirements in the Canada Labour Code concerning advance notice and the negotiation of the effects of significant changes on employees. The negotiation process component under certain circumstances envisaged eventual access to conciliation procedure, and to strike or lock-out rights under the code.

The Canada Labour Relations Board was designated as the agency responsible for determining questions as to whether notice should have been given in a particular situation and as to whether or not a proposed technological change was of sufficient significance to warrant triggering negotiations during the term of an otherwise closed agreement.

Most important, the parties were encouraged to develop in advance of actual changes their own means of coping with technological change issues through specific provisions in their collective agreements. If an employer failed to agree to contract provisions and procedures satisfactory to the union, then that employer would be vulnerable to having the collective agreement reopened if significant technological changes were introduced during its term.

These innovative changes introduced into the Canada Labour Code in 1982 had the specific intent of providing a period of notice of the intent to introduce a significant technological change and providing a mechanism for adjudication and redress in cases where notice had not been given. They were also meant to provide a means for reopening an otherwise fixed term and closed collective agreement, in cases where a technological change might adversely affect a significant number of employees. Finally, their intent was to encourage the parties in collective bargaining to adopt their own measures, in advance, to cope with technological changes and to offer exemptions from application of the technological change provisions when such measures were embodied in provisions of a collective agreement.

In essence, the approach, which was eventually adopted by Parliament in 1972, preserved the essentially stabilizing features of the fixed term closed collective agreement. However, it also provided an opportunity to bargain when the basis on which the agreement had been originally negotiated was fundamentally altered by the introduction of new technology.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I must interrupt the Hon. Member. The time provided for the consideration of Private Member's Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 96(1), the Order is dropped from the Order Paper.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTED DAY, S.O. 81—ENVIRONMENT

The House resumed from Thursday, June 8, consideration of the motion of Ms. Hunter:

> That, in recognition of the importance of contributing to an environmentally sustainable future, it be an Order of the House that:
> (1) the Government introduce by September 30, 1989 an Act to require environmental assessment of major federal projects, programs and undertakings, such Act to provide for the appointment of an environmental officer of the House of Commons whose duties shall include the assessment of all practices of the House, and who shall be charged with the responsibility of reporting to the Speaker on ways in which the House can contribute to a safe and environmentally healthy future;
> (2) the Government table, within five sitting days of the first sitting day after June 30, 1989, its plans for the safe disposal of toxic wastes; and
> (3) the Government table by December 31, 1989 its plans to achieve minimal discharge of deleterious substances into Canadian fresh and coastal waters.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being six o'clock, pursuant to the order made on Thursday, June 8, 1989 and Standing Order 45(6), the House will now proceed to the deferred divisions on the business of supply.

Call in the Members.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE

The House resumed from Friday, June 9, 1989, consideration of the motion of Mr. Tobin:

That this House condemns the Government for its short-sighted and punitive policies that are designed to eliminate passenger rail services in Canada despite the essential nature of these services to the development of communities in all regions of the country.

And on the amendment of Mr. Benjamin:

That the motion be amended by adding the following words:

"and that this House further condemn the Government for reneging on the commitment made by the Deputy Prime Minister, which reads in part, "every step necessary will be taken to ensure that VIA will operate in a safe and reliable fashion in offering good service to Canadians from coast to coast".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the amendment.

Mr. Riis: On a point of order, I wonder if there could be unanimous consent to apply the last vote to the next two motions.

Mr. Benjamin: There might be some Tories who want to vote with it.

Miss Grey: Madam Speaker, I would like to have my name removed from the yeas on the previous vote. Had there been a recorded vote on this vote and amendment, I would have abstained.

Mr. Kindy: I would like to register my vote on the amendment as voting against the amendment and abstaining on the main motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Apart from the Members who have advised the table of the changes in their votes, I take it that the House agrees to apply the division just taken to the next two questions.

Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, there is no such thing as abstentions in the House of Commons. Therefore, the two Hon. Members who just got up will be shown as absent.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Benjamin) which was negatived on the following division:

INDUSTRY, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the report of the legislative committee on Bill C-3, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find that there is unanimous consent to my putting immediately, without debate, the motion which is on page 4 of the Notice Paper in my name, with respect to extended hours.

• (1110)

Before putting the motion, I would like to point out that the motion provides for the allotted day vote that would normally be taken at 5.45 on Thursday of this week to be taken on Monday, June 19, 1989 at 6 p.m. If the vote were taken at 6 p.m. it would encroach upon private Members' hour. It would be our intention that once the vote is over on Monday, June 19, that there will be a full private Members' hour allotted commencing at the time that Private Members' Business is called directly after the vote. Therefore, there is no intention to encroach upon Private Members' Business and that full hour would apply.

Therefore, as listed in today's Order Paper, I move:

That, further to the Orders of the House adopted on May 3 and 23, 1989, the hours of sitting and business of the House, commencing on June 16 up to and including June 30, 1989, shall be as follows:

(1) Friday, June 16th and 30th

10 a.m. to 3.00 p.m.—Private Members' Business from 2.00 p.m. to 3.00 p.m.

(2) Monday, June 19th and 26th

11 a.m. to 1.00 p.m. and 2.00 p.m. to 10.00 p.m.—Private Members' Business from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m.—Standing Order 38 proceedings from 10.00 p.m. to 10.30 p.m.

(3) Tuesday, June 20th

11.00 a.m. to 1.00 p.m. and 2.00 p.m. to 10.00 p.m.—Private Members' Business from 6.00 p.m. to 7.00 p.m.—Standing Order 38 proceedings from 10 p.m. to 10.30 p.m.

(4) Tuesday, June 27th

2.00 p.m. to 10.00 p.m.—Private Members' Business from 6.00 p.m. to 7.00 p.m.—Standing Order 38 proceedings from 10.00 p.m. to 10.30 p.m.

(5) Wednesday, June 21st and 28th

2.00 p.m. to 10.00 p.m.

(6) Thursday, June 22nd

11.00 a.m. to 1.00 p.m. and 2.00 p.m. to 6.00 p.m.—no Private Members' Business—no Proceedings under Standing Order 38

(7) Thursday, June 29th

11.00 a.m. to 1.00 p.m. and 2.00 p.m. to 10.00 p.m.—Private Members' Business from 6.00 p.m. to 7.00 p.m.—Standing Order 38 proceedings from 10.00 p.m. to 10.30 p.m.

That, Thursday, June 15, 1989, shall be an allotted day and any division demanded on the opposition motion, on that day, shall be deferred until 6.00 p.m. on Monday, June 19, 1989; and

That, following the adoption of this motion, no motion pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 27(1) shall be receivable.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

Mr. Gauthier: Indeed, there have been negotiations. I have read the notice of motion and it is in conformity with the agreed time schedule.

I would like to ask one small question: Can I get the undertaking of the Government that, when the House sits until 10 p.m., it will not use Standing Order 26(1) which allows for a Member to stand in his or her place and extend the hours past the normal adjournment hour? In other words, on those days when the House sits until 10 p.m. will the Government give the House its undertaking that it will not use Standing Order 26(1)?

Mr. Lewis: Certainly, in return for an undertaking from the opposition Parties that there will be no dilatory motions on those days.

Mr. Speaker: There seems to be some kind of conditional agreement here. Perhaps I will hear the Hon. Member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: The reaction of the Government is appropriate that, assuming on a certain day there are no dilatory motions or any dilatory activity whatsoever in terms of frustrating the Government, there will be an undertaking that there will not be an extension of hours on the debate. That is a reasonable exchange.

Perhaps I will use this opportunity to state that of the legislation we are aware of and which the Government has brought to our attention in terms of its interest in pursuing, there are a number of Bills that concern us greatly.

I am afraid the Bill amending the Unemployment Insurance Act will not receive much co-operation at all from members of the New Democratic Party, and also the plant breeders' rights legislation. I think it is only fair to indicate to the Government House Leader that on those two pieces of legislation particularly, we in the New Democratic Party do not plan to co-operate in terms of facilitating passage of that legislation. We think that the legislation is bad. We think that the legislation is inappropriate. We do not plan to facilitate its passage in any way, shape or form.

Mr. Lewis: Without giving the undertaking my friend asked for, there is a spirit to co-operate and get the business done. The motion is before the House and we should move to vote immediately.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the subject matter of the motion. Does the Hon. Government House Leader have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

CLOSING OF CFB LONDON

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Madam Speaker, it is a privilege to rise in the House and present a petition on behalf of thousands of Londoners and people from the area. The petitioners are asking the Government to rescind its callous action in closing CFB London.

I hope that the Government has not become so cynical and arrogant that it can disregard the thousands of voices that are calling upon it to change its direction with respect to closing CFB London.

PROPOSED MINE AT SHOAL LAKE

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the honour to table a petition, having been certified correct as to form and content by the Clerk of Petitions. The petition is signed by some 250 residents of the city of Winnipeg. The petitioners express concern over the proposed development of a major mining operation at Shoal Lake, the source of Winnipeg's drinking water.

The petitioners ask that all possible measures be taken to prevent environmental damage to the city's valuable water resource. As a result, the petitioners ask for a complete federal environmental impact assessment of the proposed mine at Shoal Lake prior to the commencement of any mining operations.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 66 and 96.

POINT OF ORDER

COMMENTS OF MEMBER FOR BEAVER RIVER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Madam Speaker, I have a brief point of order arising from yesterday's Debates. At page 2939 of Hansard, the Hon. Member for Beaver River (Miss Grey) stated:

> Madam Speaker, I would like to have my name removed from the yeas on the previous vote.

When I look at the recorded votes, her vote continues to be in the "yea" column. I ask that the Table examine that and advise us as to whether or not her name could have been removed from the roll at that point, because obviously the Member had made a mistake in her voting and attempted to have it corrected later.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

Mr. Gauthier: I was in the House at the time and I understood it differently. I thought the Hon. Member for Beaver River wanted her vote on the subsequent vote to be negatived, but the vote to stand on the previous vote. There is a word in here that perhaps should be modified. The Parliamentary Secretary is pointing out to the House that indeed she did not want to remove the "yea" vote on the previous vote. She wanted that to stand. However, she wanted the next vote to be negatived, as far as she was concerned, and abstain.

Mr. Cooper: I had the same concerns when I heard it last night, although when I read Hansard today it seems very specific that she was not indicating that she did not want to vote on the votes that followed, but she did want a change made to the manner in which she had voted on the first vote. Perhaps we could have some clarification on this matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will reserve on that matter, and after discussion with the Table Officers there will be some clarification sought. If a correction is needed, it will be done.

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface) moves:

> That this House call upon the Government to take steps to enhance the federal commitment to the support of post-secondary education, scientific and technological development, job training and re-training and the battle against illiteracy, all of which provide the essential foundation for building a strong and competitive future for Canada.

He said: Madam Speaker, I rise in the House today to address, I believe, one of the most critical questions to be presented in this Chamber of late. I am delighted to be able to do so with able colleagues from all sides of the House.

I believe that education is absolutely essential to the growth of our nation. It is particularly important for the development of insightful cultural policies, meaningful social policies and effective economic development policies. Most great nations of the world see education as the critical cornerstone of its cultural, social and economic development, and its main tool to remain competitive, a leader of nations.

There are a number of important Canadians who have made very significant statements about the importance of education. I should like to share a few of their comments with the House.

A. W. Johnson of the Department of the Secretary of State in 1985 said:

> It is a mark of the maturity and the state of advancement of Canada that it has long been taken for granted that an educated society is a richer society—socially, economically and culturally. And it is a measure of the state of development of our nation that we have given expression to this belief, this ethos, by making almost universally available to all who want and can benefit from them diverse forms and programs of post-secondary education and training.

Donald Savage in The Toronto Star in 1986 said:

> —if we are to progress economically as a nation, we will need more, not fewer, university graduates in science, engineering and business management. If we are to survive in a competitive and frequently hostile world, we will have to know the cultures, history, politics and languages of our friends, our competitors, and our enemies. If we are to make any mark in the history of the world, all this effort must be suffused with the ideals of our civilization, its history, its philosophy and its literature.

Just recently Mr. de Grandpré in his report made the following comments:

> On an urgent basis, the first Ministers find the appropriate vehicle to review the education/training systems in Canada in order to increase the responsiveness to the requirements of rapidly changing international and domestic economies. Such a vehicle should involve participation by both business and labour, and might take the form of a federal-provincial royal commission on education/training.

I believe that education must lay the groundwork for a flexible and adaptable workforce and also provide Canadians with the tools we need to grow personally and professionally. It is important that our education systems facilitate the matching of labour force demands and supply, but we must not overlook the need to have an informed citizenry which can participate meaningfully in the Canadian political process.

It is education which will allow new immigrants to participate fully in Canadian life. It is education which will allow our aboriginal people the opportunity to overcome barriers to their full participation in Canada and give them the ability to attain self-government. It is education on which we will rely to produce tolerance of others in Canada and to respect equality rights of minorities, women and other disadvantaged groups. Attitudes formed in part by our education system will create the Canada of the next century, unified or divided, economically vigorous or regressive, tolerant or intolerant.

The Canadian Labour Market and Productivity Centre, as quoted by Jeffrey Simpson in The Globe and Mail on May 30 had this to say:

> Colleges and universities are experiencing higher student-teacher ratios, deteriorating physical plant, and aging laboratory equipment.

Hyman Solomon in The Financial Post on June 12, 1989 said the following:

> Chronic shortages and mismatching in many skilled trades is getting worse, not better. And apprenticeship programs are fraught with high drop-out rates and have few women participants.

Many Hon. Members will recall John Polyani citing the lack of opportunity for Canadian scientists. More recently the head of the Science Council of Canada, Geraldine Kenney-Wallace, said:

> Canada is very much behind; that this will eventually have a definite economic impact—while the rest of the world is getting its act together, Canadians are still arguing over whether they should commission a script.

That is what the chairman of the Science Council of Canada had to say. She went on:

> I think the consequences, quite frankly, down the line are in the pocketbooks of Canadians. In other words, there is going to be a drastic drop in the standard of living. We are already living on credit now—It's a good idea that counts in the first place. A good idea is the hardest currency of all.

A colleague of mine in addressing the problem of literacy stated:

> Because Canada has almost 5 million people who could profit by improving their literacy skills, much of their potential will never be realized unless all levels of government mount a massive campaign of assistance.

There have been valiant efforts in a number of places, but much more needs to be done for this important group of Canadians. I want to remind Hon. Members of some of the promises made by the Government.

[Translation]

In 1984, the Conservatives were, and I quote:

> Resolved to double the Budget for research and development in Canada by raising it to 2.5 of GNP—

—and they felt that—

> The federal Government should negotiate long term, five-year funding agreements with councils that dispense research grants.

The Conservative Party stated: "We are resolved to maintain the federal Government's present financial commitment according to the formula established in the 1977 agreement— We believe that the financing of post-secondary education is a major priority for both levels of government".

[English]

Putting it gently, there has been a massive retreat by the federal Government from the post-secondary sector and those areas of education in which it has been involved. It changed the formula for the transfer of funds in 1985 by reducing the transfer by 2 per cent. There was another reduction in the most recent Budget of 1 per cent. If one looks at those two cuts that have occurred over a nine-year period, because the others will have been in place for a period of time, there is a reduction of transfers for health and education of almost $24 billion and approximately $8 billion of that was to go to post-secondary education.

What are the results of that kind of reduction? Clearly there are few choices of course. Some people will say, and I believe there is some merit in that particular statement, that we have not heard an outcry from individual institutions. When one looks at Canada with its over 250 post-secondary institutions, it is very difficult to find out exactly what is being cut where.

What are some of the other results? There has been a massive increase in tuition fees across the country with the exception of Quebec. If you doubt me, talk to the student associations in the various provinces, within colleges and universities. There has been a mounting student debt. That has been acknowledged by government as well. There has been a continued deterioration of plant and equipment.

I must emphasize that this is one of the major problems we are facing in post-secondary education today. There is simply not enough money available to ensure that the plants are kept up-to-date or enough money to ensure that the equipment we require in order to remain competitive is in fact in place.

Let us look at training and retraining. There was an initial cut of $700 million. Now there is an infusion of $800 million. When we look at the $800 million, it is quite impressive. However, we have to look at it within the total context. Once the $700 million is taken away, $800 million added, and adjust for inflation, there is not a significant increase. It has been further compounded by a siphoning off of some of those funds to the private sector where there is the purchase of places going on during the last few years. This has in fact removed some important funding from our colleges and universities. In fact, that is contributing as well to the deterioration of plant and equipment and has made fewer dollars available for those activities that colleges and universities would normally pursue.

What are the results of cuts in training and retraining? Many people are asking some very serious questions about the private sector initiatives. Are these private sector courses equal in quality to what is found in the community colleges and universities? Are the controls in place? Is someone examining the curricula being produced, and is it being evaluated?

While some good work has obviously been done, at the same time I suggest that it would merit significant attention and an in-depth review to see whether or not this siphoning off has been in the interest of all Canadians. Some of the other results of the cut-backs in training and retraining are waiting lists of up to two years and longer.

Older workers are being victimized. Recently I talked to an older worker, 58 years old, who needed retraining. He was told that he would have to wait two years, but he had hoped to be able to retire at age 60. There is not much hope. I have a particular soft spot for older workers who have contributed so much to this nation. A number of causes, including the Canada-U.S. Agreement, globalization, and what will happen in Europe in 1990-1992, are having an impact on Canadian workers in all parts of the country.

Quite apart from the massive impact of the recent Budget, people are being put out of work and need retraining. We must be exceptionally sensitive to that need, especially toward those who are older.

One particularly significant effect of all these reductions is what I call the real hidden tax. There is almost $24 billion less being transferred to the provinces for health and education. There is a reduction in training and retraining, as well as in other areas. Very often, the responsibility for these shortfalls are turned over to the provinces and, depending upon the wealth of the province, they can either absorb them totally, absorb part of them, or not absorb any of those cuts.

When the province cannot absorb such a cost, it is passed on to the client who in this particular case is the student. This is one of the reasons why tuition fees are rising dramatically in virtually all parts of Canada. The cost is passed on to the province, which is then passed on to the student. When the cost is passed on to the poorer provinces and territories which are not as well off, very often the poorer students must pay a greater share. That is most unfortunate.

Let us examine research and development and the Government's commitment toward this area. As I indicated previously, the Government made a commitment to increase the contribution to 2.5 per cent of GNP. However, it is barely 1.4 per cent, about half of what is being spent in the United States, Sweden, and Japan. There are fewer scientists than in most of those nations.

We are losing our competitive edge. That is not only my statement; it is the opinion of the head of the Economic Council of Canada who made that statement a short time ago. The level field that would be provided by additional education in our universities and community colleges with additional research and development is getting bumpy, perhaps even mountainous. How can we possibly compete on an even footing with the United States if we will be spending significantly less on those very programs that would make us equal or better?

What are some of the other opportunities that are lost because of this lack of funding for research and development? There are fewer opportunities for good jobs for our youth. I believe all Parties are interested in the creation of jobs, but let us add another dimension, that is, the creation of good long-term jobs which will challenge the people of our nation and challenge our youth to go forward and produce more, to obtain jobs that will make them feel good about being Canadian by providing some insight and a contribution toward our cultural, social and economic development policies.

I suggest that this is one area where we can make some very substantial investment and reap some significant benefits for the people of Canada, particularly the young people in our colleges and universities.

Let us examine student assistance. The cost of living criteria have not been changed since 1984. The total amount of funds available have been frozen. Everyone acknowledges that the part-time assistance program is a disaster. There are two statistics about it, not one of which is better than the other. Less than 1 per cent of the people are using that program. There is a mounting debt load for students and rapidly increasing costs to students and parents. There is a climate of uncertainty because of the fear of accumulating debt and being unable to repay it.

There is a great opportunity for Canada to produce new highly qualified people who could become the professors of the next decade. We will need many new professors because it is a group in our society that is ageing. There is no large pool to replace them anywhere in the world. What better investment than to ensure that our young people are trained so they can assume those responsibilities in our universities?

Almost five million Canadians require assistance in literacy. While there has been a commitment of $110 million over five years, that represents about $4.50 per student per year. There will be little change, if any. The potential of almost five million Canadians, which is the size of a number of countries in this world, will probably not be realized.

Let us look at some of the other reductions. We do not know what the impact will be on education of our aboriginal people, on women's programs, on multiculturalism or on official languages.

Madam Speaker, I just quoted a number of reliable authorities that have pointed to a major retreat by the federal Government from the education sector. Transfer payments for education alone are expected to be cut by about $8 billion. Training and skills upgrading: there were cutbacks totalling $700 million, and they added $800 million. However, if we adjust this amount in terms of inflation, there has been a considerable reduction.

Furthermore, some of these funds have been switched around and transferred elsewhere in the private sector.

As for research and development, we provide only half the funding provided by the United States, Japan and Sweden. We have fewer researchers than many of these countries, although this would be a magnificent opportunity to enable young Canadians to explore new directions!

Financial assistance to students: the total amount is frozen. There have been no cost-of-living adjustments since 1984. As far as programs for part-time students are concerned, they are a total failure and all sectors admit as much.

Regarding literacy training, the Government has committed $110 million over five years. This is about $4.50 per student per year. And when we look at those $110 million, we must realize that we are talking about 5 million people. I realize the federal Government is doing this together with the provincial governments but, as I said earlier, we must invest a lot more in this area.

There have been other cutbacks affecting multiculturalism, programs for Native people, women and official languages. What kind of impact will these cutbacks have on education programs?

I did not mention the fact that the program of instruction for new Canadians, with the books they were given to get acquainted with Canada, has been dropped.

Madam Speaker, I want to ask the federal Government to rethink its priorities in education, not only for the sake of our youth and other Canadians who want to study and get a better education, but for the wellbeing of this country. If we want to enhance our quality of life and that of other countries, if we want to improve our economy and our competitive position, education must be the cornerstone of a comprehensive policy affecting our cultural, social and economic sectors.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments. The Hon. Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest).

Mr. Charest: Questions and comments, Madam Speaker! First of all, let me congratulate the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duhamel) for his speech. I think that he raised some very important points and I can assure you that as Minister of State for Youth, a Member of this House and a member of the Government, I too am very concerned about post-secondary education and everything to do with training, including employment programs.

I can tell Members of this House in complete sincerity, Madam Speaker, that the Government is particularly concerned about the very high drop-out rate of secondary school students in Canada now. The Hon. Member for St. Boniface did not refer to it, but Canada has a drop-out rate of around 30 per cent. That is a five-year average, but you must understand that it is not easy to have a very precise figure. I think there is agreement in Canada that the rate is about 30 per cent. That is a very high rate, higher than in most of the industrialized countries with which we compete. And that phenomenon disturbs us. It is a disturbing phenomenon, especially for a country that talks about free trade, a country that— And I am from Québec, you know, Madam Speaker, and in Québec there is a lot of talk about entrepreneurship, people talk about it and have clear ambitions, except that at some point we will have to think seriously about our country's ability to develop skilled labour to be able to meet these new challenges and manage the new technologies. It seems to me that this in any case is a very important challenge for our country, Madam Speaker, probably much more important than most people now suspect.

There is work to do. I can tell you that I intend to talk about it a lot because there is also an important social problem. You know, we tend to look at employment and training from an economic point of view, but the social significance of employment is not sufficiently recognized in our society. And in our society, working is how we participate in it. We forget, but that is the social contract here in Canada. Implicitly, you participate fully and totally in Canadian society when you work. The definition of employment itself is changing as well, but it is still based on work.

This means that our systems will have to be harmonized more, in any case, to be able to play this role and reach this objective.

Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Opposition Members for their great patience. We feel that they are eager to hear me. They want to listen with interest to what I have to say this morning, but I was rather intrigued by my colleague's remarks for the following reason. He said a lot about the problems that they feel, that they seem to see and have identified, but I am always a little puzzled when Opposition Members speak to us in the House, because it is extremely rare for them to tell us what they would do instead. You see, that is the problem!

I enjoy being a member of the Government and proposing things, you know, but I would like to know, when a government has to make choices, what they on the other side—the Liberals and New Democrats—would do instead! You will note that in his speech, he did not talk at all about what the federal Liberals would do instead. My God, what a puzzle! He gets elected to the House of Commons, pretends to be able to govern the country, comes to the beginning of a mandate, criticizes the Government, makes a long speech and is completely unable to tell us what they would do instead! I want to know, Madam Speaker, because the federal Government—our Government—has increased the budget for post-secondary education and health care, under one agreement, from $15 billion in the 1984-85 fiscal year to more than $20 billion for the 1990-91 fiscal year.

Madam Speaker, I have a feeling that the Liberals want to take the floor away from me!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Allmand: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I am not quite clear on the following. Has the Minister taken the floor on a speech in this debate, or is it supposed to be a question or comment?

If it is a question or comment. I would ask for your intervention and direction because, according to the rules, questions and comments are supposed to be brief and to the point and to allow a response from the person who has just spoken. I suggest, Madam Speaker, that the comments just made by the Minister go much beyond the rule on this matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There is one point which I would like to make for some Hon. Members who seem to think that when a Member rises on the question and comment period he or she must ask a question. I think the Hon. Member is of course incorrect; the Hon. Member can make a comment.

I think the Hon. Minister does know that he has taken a lot of the 10-minute period, considering that quite a few other Members had risen in the hope of asking questions. The Hon. Member was finishing with a question. I will allow him to finish his question very quickly, to allow the Hon. Member for St. Boniface time to answer and maybe to get some other questions from the floor. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Harvard: I rise on a point of order. Madam Speaker, the time for this exchange which has been quite unnecessarily and brought on by the Hon. Minister, is that going to be taken from this round of 10 minutes?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think the Hon. Member will allow the Chair to use her judgment on that. The Hon. Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Charest: First of all, Madam Speaker, with all due respect, and I realize that there is a lot going on in the House at once, I can assure you that when I rose in the House, there were no other Members on their feet. So with all due respect, I did not have the impression I was jumping the queue, and I can only regret, and fortunately there are witnesses in the House today to see this—

[English]

I can only regret that the Liberal Opposition would try to cut off Members on this side from saying anything, because it does not want to hear what we have to say. That is what the point of order is about.

Since the Hon. Member for St. Boniface in his opening speech on an opposition day brought forward by them on such critical issues as post-secondary education, illiteracy, training, and re-training, and in the name of the Liberal Party of Canada, had absolutely nothing, zero per cent, to say about what they would do if they were the Government, could he please give us an indication, just a little idea of what little thoughts they may have on these issues?

[Translation]

Mr. Duhamel: Madam Speaker, first of all, I want to thank you for your comments on my speech, and I am very pleased to see that the Chair agrees with me.

If I understood his comments correctly, it was mainly about what we would do if we were in power. Well, in 1992, I will show you exactly what we will do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Duhamel: Meanwhile— Would you please have the courtesy to hear me out? If I were the Minister, I would not have cut off transfer payments. I would not have cut training and skills upgrading. I would have increased funding for research and development. I would have increased financial support for literacy training. Those are some of things that could have been done. I would have— I must say that the Minister is very good at putting the blame on the Opposition. He is always saying: "It's the Liberal's fault! It's the Liberals fault! What would you have done if you were in power?" I told you what I would do. If you wish, I can give a few more examples. If I were you, I would stop claiming that these cutbacks have had no negative impact on our competitive position, on our Canadian identity, on youth, on Canadians, on Native people, on women, on our young men and women. I would tell the truth!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Harvard: Madam Speaker, I consider very unfortunate what has happened in the House in the last five to ten minutes.

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Harvard: I think my hon. friend from St. Boniface gave a very thoughtful presentation. I congratulate him on what he has said in this House. I think it is very unfortunate that a Minister would inject such irresponsible and foolish remarks as he has done in the past few minutes.

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Harvard: I do have a question, Madam Speaker. I am not going to ramble on with a silly presentation as did the Minister. I have a question for the Hon. Member for St. Boniface. It concerns his remarks when he said that there was a mounting debt on the part of students in this country and that there was an increase in tuition fees.

My question is simply this: As a result of mounting debt and increased tuition fees, does he see the possibility of some students either having to quit university because of the situation or some students not being able to go to university because they simply cannot afford it?

Mr. Duhamel: Yes, I do foresee that possibility. In fact, there are a number of documented cases which show that students have not been able to go to college or university. A number of documented cases show that they have been unable to continue because of the lack of financial assistance.

There is no question that unless things are changed in a dramatic kind of way the situation will get worse, not better. This is the cause of a great deal of sadness about which everyone agrees. When are we going to do something about it?

Unless our post-secondary institutions and all services related to them are improved in a significant and substantial way, we will lose our competitiveness. We will no longer have Canadians believing that they can become educated and carve out an important niche for themselves, especially in terms of participating in the democratic process, in finding a job, and in contributing to their communities. That feeling is starting and in fact has been running for some time now. It is getting worse.

We need to provide the resources so that more Canadians can participate, particularly under-represented groups. Once they are there participating they need to have the resources and the supports in place so that they continue their programs of training.

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate today and to discuss the motion of the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duhamel). He has indeed addressed some very important issues. In fact, any one of the issues that he has mentioned could take up a full day's debate in this House. We would probably need more time even after that.

We on this side of the House are aware, as perhaps members of the Opposition are not, of the Government's achievements in terms of science and technology. I think it might be useful if we were to review in some detail, for their benefit, exactly what we have done. I will restrict my remarks pretty much to science and technology, with perhaps a few remarks dealing with the post-secondary education issue. My colleagues will cover the other issues such as training and retraining, the battle against illiteracy, and post-secondary education in general.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, if any government ever recognized the importance of scientific and technological development, it certainly is this one! This Government and its Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) are very much aware of the impact it will have on the Canada of tomorrow.

[English]

Long before he entered politics the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was an outspoken advocate for the need to hone our competitive edge in industries by increasing the amount of science and technology not only in the country but in industry in particular—

Mr. Duhamel: That is why you shut down the steel plants.

Mr. Winegard: I thank the Hon. Member for his courtesy. After becoming Prime Minister he chaired, and continues to chair, the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology which has provided the Government with some significant advice. That board involves people from business, academe, government, labour, and the scientific community in general. It is as I know—and I have met with them several times—a very powerful board.

Just last evening I met with the steering committee of the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology to discuss new ways in which we could make Canada competitive and the kinds of things that the board should take under its wing for the next year, along the lines of what the Hon. Member for St. Boniface has been talking about. The National Advisory Board will continue to assess our national goals, our policies for science and technology, and their application to industry competitiveness in the country, which is an extremely important point.

The Prime Minister, as Members of the House know, has also altered Cabinet to reflect the new emphasis on high technology and the developing technologies. In fact, the enabling legislation for the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology is now before this House. I believe, as we just heard, it cleared the legislative committee last night. Perhaps the House will dispose of it on third reading rather quickly.

The new Department will be the flagship economic policy Department that will link industry with science and technology, trying to move ahead significantly in terms of our industrial capacity and our ability to compete.

As well, the Government has participated in the Council of Science and Technology Ministers. We have been strongly supportive of the previous House of Commons Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology. We now intend to be supportive of the new House of Commons Standing Committee on Industry, Science and Technology.

We have been building a consensus while we have been developing a comprehensive science and technology policy for Canada through such things as the Forum for National Science and Technology which was held in Toronto, the National Forum on Post-Secondary Education held in Saskatoon, and the National Conference on Technology and Innovation. All those things go toward trying to form a consensus in the country and an awareness of where we have to go. We have consulted widely. We have established a solid framework to revitalize science and technology in the country.

The programs that we have implemented or, indeed, are implementing are a result of consultation and collaboration. They are among some of the most advanced programs anywhere in the world as we try to move toward the end that the Hon. Member for St. Boniface is encouraging upon us.

As usual, I think Members opposite do not think we have gone far enough. They insist that we have not spent enough on science and technology. They suggest that we spend more and more government money, that is, on science and technology. Next week they will be suggesting in one of their motions that we spend money on other things.

Members opposite are indeed in an enviable position. They can dream of spending their imaginary dollars over and over again while we, unfortunately or fortunately for the country, have to make the hard choices with limited resources. I often think what we could do if we were not saddled with the debt that came out of 20 years of Liberal Government. Just think what we could do with that $39 billion interest. That is 70 times the amount of money we can put into the granting councils.

We recognize that we have to be judicious in spending taxpayers' money.

Mr. Volpe: When are you going to start?

Mr. Winegard: We also know that funding is crucial to the science and technology programs of the country.

I recall the words of a famous Nobel laureate who said that research is four things: brains with which to think, eyes with which to see, machines with which to measure, and money. The Government has responded to that need for research through a series of well targeted programs.

Some of those programs make a direct contribution to university research. At the opening of the National Conference on Technology and Innovation last year the Prime Minister announced that $1.3 billion would be made available for science and technology, new initiatives that is, over the next five years. That funding is broken down into a number of programs. One of the programs which I understand has received universal acclaim across the country and has received the support of my colleagues on the opposition benches is the Canada Scholarship Program under which $80 million will be used to encourage outstanding secondary school graduates to pursue undergraduate studies in natural sciences, engineering and related disciplines. When that program reaches fruition, there will be 10,000 young men and women who are Canada scholars. That is a pretty good beginning.

A year ago last May, the details of a $240 million five-year program to establish the National Centres of Excellence was announced. The program will promote university-industry partnerships to enhance world class research and to promote Canada's competitive position. It is important for Hon. Members to know that that program is a university led program. The main participants in the consortia will be universities with support from Government laboratories and, of course, industry. It will be mostly university led.

At the same time as we announced that program, the Government increased the base budgets of the three granting councils by $200 million over that same period. I remind Hon. Members that the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, the Medical Research Council and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council will also administer the budgets for the Networks of Centres of Excellence. Not only will they have their own program of distributing funds to university researchers, but they will be the main operators in terms of the peer review of the national networks of excellence.

The financial impact of these programs is really quite substantial. The Government has provided over half a billion dollars to the funding available for university research and training of highly qualified personnel over the next five years. When that is added to the contributions we anticipate from the private sector through the matching policy which was announced in the Budget of February, 1986, we expect over the next five years a full $3.7 billion for university research and training of scientists and engineers.

I think it is clear to Hon. Members that the Government is working very hard indeed to ensure that science and technology is supported in post-secondary institutions. Looking at what governments alone do in terms of supporting basic research, particularly in the academic area, Canada does not stack up too badly. We do quite well.

Hon. Members would not expect me to hold the position I hold in this Government if I were not constantly badgering you, Madam Speaker, and all my other colleagues for more funding for science and technology, and that is important. Even more important is to somehow ensure that whatever funding is available to Government is used to help promote the industrial research and development that Canada so badly needs. That is the real emphasis.

Through the strategic technologies program, we are again trying to forge alliances, this time led by industry. These will be alliances of industries coming together with universities and government to form that pre-competitive atmosphere that is so necessary to move ahead.

In the new competitive environment we see all around us today, many companies that have never done research before will have to do research. We will have to encourage that through the formation of these alliances that will bring small companies together with larger companies or groups of small companies together with Government labs and universities. These alliances will promote the concept of doing research in Canadian industry.

Let me talk for just a moment about federal transfers to the provinces. When most Hon. Members talk about that, they try to make a simple issue out of a very complex situation. We have increased funding to Canadian post-secondary institutions from something like $3.3 billion in 1981-1982 to $5.7 billion now. As part of our effort to reduce Canada's staggering debt, we have reduced the rate of growth of EPF transfers by one percentage point beginning in 1991. However, these transfers will continue to grow at the rate of inflation as a minimum, and as Hon. Members know, the transfers are provided so that the provinces can give grants to universities to cover capital and operating expenditures. There is a catch, though. We have no way of knowing or ensuring that the money we give to the provinces is used for the purpose for which it was intended. Do opposition Members really believe that post-secondary education is the sole responsibility of the federal Government?

Mr. Fontana: We haven't said that.

Mr. Winegard: They say yes. We are having a marvellous debate.

[Translation]

I would like to know what the Opposition has to suggest to ensure that transfer payments reach their destination: our universities.

[English]

Would they favour earmarking funds? There are implications to that. Would they prefer to give the EPF money to the granting councils and have them take over the whole responsibility for administering research in Canada at the post-secondary level? Would they prefer to leave the funds in the hands of the provinces entirely? How would they guarantee that other provincial funds would not be transferred away from post-secondary education if our funds were earmarked for post-secondary education? Those are important questions, questions that simply cannot be sloughed off. Those are questions that require some serious debate around the table. That is what we need to do.

Mr. Fontana: When are you going to start?

Mr. Winegard: Oh, we have started.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the Opposition seems to have some very specific ideas about what it does not like about our funding policy. Perhaps it could share some concrete suggestions with us.

[English]

I wish we had more time to sit down and have a serious debate—

Mr. Milliken: Not if that is all you have to say.

Mr. Winegard: Interesting. I wish we had more time to sit down and have a serious debate on the development of science and technology in Canada. We will hear later about the initiatives the Government has undertaken in such areas as job training and literacy as well as the broader question of post-secondary education.

I think it should be clear to all Hon. Members that when it comes to providing, in the words of the motion, the essential foundation for building a strong and competitive future for Canada, the Government's record has been pointing entirely in the right direction. I would like to conclude by saying two things. In my opinion, there are two issues that will prevent Canada from being competitive. I have said before that we pride ourselves on being a caring society. If we want to continue being a caring society we must, of course, be a competitive society. There are two things that will prevent that. First, the failure to take action on the ball and chain that each of us drags across the floor, the national debt and the growing interest rates. We must tackle that.

Second, we must, through the use of the kinds of programs that I have been talking about, bring industry in total, not just a few in the high tech area, into doing research and development so that we can proceed, meet the global competition and continue to have the kind of Canada that we all want.

Mr. Manley: Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister on his thoughtful speech on these important topics. He has raised a few points upon which I would like to comment and finally a point on which I would like to direct a question.

He spoke about the national debt, and the need to increase our spending being limited by our ability to cope with the debt problem. It is important to note that in the context of the national debt the Prime Minister did make an announcement a year or so ago of increasing new spending on science and technology by $1.3 billion. We have tried our best to find out where that $1.3 billion is being spent. Notwithstanding remarks by a previous Minister that it was not going into the space program, we find that some of it is. We find that $525 million of it is going into the Department of Industry, Science and Technology with no assurance that it is going to be new money.

I think it is important for this Minister of State, in particular, to recognize the fact that when we are talking about science and technology we are not talking about spending programs per se, we are talking about investments, investments that if they are not made are going to cost us far more in the long run.

The Minister has talked with some pride about the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology, and justifiably so, because this is a panel of some of the best people in Canada. Their advice to the Government is well worth while. This board advised the Government in its report published a year or so ago that the federal Government "double the budgets of the three granting councils over the following three years. Subsequent budgets should grow at an annual rate of one and half times the rate of GNP growth." Governments ignored this recommendation, Madam Speaker. I wonder why we bother bringing these significant minds together to give advice which is ignored.

In fact most of the additional funding has come to the granting councils through the matching grants program which is very unreliable because it depends upon money being contributed to the universities by the private sector, out of the control of the granting councils altogether.

It talks about the Canada scholarship program. As late as March of this year students were still waiting for some of their payments from the Canada scholarship program. This is a great idea but it would be nice to get the cash before the school year is over.

The Minister has talked about the Department of Industry, Science and Technology as the flagship economic policy department. I quote: "We on this side have sought to have as part of the objectives of that Department included in its mandate in legislation concern for environmentally sustainable development exactly in line with the recommendations of the Brundtland Commission. This is the key to our advance as a nation and to our survival that we tie all economic development to the needs of the environment." I would like to know why, in the Minister's opinion, his Government is unwilling to tie as an objective of the Department of Industry, Science and Technology environmentally sustainable development.

Mr. Winegard: Madam Speaker, the Member really had several questions but I will try to respond to them all. First, the Hon. Member suggested that he has not seen the $1.3 billion. I assure him that it is still there. In fact, he gave some of the figures himself, the $80 million for the Canada Scholarships Program, $200 million for the granting councils, $240 million for the Centres of Excellence Program, the space science program and some $500 million for industry, science and technology which we are going to use for R and D. Out of those funds comes the strategic technology program which, indeed, is one of the programs that I think has the ability to do a great deal for the country. So, the money is there.

I come to NABST, the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology. When one has a national board or any kind of senior advisory council one tries to pay a great deal of attention to it, but that does not mean that one can meet every recommendation. That is a false impression of how Government responds to advice. It gets the advice and does its best to meet that but has to work it into its other priorities. NABST itself is quite content with the work it is doing, the advice it gives and the general Government response it receives.

In coming to the environment, I think the answer to the question is that one of the Ministers of the Department sits on the Environment Committee of Cabinet. So, all of the issues that go through the main program come before that environmental committee of Cabinet and it is deliberate that one of the Ministers sits on that committee.

Mr. Brightwell: Madam Speaker, I would like to comment on the Minister's speech and perhaps ask him for a comment. I note that the debate today is being carried by people who were not here during the last Government. These new Members ask that the Government spend money to achieve the objectives of post-secondary education and scientific and technological development.

I want to cite an example that occurred during the last Government when it amended the Patent Act under Bill C-22. Under previous laws, drug companies in Canada were subject to copy in as little as four years after they applied to have their drug licensed in Canada to the point where they were withdrawing drugs from the market—I hope that is a fair statement—or delaying their introduction to the point that they were reducing the amount of research done in Canada. I want to say to the new Members and to the Minister that I believe there is a way of stimulating all of the things stated in the motion of the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duhamel) other than the government spending of money.

I wonder if the Minister would care to comment on policies other than the spending of money that have done all of the things that motion asks us to do.

Mr. Winegard: Madam Speaker, I believe the point is very well taken. Bill C-22 was a good example. In fact, I am trying to be generous in the spirit of this debate because I think it should not be a raucous issue.

I believe it was the Hon. Member for Ottawa South who raised the issue the other day about the difficulty with certain tax measures which prevented consortia from operating in the manner in which we would like them to operate. That is helpful when we know these things so that we can try to resolve those issues and push ahead. It does not require the Government to put up more money. It requires the Government to do something reasonable to promote R and D. Those are the kinds of issues that I believe we could all look at and make some headway.

• (1220)

I also want to take up the point again about using government money to lever other issues in these alliances. I remind the House that two or three weeks ago I signed an agreement for something I call "smart speakers"—not you, Madam Speaker, we recognize that is always the case—for five small companies that are working and coming together with funding from the National Research Council, and their own money, to develop a research program to produce these smart speakers that would recognize what was in the way and change the sound patterns. That type of alliance where we lever something outside is our only hope. We do not have billions of dollars to throw at any problem any more.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Regina—Qu'Appelle.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Madam Speaker, I too wish to join in the debate this morning on the opposition motion presented by the Liberal Party which calls for a greater and enhanced federal commitment to the support of post-secondary education, scientific and technological development, job training and retraining and the battle against illiteracy.

Previous speakers from both the government and the opposition Parties have indicated the importance of scientific research and development if Canada is to remain competitive, if we are to be able to fulfil our destiny, and explore the many opportunities that modern life has to offer to our citizens.

We all recognize the importance of moving away from a resource-based economy and society to a knowledge-based society. If we are to remain competitive in terms of international trade, if we are to be able to provide meaningful jobs to our men and women and to the young students who are now in high schools and universities, if we are to be able to provide a sense of opportunity, future and hope to the citizens of Canada, we must remain competitive and we must invest more in terms of research and development. We must correct the wrongs that have been committed by past Liberal Governments and by the present Conservative Government. I suspect if we put our partisanship aside, every Member of the House will admit that we have not done enough as a country to ensure that we have a vibrant and healthy research and development component in our country today.

Let us stop for a moment and look at the statistics and what is happening in our universities. In our major universities the library facilities are inadequate. Scientists, professors, and administrators in major universities have explained and described to us the conditions of laboratories and equipment. Much of the equipment in laboratories is totally outdated. In some facilities walls are crumbling and paint is dropping down. At times we have heard reports of dead rats and mice being found in the laboratories of our universities. That is totally inadequate. The equipment is totally inadequate.

In terms of human resources in our universities and research facilities there is a total lack of support staff. The number of students per professor has increased over the years. Over the last number of years we have seen the research capacity in our universities slowly but steadily degrade. We have also seen rising costs to our university students. As the cost of educating our young people increases, the universities have responded by increasing tuition fees and at the same time making it more difficult for students to enter by increasing the qualifications.

The danger is that universities will only become accessible to a very few. There is a dangerous trend setting in that takes away from the egalitarian notion that has guided post-secondary education in Canada for many years. This of course works against women. Historically, our universities have been slanted towards men. The university population has generally been more male than female. Over the last number of years this trend started to be corrected. I suggest that the more difficult it becomes to gain entrance into a university, again we will see discrimination against females. Restricting accessibility to universities will hurt the number of women and the opportunities that they will have to enter university.

Over the last number of years student support programs have gone downwards. Bursaries and scholarships are available to only a few. Many students are dependent upon loans which can burden them with a huge debt load, as much as $35,000 upon graduation. Part-time students, especially women, face severe barriers such as a $2,500 loan limit and a requirement that payment begin six months after graduation. Both the facilities at universities and the support programs for students and graduate students are being diminished.

Surely that is a responsibility the present Conservative Government must share in. This is despite what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) originally stated when he was in Opposition.

I am certain the following quote has been put on the record many times, but it is worth repeating. In a book the Prime Minister wrote entitled Where I Stand he stated: "The starting line for me is the technological dimension. Either we go into the game and become important players in the major leagues or we become a nation that will, in its entire lifetime, play in the Junior B circuit". This was written by the Prime Minister on Canada's poor performance in science and technology.

Yet, what is the record? In terms of the EPF programs we see in this particular Budget a further cut-back. Less money will be going to the provinces for Established Programs Financing.

Mr. McDermid: Less money?

Mr. Oberle: More money will be going to the provinces.

Mr. de Jong: We hear now from the Conservatives. The line being proposed is that they are not cutting back the amount of money that will be going to the provinces and therefore to the universities.

Mr. Oberle: There will be $25 million more in the next five years.

Mr. de Jong: What is occurring is that the increase in terms of inflation and in terms of needs will not be the same as was the previous program. The universities will see less money than they would have under the previous program. This occurred when the Tories first introduced their cuts in the 1985-86 Budget. When the Liberals did it in 1982, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), then in opposition, stated on February 1, 1982:

> The Minister is proposing to cut spending in two very important areas. He is prepared to risk major cut-backs in medical care and post-secondary education. Rather than rush into this on a unilateral basis and force spending cuts and service cuts on the provinces, would the minister and the government consider entering into two or three national conferences on health and post-secondary education so that we can set out the national objectives of the various levels of government in these two important areas before we cut spending, and before we cause closures of hospitals and cut-backs in post-secondary education?

That was stated by the Minister of Finance when he was in opposition on February 1, 1982. When the Liberals did it, the Tories said that it was a cut-back. Now that the Tories are doing exactly the same thing, it is not a cut-back, and to the Liberals it has become a cut-back.

• (1230)

The fact of the matter is that under both Liberal and Conservative Governments there have been cut-backs to post-secondary education and to our health programs. When the Liberals did it, the Tories accused the Liberals of cutting back on post-secondary education and on health care. The Government of the day, the Liberals, said: "No, these are programs the provincial Governments can spend as they wish and therefore we are not forcing a cut-back on post-secondary education and on health care." Now that we see the reversal with the Tories in government, they are claiming that it is not a cut-back to post-secondary education.

We are now hearing the Liberals make the charge that the Tories used to make when they were in opposition. One must ask: Where is the commitment? The commitment only exists when these Parties are in opposition. When they are in government, they lose their commitment.

We must also examine the Liberal commitment to science and technology. In opposition they proposed that the expenditures on R and D should be 2.5 per cent of our Gross Domestic Product. When they were in power they consistently fell below that. In the 1984 election they were to introduce a quick fix. They introduced a tax proposal, namely, the scientific research tax credit. That particular proposal blew around $2 billion of taxpayers' money with very little research and development to show for it. The only R and D that came out of that proposal was R and D by smart tax accountants who figured out ways and means of saving companies tax moneys or perpetuating tremendous tax scams.

I hear Liberal Members suggesting that I am exaggerating. Let me tell them that the SRTC tax scam was one of the most major tax scams in the history of this country. It was a badly thought through proposal and wasted much money. If that $2 billion been used for genuine research and development, we would have seen universities in a much different situation from the one they are in today. However, the Conservatives should not take too much credit in terms of closing down that tax scheme. It was introduced in the spring of 1984. We warned that it was a tax scam, that it was not going to produce any research and development.

The Tories were elected in the fall of 1984, but did they close the tax scam down? No, they did not. It took them until May of the following year finally to close it down. Half of what was lost in terms of revenue was lost in the period of time between the election of the Conservative Government and when they finally closed it down. They should have closed it down right after the election. They knew it was a tax scam. They knew what was being lost under that particular scheme.

What the scientific research tax credit scam shows, and the difficulty we faced in terms of scientific research and development under Liberal and Conservative Governments, is really a lack of a systematic plan to tie in our economic development with an economic strategy and a social strategy. We must tie in our economic strategy with what we spend on research and development through our universities, through our various scientific institutions. What is so desperately needed is a strategy that will begin to target key sectors of the economy, to channel our financial resources, technological resources, and various public and private resources to ensure that as a country we become number one in those particular areas.

That is what the Europeans are doing with the European Economic Community. That is what the Japanese have done. That is what these countries have done, and they have become very successful in developing their research and development. Unfortunately in this country, we still continue to follow a helter-skelter strategy. We lose money and very often we waste money on research and development. It has resulted in Canada being eighth among the OECD countries in terms of what we spend on research and development as a percentage of our Gross Domestic Product.

Let us look at the history of research and development in Canada compared to Sweden. Sweden is a small country. In fact it is smaller than Canada in terms of population. Yet, what it spent as a percentage of its Gross Domestic Product on research and development between 1971 and 1986 ranged between 1.5 per cent and 2.5 per cent, compared to Canada's record of around 1.4 per cent of our Gross Domestic Product.

In terms of developing high-tech industry, the Swedes have become very successful. They have done it as part of an industrial strategy. In Sweden it is the trade union movement that is in the forefront of technological change. When the price of oil went up in 1973, the Swedish unions recognized that unless Swedish industry became competitive and increased its efficiency, they were going to be priced out of the world market.

Mr. McDermid: Explain that to Shirley.

Mr. de Jong: Let me make my point here. The Tories are always anxious to bring up Shirley Carr. Let me finish making my point.

The trade union movement in Sweden has scientists on its staff who know the most up to date technologies in the world. In Sweden the Government, the unions, and the private industry work together to ensure that Swedish industry is one of the most competitive in the world. That is why I can go down to Ikea and buy a table costing $75 that is made in Sweden with Swedish softwood, shipped over here, and sold in that store. They are able to accomplish that efficiency because they have a mixed economy. There is a social contract among labour, business, and government.

It means that when Swedish industry makes money because of new technological innovations, it reinvests it in Sweden and in Swedish industry. Union contracts ensure that there will be reinvestment in the plant and equipment and that there will be research and development done in Sweden. They also ensure that there is a social net to retrain Swedish workers who may lose their jobs because of technological innovation. It ensures that they will not lose their mortgages and will not see a decline in their living standards. They will be fully consulted in the implementation of that new technology. That is the smart way to introduce science and new technology, in a co-operative way among workers, business, and government.

In Canada—and here I come back to my Conservative friends—working people are afraid of research and development and new technologies because they know there is no retraining program. They are afraid because, if they lose their jobs, they will lose their mortgages, their standard of living, and they will slide on unemployment down to the welfare level. That is the concern and the legitimate fear of working men and women in this country. Unless the Government stops attacking our social system, there will be resistance by working people against scientific research and technological innovations. Very rightly and legitimately working people are afraid of losing their jobs, their mortgages, and their standard of living.

If we are to have an efficient Canadian industry with high paying jobs, which the Swedes are able to do, we must develop a contract, a social understanding, among labour, government, and industry. This would mean that all sectors of our society could begin to act responsibly. The Tories are the first in line to denounce labour for acting irresponsibly. I suggest to them that they act irresponsibly when the Government starts cutting back on EPF, cutting back on retraining programs, not fulfilling its promises about day care, and starting to cut the social net which reassures working men and women that they will not lose their standard of living as a result of technological innovations.

Social responsibility requires that when industrial profits rise there is a commitment to keep those profits in Canada by reinvesting in research and development and new technologies.

One reason that Canada has such a low percentage of research and development as part of its Gross Domestic Product is that private industry does not do research and development in this country. Another reason for such a dismal record of R and D investment in Canada is that most of our industries are foreign controlled. Companies in a branch plant economy do not do research and development here but in their home countries. I am not saying anything new. The Lafontaine committee set up by the Liberals many years ago pointed that out as well.

Yet the Liberals, during their term in office, failed to make certain that Canadian industry was controlled by Canadians. The Liberals allowed the multinationals to come in and buy us up. It was the defeat of Walter Gordon and the fight within the Liberal Party that led to the lost opportunity of making certain that Canadian industries would be owned by Canadians. We are now seeing some of the results of Liberal policies of the 1950s and 1960s—

Mr. Oberle: Supported by the NDP.

Mr. de Jong: I will forget that comment because it is not made on the basis of intelligence or reason.

The fact that we are essentially a branch plant economy means that there has been low research and development investment here by industries. Consequently, we do not have the jobs for our young technologists and scientists. This has to be blamed initially on the Liberals, and certainly the Tories are finishing off the job as they sell us into the arms of the multinationals. There must be increased research and development. In order to achieve that, many changes will have to be made.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, I want to correct the Hon. Member. I understand that all of us are ignorant in different areas, and the Hon. Member has perhaps reached into an area about which he is somewhat ignorant. What he said about Ikea and the Swedish innovative way of manufacturing low cost furniture was true a couple or three years ago when the Liberal policies were still flourishing. It is not true today.

There are several plants that have perfected the Ikea idea and are manufacturing furniture with Canadian pine lumber and Canadian workers, not just for the Canadian domestic market but for export of that particular furniture. His statement that we are importing a Swedish idea and Swedish pine wood to Canada is no longer true. We corrected that.

I was intrigued by his suggestion that it is the Government's fault and industry's fault that there is little or few opportunities for young Canadians to take apprenticeship training to upgrade their skills. He laments the fact that there is not the kind of partnership in terms of the industrial relations process that exists in countries like Sweden and Germany.

I suggest to him that the unions deserve a little bit of the blame for that because they prefer the adversarial system that is the fundamental nature and main element of our industrial process. It is the unions that resist young people being allowed to come into a company to learn a trade and perhaps get a lesser wage while they are doing it. It is the unions that resist the introduction of new technology in plants because they are afraid of their jobs. While I readily admit that others are to blame, generally speaking it is the unions that resist it.

If the Member wants to use the Swedish model, perhaps he will recognize that the unions in Sweden encourage their employers to establish plants in other parts of the world so that their ideas will reach out and the workers can secure their jobs at home. There is a totally different attitude to labour in countries like Sweden, Germany, and Japan.

If he wants to do this country a favour he should talk to his friends in the union movement, take them to Sweden to look at those models, and try to implement them here. It is quite true that unions in Sweden have scientists on their staff. As well, the best economists in countries like Germany also work for the union movement. Our unions are not interested in that. They prefer the adversarial process in which they are right and everyone else is wrong. The Hon. Member actually believes that.

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, it is interesting to hear the Member, a former Minister of State for Science and Technology. He has made two points. One is that because of his Government's policies Swedish pine furniture is no longer coming into Canada and the other is that Canadian companies have followed the Swedish technology and have become so competitive that there is no need to import Swedish pine furniture. I must tell the Hon. Member that just a few weeks ago I was at the Ikea store where it was plum full of pine furniture from Sweden that seems to be selling quite well. I am not suggesting that there are not Canadian companies which are able to compete.

Mr. McDermid: It is made in Canada. Ikea is contracting to make it in Canada. You are missing the point.

Mr. de Jong: Perhaps I could finish my remarks. The other point made by the Hon. Member is more serious. He reverts to pointing to the unions as the real reason that we do not have the technological innovations. He suggests that their resistance is the cause of the bottleneck to technological innovations in this country. He then compared us to the Swedes.

The Member still has not understood the point I was making. I said that the reason Canadian workers are afraid of technological change, as opposed to Swedish workers, is that there is no social guarantee in this country. During the last election I sat with a man in his fifties who was a pipe fitter. He was in tears because his traditional job had been wiped out. He had been unemployed for six or seven months and recognized that his future was just a downward slide to the rolls of the unemployed, with no future. It is no wonder that working people fight tooth and nail against that.

If the Government begins to offer working people a guarantee that they will be retrained and there will not be a decrease in their standard of living, they would be in the forefront of technological change. They will help introduce new technological changes. They will want newer, better reforms of production to make certain there are good wages in their industry and to ensure that their industry is competitive on a world-wide basis. They will want to make certain that when the new technologies are introduced their work will become more pleasant and less dehumanizing.

Working people will become involved with technological innovation when they are given that assurance. It is the irresponsibility of the Government and its attack on our social programs that create fear among working people.

Mr. Duhamel: Madam Speaker, when we initiated this discussion I had hoped that we might collectively attempt to identify certain problems and perhaps address those issues to see what we might do for those who are not participating fully in education—the poor, a number of women, native people, a number of new Canadians, and people from smaller, more isolated regions. While some important points have been made, I bristled a bit when a member of the Government suggested more than once that we were somewhat irresponsible spenders and that we did not care about the deficit. He accused us of having accumulated a lot of debt.

If that kind of discussion continues, we are going to get away from the main thrust. I would hope that somehow the Government would see fit to admit that it has in fact doubled that debt in the last five years. Perhaps the blame should be shared.

The major focus of the Hon. Member appears to have been, in spite of the fact that he set partisanship aside, on the errors of the Liberals of the past and the Conservatives of present. I would suggest that our focus on what is happening now to try to bring about responsible solutions might be much more productive.

I would like to ask the Member this very brief question. He has referred to the errors of previous Liberal administrations and current Conservative administrations. There has been a number of New Democratic Governments in power. I wonder if he would care to comment about their records in the administration of funding for education. Just in case he is not familiar with the details, I would be more than willing to provide some.

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, I do not have the statistics at my fingertips on what New Democratic Party Governments, when we were in government in B.C., in Manitoba, or in Saskatchewan, spent on education. Of course we want to put it into the context of increases over a number of years.

I know, just in terms of my own personal experience, in Saskatchewan, that during the Douglas Government and the Blakeney Government university funding was increased over the years, but certainly not as much as I would have liked. I remember, when I was president of the students' council in 1963-64, leading the students out on strike against the Lloyd Government which was cutting back on university funding and resulting in an increase in student fees.

I feel that no Government has really spent the type of money and provided the investment in our post-secondary education which I think it deserves. It is an investment in the future. I think the Government is making a mistake. It might save pennies, but it is going to cost dollars in the long run. We can cut back on education and programs which do away with illiteracy, but we are going to pay for it. We are going to pay for it in higher social costs over the years. An educated population results in better paying jobs, which result in higher revenues for the Governments and for the public purse. I suggest that investments in education and in science and technology pay back many, many fold in the long run.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, some time ago, a new provision that would apply on Opposition days, when the House considers an Opposition motion, was adopted unanimously by the House. Each political party may divide the twenty-minute period for speeches plus ten minutes for questions and comments in two equal periods of ten minutes, each followed by a five-minute period for questions and comments.

I would like to suggest the following, today, now we have had our first round. Each Party representative has had a chance to speak his twenty minutes plus ten. We of the Liberal Party would like to suggest to the House that Hon. Members adopt a procedure by which from now on, each Party, when its turn is called, may divide the conventional twenty minutes into two ten-minute periods, each followed by five minutes of questions and comments.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, we on the government side have co-operated in terms of this procedure in the past. We believe that it is a good one and want to co-operate again today.

I would indicate, though, that we do have two speakers left who I understand will probably want to use the full 20 minutes. Certainly we have no problems with the spirit of that. As the Parties are ready to split their speeches I think it is a good idea, and also to have the time period for questions split as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There seems to be unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Halifax.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Madam Speaker, the fate of the universities in this country hangs in the balance following the budget cuts to established program funding. Most particularly the fate of universities in Atlantic Canada are in a precarious state. My riding of Halifax has seven universities, each with a unique role to play. Universities are fragile and complex institutions. They are the repositories of accumulated knowledge of our civilization. They are the foster parents of the future.

Universities are, it is true, only one of the elements in the tertiary educational system. Community colleges, apprenticeship, and vocational certification programs are the others. Universities are the pathfinders of the societal change in every sense of that concept. Today, technology is the chic word but political, social, economic and cultural change will be forgotten only to our peril. In Canada we have evolved a university system which integrates traditions of European and North American education.

One has only to travel to developing nations to understand what a tremendous resource we have. Sadly we have managed to allow the potential of our universities to become the victim of shortsighted political concerns. Differential fees for foreign students and our failure to market our universities internationally have seriously diminished the capacity of universities to build global links which could be of immense future importance.

Canadian embassies are reticent to enter into what is considered provincial competition for foreign students and thus will often not market Canadian universities. Historically in this country we have education as a national social priority; thus the established program funding system which is an hybrid offshoot of the original notion of equalization positive in the Act of Confederation.

What complicates this system is the relationship of the division of powers as stated in the BNA Act and the principles of equalization as they evolved in the 20th century. Spheres of influence tended to muddy the waters of 20th century social policy. The debates over transfer payments and the evolution of the EPF system are marvellous case studies of the adaptation of 19th century concepts, often fuzzy and ill-developed as was appropriate to that time, to 20th century policy imperatives. Much can be said about this point.

With respect to the fundamental role of universities, the evolution of EPF and the decision to integrate tertiary education into the equalization game have had some dire consequences for the quality of education. It is wise not to romanticize equalization, for it really is premised upon the concept of the lowest common denominator.

Philosophically EPF guarantees minimum standards rather than creating maximum goals. In financial terms this has specific results. The federal Government transfers funds, and the provincial Government, quite properly, decides upon their allocation. It can be argued that there is no answer to this, other than a responsible and co-operative collaboration between the two levels of government.

The financial commitment to the support of post-secondary education cannot in our constitutional picture be viewed as a back door to altering the established relationship of federal and provincial powers. The time has come for change, a change which is so desperately needed in the universities of this country. It must be through co-operative and sensitive federal-provincial negotiations.

The federal Government has chosen a more subtle route to amending the existing system. Having recognized that a national policy on education—and the very term is fraught with unwanted images—is a political minefield, the Government has de-indexed and done other cute financial things to EPF funding for education. The result is a very tragic one.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry but I must interrupt the Hon. Member now.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

U.S. PROPOSALS ON ACID RAIN

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the acid rain proposal by President Bush will cost American utilities an estimated $700 million per year, or half the cost of a Trident submarine, to achieve only a 42 per cent reduction of pollution by the year 2000. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) likes this proposal and claims that by 1995 our lakes and forests will come back to life. Unfortunately, he is naive.

Canada should have at least two major concerns with President Bush's proposal. The plan appears to allow juggling because of the trading provisions for polluters. There is the possibility that the big polluters who dump on Canada will trade for the right to continue polluting instead of making cuts.

Second, there is no cap on emissions. As the American economy grows, the allowable pollution would grow even though new sources would meet the emission standards. President Bush's proposal does not ensure that the health of our rivers, forests, buildings and structures will be protected. We urge the Government to ensure that Congress shortens the deadlines, raises the targets and caps the emissions.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

UPCOMING LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, get this. The NDP wants to try and run a squeaky clean leadership campaign. Now, that is highly unlikely. This MP from Churchill says, "We're not going to try and use the tax system". Well, Mr. Speaker, why should they change now? Remember how this present Leader wrote to business Canadians using his government frank to solicit funds? The Churchill MP also says, "We cannot be seen as using House of Commons facilities". My NDP office neighbour from the last Parliament ran the entire maritime campaign from a Parliament Hill suite.

Canadians will also remember that this squeaky clean Party had the policy of using federal funds to finance municipal New Democrat politicians. Clearly, the NDP should look beyond this House for someone eligible to strut their squeaky clean stuff.

FINANCE

DONATION TO HELP PAY OFF NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. Gus Mitges (Bruce—Grey): Mr. Speaker, Reverend Seymour Boyce and Mr. Allan Tobey, layman in charge, and the congregation of the British Methodist Episcopal Church of Canada, Owen Sound, Ontario, have indeed the concern, the love and the welfare of our country uppermost in their minds.

Encouraged by the action of a Canadian lady who a few weeks ago presented a cheque to her MP to help pay off the debt, they presented me with a cheque of $100 to be presented to you, Mr. Speaker, to forward on to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to be used to help defray our national debt.

Hopefully, the example of this unselfish deed will gather momentum all across our country and, who knows, perhaps we will be paying off our national debt sooner than expected.

As well, all donations to Governments are 100 per cent deductible.

HEALTH CARE

SPINA BIFIDA WEEK

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, this week is Spina Bifida Week across Canada. It is a time for all Canadians to examine the realities associated with spina bifida and the related condition, hydrocephalus. Spina bifida is the most common disabling birth defect in Canada. It affects more children than muscular dystrophy, cystic fibrosis, multiple sclerosis and polio combined.

To raise the profile of spina bifida and in honour of Spina Bifida Week, I have spent the day with Sue Mackay who was born with this disease. Sue joins us this afternoon in the gallery. Her courage in performing the every day chores and duties that most of us take for granted is an inspiration for me and for all Canadians.

As little as 30 years ago, the majority of children born with this congenital defect died of complications. Now with aggressive up-to-date medical and surgical care, at least 90 per cent of people with spina bifida live and lead full and productive lives.

I call on my colleagues in this House and all Canadians to consider the importance of research and treatment of spina bifida and hydrocephalus and to recognize the personal victories of the Sue Mackays of this world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT PROCUREMENT

LETTING OF PRINTING CONTRACTS

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, this Government claims the letting of government contracts is done in a fair and equitable manner. Yet the Government is the victim of its own statistics.

A recent report from the Canadian Government Printing Services Branch shows that 89.2 per cent of government printing contracts go to Ontario and Quebec, home of only 63.5 per cent of workers; 10.7 per cent goes to the four western provinces, home to 28.8 per cent of Canadian workers; and .01 per cent goes to Atlantic Canada, home of 7.7 per cent of workers. My home province of British Columbia received only 1.2 per cent of contracts with a work force of 15.2 per cent.

The printing industry is on the sacrificial altar of free trade and will not survive if the Government continues such blatant discrimination in the letting of contracts. It is time the Government committed to regional fairness in government procurement contracts and treats western and eastern Canada as part of the economic family of Canada.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

CONFERENCE OF FEDERATION OF CANADIAN MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to be able to attend, along with my colleague from Nepean, a conference held by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities in the beautiful city of Vancouver this past weekend.

One of the issues highlighted at the conference was a deteriorating condition of watermains, sewers, bridges and roads in municipalities across Canada.

[Translation]

I want to congratulate the Federation and its members for their commitment to solving these serious problems.

[English]

It is time for the federal Government to resume its traditional role as a partner with the provinces and the municipalities. I encourage Members from all sides of the House to work with us on this national crisis so that we may ensure a sound economy, healthy environment and public health and safety for all Canadians.

RAILWAYS

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Ross Stevenson (Durham): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the Toronto–Peterborough–Havelock Line Passenger Association for its realistic efforts to preserve the VIA Rail service.

VIA officials have identified this train and the Quebec–Windsor corridor as the two lines that come closest to paying for themselves. The Passenger Association, in a recent presentation to the President of VIA, demonstrated a willingness to work with VIA to rationalize this service.

The Association stated, and I quote that it "strongly supports the Government's desire to minimize VIA's dependence on the public purse," but stressed that VIA must be free of its regulatory stranglehold and allowed to operate as a true business venture. The Association listed a number of eminently practical suggestions for making the train more economical. This is an outstanding public–spirited initiative by these passengers to keep the Toronto–Havelock line open. I hope the proposals receive the detailed consideration they warrant.

FINANCE

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, the Government's proposed 9 per cent goods and service tax is proving to be an implementation nightmare for the small business person in this country. There are two major problems for small business.

First, there is the problem of compliance. We will now have a two–tier taxation system. The small business will now have provincial and federal taxes to calculate on each item not exempted. Administratively, this will be a quagmire.

The second major problem with the goods and service tax is an economic one. GST is not revenue neutral and increased prices of goods and services will be passed on to the consumer. It is predicted that the average Canadian family will lose $1,000 per year in purchasing power. This reduction in buying power will result in a drop in consumer demand and thus have a very serious effect on the small business sector.

For a government that has said it recognizes the importance of the small business community in the Canadian economy and have promised to cut down on red tape, they have again shown their disdain for small business. Hiring up to 25,000 new people to collect the tax and complete the forms will only add to the problem. Small business is very concerned that this goods and service tax is just the beginning of further assaults on the economic viability of the small business community in this country.

PENSIONS

DEFICIENCY IN CANADA PENSION ACT

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out once again a deficiency in the Canada Pension Act. As a result of the current test of recency provisions, a number of disabled persons have had their otherwise legitimate applications for Canada Pension disability pension rejected.

There are several hundred disabled Canadians who, when they left their employment, in fact qualified for CPP disability pension but were unaware of its availability to them. When they subsequently learned of the disability pension and applied for it, they were denied because their years of contributions no longer met the test of recency.

These disabled Canadians paid into the Canada Pension Plan. The lateness of their application, lateness owing in some cases to the nature of their disability, ought not to disqualify them from a disability pension. I, therefore, urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) to seek the appropriate amendments to the legislation in order to accommodate these deserving Canadians.

U.S. CLEAN AIR LEGISLATION

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the tenacity and determination of the Canadian Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in dealing with Washington on acid rain have paid off.

Yesterday, the American Administration tabled a bill under which the United States will cut sulphur dioxide emissions, an essential component of acid rain, of which a large part comes to Canada, in half by the year 2000.

When they met in Montebello last week, the governors of the Eastern United States said that pressure from the Canadian Prime Minister had forced the United States to take acid rain seriously and to act quickly.

Our Government has always said that acid rain is a top priority for it, and the initiative proposed yesterday by the United States, after eleven years, is a promising step in the fight against a problem that has destroyed 14,000 Canadian lakes.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, much work remains to be done on this issue, but yesterday's announcement gives Canadians and my colleagues hope that they will finally see their efforts rewarded.

THE LATE CHARLES RUTHERFORD, V.C.

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday last in my riding of Northumberland, I had the moving privilege of witnessing three First World War veterans do the honour of burning the Port Hope Legion's 17-year mortgage. Unknown to us at the time, on that same day the most honoured of Northumberland's First World War veterans, Charles Smith Rutherford, was called to his final rest.

Charles Rutherford brought great honour to the riding of Northumberland. He was the last surviving winner of the coveted Victoria Cross which recognized his heroic service in the First World War. As a member of the Fifth Battalion of the Canadian Mounted Rifles he saw active service in the trenches of France where he single-handedly captured 45 of the enemy and assisted in the capture of 35 more. This and other acts of gallantry deservedly earned him Britain's top military award as well as two other British medals—the Military Cross and the Military Medal.

Charles Rutherford is quoted as saying his greatest reward for surviving the war was to return to his home at Colborne, Ontario. Though he was humble about his own accomplishments, as Canadians we can all be proud of him and for him and be forever grateful for his service and sacrifices on our behalf.

On behalf of Canadians everywhere, especially those in Northumberland, I wish to extend my sincere sympathy to his children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

DETERIORATION OF ATMOSPHERE

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, in the testimony of expert witnesses before the Environment Committee over the past several weeks the deterioration of the atmosphere has been an overwhelming theme. It is obvious that ordinary citizens throughout the world do not yet fully grasp the stark implications of that subject for the very survival of mankind, unless we are willing and able to manage such critical environmental issues as the ozone layer, global warming and air pollution in all its forms.

Not only will such management be essential in Canada, it will be even more critical on an international and world basis.

The compelling challenge is not just scientific or technological, even more it is political in terms of achieving world-wide consensus and co-operative action.

This week we received a hallmark decision toward such an international accord on atmosphere management with the announcement by President Bush of new clean air policies in the United States which commit themselves to acid rain reductions that significantly affect Canada. This news is not just significant for the merits of acid rain controls which it brings, but even more it sets a precedent for two countries working together politically to manage the atmosphere.

There is now a real basis for confidence that a formal acid rain treaty will follow as a political model which will eventually evolve to encompass other atmosphere issues, and will eventually extend to include all nations of the world.

In terms of managing the atmosphere, nothing less will ever be sufficient.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION

DEFACING OF SYNAGOGUE AND SCHOOL IN NORTH YORK

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, a political philosopher of years gone by observed that the price of freedom is vigilance. That point was brought home last weekend by the cowardly acts of mindless vandals perpetrated on the grounds and building of the Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue and Yeshiva Yessodei Hatorah School in the City of North York.

Ours is a country which has institutionalized the concepts of religious and cultural tolerance. In affording others respect for their uniqueness, and according them the right to lead their lives in dignity, we as Canadians have reaped great material dividends. However, it would appear we have yet to conquer the small-mindedness and the malice of a minority within our midst. Their actions harm the innocent and diminish our worth as a people.

Happily, the real Canada and true Canadians behave differently. My riding association, whose membership includes among others Canadians of diverse origins including Guyanese, Portuguese, Greek, Macedonian, Italian, Scottish and Indian passed a unanimous resolution condemning the vandalism and calling on the authorities to act swiftly and aggressively to eradicate this cancer from our midst.

We must reassure all minorities and the Jewish communities of Eglinton—Lawrence and elsewhere that, when they hurt, we all feel the pain.

I know that this House—the ultimate expression and defender of freedom, equality and brotherhood—will concur.

PROPOSED CHANGES TO U.S. CLEAN AIR ACT

Mr. Brian O'Kurley (Elk Island): Mr. Speaker, I commend the action of U.S. President George Bush for introducing new measures to protect the quality of the air. The proposed changes to the Clean Air Act will significantly reduce acid rain emissions from the United States.

The plan calls for the reduction of sulphur-dioxide and nitrous oxide emissions that cause acid rain. The reduction requires emissions to be cut in half by the year 2000.

The Government of Canada, in its commitment to the protection of the environment, is committed to cut in half sulphur-dioxide emissions by 1994, and has placed a permanent cap on sulphur-dioxide emissions of 2.3 million tonnes.

I welcome this important announcement since it establishes a united approach in building for our common future.

I look forward to the day when both countries will experience the improved environment that will result from our combined efforts.

U.S. PROPOSALS TO CUT ACID RAIN

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. Canadians are certainly pleased that we finally have a U.S. President who recognizes that acid rain is a problem that requires congressional solutions. However, congressional solutions are not always international solutions.

We in the Liberal Party are extremely disturbed that the Bush proposal contains no specific monitoring the sulphur-dioxide emissions and, in particular, that there is no over-all cap in the creation of sulphur-dioxide emissions. In other words, if an American power plant is built tomorrow that exceeds the standards, according to the President's proposal, that would be okay.

Does the Prime Minister agree with us that the lack of an over-all cap and the specific lack of monitoring provisions are serious omissions? If he does agree, what specific action will he take to lobby for changes in Washington to the Bush proposal?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that my hon. friend and all Members of the House will rejoice with all Canadians in the very substantial step forward taken yesterday regarding acid rain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: As expert observers have pointed out, this is the first major initiative by the American administration in 12 years. I think it is good news for Canada and good news for all Members of the House who have been deeply involved in trying to pursue clean air on this side of the border as well.

My hon. friend points out possible omissions from the legislation. I think we should wait to see what the legislation will look like when it is brought before the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States. We will comment on it then. However, I can assure my hon. friend that we will be as resolute, as patient and as persevering as we have been from the very beginning to bring about the happy result of yesterday.

REQUEST AS TO WHETHER THE PRIME MINISTER WILL INTERVENE CONCERNING AMERICAN LEGISLATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Bush proposal has serious shortcomings that will continue to kill maple trees, for example, in Québec. One of the shortcomings is the lack of a ceiling on sulphur dioxide emissions. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has specific proposals to make today in order to improve the legislation that will be presented in Washington and to improve the Bush proposal, because, as it stands now, Canada has no guarantee that the Bush plan will let Québec's maple trees thrive, and I think that is important.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since my friend referred to Québec, she would no doubt like me to point out the very enthusiastic comments from Québec Premier Bourassa, who said yesterday evening that Mr. Bush's initiative was just wonderful for Québec and Canada. So I think that is good news for Québec and the rest of Canada.

As for possible shortcomings in any legislation, we will follow the situation closely and I can tell the Hon. Member that I have invited Senator George Mitchell, the Senate majority leader, for an official visit to Ottawa next week. The scope of the legislation proposed by the American Administration will definitely be on the agenda then.

SULPHUR DIOXIDE EMISSIONS REGULATIONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the Bush proposal, the emissions trading proposition or the permit to pollute, has been described by a U.S. Senator as a situation in which a permit to pollute may be given to certain polluting companies in the northeastern United States, something which will do nothing to improve the difficult situation of acid rain which is currently raining on Canada. That is a concern not raised by the Liberal opposition but by a Republican U.S. Senator from Minnesota who has been actively lobbying for changes in the sulphur dioxide emissions regulations in the United States.

Does the Prime Minister have proposals which will ensure that the transboundary problem of acid rain, acid rain from the United States which is raining on Canada, will be specifically monitored in the legislation? Will there be specific provisions to ensure that the permit to pollute which will be permitted under the Bush proposal will not be given to companies in the northeastern United States to the detriment of the acid rain problem in Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the point raised by my hon. friend underlines again the importance of the negotiation by Canada of a bilateral accord with the United States in the area of the control of acid rain. This notion, of course, has been denigrated by certain commentators who suggest that legislation before the American Congress of itself is sufficient. We take the view that there must be that kind of important legislation which the President referred to yesterday and it must be followed by an acid rain bilateral accord which we will negotiate with the United States of America.

With regard to any deficiencies in the legislation as it works its way through the Congress, I have already arranged for Senator George Mitchell, the majority leader of the United States Senate who is from Maine, to come to Canada on an official visit. One of the important considerations between us will be a detailed discussion of the acid rain legislation and the manner in which we hope it will benefit both Canada and the United States.

While there are clearly imperfections in any proposal, I think my hon. friend, with her interest in the environment, will recognize and salute the fact that yesterday was a red letter day, and I underline that phrase, for Canada and for all of us who believe in the environment.

TRADE

ONTARIO HYDRO—IMPORTING OF U.S. COAL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to pose a question to the Prime Minister on this subject. While properly complimenting the President of the United States on his initiative, the Prime Minister has neglected to mention the real delay that we are facing in Canada in replacing the close to $1 billion worth of dirty U.S. coal that is presently used in Ontario Hydro generating plants with sulphur-free coal from western Canada.

Aside from one or two small research projects, no progress has been made in meeting the 1992 deadline that was set. Is the Government prepared to get a guarantee that that importation of U.S. coal with heavy sulphur content will be replaced by western coal by 1992? Is the Government prepared to make major changes to the freight rates as an incentive to bring about that very important development?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, because of the initiatives undertaken by the Deputy Prime Minister, there has been an increasingly large percentage of western coal used in the process. If there are continuing serious problems with Ontario Hydro, I know my friend will speak both to me and to the Member right behind him from Willowdale, and we will get this corrected together.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the progress made to date has been one research project worth $800,000. I am talking about a $1 billion commitment that would bring about the movement of close to 10 million tonnes of coal from western Canada so that Ontario Hydro can meet emission standards in just over two years. That requires a commitment from the Government of Canada to deal with the transportation problem primarily dealing with freight rates which are presently allowed for lumber and grain. It is cheaper to bring coal from Wyoming than it is to bring it from Alberta. Will the federal Government take an initiative to change that situation so we can solve the acid rain problem and help western Canada develop at the same time?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest in this very important issue, I should remind the House that the Hon. Member was a Member of a Government which did absolutely nothing during its term of office to promote the use of western coal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Furthermore, he was the Transport Minister at that time and he did absolutely nothing.

There has been, through the task force that was put together, a tremendous amount of progress made. I would ask the Hon. Member to check with the Premier's brother who will indicate, I am sure, that the level of western coal that is being consumed by Ontario Hydro in the Province of Ontario has increased substantially. Yes, there are a number of pilot projects which are being funded which I hope will improve and encourage further the use of that coal.

FINANCE

IMPACT OF NEW SALES TAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. This Government's financial genius has announced a new sales tax that will put an additional tax burden of $1,000 on the average family, increase the inflation rate by 3 per cent, increase the number of unemployed by 70,000 and, according to a report released today, will also increase the number of tax collectors by between 5,000 and 25,000. Is this true?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member likes to ignore things that have been said in the past, but let me just remind him that the NDP tax probe of 1986, when he was the Leader, said, "As well, our analysis had led us to conclude that the current federal sales tax is so unfair, unaccountable and administratively complex that it should be abolished".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The fellow who is sitting right behind him said, "Our sales tax system is a total mess". His finance critic in the last Parliament said, "The present sales tax is a bad system and should be abolished. I accept that one alternative is some form of value-added tax such as is being proposed by the Minister of Finance".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I cannot be precise about the answer to the Hon. Member's question. The Minister of National Revenue is reviewing this matter. Some of those estimates are wildly out of line, but we are reviewing this matter and some time in the next few months, we will be able to give the Hon. Member a precise answer.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it took the Minister five minutes to deal with irrelevant matters and then he came around to answering the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister might have added that he also said that any reformed tax should be revenue neutral, and unlike the Minister of Finance, we would stand by our promise. He promised that but he brought in one that was not revenue neutral. We also called for corporate tax reform including a minimum tax which the Minister of Finance also ignored. Don't give us your baloney and answer the question, how many new tax collectors—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Finance.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party made some observations. I do not know that he put a question, but let me comment on a couple of his observations.

He talked about revenue neutrality. I have made it very clear, and I will make it clearer when the technical paper comes out, that the new tax will replace the existing tax. It will bring in and finance some income tax offsets that will be particularly helpful to people in lower and middle income brackets. After that there will be no additional moneys for the Government of Canada. That will be set out very plainly later on this month.

The second point the Member talked about was corporate tax reform. We did reform the corporate income tax system. It was brought into play last year, and we have seen a significant increase in the amount of corporate tax revenues. In addition, in this Budget we brought in a large corporations tax which I have yet to hear the Hon. Member saying is a good thing. It raises a billion dollars from his friends in the corporate community.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, boy, you are going to bring a tear to my eye.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: There are, Mr. Speaker, some 86,000 companies that made profits last year which don't pay a penny in tax. That is the reality.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question.

We have a genius package of taxes including this new sales tax which the Government is going to bring in. The sales tax is going to increase unemployment by 70,000, inflation by 3 per cent, add $1,000 a year to the tax bill of the average family, and now, according to this report, add some 5,000 to 25,000 tax collector jobs here in Ottawa. Is this the Government's view of justice or economic insanity? Will the Government come to its senses and withdraw this tax now?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member talked about this corporate minimum tax and 86,000 companies that are paying no tax, let me remind him that the large corporation tax applies to all the largest corporations in Canada. There are 3,600 of these. Where are the other 86,000? They are small businesses. They are businesses that are spread all over this country in small communities, communities very heavily involved in the resource sector that are very cyclical.

Mr. Broadbent: Baloney.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member says "baloney." If the Hon. Member knew what he was talking about on this, he would not raise this whatever because it is going to destroy employment in all of the small communities right across the country. If we have a corporate minimum tax that is exactly what it will do.

Let me also comment on another point the Hon. Member made. He says that this is going to raise the tax bill by $1,000. Where did he get that information? Is this out of the New Democratic research organization? We have said that families earning less than $30,000 a year will be better off after this tax reform.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE BUDGET

SECURITY OF BUDGET PROCESS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. It is about the budget leak.

An Hon. Member: Not again.

Mr. Kaplan: For weeks the Minister has been refusing to answer questions about the security of the budget process, and he has been using the police investigation as an excuse.

This morning the Deputy Commissioner of the RCMP confirmed that, in fact, the security arrangements were not under investigation by the RCMP. The RCMP reported that there were conflicting reports on that subject. The Deputy Minister of Supply and Services says that the security arrangements are now under review.

In light of this, why has the Minister been refusing to answer questions about security except to say falsely, as it turns out, that the leak did not result from negligence, carelessness, or lack of proper security arrangements?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the Hon. Member's question is. We have said on a number of occasions that we review the security procedures on an ongoing basis. Where it is possible to improve these security procedures, we are doing so.

I should say to the Hon. Member that we have under way an extensive review to make sure that things are going to be improved where it is possible to do so, and that will take place in time for the next Budget.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, that does not sound like the Minister who said in the House, as reported at page 1005 of Hansard, "that the violation did not result from negligence, carelessness or lack of proper security arrangements", although that may well have been so.

TIMING OF LAYING OF CHARGES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Justice.

This morning the RCMP also confirmed that in fact it had sought and received advice from federal Justice officials, federal Justice officials, in deciding whether the public interest would be affected by laying charges against a journalist.

In the light of this honest statement by the RCMP, why has the Minister been giving us only the half-truth that the charges were laid after consulting with law officers of the provincial Government in Toronto?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I made it very clear that the RCMP consulted with the law officers of the Province of Ontario. The law officers of the Province of Ontario asked for discussions with Justice officials.

I note my hon. friend said "in deciding". In my hon. friend's question he used the term "in deciding". It is very clear that it was the RCMP that made the decision to lay the charges after consultations.

Mr. Milliken: After consultations. That is right.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

CLOSURE OF CENTRE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour regarding the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety.

Canadian occupational health and safety statistics are alarmingly high. One statistic shows that more than 800,000 work days are lost annually to disabling injuries. Given this astounding figure and given the fact that the Government will cut $1.5 million from the centre's funding this year, why is the Government saying that the centre will close unless it becomes self-financing?

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the critic from the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for Hillsborough, for asking this question. I think it is very important that we state categorically that the centre is not going to close.

It has been very successful since its inception ten years ago in collecting and disseminating worth-while information about safety in the workplace. We are definitely going to see that that the centre will maintain its very worth-while operations.

RIGHT OF CANADIANS TO INFORMATION

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the same Minister. It again concerns the centre. The centre was established in 1978 to "promote the fundamental right of Canadians to be provided with health and safe workplace information", as he said. The Minister himself has said that the centre has "been doing good, useful work and that it should continue."

Is the Minister now saying that the fundamental right of Canadians to this information will be sacrificed for the sake only of deficit reduction?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that since it was established and during the six years the Opposition party was in power, the Centre received $20 million in financial support, an average of $3.3 million per year.

Since this Government came to power, the Centre has received $40 million over a period of five years, which breaks down to $8 million per year. I think that shows this Government's concern for the health and safety of our workers, and we have simply asked the Centre to continue its cost recovery policy which it started to implement three years ago.

In the course of discussions I had with representatives of the Board of Directors and the Director General of the Centre, it was established that there were many ways in which the Centre could become self-financing within the next few years.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

MAQUILADORA PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade, and it is related to the Maquiladora program of manufacturing goods in Mexico, trans-shipping them back into the United States, and importing them into Canada under the Free Trade Agreement.

I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister the following notice given to the employees of the Bovie Manufacturing Company of Lindsay, Ontario. I will read a couple of paragraphs which state:

> The Mexicans are waiting.
> Your strike vote last night means as soon as you go out, the Mexicans will get your jobs immediately.
> You may lose 8-10 weeks more wages as you cannot apply for UIC while on strike—
> However, if you work until the end of our coverall and lab coat contract, which will be approximately the end of April, and we lay you off, the waiting time is only two weeks.
> Remember, if you strike, there will be no job for you to come back to.

Mr. McDermid: Who wrote that?

Mr. Barrett: The management of this company sent it to its employees as a threat as to where their jobs would go.

Has the Minister taken steps to prevent Canadians companies using the Maquiladora program, an agreement between the United States and Mexico that allows the use of Mexican labour to produce goods without tariff coming into the United States and then trans-ship them into Canada as American goods. What is the Minister going to do about it?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it was about a year ago when the first false report of the threat from the Maquiladora program was uttered by a Liberal supporter, so the Hon. Member is a year behind the Liberals, and he is 100 years behind the truth.

The situation is the following. Under the Free Trade Agreement there are clear rules of origin so that any goods assembled or produced in Mexico in that manner would not meet the rules of origin and could not be admitted duty-free or whatever to Canada. That is quite clear.

The hon. gentleman should do a little research before he rises in the House and makes such silly statements.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, far be it from me to embarrass one of the rare breeds, a Tory from Newfoundland.

The date on this memo is February 23, 1989. The contract referred to is a contract that the goods will still be shipped back into Canada. To fill the existing contract, the goods will still come back into Canada.

It is the Minister who is out of touch. He has only five people in his whole Department to monitor this. The goods are coming back because only five people cannot investigate all those goods. Why does the Minister ask the companies to do the self-complying? Why is the Minister not complying?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there have been Tories coming into this House from Newfoundland since 1949, while Members of the NDP have been constant shrinking violets. Now they are not even shrinking. They are not even around any more. There are not any of them in the House.

With respect to the supplementary question asked by the hon. gentleman, you had to be a genius to figure out what the question was, by the way, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister could do his best.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I have to agree that I flunked out on being a genius.

U.S. ACID RAIN LEGISLATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the great majority of Canadians were delighted to hear the news when President Bush announced the proposed acid rain control legislation.

I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs and his officials will have a great deal to do with the process. I wonder what are the implications for him in his position and his officials?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by expressing my appreciation, and I am sure that of other Members in the House, to the Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka for his active interest and leadership.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): This has been a long fight for Canada waged particularly vigorously over the last four years.

As the Prime Minister indicated, we will be watching very closely the details of the legislation when it comes in. We will be consulting with Senator Mitchell when he is here next week. We will continue to apply the same determination to ensuring that Canada's environment is protected from this point forward that helped contribute to the announcement by President Bush yesterday.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF NEW SALES TAX ON SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

As of January 1, 1991 and thanks to his new sales tax, two-thirds of Canadian small businesses will be on the federal sales tax roll.

Under the present auditing system, there is one auditor for source deduction, one auditor for sales tax, one auditor for federal income tax, and if we add all the provincial acts and workmen's compensation boards, small businesses spend one-third of their energy responding to audits by various governments.

Could the Minister of Finance give us the assurance, once his new sales tax is introduced, that there will only be one audit at the federal level? I know he doesn't control the provinces, but could he at least give us the assurance that there will be one federal auditor, so that small businesses and businessmen can concentrate on running their operations and producing jobs?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has identified an area that we have been quite concerned about as far as the proposed sales tax reform has developed.

If the Hon. Member would refer to the top of page 26 of The Goods and Services Tax booklet, he will see identified a number of areas that we are proposing to introduce with the goods and services tax proposal that will reduce the compliance burden for the small business community. These have been discussed at some length with the community itself. We believe that this will go a long way to answering the concerns that have been expressed by them.

FEDERAL SALES TAX REFORM—AUDIT SYSTEM

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, if we had to rely on the first phase of tax reform to reduce the paper burden. Small business is concerned about the second phase of tax reform. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has demonstrated very clearly that it is against this tax because it will complicate the lives of those in small business.

Will the Minister of Finance commit himself and his Government today that, with the introduction of the new federal sales tax, we will have one system of auditing so that we can assure Canadians who want to start their own small business that they will get relief from routine and almost daily inquisition by the Department of National Revenue?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is not suggesting that we continue with the existing sales tax.

Mr. Gagliano: I am talking about auditing. Do not change the subject.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think the Hon. Member is agreeing with me—

Mr. Gagliano: I am not agreeing with you. You know better than that.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —that we should not stay with the existing sales tax because it is a very complex tax for those companies that are participants in that system.

There are 22,000 separate agreements with the 75,000 taxpayers in the existing federal sales tax system. That indicates how arbitrary, complex, and difficult it is for those businesses to comply.

We believe that the proposals we set out in the document we released six weeks ago, which will be broadened with the technical paper that comes out in a few weeks' time, will show very clearly how much we are concerned about this and to what lengths we have gone to reduce the compliance burden for the small business community.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

AMERICAN EXPRESS—GRANTING OF BANK LICENCE

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. The Minister knows that he has broken five of his Government's nine guidelines in promising to grant a Canadian bank licence to American Express. No Canadian bank would get similar treatment in the United States. No foreign applicant has ever been granted this type of special treatment before. Why the special treatment for American Express?

[Translation]

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that in the case of American Express, we are talking about an internationally- known financial institution. Since mid-1986, this institution has been involved in discussions with the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, to consider what it must do to meet our standards. So if American Express, as the Hon. Member said, is not regulated in the United States, its bank will be, in Canada, at the appropriate time. We also indicated, in order to enable Parliament to discuss these regulatory proceedings, that we would postpone the granting of letters patent to American Express until after the new legislation of financial institutions has been introduced and debated in the House.

[English]

REQUEST FOR CONVERSATIONS WITH AMERICAN EXPRESS OFFICIALS

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Finance.

The Minister knows that his officials quite properly held up this request for more than 24 months. The Minister himself was so ashamed of this deal that his Order in Council was held up until the final hour, November 21, 1988, election day.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peterson: Mr. James Robinson, Chairman of American Express, coincidentally led the pro-free trade lobby in the United States during Canada's last election.

In light of all these unusual circumstances, will the Minister commit to us and to all Canadians that he will make public all conversations that he or the Prime Minister has had with James Robinson or other American Express officials, conversations leading to this unprecedented deal for special friends?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have had no conversations with Mr. James Robinson or any other American Express officials.

The work that was done was done in the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions. As my colleague has said, this particular series of discussions goes back to early 1986, I believe it is, well before the Free Trade Agreement. It was a complex set of discussions. It was for that reason that the negotiations took a long period of time.

FISHERIES

FISH PROCESSING REGULATIONS

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries.

Representatives of more than 35,000 fishing industry workers from both coasts are here today to defend their industry and to support the long-standing requirement that Canadian caught fish be processed in Canada. On November 17, 1987, the Minister of Fisheries said:

> I give you my assurance those jobs are saved.

Eighteen months later every major fishing industry spokesman states that jobs will be lost. Gutting of the east coast fishery is not far behind.

Will the Minister of Fisheries today repeat his guarantee that no Canadian fish workers will lose their jobs as a result of this Government having put in Canada fish processing regulations on the free trade chopping block?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member, who is the official fishery spokesman for the New Democratic Party, would raise this kind of alarmist charge in the House of Commons.

Mr. Stupich: It is your statement.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, it is passing strange that he has not made such assertions in the many months that he served as critic.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: In fact, the new landing regulations which were the product of extensive consultation with the west coast fishing industry are designed to enhance and preserve the integrity of our management system for the Pacific salmon and herring industry. These measures are GATT consistent and will be proven to be so. They will preserve the jobs and the long-term integrity of this important resource into the future.

Mr. Stupich: Mr. Speaker, I will not say that the Minister was not here when I raised this issue previously, but I will say that another Minister responded on his behalf.

ENFORCEMENT OF LANDING REQUIREMENTS

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's own estimates acknowledge that the Department does not have sufficient numbers of inshore and coastal vessels to carry out enforcement on either coast.

Today we learned that the tracker aircraft fleet that patrols the Atlantic fishery is being phased out. How can the Minister of Fisheries expect that his limited landing requirements will work when patrols are inadequate? Without effective surveillance, how can he ensure that there will be no direct sales to Americans on the fishing grounds?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Once again, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who should know better spreads alarm and exaggeration with respect to the commitment of this Government to provide adequate support scientifically, enforcement-wise, and management-wise for the fisheries of both coasts.

It is for that reason that we have increased the budget of the Department of Fisheries and Oceansin these difficult economic times from $600 million a few years back to well over $750 million, increased enforcement on the Pacific coast from 100 officers in the early 1980s to well over 150 officers, and added helicopters and fixed wing aircraft patrol flights which were never previously operated to manage and enforce our coastal fisheries properly.

TRANSPORTATION

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN ROAD CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Minister said in an article in The Ottawa Citizen on June 8 that the federal Government may hike funds for road construction.

Will the Minister give this House and all of Canada the assurance that he was serious in his statement to the press and that the provinces and the municipalities can now expect federal assistance in road construction?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am always serious when I make statements to the press or before the House of Commons.

What I said—and I repeat it today—is that we are working at the federal level with the provinces, with the CCMTA which is the group representing the Ministers of Transport of Canada, on a national highway system.

There are three or four different phases. The first was in 1987-88. We are working on another one. Of course we considered, as much at the provincial level as at the federal or national level that something could be done in terms of a highway system. It did not involve at that time, however, putting in more money this year or next year. It was a question of defining the national highway system and working with the provinces to do so.

OTTAWA-HIGHWAY 401 LINK—FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Based on that answer, based on the article in The Ottawa Citizen, and coupled with the Ontario Government's announcement in The Brockville Recorder and Times yesterday that a four-lane highway from the nation's capital to Highway 401 would become a reality much earlier than expected, with the early engineering studies starting this year, will the Minister give his assurance that the federal Government will contribute to the funding of this $340 million project which will facilitate traffic flow in and out of the nation's capital?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very sympathetic with the Government of Ontario, but I would like to remind my friend that the Government of New Brunswick has put forward a program for $1.6 billion. We have said that it has to be seen within the national perspective.

I cannot give any commitment to the Government of Ontario today other than to say that we all are working together on a national highway policy. We consider that it will be a part of the national transportation policy in the future. However, we could not commit any money and my friend will understand that. Looking at the transportation system in this country, the Government in Ottawa is not ready to commit more money to this when we have to deal with our own obligations.

LOWERING OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In my riding there are 25,000 senior citizens. Many of them are suffering because of the Budget. According to the Minister's own Budget documents, if interest rates were lowered by 1 per cent, the deficit would be reduced by $1.6 billion. Senior citizens in Canada earning less than $20,000 are paying $567 million in income tax. If the Minister were to request that the Bank of Canada lower the interest rate by one-third of 1 per cent, it would then give seniors a tax free revenue of $20,000. Does the Minister not think this is a better use of resources?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, certainly I think we should look to the Hon. Member for advice on this because I believe he was an adviser to the previous Government when interest rates hit 25 per cent. He is an expert on high interest rates.

The point that he is raising is a serious one. We want to get interest rates down in this country. We made that very clear in the recent Budget. We also said that the Budget itself was designed to give the Governor of the Bank of Canada the scope to reduce interest rates. It is precisely for that reason that we feel we must get the deficit down, so we can get a better balance between interest rate policy and budgetary policy. That is the overriding objective. If we can get the budget deficit down we believe we will see lower interest rates.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CODE OF ETHICS FOR MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the question of ethics.

It is reported in today's press that a former aide of the former Tory M.P. Edouard Desrosiers has sworn an affidavit that other Members of Parliament have stolen federal research funds. That casts a pall on all Members of the House.

I want to ask the Prime Minister how soon we can expect from his Government an ethics package that was promised to Parliament and the people of Canada? As long as this kind of charge is left on the record it is a cloud over all Members of the House.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to some very serious allegations which may, in fact, affect all Members of this House. I strongly advise the Hon. Member and all our colleagues that, if they have any knowledge of any actions that may be inappropriate, they have as we all do a duty to transmit all this information to the RCMP so that it can investigate specific cases. I think that is the duty of all the Members of this House.

POINT OF ORDER

COMMENTS BY MEMBER FOR BEAVER RIVER

Miss Deborah Grey (Beaver River): Mr. Speaker, in my office earlier today I caught the exchange between the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Cooper) and the Whip of the Official Opposition. The Opposition Whip and, I must add, the Table, were perfectly correct. My votes in Hansard yesterday are recorded as I intended, yea on the first vote, and I was going to abstain on the amendment and the second vote. I certainly apologize to the Government if my wording confused it.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Duhamel:

That this House call upon the Government to take steps to enhance the federal commitment to the support of post-secondary education, scientific and technological development, job training and re-training and the battle against illiteracy, all of which provide the essential foundation for building a strong and competitive future for Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Halifax (Ms. Clancy) had the floor.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Madam Speaker, while the financial gain regarding funding for universities has been unfolding, there has been no concomitant re-assessment of our social policy regarding tertiary education. In integrating university education into our policy web, increasingly the Government has begun to equate accessibility to university with universal programs.

The truth is that universities are selective. But they are selective on the basis of aptitude and ability, not on the false premises of wealth, position, sex or cultural background. Every Canadian does not want to go to university. Not every Canadian can or should graduate from a university. Universities are charged particularly with the creative process of education and must be the trustees of change. People still fail to accomplish what universities expect of them, and that is as it should be. That is why we have developed alternative forms of post-secondary education.

In creating the rhetoric of accessibility and social rights with reference to university education, however, we have lost this perspective and come seriously close to undermining the capacity of the institutions to deliver the calibre of education which is fundamental to our future. A part of this argument deals with institutional autonomy which in some minds is in conflict with accountability. Some people are dedicated to proving that the two are not mutually exclusive and that autonomy does not imply licence. Rather, institutional autonomy reflects the need for a university to be free to foster creativity in every sector of endeavour.

It also means that universities must be free to maintain a critical mass of knowledge transfer. In other words, even if society thinks that the only need is for engineers, the university knows that a knowledge of history, of languages and of literature is fundamental to progress in any civilization. This is expensive. One of the best epithets I know comes from Derek Bok who said: "If you think education is expensive, try ignorance".

The other truth is that this kind of change cannot be manipulated or managed in the policy sense. You just have to ensure that the context for creativity exists. The creation of that context is not cheap, but it is not something which Canadians have ever balked at paying.

When I started university in 1966, we imported much of our professorate from the United States and we got the Grade B teachers who were not good enough for the Ivy League but fine for the colonies. This theme, unfortunately, has resurfaced and we now hear about the fact that we will not have enough home grown PHDs to staff our universities in the next generation. These cannot be created overnight unless we devalue the principles of credential, although there are a lot of creative possibilities for evolving our educational system so that it is more responsive to social needs and more fully integrated from one level to another.

There is a crucial need for a new national debate on education. The forum on post-secondary education held last year was intended to do this, but it fell far short of the goal. It did gather a lot of obvious representatives but it did not generate the kind of coverage needed by any of the participants and has not resulted in the kind of discussions that would lead to a re-assessment of where tertiary education fits in our social priority, let alone what it is.

Such a debate must be encouraged. It must be rigorous and critical. The rhetoric of the 1960s must be replaced by a fuller understanding of what the options and requirements are, including funding and a government commitment to supply that funding. We have to know the timeframes and the adaptations that universities are making to contemporary demands. As difficult as it is, we must come to some collective understanding of what we want the educated Canadian of the future to be. We need a strong co-operative plan of action and we need it now. We cannot afford budget cuts that threaten our educational and thus our cultural future.

Mr. Reid: Madam Speaker, as usual, I have listened with great interest to the comments of my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Halifax (Ms. Clancy). Whereas in the past she has been correct, there is no sense to this nonsense, in this case she has made very good sense on a number points, particularly as she has rightly said that there is much that must be done in this country in what I know as post-secondary education. Tertiary is another word over five letters and I am lost. Is it the same thing?

Ms. Clancy: Yes. Third level.

Mr. Reid: Thank you. The question we all face is having an education system that suits and meets the needs of a country that must grow technologically and must meet the demands of the future, with a workforce and population that has the capability of not only to deal with those challenges but increase our capability.

• (1510)

There has been some discussion of the Saskatoon conference which in itself was a landmark event in this country. While the Hon. Member points out that she would like to see perhaps more come from Saskatoon, or more come from another conference that would have followed on from Saskatoon, it is only fair to point out that there were a number of provinces in this country that objected to Saskatoon even happening.

It is a fundamental of our system that the provinces control education and not a situation which I particularly would want to change. The needs of the individual provinces vary greatly. The history, the culture and the educational demands are such that the provinces should maintain that control.

Recognizing that this is a very fundamental point to a number of provincial governments—perhaps not the Hon. Member's own but governments of some provinces—and recognizing that Saskatoon was a great step, I wonder if she advocates the use of the financial power, for instance, such as we use under the National Health Act, to bring provinces along or to bring provinces in line? If not, how does she reconcile the concern of Liberal governments across this country that the federal Government not meddle in any form of education, primary, secondary, tertiary or post-secondary? I would hate to find the Hon. Member buried in one of her own sepulchres.

Ms. Clancy: Madam Speaker, my hon. friend from St. John's East (Mr. Reid) made several very good points to which I would like to respond.

First, if he had been listening, he would have heard me say that the time has come for change which can only take place through sensitive negotiation between both levels of government as to the path which post-secondary or tertiary, whichever term you prefer, education will take.

My hon. friend also made note of the question of technology in the field of education. I would like to comment on that as well. I noted myself in my earlier comments that technology is the chic area for people looking at the post-secondary—I will use that term as opposed to tertiary today in deference to my hon. friend's sensitivities—but I remind him of the title of an old poem called, "Bread and Roses", and the fact that along with the bread of technology we need the roses of language, literature and other cultural and political pursuits. I would suggest that he not forget those.

I would also suggest to my hon. friend, as he comes from the same hard-pressed region as I do, that we have many universities in our Atlantic region. All of our universities are suffering. Yes, possibly too many. Certainly in my own riding, which has six universities and one on the outskirts, all of those universities play a unique role. There is indeed a place for each one of them. Every single one of them is suffering. They are suffering with physical plants that are falling apart. They are suffering with the highest tuition rates in the country. They are suffering with the lowest salaries for their faculty. They are suffering on research grants. They are suffering on equipment, et cetera. None of this is news to my hon. friend.

What I am saying to my hon. friend is that the time has come, if we are to have post-secondary education, education generally as a national priority, then we have to sit down and make a plan and see where we are going. It cannot be done by the provinces alone.

The Hon. Member's province cannot afford to fund post-secondary education, neither can my province, Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick. For the rest of the country, I am not sure. They have to look at their problems. I have looked at the ones in our region. Those are the realities which we face and we understand them.

To merely say that education is a provincial responsibility and not a federal responsibility and therefore put blinders on and no longer even look at the situation is to abdicate our responsibility. I know that this is not what my hon. friend had in mind. It certainly is not what the Members on this side had in mind.

After eight years of teaching in a university, I have seen what the problems are, as many of my hon. friends on the other side have seen them as well. What we need is a sensible plan, one that which is sensitive to the problems—constitutional, physical, salary, et cetera—that assault our universities on a daily basis. This is not a partisan issue. This is an issue for the future of our country. It is one which needs action instantly.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for York North.

Mr. Maurizio Bevilacqua (York North): Madam Speaker, the world is in constant change: Glasnost, Solidarity's election win in Poland, AIDS, reproductive technology, the recent student riots in China for democracy. At home we have free trade, our aging population and a post-secondary education system in serious trouble. Important developments in our nation, indeed our world, will experience many changes in the 1990s as we get ready to face the challenges of the twenty-first century.

It is ironic, therefore, that today in the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada we are debating an issue which is so fundamental to meeting the future needs of this country that one would think that a government would have had the vision to address it before it became an issue on an opposition day in Parliament.

Clearly, the question we must ask is: What is our Government doing to prepare Canada to meet these future challenges? The answer, sadly, is: Not as much as it can and not nearly as much as it must.

Today, I speak to the motion which condemns the Government for its destructive and inadequate policies affecting post-secondary education, research and development, training, re-training, illiteracy and its failure to provide the necessary funding to these areas which are vital to Canada's future.

It is obvious from listening to the Speech from the Throne and the Budget that the current Government simply lacks the commitment and ability to summon a vision for Canada to carry toward the twenty-first century.

Indeed, the Government's vision of Canada at no time looks more than four years ahead to the next election. The Government's vision is a vision for Canada based on an electoral map.

The people of Canada are dealing with change. They want, need and expect government to lead the way. Education should be treated as a vital national and international priority. The relative economic strength of nations has always been determined by their ability to educate and train their people. That is truer today than it has ever been in the past.

Education is vital to Canada's future. However, you could never tell that by looking at federal Government policies and programs. Indeed, Canada's per capita investment in post-secondary education is less than it was five years ago.

Federal cuts in shared cost programs with the provinces have reduced funding to post-secondary education equal to the total budgets of the University of Toronto, the University of British Columbia, the University of Alberta, McGill and Dalhousie. When quality education is more important than ever, the federal Government has chosen to cut back. The Government must begin to wake up to the reality of this nation and this world. Today we live in a technological age. Our economy is information-based and we do business in a global market-place.

Canada's youth today must have a future and must be able to deal with the challenges of the global village. Regardless of their chosen field of study and career orientation, our youth must be well educated and have a thorough understanding of the math, science and technology and, at the same time, a knowledge and awareness of the humanities and social sciences. As the countries and markets draw closer and closer together, communication among people becomes more and more important. Our young people must be able to communicate so that our message does not get lost.

When we consider the unbelievably fast pace that this world is moving in, the increasing flow of information, goods and services, financial transactions among nations, continuous flow of discussion, debate, compromise, agreements between nations, it is only logical that the nation which better trains, educates and provides opportunity for higher learning will undoubtedly have an economic, social, cultural and political advantage. Investing in our universities is absolutely crucial to meeting the demands of the global village, the village whose reality must be addressed in a serious way.

When we think of post-secondary education, we must realize that it is the way to open doors for future generations. We cannot build a strong, prosperous society in financial, social and cultural terms if we as a people are not able to understand the world around us. Post-secondary education gives our people the opportunity to become more and more masters of our own destiny. As a country, we must realize that knowledge is power and it is extremely necessary in maintaining self-determination as a nation in global affairs. An educated people is the answer to the challenges facing us today and in the future.

My concern is that we are not doing things we have to do to ensure Canada's ability to master the challenges it faces. The Government's answer to this reality that I expressed earlier is the following: Despite the obvious economic and social benefits associated with a highly educated population, Canada's universities are currently experiencing severe financial problems.

In 1986, the Government passed Bill C-96 which reduced the growth rate of transfers to the provinces by 2 per cent over five years, 1986-1987 to 1990-1991. The Government would have saved approximately $5.7 billion. The portion of financing for post-secondary education that was to be cut amounted to $1.6 billion. As if that were not enough, the Tory Government, beginning in 1990-1991, will further reduce the growth rate of the Established Programs Financing transfers to the provinces by 1 per cent.

Given the free trade deal environment and the need to be able to compete with our neighbour across the border—indeed everyone in the global market-place—we must for all the more reason be sure that we have a well educated workforce and a competitive economy. All this occurs at a time when enrolment and the need for post-secondary education is at its peak.

In the near future in Canada, almost half the new jobs will require more than five years of combined education and training above and beyond high school. Reduced funding for post-secondary education will seriously threaten its quality and accessibility. Without increased government support for post-secondary education and the development of strategy for post-secondary education and training, our youth will not be able to face the challenges of the years to come. Rather than compete in the world, we will slowly fall farther and farther behind our competitors, such as the United States, West Germany and Japan.

Disorganization and lack of leadership has marked the Tory Government's attempt to deal with the deficit crisis. What has happened now is that our youth have to pay for it. The deficit, in budgetary terms, is obvious to all. Now what has become also apparent is a deficit of solutions. Future accessibility to our universities is in jeopardy.

I would like to conclude my remarks by requesting that the Government fulfil immediately its promises to provide sufficient increased support for post-secondary education, research and development, training and retraining programs which constitute the cornerstones of a strong, competitive Canadian society. I want to give back to young Canadians the dreams of our forefathers, the dreams and goals that brought people to this country and made us a great nation: The dreams of freedom, dignity, fulfilment and perhaps the greatest dream of all, the dream of equality and accessibility. Equality and equal opportunity to learn, equal opportunity to work and equal opportunity to succeed.

Thus, I call on the Government and my colleagues to recognize the importance of this issue. We cannot go from here where we want to go and where we want to be unless we begin to put programs in place and into effect and realize the importance of post-secondary education.

We are a resource rich country here in Canada, but the greatest resource of all is our people, especially our youth. It is now time to make education the number one priority. We cannot afford to block the major artery to Canada's future.

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Bevilacqua) for taking part in the debate and I would like to remind him that it is not only a question of money, because he stressed the reduction in transfer payments. As far as my department is concerned, the Department of Science and Technology, I think that we have done a lot. His colleague just said that we had to change. I think that the change has begun, because the Minister of Science and Technology and all the other ministers of science and technology throughout the country have signed a policy to train all young people across the land, so that in all provinces, young people will have an equal opportunity, all Canadians will have the same chance to enter useful occupations that can improve the quality of life for Canadians.

I would like to point out to my hon. colleague that this national policy that the ministers of science and technology adopted involves asking industry to cooperate much more in training young people to meet the needs of industry.

We have noticed, Madam Speaker, that students naturally go into the social sciences and humanities; they go more for medicine than for science. On the other hand, we have noticed that what sometimes gives other countries an advantage over ours is that many more people go into scientific disciplines, Madam Speaker.

I would therefore like to ask the Hon. Member for York North what evidence he has to support his statements that we are not interested in university research, when the facts speak for themselves.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think the Hon. Member meant to ask a question of the Hon. Member for York North.

Mr. Bevilacqua: Madam Speaker, what really concerns me about the question and the comments made by the Hon. Member is that they are focusing into a particular area. However, I think that my speech was all encompassing as far as a philosophy and as far as a method and a vision for education as it relates to building our country.

The Hon. Member stated that in other countries there is a certain focus given to an education policy. I think that the most important thing is that students should also have the liberty to choose exactly what they want to do. To the point raised by the Hon. Member, if that is indeed the direction that this Government would like to take, then why have we not seen, for example, the development or any talk of a national apprenticeship program on that side of the House? As you know, in the past election, the Liberal Party of Canada went right across the country stating that we indeed require a national apprenticeship program. So I think that we are in agreement.

We can speak of certain issues and what we have done in positive ways, but the reality is that this Government has developed a tunnel vision approach when it comes to the deficit. In reality, what it is really concerned about is the deficit of solutions and deficit of ideas to address the problem of the deficit. The reality, as I said earlier, is the fact that transfer payments to the provinces have been decreased once again. As I have mentioned, to the tune of almost $1.6 billion for education. So you cannot as a Government begin to take credit for a very small portion of the program on the one hand while on the other hand leaving some people out in the cold and not allowing them accessibility to a post-secondary education. We as a people and as a Government have a moral obligation toward students and young people. I think that post-secondary education should be looked at as a right, not a privilege. It is a right of citizenship. That is the way in which we as a country should be directing our resources in terms of our vision of Canada.

• (1530)

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on the Government's commitment to support post-secondary education and literacy. It is my first opportunity in this session to address the House. It gives me an opportunity to reflect quietly on November 21 and the visions set out by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that day, his concerns for continuing to build a caring society, the vision for the future and the pathway to the 21st century. It also gives me the opportunity to say how pleased I am to be the Member of Parliament for Pierrefonds—Dollard, encompassing the cities of Ste-Geneviève, Île-Bizard, Dollard-des-Ormeaux, Pierrefonds and Roxboro the so-called North Shore area of the West Island. Also, I would like to say how pleased I am to be able to work on behalf of and with the Government in areas of restoring and giving greater equality and social justice.

Yes, there was restraint. Yes, we did share the burden. Yes, we did believe that we could not continue to pass on the debts to future generations and that we had to do something about them now. However, we have a considerable program available—and some $450 million for these programs of equality and social justice in the areas of official languages, women's programs, minority and cultural communities and natives. In fact, we will be having more program funding for the disadvantaged and the doubly disadvantaged. Certainly, we are touching on one of those areas today. Thus I am very pleased to have this opportunity to be before the House today.

Our record is a solid one in both the areas that we are discussing today, our commitment to post-secondary education and literacy. As I will show, we have maintained and enhanced our support to all aspects of higher education and literacy because we understand the importance of Canada's human resources, both to our social and to our economic development.

Our basic commitment was set out in the Throne Speech of October, 1986. It is one from which we have not deviated.

We said then that the Government was committed to supporting with the provinces and the territories a system of post-secondary education based on excellence and equality of opportunity. These twin themes of excellence and equality of opportunity run through the initiatives we have taken to support higher education for the past few years. As well, they are the basis for our continued commitment to co-operation with the provincial Governments and for the funding we provide through federal-provincial transfers.

I might just quickly note that I kept hearing from the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Bevilacqua) about decreases. I do not know how more money can ever be a decrease. To me, more money is always an increase. We are maintaining our commitment to support post-secondary education. Our transfers for PSE and health will increase by $1 billion from 1989-90 to 1990-91. Over the next five years the EPF will provide $25 billion more than over the past five years. That is an increase in any language.

I would now like to give an overview of the federal role in providing financial support to post-secondary education. This has evolved over time and now encompasses four main expenditure areas. They are contributions to the provinces and territories for general assistance to post-secondary education, usually called Established Programs Financing or EPF; support for research, some by federal Departments, but the bulk via the three research granting councils, the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, the Medical Research Council and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council; student financial assistance, primarily by means of the Canada Student Loans Program but also through awards provided by a variety of federal Departments and agencies; and other direct federal responsibilities such as the higher education of Armed Forces personnel, of inmates in federal correctional institutions and of Canadian Indians and Inuit.

For 1989-90 it is estimated that the total amount of federal government support in these four areas will be in the neighbourhood of $7 billion. When one considers that Canada now spends over $12 billion annually on post-secondary education, the significance of the federal government support becomes readily apparent.

About 75 per cent of the $7 billion is provided to the provinces and territories by means of tax and cash transfers under the EPF. There was some element of doubt expressed by Members opposite as to where we stood in terms of the world, with respect to how we were competing aggressively and competitively with the world about us and in terms of how we were maximizing the use of our human resources. From what I have been advised, we are second in the world in terms of PSE participation, close behind the United States. We are one of the three highest countries in terms of education spending, very close to Sweden and The Netherlands.

We must, of course, be concerned that we stay in the forefront of developed nations. That is why we are stressing post-secondary education based on excellence and equality of opportunity. Our program of Canada scholarships and centres of excellence, plus our support for granting councils are important contributions to excellence in science, research and higher education.

On the subject of EPF, I would like to stress that the federal transfers to the provinces for post-secondary education and health are not only very large, but are still growing substantially. Following the recent Budget, it is estimated that EPF transfers will continue to grow at a rate of nearly 5 per cent annually.

To be more specific, it is estimated that the total value of the EPF transfers for health and post-secondary education will be $19.8 billion in 1989-90 and $20.9 billion in 1990-91. EPF will provide $25 billion more to the provinces over the next five years than over the last five years.

Of these totals the federal legislation identifies some 29 per cent as being in respect of post-secondary education. Translated into dollars, this means that the post-secondary share of EPF is expected to be about $5.7 billion in 1989-90 and $6 billion in 1990-91, up from $4.2 billion in 1984-85.

In other words, federal contributions to post-secondary education are extremely generous and increasing steadily. In the same area, other major federal support programs were spared during the latest budget cutbacks, and I am referring to the Canada Student Loans Program, the Official Languages in Education Program and also the Canada Scholarship Program and the centres of excellence.

At this point, perhaps I may offer more detailed information that will give a clear picture of our commitment to supporting post-secondary education. In this respect, the latest updated information may be found in the 1987-88 Report on Federal and Provincial Support to Post-Secondary Education, tabled in the House on April 7 this year.

In addition to established programs financing, the federal Government provides financial support to the provinces and the territories so that they can pay the additional cost involved in maintaining and developing official language minority education programs and second official language teaching at all levels: primary, secondary and post-secondary.

• (1540)

Bilateral agreements, representing a total of $199 million in 1987-88, provide the framework for contributions made under the Official Languages in Education Program. These contributions total $57.2 million at the post-secondary level.

In addition to these contributions, the federal Government provides direct assistance to the provinces and territories. A total of $18.1 million has been granted for other activities such as the Summer Language Bursary Program and the Monitor Program.

[English]

With respect to student assistance, under the Canada Student Loan Act, the federal Government provides loan guarantees to post-secondary students with demonstrated need. The main feature of the Canada Student Loans Program is the fact that the federal Government pays the interest on these loans while the students continue full-time studies and for six months afterward. In 1987-1988, the total value of new loans was $589 million. The cost of interest on outstanding loans plus program expenses was $211 million in 1987-1988. In addition, the federal Government paid $77 million as an alternative payment to Québec as that province has always opted out of the program since its inception in 1964.

I would be remiss if I did not mention that a wide variety of federal Departments and agencies also provide scholarships, bursaries, fellowships and other support to post-secondary education students for a total of $143.4 million. The federal Government also provided close to $600 million in 1987-88 for university research, about $500 million of which went to the three research granting councils. The remaining sums came from the federal Departments and agencies that provided grants and contributions related to their own areas of responsibility by contracting out research required for their own internal purposes and by providing other research-related services.

Finally, in respect of its constitutional responsibilities for education, the federal Government spent a total of $104.1 million for its three military colleges, its Canadian Coast Guard college and for post-secondary education courses for federal inmates. As well, the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs spent $73.6 million in support of native post-secondary education in 1987-1988.

To summarize, the federal Government makes transfers to the provinces and territories under the EPF arrangements and the official languages and education protocols. It provides direct support to post-secondary students either through loan guarantees or awards such as scholarships and bursaries. Mainly through the work of the research granting councils, it provides support to university research and it assumes its own constitutional responsibilities for education.

The federal Government plays a very active role in this respect because it sees itself as a partner in supporting post-secondary education, and as such, it pursues the following objectives: to encourage institutions to offer programs and services that are in line with broad national objectives such as official languages, multiculturalism and promoting the status of women; to provide financial assistance to the provinces through the established programs financing system, enabling them to provide accessible and high quality post-secondary education; to provide financial assistance for research and development; and finally, to fulfil its own constitutional obligations with respect to the education of Native peoples, armed forces personnel and other specific groups.

In line with these broad national objectives, the Government, as I said earlier, maintains its focus on excellence and equality of opportunity.

I am sure Hon. Members will understand that, for the sake of Canada's future, we must do everything we can to help our colleges and universities aim for excellence in education. The future of our country is at stake, if we want to keep up with an increasingly competitive world.

Making post-secondary education accessible should also remain one of our major concerns. We already have one of the most open and most accessible systems in the world, and we must maintain our emphasis on equality of opportunity.

[English]

Let me outline some of the achievements of the Government in the field of post-secondary education over the past two years. We held the first national forum on post-secondary education, an historic collaboration of federal and provincial Governments with universities, colleges, the private sector and other interests. We organized, under the sponsorship of the Prime Minister the first national conference on technology and innovation, much of which was focused on the contribution of higher education and university research to Canada's competitiveness.

The Canada Scholarships Program has been introduced to encourage 2,500 of our brightest young men and women to enter science or engineering each year. The Centres of Excellence program will provide $240 million to support projects that will enhance our ability to compete internationally. Doubling the number of CIDA sponsored students and trainees will benefit both our own higher education system and the countries which receive our aid. Our support for a French language college in Ontario and le collège de l'Acadie in Nova Scotia will improve opportunities for francophones outside Quebec to study in their own language at the post-secondary level.

These examples show that the Government is already fully committed to supporting post-secondary education for Canada's future. Let me now turn to the Government's commitment to tackling the problem of illiteracy.

Illiteracy is a national problem. In every town and village, every region and district, every city and metropolitan area in Canada, there are men and women who cannot function in everyday life because they cannot read and write. Two years ago, Southam News commissioned a survey which revealed for the first time the full extent of illiteracy in Canada. I remember being shocked by the survey's findings. I know every Member of this House was equally shocked, equally dismayed and equally determined to end illiteracy.

Illiteracy is expensive! According to a study by a business task force, it causes annual losses of around $4 billion in the private sector and $10 billion in Canadian society as a whole.

However, the cost is highest at the personnal level: there are men and women who cannot read the newspaper or make sense of the bus timetable; they cannot take a full and active part in community life.

[English]

The road to literacy is one shared by all of us. The road to literacy is not followed exclusively by one level of Government. It is not followed by one political Party. It is not followed by the private sector alone. It is a road of partnership, of shared effort and of shared energy.

On September 8, 1988 we announced that the federal Government would be one partner among many in the journey on the road to literacy and we are working with many partners. Two weeks ago, the Government of the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador said in its Speech from the Throne that it was committing greater provincial resources to literacy. Advisory councils and task forces have been set up in Nova Scotia, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia to work with the provincial Governments on literacy. Ontario, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and the two territories have all increased spending on literacy programs.

• (1550)

Québec has passed legislation guaranteeing all adults the right to complete their secondary education. There is no limit on age or level of financing. This measure, which is unique in Canada, will help to increase literacy in the province.

[English]

I notice you signalling, Madam Speaker. I am deeply appreciative of having had an opportunity to work in these particular areas. The issue of literacy is an important one for all of us. We have now developed a very important partnership with the provinces, with those dedicated people who have worked in the field for countless years, very often strangers in the wind, looking for an oasis in the desert. We have been more supportive of those groups. We have found new partnerships to build on. We are now bringing forward initiatives with the business and labour movements and with the voluntary sector. Having 25 per cent of Canadians functionally illiterate is shocking, intolerable and it is something we must work to eradicate.

We will continue to do everything we can through the programs in my Ministry, programs that will be working to provide greater equality and social justice. We will do all that we can to make sure that this becomes a more open, more accessible, more understanding society and that we continue to be a country of freedom and opportunity which will continue to give all of the members of our community a full opportunity to participate. It is then and only then, Madam Speaker, that we can really take our place and say that ours is the great country of the 21st century able to challenge other countries of the world in the knowledge that we are much more effective and productive when we use the full capacity and full potential of all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his comments. I have a brief comment to make and a question to put to the Minister.

The Minister will know that I forwarded to him earlier in the year a report that had been prepared by residents of the Prince George, B.C. area who are arguing for a university in that community. I will be making some comments on that later in the afternoon. I appreciated the information which the Minister provided to me.

My question relates to the transfer payments to the provinces. There have been allegations, perhaps across the country but certainly in British Columbia, that the provincial Government has perhaps used those funds since they have not been, as has been put, tagged to be spent on education and health care. In fact, in British Columbia from the Social Credit Government the charges are that health and education money has been used for pavement on highways.

Has his Department done any studies to establish whether those charges are, in fact, correct? If his Department has, would the Minister be prepared to make them available to the House?

Mr. Weiner: Madam Speaker, I am glad my hon. colleague recognizes that significant funds are transferred and, indeed, we are hopeful that they are being fully used. We realize that there is a lot of goodwill involved here. We work in close collaboration with CMEC, the Council of Ministers of Education, Canada. We have a very good relationship with all of the Ministers of Education. We meet from time to time. There is a genuine feeling on the part of us all who serve at any level of Government to continue to make sure that our young people are the most competitive in the world, the best trained and the funds being advanced in this particular area are used for the purposes that they are intended.

The Member is certainly in the knowledge that this is somewhat of a complicated nation, that there are jurisdictional differences and it takes, as a great Quebecer, Frank Scott, once said: "When you deal with issues of this type it takes realism and goodwill. It takes co–operation, not confrontation." We will continue to work actively with our provincial colleagues for the delivery of service, which is their jurisdictional area, but certainly as I indicated in my comments this afternoon, we have a vital interest. We want to make sure that Canadians and young Canadians are completely qualified and competent and can challenge anybody in the world today.

Mr. Harb: Madam Speaker, I did not hear the answer coming through as forcefully as I would have liked it.

On several occasions all across the country, university professors as well as student federations have called upon the federal Government to introduce some sort of a mechanism whereby whenever they are putting money toward education and passing it on to the provinces that that money be used for education. Unfortunately, that has not happened as of yet.

I want to just quote from an article published by The Ottawa Citizen today, contrary to what the Minister was saying "that we are fairly well equipped internationally to compete", which quotes a statement of Lynn Burton who is a senior adviser to the Prime Minister's National Advisory Board on Science and Technology.

> To be quite blunt, Canada is ill-prepared for the new world competition and for the changing environment.

She goes on to state:

> —that figures from the 22-country Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development show that Canada lags in several key areas, including employee productivity, vocational training, quality of skilled workers and worker motivation.

That is true. We have been saying these things for years. When the Hon. Member was on the opposite side of the House he made those statements. We are both saying today that illiteracy is one of the major causes of lack of international competitiveness when it comes to Canadian society.

Unless we make education a national priority, unless we make illiteracy a national issue and we deal with those who think on that basis, we will be spinning our wheels in the air. It is very important that the Minister start addressing this issue with a little more seriousness than just telling us about the federal commitment to educational illiteracy. I know the funds are there. I know the Minister made a statement over the past two years to put some money toward illiteracy. He has set up an agency. He is doing very well and I have to commend him on that.

Since we have all of this confusion would the Minister be prepared to set up a national strategy to deal with education, namely, a National Education Act whereby you can set standards? We can set the bible for the provinces to follow. We can set the ABCs on how we want to see our kids prepared for the future.

In my view, no way can we carry on in the international market the way we are now with over 70 per cent geared toward the service sector rather than the manufacturing sector.

I would appreciate if the Minister would respond.

Mr. Weiner: Madam Speaker, I certainly appreciate my hon. colleague's recognition of the great progress we have made in fighting illiteracy. It was this Government that last September brought a $110 million program forward. I recognize that the Member might say "What's $110 million in an over-all field of $50 billion?", but that is very significant. We not only set up a small secretariat of very, very dedicated officers who are working well on the initiative, but we brought forward initiatives with the provinces and the territories. I was able to sign agreements with nine provinces and two territories by the end of March of the last fiscal year. Prince Edward Island, I believe, is the only one that we missed out on. We were not quite ready with them. We have agreements with Quebec, Ontario and all of the other provinces building new partnerships. In each one of those cases new funds were advanced for new projects and new community commitments to help eradicate illiteracy.

We went further. We are now building partnerships with the business people, with labour organizations, with new participants, individuals who were not involved in the so-called literacy movement before but we have not forgotten the dedicated volunteers who worked for decades on the issue, often without any helping hand.

As far as The Ottawa Citizen is concerned, while I have not seen the article personally, I would want whoever wrote it to be able to reflect also on the information that I have been given as advice that we are one of the three top countries in terms of educational spending. We rank with Sweden and The Netherlands. We are second in the world in terms of post-secondary education, very close behind the United States. We do not have to be ashamed of anything that our young people are doing. We are the equal of anyone in the world today. In fact, when we make full use of all our citizens by letting us all be completely involved, which is what I work for in another area of my endeavour, on the multicultural and citizenship side, watch how much more productive, competitive and effective we will be.

• (1600)

On a recent trip I had the opportunity to visit a company operated by two individuals who had come into this country in the early 1950s from Germany without two nickels to rub together. They are now running a business which employs 800 people who have come from 50 different cultural communities. That company is doing $50 million to $70 million worth of business, and looking forward to doing $150 million worth of business in the future. That is the type of competitiveness that we are developing.

What am I doing? We work very actively with the provincial Ministers in the Council of Ministers of Education, Canada Committee. We have initiatives and aims in common. There is no confrontation. This is co-operation. All of us recognize the need and the ability to deliver better by working together. The national forum was a focus that brought forward important initiatives. I will be meeting with my colleagues, the provincial Ministers, in the very near future and certainly will continue to look for ways to build a stronger and better system together.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Madam Speaker, I am pleased today to have this opportunity to speak on this motion that in many respects deals with our responsibility as leaders in Canada to the youth of this country and to the students of this country. There is a distinction there, Madam Speaker, as more and more of today's students, although they may claim youthfulness, as you and I do ourselves, are much less youthful than students of previous generations.

The decisions made now will provide for the foundations of a strong Canadian economy, a country that will be equipped and able to compete globally, whose people have the necessary educational background and technical skills, as well as the intellectual skills that will enable us to compete in the changing global economy.

This is a particularly timely motion. As universities and colleges were in the process of winding down their regular academic terms, it was announced in the federal Budget that transfer payments to the provinces for health and post-secondary education would once again be capped.

At the same time, the Government is creating the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology which is intended to have the purpose of stimulating and being responsible for science, research and development in Canada

Finally, the Government has introduced Bill C-16 to create the Canadian Space Agency. At the same time, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in openly contemptuous remarks, criticizes the very people who will be the foundation of that new agency for expressing hesitation about moving their families from the areas where they live to the south shore of Montreal.

Previously, I have spoken in the House on the Government's rhetoric in the area of science and technology. It has a lot of rhetoric, and I believe it is mostly good. Unfortunately, the substance has not been particularly grasped, nor has it been shown to have action to follow it. After all, it was the Prime Minister of Canada who, in the September, 1987 edition of the University Teacher's Bulletin wrote: "This Government stands ready to co-operate fully with the provinces and all others involved in post-secondary education and will help create and maintain a system of higher education capable of meeting the challenges facing Canada."

In the light of that statement by the Prime Minister, Madam Speaker, I invite you to accompany me on a brief journey across Canada to some of the post-secondary educational institutions on which we rely.

First, let us visit Memorial University in Newfoundland, the first and largest university in that province. At first glance one cannot help but notice how well it is used, or perhaps overused. Memorial University was built to accommodate 7,000 students. It now attempts to educate 12,000 students.

In Nova Scotia, one is struck by the fact that tuition costs are the highest in the country. That is a reflection of the fact that over the last 12 years tuition has doubled in this country. In British Columbia, tuition has tripled.

In Ontario, at the University of Toronto, join me in a fight to get a seat in Psychology 100. For the information of Members, the lecture is held in Convocation Hall. At the University of Windsor, the library selection has so badly deteriorated that students have been referred by their professors to Wynne University or the University of Michigan to do their research and reading.

At Carleton University in Ottawa, from which I am proud to have graduated, biologists are using outdated equipment in their labs, making measurements unreliable and morale very low.

In British Columbia, it is not uncommon for students to arrive in September to register for classes only to find there is no room for them. What is as crazy as the campus of Kwantlen College in Surrey, British Columbia? It is a campus composed entirely of portables. I am told the only thing that is permanent on the campus is the sign.

At the University of Regina, buckets are dispersed throughout the buildings to catch the rain. This is only a reflection of the larger problem of underfunding in that institution. It is clear that we have compromised our educational system.

In 1864, Theodore Rand, the Superintendent of Education for Nova Scotia stated words which are still appropriate today: "Is not education in fact the power of the people to make all the resources of their country tributary to their interests and comforts? And is not this the most obvious and prominent distinguishing feature between an educated and an uneducated people—the power of the former, and the powerlessness of the latter, to develop the resources of nature and providence, and make them subservient to human interests and enjoyments?"

There is no question of the importance of science, engineering and technology to Canada as we move into this globally competitive market-place. There is also no question of the problems we face. In the past in the House we have talked of the ratio of research and development expenditures to Gross Domestic Product. The Prime Minister promised to increase it to 2.5 per cent from where it currently resides at around 1.4 per cent. The GERD ratio, as it is called, is a misleading indicator. It may indicate that we do have a problem, but there are other things that are more significant.

There is a lack of industrial research in Canada. There is a flagging commitment to government research and to basic fundamental research. There is a massive trade deficit in high technology and medium technology goods. To me, those factors are perhaps more important than the ratio of research and development expenditures themselves, much as we would like to increase that.

Post-secondary education and Canadian universities are key to Canada's competitiveness and ability to do fundamental research. There are very serious problems in addition to the ones that my example suggested. There is the research capability. The number of research scientists and engineers in our universities is largely determined by the teaching requirements of the institutions. Those have remained pretty static since the early 1970s with the consequence that our university engineers and scientists are now middle-aged. They are not yet at retirement age. We have gone through a period of years when people holding PhDs have had difficulty finding positions in Canada. As this group of scientists and engineers reach retirement, we will have difficulty replacing them. Therefore, we are going from the problem of having a shortage of jobs for our PhD holders to the reverse problem of an inadequate number of PhD doctors to fill the university positions.

There is underfunding for basic research. I wish to refer the House to the report of the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology formed by the Prime Minister. In its university committee report it states on page 43:

> Because of inadequate funding, individuals and groups at the forefront of their disciplines in Canadian universities cannot undertake venturesome and leading-edge research projects. Success is likely to be achieved late in the process, only after leading foreign research universities have established their pre-eminence in new scientific trajectories.
> Few large groups of scientists thrive in Canadian universities. When a notable innovation is achieved, the advantage tends to be lost shortly after to better-funded groups abroad who are in a position to exploit the opportunities it can provide.

We lack a policy in Canada on what might be called big science, major projects. When do we fund them and with what resources? What resources are directed from other scientific endeavours? We face the problem of obsolescence in our laboratory facilities in the universities. The estimates of the need to raise the level of our scientific and technological equipment to a satisfactory level have been massive. The National Sciences and Engineering Research Council estimated $50 million per year is required. In fact, we have been spending $10 million to $15 million per year.

• (1610)

The problems are massive. We need certainly the renegotiation of the EPF arrangements. We need to increase the budgets of the granting councils. We need to increase research funds available to the environmental sciences. In conclusion, Madam Speaker, we need to integrate our endeavours in science, research and development with those of the industrial sector as well as our concerns about maintaining a clean and healthy environment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments?

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: Madam Speaker, I listened closely to the speech by the Hon. Member for Ottawa South; he said that the universities' equipment was completely outdated and that this problem occurred all over the country.

I think that the Government is aware of this problem. That is why, in its Inovaction program, the Canadian science and technology strategy, the Government, together with the provinces, set up a task force to deal with this problem and other related matters. It will certainly have solutions to suggest to us.

It is important for us too that universities have facilities with the latest technology. We think it is absolutely essential for the students and the researchers who must follow the students' progress very closely.

I would like to say to the Hon. Member that the centres of excellence program is one way. The $240 million that the Government has allocated for centres of excellence is a way for the universities and researchers to get the very sophisticated equipment that they need. But of course, they must apply for it and you know very well, Madam Speaker, that a committee is now dealing with the selection of the centres of excellence.

But I want to say to Hon. Members that this is an approach for researchers and I think that those people are very aware of it and they have been very enthusiastic in making proposals to the Government.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member, because I heard him criticize and say that the Government was not giving enough money to this and that; I would like the Hon. Member to tell me whether he and the members of his party would be in favour of increasing the deficit to give the money that is being requested all over the place. That is the question I have for my hon. colleague.

Mr. Manley: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Parliamentary Secretary for her question.

First, I agree that the centres of excellence program is a good one. It was developed by Mr. Peterson's government in Ontario and it is now being applied by the federal Government. I believe that this program has a lot of merit.

Concerning the deficit—

[English]

With regard to the deficit, this is a very important issue. I know that nobody on this side would trivialize the importance of the deficit. As it was said earlier this morning, if you think education is expensive, you ought to check out the price of ignorance. There are some things in Canada that should be regarded not as expenses but as investments. It is absolutely essential to the future well-being of Canada that we adequately fund our educational institutions. There can be no other choice. We talk about the problem of the deficit putting the expenditures of today onto future generations. What a burden we put onto future generations if we burden them with ignorance. Therefore, although I think the deficit is an important issue, I think that the deficit that exists in our intellectual development, in our scientific and technological endeavours and engineering vis-à-vis the rest of the industrialized world is much more serious to Canadians and to our future than is the financial deficit.

Mr. Harvard: Madam Speaker, my question will be short and I want to put it to my hon. friend from Ottawa South. It has to do with his remarks earlier about facing the possibility of a shortage of scientists and engineers somewhere down the road. I am simply wondering whether it is a matter of throwing money at the problem. I know that our hon. friends across the way would suggest at times that we are not sensitive to the deficit or to the Budget and that we would like to just spend money like drunken sailors. I do not think that is the case. But I want to ask my friend from Ottawa South, is it a matter of just throwing money at the problem? Will it go away by throwing money at it or is the problem much more complex than that?

[Translation]

Mr. Manley: Madam Speaker, I just have a short answer!

[English]

No, we cannot solve the problem by simply throwing money at it. It is a complex problem, but money is part of the solution. If we are going to attract more students into the natural and engineering sciences, we need to ensure that we have job opportunities for them at the conclusion of their educational careers. It was not much of an incentive to undertake a very arduous program such as science or engineering with the prospect at the end of not finding work and having to go off to the United States.

As for the problem that will likely arise in the 1990s of an inadequate supply of Ph.D scientists and engineers in Canada, I think we need to address also the problem of the funding of our facilities ensuring that we have adequate lab and research facilities in our institutions available to encourage students to pursue those disciplines.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Madam Speaker, this Liberal Party motion which is before the House asks the Conservative Government to provide more support to post-secondary education, more support to scientific and technological development in Canada and more support for job training, retraining and the battle against illiteracy. I want to congratulate my colleague from St. Boniface who prepared and put this motion to the House of Commons today for the issues involved in this motion are among the most critical that face Canada in the 1980s and the 1990s.

If Canada is to survive, let alone progress as a major player in world commerce, then education and training must be among our highest priorities. Much more must be spent if we are going to compete in this very competitive world.

We have just signed or implemented the Free Trade Agreement with the United States. We in this Party opposed that agreement, but it is in place now. It has been passed by Parliament. But unless we do more to prepare our workforce, both young and older, to be more productive and more competitive, then we are going to lose. The Americans will gain most of the benefits to be derived from that agreement. Our nation will also be facing competition in Europe in 1992 when the Common Market countries remove nearly all barriers between them. It will be more difficult for Canada to compete in the European market. Consequently, it becomes absolutely essential that Canadian workers be the best trained in the world.

Education is not simply an option or a luxury, it is absolutely essential for our economic well-being. That is why I could never understand why governments at any level could cut back on education and training when we were in a recession or faced with difficult times, such as now when the Government alleges that there is a problem with the deficit. The way to dig out of a recession and to reduce the deficit is to make sure that the workforce is highly skilled and can produce the income and revenues necessary to turn the situation around.

If we look at European countries like West Germany and Sweden, we can see that at times of recession and depression they spend more money on education and training than they do otherwise. They use that opportunity when people are off work due to cyclical or structural changes in the economy to upgrade their training and re-educate them so that they are put in line to take up the new jobs that will come after the recession or depression.

Education and training is like the basic infrastructure for the economy. Just as businesses need roads, railroads, ports and airports, they also need a skilled workforce. Rather than skimp on money in providing for a skilled workforce, it is necessary to put more money into it.

It is also important to do something about the wasted human resources. We have very high unemployment rates in Canada with respect to our disabled population and our minorities. Almost 30 per cent of Canadians are illiterate and there are many drop-outs. These are wasted human resources unless we have appropriate training programs and education programs to make these people productive, as they all can be.

Switzerland is a small country which does not have very much in the way of natural resources. It does not have a lot of minerals, oil or gas, as Canada has. It does not have large areas for agriculture and fisheries. Yet that is a very progressive country because it has a very highly skilled labour force. It is highly skilled in chemicals, machinery, banking and finance. Tourism is another important part of its economy. Every Swiss citizen is skilled to play a role in the economy so that there is very little wasted resource. It is a highly productive economy with only about 1 per cent or 2 per cent unemployment. Switzerland makes the best use of its labour market force, which makes that economy very successful.

As our Party's critic for unemployment, I will deal more specifically with the training and retraining aspects of this motion. I want to refer the House to a recent report that I believe is the best report on the subject before us today. It was published in the spring of 1989 by the Canadian Labour Market and Productivity Centre. The feature article in that spring issue is a review of education and training in Canada. I urge all Hon. Members to read this article because it is short and to the point.

The report states that for the year 1988–89, spending at all levels for education in Canada was about $40.8 billion. It goes on to point out that on a per student basis, Canadian public spending on secondary and post-secondary education represents a smaller proportion of Gross Domestic Product per capita than the average for 17 OECD countries. It also points out that during the 1980s, spending per student in real terms rose at the primary and secondary level in Canada but spending fell significantly at both the college and university levels. It goes on to say that Canadian post-secondary institutions have not been able to make up for reduced government funding and shrinking tuition income.

That is the case with respect to post-secondary education. There has been a drop in funding on a per capita student basis, which is adversely affecting post-secondary education in Canada.

Let us deal with training. The Conservative Government has cut training and employment programs by 32 per cent since 1984. The budget for training and employment in 1984 was $2.2 billion. That has been reduced to $1.5 billion in 1989, a cut of 32 per cent.

According to a table in this report, in 1982–83 under the former Liberal Government, there were 235,000 Canadians in government-sponsored institutional training courses. After the election of the Conservatives in 1984, this dropped significantly. In 1984–85 there were 216,000; in 1985–86 there were 201,000; and in 1987–88 there were 133,000. There was a drop from 235,000 in 1982–83 to 133,000 in 1987–88, which corresponds to the cuts in moneys available, to which I have already referred.

For example, let us consider what happened with air traffic controllers. This situation has hurt the country significantly in several main centres. In its 1985 Budget, the Government cut moneys for the recruitment and training of air traffic controllers. It only took about three or four years before there were shortages in Toronto, Montreal, Moncton and elsewhere, to the extent that there were no new air traffic controllers available. The Government had to go to the United States to get air traffic controllers and it is now trying to train them here. Another example of cuts in post-secondary education is the Government's recent cut to Indian post-secondary education. We have already debated that in the House. That spirit shown by the Government, to cut in areas of education, is extremely worrying and bothersome to many Canadians.

There is much to be said on this subject but I will conclude by referring again to the report of the Canadian Labour Market and Productivity Centre. This report does not represent the Liberal Party criticizing the Government, or the Opposition in Parliament criticizing the Government, it is the report of a very respected centre set up by labour and management to deal with these issues. They state in their conclusion that the evidence cited in the report suggests that Canadians have not given education and training the priority they deserve. They state that real spending per student on post-secondary education is declining and there is only a limited amount of job related training and retraining done by both government and employers. That is the issue we are debating in the House today. We will be asking Members of the House to support this motion which says that more must be done. I think Canadians will be watching Members of Parliament on both sides of the House to see where they stand on this critical question before the country.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Question or comment. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mrs. Browes: Madam Speaker, I just want to be sure that I heard the Member correctly. I think what he meant to say was that there was an increase in the amount of spending which the Government was having on post-secondary education. Now, there are not any cuts, there is an increase in the amount of money that is being transferred to the provinces on health and post-secondary education, $19.8 billion in 1989-90 and in 1990-91, $20.8 billion. Of these amounts, some 29 per cent is identified as being for post-secondary education. I would hope that the Member would realize that this is a growth of over $1 billion from 1990-91 in the first year of the Budget that we have the restraint program in place. Indeed, there has been an increase in our commitment to fund post-secondary education. The funding will provide $25 billion more to the provinces over the next five years, than over the last five years with $83 billion, for 1984-85 to 1988-89, and $108 billion for 1989-90 to 1993-94. When I hear the Member speaking, it concerns me because the support from the federal Government for post-secondary education has exceeded the support increase from the provinces.

When the Hon. Member said that more money should be spent, I want to ask this Member of Parliament where he would get the additional money to fund these programs which he is speaking of?

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, it seems that the Hon. Member was not listening closely to me. Of course there is an increase in the Budget of this year compared to last year with respect to post-secondary education by this Government. We have not said that there was not.

What we are saying is in the Budget the Government has cut back the rate of increase which was supposed to be there. In other words, the provinces were expecting to get so much but because of this Budget, they are going to get less than they were expecting and on which they were planning. That is the point. Sure, the Government is increasing it but it is not increasing it by the amount which was committed in the earlier years of this Government.

In the Budget, it definitely cut back on the rate of increase of funds to the provinces for health and education. That is the point.

To deal with the last question of the Hon. Member, we would certainly find more money for education out of the other budgets of the Government. It is absolutely essential that we have a highly skilled and a highly trained workforce.

By the way, this is not Liberal Members who are speaking. I challenge the Hon. Member to read the feature article, Spring 1989, of the Canadian Labour Market and Productivity Centre. This is a centre made up of business and labour. It is not just a labour centre. What do they say? They say that on a per student basis, Canadian public spending on secondary and post-secondary education represents a smaller proportion of GDP per capita than the average for 17 OECD countries. This report is critical of the Government, not just this Government but provincial governments as well for their commitment to education.

With respect to training—and training is pretty clear—the Government cut 32 per cent from 1984 to 1989. This was a serious cut-back. The figures are there. What has the Government done? It is trying to make it up now by taking $800 million out of the unemployment insurance fund, because it was criticized by the de Grandpré Commission and other commissions for not putting enough money into training and it is going to try and put that money back in. Instead of taking it out of general tax revenue, it is taking it away from unemployed workers.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Burlington.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure today to respond to the motion. In fact, it seems to me that the Hon. Member has provided me with an opportunity to make some positive remarks about the accomplishments of our Government.

Our Government does not need to be called upon to take steps to build a foundation for the future prosperity of this country. We have taken those steps. We are well on our way to ensuring a strong and competitive Canada.

During the last four and a half years, this Government has rewritten the book on employment training. We have worked with business, labour, communities and anyone else concerned, to create programs which will best serve Canada, the Canada of tomorrow.

Several billions of dollars have been spent to train and re-train our country's workers so that they can fill the jobs of the future.

In the Hon. Member's riding, this Government has spent $2 million for job training in the last year, and a total of $14.4 million since 1985. He of all people has no basis upon which to base doubts about the efforts to help Canada meet the labour market demands.

Can any Member of this House deny the massive challenges Canada faces in light of expanding global markets and technological change? In a world of enhanced international competition, Canada's most important need will be a workforce which is equipped with proper skills. Our human resources are the key to preparing Canada for a labour market which is radically different from the one we know today.

Right now 40 per cent of all jobs call for professional white collar skills. By the year 2000, 80 per cent of all jobs will demand those skills. It is clear that job training is a critical part of the march toward the next century. Equipping workers for the needs of the labour market will ensure Canadians the degree of prosperity which we have enjoyed until now.

Two-thirds of Canadians who participated in a recent poll said they need skills training to keep up with economic competition and technological change. Less than half who work full time have received training in the last two years. More than half of the unskilled workers polled had received no training at all.

The example of other countries has proven that business must constantly help their workers upgrade their skills in order to keep their businesses competitive. In 1987 only one out of four Canadian companies spent money to train their employees. Canada spends about half the amount on training that the United States does. It has been evident for some time now that this is not just the Government's problem.

When Canada cannot keep up with the world competition because its workforce does not have the right skills, it is the problem of every Canadian. That is why our Government since its first term has worked to put relevant training programs on everyone's agenda. Labour, that is business and communities, have an important role to play in providing training.

In 1985, this Government replaced more than 40 ineffective make-work programs with a co-ordinated regionally driven initiative called the Canadian Jobs Strategy. Rather than making work, we set out to make permanent jobs. The Canadian Canadian Jobs Strategy is aimed at individuals and their specific training needs. It allows people in the regions and those who understand the local labour market to direct the programs. Canadian Jobs Strategy has been just as successful as we expected.

Most of those who take part in the Canadian Jobs Strategy training program find work using their newly acquired skills, skills which will continue to be in demand for a long time. Building on the philosophy and the success of the Canadian Jobs Strategy, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) recently introduced an important national program which will lead to further improvements in the training and employment structure of the Canadian labour market. The Canadian Labour Force Development Strategy represents this Government's commitment to work with its partners in business and labour, to prepare Canada's workers for the future. It also represents a shift from former passive income support for the unemployed to more relevant and active support in line with labour market needs.

On examining our unemployment insurance program, we found it needed a new look to keep it in line with the times. The purpose of the unemployment insurance program remains what it was upon its inception almost 50 years ago: to protect people out of work and to maintain economic stability. However, unemployment insurance must evolve with current economic needs. Under the strategy, unemployment insurance will help clients get relevant training so that they can return to the workforce with the skills needed to keep a job longer.

Since 1977, some UI money has been used to train claimants. Last year, for example, 74,000 claimants were trained under Section 26 programs. The strategy proposes to extend the training to an additional 60,000 trainees. Some $100 million is earmarked for skills training and education upgrading for displaced and older workers. For young people, $100 million has been set aside for entry level skills development.

Some of the other services to be made available are financial support for administrative course and travel costs, income support, allowance for child care, job search counselling and access to vocational training. This strategy recognizes that training means paying for much more than the cost of taking a course. We have tried to ensure that adequate support is available so that those who need training do not encounter financial barriers.

In addition, the strategy provides $25 million to help an expected 5,000 claimants relocate. Those who want to travel out of town to look for work or who want to move where job prospects are better will now have income support available. The strategy also encourages those claimants who want to start a business. About $20 million has been designated to support the entrepreneurial ideas of those receiving unemployment insurance.

As well, some of the unemployment insurance funds have been allocated as incentives for those claimants who find work quickly. This may be in the form of bonuses or temporary earning supplements.

In addition, we are fine tuning certain aspects of unemployment insurance. In areas where there are no more job opportunities, claimants will have to work longer to qualify for benefits and the duration of their benefits will be shorter. But in areas that continue to experience high unemployment, the number of working weeks to collect unemployment insurance will not change.

Canadians are eager to work and contribute to the prosperity of their country. The unemployment insurance changes under the Labour Force Development Strategy mean unemployed Canadians will go back to work faster with the skills that will hold them in good stead for longer than the time needed to qualify for another UI cheque.

As for Canadians receiving social assistance, the Labour Force Development Strategy offers new solutions. Currently, the federal Government spends $400 million a year on a training program for social assistance recipients. We have been encouraged by its success, although it has only been in effect since 1986. Under the strategy, however, the federal Government is ready to commit an additional $50 million together with $50 million ordinarily spent on income maintenance under the Canada Assistance Plan to train more social assistance recipients for meaningful work. If the provinces agree to match this money, together we will make an additional $200 million available to help the 20,000 additional social assistance recipients across Canada.

It is critical that government programs reflect today's changing work patterns. In addition to the changes I just outlined, the strategy will provide more training opportunities to employed Canadians. Under the strategy, $230 million will be directed toward human resource planning and training. Almost half this money will be spent on entry level training to be provided by the private sector.

In recognition of the importance of the school–to–work transition, we plan to quadruple the funds for co–operative education. As well, we are providing human resource planning to industries to help them get ready for the future labour markets. The strategy also doubles funds for the industrial adjustment service. The IAS is our proud example of how labour market adjustment should be done. It works with management and workers to find solutions to obsolete skills, technological change and plant shutdown.

Our Government has tried to cover all the bases. We have analysed our weaknesses and directed our efforts to overcoming the faults. With the help of our partners, there is no question that we will meet the challenges facing this country. Such challenges cannot be met by sticking rigidly to principles or ideas that are no longer relevant.

It is incumbent upon the Members of this House to remain open to new ideas and new schools of thought. While we may all agree on the goals that must be attained, such as the need for more effective retraining and training, we are far from unanimous on the means. The issues are complex and involve all sectors of the labour market. Governments alone do not have all the answers. That is why we recently met with the leaders of 13 national organizations to launch a consultation process on future labour–market programming. These representatives of business, labour and training organization and other interested groups agreed on five key labour, market and training issues which must be addressed. They are entry level training programs for unemployment insurance recipients, human resources planning, programs for social assistance recipients and programs for older workers.

During the summer months, six representative task forces will meet to discuss these issues and prepare papers for five symposia scheduled for the fall. Probably the chief concern is apprenticeship and the extent to which it can be used to address entry level training. We need a new entry level training program based on apprenticeship's best features for occupation now not covered by apprenticeship. We will be seeking extensive advice from the private sector on this question.

A second task force will look into co-operative education as a practical tool to guide young people in making realistic career decisions while they are in school. Since co-op education will be expanding under the new strategy, we will require support and input from both the education community and the private sector.

I have already stated the critical need for more training in Canada. That is a fact of today's world. We need to know what approaches are necessary to motivate the private sector to work with the Government to achieve common goals. A third task force will explore these ideas.

The ongoing quest to help social assistance recipients integrate into the labour market must be re-evaluated to ensure that we are taking the right approach. This will receive the careful research and experimentation from a fourth task force.

As for older workers, the problems are acute and the solutions may require a response from those familiar with their needs in the fifth task force.

The sixth, and one of the most critical of task forces will concern the need to make training more effective in helping unemployment insurance beneficiaries get back to work.

The coming months will be busy ones for the six task forces. In the fall, the Government plans to begin negotiating training agreements with the provinces. The agenda is demanding. The Government eagerly awaits the reports which will guide us and our economic partners in shaping the labour market of the future. These new measures are part of a long process which began in 1985 with a goal of building a strong and competitive workforce for the 1990s and beyond. But the experience of the past four years proves that this Government is not afraid of a challenge. We have worked hard with our partners to begin the necessary reshaping of the Canadian labour market and the success of our program to date is a testimonial to the fact that this Government is headed in the right direction. Today we are eager to get on with the further changes so that Canadians can continue to prepare for future prosperity.

Mr. Volpe: Madam Speaker, I was quite intrigued by the presentation given by the Hon. Member. In the first little while, I wondered if my ears were ringing as a result of a debate I heard not too long ago with respect to the kinds of moneys that are established for a new training ethic in this country.

I dare say that if we are going to establish a true training ethic in this country, then we have to be cognizant of all the factors that enter into the play of education. When we are talking about education—and my colleagues on this side of the House, will understand this very, very well—we are talking about three elements. The first element is the formation of character and personality. The second is the instructional components that go into preparing a student, be he or she young or old. The third involves training components that are either skills specific or skills transferable.

We are talking about three dimensions in education. None of them exist on their own. Yet we have the Government, in this case thanks to the Hon. Member's presentation in this debate, that seems to concentrate on only one, and it in a vacuum.

It is important for us on this side of the House who have presented this particular motion today to stress the importance of education as an investment for the future of the country, a future that will be determined and shaped by the kind of role we see for ourselves in the international market-place, not only as producers, consumers or entrepreneurs but, I dare say, as individuals who will propagate the message of equality, of freedom, of justice and brotherhood everywhere. We can only do that if we are going to make each and every Canadian competitive and productive, productive in the philosophical sense but productive as well in the ability to harness entrepreneurial energies to the challenges of tomorrow.

I cannot sit by and allow the Hon. Member in his remarks to stress and outline a series of initiatives that represent to Members on this side of the House a retrograde step in terms of how we will prepare some very skills specific individuals for the coming decade.

I wish to finish off my commentary by asking the Hon. Member how he can justify reading through a list that suggests that the Government is preparing a new training ethic for the country when what we see in fact through the Estimates is a diminution of funds available in job development for those people who need skills preparation most, for those people who find it most difficult to enter the job market and for those people who the Government has been failing at both the formation and the instruction stage.

Mr. Kempling: Madam Speaker, I do not know what planet the hon. gentleman lives on. He certainly does not seem to be in the real world.

The job of retraining workers in the labour force today and retraining those who will enter it in the years ahead is a joint problem among Government, labour and industry. If one were to go through the industrial countries with whom we compete, one would find that industry has large sums of money dedicated to training workers. I was recently in Washington listening to an industry group which told me that it had dedicated $200 million to upgrade the qualifications of the people in that labour group in order to maintain a competitive position in the world market.

I recently read summaries concerning the following industries in Canada: electrical, steel, automotive, textile and chemical. The summaries dealt with how much these industries were prepared to spend on labour training and upgrading the skills of their employees. It is millions of dollars. It is a joint job with respect to which labour, Government and industry will have to put their brains and thoughts together. That is what the six communities that have been set up to look into the six major areas that I outlined in my remarks have set out to do. It is how we are going to go about this and what the requirements will be for the various divisions in our industry.

We have much work to do. I do not think that it will be an easy job at all. We certainly need the co-operation and support of everyone. If we are going to continue to nit-pick it apart and raise hypothetical situations such as the Hon. Member has done, then we are not going to make very much progress.

I know that the Minister and the Government are dedicated to this program. We will see that it goes through.

Mr. Mifflin: Madam Speaker, first, I would like to make a comment to put in perspective some of the specifics mentioned by the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling). He talked about the job development strategy. Indeed, we had a very good discussion on that topic last week. We did not always agree but I think our figures were pretty much the same.

The Hon. Member talked about job development strategy. I note that this year in looking at the Estimates the Government is putting in $53 million less in job development strategy than it did last year and, indeed, $50 million less in the job re-entry program.

I would like to make the point that in a more macro sense I do not think there is any question that the Canadian education system is on the ropes. In continuing to provide university education at least to an ever increasing number of Canadians, the central problem in the last 25 years has been the juxtaposition and to a certain extent the tension between trying to provide quality and accessibility.

In fact, to take it a step further, I think we have a triangle. On one side we have quality and on the other we have accessibility. At the bottom of the triangle there is money. I think we are looking at somewhere in the vicinity of $7 billion. If that $7 billion—or the money that is required to support the other two sides of the triangle—is not there, then the other sides will cave in.

The amount of money that is spent per student in Canada, as I understand it, has declined considerably to the point that, as mentioned by my hon. friend a few minutes ago, we are behind 14 other members of the OECD countries. Indeed, the operating grants in Canadian universities have risen less than 3 per cent in real growth in the last decade while enrolment is 30 per cent higher.

I would just like to make the point that we have 500,000 full-time students in Canada. We have 37 universities. There has been a 35 per cent increase in enrolment in the last decade. That was not predicted by the statisticians. In fact, what they did not allow for is that 12.5 per cent of students are now enrolling as opposed to 9 per cent.

I would like to wrap up by saying that with those kind of statistics, those kind of people and those kind of growth rates we cannot afford not to have the investment in education that we should be having.

Mr. Kempling: Madam Speaker, I think the only thing I could recommend to the Hon. Member is that he get out of the Parliament Buildings and go around to visit this country from coast to coast as I have done.

Mr. Mifflin: I have done it.

Mr. Kempling: He could look at some of the things that have been done.

I was reading today in my mail about a company called Generation 5 Technology which is working on the Alaskan oil spill in Valdez using a new process called a Munmap mapping system. The company is using computers to determine the thickness of the oil slick, where it is going, wind directions and the movement of the ocean. Five Canadians have put this company together. It is absolute first-rate top-of-the-line work that is being done by Canadians trained in Canadian universities. They have something that no one else in the world has. They are in demand.

The Canada Centre for Inland Waters has developed a process for turning sewage sludge into oil that can be used as heating oil. The City of New York wants that technology, as does the City of Melbourne, Australia. We will put it down in Halifax. Let me tell Hon. Members that this technology was developed by Canadians.

There is another company called Xenon Environmental at which I witnessed the delivery of a filtration process that can be dropped from the air. It weighs seven tonnes and can be dropped out of a Hercules aircraft.

I asked the scientists who designed it what it would have done in Chernobyl. They said that with this process, which is a membrane technology process, they could have delivered drinkable water, pollution-free water to the people of Chernobyl had it been available at that time. There are a lot of good things going on in this country and we want to build on them. We do not want to live in the dark world of Members opposite.

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member. We shall resume debate with the Hon. Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. Gardiner).

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, the Members on this side of the House have had some positive comments to make in today's debate, and I appreciate that. I am pleased to join in the debate on this motion presented by my colleague from the Liberal Party, a motion which calls on the Government to offer more support for post-secondary education.

I would like to congratulate the Liberal Members for making this a votable motion. As we all know, last night there was a vote on an excellent motion on the environment presented by my colleague from Saanich—Gulf Islands (Ms. Hunter). Unfortunately, the Government voted against the environment last night. I hope it does not vote against education tonight. I ask government Members to vote with us on education tonight.

I would like to use this opportunity to speak about education on a national level as well as on a regional level, specifically the region of northern British Columbia. Nationally, it is important to realize the role post-secondary education plays in the economy. It plays an important role for young people, industry and, indeed, Government.

Earlier today, the Minister made some comments about the Government's funding. I asked him about the concerns that those of us in the Province of British Columbia have about where the Social Credit Government of British Columbia is spending its education and health money. In reply, the Minister suggested that we need goodwill. I am all for goodwill and I think that is what this House operates on for the most part. However, when it comes to funding for post-secondary education and health care, I ask the Minister if Treasury Board asks goodwill from him. We need more than goodwill, especially when dealing with a province led by Premier Vander Zalm. We in that province have some very deep concerns about the spending priorities of that Government.

The Government opposite had an opportunity to change the legislation back in 1984. The original legislation was changed by the Liberals who were in power at the time. Transfer payments to the provinces were made in a lump sum and the money was not tagged. When the Conservatives first came into office, they would have done a good service to education if they had gone back to the original proposal in that legislation.

An excellent article in The Financial Post of January 14 by Allan Evans from the University of British Columbia talks about the importance of education and the need for a debate about its role. That debate has been missing from the Conservative Government and from some of its friends in the provinces.

We are not suggesting that spending is controlled solely by the heavy hand of the federal Government. The people in our ridings elected us to watch over the funds the federal Government spends. It is our responsibility to see that we do so.

I would like to comment briefly in the short time I have this afternoon on the role of education, particularly in Prince George in northern British Columbia. My colleague, the Minister of State for Forests (Mr. Oberle) the Member for Prince George—Peace River, is in the House today. I know he will support the comments I will make about the need for a university in northern British Columbia. I would like to use this opportunity to draw to the attention of Hon. Members, the Government and people across Canada of the ongoing campaign for a university in our community.

If the Government were participating fully in a debate about post-secondary education, it would support in whatever way it could the establishment of a university in Prince George. In March of 1986, at a regional conference called "New Democrats North", our Party talked about the need for a university there. Perhaps Members from some of the more populated parts of Canada believe that having universities in their communities is a foregone conclusion. We do not have a university and part of the goal of northern British Columbians is to build and develop the resources in our area, including our young people.

Currently, the provincial Minister of Education has set up an implementation committee which is listening to views and advice from members of the community. It will be reporting back at the end of the year. I hope that committee takes into account the comments and concerns of all Members, including my colleague from Prince George—Peace River.

We have talked about other issues that relate to post-secondary education. We have talked about what a university in our area could do to aid education in native languages. We have talked about forestry. I have written to the Minister with some suggestions for a forestry research centre in Prince George, our home town. That could tie in with a post-secondary institution in Prince George.

It is not only transfer payments that assist in the development of post-secondary education, it is the various granting institutions including the Science Research Council which provide that assistance. There is a report suggesting a regional multi-campus proposal, something which is subject to debate. The report is called Building a Future of Excellence. That is what we are trying to do. That is what my colleagues and friends in the area are working toward. We are trying to keep the pressure on the community and the province to ensure that we get a commitment from the province toward that goal.

Some have suggested that it may take an election campaign to get a university built in Prince George. So be it. We will take a university if it also means an election campaign in which we will get a provincial Government that will do something about education in our area.

As many Members have said today, education is an investment in the future of our country. Some time ago, when I studied for my degree, education meant going to university for a general arts education. Now it means a lot more than that. In the debate surrounding a university in Prince George, my initial focus was on an ongoing arts program, but I have been convinced, primarily by my provincial colleague, the Member from Prince George North, Lois Boone, that we have to concentrate as well on the professions. We need health professionals, forestry professionals and others. The continued attention of the federal Government and the provincial Government to post-secondary education is what we need.

I would encourage government Members to support this motion. I would encourage the Minister to consider seriously studying the concerns of Canadians about transfers of funds to the provinces to ensure that they are being spent in the right places. Let us lay to rest those concerns.

In conclusion, I would like to congratulate my colleagues for bringing this motion forward. I hope the Government will vote for education, because that is how we will interpret Government support for this motion. I appreciate having the time to raise these important concerns that exist across country and in my home province.

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the Hon. Member's speech, although of course I am not very familiar with the situation in northern British Columbia. However, since he said that we were not doing enough for the universities, I would like to quote a few statistics. Earlier, my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State, mentioned there has been an increase in transfer payments for medical services and education. In the last Budget, we also saw a 12 per cent increase for science and technology. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that additional funding in the amount of $1.3 billion was earmarked for science and technology. In fact, this was announced by the Prime Minister on January 13, 1988.

Furthermore, $520 million has been allocated to university research and instruction. This includes $80 million for our Scholarship Programs; $240 million for the centres of excellence, as I said earlier to another Opposition colleague; and $200 million for the base budgets of research granting councils. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that funding allocated to the granting councils will total $3.7 billion over five years, until 1990–91. He should realize, if he looks carefully at these figures, that this represents an increase of $1.4 billion or a little over 60 per cent, compared with the five previous years from 1981–82 to 1985–86.

Since we came to power, this Government has increased the annual budgets of granting councils by 20 per cent. The annual budgets of the three granting councils added up to $531.4 million, and that total is now $635.4 million. In 1990–91, the councils' budgets will practically double, an increase of 48.9 per cent or $791 million compared with 1984–85. Private sector contributions to university research under the matching funds policy will total $380 million over five years.

I have many more lists of figures I could quote to the Hon. Member, but I would like to ask him, because earlier, at the beginning of his speech, he practically implied that the Government of British Columbia might misuse federal transfer payments. The implication was there, and I wish the Hon. Member would make himself clear in this respect or withdraw what he said, because I think these are very serious allegations which may be quite disturbing to the Government of British Columbia.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Malone): I might remind the Hon. Member that he has two minutes.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. My point and concern is one a number of people have made in British Columbia. Let me talk about the current Established Programs Financing legislation. When that legislation was changed by the Liberals from having tagged funds, meaning that the province must spend the money on health and education, the money went basically toward general revenue. The charges made by many and why I asked the Minister of State my question is to try to lay to rest that concern, if there is one, as to whether the provinces are spending that health and education money where it should be spent. The Minister did not tell the House whether his Department has done any studies to confirm or deny that. He suggested that goodwill was required and I, in return, suggested that we need a little bit more than goodwill. A phrase that many people from B.C. are familiar with sums up everything. It is called the Coquihalla Highway. This is a provincial Government that spends funds in one area and uses them in another. That is how you answer a question like that.

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to enter this debate on the motion:

> That this House call upon the Government to take steps to enhance the federal commitment to support post-secondary education, scientific and technological development, job training and retraining in the battle against illiteracy, all of which provide the essential foundation for building of a stronger and competitive future for Canada.

I certainly agree with the intent of the motion and it gives me a great deal of pleasure to add a few words in support of it.

There are many areas that should be examined as we look to the wording of the motion. There is the educational part of it and there are a number of things that I could add to that educational part. There is also the re-training part. I would particularly like to add a few words on the re-training aspect of the motion today, particularly as it affects the Province of Saskatchewan from where I come and the rural and remote areas to which many people who live in my riding look to their future.

The Government in the last month has introduced Bill C-21, the unemployment insurance legislation, that we on this side of the House oppose vigorously. It is a motion which intends to change the direction of unemployment insurance in this country. One of the things addressed by this motion today is to redirect about $800 million in funding from unemployment insurance premiums to the re-training elements of our educational and employment system. I object not so much to the fact that we are putting funding into re-training but rather that we are diverting funds from unemployment into re-training.

I am a great advocate of training programs in Canada. I believe the commitment of the Government to training and re-training is the sort of commitment that we need to enhance the future ability of people who live in the remoter parts of the country and to enhance the future ability of those who live in urban Canada where technology is rapidly changing the workforce.

I want to suggest very strongly that the Government looks at the way in which Canadians view the commitment this Government is making. Let me cite an example from the Province of Saskatchewan. The previous Government under former Premier Allan Blakeney put a training program into place for dental therapy which attracted a large number of young people from the Province of Saskatchewan. The training program for dental therapists eventually led to an entire dental program for school children. Dental chairs and offices were put into each and every public school throughout the province. We provided free dental check-ups and basic cleaning of teeth for all children in the school system.

In 1982, shortly after the Government changed and the Conservative Government headed by the present Premier Grant Devine was in power, there was a redirection in thought. While 400 recently trained individuals were doing therapy and hygienic work on children's teeth, the new Premier removed the program entirely. He fired the 400 recently trained dental therapists and hygienists, pulled the dental chairs and equipment out of every room in every school in the province. Not only was there anger among parents who had benefited a great deal from having their children's teeth looked after but there was also anger among the people who had trusted the previous government to provide them with the training for what they expected to be long-term jobs.

After the announcement by the provincial government, the premier of the province came to my community of North Battleford and at a meeting of the dental therapists promised that every single one of those individuals who had lost their jobs as a result of the cancellation of the dental therapy program would get jobs in the private sector. Private dentists in the province would now have more children to look after and they would hire the dental therapists because after all they were so well trained.

That promise of guaranteed jobs for those dental hygienists and therapists in the Province of Saskatchewan has fallen dead. Only 6 of those 400 people who were trained by the Province of Saskatchewan for that program are now employed in private practice in the Province of Saskatchewan. That was the commitment, trust and respect that had been commanded by the government in the Province of Saskatchewan to the people in their retraining.

I have a great deal of skepticism about the commitment that the Government might be making and its good words about retraining programs and committing funds to training. It is all well and good to talk in grandiose terms about moving people from unemployment and welfare into jobs that will be created as a result of retraining efforts on behalf of the Government. In the Province of Saskatchewan, there is no trust from the people in the Government's moves toward that end.

The other day in the House I mentioned the Government's policy to end the branch line rehabilitation program. However, other government policies are disentitling people from existing within their own future in my part of the country. The cancellation of the branch line rehabilitation program may damage the ability of the community of River from sustaining a future. But if there is no redevelopment or opportunity for growth in that community, there will be no jobs to retrain people for. Those people will have to move into a larger community in order to build a future for their families and children. As a result, we are creating another group of unemployed in the larger urban centres. Policies such as maintaining the branch line rehabilitation program would ensure that those people who live in that rural community will have a future in their community and not have to move to a larger centre to compete with people who are already unemployed for those jobs that the Government is now considering in terms of its retraining program.

The community of Big River is not looking to the Government for assistance to retrain its workers, the people currently involved in agriculture production, in the lumber industry, and in the sawmill operations. That community is simply looking for the opportunity to maintain its economy and maintain the way of life enjoyed by its residents for quite a period of time. There are 700 homes in the community of Big River. As a result of the possible discontinuation of the rail line, those people are now looking at what is the future. If they cannot ship their grain, or move their lumber from the sawmill that is keeping the other element of that community open, what opportunities do they have? We are not going to be retraining people to do oil work, welding, or any of the other things proposed under this scheme to help the people in that community.

Regional development programs, community development programs, funding for community education-based programs to keep people active in rural and remote areas are the types of programs that we need from the Government. I certainly support initiatives that have been taken in the past to direct community and regional colleges into the rural areas by all governments of all political stripes in the Province of Saskatchewan and in the federal Government. Those regional colleges are delivering some of the programs that are being offered under the Unemployment Insurance Program and the Canada Jobs Strategy. That has to be expanded and built upon. I can see that there is a future if the Government is committed to doing that.

Mr. Kempling: As I listened to the hon. gentleman speaking, I wondered when he was going to get to his point. He seemed to be relating the experience of some people with the Saskatchewan Government and a program that it had in place, and somehow was trying to lay that problem on our back. That is too bad. Whatever happened out there happened with the government that was in vogue. It was not done in conjunction with our government.

I would suggest to the Hon. Member that the people in the community of Big River contact the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) and ask whether a Community Futures Program could be designed for their particular situation. We have signed hundreds of Community Futures Programs for situations exactly the same as the Member is describing. I am sure that the Minister would be pleased to have her officials look into it.

As far as other training is concerned, I know there are those in the world who think that all training should be done in colleges or schools. We always have this difficulty. There are people in industry who tell us that they do not want the tool and dye makers who are coming out of certain community colleges because they do not have the qualities or they do not want a certain type of worker. Our job is to upgrade that wherever we can.

The Government negotiates, talks and discusses with industry groups and with the provinces what their labour skills requirements will be for the period ahead. That is what we will engage in this fall through six industry groups which will be discussing with the Government, labour and management what labour skills will be required in the period ahead. Our job is to train people as a result of the reports that come back here and we will do that.

I do not see the doom and gloom the Hon. Member seems to see. I have been here for 17 years and I look forward to the time when one day we will hear a Member from the NDP speak about something that is not doom and gloom.

Mr. Taylor: I thank the Hon. Member for Burlington for his question. I have a certain amount of respect for the Member. Not too long ago I attended a Canada-United States interparliamentary group meeting where the Hon. Member spoke eloquently about the steel industry. That is something that I have very little contact with in my part of the country. I certainly learned a lot from the Hon. Member's presentation on steel and I feel more a part of this country as a result of that presentation. I do not know where the steel industry is going. I hope that the Hon. Member's presentation to the Americans will help them to work out the difficulties that we have.

The Hon. Member was trying to figure out what the point was about the provincial Government in the Province of Saskatchewan. The people of Saskatchewan recognize the point very clearly, that a Tory is a Tory. It does not matter whether they are federal or provincial. The de-emphasis on training and success of individuals working collectively within our society for the benefit of each other is no more evident than in the Province of Saskatchewan. There is a desire on behalf of the people to work collectively to achieve group ends. The Government of that province and the commitment that this Government is making through federal legislation is not in the same vein as that of the people of Saskatchewan. That was my point.

• (1730)

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Madam Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to participate in the debate. I would like to narrow in on just one aspect of the debate, something that I think is a blemish on our society. It has been alluded to here today several times—illiteracy. It seemed to me the pre-election commitment to illiteracy was very strong on the part of those sitting opposite. In the Speech from the Throne, there was a lessening of commitment. That of course was after the election. Now I find mere tokenism has set in and that should be accepted as a compliment because it is not quite that.

Whatever the reasons for the Government to arrange things in that sequence, which are obviously political, it is clear that illiteracy results in a great loss of potential both for the state and for the individual. Its over-all effects are often hidden. They impinge on economic development, or lack of it, and on unemployment. On the personal level they impinge on health, social maladjustment and the general well-being of those identified in our society as illiterate.

The importance of literacy can hardly be overestimated. The social, political and economic structure of the modern community rests on the assumption that every citizen can communicate and be communicated with by means of the written and printed word.

There are any number of definitions of literacy. The one that I like is the United Nations definition of literacy. It is an old one now, but I think it is still pretty valid:

> A person is literate who can, with understanding, both read and write a short simple statement on his everyday life.

Failing to be able to do that, according to UN standards, a person is considered illiterate. In this sense literacy is viewed as a means of self-fulfilment and full participation in society. The last figures available show that one in every five Canadians over 15 years of age does not qualify as literate and therefore is not able to reach self-fulfilment and full participation in society. That is an alarming statistic and one which we can be truly ashamed of in a rich country that prides itself on being so civilized. One in five over 15 years of age is only able to function on the periphery of life, having to stay in the background in many respects. Another interesting statistic is that illiteracy increases as we move from west to east in Canada. It is an interesting point.

Illiteracy increases then in Canada as we move from B.C. to Newfoundland. Luck plays a part in it. Being disadvantaged plays a significant role, but luck is still a very important component. I do not think that luck is a good way of equalizing opportunity in Canada. To attempt to identify the social effects of illiteracy is extremely complicated. Complex relationships including various factors affect an individual's social outcome. Cause and effect are very difficult to separate. It is therefore more accurate to discuss circumstances associated with illiteracy than to speak of its effects or its results. Those with low education tend to have poor health—that has been established—a shorter life expectancy, more disabilities of one kind or another. All this can be statistically proven. Other circumstances often related to illiteracy are poverty, unemployment, personal problems resulting from family breakdowns and so on. It is a very serious Canadian problem. Those identified in the category of illiterate are high risk when it comes to poverty, unemployment and when it comes to having personal problems. Very often all three are combined.

I want to talk for a moment on poverty and illiteracy. Canada, like most other countries, is still a long way from breaking the vicious cycle of poverty leading to inadequate education, meagre job opportunities and continued poverty into the next generation and the generation after so that we will have a second and third generation of illiterate people. The cost is high economically and socially. No country can afford it.

Unemployment is another factor associated directly with illiteracy. The connection between illiteracy and unemployment in western democracies has been well established. The higher an individual's educational attainment, that is to say the farther he or she moves away from illiteracy, the better chance he has to join the labour force, the more likely he or she is to avoid unemployment, the more likely that he or she will have a better job with an opportunity to attain higher lifetime earnings. Simply put, the better educated one is, the better chance of finding a job. When people have jobs, everybody in the country gains. Those who do not possess a functional level of literacy are and will remain the least likely to be employed. If they do not find a job, opportunities for advancement are not possible resulting in low self esteem and the problems which accompany that feeling of limited worth.

The federal Government has provided funds through the Department of Secretary of State to support voluntary community based initiatives for literacy and literacy training. But that really is not a commitment. There is no concerted effort. It is one of those on-again off-again approaches to a very serious problem. It is never going to correct the problem of illiteracy in Canada. The Speech from the Throne in 1986 committed the federal Government to work with the provinces, the private sector and voluntary organizations to develop resources to ensure that Canadians have access to literary skills. That was in 1986. They were very fine words but that is all. No action followed.

On September 8, 1988—a critical time since an election campaign was on and the Government's interest was intense then—the federal Government announced its intention to invest $110 million over five years to fight illiteracy in Canada. That works out to $5 over five years for everyone classified as being illiterate in Canada. That is like sprinkling a little bit of water out in the Sahara Desert, a real tokenism as I described it earlier. Several years ago it was easy for Canadians to be complacent about this. They assumed that their country was one of the best educated societies in the world. Recent studies have shown, however, that a substantial proportion of the Canadian public is now functionally illiterate and that the national cost of this is enormous.

We are proud of how successful we have been in teaching our two founding languages to great numbers of Canadians, but we failed miserably to teach one in five Canadians who are over 15 years of age to read and write in just one of our official languages. It is a reflection of the lack of priority on the part of the Government.

The Government's response to illiteracy requires commitment. It requires input from all sections of society. In devising this response, illiteracy should be recognized as a complex, long term social and cultural problem that requires money and research. It would be put on the basis of a consistent amount of money based on our Gross Domestic Product, an item which has all but disappeared on the scale of spending on the part of this Government.

The cost of illiteracy to business in Canada is horrendous. From that point of view alone, fighting illiteracy should be looked upon as an investment. Unskilled and what we refer to as muscle work is declining. It is in that group that you will find most illiterates. Technology demands are increasing and the new skills necessary are beyond the comprehension of most of the illiterates. The problems feed upon themselves and compound upon themselves. Good communications skills which are ever increasing are beyond most illiterates. Industrial accidents are higher among illiterates.

Let us consider some of the everyday things which most of us take for granted but which illiterate people cannot do. These include reading directions on a bottle of medicine and the potential pursuant problems; filling out a cheque correctly or completing some simple business transaction, or following a route on a map.

Being able to understand the Charter of Rights is very important, yet so removed to people who cannot read with comprehension. It is very difficult for illiterate people to find an amount on an income tax table, or to find a store listed in the yellow pages.

In closing, I want to encourage the Government to stop trying to find the future by gazing at the past, and to take seriously the plight of 20 per cent of our population over 15 years of age who cannot comprehend from the printed page either one of our official languages. The methodology exists now to combat illiteracy. It takes commitment and some imagination from the Government. This is in growing immediacy one of our major national problems. It has been my pleasure to address this issue and I hope the Government has been listening.

Mrs. Browes: Madam Speaker, I want to compliment the Hon. Member for his remarks today. A program dealing with this issue is probably one of the most important policies we can institute for the benefit of all Canadians. I am pleased that we can agree on the importance of literacy programs.

The examples set forth by the Hon. Member only show the importance of the announcement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) last year of $110 million for a literacy program in Canada spread over the next five years. One of the projects that I am sure the Hon. Member would be pleased to hear about is at the Frontier College in Toronto, where $417,000 is being put forward to launch a program called Read Canada.

Read Canada is encouraging Members of Parliament and members of the community to read to their constituents, to children and to people within the community in order to assist them to learn the importance of reading. The Prime Minister's wife will be reading on Parliament Hill on Canada Day and it is hoped that Members of Parliament from across the country will indeed take the opportunity on Canada Day to participate in this program called Read Canada. I hope the Hon. Member will do so.

I want to compliment him for his outstanding remarks and to indicate that we on this side of the House are doing everything we can. I look forward to working with him on these particular projects that will help all Canadians to participate in the economic and social life of our community so they may fulfil their own opportunities in Canada.

Mr. Jordan: Madam Speaker, I appreciate those comments. I think we can get along well on this issue, but there seem to be a few obstacles. I am sure that in spite of those who think that this is not a major national concern we will be able to do something collectively.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said he would spend so many millions of dollars over five years. It is like saying there will be so much spent on health care and presumably, when that is gone, there will be no longer be an interest in health care. Of course, we have a much greater commitment to health care than that, but when there is a fixed amount over a span of time it seems to me that it is simply a band-aid approach. I think illiteracy requires a much stronger commitment if we are going to make any inroads.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. It being 5.45 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt these proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 81(14).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Duhamel), which was negatived on the following division:

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR VISAS FOR CHINESE REFUGEES

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, the whole world is watching as the appalling events in China continue to unfold.

Chinese students in Canada are suffering a double burden. In continuing to maintain solidarity with their colleagues who fought tyranny in Tiananmen Square, they also fear for their families in China who may be marked for reprisals because of such student protests here.

Calls come daily from Canadians nation-wide who insist on concrete government action. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has asked for suggestions on such action.

I call on the Government to immediately offer visas for Chinese refugees with family members currently in Canada, and further to offer asylum to any citizens condemned by their own government for their stands on liberty and freedom of expression.

The people of Canada do not wish to stand idly by while justice is mocked in China.

CALL FOR DROUGHT PAYMENT

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, last week the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) felt compelled to go to Saskatoon to again assure farmers that the Tories are standing behind them. Farmers have heard that so often they are starting to wonder what exactly the Government is doing behind their backs.

Specifically, farmers need to know how much money they can each expect from the drought payment and when the cheques will be in the mail.

They also want to know if the appeal boards will have a mandate to correct the inequities caused by the archaic township-based computer program that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) insists on using. This program has already gained the reputation of being one of the most inept ever administered by any government. It would no doubt be a big hit as a comedy of errors, however, these are real people who need real money to pay real bills.

Unfortunately, bankers will not accept hot air, not even hot air from the Prime Minister.

FISHERIES

CONCERNS OF B.C. FISHERMEN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, once again the Conservative Government is treating the interests of British Columbia with disdain. It refuses to listen to the legitimate concerns of 25,000 fishermen and fish-processing workers in B.C.

This week, the Fisheries Council of B.C., the United Fishermen and Allied Workers and the Native Brotherhood of B.C. have all come to Parliament to point out the inevitable loss of jobs which will occur because our Government is willing to allow the United States complete access to our raw fish.

Of course, thanks to the Conservative trade deal with the United States, we have lost our primary remedies to respond to the unfavourable GATT ruling. The Government could at least constructively consider the B.C. industry's proposal that Canada implement regulations to ensure that our country's needs for fish are filled before any unprocessed fish is allowed to leave Canada.

The B.C. concerns about taking additional measures to halt foreign over-fishing of Canadian stocks and about relief programs for fishermen and shore workers deserve better than accusations by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) about scare-mongering.

People who are losing their jobs deserve fair treatment, not insults.

ENERGY

TERMINATION OF CEDIP GRANTS

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, the abrupt termination of CEDIP grants to the oil and gas industry is unfair. Not only was the industry not consulted or even warned about the impending end of this popular program, but the cancellation flies in the face of the Government's own legislation which requires that six months' notice be given to the industry before the program would end. No notice was given.

In fact, assurances were made by the Minister to me and to the industry mere days before the Budget that the program was safe from budget cuts.

The Government has stated that grants will still be processed if companies have legal documentation proving that before April 26 they had intention to drill.

The oil and gas industry is a business where deals are made on the basis of a firm handshake. Certainly, legal documentation follows, but a deal is a deal and to oil men a handshake is as good as their signature on a contract.

We are all concerned about the national debt. Few in the industry would argue that the CEDIP program has not been generous and worth while. Everyone recognizes that the program spent more than originally forecast. Yet, this is a matter of fairness. I and the members of the industry only seek fairness. I certainly hope that latitude will be given for applications considered under the grandfather clause.

SPORTS

USE OF BANNED SUBSTANCES TO ENHANCE PERFORMANCE

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, we all applaud the fact that Ben Johnson has admitted to the Dubin Inquiry his use of banned substances and his determination to run again for Canada. We hope that this will make a contribution towards changing the direction of Canadian sport, and will contribute to correcting the scandal that took place in Seoul last year.

I note that the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mr. Charest) is finally beginning to backtrack from his arbitrary actions taken in Seoul last year. Without prejudging the case, it is important that we all wait until the Dubin Inquiry has handed down its recommendations. But in that regard, I want to advise the House that last night I was able to present to Mr. Justice Dubin the views of a particular group of Canadians who were affected by this, namely, the young people. George J. Elementary School in my riding has issued a bill from their own model Parliament under the introduction of the "Right Hon." Chris Sandham. These views and the views of all Canadians must be taken into account in this sad chapter of Canadian history.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACTIONS OF CHINESE GOVERNMENT TOWARD STUDENTS

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, thinking and concerned Canadians continue to express shock and disbelief at the reaction of the Chinese Government towards the peaceful demonstration of students and democratic advocates. Parliamentarians from both sides of this House have expressed their condemnation of these actions.

Several hundred of my constituents have joined other Canadians in an attempt to express their grief and their outrage. In a telegram to the Secretary of State of External Affairs (Mr. Clark), they say:

We cannot stand in silence while we watch the massacre of innocent people in their quest for freedom. To say nothing is to allow the continuance of oppressive acts of violence. This is not acceptable. We must show that we care.

Canadians do care, Mr. Speaker, and this message must be communicated by this Parliament.

LINGUISTIC MINORITIES

20TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT AND THE 26TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE COMMISSION ON BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, this week we celebrate the 20th anniversary of the Official Languages Act. It is also the 26th anniversary of the B&B Commission.

Let us take this opportunity to restate our commitment, that of all political parties in this House, to the fundamental principles of justice and equality for linguistic minorities throughout Canada.

The quality of services to these minorities should be maintained and improved. Even today, for example, Franco-Albertans have to fight in the Supreme Court for their basic right to manage their school boards.

The specific characteristics of Québec, a distinct society, must also be recognized and the collective rights of Francophones in Québec must be respected.

Mr. Speaker, this is a week of celebration, but also a week to restate our commitment to justice and equality for linguistic minorities throughout Canada.

WASTE ANALYSIS STUDY AT DELTA SCHOOL

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, recently the Delta Senior Secondary School and the Recycling Council of B.C. conducted a waste analysis study attempting to determine what materials make up the school's waste system in a typical day, and how best to structure a school recycling program.

Garbage was divided in 14 recyclable materials by student garbologists, leaving only what could not fit into these categories as true garbage. The waste analysis showed that the recovery of recyclable materials can substantially reduce the amount of waste generated at the school. The Recycling Council of B.C. will be able to take the data gathered in this study to educate other schools on the benefits of school recycling.

The quest for a cleaner environment is one that must be conducted at all levels, and nowhere will these efforts have more impact than at the local level. Like residential curbside collection programs, institutional recycling programs will play a major role in reducing our waste stream and recovering valuable materials.

I commend the students, staff and faculty of Delta Secondary School for their initiative and the example they have set for others.

AGRICULTURE

P.E.I. POTATO INDUSTRY

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, the potato industry represents a major economic sector of Prince Edward Island, with 80 per cent of production in the seed potato industry.

Producers are burdened by increased costs of production placing them at a definite disadvantage in the Canadian market-place.

Inspection fees, Mr. Speaker, are a burden to Island potato producers. These inspection fees, as regulated by the Government, are another financial assault against the agricultural industry of my province. The primary producers of Prince Edward Island addressed this Government on May 29 with a strong voice. The Government must stop this unfair, unreasonable and discriminatory tax against Island potato producers.

DISPOSAL OF GARBAGE IN HALTON REGION

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, my riding is choking on garbage.

In the Halton region every bag of garbage is exported to the United States. It goes to an incinerator in New York State, an incinerator which does not meet pollution control standards in effect in Ontario. As a result, air pollutants find their way back across the border. Also, taxpayers pay $1 million a month to export this waste.

Meanwhile, the search is on in many municipalities in Halton—Peel for a new landfill site. Millions of dollars have been wasted as communities sue each other over the proposed location of one new dump. This is, of course, environmental and economic insanity.

The greater Toronto area has a garbage crisis, and I urge the federal Government to work with regions and the local municipalities to find a solution. Let us establish a super waste management agency. Let us flex the federal muscle and break the impasse which has resulted in this embarrassing export to the United States of our own garbage.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ACTION AT LES ESCOUMINS

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, before dawn on June 13, a large group of 40 Mounties invaded a small native reserve east of Quebec City. The RCMP drove to the community of Les Escoumins armed with search warrants, raided the Band office and retrieved boxes of documents, files and computers. The Solicitor General must explain to this House what the rationale was for this startling invasion into one of the smallest reserves in Canada.

Later another squad of police arrived with helmets, clubs and used tear gas on the reserve members. What could justify this drastic action of the RCMP at the reserve where there were as many authorities charging the community as there were residents living there?

Will the Solicitor General conduct an investigation into the Mounties' actions and assure Members of this House that this type of action was indeed justified?

RECALL OF CANADIAN AMBASSADOR TO CHINA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, may I put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister?

While we approve on this side of the House the Government's decision to recall our Ambassador to China, and I have high personal regard for Ambassador Earl Drake, it is very clear that the Chinese authorities so far have not listened to or responded to world protest.

Will the Prime Minister haul in the Chinese Ambassador to Canada and tell him personally that the Chinese Government's decision this week to hunt down those peaceful student demonstrators and treat them as war criminals is nothing short of ruthless and vile totalitarian repression?

Will the Prime Minister also tell the Chinese Ambassador personally, in the bluntest terms, that Canadians have the deepest empathy for the Chinese people and students but no sympathy at all for the police state tactics being used in such brutal fashion against the students.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a constructive suggestion, in light of the ongoing repression in China, that the Ambassador be called in.

I will certainly communicate to him the opinion of the Government of Canada on these matters and I will underline, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and other Members of this House have, that the position we are taking is emphatically not an anti-China position. We are seeking to encourage those forces of openness and democracy in China, and to protest in the strongest possible terms the repressive actions being undertaken by their Government.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF RESOLUTION WITH THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Secretary of State for his constructive answer. I must also say that we respect the Prime Minister's decision to support any action that the United Nations Security Council might take, but I do not believe that is enough.

Will Canada take the initiative of asking first Mikhail Gorbachev to take a stronger position against the Chinese Government, and with the support of the Soviet Union, take the initiative of confronting China openly at the United Nations? That is, will Canada take the initiative of presenting a resolution condemning the action of the Chinese Government and trying to convince other countries at the United Nations General Assembly to support this initiative and this resolution?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the House knows very well, the Canadian Government has played an active role with other countries in taking concrete measures that can have an impact on the Chinese Government's decisions. I am interested in the suggestion by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that we might encourage the Soviet Union. We are certainly thinking of having discussions with all countries that might be encouraged to take common action.

I believe that the Leader of the Opposition is not looking for empty gestures, or actions that can have no impact, and neither am I! But, in the United Nations or through bilateral talks with other countries, we hope to find ways to put pressure on the Government of China.

GOVERNMENT VIEWS ON WORLD TRADE SANCTION PROGRAM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think the Secretary of State is perfectly correct. At this stage we have been talking about the pressure of world opinion and moral suasion. That was certainly the purpose of the unanimous resolution adopted by the House of Commons. That would be the purpose of a resolution introduced by Canada at the United Nations.

Given the Chinese Government's refusal so far to listen to any reason on this issue, there may be one additional area that Canada would like to explore with other nations around the world that might have a little more clout with the Chinese authorities. What are the views of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Government on consultations with other countries about the possibility of moving toward a concerted world trade sanction program against China?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would think that it may be premature on June 14 to start detailed discussions about anything of that kind.

We are, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows, involved in consultations with a number of other countries regarding the most effective means that might be open to us. I told the House last week, I believe, that the Government of Canada was prepared to re-examine the range of our programs with China. Indeed, given the importance of this matter, we are convening a national round table of Canadians expert in Canada's relations with China and in the situation in China to be sure that the actions we take will have the most enduring and constructive long-term effect.

There are some actions that it might be appropriate to bring to the attention of the House that, in their way, can have some real impact. One of those is the decision of Radio Canada International, which I want to commend, which has moved up by ten months its capacity to broadcast into China. Broadcasting will begin on June 20 and will provide a counter to the very extensive and blanketing program of propaganda being issued in China by Chinese authorities.

HOUSING

COST OF DOWN PAYMENT ON FIRST HOME

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Housing. In a nation-wide Decima survey conducted last September for CMHC, 58 per cent of the people polled said that the amount of money required for a down payment on a house was too high to handle. As well, 53 per cent of them also felt that finding a house that they could afford to buy was a major problem

On June 9, the Royal Bank of Canada confirmed that things have become so bad that even a starter home is now out of reach for millions of Canadian families. In Vancouver, it takes more than 65 per cent of a household's income to cover the cost of an average starter home. In Montreal it is nearly 50 per cent, and in Toronto it takes up to more than three quarters of a family's income.

The Government has known about this developing crisis for at least nine months and still has not lifted a finger to relieve the situation. What does the Minister plan to do now, not next month or next year, to help Canadians who want to buy a home but find the prices too insanely high to afford?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the affordability situation across the country varies greatly. Certainly in places like Toronto, Vancouver and Montreal there is a very substantial affordability situation. In places like Calgary, where I visited yesterday and Edmonton the day before, the situation is not as severe as it is in those other places.

We have some broad national policies that we are trying to apply on a very targeted basis to see if we can assist this. At the moment I am trying to develop with provincial Ministers and the municipal officials some tripartite committees in order to target our programs, to improve the affordability situation.

We have some other programs as well that we are looking at for in the immediate and long run. I trust that all of these will help the affordability situation before too long.

AFFORDABILITY OF HOUSING

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Minister that in this same government survey, 58 per cent of Canadians want the Government to do something about housing. The fact is that the Government has done absolutely nothing for housing affordability. In fact, it has done the opposite. It has increased interest rates, it has higher taxes on construction materials and now has a goods and services tax. It has a direction from the Minister to CMHC that says—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could put his question.

Mr. Fontana: It just sets off alarm bells. The alarm bells have already been set off. Can he tell Canadians—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Fontana: Mr. Speaker, enough of this mumbo-jumbo he keeps spouting off in the House, I want to ask the Minister to tell us what Canadians can expect from—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

FISHERIES

REDUCTION IN SUPPLY OF FISH FOR PROCESSING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. On November 17, 1987, in British Columbia, the Minister said in regard to the processing of fish in that province: "I give you my assurance that those jobs will be saved". The next day in the House, when I asked the Minister a question about the same concerns of British Columbians in this sector, he said to me: "The Government will not allow jobs historically established to be threatened".

As the Minister knows, regulations subsequently tabled by himself and the Government have led, as the documents state themselves, to a reduction in supply of fish for processing, resulting in precisely the loss of jobs that the Minister said would not occur.

Will he now admit that he misled the people of British Columbia about these jobs and, if so, what does he plan to do about it?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, in fact, the circumstances are to the contrary. It is the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party who is misleading the people of British Columbia because no jobs have been lost and there is no proof that any jobs will be lost. Indeed, the new landing regulations which this Government has enacted to replace those which the international trading community said were discriminatory, unfair and illegal measures, will protect, enhance, and reinforce the opportunities available to our Pacific Coast fishing industry.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the people of British Columbia in particular will know what utter nonsense the Minister just stated.

EXPORT OF UNPROCESSED FISH

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister not simply to rely on what we say on this side of the House. One of his own Members, the Member for South Shore, said recently in reference to the export of unprocessed fish from Nova Scotia, which the Minister for International Trade has acknowledged is leaving at a rate of 80 million pounds a year, is costing Nova Scotians 1,000 jobs. If the export of that unprocessed fish from Nova Scotia is costing 1,000 jobs, why does not the same reasoning apply to British Columbia? Are we not getting the same proportionate loss of jobs? Why does the Minister not honestly admit it?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, under the previous discriminatory regulations which were not GATT consistent, there was no protection to ensure that our chinook, coho and chum salmon would be brought to Canadian shores, thereby providing additional opportunities for that fish to be processed in British Columbia. The new regulations ensure that all five species of British Columbia salmon and herring shall be brought to shore, and landed at Canadian ports. We expect, therefore, that it will be processed there.

I might add that if we do not intend to play in the international trading arena by exporting our fish products, 80 per cent of which go to export, we will surely not have the jobs that the Member is so concerned about.

Mr. Broadbent: There is a vigorous defence of Canadian interest. Only a Conservative Minister would say that processing requirements to keep Canadian jobs was discriminatory.

IMPACT ON PROCESSING JOBS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade who did admit that when it comes to Nova Scotia we were losing some 80 million pounds of unprocessed fish last year.

If that is the case, does the Minister agree with his own Member who said that this is costing us 1,000 jobs a year in Nova Scotia? If so, would he admit that the agreement he signed on behalf of the people of Canada, which has resulted in the kind of regulations his colleague has referred to and means the loss of processing jobs, means that we are losing at least 1,000 jobs a year in Nova Scotia every year as a result of this incompetence and an equivalent amount in British Columbia? The bottom line is that the Government has given up Canadians' rights on both coasts to process their own fish.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is a ferocious supporter of the GATT system. Under the GATT system in 1986—

An Hon. Member: Why did you not appeal it?

Mr. Crosbie: —the United States made a complaint that Canadians would not permit salmon and herring to be sold to their processors while the Americans were permitting salmon to be sold to Canadian processors.

As a matter of fact, 15 per cent of the salmon processed in British Columbia is purchased from American fishermen.

An Hon. Member: Fifty per cent.

Mr. Crosbie: Fifteen per cent. The United States Government launched a protest and asked for a GATT panel and that panel ruled against Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Why did you not appeal it?

Mr. Crosbie: There is no appeal. The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is abysmally ignorant in this as in so much else. There is no appeal.

We have replaced the offensive regulations with a new set of regulations requiring salmon and herring to be landed and inspected for management and conservation purposes in British Columbia. The hon. gentleman should be supporting that and helping us to defend those, not with these cheap silly attacks in the House of Commons.

TRANSPORTATION

RELEASE OF VIA RAIL STUDY

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, my question is for the Minister of State for Transport.

The VIA Rail business plan which is due this month but is already being implemented, with severance packages being discussed and cancelling of bookings on trains, is supposed to detail how VIA Rail will operate within the budget cuts.

Second, a far more important study has been done which details the extensive VIA Rail study and points out just exactly where the corporation will be going to the year 2000.

In light of that and given that the business plan will destroy VIA, will the Minister of Transport or the Government commit on the floor of this House to release the complete VIA study before VIA Rail is destroyed?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has mentioned, the business plan from VIA will be in our hands at the end of June. When we receive that plan, we will look at it and all other studies and will make the decisions necessary at that time.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, the detailed study which has been commissioned gives a lot of information and new novel ideas as to how to maintain rail passenger service in this country. By waiting and allowing the business plan to be implemented before that study is released or looked at will cause VIA Rail to be out of business.

Would the Minister please confirm that this Government is not interested in the facts, is not interested in saving VIA Rail, but is out to destroy that rail company?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, on the contrary. We do believe in the facts and that is why we do not make decisions until we get them.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CANADIANIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Communications, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister.

I am informed that an internal CBC memo, dated May 29, reveals that its Canadianization program has been put on hold for this year. Even before the massive cuts announced in the Budget take effect, the CBC has had to abandon its goal of 95 per cent Canadian content in prime time. Also, just last year in June, a communications policy document stated that the Government supports Canadianization at the CBC.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister the following questions: Does this Government still support Canadianization at the CBC? If so, will the Deputy Prime Minister ensure that the CBC has sufficient funds to allow Canadianization to proceed?

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, of course the Government supports the objective of Canadianization of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I believe that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, as befits any arm's length agency, is conducting internal studies as to what its priorities will be in light of the Budget.

APPOINTMENT OF NEW PRESIDENT

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. It is pretty clear that despite support of Canadianization the Government has not provided the funds so that the CBC can live up to its mandate.

Will the Minister at least provide support to the CBC in this time of crisis at the corporation? Will he tell Canadians this afternoon that he will recommend to Cabinet that it appoint a new CBC president before Mr. Juneau steps down next month?

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that there will be a vacancy to fill until the president and chairman of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation takes his retirement. The Government is well aware that that vacancy is about to occur and of course is making the appropriate plans.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT OF LOW LEVEL FLIGHTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence.

Would the Minister explain to the House why the Government has chosen to inform the United States of approval for low level bomber runs by the United States Air Force in western Canada prior to informing Canadians and prior to the release of the environmental impact on public health of low level flights contained in the impact study of such activities in Labrador?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is not accurate in his statement. That is not unusual.

The release was not made to the United States. The request for low level flying and the necessary training was made by the Binational Command of NORAD, the North American Air Defence, which the Hon. Member knows has a responsibility for the defence of North America. That request was made in 1985.

Environmental impact studies have been concluded since that time. There were 53 recommendations made by a private company from Vancouver, Environmental Sciences. Out of those studies, we were able to comply with 53 of the 54 recommendations. We have consulted with communities in both the Northwest Territories, Alberta, and British Columbia.

Therefore the time to make the announcement is now so that flights can take place, which will be four times a year. This is consistent with flights that already take place in Quebec, New Brunswick, and northern Ontario.

CONSULTATION WITH WESTERN CANADIANS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. It is interesting that most jurisdictions in the United States will not allow or will not agree to these low level flights.

The mass low level bomber runs pose a risk to birds, wildlife, pilots, and the public. Three U.S. B–1Bs crashed in the 14 months between September 1987 and November 1988, including one to a bird strike on a low level flight, killing three officers on board. The B.C. route is overhead 19 Indian bands who have not been consulted. Some of the aircraft will be armed, as was confirmed to me by the former Minister of National Defence.

Does the Minister not believe that Canadians in western Canada have a right to know in advance, have a right to be consulted, and a right to say no to these offensive low level flights?

• (1440)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I find it very strange that members of the New Democratic Party first of all say that we should remove our troops from Europe, that we should get out of NATO in support of that alliance, and now suggest that we should not share the burden of the defence of the North American continent.

The consultations that took place as well as the environmental impact study have been done since 1985. We are talking about the air space in Canada and the training of Canadian pilots to defend Canada and North America.

The discussions that took place over the last four years show that we have charted a route through consultation and meetings held in at least the Northwest Territories, Alberta, and British Columbia regarding routes 910 and 920.

Those routes can be altered if it is shown that there may be jeopardy. These routes are flown four days in a 365-day period. The routes are not harmful to any environment, including the human environment.

THE BUDGET

EXAMINATION OF LEAK—ROLE OF PROVINCIAL AND FEDERAL OFFICIALS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Yesterday, we had a clear contradiction between the statement of the Mounties and the statement of the Minister of Justice about the role of the Minister's officials in dealing with the examination of the budget leak.

The Mounties said quite clearly yesterday morning that these officials are their lawyers and that federal officials gave them direct advice about whether or not to lay charges, so much so that they cloaked the advice in solicitor–client privilege.

The Minister, on the other hand, claims that his officials were brought in only at the request of provincial officials at Queen's Park and only for normal consultations with the provincial officials. Which version is correct?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, all of this was laid out in an aide–mémoire which was given to the Leader of the New Democratic Party some 10 days ago. In that aide–mémoire it states very clearly: "Law officers of the Department of Justice became involved in this matter in the normal course as legal advisers to the Government and the RCMP".

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, why, as recently as yesterday, did the Minister say that the officials were brought in at the request of Queen's Park?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Simmons: Take a deep breath, Doug.

Mr. Lewis: If one reads on a little further in the aide-mémoire which was made public, one will see: "The RCMP consulted Ontario Crown law officers as to what charges were warranted. During these consultations it was agreed that there should be consultations on certain matters between the Ontario Crown law officers and the Justice Department".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA PENSION PLAN

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF ACT—DISABLED PERSONS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare who will know that several hundred Canadians paid into the Canada Pension Plan who subsequently left their employment owing to a previous disability but who have had their applications for a Canada Pension Plan disability pension denied because their applications failed the so-called test of recency.

Will the Minister consider amending the Act in order that these deserving and needy disabled Canadians can have the pensions to which they are entitled in spite of their failing to meet the test of recency?

In other words, these delays are occasioned in part as a result of the very disability which caused them to leave their jobs. Would the Minister please indicate whether he can address the situation?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I know that this has been a matter of concern for the Hon. Member for some considerable period of time. At the present time he has a motion on the Order Paper which recommends that the Government consider opening up the Canada Pension Plan Act to make these amendments.

The Government has no current intention of reopening the Canada Pension Plan Act. However, should that arise, we will certainly take into consideration the recommendations of the hon. gentleman.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENTS

REQUEST THAT DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER CONFIRM EXISTENCE OF CERTAIN CUT-BACKS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology blames the Government of Québec for the inexcusable delay in implementing the Canada-Québec agreements. In doing so, the Minister is trying to distract attention from the cutbacks he made in the regional development budget.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a letter dated May 2, sent by the Minister to Minister Gil Rémillard, in which he announced that there would be cuts totalling $470 million in the Canada-Québec subsidiary agreements.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister confirm these cutbacks in the amount of approximately $470 million?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, we have three programs under the agreement, and we hope that the Government of the Province of Québec will submit these programs as soon as possible. We are waiting.

QUESTION REITERATED

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, I have here a letter dated May 2, in which the Minister confirms that he had to abandon—that there will be no funding for the subsidiary agreements that would have become effective on March 31, 1990, and which would have only involved the sum of $274 million instead of $745 million. That makes a difference of $470 million, Mr. Speaker. I wish the Government would confirm these cuts today instead of blaming the Government of Québec. Ottawa is cutting back, not the Québec Government.

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated before, this program is made up of three components. They are programs delivered by the federal Government, programs delivered by the provincial Government, and joint programs.

The expenditures under these programs will depend upon all the participants coming forward. We are still waiting for the Province of Quebec to come forward under the joint program component and its own part of the program.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

CLOSURE OF GLASS MANUFACTURING PLANTS

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I wish to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Minister will know that Consumers Packaging, Canada's only glass manufacturer, announced recently the closure of its glass plant in Ville St. Pierre, Quebec, with the loss of 450 jobs.

This Friday the company will announce its decision to shut a second plant either in Alberta or British Columbia with the loss of a further 300 to 450 jobs. The chief executive officer of the parent company has acknowledged that these closures are to keep the industry competitive in response to the elimination of Canadian tariffs in light of free trade.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the 700 to 900 Canadian workers who are about to lose their jobs where to apply for the massive readjustment programs that the Prime Minister promised the Canadian people during the election campaign?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have a list here which is seven or eight pages long setting out plants that have expanded and factories that have expanded—

Mr. Broadbent: Table it.

Mr. Crosbie: —as well as new investments that have been made because of the Free Trade Agreement.

For example, Miramichi Pulp and Paper in Newcastle has hired 300 new employees and will hire an additional 100 in the fall as part of a $480 million expansion plan made possible by the Free Trade Agreement.

There is page after page of examples that we can give. It is completely unproductive to make these unsubstantiated and silly allegations in the House about such matters.

IMPACT OF POSSIBLE PLANT CLOSURE ON OKANAGAN

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, if the British Columbia plant located in the riding of Okanagan—Shuswap is the western plant to close, 450 people are going to be thrown out of work and there will be a loss of $32 million to the local economy.

Some Hon. Members: If!

Mr. MacWilliam: How can the Prime Minister possibly call free trade a benefit to the economy of the Okanagan when this is the kind of result that occurs?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, how the people of the Okanagan wish that they had their former Member back representing them now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Name one.

Mr. Broadbent: Why is he not here?

Mr. Crosbie: As a matter of fact he is close to us now, Mr. Speaker, watching us.

Just to give some examples from British Columbia, Alcan Aluminum is investing $48 million in its Kitimat plant.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary Southeast.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FRANCOPHONE SUMMIT—CONSENSUS RESOLUTION ON MIDDLE EAST

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, in view of Canada's support for the consensus resolution on the Middle East at the recent Francophone Summit, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs advise the House regarding Canada's position on direct negotiations between Israel and the Arab countries?

Does the Secretary of State believe that the holding of elections in the Gaza and the West Bank could be a step forward in the process of reconciliation between Israel and the Palestinians?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are two points that I would like to make. First, the Hon. Member referred to the consensus resolution at the Francophone Summit. I think it is worth recording that Canada participated actively in forming that consensus, and indeed I think it could be said that as a result of our actions at that summit the resolution appears in the relatively moderate form that it does.

Second, on the question of elections, we believe that the proposal by Mr. Shamir is a small but significant step forward. We think that there needs to be more precision. It would help if there were a specification of the conditions under which elections could occur. We think it is an important beginning that should be built upon by all parties.

WITHDRAWAL OF FEDERAL SUPPORT OF CENTRE

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In the April 17, 1978 debate in this House, the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety received all-Party support. In fact, the then labour critic is quoted in Hansard as saying:

> This Party supports the Bill because we believe that health and safety in the workplace are of vital importance.

Based on this information, why does the Minister of Labour feel that the Government has to withdraw its financial commitment from this centre which needs $8 million annually to operate? Why is the Government killing this particular centre through financial strangulation?

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Hon. Member of the Liberal Party for asking this question about the CCOHS, which I think is an organization that has done a tremendous job over the past 10 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Corbeil: We are certainly determined to see that the centre will continue operating because it has produced a kind of information and a product that is easily marketable. We feel that with the consent and concurrence of the Council of Governors, it will be able, over the next few years, to find all the necessary funding to ensure that this operation will continue.

IMPACT OF CUT-BACKS ON CENTRE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Beth Phinney (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the loss of funding to the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety will undoubtedly result in financial stress and possibly in closure.

My question is for the Minister of Labour. Is he aware that the centre had planned to expand its information systems to include environmental pollutants? Given the importance the Prime Minister has placed on the environment, how can the Minister justify this $8 million cut to the centre?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday afternoon, the Government of which I am a member is proud of its funding of CCOHS in recent years. I would like to point out that in the six years the Centre operated under the Liberal Government, funding provided by the government of the time amounted to $3 million annually. During the five years this Government has been in power, annual funding has been increased to $8 million. I think these figures are self-explanatory, Mr. Speaker, and that they demonstrate the interest this Government has in the Centre. In fact, we are absolutely convinced that the quality of the product it offers will enable the Centre to become self-financing without any problem within the next few years.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NATIONAL REVIEW OF EDUCATION—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The Assembly of First Nations has conducted a national review of education. The four-volume study, done at a cost of $6 million plus support services to his Department, was sent to the Minister on March 9, 1989. Is the Minister committed to the major recommendations contained in the national review of education? Will he ensure sufficient funding to implement the major recommendations of this review?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as indicated by the Hon. Member, the study did cost approximately $6 million, was four years in the making, and is being reviewed by the Department right now.

FOLLOW-UP TO REVIEW—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, when can the Assembly receive the Minister's answer with respect to the follow-up on the review? Will the Minister make available the funding requested by the Assembly so that aboriginal peoples can disseminate the report to all their communities?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated last night to Chief Erasmus and other representatives of the AFN, the review should be completed soon.

GANDER AIR CRASH—EFFECTS OF CLEAN-UP

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Yesterday the Minister tabled a report called Health Effects at the Site of the Gander Arrow Air Crash. The Minister advised the committee that Department of National Defence workers and Canadian Aviation Safety Board workers were not included in the study, that DND and CASB were waiting for this report before acting.

Will the Minister ensure that all workers involved in the Gander crash clean-up will be tested and monitored?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we have been in touch with the other Departments involved. DND is doing its own study and has its own medical resources to do so. We have shared the results of this study with other Departments and are working very closely with them to ensure that the recommendations are fully implemented.

CONTENTS OF CARGO

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. In addition to ensuring that the tests and monitoring of DND and CSAB workers take place, will he insist that the U.S. Government come clean on the contents of the cargo of that plane so that the monitoring will be done with the full knowledge of what substances the workers were exposed to?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my Department, when it was conducting the study, was in touch with the Canadian Aviation Safety Board which gave a list to us of any materials found at the crash site.

It would be helpful to my researchers to be able to look at those materials found there to determine whether or not toxic materials could have been created which could have caused the symptoms in question.

We have no evidence whatsoever to suggest that the symptoms which have been felt by the workers at the site have been caused by exposure to toxic materials. Indeed, all the symptoms which have been disclosed are totally consistent with post-traumatic exposure syndrome which was discussed in the report itself. It is an excellent report, and we intend to see that its recommendations are implemented.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It relates to that infamous Canada-France fish deal signed back in April some time, in which the Government knuckled under to the Government of France in allowing French inspectors to board our vessels within our 100-mile limit.

To add insult to injury, we now find that prior notice must be given to the Government of France to let it know when our inspectors will board its vessels. Will the Minister tell us why those silly conditions were put in the agreement and how many inspections have taken place to date?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that on reflection the Hon. Member will admit that this infamous deal, as he describes it, will bring untold and permanent benefit to the fishermen of his constituency.

The Hon. Member understands that the essence of the dispute was an area to the south of the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon which both countries claimed. Is it understood, Mr. Speaker, that we are talking about a disputed zone which Canada claims is Canadian and which France claims is French? The French agreed to reduce their overfishing by more than 10,000 tonnes per year in the disputed zone, and we arranged with France that we would have our inspectors board their vessels and they would board our vessels for the purpose of ensuring that the landings records, which were kept by each country when their offshore trawlers fish in the disputed zone, were accurate.

This process is ongoing at present. I am advised that a Canadian fisheries officer is presently on board the French patrol vessel Rhones for the very purpose of inspecting the daily records of catch to ensure that France does not exceed its commitment to not overfish in the disputed zone.

Mr. Simmons: I understand it full well, Mr. Speaker. But does the Minister understand which side he is supposed to be fighting for on this issue?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OVERFISHING IN DISPUTED WATERS

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, if the purpose of this exercise is to monitor French overfishing that is a sick joke and the Minister knows it.

Given the prior notice, which must be like the RCMP saying it will only enforce impaired driving charges two nights a week or something—because he has to have the element of surprise—

Mr. Speaker: I ask the co-operation of the Hon. Member. Given the time I asked for a short supplementary. It will be a short supplementary, please.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister, how will we know that the French are not continuing to rape our stocks as they have done with his blessing during the past four years?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think the House would want to know for which side the Government is fighting.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: The Hon. Member will want to know that the Government is fighting for the constituents of the riding of Burin—St. George's which is more than he did as a member of the Government which condoned French fishing in our waters—legal French fishing—

Mr. Simmons: Not true.

Mr. Siddon: —in the amount of 28,000 tonnes per year, an amount which we have reduced to approximately 12,000 tonnes.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DESJARDINS–RINGING OF BELL FOR VOTE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege because last night, my rights as a parliamentarian were breached. When the vote was called last night at 6 p.m., as scheduled, I was involved in a working session with two colleagues and three other people in Room 523 of the Wellington Building. None of the six people present, Mr.

Speaker, heard the divisions bells ring between 5.45 p.m. and 6.00 p.m. Mr. Speaker, my rights as a parliamentarian were breached because I was unable to exercise my right to vote last night, at 6 p.m.

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to make inquiries about the situation we had yesterday in Room 523 in the Wellington Building, to ensure that there are no recurrences, all in the best interests of all Members of this House.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the problem. It isn't just a problem for the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue. We have a problem, and I will immediately make inquiries in order to correct it. I hope that in one or two days or by the end of this week, the problem will be dealt with.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

STANDING ORDER 39(6)—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is now prepared to rule on the point raised on May 29 and May 30, 1989 concerning the uses of Standing Order 39(6) and Questions on the Order Paper.

Before summarizing the situation, I would like to say a word of appreciation for the contribution that Members made to this somewhat complicated question. I should remark that it is really a complicated question and this ruling will take a little time.

It would be appropriate at this point to outline succinctly the procedure on written questions. It provides that Members seeking from the Ministry information relating to public affairs may place on the Order Paper after due notice of 48 hours up to four written questions at any one time. There are several restrictions covering the form and content of such questions. For example, argumentative material or unnecessary facts are not allowed, nor is the offering of opinions on a question. Also, no debate is permitted when a question is put on the Order Paper or when it is answered by the Government. The Clerk of the House has the responsibility to ensure that coherent and concise questions are placed on the Notice Paper as stated in Standing Order 39(2).

Finally, a Member may require that up to three of the four questions be given an oral answer in the House and may also request that the Ministry respond to the question within 45 days.

[Translation]

In due course, the Minister to whom a written question is addressed will answer it, usually through the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader. The answer can be given orally in the House, if an oral answer has been requested, or by handing a written document to the Clerk during Routine Proceedings. Whether the answer is given orally or in writing, the full text will be printed in the Debates of the same day. However, on occasions, because of the length of an answer, a request is made by the Government to have the question made an order for return and the answer is then tabled in the House and filed as a sessional paper which is available, on request, to all Members.

[English]

Let me now summarize the procedural difficulty which I was asked to examine on May 29 and May 30. Briefly, Standing Order 39(6) states that at the request of the Government the Speaker examines a particular question or questions and, if it appears that a question "is of such a nature as to require a lengthy reply, the Speaker—may direct the same to stand as a notice of motion—upon the Order Paper," with such changes in form as are required for this transformation.

On May 29, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Cooper) asked the Chair to deal with seven Order Paper questions in relation to Standing Order 39(6), namely, Questions Nos. 45, 52, 53, 62, 64, 83 and 88.

I advised the House at the time that the Chair would wish to consider the matter with great care and invited interested Members to make comments at a later date.

[Translation]

The next day, a number of Members came forward to assist the Chair in analysing the question. As I have said, these remarks were very helpful.

[English]

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader stated what I believe all Members can agree with: that the process of placing questions on the Order Paper is important and fundamental, both to the House and to individual Members on all sides, and that it is a process well worth examining. He then went on to point out that some questions asked are so complicated, require the gathering of so much new information that they are impossible to answer within a 45-day limit and in some cases difficult to answer at all. He said, and I quote his words from page 2338 of Hansard of May 30, 1989:

Speaker's Ruling

There is no longer a concern about how impossible it may be to answer.

I think we would also have to agree that this is sometimes the case. The Chief Government Whip as reported at page 2340 of Hansard commented that "the form in which some come forward to Government put a kind of strait-jacket on us". He also reminded the House that, as I have remarked on many occasions before, the Chair must interpret the Standing Orders as they exist. If some aspect of the rules are unsatisfactory to the House, it is the House that must provide the remedy. The Chief Government Whip's reference to the number of unanswerable questions in the last Parliament points out a particular problem, and I was very interested in his suggestion, minor alterations in form might have made it possible to answer many of those questions fairly quickly.

• (1510)

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) argued ably for a continuation of current practice in regard to these questions: that is the transformation of questions requiring long answers into Orders for Returns—the latter to be tabled immediately, or at some later time. He stressed the role of the Chair as the protector of all Members' rights: a role that the Chair must certainly always bear in mind.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) indicated the possibility that the practices of the House may have changed so greatly in the last 60 years that to invoke a rule which has fallen into disuse as it stands may be to risk moving counter to the spirit in which it was originally adopted. Both he and the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) put the matter in the context of the recent parliamentary reforms which have done so much to revitalize the House.

The Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt (Mr. Whittaker) pointed out that there is very little explicit indication in the Standing Orders of what length or degree of complication a question should have. The Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Althouse) was able to assist us with his experience on the McGrath Committee where such guidelines had been discussed.

He went on to make several other points that the Members of the House ought to be left to decide for themselves whether or not to give notice of a motion similar to their question; that the framer of a question is a participant in the process and should expect the quality of the question to have a strong effect on the framing of the answer; and that most Members would consider a response declining to answer the question, for a stated reason, to be legitimate.

[Translation]

Finally, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) pointed out that a Private Member's Notice of Motion had a far better chance of coming before the House formerly than it has now. He suggested that either the proposal of the Parliamentary Secretary or the Standing Order itself might profitably be referred to the Procedure Committee for study and review.

[English]

The Chair has now had time to consider the matter at length. The use of Standing Order 39(6) appears simple enough at the outset; but as we have seen, upon examination it grows more complex and elusive.

The dilemma is this: we must find a balance between the urgent requirements of Members who need information in order to function and the equal imperative of a rational and fair use of the limited resources available to provide answers.

In an attempt to find this balance, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary asked the Chair several days ago to act under the provision of Standing Order 39(6), which permits—and I wish to emphasize the word "permits"—the Speaker to transform into a Notice of Motion any question which is brought to his attention by the Government and which he considers would require a "lengthy" reply.

I must emphasize, at the outset, that the Parliamentary Secretary's request is indeed quite legitimate and well within the bounds of our Standing Orders. As a matter of fact, this practice, if implemented in today's House, would certainly go some distance to solving the problem we have outlined. The pressure of the 45-day limit in which to provide "lengthy" answers would be relieved. Since not all of these motions would be agreed to, or even considered, the work-hours available might be more fairly and more widely distributed among Members' questions requiring shorter answers. As for those converted to motions, as the Chief Government Whip (Mr. Hawkes) has pointed out, the decision whether these more "expensive" answers should be provided would then be made by the House.

[English]

Unfortunately, it appears that this proposed solution may carry with it a new set of problems. It has been suggested that the use of this Standing Order might result in unreasonable limits in the freedom of Members to ask questions; it is even speculated that privilege might be involved. It has also been suggested that the Standing Order has survived so long unchanged because it has remained unused for the past 60 years; that its use in today's context may not be what was intended; and that it no longer fits the conditions of the present House of Commons, and certainly not those brought about by the McGrath reforms.

I share the view expressed by several Members that the direct consequence of transforming a written question into a Notice of Motion, to be eventually considered under Private Members' Business when transferred for debate, will be to diminish considerably the chances of the item ever being put before the House again. But it is interesting to see that such a difficulty had also been envisaged back in 1906 when Standing Order 39(6) was first adopted by the House. May I quote from the House of Commons Debates on July 10, 1906 at page 7602:

> Mr. Sproule: Then after a certain stage in the session notices of motion cannot be reached and in the case of a long question, if the government do not want to give the information all they have to do is say: You must move for it. There may be no opportunity to move and therefore the opposition are prevented from getting the information.

Certainly, I can tell the House that a request to invoke Standing Order 39(6) would undoubtedly always put the Speaker in a difficult position. It would require the Chair to make a series of decisions on non-procedural matters for which there is no information available and which only the Government, with its expert staff, is able to judge accurately: the probable length of answers which have not yet been produced. It is also true that no objective definition of "lengthy" has been provided; and in any case, it would be rash to suppose that the difficulty of answering a question must vary according to its length, or that the value of an answer is in any way proportionate to its length.

In addition, not all questions rejected as unanswerable can reasonably be converted into motions requesting the tabling of documents. Unless the question itself inquires specifically about a document, converting it into a notice of motion for the production of papers might well make it even harder to answer satisfactorily.

Another concept with which the Chair has some difficulty is that of placing on the Order Paper, in the name of a Member of this House, a notice of motion which that Member has not signed or indicated any interest in presenting. As the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Althouse) pointed out, if a Member has a question refused and wishes to present a notice of motion on the same subject, he or she is perfectly able to do so.

[English]

I have examined very carefully the request of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Cooper) and find that I am unable for several reasons to comply with the terms of the Standing Order in today's context without prejudicing the right of private Members to control fully their business by choosing for themselves how best to seek information: by placing questions on the Order Paper, perhaps requesting an answer from the Government within a 45-day period; or by having a Notice of Motion, if successful in the draw, debated during Private Member's Business.

The House will understand that two new elements which were recently incorporated in the Standing Orders on written questions have practically eliminated the kind of abuses on House time that existed in 1906. I am referring specifically to Standing Order 39(4) limiting the number of questions on the Order Paper to four per Member at any one time and to Standing Order 39(5) allowing a Member to request that the Ministry respond to a question within 45 days.

Speaker's Ruling

The Chair is extremely concerned that allowing the Government's request to transform a question into a Notice of Motion would appear as a step backwards in the evolution of the procedure governing written questions and would go against the expectation of the McGrath reform to have a more efficient method of dealing with questions.

[Translation]

As indicated by several Hon. Members, there is a long-standing practice which allows the Government to ask the House, in those instances when there is to be a lengthy reply, that the question be made an Order for Return. Such a Return is then either tabled forthwith, if the reply is ready, or tabled at a later date on completion of the reply.

[English]

There is also a procedurally quite acceptable practice —and indeed many Hon. Members have suggested that it is quite legitimate for the Government to do so—simply to respond by saying that the question cannot be answered because of the time and the human or financial resources involved. May I refer Hon. Members to Questions No. 8, 11, 12, 13 and 14 already answered in such a way by the Government during the current session.

• (1520)

The Government may continue the practice of simply declining, with an explanation, to answer questions which it finds are too burdensome. An explanation could also be given, during Routine Proceedings, that certain questions could not be answered within the requested time and perhaps reasons for that could be given. It should be understood that there is no obligation on the Government to provide a perfect answer, only a fair one. A Member in framing his or her question would accept part of the responsibility for the quality of the answer.

[Translation]

It is possible that the problems we now face arise partly as a result of recent reforms. The McGrath Committee foresaw some of the difficulties and commented, on page 46 of its report: "To avoid the possibility that members would try to get around the four-question rule by asking questions containing numerous sub-questions, all written questions should be directed to the Clerk for close and careful scrutiny as to form and content."

[English]

In that regard, the Clerk of the House must apply more rigorously the provisions of Standing Order 39(2) and, as stated in recommendation 7.10 of the report from the McGrath Committee:

> —reject outright or to split into separate and distinct questions those questions that contain unrelated sub-questions.

No doubt there are many other solutions which could also be explored. It appears to the Chair that the subject is worthy of consideration at some greater length than we have been able to devote to it here. In fact, the Chair would welcome the guidance of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges, Procedures and Private Members' Business in this matter. The committee can do that within its mandate, or if the House is so inclined, a specific Order of Reference could be given to the committee, as the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) has suggested. In any case, as Speaker, I strongly suggest to the Members of that committee that their recommendations on this question would be extremely useful to the Chair. Perhaps we may hope for some guidance from the committee on this issue.

In the meantime, however, I must regretfully state that the Chair cannot agree to the request of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

I want to say in addition that the Chair is extremely cognizant of the fact that this is not a one-sided issue. If Hon. Members will read carefully the decision which I have just rendered, I think it will be made clear that I am concerned as Speaker that both sides of the House are treated fairly in what is clearly becoming a problem. I would hope that the House, as I have suggested, would move to find a solution. I thank Hon. Members.

CANADA–EUROPE PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

PRESENTATION OF OFFICIAL DELEGATION REPORT CONCERNING 17TH ANNUAL MEETING OF PARLIAMENTS' DELEGATIONS

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Madam Speaker, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the report of the official delegation of the Canada–Europe Parliamentary Association on the 17th annual meeting of Canadian and European parliamentary delegations held in Ottawa and London from May 1 to 5, 1989.

[English]

Madam Speaker, there were two issues that were highlighted in the report as a result of the meetings. I bring them to the attention of the House because last year the proposed ban by the Europeans on the import of furs was a very relevant issue in this House.

I want to report that this year we took the European delegation to Wiebequi, a northern Indian community near Hudson Bay, to show them how unfair such a ban would be on our native communities which are so dependent on fur trapping. This led to a far greater insight into the livelihood of the native peoples of the region and of Canada, and it led to a commitment by the chairman of the European committee to bring this enlightenment to the European Parliament this month in Brussels. Therefore we have that commitment. I believe that it is going to read well for all Members of this House that the Europeans are truly seeing how this effects our native people.

The most controversial issue was the Canada–EC fisheries dispute. Each side made its points, the Canadian delegation stressing the urgent need for conservation or there would be no fish to catch in the future.

On this issue, the two delegations concluded a joint resolution urging their respective authorities to find a solution as quickly as possible. I might say that part of that resolution was ensuring that a discussion of the issue of the fisheries should be given the necessary high priority at the forthcoming EC–Canada ministerial meeting. I want to report obviously that it did get that priority. The Ministers of our country and the European countries did bring this issue to a head. We urge further consultation for the resolution of this problem.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE THE NAME OF THE ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF RESTIGOUCHE

Mr. Guy H. Arsenault (Restigouche) moved for leave to introduce Bill C–252, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Restigouche.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall the Hon. Member ç220zhave leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Arsenault: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank you and Hon. Members for giving me this opportunity to introduce a bill whose purpose is to change the name of my riding of Restigouche by adding the name of Chaleur.

My reasons for introducing this Bill are quite simple. The name Restigouche does not adequately reflect my riding. It refers to the Restigouche River and Restigouche county, but unfortunately, does not reflect the presence of the Chaleur region.

Madam Speaker, the role of a Member of Parliament is to represent his entire riding before the Parliament of Canada, and I believe that the change proposed in this Bill will have the effect of giving my riding a name that will more adequately reflect the regions it covers.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Madam Speaker, it is my privilege and honour to rise and present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36, in which some 50 residents of various towns in Ontario point out, among other things, that the Government's deregulation of air passenger service has dramatized the need for safe, convenient, economical, rapid, and environmentally sound alternative passenger service.

They pray and call upon Parliament to improve and modernize VIA Rail service in the areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound, and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of Canadian citizens who recognize that VIA Rail is an important part of the transportation system, particularly in the Quebec-Windsor corridor.

They call upon the Government to recognize the need for that kind of service and to make it available to Canadians generally.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by several people from the Windsor, Ontario area.

They decry the fact that VIA is to be cut back and probably terminated in its operations. Indeed, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain, improve, and modernize VIA Rail service, particularly in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound, and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation.

REVISION OF EXTRADITION LAWS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I have the pleasure to present petitions to the House of Commons. These petitions are spearheaded by the Victims of Violence Society, by the Citizens United For Safety and Justice, and by 31 Members of Parliament from across Canada who are currently collecting signatures on a national petition which will be presented to the House over a period of several weeks. It is expected to accumulate tens of thousands, if not hundreds of thousands of signatures.

It is my pleasure to present a petition today to the House of Commons, including 2,588 signatures mostly from the City of Peterborough and the County of Peterborough, which calls on the Government of Canada to revise its extradition laws in order that we may prevent Canada from becoming a safe haven for criminals. There are five known convicts from the United States in our institutions now.

This petition brings the total to over 36,000 signatures which have been presented to date into the House of Commons.

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (St. Albert): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition, duly certified correct as to form and content, representing 2,160 Canadians from Alberta, Ontario, and Prince Edward Island.

These concerned citizens call upon the Government to revise the extradition laws to allow for the extradition of criminals immediately or after they have been fully dealt with by the Canadian penal system. These Canadians want the Government to take action to prevent Canada from becoming a sanctuary for criminals.

The number of signatures on petitions now stands at in excess of 38,000.

OPPOSITION TO VIA RAIL SERVICES CUT-BACKS

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Madam Speaker, I also have the honour this afternoon to present petitions to this House, pursuant to Standing Order 36, from my constituents concerning VIA Rail services.

Madam Speaker, it is important to point out, with the report that VIA Rail will present to our Minister towards the end of June, how important these services are for us in the Gaspé peninsula.

[English]

The important matter for those of us on the government side, as well as for VIA administration when it decides what its new plan will be, is that my people at home wish to continue our service. We will go with the status quo now and go for better service after.

REVISION OF EXTRADITION LAWS

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary Southwest): Madam Speaker, I have the honour today, under the provisions of Standing Order 36, to present hundreds of petitions containing more than 5,000 signatures of people from Alberta, mainly the Calgary area and, more important, my riding of Calgary Southwest. These petitioners call upon the Government of Canada to revise its extradition laws.

I am pleased to join with these petitioners who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to revise the laws of Canada relating to extradition to allow the Minister of Justice of Canada to order the extradition of alleged or convicted criminals at any time after their apprehension in Canada, even during their period of incarceration for crimes committed in this country.

Mr. Brian O'Kurley (Elk Island): Madam Speaker, it is a privilege to rise today in the House of Commons, under the provisions of Standing Order 36, to present a petition from a large number of people in the Province of Alberta. These petitions contain the signatures of 1,198 Albertans who call upon the Canadian Government to change our extradition laws.

These petitioners from the Province of Alberta ask Parliament to revise the laws of Canada relating to extradition to allow the Minister of Justice of Canada to order the extradition of alleged or convicted criminals at any time after their apprehension in Canada, even during their period of incarceration for crimes committed in Canada.

The number of petitions now presented to the House of Commons is in excess of 44,000.

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Madam Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present a petition duly certified by the Clerk.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain and improve VIA Rail service. It is very important to rural areas of Canada in particular and all across Canada. I join with these petitioners in urging the Government to continue and to improve the service.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Madam Speaker, I ask that all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall all motions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY, 1989-90

The House resumed from Monday, June 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the third time and passed.

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, I rise to resume the debate I began on Monday on Bill C-11, a Bill to provide borrowing authority. On that day I spent quite some time discussing the plight of the coalition of fishermen and plant workers from the West Coast. It is a situation that could easily apply to many areas in Canada, particularly to the East Coast.

• (1540)

The people on the East Coast in the fishery should be a 100 per cent behind this coalition because what has happened out there could easily happen on the East Coast in the fishery.

Just to review it very quickly, under GATT the Canadian Government apparently brought in a regulation which said that our fish must be processed here in Canada. It prohibited the export of unprocessed salmon and herring. The United States then petitioned GATT and it was found to be offensive.

It was raised in this House. I feel very strongly that when it comes down to dealing with a natural resource, a renewable resource which so many jobs are dependent on, this Government, any Government in Canada, should forcefully stand up and take the consequences. It should stand up to the United States.

When it came to the hogs, the United States did not think of Canada. It did not think of GATT reviewing the agricultural process and the agricultural subsidies. It did not think of the new Free Trade Agreement. It went directly under the omnibus trade Bill and slapped a countervail on the Canadian hog industry.

I say to the Hon. Members that unless Canadians stand up and make our natural resources of prime concern to Canadians first, we are going to be in very sore trouble, particularly in the eastern, western and rural areas of Canada where so many people are dependent on those jobs being created by our natural resources.

This Government does not listen to those people. Those people have come up here and spent a week trying to bring home that point. The Government does not listen to the native people who are outside and have been outside. It does not listen to the people who are going to be hurt by the cut-backs in health and education because of the financing program.I do not think this Government listens to anybody except big interests whose toes might be stepped on by this Government.

We are here passing a Bill which wants us to let this Government borrow $24 billion. The Government is not going to borrow the money to improve the quality of life for those who are unemployed, those people who are going to be receiving unemployment insurance and who have depended on seasonality.

Mr. Thompson: What about the debt?

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): I am glad the new Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte brought up the matter of the debt. He was not here in 1984. I was here in 1984. I got defeated by this Government's promises in 1984. What was the promise in 1984? It was that the Government would reduce the deficit. Did it reduce the deficit?

Mr. Thompson: Yes.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): No, it did not reduce any deficit. In fact, the deficit proposed in this Budget of April 27 is exactly $30.5 billion for the fiscal year 1989–90. If the Government had not added the biggest tax grab to bring in revenues for $3.7 billion, where would the deficit be? The Government has put the biggest tax grab on the Canadian people in any time in history when there was not a major crisis. Cutting spending in its own areas might have been better, but no, it goes after cigarettes, gas, fishing vessel diesel oil, all things which will hurt all our constituents. The Government just goes after them with the biggest tax grab.

An Hon. Member: Bankrupt, totally bankrupt.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): That is right. What is a deficit if we take away the tax grab this year? If we take away the $3.7 billion and not put in the taxes, what would the deficit be for 1989–90? It would be $34.2 billion. What was the deficit in 1984. It was $34.2 billion.

How can that Government over there say that it has cut the deficits? It has gone through the best economic times, started by the way before it came into office, that this country has seen in the last number of years.

Did the the Government cut deficits? No, it increased deficits. Did it help bring in any new programs? No, it did not bring in any new programs. What is it doing now? It is cutting VIA. It is going to cut the rail lines in the East. It is going to cut VIA from Halifax to Yarmouth.

Mr. Thompson: You do not know that. The report is not out.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member wants to speak and should be given time to speak about what he thinks is not fair. He is so new in the system that it will take a thunderbolt to hit him rather than this Government telling him what he should know. However, he can ask a question after if he wants.

I just know that this Government is going to hit the Canadian people, particularly those in the East, in the area of health and in the area of post-secondary education as far as universities are concerned. I have said that before and I do not want to go into it again. Now it is going to hit ACOA, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

Mr. Thompson: There is $500 million going to Atlantic Canada this year.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): I just want to say, Madam Speaker,—

Mr. Thompson: This fiscal year, $500 million.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): —that the Government did not bring in any new programs to replace the ageing sewer and water systems. Is this Member taking part of my time, Madam Speaker?

I just think that the Government has not in the last five years improved the quality of life. In fact, it is going to hit the unemployed; it is not going to find new jobs for the seasonality of the east coast unemployed because of the type of industries we have, either in fishery, forestry, farming, or tourism.

What is the Government going to do to tourism with the national sales tax? It is going to hit us so bad in the East that we will not even know that there is a Canada. The proposed national sales tax is going to hit every area of the service industry in the east coast. As soon as tourists who come across by car or by ferry ask for something, there will be a sales tax. There will be another sales tax and another.

Why does the Conference Board of Canada say that it is tourism which will be hurt the most in the East and that the East will be hurt, not Quebec and Ontario? It is going to be the East in terms of the national sales tax.

I am glad that there is a bit more time and that I do not have to close off that fast. I do not mind having a borrowing Bill if I thought it was improving the quality of life. However, it is not.

This Government's Budget is hurting the future people who will be on unemployment insurance. It is hurting the people who have used VIA right across Canada, particularly in remote areas, to get to the cities for medical purposes or whatever. They have to go from Yarmouth to the Victoria General Hospital, or they have to go from Digby, Saulnierville, or Bridgetown to the Victoria General Hospital. There is no other way to go.

I say that because I am hearing it from the people. I attended the hearings. I am sure that over the next few weeks and months we are going to hear a lot more.

Why did the Member from the Magdalen Islands stand up and say that he wants the status quo for VIA? Why is he petitioning the Government with a petition from his people? It is because the cuts to VIA are going to affect everybody in Canada.

We could talk about allowing this Government to have the money, but I think it should be more responsible. Perhaps it should have cut in other areas, but it should be at least maintaining a fair standard of quality of life for all Canadians. If we have a program such as ACOA, as we saw in the East, why should we cut back on all of those applications? Those people have spent hundreds and thousands of dollars to prepare an application which they put in a year ago and it was not decided on. Then the rules changed and even to understand what the rules mean because of the change it will take a lot of dollars in government spending to go out and explain to the people. This is if there is money because we have not even been told that there is money in ACOA. We have not been told if there is money for the ERDA arrangements with the East.

This Bill will pass by virtue of the Government's large majority, but it must start realizing that it cannot be taking and taking and hurting all the small people in Canada.

In the last two weeks the Minister of Fisheries presented a policy on vessel replacement. I give this as an example to my colleagues in the House. I refer to a man who had an application in for a loan from the provincial Government to replace a 37–foot lobster boat was told he had to go down to a boat of 32 feet. Why? It was because, unilaterally on April 1, the rules were changed.

What will that change in the rules mean? It will mean that this man will not fit in under the coast guard regulations. Nor will he fit in in terms of boat builders who are laying off many of their people since they now have to go out to find new moulds. The mould used for the 37–foot boat will have to be replaced by a mould for a 32–foot boat. It sounds complicated. I have to say that it is complicated. It is so complicated that the fishermen, the ship builders, and all their workers have been asking to come to see the Minister and to appear before the committee. However, time is running out. The House will shut down at the end of June. They are not the only group which wants to come.

I see that you are signalling to me that my time is up, Madam Speaker. Thank you, Madam Speaker, for allowing me to speak today. I have to say that of course I oppose this borrowing authority. I do not think it is a reasonable approach to satisfy the needs of all Canadians. The Government has satisfied only the needs of the big interest groups in Canada.

Mr. Thompson: Madam Speaker, I listened with great delight as the Hon. Member for South West Nova prattled on about some obvious problems that she sees. The point we have to underline is that many of the problems with which we have to deal are problems that we inherited when we formed the Government in 1984. The Hon. Member conveniently disregards the fact that in 1984 we inherited a $200 billion deficit. Members of that former Liberal Government brag about the fact that they left the cupboard bare. They are on the record as having stated that they left the cupboard bare. Consequently, we were left paying the bills for that Liberal Government. We are still paying them.

Mr. Milliken: You keep talking about it, but you don't do anything about it.

Mr. Thompson: As the Hon. Member concluded her arguments in this debate, she mentioned some of the complicated issues with which she is dealing. I think she unnecessarily complicates them.

She spoke of the ERDAs, the regional development agreements, that we are negotiating with the provinces today.

Mr. McGuire: Where are they now?

Mr. Thompson: They will be signed, as they always have been. They have been very generous to the provinces in the past. In fact, most all the provincial Governments in Atlantic Canada will give credit to the federal Government for having transferred those moneys to the provinces to allow them to run a balanced ledger. Everyone in the House, regardless of side, understands the importance of the ERDAs. They will be signed.

The Member from South West Nova offers no alternatives. She and the Members of her Party are devoid of alternatives. They can criticize as they like. We are trying to deal with some very real problems left to us by her Government.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte comes from the other side of the Bay of Fundy. People from my area know that area well for many reasons.

I wish to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that in 1984 the public debt was $68 billion. In the four years of economic influence by the Conservatives that figure increased to $191.5 billion.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): I said in my speech that the Government had the best economic times. The Hon. Member was not here from 1980 to 1984 when the rate of inflation went up as a result of what had happened in the 1970s because of high energy prices.

Mr. Vincent: Because of your bad policies.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): We will see who had bad policies. Just wait. In the long term we will see who had bad policies. Members opposite rode with a Minister of Finance who said that we will have new economic growth. The reality is that if he had not put the biggest tax grab on Canadians, a grab of $3.7 billion in the last Budget, the deficit would be the same as it was when he first came into office, a deficit of $34.2 billion. That is the reality. The biggest tax grab as well as the interest rate policy of the Bank of Canada will put the Government and Canada into, if not a depression, at least a recession. The Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte represents the same type of people as I represent. They are ordinary Canadians who make their living from natural resources in their areas.

As we very clearly saw with the west coast coalition today, yesterday, and the day before, these people cannot live without the ability to process their fish. They cannot live on the West Coast in those fishing villages without being able to process their fish. Yet that is viewed as a violation of the Free Trade Agreement with the U.S. We want to protect the jobs of our fishermen who fish in our own waters as well as jobs on shore. I think it is atrocious that the Government kneels to the United States.

Mr. Parent: Madam Speaker, it would seem to me that the Hon. Member who spoke prior to my colleague still has not got used to the fact that his Government has been in power now for in excess of four years. Sooner or later he and members of the Government will have to take responsibility for some of their own actions.

Mr. Thompson: We will take the responsibility for employment and the wealth of the country.

Mr. Parent: The Hon. Member had his chance to say what he had to say, which was not much, I will admit, but now I think he should have the courtesy of listening to what I have to say.

Mr. Thompson: Inaccuracies.

Mr. Parent: I am addressing my hon. colleague, the Member from Nova Scotia. I visited Summerside recently. My colleague did not address, at least in depth, the issue there. I wonder if she might make a comment on the closing of the Canadian Forces bases in the Maritime provinces, especially in terms of the jobs that will be lost there, as well as with respect to the economic impact those closures will have on the people in the surrounding areas. I do not mean just the military. I am talking about ordinary Canadians, if you will, Madam Speaker, from the Maritimes who are trying the best they can to make a living and to help build Canada with the rest of us. Perhaps my colleague could address herself to that.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, because of redistribution I do not represent Barrington any more. I feel sorry for the Member from South Shore. It must be very hard for him to see that base close after so many years.

The spin-off effects from a base like Summerside would be about 60 per cent in the area, if not 70 per cent. We have heard that those bases do not have to be in those areas for regional development. We are told that they were not put there at a time when there was a need for regional development. They were put there because there was a need for a Canadian Forces base in the areas in which they were placed. That is what we were told.

The closure will affect those foreigners who are overfishing within and without the 200-mile limit. If will affect a company such as IMP which is bringing new technology and new ideas to the area. It had a contract. I heard that somewhere between 20 per cent to 25 per cent of its intake of business will be affected. I am not sure on that; it may be more. It affects the whole economy.

• (1600)

I have never heard of anything so devastating as what is being done to Summerside. I cannot believe that the Government can do this. If it wants to do away with CFB Summerside, it must have a plan of action that will sustain the area. If it does not have such a plan, it is simply saying that Summerside is on its own. In my opinion, Canada has never been that way. We are a country that has shared in the difficulties that exist across Canada. When a disaster occurs in one part of Canada, the rest of Canada has always helped.

I do not think Canadians want to see the effect of the base closures in Portage la Prairie and Summerside. There should be a more reasoned use of those facilities. One does not build a brand new cafeteria for $10 million and then close it. What does one do with it?

The Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. Hockin) has indicated that the tourism distribution centre in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, is no longer needed. It was only built five or six years ago, but it and its nine jobs are no longer needed. It cost the Government many millions of dollars to build the building and it costs about $792,000 a year in operating expenses and salaries. All the Government agencies that are operational on the east coast, for example the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, could use that distribution centre, but the Government does not think of that.

I know you are telling me that my time is up, Madam Speaker. I thank Hon. Members for their questions.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise to participate in this debate on the borrowing Bill brought forward by the Government. I note from the provisions of Clause 2 of the Bill that the Government is proposing to borrow a sum not exceeding $24.8 billion.

What I find really surprising is the lack of public comment on this Bill and on the record of the Government in financial matters. I would like to speak briefly about what I consider to be an appalling record in this regard and to point out to Hon. Members, particularly those opposite, how they might seek to improve the record by changing their ways.

As Hon. Members know, the borrowing Bill is one of three major financial items that Governments present to the House of Commons in the course of a year. We have seen more fumbling and bumbling by the Government on financial matters during the course of this Parliament than any Canadian Parliament has ever had to witness. I would like to deal with that fumbling and bumbling by referring to each of the three items of financial business and explaining how it is in my view that the Government has fumbled and bumbled its way through these items.

I would like to turn first to the business of supply which has occupied considerable debate in the House in the course of this session. The irregular procedures the Government has followed in this connection have been shocking. The normal procedure is that the Estimates for the financial year are tabled in the House of Commons by the end of February of the year, or around the beginning of March. This year, it was April 28 before the Estimates were presented to the House.

In addition, the House failed to deal, because of the Government's fumbling and bumbling, with the question of Supplementary Estimates for the last financial year which ended on March 31. We have discussed extensively in connection with both the Supplementary Estimates and Main Estimates which were tabled so late the Government's dereliction of its responsibility to call Parliament together in a timely matter to deal with the financial matter of supply.

In various debates in the House and in committee, we have heard how the Government breached the Constitution of Canada by issuing money to itself through the use of special Governor General Warrants which, in my submission, it had no proper right to do. I am supported in my opinion by such eminent scholars as Senator Forsey who has expressed his views before a Senate committee. I will not bore Hon. Members opposite by reading his testimony again. However, this is a clear indication of a shocking disregard for constitutional practice and constitutional obligation, and one that the Government should be apologizing for rather than carrying on the way it does.

Regarding the business of supply, the Government has been late at every turn. It has failed to consult Parliament as it is obligated to do under the Constitution. It has dealt itself money which it had no right under the Constitution to take, in my view, and it has generally fumbled and bumbled the business of supply in its manner of dealing with the House.

Now we turn to the second major item, the Budget. It hardly seems necessary for me to explain the fumbling and bumbling that went on with the Budget. We all know about the incredible Budget leak. The whole Budget got leaked in advance of Budget night, something unprecedented in Canada. There have been lots of Budgets over the last 22 years, heaven knows, but nothing like this has ever happened. The whole Budget was blown the night before.

We have witnessed the really rather shameful procedure whereby the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) have tried to blame the Opposition for the failure of the Government to present its Budget properly before the House the night before it was supposed to be presented. I have explained on previous occasions to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and other Hon. Members opposite how it is that the rules of the House do not provide for consultation with the Opposition in these matters. It is not a matter of asking the Opposition for authority. That is a specious argument put forward by the Ministers in order to evade their responsibility to the House and to the country. Their responsibility was to come clean with the Budget in the House, not to ask the Opposition for consent to do that. They did not need our consent to do that. They are the masters in this House. We are in Opposition and do not have a majority, much to the regret to the majority of Canadians, I might add.

Beside the fact that the Budget was leaked so badly, there has been a rather shameful cover-up on the question of how much the Government knew when the Budget was ultimately presented in the House on April 27. The evasive answers we have been given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), by the Deputy Prime Minister and by the Minister of Justice have led to a loss of confidence in the Government on the part of Canadians and loss of confidence in the ability of its Ministers to look after the financial affairs of Canada. This evasion has once again surrounded one of the principle financial instruments of Government, the Budget.

I could go on to deal with the merits of the Budget, but frankly, it would be a short speech were I discussing its merits. There are so many demerits in the Budget that those are the ones that require attention. There has been a shocking series of tax increases and cuts in areas of questionable appropriateness.

I would like to turn to the Main Estimates. The Government makes a great thing of its cuts and the Minister of Finance keeps telling us how it is that he will balance the Budget and will suddenly stop these huge deficit increases that have been plaguing us for so long, according to the Minister. I would like to read from the statement made by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) when he introduced the Main Estimates in the House on April 28, as recorded at page 1078 of Hansard:

> The Government's updated fiscal plan provides for total budgetary expenditures of $142.9 billion in fiscal year 1989–1990, a 7.4 per cent increase over the forecast for the past fiscal year.

Here we talk about government restraint. The Government is constantly complaining in this House that it cannot do this and it cannot do that because of fiscal—

• (1610)

An Hon. Member: What about that intervention we just heard?

Mr. Milliken: I am sorry, if the New Democratic Party Members wish to participate in the debate I am sure the contributions they are making are typical of what we might hear if they were in it, so I will continue with my speech.

The 7.4 per cent increase in government expenditures over the forecast for the past fiscal year—and we are told this is restraint—is that restraint? Is that what Hon. Members opposite consider restraint? I do not consider that particularly restraining.

I consider that a rather hefty increase and that is what we are being subjected to in spite all the rattling of chains and the noise about cuts. This is not a cut, this is a big increase. What is being done to pay for this increase? We are told that in fact the Government is slashing expenditures right, left and centre. The fact is the cuts are minimal. The fact is that the Government is raising its money on the backs of Canadians by vast increases in the taxes that Canadians pay as a result of these financial measures. That is what is going on here. What the Government is really doing is saying on the one hand, "Well, we have slashed expenditures", and it announces a series of cuts that are devastating in three or four areas and it increases everything else. Then the Government says, "We will increase the taxes to pay for everything else". That is what is going on and it is a shifty, shady, questionable operation. The Government is not coming clean with Canadians and explaining what it is really doing through this Budget.

We have been maintaining that on this side of the House for months now on every single item, because what appears to be happening is really not what is happening. The Government makes a policy announcement and says it is going to fix up unemployment insurance. "We are going to improve it". But when in fact you look at the details of the plan it is worse for almost everyone who participates in unemployment insurance. The employers pay more, the employees pay more, and everyone gets less in benefits. That is not an improvement. Yet those are the kinds of policies that the Government pursues in this House. Those are the kinds of answers it gives to questions. Those are the kinds of speeches its members make when they stand up and defend some of the atrocious legislation which the Government has introduced in the House. The Government should be ashamed of itself.

I see the Hon. Member from British Columbia over there smiling and nodding in agreement. I can understand his agreement and his feelings of shame when he considers the statements he is asked to make in this House in defence of some of the Government's legislative priorities. I must say that were I on the Government side, having to defend some of the legislation that we have here, I would be a little ashamed myself. In fact, considerably ashamed.

Mr. Edwards: He is nodding off.

Mr. Milliken: The Hon. Member says he was nodding off. He looks wide awake to me.

I want to turn now to the third major item of financial control that the Government has at its disposal, and that is borrowing. That is the subject of the Bill we are discussing here today.

The Government made a decision in December that Parliament would be recalled in March. It later decided that it would be embarrassing to have an Opposition facing it across the House in March because we might ask difficult questions. We might embarrass Ministers. We might make the Government look incompetent. So the Government deferred the opening of Parliament until April, thinking that perhaps by April it might have its act together. We all know that it did not, but the fact remains we waited until April. In that month Parliament was recalled and we began dealing with a new series of legislative proposals outlined in the Speech from the Throne.

The difficulty is that by waiting until April the Government was forced to use the special Government General Warrants in order to get money from the treasury for the purpose of paying its bills. But there was not enough money in the treasury in order to allow the Government to take the money by special warrant. It had to resort to borrowing in order to replenish the treasury.

We know that under the Financial Administration Act the Government is able to borrow money. I would like to read from that Act, Section 47:

> Where it appears to the Governor in Council that the Consolidated Revenue Fund will be insufficient to meet the disbursements lawfully authorized to be made from it, the Governor in Council may authorize the Minister to borrow, for a period not exceeding six months, an amount not exceeding such amount as the Governor in Council deems necessary to ensure that the Consolidated Revenue Fund will be sufficient to meet those disbursements.

The point of the section is that the Government may only borrow for a short-term period for normal government purposes. What happened here is that the Government went out and borrowed, helped itself through the use of this Section of the Act to various sums of money. On March 31 it borrowed $750 million, on April 5 it took another cool billion, on April 14 it took another $100 million and on April 21 it took $150 million. The Government has borrowed a lot more since, totalling about $5 billion according to the records I obtained a few days ago.

Let us deal only with the borrowings up to April 21, because by that time the Government was about to bring this Bill before the House. In borrowing that money, the Government had to pay short-term rates because it was borrowing the money for periods of six months or less. Had it borrowed the money in the usual fashion in long-term borrowings, it would have paid a lower interest rate. The difference between the two rates, for simplification, is approximately 2 per cent. It was about that constant rate of 2 per cent throughout the period.

If we calculate the cost of borrowing the almost $2 billion over a six-month period, the estimated cost of that differential is approximately $4 million on a very rough calculation. That is what it has cost the people of Canada for the Government to refrain from calling Parliament until April. In other words, by delaying the recall of Parliament, the Government increased its expenses by about $4 million and now expects Canadians to cough up that money in extra taxes. Tax Canadians to pay for the Government's folly.

This would not seem unusual—$4 million after all is peanuts to this Government when it is spending $147 billion in a year, I acknowledge that—but the fact is it is a cost that could have been saved the Canadian taxpayers. I would not raise it today as a particularly serious matter if it did not add into the list of fumbling and bumbling on financial matters that we have witnessed throughout this session of Parliament, but the Minister of Finance himself in previous statements has raised this cost as something he regards as a very serious waste of money.

I have here some statements by the Minister of Finance that I thought you would enjoy hearing, because, Madam Speaker, these were said of a different time when he was still a Minister but he, of course, was smarting because of further government fumbling and bumbling in financial matters in 1985.

One of the extraordinary things in this country is the approach the business press takes to the Minister of Finance because he is upheld in some quarters as a beacon of reason and right in financial matters. Yet when you look at the record of fumbling and bumbling, one has to wonder why these news editors take that particular position.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: I do not understand it. If I were Minister of Finance and I fumbled and bumbled as many things as he has in the last six months, I would quit. But he has not seen fit to do that, he is soldiering on, continuing to fumble and bumble.

Let us hear what he said in 1985. Let me set the stage for this. In 1985 the Senate of Canada received a borrowing Bill from this House and it determined that that borrowing Bill ought not be allowed to pass until the Government of the day had tabled its spending plans in this House so the Senate could see where the money would go. Indeed, in accordance with constitutional practice, that position on the part of the other place was perfectly proper and perfectly correct. Yet this Government howled and shrieked outrage at the dreadful actions of the other place in holding up the borrowing Bill. The nerve of the other place, the Government kept saying. The Minister of Finance was at the head of the charge in shouting about how dreadful it was that the other place was obstructing a piece of legislation on financial matters from this House. What he did was calculate the cost of holding up the Bill in the other place on the same basis that I have costed the failure of the Government to recall Parliament in a timely way. As reported in Hansard on February 26, 1985 at page 2500, he stated:

> Based on the level of interest rates today compared to the amounts of money that could have been raised about two or three weeks ago, and were not raised because of the actions in the other place, the cost to taxpayers has been at least $10 million. Those are the facts, and I ask him to reconsider his position.

The Minister of Finance was answering a question posed by the Leader of the Opposition.

The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) was making a speech and he quoted a letter written by the Minister of Finance. As reported in Hansard on June 7, 1985 at page 5535, the Minister stated:

There were also indirect costs associated with the Senate delay. Although these costs are difficult to measure, it is clear that any interruption in the Government's borrowing program will introduce some confusion and uncertainty into financial markets, if only because the federal government's position in the market forces all other participants to plan around the federal borrowing schedule.

Those Ministers were blaming the Senate for every ill that befell them. Now, when there is a $3 billion or $4 billion cost to Canadians arising out of their failure to recall the House on time, we do not hear a peep.

Why are the Ministers not apologizing to the Canadian people for wasting $4 million of their money that will be taxed out of their hides by the Government in its new tax measures? Why is there not some apology for this fumbling and bumbling?

Why was the Minister of Finance not out at the gates of Rideau Hall when the Prime Minister went to advise Her Excellency to prorogue the last session and postpone the date for recalling Parliament? He should have been there with signs and placards objecting to this procedure. Instead, we do not hear a peep about it. It has been all hushed up. Nothing has been said in the House about it because the Government is ashamed of its record. It is a disgraceful record.

If the Minister of Finance had any common sense or any sense of caring for the people of Canada he was elected to serve, he would resign at once and admit that the Government has fumbled and bumbled every financial measure it has brought before Parliament. It is a shocking disgrace and we should hear some apologies from the other side.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I am happy to participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill C–11. Before I get into the substance of my remarks, I wanted to put on the record the fact that I sat here and listened to the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mrs. Campbell), who has since vacated her seat, and could not help but reflect back over the years of one Liberal Government after another when they made every attempt possible, not only to gut VIA Rail and bring it to an absolute standstill, something they are now accusing this Government of attempting to do, quite accurately, but also in the Hon. Member's own bailiwick of the country in Atlantic Canada, tried three times to shut down Base Summerside. The Hon. Member and her cohorts in the Liberal Party had the unmitigated gall to stand up today and condemn this Government when they attempted to do the very same thing themselves.

It is that type of duplicity that brings a certain degree of dishonour to this Chamber. One thing we must all at least attempt to do is to bring some intellectual honesty back into this very important forum.

This afternoon I would like to discuss some of the aspects, not only of the borrowing Bill itself, but how in my view the Government is very unwisely not borrowing money in order to spend money on what I consider to be worthwhile projects. I want to touch on the rising costs and the emergency that is developing in municipal infrastructure, and the decay within our cities in terms of water services, sewage disposal, waste treatment plants and indeed the very sidewalks on which we walk and the roads on which we drive.

I also want to talk about something else that relates to ordinary Canadians, and that is older workers' retraining programs which a couple of the provinces has still yet to agree to, and also cuts in VIA Rail and base closures, if I have time.

Our cities and towns are being left to decay by the federal Government's refusal to join with municipal and provincial governments to deal with the problem. This is a growing and critical problem across our country. We see it in the United States in the inner core of its cities, on its interstate highways and bridges which are literally rotting because of the lack of funds at the local and state levels. We are now seeing that here in Canada and indeed we have seen it for several years.

For example, 138 of Ontario's 371 sewage treatment plants do not meet provincial and environmental standards. That applies today in 1989. Only 10 per cent of raw sewage east of Ontario is treated at all.

These days the Government is heralding this tremendous breakthrough in an agreement with the United States on getting control of acid rain emissions. There are arguments for and against the specific details as they were revealed in Washington a day or so ago. There is no question that that is a very important environmental concern.

Right here in our own cities, in that part of Canada that is east of Ontario, only 10 per cent of raw sewage is being treated and the rest of it is being dumped into our waterways and into our lakes. This is an absolute disgrace. This problem was neglected for years by former Liberal governments and it has been neglected by the present Government, although some initiatives of late have been taken, but not nearly enough.

Water quality is of such a concern to Canadians that last year they spent more than $80 million on bottled water. Most of those people are afraid to drink the water that goes into their homes in our municipalities because of all the additives.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) says "rubbish". I hope that the people in Kingston are aware of the problems that they face, and other municipalities face, in terms of safe water for drinking. Perhaps the water is fine in Kingston, or perhaps where I live in Brantford it is fine. However, Canadians who refused to drink out of their own taps spent $80 million to buy bottled water and it is becoming a serious problem.

The value of Canadian water treatment and delivery systems is now more than $100 billion. The bill for the next five years for repairing aging underground pipes is estimated at $3 billion and another $3 billion will be needed to improve water and sewage treatment facilities. That is $6 billion needed by our municipalities over the next five years. There is nothing that I can see in the Estimates that will go to any of those projects to help to solve any of those problems.

According to George Cuff, President of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, municipal governments and the provinces are willing to sit down and discuss funding such rehabilitation programs. The federal Government is not as willing, according to Mr. Cuff.

Another area that touches the day-to-day lives of average Canadians in their homes and on their way to work is the whole area of transportation. The transportation sector, roads and bridges, is the most neglected area of municipal infrastructure today. The Government of Canada levies heavy taxes on the users of gasoline and diesel fuels, yet channels none of those revenues into the road system.

Recently, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) has designated certain highways to be national highways. In doing so, all he has done is to change the name. He has not provided any funding to upgrade those highways, make them safer, or preserve them. Many of our highways are rotting right beneath our eyes and we are doing very little about it because the funding is extremely limited. The Government therefore should consider earmarking some of these funds for transportation and infrastructure. I emphasize that we are talking here in terms of billions of dollars. Local taxpayers on their property assessments who are being gouged for such things as education and other municipal services, cannot be expected raise the other $6 billion just for these two areas alone. This will make owning a house or maintaining a house absolutely prohibitive.

• (1630)

Former Environment Minister, Mr. Tom McMillan, said the Government is unable to act because of the Constitution. That is always a very convenient way out around this place, and it holds no water at all as an argument. The provinces have already said that they are willing to co-operate on any constitutional change or agreement that may be necessary. In fact, a communiqué issued by the twenty-ninth annual premiers conference in Saskatoon last August stated:

> The Premiers agree that the continued competitiveness of the Canadian economy will depend to a significant degree on the maintenance and improvement of vital local infrastructure. A healthy economy as well as healthy and liveable cities, towns and villages depend on having adequate transportation networks, water supplies and sewers.

The Premiers called on the federal Government to support provinces in maintaining municipal infrastructure. We would certainly like to repeat that call here today.

Along with the expenditure of some $6 billion to improve local municipal infrastructures there would be a tremendous job creation program. So we are not talking about throwing money away on making local improvements. We are actually talking about investing money. The program that the FCM has proposed, which is supported by my Party, will create 330,000 person-years of employment over its five-year life span and strengthen communities across the country. FCM president, George Cuff, has said:

> Something is wrong with a society that has people, who would rather work, lining up on a crumbling sidewalk to collect UIC benefits.

I would like to speak about another aspect of the borrowing authority and what the Government should be spending money on, or borrowing money to spend money on, which it is not doing or is doing in a haphazard and limited way; that is older worker retraining. One of the great tragedies of the workplace today is the plant closure that throws out of work lifetime workers who have put in 10, 15, 25 years. They have reached the age of 45 or 50 and they are thrown out of work through no fault of their own. They find it extremely difficult to find work of a comparable nature or income, if indeed in some parts of the country they can find work at all.

The Government's Bill C–8, the Program for Older Worker Adjustment, sometimes referred to as POWA, implicitly recognizes the inadequacy of current UIC policy to meet the needs of older workers. We are especially concerned that it hinges on provincial ability and willingness to participate. This may offer greater flexibility, but it also encourages disparities. Indeed, some provinces, the Province of Ontario for example, have not completed negotiations with the federal Government. As a result, thousands of older workers in the Province of Ontario are not able to take advantage of the POWA program. Moreover, the total proposed budget for POWA is a mere $60 million. This means that roughly 6,000 workers can be retrained through the program. Currently 415,000 workers aged 55 to 64 are out of work, but only 100,000 of these are considered officially unemployed. Even 100,000 would not make a dent on those figures in terms of re–training.

If all the money that is available at this time is $60 million, that would retrain approximately 6,000 workers. In my constituency of Brant alone, as of February of this year, there were 1,318 workers between the ages of 44 and 64 collecting unemployment insurance. More are now on welfare. CEIC does not have a separate figure for those 55 and over in my constituency. There are 200 to 250 older workers from the Massey Combines plant alone still in need of the type of retraining that a POWA program could offer.

I recall a number of years ago when both White Farm Equipment and more recently Massey Combines shut down and went out of business in the farm implement industry. This had a devastating effect on the lives of hundreds, indeed several thousand workers in my constituency. I fought very hard in those days to get the farm implement industry included on the list for older worker retraining. I will say that this Government did come across and added that class of workers to the program. However I do not know how $60 million is going to go very far toward solving the problem of retraining older workers. For example, in my constituency of Brant, only 30 per cent of older workers who lost their jobs between 1981 and 1984 had found re–employment by January 1986. I do not have current figures, but I strongly suspect that an awful lot of those workers are still looking for meaningful work that pays a decent wage. They may have part–time work, work that they are not suited for or at lower rates of income. This is extremely disruptive to their personal lives.

We now have a program to be funded with $60 million; yet in August 1985 the advisory council to the then Minister of Employment and Immigration called for a $1 billion adjustment program for older workers. This Government came up with a figure of $60 million. What we should see implemented is a federally controlled and financed program under the UIC Act which would provide an extension of benefits for this group and would apply to all older workers regardless of the cause and nature of their layoff.

I do not know why they have to limit the benefits of retraining to certain industry sectors. Surely if any industry, city or urban community shuts down, closes its doors and throws older workers out of work, they should automatically come under a national federal retraining program. They should not have to go through all the red tape of having to prove that they belong to a certain industry sector and that that industry sector falls under the POWA agreement. It should be for all displaced older workers, not just those in certain designated industries.

Furthermore, we recommend the following for the POWA program: One, incorporate the earnings based benefit formula into POWA with the minimum benefit being two–thirds of an individual's income; two, provincial and employer participation should be guaranteed through legislation if necessary; three, a job protection board should be established to evaluate layoffs, ensure adequate notice and ensure that the terms of POWA are negotiated before layoffs take effect; and four, a levy grant system to ensure employers contribute to training.

In concluding this part of my address this afternoon, I cannot stress too much the significance of retraining programs for men and women in their middle years of employment. It is an absolute shame in a country as rich as ours that people are thrown out of work, their jobs are terminated and they have virtually nowhere to go except initially part–time jobs or lower paying jobs. All this is extremely disruptive to family planning and budgeting to say nothing of the pall of emotional depression that often settles over families and individuals because of the terrible disruption in their work lives and in their financial income.

I mentioned at the outset that I would like to say a few words about the Government's cut-backs on VIA Rail. The Government is asking for a borrowing authority of some $24.8 billion. Then it turns around and pulls the rug out from underneath VIA Rail. I do not know what kind of thinking is going on in this Cabinet when it comes to transportation. I must say with complete openness and honesty that the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) is one of the great disappointments on this side of the House in terms of this Government. He has shown absolutely no innovative or creative approach to his job. The only approach that he has brought to Transport is to build down, cut back, close, shut down. It has been a totally negative approach. He is fighting change all the way. He is fighting improvements all the way. We already have in place a tremendous network of railroads in this country. We have a huge country. It logically follows that we should be promoting rail traffic for both freight and passenger services, particularly in those areas of the country where it is most difficult to move people around, most of whom cannot afford air travel which is going to get more expensive, not less expensive as the years go by.

• (1640)

Second, as a commuter service alone, there is tremendous justification in the so-called Golden Triangle between Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto. If we increase the effectiveness and efficiency of rail travel between those three centres, it could relieve the pressures at Pearson International Airport, here in Ottawa, and at Dorval. We could reduce the number of inter-city flights by up to 100 a day if the speed at which those trains travel could be increased to a point where they could travel from downtown Ottawa to downtown Toronto in two hours. If the French can do it, we can.

If that service can be provided I suggest that there will be a response from the travelling public. Rather than pulling back and saying it cannot afford it because no one travels by train today, the Government should move ahead to improve the service, the number of trains and the speed at which they travel. Business people as well as people on holidays will automatically go by train because it is more comfortable. Those who have been around long enough to have travelled on trains long ago would probably suggest that it is a more gracious way to travel.

Trains can solve a very practical problem. It has nothing to do with nostalgia or dreaming in the past. The cost of air transportation is increasing and will continue to increase. The pressure at some of our airports is downright unsafe and extremely costly. Let no one be mistaken about the fact that this Government as well as previous Governments have substantially subsidized air travel.

Finally, our highways certainly in central Canada have reached the point where travelling through Toronto has become almost impossible. The Government's answer to this is to increase the number of buses.

Mr. Milliken: And cars.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Buses and cars. The province cannot afford to improve our highways, widen them or build any more. Yet the Government is dumping more and larger vehicles onto the highways by cutting back on VIA Rail.

While there were two or three other matters I wanted to raise, I see that my time is up. I appreciate having the opportunity to speak once again to Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority.

Mr. Whittaker: Madam Speaker, first let me congratulate my colleague for an excellent speech. He touched on a number of matters of interest, but unfortunately I cannot assist him in his predicament of not having enough time to complete his remarks.

I am interested in the issue of VIA Rail cut-backs and the problem that has for us in the future. The New Democratic Party just completed an environmental task force study on the uses and abuses of fossil fuels to learn about what we may look to in the future to assist in cutting back on various emissions.

Will the Hon. Member comment on how the Government's projections for VIA Rail would assist the environment? What suggestions does he have for the Government in the area of VIA Rail and the environment?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question.

Mr. Milliken: An unbiased question.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Whether it is biased or unbiased, the point is that one of the great issues today is the environment and the negative impact of certain sources of energy on our environment.

We are in the process of attempting to come to grips with acid rain, and it will be extremely costly for our country, the United States and other countries in the world.

At the same time, when it comes to ground transportation, the Conservative Government is doing what it can to reduce the availability of a mode of transportation that is essentially environmentally friendly. I do not have to remind the House that diesel fuel is much less dangerous to the environment than gasoline or jet fuel. Yet the Government is going out of its way to encourage bus companies, trucking companies and airlines to continue to pollute our highways and our air space.

There is a huge infrastructure of rail lines across Canada for the purpose of transportation not only of goods but of people. It is a mode of transportation that should be encouraged, modernized, updated and expanded because its effect on the environment is minimal.

The slogan of the Conservative Government during the last election was "the Party who could manage change". It is changing things all right, and I guess it is managing it, but it is a change from the 1980s back to the 1920s in most respects. It cannot visualize or anticipate what is leading us into the next century. The Conservatives are unable to come to grips with it because of its doctrinaire conservative approach that is more reminiscent of my grandfather's day than mine.

The railroad is not a relic of the past. One need only go to Europe to see that it is a vehicle that is adaptable to change. The environment is certainly a very important consideration in adapting a rail system to the modern era. It is environmentally friendly in the sense that it has a minimal negative impact on the environment.

Mr. Stupich: Madam Speaker, I too am interested in my colleague's remarks about VIA Rail. Petitions have been presented in the House urging the Government to maintain VIA Rail service and improve it. The people who built the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway on Vancouver Island received tremendous acreage in land and substantial resources from the Government in exchange for building that railroad. They were obliged to continue the passenger service. I expect the same holds true for VIA Rail services all across Canada.

Do the railways have a legal obligation to maintain that service, and did VIA Rail assume that obligation when it was organized? Is there a possibility that citizens who have shown in great numbers that they want that service continued will take to court the railways, VIA Rail or the Government to enforce upon them the original obligation to maintain the passenger and freight service by rail in Canada in all railways that have been built with government assistance?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member poses a very interesting legal proposition. I am not a lawyer but it might be interesting to hear the Government in Ottawa suggest that if CP, CN, or VIA as one of its chattels, terminated passenger service it would have to give up title to the land that the Government of Canada very graciously gave it in the 19th century as part of the recompense for the outlay and cost of putting the railways through in the first place.

Conservatives and some Liberals would like to argue that the great iron horse went across this country primarily on private initiative and private money. No such thing ever happened. Any Canadian historian worth his salt knows that over 50 per cent of the money which went into the building of the CPR came from the public treasury and not the private treasury. Yet, successive Liberal and Conservative Governments have the unmitigated gall to stand up now when we need the railways and say: "Okay, fine, you can shut them down." In fact, this Government is doing everything it can to close them down, but it does not dare tamper with the lands, with its private vested interest which it got for the purpose of maintaining the railroad as a recompense or as a source of revenue in order to pay back its private debts.

I think it would be very, very interesting if the word went out that unless The Government continues to provide that service, it would lose its land and property.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Further questions or comments. Resuming debate.

Mr. Milliken: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I have had a discussion with the Minister of Public Works (Mr. MacKay) and with the Hon. Member for Regina Wascana (Mr. Schneider). I believe that in light of the proceedings about to be undertaken at another place some distance from the Hill, it might be appropriate to release the pages at five o'clock in order that they can proceed to attend there. I wonder if there could be a disposition on the part of the House to permit them to leave at 5 p.m?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think the Members have heard the suggestion from the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken). If there is unanimous consent in the House, the Chair would be very pleased to use this small way to say thank you to our pages for their dedication and their hard work all through the year. I think it would be a nice occasion for all Members to join me in thanking them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Ms. Beth Phinney (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise today to express deep concerns about Bill C–11. When one looks at the big picture objectively, this Bill appears to be quite a paradox. Does it not seem odd that this Government, constantly reminding Canadians about the magnitude of our national debt, attempting to foster a sense of fiscal paranoia in this country, now comes before this House seeking the authority to borrow more than $29 billion. Yes, Madam Speaker, more than $29 billion at a time when restraint is the catch word of this Government. It seems that this Government knows how to say restraint but it certainly does not know how to practice it.

Aside from being the masters of the "do as I say, not as I do" mentality, the Government further complicates matters by ignoring the essential needs of Canadians. To add insult to injury, this Government first breaks election promises nearly every day. It ignores the basic demands and needs of Canadians. Then it comes before this House seeking borrowing authority for more than $29 billion.

Yesterday, the Government made all that I have said abundantly clear. Yesterday, in this House, the Government flatly rejected a motion which was not critical of the Government, nor did it imply any wrongdoing on the part of the Government. Yesterday, the Government uncategorically rejected a motion which in the most gentle way urged the Government to assist those in our society who desperately need support.

The motion simply requested, and I quote: "that this House call upon the Government to take steps to enhance the federal commitment to the support of post–secondary education, scientific and technological development, job training and re–training, and the battle against illiteracy, all of which provide the essential foundation for building a strong and competitive future for Canada."

Yet this Government rejected that motion. It rejected a motion which was directed at helping the needy in our society. It is a motion which the Government should have been proud to support. What kind of Government would vote against helping the unemployed, the untrained and the illiterate? In short, what Government would vote against a better future?

It is in this light that I must query the Government's priorities. Before us lies an issue which has received pitiful little attention, illiteracy. Illiteracy is a national problem which has reached astonishingly high proportions. The costs of illiteracy are staggering. Aside from being an affront to the dignity of each individual, it places a heavy financial burden on the business community and a tremendous burden on Canadian society.

As a developed nation, a nation which has free and compulsory education, Canada's commitment to human dignity has been hollow. It is appalling that such a wonderful nation as ours, which claims to have one of the highest standards of living in the world, also has a rate of illiteracy that stands at nearly 20 per cent. That means that virtually one of every four adult Canadians is functionally illiterate.

Just last September, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated, in an address on literacy in Toronto, and I quote: "The urgency of the literacy issue is compelling in both social and economic terms. With one Canadian in four functionally illiterate, we run the risk of two societies, composed of those who can read and those who cannot. We will not have two Canada's in the socio-economic sense any more than in the constitutional sense. We want one Canada, united, prosperous, with equal opportunities for all our citizens".

Wonderful words, but it is quite clear that this promise belongs on the shelf with all the rest of the Government's broken promises. The Prime Minister also stated that the problem of illiteracy is costing Canadians $10 billion per year. As I mentioned earlier, this Government is providing $22 million per year.

Many believe that illiteracy is an imported problem, that immigrants to Canada unnecessarily boost this number. Nothing could be further from the truth. Some 78 per cent of the functionally illiterate in Canada were born right here in Canada.

The problem of illiteracy is linked uncategorically to the greatest indignity of all: poverty. Sixty per cent of Canada's functionally illiterate are unemployed. In this vicious circle, the unemployed illiterate population are not looking for jobs. They are not looking because they cannot find jobs. When they do find jobs, they cannot keep them.

Where does one look for a job when he or she cannot read the want ads, cannot read the classified and cannot even read the yellow pages? What purpose do employment centres serve for the functionally illiterate when they cannot read any instructions?

Imagine, Madam Speaker, the humiliation of having to tell a prospective employer that you are unable to fill out even a simple application for employment. Imagine the embarrassment of being unable to submit an application for a social insurance number.

Aside from the humiliation and suffering which illiteracy causes individuals, it also entails overwhelming costs for society. In financial terms, the over-all effect of illiteracy on the economy is staggering.

The Canadian Business Task Force on Literacy has estimated that the problem costs upward of $4 billion annually to the business community. These costs include $1.6 billion for industrial accidents. These are accidents which could and should be avoided were it not for the inability to read warning signs printed on machinery.

The social costs of illiteracy are equally staggering. In economic terms the costs include higher unemployment, lack of trainability and higher social assistance payments.

As well, there are the non-economic effects of illiteracy on society. We are aware that within the international arena, literacy is one of the variables used to measure the rate of a nation's development. What statement is made when Canada has such a horrendously high rate of illiteracy?

Clearly, this is a massive problem. It is a condition which is continually spreading. It costs the business community billions of dollars each year, chips away at Canada's reputation, adds costs to Canada's ever increasing assistance programs and, most of all, belittles and humiliates individuals in this great land. When one really looks at the situation objectively one sees that Canada's sparkle is fading quite rapidly.

Thus, we must do more to combat the problem of illiteracy. We must take a bold new initiative, an offensive against this indignity. In September, 1988, the Government launched what appeared to be such an offensive. Today, less than 12 months later, we are able to see exactly how inadequate those measures have been. Today, we are able to recognize exactly how insincere the Government has been.

A $110 million program was announced at that time. We soon realized that this amount was to be invested over five years, thus, $22 million per year. In comparison to the National Capital Commission's lawn-watering annual budget of $105 million, the amount becomes much less impressive.

In terms of dollars and cents—since that is the only language this Government seems to understand—it is fiscally irresponsible to vote $22 million toward a problem which extracts $4 billion to $10 billion from the economy. More important, it is hypocritical and deceiving of the Government to profess a sincere interest in this issue and contribute what equals only $5 per illiterate Canadian over five years.

Such token gestures as this will not solve the problem of illiteracy. It will barely make a dent in the problem. This Government would have more luck trying to empty Lake Ontario with a bucket.

In closing, I would like to urge the House to reject this Bill. It is ludicrous that the Government would come before the House seeking borrowing authority when it has neglected crucial social and economic concerns. The Government deserves no more from this House than it has given the needy of Canada.

Mr. Parent: Madam Speaker, I was particularly interested in the discourse given by the Hon. Member from Hamilton. I believe that illiteracy is one of the most serious problems in Canada today.

[Translation]

We all know that of those now going to school, about 55 per cent, I believe, graduate after 4 or 5 years, in Ontario. We also know that of the remaining 40 per cent, many cannot even read.

So I hope that the Government will be able to solve this problem.

[English]

A question to my hon. colleague is as follows. Is there any estimate as to the cost in dollars of illiteracy? Is there a price-tag on it as to what we as a nation lose because some of our citizens are unable to function in a society which demands that they be able to read and write so that they will know what is expected of them in terms of exactly what they are doing in our society?

Mrs. Phinney: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has mentioned what the cost is to Canada. The business community has said that it would cost it $4 billion to be able to cope adequately with the problem. However, the Prime Minister informed us that with the social costs included, including unemployment, et cetera, the costs per year to Canadians because of this problem is $10 billion.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to talk about another government borrowing Bill arising out of the Budget. This will be the fifteenth or sixteenth time that I have done this, I think.

I want to start off by saying that I am still an innocent stubble-jumping prairie boy who has still yet to receive an answer from eight or nine Ministers of Finance. I keep asking the question almost annually. How does raising interest rates hold down or reduce inflation? I have never been able to understand how it happens, since raising interest rates raises the prices and the costs of every citizen, whether it is with respect to a mortgage, a car payment or groceries. It also raises the costs of Government. When costs are raised prices are raised, as are wages and dividends, which raises inflation.

Mr. Whittaker: Not to mention blood pressure.

Mr. Benjamin: As my colleague says, then everybody's blood pressure goes up.

I can never figure it out. When I did some more checking I found that for every 1 per cent increase in the interest rate it costs the Government of Canada an extra $1.5 billion. Since 1984, the rise in interest rates is costing the Government somewhere between $4 billion and $5 billion extra which it must raise. I suspect that some part of that is in this borrowing Bill. However, I am still waiting for an explanation.

As a famous philosopher said many years ago, "Economists are like theologians. Every religion other than their own is an invention of man, whereas their own is an emanation from God". It was Karl Marx who said that.

Then there was another fellow who in about 1856 said this: "Labour is prior and superior to capital, and without labour capital cannot function". I ask my Tory and Liberal colleagues who said that.

They do not seem to want to bite, Madam Speaker. It was not Karl Marx. It was Abraham Lincoln who said that, the second time he ran for Congress.

The point of the matter is that if there is full employment then inflation, deficits and national debts are reduced.

Members of the Government keep saying that we do not propose anything. I would like to suggest to the Government two ways to knock some $6.6 billion off this borrowing Bill. It is very simple. It is a matter I have raised in every budget speech or budget Bill since 1969. At that time deferred corporation taxes were not very high. They now stand at $36 billion. The deferred corporation taxes which began in the early 1950s was a device to allow corporations to defer taxes on the theory that the corporation would reinvest in its plants, expand production, put people to work, increase exports—all those things. They did. They reinvested all right. International Nickel, Canadian Pacific, Bell Telephone reinvested in copper mines, coal mines and zinc mines in Guatemala, Chile, Indonesia, Mexico and other parts of Central America. They invested all right but there were 3,000 guys laid off in Sudbury. They reinvested but they did not do it here.

If these corporations were to be charged 10 per cent interest on their deferred taxes, which I think is less than the current bank rate, which would be a real deal, one would pick up $3.6 billion this year which could be knocked off the borrowing Bill. Then, if the Governor of the Bank of Canada were told that he has two choices, either lower interest rates by 2 per cent over the next months or be fired, that would save the Government between now and this time next year another $3 billion.

• (1710)

Another point I want to make is about all the nonsense and mythology we hear about deficits and debt. We in Canada financed our Second World War effort ourselves. During the "dirty thirties" the unemployment rate hit 15 per cent. In 1932 it was a catastrophic 22 per cent. When the war started in 1939 and once the war effort was in high gear, unemployment was replaced with a critical labour shortage.

The vast sums spent by the Canadian Government on the war effort were raised entirely within Canada. They were provided by Canadian taxpayers and the Canadian banking system. Not one cent was needed from outside the country. I do not see that in the financial columns, the editorial pages or in the words of economists.

Those expenditures had absolutely no economic value. They were worse than wasteful because they were intentionally destructive. Imagine what would happen if we did the same thing with the declaration of peace as we did with the declaration of war. We could mobilize the people of Canada and marshal the resources and the savings of the people of Canada to reduce unemployment to at least 3 per cent.

For every one percentage point unemployment is reduced, Government tax revenues at the federal level alone are increased by $1 billion a year. Yet we keep following the mythology that has been carried on from the "dirty thirties" until now.

People say that Governments are like individuals, they have to live within their means. They cannot spend more than they take in. Most individuals spend more than they take in anyway, and seem to survive somehow or other. However, Governments of all stripes at all levels do that all the time.

What the experts, the editorialists and columnists do not tell us is that there is a fundamental difference between the debts of an individual citizen or corporation and those of a Government. The difference is that the individual has to pay off those debts out of his own earnings, savings and borrowings while a Government, particularly a federal Government, can do something that an individual or a company cannot do. A Government can tax the people to whom it owes the money in order to pay those people. That difference is what destroys the mythology of Governments having to live within their means.

During the war, we borrowed $100 billion a year. By the time the war was over, we had paid off a lot of those borrowings but in 1946 there was a national debt which, translated into 1988–89 dollars, would not be $400 billion but would be $900 billion. Frankly, I am sick and tired of hearing this so–called conventional wisdom when it is really conventional stupidity. In fact, stupidity has been stretched to its longest lengths ever. It has given incompetence a good name.

Between 80 per cent and 90 per cent of the national debt, this year's deficit, is money we owe to ourselves, Canada Savings Bonds, guaranteed investment certificates and Canadian bank loans, money that Canadians have loaned to the Government of Canada. People say that every man, woman and child owes $8,000 toward the national debt. The national debts of India, Pakistan, and Zimbabwe translate into $200 for every man, woman and child in those countries. If we listen to the experts here in North America, then Canada should be in a much worse mess than the Indians, the Pakistanis and the Zimbabweans because they only owe $200 per man, woman and child, while we owe 40 times that much. We each owe $8,000. Maybe the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) should go to those three countries to ask for some foreign aid.

What kind of nonsense are they giving us? What kind of stupidity are they asking us to believe? They continue to do it backward. They have failed entirely to learn the lessons of the past, and therefore they are condemned to repeat the same mistakes at the cost of employment and to the deprivation of millions of Canadians just for the sake of the Gnomes of Zurich, the idiots in the nether regions of the Department of Finance.

I have shown how the Government could knock $6.6 billion off this borrowing Bill. Now I want to show how it could add about $8 billion to it. Why is this so? If money is borrowed simply to pay off other debts, it is not self-liquidating, it is a dead-weight debt. Let us borrow another $8 billion a year and let us put $1 billion into VIA Rail over the next five years, re-equip it and give it faster schedules so that it can succeed. Let us put enough money into cleaning up our air and water, putting a quarter of a million Canadians to work over the next five years. Let us put enough money into chronic care beds, hospital expansions and hospital equipment. I watched a spectacle in my own city. Hospital administrators were begging on their hands and knees on the streets like beggars trying to get donations to buy equipment. That is how Tories who claim to support medicare when they opposed it support it now. Let us invest money in that. Let us make the Port of Churchill a seven-month-a-year port, not three. Let us make something of it. We are a northern country. When are we going to start acting like one?

We need a million units over the next four or five years, senior citizens' housing, co-op housing, low-income housing and chronic care beds. That is another $3 billion or $4 billion. But those are not expenditures, those are investments. I say that because all the people you put to work pay taxes and the revenues received by the federal and provincial governments will more than pay off those borrowings. The new equipment for VIA Rail alone will pay for itself in five to seven years. We put almost as much money into fixing up old locomotives and old railway cars as what new ones would have cost. Amtrak is way ahead of us in the United States. The U.S. re-equipped Amtrak and the government would not allow the American railways to overcharge Amtrak for the use of the rails. Let us make CNR and CPR give $80 million back that VIA Rail got stuck for in paying for that old worn out equipment. The U.S. Government did not do that with Amtrak in the United States.

VIA Rail, before it sold its first ticket, before the first train even moved out of the railway station, was in debt for over $100 million just in start-up costs alone. It started out with the deck stacked against it. VIA Rail has never in 12 years, since 1976, been given a chance. It has been hobbled continually by the previous Liberal Government and its three Ministers of Transport as well as the present Tory Government with three successive Ministers of Transport. They do not know how to run a railroad or much else. But who is running the affairs of this country? The people in the Bank of Canada and the Department of Finance, and they are not interested in how you put Canadians to work. A full employment policy is the only solution to reducing deficits and the national debt. That was done during the Second World War.

But all the things we can and should be doing in other parts of the world that puts Canadians to work who pay taxes in five, eight or ten years could wipe out an annual deficit and reduce the national debt to a few billion. That debt could be cleaned up in one year or subsequent years.

Why do we keep making the same mistakes we made in the 1930s and 1940s? Well, we quit making the same mistakes in the 1940s, 1950s and in the first half of the 1960s then we reverted back to the 1920s. I ask why for goodness' sake we cannot just reverse what we have been doing? I know the usual line will come out. The NDP are the big spenders. Well, the New Democrats are the big investors. We are the ones who took over a province that was totally bankrupt, that could not borrow a nickel anywhere in Canada or the rest of the world. We paid that debt off and left office with a surplus of $400 million. After seven years of Tories we now have a debt of $4 billion in my little province. But during the course of the NDP years in office, we electrified 60,000 farms, brought in hospitalization and medicare and 100,000 miles of grid roads. We know how to do it because we have done it. We are not going to put up and listen to this nonsense we have been getting from successive Ministers of Finance to keep borrowing money and throwing good money after bad for borrowings that were totally unnecessary and unneeded.

I have shown the Government two ways to knock $6 billion off the borrowing Bill. I have proposed several means of adding $8 billion to it. I say put the people of Canada to work and you will pay off the $8 billion in the next two years. That is the route to go. It is the only way to go.

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, I have been here all day listening with rapt attention to the speeches delivered, particularly the last one by the Hon. Member. I have been examining the lengthy Bill C-11, which contains all of three sections. The interesting thing that I have noted about this Bill is how deceptively simple it is for the magnitude of what it is doing and upon which it is based.

For example, in Clause 2 we see that the Government wants a mere $24.8 billion. For what? For items that may be required for public works and general purposes. Those are pretty broad and nebulous four words, "public works and general purposes". Were we ever told what these public works and general purposes were? I guess we were. In the Budget that was delivered by this Government, or shall we say announced on television instead of delivered to the House of Commons, we were told what the Government's plans were going to be. Over the course of today during the heckling and questions which have taken place, over the course of debate on the Budget, virtually all of the speakers, the hecklers and the questioners on the government side have spent a lot of time telling us about past sins of our colleagues in past Liberal administrations.

That is not the issue. The issue is not who caused the problem of the deficit but what the solution is going to be and how to solve the problem. We all agree that our financial house must be brought into order. So the question Canadians are asking themselves is very simply, was this Government honest with Canadians about the country's financial affairs and its proposed agenda to deal with them? I say no. I say that because Canadians must ask themselves a series of fundamental questions about what this Government's financial agenda is and what this Government is going to use billions and billions of dollars for over the period of the next year.

I ask, were Canadians told prior to November, 1988 that our national debt was crushing and the deficit was unmanageable and unbearable? No, they were not told that. In fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that people were not listening to him. What did the Prime Minister say? We were listening to him. He and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in fact, painted a very rosy picture. The Prime Minister said, "We have tackled the deficit". "Our promises"—and at that time they totalled about $15 billion—"are all within Michael Wilson's fiscal framework. Every nickel has been accounted for". We have heard that quote many times.

When the Prime Minister was speaking on the Government's proposed child care program, which amounted at that time to approximately $6.4 billion, he said: "It is a program that the nation can afford in our current fiscal circumstances and within the budgetary framework we have set". A few days before the election, when responding to a news report that the deficit would rise, his Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated that was not accurate, stressing that the Department of Finance had no projections showing a higher deficit. In view of the Budget and in view of the request by the Government for moneys to pay for what it intends to do, we know that those predictions were untrue. We know that the Tories were not honest with the Canadian people.

During the election campaign, did the Government tell us that 45 per cent of our public debt, fully $145 billion, had been accumulated since 1984? The answer is no. We heard a Member in an earlier speech taunting a Member on this side of the House when she was giving her speech on that very point. Were we told that over the past four years the Conservative Government has raised sales and income taxes 25 times? No, we were not. Were we told that the Government would financially completely pull out of the unemployment insurance program, as suggested in the Budget, leaving it to Canadian workers and employers to pay more?

Were we told that VIA Rail would be emasculated? Were we told that the vaunted Tory commitment to defence would be demonstrated by such courageous actions as budget reductions and closures of bases?

I do not ask whether Members or Canadians agree or disagree. I ask, were they told? Were they told that social programs such as unemployment insurance and old age pensions would be tinkered with? Were they told that foreign aid would be slashed? Were they told that average Canadians' taxes have risen 60 per cent in the last four years, while the taxes of those earning more than $100,000 have risen by only approximately 8 per cent? Were they told that they would pay, in addition to all the other taxes the Government is asking them to pay, in order that the Government can borrow $24.8 billion, an additional 9 per cent goods and services tax on virtually everything? Were they told that the Government would abandon its child care commitment? No. Canadians were not told that.

The issue is not whether Canadians agree or disagree with some or all of those measures. Naturally, there will be people on both sides of the issue. Rather, the issue is the failure of the Government to come clean with Canadians.

What about integrity? Last month the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated that Canadians were not listening to him during the election campaign. That is not true. Canadians were listening carefully, but they were misled.

The Tories tried to blame past Liberal Governments, but almost half of today's debt was accumulated in only four short years of Tory Government. The stated purpose of the Budget is to control the deficit. Yet, the deficit continues to rise. It is higher today and it will be higher tomorrow than what it was before, notwithstanding the stated purpose to control it, and in fact reduce it. The Tories have had almost five years to do something, yet both the debt and the deficit have only increased. What is the answer? The Prime Minister blames this not on bad fiscal management, but on previous Liberal administrations. Where is his integrity?

Some Canadians criticize the Opposition for criticizing the Budget. What would they do? Would they entice the Canadian electorate with election candy and then hit them over the head with a financial sledgehammer? At my monthly public forums, I have asked my constituents how they would deal with the problems. As might be expected, there were many suggestions, including controlling interest rates, eliminating capital cost allowances and corporate write-offs not allowed to ordinary Canadians, eliminating or tightening up federal grants, lessening military spending, temporary across the board cut-backs in government spending, and many other suggestions.

Naturally, at those public forums, no one agreed entirely on all the solutions. However, what we did agree on is that Canadians can and do expect to be told honestly and with integrity that we face a problem and the proposed solution to that problem. Instead, after the election, of course, the Government told us to tighten our belts without having first told us in advance that it would take our pants off.

The Government wants to borrow $24.8 billion and more to come. What do we get for it? It is up to us as Canadians to decide which we want: deception and double-talk, or honesty and integrity, for we will inevitably get the kind of government we deserve.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it gives me pleasure today to speak against the borrowing Bill. The Government is requesting borrowing authority for $24 billion of taxpayers' money. In the preamble to the Bill, it can be seen that we have an accumulated deficit that exceeds $320 billion. This year's estimated deficit is approximately $30 billion.

When one looks back at the election last November, the deficit was not a very high priority. I do not recall at any time during the election when the deficit was an item of debate.

What were items of debate were the promises that the Government was prepared to offer to the taxpayers of Canada with their own hard-earned money. The promises from the Government totalled almost $20 billion. Was the Government worried about the deficit at that time? It seems not. The Government certainly did not mention it. Were they worried about the impact of the increased expenditures that those promises would bring? It does not appear so.

The Tory election promises presented certain expectations to Canadians, particularly in the areas of day care and environmental priorities.

During the election campaign, I clearly remember the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated strongly that they were not promises. They were commitments that the Government was willing to make and stand by. It is interesting because now that the election has been fought and won and the dust has settled, where are the promises? Where are the commitments? Suddenly the Government has been re-awakened with the need of pressing financial priorities. Suddenly, it has discovered that there is a deficit to deal with. It was strange that was not understood during the election when the Government made $20 billion worth of promises to the Canadian people.

The deficit suddenly became critical only after the election. The commitments that were made during the election suddenly disappeared. There is no doubt in my mind, as there is no doubt in the minds of every Canadian across this land, that this election was bought. But it is not going to be paid for. Those commitments have already been broken. As a result of the Draconian measures taken in this present Budget, Canadians will find that they will have less disposable income. There will be less to put on the table. There will be more unemployment. There will be less economic development. There will be less in social programs, programs such as unemployment insurance which the Government is now opting out of and placing the responsibility and the burden upon the unemployed worker and the small business community, transferring money from the insurance side of the program to the job creation side.

I do not believe any Member in this House has any problem focusing on the need for job creation. We have been talking about that for some time now; particularly in areas such as the interior of my province of British Columbia where unemployment still exceeds 17 per cent, areas such as the Maritimes where the unemployment figures are just as discouraging. We do not question the need for job creation. We understand that it is a necessity. However, we do not believe that the Government should remove the funds from the insurance side of unemployment insurance in order to finance these kinds of programs.

Back on October 13 at a public meeting in St. John's, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a statement which was quoted in the local press. He said as follows:

> The federal Government has a responsibility for regional development in the interest of national unity and as well as in the interest of fairness. We can't have two Canadas—We will not have one Canada that is prospering at the centre while the other regions do not receive a fair share of economic opportunity.

The very nature of the programs that this Government seeks to introduce through this Budget put a lie to these words of the Prime Minister.

Just look around. The economy in Southern Ontario is fairly robust. We saw in the paper just the other day that unemployment levels are down in the area of 3 per cent to 3.5 per cent. Some areas of this country are doing quite well, but other areas of this country are hurting and hurting badly. Because of the direction that this Government is taking by pulling back from those regional economic development programs, by pulling back on funding from Western Diversification, by pulling back on funding to the Atlantic Opportunities Agency it is in fact exacerbating the problem of regional disparities. Over the next few years when the impact of this Budget is felt, regional disparities will increase, not decrease.

I want to talk about my province for a moment, British Columbia, with respect to regional development. All nine of the economic and regional agreements between British Columbia and the federal Government are due to expire in March 1990. Funding arrangements are being reconsidered. That is about as much as we get, that they are being reconsidered, but if that reconsideration is similar to what is happening with agreements in the other provinces where in fact renegotiation is not even taking place, I ask the Members of this House what can the Province of British Columbia expect when its regional economic development agreements expire next year?

I believe there are about five provincial agreements that have expired as of the passing of the last fiscal year. Are they being renegotiated? They are twisting in the wind. Many of the regional economic development programs that were funded through those joint venture federal–provincial agreements are simply stalled for lack of funding. The forest resource development agreement in British Columbia is worth $300 million over its five–year term, $150 million of that from the federal Government, $150 million of that from the provincial Government. British Columbia is attempting to negotiate its second five–year term.

This is one area that has been working reasonably well. The present agreement for forestry, the ERDA Agreement for British Columbia, has in fact created 100,000 jobs during its term to date. It has had some important aspects for the forestry industry in that province. It has provided for the growth of seedlings, the planting of seedlings, site preparation, the development of silviculture programs. It has provided for weeding and thinning of tree farms and it has provided for basic forestry research. It has provided job creation both in the short term and in the long term.

That second forest regional development agreement will be badly needed because we have only just started to replenish the backlog of NSR lands that British Columbia has accumulated. We have only just started to recognize the extent of the problem in the Province of British Columbia which has the lion's share of the forestry industry in this country. We have only just begun to recognize the critical need to fund the replanting of trees.

When you fly over British Columbia, and I do it almost every weekend, you realize the extent of the devastation of our forests. You realize just how much of our forests have been cut down, have been cleared off and are left lying fallow with the land eroding, the minerals leaching out of the soil, making it more and more difficult for future forestry projects. The regional development agreements for forestry are badly needed in British Columbia, as I am sure they are badly needed in all provinces that have forestry as an industrial base. It is not the time to cut these programs off at the knees. It is not the time for retrenchment in terms of the economic development potential of these regional development programs. It is a false economy, and this Government will live to regret the day if it cancels those programs. Forestry is British Columbia's most important industry. The livelihood of thousands of people in British Columbia depends upon the continuation of those federal-provincial agreements.

I want to turn very briefly to an area of particular concern that is also relevant in terms of the discussion of this budget. That is the impact that the Free Trade Agreement has had in our industrial sector. As we discussed earlier in the House today, there was a recent announcement in the Province of Quebec that Consumers Packaging in Ville St. Pierre would be closing its plant, laying off about 460 workers. We also heard that Consumers Packaging, which is in a monopoly position in glass manufacturing in Canada, is also slated to close one of two western plants in Alberta and in my riding of Okanagan—Shuswap in British Columbia. If the Alberta plant closes, 300 jobs are on the line. If the British Columbia plant closes, 450 jobs are on the line.

When I began to look at the reasons behind these closures, I found that there was a string of very solid evidence to demonstrate just what is happening to the glass manufacturing industry in Canada. In fact, in my discussions with representatives of the industry, with the chief executive officer of the parent company, Enfield Corporation, we find that Consumers Packaging is having a very difficult time going up against the large American giants in the glass manufacturing industry. We also find that in the Free Trade Agreement there are provisions to reduce and eliminate over a 10 year period the Canadian tariff structures on glass product imports into Canada. We also find that as those tariffs are reduced, the Canadian manufacturing industry will find it increasingly more difficult to remain competitive with their American counterparts. Those are not my words, they are the words of the chief executive office of Enfield Corporation, which is the parent company of Consumers Packaging.

We have solid evidence that this Canadian glass manufacturing industry is in fact rationalizing its production. In other words, I am talking about closing plants and laying off workers. Some 900 jobs are at stake with the plant closing in Quebec and one plant closing out west, whether it be in my riding or the one in Alberta.

The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) had the audacity to get up today and bombastically comment on the good things that the trade agreement has brought to areas such as mine in the Okanagan—Shuswap. If the loss of 450 jobs is good news, I sure as hell hate to see what bad news is. Another interesting aspect is that Consumers Packaging also owns 10 plants in the United States. Is it closing the plants in the United States? No. Is it cutting back production in the plants in the United States? Not to the best of my knowledge. The plants are closing in Quebec and possibly Alberta or British Columbia. Two plants are closing in Canada, which means, to anybody who can put two and two together, that the industry is moving out of Canada and possibly relocating south of the border where the per unit production cost of manufacturing glass products is lower.

An Hon. Member: You lost that argument last winter.

Mr. MacWilliam: I say to the Hon. Member that this argument is far from lost. We are only now beginning to see the kind of economic impact that this Free Trade Agreement will bring to the people. This argument is far from over.

An Hon. Member: The election is over.

Mr. MacWilliam: This is only one example of the kind of economic impact that the rationalization of industry can hold when it has gone head to head with American counterparts in light of the tariff reductions through trade. Many Members on the other side of the House and many members of the business community have said this is the reality of life. To some extent, perhaps they are right. However, I want to remind the House that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) made a commitment during the election that any jobs lost through the trade agreement would be recovered through a massive restructuring program and job creation program that would be assured by the Government if the Free Trade Agreement saw the light of day.

We are in the middle of free trade now, but I do not see any evidence of that massive job creation program that was promised by the Government.

I want to turn to another area of concern, an industry that I think will be hit probably the hardest as a result of the effects of free trade. It is the tourism industry.

Apart from the lip service which the Government gave earlier in terms of providing tourism with the kind of profile that is needed to recognize it as the growth industry of the future, the Government has continued to keep the tourism ministry buried within the bowels of the larger ministry, that being the Department of Industry, Science and Technology. What a strange place for tourism to be hidden. If an industry is going to be given the profile it needs, it must be given a full fledged ministry. The Tourism Industry Association of Canada has been calling for that for some time. The Government has not kept its commitment. The removal of the Regional Economic Development Programs, of which tourism programs are a part, will make it increasingly difficult for this industry to develop the kind of marketing and product development that is needed in our regions across the country.

I realize that my time is up. I will simply conclude by saying that there is much at fault with the current Budget. I believe that the economic impact of the Budget will be felt for some time, particularly throughout the further regions of this country.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, I would be happy to see the clock if other Members want, but I will profitably use the three minutes remaining. In addressing the economic programs of the Government in such a short time, it is hard to decide on which of the many things one wants to talk about.

In the three minutes that I have, I would like to speak about the proposal to close military bases in depressed and developing regions of our country which would benefit tremendously from having these continue, as they are a very important part of those communities.

When I heard the announcement, it reminded me of a tactic I learned about in the United States known as the Washington Monument ploy. I learned about this from a cabinet colleague in the United States who said that when the Department of the Interior ever faced the prospect of a budget cut, it would put up a sign announcing that the Washington Monument would be closed because of cut-backs in its budget. This monument is visited by 3,000 people an hour and, within a couple of hours, the Department of the Interior would have the crowd lobbying on Capital Hill to keep the expenditures of the Department of the Interior intact.

I had a similar experience once as Solicitor General, when the Mounties were asked to cut their budget. They came back telling me that the first thing to be cut would be the Musical Ride.

When I saw that the base at Summerside would be closed, I thought instantly of the Washington Monument ploy. When one goes to the heart of it, it is an attempt by bureaucrats to get the public on their side in a battle against politicians. For the purposes of this argument, I am not saying that the Government should not always look for cuts that it can make in the Budget, but when the Department of National Defence came back with that as its cut, I fault the Government for not asking the officials to find other ways in which cuts could be produced that would not cause so much suffering in the region. I look forward to continuing with the Washington Monument ploy tomorrow.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1989-90

A message from Her Excellency the Governor General transmitting Supplementary Estimates (A) for the financial year ending March 31, 1990, was presented by the Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) moves:

That, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Orders 81(5) and 81(6), Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1990, laid upon the table earlier this day, be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Hon. President of the Treasury Board. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ORDER IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENT

TABLING OF APPOINTMENT AND REFERENCE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table in both official languages a nomination which was recently made by the Government pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 110(2) which is deemed referred to the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources.

POINT OF ORDER

CANADA POST ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill on a point of order.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I suspect that the Liberals are rising on the same point of order.

We understand that the annual report of Canada Post was supposed to be tabled in the House at this time today. It is the report that indicates that Canada Post made a $96 million profit on the backs of Canadians last year. We were informed it was going to be tabled in the House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Before I hear the Hon. Minister I will hear the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, indeed I am rising on the same point. We had a closed-door briefing at 10 a.m. this morning on the understanding that we would not reveal the information until the document was tabled in the House of Commons at 11 a.m. If in fact the document was tabled in the manner in which we sometimes refer to as the "back door" method, in other words, merely handed to the Clerk, I would like to know why it was under embargo. If it was tabled with the Clerk, when did that occur?

I make that request since as we are speaking the President of Canada Post is holding a press conference across the street in order to make his document public. I want to know, has this document been tabled before the House. If it has, then, of course, the next question is why were Members not informed.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that my friends opposite want to comment on the progress that has been made by Canada Post, the fact that it is no longer a money losing proposition as it was under the previous Liberal administration, and the fact that it is more efficient and more Canadians are getting better service.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I do not want to delay that.

My friend referred to a closed-door meeting. Let us not put the connotation of a closed-door meeting on the subject. Hon. Members were given the benefit of a briefing. I would not put that connotation on it. I understand that it is possible to table these documents via the front door, that is, in Parliament, or through the Clerk's office.

Mr. Boudria: Has it been tabled?

Mr. Lewis: I am sure that if it was tabled it was tabled through the Clerk's office, and tabled properly. If my friend has any allegation that it was not tabled properly then—

Mr. Boudria: Was it tabled or not? That is all I want to find out.

Mr. Lewis: I normally do not like to debate this type of procedural motion on an opposition day. I do not want to delay the debate on the very important motion before the House. I think we can deal with it privately, if my friends will give us a minute to check.

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hands, for the information of the Government House Leader, the press release that is being issued in the press conference being held in the press theatre right now across the street. It states in the second paragraph that the figure $96 million in profits released in the corporation's 1988-89 annual report were tabled today in the House of Commons.

It is our understanding that those were going to be released today. As such, I want to ask if it is the intention of the Government to ensure that the report is referred to the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations. Whether it is via the back door or the front door we want to ensure that the reference is made to the committee as well as ensuring that the report is tabled here.

Mr. Lewis: The Table is presently checking the timing of the tabling in the official manner. I want to assure my friend that that report will be referred to the appropriate committee. I know my friend will want to bring lots of witnesses to show Canadians why Canada Post is now making money and delivering the mail much more efficiently than it had been under the Liberals.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I was invited to no briefing this morning. I was not invited to any news conference this morning. However, I am very much interested in seeing this annual report of what some of us believe has become the major corporate vampire in Canada.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the issue at hand. With respect, we are not debating the merits of what is in the document. Members of the House have been asked this morning if they were interested in receiving an advance briefing. The condition for that advance briefing was that we were under embargo until the document was tabled in the House.

Unless we can find out if the document has been tabled or not, I would submit that Members are prevented from even commenting on the report on the honour that we gave this morning not to reveal the contents. This is no laughing matter for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) who should at least know as House Leader what is going on and what document his own Government is tabling.

Right now a press conference is going on across the street. I am expected to comment on that. We can be darn sure that the President of Canada Post is not delaying his press conference while we are here arguing about whether or not the document has been tabled. I am still under embargo. I have given my word of honour. I intend to keep it even if the Government is making it almost impossible for me to do so.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I think what has become clear, as the Government House Leader has indicated, is that the Government wanted to introduce this report via the back door. Obviously, it realized, too, that these profits have been made on the backs of the workers of Canada Post. The Government wanted to cover up so that we would not get into any discussion in the House of Commons.

The fact that we find out now that it has been tabled via the back door—

Mr. Boudria: Has it?

Mr. Riis: I want to remind Members of the House that today's motion before us has to do with the fishing industry in our country. It is being devastated on both coasts. It is time to get on with the debate, in recognition of the fact that the Government did slip a fast one past us today.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the question put is a simple one. The Government can table reports by having a Minister stand in his place and do so openly. That is public.

The Government can also table reports through the Clerk. We call it via the "back door". Those are not my words. It is the traditional wording for ministries wanting to table documents. It is done every day via the back door. It is through the Clerk's office and it is without becoming public. I ask the Speaker can you tell us, Sir, whether that document was tabled via the back door today?

Mr. Speaker: I am very cognizant of the importance of the question of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier and the interventions of Hon. Members. The particular report was brought to the Journal's office some time between 10.30 a.m. and 11 a.m. this morning.

STRIKING COMMITTEE

NINTH AND TENTH REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the ninth and tenth reports of the Striking Committee.

If the House gives its consent I intend to move concurrence in the tenth report later this day. I would ask at that time that we dispense with the reading of that report by the Clerk at the table as the report concerns only membership changes to Standing Committees.

[Editor's Note: See Today's Votes and Proceedings.]

STRIKING COMMITTEE—CONCURRENCE IN TENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like at this time to move concurrence in the tenth report of the Striking Committee, presented earlier this day.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have the unanimous consent of the House to move this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

DESIGNATION OF ROUGE RIVER VALLEY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, within the boundaries of Metro Toronto and the city of Scarborough, Canadians have a rare opportunity for a major environmental issue. That issue is to establish a Rouge River Valley system to be a preserved and protected area for all generations.

The Rouge River is a unique and precious natural area. It has significant archaeological sites within the valley that date back many thousands of years. The whole 5,000 acres of this land is being threatened by the discussions of the Metro Toronto Council of pursuing this as a garbage dump site. It is threatened as well by the Government of the Province of Ontario, who wish to build a major freeway right up through the middle of this particularly beautiful valley.

The constituents of Scarborough Centre, people in Metro Toronto and Canadians right across the country are really outraged with both of these discussions taking place.

They call upon the Government of Canada in the national interest, to join with the mayor of Scarborough, the federal Minister of the Environment for the Government of Canada, and the coalition of Scarborough community associations to have the Rouge River Valley preserved as a Canadian heritage land or a provincial park.

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, with the restructuring of VIA Rail and given the location of the riding of Gaspé and the services that it receives from VIA Rail, I have the pleasure and the honour to table, in both official languages, more than 2,500 names asking VIA Rail and the Government to kindly consider the restructuring of VIA Rail, which is an essential service in danger of disappearing from the Gaspé peninsula. We are strongly oppossed to any disappearance of the minimal essential service that we have in the Gaspé.

CLEAN-UP OF OIL SPILLS

Mr. Raymond Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to place before the House a petition which has been signed by thousands of Canadians who live on the West Coast, and call on the Government to initiate a full and complete public inquiry into the Government's ability to prevent, contain and clean up oil spills on the West Coast.

I have also had the pleasure, as a representative for the people in these communities, to lay on the desk of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), 200 letters from individuals, which is part of a massive mail-in campaign to get the Government to initiate this inquiry.

Individuals on the West Coast have not had the moneys which they paid out of their own pockets in assisting in the clean-up reimbursed by the Government of Canada.

It is their intention to sue the Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard), in order to recover the moneys which they have had to put out on behalf of Canadians.

I lay the first of many petitions dealing with the issue of launching a public inquiry on the coast of British Columbia into the oil spill clean-up.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition this morning from many petitioners from the Province of Manitoba, from communities including Brandon, Dauphin, Swan River and Garland.

The petitioners point out to the House that schizophrenia is a major illness in Canada. They call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will in the future be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada.

REMOVAL OF OATS FROM JURISDICTION OF CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a large number of residents from communities in northern Saskatchewan, such as Prince Albert, Shellbrook, Meath Park, Spruce Home, Weirdale, Smeaton and others.

These petitioners are asking that Parliament instruct the Government not to remove oats from the marketing jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board and to place oats and barley under the Canadian Wheat Board Act so that in the future Parliament, farmers and their organizations will need to be consulted if any changes are made in the marketing of these products.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Madam Speaker, Question No. 63 will be answered today. I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

BUDGET COSTS

Question No.63—Mr. Boudria:

Did the government incur any costs in (a) the printing, mailing and distribution of the April 27, 1989 Budget (b) media advertising and promotion of the Budget (c) any media campaign of April 1989 on the deficit and the accumulated debt of the government of Canada and, if so, in total, what were they?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): The costs were: a) $2.6 million; b) $110,000; c) $2.7 million.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question as enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—WEST COAST SALMON AND HERRING INDUSTRY

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan) moves:

That this House reaffirms the Government's pledge to the West Coast salmon and herring industry to "not allow jobs, historically established, to be threatened" by any government response to GATT rulings.

Mr. Murphy: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. There have been consultations among the Parties and I think you will find there is unanimous agreement that the Parties may divide their 20-minute and 10-minute question and answer slots. If they so wish, they can divide those slots into two Members speaking for 10 minutes each with a five-minute question and answer session to follow.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, we on the Government side are happy to co-operate on that.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair would appreciate, to help everyone keep the time straight, if the Hon. Member intends to speak only for 10 minutes, the first one in the 20-minute slot would mention it. It would make things easier. I do thank the House for their co-operation. I now recognize the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Cowichan.

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Madam Speaker, the motion we have moved is one which has the full support of the New Democratic caucus. It is also one which demands the support of everyone in the House.

What we are doing is reaffirming the Government's pledge. We want the House to stand behind the Government so that all Canadians and all of the people directly involved, even internationally, will know how we feel about this resolution which can have ramifications far beyond the people directly involved. It could affect the whole of Canada and could even affect others as well. We welcome, ask and hope for the support of all Members in the House.

The issue arose from the U.S. challenge to GATT of West Coast fishing regulations which required West Coast salmon and herring to be landed in British Columbia to be processed. To be processed means landing, counting, eviscerating and grading. That is what the regulations required. These were challenged by the U.S. before GATT.

We need these regulations in B.C. to protect our market. It is an important market. Eighty per cent of that product is exported from B.C. and from Canada. We get top prices because we have been able to guarantee the quantities we promised. We have been able to guarantee the quality of our product better than any other supplier in the world. We need those regulations to protect our resource.

We are talking about five species of salmon and in excess of 1,200 separate races of salmon. To be able to protect each individual race, we have to protect the environment. When we are talking about the environment, we are talking about drift nets which are operating some thousands of miles out to sea and raiding our salmon resource. We are talking about a point as far distant from that as one in excess of 1,000 miles upstream in some cases, where some of the salmon spawn. All of that environment needs protection because we have to be able to ensure adequate escapement for each of the 1,200 races. We need that to protect the supply for the processors in British Columbia who have some $600 million invested in the processing industry. They have invested that, secure in the knowledge that they had control of the supply. They are constantly upgrading, rebuilding, and carrying on a continuing program of research and development to maintain Canada's standards of quality salmon being shipped to international markets.

• (1130)

We need the supply to protect the livelihood of some 19,500 people in the Province of British Columbia who work in the fishing industry. These are the Minister's own figures. There are some 8,000 shore workers and 11,500 fishermen on gill-netters, seiners, and trollers. We need the supply so that they may catch it and maintain their livelihoods.

On the East Coast there are some 90,000 people working in the fishing industry at all levels. They need the supply on the East Coast just as much as we need it on the West.

We need the employment. We need to add value to what, by international agreement, is a Canadian resource. Everyone has agreed that salmon coming down our rivers going out to sea and coming back, wherever they are in the world, belong to British Columbia if that is where they came from to begin with.

We want to be able to add value to that resource. It is important to the many small coastal communities of British Columbia. It is the life-blood of many of these communities. Without processing, they will simply die. It is important because it provides the only alternative to today's social assistance, yesterday's social welfare or relief. We abandoned those naughty words and now call it social assistance. Whatever it is, it is a totally demeaning existence for thousands of women in particular, especially native women, whose only opportunity to get away from social assistance is to work in the canneries operating on the B.C. coast.

We have discussed the American threat under GATT, and it has been said that the New Democrats are strong supporters of GATT. Indeed we are. We all believe in trade, especially for Canada, since we are a very strong trading nation. We have to believe in trade for the B.C. fish. We export 80 per cent of our fish products, and we do not want to stop that or interfere with it in any way. Indeed, we would like to build on that, to increase it, and to continue to improve the quality of B.C. salmon. However, to abandon recklessly our right to process our own resource would threaten our ability to guarantee the market supply.

We have to know what is happening. We have to be able to count and identify the species. We have to be able to identify and control the races. To guarantee our supply, we have to be able to land those fish, count them, eviscerate them, and grade them. We can only maintain our world-wide reputation for quality if we have total control of the value added factor in Canada.

We have to protect the continued existence of the many races of salmon. It is not enough to protect just one race or even one species. We want to protect all the species and all the races. We can only do that if we know exactly what is being caught, where they are being caught, and when they are being caught. We have to be able to ensure that there is sufficient escapement of each race so that the race will survive. We want to maintain employment opportunities in Canada for the over 100,000 Canadian workers on both coasts who work in the fish processing industry.

We were told that the GATT decision cannot be appealed and we agree with that. However, we could have rejected it, as has been the practice of the United States and other signatories to GATT on many occasions. We had that option but chose not to use it.

The new regulations, relatively useless as they may be, are supposed to be GATT consistent. Why did we bow so subserviently to the American Government in abandoning our opportunity through GATT to reject that decision? Why did we not ask for a GATT ruling on the new regulations if we were determined to go that route? Why did we go instead to the Free Trade Council? If we are sure that they are GATT consistent, why not go to GATT to ask the question; why go to the Free Trade Council? Are we in danger of setting a precedent?

By knuckling under so early to the Americans, are we jeopardizing other measures such as Newfoundland's regulations that prohibit the trucking of groundfish out of Canada, similar regulations in New Brunswick and Quebec, Ontario legislation that provides for the further processing of minerals in the Province of Ontario before export, B.C. legislation that provides for the further manufacture of B.C. logs before they may be shipped out? How about the United States itself? The American Magnuson Act provides for the processing of American fish before it may be shipped out.

We have no desire to enter into any kind of a war, trade or otherwise with the United States, our best trading partner. However, continued good relations depend upon fair treatment on both sides. We are their nearest, largest, and most politically stable supplier of raw and partially processed raw material. We want to maintain that relationship.

We have shown our good faith by entering into the Free Trade Agreement which, among other things, provides for Canada to ensure the American energy supply by promising to invest billions of dollars in developing our oil supply for the continuing benefit of our neighbours to the south. Consistent with GATT, we could have imposed an export tax, but we gave it up under the free trade deal. We control the export of and imposed a tax on the shake and shingle industry in British Columbia because it was interfering with shake and shingle production in the United States. We co-operated with the Americans and have done many things to co-operate with them. There would be no advantage to us or to them if we were to issue threats or counter-threats. Neither would there by any advantage to Canada or to the United States if we, with wanton abandonment, gave up control of our resources, most especially our renewable resources.

This is an important issue in British Columbia today. It can be an important issue for the Maritimes tomorrow and for Ontario's mining industry the day after. If we lose on this issue there will be nothing much left for Canadians other than to be hewers of wood, drawers of water, and miners of minerals. Even the oceans will be open to anyone.

This is an important issue. We should have taken a firm stand, and the opportunity still exists to do so. I invite Hon. Members to support actions taken by the Government to ensure that we do not lose out on this issue. We must not lose out because this is just the first step on the road to being nothing but hewers of wood, drawers of water, and fishermen for the world to exploit.

• (1140)

This is an important issue. We welcome the support of the whole House and hope that it will support the Government in its actions to ensure that we do not lose on this issue.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, what we are discussing this morning is a two-pronged question. First, does the Minister stand by his promise that he made to the west coast fishing industry when he said that, as the motion indicates, this Government would "not allow jobs, historically established, to be threatened"?

Over the years on the West Coast we have seen processing plants fall by the wayside as the industry has been rationalized, to the extent that now the processing of the fish resource is focused in just exclusive centres. The Government has said that there is no requirement to process fish in these plants but that they can be transferred elsewhere for processing.

Having made that decision, why would anyone carry on processing in Canada when one can move those processing plants to the United States where labour costs are significantly less, where the rules and regulations are less stringent, and where one would have the advantages of economies of scale to make the plants more efficient? Why would a single processing plant remain in Canada, make it impossible for the Minister to keep his promise, and see the disappearance of literally thousands of jobs on the West Coast? Would the Hon. Member respond to that question? How can we save this industry unless this Government changes its position and keeps it promise?

Mr. Stupich: Madam Speaker, the B.C. salmon processing industry has a world-wide reputation for quality. Our price is high, but the world is prepared to pay that price because it knows the quality of our product. There has never been any problem with that. We have a reputation for being able to meet our market promises. If we promise to deliver a certain quantity of canned salmon or fishery products generally from British Columbia, we deliver them. We guarantee the quality and there has never been any question about that.

There is continuing upgrading in our canneries. A lot of money is being spent annually to make sure that we deliver a premium product because we know we are in competition with other countries that are shipping salmon. We have proven we can do it in British Columbia, and it can be GATT consistent. What we are doing is making sure that when the product leaves our shores it is ready for human consumption in the best condition possible in the light of the most modern technology, the most modern equipment, and the best workers in the world.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Madam Speaker, a year ago April in a committee of this House a representative of the fish processors of British Columbia, Mr. Bob Hunter, speaking on behalf of the Fisheries Council and Processors, said that if the Government permitted the loss of Canadian fish to the United States in an unprocessed form, which is exactly what the Minister and the Government are proposing, the processors would move their plants to the United States. He said that they would be crazy to leave them in Canada because wages are lower and economies of scale can be achieved in the United States. He made an emphatic statement.

Therefore, this Minister when he speaks in the House today should stand up in his place and explain to Canadians how he is going to turn around the emphatic statement of Mr. Hunter before a committee of the House who said that if the Government permitted the Americans open access to our fish, those jobs and factories would be moved to the United States. I would like to hear the comment of our critic on this matter.

Mr. Stupich: British Columbia salmon has had an international reputation for quality for years, indeed decades, Madam Speaker. It has always been important for us to maintain that reputation in world matters.If we are going to keep them, we can only do that if we have control and a guaranteed supply to the canneries operating in B.C. If the barriers are down, some of those canneries are going to move to the United States and process the product there. They will not produce as good a product because they will not have to, but it is going to make our product that much more difficult to sell on world markets.

Mr. Reid: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Cowichan. The Member has said that we should protect all our species and not just some. Therefore, is he advocating that all species of fish on the West Coast be landed on the West Coast, that we should have regulations or laws that demand that everything caught by Canadian fishermen be landed in this country first?

Mr. Stupich: Madam Speaker, it does not give us complete control even if we could achieve it because some of the salmon are caught by Americans and in accordance with agreements. That is exactly what we want.

As I said, there are some 1,200 runs of salmon and five different species. To be able to police them, to know what is happening, to be able to perpetuate not just the five races but as many species and runs as possible, we have to know what is happening. The only way we can truly know what is happening is when those salmon are landed in the Province of British Columbia.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I see someone rising. I made a mistake before and recognized the Hon. Member when he was not in his seat. I will try not to make the same mistake twice. The Hon. Member for North Island—Powell River.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Cowichan would answer a question as well.

This is such a blatant sell-out of Canadian resources. Most of the people in British Columbia believe that this sell-out was a trade off for a benefit elsewhere in Canada. They believe that this is the second sell-out of Canadians on the West Coast, the first time being the salmon and interception agreement. It is firmly believed that we were sold out on that issue in order that the Prime Minister would have something to throw away to President Reagan at the Quebec conference.

The magnitude of this particular sell-out is so horrendous. Would the Hon. Member speculate on what was traded off, what this industry was thrown away for? It is clear that it in fact was thrown away. Maybe the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans would be prepared to stand up in the House and explain why this was so blatantly thrown away.

I would like to have the Member for Nanaimo—Cowichan speculate on what this was thrown away for. It is the second throwaway that British Columbians have gone through in this particular industry.

Mr. Stupich: Madam Speaker, I was hoping the Minister would comment as well. I would like to hear his remarks.

• (1150)

Could I just say that in this statement I am congratulating the Government for having taken a strong stand. I am saying that we want to keep that up. I am saying that we want to be able to control our resource in British Columbia in this case and in Canada as a whole with respect to the others. We want to achieve that, and we are standing with and urging the Government to support the motion that has been moved today.

For the moment, unless there is evidence that the Government is not supporting it, I would rather not go along the track of my colleague and hope that the Government will support the position we are establishing today.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to take part in this very important debate which is being watched by many Canadians, especially British Columbians. I understand that some British Columbians are in this House today to witness this important discussion.

The motion calls upon the House to reaffirm the Government's pledge to the west coast salmon and herring industry to "not allow jobs, historically established, to be threatened" by any government response to GATT rulings.

What underlies the motion from the perspective of the New Democratic Party which has sponsored it is the suggestion that if only we could live in the old days of protectionism and keep export restrictions in place which guarantee a non-competitive fish processing industry, we could somehow guarantee jobs of the past in perpetuity into the future.

Recent history has shown that the New Democratic Party is usually wrong on these questions. I remember very well the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party standing in this House in November 1984. In decrying the economic statement of the Minister of Finance which set out the economic agenda of the Government for the past five years, the Leader of the New Democratic Party alleged that Canada would lose 150,000 jobs as a result of the initiatives which were taken and introduced at that time.

The people of Canada know better and they judged better on November 21, 1988. The NDP is using the same fear-mongering tactics in this House today and is trying to frighten people. The only way its Members can gain political support is by frightening people about the alternatives.

Instead of 150,000 jobs being destroyed, as they put it, 1.5 million jobs were created as a result of the economic initiatives of this Government. The national unemployment rate dropped from over 12 per cent to less than 8 per cent. There were major reductions, approximately a one-third reduction, in every province and in most industries in Canada.

Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party do not want to hear the truth. The truth is that the fishing industry of Canada, during the four years that I have presided over it, has seen untold prosperity, unparalleled in Canadian history. The income, the amount of employment, the emphasis on quality, and the value added processing opportunity have increased because we have an increasingly competitive fishing industry.

I picked up a brochure put out by the fishermen's union. I wish it were as true as it appears to be to the innocent reader. However, there is a statement in this brochure that says "the rescinding of these export restrictions," which I will come to in a moment, "is a complete betrayal of a competitive Canadian industry". It goes on to state: "Why does the Government refuse to protect an industry?"

Any thinking person knows that we cannot have a competitive industry if we always attempt to protect it from the realities of the world market-place. The reality of the fishing industry is that Canada exports 80 per cent of our products. In terms of the Atlantic industry, which is a large part of it, two-thirds of our exports go to the United States market. In the case of the Pacific industry, a large proportion goes to Japan and the European Community.

The point is that we depend on access to those export markets to guarantee the jobs that employ our fish plant workers and our fishermen. If we are not competitive in the international market-place, we will not sell fish and the industries of Atlantic and Pacific Canada will not pay wages.

Indeed, the Government is dedicated to preserving and enhancing the opportunities for employment and the quality of employment in the Canadian fishing industry. That will not be done if we cut ourselves off from access to a market, 80 per cent of it being an export market, which ensures employment for our people.

That means we cannot have it both ways. We have to sell competitively into the market-place the highest quality product of any country in the world. That means customers have to feel that they get the best value for their money when they buy Canadian. That has increasingly been the case.

We should understand the nature of world trade and the liberalization of world trade to which Canada is committed. Members of all Parties are also committed, I presume, because they prescribe to the process of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade in which Canada has been a participant for 40 years. Any country that is as export dependent as Canada knows that we cannot put up protectionist barriers to protect our industries, thereby ensuring they will be higher cost industries, lower volume industries, less competitive industries, and still expect to have the free opportunity to export our products into other world markets. In other words, we have to play by the international rules of trade.

It is a fact of life that some years ago previous Canadian Governments decided to protect our salmon and herring processing industries by erecting export prohibitions on unprocessed sockeye and pink salmon and herring unless the roe was extracted in Canada. These were very important regulations at that time which helped the Canadian industry to become competitive. That competitiveness now does not depend in perpetuity on maintaining those protectionist barriers because these industries have grown up. They are big boys and girls now. We can compete. We do supply the best fish products available from our west coast fishery in those markets.

If this Government and this Minister did not believe that, we would not be devoting tens of millions of dollars to enhancing our salmon stocks on the West Coast. I would not have gone to Cabinet and worked to gain an increase in the budget of the Salmonid Enhancement Program of $208 million over five years with a firm commitment of that funding into our a base on into the next century, if I did not have confidence and faith in our ability to get maximum economic advantage out of the salmon producing and processing industry.

As I said earlier, the record of the last four years shows it is paying dividends. We have had the most prosperous years. Again this year we are to have a record year in terms of the runs of pink and sockeye. As I announced only yesterday in Vancouver, we will expect to have over 17 million pink and sockeye salmon caught this year. They will be processed in British Columbia. I am confident of that.

It is a fact of life that when fish are caught and landed close to the point where they are caught where there is infrastructure, in which there is a significant investment, which is modern, and which is the most competitive in the world, it would make no sense to truck it 600 miles to somewhere else. If we process it at that plant, we get the highest quality product. It will be Canadian Grade A prime product whether canned, frozen, or whatever form, and we will get the best dollar from that product by processing in Canada.

These old regulations were found to be offensive because Canada, and in particular some processing companies on the northwest British Columbian coast, wanted to have their cake and eat it too. They wanted to go to Alaska and buy fish. This would not just be in surplus years, but in other years when the Alaskan processors did not have an adequate supply. They wanted to buy that fish by offering a higher price to Alaskan fishermen than the Alaskan processors were able to offer. Our processors in northwestern British Columbia want to go to United States waters and buy from their fishermen but in return say to the Alaskan processors that they cannot come into Canada and buy fish from our fishermen. That is clearly discriminatory and was found to be so by a panel of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. If we want to export our products internationally, Canada has to play by the rules on a level playing field, and we were caught out in that case.

• (1200)

I could submit that the Americans would not have taken that case to the General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade had the Free Trade Agreement been in place, because we would then have had an avenue to negotiate a solution to that problem which we did not have then. We now have a mechanism to resolve such future disputes.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): The resolution is delivery direct to the United States.

Mr. Siddon: I want to point out to the House that whether we are talking about salmon, herring, codfish or other species, Canada is not God's gift to the world. We are only a small producer.

Mr. Rompkey: It's the biggest exporter in the world.

Mr. Siddon: We take great pride in our salmon and herring stocks, but the fact is that we produce only 20 per cent of the world's supply of salmon and herring. That is an important point those nervous Nellies over there fail to acknowledge. Any country that wanted to buy raw fish and take it home and process it—it would be rather silly to truck it on ice for hundreds of miles—could buy five fish out of every six from somewhere else. For example, they could buy it from Alaska, from Norway, or from Iceland. They could buy herring from Atlantic Canada or from the Nordic countries. In other words, there is ample choice in terms of supply of raw fish. Americans processors have access to five times as many American codfish and salmon as they do Canadian cod. Why would they all of a sudden come and buy fish from Canada rather than buy from their own fishermen?

One reason would be if our fishermen would sell it more cheaply. But why would our fishermen sell it more cheaply to Americans if they were getting a decent price from Canadian processors? This is a question that the New Democratic Party fails to address. By these export restrictions, our fishermen are held captive to the Canadian processing industry, and that is unfair to our fishermen. Now they fall silent because they know that the fishermen's union is split on this issue. Fishermen want and are entitled to the best price for their fish while we carefully manage, licence and allocate quotas to their benefit.

Now let us ask Members of the New Democratic Party what their position is. Should our fishermen not get a world competitive price for their fish? Why is it that the processing companies do not have to pay a competitive price? Because they have the supply guaranteed by those old export restrictions.

The point is that countries that would buy our raw fish have many other ways to buy fish. The only way they buy Canadian is if they can get it cheaper. Why would Canadian fishermen sell it more cheaply abroad if they can get the right price from Canadian processors? That represents the heart of the injustice that will be rectified by the new regulations. These will ensure that we maintain control of our herring and salmon for management and conservation reasons. Under the new regulations all West Coast species, all five species of salmon, must be landed in Canadian ports, inspected, counted, and biological samples taken, before anyone can buy this resource of Canada.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Is that what the free trade panel said?

Mr. Siddon: Let us not jump ahead. I will come to that in a moment. The point is that all five species will be brought to shore.

I was interested a few moments ago when the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Reid) asked the lead speaker whether he supported this regulation. All Canadians should support such a landing requirement, including the processing sector, the fishermen's union and those organizations, and the New Democratic Party. I would like to know if Members of the New Democratic Party feel that groundfish, rockfish and other species should be required to be landed in Canadian ports. We believe this to be our right under Article 11 of the GATT and will be testing this shortly before a free trade panel.

If those Members are so immature as to suggest that we should not control our resource and manage it well by requiring it to be brought to Canadian ports, they should rise and state that they support those measures. They are attempting to say that the Government is going to relinquish control over our fishery. That is pure balderdash.

I have insisted during the whole period of the trade negotiations with the United States, that only Canadians shall be licensed to harvest fish in Canadian waters. We have steadfastly refused to allow American processing boats, buying boats or packers, if one wishes to call them that, to come into Canadian waters and take fish from our fishermen. This Government is adding to that assurance that we properly manage and conserve our resource by requiring it be brought to Canadian ports. To hear members of the Opposition, one would think they oppose that. Where is their sense of national patriotism?

The Government has done the correct thing in this matter by ensuring that Canadians receive the benefit of that resource at their point of landing where any self-respecting industry which intends to be competitive in the world market-place will have the best opportunity to process it right there. Not only to gut the fish. Members opposite want to have the guts taken out and then ship the fish away. We want them processed. We do not only want them to be stuffed into cans. We want our fish products put into TV dinners and higher value-added products such as fish cakes and restaurant meals. We want to get the maximum dollar value from our fishery resource. That adds up to employment for processing workers and for fishermen. It means they will get the best dollar for their product.

Canada cannot hide behind archaic protectionist regulations which shelter our workers from the realities of the world industrial commodity trading market.

When this Government took office Canada was eleventh among industrial nations. We were down at number eleven in terms of our competitiveness. I suspect when we see some figures soon, we will see that Canada is near the top. That is because this Government has rejuvenated Canadian industry in all sectors and expanding opportunity to add value to our natural resources.

That is why the Free Trade Agreement is so good for Canada and for the fishing industry. It removes the tariffs upon entry into the United States market which the Americans were applying to our salmon, herring, lobster and other fish products. With the removal of those tariffs, the price to the consumer in the United States goes down and we sell more, and we sell more value-added product, not more raw material.

I submit that members of the Opposition are way off base as usual. They were wrong in 1984. The Canadian people judged them wrong in 1988 in an election, and they will do so again in 1992 or 1993 because this Government has Canada on the rails to prosperity and we will stay there. We do not need pessimistic doom and gloom when Canadians are confident and optimistic about their future and the opportunities we can give to our nation.

Mr. Stupich: I cannot help but regret the attitude of the Minister. The motion I moved states:

> That this House reaffirms the government's pledge to the West Coast salmon and herring industry to "not allow jobs, historically established, to be threatened" by any government response to GATT rulings."

I had hoped that the Government would agree with that, but it seems that the Government does not. The Minister in his response said that we are No. 11 in terms of competitive pricing. We are No. 11, and yet we never have had any problem selling our product at premium prices because we deliver the top product in the world. Why would people buy Canadian fish if they can get their own more cheaply? Because they know historically they have been getting a guaranteed and a superior product when they buy Canadian fish at top prices. We have never had any problem selling our Canadian fish.

Groundfish today are being trucked from Prince Rupert to the United States. Fish can be moved and are being moved. If you are prepared to sell without the restrictions, without the quality guarantees, without the quality reputation that we have for our fish products in British Columbia, then you can sell more cheaply if you do not really care what kind of garbage you are selling. I cannot say that much about the East Coast because I do not know it that well. But West Coast fishermen and the industry have built a world-wide reputation over decades for selling a guaranteed top quality product and for meeting the demands of the market. That has been our reputation, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, I certainly agree with the Hon. Member. That is why our Canadian fish products sell and why we never have anything left over going to waste. It is top quality product priced competitively. That is the way it will continue to be. With or without this regulation, that is the reality. Our industries have invested in the most modern technology. They have upgraded their plants.

If the Hon. Member is saying that the only way the industry can make a big enough profit is to pay the fishermen too low a price, we do not want that. We are on the side of the fishermen and the plant workers. It is about time the NDP were, too. If what they are doing is siding with the processing industry and saying the only way that industry can make a profit is to keep paying workers too little, we do not agree with that.

I do not agree with the mischievousness of this motion. I am confident that the public will judge this Government as having created economic growth, new jobs and a more competitive economy in this country. That certainly has been true of the fishing industry these past four years.

Never has so much income been enjoyed, so much value added, so much use made of under-utilized species as has been the case under this Government. While I may not agree with the mischievous language of the motion which tries to protect archaic jobs in the form that was appropriate 20, 30 or 40 years ago, I can say with confidence to this House that there will be more employment, more rewarding and year-round jobs, not jobs that put people on unemployment insurance for six months of the year. This is a result of the competitive drive of this Government to extract more value from our natural resources, to modernize our industry and to export more product.

The Hon. Member said our fishing industry has produced the best quality product. It is bought because of its high quality. It is not bought because of the protectionist regulation that was removed. We will have an opportunity to do more of that processing when all the fish is brought to shore.

The Hon. Member has not told me why they would support the old regulations which did not require that coho, chinook or chum salmon be brought to shore. They do not want that fish protected. We are bringing that fish to shore under this regulation. Those fish have been exported in uneviscerated form—guts in, if you like—for years with the support of the New Democratic Party.

We want that fish to be brought to shore so that we get first opportunity to process it, put it in its highest most value-added form; not just sockeye and pink, but chum and coho and chinook. If they want to throw in groundfish, I would like them to stand up and say that we want groundfish restricted to being landed at Canadian ports. I would like to hear that. I would like to know how some of their supporters who are crewmen on the trollers would feel about that. I am prepared to listen because I think it makes good sense. But I want to hear the NDP propose it in this House.

Mr. Walker: Madam Speaker, listening to the Minister give his response reminds me of an age-old struggle that has taken place between the Conservatives and the NDP which constantly misses the futures of people whose jobs are at stake.

The Government prides itself on giving millions of dollars to native organizations, for example, to build up an economy. This is an industry in which native people are involved, struggling and working hard and the Government pulls out from underneath them the very support structures they need to build up an independent life.

I would like to ask the Minister how he reconciles the fact that on the one hand the Government is saying that it supports native people and new Canadians, and on the other hand in an industry where they can get themselves set up in and involved with, and the Government pulls the rug out from underneath them and leaves them exposed to the international market-place in a way that is very hostile and alienating to them.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the question. The Member who raises it was not listening to the basis on which I justified what the Government is doing as a means of creating more employment for native people, for new Canadians, for Canadians of all ages and all skills. That is exactly what this does. It is not just my opinion. I notice the Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Walker) is not listening and preparing. He should pay great heed of the words of a very prominent West Coast Liberal, Dr. Peter Pearse of the University of British Columbia who wrote an important report for Mr. LeBlanc when he was Minister of Fisheries. This is what Dr. Peter Pearse said in his report about these archaic support restrictions:

> Although pressure from established processors and plant workers to restrict exports of less highly processed products is understandable, to do so is inconsistent with fishermen's interest in high prices and with the public interest in generating the highest returns from the resources.

These are the words of a prominent Liberal, Dr. Peter Pearse. I am sorry that he was not elected to this House on past occasions as he once tried to be because he has got it the right way. He is saying exactly the same thing that I have been saying in this House this morning.

Mr. Reid: Madam Speaker, one of the things that strikes me in this debate is the implication of our New Democratic friends across the way that this Government has turned its back on the British Columbia fishery, particularly the British Columbia salmon fishery. As the Minister has said, unfortunately only briefly, that clearly is not the case. The evidence is totally contrary to that. This Government, in particular the Minister, has made great strides in terms of policy, programming and funding for a variety of different things that have been designed not only to protect the fishery and all those who work in it, but to enhance that fishery.

I wonder if the Minister might take a moment to expand a little on that. He alluded to the salmon enhancement plan and some other things that have been so successful. Would he reaffirm his commitment and the Government's commitment to the British Columbia fishery?

Mr. Siddon: I do appreciate that unexpected question from my colleague, Madam Speaker. I did mention that I worked as a Member of the Cabinet to secure recognition, reinforced again last week by the Prime Minister while speaking in Vancouver, of the importance of the Pacific Coast salmon fishery the result of which was the conclusion of the Pacific Salmon Treaty. Our friend, the Speaker, was the Minister of Fisheries at the time and presided over the successful conclusion of that treaty which recognized Canada's sovereign ownership of fish that are spawned in our waters. It is clearly written into a bilateral treaty with the United States that we will achieve the benefit of the fish which belong to us.

We have increased the funding for the salmon enhancement program by doubling it and adding $206 million a year. We are funding all kinds of projects in classrooms with native groups, with fishermen's organizations, with concerned community groups to help to build small incubation boxes and hatcheries, to improve the habitat and clean up the spawning capacity of our rivers and lakes. The Government and I particularly take pride in that. If we did not have confidence in the future of the Pacific Coast fishing industry, we would not have spent tens of millions of dollars fixing up our ports and harbours.

I went to Cabinet, with the support of my colleagues, and obtained $200 million of new funding for our small craft harbours. We increased, in a time of restraint, the budget for small craft harbours by some 44 per cent for the annual operation. The Hon. Members opposite have benefited by those improvements to harbours in their ridings which amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars in new multi-million dollar harbour facilities. Why would the Government make those our priorities if it did not have confidence in the future of the West Coast fishing industry? Why would we have engaged and why did I secure the support of all provincial Ministers of Fisheries for the negotiation of a Free Trade Agreement with the United States? Yes, indeed, it is in the communiqué to First Ministers of 1986 that all Ministers of Fisheries agreed that free trade would be good for the fishery. Indeed it shall be.

• (1220)

Mr. Simmons: Those people up there in the gallery are laughing at you.

Mr. Siddon: I know you want me to take my seat, so I shall, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments has now expired.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This question is so vitally important to the people of British Columbia, I wonder if Your Honour might put to the House a proposal to allow the Minister's period for questions and comments to be extended since only two or three very short questions have been asked. I am sure that the House would agree to that.

Mr. Simmons: May I speak to that, Madam Speaker?

I say to my friend in the NDP that, normally, his would be a great proposal. Normally, we would be prepared to entertain it. In this case, this Minister has demonstrated in the time he has had available to him that he does not know his file. He does not know the issue. I will not be a party to allowing the ignorance to be further paraded.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): For the Chair to entertain the suggestion of the Hon. Member for North Island—Powell River I would need unanimous consent. I think that the last remark means that I do not have that unanimous consent.

Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, before making my own comments I first want to express the regrets of the Member of Parliament for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) who has for several years had a very strong concern about this issue. Unfortunately, for personal family reasons, he must be in Winnipeg today. I hope the House understands that his absence is one that he regrets. However, he had no choice but to attend to a family matter. I want to express my regrets to the House on his behalf.

In saying that, in some ways I am glad that he is not here. Having listened to 30 minutes of drivel from the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon) would probably be more than any strong stomach could stand so close to the lunch hour.

Over the last two or three days many Members of Parliament have had an important experience. We have sat down and met with the workers in the West Coast fishing industry. We have talked to them about the concerns they have raised over a barbeque or over a table. What has been interesting is that people have come to the capital of the country with a simple request. They came to the Government to ask to be listened to on a simple question. It is this. Why are they losing their jobs? Why are hard-working people who have spent years developing an effective and good industry on the West Coast, through no responsibility of their own suddenly threatened with the loss of their livelihood? It is a simple question. However, they have been unable to get answers from the Government.

We have listened to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon) ramble on about all the great advantages of competitiveness and how we will make the fishing industry of Canada into a world class premium opportunity. However, he never answered the simple question as to why these people are going to lose their jobs. Why are they faced with a situation not of their own making but based upon a decision of this Government? That is the issue.

Neither the Minister nor his colleague, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), have explained why it is that it is a government decision that has put these people into this threat, that has put them into this problem. Perhaps more tragically not once have we heard from any Member on the other side what the Government is prepared to do about it. Is it really prepared to listen to these people? Is it prepared to understand the nature of the problem? From the Minister's reply today there is little hope being offered.

What is tragic is that we have a Minister of Fisheries who has the gall, the ultimate and incredible effrontery to stand up in this House and say: "The fishing industry has never had it so good". I ask him to tell the thousands of fish workers from the East Coast who have been laid off in the last month that they have never had it so good.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): I ask the Minister to tell it to the fishermen who have had their stocks and quotas cut back by 50 per cent because of the Government's mismanagement.

This is the Minister of Fisheries talking, and not the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who we are accustomed to hearing make those kinds of exaggerated claims. This is the Minister supposedly responsible for the stewardship of that industry. What kind of time capsule, what kind of insulation chamber is the Minister living in? What kind of warp has he found himself involved in so that he does not understand that the fishing industry of Canada is in peril on both coasts, that it has real problems and that the workers are asking somebody in the Government to listen to them and to respond to their needs?

That is the point of this debate. I find in part that the arguments made by our friends in the NDP are a little unusual, somewhat strange, since they are saying: "We want to support the Government in its strong stand on this issue". It has not taken a strong stand on behalf of the fishing industry of the West Coast. It has been a consistent history of sell-out right from the very beginning. Right from the beginning it has taken a stand to sell out this industry with the most blatant, callous forethought.

The Government has had its public relations people working. They have churned out the press releases. The fact of the matter is it has not defended this industry.

Let me give you a little history, Madam Speaker. The great crown prince of blather, otherwise known as the Minister for International Trade, gets up to say with his hand over his heart: "The devil made me do it. It is a GATT decision. What have I to do about it?" He shrugs and sighs and moans and says: "I had no responsibility. It is the GATT that made me do it".

Madam Speaker, I will tell you what the real history is. In 1986 the Americans started complaining about this problem. At that time we were already engaged in negotiations with the Americans on the free trade deal. Things were put on the table and things were taken off. The Americans took things off the table. They said: "We are not going to talk about the Jones Act protecting the shipping industry. We are not going to talk about the Magnuson Act concerning the fish processing industry". They took those off the table. Did our Government take the West Coast fish processing industry off the table? Darn right it did not. It put it on the table. It was a bargaining chip.

When the Member from Nanaimo says that we should support the Government's strong effective stand I say that back in 1986 during that negotiation the Government had every opportunity to say to the Americans: "This is a non-negotiable item. We have the right to protect the processing of our own natural resources and we will not bargain it away". However, the Government put it on the table as part of the deal. Yet Members of the Government stand up to say that the GATT made them do it. They had two years of negotiation in which to protect the West Coast fish processing industry, and they did not take the opportunity to do it. It was there. There were certainly enough examples of things that were moved off from one side to the other and nobody dealt with it.

Then we come to the GATT panel. Again, the Minister for International Trade and his sub-junior colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, says: "I had nothing to do about it. I am sorry, it is the GATT panel". However, what they do not tell Canadians, which is part of the big lie, part of the big propaganda machine that keeps going on, is that under the GATT rules it is perfectly permissible to use an export tax to protect any processing in one's own country. The GATT has allowed it with us in the past, as well as other countries. It is perfectly legitimate to use an export tax to say that raw fish leaving Canada should be subject to a higher tax.

• (1230)

Guess what was given away in Section 408 of the Free Trade Agreement? What was given away was the right of Canada to impose an export tax. The legitimate remedy which we had as Canadians to protect our natural resources and to protect our fish to ensure that it would be processed in Canada was given away under the Free Trade Agreement.

How does the Government defend that? When the Minister of International Trade and his colleagues stand up and say "the GATT made me do it", they should add the real bottom line that the GATT also offered a solution which they threw away, bargained away, and sold away. For what? I will not go into the history of what we did not get in return, but the fact of the matter is that the remedy was at hand. The remedy could be used today to protect the west coast fishing industry, but it has disappeared from our arsenal of public tools.

I would hope that the people of British Columbia, in fact all Canadians, would recognize just what a bad bargain was struck when they gave away the sovereign right of a Canadian Government to protect its own industry and its own people, for merely a song and a dance.

An Hon. Member: We get a song or a dance.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): We did get a song and a dance. We got Yankee Doodle Dandy, and the Prime Minister was up in his Gucci shoes doing a dance the whole time. That is what we got.

I cannot see the Minister here any more, but he might be around in the vicinity. I want to talk about his argument that somehow this regulation he has brought forward is a great advantage to the fishing industry on the West Coast. It is going to come as a surprise to the fisheries council, the unions, the processing people, and all the rest of the industry. I want to remind Members of the House that this is a Government which states that it listens to the industry. It states that it consults with Canadians. Why is it that all the major players, the owners, the unions, the workers, and the processing plants universally say that this is a bad deal?

Maybe the Government does not listen to the people. We know that from the past. Maybe the Government might listen to its own officials. The thing that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans did not talk about was a report prepared by his own Department, the Department for which he is responsible. It stated that the export of large quantities of unprocessed fish is possible, reducing the supply of raw material for B.C. processors and causing an impact on unemployment. That report was prepared by Tom Rideout, Fisheries and Oceans International Directorate.

Does that mean that once again we have a Minister who cannot read? Has he picked up the bad habits of the Minister of Trade? Does he not read his own documents? Has he forgotten that illiteracy is one of the primary criteria for being a Minister of the Crown? In his own Department officials say that this particular regulation will provide for the removal of large quantities of raw fish and the loss of employment.

Why does the Government not listen? If it will not listen to the fishermen, the fish processors, the businesses, or members of the Opposition, why does it not listen to its own officials and read its own reports? We know it will not because this has nothing to do with hard analysis. This has got to do with simply knuckling under, being afraid, and bargaining on our knees with the neighbours of the south. That is what it is all about. That is what the issue is about. It is simply craven politics at stake here.

The Minister of Fisheries went on to state: "Well, I expect our people to be so competitive." He was talking as if there was a level field out there. The people who came to visit us passed on some interesting communications members of their own processing plants are receiving.

I have a letter from the Economic Development Association of Skagit County, down there in the great State of Washington, which is providing a sales pitch to processing plants in Canada to move south of the border because they can pay lower wages and do not have to pay the same rate of unemployment insurance or the same rate of health benefits. In other words, it is what we have been arguing in this House for three and a half years. It is not a level field. It is a biased, distorted, bevelled field. It is in fact coming to bear—and it is the truth—in the fish processing industry. We now have enticements and inducements being offered by the economic development organizations in the United States stating that they can give us a good deal.

It is like those guys with the old, dirty postcards in Paris. They say: "Come on down here, we are going to give you a good deal. You do not have to pay your workers the same wages." If that is what the Minister of Fisheries means by competition, that we are going to expect our workers to take less money and have less benefits, then that totally contradicts the great promises of the Prime Minister who stated that this deal was going to open up an economic bonanza for Canada.

The hard truth and reality is that this deal says that the only way we will expect Canadians to compete is if they are prepared to accept a lower standard of quality of wages, a lower standard of quality of working conditions, a lower standard of quality of support for their families and their communities. It expects that we will reduce ourselves and harmonize downwards, that that is the basis for competition. Of course it fits its agenda, the agenda of the Conservative Party. That Party does not like unions very much.

Its Members do not like occupational standards. They do not like unemployment insurance. They do not like the kind of structures we have built up in this country over the years to ensure that we have a decent workplace and that workers, particularly those in seasonal work and particularly in the resource industries, have a safety net to live on. That is not free enterprise, according to their version. That is not the market-place. I will tell you, Madam Speaker, that it is the Canadian way of doing things.

That is why the example of fish processing industry on the West Coast is so important. I agree that it should tell us is something about the fish industry in the rest of Canada as well.

I will not take a long time, because I have learned colleagues who are directly experienced in the east coast fisheries. However, I just want to remind you of one thing, Madam Speaker. If this sticks, if the Americans make their case and this regulation is allowed to stand, if we do not get up and fight as Canadians, then what is happening in the west coast fisheries is simply a prelude to what is going to happen in the east coast fisheries. It is the test case. The fact of the matter is that there is so-called protection in the Free Trade Agreement. I will read Article 1203 which exempts provincial controls on the export of unprocessed fish on the East Coast. Article 1801, however, states that the U.S. has the choice to challenge any trade restriction in the GATT.

If this GATT precedent is allowed to stand, they will then take the next case and move it over to the East Coast; then the entire Canadian fishery and the workers in it will be put in jeopardy. That is the real issue we are facing.

I would even go one step beyond that. It is another test case similar to what we have seen in the softwood lumber case. It is a retreat, a surrendering of the rights and abilities of Canadian Governments, federal and provincial, to protect our own natural resources, to try to provide the best laws and regulations in the interest of conserving our own resources, managing them, and ensuring that they are used in an effective and efficient way for the employment of Canadians.

The Canadian public policy over the years has been judicially applied—it has not been exaggerated or abused—to ensure that our vital natural resources can be properly used. As experts have pointed out, this landing requirement does nothing for the conservation or management of our resource. Again it is simply a throwaway.

The same thing will happen in other natural resource areas. Our ability to make decisions in our own Legislatures, our own Parliaments, on how we want to use our natural resources in an effective and conserving way is being lost because we no longer have the instruments. They are being taken away from us. We do not have a Government which either understands or accepts the need and the utility of those kinds of important public policy tools and important public policy programs.

I say to you, Madam Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues from whom we will hear more throughout the day, that the intent of the resolution is the right one to get the Government to act. We would not endorse the notion that this is a Government which has been doing its best. Far from it. It has been doing its worst. It has been covering up. It has not been trying to protect the west coast fishery as a responsible national Government should. It has had as its overriding obsession and preoccupation the signing of a deal with the Americans, regardless of the cost or how many victims it had to throw on the scrap heap.

Unfortunately, the people on the West Coast in the fishing industry are right now the visible victims. There will be many more in the months and years to come, unless we stop this deal and stop what this Government is doing.

• (1240)

[Translation]

Mr. Marin: Madam Speaker, I listened with great attention to what our colleague just said. Although we must admit that the Opposition is fulfilling its role of officially being against any government action or policy, it is still a little difficult to understand that intelligent people sitting in the Opposition can confuse such important things as the decline in eastern fish stocks, the problems with GATT in the West and free trade. The Hon. Member who just spoke got it all mixed up! If GATT creates problems in the West, that is necessarily the reason for our resource declining in the East.

I will ask our colleague a question: Would he be prepared, on behalf of his party, to ask that Canadian fishermen not have the right to sell wherever it suits them?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, I am not the one who was confused; it was the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister said that the fisheries sector was in good shape; I did not. I have the responsibility of asking in the House whether the problems with the fisheries, especially on both coasts—this problem is due to a decision of this Government.

Madam Speaker, especially in the free trade negotiations, your Government gave the Americans the right to protect the fishing industry with export taxes. That is a simple fact. It is not a problem of confusion, it is the decision made by your Cabinet, which decided with the Americans during those negotiations to give away this fundamental, sovereign right of Canada.

[English]

I resent the tactics used by the Member and by the Minister himself to try to pit one sector of the fishing industry against the other. They are turning the fishermen against the people in the processing industry because if they can divide, they can conquer. If we had the right to protect our fishery through a proper export tax, a right which the Government gave away, then we would not have a problem protecting the fishermen, the fish processors, and the industry as a whole.

Mr. Barrett: Madam Speaker, I have a quick observation to make and a question to ask my Liberal colleague. First, I would like to ensure that my comments are in order by referring to the motion we are discussing. The motion reads:

> That this House reaffirms the government's pledge to the West Coast salmon and herring industry to "not allow jobs, historically established, to be threatened" by any government response to GATT rulings.

To put this in context, I want to tell Hon. Members where the words in quotes come from. The words in quotes were deliberately chosen because they were plucked out of a pledge given by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to the west coast fishing industry. The NDP is not suggesting that we support the Government's initiative. We just want to see if government

Members vote to back up the Minister's very words to the industry.

The Hon. Member eloquently answered the last question asked regarding the GATT ruling. Does the Hon. Member not find it passing strange that the Government has said that GATT forced the Government to do it, as the Hon. Member so eloquently, if somewhat theatrically, put it?

If the GATT forced the Government to do it, why is it going to a free trade panel to deal with a GATT decision? I would ask the Hon. Member to explain, since he is knowledgeable about the Free Trade Agreement, why the Government has copped out, given in, abandoned the logic that GATT made the Government do it? Why has it not gone back to GATT but has used the free trade agreement panel?

It has been reported to me that the Minister said that the Government is going to the free trade panel because that is what the Americans wanted. I do not need to ask who is the monkey and who is the organ grinder. The Government's position is one of capitulation, does the Hon. Member not agree?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, that is a tough question to answer. Let me say at the outset that in my remarks I did not criticize the motion. I did say that the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Cowichan, who said that he was supporting government initiatives in the past, should have pointed out that those initiatives were no more than a subterfuge and a camouflage. They were not seriously intended to protect the interests of the west coast fishery.

I would simply say, because time is limited, and this amplifies just what a hoax the Free Trade Agreement really is, the reason the Government is not going to a panel under the Free Trade Agreement is that it knows it would have to apply U.S. trade law. It would be required to use U.S. law as the basis for a decision—

Mr. Barrett: It is going to the free trade panel.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): But it is not going back to GATT because when the Government signed the Free Trade Agreement it in effect signed away its options and choices and has implicitly accepted that U.S. trade law will determine the outcome of those decisions.

The Minister knows full well that the great promise of guaranteed access to U.S. markets was really a charade. All we really got was to be the instrument of applying U.S. trade law to Canada.

Mr. Dave Worthy (Cariboo—Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, today we are engaged in a discussion that is very important for the people of British Columbia. I do not rise as an expert on the fishery, but I do rise as a Member from British Columbia who is keenly aware of the importance of this industry to British Columbia and in fact to Canada, particularly to the thousands of fishermen and fish processors who are engaged in this very important livelihood.

It is essential that we focus our attention for a few moments on the history surrounding the salmon and herring fishery and that we do not forget that it was British Columbians who built the fishery, it was British Columbians who developed the product lines and the markets which make our fish products second to none in the world, and it is British Columbians who will continue to be the leaders in the trading of fish.

The concerns that have been expressed are felt by all who are close to British Columbia because the salmon and herring industry represents a major component of the B.C. economy, an economy that is dependent on trade as is the rest of the country dependent on fair and free trade. As a signatory to the GATT and to the Free Trade Agreement, Canada recognizes that there are trade rules which must be followed. We play by the rules of the game in Canada.

What is on the minds of many British Columbians is the removal of the requirements for the processing of Pacific salmon and herring in Canada. Why were these regulations removed?

In 1986 the United States indicated to Canada that it found the regulations requiring the processing of salmon and herring to be a restriction on trade. Canada and the United States entered into consultations but could not find the means to arrive at a mutually satisfactory resolution. The United States appealed as was its right to the GATT. As a result, a panel of trade experts was established to review the salmon and herring processing requirement regulations to ascertain if they constituted a GATT illegal barrier to trade.

Both Canada and the United States made their supportive arguments before the GATT panel. In November 1987 the panel ruled that in fact the processing requirements for salmon and herring could not be justified under the GATT rules and that they were a trade barrier. In April 1988 the Government accepted the GATT panel findings and indicated that the GATT illegal regulations would be removed.

This Government heard the concerns expressed by the B.C. fishing industry over the acceptance of the GATT panel findings and responded accordingly. First, it assured other sectors of the fishing industry that we were not going to take actions which would jeopardize our trading relationships around the world.

Second, it assured the fishing industry that measures would be taken to ensure that the fundamental principles of sound resource conservation and management would not be compromised by the Government's decision to accept the panel finding.

Third,it assured that any new conservation and management measures taken by the Government would be GATT consistent.

In the summer of 1988 a high level industry working group was established to identify what measures were necessary to ensure that the conservation and management of the salmon and herring industry would not be compromised by the removal of the processing requirements. It should be noted that the processing requirements constituted a de facto landing requirement and that their removal meant valuable conservation and management information could be lost.

The working group considered the problems created by the removal of the processing requirements and submitted their report in early September 1988. To ensure that any new requirements were GATT consistent, the working group recommendations were scrutinized by GATT scholars who advised the Government that some aspects of the working group's recommendations were not GATT consistent and should not be adopted by the Government.

However, the implementation of the landing requirements to ensure the collection of essential and accurate conservation and management information was considered to be GATT consistent and was implemented by this Government in April of this year. It was implemented after five lawyers gave this Government their best advice that these new regulations were, in fact, GATT consistent.

Following the review of the working group proposals by the GATT experts, the Government undertook to discuss the new landing requirements with the United States. Bilateral discussions continued into the spring of the year with the hope that the disagreements on the landing requirements could be resolved. This has not been the case, and the matter has been referred to the free trade dispute settlement panel which will bring forward its decision in September of this year.

We have all heard the rhetoric associated with this issue, rhetoric which clouds the essential points that need to be made. I share the concerns of the B.C. workers who feel that their jobs are threatened but ask what would be the impact on the same workers if Canada was not a member of the GATT. I submit that protectionism would be the norm and B.C. and Canadian products would face trade restrictive initiatives in many of our markets.

What kind of business plan could companies or individuals prepare for a market which determines trade policy on an ad hoc basis? It would not be successful. Our membership in the GATT in recognition of the GATT rules means that we can develop products and markets with confidence. In those cases where we are treated unfairly we can appeal to the GATT for action. We should not lose sight of the importance of trade rules to effective trade and the long–term positive impact for all Canadians.

I accept, as I think we all do, the principles underlying the GATT. I accept, as I think we all should, that the Government had no other option but to abide by the GATT panel findings on Pacific salmon and herring. However, I cannot ignore the concerns of British Columbians over the potential impact of the GATT ruling. I am reassured by the action that has been taken to date, action based on sound conservation and management principles following the recommendations of the industry.

If we step away from the issue at hand and examine the B.C. fishing industry as objective observers, one cannot help but be moved by the pride this industry gives to its employees, its province, and its country. We are price setters in the market–place, not price takers, even though our products are not in the majority. When other countries have faced crisis after crisis due to inferior processing practices, our skilled and technologically advanced industry has continued to produce top quality products.

The words "British Columbia" mean dependability and top quality around the world. Do we really need to provide trade protection for this industry? I submit that we do not. We do need to ensure that Canada's principles of conservation and management are not compromised and that no competitor is permitted to malign the B.C. reputation for quality.

The Government has initiated GATT consistent regulations to ensure that conservation and management principles are not compromised. I am confident that our fishing industry has the competitive edge and in the long term will agree that trade restrictive measures are not necessary for the continuation of this vibrant and productive industry.

SPACE AGENCY

RELOCATION

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to condemn a statement by Mr. Robert Bourassa that appeared in La Presse on June 13, in which he criticized scientists who disapproved of relocating the Space Agency to Saint-Hubert, Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Bourassa accuses them of narrow-mindedness and being limited in their competence. This cheap shot from the Premier of Quebec was only made for political gain. I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that these people are some of the brightest Canada has ever produced. The very fact that they can find jobs so quickly points to their excellence. The Premier of Quebec owes them an apology. I have great sympathy for people who are forced to uproot their families for political expediency.

[Translation]

Robert Bourassa has shown an incredible lack of tact towards the families in question, in addition to his flagrant ignorance of the excellence of these Canadian scientists.

[English]

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should publicly affirm the competence of our space scientists.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

P.E.I.—LOSS OF INVESTMENT AND EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, over the past weeks, many investment and employment opportunities have come to a halt in Prince Edward Island.

This is a direct result of two measures taken by this Government. First, it failed to renew more than $720 million in regional economic development programs in Atlantic Canada. Second, the amount of money received under ACOA will be spread over seven years rather than five. This amounts to a reduction of approximately 25 per cent.

Now some projects will not proceed and the opportunity to create new jobs in the private sector will be lost. Islanders are frustrated and bewildered by these cuts. They believe that this Government has broken its commitment to regional development.

I urge this Government to reconsider its commitment and provide the necessary funding to encourage economic development in Atlantic Canada.

TRANSPORT

BREAKDOWN OF SHARE OF PUBLIC TRANSPORT MODES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, according to yesterday's Globe and Mail, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) says that his Department has no detailed breakdown of the number of passengers travelling by train, bus, and airplane, and that he only has national figures from Statistics Canada.

The Minister should do his homework. I have in my hand a breakdown of the share of public transport modes for all the routes in the Quebec–Windsor corridor for 1987. For example, in that year, 48 per cent of passenger travel between Montreal and Toronto was by public transport modes. Of that share, 26 per cent travelled by rail. Between Toronto and Windsor, 34 per cent of passenger travel was by public means. Half of that was by rail. Twenty-seven per cent of travel in the corridor was by means other than the private automobile. One third was by rail.

These are part of a national tracking study tabled by VIA Rail at the National Transportation Agency hearings. The Minister of Transport no longer has an excuse for not knowing what he is talking about when it comes to VIA Rail ridership levels. Wouldn't it be nice if we had a Minister of Transport who knew what he was talking about?

ACID RAIN

PRIME MINISTER'S ROLE

Mrs. Pierrette Venne (Saint-Hubert): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to rise in the House today to speak about acid rain.

Thanks to the perseverance of our Government and especially of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), a major milestone was reached a few days ago, when the President of the United States presented a bill on reducing acid rain in the United States.

Under the proposed legislation, the United States will cut sulphur dioxide emissions by half between now and the year 2000.

We all know that most of this pollution comes to us from the United States.

Industrial emissions of sulphur dioxide, the main component of acid rain, affect the provinces of Ontario and Québec to a very great extent.

I am therefore both proud and thankful that the Prime Minister has been so insistent on this very important issue, since our quality of life and our environment are at stake.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGED POLITICAL INTERFERENCE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, the NDP has been claiming that the Government is applying political interference by influencing the RCMP to lay charges under the Criminal Code in connection with the federal budget leak. We heard this accusation at the Justice Committee hearings this week, even when the RCMP Commissioner, Norman Inkster, stated to the NDP questioner from Victoria: "No one from the Government called me. No one tried to influence me in any way, shape or form".

Commissioner Inkster flatly rejected suggestions by the NDP that there had been political interference in the decision to lay charges. The NDP then moved and lost a motion asking the RCMP to withdraw the charges laid against the television broadcaster and others for the leak.

Could the NDP not realize that a motion to direct the RCMP to withdraw a criminal charge would be direct political interference, showing a most blatant interference in the due process of law.

I am sure Canadian people will be happy to know that our national police force, not the NDP, is the investigating authority in determining when criminal charges should be laid.

TRIBUTES TO MAURICE BELLEMARE

Mr. Denis Pronovost (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, this morning, all Québecers heard to their sorrow about the death of the Hon. Maurice Bellemare. The ex-MNA for Champlain and Johnson in the Québec National Assembly had been a well-known figure on the Québec political scene since 1944.

With the passing of the last survivor of the Duplessis era, an important page in Québec's history has been turned. Mr. Bellemare became well-known as Minister of Labour and as the loyal servant of Premiers Duplessis, Sauvé, Johnson and Bertrand. He was a man of great character and personal warmth, very sincere and with a termendous concern for the problems of others.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all federal Members will join me today in paying a last tribute to a very great Québecer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PAKISTAN

ALLEGED PERSECUTION OF AHMADI MUSLIMS

Mr. Maurizio Bevilacqua (York North): Mr. Speaker, persecution of Ahmadi Muslims in Pakistan continues. I have now received reports that last Thursday, June 8, as a result of a provocative and inflammatory speech apparently delivered by a Muslim clergyman, a Member of provincial Parliament, a mob of Pakistan Muslims raided an Ahmadiyya Mosque in Lahore. They burnt down the articles of the Mosque, the home of an Ahmadi and vandalized the shop of an Ahmadi Muslim. Last month, an outstanding Ahmadi doctor was murdered in broad daylight. This was the seventeenth Ahmadi murder in the home province of Pakistan's Prime Minister.

It is high time that the Government of Canada take up the matter seriously with the Pakistan Prime Minister as it is a clear violation of human rights. As the Member of Parliament for York North where the Ahmadiyya Mission and Mosque are located, I strongly urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to convey, in the strongest possible terms, the serious concerns of the Government of Canada and of Canadians on this ongoing persecution against Ahmadi Muslims in Pakistan.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

UPCOMING LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, the Member from Portage—Interlake rose in this Houses and criticized the intention of the New Democratic Party to have a squeaky clean leadership campaign. Thanks to the handiwork of a prominent Liberal supporter, Patricia Starr, we now know that a charity listed with Revenue Canada has donated more than $60,000 to various Liberal campaigns.

• (1410)

Meanwhile, at the federal level, Senator Michael Cogger, a close friend of the Prime Minister, is now implicated in an influence peddling case. He has also used a plane which was donated to work in a by-election campaign.

Kenneth Washcuk, a Regina pollster has been appointed to the Air Canada Board of Governors by the Conservatives. He is now in political trouble.

Tommy D'Errico, a federal Tory supporter and a provincial Liberal bagman has been appointed to the CBC Board of Governors and is now in the centre of a land flip scandal in Quebec.

There is no other reason for having a squeaky-clean campaign and an ethics committee of the House of Commons than the pasts of the Liberal Party and Conservative Party of this country.

THE ENVIRONMENT

U.S. CLEAN AIR PROPOSALS

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, this week's announcement of clean air proposals by the American administration is welcome news for Canadians too, and comments from the United States Senate that Canada was instrumental in this latest initiative are worth a bit of uncharacteristic Canadian self-congratulation.

But it is only the first step.

I urge the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) to immediately take the next step to initiate discussions resulting in an international agreement on acid rain. This would commit both countries to achieve promised emission controls. Legislation is good. An agreement is even better.

CANADA POST

POSTAL SUBSIDY FOR PERIODICALS AND MAGAZINES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Government's gross insensitivity to Canadian cultural undertakings has once again reared its head with the Government's decision to cut $45 million over the next two years from the century-old postal subsidy.

Canadian periodical and magazine publishers state that the cut to this postal subsidy could put them out of business. This industry only earns pre-tax profits of 2 per cent.

Studies have demonstrated the necessity of the postal subsidy for the survival of this industry. One year ago the Government announced that program funding would be maintained at approximately its current level for at least five years. That was a show and promise to Canadian voters that a Canadian cultural initiative would be preserved. With the election over, the Free Trade Agreement a fait accompli and a little pressure from American printers, the Government has broken another of its promises to Canadians.

The Government's slashing of this vital link between publisher and reader may irrevocably affect the lives of 95 per cent of Canadians who read Canadian magazines. Does this Government not realize that Canadians like to read Equinox, Chatelaine, Maclean's, and others?

THE ECONOMY

OPENING OF NEW PLANT IN TRENTON

Mr. René Soetens (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, on Monday when I spoke in the House about the new jobs being created in my riding in the pharmaceutical industry because of good Conservative government policy, members of the Opposition complained that it was not helping their ridings at all.

I can only encourage members of the Opposition to look again. By example, I would like to tell them about some jobs that are being created in eastern Ontario in an opposition held riding.

Banner Packing Ltd. will be building a new 45,000 square foot pet food plant in Trenton creating 49 new jobs in a community that needs those jobs. When the national sales manager was asked why the expansion was occurring he stated: "The decision to expand at this time is in keeping with the advent of free trade as the products are aimed at new markets in the U.S. and Europe".

It just goes to show that good government policies such as free trade are helping even those who chose not to vote Conservative, this time.

CREDIT CARDS

ISSUING OF NEW RED CARD

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, I rise on an urgent matter. In this country we have green credit cards, gold credit cards and platinum credit cards. Now we are about to have a red card.

As the House knows, this week the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations has been conducting an investigation into the matter of credit cards. Members of this committee, from both sides of the House, have been relentless and effective in their questioning of the bankers. Some real concerns have emerged from the committee.

I wonder how the Liberal members of the committee feel about a plan that would see their Party in bed with the Royal Bank for the issuing of a new credit card. Is it right for a political Party to hand out credit cards? Is it right for a political Party to get a pay-back when a Liberal Member of Parliament uses that card for parliamentary business?

What type of signal does this send to the Liberal members of the committee who are trying to do their job in the committee? Does the Liberal Party brass not believe that this puts their members in a compromising position.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's announcement of low-level flights in western Canada has again reminded us of a lot of what is wrong with this Government.

First, it reminds us of arrogance towards remote regions of the country when the Minister states that those areas were chosen because they are unpopulated. There is the community of La Loche in the flight path which has more than 3,000 people, and many other communities where people have lived for generations.

Secondly, there is the myth of consultation. No one along that flight path has ever been consulted. Third, the Government's thinking is still mired in the cold war. We have made it through all these years without these flights. Why do we need them now just when international relations are improving?

Therefore, I call on the Minister to get in touch with the real world and cancel these flights.

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

QUEBEC SPECIFICITY

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, Canada will be celebrating on July 1. We live in a country where the ten provinces that make it up are very diverse and have very different needs. We all enjoy innumerable benefits in this Canadian society which is free, prosperous, democratic and so tolerant.

Canada is open to immigration, a promised land for its inhabitants, a country of hope for young people who are learning to live with its linguistic duality and soon, I hope, we will live with the wonderful reality of the Meech Lake Accord, which is still in suspense because two provinces do not want to accept Québec's specificity.

I represent Beauce in Québec and where I come from, Mr. Speaker, people think that differences between the provinces are normal and they are proud to be Canadians. We do not understand why Manitoba and British Columbia do not accept our reality as Québecers within the great Canadian family.

It is together, Mr. Speaker, in a united Canada, that we will make progress.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BILL C-21—OPPOSITION TO CHANGES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. This morning a national coalition of Canadians announced their plans to vigorously oppose the Government's cruel changes to unemployment insurance.

The Unemployment Insurance Act was introduced in 1940 and since that time it has served Canadians well when they have lost their jobs against their will.

Now, with Bill C-21, the Government is making it more difficult to qualify for unemployment insurance, is cutting back on the benefit period, and is taking $1.3 billion away from regular benefits.

Can the Prime Minister tell us how many Canadians will directly lose because of those changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act? How many Canadians will have no unemployment insurance benefits because of these changes? Who is going to take care of those unemployed Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, when we announced the strategy to implement the policy for those who must work, we took account of regional disparities. The purpose of the strategy, the unemployment insurance reform, is to create jobs. We want to break the vicious circle of those who work 10, 12 or 15 weeks and then collect unemployment insurance. So we have an active strategy for an active population, with access to training!

THE UNEMPLOYED DEPRIVED OF BENEFITS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question, which I will repeat.

Since the Government took $1.3 billion from the Unemployment Insurance Benefits Fund, thousands of unemployed people will certainly be deprived of benefits. Now I ask again: How many unemployed will be the victims of these changes and who will be responsible for these abandoned unemployed people?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, the losers will be workers who quit their job voluntarily. We know very Well that training can facilitate job creation.

CONCERNS OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I want to go back to the Prime Minister. What kind of smoke and mirrors game is this? The Government is cutting $1.3 billion from regular unemployment insurance benefits and it is pretending that no one is going to lose. It is evident that if you are unemployed and have no unemployment insurance benefits, then you are going to have to rely on provincial welfare. Now several provinces have already expressed their alarm at this possibility.

I ask the Prime Minister, or the Minister of Finance, how many provincial Governments have already approached him with respect to this problem, and how are they going to help the provinces carry this additional burden of taking care of the unemployed of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the simple answer is that none have, but I think the Hon. Member should reflect on the reasons why we are proceeding with these unemployment insurance changes.

Mr. Allmand: Answer the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Well, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says, answer the question. I did in the first sentence of my answer, if he would clean out his ears.

What I said was that it is important that we understand the reason why we are proceeding with these unemployment insurance changes. We believe that it will be beneficial. The savings that are being made in the unemployment insurance system are being recycled right back into making the labour market a healthier labour market so that people can get training, so that people can get better jobs, so that people can stay with their jobs for a longer period of time. That surely is the objective that this Government has, and it surely should be the objective of the Hon. Member.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

LACK OF GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglington—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Her Government intends to cut nearly $5 billion from its social programs. Six hundred thousand Canadians will feel the impact of these cuts, the 20 per cent who receive unemployment insurance, and I am referring to women, young people, Native people, the disadvantaged and those with very little training.

How can the Minister claim to help the neediest in this country, when her Department has agreed to withdraw the Government's share of unemployment insurance contributions to the tune of $2.9 billion, to meet the objectives of the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, we are not cutting programs, we are making them more effective and more active. Recommendations were made by parliamentary committees, and we know perfectly well that our employment strategy, which worked well during the first four years, was aimed at manpower training and that we now have to train people to meet new labour market needs.

We are not cutting our programs, we are making them more effective and more productive.

[English]

JOB DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the facts, if the Minister would just look at them, tell an entirely different story. The same people upon whom she is imposing this onerous tax burden, will be contributing over 58 per cent of all funds to the Finance Minister's budget cuts for the upcoming spending year, are those on whom she is also shutting the door to training.

Why is the Minister cutting $53 million from job development programs and denying, thereby, access for over 10,000 Canadians the opportunity to improve their employability? Does she think it is fair to penalize those who cannot help themselves for her Government's wastrel habits?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, the reform we announced allows for regional differences. I come from a region where, unfortunately, the unemployment rate is still too high.

In fact, we have made it clear that it is possible to work together with the provinces and the private sector, to establish an employment strategy and to ensure that workers are an asset to the labour force.

LABOUR

CANADIAN COUNCIL OF SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT REPORT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

The Canadian Council of Social Development produced its annual assessment of the reality of Canadian poverty today. It contained a number of alarming statistics. Among them was the fact that some four million Canadians remain at the poverty level in this country. One of the major reasons cited by the Council for this is that poverty among young families has almost doubled in the past 15 years. Again, the reason that poverty among these families has gotten so bad according to the Council is the deplorable state of the minimum wage in Canada which has gone down in real terms an awful lot.

My question to the Minister is simply this—

Mr. Crosbie: How much?

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister says how much. The reality is that the federal minimum wage is the lowest in Canada, lower than the provinces, lower than the territories at only $4 an hour, and that is one of the major reasons for poverty.

I want to ask the Minister of Labour, will he take some concrete action on behalf of the poor and raise the minimum wage immediately?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, like all Members of this House we are, of course, very concerned about the level of poverty among certain Canadian citizens, and action will be taken. Some very interesting statistics, published several times during the last few months, indicate that far fewer people in Québec are living below the poverty line now than in 1984. I think we should acknowledge this fact, which is an improvement for a large number of Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, how complacent can you get? We have almost four million people living in poverty and you get that kind of nonsense from the Minister.

REQUEST FOR ACTION ON MINIMUM WAGE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I have a question for the Prime Minister. If you look at the record of the Conservatives since 1984, the only group of Canadians who have improved their income position in this country are the richest 1 per cent—the richest 1 per cent I say to the Ministers on that side. Since we have a virtual doubling of young families living at the poverty level and a major reason being the low level of the federal minimum wage, will the Government take action now to increase the minimum wage for Canadians and set some standards?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP refers to Canadians living in poverty. Of course all parliamentarians work to alleviate that situation. I know that my hon. friend will be happy to learn that the number of Canadians living below the poverty line fell by 549,000 from 1984 to 1987. That is a tremendous improvement for Canada. The number of children living below the poverty line fell by nearly 200,000 during that same period. It is important to note that since 1984, almost 1.4 million new jobs were created.

If we maintain that kind of attitude and economic outlook, we will be able to keep up that kind of job creation and ensure the elimination of a greater degree of poverty in Canada and bring about a greater degree of social justice.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT POVERTY AMONG CHILDREN BE ELIMINATED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows perfectly well that the percentage of Canadians living below the poverty line has not changed in twenty years. It is about 20 per cent. The Prime Minister mentioned children, for instance. In Canada today, there are one million children living below the poverty line. My question to the Prime Minister is quite straightforward: Can the Government guarantee that in September, after the summer holidays, its goal will be to completely eliminate poverty among Canadian children?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am all for eliminating poverty in Canada. I am not going to wait until September. I would like to do it tomorrow. But unfortunately, it is—

Mr. Broadbent: September was a target date!

Mr. Mulroney: —it is a very serious problem.

I have just given the figures for Canada. Perhaps I may give those for Québec. Since the election in 1984, 315,000 new jobs have been created in Québec. The number of Québecers living below the poverty line has declined by 171,000 since 1984, and this includes 53,000 children. So I think that with the job creation rate we are achieving, with the creation of new wealth by reducing the number of people affected by poverty, we are making substantial progress. We still have a lot to do, and we intend to reach that goal with the help of all Members of this House.

POVERTY

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. This morning, the Canadian Council on Social Development announced that a quarter of Québec families live below the poverty line. That is a total of 615,000 households or two and a half times the population of the City of Laval. When will the Government act to halt the widening gap between Canadians? What will the Prime Minister do so that Québec will no longer be the second poorest province in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has heard the response that was given to that same question by the Right Hon. Prime Minister. She asks when are we going to act. We have been acting.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We increased the child tax credit between 1984 and 1988 from $367 to $559 per child. We introduced a refundable sales tax credit, a major progressive advance in social policy which will reach, in 1990, $140 per adult and $70 per child. Also in 1988, as a result of the income tax reform, we introduced changes in the income tax system which resulted in 850,000 low income Canadians not paying tax in 1989.

Those are three clear actions that address the problem the Hon. Member has raised.

PEOPLE LIVING BELOW POVERTY LINE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is still for the Prime Minister and I have a comment for the Minister of Finance: You raise taxes and cut programs.

In his recent Budget, the Minister of Finances predicted an increase in the unemployment rate, which means that the rate in Québec could go over 10 per cent. The Minister of Employment and Immigration is determined to present her Unemployment Insurance Bill, which will force Québecers to depend more and more on welfare benefits. What does the Minister intend to do to help women and children who live below the poverty line?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): What we are determined to do, Mr. Speaker, is to implement measures for more training, measures for seniors, measures that respect the Charter of Rights, measures that will support the talents of young people, women and seniors.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

IMPACT OF CUT-BACKS ON ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed for the Prime Minister. Over the past few weeks the Prime Minister and his Government have waged an all out attack on the people of Atlantic Canada. Military bases have been closed. Fish plants have been shut down. Regional development agreements have been allowed to expire.

After $3 billion in cuts and thousands of jobs put at risk, the Prime Minister is slashing another $200 million in unemployment insurance benefits in Atlantic Canada.

Why has the Prime Minister decided to slash benefits and impose tougher requirements at the very time when the people of Atlantic Canada are pleading for some compassion and some relief? Is the Prime Minister's real vision of a caring and compassionate Canada—so much for those who have and to heck with everybody else?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is talking about an area of the country that has received a great deal of attention from the Government and deserves even more, and will be receiving it.

Mr. Tobin: That is what is scaring us.

Mr. Mulroney: I ask my hon. friend to consider, for example, during the time that his Party was last in government regional development averaged $185 million per year in Atlantic Canada. Over the last five years regional development went to $282 million per year. Over the next five years the average spending level will go to $425 million per year, which is an increase for Atlantic Canada of 51 per cent.

My friend will want to consider the objective facts. Results of programs have to be measured some way. One way to do it is to measure it by unemployment or employment results. Since we came to office there have been 29,000 more jobs created in Newfoundland; 6,000 more jobs in Prince Edward Island; 35,000 more jobs in Nova Scotia; and 38,000 more jobs in New Brunswick. That is results for Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): We know how to add in Atlantic Canada. We know that what this Government has done to Atlantic Canada is both obscene and unconscionable.

REFUSAL TO MEET WITH PREMIERS OF ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister.

The Atlantic Premiers have jointly asked for an urgent meeting with the Prime Minister regarding his callous treatment of our region. The Prime Minister's response is to give the Premiers the back of his hand.

In light of the Prime Minister's rhetoric on national conciliation, why has he refused to meet jointly with the Premiers of Atlantic Canada to discuss these changes and their devastating impact on the people of Atlantic Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that my hon. friend would like to pass himself off as a hero in Atlantic Canada. However, he represents the political Party that voted against the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Atlantic Canadians know that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Members of his Party held it up, led by Senator MacEachen in the Senate. Atlantic Canadians will never forgive them for what they have been doing to betray the interests of Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO ACT

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns unemployment insurance.

We have heard that all this government largess is going to the unemployed people of Canada. I met with a group of people this morning ranging all the way from the FTQ in Quebec, to the Status of Women, to the Canadian Federation of Students who are opposed to those changes. They are not exactly appreciative of all these wonderful things the Government is supposed to be doing.

Could the Prime Minister name one organization that is in favour of the changes to the UI program?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, all employers in this country want an active labour force. All employers and the private sector want the labour force to be up to their new requirements. However, individuals who through no fault of their own have to leave their jobs will receive the same benefits, but in a different way.

[English]

IMPACT OF PROPOSED AMENDMENTS ON UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, obviously that is not the case. We do know that all employers in the country are not in favour of it. The Minister cannot make any blanket statements such as that one.

As part of the devastation that is being heaped upon the unemployed people of Canada, I want to point out that $200 million or $300 million is now going to be paid in the form of tuition by unemployed students who otherwise would have been receiving funds out of general revenue. How can the Minister possibly say that those are improvements for the unemployed people of Canada?

• (1440)

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, what is going on in this House! What we are trying to do as a Government is ensure that our labour force is retrained and ready to take its place on the labour market and meet new requirements, and they are clamouring for measures and mechanisms to support unemployment insurance! Our reform is aimed at breaking this vicious circle of being unemployed, employed for a while and then unemployed all over again. What we want to do, on the basis of the recommendations made in various committees, is to provide more training under our program. We want to make a more active, more effective and more dynamic program, and that is what the unemployment insurance reform is all about.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION FROM NEW ZEALAND

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Members the presence in our gallery today of a parliamentary delegation from New Zealand, led by the Honourable Kerry Burke, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

IMPACT OF PROPOSED AMENDMENTS ON ATLANTIC CANADA

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister, in the wake of his scorched earth policy in Atlantic Canada. During the election campaign both the Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade stated and restated that absolutely no way would there be any cuts to unemployment insurance.

Can the Prime Minister tell us now what cataclysmic change occurred in this country between November and April which caused this complete reversal of government policy and broke yet another sacred trust?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I just comment briefly on the scorched earth comment of my hon. friend from Halifax.

From 1984 to 1989 the unemployment rate in Newfoundland dropped from 23.5 per cent to 14.4 per cent. In Prince Edward Island it dropped from 14 per cent to 12.8 per cent. In Nova Scotia it dropped from 13.8 per cent to 9.5 per cent. In New Brunswick it dropped from 16.3 per cent to 12 per cent. Mr. Speaker, that is not a scorched earth policy.

The scorched earth policy took place between 1980 and 1984 when the Liberal Party trampled upon the economy of Atlantic Canada and left the economy of that region decimated. This Government, with the co– operation of Atlantic Premiers, brought it back to life. That is why Atlantic Canada continues to do well today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Clancy: I can only say that somebody should tell that to the over 8,000 fish plant workers in Atlantic Canada who are going to be affected by the fish plant closures.

Many of these jobs are held by women, and most are in areas where the fishery is the only game in town.

RETRAINING OF WORKERS

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, I would like to know from the Prime Minister, who does such a great thing for my region, does he plan to retrain these workers for industries that do not exist, or is this Government so insensitive to community ties in Atlantic Canada that he is just going to tell them all to move to Toronto.

We have heard that the Minister is going to consult on training. How about you, Prime Minister? Why don't you consult?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are not going to tell Atlantic Canadians to move to Toronto. A Liberal royal commission tried that in 1957, and it failed then and it would fail again.

Ms. Clancy: I could not vote in 1957.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend said that she was not born in 1957. I was only a child myself, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Clancy: I said I could not vote. I was born.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I was and I probably have a better memory than all and any of you. Perhaps the Prime Minister could answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asks a question—and perhaps given her political background she would want a more authoritative voice than one from this side of the Chamber—with regard to attitudes in Atlantic Canada. Perhaps I could refer her to a recent statement in The Financial Post which stated: "The Canada–U. S. Free Trade Agreement is already starting to reverse the fortunes of Atlantic Canada, New Brunswick Premier Frank McKenna said yesterday— APEC figures show planned spending on projects of more than $10 million each has jumped 25 per cent since 1988 to $48.5 billion. A third of those projects will—get their start in 1989." I share the enthusiasm of Liberal Premier McKenna for the well-being of Atlantic Canada and not the pessimism of a lady from Halifax.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

IMPACT OF ANNUAL REPORT ON SERVICE

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. This morning the Minister tabled the corporate plan for Canada Post and its annual report. I was impressed by the amazing if not unbelievable turnaround in the financial position of the corporation.

I would like to ask the Minister: What impact will that financial turnaround have on what Canadians really care about and what they demand from Canada Post, that is, service?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post announced today a profit of $96 million.

In reaching that first profit in 30 years, it has improved its on time delivery rate to 96 per cent as established by outside auditors, Clarkson Gordon. A recent Gallup poll established that 97 per cent of rural Canadians think Canada Post service is excellent. Canada Post even passed The Toronto Sun delivery test. We have just started.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION OF POSTAL RATE INCREASE

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, with the announcement this morning, the Government has introduced a new tax. Will the Minister explain why he intends to use the Canada Post system as a new means of taxation by grabbing $300 million surplus for its general revenue?

Will the Minister cancel the increase in postage stamps projected on January 1, since it obviously does not need an increase to operate Canada Post?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party cannot stand success. After years and years and billions of taxpayers money poured into the Post Office finally the taxpayers are going to get a return on their investment.

In view of the fact that 80 per cent of revenues for Canada Post comes from business, the Hon. Member is suggesting that we should continue to penalize taxpayers, continue to have them subsidize business through the Post Office. We think the taxpayers have earned, after 30 years of billions of dollars of subsidies, the dividends coming to them.

EQUALIZATION OF SERVICES

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the proposed $300 million tax grab, I would like to note, does not even meet the legislation. However, Canada Post was established to provide a service for Canadians, a service which should be provided equally, yet today it is far from equal.

• (1450)

In all communities, we see supermailboxes, door-to-door delivery, letter carriers, and green box service. There are different levels of service depending on what street one lives on. Will the Minister provide quality service and equality for all Canadians? Will he eliminate the inferior service provided by supermailboxes and the like?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member did not hear my comments about the Gallup poll that showed that 97 per cent of rural Canadians think the postal service is excellent and that 90 per cent of those who live in communities where the service was changed in the last four years think it is as good or better than it was before.

Why in heaven's name is the Hon. Member advocating going back to something the people believe is worse than what they have today?

MUSEUM OF CIVILIZATION

OPENING CEREMONIES

Mr. Al Horning (Okanagan Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications and is with regard to the screening of The First Emperor at the opening ceremonies of the new Museum of Civilization.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary advise the House whether or not this film is being withdrawn and, if so, why it would not be shown on June 27? Has the withdrawal been a result of pressure from External Affairs?

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for a cogent and timely question—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: It is just what the Hon. Member has suggested it is, and I think the House ought to listen to the answer.

Mr. Edwards: I will try to give a cogent and timely response. The film has not been withdrawn. It was deemed inappropriate by the Minister of Communications, in consultation with other Members of the Government including the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and officials of the Museum of Civilization and the National Film Board, to have a celebration just short days after this House passed a unanimous resolution condemning the actions of the Government of China. This is a Government to Government project.

However, I am pleased to advise that once the celebration of the opening of the museum is behind us, the public will have an opportunity to judge the film on its artistic merits and it will begin its screening at the museum on July 4. The withdrawal is not the result of any pressure. It was a decision of the Minister of Communications.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DRAFTER OF PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO ACT

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. During the 1988 election campaign, the Government promised that social programs would be enhanced, not cut. It also left the distinct impression with Canadians that no social programs would be affected by the Free Trade Agreement and that Canada could expect a level playing field.

Is it not true that Americans see government involvement in unemployment insurance benefits as a subsidy and wanted Canada to withdraw its involvement in unemployment insurance during the free trade negotiations?

Is it not also true that the Government dutifully complied with their demands, even before the negotiations on subsidies started?

Who drafted the unemployment insurance changes, the Minister of Employment and Immigration or the Minister for International Trade under the thumb of the Americans?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the answer is quite clearly, of course, that unemployment insurance was never discussed or negotiated in the course of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade negotiations.

The United States has never made a representation to us about the unemployment insurance program, and all we have had since the FTA came into effect are complaints from Americans that they are not up to our competitive standards because they do not have our medicare and other social programs. Those poor devils are suffering because we have those programs.

Mr. Speller: I remind the Minister that it was he who said that there would be no changes to the unemployment insurance system.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister.

The Government knew all the time that it would make changes to the unemployment insurance system. In fact, at the same time as government Members were running across Canada saying that these programs were a sacred trust, they were secretly giving them away at the negotiation table.

Is the reason the Government has not started negotiations with Americans on subsidies that it has already given away the farm, as is the case with unemployment insurance, and now it has no bargaining position left?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, no changes in unemployment insurance are as a result of the Free Trade Agreement.

If the position taken by Hon. Members opposite is that all changes in social programs made since the election are as a result of free trade, then they will want to give credit for the $865 million increase in payments to seniors, the $307 million increase in the Canada Assistance Program, the $26 million increase in family allowances, the $127 million increase for initiatives relating to seniors, AIDS, the child care initiatives fund and Bill C-31.

What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. It is time opposition Members recognized the fact that the Government's commitment to social programs remains strong and is growing.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SERVICES IN COMMUNITIES

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the matter of Canada Post's profit of $96 million.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: I appreciate the applause.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Given the time that remains, perhaps we could get on with the question.

Mr. Taylor: At this time when communities across Canada are organizing to save rural post offices and to get door-to-door delivery to the hundreds of thousands of people who are being denied door-to-door delivery, how can the Minister responsible for Canada Post justify $96 million in profits generated by the corporation when real people are organizing to improve the service in their own communities?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, across Canada today in weekly newspapers there will be an advertisement with the following heading:

> "People in my community are benefiting from this new postal service. It's good for the community."

This is signed by 80 reeves and mayors from across Canada, including Mr. Edward Kjargaard, Reeve of Alticane, Saskatchewan, which is in the Hon. Member's riding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: I am sure Canadians will take a lot of heart in the gloating of the Minister and Members on the other side.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, the mandate given to Canada Post by Parliament in 1981 was for the corporation to deliver a service and to work toward self-sufficiency.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Taylor: Is the Minister not taking liberties with the mandate Parliament gave Canada Post when he takes self-sufficiency and turns it into a $96 million profit at the expense of services?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, service has increased everywhere in Canada. The satisfaction level of the public has gone up. The price of stamps has risen less than inflation and is therefore down in real terms, and the post office has made a profit. What terrible, terrible news, Mr. Speaker!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOW LEVEL TEST FLIGHTS OVER NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Ministers of National Defence, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. The Arctic is increasingly becoming a focal point for provocative international defence manoeuvres. Yesterday, the Minister of National Defence announced his approval of low level test flights over a vast area of the Northwest Territories. Given that the Dene, Métis and members of the Government of the Northwest Territories emphatically object to these outrageous military war games for environmental as well as other reasons, I would like to know whether the Minister consulted with these groups on his decision, or whether the groups were even advised of his commitment to the Americans. If they were, why were they not listened to?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I explained to the House yesterday, the request for these routes came from the binational command of NORAD. The routes were studied since 1985 by a private environmental firm hired by the Government of Canada. We held meetings and discussions with the Dene Nation. We held meetings with the Métis Association of the Northwest Territories. We held meetings with the Dene–Métis Negotiation Secretariat. The approval was given by the RERC of the Northwest Territories which is comprised of members made up of the territorial, federal and environmental groups in the Northwest Territories. Because of the discussions and the meetings held in the communities of Fort Resolution, Snowdrift and two other communities in the Northwest Territories, changes were made to the routes on their recommendations and changes were made to the altitude at which the exercise would be maintained.

RIGHTS OF ONGOING LAND CLAIMS IGNORED

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in conducting the environmental review, it concluded that the only possible danger was the effect of aircraft noise on people and animals. Given the fact that much of the land area affected in the Northwest Territories is currently the subject of land claims negotiations with Canada's first people, specifically the Dene and Métis, why did the Minister choose to ignore this opposition, especially in light of the erosion of the right to negotiate ongoing land claims. Why were these rights ignored?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, I am fully aware of the negotiations that take place between Canada and the Dene–Métis Secretariat in the Northwest Territories. As the Hon. Member should know, the routes were changed after consultation. There is still an opportunity for change if it is shown there would be animal activity that may be encroached upon by the routes.

The Hon. Member should listen and I will try to answer her question. The air routes belong to Canada. They do not belong to the Territories or to the Provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta or British Columbia.

The Member for the New Democratic Party left the wrong impression yesterday. We have six low-level routes in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Routes!

Mr. McKnight: There are 100 routes in the United States. Some people can question my pronunciation but they cannot question the consultation and the opportunity that was given to those people in the Northwest Territories.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

SPECIAL PROGRAM SOUGHT FOR NATIONALS OF CHINA TO APPLY FOR LANDING RIGHTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Considering the several thousand young people from People's Republic of China now studying in Canada who may fear to return because of that Government's violent repression and who may wish greater assurance than extension of their visas, will the Government create a special program for nationals of the People's Republic of China in Canada as was done for Poles, Salvadorans, Iranians and others, by offering them an opportunity to apply for landing within Canada with relaxed employment criteria?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister made it very clear a week ago I think, in Vancouver, in public comments there that we had no intention of sending students here from China back to any kind of danger in China. Pursuant to that undertaking by the Government of Canada, the federal Government has begun a series of discussions with non-governmental organizations and with provincial Governments. There will be a meeting here in Ottawa tomorrow involving the provinces, the federal Government and non-governmental organizations that will focus particularly on the situation of the students. I expect it will result in two committees being established. One is an assistance committee designed to deal primarily with financial assistance but also with other kinds of assistance. A second will be an advisory committee established for the purpose of making available advice on a wide range of questions that may come from the students of Chinese origin in Canada.

In addition, we have made it clear that any application for refugee status would be considered in a most sympathetic way.

HANDLING OF REFUGEE APPLICATIONS—HUMANITARIAN EMPHASIS URGED

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the Minister's answer and I know the Chinese community will appreciate it. With regard to refugee applications, considering the danger of overloading the new system which is already overloaded, will the Minister and the Government consider asking the immigration officials to give sympathetic consideration at the front-end humanitarian review before the rest of the process is followed on a refugee application?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we will consider seriously every practical step that can be taken to ensure that we can deal expeditiously and sympathetically with applications for refugee status.

Mr. Nunziata: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. We are already over time and I think we must conclude.

I know there are Members seeking points of order. I am aware of it and I will get to all of them. The Hon. Member for Beauce.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. BERNIER—CLARIFICATION CONCERNING STATEMENT PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I wish to correct the mistake I made at 2.15 p.m. when I read my statement. I inadvertently, and I repeat, inadvertently, mentioned the name of two provinces which had not yet ratified the Meech Lake Accord. I referred to Manitoba and British Columbia, and of course I meant Manitoba and New Brunswick. This is an impardonable slip of the tongue, especially since, you Mr. Speaker, represent that particular region. I do apologize!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West is rising on a point of order. However, I have another point and perhaps I could deal with it first. I will come, of course, to the Hon. Member for Windsor West in just a moment.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mrs. Catterall).

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS REFERRED TO BY MINISTER FOR INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order under Citation 495 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Sixth Edition and I refer to yesterday's Hansard and to statements by the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) in response to a question as reported at page 3019.

The Minister rose to respond to a question with a document in his hand and referred in his answer to:

> a list seven or eight pages long setting out plants that have expanded and factories that have expanded—as well as new investments that have been made because of the Free Trade Agreement.

The Minister then proceeded to quote from those documents, both names and figures. He went on to say:

> There is page after page of examples that we can give.

I believe that the Citation referred to requires that the Minister not refer to such documents unless he is prepared to lay them on the table of the House and I would ask that those documents be laid on the table. I have not looked up the specific Hansard references but this is perhaps the fourth or fifth time the Minister has done this. I would like to ask that in fact he table all similar documents that he has referred to in the House.

• (1510)

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I did indeed refer to a list which I had. It was seven or eight pages long. It set out the plants that have expanded, factories that have expanded and new investments made. I do not have it here today. I prefer not to table any such list. I prefer to drop the names out one by one, or two at a time. Why should I table all my ammunition at once just because the Hon. Member wants to have it all tabled at once?

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Minister has all this ammunition and he had it in a document in his hand to which he referred, then of course he must table it. If it were some other kind of note made for Question Period, that is something else. I am not particularly helped by the Hon. Minister's representations. Perhaps he could assist me further.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, this was information and notes that were prepared for me for Question Period. Surely I am not to be stripped naked of my notes.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the rules and precedents of this House must apply to the Minister for International Trade to the same extent as they apply to anybody else. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to apply these precedents to the Minister for International Trade.

We saw the Minister get up and read from sheets of paper. He was not using them as notes. If he has confidence in the information he was presenting in Question Period, I do not see why he would not be delighted to table these documents pursuant to the rules.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, in support of the discussion raised around this very important point, the Minister referred directly to the documents and used the documents in response to a question. It is the right of this House to have access to those documents. Otherwise, the whole use of documents in this House will be abrogated by ministerial choice rather than rules of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister has made it very clear that he was reading from notes prepared for use in Question Period. The Hon. Minister made good use of those notes. As he has indicated, he is under no obligation to table them. I think the House should take the word of the Minister that those were notes prepared for Question Period.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am going to settle this immediately. I want to put it to the Hon. Minister very directly that if this was a document from which he was quoting, then of course it must be tabled. If it was preparatory notes for Question Period, then I do not think the rule extends that far. Could I have the Hon. Minister assure me one way or the other?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, these were notes prepared for Question Period so that I could answer the untruthful assertions made by Members of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: I am not interested in getting into further argument. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray)? I hope the Hon. Member will keep in mind what I have just said. I do not want further argument. I want to know whether anybody can help me in making an appropriate procedural decision.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I first of all invite you to review Hansard and, perhaps more important, the electronic television record and reserve judgment until you have done so.

Second, I ask you to ask the Minister to withdraw the language he just used in referring to Members of the Opposition as making untruthful statements. I think that is unparliamentary and that word should be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister would perhaps like to respond.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Question Period is absolutely full to the top of the barrel with completely false and untrue statements made by Members of the Opposition in introducing their questions. That is just a fact. I have nothing to withdraw about that.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Could he tell us about his answers too, while he is at it?

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, on this point of order, we are not discussing the relevant matters of judgment of whether or not under somebody's opinion a statement is true or untrue. We are asking that the rules of the House be applied. When you asked the Minister to give us a statement of his assurance, he went far enough to accuse the Member of saying an untruth rather than responding to your question. I think that is an offence to this House.

I would suggest the question be put again to the Minister and, hopefully, we can have a ministerial response on that basis.

Mr. Speaker: I think that perhaps the best way of dealing with this is for me to consider the matter. First of all, there has been a suggestion made that the Hon. Minister is quoting from some document. The Minister has stated very clearly that he is not quoting from any document but is quoting from notes preparatory to Question Period. As all Hon. Members know, there are all kinds of things in notes preparatory to Question Period. I will take the admonition of the Hon. Member from Windsor West, who has been here a lot longer than most of us, and I will consult Hansard.

On the other issue, the question comes down to this: As the Hon. Minister said, Members on the opposition side have been intentionally distorting the truth. I have some doubt about that, but I will consider what has been said. I will report back to the House as soon as I can.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to cause you to have to look anything up unnecessarily. I withdraw whatever was found to be objectionable from my statement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, respectfully, I never did hear you recognize the Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) yet his mike was turned live. I wonder now if the people throwing the switches are the arbiters of who is going to be recognized.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock (Mr. Friesen) is of course absolutely correct. By some inexplicable happening, the Hon. Member, who was of course the Premier of the Province of British Columbia, was recognized without even the Speaker of the House intervening in any way, shape, or form. I would hope that the House would be very gracious about this because I do not know how I can unrecognize the Hon. Member.

An Hon. Member: He spoke by divine intervention.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member spoke of divine intervention. I cannot resist asking him whether it was from the Old Testament or the New Testament.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, I want to assure the Hon. Conservative Member who worries about such things that it is obvious that I have been fully recognized by the Speaker and I deeply appreciate his courtesy.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Government House Leader if he could give us the customary statement of government business for the next several days? I realize he is working on this and there are consultations going on. However, if he is able to, perhaps he could outline in a preliminary way some of his priorities for the next two weeks.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wish to report that tomorrow we will resume debate on Bill C-2, the Transport Safety Bill, at report stage. There is some indication that we may complete that tomorrow. If so, we will continue with second reading of Bill C-10, Forgiveness of Debts.

Monday, we shall commence the day with debate on Bill C-15, Plant Breeders' Rights, second reading. For the balance of the day, the debate will depend upon the progress that is made in that debate and discussions between the Parties.

On Tuesday, debate will commence on Bill C-22, amendments to the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. The balance of the day will depend upon discussions between the Parties.

On Wednesday, the entire day will be devoted to resumed debate on Bill C-21, the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

• (1520)

As my hon. friend has indicated, there are discussions under way with respect to making as much progress as possible on the Order Paper by June 30. We would hope to have an agreement in the very near future as to what can be done by that time. I do not believe I am being presumptious in suggesting that Members on both sides of the House should be in contact with their House Leaders with respect to the daily agenda. We are making every effort to adjust the agenda in order to accommodate spokespersons in the opposition Parties vis-à-vis the Bills that we wish to move along through the Order Paper.

Ms. Copps: I understood from the government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) that Bill C-22 would be called quite early. We were under the impression that the deadline for the Montreal Protocol implementation is July 1 and the clock is ticking very quickly.

In the meantime, there are 25,000 refrigerators in Canada releasing coolants that contain CFCs which are entering the environment and killing the ozone layer. Obviously, we will want to have more than one speaker on this particular issue. We would like to co-operate with the Government, but it should have called the Bill before. The Government should bring this Bill to the House in order that we can discuss some of the devastating effects of the CFC releases that are occurring as we speak.

Mr. Lewis: We are discussing those very things with the House Leader of the Liberal Party and with the House Leader of the New Democratic Party. As I indicated in my comments, we intend to bring that particular Bill on for debate on Tuesday at 11 a.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S. O. 81—WEST COAST SALMON AND HERRING INDUSTRY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stupich:

> That this House reaffirms the Government's pledge to the West Coast salmon and herring industry to "not allow jobs, historically established, to be threatened" by any government response to GATT rulings.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose at 12.59 p.m. the Hon. Member for Cariboo—Chilcotin (Mr. Worthy) had completed his speech. The question and comment period following the Hon. Member's speech is now available to Members, otherwise the Chair is prepared to recognize Hon. Members on debate.

On questions and comments the Hon. Member for North Island—Powell River (Mr. Skelly).

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): The previous speaker listened to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) state that this Government and he as Minister were not prepared to preserve uncompetitive Canadian jobs in the fishing industry. By "uncompetitive jobs", he is talking about Joyce Brown's job in Prince Rupert. She is here today. She has been a widow for the last 11 years. She has three children aged 11, 14 and 17. She works in the B.C. Packers plant in Prince Rupert. It is one of the largest and most efficient plants in the world.

The aspect of her job that the Minister sees as uncompetitive is that she works for $14 an hour. She is protected by a union agreement with safety committees and all the supporting facilities in the plant. In addition, when she retires she will have the opportunity to receive a pension.

In order to make her job competitive, the Minister of Fisheries wants Joyce Brown and her colleagues to work for $6 an hour, which is the rate in the United States. The Minister of Fisheries wants to get rid of the union in that plant. He wants to get rid of the pension plan.

Mr. Siddon: Who said that?

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Those are the consequences of sending those fish to the United States.

The clarification I would like from the previous speaker is that he will stand up with Joyce Brown and the other women who work in that plant, who are here today attempting to protect their jobs from the actions of the Minister of Fisheries and this Government, and state that he is not prepared to see those fish go across the line, and not prepared to see Joyce Brown and her fellow workers out on the street.

The Government and the Minister have cut back the unemployment insurance benefits. When the fishing season is over, she will not be able to qualify for unemployment insurance.

Mr. Friesen: That is wrong, and you know it is wrong.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): She will wind up on welfare with her three kids because of what the Minister has done. She is standing up here today in Ottawa saying: "Please don't do this to me and my kids, and please don't do this to the community".

Mr. Friesen: You know that is wrong.

Mr. Crosbie: You are a damn liar.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): The Prince Rupert Chamber of Commerce has stated the equivalent thing in a brief. Is the Member prepared to stand up with NDP Members, stand up with the UFAW members and state that these jobs are competitive and effective in preserving and raising families in those communities? Would the Hon. Member be prepared to stand alongside those women, or is he going to listen to the balderdash spread by the Minister of Fisheries and the rest of the Cabinet Ministers in this Government?

Mr. Worthy: I sure will stand up with those women. Some of the members from Prince Rupert spent the lunch hour with me. It is not this Government they have to be concerned about when it comes to their jobs. I think the Hon. Member is old enough to remember the time when his colleague was leading British Columbia back in 1974, and he should understand what real concern about jobs is all about.

The Hon. Member referred to the ladies from Prince Rupert. I know they are here and that they have real concerns. People from all departments of the Government have been listening to those concerns. Every one of those people have stated that they are competitive, that they have the best quality fish in the world. Yesterday, the Hon. Member's colleague yelled across the floor at me in the Standing Committee that our industry in British Columbia is the best in the world. If the Hon. Member really believes that, he will know that it is going to be competitive.

The quality of our fish is the best in the world. Our workers are the best in the world. The industry recognizes that it can afford to pay the wages the workers have and still be competitive. While we do listen to them, and we are concerned for the jobs of all people from British Columbia, in fact across Canada, I do not accept that the people in our industry cannot be competitive with people around the world.

The Hon. Member knows that 75 per cent to 80 per cent of all of the salmon that those workers process is exported to other countries around the world. I do not accept what the Hon. Member states, but I certainly will stand up with the workers any day the Hon. Member asks.

Mr. Friesen: We have just heard from the Member for Comox about job loss in the fishing industry.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Correction. This guy can't get his facts right on any given day. It is North Island—Powell River.

Mr. Friesen: I apologize, Comox—Powell River.

Mr. Crosbie: He is just as obnoxious under either name.

Mr. Friesen: I do want to put on the record what is going on in the fishing industry. If the Hon. Member wants to talk about job loss, I suggest he looks at the statistics.

In British Columbia for the fish processing industry shore workers in 1984 there were 2,972 jobs. In 1985 there were 3,695 jobs. In 1986 there were 3,788 jobs. In 1987 there were 3,746 jobs. In 1988 there were 4,051 jobs. That is an increase of approximately 33 per cent in jobs in a matter of four years. The Hon. Member from Comox has the nerve to talk about job losses in the fishing industry.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Thelma Peterson is here from Prince Rupert. She works in the fish plant.

Mr. Siddon: She has a job.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): She has a job, but the reason she is here in Ottawa is that her job is threatened. They are already trucking fish out of Prince Rupert. Her husband is disabled and she is the sole support of her family. What we have is the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) putting her job out in the cold.

• (1530)

Mr. Siddon: She has a job.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): This Government, by increasing the qualifying period for unemployment insurance, is going to ensure that Thelma Peterson and her colleagues are not going to be able to qualify for unemployment insurance. Those who are lucky enough to qualify will get reduced weekly benefits.

I want to ask the Member to stand up again with these women and say that he is not prepared to see them lose their unemployment insurance and still be the sole support of their families—in this case a woman with a disabled husband and in the other case, a single parent with three kids—say that he is not prepared to see them go on welfare. Is the Member prepared to stand up and say to this Government that the unemployment insurance proposals stink, that they are harmful for those people,and he is not prepared to see itimpose regulations that would allow that fish to be trucked for processing in the United States. Fish is already being trucked from Prince Rupert to the State of Washington. Those trucks are going by their plant full of fish down to the State of Washington already.

I would ask the Member to stand up and declare that he is not in favour of those unemployment regulations, that he is not in favour of the regulations put in by the Minister of Fisheries that will cost them their job, cost them unemployment insurance access and do irreparable harm to the community. The Prince Rupert Chamber of Commerce echoes these exact words. Why is the Member not listening?

Mr. Worthy: Madam Speaker, I am listening and the Government is listening. I can assure the Hon. Member these people he refers to will be far further ahead with this Government. They do not want a lot more unemployment insurance. They want meaningful work. They want more and better jobs. They know that they will get that through this Government. There are examples in the fishing industry, the industry of the people who are here visiting us this week. As they have explained it, they have untold tonnes of groundfish and whitefish that never get inside the plant doors. They want to see that fish and those jobs in British Columbia. There are salmon that are being plundered on the high seas that belong to British Columbia. It is those jobs that they want to see in British Columbia and on our coast. It is the tens and hundreds of millions of dollars being poured into the salmonid programs by this Government that will bring more fish back to those shores. It is those jobs that they want on their coast.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for question and comment is now over. Resuming debate.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Madam Speaker, as I believe you have agreed, we in the Official Opposition have agreed to divide our time into two periods of 10 and 5 versus one of 20 and 10.

I am very pleased to rise and speak on this motion today to protect the west coast of Canada jobs related to the herring and the salmon industry. This motion has to do with free trade, and it has to do with the fisheries.

Mr. Crosbie: It has nothing to do with free trade. What bunk.

Mr. Mifflin: Since the passage of the Free Trade Agreement, the policy on trade is reasonably clear, if not the consequences. I wish I could say the same for the fisheries policy. If I were to ask what is the fisheries policy of Canada today, I wonder who would answer for the Government. Would it be the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) or would it be the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie)? That question is more than rhetoric because I have sat in this House and I have observed the policy questions on the fishery go back and forth like a political tennis ball. No wonder the policy is not clear.

Today we are discussing the situation in which the Conservative Government surrendered to demands by the United States under the GATT rules for virtually unrestricted access to processed Canadian salmon and herring. These new rules, conceded on April 26 of this year, invalidated long-standing rules prohibiting the export of unprocessed salmon and herring. They require now only that fish be deposited at a designated landing station for counting prior to export. In the short term these changes threaten the loss of thousands of jobs in the processing sector in British Columbia. In the longer term they create a dangerous precedent that could signal the undermining of Canada's ability to manage and conserve valuable fisheries resources.

As if that were not enough, even this bold move was unsatisfactory to the United States Government. It threatened massive retaliation under U.S. trade laws unless Canada would guarantee that our fish could be purchased by the U.S. without it touching Canadian soil. What happened then? This Government, apparently frightened by the prospect of what Big Brother would do, offered to send even this vastly conceded issue to arbitration under the dispute mechanism of the Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Crosbie: It has not got to arbitration. Get your facts straight.

Mr. Mifflin: It is going to arbitration, and the tricky part here is that the arbitrators must determine whether or not the rule changes are consistent with U.S. law, not Canadian law.

Mr. Crosbie: My God, you are mixed up. This is absolute madness.

Mr. Mifflin: Not international law, but U.S. law. More and more we are being made to look like second-class citizens in our own country. That is not a very good feeling as we prepare to celebrate Canada Day with our friends and family across this country.

Now despite the many guarantees that were given on free trade during the election campaign, there is a major implication for the East Coast fishery. Now that the U.S. has successfully challenged Canadian restrictions on the export of unprocessed fish from the West Coast, the logical next step for them would be to challenge the same type of Canadian restriction on the export of unprocessed fish from the East Coast. Whether this is because of trade policies or fisheries policies, it does not matter. Canadian fishery workers are being adversely affected by external forces, something over which this Government, any sovereign Government should have control.

I submit that just as the goal of Canada's defence policy should be to protect Canada and the interest and well-being of all Canadians, so should a fisheries policy be designed clearly and unequivocally first and foremost to protect fishermen and all those Canadians involved in the fishing industry. It is an industry that represents billions of dollars and an industry the scope and significance of which reflects Canada being the world's largest exporter of fish.

I could not believe my ears this morning when the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans suggested that we were small time on the world scale. We are the world's largest exporter of fish. No wonder we are in so much trouble. Does our present policy protect fishermen? That is the key question. I have just indicated what it will do to B.C. fishermen. What will it do to East Coast fishermen, to Newfoundland fishermen? Ask a fisherman in Bonavista Bay, Trinity Bay or Conception Bay. They wake up every morning and here is what they see. They see, first of all, signs of mismanagement. They see a giveaway of a portion of the northern cod stock in order to entice France to submit the St-Pierre and Miquelon fishing boundaries dispute to binding international arbitration just like the giveaway of processing jobs in British Columbia to the United States.

To add insult to injury, factory trawlers registered in France are harassing Newfoundlanders and their longliners and they are destroying their gear in their own economic zone. They see the hope given in the 1982 Kirby Report for a total allowable catch of 400,000 tonnes reduced to a 1988 level of 255,000 tonnes. A recent recommendation by federal scientists, confirmed by a blue ribbon panel, is that the 1989 catch is going to be further reduced to 125,000 tonnes. I regret to say this, but there are signs of worse to come.

What else do these fishermen see? They see over-fishing by other foreigners, especially the Spanish and the Portuguese. In 1986, when Spain and Portugal joined the European community, the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization, NAFO, allocated 23,200 tonnes to the European community, but the community unilaterally set their own quota of 102,000 tonnes. Then they went away and took 171,000 tonnes. Similarly in 1987, NAFO gave the community 23,000 tonnes. They gave themselves 110,000 tonnes and then they took 140,000 tonnes. They give themselves five times the allocation and then go off to catch seven times the allocation.

Stemming from this mismanagement, with the acknowledgement of the serious depletion of northern cod stocks, they see the possibility of an ecological disaster, one that will not only wreck the economy of Newfoundland but one that will savage communities in Nova Scotia and will affect seriously the coastal communities of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Furthermore, with the announcement of the Government to retire the venerable tracker fleet as part of the CFB Summerside shutdown, they see a cut-back in surveillance and control so crucial to police these waters and the 250 floating trawler fish plants in our own inshore and offshore economic zone. These aircraft provide 800 of the 900 flying hours of fisheries surveillance in the Atlantic. Given the mismanagement and the ecological catastrophe issues that we are facing, there should be at least a reasonable expectation of the opposite.

They see the loss of jobs despite what has been said here. There are 65,000 registered fishermen in Atlantic Canada and 30,000 plant workers in 900 plants.

There are 14,000 people employed in the B.C. fish harvesting and processing industry. These jobs, as we see here today, are being seriously jeopardized.

There is something else that we see. We see band-aid regulations and policies, perhaps well intentioned, but these policies confuse and anger our fishermen. I want to give you one example, Madam Speaker.

We have in Newfoundland a new crab closure policy for the Newfoundland region which came into effect on January 31 this year. In all fairness to the Department and its officials, the objective of this new policy was to ensure uniformity of closures throughout all districts and to reduce the risk of quota overruns. The new policy stated that at midnight on the pre-announced closure date, no crab would be permitted to be landed. That is to say that if there was any crab found in the crab pots, they had to be left in the ocean. They could not be retained.

The key to making this procedure work was that ample warning time be given to the fishermen. Ample time depends on a number of things, such as the number of traps set, the size of the vessel and weather conditions, all individually variable and variable as a combination. What might be acceptable to a 65-footer with 800 traps over a calm period would clearly not be ample for a 40-footer in rough weather with a different number of traps.

The end result in Bonavista Bay last week was that the time given was such that when the quota was reached and the closure was announced, many fishermen did not have sufficient time to clear their pots and return their catch for processing ashore. They had to dump them instead. We have a situation in which the crab were caught but the fishermen had to get up in the middle of the night, steam out, haul their pots, return the crab to the ocean and come back without their catch. They were angry and upset. I think they had every reason to be so. Under the conditions and with the new policy in force more warning time was needed.

Are these policies protecting our fishermen? They do not think so. Quite frankly, I do not think so. I am sure that there are Members in the House on this side and opposite who do not think so either. These fishermen are honest, hard-working and trusting people. I believe they have been let down by the Government. They would certainly not agree with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans that they never had it so good.

I could go on relating these ills from now until the House shuts down on June 30, if it closes down then. Fishermen have to cope with an awful lot. However, I do not want to look backward. Life is interesting looking backward but, unfortunately, it has to be lived forward.

What we need is an overhaul of our fisheries policy that will offer protection for fishermen. Plainly and simply, we need a fisheries policy that will guarantee jobs for our fishermen and our plant workers. We need to raise the profile of the fishing industry so that it becomes an issue of national importance and concern. Finally, we need accompanying and foreign policies that will implement and support our fisheries policies, ones that will make our industry healthy, viable and vibrant.

As a Member hailing from a riding so predominantly dependent on the fishery, I strongly support this motion that this House reaffirms the Government's pledge to the West Coast salmon and herring industry not to allow jobs historically established to be threatened by any government response to GATT rulings.

Mr. Crosbie: I thought that this was a debate about the West Coast salmon and herring industry. The hon. gentleman opposite spent all his time talking about the fishery on the East Coast. These two fisheries are some 3,000 miles apart. If the hon. gentleman knows as much about the West Coast fishery as he knows about the East Coast fishery, God help us.

When I get to my own remarks I will expand on this issue. The dispute about the salmon and herring regulations on the West Coast of Canada has absolutely nothing to do with the Free Trade Agreement. It was a complaint initiated in 1986. It was a complaint brought under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, not brought under American legislation or under the Free Trade Agreement, which did not then exist.

This is a dispute about what the GATT international trading rules mean or do not mean in relation to certain regulations. When this matter goes, by the way, to a panel under the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement, the panel is not going to consider American law at all. American law does not come into the matter. It will not be considered.

What the panel will be considering is Chapter 18. It will examine the consistency of Canada's landing requirements for Pacific salmon and herring with our obligations under the GATT. That is what it will be examining.

The hon. gentleman referred to the protection of fishermen. I will be able to elaborate on this in my own remarks. I want to point out to him that if Canada ignores the results of the GATT panel with reference to these regulations on the West Coast of Canada, the United States would be justified under the GATT in taking retaliatory action against Canada. Whatever the amount of the trade damage was that it had suffered as a result of our continuing with regulations that were GATT inconsistent and damaging it, it could take counter measures against Canadian exports to the United States. The Americans could choose whatever Canadian exports they like to take those counter retaliatory measures against. They might well choose to counter retaliate against East Coast fishery products—lobster from the East Coast, or cod, or whatever. I would like to hear what the hon. gentleman would be saying about the situation because Canada ignored a GATT panel decision, and his own fishermen on the East Coast were injured as a result. I would like to hear what the hon. gentleman would then say about that particular situation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. As this is a five-minute period of questions and comments perhaps the Hon. Minister would allow the Hon. Member some time for rebuttal on what the Minister has already said.

Mr. Mifflin: Madam Speaker, I do not really think that there is much to rebut. I thank my hon. friend across the floor for his comment on my knowledge of the fishing industry. I have to remind him that I grew up in a family that had been in the fishing business for seven generations. I am sure the Minister would agree that some of this has to rub off on one at some time.

The one question or query I have in my mind is this. It is still not clear to me, as I am sure is not clear to Members over here, and members of the NDP, precisely why we had to go to a dispute settlement mechanism after we agreed under the GATT that something should have been done anyway.

We are adding insult to injury. It is no wonder that these people are upset. I say once more, I more strongly support this motion the more I hear from Members opposite.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's.

Mr. Crosbie: More repetition.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Madam Speaker, I say to my friend from St. John's West, we will see whether it is repetition or not. I will let him decide. He has the opportunity to follow me, I would think. I look forward to hearing what he has to say.

First, I want to congratulate the hon. gentleman from Nanaimo—Cowichan for bringing this motion forward, and for putting it down in such eloquent terms. For the eloquence he cannot take all the credit, I say to him. The eloquence actually belongs to another Member of this Chamber. We ought to give credit where it is due. The eloquence is that of the gentleman who happens right now to be the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon). The words are largely his. It was he who said first that the Government would "not allow jobs, historically established, to be threatened" by government actions.

• (1550)

Those were his words, Madam Speaker. I congratulate my friend for Nanaimo—Cowichan for putting down this resolution in words which are clearly going to be acceptable, certainly to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon). If there ever was a motherhood resolution, this has to be it. It calls upon the House to reaffirm the Government's pledge not to allow the salmon and herring industry to be threatened by any Government response to GATT rulings. I would expect that the entire Government would want to support that particular resolution. I do.

I would like to state in the next few minutes why I do. I have had some visits, as I am sure many Members have had in the past few days, from people who have come all the way from Prince Rupert and from other parts of British Columbia to acquaint us with some of the details of the situation which they face. I represent a fishing constituency which I believe is the largest one in the country in terms of numbers of persons who depend on employment in the fishery, either in catching the resource or processing the resource. There are 16,000 such persons in Burin—St. George's. I claim to represent the largest fishing riding in all of Canada.

I found common cause when I heard those people from Prince Rupert and other parts of British Columbia, and when I saw the thoroughness with which they had prepared their case. I believe many Members of the House will be familiar with this particular document, an appeal to Canadians, which I hold here. Also for the edification of the gentleman who is the Minister of Fisheries, I will quote some more of his words. On November 17, 1987, he said that: "I give you my assurance that those jobs are safe." Of course, he was talking about the jobs in B.C. which are very much the subject of this motion today. "I give you my assurance that those jobs are safe." That was November 17, 1987.

By May 3, 1989, a month or so ago, he was saying something quite different: "I have never said the specific jobs would remain intact." I submit that these are two completely mutually exclusive statements. He either means one or the other. He cannot mean both unless the gears are changed along the way. Clearly, that is what has happened in this particular case. The people who prepared this brochure are quite justified in labelling that part of their brochure the betrayal of an industry.

Had I the time, Madam Speaker, I could talk to you at some length about the betrayal of the fishing industry on the East Coast. However, today, let us stay for a moment with the West Coast. Before we do, let us go to a gentleman from South Shore in whose riding is located the fish plant at Lockeport. He has said quite recently, less than a month ago, on May 16 that: "We are exporting 1,000 jobs a year from Nova Scotia along with our roundfish". That was from a Member in the same Party as the Minister of Fisheries, who lauded his Government today and the administration which he is part of, for how it was getting the best dollar, in his words, how he was seeing to it single-handedly that we were encouraging further processing. I have to say to him, that is not at all what the figures say.

I have this fresh from Statistics Canada just a few minutes ago and it states that in 1988, our primary export in the fishery—that is to say whole, dressed, fillets and blocks—last year for all of Canada 371.9 thousand metric tons. That is the figure to keep in mind. If we compare that to the exports we did in the fishing industry after secondary processing had been affected, that is, smoked, cured, salted, canned and so on, the figure is 204.9 thousand metric tons, or a ratio of approximately two to one. We are still exporting essentially in the unprocessed form two-thirds of all the fish we catch in this country.

Why the Minister of Fisheries can stand there and brag about that escapes me completely. He said something else that needs just a quick rebuttal. He said, and I copied his words down this morning: "Canada is near the top as a competitive nation." He said we are way down from No. 11 and now near the top. I agree with him on one thing. We are way down. I will tell him how far down now. I have this from the World Bank in its latest economic atlas, which compares growth rates for the 1980 to 1987 period. The World Bank states that Canada does not stand first or second, as the Minister is saying, and as the Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs

(Mr. Valcourt) has been saying recently. It does not stand first and second at all.

Here is what the World Bank says. That is the organization that my good friend from St. John's West is going to— I want to be the first to predict this publicly— when he leaves here, which is sooner than a lot of people think. He has got his mind essentially made up, he is going to the World Bank. I believe that he will be the new president of the World Bank. He will then have to espouse those very figures. I say to him today: "Tread softly. Don't do anything and don't say anything which might turn off your prospective employers a year or two down the road." The World Bank stated that: Canada is not in the first or second in terms of growth. In the last eight years, it actually stands forty-sixth. Forty-five countries have managed to grow faster than Canada in the past seven or eight years.

An Hon. Member: What are the names?

Mr. Simmons: Oh, you want some. West Germany, Japan. The Minister wants some more. There are 45. That is not bad.

Nor is Canada at the top of the league among the industrialized countries. The Economist of London, the great right-wing Conservative publication which my friend from Toronto and from St. John's sleep with every night, has the following to say on the subject. It compares the performance of 13 industrialized nations. In the past year, industrial production in Canada has been the second slowest growing of all the 13 industrialized nations in their grouping, underwhelmed only by Great Britain. All the rest, United States, Sweden, West Germany and the others grew faster.

I realize that I do not have very much time left. The Government would do well to adopt just a little bit of ordinary down-to-earth common sense on this particular issue. It would do well to take the advice of those people from Prince Rupert, and the people from my riding in Burgeo, Fortune, Grand Bank and Marystown. They are saying the following to the Government of Canada: One, implement regulations which would ensure Canadian needs for fish are met before any fish is allowed to leave the country unprocessed.

Two, take steps to halt the foreign overfishing of Canadian stocks. The people in my riding know all about the devastating impact the give-away is having on their fishing activity and their opportunity for jobs in the fish plant.

Three, increase spending for the conservation and protection of fish resource and, four, an immediate relief program for shore workers, plant workers and fishermen.

Why does the Government not take some of that common sense advice from the people who are there who know full well what the real problem is. Why is it that the Minister wants to suggest that the whole world is wrong except him? What about his people in B.C. and the Fisheries Council? Are they so wrong when they say: "The response of the Government of Canada to the GATT case paid scant attention to legitimate and long-standing national economic policy." Is he telling his own people they are wrong when they go on to say: "Worse, this case threatens to undermine the potential of the industry to contribute to a strengthening of the economy of British Columbia so that there is full utilization of our natural resources.

• (1600)

Let me close up with this plea to the Minister from British Columbia. Why does he not get off his high horse and stop mouthing every last syllable that the Prime Minister and the people who are orchestrating things for him tell him to say. Why does he not sit down with the people of Prince Rupert, with the fishery council, with the UFFAW and talk to them? Maybe they will knock some sense into his head so that he does not make such a fool of himself when he rises in this Chamber to talk about fish.

Ms. Langan: Madam Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member raised the question of comments made by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon). When I listened to the Minister's speech earlier today, I was quite surprised by it and I wish that the Hon. Member had commented on some of the things that were said. I will ask him to do so now.

The Minister said that it would be kind of silly to truck fish on ice to the United States, yet there is already fish on ice being trucked from Prince Rupert to Washington State as we speak. The Minister also said that Canada is a small producer and he mentioned that it produced 20 per cent of the world's fish. Canada's population is only 0.5 per cent of the world's population and we produce 20 per cent of its fish. Does that make us a small producer?

The Minister said that industry wants to go to Alaska to buy fish. However, the Fisheries Council of B.C. met with the standing committee on Tuesday and in fact said just the opposite. The Minister said we were on the rails to prosperity. With the direction in which this Government is taking us, we will not have any rails. I suspect a better assertion would be that this country is on its way to the ropes.

Mr. Boyer: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member while she is making her points—

An Hon. Member: Then why do it?

Mr. Boyer: The reason I do it, in answer to her colleague, is I believe we are now in the period allowed for comments and questions relating to the previous speaker, a Member from Newfoundland, but we have been hearing comments on statements made by the Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Mission—Coquitlam (Ms. Langan), the way I asked the Minister, to please allow time for the Hon. Member who just spoke to have his say after she has made her comments. I remind her that this is a five minute question and comment period.

Ms. Langan: Madam Speaker, that was one of many questions I was asking the Hon. Member to comment on, and Hansard will show that I prefaced my remarks by asking the Hon. Member if he would comment on the statements made by the Minister earlier today.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I thank my friend from Mission—Coquitlam for her comments and her question and I would be delighted to make a comment. By way of explanation, my friend from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception has spent some time talking about the Minister's very asinine statement about Canada being a small producer.

Mr. Siddon: I didn't say that.

Mr. Simmons: I listened to the Minister and he said that, using those words exactly. I have it in front of me and I ask him to deny this when he receives Hansard. He said, "We are only a small producer".

If we are the largest fish exporter in the entire world, we are hardly small. If we are producing 20 per cent of the total output, that is hardly small. We produce 20 per cent of the world's fish, one in five, 20 per cent, 20 per cent. Has the Minister got it? One fifth of all the fish output in the world is produced in Canada and the Minister has the gall, or should I say kindly the ignorance, to stand there and say that that is small.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think it is in accordance with the orders of this House for Members to take points totally out of context without interpreting what was actually said in that—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Minister may have been raising a point of debate but it is not a point of order. There will be one minute left for the Hon. Member to continue.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I would ask my energetic friends in the NDP not to get overly excited. We may have an opportunity here that we should not miss. Perhaps the Minister is really saying with his spurious point of order that on reflection, he is wrong. Does the Minister deny that he said that we are only a small producer? He wants to dance about context. I would give him an opportunity to dance all he wants if he would retract one thing, if he would say, "I was wrong, we are not a small producer, we are the largest fish exporter in the world". That is true and he admits that.

We want in the Ministry of Fisheries and Oceans a man who will beat his breast for the fishing industry of Canada, not a man who goes around minimizing our magnificent effort in the fishing industry.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Madam Speaker, I would like to address the resolution about the situation with the West coast salmon and herring industry because this is a serious problem that affects a large number of people. It is a problem to which, since I became Minister for International Trade, I have devoted a tremendous amount of time and a lot of concern together with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and his Department.

Why is this an issue that gives us so much difficulty? In the fist place, we want to ensure that the fishermen and fish plant workers of British Columbia retain their jobs and continue to prosper. We see their concern by the fact that a delegation of 40-odd of them came from British Columbia this week to demonstrate their concern in Ottawa. We are concerned about that too, and we are also concerned with the place of Canada in the world. We are concerned that Canada, whose life blood is trade, continues to have the opportunity to gather wealth from trade with the rest of the world. I believe that something like 30 per cent to 35 per cent of the total Gross National Product of Canada comes from our trade with the rest of the world.

We are a small to medium-sized country. We are not one of the world's powerful countries in a military sense. All very large, small and medium-sized countries have to depend upon the world trading system and the international trading rules contained in the GATT to protect them and their trade. If we are not prepared to observe those principles ourselves, we are throwing ourselves to the wolves. When we get thrown to the wolves, it is the medium-sized and the small that will be harmed. That is why the Uruguay Round of the MTN is so important and that is why it is so important that we observe any GATT panel rulings that find against us with respect to whether or not we are observing fair and proper international trade rules.

Why is this so important to the fishery? The figures for the total amount of fish landed in Canada may have been given earlier, and 80 per cent of all the fish landed in Canada is exported. If we do not observe the rules with reference to fishing and fish processing in our own country, what will happen to the 80 per cent of the fish that we export elsewhere in the world? If we do not observe a GATT panel report the U.S. gained when it complained about us with the U.S. being our main market for fish, how can we defend ourselves if the United States wants to take retaliatory action against us in the fishing environment?

An Hon. Member: Five million bucks.

Mr. Crosbie: We do not not know if it is five million bucks or how many bucks it is. We do not know what kind of retaliatory action they may take. It may be tens of millions or it may be 20 million or 100 million. We do not know what retaliatory action they might take.

We exported $2.67 billion worth of fish to the world in 1988 and $1.4 billion worth of that went to the United States, $600 million worth to Japan and $437 million worth to the European Community. That is what we have to keep in mind when we are dealing with this GATT panel ruling. We cannot just say we are going to ignore the rest of the world, we are going to ignore GATT panel rulings, we are going to ignore the fact that these regulations we had in place are clearly contrary to the GATT because they are protective, because they are against the rules of fair trade and free trade. Are we are going to ignore all of that and keep these rules in place?

Mr. Fulton: Why did you send Mickey Mouse to Geneva?

Mr. Crosbie: And then have the Americans say to us, when we complain about the U.S. to GATT and get a panel report, that they will ignore GATT panel reports in our favour. If that is the game the New Democratic Party wants to play, let them sell it to the people of Canada, get into power and see where we will be after five years of their administration with that kind of law of the jungle in trade rules. That is the back rub.

What was the dispute? By the way, talking about fishermen, why do you not listen for a change?

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): I am from North Island.

Mr. Crosbie: You don't make any sense. You are too darned ignorant to listen to anyone else who wants to make a case. Now, pipe down and listen. Do the people who came here and travelled a couple of thousand miles the courtesy of allowing them to listen to my point of view instead of making such an ignorant noise over there.

Let us look at the position of fish processors and fishermen. The figures were given here earlier today. In 1984, when we came into office, there were 17,187 fishermen in B.C. Today, there are 20,613 fishermen. In B.C. in 1984, there were 2,972 fish processing workers. Today there are 4,051. That will show you what is happening to the fishing industry under our government. In Canada the figures are just as favourable; 84,038 fishermen in 1984, 93,551 today. There were 24,372 plant workers in 1984 and 29,253 today. The NDP does not have any monopoly on worrying about people or fish processing workers or fishermen. I was worrying about them and looking after them 20 years ago before that motley crew ever got into this House. That is why fishermen and fish processing workers have been electing me, Madam Speaker, for 20 years and will elect me, I hope, for another 20 years if I go before them. They know that I have their interests at heart, that I am not out just trying to bluff them about their jobs.

I am not out trying to worry them about their jobs like the motley crew opposite, because there has not been one of them who lost their job yet. That is a fact, Madam Speaker. Not one fish processing worker has lost his job in British Columbia yet. But you are filling the workers with alarm and trying to scare them to keep them in your camp, to bluff them and to fool them. Well, Madam Speaker, we are here today to clear their minds for them.

This situation does not affect fishermen at all. The fishermen of British Columbia will still be catching the salmon and herring. This is an issue that might affect most fish processing workers, not the fishermen.

Mr. Simmons: You have got it finally.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): It is time you woke up.

Mr. Crosbie: How does this situation arise? In April, 1986, the U.S. filed a petition under Section 301 of the U.S. Trade Act complaining about an unfair trading practice in Canada. The complaint was that while Canadian fish processors were buying significant quantities of unprocessed Alaskan salmon and herring, U.S. processors were denied any access to unprocessed salmon and herring from British Columbia. That is their complaint. Surely, the Americans have the right to complain about that. We Canadians can buy their unprocessed salmon from Alaska and their unprocessed herring. But they could not come here. That was their complaint.

Regulations under our Fisheries Act prohibited the export of Pacific sockeye, pink salmon and herring unless it was processed in a federally certified plant in British Columbia.

Mr. Fulton: Since 1903.

Mr. Crosbie: Other species such as coho, chinook and chum were not subject to those regulations. In the past we have bought as much as 15 per cent of the salmon processed in British Columbia from Alaska fishermen and as much as 8 per cent of the herring processed in British Columbia was imported from Alaska.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Surplus.

Mr. Crosbie: That is why the Americans were complaining. The Americans were saying "What's sauce for the goose should be sauce for the gander and if you won't allow us to buy your salmon and herring then we are going to make a complaint to the GATT". Long before we got to the Free Trade Agreement which was signed in December, 1988, in November, 1987 the GATT panel made its findings. What were its findings? That our export restrictions were inconsistent with the GATT because the measures were primarily trade restrictive rather than conservation or marketing measures. If we kept those regulations in effect, then the United States is entitled to retaliate against Canada for whatever the Americans say is the amount of the damages they have been suffering. They will retaliate against Canadian exports to the United States and it will cost Canadians—we don't know what Canadians—it will cost other Canadians $20 million, $10 million, $100 million because we would not observe the GATT panel report.

The hon. gentlemen over here say "We don't care about other Canadians. We don't care who gets hurt if we ignore this panel. We don't give a darn about anyone else. Go ahead and ignore the panel, ignore the trade law of the world, give Canada a bad reputation. Go ahead and do all that". You say "We do not give a damn who suffers, but we do not want these regulations changed in British Columbia". That is the alternative of the New Democratic Party and a pretty despicable alternative it is. Completely irresponsible, Madam

Speaker. This is a Party that says it believes in the GATT, that it is a supporter of the GATT. The New Democrats did not want a free trade deal with the United States. They supported the GATT. The Liberal Party supported the GATT.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy) on March 21 said this: "I would like to underline and reinforce the strong and important commitment that this country has to the international trading system and in particular to GATT and to endorse the spirit that the development and enhancement of the international trading system are essential to our own economic and international progress". That is the statement. That is the policy of the Liberal Party. The Liberals are for the GATT except when a chance arises of making some political mischief. Then they are not for the GATT. Then they want to be for the rat, or to be for something that causes the Government trouble instead of helping with the solution. They want to worsen the problem. That is the NDP and that is the Liberal Party. They are for the GATT until it means something, until they can make political mischief and then they are no longer for the GATT, and we hear nothing more about the GATT.

Mr. Fulton: What about the right to get fish?

Mr. Crosbie: The GATT panel made its finding. We considered the matter and negotiated with the United States for a number of months. On March 22, 1988 we announced our intention to remove the GATT inconsistent measures and to replace them with measures that would be GATT consistent. That is what we have done. We have had a series of consultations with the industry, with the union and with the British Columbia Government. We have had meeting after meeting in devising a new set of landing regulations that will act to help in the proper management and conservation of the B.C. salmon and herring stocks.

The main purpose of these regulations is to better manage the B.C. salmon stocks and to ensure conservation. No one can sell over the side. Everyone is required to land as of late in April when the new regulations were passed. You have to land your fish at an approved landing station. The fish had to go through, be observed, measured, and certain biological tests and checks had to be done so that we have the proper information to manage and conserve the B.C. salmon stocks. After that has happened, anyone who wants to buy the salmon can buy it.

By the way, one has to assume it is a bit better for the B.C. fishermen. The more competition there is to buy their fish the better it is for them. One has to assume that the Alaskan fishermen are not complaining because Canadian buyers can buy Alaska salmon or that Canadians can buy Alaska herring. The more competition for the fish the better the price. But here are these great NDPers over here, how they love the fishermen, how they want to protect the fishermen. They do not even see any conflict of interest in what they are doing and saying here. There is a conflict of interest between the interests of the fishermen and the interests of the fish processing workers which the New Democrats do not even pretend to notice.

• (1620)

During 1988, we had consultation between the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the B.C. industry union and the provincial government. Then on March 29, the U.S. trade representative told us that even our new proposed regulations are considered to be unfair trading practices. So on April 25, we revoked the old regulations because they are clearly trade restrictive and inconsistent with the GATT. We put in place the new landing requirements for Pacific salmon and herring.

We believe that given a chance, this system will help ensure good management and quality of B.C. salmon. Incidentally, it will also be helpful to those who are worried about the B.C. processing industry.

We are getting no help from the NDP Members. None whatsoever. They are not giving us any ammunition to support these new landing regulations. No. They are giving all the ammunition to the United States people who are going to appear before the GATT panel. They are going to have all the protectionist statements of the NDP Members from British Columbia to use as evidence before the panel. They do not care if they help the Americans. All they care about is trying to score a few cheap political points in this House. They do not care about the good of the fish processing workers. They do not care about the fishermen. They do not care about anything but trying to skulldug themselves into power.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Crosbie: On May 23, 1989, the U.S. requested a dispute settlement panel be established under Chapter 18 of the Free Trade Agreement. That panel is going to examine the consistency of these landing requirements with our obligations under the GATT. That is the question. We are lucky enough to have three Canadian members on that panel. We have two Canadian nominees to the panel and two Americans nominees. They could not agree on a chairman. They had to choose a chairman by lot. The chairman is going to be another Canadian, the dean of the law school here in Ottawa who formerly taught out at UBC, I believe, the University of British Columbia. So we have a Canadian chairman on this panel, two Canadian members and two American members. They will do their job in accordance with international trade rules and they will examine the system to see whether they feel this system is GATT-consistent or not. If we happen to lose that case, the blame will fall squarely upon Members of the New Democratic Party in this House.

Canadians have not lost their right to access fish caught in their own waters. They are the only ones who can catch fish in their own waters. It is our administration and our rules that say there are no over-the-side sales. The fishermen of British Columbia are to catch the salmon and herring.

The representatives from British Columbia do not care about the position of the fishermen. They think they are onto some other political point that is going to do better for them than the cause of the fishermen and fish processing workers. But we are protecting both. We are protecting the B.C. fishermen who are going to have the sole right to catch the fish in B.C. and Canadian waters and we are protecting the fish processing workers, because these regulations are going to assist the management and conservation of the industry. I think they are going to continue, the result of which will be that I will be surprised if not all the fish caught in B.C. waters, but nearly all, do not continue to be processed there.

Mr. Barrett: You would be surprised? Is that all you are prepared to do is be surprised?

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member will not be surprised because he is in the House telling untruths. He is in here pretending people have lost their jobs when they have not lost their jobs. He is trying to scare the wits out of people unnecessarily. He does not want to be helpful.

There have been months of work done on this. There are resources committed to the west coast salmon industry which doubtless the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) has expanded on what has been spent through the Salmonid Enhancement Program and other programs. I notice from my notes here that it is $41 million a year.

The GATT is the cornerstone of Canadian trade policy. It served us well over the years. We sometimes win at the GATT and we sometimes lose at the GATT. But if we, as one of the medium-sized powers of the world, are going to abandon the GATT when it does not suit our own narrow interests and not accept our obligations as a trading partner in the system, then the system is doomed and Canada is doomed because Canada depends on trade for our prosperity. One-third of our whole national wealth comes from that trade. Four million Canadians depend on exports. Members opposite want to jeopardize four million Canadians while they try to scare a couple of thousand other Canadians. This is the kind of statesmanship we get from the New Democratic Party, Madam Speaker.

We depend on strong and predictable international trade rules to protect our own export sales. A strong GATT is the best security we have for Canadian trade. How can we turn our back on it? There are individual cases where we do not particularly like the results but we have had to recognize certain regulations were not GATT-consistent.

By the way, the situation on the East Coast is that regulations that were in place are grandfathered under the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. That has nothing to do with this situation. However, anyone who wants to challenge even the east coast regulations under the GATT could do so. There is nothing to prevent that from happening. It simply cannot be challenged under the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. The United States would not agree, because of their success in this case, of grandfathering the B.C. regulations under the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. They would still have been exposed to a challenge under the GATT in any event as they were challenged in 1986.

Let us forget all the rhetoric and forget the attempts to confuse the issue.

I might point to Mr. Peter Pearse's report. He ran for the Liberal Party in the last election. In his report of 1982, he said this:

> Although pressure from established processors and plant workers to restrict exports of less highly processed products is understandable, to do so is inconsistent with fishermen's interest in high prices and with the public interest in generating the highest returns from resources.

Of course, Hon. Members opposite are not interested in the fishermen's interest in high prices. We already know that.

Just to reiterate, no jobs have been lost. None. No jobs. We have a new set of regulations in place that we think will protect Canada's and British Columbia's interests, the interests of the industry and the people in the industry out there. Canadian fishermen are not going to be damaged in any event. Only Canadian fishermen can catch the salmon and herring. We have an increase in plant workers and fishermen in the last four years as the result of our efforts and policies. These are the facts.

We have worked hard to put the system in place that we have now. We need the support of the Members from British Columbia, the industry, and the unions of British Columbia to maintain our position in the panel that is now going to operate under the U.S.–Canada Free Trade Agreement. What we need is help, not hindrance by Members of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): I have a point of order. It is that jobs have already been lost in Prince Rupert. The Minister is giving us misinformation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member may wish to debate the point later on this afternoon. On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, the Minister tried to make it seem that there is no connection here between the Free Trade Agreement and GATT and what is taking place on the West Coast.

As the Minister knows, export taxes are inconsistent with the Free Trade Agreement but are consistent with GATT. I would like to read him a quote and get his comments on it. I quote from one of his own government officials, the Assistant Deputy Minister for Pacific Fisheries, Pierre Asselin. On May 16, 1989, he said: "One thing I would like to mention, however, is that an export tax would not work with salmon because an export tax could never be imposed against the United States because of the Free Trade Agreement". That is before the Standing Committee on Fisheries here in Ottawa.

How does the Minister continue to rise in this House and say that there is no connection between what has gone on here and the FTA?

• (1630)

Mr. Crosbie: Here would be the situation if we did what the hon. gentleman is suggesting we do. The United States or some country goes to GATT. GATT establishes a panel. The panel finds that Canada's particular regulations are inconsistent with GATT and with the world international trading rules which have been in effect since 1947. Canada accepts the GATT panel report as it must and should do, if we believe in a world trading system in which we are so totally dependent, and then we turn around and add an export tax and vitiate the whole results of the GATT panel report.

Does the Hon. Member think the other countries of the world in the GATT trading system will put up with that, or that this would be consistent with GATT? You win on the one side, and then the country against which you are successful comes in and imposes an export tax.

At the present time an export tax might well be permitted under the terms of the GATT. However, with respect to the United States of America under the U.S.–Canada Free Trade Agreement, we have both agreed not to impose export taxes on goods that we sell to one another which are consumed in the country to which we sell them.

If we sell the Americans goods that they are to consume themselves in the United States, we are prevented from imposing an export tax. In the same manner, the United States is prevented from imposing an export tax on goods that we import from them to consume in Canada.

Why is that? Because it is a free trade agreement. We are going to reduce tariffs between our two countries over 10 years, so there are no longer any tariffs. If there are to be no longer any tariffs, how can we have export taxes and put on the reverse of tariffs so in effect there is a tariff going in the other direction? Part of a free trade agreement is that two countries agree not to put export taxes on the goods that one another consumes.

However, if the United States wanted to import something from Canada to re-export somewhere else and not to consume in the United States, then an export tax would be valid with respect to those goods.

I hope that clarifies the matter for the hon. gentleman, although I think his mind being so murky it would take a lot more than my abilities to clear anything up for him.

Mr. Rompkey: The Minister stated that nobody has lost jobs but I thought I heard him say that some fish plant workers might lose jobs.

The Minister has been making the argument that the Government has to go along with GATT because of the fear of retaliation. Yet, who is that retaliation going to be against? Surely, it will not be against the fishermen and the plant workers on the East Coast or the West Coast. They have already suffered that pain. We have to be led to the conclusion that it is retaliation against other people in other parts of the country.

This is a fair country. We all pay the same taxes and we all have the same rights. Should not the pain from the market forces be spread across the country? Does the Minister agree that the fishermen and the plant workers on the East and West Coast are those who are least able to bear the pain?

Third, I would like to ask the Minister why are we so locked in still to the American market? Why has the Government not developed other markets? For example, on the West Coast, as part of the Pacific Rim, there are markets available for species from the West Coast. The East Coast is close to Europe and has traded with Europe for years. For example, the East Coast has sold salt fish to Spain and Portugal. Yet, the Government has not supported the Canadian Salt Fish Corporation.

Why are we still so locked in to the American market? Why have we not developed other markets so that we do not have the fear of retaliation as a result of protectionism?

Mr. Crosbie: The protectionism in this case is Canadian protectionism. Canadians are not totally innocent in every aspect of their national life and activity. This is a case of a complaint against Canadian protectionist activity. We were caught being protectionist. Under the rules forbidding the export of unprocessed salmon and herring, we were found to be protectionist by an impartial GATT panel. We have to observe the GATT panel because we are players and dependent upon the world international trading system. If we are not prepared to obey the rules, how can we expect others to?

In this case, the protectionists are not the Americans, but the Canadians. The Americans are there in Alaska willing to and selling us salmon and herring.

Mr. Rompkey: But you signed the Free Trade Agreement because you were afraid of American protectionism. That is why you signed it.

Mr. Crosbie: They have been selling Canadians salmon and herring, so they have not used protectionist measures, but we did. The protectionists in this case were Canadians. That is why we have had to change these rules.

The answer to the question on the pain is the following. Under GATT rules, if we do not observe a GATT panel report, the Americans are entitled to estimate what the damages are to them a year—

Mr. Fulton: According to the applicant, $5 million.

Mr. Crosbie: —and they will get the approval of GATT if they go to GATT to ask for it, and taking retaliatory action against other Canadian exports. They can pick what they like. The likeliest thing they would probably pick are other fishery product exports from Canada to the U.S. Perhaps they would choose lobster from eastern Canada, or they might choose cod from eastern Canada. Therefore, they would impose a counter-retaliatory action on other fish products which would harm the fishermen in the district of the hon. gentleman. Then we would hear him talking about sharing the pain. Would he be up saying that we must all share the pain? Like heck he would be up saying we must all share the pain. He would be saying: "Why didn't you observe the GATT panel rules? Why don't you observe the GATT? Now my people are suffering". It might be producers of some manufactured product in eastern Canada.

With respect to markets, last year of $2.67 billion in fish product exports, $1.4 billion went to the U.S. We now have $600 million worth of fish products going to Japan as a result of our efforts, particularly under this Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), for example, salmon, herring and female capelin from Newfoundland. We are up to $600 million in exports to Japan, and $437 million in exports to the European community.

I ask the Hon. Member to keep that in mind when he is bawling about trade sanctions, how we should sanction the European Economic Community if they do not do what we want on the nose and tail of the banks. There are $437 billion worth of Canadian fish products sold to the European community every year, and a tremendous amount of value in lobster from Nova Scotia. Would Hon. Members like to see us sanction the European community so they sanction us back and don't buy any of our lobster? I do not think so. I think that this is very much a two-edged sword.

Let us try to keep in mind whose interests we are acting in. We are acting in the interests of B.C. fishermen, B.C. processing workers, the B.C. Government, the B.C. people, and the people of Canada in observing this GATT panel report and in bringing in these new regulations which we hope to have accepted by the panel that has been established under the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Madam Speaker, it is always a pleasure to listen to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie). What he lacks in substance he makes up for in rhetoric. We will attempt to deal with the detailed analysis in the answers he gave to the questions.

In answer to the second question of the Hon. Member for Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), the Minister stated that if we ignore the GATT decision we would have to penalize the East Coast fisheries, the fishermen and the producers.

Mr. Friesen: That is not what he said.

Mr. Barrett: Yes, he did. He criticized the Member for even raising this by saying there would be a tariff on lobster and other fisheries.

The original application to GATT by the company that was opposed to Canada's practices pointed out that it was talking about the potential of a $5.1 million penalty. That is the maximum. On the West Coast of Canada we are dealing with a fishery that produces $860 million in the export market and we put that at risk for a $5 million penalty for ignoring the GATT decision, and that would only be if we lost.

This is supposed to be a business-like Government. It is risking $860 million worth of international trade under that Minister who is supposed to be protecting our international trade for the potential penalty of $5 million in a countervail duty. Does that make sense? Twenty cents for every Canadian to risk this whole industry on the West Coast. It is more than that, and I will come to my further arguments in a moment.

Second, in November, 1988, the Minister said that it has got nothing to do with free trade. That is what he said—nothing to do with free trade. if this situation has nothing to do with free trade, then why after the GATT ruling have we acquiesced to an appeal of this ruling, not through any mechanism of GATT, not by taking the risk of paying that $5 million countervail, but acquiescing to the Americans by saying we want a panel under the Free Trade Agreement to settle the GATT decision, knowing all the time that under the Free Trade Agreement that no matter what the panel does, it cannot under any circumstances go against American law.

I want to the Minister to explain to the West and East Coast fishermen how a GATT decision that has got nothing to do with the Free Trade Agreement is now in front of a free trade dispute settlement mechanism. How is that so? The Minister was not giving the whole story to this house and to the Canadian people. It has everything to do with the free trade deal. Otherwise why is it there at that panel? Probably any Canadian left awake in this country watching us wrangle over the details of this debate is totally confused as we exchange our interpretation of facts to suit our argument. So let us abandon that debate for the few moments that I have got and I will raise this proposition.

The Tories asked to become the Government of the day. They espouse a certain series of policies that the Canadian people would either benefit from or suffer from. They took as a course of action on this particular issue to deal with a response by a decision from GATT. The decision that they were responsible to make was to make a series of choices. We have outlined some of the choices they could have taken. They did not take those choices. They chose a very weak landing regulation that is now subject to a panel under the Free Trade Agreement. They said all along when political statements were being made about the threat to jobs that no jobs would be lost. In the substance of this motion in front of the House, the Minister of Fisheries said: "not to allow jobs historically established to be threatened."

Of course we will not know until this fishing season is over in west coast British Columbia what has happened. It is a fact that the New Democratic Party, the Official Opposition and the Government will not know what the impact of the decisions are until this fishing season is over. We say it will be a disaster. They say nothing will change. They are responsible for putting us in this situation. We did not agree with the process that they took. We offered alternate advice and we were ignored. It is now incumbent on government Members to stand up and say: "We have made this decision, we think that we are right, we have denied that any jobs will be lost. However, since we have ignored the advice of our own experts or ignored the advice of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party on how to handle this, we are prepared to stake our seats on our word." I put this challenge to the Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. Crosby: How do you propose to put your seat on the line?

Mr. Barrett: Under the rules of the House if a Member says clearly that no jobs will be lost, and that is the end result of a government policy, they cannot get away with saying, oops, we were wrong.

Mr. Boyer: Will you put your seat on the line?

Mr. Barrett: Yes, I will put my seat on the line.

Mr. Crosby: Send a letter to The Speaker.

Mr. Barrett: If the jobs are not lost in British Columbia, I will resign my seat at the end of this fishing season on the basis that either one of those two Ministers, the Minister of International Trade or the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), will do the same. If I am wrong, I will step down from my seat in this House. If they are wrong, let them step down from their seats in this House. I make no bones about it.

I did not come down here to play games, hear attacks of rhetoric and accusations. Let us put it down to cases. I am prepared to stake my seat on this issue right here in this House. If I am wrong, I will resign my seat only on the basis that if they are wrong, they will resign their seat, too. That puts it down to a clearly understandable situation. The people in British Columbia whose livelihoods depend upon this issue, the industry in that province, the small towns, they do not understand the nature of this banter back and forth in the House. They do not understand the intricacies of the Minister's rhetoric. They understand only one thing, and that is that they are out of a job. Who was responsible for putting them out of a job? The Government has handled this problem in a stupid fashion and caved in to the United States every step of the way on this deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barrett: We can talk about who said this and that. We can talk about who should have done this and that, but this is not a roll of the dice. This is the responsibility of a Government that swore on behalf of the people that they were going to protect the jobs of those workers. I say they put them at risk and they say they have not. If I am wrong, I am prepared to walk away from it by saying that I put my seat on it. They should be prepared to do the same.

Let the Minister of Fisheries stand up in this House today and say, as it is in this resolution, that not a job will be lost, and that if a job is lost, I will step down from my seat. Let the Minister of International Trade with all of his bluster and nonsense and personal attacks say that if I am wrong, I too will step down because I put too much at stake on the roll of the dice. Do the Canadian people have anything less to expect? Not at all. We are talking about the livelihood, the maintenance of succour and care for those rural communities on the coast of British Columbia.

Let me predict this. Should this happen in British Columbia, God help us, it is going to happen in the Atlantic provinces as sure as the sun comes up in the morning because Americans will see how weak-kneed, how stupid and how lacking in ability this Government is in dealing with these kinds of issues. We are not going to score debating points about you said this and I said that. That is all nonsense now. Now the crunch has come.

In a few weeks the fishing season will start. Yes, the British Columbia fishermen will catch the fish as they have always done and as they have always had a right to do. To pronounce in this House that somehow the Government has protected this inherent right by Canada being a sovereign nation is nonsense. The fishermen will catch the fish. Who will process the fish is the question? We predict that once those fish are in this phoney landing situation, they will be scooped up by American buyers, trucked down to American plants and off to Japan.

What the Minister said in his last hidden comment in response to an answer of my colleague was about the export taxes. We cannot put an export tax on anything consumed in the United States. Ninety-five per cent of the canning of Canadian fish under this agreement will not be consumed in the United States. It will be sold offshore for a massive profit by the American processors. If the Americans had to eat all the fish that they imported from Canada, they would have fish three times a day and an extra meal at midnight trying to get through those cans. Who is he trying to kid? It is not for consumption in the United States. It is for the export market, trans-shipped and processed through the United States. You have sold us out. You have sold out British Columbia. You have sold out the people of my province and you play games in here.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I know my time is up. I repeat calmly and rationally that if I am wrong, I will resign my seat. I expect from either one of those Ministers to respond to my challenge by saying that if they are wrong, they will resign their seat.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, I want to make a comment and then pose a question to the Hon. Member. First, he did refer to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement and he did refer to Atlantic Canada even though the focus of this debate is on British Columbia. I want to tell him this. I think I am repeating what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in the House of Commons today.

• (1650)

The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement is already starting to reverse the fortunes of Atlantic Canada. Who said that? The Premier of New Brunswick, Frank McKenna, who had a unanimous victory in that province. He praises the Free Trade Agreement. He said: "We are starting to feel like we are on the move, that we have got an opportunity to share the wealth of Canada in an equal fashion. That is what the Free Trade Agreement has done for Atlantic Canada". That is what Premier Frank McKenna, with the unanimous support of his electorate in the Province of New Brunswick, says about free trade. I tell the Hon. Member to be careful about what he says about free trade in Atlantic Canada and stick to British Columbia.

Let me tell the Hon. Member something about British Columbia. The Hon. Member said in his speech that the fishermen will catch the fish. The question is who will process that fish. These fishermen are Canadians. Canadians own and control every fish that is caught in this exercise. Why does the Hon. Member not go to the fishermen and ask them not to sell it to the Americans? Why does the Hon. Member not say: "Sell that fish to Canadian processing plants"? Why does he not get his answer there. There is no law in the world that compels Canadians to sell fish to American processors.

The Hon. Member blames the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) for who buys and sells fish in British Columbia. He is looking at the wrong people. Never mind resigning his seat. When he gets back out to British Columbia he should tell the fishermen to keep that fish in Canada. Do not let it go to the United States, if that is what the Hon. Member is worried about.

Mr. Barrett: Madam Speaker, one of the ironies of debate in this Chamber is to have the people who should least be in the position to get up and attack on these kinds of issues be the first to jump up and attack. It is in the province of the Hon. Member, because of the trucking of fish, that 1,000 jobs have been lost in the fish processing industry. His own colleagues have said that. If he is so concerned about protecting jobs, he should be up on his feet demanding that the sale of unprocessed fish stop from his own province and protect the jobs of his own workers in that province.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barrett: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about me and suggests that perhaps I should not take this tack and I should not do that. I reiterate, we are now at the stage of a guessing game as a consequence of the Government's policy. We criticized this policy. We are predicting what the consequences of this policy will be, in spite of the promises made to us by the Government. The Hon. Member does not know what will happen. I do not know what will happen. I have a darn good guess as to what will happen. The Hon. Member thinks that something else will happen.

I reiterate on the roll of the dice that if Members opposite really believe that they are right in everything they have done then they should be prepared to take my challenge. I repeat it. If Members opposite are right and no jobs are lost in the processing of fish in the Province of British Columbia this season, I will resign my seat. The other side of the challenge is that if Members opposite are wrong after all their rhetoric, all the bumpf, all the baloney and everything else, it means more than just standing up and saying with the wringing of hands: "Gee whiz, we were wrong. The devil made me do it". Members opposite must be prepared to be responsible, morally and physically, for their jobs. They must put their seat on the line through the Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Harvard: You have little to worry about, David.

Mr. Barrett: Madam Speaker, I wrap up by saying again the question is this. Will the Government take the challenge or not? Do Members opposite believe the policy or not? The challenge is on the table. If they believe in what they are doing, then they should take it up. If they do not take it up, then we all know what they have done. They have sold out to the Americans.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I would like to touch on a few of the things that have been raised by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon) and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) today. There is a very fundamental issue that has to be addressed in this debate. It is that one cannot compete if one does not have the fish.

What we are talking about here is the ideological and the philosophical approach that we just heard once again from the Hon. Member from Halifax. He said: "Go talk to the fishermen". He thinks that is the solution.

Let me run through a few of the designs that we see coming out of the ideology of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, or as Alan Fotheringham refers to it, the regressive convertibles.

What is going on in the high seas? We know that Japan, Taiwan, Singapore and Korea are involved in a massive drift-net fishery—50,000 miles of drift-nets this year. They are taking between one-fifth and one-third of British Columbian salmon. What does the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans do? He wrings his hands. He will send five observers out to go on 1,500 boats. He is a real tough guy. He is really out there standing up for Canada. He is a great Canadian.

What does the same Minister of Fisheries do for Alcan? Alcan wants to take all the water out of a river system in British Columbia. It is dealt with in Section 20(10) of the Fisheries Act, one of the oldest constitutional and parliamentary powers in Canada in relation to flowing water and fish. What does he do? He signs on the dotted line. He gives up all powers and turns over those spawning areas in those river systems to the Aluminum Company of Canada so that they can make power to export where? To the United States.

What did he do on the Queen Charlotte Islands when Frank Bevan Logging caused a big slide? The slide went down into the river system and blocked the salmon four seasons in a row so that they cannot get in. We win every way. We win in provincial court. We win in the Court of Appeal. We win in the Supreme Court of British Columbia. The case is on its way to the Supreme Court of Canada so that we can get the logging companies to pay restitution for cleaning out the stream. In the middle of the election what does the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans do? He drops the charges.

There is a design here on the high seas and in the rivers. What about pollution? Some 17 out of the 23 pulp mills in British Columbia have been in significant non-compliance with their permits for more than a year, accounting for 50 per cent of the marine pollution in Canada. We will have fisheries closed right in Prince Rupert. Fishermen cannot even take crab, prawn or shrimp out of the harbour because they are polluted with dioxin. What does the Minister of Fisheries do? He sits on a 600-page report that demonstrates that almost every pulp mill in Canada is in significant non-compliance with the Fisheries Act of Canada. Does he do anything? He does diddly-squat. There are only two places in this country where wool grows. One is on the back of a sheep and the other is inside the skulls of the Minister for International Trade and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. That is clear to anyone who studies this issue for even a moment.

Let us go back to where this all began. Let us go back to the grand design. What did the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans say in Prince Rupert? Let me quote his words. We used to have CBC in Prince Rupert but the Tory ideology was that regions of the country cannot have news and weather. No, we have to get rid of the CBC. Here is what the Minister of Fisheries had to say in Prince Rupert on CBC. I quote: "If we are talking about liberalizing trade, and we are talking about free trade talks, maybe we should be talking about the free flow of fish between the two countries," referring to Canada and the United States.

When the former U.S. Ambassador to Canada, Thomas Niles, was asked out in British Columbia about what some of the articles of the Free Trade Agreement meant when it came to logging he said that his understanding of the Free Trade Agreement was that it would mean that U.S. loggers would be able to come into British Columbia, fell trees, buck trees, load the trees and take those trees back to the United States. I am paraphrasing what he said. However, it is on the public record.

We hear a lot of buffalo chips from the Minister for International Trade. He says: "This will not affect Maritime Canada, the East Coast, Newfoundland, P.E.I., Nova Scotia".

The same GATT challenge to which the Government acquiesced supinely out in British Columbia is going to affect New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Quebec. I urge people in those provinces to read Article 1205.

• (1700)

It is the same ideology, the same philosophy. This whole process to sell out the fishing industry all over Canada began on April Fools Day, 1986. The decision had been made in Cabinet. They never told the backbenchers. I do not suspect for a moment that most Tory Members of Parliament know what the underlying agreements are between Canada and the U.S. on this.

I know all of the issues that brought Icicle Seafoods about. We could not buy and bring those fish into Prince Rupert if they were not surplus to the plants in the State of Alaska. The Ministers never want to talk about that. The Ministers do not want to talk about the Magnuson Act. They act as though it did not exist. We cannot do in U.S. waters what they claim to want to be able to do in ours.

What happened, Madam Speaker? My colleague for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) made it very clear. The actual applicants from Icicle made it very clear. The maximum damage they tried to seek under 301 was $5 million. What does this Government do? It puts an $867 million industry from last year on the ropes, on the chance. There is no certainty that Icicle could have even won it. But the Government put our entire industry on the block for $5 million. It does not even want to fight it.

Then what happened? We get this GATT panel in Geneva. It is unbelievable. Someone was sent who knew almost nothing about law. He stood up for Canada, at the very best on his knees. What happened while we were there? He did not argue the Canada–U.S. Salmon Treaty which predated this process. He did not argue on the principles of the Law of the Sea, the covenants of the International Law of the Sea which gives us very specific identifiable rights, which predate the Magnuson Act of 1976. Was that argued? No. This was by design all the way along. This was a coldly, calculated way of fudging the issue all the way along.

Let me give another issue of fudging, Madam Speaker, from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon). What did he say while this matter was in Geneva? I asked the question right here on the floor of the House. He said right here in this House of Commons and I quote: "What we have here is a panel recommendation which will in all likelihood be overturned by the GATT Council". We, speaking for the Government of Canada on the floor of the House of Commons, said we will be opposing the recommendation when it reaches the GATT Council. That is what he said. Shore workers and fishermen in British Columbia said that the Government blew it in terms of allowing it to get where it has got. It gets to the GATT panel. We do not even argue on Canada's behalf, do not argue for Canada's outstanding position which we would have won. We allow it to be lost there. We then say we are going to oppose it when it goes to GATT Council. Does Canada oppose it? Fat chance. On March 21, 1988, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) capitulated to U.S. interests.

On March 22, 1988, what happened? Well, history speaks for itself. What went on in Washington? The fishermen were told: "Okay, don't worry, we are going to have a working group in terms of getting some new regulations." Bear in mind, these regulations date from 1903 in terms of herring and salmon in British Columbia. It massively predates the FTA, and predates GATT by more than 40 years.

There are principles of international law which must be upheld if the international forum is to survive. The Minister states that we have to be GATT–consistent and a lot of other bluster and bull. History is very clear about what happened here. This was a sell–out by design.

Who do we send to Washington after we had been promised in the working group, we were promised landing rights? We were promised grading rights and we were promised evisceration. We were told Canadians have a right to gut fish. If we do not have a right to gut fish, logs will go to the United States. Do we ship pigs? Do we shoot hogs in this country and ship them with their guts into the United States? Do we do it to chickens or anything else? This is the thin edge of the wedge.

If you will just give me a moment, Madam Speaker, I will close on a couple of quick points. What went on in Washington is crucial. We sent down how Howie Wilson. Who did the United States have on their side? They had Peter Murphy who had just been through the whole FTA negotiation with Simon Reisman. He knew exactly how deep the desire to sell out the fishing industry was from the Conservative Government. It was a chip, a bargaining pawn in relation to other agenda items. It was Mickey Mouse versus Godzilla. Peter Murphy said that he did not want that evisceration right on the table. Howie Wilson runs out of the room and takes it right off the table again. No bureaucrat would have done that without the direct support of the Minister for International Trade.

On April 25, the Minister for International Trade proclaimed the gutless regulations. The industry in British Columbia is threatened, every single processor. They were here in Ottawa this week. Mike Hunter who is with the Fisheries Council said exactly what the unions are saying from Prince Rupert and from throughout British Columbia. I am sure there will be a question and I will carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, after listening to my colleague present such a very clear picture of what is taking place, there is only one comment I would want to make. He described that some bureaucrat ran out of the room and took it off the table and that he did not do it without the Minister knowing. We know that for the 75 missing minutes bureaucrats do make decisions in that Government without consulting the Minister.

He described very clearly the silent supine surrender of this country with respect to the whole question of processing fish. I want my hon. colleague to comment on the following. Imagine the implications for other resource sectors. What are the implications, for example, of finishing nickel in this country? Ontario has a law which states that the nickel that is mined in Ontario must be finished in Canada. That is the mining law of Ontario. There is only one exception to that law and that exception is Falconbridge. It has been written in because Falconbridge had established a refinery in Norway and it is still on the books.

I would like to ask my hon. friend: What is the implication for Nickel and for a whole host of other resources? We are still hewers of wood and drawers of water largely. This will condemn us to forever being hewers of wood and drawers of water.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, earlier this afternoon we heard from the Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby). I think fisher people around British Columbia and around this land will have listened with care when he said: "Talk to the fishermen. You have a right to catch fish but that is as far as it goes". After that, it is free enterprise, he would have liked to have said.

Let me deal with what my hon. colleague for Nickel Belt has just raised. It is abundantly clear what the implications are in terms of the thin edge of the wedge. We can see it directly and visibly in Articles 1203, 1204 and 1205, as to how the fishing industry in other areas of the country will be challenged on precisely the same grounds as what happened in British Columbia.

In terms of any kind of prohibitory provincial or federal law, such as that to have to process nickel in a certain area of Ontario, as an example. It will simply be a matter of time before the argument espoused by the Member from Halifax is used in that situation.

They will say that once the nickel is mined then it is up to the open market. That means situations where we have in fact become, as we are in the B.C. fishing industry, the most competitive, the world leader in terms of price and quality. We have done that over generations. We are doing it in other sectors in our economy. However, let us not forget what Thomas Niles had to say when he spoke about our forest industry, because he had been briefed about what the FTA really means.

According to him, even though the export of logs of all species is in Article 1203, the same place where we find the fish regulations, his interpretation is that U.S. citizens, under U.S. law, will be able to come into Canada and cut our trees down and take them back to the mills in their country.

If this debate does not alert Canadians to the underlying ideology and the ultimate goal of what was negotiated between our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan, and if people cannot see it now in relation to what is going on in the fishing industry, they then will not understand why Members of Parliament like myself will be standing on the docks and doing whatever is necessary, including civil disobedience, to make sure that our fish are not exported, regardless of the smelly deals cut by the Conservative Party of Canada to sell out our nation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Delta.

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to stand in the House today and speak on this very important matter to British Columbians. As a native British Columbian and one who has spent a great deal of time on the north coast, as well as the west coast of Vancouver Island, I realize the importance of this topic to all of us in British Columbia and indeed across Canada. One of the things we have not talked about too much in the debate this afternoon is whether or not Canadians can compete in this world, and that is what I would like to talk about this afternoon.

• (1710)

It has been asked what the Government will do to help the West Coast industry in the face of the current salmon and herring situation. One should not be left with the impression that the West Coast is being abandoned. The West Coast fishery, like most other world fisheries, has gone through and will continue to go through both turbulent times and prosperous times. Since 1985, the industry has been both buoyant and prosperous.

The Pacific fishery is dominated by salmon which in 1987 accounted for approximately 46 per cent of the total landed value of $416 million. Herring, mainly roe herring, accounted for 26 per cent of it and groundfish for 22 per cent, with shellfish and the remainder types making up the balance of landings.

Can West Coast fishermen remain competitive? To respond to this question one must realize the tremendous pressures on West Coast fish stocks. To take salmon as an example, apart from ocean survival and environmental concerns, these fish must first pass through U.S. and Canadian commercial fisheries as well as recreational and native fisheries before returning to their streams of origin. Within these returning stocks, there are weak and strong runs of fish, enhanced and wild stocks of all five species of salmon. To ensure that adequate escapement takes place makes the business of fisheries management extremely complex and fisheries managers must exercise extreme caution. All fishing plans in British Columbia are designed to target specifically those stocks which are expected to be returning in abundance and to minimize or avoid the harvest of weaker stocks which cannot withstand commercial harvest.

In 1976, in response to declines in many salmon stocks, the federal Government launched the Salmonid Enhancement Program, SEP, which to date has invested one quarter of a billion dollars to rebuild depleted salmon stocks and enhance fishing opportunities. SEP continues a formal commitment by the federal Government and the Province of B.C. to an extensive systematic program of enhancement of salmonid stocks.

In 1987, 607 million juvenile salmon and sea-run trout were released from enhancement projects. The resulting catch in escapement through 1991 is anticipated to be 8,570,000 fish plus. In 1985, enhancement contributed approximately 14 per cent by weight and 21 per cent by landed value to the commercial salmon fishery catch.

By the early 1990s, SEP is expected to account for one third of British Columbia's salmonid production. SEP has been the vehicle allowing approximately 12,000 volunteers to help enhance and rebuild the resource and has served to increase the public's awareness of the importance of protecting fish habitat. By 1990–91, the funding commitment to SEP will stabilize at $42.5 million a year and 19 of SEP's projects are contracted out to remote native communities in B.C., thus providing training and experience for natives as well as economic development opportunities.

SEP is an increasing factor in B.C. fisheries. It is a program aimed at ensuring that future prospects for this valuable resource will be greatly improved. Maintenance of a program such as SEP clearly indicates the Government's commitment to fostering a strong West Coast fisheries resource base.

Prior to 1985, the SEP program could not expand to realize its full potential because many stocks targeted for enhancement were being fished in Alaska and Washington. As a result, following almost two decades of negotiations, the Pacific Salmon Treaty was signed in March of 1985. This treaty sets out long-term goals for the benefit of salmon. The principles of the treaty are to prevent overfishing and to provide for optimum protection and for each party to receive benefits equivalent to the production of salmon originating in its waters.

Why did we need the Pacific Salmon Treaty? Salmon fishery managers in Canada and the United States are challenged by the fact that some of the Pacific salmon each country produces are intercepted by fishermen of the other country. Interception exists because salmon swim across international borders beyond the jurisdiction of the Government in whose waters they were spawned. The fish migrate long distances, spending several years at sea. In the course of their migratory cycle, United States spawned fish enter the fishery zones of Canada and Canadian fish enter U.S. waters where they are vulnerable to the other country's fishing fleets.

Over the years, research by both countries revealed that Alaskan fishermen were catching salmon bound for British Columbia, Oregon and Washington. Canadian fishermen were capturing Coho, Chinook and other species bound for the rivers of Washington and Oregon. Fishermen in northern British Columbia were intercepting salmon returning to Alaska, and United States fishermen were catching salmon as they travelled through the Strait of Juan de Fuca and San Juan Islands toward Canada's Fraser River.

Unless management policies and conservation concerns are jointly agreed on, one nation may harvest too many of the other country's stocks and frustrate the home country's management plans. Uncontrolled interceptions may also jeopardize the administrative and financial support needed for salmon enhancement programs. The home country may be reluctant to invest in hatcheries for habitat protection and restoration if the fish produced are caught by fishermen of another nation. Intercepting fisheries encourage over-harvest and discourage investment in conservation and enhancement.

Through the years, the United States and Canada reached agreements over the management of particular salmon stocks in limited regions, for example Fraser River Sockeye and pink salmon. However, the number and diversity of each country's intercepting fisheries defied small-scale solutions. The Pacific Salmon Treaty is broad in scope, enabling it to serve as the means to co-ordinated management of the coast-wide salmon resource.

Management of the West Coast fishery is not a simple task. The Department, for example, has the following objectives for the salmon fishery: First, it wants to achieve escapement objectives by ensuring that each salmon stock or groups of stocks are not overfished. It wants to ensure that the international obligations for all five species of salmon under the new Pacific Salmon Treaty are met and it wants to ensure that the domestic allocation of the total allowable catch between sectors, whether native, commercial or recreational, and within sectors, whether seiners, gill netters or trollers, are achieved.

Verification programs are necessary to confirm which species are caught, where they are caught as well as what stocks make up the catch. As each fishery commences, Department of Fisheries officers collect catch and biological information on the harvested species. The first stage, hailing, provides information to DFO on the fishing grounds by fishermen. This information is subsequently verified at the second stage when the catch is delivered to landing stations and reported to the Department on sales slips. Estimates of catch and catch rates are calculated and fishing plans are adjusted accordingly.

Some biological information is gathered on the grounds but the bulk of sampling, and I think this is key to the topic we are talking about today, is done as the harvested salmon are being delivered to shore-based landing stations, hence the need for a landing requirement. Catch and biological sampling programs which verify what has been caught by species and stock are the key elements of a salmon conservation program.

To meet national and international obligations and to protect the resource from overfishing, fish managers must gather and verify this information quickly and adjust harvest plans accordingly. The integrity of these programs must be maintained to optimize production of salmon in B.C., and this is the reason we are insisting upon the landing regulations that are the topic of the debate today.

• (1720)

Careful husbandry of the fisheries resource has allowed the stocks in most West Coast fisheries to remain abundant. The West Coast fishery has seen days of depleted stocks, such as herring.

In the early 1970s the whole fishery had to be shut down. However, recognition by the industry as a whole—this includes the Government, fishermen and the shore workers—of the problem and subsequent good management practices by the Government have allowed these stocks to rebuild to allow solid fishing opportunities and the maintenance of strong markets.

The management techniques practised by Canada are further extended by a committed inspection service that allows Canadian products to maintain a top position in world markets. We are concerned about the quality our Canadian products are presenting to the world, and it is important in the whole competitive arena.

I asked if West Coast fishermen and shore workers can remain competitive. I say absolutely. As you have heard, Madam Speaker, various programs are in place, of which I have only given a sample, to ensure that fishermen have healthy stocks of fish to harvest. They have been ridiculing the depletion of stocks on the East Coast, yet when the same thing is done on the West Coast it becomes a bad thing. This is the whole concept of fisheries management. Stocks are allocated and, for commercial fishermen, landed to be sold.

Can the industry as a whole remain competitive? Absolutely. With a strong competitive market, fishermen will surely be able to demand top price for top quality fish as they currently do. Processors with labels that are synonymous with premium quality fish should surely want to purchase top quality fish and maintain their niche in the market. To process the fish, workers will be needed in the plants.

Can Canadian fish companies remain competitive? I say they can. The Government has invested heavily in the development and management of Canadian fisheries. Our management practices and fish inspection services are respected in today's international fishing forums. We may need to make changes in how we do business to adjust to changing times. But the basic premise of Canada maintaining strong viable fisheries for the benefit of all Canadians will always remain. Yes, we are now facing a dispute with our friends to the south but it will be resolved. The combination of government management of the resource and private enterprise initiative to process and market the resource, will prevail. Canada can be competitive in today's market and in the climate of free trade.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to comment on the correspondence between the State of Washington from Skagit County and processors in British Columbia. One letter in particular, from Mr. Don Miller, President of Great Northern Packing, pointed out all of the various benefits that there would be for the processing industry from B.C. to move there. Under the tax credit section of the proposal to get the processing industry to move to Washington it states: "Because there is a surplus of available workers in Skagit County, new business and industry are eligible for state tax credits". Under financial programs it states: "Low interest loans are available to new industry creating jobs in Skagit County. Average hourly wages range from $4 to $9". Would the Member comment on that? Is that the kind of competition the Member would like to see in terms of the B.C. processing industry? Would the Hon. Member agree that British Columbians have a fundamental right to eviscerate fish? Many of our trading partners, such as France and Great Britain, will not allow British Columbia salmon into their markets unless it is eviscerated.

No one, including the Americans, has ever gone to GATT to challenge the right of a country to demand that incoming British Columbian and Canadian product be eviscerated. Do we have a right to do that? Does the Hon. Member see what the real design is here?

Mr. Wilbee: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member from Skeena and I have much in common in that we both, you might say, represent border areas and we both have fish processing plants in our ridings. We should remind ourselves that it was because of the highly competitive nature of the plants in the Prince Rupert area that we were buying fish from southern Alaska that really upset the Americans. In other words, the Canadian fish plants with their modern processing and excellent workforce were able to buy American fish and process them. The American processors were unable to get the fish for their plants.

As far as my own area is concerned, we do have several fish processing plants. These are all new plants. They are well equipped and I have not had any complaints from any of their people about the possibility of heading south. In fact, I think they are all looking for more sources of fish. They are looking for areas where they can get more fish rather than worrying about moving south.

As far as the letter from Skagit County to processors is concerned, I think this is fairly routine. I can show you several letters from my own municipality of Delta. Letters have been sent to other businesses encouraging them to come to Delta, telling them all about the virtues of the place. I have not heard concerns from people in the fish plants in my area that they are seriously considering a move south. Right now, the processors have ready access to fish and I cannot see that this is a factor.

I used to work in the Prince Rupert Cold Storage many years ago. It was mentioned earlier about the trucking of fish to the States. At that time all kinds of fish were being transported via reefer barges through Prince Rupert to Seattle and to Vancouver. I think this whole industry is highly mobile and as long as our plants can remain competitive, keep up to date and produce a top quality product, we do not have too much to be concerned about.

The second part of the Member's question concerned evisceration. I think we all recognize that if you do not eviscerate the fish as soon as possible, it deteriorates. This has been recognized by Canadian officials and is why they want these landing requirements. If fish are landed and reloaded again with the guts left in, as time passes the quality will deteriorate. I think if we can get these landing requirements through, and I have every reason to believe they will because they have been judged to be GATT-consistent, then I trust we can have these fish completely processed. I would like to see them smoked, canned and whatever else we can do to have value added. It is important for British Columbia.

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois: Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speech by the Hon. Member for Delta (Mr. Wilbee) and also to the reply he just gave the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member's speech should provide the people of British Columbia with some measure of reassurance regarding the Government's intentions. I think it also puts the debate in a more logical context, allowing for market conditions and for the ability and expertise of the people of British Columbia which, with the Government's support, should help get them through the present situation.

I would like to direct the following question to the Hon. Member for Delta, and perhaps he could inform the House how he expects the fish processing plants in his riding in British Columbia to remain competitive with processing plants in the United States.

[English]

Mr. Wilbee: Madam Speaker, there are great changes going on in the fishing industry with the fish farms and so on. A few years ago there used to be canneries all over the coast. Changes in the ability to transport fish with the modern seiners and gill netters make it possible to cool the product right away. Before, they had to unload it every day. They can now go for several days with icing. This is even in the smaller ships.

• (1730)

What this has done, of course, is tremendously increase the quality of the fish that are available. It is still a fact that the sooner fish is processed, the better the quality.

We talked about the Japanese market earlier. I think this is a wide-open field for us to go into. Top quality, well prepared sea food. The market is going to be unlimited. This is where the plants in my area are concentrating. They are going into the Japanese markets as well as trying to maintain their nick in the European and North American markets.

I think because we are closest to the source of the fish, we have the best fish. They can be brought in and processed rapidly under ideal conditions. We have an edge on quality. The workforce that we have is highly skilled. We have an excellent marketing program. I think this is what is going to maintain the fishing industry in British Columbia.

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Madam Speaker, I want to say a few words on this motion which is very ably worded by the NDP. I congratulate them for bringing it forth and in such an imaginative way. It allows people to put their seats on the line. It shows how strongly they feel about it.

The reason I want to stand up and say a few words is because we feel just as strongly. This is an issue that is not confined to one coast.

We had a visit on Wednesday in the Atlantic Liberal caucus from the consortium who put together this trip, and this initiative, and this exercise called "The case for government action to protect and develop the fishing industry". It included the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union. We have those in my province and in the Atlantic provinces as well. The Prince Rupert Amalgamated Shoreworkers and Clerks Union and others were included. They came to us as people from the West Coast and people from the East Coast with a handout for help in a situation that affects us all.

Whether people live on the East Coast of Canada or the West Coast of Canada, they are a coastal people. The reason we live there is the marine resource. We live by the sea and from the sea. We live off the sea. If the harvest of the sea is threatened, then it threatens us on both coasts. We understand the seriousness of that.

Indeed in their brief and documents they put together, they suggest that both coasts are at risk. The document says that Canada is the world's largest fish exporter, but 4,000 B.C. shore workers and an equal number in the Maritimes face lay-offs while unprocessed fish move south. Our greatest export industry, the mainstay of our coastal economy, is at stake if we fail to act.

Let us look at the B.C. situation first. We are told that the Government could have done nothing, yet I think my colleague from Winnipeg said earlier today that they could have acted. They could have acted and refused to act. Indeed as the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) has pointed out, the issue has been fudged all along. They could have fought, in the Free Trade Agreement, for the protection of the West Coast fishery as they did for the Atlantic. They could have insisted that it be on the table, but they did not. They let that go by. They put it on the table as a bargaining chip. They gave it up. It was a give-away on behalf of the Government of Canada. They must be held to account for that.

Second, they could have vetoed the GATT ruling. My understanding is that Canada had the right to veto the GATT ruling when it was made, yet it decided not to. The Government did not veto the ruling. Instead, it attempted to implement regulations to ensure that fish were landed, graded, and eviscerated in Canada. Those regulations are not going to hold up.

What these regulations do and what the actions of the Government of Canada do are to put the fishermen and plant workers on the West Coast of Canada on the same footing as those in the United States. The fishing industry in the United States now has the same equal opportunity to Canadian fish as do Canadian fishermen and Canadian plants.

What has really happened is that we have given up our sovereign right to develop our own natural resource.

I want to point out that we can talk all we like about the changing market-place and changing economy. The fact is that on both coasts, we are still a resource-based economy. There are not the alternatives that are available in parts of central Canada and other parts of the country. The East and West Coasts are still resource-based economies. What Canada has now done is to give up our right to control the harvest of the sea.

I think the Government has to be held to account for that, because there will not be equality. Americans and Canadians are not on the same footing. The fact is that in the U.S., there are lower wages. In the U.S., there are no medicare costs. In the U.S., there is no national unemployment insurance program. That means that the U.S. is in a better position to compete for Canadian fish than our Canadian plants. We are going to see jobs going to the U.S. We are going to see jobs going to the U.S. on the West Coast just as we are for the East Coast.

The brief that was put together by the West Coast people points out very vividly and very graphically that the Atlantic coast is at risk as well.

My colleague from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception was criticized by the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) this afternoon for focusing on the Atlantic coast. As I pointed out earlier and as is pointed out in this brief, this is not simply a West Coast issue. The West Coast is at risk right now. The West Coast is concerned. The West Coast is threatened. The Atlantic is no less threatened. Our turn will come. This brief points out that the future of our coastal communities is threatened by the Government's apparent inability to protect and manage our marine resources. All four maritime provinces have long had legislation giving them the right to control or eliminate the export of unprocessed fish. This legislation was grandfathered into the Free Trade Agreement. Similar regulations protecting B.C.'s salmon and herring were specifically excluded.

It was a short-lived victory for the maritime industry because it is at risk too. Many of our products will be at risk. The implications for the Atlantic fishing industry are clear.

The Member for Skeena referred to Article 12.03 of the Free Trade Agreement. There is nothing to prevent the U.S. from challenging the Atlantic statutes in the GATT. The Tory Government has, in effect, conceded that we do not have the right to restrict the export of unprocessed fish in order to protect jobs on the West Coast. The same applies to the East Coast because the Government has treated us in the same way.

This afternoon, the Government and Minister for Trade claimed that the overriding principle behind the actions of the Government is to respond to protectionism in the United States. They were afraid of what would happen. They were afraid of the threat from the U.S. if we did not sign the Free Trade Agreement. That is the overriding principle. We had to do it. We had no choice. We had no option. We had to operate within GATT. We cannot exclude ourselves from GATT. We cannot ignore GATT. We cannot challenge GATT. We cannot overrule GATT. We cannot veto GATT.

That is what the Minister of Trade said this afternoon. That is the underlying principle behind the actions of the Government. Surely, there is a more important principle. That is the sovereign right of Canada to harvest and manage its own resources for its own people. Surely that is a more fundamental principle. If we give up that principle, we are really giving up our nationhood and sovereignty as Canadians. I submit that that is the underlying principle.

The Government has caved in to American interests. We are suffering the consequences. What are the alternatives? Has the Government thought about that? What is going to happen to those people?

Nobody has lost their jobs yet. The Minister of Trade admitted this afternoon that they could. Maybe fishermen will not lose their jobs, but plant workers may. The Minister of Trade admitted that in the House this afternoon.

• (1740)

What are the alternatives? I can tell you that on the East Coast there are no alternatives. The fishing industry is the mainstay of our economy. Why are there 500,000 people in my province yet millions of Newfoundlanders spread across the country? Why are they in Tuktoyaktuk, Thompson, Manitoba and Galt, Ontario. Why are they in Toronto? Why are they in other parts of the country? They are there because the jobs are there. They have been forced to go to those places to look for work. Now, with the crisis in the fish stocks off the East Coast, there will be more people going down the road.

At the same time, the Canadian social security system is beginning to be dismantled. Today we were having a debate in Question Period and the main theme was the unemployment insurance program. We have had that safety net to fall back on. It has not been available to the Americans, but we have had it here and we can be proud of the social security system that we have had.

At the same time as the fishing industry is in crisis on the West and East Coast, at the same time that jobs are threatened in the fishing industry on the West and East Coast, at the same time where there are very few, if any, alternatives for employment on those coasts, the Government is starting to dismantle the Canadian social security system.

Under unemployment insurance a person will receive less benefits and have to work for more weeks in order to quality, and will have to pay more premiums. With the money that it gains, the Government is going to start to train people. It will not provide jobs, but it will train people.

For what will the Government train a 40 year-old fisherman who lives in a small community of about 500 on an isolated coast? He is going to lose his job. His children are the ones who will be affected. His wife is the one who will suffer. His community will suffer. The Government states it is going to stop paying those social security payments to people who are out of work through no fault of their own and it is going to train them. For what is the Government going to train that fisherman whose livelihood is affected, and whose family's livelihood is affected as a result of the negligence of the Government?

It is a myth, and an idea that has jumped full blown from the vivid imagination of some central Canadian bureaucrat. It does not make any sense at all. The management policy does not make any sense, and the social security policy does not make any sense for both the West Coast and East Coast. Whose interests are being served, I do not know, but it is not the people who live on either coast. Those are the implications of what has happened.

This Government prefers to let market forces govern no matter what, and particularly if those market forces originate in the United States. In this country we are falling into a master/slave relationship with the United States. Someone today stated that we are starting to become second-class citizens in our own country. That is what is happening.

Mr. Benjamin: We used to tell the Liberals that, too.

Mr. Rompkey: The second thing that is happening is that rural and small-town Canada is being cut adrift. These regulations and policies may very well work in the larger cities of Canada, but they do not make any sense at all in rural and small town Canada.

That is what is happening as a result of the GATT ruling. That is what is happening as a result of the free trade agreement. That is what is happening as a result of the policies of the Government of Canada. Market forces are being allowed to rule and they will rule us right out of existence. We are going to see a shut-down. Our leader stated during the campaign that rural Canada and small-town Canada is cut adrift. That is the effect of the legislation.

I applaud the motion of the NDP. We in the Atlantic area stand with our brothers and sisters on the West Coast in opposing the policies of the Government in fisheries management. I applaud the NDP for bringing forth this motion today.

CANADIAN TRANSPORTATION ACCIDENT INVESTIGATION AND SAFETY BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, June 12, consideration of report stage of Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport, and the motion of Mr. Tobin:

Motion No. 9

That Bill C-2 be amended in Clause 19 by adding immediately after line 33 at page 19 the following:

"(17) An employee statement obtained pursuant to a collective agreement is privileged, and no person shall have access to such statements, except as authorized in writing by the person who made the statement."

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. At the last consideration of Bill C-2, I believe the House was debating Motion No. 9 which stands in my name. At that stage I had already spoken on the motion, as had a number of other Members. Certainly on this side on this particular motion there will be no more speakers. We will have speakers on Motion Nos. 10 and 11.

Mr. Speaker: I think that the House will know we are on Motion No. 9, and the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden has the floor at the moment.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what that point of order was in aid of.

As I was saying last Monday, I wish the Parliamentary Secretary would have stood up and said on each of the amendments which we have debated why they were not acceptable to the Government and for what reasons. Following the discussions in the committee on each of these items, my colleague, the Liberal Party critic and myself came in with amendments going at the same matters in a different way, hoping that that would satisfy the Government's earlier objections. We still cannot find out why they do not like these amendments. The Parliamentary Secretary did not rise. I noticed that the chairman of the committee was here for prayers, but he has now left. I was hoping that he would rise.

• (1010)

I do not think an employer should be allowed to take a statement from an employee involved in an occurrence, incident or accident until after the investigator for the board has taken a statement. In other words, just like the scene of an occurrence or accident being quarantined until the board investigator has arrived at the scene, so should those employees who are affected. They should be quarantined from the tender mercies of their employer who might want to take a statement for disciplinary purposes or other reasons. That is why I feel the Hon. Member's amendment does not go far enough. However, it is a good amendment in that it protects the confidentiality of the statement taken from the employee. This is a good principle and one that we support. I urge government Members to accept it as well.

There is not sufficient protection either in the collective agreement as it would pertain to this Bill or in other statutes, and we want to secure the privilege of those statements given by employees, be they management or rank and file. I urge government Members to accept this amendment. It will be supported by my colleagues and I, and I trust that the Government has seen the error of its earlier ways and will accept this amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 9 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on motion No. 10 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden) moved:

Motion No. 10

That Bill C-2 be amended in Clause 24 by adding immediately after line 36 at page 22 the following:

"(3) The Board shall append to the final report any recommendations made in the draft report but not included in the public report, and recommendations and comments made by the Minister of Transport or any other Minister or observer designated as such under 23(2)(d)."

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the committee, we initially tried to have three parts of Clause 24 deleted from the Bill because of something to which all members of the committee agreed. The Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board must not only be independent but must be seen to be independent. Lo and behold, the Bill provides for a draft of the final report of the board on any accident or incident in any one of four modes of transportation to be sent to the Minister and other observers to make comments and representations.

We lost out on getting that provision deleted from the Bill so the purpose of this amendment is to ensure that not only is no influence attempted but that there is no perception that some influence may be attempted to be placed on the board by some external force and go unnoticed.

If a major change is made to the final report, the public one, the only way of finding that out is to compare it to the draft report which quite correctly has limited release. Originally, we wanted to do away with the concept of a draft report altogether. Then we tried to see that the draft report have wider distribution. This failed because of the very good reason of confidentiality. That position may not be supported by the Liberals, though I hope they will support it, or Members on the Government side. Government Members certainly do not want to see this happen. However, it was suggested by several groups that we must make this attempt.

The Chief Executive Officer of the Canadian Railway Labour Association representing some nine railway unions said that the unions wanted no part of this, would not be the slightest bit interested in getting a draft report and that the draft of the final report should not go out to anyone.

During the course of an investigation and during the course of board hearings, the Minister will have an observer on hand as well as at the site of the accident or incident. So will the other representatives of employees or companies involved. Those who qualify as observers under the legislation will have ample opportunity to make representations both to the chief investigator and to the board when it is deliberating, hearing witnesses and receiving evidence obtained by the investigator and provided by other sources. There will be ample opportunity for them to make their views known and to comment on whether or not they think there are any omissions or if an investigation was carried on improperly or insufficiently before the final report is drafted. Therefore, I do not see any need for a draft of the final report to be sent out for people to make comments on.

Since people will be allowed to make comments on a draft report, we are trying to provide here that any representations, comments or requests made by the Minister or any other Minister or any qualified observer who receives the draft of the final report shall be appended to the final report. Then we can check to see what differences there are between the draft report and the final report. It will all be out in the open as to what kind of comments and recommendations were made by the Minister or others.

• (1020)

I do not want anyone in the Chamber to get mixed up. There are interim reports which have nothing to do with this section. Interim reports are covered in Clause 25, and will be made by the board as and when it deems necessary to correct something that occurred and could be a cause of further accident or occurrences. This will have the matter corrected without waiting for a final report. The Minister may request interim reports if he thinks there is something wrong somewhere and wants to be able to act on it. He can call the board up and request an interim report. We are not suggesting that there be any changes in that.

However, I do not think the draft of the final report should go out to anyone anyway, but since it is going to, the public has a right to know. It should be perceived as well as believed that the board is independent; that no improper pressure or influence was attempted on the board in order to get it to change the draft of the final report.

That is why we are asking in this amendment that all representations made by the Minister or other observers have to be appended to the final report. Then everyone will know, and that will enhance the independence of the board. It will not only appear to be independent but it will be. All its proceedings will be in public, unless for a specific reason it orders some portion of a hearing to be in camera, but generally speaking everything is out in the open.

That is why in this draft report there should be no opportunity or temptation for anyone to attempt, in an improper manner to influence the board or get it to change what it feels should be in the final report. If the board does make a change, we can see what requests or representations were made, what change the board made, and the reasons for it. If they are proper and justified, that is fine. Again, it is out in the open.

The Government should be leading the line-up to enlarge and enhance the real independence of the board. This amendment does in fact do that. I hope the Government will decide that at least this amendment does improve the legislation, does enhance the independence of the board and ensures even more that no one can exercise any undue influence, pressure or improper action upon the board, its members or any of its staff.

Once the final report is delivered to the President of the Privy Council, copies should go to all the Ministries and to interested observers and interested parties. I presume that the report will also be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport. If it is felt that anything is fundamentally wrong in the report, by the Minister or any of the observers, the Minister can make further inquiries. If there are omissions or inadequacies in the final report, it can be gone into again by the Minister or by anyone else he may appoint to do that.

I hope the amendment will find favour with all my colleagues and that it will receive the support of the Government and the Official Opposition.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin) spoke with such characteristic eloquence on the rationale and with powerful reasoning and persuasion behind the authorship of the amendment that he proposes to the House that there is not much that I or any other Member could possibly add that would enlighten Members.

We in the Official Opposition support the amendment of the Hon. Member. We support the basic notion that justice must not only be done, but must be seen to be done, and the independence of the board must not only be practised, but must be seen to be practised.

What the Member is proposing in his amendment is that, given in the process of investigating and coming to conclusions about an accident or occurrence in the transportation field, and quite possibly a loss of life, it is extremely important that public confidence in our investigation agency be maintained, especially in the light of the Gander experience and the deep division on the CASB board, the conflicting opinions about what caused the crash and terrible loss of life in Gander.

Given that it is important that public confidence be maintained, the Member proposes to the House that any draft report, and there is a provision for a draft report in this Bill, submitted to Ministers of the Crown prior to a public release of a final report, and any draft report carry with it an obligation that any comments by Ministers, and more importantly any subsequent changes to the draft that are reflected in the final report, be noted when the final report is released. The public will then have an opportunity to see whether between the draft and the release of the final report there have been any changes, and if there have been, who recommended them and on whose advice were changes made. In other words, the public needs to know there is not an ability behind closed doors or in secret away from the public's eye to change a recommendation.

I hope that the people appointed by the Government to serve on this board are people of such credibility and integrity that that type of practice would not be permitted in any case. I would hope that the Ministers of the Crown undertake their responsibilities in such a manner that they would not attempt to exercise that type of influence in any case. I and all Members would expect that.

However, if there is nothing to hide, and I submit there is nothing to hide and we take the Government at face value in submitting this Bill, then there should be no hesitation in supporting the amendment of the Hon. Member and providing for the full disclosure of recommendations made at the draft stage, and more importantly the ability to see what changes were brought about in the final report as a result of those recommendations made at the draft stage.

We support the amendment of the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

• (1030)

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte) moved:

Motion No. 11

That Bill C-2 be amended in Clause 32 by striking out lines 19 to 25 at page 31.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the final amendment proposed by the Liberal Party to Bill C-2, but frankly I think it goes far beyond the purview of the Bill, which is the whole question of accident investigation. I submit that the amendment is fundamental to Members of the House because the principle expressed in Clause 32 has a direct impact on the whole notion of the principle of fundamental justice.

Members of Parliament who have not been part of the committee process should know that the clause we are seeking to amend by this motion is Clause 32 of the Bill. It is a clause that sets out the responsibilities of an investigator, that is somebody who goes out and conducts the investigation into an accident on behalf of the multi-modal agency.

This particular clause sets out the responsibilities of an investigator vis-à-vis a court of law, in particular whether or not there is litigation before a court of law having to do with the cause of an accident when victims or their families may be attempting to seek legal redress. In short, they are suing those who may have been responsible for an accident.

I want to read the clause that I am trying to amend, because I think Members will understand that what we are talking about is far more important that just this Bill. There are three sections to Clause 32. The section I am attempting to amend reads:

> An investigator whose evidence may be admitted by affidavit under this section is not compellable to appear as a witness in the proceedings unless the court, coroner or other person or body before whom the proceedings are conducted so orders, for special cause.

I ask Members to reflect upon that. The evidence of an investigator may be admitted before a court of law, yet the investigator who submitted and drafted the affidavit is himself not automatically compelled to appear in a court of law to defend the conclusions he has reached. The defence does not have an automatic right to cross-examine the author of an affidavit that is submitted in a court of law as evidence. I want Members to think about, especially those who are members of the Bar, what this amendment says.

As I just said, this clause is comprised of three sections. In referring to the affidavit, the first section of the clause reads:

> —in any legal, disciplinary or other proceedings and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is proof of the truth of those observations.

In the absence of proof to the contrary and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the affidavit as submitted by the investigator will be accepted as proof of the truth of those observations.

We have a situation in which an affidavit authored by an investigator may be submitted to a court of law. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be accepted as proof of the truth of the observations. The investigator himself has no automatic obligation to appear before a court of law to defend his observations, unless the party in question who takes exception to those observations proves to a judge that there is cause to disturb the investigator in his normal duties and compel him to appear before a court.

The fundamental principle of justice, I submit, is the right to cross-examination. It is an automatic right. I question that notwithstanding putting this clause in the Bill whether or not any judge will pay any attention to it anyway. I submit it is not for Parliament to make any kind of determination on who should or should not appear before a court of law, to make any kind of judgment or to try to send any kind of signal to a coroner or a judge that only in exceptional circumstances should an investigator of the Crown be called to defend his observations. I submit Parliament in this context really has no role whatsoever in trying to give direction to a court, to a coroner, or to an inquirer.

The effect of my amendment is simply to wipe out entirely subclause 32(3) which indicates:

> An investigator whose evidence may be admitted by affidavit under this section is not compellable to appear as a witness in the proceedings unless the court, coroner or any other person or body—so orders, for special cause.

Its seems to me it is not for Parliament to make that determination. It is for a court. I do not think that Parliament in any way, shape, or form should seek to give advice to a court or should seek to indicate that it is our desire, unless there is special cause, that the normal right of the defence should not be exercised.

I submit that if we care or value at all the fundamental notion of justice, which must have as its centre-piece the right of cross-examination, Parliament would be acting in a wise and judicious manner in simply removing a clause that not only directly impacts on the ability of people to cross-examine a witness in terms of the proceedings of the multi-modal Accident Investigation Board but sets a rather onerous and dangerous precedent in legislation enacted by Parliament.

I cannot find anywhere in any federal legislation any precedent for this kind of clause being contained in the Bill. It does not exist in any other legislation that has ever been passed or contemplated by the Parliament of Canada.

By the way, I submit that the Government means no harm; there is no devious plot nor evil design on the part of the Government. It happens to be one of those things that in the process of drafting a Bill is slipped in, perhaps with another intention.

I can tell Members that the intention is that investigators are quite frequently tied up in court having to defend their observations as contained in affidavits. The Government is concerned that their investigators spend their time out investigating accidents, not being tied up in courts. That is a fair comment on the part of the Government, but which is the greater need? Is it the need to free up our investigators from a court of law, or the absolute primary requirement to ensure that justice is upheld and that the fundamental right of cross-examination is maintained?

It may be inconvenient for the Government to have investigators tied up in the courts. It may be inconvenient for the investigators. It may tie up valuable time, but we cannot solve a problem of inconvenience on the part of investigators by tinkering with one of the fundamental tenets of our justice system, the right to cross-examination.

I do not allege any evil design. I do not allege any plot or conspiracy. I simply allege sloppy drafting of this Bill. I simply allege that those who seek to solve the problem of an investigator spending more time than he likes in a court of law have interfered in a fundamental way in sound and basic principles of justice. I would call upon Members to remove this clause.

The only effect of removing this clause will be to put back into the hands of the courts, the coroner, and the judges, back where it belongs in the judicial system or normal body of inquiry, the decision on who appears or does not appear as a witness.

Parliament should not be attempting to give any direction whatsoever. We should not deny or reduce even in the slightest manner the possibility of a lawyer, representing a client, having an investigator come to defend the accuracy of his observations.

I hope that Parliament, in a non-partisan way and in the interests of producing a better Bill and a good Bill, will accept the amendment that I propose. I submit this simply in the interest of ensuring that we produce good legislation and do not inadvertently interfere, in a Draconian way, in the proper proceedings of justice.

• (1040)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I am something of two minds on this amendment. The clause that my good friend wishes to have deleted ends with the words:

> —unless the court, coroner or other person or body before whom the proceedings are conducted so orders—

Mr. Tobin: "For special cause". Leave it to the court.

Mr. Benjamin: Of course, that is designed, I gather, so that when there is a lawsuit involving hundreds of millions of dollars following an air crash which drags on for three or four years, a top-notch investigator of the board is not spending months and months sitting around in the court room. That is nice. I agree that it is not a good thing to have happen.

On the other side of the coin, the remarks of my colleague are well taken. If an attorney for a claimant wishes to dispute evidence in an affidavit or brings in other expert witnesses who dispute what is in an affidavit of an investigator, all that attorney has to do is ask the court or the coroner to order that he appear. However, that does not guarantee that the court or the coroner will so order. If the court decides not to issue an order, there is no way the author of the affidavit can be questioned as to its accuracy or otherwise.

The deletion of this clause means that an attorney in a court, or one involved in litigation following an accident, may just call him as a witness. If he does not come, then he can ask for a subpoena. However, it makes it easier for an attorney who, let us say, is acting for the families of people who were killed in an occurrence. Deleting this clause makes it easier for that attorney to have the investigator appear.

Mr. Tobin: It maintains the status quo. That is what it does.

Mr. Benjamin: In other words it keeps things the way they are. Frankly, if a court were not to order it, I suspect there would be appeals and a higher court would strike this clause down. I think it would be thrown out of court. I think that the Parliamentary Secretary would have to agree with me, even though I am not a lawyer and I do not think he is either.

Mr. Belsher: Thank goodness.

Mr. Benjamin: From many a legal discussion I have had with legal eagles, they think that this is a pretty weak piece of legislation, a pretty weak clause which is not likely to stand up on appeal, and that a higher court will just strike it down. That would involve appeal after appeal and dragging the case out even longer at great cost to everyone concerned, including the Government.

On balance, I agree with the Hon. Member. I think that his motion should be accepted. We should delete subclause 32(3). I do not think it serves much of a purpose anyway. It will not accomplish what the Government would like it to accomplish.

I fully agree with my colleague that anything that even appears to impinge upon what is a fundamental tenet of our justice system is not good law. We should not have anything in the Bill which appears to impinge. It might be all very well to say: "Well, this would never happen anyway, the court would order him to appear, or the coroner would order him to appear". We cannot be sure of that. In that situation in a court case subsequent to an accident justice would not be fully done. If a court or coroner fails to issue an order then justice would not be fully done.

I agree with my colleague that this is not a partisan issue. I think all members of the committee felt strongly about this legislation and think that it is basically good legislation. We have moved some amendments and a few of them were accepted at committee. We did this to try to make a better Bill. That was the intention of all members from all sides in the committee. It was the intent of the motions my colleagues and I have moved at report stage. They are in order to make a better Bill.

I sometimes wonder why I spend so much time trying to help rewrite the Government's legislation in order to make it better. Maybe we should just let it go through as it is and let the Government get into a lot of trouble. However, if one is a responsible parliamentarian, one tries to do one's job and hopes to get the Government to mend its ways.

I do not think there is any malicious intent or devious intent on the part of the Government. It was just an attempt to set some kind of a limit on how much time an investigator might have to spend in a trial because he is required as a witness. I do not think this clause will accomplish that. The greatest danger is that the right to cross-examine is harmed in any way, shape, or form. I hope the Government will accept this amendment as well as the others which we have put forward when it comes to voting on them on Monday night.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 11, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

[Translation]

At this time, the House should proceed with the deferred divisions at report stage of the Bill now before the House. However, pursuant to Standing Order 45(6), the divisions are deferred until Monday, June 19 at 6 p.m.

FORGIVENESS OF DEBTS (SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA) ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, May 26, consideration of the motion of Mrs. Landry that Bill C-10, an Act relating to the forgiveness of debts incurred or assumed in respect of certain official development assistance loans made by the Government of Canada to the Governments of certain countries in sub-Saharan Africa, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should emphasize that this Bill has the support of our Party and I hope the support of all Members of the House.

Before we vote on the Bill I want to take this opportunity to discuss, for a few moments at least, the issues which underlie this legislation.

• (1050)

The Bill itself would forgive the debts of certain sub-Saharan African countries. As I understand it, the House has already provided in past budgets for the funds that would be covered by this Bill, but the Act itself is necessary. It gives us an opportunity to speak directly to the issue of Third World debt and to speak, therefore, about one of the most pressing problems in the world, that of the crushing burden of debt on societies which comprise probably two-thirds of the people of the planet.

If we were to pause and review our stewardship of this planet, we would quickly come to see four related problems: first, the problem of the environment; second, the arms race; third, the issue of lack of freedom; and fourth, the issue of poverty. As the Brundtland report has so eloquently and clearly shown, these issues are inextricably linked.

Today in this country the issue of the environment stands at the forefront. The environment is threatened, not just by this society's overuse of resources, but by the tremendous increase in the use of chemicals and other substances which attack the air we breathe, the ozone layer, the oceans, and the waters. Throughout the world the environment is under attack, in part because of the extraordinary expenditure on the arms race and because of the distortion of economic resources that go to the arms race. This in turn has put pressure on Governments and others to seek to control in the most arbitrary ways the freedom of their people who seek themselves to press for the use of resources for the basic fundamentals of human existence.

All this has driven millions, if not billions, of people in the world to live in crushing poverty, which in turn puts pressure on the environment and resources. In many countries of the world, the forests, the waters, and the lands are under assault because of the desperate need of people just to meet the basics.

With regard to our responsibility as a country, most of us live in an affluence that previously was undreamed of in human history. Our affluence assaults the environment of the Third World and contributes to the poverty of so much of the Third World. Since the end of the Second World War, Canada has participated in efforts to try to improve the economies and the social conditions in other parts of the world. One of the major ways that has been accomplished has been through Official Development Assistance. For years, however, our Official Development Assistance has been in the form of loans to Third World countries, which have normally required repayment over a period of time.

At the same time, we have been giving a relatively paltry sum to assist the development. We have been making it increasingly impossible for Third World countries to meet the obligations we have imposed upon them. Changes in exchange rates, lack of fixed prices for commodities, and total instability in the international economy imposed through our multinational institutions have created a situation in which Third World countries have found it impossible or very difficult to meet the obligations imposed on them. Probably more money is leaving, both from government and commercial loans, to pay them back and to pay the interest thereon than we are turning back to the Third World to assist it in its economic development.

There have been a number of major studies in this regard. The Brandt report highlighted a number of years ago north–south issues, our interdependence as a planet, and the need to deal with Third World debt for our own interest economically.

The recent document entitled Our Common Future, commonly known as the Brundtland report, named after the chair of that committee, has linked those problems with the environment. This Bill would confirm at least the minimum, that is, the forgiving of debts we imposed on the Third World. The repayment of them has made it even more difficult for that cycle to be broken.

I would like to use this opportunity to call the Government to account for another policy which has been imposed, that is, the reduction in the budget of Official Development Assistance. It seems to me that it is the height of hypocrisy for this Government, on the one hand, to bring forward Bill C–10 forgiving debts which in some sense have already been forgiven and, on the other hand, to reduce significantly the funds provided through Official Development Assistance to break the cycle of poverty in the Third World.

I had an opportunity many years ago, in 1972–1973, to spend a year in Tanzania on a CIDA project. One of the feelings I had at that time was that while this program was on the face of it a donation by Canada to Tanzania and to the Third World, in the final analysis, myself and my family gleaned much more from Tanzania than Tanzania got from the program, even though I hope I was able to provide some assistance in the work that I did. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians have worked in the Third World under various programs: CIDA, CUSO, Canada World Youth, OXFAM, and many others. We have learned as much from these as we have given.

The Third World has given much to this country in the way of its resources, in its understanding of human history, and in both beauty and other values. The very least we can do is to adopt this Bill, and from this Bill we must take other more important steps toward the alleviation of poverty in the Third World. We must restore the cuts to Official Development Assistance. We must use our role in the IMF and the World Bank to assist the total restructuring of the international economy so that this critical problem that faces the world today can be truly addressed in the immediate years ahead.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being eleven o'clock, the House will now proceed to statements by Members.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENTAL ACTIONS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, during the recent crisis in China, my office in Scarborough was contacted by a constituent who was unable to reach his son.

Bill Brown's son, Stephen, was teaching at the University of China in Wuhan. Officials at External Affairs worked tirelessly to locate him. This morning Stephen Brown arrived safely in Hong Kong.

• (1100)

On behalf of Mr. Brown and his family, I want to thank the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and his officials for the outstanding assistance that they provided. Their work throughout this crisis has been exemplary and I applaud those efforts.

THE ENVIRONMENT

RECOGNITION OF VOLUNTEER WEATHER OBSERVERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, one of the events of National Environment Week which did not receive as much public attention as it deserved was the announcement of Environment Canada's decision to honour hundreds of volunteer weather observers across the country.

These observers record morning and evening temperatures and the total precipitation each day in their respective areas. The data is forwarded to the Atmospheric Environment Service on a monthly basis and entered into the National Climatological Archives.

Since 1871 a network of 176 volunteer observers has now grown to approximately 2,300 strong. Climatological awards for volunteer service have been issued in my constituency of Brandon—Souris to the staff members at the International Peace Gardens, the Spence family of Medora, the Sexton family of Deloraine and the Lowe family of Waskada.

In addition a special award to the Renton family of Deloraine has been granted for 24 years of high quality weather reporting.

Thanks to these and hundreds of other volunteers, Canada's Climatological Archives have been greatly enriched.

PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA—OPPOSITION TO EXECUTION OF DEMONSTRATORS

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, the Government of the People's Republic of China continues with the total and absolute repression of its people. The Chinese Government has arrested and imprisoned individuals who had the courage to tell the whole world, via the electronic media, the truth about the tragic events in China.

[English]

Canadians are particularly concerned with the death sentences imposed on three reformers in Shanghai. These protesters were accused of burning a train which minutes before smashed through a human barricade killing six demonstrators.

Reports say that no one was injured or killed as a result of the blaze set on the train. In my opinion, the real criminals were the authorities who ordered the train to proceed. Now, Mr. Speaker, the death toll as a result of this incident will increase to nine, unless people in Canada write to the Chinese Embassy urging them not to impose the death penalty.

I call on the Government and all Canadians to express their deepest condemnation on the imminent execution of Chinese demonstrators. The global community must do everything in its power to prevent China's descent in ever deeper political turmoil.

SENIOR CITIZENS

NATIONAL SENIORS SAFETY WEEK

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, this weekend representatives of the Canada Safety Council are meeting in Winnipeg with seniors' interest groups to begin preparations for National Seniors Safety Week, November 12 to November 18.

The theme of the event is "Safeguard the Best Years of Your Life". Its purpose is to draw attention to safety issues affecting seniors, to identify accidents and health hazards which can confront seniors in the home and to promote measures which can be taken to reduce deaths.

Older Canadians sustain a rate of accidental death and injury approximately three times higher than the rest of the population. More than 20 per cent of deaths are caused by home injury with accidents due to falls heading the list.

A conference such as this one is vitally important in improving the quality of life of Canadian seniors. I applaud the council for its initiative in organizing this event and extend my best wishes for a successful National Seniors Safety Week.

MUNICIPALITIES

NATIONAL ACCESS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, recently as part of the National Access Awareness Week, the Secretary of State (Mr. Weiner) presented the first ever five star community awards at the annual conference of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities in Vancouver.

The awards recognize communities across the country that demonstrate a strong commitment to the ideal of full and equal access for disabled Canadians in the five star areas of transportation, housing, employment, recreation and education.

The awards ceremony was the crowning moment for a very successful National Access Awareness Week in which more than 400 communities participated.

The Minister gave 16 awards to the civic leaders of 14 cities, towns, districts and a regional municipality in recognition of their action to improve community access for people with disabilities. Two cities, Kitchener and Ottawa, each received two awards.

Let us join all Canadians in congratulating this year's recipients of five star community awards for their contribution to the integration of people with disabilities into the mainstream of Canadian society.

DISASTERS

EXPLOSION OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, last night at a company work site on Plinkquet Street in my riding of St. Boniface thousands of litres of petroleum products exploded, shooting clouds of smoke, and I quote from the newspaper report:

> —hundreds of metres into the air, creating an inferno of flame too hot for firefighters to approach—

Between 150 and 200 homes were evacuated within two kilometres of the fire. At least six chemicals were stored at the plant. One, in particular, methylene chloride, becomes an extremely toxic hydrochloric acid when exposed to air and mixed with moisture in the lungs.

I call upon the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight) to provide this House with details of his Department's involvement, if any, in the evacuation and subsequent handling of this particular situation. I also call upon the Minister to inform this House as to how well the evacuation procedures undertaken last night worked.

I would call upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) to inform the House regarding the potential health hazards which may have occurred and which still may be of concern to the residents of St. Boniface and the surrounding areas.

MINES

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE CANMET PROJECT JOINT ACTION COMMITTEE

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Canmet project joint action committee in northwestern Québec submitted its report on June 12, 1989 to (Québec) Mines Minister Raymond Savoie and to Assistant Deputy Minister Marc Denis Everell, who is responsible for Canmet. At a press conference, Claude Drouin, committee chairman and executive director of the Québec Mining Association, reviewed the contents of the report and the committee's recommendations.

The committee's mandate was to support the emergence of a centre of excellence for mineral technology in northwestern Québec. Public consultations made the committee members aware of 13 interesting site combinations in the area of Rouyn-Noranda and Val-d'Or. The committee unanimously chose the Or Val site, which belongs to Aurizon Mines in the Val-d'Or mining area located in Abitibi-Témiscamingue. Mr. Speaker, this is an excellent choice because this site is ideal for establishing Canmet's mineral technology research laboratory in Québec.

PAKISTAN

ALLEGED PERSECUTION OF AHMADI MUSLIMS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of the New Democratic Party to express our concern about the continued persecution of Ahmadi Muslims in Pakistan.

In Pakistan there are approximately five million followers of the Ahmadiyya movement in Islam. The Ahmadi Muslims are peace-loving people celebrating their one-hundredth centenary this year. Sadly, the Pakistan Government has prohibited centenary celebrations at the international headquarters at Rabwah. This repressive action is consistent with government behaviour towards the Ahmadiyya movement.

Ahmadi publications are censored, their right to freedom of assembly is violated and government measures incite intolerance toward them. Discrimination is a daily fact of life.

Actions against the Ahmadi people extend to violence. Ahmadiyya Mosques are regularly vandalized. Such an incident occurred as recently as last week. In April of this year a large mob set on fire over 50 homes. Many Ahmadi have been assaulted and some have been killed.

It was hoped that this persecution would end with the coming to power of Benazir Bhutto but this has not been the case.

I urge the Canadian Government to express in the strongest terms to the Pakistan Government that the actions against the Ahmadi people are unacceptable. I have already written to the Pakistan ambassador on behalf of the NDP.

THE LATE DAVID PEREGRINE

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, today the arts world, and especially the Royal Winnipeg Ballet, is in mourning. At a press conference held in Winnipeg last night, the Ballet's artistic co-ordinator announced that their principal dancer, Mr. David Peregrine, 34 years old, tragically lost his life in a plane crash in Alaska.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that some day we will have to leave this earth, but we are rarely given prior notice. And when death takes away someone in the full flower of his professional life, the shock is even more intense.

On behalf of my fellow Members, I would like to extend our sincerest condolences to Mr. Peregrine's family and also to his family in the arts, the Royal Winnipeg Ballet, one of Canada's most prestigious ballet groups.

POLITICAL PARTIES

FUNDRAISING METHODS

Mr. Jean-Marc Robitaille (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, yesterday and today, we read in the newspapers that both Opposition parties are going to resort to a fundraising method that is, quite frankly, outrageous. With the help of their friends in the financial world, our friends in the NDP and the Liberal Party are not only going to finance their operations by using credit cards, they also intend to swell their ranks by urging Canadians to borrow, at a time when a parliamentary committee is debating the skyrocketing interest charges on credit card balances, and even Opposition Members are criticizing banking practices on behalf of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the precarious financial circumstances of these two Parties seem to be more important than the interests of consumers. Personally, I feel Canadians will soon realize whose side the Opposition is on.

Voters did not put their trust in them on November 21 last year, and history now proves they were right. The Liberals, the world's experts on debt, have now embarked on a new era, an era of double talk. Our NDP friends, those sworn enemies of the Establishment, have just made a major about-face.

Mr. Speaker, the two Oppositions Parties are absolutely shameless!

ALASKA HIGHWAY

CELEBRATION OF FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, 1992 will be the fiftieth anniversary of the Alaska Highway. We, in the Yukon and northern B.C., are inviting the world to celebrate this anniversary with us by coming north and driving the highway.

In fact, the federal Department of Public Works has recently published a brochure on the highway which promotes this event. One activity will be a car rally.

It is crucial that the necessary funds are allocated to highway maintenance now to ensure that travelling this route is a pleasant experience, not only for northerners but for our visitors from all over the world and for the exciting activities planned.

For two years, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. MacKay) has received hundreds of signatures on petitions. There have been unanimous all-Party resolutions from the Yukon Legislature.

There have been numerous interventions by myself asking this Government to recognize the importance of this sole land route to northern B.C. and the Yukon.

I call upon the Government to immediately increase the level of funding for maintenance and improvement of the highway. Let's do Canada proud in 1992.

ENDANGERED SPECIES

SLAUGHTER OF ELEPHANTS IN AFRICA

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, today 300 African elephants will be slaughtered by poachers and their tusks cut away by chain-saws to supply big bucks for the international illegal ivory trade.

Yesterday, 300 elephants were killed, tomorrow, there will be another 300. Altogether this year some 70,000 African elephants will be slaughtered.

Yesterday the Government of Canada announced that this fall it will vote to move the African elephant to the highest level of protection, that which is currently enjoyed by the Asian elephant under the convention for the protection of endangered species. In the meantime, the Government has indicated it will impose new restrictions to ensure that Canada does not become a dumping ground as part of the illicit ivory traffic. It is actions like that which Canada has taken and must continue to take as part of a global response to see that the endangered species on this planet get the protection they deserve.

THE LATE DAVID PEREGRINE

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, I rise on two matters today. First, I note with sorrow that the Royal Winnipeg Ballet has been hit by tragedy again in the death of its principal dancer, David Peregrine.

Mr. Peregrine received international recognition when he won the Bronze Medal at the World Ballet Concour, partnered with Evelyn Hart. He had been with the Ballet since 1975 and its principal dancer since 1980. Mr. Peregrine will be greatly missed by the company.

THE ENVIRONMENT

CALL FOR FEDERAL IMPACT ASSESSMENT

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, Consolidated Professor Mines Ltd. has recently applied to operate a gold mine at Shoal Lake, Ontario, the source of Winnipeg's drinking water. A recurring consequence of the mining of gold is the production of arsenic. As a result, there is a fear that Winnipeg's water could become contaminated.

The building of the mine would touch on several areas of federal responsibility, namely fisheries, Indian Affairs, interprovincial waterways and international affairs since Shoal Lake is an arm of Lake of the Woods, an international waterway.

Further, this Government has already promised Canadians a safe drinking water act. This is the perfect opportunity for the Government to demonstrate in action, not just words, its commitment to the environment.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) has pledged to Canadians that he would put the environment ahead of profits. Let the Minister demonstrate this commitment today by putting the safety of over half a million peoples drinking water ahead of the profits of one company.

I urge the Government to listen to the Winnipeg Water Protection group and undertake a full federal environmental impact assessment.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIOLATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The Minister met with the Ambassador of the People's Republic of China yesterday, I think. Did he have the opportunity to express to him the indignation Canadians feel with the ever more frightening increase in the number of violations of the most basic human rights in China, and in particular, did he warn the Ambassador that the killing or execution of students who were sentenced in such summary fashion could have very harmful consequences for future relations between the Government of Canada and his country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had a meeting here yesterday with the Ambassador of the People's Republic of China. I expressed the grave concern of the Government of Canada and Canadians with respect to reports on the treatment and execution of students in China.

I indicated that it would be impossible for Canada to consider a "business as usual" situation, as suggested by some Chinese spokespersons. I stressed the importance of this issue for all Members of the House.

In fact, I gave the Ambassador a copy of the official report of last week's Debates to show clearly and directly what was discussed and the questions and answers here in the House, so as to leave no doubt in the Chinese leaders' minds as to what Canadians think.

I asked that our opinions be passed on to China's leaders.

[English]

ACTIONS TO BE TAKEN AT UNITED NATIONS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—St-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his words. Certainly, it will be more significant than just words if Canada takes some initiative at the Security Council at the United Nations. I understand that the Minister is still looking at this possibility.

Ambassador Fruitier will be here next week. Will he then be in a position to tell us precisely what type of specific actions Canada could take at the UN to enhance the positions which the Minister is indicating by words but not yet by action should be taken.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in so far as actions are concerned, the Hon. Member and the House will know that Canada has recalled our ambassador for consultation, as other countries, I believe, have not yet done. We are actively examining actions that can be taken through the United Nations.

I am asked a specific question as to whether or not Ambassador Fortier will be in a position next week to indicate precisely what action might be taken. I cannot answer that question. I do not know whether he will be in a position next week.

I can assure the Hon. Member that we are examining every avenue that is open to us which would result in effective action. Next Thursday morning I will be convening, at the Prime Minister's request, a national round table involving Canadians expert in China, including Canadians of Chinese origin, so that we can supplement the work of the Government at home and internationally with the advice of the Canadians who are knowledgeable about China.

I do not think there is any doubt about the attitude of the Government or the people of Canada. There is, given the nature of international institutions, the challenge in trying to find ways to make our views be felt effectively. I assure the House that we are pursuing that vigorously.

POSSIBLE DEFECTIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—St. Michel): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Can the Minister confirm this morning that there have been a number of defections from the Chinese embassy here in Ottawa and that a number of Chinese have asked to remain in Canada? If so, could the Minister tell the House that these people are welcome and that everything will be done to make it possible for them to remain in Canada and obtain landed immigrant status as soon as possible?

• (1120)

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in very general terms, regarding citizens of China who might indicate their desire to stay in Canada, we would respond to those cases in the most sympathetic way.

It has been the practice of Secretaries of State for External Affairs for some time not to comment on specific questions regarding events relating to personnel of embassies or consulates, and I think it would be wise for me to respect that practice.

SECURITY

TESTIMONY OF CSIS DIRECTOR

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General, I direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Yesterday at the Justice Committee, the Director of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service refused to confirm or deny the presence in Canada of the MSS, the Chinese security intelligence service. The Director, however, was prepared to confirm the presence in Canada of other hostile foreign intelligence services. I would submit that the Government has an obligation and indeed a duty to be forthright in this matter.

Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs aware whether or not the MSS, the Chinese intelligence service, is operating in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I paid particular attention to the testimony of the Director of CSIS yesterday. He indicated that the service keeps an eye on the situation concerning the Chinese community in Canada. Any undeclared intelligence operation in Canada by foreign intelligence services is unacceptable and it will be dealt with by appropriate authorities.

CSIS is responsible for investigations against national security. It reports to the Government which takes the appropriate action that it deems necessary. I can add that in light of the unusual interest and circumstances here, I would be prepared to arrange a briefing for the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party or a Member of Parliament each would designate early in the new week to deal with matters that might arise in these circumstances. I think they would be better dealt with in that way.

CHINESE INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Director of CSIS was being somewhat selective in that all Canadians, including those who may be at risk, have a right to know whether Chinese intelligence officers are gathering intelligence in Canada. Let there be no mistake. We are dealing with a callous and brutal regime with no concept of due process and with the capability of committing the most heinous crimes against humanity.

I put my question again to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is he aware of the presence in Canada of these intelligence officers, and if he is not, will he inquire and give the House his undertaking that he will declare these people persona non grata and take immediate steps to have them removed from Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think I would add only two things to what I said in my earlier response.

First, I raised with the Chinese Ambassador yesterday allegations with respect to activities that would be improper by officials of his embassy or consulate, and he denied that those activities were occurring. I can report that fact.

The second point I would make is that the Hon. Member has been with me in India and in eastern Europe in circumstances that were sensitive. He comported himself on those occasions in an entirely commendable way, recognizing that there are sometimes circumstances that should await discussion. I would hope that he would conform to that high standard here before the television cameras of the House of Commons.

THE ENVIRONMENT

CONTAMINATION OF CRUSTACEANS IN HOWE SOUND

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. As he will know, in British Columbia last night, members of the public were advised to no longer eat shrimp, crab or prawns taken from the entire Howe Sound area as well as the Prince Rupert area. I wonder if the Minister would advise the House what other species along the coast of British Columbia have elevated levels of dioxin and organochlorines. Would he also tell the House when the Government first learned that the levels of dioxin and organochlorines in crab, shrimp and prawns in Howe Sound exceeded safe levels for human consumption?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that the Government is conducting a sampling program all over Canada to examine and identify the level of dioxins and furans at the exits of paper mills. The data is being collected. It was being examined and analyzed by different Departments. When the analysis was known at the Department of National Health and Welfare, all other Departments were notified of the situation and a decision was made immediately by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to close those fisheries.

VIOLATIONS OF FISHERIES ACT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister knows from a report that was completed last July and was sat on by the Government for more than six months, there are still 17 out of 23 B.C. pulp mills that are in significant non-compliance with their existing licences, and 17 of the 23 are acting in direct violation of the Fisheries Act of Canada.

I wonder if the Minister would tell the House when the Government plans to bring forward regulations and enforcement procedures so that there will be zero discharge of these kinds of toxic, life-endangering toxins into the environment of British Columbia. When will the regulations and enforcement procedures be brought forward? The overwhelming majority of pulp mills, not only in British Columbia but right across Canada, are violating their licenses and are in direct violation of Canadian law.

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, concerning pulp and paper mill pollution, the action of the Government is twofold.

First, there is the furan and dioxin problem, and this is regulated under CEPA. As of now, we are devising very tough and comprehensive regulations, that should be put into force next year. For the rest of the pollution, it is regulated under the Fisheries Act and the actual regulations were enacted in 1971 and apply only to mills built after 1971. The majority of mills were built before 1971 and do the most polluting. We have to deal with a situation that goes back more than 18 years.

In two or three years we will be able to issue and enact a new set of regulations for the other kinds of toxic materials exiting from paper mills, but those will be comprehensive regulations applying to all existing mills, built before or after 1971.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the Minister does not seem to understand. This is one of the largest and most widely used fishery areas in all of Canada. More than 400,000 recreational anglers make use of the Howe Sound area. Shrimp, prawn and crab fisheries have now been closed. British Columbians have been told as of 11 o'clock last night to no longer consume any of those products.

The Minister has not told us what other species have elevated levels. Would the Minister at least tell us when, on what precise date, there will be zero discharge regulations and enforcement procedures put in place? What steps does the Government plan to take today to compensate those boats that are now tied up with their crab pods, prawn traps and shrimp pods tied on board? What is the Government going to do, nothing?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Government has taken very stringent measures. We have closed fisheries where we have been advised by the Department of National Health and Welfare that the levels of furans and dioxins were too high. We cannot be more drastic. We have stopped the fishing of those species. For the rest, there will be very tough new regulations as early as next year. The Hon. Member knows very well that the issuance of new regulations as global and complicated as those take a few months, and it will be done no later than 1990.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACTIONS OF CHINESE GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, there are over 2,000 Chinese Canadians in my riding. In the past four days, I have interviewed 700 people of Chinese descent due to the current crisis in China. Because of peaceful pro-democratic demonstrations of the students here in Canada, their parents are under House arrest in China.

• (1130)

Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs send his strongest condemnation of this type of harassment of Canadian residents to the Chinese Government and ask that those being held under house arrest in China be released immediately?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and for his active interest in the matter. It is entirely helpful that he and other Members of all Parties in the House are in close and active contact with members of the Chinese community in Canada. I conveyed that view yesterday to the Ambassador in my meeting with him.

There is obviously a difference of view between Canadian authorities and Chinese authorities as to what the facts are. There is no doubt in the minds of Chinese authorities that Canada finds any actions of that kind unacceptable. I have asked that that view be conveyed to Chinese authorities.

WORK PERMITS AND VISAS OF CHINESE NATIONALS IN CANADA

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

In light of the situation in China which may continue for a long time and the fact that only eight-week extension visas are being issued to Chinese students and visitors, will the Minister take steps to allow the issuance of work permits and extensions of visas beyond eight weeks?

Will the Minister today announce what concrete steps will be taken to resolve this unfortunate situation? These students need our help, and they need it today.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we certainly recognize that these students need our help. Perhaps I could clarify for Members exactly what we have done in terms of Chinese citizens currently in Canada, not only students.

Four things can happen that would allow them to remain in Canada: first, to continue in their present status as students, visitors, or temporary workers and sympathetic consideration will be given to extending student or visitor status; seek permanent residence on compelling humanitarian grounds; submit a regular immigration application at a Canadian consulate in the United States or at a Canadian Embassy or consulate in another country of their choice where normal criteria would apply; or submit a refugee claim.

Because there is such great concern about this matter, we will be putting out a package this afternoon in the form of a press release of the detailed information of steps that Chinese citizens in Canada can take.

CHINESE NATIONALS IN CANADA—LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I, too, have a large Chinese population in my riding.

As protesters in China begin to face arrest, trial, and even death, Chinese citizens on visas here are increasingly concerned about their future. I know of a number of those students in Canada who are convinced that because of their activities it is now impossible for them to return to China.

I ask the Secretary of State: Will the Government be moving beyond its present program of visa renewals and no removals and bringing forward a special program to grant Chinese citizens in Canada landed immigrant status?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister has just indicated in the House a series of measures that the Government has already taken.

The Hon. Member will know that the Prime Minister stated some days ago in Vancouver that we will not be sending persons back to danger in China.

The Hon. Member will also know that there is a process under way now in which we are re-evaluating several aspects of our policy, whether it relates to Chinese citizens who are here or whether it relates to the general question of Canada's relations with China. We are proceeding with that as quickly as possible but also in a way that is as careful and comprehensive as possible.

In addition, with regard to the particular situation of students, a meeting will be held this afternoon, a consultation initiated by the Government of Canada, involving representatives of provincial Governments and non-governmental organizations that is designed to look particularly at the problems faced by Chinese students in this country.

Out of that I expect two groups will emerge. One will be an advisory panel available to give advice on any questions which may cause concern to those students. The second is an assistance panel that will be seeking ways—financial assistance, perhaps employment opportunities and other ways—that can contribute materially to the capacity of those persons to stay in Canada.

If Hon. Members have practical suggestions that the Government should be considering to deal with the type of problem quite properly raised by the Hon. Member, we will certainly look at them in a most positive way.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Gordon Fairweather, Chairman of the Immigration and Refugee Board, has recommended that students in Canada who feel their lives would be in jeopardy if they return to China should make a claim for refugee status.

What advice would the Minister give to these students?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I outlined in response to the question from the Member's colleague, we will be issuing a package of information later today to make clear the options available to Chinese citizens in Canada.

Our officials will also be involved in the meeting this afternoon with the NGOs and the provinces, in order to expedite the situation and to assist with any further measures that we might take.

We will continue to work very closely with the private sector, the community, and the Department of External Affairs on future measures.

However, there is more than one step, and I do want to make that clear. There is more than one thing that can be done, and that is why we will be issuing this package.

BANKS

ALBERTA BUSINESS LOANS PORTFOLIO

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I gave to the Minister of Finance a series of figures showing that between 1982 and 1988 Canada's chartered banks yanked $9 billion out of their business loans portfolio in Alberta. This 50 per cent claw-back by the banks cost Alberta between 100,000 and 140,000 jobs and countless business enterprises.

Why did the Government do nothing while the chartered banks threw literally half of their business loans portfolio overboard?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is putting a somewhat pejorative interpretation on those numbers. I thank him very much for giving me notice of his question.

What has happened since 1982 up to 1988 is that we have seen a significant shift in the relationship in the bank loans to Alberta relative to the rest of the country. At that time the proportion of loans to Alberta was twice the size of its proportionate size in the economy, 25 per cent of business loans as opposed to its share of the GDP, the national income, of 12 per cent.

During this period of time that has come into line, so that it is roughly about the same proportions in both business loans and in its share of the economy.

That is partly as a result of the change in the resource sector. In the resource sector I understand that the loans are down from $10.8 billion to $5.6 billion as the result of a change from a very powerful and very strong period at that time and a number of loans related to takeovers related to the National Energy Program. That has worked its way out of the system, and there has obviously been an impact on other loans as well.

REVERSAL OF POLICY—POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, in fact, what has happened has been virtually restricted to the banks. At the same time as they were gutting their Alberta business loans portfolio, local financial institutions such as the credit unions, the mortgage loan companies, and the trust companies when they were going through a difficult period in Alberta, increased their asset base in Alberta. It is only the banks that have abandoned their Alberta portfolios.

In fact, it is not only the resource sector. In that category of loans under $5 million there has been a 33 per cent decline in the bank business loans portfolio in Alberta.

The Minister has responsibility for banking in this country. It is not something that the provincial Government can do. Will he put what pressure he can on the chartered banks to reverse this disastrous policy on behalf of the businesses and the people of Alberta?

• (1140)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks what we will do to change this matter. In fact what we did was change the National Energy Program, which was a very large factor in the disastrous impact on the resource sector itself.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): That is not true.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that it is not true. He should go to speak to people in the resource industry in Alberta. They will say that yes we did kill the National Energy Program. Yes, they will say that this was a good thing for the resource sector. Yes, they will also say that it is setting the stage for a healthy resource sector in the future, and that is in place right now.

I was going to say that the Hon. Member might be interested, but clearly he is not listening. I should also say that I have spoken to members in the banking community over the course of the last couple of years because I have been aware of this drop taking place. They advised me that the relationship between the size of the Alberta economy and the size of the bank loans is now coming into balance. They expect to see a more normal relationship in the future.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INFORMATION LINES FOR CHINESE NATIONALS

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As of yesterday morning, the External Affairs 1-800 number for Chinese nationals was not offering assistance in any of the Chinese languages. Today, many Chinese in Canada are panicking because the line is constantly busy.

Will the Minister add more lines to this information number? Will he also arrange to have persons who are fluent in the various languages to facilitate the flow of information to a very frightened people?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member tries to get her facts right and she generally is very appreciative of the quite excellent work that has been done by officials of the Department of External Affairs.

The fact is that throughout the operation of our hot line we have had operators available to speak to callers in both Mandarin and Cantonese. They have not been answering the telephone in Mandarin or in Cantonese. They have been answering in French or English, but that capacity has always been there on the hot line.

There had been a decrease in the use of the 1-800 number and for that reason the number of hot lines had been reduced. I will see if our information corresponds with that provided by the Hon. Member. If there is a need for new hot lines, they will be installed.

Ms. Clancy: I thank the Minister for his answer. I am sure that he will act on it.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. Fear and intimidation are constant within the various Chinese communities in Canada right now, as have been expressed in my riding of Halifax and across the country.

Will the Minister outline for the House what steps his Department is taking to alleviate this fear among Chinese nationals in Canada and to increase their protection in this time of peril and need?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have raised some of the concerns that are at the root of most of that apprehension directly with the Chinese Ambassador because there have been allegations of names being taken, photographs being used, and harassment being practised.

The views of Canada have been conveyed, the fact that this is utterly unacceptable to us has been conveyed. We will take a range of other measures. I will try to make available to Members of the House a precise listing of not only things that have been done but more particularly of people who can be consulted in the event there is a difficulty.

May I make this point: the Department of External Affairs and the Government will do everything we can. I think that one of the most helpful developments has been that to my knowledge Members of Parliament of all Parties across this country, in whose constituencies there are Canadians of Chinese origin or Canadian citizens, have been actively in touch with those persons. I would encourage that to continue.

It is one thing for the Government to be available and to have its services available, but it is far more helpful for Members of Parliament, in our own constituencies, to make it known that if there is anyone with a concern they should come to the Member of Parliament and the Government of Canada. If information reaches me that is accurate and on which we can act, we will act.

TRANSPORTATION

VIA RAIL ATLANTIC ROUTE

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of State for Transport.

In 1985, the Deputy Prime Minister promised the Mayor of Saint John that his Government would not shut down VIA Atlantic if 200,000 passengers used it by 1990.

In 1988, 240,000 passengers have used the VIA Atlantic route and the figures for the first quarter of this year show an increase of 23 per cent. Clearly, the people of Atlantic Canada have lived up to their end of the deal.

I want to ask the Minister if she will promise that the Government will keep up its end of the deal.

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Transport and myself have stated in this House earlier, the decisions relating to VIA will be made once we have received the plan from them, hopefully at the end of this month or early into July. At that time all facts will be taken into consideration and decisions will be made.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has said that only 3 per cent of Canadians use VIA. According to Transport Canada, most people travel by car. Of those who do not, 20 per cent use VIA; 40 per cent fly; and 40 per cent take the bus. That is the real situation.

Will the Minister read her own Department's figures? Will she do the honourable thing and let VIA provide the service it is capable of and that Canadians have come to expect?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, we always do the honourable thing. We make our decisions based on facts and figures.

As the Minister of Transport stated, there are only 3 per cent of Canadians that use the train. VIA is a national service. Three per cent of Canadians nationally use VIA. When the decisions are made, they will be made on the facts that are presented to us by VIA's studies and its financial plan that it will give to us at the end of June.

ELECTIONS ACT

THIRD PARTY ADVERTISING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. It relates to election expenses. In the committee yesterday, Jean Marc Hamel, the Chief Election Officer for Canada, indicated that we need some laws to restrict third party advertising during elections.

Being that the Government has indicated in a letter from the Deputy Prime Minister that it wants to remove all reference to third party advertising—in other words, make it completely wide open—I would like to ask the Minister if the Government has changed its mind and will put restrictions on third party advertising during the election campaign. Second, when will it start its inquiry into the Elections Act which was promised in the Speech from the Throne?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise my friend that in the Speech from the Throne the Government made very clear that we intend to set up an electoral reform commission to look at all matters vis-à-vis amendments to the Act. By putting this into the hands of an independent commission, I think that it will be able to work quickly and hopefully address the items to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I asked when. The Government did not answer. I asked what the Government's position was, whether it reversed itself on third party advertising. That was not answered.

NATIONAL REVENUE

TAX DEDUCTION STATUS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of National Revenue. He is aware that the Starr affair is now implicating not only Liberal cabinet Ministers in Ontario but members of his own caucus.

Has the federal Government checked to make sure that the laws with regard to charities and the tax deductions of this charity have been upheld? In other words, is the law of Canada being obeyed and has the Government initiated an investigation into this matter?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the simple answer is yes. In the broader perspective, while an individual took some very serious and questionable actions within that organization, I can confirm that after Revenue Canada looked into the matter very closely and worked with the National Council of Jewish Women of Canada, Toronto section, corrective action was immediately taken by the association.

This included asking for the resignation of Miss Starr and two other people who had been associated with Miss Starr in the foundation which was making those contributions. The council is now doing everything it possibly can to comply with the rules and regulations of its charitable status. Of course we are actively monitoring it and full co-operation has been given to us by the council. As a result of corrective action that was taken, there is no consideration at the present time to revoke the charitable status of that organization.

ENDANGERED SPECIES

SLAUGHTER OF ELEPHANTS IN AFRICA

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Given the appalling slaughter of African elephants by poachers who are killing for the illegal ivory trade, as was brought to the attention of the House earlier today by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore, and given the Minister's announcement yesterday of new Canadian initiatives to curb ivory imports to Canada, can he advise the House how and when these new measures will take effect?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the interest of the Hon. Member. The House will be interested to know that 10 years ago there were about 1.4 million African elephants. That number is down now to about 600,000. There is a rate of kill of 300 per day. Canada is in full compliance with the obligations that we have undertaken. However, there is no question that more must be done.

I indicated yesterday that we will be introducing very quickly further restrictions on imports of raw or worked African elephant ivory.

In addition, the Conference on Trade in Endangered Species is holding a meeting in Lausanne in October. As the House may know, there are two categories of protection. Asian elephants are in the most protected category. African elephants are not yet. Canada will be pressing at the Lausanne conference in October that African elephants be accorded the fullest possible protection.

PUBLIC SERVICE

MERIT PRINCIPLE

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board.

As the employer of one-quarter million Canadians in the Public Service of Canada, does the Minister approve of yesterday's announcement by the Public Service Commission that it is abandoning the merit principle for lateral transfers in over 20,000 positions thus opening the floodgates to administrative patronage?

Does he agree that employees should now lose the right they have through the courts to appeal when less qualified, less capable people are appointed without competition?

As the employer, is he concerned about the weakening of the quality and impartiality of the Public Service?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first, I would just like to underline for the Hon. Member that the Public Service Commission reports directly to Parliament. It does not report to Treasury Board.

Now that she knows that and I have confirmed it, I would like to say that in my view this is by no means an abandonment of the merit principle. The Government stands firmly behind the merit principle and is willing to foster the merit principle in every instance, at the same time ensuring the greatest efficiency in the delivery of government services throughout the country.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure how the Minister can say that when this action by the Public Service Commission ensures that transfers are not subject to review and that managers are not accountable for the application of the merit principle in over 20,000 positions. If that is not an abandonment of the merit principle, I do not know what is.

The Minister is absolutely right when he said that the Commission was established as an agent of Parliament—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mrs. Catterall: —and it should consult with Parliament before abandoning its mandate.

Will the Minister and his colleagues refuse to approve the Order in Council robbing employees of their right to appeal non-merit based appointments? Will he and his colleagues allow Parliament before approving the Order in Council—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister will answer the question.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly aware of the situation. I think it would be appropriate for the Public Service Commission to be approached on this particular matter. In spite of the fact that it reports officially through me to Parliament, it could certainly be seized of the matter.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PRIVATIZATION OF RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Post.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: I think that perhaps Members opposite should wait for his answer before deciding to applaud.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: In today's major daily newspapers Canada Post wasted yet more taxpayers' dollars in printing a list of 80 municipal officials who Canada Post claims are supporting the new privatized rural post offices.

Given that Reeve Janice Bush of Haggerty and Richards Township told me this morning in a telephone conversation that she never endorsed this principle and that the only thing she approved of was the fact that the privatized post office was better than no post office at all, I want to ask the Minister the following questions: How many more of these endorsements are phoney as Canada Post is in its corporate plan?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Gallup organization conducted a survey of all the communities that have had their service changed. Some 97 per cent of the people said that they found the service satisfactory. Some 90 per cent said it was as good or better than before.

Why did the Hon. Member not talk to Denis Pommainville of St. Albert, Ontario, which is in his riding, who endorsed the service as well?

Mr. Boudria: That is another one that is phoney. I am glad the Minister raised that one as well.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask him very clearly how many of those endorsements are phoney. Why are we being conned by Canada Post? Is the Minister an accomplice to this as well, or is he just merely approving that kind of nonsense?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in the Hawkesbury Express, a newspaper published in the Hon. Member's riding, people were asked: "Is the mail service any better?" Marilyn Hall of Hawkesbury said: "Yes". Catherine Laviolette of Kilmar said: "Yes". Monique Fournier of Hawkesbury said: "Yes".

His own constituents when asked by the newspaper in his riding say that the service is better. Why is the Hon. Member insisting on being a mouthpiece for Jean-

Claude Parrot rather than a representative of his citizens?

Mr. Boudria: I am a mouthpiece for my constituents.

THE ENVIRONMENT

ST. BONIFACE FIRE—PRESENCE OF FEDERAL INSPECTORS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I have some questions for the Minister of the Environment with respect to Manitoba.

The Minister will know that late yesterday evening there was a very substantial fire in Winnipeg, in St. Boniface, but it is also of concern to the people of Winnipeg—Transcona because the plume of smoke from the fire blew over the northeast end of Winnipeg.

Will the Minister of the Environment tell us whether federal officials, federal inspectors are on the site now? Has the Minister directed any of his people to make sure that both emergency procedures went according to the way they should have and also that environmental regulations were observed? What will be the federal follow-up to this event? Obviously, it is of great concern to the people of Winnipeg.

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is right. It is something that is worrying.

What we know is that it was an explosion of 160 one-litre drums of some kind of paint or solvent. Four family homes in the surrounding area had to be evacuated. However, people have returned now to their homes.

The situation is under control. We are analysing possible run-off contamination. Samples have been taken. We will have some results within the next few hours. The situation is under control. It is closely monitored. I am ready to inform the House and keep it posted as often as necessary.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, my information is that more people than that were evacuated.

SHOAL LAKE MINE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, also with respect to the Manitoba environment the Minister will know that there is growing concern about the prospect of a new mine being opened in Shoal Lake. It was raised earlier in the House.

Could the Minister tell us whether or not he is prepared now to order a federal environmental assessment review of this project? He has the capacity to do that.

We just learned today that as a result of slack regulations we have the problem in the Howe Sound. Why do we not act in a preventive way now before Shoal Lake is poisoned, order a federal environmental assessment review, and bring in a safe drinking water Act while we are at it?

• (1200)

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Shoal Lake mining project is under discussion by all Ministers involved—Ontario, Manitoba, and the federal Minister, myself. We will make sure that all federal environmental requirements will be met in this case as in any other.

AIRPORTS

IMPACT OF CONGESTION ON TOURISM

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for tourism, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister or whoever is present.

The Tourist Industry Association of Canada is becoming increasingly concerned about difficulties at the Pearson International Airport. Already there has been a major cancellation, that of the Professional Convention Managers Association. It was originally scheduled for Toronto and is now going to Dallas, Texas.

What does the Minister intend to do, as soon as possible, to prevent further losses to the tourist industry that is so important for Canada?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, the congestion problems at Pearson International Airport have been under investigation since the beginning of the year. Consultations were held with some 200 people in the Toronto and surrounding areas. We are working on the plan. A decision will be made public very shortly.

PETITIONS

ALLEGED MILITARIZATION OF ECONOMY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, indeed it is a privilege and an honour to have the opportunity to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Kamloops, British Columbia.

They point out their concern for what appears to be a growing militarization of our economy, and the support that the Government of Canada gives to developing our form of the multinational complex that promotes, aids, and abets the arms industry. They are asking Parliament to pass legislation ending this particular process.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, on another matter unrelated and pursuant to Standing Order 36, again I am pleased to present a petition on behalf of a number of Kamloops residents who are outraged at the Government's decision to change the Unemployment Insurance Act to take money from the unemployed for training programs.

Obviously the unemployed, particularly in the regions of Canada, are having an incredibly difficult time. To see their benefits reduced to enable the Government to provide money for training and re-education is absurd. They are suggesting that a more appropriate place to begin to collect tax would be from some of the 60,000-plus profitable corporations that do not pay any income tax at all, as opposed to dipping into the pockets of the unemployed.

WEST COAST OIL SPILL CLEAN-UP

Mr. Ray Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition in the House from citizens of Powell River, Texada Island, and other residents of the West Coast.

They ask the Government to launch a public inquiry into the Government's ability to prevent, contain, and clean up oil spills on the coast of British Columbia.

Many of these people volunteered to work with the Ministry of Transport and the Environment to clean the beaches. They undertook on behalf of Canadians to try and mitigate this oil spill. They lost clothing, took time off work, and bought bags with money out of their own pockets. They understood that they would be compensated for this by the Government of Canada that would then sue the perpetrators on their behalf.

It now turns out that these people will be suing the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard), and the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) in small claims court to go good on the promise that the Government originally made. Hopefully the Government will respond to the petition before they have to take it to court and before the House rises.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 52 and 60 could be made orders for returns, those returns would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that questions Nos. 52 and 60 be made orders for returns?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement as a follow up to yesterday's statement on business. I understand that we are making progress on second reading of Bill C–10. This is the only item of business that the Government intends to call today. The Government would be agreeable to moving Private Members' Business up and commencing that as soon as second reading on Bill C–10 is complete if, in fact, it is completed before two o'clock.

With respect to Monday, we are trying to schedule Bills to meet the convenience of Members. Therefore, I wish to indicate a change. We will not be calling Bill C–15, an Act respecting plant breeders' rights, at eleven o'clock but rather we will call Bill C–11, an Act respecting Borrowing Authority. There may be further Bills called as time permits on Monday but we will continue to consult with our colleagues opposite in an effort to make sure that we are not inconveniencing unnecessarily any Members.

I do wish to indicate something to the House. Yesterday I said discussions were under way to complete a reasonable amount of work on Bills currently on the Order Paper by June 30, 1989. However, I wish to give formal notice of the Government's intention to invoke Standing Order 57 in order that second reading of Bills C–15 and C–21 be completed, that third reading of Bill C–11 be completed and that second reading of Bill C–20 be completed prior to June 30, 1989.

Mr. Allmand: Disgraceful. This is closure.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, what we have just heard is outrageous. I do not know if the Government is trying to turn the House of Commons into China II with the trampling of democratic rights but it seems that we are being given notice that the Government plans to proceed in the same despicable way.

I want to remind the Hon. Minister that Bill C–15, plant breeders' rights has not had a single speaker speak to it to date, not one. Debate has not even begun on it.

On Bill C–20, the Excise Tax Act, we have only had one speaker. This Bill is going to impose a vast network of taxes on the people of Canada. Bill C–21, we will have closure after only two speakers from this Party. I want to send a very clear signal that once again we are seeing a contempt of parliamentary tradition. We are seeing a contempt, if you like, of the Government permitting adequate debate on critical issues in the House of Commons. We find this repugnant. We find it unacceptable, dictatorial and something we have now come to expect.

I think what this Government is trying to do is to make Canadians immune to these Draconian and anti–democratic measures when they are prepared to trample on the rights of parliamentarians by not permitting adequate debate on these very critical Bills.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it was almost impossible to believe the words of the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) when he announced in the House that the Government is invoking closure on Bill C–21 after only three speakers I believe it is from the Official Opposition who have spoken in this important debate.

Here we have a situation where the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, with the support of Conservatives on that committee, moved that that committee travel throughout the country to consult on measures in that Bill. That report was sabotaged in some way or other in the House. We then have the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) saying that she did not consult and does not intend to consult on the Bill. Now after only a few Members speaking in debate the Government is introducing closure on measures which significantly affect unemployment insurance all over this country. This is, as my hon. colleague says, a hijacking of democracy. It is an insult to Parliament and all our parliamentary traditions. If the Government is going to act in this particular way in dealing with important Bills, we will find ways to deal with the Government in like manner so that it will not get its business through this House.

It was not our purpose to obstruct on that Bill but simply to continue the debate so Canadians could understand what is a very complicated piece of legislation. It is very difficult for people to understand the implications of unemployment insurance legislation. The terminology is difficult and a certain amount of debate is necessary so Canadians can understand what is happening to them. For the Government to move this kind of measure at this point in the debate is totally unacceptable.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I merely gave notice of the Government's intention to move closure in the event that we are unable to pass these Bills at the stage referred to by June 30. The House will know that notice is a normal thing. The closure motion has not been moved. It is simply notice.

I would like to make one comment. I think my hon. friend from the New Democratic Party suggested that the debate on Bill C-15 had not been commenced. I believe if he checks the Notice Paper he will note under item No. 15 on page 14, it states:

> Resuming debate on the motion of the Minister of Agriculture for the second reading and reference to a Legislative Committee of Bill C-15,—

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the point of clarification by the Hon. Minister. I simply want to reiterate that on a Bill that is literally going to transform the entire patent field when it comes to life forms, something that has incredibly vast implications, it must be debated thoroughly at every stage. There have been two speakers from the New Democratic Party on Bill C-15 but if we were doing our job properly, we would be spending the next two or three weeks on this piece of legislation alone. The implications in terms of patenting life forms in this country are horrendous. It is important that parliamentarians not only have an opportunity to express their views on behalf of their constituents but to hear other views on this very critical issue. It is for that reason that we find this move despicable and completely unacceptable.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say as a new Member of this House that here we have the occasion of the Government giving notice of closure on Bills that it is just beginning to be processed through this House. This is the same Government that waited until April 3 to call this House back into business.

It seems to me that the words of the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) are mild compared to what might have been used. This is an absolutely outrageous suggestion from the Government that it is to proceed this way.

The Minister is now suggesting that he is going to hold a club over the opposition Members regarding their response to these Bills. I want to say as forcefully as I can through you to the Minister that this Government has forgotten the traditions of this House and, even if I may say, the traditions of his own Party in coming to this House with the suggestion that he makes here today.

[Translation]

Mr. Gatuhier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a procedural matter. I must say I deplore the approach taken by the Government, but if I understood the Minister correctly, he is giving notice on four pieces of legislation, namely, if I am not mistaken, Bills C-15, C-21, C-20 and C-11.

I would like to ask the Chair whether Standing Order 57, as it stands, covers a situation where a Minister gives notice on four pieces of legislation, or are we to understand that he must give notice every time he intends to dispose of legislation, as opposed to doing all four at once.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: To answer the question, I believe the Hon. Minister may give notice for several bills at a time. However, I will check, and I will get back to the Hon. Member in a moment. I am almost positive the Minister is right.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, if I have to read Standing Order 57, I will do that, but I read the Standing Order very carefully. My interpretation is the one I mentioned just now, namely that the Minister may give notice that he will invoke closure under Standing Order 57, but only on one measure, one bill, and not several or a whole series of bills, and I would ask the Chair to give me some clarification.

SPEAKERS DECISION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 57 does not say the Minister is limited to one specific bill, and therefore, I must conclude the Minister has the right to announce a series of bills. However, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for raising this question. Perhaps it could be usefully examined by the Committee on Elections, Privileges, Procedure and Private Member's Business, but for the time being, the Chair accepts the proposal made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis).

FORGIVENESS OF DEBTS (SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA) ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, May 26, consideration of the motion of Mrs. Landry that Bill C-10, an Act relating to the forgiveness of debts incurred or assumed in respect of certain official development assistance loans made by the Government of Canada to the governments of certain countries in sub-Saharan Africa, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de Grâce.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-10 is to partially forgive the debts owed to Canada by certain sub-Saharan African countries. It is satisfying to note that the countries of the world are finally giving some attention to this most critical and serious problem of Third World debt.

I say finally because I can recall attending international conferences at the United Nations and elsewhere only four and five years ago when representatives from Latin America and Africa pleaded with representatives of northern and western countries to pay more attention to the developing crises in their countries as a result of the overwhelming debt owed to the North.

Very little was done at first. Perhaps this was due to the fact that at that time the officials and the ministers dealing with the problem in northern and western countries were principally Ministers of Finance and officials in departments of finance. But finally, people who are involved in external affairs and in development assistance have become involved and we have seen some movement. While no problems have been solved yet, at least attention is being given to this extremely serious matter.

We saw in Toronto last summer at the Economic Summit decisions taken to reschedule sub-Saharan African debt. These proposals went forward in the form of the Paris Club plan for a rescheduling of that debt. Then this March, we saw the new Secretary of the Treasury for the United States, Mr. Brady, making additional proposals toward a solution of these debt problems with particular reference to Latin America.

It is heartening to note that Members of Parliament are also getting involved. I had the good fortune to attend a conference organized by Parliamentarians for Global Action, a parliamentary association which is active in this Parliament. This was a conference which this global association of parliamentarians organized at the end of March in Amsterdam, Holland.

At that conference, we had Members of Parliament from most of the G-7 countries and from all political parties. From Canada we had Conservative and Liberal Members. From the European countries, we had Christian Democrats, Social Democrats, radicals, et cetera, with officials and experts discussing how we might on a multi partisan basis deal with the problem of Third World debt. I am pleased to report as well that in this House, for the last few days the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade has been paying special attention to this problem.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, this problem of Third World debt is extremely serious and destabilizing for world peace. What is particularly upsetting, when we look at the facts, is that many of these countries are paying back to creditor countries in the north, countries like the United States and Canada and the western European countries, more in the form of interest than those countries are paying in development assistance. What nonsense, Mr. Speaker.

We have countries in the north boasting about their programs for development assistance on how much they give to African and Latin American countries through their development assistance programs. Yet, on the other hand, those same countries are forced to pay, in the form of debt and interest, moneys back to those very same countries so that in many cases those countries are debt receivers. The northern countries receive more from those poor developing countries than they are giving in assistance.

Let me cite some figures. According to the World Bank, developing country debt now exceeds $1.3 trillion. That is hard to imagine. I can think in terms of millions and billions of dollars, however, when we get into trillions it is very difficult to imagine. But that is now the total debt figure—at least it was at last report—for developing country debt. That is $1.3 trillion.

By the way, the $1.3 trillion is in U.S. dollars. These developing countries have transferred $85 billion U.S. dollars to developed countries since 1982. In the cases of the most highly indebted, this translates to more than 2 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product in the period.

If we can put this in other terms, in recent years the net transfer of capital from the Third World to the rich countries has taken place in large amounts. There has been a net transfer from the Third World, from the poorer countries, to the rich countries. Between 1981 and 1985, net capital export from Latin America moved from U.S. $0.2 billion to U.S. $42.4 billion.

In Asia, the transfer was from $1.7 billion in 1981 to $9.7 billion in 1985. In Africa, from $5.3 billion in 1981 to $21.5 billion in 1985. It is obvious that this makes a farce of our development assistance programs and our philosophy for development assistance.

If we look at sub-Saharan Africa, which is the main focus of this Bill before the House today, the total outstanding debt of the countries of sub-Saharan Africa at the end of 1985—and that is the most recent report that I have—is about $100 billion. About $100 billion at the end of 1985. The International Monetary Fund estimates $76 billion, excluding arrears of at least $11.6 billion.

In sub-Saharan Africa, the countries most indebted are Nigeria, with $16.6 billion; the Sudan, $7.7 billion; the Ivory Coast, $7.4 billion and Zaire, $4.6 billion. I could go on and on. These debts and the repayment of the debts and the schedule for repayment is extremely important, not only for the suffering and hardship in those countries but also because it is a destabilizing factor in world peace and world politics.

The foreign debts of those countries have been estimated to be the major cause of depression in those countries in the 1980s. Since 1980, many developing countries have experienced a depression more severe than the Great Depression of the 1930s in the industrialized world. The three post-war decades of slow improvement in the living standards of these peoples is such that these developing countries have begun to go backwards. While there had originally been some improvement, now there is backward movement.

This is not only a question of the situation of the peoples in these countries. It is also a question of stability and humanity with respect to those areas. It is sad to note that since 1945, which was the end of the Second World War—which we talk of as the last war, which in fact it was not—there have been 125 wars in which 30 million people have been killed, two-thirds of those people being citizens as compared with one-third military, and three-quarters of those wars have been in the developing world.

• (1230)

In the developing world, there is depression, instability and debt. That is why we have to consider the problem of world debt not simply as a financial and economic question but also a question that affects the whole world. It is a question of peace. When we deal with questions of war and peace, we do not simply look at the number of weapons and nuclear arms involved, we have to look at the causes which lie behind conflict. One of the causes which lie behind conflict is the severe poverty that exists in many of these countries.

Bill C–10, the Bill before us today, forgives the debt with respect to certain sub–Saharan countries in Africa, 13 countries which are listed in the annex to the Bill. While it does not solve the problem, it is certainly a move in the right direction. My hon. colleague, our Party's critic, has pointed out some of the shortcomings in the Bill.

Today I appeal to Canadians to understand and support the reasons which lie behind a Bill like this. When I happen to meet some people in the street, they ask why we are forgiving the debts of African countries. People ask why we do not do this for Canadians, why we do not forgive the debts of Canadian farmers and business people instead of forgiving the debts of these African countries. In Canada, we do have very significant programs to deal with this, though they are not enough. We on this side criticize the Government for not doing enough, but there are programs like Old Age Security, the Canadian Pension Plan, certain regional development programs, the Canadian Assistance Plan, Medicare and the like, programs at the federal and provincial levels that deal with the problems of Canadians. As well, there is a Bankruptcy Act in Canada. We have insolvency legislation so that when people get into debt over their heads, they can get out of that debt and start all over again. We do not drive them into the ground and let them starve to death. We have legislative means for helping them. Unfortunately, in the international arena that is not the case.

When countries like Brazil, Argentina and Peru have debts with banks in Canada, the United States, Britain, France and Germany, there is no international Bankruptcy Act that would allow these countries to get back on their feet again. If we believe in the philosophy of bankruptcy and insolvency legislation for those who live within our own national boundaries, we should translate that spirit into the international arena and should be ready to forgive debts in certain cases which would drive the country to what I would call complete insolvency. That is what some of the proposals that are now on the table are attempting to do. I am referring to the decisions taken at the Toronto Economic Summit last summer where a plan was put forward for rescheduling certain Third World debt, known as the Paris Club for debt rescheduling. It is certainly not enough. It will not solve the problems, but at least it is a beginning and a move in the right direction.

On March 10, U.S. Treasury Secretary, Nicholas Brady, a member of the new Bush Government in the United States, unveiled a plan in which he exhorted commercial banks to forgive a portion of their Third World loans in return for guarantees that at least some of the debt would be paid. One would think that would be looked on with reason and with a long term view. Unfortunately, some of the banks, including some Canadians banks, have not been too sympathetic to that proposal.

A certain number of parliamentarians met in Amsterdam at the end of March, and I was one of them. We met at a conference organized by Parliamentarians for Global Action and after two and a half days of discussion, we put out a document entitled,"The Amsterdam Appeal". In that appeal, we stated:

> We agreed that the recent new debt relief policies—although moving in a more positive direction—are insufficient and need substantial extension. In fact, the new debt strategy requires a "Toronto plus" and a "Brady plus" approach. The debtor countries require both debt reduction and new concessional finance as a pre–condition though not a substitute for valid and sound domestic economic policies. Funds for debt policies reduction should be additional to those already allocated for aid.

Then we made certain specific recommendations, some with respect to Latin American countries whose debt is principally commercial and is owed to creditor banks in the northern hemisphere. We made other recommendations with respect to the sub–Saharan countries whose debt is principally with governments of countries in the north. Since the Bill we are dealing with today focuses on the sub–Saharan African countries and their government–to–government debts, let me mention some of the recommendations that were made.

We said again that the Toronto Summit set an important precedent by authorizing debt reduction in connection with rescheduling in the Paris Club, and we said that the need of African and other low–income countries for external resource flows and debt reduction has not yet, however, been adequately addressed. We recommended first that there be a write–down of a significant portion of the Paris Club debt. Second, we recommended that there be a moratorium of 10 years on all official interest and principal payment obligations.

Further, we recommended that the budgetary costs of these debt reductions be added to aid donor commitments and not be taken from existing aid allocations. That is very important because the existing aid allocations are being relied upon for certain projects in Third World countries and to simply take some of those moneys for the debt reduction would not solve the problem. We also recommended that aid donors who have not already done so plan a program of cancellation of their aid-related debts and, through this Bill, there is the cancellation of certain debts. Finally, a very interesting recommendation made by the parliamentarians in Amsterdam is that the International Monetary Fund consider the sale of a portion of its gold holdings to finance additional multilateral concessional lending to low-income, debt-distressed countries.

These are some of the proposals made by parliamentarians, experts, financial people and businessmen to try to resolve these important problems. In conclusion, I would like to make an appeal to Canadian citizens to understand how serious the poverty is in these countries of Africa and Latin America. We must reach out to them to do things which will support them in the development of their peoples and countries. I recall how Canadians and people from all over the world responded a few years ago when they saw on television the starving children in Ethiopia. They responded with great heart and gave in substantial amounts. They gave through rock concerts and in many other ways. That was because they saw very graphically on television how horrible the situation was. It has not gone away. The fact that we do not see it on television every day does not mean that it has gone away. It is still there in Latin America. It is still there is Asia and in Africa.

• (1240)

I urge the Canadian people to support our Government and urge it to do more in order that we can have a world where there is co-operation between peoples and not conflict and war.

Forgiveness of Debts Act

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate. As the previous speaker indicated, I would like to suggest that it is a step in the right direction.

Bill C-10 on which we are completing discussion today is a Bill that forgives the government-to-government debt that a number of sub-Saharan countries have with the Government of Canada.

It is important to recognize those countries as identified in the Bill. They are the Republic of Camaroon, the People's Republic of the Congo, Republic of the Ivory Coast, Gabonese Republic, Republic of Ghana, Republic of Kenya, Democratic Republic of Madagascar, Federal Republic of Nigeria, Republic of Senegal, Kingdom of Swaziland, Republic of Zaire, Republic of Zambia and Republic of Zimbabwe.

This at least is a recognition by the Government of the incredibly bleak conditions that face the people in those sub-Saharan countries. Time and time again we are reminded as Canadians, normally through the news media, of the terrible conditions that exist for the people in those countries. We are not reminded every day because those terribly horrible conditions are not news, as we normally define news. They are on occasion flashed on our television screens or covered in various publications. For the people of the sub-Saharan, and generally people of developing countries, these terrible conditions go on day after day, year after year, decade after decade.

As parliamentarians, we are aware of those situations. Over the years we have urged the Government of Canada to take appropriate steps. That is why today it is fair to say that on a government-to-government basis steps are being taken. We support this particular initiative to at least ease some of the debt burden that those countries have in terms of debts they owe to the Government of Canada as a result of a variety of aid packages and aid loans over the years.

However, it is important that we now go beyond this. While we say that this is a step in the right direction and as a result of this initiative that we are passing in Bill C-10 a small amount of the debt faced by those countries will be eliminated, it is only the tip of the iceberg in terms of the iceberg being the problem. The tremendous debt problems those countries face is something that I do not believe Canadians are able to easily comprehend. I say that for two reasons.

When we in our country get into serious debt problems, either as individuals, as organizations, or as businesses, we have legislation that recognizes that from time to time this does occur, often through no fault of the players but because of changing circumstances. For example, a farm that might be struggling through difficult financial or climactic times may find itself in a bankruptcy situation. Often when people find themselves with a serious debt problem, it is not necessarily because of their inability to deal with the financial challenges that face them, but is as a result of outside circumstances that create this debt situation to a point where repayment of the debt is simply impossible.

In our country when that occurs to individuals, businesses, organizations, we have backruptcy and insolvency legislation to deal with that in order to attempt to recognize that steps must be taken to pay off, as much as possible, those to whom the money is owed. But we are not in a position to drive those individuals into starvation, or literally to destroy the lives of the people and their families involved. We have taken on a rather humane view of financial crises that individuals, groups and companies experience.

That same logic and goodwill ought now to be extended to the developing countries. When one looks at the plight that they are in, at the incredible financial and economic challenges faced by them, in most cases those challenges have nothing to do with the people themselves but are foisted upon them from outside.

We all recognize that as a result of a variety of forces, the sub-Saharan countries have faced incredible drought problems. Rural and particularly nomadic peoples have been forced to move off their traditional lands and focus their activities in certain areas, and as a result overgrazing and desert expansion results. It seems that the natural environment that has sustained previous generations for hundreds and thousands of years simply evaporated overnight as a result of desert conditions extending into the sub-Saharan area day by day.

If we were honest, we would all recognize that the developed countries, the First World and the Second World countries as we define them, have exploited the Third World countries, the Fourth World countries and the developing countries for years and years. They have gone in and extracted their natural resources and taken advantage of the desperate situation in which the people find themselves and have exploited the people in a variety of ways.

We do not have to look any further than the so-called free trade zones on the American-Mexican border where people are working for a few cents a day. Those same people working in a country such as Canada would be paid $7 or $8 an hour. That is the reality. We have exploited those people in these countries for decades.

Now those countries find themselves in a desperate situation financially. We have to ask what our response has been. By "our" response I do not necessarily refer to the Government of Canada directly, but I do indirectly, because it involves our chartered banks that operate overseas, it involves organizations such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, organizations of which we are a part. The answer that those organizations have placed on those countries is to impose what can only be described as a new right concept in terms of applying market-place forces on those countries and asking them to cut back on important government services in terms of developing urban and economic infrastructure, cut back on education, cut back on health care, and cut back on housing. In other words, imposed a veil of poverty and starvation on the people of those countries. That is the reality. We can couch it in all manner of fancy economic terms.

Recently, not in the sub-Saharan but in Venezuela, some pointy-headed bureaucrats who sit in Washington, D.C. making decisions on behalf of the IMF have suggested an incredibly oppressive package be placed on that country. That country has been given no alternative because it needed a carry-over loan because of the tremendous debt situation it is experiencing.

The International Monetary Fund stated that it would loan Venezuela the money to carry it over the next number of months, if it imposed upon its people a harsh and cruel program of restraint. That country was given no alternative. We saw rioting in the streets as the gas prices were increased significantly and people had to abandon their cars because they simply could not afford the cost of gasoline. They then had to depend on a public transportation system which was already overburdened in some of the major cities, and whole cities ended up in chaos. There was rioting, killing, looting and burning as a result of the poorest of the country being the hardest hit. That decision was made by pointy-headed bureaucrats sitting in the United States with no understanding of the political, cultural and economic reality of those Third World countries, and no sensitivity.

We are part of that process. Canada, being a participant in the IMF and a player in the World Bank decisions, would have an opportunity to influence some of those decisions. When we look at the whole process of structural adjustment that the IMF, the World Bank, and the banks in the other developing countries are imposing on these developing countries, no wonder they are ending up virtually worse off as a result of this so-called adjustment.

I think it is only fair to say that adjustment becomes more intelligible when understood as a technology of control. What First World countries have determined is that our way of life in countries like the United States, Canada, and Western Europe ought to be imposed on the developing countries regardless of their culture, the realities of their economies, their traditions, or their social values. We are going to impose what has worked in our country on theirs.

We must recognize that what has worked and resulted in the prosperity that we experience today in countries like Canada, the United States and Western Europe is a result of exploitation of Third World countries. It goes right back to the very beginning with the Conquistadors going into Latin America and extracting, in a barbaric way, the resources back to Spain. We see the same thing here in terms of the reaction to exploitation of our native people through the fur trade from the very beginning of the Canadian economy.

We have to admit that our prosperity, wealth and lifestyle, of which we are very proud, to a certain extent in some cases and to a large extent in other cases, is based on the exploitation of people in the developing countries. So there is no way that we can impose our system of exploitation now focused on them because there is no one left to exploit. They cannot apply the same methods and technology of exploitation to those around them.

It is an unrealistic solution. Canada can make a difference in the international community, particularly as we participate in these international organizations that are making the decisions to impose this new right solution called "Structural Adjustment" on the people of the developing countries.

In conclusion, I want to say that we certainly do support this initiative. It is, hopefully, not an empty initiative that simply gives the impression that Canada is concerned.

I have spoken about the fact that while we might make some small concessions in terms of government-to-government loans due Canada by tearing up those papers requiring that loan repayment, we fail on two other counts that I think we have to recognize. There is one I have just mentioned in terms of our participation in organizations such as the International Monetary Fund. Also, how serious are we in developing and supporting the economy of the sub-Saharan countries?

The way we evaluate the Government's concern is by what we do with our overseas development assistance programs. Do we extend additional assistance to those countries in desperate need? Do we look at the developing country and identify new ways and means of supporting its efforts toward self-reliance and self-determination? I am afraid it is a very sad day for the Government of Canada to have to admit that, no, we are reducing our commitments.

As a matter of fact, during the last Budget, that section of the Budget that had the deepest, most wicked and cruel cuts, was that of overseas development. CIDA, one of the arms of our foreign aid work has made a tremendous difference in terms of changing, on a relatively small scale, the local economies in terms of developing people's basic training and skills, developing local infrastructure to allow people to develop self-determination and self-reliance. This Government has curtailed large expenditures in those areas. After all, the proof of the pudding is in the eating.

We can stand here for days and listen to government Members talk about their concern for the Third World and their interest in assisting Third World economic development. The reality is that we should be prepared to put our dollars to assist in those initiatives. I am sad to say that the reality is that the Government says, no, we are not only going to cease expanding in these areas, we are going to reduce our commitment and reduce it significantly.

I say it is a sad day. While we see this Bill as a signal that perhaps the Government has come to its senses and recognized the responsibilities and obligations we have internationally, let us hope that we will see a change in attitude in terms of the amount of money we put into official overseas assistance. We should also take a more aggressive and pro-active position in organizations such as the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) should urge our chartered banks that also have huge obligations in the Third World to recognize that we should be treating those countries and those people in much the same way as we treat our own people in this country through our bankruptcy and insolvency legislation.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the debate today is certainly a critically important one. In some respects, it shows the concern of the Government for Third World nations in great difficulty.

I would like to ask my colleague about the prospect of External Affairs and the Government of Canada tying agreements such as this to certain specific conditions. I would like to put to him the proposal that the high seas drift-net fishery in the Pacific Ocean is one of the most destructive undertakings in the world. It has been put forward as the biological destruction of the Pacific Ocean.

In this particular arrangement, we have countries who are buying high seas illegal fish from Taiwan, a country that manufactures, processes and catches fish illegally. The question is whether we, as humanitarians, are prepared to make an important gesture to these countries.

We do not have any diplomatic relations with Taiwan. Therefore, we are not able to undertake a treaty with them or open discussions with them. What we can do is stop the flow of illegal produce.

The question I would put to my colleague is whether it is reasonable to ask those countries to join with us in an action that would protect an enormous part of the environment of this earth by stopping the flow of illegal high-seas fish that are captured in the north Pacific by stopping the destruction of millions of sea mammals and sea birds. This activity is described as strip mining and is destroying the Pacific Ocean. It is so critically important that we give consideration to Canada becoming involved in a major gift, as it were—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Halliday): Order, please. The Chair would ask that you try to demonstrate the relevance of that question to the Bill under debate.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly be prepared to demonstrate the relevance of it as there is an indication that the flow of illegal product moves into these Third World countries. The dilemma we have is that with an illegal operation in Taiwan we do not have any influence to exert on Taiwan. These countries could assist us in return for the gift of forgiveness of loans by Canada. We could certainly be in a position with External Affairs to make it a condition that they not accept this illegal, destructive produce in return for that gift; that they join with us in the United Nations to stop this activity and that they also form a third-party arrangement through agreement to stop the activity which destroys the Pacific Ocean. It is vitally important to us that in a gesture such as this, where Canada is forgiving loans to other nations, it would not hurt to ask whether they would be prepared, in return, to join with us on such an important undertaking.

This Government's record on this particular issue, where it put five observers on foreign ships that were plundering the ocean, the Americans withdrew from it. They said it was absolutely ridiculous and more direct, vigorous action had to take place. This Government's action on the high seas drift-net activity is absolutely disgusting. It is destroying jobs. It is destroying the environment.

We should be asking other nations to join with us. It is a fair and relevant question to my colleague that I hope he has time to answer.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the question demonstrates to me, as much as anything, the incredible interest the Hon. Member for North Island—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) has in the destruction of the resources of the Pacific as a result of the drift-net technology. On every occasion possible, he raises the concerns of so many people on the West Coast of British Columbia. The Government appears to be taking little interest in this initiative. I think we all agree, and I see a number of nodding heads—I am sure I speak for everyone in the House—that we would all like to see the Minister of Fisheries take a much more aggressive position in terms of the Taiwanese, Japanese and South Koreans fishing with the use of the drift-nets which are literally destroying that Pacific Ocean resource.

• (1300)

Having said that, I think perhaps the most appropriate response would be to say that, yes, actions can be taken but actions can only be taken if the Government of the day has the will to stand up to countries such as Japan, Taiwan and South Korea, which countries are overfishing. If you like, Mr. Speaker, fishing might be the wrong term. It is the biological destruction of the resources of the Pacific Ocean—a total destruction of that resource.

In summary, I appreciate the Hon. Member's intervention. It was a thoughtful one. It is one that he has made often. Hopefully, the Government will be listening soon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Halliday): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment you on the latitude that you give Members of the House of Commons when entering into these sorts of debates.

Bill C-10, is a Bill for the forgiveness of debt in—

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In terms of referring to another Member's intervention, I suggest that the high seas drift-net fisheries is such a dangerous and destructive thing that the Hon. Member should probably include the topic in his speech. Perhaps the question of the relevance of tieing this issue to loan forgiveness is important. I would like to hear him stand up for the people of Canada and indeed for the—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Halliday): I am afraid that that is not a point of order. It might be a point of debate.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I do not withdraw anything that I said.

To get on with the debate at hand, it concerns the forgiveness of debts in the sub-Saharan regions. I want to go on record with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace (Mr. Allmand), in saying that my Party concurs with the principle of what this Bill is trying to do. In our concurrence, however, we do not thoroughly agree with everything that is being done, but we believe that we are on the right track in terms of the forgiveness of debt in these particular countries.

I wish to try to put a more human face on the debate and what is going on in Africa now. Three months ago I had occasion to have a luncheon with the Minister of Health for the Sudan. She had been visiting Canada along with her brother. They spoke to a number of parliamentarians here on Parliament Hill. They were telling us about the state of health of the people but, more particularly, of the children of the Sudan which left us very near to tears.

A few years ago I was in Washington. I overheard a conversation between two representatives of farmers' groups from a country called Lower or Upper Volta, I am not sure which. They were talking about mechanizing in their country, mechanizing in order to bring forth better crops. Since I have a farm implement dealer factory in my riding, I was pretty much interested in what kind of machinery they were using. They were talking about mechanization and the fact that they were at last going to get, I think, a horse or a donkey rather than having the children and the wife pull the ploughs. We are dealing here with countries which are not only underdeveloped but which about I think it would be fair to say lack even the basic tools to feed themselves.

In this debate I would like to put a human face on Bill C-10 and what is happening in Africa. For almost 900 million people, approximately one-sixth of mankind, the march of human progress has now become, in my opinion, a retreat. In many nations development is being thrown into reverse. After decades of steady economic advance, large areas of the world are sliding backward into more abysmal poverty.

Throughout most of Africa, average incomes have fallen by 10 per cent to 25 per cent in the 1980s. In the 37 poorest nations, spending per person on health has been reduced by 50 per cent and on education by 25 per cent over the last few years.

In almost one-half of 103 developing countries from which recent information is available, the proportion of six to eleven-years olds enrolled in primary school is now falling. Not only do they not have the money to take care of themselves in terms of health and food, they cannot even nourish the minds which in the future might get them out of their cycle of poverty. In other words, it is the children who are bearing the heaviest burden of debt and recession of the 1980s. In tragic summary it can be estimated that at least half a million young children have died in the last 12 months as a result of the slowing down or reversal of progress in the developing world.

For most of the countries of Africa, Latin America and the Caribbean, almost every economic signal points to the fact that development has been derailed, per capita GNP has fallen, debt repayments have risen to a quarter or more of all export earnings, share in world trade has dropped and the productivity of labour has declined by one or two percentage points each year throughout the entire 1980s.

It is the young child whose growing mind and body is susceptible to permanent damage from even temporary deprivation. It is the young child whose individual development today and whose social contribution tomorrow is being shaped by the economics now. It is the young child who is paying the highest of all prices and who will bear the most recurring of all costs for the mounting debt repayments, the drop in export earnings, the increase in food costs, the fallen family income, the rundown of health services and the narrowing of educational opportunities.

Too often, spending money on health or education is regarded as a form of consumption which can only be afforded in times of plenty. Protecting the health and education of these children is the basic of all investments in the physical and mental capacity of the next generation and, therefore, in the social and economic development of all societies and, most particularly, in the societies of the sub-Sahara.

It is no longer necessary for approximately 40,000 young children to die every day, every day even as we speak in the developing world, and for so many millions more to live on with ill-health and poor growth. The advances already achieved during the 1980s in immunization, in family spacing and in the drafting of a convention on the rights of the child are among the great humanitarian achievements of our times, something in which our country has taken a part. However, these are jewels in a tarnished crown. Without restoring the forward momentum of economic development, it will become increasingly difficult to sustain such progress.

Two elements have dominated the deterioration of economic prospects over so much of the developing world in recent years. They are rising debt payments and falling commodity prices.

The total debt of the developing world is now over $1,000 billion U.S. In many countries annual repayment of interest and capital amount to more than the total of all the new aid and loans being received each year. On average, repayments now claim about 25 per cent of the developing world's principal export revenues.

The developing world still depends on raw materials for the majority of its export earnings. However, in the last 10 years real prices for the developing world's principal commodities have fallen by approximately 30 per cent. The fall in new commercial lending and the inadequate and static levels of official aid complete the four walls of the financial prison in which so much of the developing world has been incarcerated during this decade.

• (1310)

In 1979, a net of $40 billion flowed from the northern hemisphere to the developing nations of the south. Today that flow has been reversed. Taking everything into account, loans, aid repayments of interest and capital, the southern world is now transferring at least $20 billion a year to the northern hemisphere. That is a difference of $60 billion which could be used in helping these developing nations. As a result, most of the affected nations have been forced to adopt economic adjustment policies in an attempt to stave off balance of payments crises while at the same time meeting debt obligations, maintaining essential imports and struggling unsuccessfully to return to economic growth.

The need for adjustment is not really in question. The manner of adjustment by contrast is an issue which is both complex and controversial. Now with or without support from the International Monetary Fund, the IMF, adjustment policies have usually taken the form of a dampening down of demand, a devaluation of the currency, a withdrawal of subsidies on fuel and stable food stuffs and deep cuts in Government spending. In total over 70 developing nations are now struggling to adjust their economies by just such methods.

I have here, as an aside, a copy of The Financial Post. This great literary newspaper seems to be in favour of just this type of thing. I know when they are in favour of something like that, it is a very good reason for myself and anyone in the Liberal Party to be against it.

It is the poor and the vulnerable who are suffering the most, and for two main reasons: First, the poor have the least economic "fat" with which to absorb the blow of recession. Often three-quarters of the income of the very poor is spent on food and much of what remains is needed for fuel and water, housing and clothes, bus fares if they have buses and most needed of all, medical treatment. In such circumstances a 25 per cent cut in real incomes obviously means going without even the basic necessities in these countries.

The second reason is that the poor also have the least political muscle to ward off the blow. The services which have been lost or radically pruned are health services, primary education and food and fuel subsidies, the services on which the poor are most dependent and which they have the least opportunity to replace by any other private means.

Over the last decade, for example, the proportion of Government expenditure devoted to health has fallen in most countries of sub-Saharan Africa, in more than half of the countries of Latin-America, in the Caribbean and in one-third of all the nations of Asia. There is little doubt that adjustment strategies are failing in at least two major ways. First, as I have already pointed out, they have placed a disproportionate burden on the poorest and most vulnerable, and the children are those who are the most vulnerable of all.

Second, they have succeeded in a principal aim of allowing indebted economies to escape from debt to return to healthy economic growth. It is this second failure to restore growth which must be urgently addressed in order to protect the poorest and the most vulnerable, and also to contribute to a quickening of economic growth of a kind which smaller and poorer producers could both contribute to and benefit from. Despite the hardships being visited upon the poor, present policies for coping with the debt crisis are manifestly not succeeding in restoring economic growth to the most indebted nations.

For sub-Saharan Africa, in particular, the agonies of economic adjustment are evidently not the birth pangs of a new economic growth. Sooner or later the fact will have to be faced that in many countries attempts to pay interest and capital on the full amount of present debts is fundamentally incompatible with return to economic development. That is why at the beginning of my intercession today I said that our Party was in favour of the principle of this particular Bill. Debt payments at present levels may not only reduce consumption and all the human hardship that that implies, but also a reduction in investment and in future economic progress.

I want to quote a few figures from a paper which was written by Mr. John Locksley. In the past two years, it has become apparent that the world debt crisis is not confined to the large debtor countries, and that most African countries are facing debt obligations which they will find very difficult indeed. They are less spectacular than famine, and less threatening to our own financial institutions than debt difficulties elsewhere. The African debt crisis is of daunting proportions. Unless the outside world moves quickly to render assistance, many African countries will experience immense social and economic dislocation and deprivation as they seek to service their debts. That is why this is a good gesture on the part of this Government.

Figures for African debt outstanding are notoriously unreliable, but the International Monetary Fund estimates that they are over $130 billion. This figure has more than doubled in the last 10 years. It is now the equivalent of 150 per cent of the whole continent's total annual exports or 30 per cent of its total GDP. The debt of sub-Saharan African countries is equal to 230 per cent of exports and to 68 per cent of GDP figures which are well in excess of even the large problem debtors, the difficulties of which are so well documented.

The annual costs of servicing this huge debt have risen sharply from $3.6 billion in 1978 to over $15 billion today. Over the same period, Africa's export earnings have risen by only $20 billion. The bulk of this increase has been used for what? For bettering the lifestyle of the people there? For bettering their lives? No, for servicing the debt. Annually these commitments now absorb 28 per cent of all the export earnings, the highest for any region of the world outside of Latin-America.

It is apparent that many of these countries will be devoting significant proportions of their income and foreign exchange earnings for debt servicing in the years ahead. The negative consequences of this scenario are likely to be horrendous for the economic and social well-being of the affected peoples, most of whom even without this burden live close to the subsistence level. Their ability to purchase imports, so vital to the operation of their economies, will be severely constrained. This will lead again to unemployment, an excess capacity in industry and trade, a fall in investment and a lack of input into such key areas as agriculture, health and education.

I think that the point has been well made. I think that Members on this side of the House have stated the position of our Party. We are moving in the right direction in this debt forgiveness, but this Government should extend itself even more. It should reconsider, or at least consider in the next budget, and see to it that these people in Africa do not have any more cuts in CIDA, do not have any more cuts at least from this country. We should be opening up our hearts and in this case our purses so that the least fortunate people on this planet can have a chance to survive and live their lives in some kind of dignity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred a legislative committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being two o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Member's Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS EXPORTS

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the "surplus test" should be restored so that no exports of natural gas from Canada would be permitted unless it could be shown that volumes slated for export were surplus to Canadian needs reasonably projected over the 25-year period following the commencement of the proposed export.

He said: Mr. Speaker, no doubt to the delight of those present here this afternoon, I propose to keep my remarks mercifully brief and to the point.

I would start by noting a couple of things about natural gas and Canadian supply. First, rolling in our non-conventional reserves, which is to say principally those Arctic reserves to which no pipeline has yet been built, we enjoy at current rates of export and domestic consumption about a 25.5-year supply of natural gas in this country. So, there is no question that the matter addressed by the motion is not an urgent one.

However, it should be noted that there are two overwhelming factors that we must constantly keep in mind when we address the question of domestic supply of natural gas. The first is, obviously, Canada is a northern country. We have cold winters. We need to be very careful in the husbanding of those energy resources which allow us to thrive and prosper during those long cold winters.

Second, as we move, for we must move, from excessive dependence on conventional gasoline and such fuels for the powering of our automobiles, the heating of our homes, and the running of our factories and other industry, natural gas will play a crucial transitional role. We will move to energy alternatives. We have no choice. It will happen. But in getting there we will be absolutely reliant on large supplies of natural gas as we move from old technologies to the new.

Those are the two things we should bear in mind in considering this matter. One, that we are a northern country and need energy resources and, two, that natural gas has a crucial environmental role to play in this country. It is in light of this that we should examine what is happening in the export market which currently is most respondent to two overwhelming factors. The first factor is the willy-nilly deregulation of the oil and gas industry undertaken since 1985 and the second is the signing of the Free Trade Agreement with the United States and its implementation as of January 1.

There is no question that that gas bubble in the United States which had kept Canadian exports to that market at such a low level for so long is contracting. Indeed, it can be expected to disappear completely over the next five to ten years. In fact, there are already huge volumes of natural gas under consideration for export to the American market: for example, the applications now before the National Energy Board are for permission to export Arctic gas in volumes unprecedented in Canadian trade with that country. Currently there is nothing in regulation or statute, certainly not under the FTA, to prohibit a rapidly accumulating volume of exports to the United States of Canadian gas. There is no cap or ceiling. It is technically possible that we could wind up in a short period of time exporting 80 per cent of our proved reserves to the United States. I think that is unlikely but my point is that there is nothing in regulation or statute to prevent it. I think that would be a foolish thing to do but not technically impossible.

There is a very large expansion in the capacity of the transmission pipelines to the United States under way now. There are applications for new pipelines to be built and for further expansions of existing pipelines. There is no question that the players in the market are gearing up for greatly expanded exports to the United States,and this in light of what some industry analysts call the "FTA ratchet" which, simply put, is the provision in the Free Trade Agreement that gives the United States the mandate to continue to receive the proportion of our energy resources that the Americans received in the average of the previous three years should some regime of rationing be brought in. This means that as our exports to the United States grow in volume, our ability in the future to close off those exports to some degree is diminished in that we must always be prepared to supply to the Americans the same percentage of production that was in place prior to any rationing.

In the absence of any regulatory or statutory provision requiring the maintenance of some kind of reserve for Canadian use, we run the risk of signing over huge quantities of our gas reserves to the American market in virtual perpetuity. We may wish to do this. The Government may decide that this is a good and prudent policy. I do not agree but the point is we should understand that if that is the policy decision there will be those consequences.

I think it is prudent, especially in light of the Free Trade Agreement, that we return to a regime whereby a guaranteed supply is retained for Canadian purposes over a prudent period. Twenty-five years was the previous surplus test. It makes sense and is a good policy for Canada to return to that regime. However, I note as well that under the current deregulation regime, the simple imposition of a surplus test only would be grievously unfair to the producers because it would put an overwhelming bargaining tool into the hands of the consumers of the product.

If there were a 25-year surplus test requirement before the producers could sell any volume above that 25-year supply to the United States, it would be a simple matter for the principally-eastern-Canadian consumers to sit back and say: "Fine, you are not selling any of that until you bring the price down to something that we like". It is an easy scenario to envisage and one that I think would ensue almost immediately were we to return to a surplus test regime in the absence of other regulation. This is why I view this motion to be in tandem with other re-regulatory initiatives. We need to re-regulate the price especially with regard to the return to a border price test but as well the return to a regime of regulated pricing generally in Canada.

Is this a proposal for a return to a regulated price that would be bearable in consumer markets and give to the producers of the resource a fair return allowing them to go out and explore further to discover new reserves which, by the way, the current market price does not do?

• (1330)

Is this the thin edge of the wedge in terms of complete re-regulation? The answer, Mr. Speaker, is yes. Unqualifiedly, that is in fact what I am proposing.

If I may digress just briefly here, I would like to plead with those whose assigned task it is this afternoon to quarrel with this proposal, not to bring up the red herring of the National Energy Program. I realize that this request on my part is in all likelihood doomed to go unmet. But I feel compelled to make it regardless, for the simple reason that what is proposed here has nothing to do with the NEP.

The NEP in its three principal provisions imposed the PGRT, the petroleum gas revenue tax, diverted investment dollars from the western sedimentary basin to the frontier Canada Lands and provided a regime for the progressive Canadianization of the oil and gas industry.

Our government, having slain that particular jabberwock, "O Frabjous day!", cannot now claim that the return to a regime of regulated pricing, a 25-year surplus test, and the border price test has anything to do with the NEP. All of those factors in fact predate the NEP. They were left unchanged by the NEP. They were done away with, not in consequence of the doing away with the NEP, but in the coincidental elimination of various forms of regulation in the oil and gas industry.

I would argue that de-regulation has been in place long enough for it now to be understood as a grievous error. It has created a situation in which billions of dollars of investment have been drawn out of the Province of Alberta, and to a lesser degree other provinces, in which hundreds of companies have gone out of business, especially the independent Canadian juniors, in consequence of which Canadianization of the industry has been rolled back. We have lost the accumulated skill and expertise of decades in one fell swoop. The rate of the finding of new reserves has dropped to a trickle. The Americans in consequence have been granted a control over our reserves which they could not have dreamed of 20 years ago.

The central fact of the matter is that in Canada it is imprudent and heedless of Canadian history to rely on the market. In Canada, the market must be tamed and put to the purposes of public policy democratically arrived at. We rely on the market at the peril of our nation and to the enhancement of the Americans' nation.

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member suggested that we not refer to the NEP. Frankly, I cannot help but refer to it when he speaks of regulated pricing in all forms of the oil and gas industry. That is precisely what the National Energy Program was for, a Made in Canada oil price.

Earlier today in Question Period, he talked about the banks and how money has been taken away from Alberta. The reason the banks failed was as a direct result of the National Energy Program. Real estate prices fell. Businesses failed. People lost their jobs. At the tail end of a recession there were bank failures.

With this motion and Motion M-97, the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey) suggests that we have a floor price. He is advocating the return to a national energy program or a program with similar consequences. Other than to have these few brief comments about the National Energy Program, I will not return to it. I think the Member for Edmonton East will be thankful for that.

Approval of the Hon. Member's motion would not only represent a return to past practice, it would be a step into the past, to the bad old days when the Government of Canada's energy trade policies were based upon notions of hoarding and unfair treatment of trading practices. It would imperil the stable and attractive investment environment that this Government has strived to achieve. Instead of promoting energy security, it would reduce it. It would also seriously affect the prospects for investment, employment and economic growth in Canada.

Since 1984, this Government has undertaken a number of initiatives to improve the health of the energy sector and to restore its vital role in achieving a sound energy and economic future in all regions of the country. Among its principal initiatives, this Government has deregulated oil and gas markets, undertaken regulatory reforms and eliminated unnecessary and onerous restrictions on trade in oil, gas and electricity. It has put in place a more balanced and profit-sensitive fiscal regime to encourage investment and development.

These initiatives were guided by one fundamental principle, that dynamic market forces are the most reliable and efficient means to guide energy production and consumption decisions.

This Government's energy policy has recognized the need to foster the development of Canadian resources and of competitive markets in order to create an environment in which, first, consumers are assured that sufficient and diverse supplies of energy will be available at fair and competitive prices, and second, producers benefit from a wide range of market opportunities and a stable and attractive investment climate. These policies do not mean that the Government has withdrawn from the energy sector scene nor that the Government no longer has a legitimate role to play in energy matters. Quite the contrary.

While the Government's policy emphasizes the valuable role of market forces to guide energy production and consumption decisions, it also recognizes that markets are not always perfect. This Government takes seriously its responsibilities to ensure that the interests of Canadians are protected. The National Energy Board in particular performs an important monitoring and review role to ensure that markets are operating properly.

The existing market based procedure used by the NEB to review natural gas export proposals combines greater reliance on market forces with intervention if and when necessary in order to protect the interests of Canadian consumers and producers.

While the Government's regulatory framework has been streamlined, this is not an indication that it is any less effective. It is only an indication that the previous regulatory regime was terribly excessive, imposing severe costs on the producing industry while not providing any material advantage in terms of energy security for Canadians.

Canadians realize that true energy security cannot be achieved through hoarding. Policies which encourage competitive and responsive energy markets, coupled with appropriate emergency measures and international co-operation, are the most effective means of achieving energy security.

One of the best indicators of how we in Canada co-operate internationally is the Free Trade Agreement. In its simplest terms, the Free Trade Agreement calls for the freest possible bilateral trade in energy. This has been achieved through the elimination or reduction of tariff and non-tariff barriers and an establishment of rules to govern energy trade in the future.

At the same time, the Free Trade Agreement acknowledges the legitimate right of governments to maintain appropriate regulatory systems and to restrict exports when circumstances warrant. This does not mean that the Free Trade Agreement will result in a surge of exports above what would normally occur in a deregulated environment. The growth in the energy sector over time and the volume of energy exports to the U.S. or elsewhere will be guided not only by the availability of resources but by the economic opportunities that exist.

Can exports be restricted? Does this mean that Canada can no longer restrict exports to the U.S. or to other foreign markets even if it is in the public interest to do so? Clearly, we can restrict exports.

There are a number of reasons for which the Government might authorize export restrictions, all of which are recognized by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the Free Trade Agreement. The Free Trade Agreement includes some conditions that must be observed if the Government chooses to restrict exports in certain circumstances. Two points bear emphasis in this regard. It would rarely, if ever, be in Canada's interests to restrict exports. Restrictive action usually results in reduced revenues for Canadian energy producers, thus reduced incentives to find and develop additional supplies. Restrictions often entail a beggar thy neighbour approach to export customers and provokes strong resistance on the part of the producing provinces, especially Alberta.

Second, exports nonetheless can be restricted for reasons set out in the GATT. These include the existence of a short supply situation, the need to conserve depleting resources and to effect measures taken in connection with a price stabilization program. In other words, the Free Trade Agreement has addressed the Hon. Member's concerns.

If exports are restricted to deal with situations of critical shortages, conservation and in conjunction with price stabilization schemes, the FTA further provides that three conditions must be respected. The first condition is that Governments may not interfere to restrict export customers' competitive access to the share of total supply that they have previously enjoyed. This does not mean that Canada is obligated to supply or deliver that share. It simply means that governments will not interfere with the competitive access up to the allowable limit.

Canadian consumers, on the other hand, will have competitive access to all available supply.

The second condition is that the governments will not discriminate against U.S. customers by imposing higher prices on exports than those charged for domestic sales. Higher export prices may, however, result from competitive market forces. This provision applies only to government action to impose higher prices than those charged to domestic customers.

Finally, governments agree not to act in a manner that will disrupt normal channels of supply or the normal mix of energy products being exported. What is noteworthy about these conditions is that they apply only to exceptional circumstances and apply only to government actions that could otherwise result in arbitrary and discriminatory actions. In other words, they entail a presumption that the competitive operation of market forces will generally produce a better and fairer result than the arbitrary actions of bureaucrats. God knows, we have too many of those.

There are many other reasons for which governments or the NEB may restrict exports legitimately under both the FTA and the GATT. For example, restrictions imposed for the regulation of monopoly, for environmental reasons, for reasons of public safety or to correct the effects of unfair trade practices in the marketplace are all legitimate reasons for which governments might intervene. In these general circumstances, the proportional access provisions which I have outlined do not apply.

It is quite clear that the Hon. Member's motion providing for a return to a surplus test based on the argument that Canada has lost its ability to restrict exports is completely unnecessary.

In summary, let me re-emphasize the main points I have made. The setting aside of 25 years of reserve would run counter to Canada's energy policy which clearly emphasizes the critical role of competitive markets to achieve not only Canada's energy security objectives but also its important economic and regional development objectives. An arbitrary 25-year reserve requirement would impose severe costs on the industry, jeopardize the attractive investment environment in the oil and gas sector, increase federal, provincial and regional tensions and result in foregone opportunities for expanded trade and economic growth. This will mean fewer jobs for Canadians while we want more jobs, more economic opportunity and a fairer and more just society for Canadians.

Walter Van De Walle (St. Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in the House to express my confidence in the National Energy Board as the custodian of our Canadian natural gas supplies. The National Energy Board has the sole legislative responsibility to protect reasonably foreseeable domestic natural gas requirements. In my opinion, the board has discharged this responsibility very well in the past, and I see no reason to doubt its capability to do this in the future.

My hon. friend from Edmonton East disagrees with this. He wants a surplus test to be restored, but not just any surplus test. Rather, he wants:

> That, in the opinion of this House the "surplus test" should be restored so that no exports of natural gas from Canada would be permitted unless it could be shown that volumes slated for export were surplus to Canadian needs reasonably projected over the 25 year period following the commencement of the proposed export.

What is so magic about the figure of 25 years? Why not a figure of 35 years or 15 years? The legal text which sets out the mandate and responsibilities of the National Energy Board in the area of licensing of natural gas exports does not refer to a magic number. Let me quote in part from section 118 of the National Energy Board Act which sets out the considerations applicable to the issuing of licenses:

> On an application for a licence, the Board shall have regard to all considerations that appear to it to be relevant and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the Board shall
> (a) satisfy itself that the quantity of—gas—to be exported does not exceed the surplus remaining after due allowance has been made for the reasonable foreseeable requirements for use in Canada having regard, in the case of an application to export—gas, to the trends in the discovery of—gas in Canada;—

There are three things to note about section 118. It provides a mandatory responsibility using the word "shall". It is within the sole purview of the NEB and it gives no indication or direction as to responsibility. There are no magic numbers or formulas in that text, and it provides no one way of doing things. Indeed, the National Energy Board has seen fit to modify its surplus determination procedures.

• (1350)

Let me review the various hoops which the surplus test, so dear to the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey), has gone through since 1959. Generally speaking, the model first established by the Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board, the National Energy Board has used a formula approach to determine volumes of gas that are surplus to reasonably foreseeable domestic requirements. The methodology has been adapted according to changes or perceived changes in market conditions; that is, the methodology has tended to be more exacting when gas markets are tight and energy prices are rising, and more flexible when markets are soft, prices falling and supplies shut-in.

In the 1960s, a decade of resource discovery, development, and market expansion marked by little or no concern for supply and pricing, the National Energy Board used a stock approach. From established reserves, that is recoverable reserves, the Board deducted total requirements, that is a lump sum for Canadian sales, usually 25 per cent of the actual or forecast demand, plus a lump sum for authorized exports. The balance, if any, was considered to be available for exports. This formula approach did not take into account the increase or decline in demand, nor in future reserve additions, thus it was always possible to overestimate or underestimate a variable.

In the 1970s, energy markets changed very abruptly. Low prices had increased the North American gas demand, but also discouraged resource developments. At the same time, oil price shocks had fuelled world-wide concerns about energy security. The National Energy Board switched its attention from the adequacy of reserve bases to the adequacy of deliverability, that is the industry's ability to produce gas over a given period of time. In 1979, the Board added to its reserves test to deliverability tests, one based on the level of deliveries, and the other based on established reserves. All three tests had to be satisfied before exports could be authorized.

In the early 1980s, the gas market again changed dramatically. There was restrained demand, mature infrastructure, underutilized capacities, and surpluses were now the major characteristics. Thus, in 1982 the National Energy Board made some changes to surplus procedures, adopting a more realistic assessment of total requirements, that is, what actually would be sold versus what was licensed or contracted for sale.

In 1985, while negotiations leading to natural price deregulations were under way, and that is the time that this is taking place, the National Energy Board decided to review surplus procedures to determine their appropriateness in the light of anticipated policy and market changes.

In the spring of 1986, the Board introduced a surplus methodology based on the reserves/production ratio. The object was to maintain a ratio between reserves and production.

In September, 1987 the board announced that its current reserves to production ratio would no longer be appropriate, and it would be contrary to the free market operation if the level of gas supply to Canadians were to be determined by other than market forces. The Board moved to a market base procedure which is comprised of two elements, one of which is a public hearing component to air complaints and assess the impact of the proposed export and to determine whether the national public interest is being met as stipulated in Section 118 of the Act.

May I remind my hon. friend from Edmonton East that this new market base procedure was announced more than one year before the passage of the Free Trade Agreement? Thus, one cannot accuse the National Energy Board of bowing to the pressures of the Free Trade Agreement.

After a lengthy public hearing on the matter of surplus determination procedures—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, however, as the time has expired may I ask him to conclude?

Mr. Van De Walle: In conclusion, I see no reason why the House should vote to restore the 25-year surplus test as proposed by the Hon. Member. While he may take some comfort in numbers, personally I feel very confident in the good judgment of the National Energy Board.

Mr. Charles A. Langlois (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me today to speak on the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey).

Mr. Speaker, the natural gas surplus test established by the National Energy Board was based on the principle that the best way to ensure our energy security was to keep large amounts in reserve. This was an interventionist approach that substituted a bureaucrat's reasoning for the laws of the market. The Government believes that the best way to guarantee a secure natural gas supply is to ensure that markets work correctly, not to distort the rules.

It is said that those who do not learn from history are condemned to repeat the same mistakes. The energy crises of the 1970s were an excellent lesson. The main lesson that these upheavals in the petroleum market taught us is undoubtedly that any excessive government intervention is likely to do more harm than good. The history of natural gas is proof.

In the early 1970s, the surplus test was a large obstacle to the gas trade between Canada and the United States. According to this test, the National Energy Board would only approve exports if, in its opinion, Canada had sufficient reserves to meet its own needs for 25 years.

Mr. Speaker, the application of this test had three negative effects. First, we lost major export earnings, since the Board did not authorize any new gas sales outside of Canada between 1970 and 1979. Second, one form of intervention leads to another. Since the door was closed to exports, there was so little competition on the domestic market that the Government was obliged to regulate the domestic price of natural gas. Third, the natural gas producers were encouraged to develop gas that no one needed so that it could be put in reserve and included in the calculation for the surplus test.

It is extremely difficult to calculate what this policy has cost Canadians as a result of inefficient operations and in terms of foregone income. It probably amounts to billions of dollars, Mr. Speaker. Furthermore, Canada's reputation as a reliable trading partner has been tarnished.

Did Canada enhance its security of energy supply by creating such reserves? Not at all, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the surplus test points to a basic lack of understanding of the laws of the energy market.

In the case of oil, there is the constant threat of a sudden disruption of world supplies. More than half of the world's oil reserves are located in the Middle East, a region that suffers from political instability. Furthermore, most of the oil in Eastern Canada is imported. That is why the Government has introduced policies to deal with any disruption of supply. More specifically, the Energy Supplies Allocation Board would be able to activate a number of allocation and rationing programs should an emergency situation be declared. Canada is also a member of the International Energy Agency, whose emergency sharing system would guarantee that no member country would suffer unduly in case of a worldwide disruption of the oil market. Thanks to measures of this kind, Canadian oil consumers are protected against any interruption of supply, without adversely affecting the efficient operation of the oil market in our country.

In the case of natural gas, we do not have the same problem. Canada produces practically all the gas it uses, so that occurrences on the market outside North America do not really have an impact on our own market. In fact, we have no reason to expect a sudden disruption of the gas market.

Our major concern is therefore not that our access to natural gas might suddenly be cut off but that someday we might exhaust our supplies, so that consumers would be out in the cold, so to speak. Are we right to worry? Not at all, Mr. Speaker. If governments let the markets operate the way they should, none of this will happen.

In the early 1970s, some people predicted that we would have a shortage of natural gas before the eighties. In fact, in 1979 we had a surplus. What happened, Mr. Speaker? Despite government intervention, the market did its work. Prices rose, which caused production capacity to increase and consumption to slow down. When the same thing happened in the United States, there was a drop in demand for our exports. That is why the expected shortages never materialized. In fact, as governments changed their perspective and encouraged the substitution of gas for oil, the anticipated shortage changed into a glut.

Does that mean that we must always go from one extreme to another, from shortage to surplus? Not if we are prepared to accept the laws of the market as more efficient than rules made by bureaucrats in determining the ideal rate of depletion and in choosing the best forms of alternative energy or fuel saving! However, we do not need the "surplus test" to make sure that Canadians never run out of gas. If we let market forces operate, prices will always adjust so that supply and demand remain in balance.

What about the long term? After all, is natural gas not an exhaustible resource? Mr. Speaker, as the price of natural gas rises, consumers will adopt other energy sources. Nothing leads us to think that this change will be rapid or disruptive. We already changed from one form of energy to another in the past, with no great economic consequences.

In the 1870s, 90 per cent of Canada's energy came from wood. In 1920, it was only 16 per cent, while coal accounted for 75 per cent. Fifty-five years later, in 1975, coal's share had fallen to 10 per cent, while oil accounted for 54 per cent and gas for 22 per cent. Everything suggests that the future transition from oil and gas to nuclear fusion and hydrogen or any other form of fuel will be just as easy. Furthermore, coal consumers started to use oil or gas long before coal ran out and we can expect that natural gas consumers will go to some other source of energy long before gas runs out.

All this does not mean, Mr. Speaker, that the Government has no role to play in the natural gas markets. Obviously, market forces can fail. The present market-based procedure serves to ensure that Canadians have fair access on normal business terms to their own natural gas supplies.

Mr. Speaker, I would be negligent if, in closing, I did not talk briefly about natural gas from an environmental point of view. Gas is the least polluting of all fossil fuels because it produces less sulphur dioxide and carbon dioxide emissions than coal or oil. Sulphur dioxide contributes to acid precipitation, while carbon dioxide adds to the greenhouse effect. Building up gas reserves therefore does nothing to safeguard the environment. On the contrary! If Canada exports less gas, the United States will probably burn more oil and coal. We should encourage the use of natural gas, not limit it!

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak on Private Member's Motion No. 97 of the Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey). It gives me pleasure to endorse the deregulate-denvironment of Canada-U.S. natural gas trade.

Recent regulatory and policy initiatives have created a framework that allows the industry access to market opportunities. That also provides a method of oversight to ensure that exports are in the over-all public interest.

Allow me to review the accomplishments of the natural gas industry. Canada has the most competitive natural gas market in the world. Our competitive market is working to the benefit of both producers and consumers. With the achievements to date, our industry is in an excellent position to withstand and benefit from the energy market volatility that seems to lie ahead. In short, we have a success story in which we can take pride.

It is worth noting that our natural gas deregulation policies were primarily driven by developments in and the objectives for the Canadian gas market. After all, 60 per cent of the marketable gas produced in Canada is consumed at home. Tangible evidence of the success of deregulation is the increased competitiveness and market responsiveness of the Canadian natural gas prices. The weighted average domestic price for the years 1987-88 is more than $1 per gigajoule lower than the pre-deregulated price of $2.79 at the Alberta border. In turn, this has increased the competitiveness of gas vis-à-vis alternate fuels and enhanced the ability of industrial gas users to compete internationally. A similar degree of progress has been achieved in the natural gas export industry. Volume wise, 1988 was a banner year for natural gas exports. Exports of 1.27 trillion cubic feet in 1988 surpassed the previous record established in 1972 by roughly 25 per cent. As a result of these export sales, Canadians captured roughly a 7 per cent share of the total U.S. natural gas market, the largest portion ever.

On a regional basis, imports of Canadian gas assume a greater importance. For example, about 30 per cent of total California supply comes from Canada and about 71 per cent in the Pacific northwest. Certain border accommodation markets such as Vermont and upstate New York are entirely dependent on Canadian gas.

Although the surge in export volumes has been accomplished by a decline in average export prices, gas export revenues grew 15 per cent in 1987 to reach $3 billion in 1988. In Canadian currency, this represents the first major increase in revenues in three years.

• (1410)

Notably, Canada–U.S. trade in natural gas has not been one way. One of the offshoots of Canadian gas deregulation has been the reactivation of U.S. exports into our eastern markets. To date, the volumes have been small, less than 20 billion cubic feet, and limited by capacity constraints, although still strategically important both from a price discovery point of view and ensuring greater flexibility and security in gas supply systems.

It is perhaps worth remembering why Canada–U.S. trade in natural gas began at the turn of the century and subsequently prospered. For the U.S., Canadian gas offered the proximate long–term supply security needed for market development. In several instances, U.S. markets were closer to Canadian supply than to lower 45 production.

For Canada, exports provided the economies of scale needed to finance the major pipeline systems which attached supply to market, and were also a means of generating producer cash flow.

Although we have a surplus of natural gas relative to domestic demand, Canadians have always been somewhat ambivalent about exports. Recognizing both the importance of natural gas in meeting our total energy demand of 30 per cent and the non–renewable nature of the resource, Canadians have consistently sought reassurances that exports would be in the public interest. This ambivalence has been reflected, virtually since the turn of the century, in policies and consequent legislation and regulations governing pricing and licensing of natural gas exports.

However, historically, regulatory policies on both sides of the border have tended to distort prices and limit levels of gas demanded. Both the Canadian and U.S. Governments have worked hard over the past five years to place bilateral gas trade on a competitive, market–oriented basis.

In Canada, the regulation of gas exports is carried out by a federal agency, the National Energy Board, and includes three major functions. They are to ensure that gas to be exported is surplus to reasonably foreseeable domestic requirements; to establish tolls and tariffs, that is, conditions of access, for Canadian pipelines serving domestic and export markets; and to issue certificates of public convenience and necessity for the construction of interprovincial and international pipelines.

We have been particularly fortunate in that our governing legislation and the regulators who implement it have been sufficiently flexible to adapt rapidly to changing policy and market circumstances.

A case in point, consistent with domestic deregulation, the NEB replaced a rigid formulaic approach in place for 25 years, with a market–based procedure to determine if gas to be exported is surplus to Canadian requirements. The procedure has three components. They are the ongoing monitoring of and reporting on specific market gas developments and over–all Canadian energy supply market trends. This is intended as an early warning system to alert industry to possible future market disruptions.

The second component is the public hearings at which applications for long–term—in excess of two years—export licences are reviewed to determine over–all public interest.

The third component is a complaints procedure to ensure that no Canadian user is unable to contract for supply under terms and conditions similar to those in a proposed export arrangement.

To date, the new procedure has been used successfully to assess several export licence applications.

The Free Trade Agreement with the U.S. is a logical extension of this earlier deregulation process. The Free Trade Agreement basically entrenches the conditions under which exporters are able to compete actively in U.S. markets and gain market share. However, a form of public review and export–import licensing does remain in place for the following reasons: to obtain statistics on trade; to ensure orderly marketing; to monitor supply and demand trends; to ensure broad public interest criteria are met; and to ensure that there is no discrimination in the access to markets or to supplies.

Given these initiatives, what is the outlook for Canadian gas exports? Clearly, long–term exports for general system supply will continue to be the backbone of our natural gas trade. However, thanks to the flexibility of our export policy, Canadians have become active players in the U.S. spot market. Some 25 per cent of the volumes flowing are under short–term orders. Indeed, the willingness of Canadian producers to sign long–term export contracts provides them a competitive advantage in the U.S. market vis–à–vis their American counterparts. U.S. producers have demonstrated a reluctance to submit to similar terms and their contracts frequently relate to "well deliverability".

Canada has significant proven and potential gas supplies in both the western sedimentary basin and in frontier regions. For example, at year-end 1986 Canada had roughly a 25-year supply available from remaining reserves of 72 trillion cubic feet. With frontier discoveries included, the established reserves are estimated at 89 trillion cubic feet. Thus we are well placed to take advantage of new market opportunities.

However, at present levels exports are reaching the limits of capacity. Additional volumes to meet growing U.S. demand will require the construction or expansion of systems in Canada and the U.S.

Mr. Speaker, it has been a great honour for me to take part in this debate.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, first, let me apologize to you for my rather husky voice. Let me say that while we are talking on the subject of hydrocarbons I could use some form of hydrocarbon for my voice.

I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey) for having been able to introduce a Private Member's Motion into the House at such an early date in his career. It surprised me a bit that somebody from Alberta would want to put a clamp on the export or use of hydrocarbons from Alberta. I would have expected someone like myself from Ontario to be one who might fall for the idea of trying to limit the use of natural gas.

This is a motion with which I perhaps would have agreed some 15 or 25 years ago. However, I think the passage of time has suggested that perhaps this thought is outdated. Indeed, the National Energy Board surplus tests for natural gas was based on the belief that hoarding our energy supplies was the best way to ensure energy self-sufficiency or security. That policy is definitely an interventionist policy. It has as its objective to substitute bureaucratic wisdom for natural market forces. I think that is where the problem lies. I know that my hon. friend from the NDP perhaps would not like to talk about the natural market forces. However, history shows that they do work.

It is a belief of the Government that the best way to ensure that security of natural gas supplies is not to override market forces but to make the markets work. It has been said that those who do not learn from history are doomed to repeat it. There is much to learn from the two energy crises of the 1970s. Unquestionably, the prime lesson to be derived from the ups and downs in the petroleum sector is that excessive government intervention can do a lot more harm than good. Indeed, the history of the natural gas surplus test is a case in point. By the early 1970s, the surplus test represented a major constraint on the trade of natural gas from Canada to the U.S. In accordance with this test, new exports of natural gas were permitted only if, in the view of the National Energy Board, sufficient gas reserves existed to satisfy Canadian needs for 25 years. This test had three major negative effects. First, there was a significant loss of export revenues between 1970 and 1979, which of course had a big effect on Alberta producers. There were no new exports of natural gas allowed.

Second, intervention begat intervention. With the export markets cut off, there was virtually no competition left in the Canadian market. The Government then had to regulate the domestic price of gas.

Third, natural gas producers were given an incentive to develop gas that nobody wanted so that it could then be shut in and included in the surplus test calculation. It is extremely difficult to estimate the cost to Canadians of this policy in terms of the inefficiencies that were created and the revenues that were lost, but it would likely be in the billions of dollars. In addition, there was the damage to Canada's reputation as a reliable trading partner.

Did Canada enhance its security of supply by hoarding its gas supplies in this fashion? No, because the surplus test represents a fundamental misunderstanding of how energy markets work.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that I am running of time, but I would be remiss if I did not add a word about natural gas and the environment. Natural gas is the cleanest burning of the major fossil fuels. It produces fewer sulphur dioxide emissions than oil and coal and fewer carbon dioxide emissions. Sulphur dioxide contributes to acid rain and carbon dioxide contributes to the greenhouse effect. Hoarding of natural gas therefore will not help the environment. In fact, the opposite is likely to be true.

If Canada exports less natural gas, the U.S. is likely to burn more oil and more coal. We should be encouraging the use of natural gas, not prohibiting it.

PETITIONS

NOISE FROM PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36 I have the honour to present a petition from a number of constituents of Mississauga South dealing with the problem of air noise over Mississauga South occasioned by the activity at Pearson International Airport.

CALL FOR CBC TRANSMITTER

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the residents of Wollaston Lake and Hatchet Lake in the north part of Saskatchewan. There are about 900 people in those communities, 300 of whom have signed this petition. The only media services they get are those from satellite. There is no local, provincial or regional media coverage.

This petition calls on the CBC to build a transmitter, as is its mandate for every community with a population over 500. It is my honour to present this petition to call upon the CBC to build a transmitter in Wollaston.

RCMP UNIFORM

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary Southwest): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour under the provisions under Standing Order 36 to present many petitions containing the signatures of 9,833 citizens of Calgary who want to retain the uniformity of the RCMP uniform.

These petitioners say that the RCMP has a long and honourable tradition, known and admired around the world. They want to make it clear that they are not discriminating on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms prevents that under equality of rights provisions in Section 15.

All persons must have the right to apply for positions in the RCMP and, of course, competence and qualifications must be tested and criteria must be maintained. The uniform of our RCMP is part of our Canadian heritage and our Canadian culture. That is what these signatories want to preserve.

These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to preserve the distinctive heritage and tradition of the RCMP by retaining the uniformity of the dress code with all the recognized colour and trappings that have such a great historical value for this country.

I want to thank the three ladies in Calgary, Alberta, who worked days, weeks and months to obtain the 9,833 signatures. They are proud Canadians and want the Canadian identity protected.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 36 to table a petition with this House. The petition is signed by residents in the Kingston, Napanee and Ottawa area of this province. They express their concerns about the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to move immediately to adopt the recommendations presented to it by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration in its report to the 33rd Parliament, Second Session, and reject any proposals to fund much–needed training programs from unemployment benefit funds.

CLOSING OF CFB SUMMERSIDE

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the honour today to present to this House a duly certified first instalment of a petition from over 6,500 concerned citizens of Prince Edward Island.

This petition was circulated by Mr. Frank Lewis of radio station CFCY and Ken Simms of The Guardian Patriot newspaper on behalf of those who wish to save the CFB Summerside because of the socioeconomic and emotional impact of this decision. It is of great concern to all Islanders that the Government reconsider its decision.

ALLEGED MILITARIZATION OF ECONOMY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the same rule, I have a petition from a number of people in Edmonton, Alberta and other parts of Canada opposing the Government's spending on arms and armaments and its involvement in the arms bazaar here in Ottawa. These people are not against bases like Summerside where there are search and rescue and similar activities. They are against military spending on arms and dealing with countries that are human rights violators. I would like to table that petition.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 on behalf of a number of residents of Kamloops, British Columbia who are utterly dismayed that the Government plans to have people that receive unemployment insurance pay for their own training.

It is a long petition, and it lists all the reasons for their feelings of betrayal, frustration and disbelief that the Government of Canada would act in such a cruel way. So I will table it, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps you will have a chance to look at it later yourself.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, just before asking that the questions be allowed to stand, I would like to indicate that there are about seven or eight questions that we are presently behind on the 45 day notice. I wish to indicate to the House that I am doing my best to get those in as quickly as possible. But I would ask that all the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the point that there may be some questions on the Order Paper that would require longer than the 45 days for justifiable reasons. I would ask that the Government, when it finds itself in that position, consult with the Opposition House Leaders so that our Members can be informed that answers are actively being pursued and will be forthcoming.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to co–operate with that suggestion. I can indicate that most of the questions that are outstanding are from this side of the House rather than the Opposition side, but we will certainly take that into account.

Mr. Speaker: I must say that probably all Hon. Members appreciate the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary indicating that there is some difficulty in meeting the 45 day request. The Hon. Member for Kamloops is completely within his rights in asking that there be some discussion when this does happen. It may not be a procedural rule, but it seems to me that it would help matters in this place. I appreciate the Parliamentary Secretary's approach to this.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989-90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to speak on the borrowing Bill today. I have heard a lot being said about this particular Bill, the Budget and all the things that have led up to it. It is difficult to speak without repeating much of what has been said before, but one has to really put this whole thing into perspective. Standing on this side of the House it is very difficult to say something without being accused of being partisan, but that is fair game.

Let me assure you and all Members of the House, Mr. Speaker, that as I stand on my feet first thing on a Monday morning at 11.16 a.m. to talk about the borrowing Bill, the results that will emanate from the way the Government is doing its business and the effect it will have on my riding and the people in it, need to be summarized one more time for all sides of the House.

I would preface my comments by saying that if they appear to be overly partisan, that certainly was not the original intent. The thread through my presentation, if there is one, will be how this is viewed by rural Canada and what it will mean to the people of my riding of Bonavista—Trinity—Conception who have their own vision of Canada. It is fair that I should be allowed, even compelled, to represent their vision on this very important subject as it will have an effect, not in the short term, but in the long term, not just on the finances and deficit control in this country, but on our Canadian way of life and, in particular, on our rural Canadian way of life. That very much includes my riding.

There are certain areas on which I would like to focus. First, I would like to give the impression that people have that I have spoken to in the last couple of months. They believe that the Government and the big business community together have a narrowly focused agenda that has been brought out in this Budget and indeed in the Throne Speech itself. Their perception is that what these two have done is to focus solely on the substantial cuts to Government spending, concentrating on defence and cutting out social programs that have been a part of the Canadian way of life for a long time; indeed unemployment insurance since 1940. They believe that there is a joint desire to impose a new massive regressive sales tax on the people of Canada. I can understand their perception. By the way, I believe the perception is entirely correct.

I would like to review some of the things that have been said by some of the spokesmen for the business community. The thread, if there is one, is that there is a lot of talk about the need for cuts in social programs, and a Government response to the Free Trade Agreement. I am not going to try to link any of the ills to the Free Trade Agreement. Anything I have to say will have to stand on its own.

However, the belief is that in order to get moving on the things that need to be done by the Government side of the House, it would appear that the level playing field that was discussed so frequently in the free trade discussion and the cutting out of our social programs is very high on the agenda. In fact it is too high on the agenda for my liking. We are already beginning to see the effects of this. One of my concerns is that a lot of my colleagues say that we are not in government and we do not necessarily have the responsibility to come up with the answers. It is my view that the job of the Official Opposition is to criticize and oppose, but I have told my constituents that there are other ways to go about doing business and I am going to suggest some of them here today.

I understand the need for the machinery of government to operate and the need to fuel the economy with big corporations and big business. I am not against big business, I am all for it. However, certain ameliorations, adjustments and improvements should have been considered when this Budget was being put together. I am concerned that the corporations' share of the tax burden has fallen tremendously in the last 15 or 20 years despite the various tax reforms which I believe were intended to increase corporations' share of the tax burden.

In 1965 personal income taxes made up 30 per cent of Canada's revenue and corporate taxes made up 20 per cent. In 1988 the situation had changed dramatically. Canadians now pay 44 per cent in personal taxes and corporations pay 11 per cent. It is quite a change from 30 and 20 to 44 and 11 and I wonder where it is heading.

There is another aspect of this subject. Last year big business received a total of $8.9 billion in grants and subsidies from the Government. That is hard to believe. According to a Library of Parliament study, which I think is a pretty reputable source, federal subsidies and assistance payments to big business have grown faster in the past 20 years than social program spending. These subsidies and assistance programs increased from less than 1 per cent of the Gross National Product in 1970 to a peak of 2.5 per cent in the mid-1980s. That is an increase of 1.5 per cent of the Gross National Product in 15 years.

There is another aspect of the $8.9 billion that is being paid to big business. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business which represents 80,000 small firms across Canada said recently that a comprehensive deficit reduction program should include, not a small reduction or a big reduction, but the elimination of the grants and pay-outs to big business.

Their report claims that the economic activity which is the direct result of government grants often falls short in the long run. They go on to say that when a big business, or small business for that matter, is the recipient of these hand-outs the result, in fact, is a degradation of the market-place and it provides a competitive disadvantage for those companies which do not receive a hand-out. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business is a reputable organization and is not partisan as far as I know. I would, therefore, take note of that. I know that a lot of people in my riding have read these kinds of things and are asking me why we do not do something with the $8.9 billion that is being paid to big business which does not seem to be doing what it was meant to do.

The other aspect which concerns a lot of people in my riding, and I am sure all Canadians, is the uncertainty of what will happen with income tax reform. Looming over our heads is a sales tax. We think we know that it is going to be a certain percentage, we believe it is going to be roughly revenue neutral, but the details of the goods and sales tax which is going to be upon us in 1991 are anything but clear.

Recently the Minister of Finance confirmed that we would begin paying a 9 per cent sales tax on almost everything except main food, rent, health care and education. I do not have to remind anyone in Bonavista—Trinity—Conception who is listening to me that this is 9 per cent on top of the existing 12 per cent. This is a 21 per cent tax on anything you buy or any service you have performed.

I remember when Newfoundland joined Confederation in 1949 and a 7 per cent sales tax was imposed. I remember how tremendous and horrific that was and we are now looking at a 25 per cent sales tax. What is that going to do to the people who have enough difficulty buying clothes to put on their children's back as it is?

This tax started out to be revenue neutral, which is an interesting catch phrase. I do not hear nearly as much talk about revenue neutrality now. What does revenue neutral mean? I do not know. I cannot find any description and I have not heard it defined by the Hon. Minister of Finance. In fact his definition seems to be getting a little more flexible as time goes by. I read media reports saying that the tax grab has already started.

The idea was to remove the manufacturers' sales tax which was, I think, 12 per cent before this Budget and is now taking in roughly $13 billion. However, the manufacturers' sales tax has already gone up to 13.5 per cent and is going to take in another couple of billion dollars. Where does this revenue neutrality start?

We are talking about 9 per cent. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that anyone who knows anything about value-added taxes looks at the countries which have involved themselves in this very interesting experiment. They have come up with some very interesting findings. I was given a list of some of the European countries involved. I do not want anyone to look at the record and say that I was misrepresenting the idea, but I would have to say that the value-added tax of which I speak is not the same exactly, but the principle is the same, the intent is the same, and the graduation is the same.

In Denmark the year of introduction was 1967. It started off at 10 per cent. In 1988 it was 22 per cent. It has gone from 10 per cent to 22 per cent. In France the year of introduction was 1968. It started off at 13.6 per cent and is now 18.6 per cent. France has not done too badly. Remember, we are starting off at 9 per cent in 1991. Germany started off in 1968 at 10 per cent and is now at 14 per cent.

In the interest of brevity I will quote only a few more. Britain started in 1973. Do you remember the fuss when they started with the value-added tax over there? It is now up to 15 per cent. Sweden started in 1969 at 11.1 per cent, less than ours, and are up to 23.5 per cent. The list goes on.

The point I am making is that the principle has been established and all we are haggling over now is the price. I fear tremendously the revenue neutrality aspect of this. I have fears of where we will be 10 years from now. What will the 9 per cent grow to be? The European experience is that in 15 years it has roughly doubled. What will that do to us? I am concerned about that as I think we should all be.

There is another aspect which has me very worried. I am talking about the general financing of the way we do business in Newfoundland. I do not think it is a surprise to anyone in this House that Newfoundland depends very much on revenue from the transfer payments to the provinces. They amount to 45 cents out of every dollar and very much depends on where you put it and how you look at it.

People on this side of the House have asked what we are worried about because we are getting an increase. Yes, we are getting an increase but we had budgeted for a certain amount and we are getting a lot less. I look, for example, at the transfer payments to the provinces. People on this side of the House ask what I am complaining about because we are going to get more than we got last year.

Yes, we are, but we are not going to get as much as we thought we were going to get. I think in the case of Newfoundland it is the difference from $23 million to $24 million, to $19 million. That is a lot of money when we look at a province which depends on almost 50 per cent of its budget from the federal Government. Over all in Canada to the provinces which depend on regional transfers it is $200 million. That is a lot of money, when it had not been allowed for.

Dealing with ERDAs, the same subject of money from the federal Government to the provinces, my family, my constituents, and my friends have been involved in a lot of the aspects of federal government grants and transfers in the form of the Economic Regional Development Agreements. There is no way in which I can emote, postulate or indicate their importance to Newfoundland.

I am trying to do all I can here. A lot of people, along with me, in the Newfoundland Government and entrepreneurs in Newfoundland are trying to promote tourism. We find that the ERDA, the Economic Regional Development Agreement which was signed lasted for five years in Newfoundland, to the tune of $21 million. Our Minister of Tourism and Development had to return to Newfoundland a couple of weeks ago with the sad news that we are not to get this renewed.

I do not want to sound like somebody from a rural riding of Newfoundland who is always getting up, complaining, and crying that he is not getting enough. I just want our fair share. Tourism in Newfoundland is still in its embryo stages. I think it is going to be big. I hope that I can help it along.

However, when I see these kinds of obstacles standing in front of me and staring me in the face, I have to remind myself that we are behind in tourism development in Newfoundland. Our fair share is perhaps more than what the fair share would have been for any other province.

To begin with, tourism really had not started until about 10 years ago or maybe 15 years ago. It is still in the early stages. We have almost 100 miles, 90-plus miles, separating us from the mainland of Canada. These are two very important considerations which I am sure were eloquently argued by the Minister of Tourism and Development. We still do not have the money. This is one example of our concern about the cut-backs that have taken place of which Newfoundland is the recipient.

Later I will be speaking on Bill C-21 dealing with unemployment insurance. I do not want to digress into that. In the interest of time, I am sticking to the main point which is the borrowing Bill. In the context of the over-all effect which it will have on my constituents, I could not sit down without bringing to the attention of the House the Job Development Program which is part of the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. Even now, before the Act has been put in place, it has had a tremendous effect on my riding. I think it is safe to say that the organization which was represented by the Canada Employment Centres in Newfoundland—and I know I am speaking for my riding—represents about 20 per cent of the economy. That is a lot of money.

In Job Development Strategy in Canada we find that we are losing $53 million. That is $53 million less, which means millions of dollars to my rural riding. This means that jobs will not get done. This means that people who are unemployed will not get jobs. This means that people who would have their incomes raised higher by higher paying jobs will not have that happen.

I want to thank the Hon. Member for Burlington who gave me a list of some of the job opportunities which were there. I reviewed them in fine detail with my constituency office and with many of my constituents. They were quite impressed that in fact some of the jobs have a bearing on my riding in particular. However, two things came out of most of them that would be available in Newfoundland.First, a lot of the jobs were available in Labrador. Of course, people in my riding are not particularly interested in going to Labrador. Second, a lot of jobs in general for Newfoundland are centred in the urban areas, St. John's, Corner Brook, and Grand Falls. While I again thank the Hon. Member for the opportunity to have a look at that and make use of it, which we are doing, unfortunately most of these jobs relating to Job Development Strategy are in urban areas. It is not going to be very helpful to us at all.

Turning to the business of unemployment insurance not changing very much in the sense of not losing jobs, I do not have to say that the unemployment rate in Newfoundland is extremely high. It is around 15 per cent right now. For the rural areas, it is over 20 per cent. I think the last time I looked at the average, it was 23 per cent, 24 per cent, 25 per cent.

As I wrap up my remarks on this Bill I would like to go on record to say that I am deeply concerned. I represent the deep concern and almost alarm of my riding on the effect that some of these things, which may be well intended, will have on rural Canada and rural Newfoundland.

What are we going to do about it? What could we have done? I think we could have looked at big business. We could have looked at corporations with a minimum tax. A lot of corporations do not pay taxes. We could have had an adjustment period for these changes which are taking place in unemployment insurance. I think that would have improved the situation somewhat. We could have given people more warning.

As far as the goods and services sales tax is concerned, the impact has not really hit people yet. I think we need to have a good look at it. Is it the way to go, or are there other ways?

I did not have an opportunity to speak on the tremendous effect Canadian-wise that the more than fair cuts out of defence are having on my previous colleagues in National Defence. That will be a subject of some separate comments. I would like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your generosity in allowing me to finish the threads of my thoughts.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I commend my colleague on his excellent speech. During the provincial election campaign in Newfoundland, he attended in that province and watched the thrashing administered to the Conservative Government during the election campaign. I suspect that that was in part because the Government had tied itself too closely to the hon. gentlemen who sit on the other side of this House. Had we another election in Canada today, I expect the same thing would happen to them.

The point of my question is to deal with the ERDA funding which I understand is now up in the air in Newfoundland. That is part of the budget proposals that have been under discussion in this House and that are the subject of the borrowing which is being done in this Bill.

It is my understanding that during the election campaign in Newfoundland, the Premier of Newfoundland claimed that an agreement had been reached with the federal Government for a continuation of the ERDA arrangements. Subsequently, it was discovered after the election that in fact no agreement had been signed. The federal Government, composed of the Hon. Members who sit on the other side of this House, did nothing to deny the statements of the Premier of Newfoundland during the election.

I wonder if my hon. friend could enlighten the House on this subject and tell us whether in fact something was done to deceive the people of Newfoundland in the course of that election concerning those grants. Perhaps he would be able to explain the position.

Mr. Mifflin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands for that question. Yes, indeed, this was the subject of some great concern while I was over in Newfoundland during the election campaign.

I left Ottawa with the impression that certain ERDA arrangements had not been negotiated or renegotiated as the case may be. I was kind of nonplussed when I arrived in the province because I was told: "No, no, you do not have any worries about that". In fact I was campaigning up in Bonavista North with the now Speaker of the House, the Honourable Tom Lush who represents Bonavista North. I was told: "No, no, don't use that in your campaign because the Premier has already announced that over $80 million had been approved". There was a Labrador agreement. I do not know the exact name of it, but it had to do with Labrador development. The other one was rural and northern development for Newfoundland.

In my riding I have 10 rural development associations. They are in many ways the focal point of activity which gets things going. I was campaigning and talking to the chairman of these committees. They must have thought it strange that I did not bring to bear the fact that these ERDA arrangements to which I spoke earlier this morning had not in fact been negotiated.

• (1140)

Whether it was a mistake or whatever the case may be, when the then Premier of a province, even of another Party, makes a statement that something has been done I accept those things. The people of Newfoundland accepted it. Certainly the people of the rural associations accepted it. They were launching into programs to get things under way again. As we got a little more deeply into the campaign, in discussion with some of the bureaucrats, I was told: "No, no, these have not yet been approved". I find to my disgust and total consternation that when we get into details of the Budget in fact they have not been approved at all.

The Government served notice that it intended to renegotiate these five-year agreements but that has not been done. I spoke of the tourist agreements which cover aquaculture and fishing. I have four or five projects that are waiting now. They have been held up and probably will not go ahead because there is no money. The pot is empty. It has been drained right out.

As far as mining is concerned, I have a man who has a project that can involve 40 people now and when developed can involve 200 people in a part of my riding where unemployment is up to 30 per cent. I have spent a lot of time trying to help him with it. Regional development agreements are not being approved. We have a combination of the new rules for the reprofiling of ACOA, which mean essentially that one cannot get any money if the project is over $200,000. This man is a pretty brave and strong individual. He has not given up, but had he been someone of lesser courage he would have said: "The game is not stacked in my favour this time around". This man is not happy because of regional development agreements and the changes in the rules of ACOA.

I think reprofiling must mean the same as revenue neutral. We have description, definition, and understanding. I wish we could find better words to convey a better understanding of it. My energies will be focused into trying to get these well intentioned agreements into play. Everyone in the business knew exactly what they meant to my riding, to Newfoundland, and to Atlantic Canada. We have the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Those opportunities have now become pipe dreams and lost hopes. People have had projects in for as much as $3 million, $2 million, $1 million, to help the tourism industry, but now they cannot be done.

I had to give an answer to my hon. friend, perhaps a rather longer one than he had expected. We were very disappointed that we were told yes, then no, and now maybe. I am not sure where we will go from here so you can understand the indecision and lack of direction right now, Mr. Speaker. It adds to the confusion, consternation, and very uncomfortable feeling that people have from where I come. It is going to be pretty tough on the East Coast of Newfoundland this winter.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to hear the Hon. Member in his initial remarks be quite condemnatory of the $8.9 billion he has identified as money going to the large corporate sector from government funds. I concur with him that this does not seem to be something which is necessary.

Some analysts have great difficulty separating out assistance to corporations by size. Could the Hon. Member clarify what he means by pulling away that funding in relation to the criticism that he also had of the Government's attempt to pull away funding from business through ACOA, EPF funding, and the other funding projects about which he has just spoken? Could he tell us what the distinction should be from his Party's point of view and how pulling away the $8.9 billion funding to the very large multinational corporations would assist outlying regions such as Newfoundland or, in my case, Saskatchewan?

Mr. Mifflin: Mr. Speaker, I differentiate very much between the two. First, turning to the $8.9 billion, I can tell the Hon. Member that we do not have many corporations in my riding that would get a piece of that $8.9 billion. His point is certainly not lost of me. The money from ACOA which is being reprofiled had the potential of going to people like the gentleman who wanted to start a mine and create 200 jobs. A constituent of mine has been trying for three years to get a small resort hotel in Conception Bay North where we were going to have a lot of extra economic activity from the prison that was going to be built in Harbour Grace. That is gone now and so is the ACOA possibility. There is a big difference.

I would be more inclined to tap that $8.9 billion as part of deficit reduction program than I would to reprofile the ACOA and make it more difficult for people to get anything over $200,000 to help to get the economy in my riding, and I suspect in his riding, off the ground a little bit faster. I thank the Hon. Member for his question.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak today on the borrowing Bill. As my Party's spokesperson for international development, I want to take the opportunity to make some comments on the over-all Budget of this Government.

This Budget is a deceptive Budget. The Government is saying one thing and is doing another. For example, the Government has supported the Brundtland commission report for international development and environmental assistance. That report states very clearly how interlinked we are, that we have to think in global terms. We can no longer just think nationally; we must think internationally.

It was with a great deal of hope that we heard this Government was to support those recommendations. This Budget demonstrates that the Government's understanding of those recommendations are very limited because the hardest area hit in this Budget was international development assistance. Almost one-quarter of all the spending cuts made by the federal Government were taken in the Budget for foreign aid. Although Overseas Development Assistance represented only 2.8 per Cent of federal spending in the years 1988–1989, it accounted for 23.3 per cent of the cut-backs for the years 1989–1990.

The dollar figures we are talking about in these budget cuts is $360 million. Many people wonder about cutting and know it has to be cut somewhere. Members on this side of the House have been concerned with the cuts to our social programs. I do not see these cuts as distinct from one another. When we are talking about cuts of that magnitude the Government has an agenda and that is what I want to talk about today.

Domestic cuts and cuts to international development assistance are a fundamental shift in philosophy, a shift to the right to a more free market thinking that fits in with the whole free trade agenda. I know government Members do not like it when we raise this point. They get glazed eyes when we talk about it. However, when we see that this is happening we have to speak out.

• (1150)

The free market agenda is a turning inwards. We are saying: "We are all right. We do not need to worry about those people over there. Somebody else will worry about it". We have to get away from that kind of thinking if our world is to survive. The Government, by saying that it wants to cut the deficit, is falling into that trap of short-term thinking.

We must open our minds and see where the real solutions are to the global problems that confront us as legislators. We need to do more than just speak up in the House. We have to be prepared to change our views and ideas. The situation in our world demands it.

The Government's Budget is in fact a self-imposed structural adjustment. The structural adjustment that has been imposed on developing countries by the International Monetary Fund is one the Government has decided to make on its own through this Budget. It has cut regional development programs and social programs. It is slowly and surely eliminating unemployment insurance benefits. It is privatizing and buying into the market system which the International Monetary Fund is thrusting upon the world, in the vain hope that it will prop up the international banking system.

It is the banking system that has caused much of the grief in this world. With this Budget the Government is not only protecting those banks but is buying into that whole value system of bankers rejecting the people who are the most vulnerable both here in Canada and overseas. They reject those people who do not have a voice, aside from those few of us on this side of the House who have the courage to stand up and say: "No, we know what they are up to. We know their agenda". We are going to talk about it.

We must ask ourselves who is pulling the strings, who will benefit from Canada turning inward. Whoever is pulling the strings is doing it because we will be so worried about our own deficit and our own internal problems that we will be quiet, we will not speak out or criticize when things happen in Central America, Africa, or Indonesia. We will be so focused on our own social strife that we will not criticize those superpowers that are bringing death and destruction overseas.

We know what is going on. We know the agenda and we are not prepared to be quiet about it. We also have to speak out, as has been done very well by many Members on this side of the House, about the social programs that will be affected and the grief and hardship that will bring about here in Canada. These things cannot be distinct. They are all part of the same plan, this monetarist view of the world that has been so destructive.

Canada's wealth and status as one of the G-7 nations and our repeated previous commitments to increase aid contributions indicate the considerable moral responsibility we bear in this suffering world. Canadians have stated their support for international development programs, yet these cuts threaten abandonment of these key commitments, a weakening of our positive role in world affairs, and a loss of moral authority. It is that moral authority, as much as our ability to send money overseas, that is most worrisome.

We have lived on our international reputation, established largely in the 1960s under former Prime Minister Pearson. We have a strong international reputation and we have lived on that capital for a long time. We have not put very much into it. It was with a good deal of hope that last September we heard the Prime Minister say the following before the United Nations:

> Increased development assistance, especially to the poorest countries, is another imperative. Canada has just completed a review of its Official Development Assistance policy. We have reset our bearings to improve the quality and increased the quantity of help we give.

He said that on September 29, 1988. That is why I say that this is a deceptive Budget. Six months later, the Government brought down a Budget which cut $360 million from international development assistance. Once again, the Government was saying one thing and doing another. Did the Government not know that it had a deficit problem six months ago? The problem is that an election campaign intervened. This is why people have lost confidence in politicians. They say one thing and do another. We have to change that because we are running out of time. We do not have the time to be able to say one thing and do another.

In 1984 official development assistance equalled .5 per cent of our Gross National Product. For 1989-90 it has been cut back to .43 per cent. We are going backward in a world that has increasing problems. We have lost our moral authority. The Prime Minister's statement to the United Nations, although it did not appear bland at the time, has turned out to be bland because he is not putting any money behind his statement. We thought that he had some understanding of the recommendations of the Brundtland commission about the view that the world is interdependent and that we in the developed world have some responsibility to address the ills overseas.

There is a self-imposed structural adjustment program in Canada. There are reductions in regional payments. In British Columbia there are reductions in health care payments and the nurses are currently on strike. There have been reductions in post-secondary education. We are now very concerned about possible cuts in the forestry agreements. It all fits into the mode of linear thinking. Lord preserve us from linear thinkers, and there are more than an abundance of them across the way.

We have to understand that foreign aid is not a frill. It is our contribution to a more stable world. We will not buy into the mindset that says that bigger and better armaments will make us more secure. Thinking people have rejected that mindset long ago. If we want a more stable world, we have to be able to reduce the causes of instability. That means we have to eliminate poverty.

A nice glossy document about Canadian international development assistance says that the first priority is the elimination of poverty. Then the Minister responsible has said that we also have to take our share of the cuts. One quarter of the budget cuts is much more than our share of the cuts. The Minister being an apologist for the Budget is something I find most offensive.

We have to understand that Canada has not only a financial obligation, but a moral one. We have to use our credibility. One wonders why we have so much credibility because of the actions that we often take, but we do have it and we should use that international credibility to effect change, to speak courageously at a world forum such as the United Nations, and to follow up those words with actions. That means not having cuts in the Budget for international development assistance.

We do not understand why Canada's collective obligations to assist those confronted with economic and social disaster should be so extensively abandoned at this time. We do not believe that Canada's own prosperity can be guaranteed in a fortress North America. We believe that our future is secure only if it is linked with development in which the world's majorities participate. This is a philosophy that Canada has had since the 1960s.

We are a small country in the grand scheme of things, but we have enormous international credibility which is withering away with this Budget and with the actions of the Government. It is fitting in with the grand schemes of the superpowers and the confrontation and polarization that we must resist if the world is going to survive. We have to think about stability and not creating more wars, and the poverty that creates wars, and we also have an obligation to attempt to bring prosperity to other people in the world.

We hear many comments about the refugee flood at our gates, and many people saying: "No, we do not want them. They are going to be taking away our jobs". Those refugees do not want to come. They want to stay in their own countries. It is our obligation to assist them to do that by supporting the development work in their own countries. That is what I am saying about linear thinkers, the turning away, the "we will look after ourselves", clutching ourselves and saying that the rest of the world be damned.

This is what we have to reject. In our Party we do reject this. We have a global vision. We are not only talking in response to government polls that Mr. and Mrs. Middle Canadian states such and such and therefore we will do what they say. We have a long-term vision. We want to change and better this world. This Government's Budget is restricting us from doing that.

Not only is this Budget hammering the poor in Canada by reducing the social programs and by eliminating the universality of our long fought for social programs, but it is also hurting the poor overseas, those most vulnerable, those without a voice. How absolutely immoral and heartless of the Government to cut bilateral food aid. Then it states that CIDA has to take its fair share of the cuts. We are not talking about a fair share here. We are talking about people's lives.

There is a connection between the people who are most affected here and the people overseas. We also have to ask who is benefiting. It is not ordinary people here, and it is not ordinary people overseas. It is the big people in their board rooms who are running things and pulling the strings. We are going to continue to speak out against this in the weeks and months ahead.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions or comments the Hon. Minister of State for Privatization.

Mr. McDermid: I know the interest of the Hon. Member in foreign aid, and she spoke most eloquently about that today. However, I would like to point out, and I am sure the Hon. Member would want to be fair when she discusses those particular matters, that Canada is the second most generous nation of the G-7 countries. Canada is exceeded only by France and by a very small percentage point. As a percentage of the GNP, Canada stands second. Third is Germany, fourth is Italy, fifth is Japan, sixth is the United Kingdom, and seventh is the United States. Our record for aid overseas has been very good. It is never enough. We would always like to do more, however, it has been very good.

Over the next five years more than $16 billion will be given in foreign aid. That is hardly an indication, as the Hon. Member attempted to make out today, that CIDA will be crippled in its ability to do its job. Our commitment will continue. The Hon. Member will be interested to know that with the Budget cuts that Canada is experiencing at the present time, the ODA-GNP ratio will drop from .47 to .43. That is a fairly small drop, but one that was necessary due to the fiscal situation in this country.

Without exception, members of the Opposition have criticized every single cut that the Government has made in the Budget.

Mr. Milliken: That is not true. That is false.

Mr. McDermid: With the exception of nuclear submarines. I was coming to that, if Members opposite would give me a chance to finish my sentence.

We have deficit problems and debt problems in this country. For once, I would like to see someone in the Opposition stand up and talk responsibly about where the Government should be cutting back, where we can save money, where we can get the deficit and the debt under control. All they do is stand up, speaker after speaker, and criticize the Government for trying to get its fiscal house in order. Would the Hon. Member rise and give me a list of where she would cut back on the expenditures of the Government?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I know it is a full moon today, but it is only the noon hour.

The Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands.

Ms. Hunter: I thank the Hon. Member opposite for his question. I will speak slowly, because we have to get an understanding of what we are talking about here which is a shift in thinking. I am asking the Government to realize that by not cutting foreign aid, by increasing foreign aid, as the Government had committed itself to do, we are investing in our world. Speaking in those terms, perhaps the Hon. Member will understand.

The Hon. Member asked me where I would cut expenditures. He also asked from where the Government would be getting the money. We have made some very concrete suggestions about where that money could come. What we are talking about is economic growth. None of us is opposed to economic growth. We all want economic growth in order that we can contribute more to our society. The Hon. Member knows what is coming, doesn't he? We are talking about 60,000 profitable corporations which paid no income tax at all.

Mr. McDermid: Members opposite stated that it was 87,000 the other day. When are you guys going to get your act together?

Ms. Hunter: I am making a responsible statement as the Minister requested I do. I am downgrading the numbers so that he will not accuse me of inflating the terms at all. I will say 60,000. The Minister can say 87,000, if he wishes. I will be the conservative for a moment.

We are not only talking about cutting. We also want to know who is paying. It is the ordinary people who are always paying. I challenge the Government to start taxing those who can afford it rather than those who cannot.

• (1210)

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, the Government talks about the family and its commitment to the family as well as the need to speak for children who cannot speak for themselves. Yet the Government has cut its support to families all over the world. I wonder if the Hon. Member would like to comment further on that subject.

Ms. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I thank my esteemed colleague for her question. What is most heartless about the Budget is when we think about who is pulling the strings, where they are sitting in their boardrooms and the effect these cuts will have on the children of the world. We are talking about international development food aid. We are cutting food aid. It is ridiculous. They are sitting in their boardrooms which probably look much like this lovely Chamber with lots of oak and velvet while the children of the world starve. It is disgusting. It disgusts me that these people with that kind of power use it so horribly.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate. My question to the Hon. Member who spoke so eloquently in terms of government cut-backs in critical areas is this. Does she feel that one of the areas the Government might consider cutting back in is the area involving millions of dollars of expenditure on government propaganda and advertising?

We read the other week that the Government will have to hire up to 25,000 tax collectors to collect the new national sales tax. I wonder if there is a need to proceed with that. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the expense involved with the tax collectors themselves—25,000—in a bureaucracy and the red tape associated with it? Could the Hon. Member comment on the areas in which the Government could cut back in immediately. I refer to the coins rolling out on the television screens during the hockey play-offs day after day. The Government spent millions of dollars to tell people: "Listen, raising your taxes and cutting back your services is a good idea".

I have heard the big lie technique which has been used in the past by unscrupulous types. I am not suggesting that this is a Goebbel's like approach to communication. When I hear about the millions of dollars being spent on what I think the Minister of Finance calls government information it is similar to what we are seeing in China today. On television screens there the people see government information which says that there were no student killings, there was no extreme violence and that the Government was just taking care of a few trouble-makers.

Could the Hon. Member explain whether this is an area that she has been thinking about in terms of where we could save the taxpayers a lot of money and also be a little bit more honest with what we are doing by suggesting that the multimillion dollar government propaganda office curtail some of its expenditures?

Ms. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, my honoured colleague brings up a point that is worthy of underlining in Hansard. He talks about the public relations scam that is going on in the country and internationally. We have to be very aware of the type of marketing tools that are available to the Government which will allow it to manipulate public opinion. I think it is to be deplored especially when we think that the Government could be putting its money where it would make a real difference to people's lives. The Government could certainly do some educational work on sustainable development and try to get a sort of Participaction view to have Canadians involved. However, no, the Government talks about the short term. It says: "We will have to tighten our belts. We are not going to take any money from the rich people. We will only take it from you". This is the sort of manipulation of the population that I think is most worrisome.

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words to say on this particular Bill, the borrowing authority asked of this House of Commons by the Government of Canada.

The Government is really obsessed by the balance sheet, not so much with the natural saving of money but to give the impression that the Government is making everything profitable and that the philosophy on which it was elected is a good thing.

The other day it was interesting to see Canada Post present its annual report.

Mr. Blenkarn: A great thing.

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman who went to New Zealand to investigate the new sales tax indicates that he is proud of that report. When one looks at the financial statement of Canada Post one notices two things. First, one sees Canada Post saying that it made a $90 million profit. Then, when one examines the balance sheet one discovers that the federal Government all wed Canada Post not to account for some $34 million in payments to employees who are losing their jobs but allow that figure to appear on the balance sheet over the next 15 years. That is $34 million. It was not enough to bring Canada Post's financial situation into a profit standing. So what did the Government of Canada do? What did the Cabinet do? They loaned Canada Post $80 million this past year and then they held a press conference to say: "Look at what we have done for Canada Post. They are in a profit situation". It is a new reverse colorization process I would say, like the process that changes black and white films into colour. This action by the Government is reverse colorization. It changes from red to black.

Some people launder money. Canada Post has Landerized it. Donald Lander in proposing this financial statement to the House of Commons has displayed the effects of Landerization.

The other reason why I decided to participate in this debate is because there is a demonstration on Parliament Hill today. People have come a long way. They have come all the way from Prince Edward Island in buses to demonstrate on the Hill about the closure of an armed forces base in Prince Edward Island. It is the only armed forces base there. It is the most important base in eastern Canada because it is the home of the search and rescue squadron. It is strategically located right in the middle of Atlantic Canada. For the last two or three years we have been asking the Government to base the interceptor squadron there because we have noticed over the last two or three years that all of the interceptions that take place off the East Coast of Canada today are done by the Americans. Oh, yes, the F-14s, from the State of Maine do the interceptions off the Canadian coast of the Russian aircraft which frequently test our defence system. We were saying that that is where the interceptors should be based. Then along comes the Conservative Government after having promised during the election campaign everything that Prince Edward Island wanted. It was even going to build a bridge, a causeway to Prince Edward Island, or a tunnel, or anything. It would spend loads of money. Yet after the election campaign what did the Government do?

The only presence by the Department of National Defence in the entire Province of P.E.I. was its base a Summerside, a major employer in P.E.I. It is the home base of search and rescue. The Government has closed the entire base.

• (1220)

During the election campaign and just prior to it we saw the Government spend money like it was growing on trees. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, which should be renamed the Atlantic Canada Overblown Agency, spent half is entire five-year budget in six months. There was no problem with money for the Government at that time. ACOA was designed to give grants to small business. It replaced DREE, which had become a dream, and DRIE which had dried up.

ACOA had no problem getting money for small business at that time. The Irving group of companies received lots of business under the small business provisions, as did the Wandlyn hotel chain.

When I read the list of grants recently, I noticed that one outfit received money to investigate the establishment of breweries throughout Atlantic Canada. Is the solution that we all get drunk and forget our problems by establishing breweries in Atlantic Canada? There was no problem with money six months prior to the federal election campaign.

Now the money has dried up. The Government has changed ACOA completely so that money is no longer available in Atlantic Canada.

After it was elected, the Government announced its intention to introduce its new sales tax to raise more money so that it will not need as much borrowing authority in the forms of Bills before the House. The Government has tailored its tax on the system that is in effect in New Zealand, a country which, if dropped in the middle of one our bigger provinces, would require search and rescue in order to find it. Our situations are not at all the same.

What are its effects on Atlantic Canada? The people of Prince Edward Island presently pay 10 per cent sales tax to which will be added another 9 per cent. However, it is not as simple as becoming a 19 per cent tax because the 9 per cent federal tax is applied to each item and the 10 per cent sales tax is applied on top of that.

For example, in its Budget the Government increased the cost of long distance telephone calls. The federal tax is added to the long distance telephone charges so that if there is a $100 telephone charge a 9 per cent tax makes it $109.

An Hon. Member: Very good.

Mr. Baker: I hope the hon. gentleman is listening because he sure did not understand it when he voted for the Bill.

The sales tax is 10 per cent in Prince Edward Island, 10 per cent in Nova Scotia, 11 per cent in New Brunswick, and 12 per cent in Newfoundland. Those who live in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia will have their 10 per cent sales tax added to that $109, while it is 11 per cent in New Brunswick and 12 per cent in Newfoundland. The result is over 20 per cent in sales tax at the retail level for people in Atlantic Canada because of the new sales tax being introduced by the Government.

This is further complicated by the fact the Government, in using the New Zealand example, did not take into account the geography of our country. Goods that are made in one part of Canada and shipped to another part are taxed at various stages so that those at the far end of the country pay more federal tax than those living next to the manufacturing industry. Not only do Atlantic Canadians pay a higher percentage in tax at the retail level, they pay a greater percentage of the amount of federal taxes that are collected per capita. That is not good enough.

The federal Government has also stated that it will cut back portions of VIA Rail. Again, it is affecting Atlantic Canada. The Government should come out with the truth on the matter. It is not just eliminating portions of the rail line that it claims are not profitable.

When Mr. Lawless appeared before the committee last week, it was rather sneaky for VIA not to admit that it had just given lay-off notices to the red caps who work at the train station here in Ottawa. They are the people who handle baggage and so on. Those lay-off notices were being issued as Mr. Lawless was getting off the train to come to the Standing Committee. Perhaps it was coincidental, but the message is that VIA Rail and the Government of Canada are no longer interested in travellers who carry baggage. It is only interested in businessmen who travel short distances for an hour or two and to heck with everybody else. By removing the red caps, the Government is removing a service from a mother travelling with her children, from senior citizens and from disabled. The Government has absolutely no interest in the people who take the train because they cannot afford to fly, or find it more convenient to take the train. It may even be the only way for them to travel.

The Government is more interested in international relations with France, the Soviet Union, Poland, East Germany, Cuba, Japan, Sweden, Norway and the Faro Islands.

Those countries are being issued licences this month to fish within our 200-mile zone while Canadian fish plants are closing. The Government of Canada is more interested in making sure that the Government of the Soviet Union is allocated over 100 factory freezer trawler licences.

• (1230)

Some say that countries which come to Canada and are issued licences by this Government do not bring their fish back to their countries. Is that a fallacy? Every Communist Government today that fishes off the east and west coasts of Canada sells its product to the United States. I defy anybody to show me one factory freezer trawler load that was brought to its own country and distributed to its own people.

The other day I watched a factory freezer trawler from Poland. It caught grey sole and turbot and, lo and behold, it ended up on the Boston market. How did it end up on the Boston market? It is interesting because some of it was direct, but the rest of it was through established Canadian companies that sell into the market.

While we have fish plants that are currently closing in Canada and people being laid off, in December of this year we will have the biggest lay-off in Canadian fishing history. The Government of Canada is about to announce the biggest quota cut for next year that we have ever seen.

There is a group that is not affected, that is, the 260 factory freezer trawlers from foreign countries that fish around our shore. That group of people did not take a cut. They took an increase. Why did they take an increase?

There are various reasons. Of course, we gave it to them. One was a boundary dispute with St. Pierre and Michelon, with the Government of France. We turned around and said: "If you come to the bargaining table, for four years we are going to give you extra quotas. You can go down into southwest Nova Scotia and everywhere they are closing fish plants and you can fish codfish. You can go up to Cape Breton Island and fish codfish. You can go to Prince Edward Island and fish codfish. You can go off the coast of Quebec in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and fish codfish". While our companies are closing, while people are being laid off, the Government of Canada says that international relations with foreign countries are more important than the jobs in our own country.

That is the philosophy of the Government of Canada. It is absolutely obsessed with this business of deficit reduction, to the extent that it is overshadowing everything else. One Department does not know what other Departments are doing.

The other day the Department of National Revenue sent a notice to a federal Crown corporation, CN Marine, and said: "Look, if you use the Bluenose", which is a very famous vessel, "any more this year, we are going to have to impound it because you owe us under our new policy a quarter of a million dollars in Customs duties". That is how far it has gone.

The Government of Canada has passed new rules and regulations for ships that come into Canadian ports. This will mean, by the way, that the tourist trade via large ships into the west and east coasts of Canada will virtually come to an end. The Government did not consult with all relevant Departments about what ships would in fact be passing from this country to another country and would violate those rules and regulations it brought in.

When we add it all up, in this borrowing authority for which the Government is asking today in the House of Commons it is unfortunate that the Government of Canada is currently inflicting real misery upon eastern Canada and the people who live there. There are people who live in Prince Edward Island today and other communities across this country who are losing their jobs because the Government say that those jobs must be lost for the sake of its policy. There is one thing for certain: while these people may lose their jobs, there is another group of people who are going to lose their jobs as well. In the next election, this crowd is going to be booted out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. McCreath: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest as I always do when my hon. friend opposite rises to speak. I am not sure exactly how foreign fishing on the Atlantic coast relates directly to this Bill. Inasmuch as my hon. colleague opposite has raised the issue, it might be appropriate to rectify some of the information he imparted in his enthusiasm which may exceed slightly the realities of the situation, certainly as seen by those who are very close to the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada.

I was amazed to hear him talk about foreign vessels being licensed to fish codfish within our shores. I believe he knows perfectly well that foreign vessels are licensed to fish within our 200-mile zone those species which Canadians are not interested in harvesting and for which there is a by-catch.

The statistics are readily available. I would be glad to provide them to him if he does not have them. The Russian vessels fishing inside our 200-mile zone are allowed a by-catch of 1 per cent as against all the remaining fish caught. Indeed, the statistics for 1988 show that in fact the by-catch taken was less than half of 1 per cent. Perhaps this is his understanding of entitling foreigners to fish within our shores.

He should also be aware that under the agreements of the international law of the sea Canada is required to make available those species not harvested by Canadians.

Second, he speaks of the nose and tail and foreign fishing outside the 200-mile limit. Could he explain to the House what measures can be taken by the Government of Canada to impose its will in international waters where we have no jurisdiction?

The Government has taken action by meeting with the European Community and getting it to agree to sit down in a committee which met last week to come to a peaceful resolution of the problem that exists. That is significant progress.

Mr. Gauthier: How about a question?

Mr. McCreath: Third, he mentions the Canada–France agreement. That is not a new situation. That is a situation about which his Government did nothing for many years.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. McCreath: This Government brought the French to the table. This Government got the French to sit down and agree to a resolution of the problem and to recognize the amount of fish they are harvesting. He knows perfectly well that it will be 60 per cent of the amount of fish that they have been catching for years, particularly during the time when his Government was in power.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is vociferously energetic about this subject because a fish plant in his riding just closed because of a lack of fish. The situation is very desperate in his part of Nova Scotia.

He raised three points. First, he said that codfish were not caught in any great numbers. I believe he said that 1 per cent were caught by the Russians. If he checked, he would find that the Russians are given a quota on his coast in what we call the silver hake box, about 80 miles due east of Halifax. They are given a quota of 58,000 tonnes of silver hake, which is like a large herring. It is good to eat. The Americans caught 20,000 tonnes of it last year and sold it fresh into the U.S. market.

Mr. McCreath: It is not codfish.

Mr. Baker: It was 58,000 tonnes of silver hake. He is wrong in his percentage. His 1 per cent is correct. The 1 per cent is for haddock. There is 5 per cent for pollack and there is 5 per cent for cod. By any mathematics, if we took 5 per cent of 58,000, we would come up with about 3,000 tonnes. That is for cod. Five per cent of 58,000 tonnes of pollack is another 3,000 metric tons. Then we multiply that by millions of pounds of fish and we see that any seasonal plant on the East Coast of Canada could exist with that amount of cod and pollack. That is written in the licence for the Soviet Union, and that is only one country.

• (1240)

What about Cuba? Cuba has nine factory freezer trawlers in the silver hake box 80 to 90 miles east of Halifax today. They are fishing the same percentages, that is, legally fishing.

There is a law for the foreign vessels in Canada now which says that they do not have to throw away what they catch in excess of what they are allowed to catch. Nova Scotians, Newfoundlanders, New Brunswickers, Prince Edward Islanders, and Quebecers are being dragged into court continually because they have not thrown overboard a fish that they were not licensed to catch. In the Act it says that it is "incidental" catch. While we are being dragged into court, the foreign boats out there have it in their licences that they can keep in excess of what they catch. No only that, France is licensed specifically to catch cod off the coast of Nova Scotia.

I am not talking about the incidental catches. How incidental can you get, Mr. Speaker? The Russians have 3,000 metric tons of cod. How much do the Japanese have? How much do the Cubans have? How much do the East Germans have? How much do the Faro Islanders have? How much do the Poles have? The Poles catch grey sole. Mr. Speaker, when you go into a restaurant and order sole, it is grey sole. Poland owns its own vessels. The Polish people come over and are given an allocation of that off the East Coast of Canada.

The hon. gentleman then went on to say that we must give by international agreement fish in excess of Canada's needs. Here is where we have a problem. There is no fish in excess of Canada's needs today. There is not one. They call them "underutilized species". The only underutilized species on the East Coast of Canada are fish plant workers and fishermen. They are becoming an endangered species under the Government.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have just a brief question for the Hon. Member from Gander who speaks so eloquently about a number of issues.

He started his remarks today with reference to Canada Post and the so-called $96 million profit announced by Canada Post late last week. The Hon. Member talked about the misrepresentation of that profit. We are also hearing this week about misrepresentation of individual community leaders' views on the matter of small rural post offices and the support for Canada Post's new system.

Can the Hon. Member from Gander tell us a little bit about what he is hearing from the real people about the smaller post offices in his constituency?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the only thing I am hearing about the smaller post offices in Newfoundland is that they are closing. The only thing we are hearing from the smaller rural post offices in Canada today is that they are closing. They will be replaced by a box in the snow. Imagine getting up on mail day and having to go out and dig your way down to your mail. That is real service, isn't it, Mr. Speaker? That is real service!

Not only that, but a great many communities are even losing that and people will have to go to the next community to receive their mail. Even in the larger communities up here in Ontario that is happening. Now one usually goes into a pharmacy or drug store to pick up one's mail. I can imagine going to the counter to get your mail and the clerk saying: "Just a minute now. I have to serve that fellow over there who wants some toothpaste and other items". That is the level to which service has deteriorated in Canada today. We need a change all right. To restore delivery in Canada we need a change of government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I am rising today to debate the proposed borrowing authority which the Government has put before the House. As the House will know, this comes about because the Government projects a fairly large deficit again, in the area of $30 billion again this year.

The Government has proposed that before the House rises at the end of June it wants to have the authority to borrow up to $24.8 billion in the very predictable event that tax revenue does not come in fast enough to offset the expenditures the Government has committed to make. The Government wants to borrow $24.8 billion with this Bill before us today. This is a very straightforward Bill which includes that and one other clause saying that the Government will have permission to use an unextended borrowing authority to the amount of $3 billion in the next fiscal year.

Therefore, after April 1, 1990, instead of having to come to the House immediately for extra borrowing authority, it will have $3 billion granted by the House today to spend in the next fiscal year. This policy is induced by the deficit which is being predicted for the coming year in the neighbourhood of $30 billion.

We have come a long way since the end of World War II. I am not sure that it has all been progress, but the goods and services available to the people of this country have probably come about because of technical progress around the world. However, as a country Canada is having some difficulty keeping up. I remind the House that after World War II we were the fourth ranking industrial nation in the world. Only the United States, the United Kingdom, and the U.S.S.R. rated higher than Canada right after World War II in terms of industrial output.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. Would the Member for Winnipeg—St. James please sit.

Mr. Althouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, after World War II Canada was the fourth ranking industrial power in the world, and we are now either twenty–fifth or twenty–sixth, depending upon which ranking one uses. Our influence and power in the world have shrunk considerably and at a very rapid rate.

At the same time we have had some difficulties deciding how we are going to operate our country. For the past eight or nine years we have been shifting to a user pay deregulation mode and have been following an economic philosophy which is probably monetarist in view, following some of the teachings of Milton Friedman and others. This was started by the Liberals and carried on with a vengeance by this Conservative administration which likes to talk a lot about problems it is having with the deficit.

It does have a problem with the deficit. When it came to power it had an accumulated deficit inherited from previous Liberal and Conservative Governments of about $150 billion to $160 billion. It has handled that very well in the five years since then, to the point that the deficit accumulation now ranks somewhere between $320 billion and $350 billion.

In other words, it has more than doubled in approximately four and a half years. This makes a lot of people concerned not just about the deficit but about this Government's ability to operate anything, let alone the Government of this country.

We have been hearing that the way out of this deficit will be to cut expenditures. That seems to be the one-eyed view of this Government to handle the deficit situation. Anybody outside of the Government knows that there are two levers which can be used to handle deficits, whether we are running our own finances, operating a business, or operating a Government. We can cut expenditures, yes, but we also have to find out where to get more money if we are having a deficit problem.

The Government made some bad decisions in deciding where it is going to get more money and where it is going to make the cuts. The result has been that not only does the deficit stay approximately where it is and worsens year by year, but it has not been good for the economy.

Previous to the monetarist view of the world, we had a Keynesian view which attempted to show quite conclusively that by handling spending correctly it was possible for government expenditures in fact to increase the economy and make everyone better off. It is all a question of where we put those expenditures and what we do with the money collected from all of us as a collectivity. We have a political problem but it has created a very large economic problem.

The strategy of this and previous federal Governments has been to involve themselves more with large corporate enterprises and to provide assistance to the very large economic entities which exist in this world. We have heard in previous speeches how grants to big corporate business have risen from less than 1 per cent of our Gross National Product in the 1970s to over 2.5 per cent of Gross National Product in the mid-1980s. We do not have any current statistics to the late 1980s, where we are right now, but I would think that it is probably growing even faster at this point.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business represents the small businesses with which most of us in outlying rural ridings deal when we talk to business, It has called on the elimination of these big grants to big business which it estimates run at about $8.9 billion in last year's Budget.

Just the elimination of those kind of grants would reduce the deficit by more than $8 billion. There would be some justification in doing that, just from a point of view of fairness and equity. How can the small business in my riding or another riding, whether it is in rural Saskatchewan or urban Edmonton, compete side by side with its new reinvestment tax dollars which it has generated.After it has paid 20 cents or 30 cents tax on that dollar, it only has 70-cent or 80-cent dollars for reinvestment purposes.

We are asking small businesses, in case after case, to go head to head in side by side competition against a large multinational corporation that is investing 100-cent dollars because it has not had to pay any income tax on that money at all. We cannot have fair competition with that kind of a tax system. It is time we had a change.

We have been told by this Government and preceding Liberal Governments that we have to have these kind of tax incentives to big business to encourage investment. What kind of investment are we getting and what are they proposing that we should be encouraging?

We heard in speeches from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on down in both Governments, whether it be Liberal or Conservative, that it was to encourage new factories and new institutions that would create new jobs. That sounds all very laudable, but when a tax advantage is applied whether a new business or a new factory is built, or when there is the same tax advantage for taking over an existing one, businesses being by nature conservative and going where they have the sure thing as opposed to some risk, tend to buy each other out. As a consequence in the last decade or so we have had the biggest boom in buy-outs and takeovers that we have seen in our history, all encouraged by the tax system.

This is a tax system which costs the country money, which leads to the deficit, and which causes us to have to come before the House of Commons every year for borrowing authorities that get bigger and bigger. Taxpayers are going to have to pay for it.

If the Government were serious about creating investment, it could use the tax system to achieve that end. Why do we create a tax system which encourages takeover and has a built-in incentive for all participants to create inflationary expectations? Whether it is real estate or the stock market, everybody who is a player knows that if we can just get this stock up or this property up, we will all be slightly better off. Why will we be better off? It is because there will be a nominal value increase. However, we have a tax system which says that on the first $100,000 of capital gain—and these kind of things are capital gains—we do not have to pay any income tax.

Most of the players in the business world are consciously looking for ways to help each other get the price of certain stocks and certain properties up so that they can all take advantage of the tax-free capital gain and walk out with up to $100,000 in the course of their life-time on which they will not have to pay any income tax at all. Does that encourage investment? I do not think so.

What that type of tax system is doing is encouraging inflation, something which the Minister of Finance has said when he defends high interest rates that he is trying to do away with. He said that he is trying to keep inflation down. How is he trying to do that?It is a little laughable, Mr. Speaker, but he is trying to keep it down with a tax system that encourages the value of stocks, bonds, and properties to go up. He is encouraging inflation with an interest policy that encourages interest rates to go ever and ever up.

That becomes a great cost to the small business people in my riding. It becomes a great cost to the individual taxpayer in my riding and across the country. It is counterproductive to the goals which the Government sets for itself.

In other words, when I am able to complete my remarks after the break I will say that the Government is saying one thing and doing a whole host of other things which will make absolutely certain that its goals cannot be achieved. This application for $24.8 billion worth of borrowing authority gives me an opportunity to point this out to the Government, and I hope that it will take note of it.

May I call it one o'clock and complete my remarks later.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Mackenzie will have eight minutes remaining in debate, plus 10 minutes for questions and comments when we resume after three o'clock.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

The House took recess at 1 p.m.

CBC

REQUEST FOR A NETWORK TV STATION

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, New Brunswick is the only province in Canada not to have its own television station that is entirely owned and operated by the English network of the CBC.

Therefore, New Brunswickers must be satisfied with watching English-language CBC programs on CHSJ in Saint John.

Given the French-English mix of New Brunswick's population and the CBC's mandate to unite all Canadians, it does not seem very fair that this province is denied a network station. In fact, this situation is clearly intolerable.

[English]

The establishment of a full CBC station in New Brunswick would permit the province to reap benefits beyond the television service. With complete production facilities in the province and more New Brunswick-made shows produced there, the province's artists, actors, technicians and other professionals would be provided with new opportunities which are now closed to them.

Although the CBC has been the victim of drastic budget cuts, the need for an owned and operated station in New Brunswick still exists. All that is needed is for the federal Government to show the political will to make it a reality.

AIRLINES

RENEWAL OF AIR SERVICE

Mr. David Bjornson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, June 16, I had the opportunity to represent our Government at the inaugural flight of United Express-Aspen Airways from Denver, Colorado to Grand Forkes, North Dakota to Winnipeg, Manitoba.

The role of the Government of Canada in conjunction with the Government of the United States in the approval of the licence for this service is a positive development in the transportation interface between our two countries.

I commend Mr. Don Ringsby and Mr. Don Martins of Aspen Airways for their special efforts in the re-establishment of this program. I would like to congratulate Governor Rommer of Colorado, Governor Sinner of North Dakota and Premier Filmon of Manitoba for their initiative in setting up this regional service.

This licence is not part of the Free Trade Agreement but with the renewal of this air service the business climate between our great countries will no doubt improve even more.

RAILWAYS

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, a very important meeting was held this morning on the future of VIA Rail. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) met with the Mayors of Windsor, Toronto, Mississauga, Montreal, Quebec City and, of course, the great city of Hamilton.

The mayors expressed their desire to modernize the Windsor-Quebec corridor with a rapid and potentially profitable service. The Government unfortunately does not see it this way. Cuts to the budget for VIA Rail would likely impact greatly on the development of passenger rail service in the Windsor-Quebec corridor. Commuters will be forced to look for alternatives to train service which would certainly be more costly and damaging to the environment.

For 1988, the number of passengers on the train between Niagara and Toronto was 273,000 people, of which over 33,000 people either got on or off the train at Hamilton. From January 1 to May 31 of this year there were 98,000 passengers on this line. Ridership, Mr. Speaker, is increasing not decreasing. A multi-modal approach makes sense. The solution is to build a high-speed rail network from Windsor to Quebec and ease the congestion of air traffic from Pearson International Airport by incorporating Hamilton Airport.

TOURISM

THE MATANE SHRIMP FESTIVAL AND THE CENTENARY OF AMQUI

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia—Matane): Mr. Speaker, my constituents, like people in many regions of Canada, have taken charge of their economic future and are doing more and more to make tourism a profitable industry.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to point out two important summer activities in my riding, namely the Matane Shrimp Festival, which will be held from June 24 to July 2, and the Centennial Festivities of Amqui, my home town, which will take place throughout the month of July.

In conclusion, I must pay special tribute to the many volunteers who make these regional events major economic activities in each of our ridings.

This is an invitation to everyone to visit the Gaspé peninsula, one of the most beautiful regions in Québec!

NATIONAL REVENUE

ASSESSMENT OF VALUE OF TRADE-INS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, prairie farmers who traded used farm machinery in the early 1980s to buy new equipment are still being harassed by Revenue Canada over investment tax credits and the value of trade-ins.

Last year the Department agreed to pay the field cost of a Saskatchewan farmer which would serve as a test case for the rest. We have heard that the case is pretty slanted in favour of the Department but that is another matter. The producer has since dropped his appeal. The Minister recently stated that his Department was looking for another test case. Meanwhile, Saskatoon officials of Revenue Canada have other instructions and have begun to send farmers notices of assessment.

An accountant who offered three of his clients as potential test cases was turned down with no reason given. In fact, the official said she did not care what the Minister said in the House, Revenue Canada was going to go ahead with the assessments anyway.

Will the Minister keep his word and find another test case? Or is he afraid that the courts will rule in the producer's favour and thus stop his Department's harassment of farmers who followed Revenue Canada's rules only to find them being changed later on in the game.

LIBERAL PARTY OF CANADA

Mr. René Soetens (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, on November 21 the citizens of Canada spoke with foresight and clearly indicated they would not allow the Liberal Party of Canada to govern this country. In hindsight it was a very wise decision. The Liberal Party is a party bereft of policy and money and now a leader.

The Liberals rightfully planned a convention in Calgary to try to establish a policy with which the Party and maybe Canada could live. Well, they could not even let that decision stand. The Liberal Party does not have any money so it decided to seek an arrangement with a major bank so that the Liberals could charge their expenses on Visa. Just like they ran the country, they have no idea how they are going to pay their bills.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party has announced the longest leadership campaign in their history, a campaign the Liberals want the taxpayers to pay for. For over a year this band of opposition critics bereft of policy and money will be leaderless. Can they really wait until June of 1990 to bring this group together, united under one leader who will lead a party that will still have no policy?

GREENPEACE REPORT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, speaking of policy, the policies of this Conservative Government are strangling the Canadian environment. I would like to refer to a specific report which was published today by Greenpeace which is a damning indictment of the Government's so-called commitment to the Montreal protocol.

[Translation]

The Montreal Protocol was signed by our Government as a sign of our interest in the environment, but in 10 days, the Minister himself will not have the ability to proceed with this protocol because he has not established regulations concerning CFCs.

[English]

We have a situation in this country where 25,000 refrigerators are currently being drained of CFCs. In total there are one million refrigerators between Canada and the United States. Those CFCs are not being recaptured. They are leaking right into the environment and they are going to affect the air we breathe, the drought situation in the prairie provinces and the very quality of life that Canadians hold dear. So it is fine for the Minister to sign the Montreal protocol but when he tables legislation this week, we ask him to do something about CFCs and used refrigerator appliances because otherwise all of his talk and all of his government policy is nothing more than smoke and mirrors as was stated in the Greenpeace study.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

CULTURE

WORLD FOLKLORE FESTIVAL

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I want to invite all Hon. Members and all Canadians to come to the riding of Drummond and the Eighth World Folklore Festival, which will be held from July 7 to July 16. This year's theme is "The Wedding", and more than 30 folk dance groups from 22 countries will be at the festival, reflecting the folk culture of many different peoples during ten days of music, dance, singing, and a host of interesting activities.

[English]

More than 1,500 dancers from Canada, United States, France, Brazil and from countries as far as China, Thailand, Turkey and Russia will exchange by their folklore, one of the oldest and marvellous traditions of the wedding; the dance.

[Translation]

Last year, the Festival, which was named "tourist event of the year" in Québec, received about 700,000 visitors. This year's festival will be another glorious wedding of music, song and dance from many nations.

THE ENVIRONMENT

THE PREOCCUPATION OF CANADIANS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, according to a recent Gallup poll, almost all Canadians or approximately 97 per cent of the adult population say they are aware of the dangers of pollution. Almost three-quarters of Canadians in this age group believe that pollution is a very serious problem. In 1987, only 67 per cent of respondents shared that view. In Québec, where the proportion of affirmative answers was the highest, four people out of five, or 81 per cent, said that their province was affected by pollution.

Mr. Speaker, the general response shows that Canadians have become increasingly aware of the dangers of pollution and that times have indeed changed. The trend indicated by this poll shows that the concern of Canadians for environmental issues has increased during the past ten years.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST THAT CAMP IPPERWASH BE CLOSED

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the Chippewa of Kettle and Stoney Point on Lake Huron have a 47-year grievance with the Department of National Defence. During the last war, the Government took over 2,000 acres of their land at Stoney Point for military purposes. Native families were forced to move but were told that they could have their land back after the war when the land was no longer needed for military purposes.

This reserve land is now used as a summer camp for cadets and no longer serves any regular military functions. However, the beautiful beach-front land is being much appreciated by military officers as a private summer camp for their families.

The Chippewa want to build houses for their people and to develop the beach-front property so they can create jobs for the community. I call upon the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight) to do the right thing, to close Camp Ipperwash, return the land to the Stoney Point people and relocate the cadet camp to another military base where it is wanted.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CLOSING OF POSTAL STATION

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, while the Government has been trimming and cutting and destroying the fabric of Canada Post to make a profit, Canadians have had to endure poorer and poorer service. In my riding of Parkdale—High Park, Canada Post, by threatening to close Postal Station V located at 25 Ritchie Street, has forced the residents, many of whom are elderly, to have to go four or five kilometres to get a simple registered letter or to mail a package.

Owners of small businesses that are located in the area because of mail service at Postal Station V will now have to take time from the workday to go all the way to Postal Station M to pick up a package or send a Priority Post letter. These small businesses are being attacked from all sides by this Government with respect to taxes and operating costs. Now they do not even get the mail service they need to do business.

Surely the Government has a duty and a responsibility to all Canadians to ensure the smooth running of our essential services, one of which is Canada Post. I call upon the Minister to reverse his decision and to keep Postal Station V open.

U.S. MEASURES AGAINST ACID RAIN

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, recently U.S. President George Bush agreed to take long-awaited measures to drastically cut carbon emissions that have been causing serious cross-border pollutants. I commend President Bush on his historic initiative, but I would caution that more drastic measures must be taken to control the high acid rain emissions currently being recorded.

Strong support for more action has recently come from U.S. Senator Al Gore. Speaking in Halifax, Senator Gore admitted that the mood in his country had changed, warranting bolder action. He is looking for President Bush's measures on acid rain to be strengthened by Congress. It is very encouraging to know that the acid rain problem has finally become a major concern, not only in Canada but in the United States as well.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

TAX DEDUCTIONS FOR CORPORATIONS

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Tory Government is morally bankrupt and no amount of tinkering can change that. The Government is paying a consultant $600 every day to help sell the sales tax. The consultant says it may be immoral but it works. I say that it is immoral.

The Government allows tax deductions for those corporations or businesses that advertised for the Government on the trade deal but not for those businesses which advertised against the trade deal. That is immoral.

Three times the Government promised improvements in child care. It introduced a Bill that reduced the number of spaces, promised it again in the election but did not provide for any reasonable improvement in the Budget. That is immoral.

The Government promised to expand and improve VIA Rail and has now announced cuts to public transport. That is immoral.

The Government attacked pensioners not once but twice. That is immoral. It is a tragedy for Canadians that the Government's continuous acts of immorality add up to total moral bankruptcy.

FISHERIES

DIMINUTION OF NORTH COD STOCKS

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, some confusion exists as to the scope and mandate of the special committee of Cabinet announced recently under the chairmanship of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to review implications of the apparent diminution of the northern cod stocks.

For several months now, it has been readily apparent that coastal regions of the Maritimes face serious difficulties as a result of the diminution of groundfish stocks on the Scotia–Fundy region. Nova Scotians in particular will be further hard hit if current forecasts of northern cod stocks prove to be correct inasmuch as 30 per cent of those stocks are harvested by Nova Scotian vessels including vessels from Lunenburg and Liverpool.

Accordingly, I urge the Government to clearly indicate the process that is in place to respond to these very serious and urgent needs throughout maritime coastal areas.

FISHERIES

INCREASE OF SEA LAMPREY IN GREAT LAKES

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, a sea lamprey is an eel–like parasite that attaches itself to the undersides of fish and kills Lake Superior trout and salmon. Sea lamprey are found in the Great Lakes and at one time were under control, but unfortunately, insufficient funding has caused the sea lamprey to make a resurgence in Lake Superior and the other Great Lakes.

In 1987, the Government froze the level of funding for sea lamprey control. A report by provincial, state and tribal agencies of the Great Lakes estimates that the Great Lakes sea lamprey will double, trout and salmon stocks will diminish by 50 per cent, the Great Lakes sport fishing industry will lose $552 million and the commercial fishing industry will lose $135 million. In sum, the economic activity of the Great Lakes region will decline by $1.4 billion annually.

I urge the Government to alter this course. Increased program and research funding is imperative if we are to save the salmon and lake trout in Lake Superior and the other Great Lakes.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSURE OF CFB SUMMERSIDE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. There are two groups of Canadians in Ottawa today to protest two of the Government's decisions linked to the Budget cuts, decisions to destroy the fabric of our country. Mayors from Ontario and Quebec are protesting the cut-backs in VIA Rail service and a grassroots group of people from Summerside, Prince Edward Island is protesting the closure of the armed forces base on the Island.

The Acting Prime Minister will know that this country is held together over vast distances by a framework we have developed as a nation for over 100 years. The country is held together by policies that treat all regions of Canada equally. The Government is tearing that fabric apart.

What did the Prime Minister mean when he campaigned in Summerside, Prince Edward Island, just a few months ago and said on October 15, "In the future, Canada will be doing more, not less for all of you"? How can the decision to close down the Summerside base gibe with the promise made by the Prime Minister of Canada two weeks before the election? What answer does the Acting Prime Minister have for the hundreds of people who have come to protest today on Parliament Hill against the closure of the base?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to note first that no one on this side of the House takes profound changes and disruptions in the economy lightly. The policies that we have put in place over the past four and a half years have led to economic growth in every region of Canada.

Having said that, I can say that from time to time there are particular problems. We recognize there is one now in Summerside. We will be working with the community and with the province to ensure that programs are available that will help economic development of that region in the future.

PROMISE OF PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I in no way want to denigrate the versatility of the Minister. However, the question was put to the Acting Prime Minister because it concerns a promise made by the Prime Minister of Canada to the people of Summerside and it involves an issue of national fairness.

We can build this country together only if we treat all regions fairly. We can build this country together only if essential services are provided to all citizens. We can build this country together only if the federal Government's decisions make sense to all Canadians.

How does the decision to close the Summerside base make any sense when we need aerial surveillance to police off-shore fishing on the Atlantic coast and we need search and rescue services for the fishermen? Obviously, the closure of that base devastates the economy of Prince Edward Island.

• (1420)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, has stated in the House that officials in his Department did consider alternative military uses for Summerside.

However, it did not provide an answer in terms of operational savings to the Department of Defence or in terms of the operations of the defence policy of the Government. That does not mean to say that we do not have a concern for the community. They are two quite different issues.

As a Government we will be working with ACOA which, up until now, has found business opportunities for other areas in Prince Edward Island and throughout the Atlantic, and with the types of programs that we can put in place to help build a more solid future for the people of that community.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The people of Summerside who are here today have come a long way for an empty answer that promises them no hope for the future.

RAIL TRANSPORTATION

VIA RAIL—INTERRUPTION OF SERVICE BETWEEN QUÉBEC CITY AND WINDSOR—GORVENMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, instead of destroying what made this country great, we should provide positive support. We should promote and improve on the policies that have contributed to the unity of this country. If we accept that, why should VIA Rail be shut down? Does it make sense to cut passenger services between Québec City and Windsor, in the corridor between Ontario and Québec, while everybody knows that passenger trains replace cars which pollute a lot more, and that trains enable Canadians to avoid our overcrowded airports and highways?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this morning, I met the mayors from the Québec City–Montreal–Toronto–Ottawa–Windsor–Hamilton–Mississauga corridor. They took a very cohesive stand on VIA Rail services. However, I repeat what I have already said many times to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, which is that nothing has yet been submitted by VIA Rail to me, nothing that says absolutely, once and for all, that we are going to shut down a route between Québec City and Windsor. It might happen, and that is what I told the mayors this morning. Once again, I feel that it makes sense to have acted the way we did in terms of the resources that are available. We can talk about the VIA Rail issue forever without facing the financial truth, but it won't go away!

I repeat, we cannot afford to invest the kind of money we have invested in the past in a service that is hardly being used. On the other hand, it would be an undue assumption to say today that we are going to shut down any route at all. I repeat, it is quite possible, but I think it only makes sense to wait and see what happens about two weeks from now when I receive the report. At that time, the Government will make the appropriate decisions within a reasonable time frame.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PREMIER'S TASK FORCE REPORT ON CLOSURE OF CFB SUMMERSIDE

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, maybe I will have better luck with the Minister of National Defence.

The Minister and his colleagues have had some weeks now to absorb the contents of the Premier's task force report on the closure of CFB Summerside. Today, he had the opportunity to witness the real depth of concern that Islanders have when they came to Ottawa, at their own expense, to demonstrate on Parliament Hill.

Now that the real facts are in the possession of the Minister and he knows the horrendous impact the closure will have on Prince County and on the province, has the Minister decided that the price is too high for Prince Edward Island to pay, and if not, why not?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I have explained to the House, the decision was made because of the economic realities of today that face Canada and this Department particularly. That decision, as other decisions in the Budget, will stand.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration, other colleagues, and myself have had the opportunity to meet people from Prince Edward Island and have stated that we will work with them. We would also appreciate the opportunity to work with the Premier of the province. The province could work with us in putting forward a real economic base, not a base for the economy that is based on something that is not necessary, either from an operational point of view or from any other point of view other than to create activity when it happens to be the Department of National Defence. We have offered, and will continue to work with the province and the people affected in that community.

REQUEST THAT BASE REMAIN OPEN

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Premier knows that the entire ACOA budget of $1 billion was more than half spent already in Prince Edward Island or in the Maritimes. There would not be enough in the original ACOA budget to replace CFB Summerside for any great length of time. That is why the Premier, and Members on this side of the House, are fighting to keep that base open, because nothing else can replace it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGuire: A prominent citizen of Summerside has stated: "The Government has placed the greatest burden of the deficit battle on a small community in a poor to marginal region far from Ottawa." He goes on to say: "This is not a base of guns and bombs, but a centre for search and rescue and maritime coastal fisheries surveillance. What logic," he asks, "would close such a centre in Summerside when our waters are even more congested and our fisheries ravaged and endangered?"

Could the Minister answer that question?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question. There is no military operational need to maintain that base.

The other part of the Member's question regarding search and rescue was identified on budget day, and that is still the policy and the direction that we are prepared to take.

Ms. Copps: What is that supposed to mean?

Mr. McKnight: The Premier's task force itself has identified that Canadian Forces Base Summerside does not have any military need. It is there for an economic rationale. This Department does not have that responsibility. We are prepared to work as a Government, as other Ministers have stated, through meetings and discussions we have had. I have had meetings with the mayor—

Ms. Copps: Buck-passer.

Mr. McKnight: Apparently the Hon. Member for Hamilton East is not interested in this. I know that her colleague is, and I am.

I have met with the Mayor of Summerside. I have met with the President of the Chamber of Commerce from Summerside. My officials have met with other representatives of the province and the community, and we will continue to do so.

We have two needs. There is a need for military operational efficiency, which is not located in Canadian Forces Base Summerside, and we have a need for over $1 billion of savings that are made by eliminating that non-military operation in Summerside.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL IMPACT STUDY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the same subject, and it is also for the Acting Prime Minister.

No Government would deliberately and knowingly shut down the base at Summerside, thus withdrawing $60 million a year from the local economy, and that is also the provincial economy, without having done a thorough and exhaustive economic and social impact study.

I want to know the nature of the study that was done, obviously by the Cabinet before the decision was taken. I would like the Acting Prime Minister to table that study in order that we can all see it, particularly the people of Summerside.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister of Finance would probably be happy to provide whatever information the Hon. Member needs.

What is important for us to do now is work with the people of Summerside and with the province in terms of building toward the future of Summerside, and the future of Prince Edward Island. That is what the Government is concentrating on, and I am working with my colleagues on that very thing.

BROADENING OF ACTIVITIES AT BASE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Government did not do that study and it is hedging on it and running away from it now.

My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Defence. On May 23 I put some questions to him in the House with respect to broadening the activities into para-military or soft- military surveillance of eastern Canada. It has already been mentioned today that those activities and demands for activities are on the increase.

In his answer he stated that he would get together with his colleagues in Cabinet to discuss the feasibility of that suggestion. I would like to now find out what the response was from those Ministers, and what the results were from those discussions.

• (1430)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows as well as I do that the closure of that base was for economic reasons. As the Hon. Member knows, there is a tracker—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): No impact study has been done.

Mr. McKnight: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can read to the Hon. Member verbatim, if he wishes, a study done by my Department.

Some Hon. Members: Table it.

Mr. McKnight: I can certainly table it. Would that be better?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKnight: It is the same information that was given out on budget night. I am sure the Hon. Member has read it. However, if he wishes to have it again I will make it available.

The Hon. Member suggests that we should continue to do more with less. The Hon. Member knows we cannot. To re-engine the trackers would cost $331 million. That is just to re-engine aircraft which came off Canada's last carrier, the Bonaventure. They are 30 years old.

Because we have to make these savings he is asking that we replace them. We will have discussions among colleagues to see what can be done. However, the Hon. Member has to understand that we cannot do more with less. This Department has $2.74 billion less in this five-year planning period.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is addressed to the Acting Prime Minister.

We understand that today the Prime Minister is in Atlantic Canada. He is meeting with the only Tory Premier of Atlantic Canada in Halifax.

Why is he not meeting with Premier Ghiz of Prince Edward Island on the Summerside crisis? That is where he should be today, not in Halifax.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, just to keep the record straight, the implication was that the Prime Minister has not met recently with other Atlantic province Premiers. He met with Premier McKenna of New Brunswick when they were both participating at the Francophone Summit.

The Government of Canada is prepared, Ministers have met, and officials are prepared to deal with representatives of Summerside, including the Premier, to discuss alternative uses that might be made of the base. However, the decision is clear and should be understood as clear. That base closure decision has been taken. It will stand. As my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration said, the challenge right now is to work together to find alternatives.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSURE OF CFB SUMMERSIDE

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Since the Government announced that it was closing CFB Summerside we Island MPs have tried time and time again to impress upon the Government the disastrous economic and social impact that this decision will have on the Province of Prince Edward Island. They are all to no avail.

Today, hundreds of angry and disappointed Islanders marched on Parliament Hill to register their opposition to this decision.

Will the Minister do the honourable thing today and take this opportunity to announce that CFB Summerside will remain open?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, once again I have to inform the Hon. Member that, no, I cannot make her happy today.

I can ask the Hon. Member if she and her colleagues on the other side of the House will work with the Government to bring about substantial economic activity and benefits that would be long-term and based on a real need, not a false premise that the Department of National Defence has an economic responsibility when it has a responsibility for the national security of Canada.

Ms. Callbeck: Certainly we are prepared to work with the Government. However, we want this base to remain open.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening very carefully to the Minister. He has not yet answered the essential question of fairness.

Is it fair to close the only Armed Forces base in Prince Edward Island? Is it fair to leave Prince Edward Island the only province without a base?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, what is fair is that the Government has taken an action through its Budget to bring economic well-being to Canada. Through that activity there was a reduction in the DND budget.

The Hon. Member is speaking as if Prince Edward Island, with its size, is isolated from the military activities of Canada. The Hon. Member knows better than that. It is not as isolated as areas in the Province of Saskatchewan. It is not as isolated as areas in the Northwest Territories, as she can ask her colleague to her right. It is not as isolated as other areas in Canada are from military activity or that security which is provided by military activity.

CLOSURE OF CFB PORTAGE LA PRAIRIE

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of National Defence.

It has been almost two months since the Government announced plans to close CFB Portage. In that time the Minister has heard numerous forceful arguments about why the base should be saved and to what alternatives the base could be put. Despite this the Minister has not brought forward any game plan, nor has he even visited Portage la Prairie.

Will the Minister end the uncertainty today and announce what decisions, if any, have been taken in the last several weeks with respect to the future of CFB Portage?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member has an occasional interest in the well-being of the people of Portage. However, we have been working with the Member of Parliament who represents Portage and has come forward with several alternatives which he has been exploring with the support of the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKnight: I can inform the Hon. Member that on budget night we made an announcement that starting in 1992, after we have received proposals and made a decision on preliminary flight training which is now taking place at Portage, such as doing it in co-operation with the Enterprise outside Canada's Forces, we would then make an announcement on the closure of CFB Portage.

I have said that until we receive that information I cannot make an announcement. The time period for receiving that information is 1992.

IMPACT ON HELICOPTER TRAINING

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, I think we want to hear a detailed account from the Minister and not from the Hon. Member for Portage—Interlake.

My supplementary question is also addressed to the Minister of National Defence.

Helicopter training is one of the major operations of CFB Portage. CFB Portage was chosen as a base for helicopter training, for logistical reasons, weather, topography, and open air space. There is even good reason to believe that CFB Portage is the only base in western Canada that can serve as a helicopter training centre.

Will the end result of the closure of CFB Portage be the loss of helicopter training in western Canada?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to draw to the Member's attention actions that have been taken in the past. However, the closure of Gimli and the closure of Rivers, which were equally capable of continuing to provide training, were found to be acceptable to previous administrations because there was no military need as identified at that time.

I can assure the Hon. Member that Portage la Prairie is not the only place in Canada where helicopter training can take place. I suggest the Hon. Member talk to the Hon. Member for Kamloops and other Hon. Members from British Columbia. He should talk to Members from other parts of western Canada. Helicopter training can take place in several areas.

VIA RAIL

WINDSOR–QUEBEC CITY CORRIDOR

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. This morning the Minister rejected a request from mayors along the Windsor–Quebec corridor to protect the existing levels of passenger rail service.

• (1440)

Given the fact that VIA raises through passenger revenues 67 per cent to 74 per cent of its costs along the corridor, using extremely old and expensive equipment, while the best Amtrak in the United States can do is 69 per cent over the total system, will the Minister go back to Cabinet and demand the necessary funds to continue VIA's operation and to acquire new equipment so that it can make a buck?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well what I will say. I do not know what has been said to him, but this morning the mayors presented some requests in terms of the status quo, and particularly in terms of consultation. I said that I will make a decision which will be communicated to the mayors of the corridor.

My hon. friend knows very well that I will not make a decision before VIA Rail presents its corporate plan within which we will have some proposals. I will not deal with the corridor without keeping in mind that I have to deal also with all other routes in the country. I cannot make a decision between Windsor and Quebec without keeping in mind that there are many other places in Canada.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, he made a decision by deciding correctly to protect the nine routes that are served only by VIA.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister wanted, he could decide to protect the corridor because of the impact on the environment, the impact on the congestion at Pearson Airport, and the impact on the highways in Ontario and Quebec.

Will he do that now so that, at the very least, that section in that very populated area of the country can be protected, and we will continue to fight for the rest?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope my friend is not comparing the Winnipeg–Churchill route with the Toronto route.

Mr. Angus: They are both necessary.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): There are not the same kind of transportation modes between Toronto and Montreal and between Winnipeg and Churchill. Of course we kept nine routes where, in some places, there is no other transportation mode. He understands that very well.

The decision on the corridor will be made in light of the proposals by VIA Rail. It is a Crown corporation that must make its own corporate plan. Once again, decisions will be made in due course. I have no more money than I did two months ago. We will make a decision that corresponds to our capacity to pay.

HOUSING

RESTORATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS – MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Housing.

Everyone knows how important our restoration assistance programs are throughout the country and particularly in Québec.

I would like to ask the Minister of State for Housing if he intends to further emphasize assistance for rental housing in his social housing programs.

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago, I met the Québec Housing Minister, Mr. Paradis, the Mayor of Québec, Mr. Pelletier, and the Mayor of Montreal, Mr. Doré. I hope to form a tripartite federal–provincial–municipal committee, which will find solutions to the problems raised by the Hon. Member.

I also wish to cooperate with the Hon. Member and other Members from Québec to solve these problems.

[English]

VIA RAIL

WINDSOR–QUEBEC CITY CORRIDOR—POSITION OF MAYORS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the unprecedented appeal of the mayors of the major cities in the Windsor–Quebec City corridor to the Minister and the Government that the VIA Rail service in that corridor be kept in operation.

Why does the Minister not agree with the mayors when they point out in their brief that more than 10 million people have access to this service and that the future of the railway links in the corridor therefore has an impact on Canada's economic development? If the Minister and the Government are serious about Canada's economic development, why do they not end the uncertainty today and make a commitment that that VIA corridor service will remain in operation?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I do not have the same perception of management as the Member for Windsor.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): When we see the debt that was created by the Liberals, we know very well that they are ready to use 25 per cent of the budget for all of Transport Canada on 3 per cent of the ridership. That is how the economy developed in this country under the Liberal Party. Thank you very much, but I am not interested.

[Translation]

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer is a slap in the face to the mayors and people of the six large cities in the Windsor—Québec corridor.

[English]

IMPACT ON REGIONAL ECONOMY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, why is the Minister ignoring a key point in the brief of the mayors when they say that current service in the corridor cannot be interrupted because "this would have catastrophic affects on the regional economy and the competitive position of the cities in the corridor". Why does the Minister and the Government not care about this and make a commitment now to keep that service in operation?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, who said today that the service will be cut between Windsor and Quebec? I said repeatedly in the House that we will wait for the proposals by VIA Rail. The Hon. Member has already made a decision without the Crown corporation, as Liberals have always done. He will have to accept that the Crown corporation will make its proposals. The mayors understood that this morning. He should speak to the mayors again.

IMMIGRATION

INVESTOR PROGRAM—SPECIAL MINISTERIAL PERMITS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Media reports today reveal that over 100 special ministerial permits have been issued to allow entry into Canada of individuals who are willing to invest over $150,000 under an investor program that is still not officially and fully operational.

Why did the Government announce this program in April 1988, only to raise demands and expectations when no regulations have been finally established? Why did the Government issue ministerial permits to people under a program that has yet to obtain the necessary legislative authority from the Chamber?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to point out that since the program was announced there have been discussions with a number of provinces. There are very clear guidelines in place. I think they are well understood by the people who are directly involved with the investment procedure. The regulations will follow.

Mr. Marchi: Only that Government can put the cart before the horse.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister.

The Minister knows that ministerial permits were designed to be used for compassionate and humanitarian reasons to help people who are facing desperate or life threatening situations. Why did the Government abuse the application of these permits by allowing business investors simply and blatantly to buy their way into this country?

Why extend special privileges to the chosen wealthy few when the Minister, for instance, has played tough and callous with families whose children suffer from Down's syndrome?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Hon. Member—and he has personal knowledge of this—that this Government does use ministerial permits for many other purposes.

• (1450)

This is the Government that has expanded the family class. This is the Government that has actively moved to help Chinese citizens in Canada with the current situation in China. This is the Government that has taken in more refugees than were taken in before. I think that the question is really an inappropriate one.

FISHERIES

NORTHERN COD STOCK

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Recently the Government announced the establishment of a special committee of Cabinet to review the potential impact of possible reductions in northern cod stock.

Given that Nova Scotians already face urgent and serious difficulties arising from the proven diminution of the groundfish stocks of the Scotia Funds region, can the Minister assure the people of Nova Scotia, and in particular the people of the South Shore, that the special committee will as well review our urgent needs and problems and that the committee will bring forth recommendations for special measures to respond to existing as well as to potential problems in the Maritime coastal areas?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member not only for the question but for the active representations he has made to me and to other members of the Government with regard to the very special and serious problem of the groundfish fishery in Nova Scotia.

I can assure the Hon. Member that the special committee I have been asked to chair will look at that question. We will examine the effectiveness of existing programs in dealing with the impact of that problem upon the communities and the livelihood on the South Shore. If necessary we will look at other programs.

I would ask the Hon. Member to continue his active representations which have been very helpful to us.

THE ENVIRONMENT

SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. As the Minister knows, the Prime Minister endorsed the conclusions of the World Commission on the Environment and Development before the United Nations. The Minister of Environment endorses the principle of sustainable development on an almost daily basis and claims that it is the number one priority of Cabinet.

However, despite the lip service, 72 per cent of Canadians polled by Gallup this month believe that the dangers of pollution are now severe. We in this Party have proposed that at least 1 per cent of the national budget be directed to grassroots organizations to take action on sustainable development. Does the Minister not believe that 1 per cent of Canada's national budget should be set aside for that purpose in this crisis situation?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we were all very interested this morning to read in the papers that 97 per cent of Canadians are aware of the seriousness of the environmental situation. This is confirmation that the Government was right in making a strong commitment to sustainable development. We will pursue this commitment.

We know that the funding of the organizations is not at the level that they were expecting. I met them this morning. I think that we will have to devise a policy to take care of this concern.

Oral Questions

FUNDING OF CANADIAN NETWORK

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on June 8 in this House the Minister of Environment said the following:

> We have all made too many speeches on the environment. What we need now is action.

I think we all agree with that. As the Minister would know, the Canadian environment network represents over 1,800 national environment groups, and the Government of Canada provides $84 per group per year, one three hundred and sixtieth of what the Government provides to amateur sport. That funding is to assist them in research and public education on environment issues right across this country.

Does the Minister really believe $84 per group per year is sufficient to deal with the crisis we face in the environment of Canada and the earth?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is true that too many people are delivering great speeches for environment, but the difference between our colleagues on the other side of the House and ourselves is that we are taking action.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): We have already announced the implementation of two programs: one last year, $110 million for the action plan for the St. Lawrence waterway, and last week $50 million for the "environment partners fund". Those are actions that we are taking.

We will introduce more in the fall. There is very important legislation before this House, and the House will be invited to co-operate with the Government to provide the country with an Environmental Assessment Act.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

STATISTICS CANADA REPORT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of International Trade. Last October the Prime Minister was quoted as saying that the Free Trade Agreement would create more new jobs for Canada and put more money into Canadian pockets. Yet, we now have in front of us a report from Statistics Canada, and the quarterly trade results which show exactly the opposite.

In fact our exports to the United States are consistently going down and our imports from the United States are consistently going up. Is the Minister now prepared to say that the Prime Minister was wrong and that in fact the Free Trade Agreement is ending up having fewer jobs for Canadians and less money in Canadian pockets?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I could give the short answer which is no, but I want to elaborate a little.

For example, the World Economic Forum just met here in Canada, and Klaus Schwab who is the founder of that forum said that our economy's recent growth rate has been second only to that of Japan. He said:

> The forum's most recent ranking on the competitiveness of various countries placed Canada in fourth position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Economist Pierre Fortin said:

> The signing of the Free Trade Agreement—is the most important economic achievement of this decade for Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Crosbie: There is more to come, Mr. Speaker.

IMPACT ON TRADE BALANCE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, with all due apology to Mr. Klaus Schwab and the World Economic Forum, I am talking about a report from the Government itself, the Statistics Canada report which points out that our trade balance is at its lowest level in close to eight years. In fact, we are almost close to having a trade decline, a trade deficit which we have not had in 15 years, all because of the disastrous agreements signed by this Government.

We want to know what this Government is going to do about that trade deterioration. Is the Government going to do something about the closures in the softwood lumber industry? Is it going to do something about the movement of the auto parts industry to Mexico? Is this Government going to stop issuing press releases from Mr. Schwab and take some action on behalf of Canadian business?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we just saw the sparrow in action again.

Monte Kwinter who is the Minister of Industry in Ontario—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —is quoted today as saying:

> —his Government hasn't identified a single plant that has closed because of encroaching U.S. entrepreneurism under free trade.

Finally in explanation for the present trade surplus position, there is a whole series of explanations including the fact that the Canadian dollar has gone up tremendously in value since 1984 when the disastrous economic performance of the hon. gentlemen opposite was ended. That is one of the reasons for this situation.

Imports of aircraft have risen quite tremendously. There has been an increase in crude oil prices. Our wheat exports are temporarily down at the moment. I could take the gentleman outside and explain all these matters to him, but I can assure him that it is not the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. It has no connection with the situation at all.

VIA RAIL

APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT AND CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Minister appointed as president and chief executive officer of VIA Rail the president and chief executive officer of Canadian National, a company that spent VIA's whole corporate life gouging VIA financially.

This creates a conflict of interest because for every VIA route that is cancelled by Mr. Lawless, this enhances CN's argument for shutting down that rail line entirely. Why did the Minister appoint Mr. Lawless as president of VIA Rail when he knew that it must surely mean the end of the passenger service between Sydney and Halifax, which would lead almost definitely to the abandonment of the rail line in eastern Nova Scotia?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the president of VIA Rail, Mr. Ron Lawless, appeared last week before the Transport Committee. I believe I said that this question was raised, and Mr. Lawless answered satisfactorily regarding that concern about a conflict of interest. I believe Mr. Lawless is an outstanding man in terms of rail transportation. The role he has to play is to deal with the levels that we have given to him. Unfortunately, I believe that we cannot afford, as the Member's Party unfortunately did for so many years from 1977 to 1984, to deal with the corporation which could not attract maximum ridership. For that reason I believe the decision which will be made will be the best, even for eastern and Atlantic Canada.

• (1500)

PROPOSALS OF VIA RAIL AWAITED BY MINISTER

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that appointing Mr. Lawless as President of VIA Rail is like asking a fox how many chickens should be left in the coop. Why does the Minister not admit that he wants to see VIA Rail service abandoned between Sydney and Halifax and that he wants to see the rail line in eastern Nova Scotia abandoned?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at this time the Minister does not have to want anything about VIA Rail, he has to want to have a report by the corporation which will give options. If one of the options is to keep the route between Sydney and Halifax, I will be delighted to be in agreement with the company. However, I have to wait for the proposals.

HOUSING

CMHC FUNDS FOR PRINCE CHARLES SENIORS PROJECT

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Housing and concerns the Patricia Starr case and the use of CMHC guaranteed funds for the Prince Charles Seniors project in Toronto.

It is standard practice for CMHC funds not to be released to a project by a financial institution unless authorized by CMHC, based on specific expenses, and supported by vouchers and signed contracts. Consulting contracts and invoices have to be filed with CMHC and authorized on an individual basis on each job.

Can the Minister state whether in the Prince Charles project these procedures were followed and if not, why not?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, the case to which the Hon. Member is referring was a turnkey project involving the Tridel Corporation and the charity in order to produce the non-profit housing project. In that particular case funding was advanced in accordance with the usual procedures of CMHC. The funds that are involved, as I understand it, are funds that were returned to the charity as a retail sales tax rebate. It was those funds, as I understand it, that were used in connection with this situation.

EXPENDITURE OF CMHC FUNDS QUESTIONED

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Minister of Housing that some of the funds were in fact for consulting fees guaranteed by CMHC. This scandal is now a month old. Has the Minister not found out what vouchers and contracts were filed with CMHC concerning this project and Patricia Starr?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, that is most certainly the case. All of those facts are well known to CMHC and in fact a request has been made for the return of the funds which were spent inappropriately.

I am sorry that the Hon. Member has not had the opportunity to ask a question in this House for some six weeks. Members of the Government have, of course, been asking questions on housing and I am pleased to see that at long last—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Orders of the Day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989–90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C–11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Althouse) had the floor. He has a further eight minutes plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, when the sitting of the House was interrupted for the lunch break I was pointing out some alternatives that the Government might use in order to offset the deficit about which it is so concerned at the moment. I pointed out a couple of tax provisions which I thought would do two things; they would provide funding to reduce the deficit and would also help in the fight against inflation. I wanted to carry on by pointing out in the last few minutes available to me that there are alternatives. I was attempting to point out some of the other choices which the Government has to raise money and to reduce the deficit. One of the things which the Government has overlooked is where it gets its money.

Let us examine the long-term pattern of taxation with respect to the proportion of revenue accruing from personal and corporate taxes respectively. We know that in 1950 income taxes from personal and corporate sectors were approximately equal and together they represented some 75 per cent of the total federal revenues. About three-quarters of what the Government took in came from income tax, half of that from the corporate sector and half from private individuals.

By 1988, personal taxes had risen from 35 per cent to 47 per cent of total government taxation and revenues, while corporate taxes had declined from something like 40 per cent to about 9 per cent of government expenditures. In other words, the corporate sector has managed to sharply reduce its relative share of the cost of government operations to less than one-fifth that borne by individual taxpayers collectively. In 1988 terms, if the corporate sector contribution had been equal to that paid under personal taxes, instead of a budget deficit of some $30 billion the Canadian Government would be looking at a surplus of $18.5 billion.

The difference there is quite dramatic and if the Government is really serious about reducing its deficit, one of the first things I contend it should do is start going back to equitable taxation between the corporate sector and taxation of the individual and small business.

Earlier I pointed out some of the problems that came from this kind of tax policy. Instead, the Government brought in a Budget which imposes additional taxes on individuals. It proposes to add, at the beginning of 1990, a new sales tax which, far from being revenue neutral as was touted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) months ago, according to Finance Department officials' own figures it will take an additional $3 billion from the pockets of individual taxpayers.

I contend that under any definition of inflationary pressure that will be inflationary. The Government is asking people to shell out even more money for services and will be creating an inflationary environment. The Government is feeding the Bank of Canada with a policy which is attempting to keep the Canadian dollar high by keeping interest rates high and attracting dollars to Canada, something which is self–defeating on a whole series of counts.

We heard in Question Period today that we are very close to having the first trade deficit that the country has faced in more than 50 years, all because we have built the Canadian dollar up into the low eighties from the high sixties. In order to do that the Government has successively increased the amount of interest that we have to pay.

Small business people, farmers and homeowners in my riding are having to pay ever–increasing interest rates, an increase of more than 3 percentage points over the past year.

• (1510)

When we produce our goods and services for export, whether it is grain, light manufactured goods or wood products, the price that we receive in U.S. dollars, whether we sell it to the United States, Asians or Europeans, the value of the product in our market is down. When we were selling it for 67 cents U.S., and are now selling it for 82 cents or 83 cents, the amount of money that we have to keep is very much smaller. We have lost 15 per cent to 18 per cent of the value of those products simply because the Government has decided to go for a high dollar kind of policy accompanied by high interest rates.

If the Government is serious about cutting both inflation and the deficit, a lower interest rate policy accompanied by a slightly lower dollar would help us to get there. The cost of carrying the something between $320 billion to $350 billion accumulative deficit would go down if we let the interest rate go down. The amount of money that exporters right across the country would garner from shipping products outside of the country would go up. With those extra funds, new economic activity could be created. Instead, the Government chooses the current route of charging more taxes and reducing very much needed services to constituents.

It has particularly been hard on constituencies lying outside of the big metropolitan areas, areas like Mackenzie in Saskatchewan which I represent. We have seen a commitment in this Budget for the Government to cut $90 million to $100 million per year from its contribution to the crop insurance program. This means that the farmers and the provincial governments are going to have to pick up the difference. Given the tendency of the provincial governments of late, I predict it will mostly fall on the farmers.

From this Budget we have seen an announcement to end all branch line rehabilitation. The last little branch line in western Canada which is going to be built this year is being built into my hometown. There is 13 to 14 miles there. After that, there is no more money. What does that mean? It has been accompanied by an announcement by C.N., and apparently soon to be followed by CP, that the track crews which CN have will be cut by one–half. They are going to lay off half the workers. Anybody with seniority of under 12 or 13 years will be probably laid off and out of work. The branch lines have now been reserviced or totally abandoned. Those branch lines which have been rebuilt are only guaranteed service until the end of this decade, this century, to the year 2000. They will not need track crews any more to keep them up. They have all been rehabilitated in the last 10 years. The companies have just callously decided to lay off half the track crews and let the service go to pieces because they will not be servicing a lot of these towns in the very near future. Within a decade they can abandon them. This came about because the Government decided to abandon those particular programs.

This last Budget ended interest-free cash advances to farmers which has been a part of the farm network of services for the last 15 years or so. It has now ended. There is an end to the commodity based loans under the Farm Credit Corporation where the Farm Credit Corporation is asked to share the risk of declining farm prices. They cannot do that. The Government talks a lot about the risk but they do not want to be involved in sharing some of the risks they are imposing upon Canada's farmers.

This Budget saw the elimination of the Dairy Special Export Program. It is no longer in existence after this Budget. This Budget saw the termination of the At and East grain and flour rates which permit Halifax, Quebec City and the ports which are open over winter to participate in the grain trade while the seaway is frozen up. It is being put to an end. It will reduce the potential for export. It will reduce the jobs which exist in those ports.

This Government has, in short, given up on a lot of programs that I think were necessary to keep the regions of this country healthy, and has continued with a program of leaving the regions to the mercies of the cold winds of economic rationalization. It would not be so bad if that was all the Government was doing but it is forcing this rationalization by interfering with the interest rate, interfering with the dollar, deregulating transportation and the other services which might keep these regions in business. It is doing everything it can to force them out of business. I do not know how the country can continue with that kind of policy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think it is particularly appropriate that on this day when we have the mayors of the Quebec City-Windsor corridor in Ottawa to deal with the Government's devastating cut-backs on VIA Rail and to address the environmental issues, that we also have an opportunity to speak on the borrowing Bill. The Government is seeking authority to borrow millions and millions of dollars at the same time as it claims that it does not have the money to maintain essential services.

It is interesting to note that in one of today's columns it is pointed out that one single interest-free loan which has been recently tendered to—

—the Lavalin Corporation is worth as much as all the funds throughout Canada for all unemployed workers, whether they lost their jobs because of free trade or something else.

Mr. Speaker, it's incredible! The Government says that it does not have a cent, that it is almost broke, but when the time comes to give Lavalin an interest-free loan, it finds the money. However, when the time comes to pay for VIA Rail to make linkages among communities, it never has the money.

[English]

This Government is fraudulent in the sense that it is claiming to the people of Canada that it cannot afford to keep the rail service going. What is the ultimate effect of a cancellation of the rail service? In our own area, the Government is spending millions of dollars on an ongoing basis to try and keep traffic going into the Toronto International Airport. The Toronto International Airport at the moment is an economic disaster area. In fact, my colleague, the Member for Gatineau—La Lievre (Mr. Assad), raised a question in the House last week that conventions, conferences and business people do not even want to go to Toronto for conventions because the airport is such a disaster area.

We know that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) himself, gutless though he may be—he is not prepared to admit to the public that there is a severe safety problem in Canada's skies—has undertaken a secret study of the safety issues which are basically at the root of some of the problems in Toronto. I am doing everything I can to avoid Toronto. One of the ways which we can avoid the Toronto International Airport is by using an effective train service.

The decision by this Government to eliminate VIA Rail passenger service at the very moment when we as a nation are becoming cognizant of the fact that the environmental time bomb is ticking, is sheer folly. If we look simply at the issue of the creation of sulphur dioxide and the carbon monoxide emissions from automobiles and how much our own atmosphere can be saved by effective and efficient use of passenger service, and if we believe the comments of the Brundtland Commission about sustainable development, then surely we have a responsibility to encourage the use of communal passenger service. In particular, a most efficient use of the rails which are a cleaner, more effective form of movement of Canadians than the amount of fossil fuel burning which is needed to get one jet off the runway at Toronto International Airport.

When we want to talk about money and savings in the economy, let us understand that the train service in this country has formed an integral part of the development of the communities.

[Translation]

And, Mr. Speaker, I think that there are other issues related to the Government's decision to cut the ties between communities.

[English]

We are not just making an economic decision here. What we are making is a decision to amputate the lifeline of an island like Cape Breton.

• (1520)

I was in Cape Breton on Friday night and met a young student who uses the train to get to university. She told me that if that train is cut off she will not fly because she cannot afford to. The bus service makes it necessary for her to stay overnight in a hotel in order to make a connection. The train service effectively and efficiently provides a link between the island and the mainland and keeps Canada together. This is not just an economic issue, it is an issue about whether the Government believes it should be putting money into communities that link Canadians from coast to coast.

If Sir John A. Macdonald in the early 1860s had looked at the issue of the CNR, he may have said it does not make economic sense. It is too expensive. We cannot afford to do it. He could have been a doomsayer and a naysayer like the Conservatives. But instead, Sir John A. Macdonald had a dream. He had a dream that despite all the economic forces pulling us to the south we were going to build a country that went from east to west. We were going to pay the price that includes sometimes having a postal service that is not just there to make money. Did you hear the Minister responsible for the post office—I should say the coast office, because that is about what it is doing at the moment—boasting about his profit? There are thousands of Canadians in rural communities who have had their lifeline to the outside world cut off with the closure of rural post offices, Mr. Speaker. But the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Andre) and the Government see the function of the post office as merely a money-making machine. There is more to Canada than sheer capital even though the Conservatives do not seem to be aware of that fact.

I was not surprised that the post office was able to report a profit. We had hearings in Hamilton recently which pointed out specifically that the post office in Hamilton is breaking the law by requiring workers to work overtime without getting paid for it. Indeed, if workers want to be hired by Canada Post they have been requested to sign a form in which they will state that they will work overtime without being paid for it. It is a violation of the law. Any business in this country could turn a profit if it were prepared to disregard the basic rights of workers under the Canada Labour Code.

We were also informed that on a regular and consistent basis Canada Post falsifies its payroll records, falsifies Priority Post recordings so that it can report that it has delivered a piece of mail on time when, in fact, it has not. That is standard operating procedure at the post office. Furthermore, we heard that it is standard operating procedure when a package valued under $100 is insured for delivery, that if the delivery date is not met there is a specific directive given to employees to destroy the contents of the package and pretend that it has been mislaid or misplaced. The post office does not want to say it has not met its delivery deadline. Anyone can cook the books, Mr. Speaker. But it is up to the Government to have a direction for this country which says that there are certain instruments of national unity which should be supported in order to build Canada east and west and make us a stronger nation.

One of those instruments is VIA Rail and its passenger rail service. Heaven knows, when the Conservatives were sitting on this side of the House we remember very well the assault on previous Liberal Ministers when they attempted to change passenger service at places like Nakina. I remember, because I myself wrote on behalf of the residents of Nakina urging CN to continue stopping in that particular community. But what we have is a deliberate and vicious attempt by Mr. Lawless—and I think his name is rather appropriate—and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) to close VIA Rail. They do not want the system to work. They do not want Canadians to start using rail as an alternate, cleaner, more effective and more efficient use of common transport. They would prefer simply to shut it down. They do not look at the economy and the deficit. Take a trip down the highways between the Windsor–Quebec City corridor any given day of the week.

How many hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars are lost by virtue of the fact that many of our roadways are currently impassable? They are impassable because the volume of traffic that is in a position to move from Windsor to Quebec City is far greater than the system was built to carry. If you are a trucker sitting on the highway—let us say the 401 coming east of Toronto—for two or three hours of lost trucking time multiplied by the hundreds of thousands of commercial vehicles on the road that are paying the price for an over-clogged system, that is lost gross national product. That is lost money to the economy. But the federal Government in a very shortsighted and environmentally insensitive way does not look at the long-term impact of what will happen when these hundreds of thousands of passengers pour off the trains and onto the roadways or onto airplanes.

We are spending in the millions of dollars already and we cannot deliver a decent service to fly somebody from Ottawa to Toronto. So how in heaven's name do we expect to be able to absorb the increased capacity of the number of passengers who will be leaving the trains and piling onto the roads or into planes or buses? It cannot be done. For the Government to suggest that it is merely a bottom line issue is a folly.

It is symbolic of this Government that it really does not give a darn about the regions and communities of this country that are very dependent on federal government involvement. An example of this was the response of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight) today when the people of Summerside at their own expense came thousands of kilometres to Ottawa to plead their case, and they did not even get the courtesy of a decent answer from the Minister on what research went into the decision to close down CFB Summerside. Callous, cold, cruel, uncaring, heartless are just some of the adjectives that must be used to display the utter disregard of this Government for the people of Summerside whose livelihood depends very much on the survival and sustenance of the base at Summerside. What did the Government say? It sent out the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall).

I must say I am getting increasingly disturbed about a trend of this Government. When the Government has to make a tough decision or bring forward a tough policy, it trots out its women members and women Ministers to justify it. Well, we on this side of the House think it is unconscionable that a government that promised it was going to create hundreds of thousands of jobs is in the process of dismantling the very infrastructure that permits the survival of those jobs in those communities. What is the Minister of Employment going to say to someone in Summerside? The Minister is telling them to work together with the Minister for the strengthening of ACOA. We have seen what ACOA has done. It has built a very nice road beside the property of the Minister responsible for Nova Scotia and ACOA, the Minister who is responsible for making recommendations for ACOA. But the Government certainly does not have the capacity to replace the kind of fatal blow that has been dealt to CFB Summerside.

I do not think it is a coincidence that this vindictive action has been taken against a province that by sheer coincidence voted Liberal in the last election. There are four seats in Prince Edward Island.

The people of Prince Edward Island were not hoodwinked by the false promises of the Government and they voted Liberal. If you look in my own community of Hamilton, Mr. Speaker, we had the good sense to send three Liberal Members to Parliament. The Government is embarking on a plan which was articulated very well by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) who basically a few days after the election made one of the truer statements made by this Government—and I use the word advisedly—when he said that Ottawa and ridings that voted Liberal would be punished by this Government because it would not forget. Well, we are being punished in Hamilton. The Canada Centre for Occupational Health and Safety has been operating for ten years. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Corbeil) has recognized that it is a model not only for Canada but for the world. It is a model of worker, management and Government participation. Yet the edict has come down from Ottawa that within the next three years, the centre must be self-sufficient or it will be cut completely loose.

• (1530)

To understand the mandate of the centre, one must realize that the centre makes available to workers across Canada information on chemicals, for example, materials workers may be working with which are potentially life-threatening if they spill them, rub them in their eyes or come into contact with them in an unsafe way. The centre allows them to call to find out what chemicals are involved and whether or not they represent hazards in the workplace. I dare say that some companies might make this information available to their employees but many would not prefer to do so. This service will not be able to survive because of the theory of the Conservative Party, which is that if it does not make a buck, cut it. There are some things in life that are more important than making a buck, and I happen to believe that one of them is protecting the lives of workers.

The centre was expanding to work with the Canadian environmental network on environmental information. Canadians are thirsting for information about how to do more locally and think globally in relation to the environment. The Canada Centre for Occupational Health and Safety, together with the Canadian environmental network was moving to develop a model whereby people anywhere in Canada could pick up a phone to find out the effect, for example, of CFCs, to find out what one can do in one's own home to recycle and conserve. This is the kind of useful information which could lead to the saving of our planet. That was what the centre had in mind, but because the Conservatives do not feel that the centre responds to the almighty dollar, it will cut it loose. It will kill that centre which had been operating for a decade and was visited by people and organizations from around the world.

We on this side of the House are trying to say that the role of Government is not merely to borrow money. The role of Government is not merely to create capital. The role of Government is to create a climate in which our country is built and made strong, one which develops links from region to region. Sir John A. Macdonald had a dream that the trains could link east and west. It is important that the Government understand that the role of VIA Rail is not simply one of coming up with a bottom line, the role of VIA is one of linking the country.

The Post Office does not exist to make a profit. The Post Office does not exist for the trading of stocks and bonds. That is the role of the private sector, the Toronto, Vancouver or Montreal Stock Exchanges. The role of Government is to provide a base from which the private sector can grow but also to provide a base that protects the weaker regions and the weaker citizens.

[Translation]

The Gallup polls last week showed that the Conservative Party is losing popularity in all regions, including Québec, the Maritimes and the West. The reason for this incredible statistic is that the Conservative Party does not understand that it is the Government's role to make this connection. All it sees, Mr. Speaker, are dollar signs.

[English]

All they can see are dollars signs popping up and down. The Minister responsible for the Post Office was practically salivating last week as he saw those dollar signs popping up and down. However, he did not talk about the increase in costs, the fact that the people in my riding cannot get door-to-door mail service if they happen to live in the newer areas and are relegated to having to use supermailboxes. He did not mention that rural post offices across Canada have been cut down and that workers are being forced to work illegally. He did not mention that Canada Post has embarked on the falsification of payroll records, an illegal activity. Those are the kinds of reports that the Government should be called to account for. Instead, all we see is the Minister responsible salivating over Canada Post's profit report.

We in the Liberal Party do not support the Government's single-minded pursuit of capitalism at the cost of the regions. We do not support the Government's pursuit of dollars through the closing down of VIA Rail and rural post offices and so many of the things that have kept Canada together. That is why we cannot support the Government's borrowing Bill. Why should we give the Government billions of dollars when it is only interested in spending the money to pump up their friends and to make the unfortunate decisions we have seen made in the last five years? Government Members are frauds, they should be exposed and we should not vote for the borrowing Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

At the beginning of her speech, she alluded to a project for which $800 million would be made available, in order to finance a surface rail transit system in Bangkok. This project was made possible thanks to work done by Lavalin and a consortium of Canadian companies. The Government has not yet agreed to make the funds available. In the course of negotiations with the EDC, it was suggested that 39 per cent of the funds would be made available interest free, and that 61 per cent would be subject to 8 per cent interest. Those are conditions that appear to be customary on the world market.

Does the Hon. Member mean she would prevent Lavalin and its group, its Canadian consortium, who are capable of breaking into the Bangkok market and who are capable of building surface rail transit systems— Is the Hon. Member saying to this Government: We are not going to support the efforts of Canadians, we are not going to let Canadians play a leadership role and apply their expertise to building surface rail transist systems in Thailand, New Delhi and throughout the world? Is that what she means? Does she want to prevent Canadians from exporting? I would appreciate some clarification.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, certainly not. However, the Conservative Party is giving most of its support to the capitalist system.

You are asking Canadians, and especially senior citizens, single mothers and the people of Prince Edward Island to make sacrifices, and you say you don't have enough money!

The Government has an obligation to choose, and if I were in the Government and I had to choose between giving an interest- free loan to Lavalin or supporting 1,000 workers who are unemployed because of the policies of this Government, I would prefer to give money and support to single parent families, the unemployed, and the people who need VIA Rail. It's a wonderful idea to go to Bangkok and work on a project. Nothing wrong with that. But if you truly support the capitalist system, why does the Government pay and not Lavalin? If a choice has to be made, and if we ask Canadians to make sacrifices, why don't we ask the companies to make the sacrifices and let them pay, if it's a good idea?

[English]

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, after having listened to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight) and some other cabinet Ministers today, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) would care to try to explain what we heard this afternoon. It seemed to me that the Minister of National Defence said that there was nothing in Prince Edward Island to protect. Was he trying to tell Canadians that the island is not worth defending or was he trying to tell Canadians that no one would want to attack it because no one would want it?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister was displaying his absolute ignorance of the life of the people of Prince Edward Island and the fact that he really does not care. The issue that was never referred to by the Minister is the issue of air surveillance of Eastern waters. Obviously we are being assaulted from all sides by over–fishing and the abuse of our 200–mile limit off eastern Canada. The people of P.E.I. know that better than anyone else. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight) did not care. He basically stated that, as far as he was concerned, and I think he made this comment once before in the House, he was not into regional development projects, or something of that nature. That is how he views Prince Edward Island. The sarcastic remarks the Minister made about the Premier of Prince Edward Island were in large measure due to the fact that they do not share a common political philosophy. That is why the activity of the Government has been vindictive. It has been directed in particular toward the people in those areas of the country who saw through the fraud of the Conservative Government. Now everyone does, because Members will have seen the Gallups.

• (1540)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions or comments the Hon. Member for Renfrew.

Mr. Hopkins: Since the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has taken such a deep interest in Canada Post, I would like to ask her about the so-called surplus that Canada Post has shown. Does the Hon. Member agree that the surplus Canada Post is talking about is simply moneys left over because of lack of service provided to Canadians, cutting valuable service to Canadians in rural areas, and no development in urban areas?

Within Crown corporations, what is the incentive to even attempt to make money when the Government comes along, takes up what is left over, and uses it itself? What incentive is there for government agencies with this Government?

Ms. Copps: It is the ultimate shell game. It reminds me a little of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who, every time we ask him a question in the House in relation to those people we should be defending by our government policy, and that is the poorest of the poor, states that the Government took 800,000 people off the tax rolls last year. The same Minister does not state that since the arrival of the Conservative Government in 1984, 1.5 million people have been put on the tax rolls who were not paying tax before. The Government has put 1.5 million people on the tax rolls who are earning $12,000, $13,000, or $14,000 a year who never paid taxes before, and then states that it will give those people back half of their money, and government Members beat their breasts about it.

Obviously, the shell game of Canada Post is being carried on by the Minister of Finance and by others in the Government. I am not surprised that they want to perpetrate this fraud on the people of Canada. As I mentioned, the recent Gallups will show the Conservatives at an all-time low in popularity. That is a reflection of the fact that the Canadian people finally have their number and will never be voting for them again.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, when I rose to speak on Bill C-11 at second reading on May 1, I opened my remarks by reminding Members that, in the first week of April, the Government ended its Throne Speech by stating: "May Divine Providence guide your deliberations." Since that day what we have seen from the Government will require a lot of divine guidance for us in order to continue to live with the Government for the next three and a half years.

We have heard the discussions with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on the floor of the House and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) attempting to defend him. If this situation had taken place in Britain, there would have been no question about the route that things would have taken.

Today we are debating a borrowing Bill at third reading for more than $25 billion. During the election campaign last fall, members of the Government were going around the country bragging that they had the finances of the nation under control. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance were stating that they took on the challenge, solved it, we are on the right road and away we go. It was a real glory ride.

This winter, when the House was recalled, one of the first things we heard was that the country was facing a crisis, and our deficit was going to be bigger than expected. As a result, the national debt would continue to grow by leaps and bounds under this Government. This Government is still blaming a previous Government even though it succeeded in doubling the national debt since it took office less than five years ago. After nearly five years in office, the Government is still desperately attempting to blame someone else for not having been able to get its own act together.

Over the weekend we heard about the declining trade surplus between Canada and the United States. One does not need to have written a doctoral thesis to understand what is happening here. Months ago we told the Government what was going to happen to the softwood lumber industry in Canada when the then Minister for International Trade, the Hon. Pat Carney, slapped on a 15 per cent export tax which practically killed our softwood lumber trade with the United States. That gave the milling operations in the northern United States the opportunity to build up their mills, improve them, bring in greater production, and now they are selling under that 15 per cent protection brought on by this Government's 15 per cent penalty on our own softwood lumber industry.

The companies in the United States that we were beating into the ground as far as competition was concerned before the Memorandum of Understanding on softwood lumber, and before the free trade deal, we are now losing out to and not being able to sell our lumber. Lumber is piling up in the lumber yards of this country. There have been lay-offs across Ontario. The Government is wondering what is wrong. As far as our trade surplus is concerned, lumber is one of the big sales that keeps our trade surplus in a healthy condition. Today, that has gone.

When the Memorandum of Understanding on softwood lumber was first introduced, there was a 71-cent dollar. Then the Government slapped a 15 per cent export tax on our own producers. Now the dollar is at 82 cents or 83 cents, therefore we have lost another 11 per cent or 12 per cent. The Government cannot deny responsibility for having high interest rates. I was present in the House in the early 1980s. I remember Ministers when they were in Opposition blaming the Government of the day for high interest rates in the early eighties that were as a result of world inflation and international pressures. However, today those Ministers state that it is not their fault. In the days when they were in Opposition, it was the fault of the Government. Therefore, if it was the Government's fault before, it is the Government's fault today that there is a high interest rate policy.

Those three issues have damaged the Government's surplus in trade, if it would only come to grips with it and admit a fact of life: high interest rates mean that our own industries cannot borrow money cheaply in order to upgrade facilities and compete; 15 per cent export tax on lumber; and the exchange rate on the Canadian-American dollars.

Today the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) was once again giving the impression that everything was fine, that it certainly had nothing to do with the managerial ability of the Government that our trade surplus was declining. That is absolute balderdash. We know very well what is happening out there. The Minister for International Trade made a commitment that he was going to meet with the softwood lumber producers and come to grips with this issue and with the Memorandum of Understanding, as far as Ontario was concerned. Instead, he continues to blame the Ontario Government which was not consulted in late 1986 when the then Minister of Trade, now retired, was the one who agreed to the Memorandum of Understanding and overnight brought in that penalty on the lumber industry of this country.

The profits from Canada Post were mentioned a while ago. The Government states that Crown corporations must pay their way. Then when Crown corporations do pay their way, the Government robs the bank, runs away with the petty cash, and uses it for its own purposes. Where is the incentive in our Crown corporations to make money today except in their dedication which is still there to a very large degree?

• (1550)

The Minister of State for Privatization (Mr. McDermid) appeared before the legislative committee which studied Bill C-11. I want to make a point about that. We were sitting in a room in the West Block on Parliament Hill waiting to start the discussion on Bill C-11, this borrowing Bill, in which the Government proposes to borrow $25.6 billion. This is not a slap against the people who appeared. They were very senior and well-informed Public Servants who appeared before the committee. Surely, as I brought out at the meeting, on a Bill of this size there should be a Minister before the committee to whom to put the political questions. We know that we cannot put political questions to senior civil servants and expect them to reply. That is the accepted rule around this place.

The Minister finally appeared part way through the meeting and answered some political questions. However, for all the information we got out of him he might as well have stayed in his office. The Minister responsible for privatization denied the fact that even though the Government was borrowing money that at the same time it was actually transferring the liabilities of the national debt, the liabilities of running the Government, to the provinces. This means less money in transfer payments to the provinces. It passed the buck to the provincial level. What can the province do then? It has less money so it has to pass the buck on to the municipalities which come under its jurisdiction. Then the municipalities have the dirty work of cutting their programs when they live with their neighbours every day right down on home base in their own individual communities. It is either that or cutting down on programs at that level all together.

Another matter that was totally swept aside and not even discussed was the fact that in the recent Budget, $8 billion of the increase in taxes is coming from average individual Canadians while $1 billion of the increase is coming from corporate Canada. Yet the Government calls this fair taxation. It calls it a fair deal. That is the idea of fairness of this Government.

With respect to the complaints about VIA Rail the Government keeps saying: "There are parts of the country which cannot get along without transportation services and we are aware of that". The way the Government has been treating rural Canada and the regions of this country indicate that it does not understand anything about it. The Government's main interest is in the bottom line. Its aim is to cut the bottom line, forget about rural Canada and bring everybody into the cities. What will the Government do when it brings all these people into the cities? The Minister responsible for privatization said very clearly at the legislative committee that the federal Government has no right to be interfering in infrastructure services such as water and sewers for municipalities. He said that that is a provincial responsibility.

If we look at the United States today we see that the Americans have been living off their capital instead of their income. What has been the result? What has been the result of not looking after their cities? The result has been that major cities such as Detroit, Chicago, New York and so on have tremendous problems in terms of water and sewage services—all types of services for their municipalities. Their cities will cost multibillion dollars to repair because they have been let go. The states cannot afford it. Municipal Governments cannot afford it any more. National Governments are the ones which can tax almost anything to get these jobs done, pay grants and part of its share to the municipalities.

When we look at this Government today we see that, indeed, it has as a federal Government taxed nearly everything in Canada. That is probably the only role in which it has been doing well. It will continue to tax nearly everything in the country—every thing and everybody. Yet the Government says: "We are not going to touch the municipal services. They are not our responsibility". They are services that affect every Canadian in everyday life. They touch every Canadian's life. It is our responsibility as well as the provinces, the many municipalities and the people in the back streets, the concessions, roads and the main streets of Canada to ensure that our facilities are kept clean and up to date.

How can we talk in the House about environment being such a fantastically important issue today and do our job with the environment if we are going to forget the most important thing of all? I refer to the first-class health conditions of every Canadian citizen. Of course, if there is not good water and sewage systems, then there is not good community health conditions. There is no way that we should be trying to sneak away from that.

There are other matters which I wish to mention. One is deregulation. I spoke several times on the deregulation Bill in this House when it was presented by the Government. The Government is now in trouble with it. It brought in deregulation at a time when the United States was getting out of it. I was very interested in going home on the weekend one week ago. I picked up the local Pembroke Observer and saw an editorial which rather warmed my heart. It is dated June 10 and the headline reads: "Air Deregulation Disaster, O'Brien Says". The article states:

> Deregulation of the airline industry has had a major negative impact on small carriers, says Del O'Brien.
> The President of Pem-Air, a local airline, he was a member of a group that spoke strongly against deregulation when the federal Government announced it would bring in the necessary legislation.
>
> In a speech to the Pembroke Kiwanis Club this week Mr. O'Brien said deregulation has led to a monopoly position for two major carriers and to poorer service for Canadians.
> Prior to deregulation major airlines handled about 76 per cent of the traffic, now two carriers control 96 per cent.

We told the Government that that is what would happen under that deregulation Bill on transportation.

Who is Del O'Brien who spoke to the Kiwanis Club in Pembroke on the deregulation of the air industry? Del O'Brien is the Conservative candidate who ran against me in 1968. At that time he was president of the Young Progressive Conservatives in Canada. He ran against me in 1974. He came to Ottawa and advised the Government what it should be doing, that it should not be going into deregulation. The Government ignored his representations as a good Conservative candidate. He was a good Conservative candidate to run against. The Government is not even listening to its own people. It goes ahead in its bull-headed way and brings something in anyway. We can see where the private, small entrepreneur trying to run an airline in the country is really behind the eight ball.

> The result of this monopoly is that all regular fairs are almost exactly the same, there is only one reservation system, controlled by the big boys, Air Canada and PWA Corp. which owns Canadian Airlines International and Wardair, and, warned Mr. O'Brien, we should all be concerned about the safety of air flight under deregulation.

There are a wide variety of concerns under deregulation and one of them is air service in the north. While the big carriers are choking off competition, small airlines, many of which provide important rescue flights, are being either put out of business or moving to Toronto where the action is.

As a result air service to smaller centres in northern Ontario, and other provinces, is being reduced or even cancelled.

So much for deregulation. That is a very strong message from one of the Government's own supporters and candidates.

• (1600)

In closing, I would be remiss if I did not put this caveat in my speech, as I always do. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp), in a letter to employees of Atomic Energy Canada Limited, said:

—let me state clearly that the federal government fully supports the Canadian nuclear program.

On page 1 he said:

The sources for continuing the necessary level of research and development funding are uncertain.

If AECL does not bring in a report to show how it will make money, the Government will not loan it any. At the same time, the Government is selling off its assets and good work in the form of two Crown corporations under Bill C–13, which I will speak against.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, one of the most chilling aspects of the Government's Budget and this borrowing Bill is that it has put itself in a position where it must borrow. While it is making the largest tax grab we have seen in this country, it will still have a $30 billion deficit. Furthermore, it is eliminating many of the services we have come to expect in Canada.

During the last three years, over 1,000 foreign and domestic companies changed hands in Canada. Foreign ownership and control in Canada is the greatest of any industrialized country in the world. We also have the highest concentration of corporate power, with approximately 1 per cent of the top enterprises in Canada controlling almost 80 per cent of the shares of the 300 largest companies.

In light of this huge merger mania that seems to be happening, if the Hon. Member's Party was in Government would it implement a policy to tax the merger of corporations or any type of acquisition that would not benefit Canada or provide jobs for Canadians?

Mr. Hopkins: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. He is a very valued Member of our Public Accounts Committee and is very interested in these matters. I agree with his statement about the tax grab by the Government. I said in my speech that $8 billion of the tax increases in the recent Budget have come from individual Canadians while only $1 billion in tax increases come from corporations in this country.

I am reminded of the time when the Hon. Sinclair Stevens stood up in the House to say that he was supporting the Mitel workers. He asked why we were criticizing him when he was supporting the Mitel workers.

Of course, we know how the Government supported the Mitel workers. It sold the company to a British firm, an example of what the Hon. Member talked about, and one of the first things it did was to go into my riding in Renfrew and close down the $30 million Mitel plant and lay off over 500 workers. That is an example of corporate conglomerates destroying small town Canada.

The Hon. Member mentioned the amalgamation of firms in Canada. Those companies know they have a free hand to do so under the Government because the Government encourages big business. It does not matter how large a corporation would like to get, it is encouraged to grow larger no matter what stands in its way. That is the Tory philosophy.

This was the trend in the United States during the late 1800s, which continued until Franklin Roosevelt put restrictions on major corporations. He was accused of being a Communist for doing so, but the fact is that governments must act in the best interests of the people. When big corporations and finances begin tramping over individuals, if the Government has any heart it will prevent that from happening. One way to control such corporations is with tax leverage.

If one does not have the heart to tax big corporations and would rather slap a major part of the tax on the rank and file Canadian, one would have to be in the present Government because that is what it is doing.

In order to have a fair tax system, it is necessary to tax the corporations. Only then will there be some equity in society.

The Government has the authority to impose regulations when big corporations get out of control, and certainly, with federal-provincial co-operation, that must be done in the best interests of the country when it is required.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-11 is a bill which, in short, allows the Government to borrow up to $24.8 billion. It is worrisome, Mr. Speaker, to authorize the Government to borrow such amounts when we see how the Conservative Government is managing now.

Mr. Speaker, in recent months, I have noted some problem areas that cause Canadians concern—great concern. Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to relate some of these problems that are now surfacing and that cause us real concern.

I am pleased to note that the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Loiselle) is here. I hope that he will be able to make some recommendations to his Government.

Mr. Speaker, just a few weeks ago, the Government was looking for about $500,000 to complete the fountains at the Canadian Museum of Civilization in my riding of Hull—Aylmer.

We must remember, Mr. Speaker, that this contract was awarded by the Government of Canada in late 1983 or early 1984. The Canadian Museum of Civilization was to cost approximately $90 million, according to estimates at the time. From the figures and estimates that we have today, Mr. Speaker, we learn that the Museum of Civilization will cost nearly $300 million, which is more that three times the estimates the Government agreed to in 1983.

What is worse, Mr. Speaker, is that after building this magnificent structure that was to open at the end of June, they had fountains installed at a cost of $5 million. Only a few days ago, Mr. Speaker, we heard that unfortunately, the fountains facing Laurier Street will not be operational when the Canadian Museum of Civilization is opened, because apparently, the Government has no money left to finish its museum project and is now asking, not the City of Hull but private companies to pay the cost of finishing the fountains.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is absurd that in order to finish a museum of this stature, the Government uses money from private companies without first calling for tenders.

I think there are some very serious questions that should be asked, and I think this warrants some serious discussion. I hope that my fellow Members, especially Members opposite from Québec, will pay special attention to an item that appeared in the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in April which concerns among other things the Transport Canada building. The issue has been brought up a number of times, Mr. Speaker, and I think we have given it a great deal of thought. Just a few weeks ago, a parliamentary committee asked the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Mazankowski) about this question.

Once again, I would like to draw the attention of the Government to its spending on Public Works. The Government claimed capital costs totalling $200 million on page 26 of the Budget of the Minister of Finance, and I have to tell the Government that is just not true. There is no capital cost involved in construction or eventual construction for Transport Canada, for which the federal Government had called tenders and had received them in December 1988. We know, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Public Works told us last week, that the lowest tender was $234 per square metre. All it takes is a pencil to figure it out, but if you find a saving in the construction cost for the Transport Canada building, I apologize to the House.

However, the Minister of Public Works informed us that his Government has decided to stay at Place de Ville in the Campeau building, at a cost of $315 per square metre, as of 1992, for a period of seven years, while the lowest tender was $234 per square metre, which is $81 per square metre less, or $7 million less per year. And when we consider that to stay in Place de Ville, the Government must be prepared to pay the full cost of removing asbestos panels, more than $50 million, plus the cost of repairing the heating system and other costs that may exceed $60 million. When that kind of licence is given, Mr. Speaker, I think the Official Opposition has reason to be concerned and, in fact, has a duty to be concerned on behalf of the Canadian people, when it sees this kind of poor management.

Mr. Speaker, these are just a few of the points I wanted to raise today, when we are being asked to approve a bill that would allow the Government to borrow $24.8 billion. If that is how the Government spends taxpayers' money, I think we are entitled to ask some serious questions, and I think the Official Opposition will certainly vote against this Bill.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on with some of the other problems that we are having with the investment of funds in public works and also in transportation. In the Outaouais, there is Highway 50 from Masson to Lachute. The National Capital Commission, through the Department of Public Works, had agreed to pay a major part of the cost of the road network in the Outaouais within it's jurisdiction. On the other hand, the previous federal government, as part of regional development spending, had agreed to pay part of the cost of the highway network, more specifically, of Highway 50 from Masson to Lachute and on to Mirabel via Highway 13, Mr. Speaker, and as I said, this was for the purposes of regional and also, of course, economic development.

Here again, the Government of Québec has committed itself several times, and recently, the Minister of Transport, Marc-Yvan Côté, said that the Government of Québec would agree to pay for Highway 50 from Masson to Lachute provided the federal Government contributed substantial financial assistance. I have referred to it several times in this House, Mr. Speaker. I made several requests to the Minister of Transport for him to include it in the next federal-provincial economic development agreement. I trust that the Minister of Transport of Canada and the Minister of Transport of Québec will be able to agree to include this important highway on the Québec side of the Ottawa River joining the Outaouais to downtown Montreal. So I think that it is a very important consideration, and again, when I see such huge amounts as $24.8 billion, I would hope that the Minister of Finance could find a few cents, a few hundred thousand dollars, if not a few million, to complete the work that they have already began in past years on the Québec side of the Ottawa River.

Mr. Speaker, we were still talking about it at noon today, and I am rather concerned that, as the Minister of Transport was telling us again today, he was still waiting for a report from VIA Rail before he would know exactly what would happen to VIA Rail. I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that today we had the mayors of large Canadian cities, including Québec City, Windsor and some in Ontario. And it worries me when the Minister of Transport tells us that we are waiting for the report before the Government can deal with the issue and give the necessary authorizations or leave it to a fate that may be even worse than expected. I think that it is increasingly important to take account of a system that may be very expensive today when the investments that must be made in it are considered but that I think is still a system that should in future cost us less probably and be used more than it is today. It comes down to promoting it and knowing what you want to do with it! I think that our VIA Rail system at present is deficient and outdated and major investments will be needed if we want to improve it.

• (1620)

Mr. Speaker, I conclude with that and say to you that yes, I am certainly concerned about the way the present Government spends Canadians' money. I am even more surprised, Mr. Speaker, when we are told every day, and again today, in advertising paid for by the Government that Canadians have to tighten their belts because the deficit is around $30 billion and the debt is approaching $400 billion.

But when we see how the Government manages Canadians' money, we can be even more concerned about the management we are getting now.

I would hope, since we are at the beginning of a term—it is just a few months old—that the promises made to us, made to Canadians during the election campaign, will not all be set aside and that we won't be victims of such a striking example of Alzheimer's disease; that this Government won't forget everything that it promised now that the elections are over and that we won't see such drastic cuts in such important things as social services and unemployment insurance.

[English]

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I am very honoured to rise to speak in this particular debate. We have had five years of unprecedented increases in tax revenues. This should have resulted in balanced budgets. However, government debt has risen to more than 90 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product. Canadians believed that the Government's budget would naturally cut government spending, but what we have seen in this Budget is the same old thing. In order to maintain prosperity and influence for themselves and their friends they have chosen to continue borrowing beyond their capacity and are making ordinary Canadians pay the bill.

Economists are saying that the Budget brings the worst of both worlds, that Government spending cuts are so weak that the deficit will actually be worse this year and there will only be a marginal reduction next year. Trying to reduce the deficit by sharply increasing taxes will increase inflation and slow growth. This will leave little room to reduce interest rates. Excuse the cliché, Mr. Speaker, because I mean it in the literal sense, but who in the world is going to have confidence in Canada now, in our dollar, in our fiscal policy, in our commitments?

Economists also say that the Government's forecast for 3 per cent growth is optimistic, that it will not be met this year and next year it will drop to 1.7 per cent. For every percentage that growth goes down, unemployment goes up, so next year is the big story and what will the Canadian public deduce when unemployment goes up over 8 per cent and interest rates go up and the deficit target cannot be met? What a loss of confidence and trust in a government responsible for the social and financial welfare of all Canadians, not only a select few.

Lack of confidence in the Canadian dollar is one thing, but it is the massive cut in foreign aid that sends the wrong message to the world that Canada does not care. Those of us on this side of the House do care and we say that if the Government wants to cut spending it should have tightened its own purse strings and not toughened its assistance to the world's hungry citizens. There was no conscience present when $360 million was cut from foreign aid. Foreign aid should have gone up 6 per cent with inflation, not cut.

Only half of the 28 government departments are even cutting staff, the rest are all hiring. The reduction of staff is half of 1 per cent. I bet the Public Service is laughing as a lot of people consider this spending to be a joke. It is really hypocritical that only four of the 28 government departments are actually planning to spend less this year than last. The Finance Minister's own Department has manoeuvred a whopping 20 per cent increase for this year.

While the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is cutting aid to farmers in agriculture, the Department will enjoy a 21 per cent increase. So much for a government that was allegedly worrying about big bureaucracy.

So what is this Budget all about? Let's talk about universality. The Government has eroded social programs. It has cashed in its portion of unemployment insurance for $2.9 billion. This affects all Canadians. This Budget destroys the principle of universality. The threshold of $50,000 for taxing back Old Age Security might be the magic number for today, but what about tomorrow when inflation eats away and the threshold becomes $40,000 and middle-income families will once again be paying the tab for the Tory grab.

The other universal income support program which has been abandoned is the family allowance. By 1991, with indexing included, a total of $800 million will be removed from the family allowance program. I would like to know why the Government would give a cheque to a Canadian if there is no benefit. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) says he has not denied access, and he is right, but he has denied benefit by his claw-back scheme and that is what has been ruined by his tactics. There is no more equal benefit and equal access for all Canadians. These measures are the thin edge of the wedge. Today it is the semi-rich who are affected but tomorrow it could be everyone.

The Tories have cropped regional development assistance and in the Northwest Territories they have not even considered an agency or a program to develop the northern economy. We are not part of the western diversification or any other agency. For three years northerners have been waiting for the Government to take some action, or at least to give some consideration to economic development in the north. More and more the Government is dividing this country. The gap is growing between the have and the have-not regions. The tax measures which hit those on the poverty line hardest put big business people ahead of Canada's most valuable resource.

I am sure you are aware, Mr. Speaker, of the oil and gas development that has been taking place in the Mackenzie Valley and Delta and offshore in the Beaufort Sea since the first quarter of the century. The Canadian Arctic has potential to make Canada energy self-sufficient. Some of the most technically advanced icebreakers and drilling units in the world are working in the Beaufort Sea operated by Canadians and Canadian companies. The Canadian north is obviously contributing to technical and resource development. When will the Government address a foreign policy which includes the Arctic's contribution to the world and not what our allies can do for Canadians in the North.

Northerners are insulted by the Government's ignorance and its stance that since it cannot afford nuclear submarines our allies will have to maintain Canada's sovereignty in the Arctic. Northerners feel that establishing a political, social and economic presence achieved by northern self-alliance and full northern participation in making economic and political decisions is as important as this military presence. A fraction of the money to be spent on assuring sovereignty through military means would help build the transportation network needed for our economic well-being. As well as sovereignty, Canada would gain a strong and viable northern territory and access to the land's rich resources. This Canadian investment in the future, added to advances in our status as a partner in Canada, would give northerners a chance to take part in and benefit fully from our country's economic and political life.

I want to elaborate on how this Budget is going to affect northerners residing in the Western Arctic. The federal Budget has failed to come close to solving our debt problems but Canadians, especially northerners, will be paying the price for the slapshot attempt of the Minister of Finance.

• (1630)

The North is rich in natural resources but the economy remains poorly integrated. Diversification has been confined to the development of service businesses which are primarily dependent on government. Unemployment rates reach 50 per cent or more in many isolated and predominantly native western Arctic communities.

I want to indicate to the House that when the Government presented the new Labour Force Development Strategy, that documentation did not even provide the unemployment statistics for the Northwest Territories. It was left completely blank. I requested that the Department rectify this error and at least provide information on the unemployed. However, 20 days later, and maybe 30 by now, I still have not received anything from that ministry.

It is exactly this type of typical Tory blunder which makes me extremely concerned about what the Government's agenda is for Canada's North. Does it even care that it has completely overlooked the fact that in communities which are part of over one-third of Canada's total area, that there are unemployment rates which are as high as 50 per cent, 60 per cent, 70 per cent, 80 per cent and 90 per cent. How will the new unemployment insurance plan help these people?

Since the Government obviously overlooked the part of Canada north of the 60th parallel when the Budget was being prepared, let me tell the Members opposite what the North is about and how this Budget is going to have crippling effects on people who bear the burden of this country's highest cost of living. I am sure that the Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Anawak) will be agreeable if I talk about the whole of the Northwest Territories for a moment.

The Northwest Territories covers an area of 3.3 million square kilometres. It constitutes roughly one-third of Canada's land mass. The territory is located above the 60th parallel, a location which poses some severe economic constraints, including remoteness from prime North American markets, long winters and higher utility, transportation, communication and other costs. Added to these are small, scattered populations, as well as low education levels for a large part of the population.

Over-all, the economy is poorly integrated. Linkages among industries are weak. Diversification has been largely limited to the development of service businesses which depend on government, primarily, as well as large industry. Apart from minerals and hydrocarbons, very little is exported from the NWT. Mineral concentrates and ores are shipped out for further processing. Manufacturing is confined, for the most part, to cottage industries producing artistic goods for small local markets and limited export.

The Government's Budget is going to be disproportionately tougher on northerners than most residents in the provinces. No consideration was given to northern Canadians—which is of no surprise from this Government—who already pay the highest cost for all goods and services in the whole country.

The Northwest Territories' economy is best viewed as two quite distinct economies. Most of the non-native population live in major centres whose economies are dominated by government or resource extraction activities. Average incomes are typically very high. Unemployment is very low. Those northerners will be adversely affected by the additional personal income tax and tax on old age pensions and family allowances, even though their cost of living is about 40 per cent higher than families of the same income living in Edmonton, for instance.

Conversely, most of the 30,500 people of Inuit, Dene or Métis ancestry, almost 60 per cent of the total population, live in small, widely scattered villages where Government transfer payments and traditional harvesting activities dominate a fragile economic base and where there are few prospects for growth. Average incomes are generally low, unemployment high and social assistance a fact of everyday life.

Unemployment rates reach 50 per cent or more in some of these communities and can no longer be readily dismissed as a native preference for traditional non-wage pursuits. Hunting, fishing and trapping as a full-time occupation, even when possible, is no longer preferred by most native young people who are fast comprising the majority of the population, if only because they cannot earn sufficient income to purchase the material goods the modern economy provides. The new unemployment insurance scheme will negatively affect most of the residents of these native communities. Hunters and trappers will be hit by higher fuel costs.

Before this Budget, the western Arctic economy as a whole appeared to be emerging from a cooling off period after the boom of the early 1980s. This modest growth will quickly come to an abrupt halt as this Government's claw-back initiatives are felt.

The new telecommunication tax affects the western Arctic residents proportionately more than residents of the rest of Canada. Communication and transportation are the two most critical services northerners depend on. Both programs are going to be taxed beyond northerners limits to meet the multitude of increases this Budget demands.

The massive cut to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is sure to mean cuts in northern programming. People in the North depend on radio for vital information for their safety and in many cases for their survival. Whether people are on the land, in their camps, on the trap line or driving on a remote highway, they have a radio because they need to know the weather conditions, the thickness of the ice, the current of a river, the state of the road and the temperature. Communication is not a luxury for northerners. It is an essential service, a necessity for survival. When many of the communities depend on winter roads which depend on the thickness of the ice, it is a matter of safety.

The Secretary of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development) (Ms. Campbell) did not stop with native communication. There have been cuts and reductions. There has not been any growth in the budgets that have been granted to the native communications for radio services to many of the native communities.

As far as transportation is concerned, it is the other crucial service to northerners. I have already said the land mass is about three and one-half million square kilometres.

This Budget's increase on airport taxes, aviation gasoline and fuel excise tax is going to cost northerners more than any other Canadians. Those of us who have lived in the western Arctic and who have strived to develop our resources, and realize its full potential, it is the development of the transportation systems which will open the North and give many communities a chance for fuller participation in the territorial economy.

The lack of adequate roads, airports, docks and harbours handicaps our economic growth. A better transportation system will create opportunities for mining, tourism, fishing, trade and travel between communities. Building, operating and maintaining new transportation routes and facilities will create jobs for years to come.

However, this Budget not only increases transportation for businesses and consumer costs but literally puts on the shelf future investment in transportation infrastructure. The expansion of the North's economy will be additionally crippled by the monstrous burdens which have been placed on small businesses.

Small business is the core to development. Small business is now strapped with having to pay more taxes, higher premiums for unemployment insurance, increased construction, transportation, utility, energy and inflation costs, as well as being at risk from high interest rates. This is all at a time when consumers are going to have less money to spend.

Other taxes will hit hard the northerners' pocket books: The federal sales tax increases to 13.5 per cent. We have tax increases on construction materials, telephone calls, cablevision, cigarettes, alcohol and on surtaxes for income.

Hunters and trappers in the North are hurt by the Government's elimination of the rebate on gasoline and the increase in the gasoline tax. As well, the North's taxpayers will benefit less from the enhanced sales tax credit, the only real tax reduction in the Budget.

These measures will have a disproportionate affect on the Northwest Territories residents. Since incomes are higher in the North to compensate for higher prices, there is a larger proportion of high income earners among the North's taxpayers.

We hear a lot from this Government about regional development and the role that the Atlantic Opportunities Agency, the Western Diversification Program and other agencies play in the regional economies. However, again, the North has been excluded. We do not belong to any agency or any plan which will directly assist with small business and economic development.

This Government has cut regional development assistance, and I cannot tell residents of the western Arctic whether they are affected or not.

Those agencies have been operating since 1987 and the North still has not been advised as to where we fit in. We are not asking for hand-outs, but we thought it was the Government's role to provide at least a foundation for the growth of individuals and businesses and to foster a climate which would encourage that growth. The climate which this Government is creating in the North is a climate of gloom. If you think this Budget restricts the development of the North's economic resources, that is a mistake, because it also inhibits the development of its most valuable resource, its people.

• (1640)

Mr. Comuzzi: My question is for my friend and colleague from Western Arctic. Before posing a question, let me just mention to my colleague how important it is that she forms part of our group. Since we have been acquainted in this House, I as one Canadian have had the opportunity and privilege to learn through our friend from the Western Arctic about the lifestyle, tribulations and the ways of life of the people who live in the Western Arctic.

Because of my friend's in depth knowledge of the people whom she represents, she has come to this House and to our group, in particular, and told us on a regular basis about the areas of concern to the people in the Arctic and their hopes. This is within the framework of Canadian unity and democracy and within our love for the whole of Canada she has brought to us a perspective that I and many of my colleagues have not had the opportunity to appreciate or to fathom.

I am particularly interested in two areas. One is the area of universality and how it affects our social programs, programs for seniors, health care and the concept of these programs on all Canadians and on the people in Western Arctic.

Second is that of natural resources which the Western Arctic has in abundance and which only need to be developed.

I recall hearing a presentation from the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Ms. Blondin) about our natural gas resources in that area. Perhaps she can tell us what she foresees as the future development for them and how they can be used for the rest of Canada and export.

Ms. Blondin: Mr. Speaker, with regard to universality, the Western Arctic is an area of high unemployment and high seasonal employment. Eligibility for the unemployment insurance program is an absolute necessity in that it basically accommodates the northern peoples. Because of the high unemployment rate many people could not afford to pay for their own medicare. Then there are social assistance programs. In many communities, because of the growing seasons and extraordinarily high cost of living, the northern peoples cannot afford to lose any of the social network programs.

As for the resource development area, the Northwest Territories has gone through a series of boom and bust development. One was with the exploration in the Beaufort Sea in the 1970s and 1980s. An application has been put forward to the National Energy Board for a gas export permit. Many considerations have to be given to this. One is to weigh the economic benefit and the impact on the environment. Also, the territorial government has grown and matured. A Northern Accord has been devised enabling the territorial government to share in the management and revenues of any major development project.

The problem with major development programs besides the socio-economic impact is the fact that we northerners have a very high rate of illiteracy and we do not have the trained personnel or the training necessary to work in the best paid positions in a resource development megaproject.

We are working in a number of areas such as training. Another is the completion of the Northern Accord. The North is presently going through a situation where the Dene and Métis have an agreement in principle, are looking at selecting lands perhaps right in the corridor where the gas pipeline is to be built. So, there are a number of areas of consideration before an absolute resource development strategy is proposed and accepted by all northerners.

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be short. I deeply appreciate the remarks made by my colleague from Western Arctic. I have often listened to her since my arrival in the House and she always makes good sense.

I have had the pleasure in the past of visiting the Northwest Territories. When I go there, I am always struck by the beauty of the area and the vitality and friendliness of the people of that area. I would like to go back again. In fact, there is a possibility I may go this summer.

I want to make reference to a couple of points my colleague made in her remarks. One had to do with the high rate of unemployment. In some areas she mentioned that it runs from 60 per cent to 70 per cent to 80 per cent and to 90 per cent. I think those of us who live in the south and in the relatively affluent areas of the south find it difficult to relate to high unemployment figures of that kind unless you are familiar with some of the unemployment rates on Indian reserves here in the south.

The Hon. Member also mentioned the problems at the CBC, the cut-backs and what they might do to service in the North. I also want to point out that when I visited the North, I noticed the high cost of living. A quart of milk may cost $5, which is extraordinary. When you consider unemployment and the high cost of living on one side and on the other side the Government pulling out of the market-place and cutting back on services, what is the future for the North under this Government?

Ms. Blondin: Mr. Speaker, the high unemployment in the North results from a high incidence of illiteracy and untrained and uneducated people. It also stems from the fact that there is not an industrial strategy for the North whereby jobs are provided by having businesses in small communities. There is not that sort of strategy in the North and that is being dealt with by the Government of the Northwest Territories. The mobility factor comes into play when young people cannot finish their education and work in their communities because there are not the kinds of jobs for which they are trained.

The other factor that has been mentioned is the cuts in CBC programming. Throughout the history of the North, before it had a telephone system, there was a reliance in the remote communities on the CBC for information. An historical dependence has developed on CBC for communications and news which has to reach the communities.

• (1650)

This Budget will be very tough on the people of the North. It will be very difficult having a tax on everything with the already high cost of living in the North. With the high cost of construction material, rents will skyrocket. The taxes will go on things that already cost a great deal, including groceries. Generally, the people of the North have very large families and the Budget will have a direct impact on not just the communities and businesses but on the northern families as well.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the new proposed McKenzie Valley pipeline, the Hon. Member will be aware that Nellie Cournoyer who, 15 years ago, opposed the construction of such a pipeline before the Berger inquiry, is now in favour of it. Maude Barlow of the Council of Canadians has said that she is against it. In one or two sentences, can the Hon. Member tell me what her position is? Is she for or against the new proposal?

Ms. Blondin: Mr. Speaker, my position on this is somewhat burdened by a number of considerations, including considerations about the completion of the Northern Accord and the completion of Dene–Métis claims. Mr. Justice Thomas Berger in fact stated on April 18 or thereabouts at a True North Strong and Free Conference that the northerners have to decide for themselves whether they want this project or not. Perhaps 10 years ago, the people of the North needed someone like Mr. Justice Thomas Berger, but I think it is up to northerners to decide now.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of gratitude to the Senate that we are having this debate. The Senate, in its determined fight in defence of parliamentary traditions and the parliamentary institution, last month reminded the Government of its obligation to come to Parliament when it needs to borrow funds. The Senate made a well–presented argument, an argument which has registered with the Government in more than one respect.

The Government is coming to the House seeking the authority to borrow with dirty hands, and perhaps one might even say with hands which are dripping with mud, particularly in environmental terms. The Government has contradicted itself on the environment and on sustainable development in so many ways that it is not fun any more.

Let us begin this brief analysis with the Speech from the Throne. One of the Government's main themes hinges on sustainable development which will be adopted as a policy thrust in the life of this session. A few weeks after the debate on the Speech from the Throne, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) came into the House with a Budget and stated that we will move ahead with important economic initiatives, including action to ensure that economic development occurs in an environmentally sound way. These are the key words of the Minister of Finance who had evidently read the Speech from the Throne and was determined to implement the spirit of the Speech from the Throne.

What has the Minister done since then? He promptly announced the closing of 12 conservation and renewable energy regional offices. As if that were not enough, he phased out the National Conservation and Alternative Energy Initiative program. As if that were not enough, he cut transfer payments to the provinces by some $340 million, possibly endangering reforestation and other joint environmental ventures.

As of today, up to six provinces are waiting for the renewal of their forestry agreements with Ottawa. Among them are Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia. As if that were not enough, having cut transfer payments to the provinces by over $300 million, the Minister cut $396 million from overseas development assistance, something which may also affect environmental programs abroad.

These measures scream out to heaven in their contrast with the proclaimed commitment of the Government to environmentally sustainable development, both in the Speech from the Throne and in the introductory speech made by the Minister of Finance in conjunction with the presentation of the Budget.

As if that were not enough, the Minister presented a document which ignored any form of tax measures, removal of tax impediments or introduction of tax incentives that would facilitate the process of embarking on this environmentally sustainable development proclaimed by the Government in the Speech from the Throne, in the Minister's introductory remarks and last year at the United Nations by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). When we looked through the Budget, we did not find any tax measures to improve accelerated capital depreciation allowances for pollution control equipment and machinery. We looked for tax incentives for industry to recycle. We looked for tax exemptions for energy efficiency. We looked for tax exemptions for conservation products and the like. We found none of them.

Having gone through that exercise, we said to ourselves that maybe the regime for cutting the deficit is so massive that it has been applied across the board in a savage manner affecting everyone and every sector and interest. We looked for an announcement that would indicate the Government's determination to find the $5 billion tied up with energy megaprojects. Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that we could find any reference to energy megaprojects in the Budget? We could not find one word about it. There are, as Hon. Members know, $5 billion tied up in the Oslo and Lloydminister projects as well as others. The application of the Budget in a selective manner which ignores the basic commitment to sustainable development is mind-boggling.

We all know that we are running out of time in relation to the question of climate warming. The scientific community is clearly on record indicating to us that we have to change trends and slow down the process of climate warming. The long-term cost of this trend is such that it requires action. Yet, having embraced the buzz-words, the Government seems unable to come to grips with the substance. The substance means abandoning the energy megaprojects because they will increase our dependence on fossil fuels in the next decades rather than decrease it.

• (1700)

It is inevitable that we have to concentrate on energy because of the intimate relationship between the environment, sustainable development and energy policies. It is quite interesting and revealing to read what the Solar Energy Society of Canada wrote in early May by noting the following:

> Since the September cutbacks EMR officials have also been telling renewable energy firms seeking R & D funding to apply to the Unsolicited Proposals Program.

Do you know what happened to the Unsolicited Proposals Program, Mr. Speaker? It has been cancelled. It was the avenue for a number of Canadian firms, entrepreneurs and researchers to develop certain technologies in the field of renewable sources of energy. It has gone. So much for the commitment of the Government to sustainable development in environmental terms.

The Solar Energy Society asks:

> Is the government deliberately trying to destroy the conservation and renewable energy industry? Why were energy "boondoggle" megaprojects, such as Hibernia, not cut?

That was not stated by the Official Opposition. That is a society in Winnipeg. It goes on to state:

> Mr. Wilson refers to our children and future generations nine times in his budget speech.

What a record. We congratulate him. The letter further states:

> He also says that Canadians want a Canada able to meet priorities such as—the protection of the environment.

No wonder. The letter further states:

> Until the Government stops paying lip service to conservation and renewable energy, environmental degradation will continue.

The letter concludes by stating:

> Please raise our concerns in the House of Commons.

That is what we are doing today.

At the beginning of my speech I referred to the cuts of some $396 million to overseas development assistance. It is worth while to put on the record what Oxfam Canada wrote about it, in its own words, so they are not being interpreted as the fiction, the imagination, or interpretation on the part of the Opposition. This letter dated May 5 states:

> The recently announced Budget provokes considerable concern in our organization. The sharp changing funding for Canadian foreign aid means added hardship for the world's poor, and significant abandonment of Canada's promise and obligations with partners overseas.
> The overall approach of the Budget brings home to Canada and Canadians the sorts of "structural adjustment" policies which currently lead to mass suffering in many of the nations where our aid dollars are used.

This situation is not unknown to the Government of Canada or to parliamentarians. We note the recent declaration of parliamentarians from the G-10 countries, the ones who met in Amsterdam at the end of March, Mr. Speaker, drew attention to the urgent need for that reduction, and new concessional financing stating that while international and financial crises are currently avoided, the fundamental flaws are that the costs have been borne by the debtors causing general deterioration or stagnation and growing impoverishment for large segments of the population.

In this context, the deep cuts to official development assistance are significant in magnitude, disproportionate in share and objectionable in effect. Foreign aid is the only one of seven major areas of government spending which will actually have less money in 1989-90 than the last fiscal year.

I ask you to reflect on those comments, Mr. Speaker. A closer look at the Budget figures reveals that the over-all loss is compounded by a redistribution of funds away from direct help. Listen to this, Mr. Speaker, this is a beautiful one. The biggest increase in funds is to go to administration which will increase more than $100 million. Much of this increase is disguised by the transfer of funds to the budget of External Affairs to pay for the decentralization of CIDA staff. The same argument applies for other Budget increase items including public outreach and industrial co-operation.

The question asked at this point is, why should public relations, as distinct from ongoing development education, be increased while support for overseas projects is reduced? It is a good question. Why should industrial corporations whose benefit is arguably more oriented to Canadian business and middle-income countries be increased when people-to-people community-level aid is held static or reduced? This is a very distressing analysis by Oxfam Canada which is recommended reading for every parliamentarian.

I mentioned already what will happen to the national conservation and alternative energy initiative and conservation and renewable energy offices. They will be reduced by $8 million in 1989-90. The program is phased out, as scheduled, by the end of 1990-91. That is it, Mr. Speaker, so much for the commitment of the Progressive Conservative Government to conservation and alternative energy initiative. "Rest In Peace", is what can be written, unfortunately, on that tombstone. It is also interesting to inject in this debate the social consequences, and I will do so briefly. The Canadian Council on Social Development, in a one-page analysis, has one paragraph which merits repeating:

> The federal budget does nothing to alleviate the poverty suffered by more than 2 million Canadian households—
> As a result of this budget, a minimum wage worker making $10,000 per year will pay about $100 per year more in consumption taxes—

That is, Mr. Speaker, federal sales tax and others.

> —$25 per year more in U.I. premiums and $12 per year more for the income surtax—

Then we come to the analysis offered by the North-South Institute which, in a way, complements what Oxfam Canada has written on the subject. Here we find that the cuts in overseas development aid by $1.8 billion over five years are much larger and longer than earlier figures mentioned in the media, that of $800 million over three years. It is over five years and it is $8 billion.

• (1710)

The 1989-90 aid budget, despite only accounting for less than 3 per cent of government spending, is one of the smallest envelopes, which nonetheless bears a major part of the Government's spending cuts. The $360 million aid cut will cover 23 per cent of the Government's spending reductions of $1.5 billion in 1989-90.

You are pointing to me, Mr. Speaker, that my time is running out. Therefore I will conclude.

It seems to me that in coming to Parliament and seeking this borrowing authority the Government has to be consistent with itself. It has to prove to the Canadian public that its long-term plans and policies as expressed in the Speech from the Throne, which is basically a blueprint of the Government's intentions, are being carried out. That is the reason why we looked at the substance of the speech of the Minister of Finance to see how the Government would be tackling the question of implementing the sustainable development which was so highlighted in the Speech from the Throne. That is a legitimate expectation—not raised by us but by the Government. We looked at the way the Government saw itself implementing its policies through such an important instrument called the Budget and what we found was contradictions and denials of the main mandate that the Government has set for itself.

On energy alone there is an enormous vacuum that the Minister of Energy has failed to fill. We do not know at this stage what is the intent of the Minister of Energy in terms of Canada's commitment and role in slowing climate warming. All we know is that existing projects which will increase Canada's momentum in climate warming have been confirmed instead of having been turned around.

Evidently, Mr. Speaker, I have tested your patience to the limit of the time allocated, and I thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I enjoy listening to the Hon. Member. However, I regret that he has run about a minute or so over his allotted time.

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted some time to bring to the attention of the House a few points with respect to Bill C-11, the borrowing authority Bill. When we see the amount of money that is going to be borrowed, $24.8 billion, how can the average Canadian possibly understand what it means, let alone talk about the deficit which is a few hundred billion dollars? None of us will be strapped with it ourselves individually so we do not worry about it.

My colleague from Davenport explained some of the weaknesses of the Budget, be it in the foreign affairs envelope or environment. Needless to say, the record of the Government in the environment has been extremely weak, although it had a conversion like Saul did when he went to Damascus. However, nothing has really happened.

Our whole tax system has to be overhauled. It is such a complex system that no one really wants to tackle it, or else there are too many vested interests protecting the system as it is. Far be it for me to say who is right and who is wrong about the whole tax system. I am not an expert in the tax system. I guess that few people are. However, there are basic principles that were brought out many years ago by the Carter Commission which started in 1967 under the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker. It was a a great initiative on his part that there should be a Royal Commission into the tax system. It took many years before the Carter Commission could write up its conclusions. Unfortunately, the document, as credible as it was, was never published. It was used at Harvard University and in Scandinavian countries as a basis for seeing how a comprehensive and just tax system could be implemented. The document was remarkable. I say in this House that Kenneth Carter is probably one of the unsung heroes of Canada.

The basic principles he outlined would make the tax system fair and equitable for all Canadians. However, some 25 years later, if we look at the tax system and the deficits that are being accumulated, it is obvious to any Canadian that something is drastically wrong. Nonetheless, we go on without a deep reform of the whole tax system.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I said that about 25 years ago, a study was made of the taxation system in Canada, and that we have never really wanted to come to grips with the problem. Hon. Members opposite have heard it all before: The rich don't pay taxes! It may be just an expression, but if we look at the taxation system in Canada, there is a great deal of truth in it. Incredibly so, in fact. When we see the advantages for the financial elite in our country, we have to conclude that the wealthy in this country do not pay their fair share.

I believe, Madam Speaker, as the Carter Commission pointed out 25 years ago, that there is a way to be fair and equitable towards all Canadians. There is an expression that was very apt at the time, but unfortunately, it wasn't taken seriously—

[English]

Mr. Speaker, you probably remember the expression of that time: "A buck is a buck". No matter how it was earned the Government had a right to tax it. However, over the years we have seen loopholes in the law. They are loopholes that are not a mystery and that were dictated by the financial leaders of Canada. The Minister of Finance had to go along with some of their requests. I become impassioned on this issue. There are but a few Members of this House who have gotten up to point a finger to say that the financial elite in this country used the tax system to their benefit to the disregard of the middle class. I read a book which influenced me greatly. It is one by Linda McQuaig. She now works for The Globe and Mail. It is entitled Behind Closed Doors. It was translated into French. I have been told that it is a good translation.

[Translation]

The French title is La part du lion. The book shows how in the past 25 years, Ministers of Finance have been increasingly pressed to hand out tax benefits. To whom? Not to the middle class but to the financial world, which has never paid its fair share. I say the time has come to take another look at the basic principles proposed by Kenneth Carter in the report of his Royal commission of inquiry on the subject.

[English]

For anyone who is interested it is a complicated affair, that is for sure. There is no doubt that if anybody wanted to sit down and look at the tax laws obviously one would have to be a lawyer because it is so involved. However, no one can make me believe that with common sense we cannot get to the basic principles. What Canadian would not agree that the most fundamental principle in a democracy is that it would be fair and equitable? But the fact is that it is not. Is it any surprise that after all these years we have a deficit that is getting out of proportion? When we compare our population of 27 million to the United States with well over 240 million, our deficit on a per capita basis is twice as high. There is no mystery that something in our system is flawed.

• (1720)

It is time that we woke up to this problem. I hope to see the day when the average Canadian, especially the middle class which is the backbone of this country, will ask each and every Member of Parliament what their role is to ensure that the tax system is fair and equitable. There is no other way to make it work than for the majority of people to call upon their individual representatives to sit down and find a way to make the tax system fair and equitable. We are not asking for any more.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this has been a particular concern of mine for years, and after lunching from crisis to crises, in time we will have to take a much better look at what happens in a country with a deficit that is out of control, and realize that our tax system is far from being fair and equitable.

We should take a look at the problems we will be facing in the next few years. In only a few years, after what happened in Saint-Basile-le-Grand, the environment has become an extremely important issue. It has become the most important issue in our daily lives, and rightly so. Maybe this should have happened 20 years ago, but at least it did happen, and we are thinking about it, and we will have to keep on thinking about it. However, it is going to take a lot of political will and public funds to solve the problem in the years to come.

The other problem is municipal infrastructures.

[English]

I want to deal with the question of infrastructure. We are beginning to see that as a result of years of neglect, our roads, bridges and other infrastructure are deteriorating rapidly.

A couple of years ago a professor from Cornell University estimated that the repairs to the infrastructure in the United States, which he considered to be in an alarming state of deterioration, would cost approximately $500 billion just to bring it to a reasonably safe level. A couple of weeks ago we met with the Mayor of Quebec, who is president of the Union des municipalités de Québec. They anticipate that they will not be able to absorb the amounts needed for the maintenance of the municipal infrastructure.

During the last election the Liberal Party of Canada stated that we need massive expenditures in sewage treatment. There is an increasing volume of letters on this matter. I know that in my constituency, mayors are asking me if there is any possibility for some help to the municipalities for their infrastructure.

We know that in the future Canadians will be asking Parliament for this help because it is the Government of Canada that has the most powerful borrowing authority, as illustrated by this Bill in which the Government is asking for $24.8 billion, and perhaps more.

The provinces are having difficulty because of the Government's policies. They must absorb many of the expenditures and as a result of the deficit we will be in a very difficult position to help the provinces, let alone the municipalities that need assistance with their infrastructure.

I recommend Linda McQuaig's book Behind Closed Doors. While it is not gospel, it provides a basis for everyone to at least recognize that it is time for us to consider total reform. We were given a tremendous example 25 years ago and those principles still hold true today. Let us look at that again and perhaps in the years to come we will see this reform as part of the solution, along with the constraint in spending that we will have to impose upon ourselves. Perhaps we will have a just and equitable tax system for all Canadians that we can say we developed through a tremendous amount of political will and in spite of pressures against reform.

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague talked about taxation and the need for reform. I think we all realize that there is great need for reform.

He mentioned Kenneth Carter as being the unsung hero in this country. I would like him to expand on what he meant by that.

Mr. Assad: Mr. Speaker, the Kenneth Carter Commission was established by John Diefenbaker in 1963. It was a Royal Commission into the tax system to see if there could not be a more comprehensive system.

While the process was very complicated, he could see how it could be simplified. The purpose was to develop a fair and equitable tax system.

Mr. Carter felt that a salary, investments, all forms of revenue would be taxable.

Mr. Harvard: A buck is a buck.

Mr. Assad: A buck is a buck, as I said to the Speaker. The basic principles he came up with 25 years ago still exist today.

I repeat that he was an unsung hero in this country. He was a man of integrity. He did a great service to this country and we did not even know it.

I have begun to look into his study. This issue required a tremendous amount of work and it takes someone with a great knowledge of the system to understand it. He was attempting to simplify it. The basic political will that we must have is to make it fair and equitable. I am sure that that is all any Canadian wants of us.

• (1730)

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, it seems that for most of my adult life the Liberals were in power in Ottawa. The man that you spoke of from the Carter Commission said a buck is a buck and should be taxed as such. Why was that not implemented? Why are we getting Liberals saying that we have this unfair taxation system? The Member put it very eloquently. There are people in this country who are not paying their fair share. Well, welcome aboard. Come over and sit with the New Democrats. That is what we were saying in the last election and before that. I will ask the Hon. Member two questions: One, do the Liberals not take some responsibility for the fact that we have this big deficit as a result of the mismanagement of the economy? Why did they not implement all those good ideas if they were so great? Why did they not implement them? Let us not have this hypocrisy here. Let us have some truth.

Mr. Assad: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that we need any lessons from the NDP.

Mr. Waddell: Answer the question.

Mr. Assad: I will answer his question. As I look to the period of that Royal Commission that was established by the late John Diefenbaker, and at the attempts made under the Minister of Finance, Mr. MacEachen, to correct some of the inequalities in his Budget of 1979—am I correct, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Mills: 1981.

Mr. Assad: I believe at that particular time there was some difficulty with his Budget. There was a tremendous amount of pressure, and he had to put aside some of those things that he felt were fair and equitable. In answer to your question, I agree that the Liberal Party at that time did not implement some of the things they could have, but nevertheless it does not change the fact that we consisted of 284 Members in this House and our job was to make sure that the tax system was fair and equitable.

Today with the knowledge that we have, and knowing that it takes problems to bring things to a head, I agree that a reform is needed in the whole tax system. I am not trying to whitewash the Party that I have the honour of belonging to in this House, but nevertheless we are all Members here. We all represent average Canadians. I am sure that there is no one in this House who can get up and tell his constituents that this is a fair and honest tax system no matter what Party you represent. A buck is a buck and the facts are the facts and you know them as well as I do, no matter what Party you represent, be it our pseudo-socialists at one end or the Conservative Party across the way. We all have obligations toward our fellow Canadians. If you can find a constituency where they disagree with what I have said today I will retract it all.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I will take this opportunity to speak on the borrowing bill. The most chilling part of the Budget that we have been faced with in the last month or so is the fact that it intends to tax every area in which we as Canadians have been operating, where we have been transferring money and goods. It is a major tax grab, but a tax grab which the Government said was necessary because it had to deal with the deficit. Besides the tax grab, the Government has said that it is spending far too much in certain areas and therefore it has to cut back. It is cutting back on old age security, family allowance, cutting back wherever it can. In so doing, it is changing the fabric that has made Canada the kind of country that it is.

We have on one hand a major tax grab and a major cut of services. The reason given for this change was that it was a means of dealing with the deficit. What really happened? Instead of making a major impact on the deficit, it is as high as it ever was and we continue to accumulate a considerable amount more each year, at this time probably close to $30 billion or more. In the process, we have pushed the national debt or the accumulated deficit, whatever you want to call it, up to something over $300 billion. It has become a major factor in the expenditures of this country. Are we to believe that by increasing the taxes and reducing the services that this country has looked at all the possibilities of reducing the deficit, if it is so necessary to do, and the Government claims that it is.

We should perhaps talk a bit more about what I like to call the four phases of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). If you look back through the last year, you will find that the Minister of Finance and his Government—I cannot blame it all on the Minister of Finance—have had four different decisions. There was the pre-election decision which was: "We have done such a great job of the economy and in directing the country that we have no real problem. Perhaps there is a little deficit there, but let us not worry about it. We are doing so well that we do not need to worry about it. The country has turned the corner. Our policies have pushed the country around the corner. We have all of these good things that we are going to give you, such as a major child care program and drought relief. We are going to support agriculture so that farmers can be sure they are going to get some returns." All of these were part of the pre-election phase, number one.

Then the election came along, which is phase number two. "The deficit is no longer a problem. All the things that we said we were going to do and did not do because money was short, because of the bad job that the Liberals did in governing the country, because of the wastage, and all the things that the Nielsen Report was supposed to do for Canada, we are going to do. We do not have any problems any more. Just put us back into power and we will give you child care and $800 million worth of drought relief." That was phase number two.

Then we got out of that election. The Government was returned with a reduced majority, but they were returned, and we have a post-election, pre-budget period during which the Government and the Minister of Finance suddenly rediscover the deficit. The Minister told us that none of the projects that the Government had been planning and promised—remember this was the Government that had been in place before the election—to do during and before the election were possible now because all of a sudden the deficit was so important that it could do nothing. Everything that the Government had promised during the election would have to go by the board because the deficit is so large that it has to do something about it. I told you what they did about it, they increased taxes, reduced services and increased the deficit. Face number three, the post-election, pre-Budget period.

Let us look at face number four, the Budget. What did the Minister of Finance do in the Budget? He said that we cannot afford any of these things, that we will have to step back and curtail economic growth, we will have to accept more unemployment, we will have to accept higher interest rates, we will have to curtail economic growth until it hurts. The most chilling factor is that we are still going to have a $30 billion deficit, that we are still going to push the accumulated deficit to over $300 billion, and we are still going to be paying a high interest rate on that accumulated deficit.

The reason for all of this did not go away and it is not predicted that it will go away in the next four years. Therefore we find ourselves here now debating, not the four faces of the Minister of Finance, but the result of what the Government has been doing for the last four years which was assisted in this direction by the previous Government.

The Budget is attacking universality, although I know the government side will say that they are not attacking universality, that everyone is going to get their pension and everyone is going to get their family allowance. However, they are attacking universality in the sense that old age pension, which has been considered a right by all people across Canada regardless of class or category, will be clawed back from people in a particular category.

I would think that before very long after this goes into effect someone will challenge the Government on this as it is discriminatory. If my friend from Vancouver and I each make $50,000 but part of my income comes from an old age security cheque, I will be taxed more than him. I think the time is coming when someone will challenge that and the Government is going to lose. Although this may not be a direct attack on universality, certain people will not receive retirement benefits when they reach the age of 65. The same will happen with regard to family allowances.

We have prided ourselves over the years on putting in place a safety net for the people of Canada. That net meant that if people got sick or found themselves without a job, there would be a worth-while and effective net in place for which they had paid. That safety net is being attacked. We should be most cognizant here of the fact that this is the beginning of the attack. We cannot be secure in the knowledge that the Government will not do more next time. It attacked the universality of the Old Age Security and the family allowance. It changed the structure of unemployment insurance so that it no longer resembles the insurance that we had.

Where will this end? This should be our major concern. Will it reach the point that if you can afford it you will have to pay for the schooling of your grade school and high school-aged children? Is it going to reach the point that if you are rich enough medicare and hospitalization will be your responsibility, that the Government will not maintain that kind of a net? Will there be a further change in the attack on family allowance and Old Age Security next year so that if you earn $30,000 you will have it all clawed back and the year after that if you earn $20,000 you will have it all clawed back until no one gets Old Age Security if they are getting a minimum wage? Will it stop at unemployment insurance? We do not know where it is going to stop.

Our Party has always felt that we have a responsibility to let the Government know that it had alternatives to reduce the deficit, that it could be reducing the amount that the accumulated deficit is costing us. We do not believe that our only duty is to oppose. We believe that we should also point out the weaknesses in legislation and the alternatives available to the Government. We have a different philosophy and different ideology than does the Government or the Liberal Party. We work from a base which we believe to be the best for the people of Canada. We recognize that the ideas which we put before the Government now and in the past are good ideas. I point to the social fabric of the country as proof of that. The ideas which have built the basic social fabric of the country were ideas which our Party or our predecessors put before previous Governments. I speak of old age security, health care and family allowance, to name a few. Part of the social fabric of the country was formed as a result of ideas and structures which this Party put before this Parliament many years ago.

When I first came to this House, the Member for Winnipeg North Centre at that particular time, Stanley Knowles, told me, when I was very disgruntled at how little impact we were having, that we do have impact, that every one of the programs that I am now speaking about were private Members' Bills put before this Parliament 30 years ago.

The Government seems intent on tearing the social fabric which the people of Canada have put in place and supported. What can the Government do? It can do a lot. As I pointed out to one of the earlier speakers, there have been over 1,000 foreign and domestic acquisitions in Canada in the last year. Those acquisitions have done nothing to increase the number of jobs that we have. In fact, if anything, they have decreased the number of jobs.

• (1750)

We have in Canada the highest concentration of corporate power of any industrial country in the world. The top 1 per cent of the enterprises control almost 80 per cent of the assets in Canada. Nine families alone control 46 per cent of the value of all the shares in the largest 300 corporations in Canada that are traded on the Toronto Stock Exchange.

We have this kind of a structure in Canada. The policies of this Government are further increasing this kind of structure. Every time we allow a corporate merger or a corporate take-over, we lose. We lose, particularly if it is a foreign take-over. We also know that in the last three years we have experienced in Canada a deficit of interest and dividend payments of over $15 billion annually.

What I am talking about is that $15 billion of interest and dividends earned in Canada have left Canada to go to other nations. Fifteen billion dollars, which is half of our deficit this year. Every time we allow a merger, we increase the amount that will leave the country. Where does it end, when we are 100 per cent owned by corporations other than Canadian corporations, so that every dividend that is paid in country leaves this country and we become mainly a country with large and successful huge corporations which we do not own.

When the Swedish Government found that they had increased from 7 per cent to 7-1/2 per cent of their corporations foreign owned, they had a huge debate in the parliament in Sweden. The basis of that debate was, should we put in place certain restrictions which would limit the amount of foreign ownership. All of these things are ways in which this Government can start looking and dealing with the problems of deficit if it thinks it is so important that it do so.

I talked about mergers. Let us talk about one other issue in the financial structure. The Government keeps telling us that on one hand it cannot change the interest rate, that it is important that the interest rate be set by the market. The director or the president of the Bank of Canada is under the auspices of the Government, and if you do not believe it, go and ask John Diefenbaker. He made the Bank of Canada become subservient to the Parliament of Canada. This particular Government does not seem to think that that would work. If we reduce the interest rate by 1 per cent, we would reduce the deficit by $1.5 billion. We have the power to do it.

There are alternatives which this Government can look at and can use to reduce the deficit and do what it says is so important that it do. However, it is unwilling to do it because it does not direct the direction of our economy. It is done by somebody outside of the Government. Those mergers and those large corporations have more power than this Parliament.I think that is a very sad state of affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate. It gives me the opportunity to put some of my views on record. I think that the Government in its preoccupation with deficit reduction runs the risk of throwing the baby out with the bath water. Let me try to explain that.

If we go back to the election day, November 21, 1988, what we have witnessed is an unprecedented barrage of Government propaganda. After the election was completed, the Government put its propaganda wheels in motion and those wheels have been running at unbelievably top speed ever since. Canadians are sensitized to this matter of deficit reduction. I think that most Canadians appreciate that the deficit is a problem. However, we have to be careful. As I said earlier we cannot throw the baby out with the bath water.

Let me, if I can, touch on a couple of areas. First, the CBC, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harvard: Well, you can perhaps make fun of the CBC, but I will tell the Hon. Members, it is a fundamental service in this country. We cannot do without the CBC.

Some Hon. Members: hear, hear!

Mr. Harvard: I will remind the Hon. Members, and I will remind my colleagues from Calgary and from Selkirk, that it was a Conservative Government that started the CBC, it was Tories who started the CBC. It was people like R. B. Bennett who realized that we could not run this country and this country could not survive without the CBC.

All we have to do is check the records. In fact, the late Prime Minister, the Prime Minister of that period going back more than 50 years, made some very, very eloquent speeches in defence of establishing a public broadcasting system in this country. Do you know why, Mr. Speaker? I will tell you why, because back in the 1930s when television was not around but radio was,listen to this, the Canadians in those days, yes, even Tories, were concerned about American influence. They were concerned about the incursion of American programming into this country. They decided to do something about it. They set up the CBC. It is one of the smart things which the Tories did in this country. They established the CBC.

Over the years, the CBC has done a tremendous job and established a world-wide reputation. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is known as one of the best networks, bar none, anywhere in the world. In fact, there are professionals in the broadcasting field, Mr. Speaker, who will tell you that the CBC is the best. It is not No. 2 and it is not No. 3. It is the best, even ahead of that well known famous BBC in Great Britain. That is the kind of reputation which the CBC has. It is that kind of service provided by the CBC and that kind of reputation of the CBC that is in danger now because of the cuts which are proposed in the Budget of the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) of a couple of months ago. Unfortunately, over the years, and perhaps because the CBC did such a great job, the CBC was just simply taken for granted.

For a while, back in the 1940s and 1950s before the private sector got its act going, particularly on the television side, the CBC was really the only act in town. It was really the only show in town. People just took it for granted. Now, because of the advent of private sector television and radio—and they have been in the game for a long time—the CBC needs support. It cannot be taken for granted any more. That is why those of us who are so strongly in favour of public broadcasting have come to the defence of the CBC. The CBC is an endangered species because of this Government.

Let me tell you something, Mr. Speaker. In the Budget of the Hon. Minister of Finance there are proposed cuts over the next four years neighbouring about $140 million. Do you know what that would do, Mr. Speaker? First, it would make the CBC unrecognizable. In fact, that is not my word. That is a word used often, since the Wilson Budget, by no less than the President of the CBC.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Harvard) will have 15 minutes left in his debate, plus 10 minutes questions and comments.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 81—WEST COAST SALMON AND HERRING INDUSTRY

The House resumed from Thursday, June 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Stupich:

> That this House reaffirms the Government's pledge to the West Coast salmon and herring industry to "not allow jobs, historically established, to be threatened" by any Government response to GATT rulings.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being six o'clock, pursuant to the order made on Thursday, June 15, 1989 and Standing Order 45(6), the House will now proceed to the deferred divisions on the business of supply.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

Pursuant to Standing Order 45(6) the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at the report stage of Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, June 16, consideration of Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport; and the motion of Mr. Benjamin:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-2 be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 10 to 13 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"as full-time members persons who, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, after consultation with members of the transportation industry, are knowledgeable about one or more of the following modes of transport:

(a) air transportation (b) marine transportation (c) rail and commodity pipeline transportation."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Accordingly the first question is on Motion No. 5. Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps you will find that there is unanimous consent to apply the vote that we have just taken on the opposition day motion to Motions Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10.

Mr. Gauthier: I take it that the NDP are not voting for Motion No. 11. We are.

• (1830)

Miss Grey: Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of Motions Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, and 10. I am opposed to Motions Nos. 9 and 11.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, as the sponsor of the motions that stand in the name of the Liberal Party, we agree with the proposition made by the NDP House Leader to apply the vote taken earlier on the opposition day motion to all the motions proposed today, with the exception of Motion No. 11 with respect to which the NDP will oppose.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, you can record me as voting in favour of Motion No. 11.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the House agree that the division just taken be recorded as applying to Motions Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Accordingly the first question is on Motion No. 5.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

The next question is on Motion No. 6. Mr. Benjamin moved:

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-2 be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 38 to 43 at page 6 and lines 1 to 11 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"5.(1) The Governor in Council shall appoint one Chairperson who shall have demonstrated an understanding of the role of an investigatory body, have knowledge of law and due process and not be an expert in any individual mode covered by this Act.

(2) The Governor in Council shall, in consultation with the Board, designate one Member to be the Vice-Chairperson of the Board.

(3) The Chairperson is the chief executive officer of the Board and subject to paragraph (a) hereof, shall have the responsibility for the administration of the Board and such powers and duties as are delegated to him by the Board.

(a) In exercising the powers conferred on him by subsection 5(1), by the Public Service Employment Act and Financial Administration Act, the Chairperson is subject to and shall act in accordance with the general policies, resolutions, rules and regulations of the Board.

(b) In the event of the absence or incapacity of the Chairperson, the Vice-Chairperson has and may exercise and perform all the powers of the Chairperson.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

The next question is on Motion No. 11. Mr. Tobin moved:

Motion No. 11.

That Bill C-2 be amended in Clause 32 by striking out lines 19 to 25 at page 31.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

• (1840)

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval) moved that the Bill, as amended, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members have risen:

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I think you would find unanimous consent to apply the vote taken on the opposition day motion earlier today to this vote.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I think you would find that if we are to have a standing vote, the vote that we just had on Motion No. 11 ought to be applied to the report stage motion.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, for greater clarity, are we to understand that the vote we just had on Motion No. 11, if applied to report stage, would mean that the NDP has voted with the Government on report stage?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it perfectly clear that on the report stage motion, yes, we are supporting the Government and that the Member for Regina—Lumsden is voting with his caucus.

Mr. Funk: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I also want to register my vote on this question as being with my caucus.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The division just taken will be applied in reverse to the motion for concurrence in the Bill at report stage.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

FOOD AND DRUGS

LABELLING OF DRUGS

Mr. Murray W. Dorin (Edmonton Northwest) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Food and Drug regulations in order to require the labelling of all drugs, irrespective of their intended use, so as to include a quantitative list of all medicinal and non-medicinal ingredients.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I first introduced this motion with the intention to speed up discussion already under way about labelling. I consulted with my colleagues in the House and I believe Your Honour will find unanimous consent for the House to accept a one word amendment to this motion. Therefore I move:

> That this House accept an amendment substituting the word "qualitative" for "quantitative" and that we debate the amended motion at this time in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Dorin: It is my pleasure to begin this debate on more extensive ingredient labelling for the medicines we need and use in this country. I hope the debate will speed the efforts currently under way and change attitudes among interested parties who are already in constructive consultation with the Department of National Health and Welfare.

I have several people to thank for the information I have today. The staff and volunteers of the Allergy Information Association, especially the executive director Mrs. Susan Daglish, have provided me with excellent scientific information and case histories. Their organization is the only national organization which represents allergic individuals and health professionals in this field.

I also owe a great deal of my information on this subject to Dr. Ed Napke, chief of the Product Related Disease Division of the Department of Health and Welfare. Dr. Napke's work in public and professional education, scientific drug monitoring and study has probably done more to advance policy in drugs and allergies than any other Canadian scientist.

There have been other endorsements of my motion's intent from organizations and individuals across the country. The Alberta Hospital, Edmonton, especially the mental health hospital board, and the Association for Vaccine Damaged Children have been very supportive. The association drove home to me the fact that vaccines, too, are drugs and reinforced my belief that we have a long way to go in this country in helping patients and relatives make responsible decisions about the health care they receive.

As well, I should mention Jamie Lawson, parliamentary intern who is responsible for gathering much of the information for this motion today.

Without the efforts of these people I would have been unable to present to the House anything more than statistics and scientific knowledge. If we stuck to "just the facts", we would be missing some very basic facts.

The Non-Prescription Drug Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Drug Manufacturers' Association and its umbrella organization, the Federation of Canadian Health Care Associations, have all written to me endorsing the principle of full ingredient disclosure.

Here are some of the facts as seen from the consumer's point of view. Currently, voluntary guidelines request disclosure of excipients causing widespread sensitivities for non-prescription drugs. Excipients for prescription drugs need only be listed voluntarily in the professional reference work, compendium of pharmaceuticals and specialties. Many companies release no such information at all. Let us consider the occasional result.

An individual does not feel well and makes an appointment with the family doctor, then stops at the drug store to fill the prescription. After bringing it home and taking it according to the directions, the individual settles down to wait to feel better. In minutes the person begins to feel something, to feel worse than during the whole day. What is happening?

What might be going on is an adverse reaction to something the person did not even know he was taking. It is something called an excipient.

As I discovered, there are literally dozens of excipients in many medicines. They do not directly serve a healing, diagnostic or protective purpose. In some cases they are meant to be the "Mary Poppins" chemicals, the spoonful of sugar to help the medicine go down. Others hold powders together in a pill form, prevent chemical reactions and decomposition, release the medicine slowly, or make a dose easy to hold, swallow, or apply.

• (1850)

Some prescription creams have up to 58 such chemicals which many used to call inactive ingredients. Unlike the medicinal ingredients which are the working chemicals that make the drug worth taking, these chemicals have long been ignored by society in many respects. The best drug testing in the world focuses mostly on the drug itself, not the excipients. Drug experiments are initially aimed at healthy animals which are chemically different from ill humans. Even the latter studies which focus on humans will not always capture the rarer reactions to the drug in combination with different living environments.

Different companies put approved drugs in completely different "chemical packages" and frequently each firm will offer certain drugs with different flavours and in different forms.

In addition, each body is chemically different. Obviously we know casually that John and Mary are allergic to different things in different ways, but this is based in part on their different day-to-day environments in a way which is very hard to predict.

Dr. Napke pointed out:

> Man is a walking test-tube. Each time a chemical is added or subtracted the balance may be upset.

He has also been quoted on the subject of how reliable even the most respected and dependable studies are, given the setting in which they take place. Testing, no matter how professional, cannot foresee all possible adverse drug reactions. This kind of perfect world is not what this motion can promise.

What this motion can promise is a way of reducing risk to patients by keeping them and their physicians better informed. It is based on the premise that consumers have a right to know what is in a product when they buy it, not just when they take it home and use it. By letting patients, physicians, and pharmacists know what is in a given pill we can make progress on several fronts.

First, people with known allergies to foods and drugs could avoid them more easily. Let me read a letter given to me by the Allergy Information Association:

> I have a 16 month old child. She was tested after a year of problems, and corn is her major allergy. My baby is very underweight with all her sickness, only 22 pounds. She has had three ear problems in six weeks and I can't find an antihistamine/decongestant she can tolerate. Most have a corn syrup base which caused a severe reaction: hyperactivity, destructiveness, irritability, colic pain, gas, crying constantly and not sleeping. The reaction took 36 hours to leave her system after I discontinued medication. Doctors and pharmacists can't help me any more and I am at a loss. Could you recommend children's medications which are corn free?

As another example, there is currently a human rights case before the Ontario courts in which a woman was denied a permanent position at a firm because of a violent allergic reaction to ASA or aspirin during a three-month probationary period. She says that she lost her job not because she was so foolish as to take aspirin but because she took a medication which contained ASA without listing its fullingredients.

Second, labelling excipients will make diagnosis of allergies much easier. In one recent case, a 36 year old man was allergic to polyethylene glycol which is added to many drugs, shaving lotions, and milk products. One day he took a normal drug just as anyone here might. Suddenly his blood pressure dropped, he lost consciousness, and he went into a seizure. He was experiencing life threatening anaphylactic shock. His doctor phoned the manufacturer which turned down his emergency request for information. The manufacturer would not even confirm that polyethylene glycol was present in the drug until the doctor threatened to list the brand name of the medication as cause of death if the patient died.

I am sure that most Canadians, including drug manufacturers, are appalled by this story. The Allergy Information Association has sent me numerous cases of allergic reactions or other medical emergencies in which time was wasted negotiating with companies to get vital ingredient information. We cannot end all of the risk, but why not end the life threatening delays and fatal errors that can be prevented?

Even with the best will in the world, the current system is costing lost hours in people's life and work, lost dollars in the Government's medical support programs, and lost lives and wasted talents in the homes and workplaces of this country.

According to the AIA at least 20,000 Canadians suffer from an allergic reaction to a drug every year. Some 5,000 Canadians per year are actually admitted to hospital mainly because of a drug reaction. In fact, 3 per cent of all acute care admissions to hospital are due to adverse drug reactions. There are also other forms of substance intolerance such as diabetic reactions to sugar filling in pills. Persons with celiac disease react to the presence of gluten, a substance found in most cereals and in such medication as capsule shells.

The general term for allergies and these other types of substance intolerance is an "adverse drug reaction", or ADR for short. In Dr. Napke's opinion, which has been both unique and influential world-wide, ADRs should include any effect of the drug, including no positive effect at all which does not aid in curing, diagnosing or protecting the patient.

ADRs, in other words, are what happens when a drug is not just a drug, but also a foreign and potentially harmful substance. Just how frequently ADRs occur in the general population is not clear, but surveys show that they affect between 5 per cent and 35 per cent of those in hospital.

No one can say for certain precisely how important ADRs are in part because of the lack of easily accessible ingredient information in the public domain. There are not reliable figures of lost jobs, tax burden, burden on the health care, or cost to the economy. Clearly, however, based on what information exists, we are looking at an extensive as well as a tragic problem in all these areas. It is important to bear in mind that allergies produce a broad range of symptoms. These reactions can change in intensity, triggering agency or symptom. Changes may evolve slowly or after periods of stress, pregnancy, and other changes to normal hormonal balance or from poor nutrition. It is also important to stress that allergy reactions are diverse and can be confused with many different illnesses. This makes the identification of a drug allergy even more difficult.

Beyond the all too familiar and unholy trinity of asthma, stuffy nose, and rashes, reactions can include fatigue, headache, insomnia, rapid mood changes, confusion, depression, anxiety, paranoia, hyperactivity, heart palpitations, muscle aches, joint pains, hives, hay fever, bed wetting, shortness of breath, diarrhoea, eczema, abdominal pains, and constipation.

Less common are the severe reactions including psychosis, seizures, and anaphylactic shock. Dr. Marshall Mandell, an expert in clinical ecology, has recently concluded that between 50 per cent and 80 per cent of the average day-to-day medical practice are patients with allergic reactions all too often misdiagnosed. Bearing in mind the complexities of allergies, the author of an article in the summer 1987 edition of the journal Vitamin Supplement made the following observation:

> One of the most important aspects of the study of allergies is the fact that they are highly individualized.

This point is particularly significant. If chemicals put in a drug affected or killed a large part of its users, we would expect the Government's regulators to ban it. In the case of ADRs, one person's drug is another one's poison. Because ADRs are individualized government regulators must still act, but they must concentrate their efforts on helping individuals protect themselves. We have to accommodate both the needs of the non-allergic person needing medicine, without standing in the way of another person's right to defend his own life and health.

If I may, I would like to give just a brief bit of information on this issue. I introduced this motion on December 15, 1986. I made it a motion because it requires only a single vote in the House and therefore can have a quick impact. It also avoids trapping the Government into language which inadvertently makes implementation difficult or impossible.

However, on August 18, 1987 it fell prey to the old danger of being talked out. Nonetheless, the debate was helpful for two reasons. In the first case, it demonstrated that this motion could attract support from all Parties. In the second case, the matter was pursued before the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare. After further hearings into drug, food and cosmetic intolerance, the committee submitted a report and a series of detailed recommendations on July 14, 1988 and demanded a reply from the Government.

Significantly, the committee recommended an approach which included labelling, but did not restrict itself to informing the public by way of labels. I accept these developments as promising, sophisticated approaches to the complexities of drug disclosure.

However, I would prefer to see labels than accompanying pamphlets or even toll free ingredient information hot line numbers printed on the package. I feel that labelling is simple, direct, and easily accessible when the key decisions are made to buy, prescribe or use a particular prescription or non-prescription drug.

During the early part of 1988 there was also considerable evidence that the Ministry was moving toward more action in drug labelling. On January 15, 1988 information letter No. 733 was issued by the Health Protection Branch of Health and Welfare on the subject of mandatory disclosure of all drug ingredients. The due date for replies to the document was only four months thereafter.

In very broad terms the information letter was suggesting that all ingredients be made public in qualitative alphabetical lists on all drug labels or in accompanying lists in the case of smaller containers.

By February the Minister for Health and Welfare would cautiously testify before the House committee that the question was no longer "should something be done?", but rather "what is practical?"

• (1900)

In August, the first company in Canada, Searle Canada Inc., voluntarily moved to reveal its excipients to the public through labelling and publications sent to the medical community.

I want to congratulate this company for taking this initiative which has two purposes; one, it demonstrates that this can be done by a company involved in the industry if it chooses to do so and, second, it paves the way for other companies which may not have yet followed suit. This fine action was praised by representatives of the industry, the Allergy Information Association and the medical professions.

Searle is reporting that the cost factors in changing labelling were minimal. I note, Mr. Speaker, that Searle has seen fit to send a representative here today from Toronto to observe this debate.

However, Searle represents only a small fraction of the market-place and the lack of consistency throughout the market limits trustworthiness of even an expanded voluntary system. The extent of labelling, what may be withheld as a trade secret and what not, the terminology to be employed; all of these matters should be standardized if the consumer or patient is to feel confident of what is there to be read.

I would like to close my remarks on a personal note. I first thought of this motion nearly two and a half years ago. I was angry about the allergy problems of my young children, angry that my wife, our doctor and I were pretty much shooting in the dark when it came to discovering what drugs they could tolerate. We got good information about the actual medicine in the children's drugs but there was generally only sketchy information about the additives, colouring, flavouring and fillers for drugs. I knew other people had the same problem but I did not really know how serious this issue was, how many people were affected and how complicated a solution would be.

I now feel that by approving Motion 437 which is before the House today we have the opportunity to do something very important. I urge all Members to support this motion and to take the matter forward. I hope that the Government will see fit to act quickly.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin by congratulating my colleague, the Member for Edmonton Northwest (Mr. Dorin), on his introduction of this particular motion on a subject matter which I believe is of great concern to a good number of Canadians. I want to congratulate him for seeking the consent and co-operation of other Members in terms of introducing the amendment that he started off with.

Some years ago, I believe in this Chamber, and perhaps you were here at that time, Sir, a former Prime Minister said, "Consumers have a right to know what is in a product when they buy it and not when they take it home and use it". Those were the words of the former Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

I wish to join with my colleague and support him in this particular motion which I think provides benefits to Canadians, particularly those who have a variety of diseases. There are approximately 3.5 million Canadians who are treated for allergic diseases every year, that is, one in six. Two million Canadians have hayfever, over one million have asthma, and one million are affected by other allergic conditions including eczema, hives and allergic reactions to food, medication and insect stings. Some allergic individuals suffer from more than one form of disease. Allergies tend to run in families. If one parent is allergic, the child has one in four chances of developing that allergy. If both parents are allergic it is likely that two out of three children will be allergic as well.

The question that we ought to pose is how are children in this great country of ours affected. Point five million children in this country have hayfever, .8 million children have asthma and .2 million children have eczema. Allergies may develop at any age, beginning as early as infancy. One in five children visiting doctors do so due to a major allergic disorder. Asthma is the most common cause of pediatric admissions to Canadian hospitals.

When allergic women are pregnant, approximately one-third have fever symptoms, one-third become worse and the condition of one-third remain the same way.

Those are some of the facts, Mr. Speaker. This amendment moved by my colleague from Edmonton Northwest provides good information to those Canadians who have an allergy themselves or have a child with a particular allergy.

We all know from previous debates in this House as well as in committees that the opposition presented to making these particular changes was also presented with regard to the Food and Drug Act concerning certain foods. In fact, opposition to labelling food came primarily from the food industry in other substantive matters which came before this House. I guess the same argument could be made here as well. I would like to go through those arguments briefly.

They said that labelling would reveal their secret recipes to the competition and that processing and cooking would change the protein structure of the ingredients to such a degree that the information would be meaningless. That is what they said with regard to the Food and Drug Act. They said that consumers would not utilize labelling because they would not bother to read them or, if they did, they would not understand the terms. They said that it would be costly and difficult to list ingredients on food packages. Those are only four arguments that were used.

In a non-partisan way I say that those arguments can be made with regard to the specific motion that we are dealing with. However, I think you will find that since the Act of 1969, whether it be pharmaceuticals or what have you, these particular arguments hold no water whatsoever. What is wrong with Canadian consumers having this knowledge about drugs? Surely there is nothing wrong with that kind of information being imparted to Canadian consumers and making it mandatory that the Department of National Health and Welfare have it included.

This is a very worthy motion, Mr. Speaker. I wish to congratulate my colleague again for bringing what I believe to be a substantive amendment to the attention of this House. I would like to congratulate all Members of the House from all Parties for the support that they wish to give to this particular motion.

We know that this motion is merely a proposal being made by a Member of Parliament expressing an opinion with regard to the changing of regulations. However, I think it goes to the heart of knowledge and information which we are imparting to Canadian consumers. Not only in my capacity as the official critic for National Health and Welfare for the Liberal Party of Canada, but also as a father and as a person who has been watching this particular matter for quite some time, I wish to concur with the comments made by my colleague and offer him my support for this motion.

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to rise in support of the motion of the Member for Edmonton Northwest (Mr. Dorin). I want to congratulate him on his persistence in once again bringing the subject of drug labelling to the House. He is asking us to consider the advisability of amending the food and drug regulations in order to require the labelling of all drugs, irrespective of their intended use, so as to include a quantitative list of all medicinal and non-medicinal ingredients.

In the wide array of methods utilized to improve health status, the use of prescription and non-prescription drugs has played an important role and for most people the drug prescribed and used does what it is intended to do. However, for a large number of people it causes an adverse reaction and there are two possible causes for this. It is either an adverse reaction to one or more of the active ingredients in the drug in question or to one or more of the excipient ingredients in the drug. In other words, either something which is in the drug to assist the individual with their illness causes an adverse reaction, or something which is used to enable that drug to be taken causes the adverse reaction.

• (1910)

The Canadian Society of Allergy and Clinical Immunology estimates the extent of those in our society who have adverse reactions to a variety of substances and drugs. For example, 3.5 million Canadians are treated for allergic diseases. That is one in six of all Canadians. A million Canadians have asthma. A million Canadians are affected by other allergic conditions, including eczema, hives and allergic reactions to food, medications and so on. One in five children visiting a doctor do so due to a major allergic disorder. In hospitals, 20,000 patients suffer allergic reactions to drugs and 5,000 people enter hospital because of allergic drug reactions. While both prescription and non-prescription drugs have provided major gains to Canadians, they also give rise to major problems for other Canadians.

Present regulations require that only the active or therapeutic ingredients of drugs be disclosed. The excipient or non-active, non therapeutic ingredients do not have to be disclosed at the present time even though there is evidence to suggest that they do in some circumstances cause adverse reactions in some people.

The motion put forward by the Member for Edmonton Northwest (Mr. Dorin) would require the disclosure of all ingredients, including flavours, colourants, binders, lubricants and preservatives, all ingredients of the drugs both active and inactive. All the motion asks is that consumers have the right to know what is in the prescription and non-prescription drugs they will consume. Surely, all consumers have a right to know the contents of those drugs so as to protect themselves from adverse reactions and consequences and so as to make decisions on whether or not to use the drug in question on the basis of knowledge of its content. In this way, consumers could be protected. Costs to the health system of those people who do have adverse reactions could be reduced.

A similar issue arose when regulations were put into place requiring the disclosure of ingredients of foods. The food industry was opposed to the inclusion of such ingredients on the basis, they argued, that it would reveal secret formulations of their products and that manufacturing processes changed the chemistry of ingredients so that much labelling might not be meaningful. They argued that no one read the labels. They argued that it would be costly and difficult to list the ingredients on labels. We are hearing the same sorts of concerns today from drug companies. As we have heard, though, Searle voluntarily responded to the need for disclosure, thus indicating that it cannot give rise to too large a competitive disadvantage and cost to provide that information and they should be highly congratulated for making that move.

Not only were the concerns of the food industry at the time of regulations on food products shown not to come to pass, they also did not deter the government of the day from passing the regulations in question. It is hoped on this side of the House that any concerns about the costs and other difficulties with regard to labelling will not be affected today either and that the Government will respond to this motion which, as we all know, has the support of all sides of the House.

Consumers should have the right to know the contents of the prescription and non-prescription drugs they take. Pharmacists and members of the medical profession should know of all these ingredients too so that they can advise their patients and have some confidence in the effect of the drugs which they are to prescribe.

The information in question, which the Member for Edmonton Northwest is asking to have considered for inclusion on drug labels, is already provided to the Government in the process of drug regulation. The information, therefore, is already available and already presented in a form which could be readily translatable onto a label. We need only to ensure that that information is added to the list of active ingredients on the label of drugs which are sold in Canada.

I and my Party wholeheartedly support the motion put forward by the Member for Edmonton Northwest. Canadians have a right to know the ingredients of what they are consuming. The Government of Canada owes it to all Canadians to provide them with this information in a readable and legible form at the time they make the purchase and/or the decision to use any drug in question.

The rule, Mr. Speaker, should be disclosure of the information. As I say, I wholeheartedly support the motion put forward by the Member for Edmonton Northwest.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. Then I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this evening to rise in the House to speak to the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Edmonton Northwest (Mr. Dorin).

Mr. Speaker, I have a personal interest in this motion, but I would also like to take this opportunity to expand on the Hon. Member's motion and say that, in addition to the therapeutic or medicinal ingredients that are needed in order to prepare the dosage form. These ingredients include, for instance, what are commonly referred to as excipients, lubricating agents, binders, preservatives and colouring agents.

The safety of these ingredients is generally well established and the ingredients themselves are widely used in industrialized countries. However, in recent years, a small number of non-medicinal ingredients has been associated with harmful effects in a small percentage of patients with very specific allergies.

It is not always possible to eliminate or find substitutes for these non-medicinal ingredients. In some cases, the nature of the medicinal ingredient itself limits the range of non-medicinal ingredients used with it. Furthermore, the nature of the medicinal ingredient may be such that not using a certain non-medicinal ingredient may compromise the stability of the pharmaceutical preparation. It is also a fact that substitution of a non-medicinal ingredient does not guarantee that some people would not be allergic to the substitute product.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, individuals who are sensitive to certain substances need and are entitled to know the composition of any medication before taking it.

The Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare has received many inquiries from individuals, consumers' groups and health professionals, and many expressions of concern about the lack of a statement of non-medicinal ingredients in pharmaceuticals.

For many years, the food and drug regulations have required the name and amount of medicinal ingredients to be given on the label of any medication.

In recent years, representatives of the branch have worked closely with the pharmaceutical industry to determine how to inform consumers on the nature of non-medicinal ingredients in drugs.

These negotiations between government and industry have resulted in the manufacturers' associations adopting voluntary guidelines for the listing of non-medicinal ingredients. For non-prescription drugs, these guidelines specify that ingredients known to cause allergic reactions in a large number of individuals will be listed on the drug label. Since prescription products are not usually distributed to consumers in their original packaging, information on the non-medicinal ingredients will be given to the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association, which will publish it in the Compendium of Pharmaceuticals and Specialties (CPS), a publication available to physicians and pharmacists and, to a lesser extent, to consumers, in public libraries.

Although these efforts have proved useful, the concept has not been accepted by all interested parties. Furthermore, most if not all ingredients can cause allergic reactions, although very few have been found at fault. Clearly, regulatory action was necessary in order to guarantee that health professionals as well as Canadian consumers would have access to information on non-medicinal ingredients in pharmaceutical products.

• (1920)

In January 1988, the Health Protection Branch issued Information Letter No. 733, in which it proposed that the qualitative declaration of all non-medicinal ingredients on the labelling of drug products should be made mandatory. This Information Letter received ten times the usual response, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we received 155 letters. The vast majority of respondents, 140, were in favour of the proposal, while 35 disagreed, but only on the manner of disclosure of the information. Although alternatives to listing the ingredients on the label were suggested, none of these suggestions satisfied the consumer's need to have access to the information when and where the drug was purchased.

In July 1988, in its fourth report, the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare recommended amending the Food and Drug Regulations to require a full qualitative listing of all ingredients in all pharmaceutical products. The Department of National Health and Welfare is committed to adopting provisions requiring the declaration of non-medicinal ingredients. Provisional regulations are now being drafted and will be published in Part I of the Canada Gazette, simultaneously with the Department's response to the concerns expressed in response to Information Letter No. 733.

In order to reduce any negative economic impact of the proposed declarations on the pharmaceutical industry, it is suggested that implementation of the new provisions be delayed. Manufacturers will then be able to change the labelling of their products as appropriate and exhaust their existing stock of labels.

Thanks to a sensible approach to the implementation of the new regulations on drug labelling, the Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare will continue to fulfil its mandate, which is to protect the health and safety of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I would like to add that Health and Welfare Canada was already considering a motion similar to the one presented by the Hon. Member for Edmonton Northwest (Mr. Dorin). In the spirit of parliamentary reform, the Government was pleased to let our hon. colleague present a Private Member's motion, as we did in the case of Ms. McDonald of the New Democratic Party when she was the Member for Broadview—Greenwood.

The Hon. Member, who agreed to propose an amendment to his motion so that it would meet all the Department's requirements, is to be commended for the work he has done in this respect and especially for his concern for the health of his fellow Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, health safety for all Canadians is paramount. It is a basic right. I therefore rise today to speak in favour of Private Members' Motion No. 437 as amended:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Food and Drug regulations in order to require the labelling of all drugs, irrespective of their intended use, so as to include a qualitative list of all medicinal and non-medicinal ingredients.

The past couple of decades have seen Canada at the forefront of efforts to label products for consumer safety. We now label packaged food and textiles. Today, we consider a motion to label all drugs and drug packaging similarly to include in this labelling a list of both medicinal and non-medicinal ingredients. We, in this House, have another opportunity with this motion for Canada to play a leadership role.

Allergies are a problem for millions of Canadians and for many of them the problem can be very serious, even life-threatening. Minute amounts of a substance have been known to cause sickness and even death. The key to preventing an allergic reaction is avoidance of contact with the offending substance. Thus, it is of the utmost importance that individuals with allergies are aware of the substances to which they may be exposed.

There are two additional equally important considerations. First, a physician when cognizant of the specific ingredients in a given product is better equipped to make a timely diagnosis of an allergic reaction in a patient who is reacting adversely for the first time to that drug which has been given for some other reason.

Second, a physician is assisted in explaining a seeming inefficacy of a drug in which the action of the active ingredient is hindered or nullified by the adverse action of certain inactive ingredients in the said drug in some individuals.

Indeed, the arguments in favour of this motion are strong from the point of view of making a correct diagnosis, of evaluating an unexpected response to treatment and of preventing a medical catastrophe.

It may be argued that labelling would reveal secret ingredients to competitors; that consumers would not take the time to read the labels even if they were there; and that it would be costly and/or difficult to list ingredients on the packaging for medications.

I suggest that trade secrets ought to be subservient to consumer safety; that those with a life-threatening allergy to a substance would be diligent and take the time to read the labels; and that costs of such labelling would be minimal while the benefits would be substantial for those with known allergies.

A basic principle in patient care is informed consent. Also, knowledge by a medical doctor of all ingredients in any pharmaceutical agent taken by a patient or individual ensures the doctor's proper action in case of an emergent, adverse or untoward reaction to that pharmaceutical agent. Thus, giving those who suffer from allergies the knowledge required to make safe and wise choices of drugs is a societal obligation. Giving physicians all the information will enhance the delivery of exemplary health care to all Canadians.

Thus, today I speak in favour of a change to the regulations of the Food and Drugs Act to provide for the mandatory labelling of non-therapeutic ingredients in medications.

I congratulate my colleague the Hon. Member for Edmonton Northwest (Mr. Dorin) for introducing this excellent motion. Indeed, I am privileged to add my own and my Party's support to this motion.

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to respond to the motion that has been put forward by the Hon. Member with respect to the labelling of pharmaceuticals. This is a current initiative within the Department of National Health and Welfare and I welcome the opportunity to advise the House of the progress it has made in this area to date.

I would like to address this motion in relation to preventive health care. The issue of drug labelling of non-medicinal ingredients has been a priority in the Department for some time. Non-medicinal ingredients are not normally associated with any action on the taking of a medication for the first time. However, in recent years the health professions and the regulatory agencies have noted that some individuals are intolerant or experience adverse reactions ranging from mild to severe, including several forms of allergy.

The reactions that have been reported have varied considerably. They can range from relatively minor skin rashes to generalized symptoms of fatigue, nervousness and headache to more serious gastrointestinal or neurological effects and may even result, as some Hon. Members have mentioned, in shock or death. The responsible agent is only rarely identified.

A finite number of substances used as non-medicinal ingredients in drug products are known to cause adverse reactions in sensitive individuals. A few examples of these are lactose, a commonly used filler in pharmaceutical products, the yellow colouring agent, tartrazine, sodium metabilsulphite and related compounds used as antioxidants to preserve flavour and prevent decomposition, benzoates and parabens commonly used as preservatives and gluten, a protein found in certain types of starch which must be avoided by those suffering from celiac disease.

It is evident that although only a small proportion of Canadians appear to have adverse symptoms from some ingredients, the range of reported effects is very broad. It is also clear that such ingredients are widely used in society without any discernible problems for most Canadians.

Drug products contain non-medicinal ingredients to perform various functions related to the quality, safety and effectiveness of these products. For example, non-medicinal ingredients may hold a tablet together or maintain the sterility of the product. They may contribute to the rapid release of the medication after ingestion or maintain the potency of the medication within the drug product. It is readily evident that the complete elimination of non-medicinal ingredients is not possible for all products.

Since non-medicinal ingredients are essential to the availability of safe and effective drug products, it is necessary to minimize the exposure of individuals to non-medicinal ingredients to which they know they are intolerant or allergic. The initial response of the Department of National Health and Welfare to these concerns was to solicit the voluntary support of the pharmaceutical industry. As a result, drug manufacturers' associations adopted voluntary guidelines for the disclosure of potentially harmful non-medicinal ingredients.

Prescription drug manufacturers chose to declare the content of those non-medicinal ingredients that have been clearly associated with symptoms of intolerance or allergy in some people. This information was given to the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association for inclusion in the drug monographs of the reference textbook, the Compendium of Pharmaceuticals and Specialties, commonly known as the CPS. Non-prescription drug manufacturers disclose the presence of selected non-medicinal ingredients known to cause allergic reactions on product labelling.

While these efforts have been helpful, voluntary labelling and other voluntary declarations have not been universally accepted. It is also apparent that there are many non-medicinal ingredients which have the potential to cause sensitivity or allergic effects. Only full label disclosure will eliminate the continuing debates over whether a particular ingredient is a sensitizing agent and should be declared. To that end, the Department of National Health and Welfare published Information Letter No. 733 soliciting comments on a regulatory proposal to require the listing of all ingredients on the labels of all drug products. The responses to this regulatory initiative are currently being evaluated.

Some of the issues that will be reviewed prior to the preparation of regulatory amendments include quantitative as well as qualitative declaration of non-medicinal ingredients, a consistent method of declaration on the product labels, particularly with regard to the nomenclature of the non-medicinal ingredients, exemptions of certain types of products from the requirement to declare non-medicinal ingredients on their product labels and appropriate implementation of the regulatory requirements to minimize the economic impact on pharmaceutical manufacturers and on society.

Regulatory amendments will be drafted with consideration of these and other comments received. The Health Protection Branch, with the co-operation and commitment of the pharmaceutical industry, will continue its efforts to safeguard the health and safety of Canadians by providing the ingredient information needed for the informed use of drug products.

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, this is just a note concerning the motion before the House. I listened with some interest to the Parliamentary Secretary. The Government of Canada is now preparing new regulations to change the existing regulations in the Food and Drug Act to do basically what this resolution wants the Government to do.

Hon. Members will notice that about 15 minutes ago, the Parliamentary Secretary mentioned that the Information Letter No. 733 to which the hon. gentleman just referred got 155 responses from the manufacturers, and 140 were in favour and 35 disagreed with the manner but did not disagree with the intent of the regulation. Therefore, now that the manufacturers agree and the companies agree, the Government of Canada is going to change the regulation to agree with the manufacturers and what the companies agree that they agree with. That is some leadership.

If that is not a good illustration of leadership, this is what the Parliamentary Secretary said further to that. She said that the regulation will be brought in later on so the manufacturers can clear out their existing labels. Those were her exact words. That is leadership. That is concern for the health of Canadians on the part of the Government of Canada.

Perhaps the Government of Canada should be showing more leadership here. Perhaps it should be more concerned about the health of Canadians as is the Hon. Member who introduced the resolution and other Hon. Members who have spoken to it. The Government should not wait for the companies to clear out their labels before bringing in the regulations that the companies agreed to bring in, really.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to take this opportunity to speak to the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Edmonton Northwest (Mr. Dorin), because we all know that the fact that a number of people are allergic to non-medicinal ingredients is a matter of concern to regulatory bodies, health professionals and the pharmaceutical industry.

As we know, Mr. Speaker, an allergy can be extremely dangerous and harmful. It could even cause the death of a person who ingests a substantial dose of an ingredient that causes an allergic reaction. It is harmful because it may deprive a patient of medical care and thus prolong that person's illness.

Earlier, the Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls (Mr. Baker) commented on the Government's lack of leadership. I simply want to say this: I don't think that the Government showed a lack of leadership by asking for the views of industry. We must remember that the Government submitted the information to this sector to get a reaction or comments with respect to the proposed changes, because after all, this is a scientific sector. It isn't always possible to get the information we want. However, in recent years, science has seen some very important developments.

Today, with this information we are now able to go ahead with these regulations and even save lives, because unfortunately, there are still too many people who have those allergic reactions and the only way to stop or prevent this, is to provide information on all drug ingredients, both medicinal and non-medicinal.

Mr. Speaker, I support this motion and I believe it goes a long way towards improving the present situation, and before concluding, I want to say that although we are all for progress, the fact remains that thanks to this information, certain findings were sent to the Department. The Department is now trying to decide the best way to make the information available to the general public, so that it is done right and especially so that it is understood by all who will have to take those drugs.

• (1940)

So, Mr. Speaker, I close by congratulating my colleague from Edmonton Northwest, of course, for having presented this motion, for being consistent and for trying to move everything forward in the health field so that everyone—industry, professionals and government—can reach a consensus in order that everyone might be able to advance science in a concrete way, in the interest of patients and to avoid unnecessary loss of life from now on. So, once again, I congratulate my colleague. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Harry Chadwick (Brampton—Malton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to address the House on the issue of labelling of drug products in Canada and to apprise the House of recent regulatory initiatives taken by the Department of National Health and Welfare in this area.

The Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare, as part of its mandate to protect the health and safety of Canadians, has the responsibility to regulate and evaluate the labelling of all drug products. It has been a requirement of the food and drug regulations for many years that a quantitative listing of all medicinal ingredients be displayed on the labels of all drug products.

In recent years, concerns have been expressed by both consumers and health professionals on the lack of information available about the non-medicinal ingredients included in those products.

This information is especially vital to those who suffer from sensitivities to certain substances. Although the majority of Canadians are not affected by non-medicinal ingredients in drugs, some individuals experience reactions which can range from mild to incapacitating in effect.

The Health Protection Branch recognizes the special needs of those individuals who are sensitive to non-medicinal ingredients in drug products. In response to that concern, Information Letter No. 733 was issued in January, 1988, to seek a uniform and practical approach to the full disclosure of those ingredients. The information letter proposed that the food and drug regulations be amended to require the qualitative declaration of all non-medicinal ingredients on the labelling of drug products.

Responses to the information letter were received from pharmaceutical manufacturers, industry associations, health advocacy groups, health professional associations and individuals. The principle of disclosure of non-medicinal ingredients received overwhelming, if not unanimous, support.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989-90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Saint James has the floor. He has 15 minutes left plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, I was interrupted by the clock at 6 p.m., 1.45 hours ago. I would like to repeat two or three of the points I made before six o'clock. I was talking about the CBC, which is more than 50 years old. It has been serving this country for more than half a century. It was established by a Conservative Government and a Conservative Prime Minister, R. B. Bennett, who saw the wisdom of establishing a public broadcaster in this country. One of the major reasons, in fact, the major reason Mr. Bennett believed in establishing the CBC was because of the fear of the influence of American programming from across the border. In those days it was radio, not television. Mr. Bennett and the Tories of the time saw a threat. They wanted a public broadcasting system to offset that threat and offset that American influence. They went ahead and established the CBC.

Over the last 50 years and more the CBC has established an extremely enviable record. Unfortunately, many Canadians have begun to take the CBC for granted. We cannot take the CBC for granted any more, particularly in the face of the Budget, and particularly in the face of the proposed cuts in the Budget which will run to $140 million over the next four years. That is simply too much for the CBC to take, particularly when one considers that the CBC has been suffering cuts for a good while, not only in the last 12 months, but perhaps for more than five years.

The President of the CBC has also stated that he is alarmed about the proposed cuts. I wish to refer to a newspaper article of some time back with the headline: "CBC fears loss of entire network". In that particular regard the President was talking about Radio Canada International. The article states:

> He says Finance Minister Michael Wilson's budget will make the CBC unrecognizable in four years from now, and argued if the possible shutdown of stations or even entire networks is what the Government wants, it must help wield the axe.

We know that the Hon. Minister has stated otherwise. He stated that he decides on the cuts and decides on this bad medicine, but it will have to be the board of directors of the CBC and the bureaucracy within the CBC which will have to administer the bad medicine.

The article further states:

> —the $140 million in fresh cuts in CBC funding announced this week are "immoral" and "devastating" and will confront the publicly-owned system with options that are "horrible" to contemplate.
> "If these cuts are actually finalized, the CBC will not be recognizable four years from now," he said in a telephone interview.

That is the type of evidence adduced and brought forward by the President of the CBC. He should know what he is talking about.

It would be a tragedy if these cuts were effected in such a Draconian manner. We need both the radio network and the television network of the CBC. I hear the Tories mumbling and grumbling.

Mr. McDermid: You are doing the grumbling.

Mr. Harvard: It is too bad that the Tories have been Americanized in the past few years. They can have the republican system, and the private radio systems from the States. They can have the private television networks, and they will get with it all the junk that the Americans have become so famous for in television and radio—junk! The CBC is far superior to that stuff which comes across the border.

Mr. McDermid: The CBC buys all those junky programs from the United States.

Mr. Harvard: What junky programs?

Mr. McDermid: The CBC buys them. Watch it.

Mr. Harvard: Oh, yes? Only because people like you try to starve the CBC.

Mr. McDermid: One billion dollars is starving?

Mr. Harvard: You don't know what it costs to run a network. You have no idea.

Mr. McDermid: Neither does the CBC.

Mr. Harvard: The CBC brings this country together. This is a huge country with a massive land mass. We do not have a great many people, only about 26 million or 27 million. It takes a public broadcasting system devoted to bringing the people together, to celebrate our differences, to tell us the Canadian story. That is what a Canadian public broadcasting system can do. The private sector cannot do that. That is not to criticize the private sector. The private sector has a different preoccupation. It has a different target. Companies are in it to make a profit. They are there to attract advertising. Their whole notion concerning programming is entirely different.

• (1950)

I am not here to quarrel about private broadcasting and its need to make a dollar. I do not quarrel with that for a moment.

Mr. McDermid: Where have you worked all your life?

Mr. Harvard: I will tell you, sir, I worked in the private sector for 13 years and I worked at the CBC for 18 years.

I happen to know something about both systems. There happens to be a place for both of them, something Tories cannot seem to understand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Brightwell): I would ask the Hon. Member to address the Chair and perhaps get on with his dissertation rather than arguing with other Hon. Members.

Mr. Harvard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I apologize. I certainly meant to speak through you, Sir, to those Members opposite. I get my dander up because I do not know where Members opposite live. I do not know whether or not they live in a swamp, in a bush or somewhere on the moon. This is a great country. One of the reasons why it is a great country is because we have the Canadian broadcasting system. It has been said many times, and something which I did not say first, if we did not have the CBC someone would have to invent it. That is the absolute truth.

The Tories wake up to the CBC. However, they do not even realize that they are receiving information programming on radio in the morning. There is the Gzowski show between nine and 12. As It Happens, which is a venerable show, has been on the air for about 20 years. The CBC has some of the greatest television programs that will ever be seen. Does The National have an equal? Does The Journal have an equal? I doubt it very much.

The National and The Journal are high profile shows. They are watched by millions of people, including Tories. They like the CBC except when they walk into this Chamber. Something happens to them then. They lose their marbles.

There are also programs like Fifth Estate which has probably been on the air for something close to 15 years. It is one of the finest programs one will ever see. Man Alive has probably been on the air for more than 20 years. I could go on and on with regard to the kind of service the CBC provides.

Do you know what, Mr. Speaker? I feel passionate about this, not because I worked there but because of the vital role it plays and because, unfortunately, a great many Canadians have taken the CBC for granted. Not only that, but the CBC has been guilty of not blowing its own horn. I wish that over the years the CBC had adopted some of the free enterprise promotion that has made private radio and television stations so successful. I do not think the CBC has done a very good job of blowing its own horn.

In these difficult times it is people like those of us in the Opposition, we Liberals, who have the responsibility to come to the defence of the CBC.

I read an article in The Globe and Mail written by some chap from London, Ontario. It left me incredulous. He said that CBC programming was boring. When we think that probably three million Canadians on average watch The National and something over two million Canadians watch The Journal every night, that is really boring, right?

There are some famous drama productions that have appeared on the CBC such as Anne of Green Gables.

Mrs. Dobbie: You named one, good.

Mr. Harvard: I could run down a list a lot longer than that, I remind the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South (Mrs. Dobbie). Does the Hon. Member not wish that she represented Winnipeg South Centre?

CBC programming is not boring. Canadians have shown over and over again that they appreciate the work of the CBC, that they appreciate the programming that is provided by the CBC. We have to come to the defence of the CBC.

Another point I want to raise has to do with possible commercials on CBC Radio. As you know, Mr. Speaker, a number of years ago there was advertising on CBC Radio. Then, through some strategic moves—

Mrs. Dobbie: By the Liberals?

Mr. Harvard: Yes, of course, by the Liberals. Who else? There was a good decision to take commercials off CBC Radio.

Mrs. Dobbie: And let the taxpayers pay.

Mr. Harvard: The Tories simplify. They cannot seem to grasp what the CBC is all about. They cannot grasp what public broadcasting is all about.

When commercials are taken off a radio network, something which was done a number of years ago, the raison-d'être of the corporation or the radio network in particular has changed. The type of programming that draws advertisers does not have to be conducted. Mass appeal programs do not have to be broadcast. In the main, programs of public service can be carried out, programs that the private sector cannot air. That is not to damn the private sector. It has a different reason for its existence.

That is the reason why we need the CBC and why we a non-commercial CBC radio network.

There was a rather prominent Tory from my province who asked in committee a few weeks ago what would be wrong with putting commercials on CBC Radio. There would be a lot wrong. Putting commercials on it would change the whole character of CBC Radio.

I would now like to deal with the Canadianization program at the CBC. The CBC has been trying to increase the amount of Canadian programming in prime time viewing hours. The objective of the CBC over the last few years has been to increase Canadian content in prime time to about 95 per cent. That is a laudable goal. It is a difficult goal to achieve, particularly in these times. I think that right now Canadian content in prime time on the CBC television network is somewhere between 85 per cent and 90 per cent. It still has a short distance to go.

It is apparent in the wake of the cuts announced in the Budget that the increase in Canadian content in prime time is going to have to be slowed down. The corporation will not reach its target. That is too bad because it was a laudable goal. The CBC had really hoped to achieve it, but it is now impossible. It simply costs a lot more money to produce Canadian content programs than to buy that cheap stuff from the United States. To a great extent what the Americans are doing is using Canada as a dumping ground to dump some of that stuff. Unfortunately, the corporation because of its financial restraints does not have any choice.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, if CBC people had their druthers, they would like to have a lot more Canadian content programs.

Mrs. Dobbie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question about the practices of the CBC as a Crown corporation. It is my understanding that in the provinces, when a member of the Crown corporation leaves to go into public service it is frequently the practice to give them a leave of absence for five years and then take the person back. Is that the practice of the CBC? The Hon. Member should be able to tell me since he was a member of the CBC employment force when he ran for office. Perhaps he could tell the House if it is the practice of the CBC to take ex-employees back if they have served time in the public service?

• (2000)

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South (Mrs. Dobbie) that I am not aware of the CBC granting anyone a long leave of absence. I know that the CBC has granted people leaves of absence for two or three months, but when she is talking about a Member of Parliament who will be away for at least four or five years, I have never heard of such a thing. I can assure you that I have no intention of returning to the CBC.

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, I think it is sad that those four Members opposite find it great sport to heckle. I think they possibly missed the point the Hon. Member was making, that the CBC is like VIA Rail, it is the glue that keeps this nation together.

I wonder if the Hon. Member would consider reiterating his position so that they might give him the courtesy of listening.

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. I would be very happy to repeat a couple of things I said. In a democracy like ours in Canada, I think the CBC is indispensable. We need a public broadcaster that will disseminate information. The free flow of information is absolutely essential to a democracy and if we have a strong democracy in this country, which I believe we do, one of the reasons for it is the CBC.

Canadians are well informed. They are enlightened and know the issues. They know how bad the Government is, and they know how good the Opposition is.

We need the CBC to do that kind of programming. More than that, the Canadian story is complex, the Canadian story is many faceted. It is multi-dimensional. It reaches out to the farthest corners of the country. We need a public broadcaster like the CBC to bring us together and to celebrate our differences, to tell the Canadian story. It is a great institution which has done a wonderful job. I hope it will continue to do that job, but it needs our support.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I think the central theme to the Hon. Member's speech is not to cut CBC because of the good things it has been doing. He gave us Anne of Green Gables as an example of good programming. I would be surprised if he would find any significant percentage of Canadians anywhere who would disagree with him.

He said that The Journal was good. We all have variations, and some will question and doubt one program or another, but we need to recognize that it costs $1 million a week for the program.

The pertinent point I want to put to the Hon. Member is that it is not simply a question of whether something is good and should not be cut. That question can be asked of every agency of government. The fundamental question is whether or not the country has a problem with the deficit. The fact is that we are spending 30 cents of every dollar simply to pay for the interest on the debt and if we do nothing, it will rise to over 50 cents by 1993. Does the Hon. Member not see that as a problem? If so, what would he cut?

Is the debt a problem to this nation and its future, and if the answer is yes, what would he trim to bring it into balance?

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for those questions. They are appropriate and responsible questions.

I am concerned about the deficit. I wish the Tories had been concerned in the last four or five years. One of the reasons we have a problematical deficit is that the Tories allowed the debt to rise almost 100 per cent in the last four or five years. If they had not allowed the $170 billion to rise to $340 billion, we would not have the deficit we are facing today.

The Hon. Member asks where I would cut. I say to the Hon. Member for Crowfoot that first you have to establish priorities. I question the Government's priorities when it proposes to make cuts of $140 million over the next four years to the CBC. It should be looking at interest rates. If the interest rates were not so high we would not have such a high deficit.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South giggles.

Mrs. Dobbie: Because you are silly.

Mr. Harvard: They do not like to hear the truth and the facts. According to economists, the high interest rates have probably added some $3 billion to $5 billion to the deficit. If the Government would address the high rate of interest perhaps some of the other things would come into place. It has not done that.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that the rhymlesser, the timelesser, the worser the free verser. I can hardly believe that someone so recently from the Liberal past could come here after August of 1981 when interest rates were 21.75 per cent at the Bank of Canada, 25 per cent for consumer loans and over 30 per cent for many other card loans, and talk about this period of time as one of high interest rates. He knows full well that the pressures on interest rates are world-wide, including in Japan, the United States, Europe and elsewhere.

I put the question to him again: What would he cut? If the country is in debt he has to be able to respond. If he is going to respond seriously to the question, what would he cut?

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, I think I have adequately answered the question already. I think the Hon. Member is misinformed, as usual. It is getting to be a disease on that side of the House.

There is no disputing the fact that we had high interest rates in the early 1980s. The entire western world was in an economic mess and the Canadian economy was sucked into that. For the last four or five years western economies have been doing very well. We should have been doing much better than we were.

As a result of the foolhardiness of the Government, the debt rose. In the last number of months, particularly since the election, there has been an unconscionable rise in interest rates. That is your answer.

• (2010)

Mr. Mills: I am not really convinced that you understand how important this issue is on the other side of the House. I have just been reading from the Atkinson Lecture of Mark Starowicz at Ryerson Polytechnical Institute on March 12, 1985. This is just a short preamble and then I will address my question to my colleague whose passion for the CBC has to be respected by everybody in this House because it is a very important institution. However, here are some facts:

> Canadians now spend over half their leisure time watching television. That is an average of 23 hours of television per Canadian per week — By the time our children reach the age of 12, they will have spent 12,000 hours watching television, more time than they will have spent in school.

I would like to give another recommendation from Mr. Starowicz who is a respected man in this industry and by all Members of the House. He talks about the political broadcasting system being one of our great defence systems for our sovereignty. He makes this statement: "Fifty per cent of Canadian television should happen on the Canadian broadcasting system within the next five to 10 years. This is simple dignity for nationhood."

I would like to ask my colleague who has been a member of the industry for many years if he feels that this is at all possible with the way the national Government is treating the CBC today.

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. No, I do not think it is possible for the CBC to continue in the way that it has for the last few years in the face of these cuts. Television is a very, very expensive business. It takes a lot of resources to do the kind of programming that one expects of a public broadcaster. I repeat, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Hon. Member, that it was no less a personage than the president of the CBC, Mr. Juneau, who said that if these cuts go through, the CBC will become unrecognizable, that the cuts would be devastating. That is the kind of evidence that we must consider.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the third time and passed.

• (2050)

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Considering the progress we have made today, I think you might find unanimous consent to call at ten o'clock.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I hate to do this. I too appreciate the progress we have made, thanks to co-operation from the opposition Parties. However, I would give the undertaking that once we are through a brief debate to complete second reading stage of Bill C-9 we will call it ten o'clock.

BANK ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, April 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Loiselle that Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Bank Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Rodriguez:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:
> "Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Bank Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam has the floor.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by thanking the Government House Leader for giving me this opportunity.

I would point out that when I last rose to give this speech on April 26, 1989 there was a problem. It was the evening of the budget leak. As I rose to speak, I was interrupted by the Government House Leader who moved that the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of second reading of Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Bank Act. That really was not the truth at all. The Minister was trying to keep the House going because of the budget leak.

I want to quote the remarks I made at that time because they were rather prophetic. As reported at page 1001 of Hansard, I said:

> He is absolutely right. When you play those kinds of games it comes back to haunt you in this House—

Now I would like to continue my remarks on the Bank Act, and I will pardon my colleagues if they wish to watch me from other places.

The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), our Party's critic in this area, has already made his speech. It was a very exciting speech and I will try not to repeat too much of what he said.

Mr. Friesen: Any of it.

Mr. Waddell: Our position, to be serious for a moment because this is a very serious matter, is that the banks have been gouging their customers for years on service charges. There is so much gouging going on that the Canadian public rose up and started to complain about this. Complaints came from everywhere, including from the Chairman of the Finance Committee.

The Government set up a special committee to look into changes to the Bank Act to deal with these bank service charges. The committee reported and, unfortunately, the Bill had no teeth when it came back to the House.

This Bill is the same as Bill C–140 which died on the Order Paper just before the last federal election, though small business is included in this Bill. We in the NDP opposed Bill C–140 and we are also opposed to this legislation.

We oppose this Bill for a number of reasons. The Bill provides few guarantees for customers and small business against unfair service charges and does nothing to keep fees and increases under control. Hon. Members will recall a famous National Film Board short movie which won an award years ago. It was a cartoon about a person who went into a bank and was terrified. Things have not changed very much. People are not terrified of going into banks, but they are still getting ripped off while the banks are making immense profits and are the most protected of industries in Canada. Not for them wild competition, not for them the free market. They want to be protected and they also want to be able to charge as much as they can possibly get away with. They have certainly got away with a lot, and they will continue to get away with a lot after this Bill becomes law.

The Government laboured and brought forward this mouse of a Bill. The principle is that the banks can be trusted to keep service charges in line. In other words, they will self–regulate themselves. The Government took that same position on interest charges on credit cards. The charges came down a little bit when Parliament put a lot of pressure on the banks, and as soon as Parliament recessed the interest charges climbed back up. We say that one cannot trust voluntary compliance through the banks on the matter of service charges, and that is the first weakness in the Bill.

The second weakness in the Bill is that there are a number of charges that the Bill does not remove, which it could remove, such as charges for deposits and withdrawals, charges for cashing NSF cheques, charges for closing accounts, charges for maintaining a minimum balance, charges for providing the current balance on an account, and charges for errors made by the bank. The banks make an error, and you pay. You close your account, you pay. You don't have the right minimum balance, you pay.

We also object to the self–monitoring provisions in the Bill. I will address that in a moment. Hopefully, if I have time at the end of my speech, I will add some positive measures that could be taken in the House to oppose gouging by the banks on service charges.

First, the weakness in the Bill and the concept of voluntary compliance. The legislation does not force the banks to do anything about their service fees, except have them disclose the charges and notify their customers about increases or new fees. I gather the philosophy is, if the customers do not like it, they can go to another bank. Except, the problem is that the other bank will have the same service charges and fees.

In the case of small businesses, banks are not required to disclose all the charges, but only those defined as a "core list".

The Government bases this approach on the assumption that the disclosure and notification of charges will open up competition. This does little for a customer who has a mortgage or a small business that has a loan with a bank. They cannot just walk out of that bank. They would have no option but to accept the increases because it would cost them too much to transfer their loan or their mortgage.

In terms of voluntary compliance, the banks' past record has not been good. By all accounts, 1988 was a banner year for the banks. The Royal Bank had a net income of more than $700 million; the Bank of Nova Scotia's income was $506 million; and the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce had record earnings of $591 million. Despite those huge earnings, the banks did not hesitate to raise service charges. The Royal Bank raised 15 of its service fees on November 1 by 4 per cent to 6 per cent, with the cost of writing an NSF cheque going up 12 per cent. I am not condoning writing NSF cheques, and certainly would not do it myself—not knowingly, anyway, Mr. Speaker. However, the charges are excessive for that accident happening, which does happen to the majority of people.

In 1987 the five major banks collected more than $1 billion from bank service charges. We need to ask then, can we really trust the banks to voluntarily keep their service charges in line, which this Bill does?

I mentioned some of the charges that are put on that this Bill does not remove, which could be removed. The Bill does not prohibit those charges, for example, for closing an account, for maintaining a minimum balance, and so on. We should have legislation that forces the banks to provide a basic no-frills account which would provide basic services free of service charges. The banks are making enough money from investment of our money that they could afford to do this. The recommendation for a no-frills account was a central feature of a study of service charges conducted by the Finance Committee in the spring of 1988.

I mentioned self-monitoring of banks. If customers are not happy with the way complaints are made to banks, they can contact the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions in Ottawa. The Superintendent of Financial Institutions looks good on paper, but the problem is that it is not a real guarantee at all. The Superintendent of Financial Institutions may have a big name, but he or she does not have a mandate to protect consumers. In fact, the Office of the Superintendent is there to ensure that financial institutions remain solvent, not to be an appeal as an ombudsperson on bank service charges.

This Bill will only create more pressures for an agency that is already overworked. More important, the Superintendent's job is to ensure that banks stay in business, not that they satisfy customers. It is possible to imagine how those two interests could conflict.

What are we proposing, because one has to be positive as well as negative? We would accept the recommendations of the Finance Committee, such as to require the provision of free basic banking services. That is the basic no-frills service, to prohibit certain unfair charges such as the minimum balance charge and the charge-back for cashing an NSF cheque. We would agree to those recommendations; however, they do not go far enough.

In addition to what the Finance Committee proposed, we would propose a freeze on all bank service charges for one year. Why? Well, service charges have increased over the past five years at an annual rate of 19 per cent. The banks are making $1 billion a year from those bank charges. An argument can be made that the banks have over-charged consumers and should be prepared to give customers a break for one year.

There have been precedents where federally regulated corporations have been required to compensate consumers when over-charging is demonstrated. For example, the CRTC has made a number of rulings vis-à-vis Bell Canada where consumers have received money back from Bell.

We would suggest the establishment of a financial services ombudsperson empowered to perform consumer advocacy, referee and long-term policy advice with the banks. This office would be an independent entity with a toll-free number in order that consumers across Canada could call with complaints. We live in the modern world, and that could be done. It would also advise Parliament regularly on consumer relations in relation to financial services.

The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has tabled a private Member's Bill in this Parliament to implement the recommendations of the Finance Committee and to implement the proposal of a one-year freeze and a financial services ombudsperson. The Hon. Member's Bill would extend those guarantees to all customers and small businesses. His Bill would set up a no-frills account that would not have charges for deposits and withdrawals, for cashing an NSF cheque, or for maintaining an account. Second, a personal account will not charge customers for deposits and withdrawals, for maintaining a minimum balance, for cashing NSF cheques, for closing an account, or for errors made by the bank. Third, there would be a freeze on bank service charges for one year. Fourth, it would create a financial services ombudsperson.

These are positive recommendations that would bring some justice for consumers. The banks have made a lot of money in over-charging and gouging people on service charges. It is about time that we took concrete action. We do not know why the Government is not doing that. There is public pressure from consumers for a fair shake here. The banks have been making a pile. They are heavily protected in the Canadian environment. It is not a free-market economy for them. They get together and do their thing and fix service charges. It is no accident that they all have the same policies. There is not going to be competition there. We need more teeth in this Bill. This is not half a loaf, it is about a tenth of a loaf. We want the whole loaf.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions or comments the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Boyer: I listened to the former resident of the lakeshore and his thoughtful speech about the present relationship between consumers and banks, and thought there were many good suggestions made. Not directly touched on by the Member in his speech, but nevertheless a point on which the Member may wish to comment, is the report in the press today with respect to the relationship between political Parties and banks providing credit cards with a discount rate for Party members who use those credit cards. This is something which has been entered into between the Liberal Party of Canada and the Royal Bank of Canada, and apparently between the Ontario New Democratic Party and the Bank of Montreal. I certainly hope that our Party would not enter into that type of arrangement.

However, I want to ask the Hon. Member who has brought a lot of common sense to the subject tonight in his speech what his view is of that type of formal relationship between a political party and a credit card issuing company to provide affinity cards and whether he thinks that is appropriate. Does it not in fact set a double standard which Canadian consumers might justifiably criticize when seeing political parties using their relationships with banks to extract for the benefit of party members who are also card holders an interest rate that is fully 1 per cent lower than that which is charged to other customers of the bank?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I note that he pointed out that I come from Toronto Lakeshore. I have been trying to hide the fact that I really do come from Toronto in all the years in which I sought election in western Canada. However, there have been some events in the last few months that have made me say that I am proud of my origin in Toronto. It is in the great Province of Ontario which has a lot of representation from my Party.

With respect to the credit cards, I disagree with the Hon. Member. I will be honest and straightforward with him. I do not think the fact that my Party and New Democrats are able to get a credit card through the banks is going to stop us in any way from criticizing the banks. I do not mean to say that the Hon. Member was directly saying that, but there may have been that implication. After all, I just stood up for some 20 minutes and kicked the bejabers out of the banks. I do not think we will have a conflict. I do not know what the Hon. Member's wallet is like but mine is full of credit cards, although probably not with as many as his. We live in a modern world. We use credit cards. There is no sense ignoring that. If we can negotiate a deal with a Canadian bank by which we get a good deal for our Members who are using credit cards anyway, then let us face it, there is not anything wrong with that. As a matter of fact, I think it makes good business sense, something for which I would like to see my Party noted.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I was neither suggesting that this arrangement would preclude or prevent New Democrats from criticizing the banks, nor that there is something wrong with having an agreement between a Canadian political party and one of the banks with respect to affinity cards. The point I was making was why should that agreement provide for a lower rate than that which is paid by other consumers. As he said, he spent 20 minutes denouncing the banks. Why does he not continue with some of the logic that is there and carry the force of his argument through consistently and in this Chamber turn the mirror on himself and his own Party and accept that this is an area in which the New Democratic Party has made a mistake? I will repeat it here on the floor of the House. I would never support such an arrangement between the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada and a credit card company. I think Canadian consumers would certainly look with jaundice and a heightened sense of dismay at political parties negotiating that type of reduced rate of interest for party members, whether it is the New Democratic Party or the Liberal Party—

Mr. Funk: They finance your elections.

Mr. Boyer: —compared with what consumers pay. I want him to answer that specific question.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I admire the Hon. Member very much. He is one of the stronger Members of this House. However, let him not be holier than thou. His Party receives contributions from banks and so on. Will his Party now stop accepting those contributions in an election campaign? Will it stop accepting contributions from companies and so on? It is absurd for the Hon. Member to have a holier than thou attitude. He is trying to nail us in this area as if we will be defensive and say: "Oh yes, we made a mistake". I do not think that we have made a mistake. I think that we got a deal for our Members through a negotiating process. It is open to other Canadians and other groups to negotiate these deals as well. There is no double standard, as he calls it. There is a straightforward standard. The standard is that we live in a modern world in which we use credit cards. We are members of groups which can negotiate certain rates. The Hon. Member probably gets a corporate rate when he rents a car from Budget. Or does the Hon. Member turn that down because it is discriminatory of others who cannot obtain that rate? Let us not be holier than thou.

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address the proposed amendment to the Bank Act, specifically Bill C–9 and its corresponding regulations.

The Bill was introduced to the House of Commons on April 13, 1989, by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Loiselle) and was the result of extensive reviews conducted by the House Standing Committee on Finance during 1988.

This Bill, as we are all aware, is the second effort of the Government to introduce legislative changes respecting banking service charges. The first effort, Bill C–140, having died on the Order Paper due to the fall election, was similar in content to the present Bill before us. There are some minor modifications, the dominant one being the introduction of business deposit accounts in the legislation. That is the basic difference between these two proposals.

Although Bill C–9 does address some of the concerns expressed by organizations such as chartered banks, consumer advocate groups, banking associations, trust companies, credit unions, the Superintendent of Financial Institutions and the Minister of Corporate Affairs, the legislation falls short of adequately addressing all concerns expressed by these groups. Indeed, the legislation falls short of proposing many of the recommendations of the House of the Commons Standing Committee on Finance.

Perhaps the Bill could be viewed as a good start, but certainly it is not complete in its approach to the governance of banks in Canada. There are a number of areas in which the proposed legislation is deficient.

I wish to take this opportunity to review these concerns, concerns that are not only mine but also those expressed by business, citizens and bank organizations. I bring these matters forward in the hope that Hon. Members opposite will agree with the importance of these concerns and make some serious effort to amend Bill C–9 prior to its final passage so that these matters will be adequately addressed.

Bill C–9 reduces the need for banks to disclose to both personal and business deposit account holders the various charges for services rendered by the bank. Further, the Bill and, in turn, its regulations provide guidelines for the timing of disclosures of charges.

Although this is a much needed introduction, it does not go far enough to provide specific details to be followed by banks for such disclosures. The banks have argued that due to various types of accounts it would not be possible simply to place signs in branches advising the charges of the bank. The proposal would permit the use of brochures to advise account holders of various service charges. The question remains: Does the banking system need to be so complicated that it is not possible for the banks to provide simple instructions to its customers? Is it necessary to produce volumes of brochures on service charges? If the sign method is too complicated, how do banks intend to keep the brochure method an easier way of disclosing service charges?

The Bill and its accompanying regulations should specify the form of disclosure required to comply with the legislation. According to this legislation, we would permit the banks to draft and circulate their own brochures on this very important matter. If it is our intention to provide the understanding of bank service charges and if it is our intention to ensure quantity of this information, then surely it must also be our intention to ensure quality of the information to Canadians. We will not be able to achieve the goals for improved disclosure to individuals if we are not ready to regulate the disclosure content to ensure the information is frank and honest.

The legislation is silent on the issue of charging penalties against individuals and businesses for depositing non-sufficient funds cheques.

Although the banks have recently been more willing to accept the concept of no penalties for NSF cheques on personal accounts, they are still reluctant to waive the penalties in such instances on business accounts. I am sure we must all agree that when either the individual or a business accepts a cheque, the recipient should not be penalized because the cheque has not been issued in good faith and turns out to be NSF. One may suggest it is only a nominal charge, about $10, but this impacts on the individual finances as well as on business profits. In some cases, the service charge can be equal to or almost as much as the cheque itself.

Let us take the example provided to me by a newspaper delivery boy in a town in my area. I recognize that newspaper boys and girls are not big business, but in the particular instance that happened a year ago, this newspaper boy accepted a cheque for payment of a few weeks of delivery. The cheque itself, barely over $10 in value, was returned NSF. The boy was charged a $10 service fee and the bank saw nothing wrong with the system. Its response was that this was its policy.

It was only after rigorous intervention on behalf of the youth that the bank waived the service fee. Certainly it is not the intention of our bank system to unjustly penalize persons or businesses who accept cheques in good faith. Certainly it is not the intention of our institutions to introduce our youth to a business world that would have no compassion or understanding for an individual who works hard for his money only to find out that he or she can be penalized for trusting people.

Where is the bank's responsibilities in these cases? All persons and all businesses utilize banking services. Indeed, any financial transaction will undoubtedly include a bank customer. We encourage the use of banking institutions and services in our society. In return for providing these services the banks are compensated, and compensated quite handsomely. Chartered banks are recording record profits that are supplemented by fees generated by service charges. Yet they are reluctant to waive the penalty against the innocent depositors for non-sufficient fund cheques.

The legislation must be altered to address the most discriminatory practice. Legislation must include a prohibition for all depositors of NSF cheques from penalty. This is the only fair and equitable method of addressing the issue.

At the time of introduction of Bill C-9, the Minister indicated that the responsibility for handling complaints must first rest with the financial institutions. The Bill and its corresponding regulations provide for the establishing of a complaints procedure, which calls for banks to handle complaints first.

Only after exhausting this procedure would the complainant be permitted to apply to the Superintendent of Financial Institutions. However, neither the Bill nor its regulations stipulate the method which the bank must follow in processing complaints. There is no guideline or timeframe. In short, there is no guarantee that the complaint would be handled in an orderly and expeditious manner. The Bill simply requires the bank to file its complaint procedure with the Superintendent.

If the banks are provided with the opportunity to be first to deal with complaints, should the legislation not provide the guidelines to be followed? Is it not possible, with the current proposal, for banks to introduce lengthy arbitrary appeal processes? I believe it is possible.

Further, if it is our intention to make this process more simple and understandable, it would certainly be more advantageous for all parties to uniformly apply a complaints system. Therefore, I ask the Government to reconsider this issue, acknowledge the problems that could arise as a result of a Bill not providing sufficient direction in the complaints process, and introduce changes before final passage that would ensure uniform, prompt and sufficient procedures for customer complaints.

Bill C-9 in its present form attempts to address the very serious matters of disclosure of bank service charges and complaints system. The Bill is silent with respect to NSF cheque penalty charges. The Bill only addresses banks, pursuant to the Bank Act, and those banks are listed on schedules 1 and 2 of the Act.

What about other financial institutions that deal in deposit accounts, such as credit unions, the trust companies and the loan companies? What about governing these financial institutions?

Again, in pursuit of uniform and equitable legislation governing deposit accounts, service charges and complaints procedures, it must surely be argued that the rules must apply equally to all financial institutions. To this end, would it not be advisable to introduce legislation that covers all financial institutions? The banks, trust companies and co-operatives should all operate under similar guidelines.

Certainly, the Canadian Bankers Association would welcome the introduction of legislation to govern trust and loan companies and co-operatives. These institutions should certainly not be given an advantage over chartered banks by being permitted to operate by different rules.

I suggest that it would be prudent for the Government to not only strengthen this legislation as it relates to banks, but also to introduce further legislation that will address service charges, NSF cheques and complaint processes for the rest of the Afinancial services industry.

In summary, I wish to emphasize the importance of the issues raised in Bill C-9 and its corresponding regulations, and to further emphasize the need for the Government to reconsider certain provisions of the proposed legislation. Action is necessary to strengthen this legislation and extend it to cover all financial institutions.

If we are in doubt of the serious nature of banking service charges and its importance to the business community, let me refer to the Federation of Independent Business, an item, Small Business Views the Banks, The Bottom Line, edition 1988:

> The issue of service charges has risen quickly to become the single most significant concern of one in every four small businesses in Canada. There is no doubt that the banks are relying more and more on service fees as a profit source. This is explained by the banks as a result of the fact that "less low cost money on account is now available for banks to lend out to other customers; depositors prefer term deposits et cetera to non-interest bearing accounts." In summary it seems that small firms are seeing their service charges increasing at rates far above the rate of inflation, and often more than once a year, with no compensation gains in other areas.

The House of Commons Finance Committee itself made specific recommendations with respect to service charges. Recommendations based on the hearings conducted in 1988 included the elimination of certain types of charges and the modification of other charges. An example is the charge for not maintaining a minimum balance in accounts. Such a charge penalizes low-income Canadians when account balances dip below the magic minimum balance figure that is established by the bank. This relatively new practice of levying a maintenance fee was a special concern of the committee. The Bill does not address this matter.

The negative response to the proposed legislation's lack of addressing the NSF cheque situation was evident in the Consumers Association of Canada response:

> The Association welcomed the alacrity with which the service charge legislation was re-introduced, but said it hoped the Finance Department would have gotten even tougher with the banks—(the association) was disappointed the draft legislation wasn't tougher. The government had an opportunity to have another go at it and should have forced banks to eliminate some fees, like penalties for bounced cheques.

Although banks may have no difficulty in complying with Bill C-9 because "banks were already complying with what was proposed in the 1988 draft legislation", there is concern among members of the Canadian Bankers Association and its comments bear this in mind:

> The Banks believe they are capable of regulating themselves and do not need such legislation. We are generally satisfied – The Canadian Bankers Association believed that similar rules should be introduced to cover the rest of financial services industry, including trust companies and loan companies and co-operatives, which were also subject of last years public hearings.

The Government has seen fit to introduce service charge legislation. Bill C-9, in its current form commences the much needed overhauling of the system. What the Bill lacks is clearer, more defined policies with respect to disclosure of charges and complaints procedures and elimination of certain charges. What the Bill does not do is extend its proposals to all financial institutions.

• (2130)

I would further suggest that in order to assist the Government in these matters, the Bill be referred to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance. This committee, because of its previous review of the Act and its recommendations in 1988, is very capable of reviewing the Bill and making further recommendations on this issue.

In order to address these matters, in order to eliminate the discrepancies to the Bill that are not solved in the proposed amendment, in order to treat all Canadians fairly, in order to treat all financial institutions equally, I request the Government to amend the proposed legislation prior to the final passage. I ask this Government to undertake these changes expeditiously and present to the House and the people of Canada a comprehensive piece of legislation that will meet our financial needs today and in the years to come, that will instil customer confidence in our banking and financial service industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, I have listened very carefully to the intervention of the Hon. Member for Essex—Kent (Mr. Pickard). I would like to congratulate him on many of his very positive remarks on Bill C–9. I would be tempted to say the same for the Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam (Mr. Waddell) who spoke before him. I am pleased to see that there are very positive suggestions. This is a first step, and we will follow it very carefully.

I cannot address all the points that he has raised on this particular Bill on bank service charges, but he said that we fell short of addressing all concerns of the various groups. Of course, we are very much aware of that and that is a good start. As far as profits, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the banks are widely held financial institutions, and we look at them very often as huge monsters, but their profits are disseminated all across Canada to a large part of our population.

He spoke about brochures instead of signs. A man or a woman going to a bank to look at the charges relevant to a particular bank would find it difficult to go around and copy down from the various signs that would be posted there. We feel that it would probably be much better to have a small brochure available at every bank. Then you could go around to three or four banks, very quickly pick those up, go home and study them at length. We thought that this would be a more open way of dealing with it.

My last remark would be to reply to his point that we should apply the same rules to the other financial institutions, the trust and loan companies. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that our constitutional capacity to intervene in those institutions is much less clear than it is with the banks over which we have very real responsibility in other areas. Our responsibility is very often limited to the solvency issue and all contract matters come under provincial jurisdictions. We have looked at that, but I am pleased to tell him that following efforts that have already been made by the banks, many other institutions have followed suit. We can only hope that it will continue to be so.

One thing I would like to ask him: Could he possibly indicate to me if he feels that additional competition in the arrival of 60, for example, annex or Schedule B banks and the fact that the trust companies and loans and credit unions are there to compete with the banks is not in itself a good way of solving the charges issue also?

Mr. Pickard: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Minister for his question. I feel that the market–place is definitely a place to have controlled competition, but I feel the major problem with that competition is that if everybody is not playing by the same set of rules, if everybody is not controlled in similar respects by using the same parameters within which they can operate, a difficult situation is created for each one of our financial institutions. I recognize that we do have provincial bodies that govern certain of our financial institutions as well as federal bodies that govern other financial institutions. I believe it is really the nature of this Government's policy that we should move beyond where we are right now, negotiate some regulations which would make the playing field of all financial institutions fair and equitable.

If it is just the market–place that is going to control what is happening, it seems to me that when one financial institution comes forward with a group of policies, with a group of regulations, others follow very quickly. It appears that interest rate charges are often very close to the same in each one of our banks. It appears that service charge rates are the same with all of our banks. It appears that we get a very close correlation between charges from one institution to another. I think the market is the place that determines much of that. There is no question that if one bank is a long way out of scope, they are not going to be doing the business.

I do think that when it comes down to this issue that I am looking at, that the average person cannot go through a hundred different regulations that each bank has, if it is such a complicated issue that the banks have to provide all kinds of package policies, provide different charges on every operation that they carry out, the consumer is almost at a loss to figure out what this bank is doing and try to make comparisons with others. It is not just a simple matter of comparing an interest rate to an interest rate. With many of these package policies put together by banks, you get three or four services at a certain fee. Three or four different services provide a different fee. I believe the average consumer is unable to go through that without a tremendous background of accounting or other similar experience.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate?

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to take part in the debate on this legislation which is a Bill to amend the Bank Act in Canada. The Hon. Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Loiselle)said in his contribution to this debate on April 26 on page 979 of Hansard that Bill C-9:

> —responds to the many recommendations put forth by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Indeed this Bill did adopt some of the committee's recommendations. Why though did the Government not see fit to incorporate all of the committee's recommendations which make good sense, are fair to all Canadians, and would improve the content of this Bill considerably from its present form?

• (2140)

Let me refer specifically to these recommendations. The first recommendation of the committee's report to the House on May 31 suggested that banks and other federally regulated financial institutions be required to provide accounts that would make basic banking services available. For these basic accounts no charges shall be levied for maintenance of the account, making a limited number of deposits into or withdrawals, or payments by cheque on the account, providing the current balance of the account and transferring to the basic account the balance of any other account of the customer with the financial institution.

Surely Canadians should be able to expect that the most basic services provided by financial institutions, as cited in the recommendations, be provided free of cost. Such an amendment would ensure that poorer families, infrequent users of the bank, young children and indeed our senior citizens, who are less likely to conduct or require more complex financial transactions, can satisfy their more limited banking needs free of charge in the six banks that control banking in this country.

The current Bill fails to address this issue. More important, Bill C-9 ignores the committee's second recommendation that financial institutions be prohibited from levying charges for a variety of services. For example, recommendation 2(D) states that financial institutions be prohibited from levying charges for any transaction which results from an error or unauthorized action by the bank.

Does it not make good sense that if a financial institution makes a mistake that the cost of that mistake is not incurred by the customer? It should be incurred by the bank. Why should such a recommendation not be adopted by the Government? Why also does this Bill not prohibit charges for closing accounts, inactive accounts, or maintaining a savings account when the balance falls below the amount specified by the bank? It is curious that these salient recommendations, which would undoubtedly be in the best interests of Canadian bank customers, were not included in the new legislation which is before the House today.

Perhaps the Hon. Minister of State for Finance would respond that these recommendations would be inconsistent with his government's position, that as he stated in this House competition, not regulation, is the best way to guarantee a fair and reasonable approach to establishing prices. Have you ever heard anything so foolish, Mr. Speaker? It insults the intelligence to think that competition among the six banks in this country is going to regulate these affairs rather than regulation.

This reasoning ignores two very important facts. First, it assumes that bank customers ought to have the right to be charged for services rendered by the financial institution. It suggests that competition will establish fair prices for the customer while not ensuring that no charges will be levied on certain services. It does not exclude the possibility, but it is highly unlikely, that a financial institution will voluntarily eliminate service charges.

Second, perhaps more important, this is a "big city" perspective. What sort of competitive market forces does the Minister expect will come into play in small towns and rural Canada?

In many areas of my riding of Thunder Bay—Nipigon there is either a single or perhaps no financial institution at all. How would competition instead of regulation do anything to help many of the residents in northern Ontario, and in fact many sections of northern Canada? The provisions of this Bill intend to allow banks to have access to the costs associated with conducting their financial transaction at that institution. In theory this will allow a customer to select which bank provides the services sought by the individual or business at the lowest cost.

This might hold true in Toronto, Vancouver, Montreal or Winnipeg, but what are the implications for places such as Nipigon, Hurkett, Red Rock or Armstrong? This legislation does little or nothing for these communities. In fact, Armstrong, Ontario, a community of over 2,000 people 200 miles away from Thunder Bay has absolutely no financial institution at all and there and in many other areas there is little room for dissatisfaction with our financial institutions. In the smaller communities in northern Ontario the code which applies is usually "What you see is what you get".

Moreover, this legislation offers nothing to the many communities across Canada, and there are several in my riding, which desperately require the establishment of a financial institution. A Bill meant to increase competitiveness between banks will not assist these small places in northern Ontario.

It could be argued that increasing competition between financial institutions and prompting them to lower service charges will decrease their income, hence further reduce their incentive to set up comparatively more costly branches in rural communities. I would not find it surprising if such considerations were never given any thought by the Government. After all, in the name of competition, or more accurately, ignorance, the Government has also decided to abandon VIA Rail passenger service, shut down rural post offices, and deregulate air travel, reducing the quality and quantity of flights to rural and small town Canada. The Government is one thing, it is consistent in its disregard for northern Ontario. More important, the Government is consistent in its complete disregard for rural and small town Canada.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business concurs that increased competition will have a negative effect on small towns in Canada. It argues that since banks are now pursuing much larger accounts, because of deregulation, profit margins on big business lendings have been decreased. As a result, financial institutions are imposing larger and more numerous charges on small businesses. Greater competition has forced financial institutions to undertake cost-saving measures such as closing branches in small towns, leaving small businesses in the community without financial institutions with which to deal.

We in the Official Opposition are also very concerned about the need now to penalize businesses or persons who deposit a non-sufficient funds cheque into accounts. In its report to the House the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs stated: "It seems unfair to penalize someone who accepts a cheque in good faith and does not receive payment from the person who wrote the cheque. There may be other reasons why a cheque is returned unpaid, such as errors. The committee is of the view that those who issue cheques should be responsible for ensuring that payment follows. A depositor of a cheque should generally be assumed to act in good faith, and there should be no double penalty for one single error". Such a proposal makes good sense, especially for small businesses. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business is adamant that there should be no penalty imposed on the person who deposits the NSF cheque.

Does it seem fair that the owner of a small business with limited resources and facilities for verification is not only stuck with an NSF cheque but that a penalty must be paid as well for depositing such a cheque in this financial institution? It makes very little sense. Reason would dictate that the individual issuing such a cheque would be fully responsible and incur whatever penalties or costs there may be and it would be up to the financial institution to impose that charge.

As a result of this intervention I hope that the Government will consider its position with respect to rural and small-town Canada and its financial institutions. I hope it would consider its position with respect to seniors and the services that they should expect from our banking institutions, and consider its position with respect to our young children and bring the necessary changes in the Bank Act before this House for approval.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to congratulate my friend for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi) for an outstanding speech, but more to the point, I thought a very compassionate treatment of a fairly difficult issue. It was a very inciteful approach to the matter. I want to congratulate him on that.

I can particularly identify with his concluding remarks, those which make an appeal to the Government. I see the Minister in his place and I saw him making notes. He is not an uncompassionate man. I would be prepared right now, Mr. Speaker, to take my seat if he would indicate even with a nod that he has not only heard the message but will respond to the excellent and very sensible plea put forward by my colleague for Thunder Bay—Nipigon.

This legislation, as I said when I spoke myself earlier in the debate, which seems weeks ago now, is a small step in the right direction. It could be a giant leap, I say to the Minister, if he would take the counsel of the gentleman for Thunder Bay—Nipigon—I was about to put a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, I wish the Hon. Member would. He should be commenting on the Hon. Member's speech and not on the Minister's remarks. The Hon. Member is a long time Member in this House. He knows exactly what he should be doing. I just thought I would remind him. I know that he is getting to asking the Hon. Member a question.

Mr. Simmons: I thought I had mentioned the gentleman from Thunder Bay—Nipigon so often I was beginning to sound repetitive. I am prepared to do it, Mr. Speaker, even more often. I thought he gave a magnificent speech. He does not really leave a lot to question.

I guess my question for him, and it was in this context that I glanced over at the Minister who is there, being his attentive self tonight and I hope his compassionate self tonight, and I hope he would indicate to us—but let me put it to the Member, the future Minister, the Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon instead. What reason has he to believe and what hope has he got that the excellent proposal he has made for improving the legislation, not dissimilar from the proposal which I have made during my speech, and with which I very much identify. What hope has he got? Has he got some signal from the Minister that maybe we can expect the changes that he has advocated to be incorporated in the legislation before it passes this House finally.

Mr. Comuzzi: Mr. Speaker, if I can just comment that I know my friend and colleague is a long time Member of this House. As you know, Mr. Speaker, this is my first term. As a new Member, I am not used to those compliments.

An Hon. Member: There is going to be more.

Mr. Comuzzi: We should allow a little latitude with those with more seniority. I am hoping that with the recommendations which I have suggested in my intervention and in my remarks that the Minister, who happens to be in the House today, would listen to those very critical areas which we consider very important for rural and small town Canada. Those are the necessity and the needs of the services of our senior citizens in our country which require perhaps a little additional facility than is being provided to them today. In rural and small town Canada, those areas which are served by one financial institution, as I said, what you see is what you get. There is no competition in the financial institution in those small communities with 2,000, 3,000 or 4,000 people. There is only one banking facility. When we have only one banking facility, we do what the local banker insists that we do, especially if it is a small businessman in that area. When I was going to school some many years ago I can remember that it was—

An Hon. Member: Four or five.

Mr. Comuzzi: No, longer than four or five. They are very kind on this side of the House. They would come to school and they would say it is the wisdom of opening a bank account when we were young children with a paper route. We would go down to the bank and open an account. There would only be $2, $3 or $4 in that bank account. Today there are going to be bank charges on those insignificant amounts. We want to train our young people how to become responsible citizens, how to be industrious, how to do the things that are so important for them to be good Canadians and good citizens of our country. Those are the type of things and those are the type of charges that we have got to prevent.

In answer to my colleague, it is hopeful that our suggestions and our recommendations are falling upon the compassionate ears of the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Loiselle).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Beaches—Woodbine on a question or comment.

Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I also enjoyed listening to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi) and especially the comments which he made about the minimum charges that banks make on minimum deposits. I recall that my daughter, who is 18 or so, who still goes to school and works quite hard on evenings and weekends, and tries to put some money in the bank, received a letter from her bank last week, as a matter of fact, advising her that if she did not maintain a minimum of $1,000 in the bank account that there would be a service charge levelled against it.

She not only thought this was unfair but I considered it to be outrageous, to say the least, particularly when you realize that banks over the last five years have had an annual rate of some 19 per cent and that they have generated over $1 billion a year on those kinds of service charges. It seems to me that these banks should be giving people like my kid and other Canadian kids a break, rather than going after them because they do not maintain $1,000 in a bank account.

My second question to the Hon. Member is, several years ago I happened to be in rural Ontario talking to farmers, which is quite strange for a guy from the east end of Toronto but it was quite interesting. Those farmers told me of the tremendous problems which they face when a bank unilaterally closed a branch in their community. It created tremendous problems for farmers in that particular community where they relied on the bank to provide them with loans so that they could continue to operate their farms. It seems to me that if these banks are going to be allowed to operate in the way that they do in Canada, the minimum they should be required to do is provide that basic kind of service, not only to the kids in the first part of my question but certainly to the farmers in this country who have contributed a great deal to the wealth and well–being of this country and Canadians.

Mr. Comuzzi: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague on this side of the House for that question. Some years back when I was in business we called the minimum deposit the double interest type of charge. There was a period of time when the banks could only charge, if my memory serves me correctly, a certain rate of interest. In order to circumvent that rule, what they would say is that you would need a certain amount of money if you were in a small business, as I was for a number of years in Thunder Bay, but you would need to have a minimum deposit always on deposit in your bank. Those minimum deposits in a current account never drew any interest. The very fact that you had to have the minimum deposit in your line of credit meant that you were paying at that time a double rate of interest. That is what drew my mind when he was talking about his daughter of 18 years old and wanting to do banking with an institution in her community, that they would require at 18 years old to have a minimum deposit of $1,000 in the bank. It just does not make any sense.

I am sure that that $1,000 would not be drawing the rate of interest that would be going out on the other hand, which would be the loan that would be going out if she wanted to buy a car and needed $1,000. Those are the inequities that we are hoping can be addressed by the Minister of State responsible for this legislation.

The other problem that my friend also mentioned is the unilateral closing in small communities that he mentioned. I thank him very much for drawing to my attention, which I failed to do in my remarks, that small communities and farms throughout this country are affected when the local bank decides, for whatever reason, that it is not going to offer any further services.

I concur with him. I can see, Mr. Speaker, that you are getting ready to call it 10 o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am ready to call it 10 o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 is deemed to have been adopted.

AGRICULTURE—FARM MARKETING BOARDS—DISCOUNT OF FARM MARKET QUOTAS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on May 2 I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) concerning a document which I had received from the Royal Bank of Canada. This resulted from the Government's action to freeze the income of Canadian farmers at the GATT. The decision was made and the Minister of Agriculture announced on April 14 that the Government was taking away the power of the Canadian Dairy Commission to raise the price of Canadian dairy products.

I do not think with regard to products going into international trade that there was a lot of dissatisfaction with this in the dairy industry because we are part of a global community in that regard. Farmers are concerned that their income is going to be frozen until 1991 on commodities which are used domestically. As a result of the Government's decision which was announced on April 14, the Royal Bank issued a memorandum to all of its lending institutions in the Ontario region saying they were concerned that the Canadian Marketing Boards and quotas would become a sacrificial lamb in the GATT negotiations.

We know that the Board of Directors of the Royal Bank of Canada and other large banking institutions are very close to the Government, and close to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). They obviously have a lot more information on this than the average Member in the House of Commons. This memorandum to all the Royal Bank branches is especially pertinent and of great concern to the Canadian dairy industry.

The Board of Directors go on to say that because the risk is so great of the whole marketing board structure being lost, they were withdrawing immediately 50 per cent of the value of quotas for the dairy industry and other supply-management industries for calculation of debt-equity ratios. They also went on to say that no quotas would be financed over a five-year period and that it would be necessary in some cases for branches to raise interest rates.

I asked the Minister of Agriculture why he was moving in this way, what was going on and what assistance and support would be provided to these producers who were losing in some cases 50 per cent of the value of their quotas for loan purposes.

The Minister really gave very little response. I was disheartened with that because this is a real problem for dairy producers across this country who want to renew or take out a new loan having the value of their quotas discounted by 50 per cent as far as providing equity in equity-loan ratios. I think the responsibility is on the Government. The Tories campaigned hard and long last fall saying that supply-management and marketing boards would be protected under the free trade deal, under the GATT deal, and yet supply-management and marketing boards are really under the gun as a result of the Government's actions. Clearly, it is not only the decision at the GATT to freeze farmers' incomes in 1991, it is the challenge which has been launched by the United States import controls which have been placed on yoghurt and ice cream. That issue, even though it has since gone into a free trade area with the United States, now challenges the right of the Government of Canada to impose import controls on milk constituents like yoghurt and ice cream. That subject is now at the GATT.

I am told that the chance of Canada winning that challenge is something less than a 50-50 chance. We not only have the prospect of larger imports from the United States with the tariff being removed over the next several years but also import controls not being effective at controlling those milk products coming from the U.S. The dairy industry has a great concern over this. The dairy farmers of Canada have published a long document in which they refute all the arguments the Government has made with regard to their position on the whole question of the dairy industry supply-management.

This Thursday morning in room 362 East Block, we will be holding a public forum in which we will give an opportunity to dairy farmers from across Canada to make presentations and express their concerns to the Government about how serious the matter is as a result of the Government's action, both in the free trade negotiations with the United States and the decision to freeze farmers' incomes for the next 20 months until 1991.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski). My understanding of the situation is that the Ontario district of the Royal Bank has decided to value quotas at 50 per cent of their face value rather than at full value, as it has done in the past when assessing the risk of loans to producers of supply-managed commodities. Lenders often discount the expected market value of assets based on their assessment of the marketability of those assets.

In Ontario, a recent court decision limits the security value of quota based on interpretation of the Provincial Marketing Act. This clearly has nothing to do with federal Government trade policy.

I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his concerns about farm market quotas. The Hon. Member has cited an internal document from the Royal Bank outlining changes to its lending policies on quota as evidence that federal trade policy is destroying Canada's supply-management systems. A representative of the Royal Bank has stated that the language used in the circular was inflammatory and should not have been used.

The Government has never waivered in its support of supply-management. We stood by this commitment when the Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement was negotiated and we continue to stand by it in the GATT negotiations.

As the Hon. Member knows, Article 11 of the GATT gives Canada the right to operate supply-management systems. We want to strengthen and clarify our Article 11 to guarantee this right over the long term. Because of the nature of GATT, however, we cannot negotiate this one article by itself. We would achieve nothing if we did not co-operate with other GATT members in a full review of the agreement.

The recent short-term measures agreed to in Geneva represent a necessary starting point for long-term negotiations on GATT rules for agricultural trade, including Article 11. During the course of negotiations, Canada and other countries have agreed not to raise any support prices to producers which are set above international market levels. These measures may not be perfectly fair by country or commodity, but they are necessary to launch long-term negotiations.

Our national dairy policy does not operate in isolation from the rest of the world. There has been recognition in this round of talks that domestic support programs can lead to international trade distortion, so some short-term adjustments may be required to guarantee a favourable long-term outcome.

It is unfortunate that these short-term measures and their impact on our dairy industry have been misinterpreted. We do not know yet what the latest cost of production data for industrial milk will show. Therefore, we do not know if the short-term measures will have any impact on the price of industrial milk.

The Government has been generous and flexible with dairy producers in the past. The target price for industrial milk is now $46.06 per hectolitre. It has remained at that level since February 1988, even though the cost of production formula indicated decreases on August 1, 1988, and February 1, 1989.

We have maintained the existing price because we were aware that drought was affecting feed costs in parts of the country. I can assure Members that banks do not set prices for milk quota. The value of the quota is set by producers based on what they are willing to pay for it. In Ontario, the average cost of buying dairy quota represents less than 7 per cent of the total farm assets. Therefore, the rest of the dairy farm assets are available as collateral if borrowing is required.

The Government remains committed to working with dairy producers and processors. It is the continuing co-operation of all participants that best assures the long-term success of Canada's dairy industry.

TRANSPORT—VIA RAIL—CONTINUED SERVICE OF ATLANTIC LIMITED

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, as you are no doubt aware for many months, indeed going back for many years, I have been promoting the case for a substantial rail transportation system in the Dominion of Canada. I wish to reinforce the position that I have taken over that period of time with the Minister as a result of a question that I put to him in the latter part of May. I brought to his attention the fact that one of the major trains out of the maritime provinces, the Atlantic Limited from Halifax to Montreal, was a well utilized train.

The important thing to recognize at this juncture in our efforts to attempt to address the deficit, which indeed we as Atlantic Canadians are no less prepared than any other Canadian to accept our responsibility for, is the fact that the rail transportation system in our nation has been something that we have long recognized in Atlantic Canada as one of the necessary links for us as Canadians to identify ourselves with in the rest of the nation.

This nation was forged on the system of the railway transportation links. In Atlantic Canada, it is not only a matter of building up our highway system or replacing one mode of transportation with another, as the Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte (Mr. Thompson) has repeatedly pointed out to the House of Commons. For a great many people in Atlantic Canada, it is the only communication link with members of the family who might have moved west because of varying economic reasons, or whatever the happenstance may be that they found it necessary to move to other parts of Canada.

I want to bring to the attention of the Minister, who rightly recognizes the concern of a mounting deficit on the part of rail transportation, that as responsible Canadians we must live up to our responsibility to future generations and address the mounting deficits. There has to be a continuity of our association in Atlantic Canada with the rest of Canada, and it cannot be arbitrarily cut off by a discontinuation of what we in Atlantic Canada have grown to accept as part of our historic relation to confederation.

I know you will relate to that, Mr. Speaker, being a westerner. To succeeding generations of Canadians who have grown up and travelled from one sea to the other, the rail communication links have meant a whole lot in our ability to relate to one another as Canadians. Indeed, no one on this side of the House would suggest that we continue with rail transportation links that are not well utilized, or where there are realistic alternative means of transportation.

• (2215)

I want to hasten to add that road transportation from Atlantic Canada, the Maritimes, to Upper Canada is not a realistic alternative from our perspective. Indeed, it is recognized that in the Maritime provinces there is a population of approximately 1.7 million people and that in the two major transportation links, rail transportation and water transportation, there was in excess of 475,000 people who travelled just last year. That number is growing every year. Indeed, it represents far more than the figure of 3 per cent of the population that the Government often uses as an example of the few who are utilizing the rail transportation link.

It is with that in mind that I try to reinforce that in Atlantic Canada the number of people who utilize the main rail transportation link between that part of the country and the rest of the nation is far in excess of the 3 per cent figure. Practically half a million people in relationship to a population of 1.7 million in the Maritime provinces use that link. The majority of those are not from Upper Canada but are Maritimers who are travelling students, elderly people, people with no alternate means of transportation and individuals who want to continue their links with the rest of Canada. They depend on that rail transportation system to identify with the rest of Canada as being Canadians from Atlantic Canada. I want to reinforce that it is of no small consequence to those of us who live in the Maritime provinces. It is important that we recognize that there is a substantial number of Maritimers who depend upon that rail transportation system as being their support, their raison d'être, for maintaining their identity as Canadians in this great dominion of ours.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett) for speaking out on behalf of the Atlantic region, which region he represents as a Member of this place.

As he knows, on May 3, 1989, VIA was asked to prepare and submit by June 30, 1989, a new business plan that represents its new budget. This business plan will set out a course of action that sets out the budget realities. The new reference levels which decrease gradually from $541 million in 1989–90 to $250 million in 1993–94 reflect the Government's commitment to expenditure reduction and restraint.

Options which the Government expects the corporation to consider in developing its plan include productivity improvements, fare increases, the takeover of services by other interested parties, service reductions and route abandonments. No options are being ruled out. The one restriction that has been placed on such options is that rail passenger services to truly isolated communities along remote routes will be maintained.

As my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) has stated, no decisions have been taken on the long-term future of rail passenger services in Canada. The impact of the new VIA budget cannot be determined until we hear from VIA with its new revised plan. Once thing is clear, however, these subsidies have been disproportionately large when compared to other modes. Last year alone they reached an unprecedented $641 million. This has been due to a large extent to the low level of VIA ridership. Rail passenger services currently retain only 3 per cent of the total Canadian intercity passenger traffic.

The air mode has a market share of 7 per cent. The automobile enjoys the lion's share of the market at 84 per cent, demonstrating Canadians' love affair with their cars.

Even the bus mode has a greater share of the market, being twice that of VIA, at 6 per cent. These figures clearly demonstrate that Canadians can no longer afford a service which is costing more and more and being used less and less.

ORDER IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS

TABLING OF APPOINTMENTS AND REFERENCES

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table in both official languages a number of Order in Council appointments which were made by the Government pursuant to Standing Order 110(1). These will be deemed referred to the appropriate Standing Committees, a list of which is attached.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-253, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (cattle and other animals).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a Bill to amend the Criminal Code in respect to cattle and animals. It has been drawn to my attention that in many areas of the country, dogs have been running at large and attacking livestock. This Bill simply constitutes a lawful excuse for a person to protect his cattle or farmyard animals.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we might have permission to revert to Tabling of Documents. I inadvertently neglected to table the reply, in both official languages, to four petitions. If I could have that permission I would be prepared to do so now.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the request of the Minister. Is there agreement?

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

BICENTENNIAL OF CONSTITUTION

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you would find that there is unanimous consent for me to put the following motion immediately and for it to be voted upon without debate. On behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) I move:

That the Speaker of the House of Commons convey to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the President of the Senate, of the Congress of the United States of America, the good wishes of the Canadian House of Commons on the occasion of the bicentennial anniversary of the Constitution of that Republic.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say on behalf of the New Democratic Party that we support this motion unanimously.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, this is an excellent initiative of the Government. We just hope that at some time in the future it will do the same for France which is celebrating its two hundredth anniversary also.

Mr. Lewis: When?

Mr. Gauthier: This year.

Mr. Lewis: I wish to thank my hon. friend for the suggestion and I will check that out immediately.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, on the same point, given the love shared for the Americas, I would hope that the Government will use this resolution as a jumping off point for some support for the quincentennial of the arrival on this continent of Christopher Columbus. The United States Congress has already set a committee to do something about it. They are doing something in several other countries of the Americas and we are doing nothing.

Mr. McDermid: He missed Canada by a few thousand miles.

Mr. Dick: We don't have Columbus Day here either.

Mr. Speaker: I am always, of course, in the hands of the House. Christopher Columbus' arrival was a very important event, as are some other things that have been mentioned, but I think perhaps we should have such a discussion in another place or we may be going on for quite a long time this morning. However, as I say , I am prepared to extend regards, felicitations and congratulations to anyone that the House asks me to do that for.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments regarding Christopher Columbia. However, I simply want to remind the House that the first Europeans to this continent, of course, were the Vikings and I think we ought to speak of the role that they played in the exploration of this country.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg Transcona (Mr. Blaikie) is not in the House this morning, but if he was I know that he would rise on a point of order and point out that while the Scots have welcomed a lot of people, nonetheless we could not have the country without them.

Does the Hon. Government House Leader have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 on behalf of a number of Kamloops residents who are dismayed that the Government is changing the Unemployment Insurance Act to require that financing for training be taken from unemployment insurance funds.

They are also concerned because this means that higher premiums will have to be paid by employees as well as employers. I do not think we have seen the end of the impact that this change will have on the small business community of the country. The petitioners are calling upon the Government to come to its senses and back off from this regressive step.

ALLEGED MILITARIZATION OF ECONOMY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by residents of Kamloops, British Columbia, who point out their concern regarding the Government's support for the growing militarization of our economy. They go on at some length to point out the details of their concern that we seem to be moving our economy to one which is tied more closely to the American military complex.

The petitioners call upon the Government to back off from this involvement and to encourage the diversion of military spending to socially important areas which create jobs while strengthening Canada's commitment to peace.

ECOLOGICAL STUDY OF CARMANAH VALLEY

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions on behalf of approximately 18,000 Canadians. These 18,000 Canadians recognize that the Carmanah Valley, approximately mid-way along the West Coast Trail, is carpeted with an ancient forest of cedar, hemlock and Sitka spruce, the spruce especially being outstanding examples of their species including the tallest in the world and the tallest known tree in Canada, a tree 312 feet, taller than a 30-storey building or the Parliament Buildings.

The petitioners submit that in order to preserve the Sitka spruce ecology in perpetuity their entire natural forest valley habitat must be protected, for logging in the watershed will increase run-off erosion and open up the tall trees to the force of the wind which inevitably causes the ancient trees to be blown down.

The petitioners therefore ask that a full assessment of the ecological significance of the Carmanah Valley be undertaken by Environment Canada, including the merits and values as a tourist attraction with extended trails from the West Coast Trail and that pending the results of these studies the federal Government enter into negotiations with the provincial Government to protect and preserve the entire valley as an addition to the Pacific Rim National Park.

Point of Order—Mr. Riis

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 45 could be made an order for return, the return would be tabled immediately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 45 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

AVAILABLE FUNDS

Question No. 45—Mr. Caccia:

1. For each of the past five years for which data is available, has the government provided money to companies for the exploration or development of oil and, if so (a) under what programs (b) in what amounts?

2. In each of the past five years for which data is available, has revenue been foregone by the government by way of tax breaks to companies for oil exploration and development and, if so, in what amounts?

3. In each of the past five years for which data is available, has revenue been foregone by the government with respect to companies engaged in energy conservation or renewable energy research and, if so, in what amounts?

Return tabled.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a very short point of order before we get on with some very important legislation.

I simply want to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and the attention of the House that having had a chance to read the report of Question Period in yesterday's Hansard, I noted that the Minister of Housing (Mr. Redway) referred to the infrequency with which the Member for Surrey North (Mr. Karpoff) raised questions regarding the housing crisis in the country. If we had the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, you can rest assured that we would be asking questions every day of the Minister of Housing because of his abysmal showing as the Minister of that portfolio. I simply wanted to correct the record in that respect.

CANADIAN ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John McDermid (for the Minister of the Environment) moved that Bill C–22, an Act to amend the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this opportunity today to speak on second reading of Bill C–22, an Act to amend the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. This Bill will correct an unfortunate drafting error which is in fact holding up Canada's participation in the fight to protect the ozone layer.

As we all know, CEPA became law on June 30, 1988. That legislation was designed to protect the health and environment of Canadians. The Canadian Environmental Protection Act provides the legislative basis for coming to terms with the complex issues of air and water pollution, toxic substances management, waste disposal, acid rain and climate warming.

The new Act embodies an ecosystem vision of environmental protection. It addresses pollution problems on land, in water and through all layers of the atmosphere. The Act recognizes that ecosystems extend beyond national borders. It provides the legislative basis to enable us to control international environmental degradation through restrictions on the import and export of dangerous substances and through the regulation of Canadian sources of transboundary air pollution.

The Act deals with organic and inorganic substances, the products of biotechnology, emissions, effluence and wastes. It gives the Government the authority to impose strict controls at each stage of a toxic substance's life cycle.

The Act is designed to protect against environmental contamination from toxic substances. According to CEPA, a substance is toxic if it threatens human health or the environment. The Act adopts a two–pronged approach to managing toxic substances. First, the regulating of those substances now in the Canadian marketplace, many of which we know little about. Second, controlling the introduction of substances that are new to Canada.

Once a substance is found to be toxic, an order is made to add this substance to Schedule I of the Act. The order is effective on the date a regulation pertaining to the substance takes effect. Regulations may address any aspect of the life cycle of a substance, including manufacture and import, storage, handling, packaging, distribution, transportation, sale, use, release and disposal.

The Canadian Environmental Protection Act builds on earlier environmental statutes. These include, among others, the Clean Air Act, the Ocean Dumping Control Act and the Environmental Contaminants Act.

CEPA incorporated the various regulations developed under these laws; regulations dealing with lead, mercury, vinyl chloride, and asbestos in air emissions; with phosphorous in detergents; with lead in gasoline; with PCBs, mercury and mirex. These regulations were intended to be applied upon promulgation of the Act on June 30, 1988 in accordance with the CEPA enforcement and compliance policy.

At the same time, many of the substances dealt with in the regulations were included on the list of toxic substances in Schedule I to the Act.

There are nine such substances, PCBs, mirex, polybrominated biphenyls, CFCs, polychlorinated terphenyls, asbestos, lead, mercury and vinyl chloride.

It is in this process of listing, on Schedule I, substances found to be toxic which concerns us here today.

To be clear, Schedule I identifies those substances which can contaminate the environment and thus should be controlled. Listing a substance allows us to strengthen the earlier regulatory requirements and/or develop further controls as necessary.

On that basis, the Government ratified, within hours of the promulgation of CEPA, the so-called Montreal protocol for the protection of the ozone layer. On that basis as well, the Government announced on February 20, 1989, a national program to eliminate CFCs from Canada within the next 10 years.

Unfortunately, the basis for those actions has been compromised. According to our legal advice, the inclusion of a list of toxic substances in Schedule I in CEPA, as passed, was not appropriate. The Act requires that substances be added to the Schedule only through an order of the Governor in Council. Orders are based on evidence of the toxic effects of the substance in question. They take effect once regulations are developed. Thus, the nine substances, to which I have already referred, because of the absence of such an order, probably had no legitimacy.

This created several dilemmas, not the least of which was a regulatory hiatus, where the current regulations dealing with the nine substances in question may have been unenforceable.

Faced with this advice, the Government took immediate steps to address this situation. Earlier this spring, the Government republished the regulations in the form of interim orders under CEPA. By virtue of Section 35, interim orders have the effect of a regulation but for a lifespan of only two years.

The Government also reviewed the various options for correcting the list of toxic substances and, in particular, ensuring that we could move ahead to meet our national and global obligations to further control CFCs.

The most obvious option was to complete an assessment of the environmental and health impacts of each of the nine substances. Using existing scientific data, both Canadian and international, the Government could prepare assessment reports, publish summaries of these findings, consult with various stakeholders and develop the appropriate recommendations for a Governor in Council order. We could then publish regulations for comments. The difficulty with this approach was and is its timing. We are already seized with assessing 44 existing substances recommended as priorities by an independent advisory panel. We are also completing our assessment work done on dioxins and furans. We are assessing benzine, waste oils and polyaromatic hydrocarbons among others.

We hope to finalize the assessments of at least nine substances over the next few months and to publish regulatory controls as appropriate.

Quite frankly, we would prefer to concentrate our efforts on evaluating the new or the unknown, rather than reinventing the wheel on those substances already deemed to be toxic enough to justify regulation under earlier laws.

Our preferred solution is the one presented here today, that of amending the legislation to modify the effective date of an order adding substances to the Schedule, in effect, removing the link to the publication of regulations. This change, once approved, would allow the Governor in Council to make an order creating the list of toxic substances and thereby providing a basis for the regulations in effect prior to June, 1988, under earlier legislation and for any new regulations relative to the nine substances which I have already identified.

Quick consideration of Bill C-22 will allow us to persevere in our efforts to develop controls for additional substances. Quick consideration of Bill C-22 will also allow us to meet the July 1, 1989 international deadline for action to protect the ozone layer.

Many of us, and perhaps most of us, in this House share the growing concern about the changes taking place in the gases which make up the earth's atmosphere. In particular, we are monitoring the disappearance of the ozone layer which protects the earth from the impact of the ultraviolet rays of the sun. The international scientific community has concluded that CFCs, a synthetic chemical developed in the 1930s, are responsible for modifying the ozone layer.

Canada acted in the mid 1970s to reduce the use of CFCs. Using the formal Environmental Contaminants Act, Canada developed regulations controlling the import, use and manufacture of CFCs. As of June 30, 1988, those regulations were to have been transferred and applied under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. CFCs were included on the list of toxic substances under the Act.

We now need to move ahead and strengthen our control of CFCs and in fact eliminate them altogether. As I have described, the legislative basis for these actions has been questioned. We propose, through Bill C–22, to correct that.

This Government's commitment to protecting the well–being of this planet is strong. We believe in strong domestic action to control toxic contamination. We believe also in the need for strong international action. The fight against the depletion of the ozone layer is a case in point.

I ask the House, therefore, to approve Bill C–22 and to correct the legal technicality now inhibiting Canada's actions to control CFCs. Parliamentary study and approval of CEPA, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, was exemplary in terms of the co–operation and the positive contributions made by all Parties to improve the legislation. I would ask this House to continue that tradition in approving this amendment.

• (1130)

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am a little amazed that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Clark) has not put this government foul–up in context. According to a phone call the Minister is here in Parliament. I do not know why he is not here to speak on his own legislation. On February 20 the Minister issued a major press release in which he stated:

> I am tomorrow issuing draft national regulations to curb CFC use.

When the original Canadian Environmental Protection Act was introduced, it was condemned widely by environmentalists as being badly worded, bewildering, and confused.

The very wording problem that has been exposed and is now to be rectified as a result of the amendments under Bill C–22 was applauded by the then Minister of the Environment. Several groups and organizations appeared before the committee and pointed out that if the wording in the Act were not cleaned up we would see a situation where a number of specific improvements could not be applied.

What did the then Minister of the Environment have to say about that criticism? During the course of the committee hearings the then Minister, Mr. McMillan, said:

> We do not have at present, under either of these bodies of law or under any others authority to control, cap or reduce production, prohibit new production facilities or control imports of ozone–depleting substances from specific countries, for example, non–parties; nor do we have the authority to control exports to Pacific countries.
> We will have all those powers under CEPA if Parliament passes it as it is.

That was a statement made by the Conservative Minister of the Environment a year and a half ago when we were asked to pass the badly worded Canadian Environmental Protection Act in the House.

We now see that the Minister has recognized the folly of his own legislation and has brought forward amendments to attempt to address the specific shortcomings of the chlorofluorocarbon regulations.

In February presumably, if we take him at his word, the Minister did begin examination of the regulatory process. I cannot understand why he did not discover at that time that because of the wording of the Act we would not be able to meet our obligations under the Montreal Protocol. Our obligations under the Montreal Protocol begin in approximately 10 days. Now we are being asked in a shoddy, haphazard effort similar to the effort that was not shown, in so far as cleaning up the original wording of CEPA, to pass this new regulation change with very little involvement or assessment by the 1,800 environmental groups across this country that have a particular interest in what CFCs are doing to the ozone. In particular, the Minister is ignoring the suggestion by the Liberal Party that while we are moving to implement a cut–back in CFC use as agreed by the Montreal Protocol we should be examining the use of CFCs and their disposal in relation to refrigeration.

As we speak there are approximately one million refrigerators produced by General Electric, of which 25,000 are being produced in Canada by Camco in Hamilton that are being repaired because of a faulty manufacturing process in relation to the CFCs. They are being drained irresponsibly and with great damage into the environment.

The Minister would have us believe that Canada is at the forefront of reduction of CFCs in the world. Yet, he brings forward an amendment which, albeit we will support because it should be supported, should have been brought in three months ago at the time when the Minister first discovered this gross error in drafting perpetrated on Parliament by his own Party.

He should have brought this amendment forward and he should have permitted a full public examination. Instead we are being told that we must pass this Bill by tomorrow or the next day because if we do not the Minister will not be able to have a press conference announcing that he has met his obligations under the Montreal Protocol. If the Minister is going to start doing and stop talking—he has been Minister for almost six month—he should start examining in greater detail the implications of the unfettered use of CFCs in relation to refrigeration. In particular, he should know that industries, private individuals, in fact anybody, can drain CFCs directly into the atmosphere at the moment with absolutely no federal regulations to govern that situation. What kind of a climate are we actually creating?

[Translation]

Despite the Minister's lavish comments on the Montreal Protocol, Canada is currently welcoming to its Eastern Townships second-hand refrigerators that are being off-loaded in dumps all over the place and are draining CFCs into the atmosphere, in absolute contravention of the Montreal Protocol. And the Minister was asked when he would be making changes in the regulations under the Environmental Protection Act—why isn't he introducing regulations governing CFCs in refrigerators?

[English]

The Minister has the power. Why does he not exercise it? He has the power under Section 35 of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act to determine that the absolute negligence of companies that are prepared to allow CFCs to leak into the atmosphere should be the subject of an environmental emergency. We are talking about the coolant of one million refrigerators being leaked into the atmosphere, yet the Minister of the Environment refuses to do anything. The Minister would have us believe that he is very determined to meet his obligations under the Montreal Protocol. What has the Minister been doing since February 20? What has the Minister been doing since he stated:

> I am tomorrow issuing draft regulations to curb CFC use by more than 85 per cent.

Instead at literally the twelfth hour—that is 11 days before the date of the implementation of the Montreal Protocol—we are being told we have to pass this Bill today no questions asked.

In a report Greenpeace had a few things to say yesterday about CFCs. It gave a fairly damning indictment of the activity or lack of activity of the federal Government in relation to CFCs. What Greenpeace said bears repeating. Friends of the Earth that also has a non-governmental, non-biased, objective assessment of the federal Government's environmental record today is saying that the clock is ticking in relation to the hundreds of thousands of refrigerators. The clock is ticking in relation to the fact that as a matter of public policy the Government is creating a situation where we are being asked to welcome with open arms used, broken down, and leaky refrigerators from the United States.

Surely, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act has been drafted in such a way to permit the Government to act, not only in relation to our obligations under the Montreal Protocol but in particular in relation to our obligations under the Government's much vaunted commitment to the environment.

The Government and the Minister like to say that they play a leadership role. In early May of this year the first meeting of the Parties at the Vienna Convention and the Montreal Protocol were held in Helsinki, Finland. One of the issues discussed was a rapid phase-out of CFCs. They also looked at the specific issue of how to help developing countries in reducing and eliminating their use of CFCs.

We in the have countries have created many of the problems, and we are now putting a stop to the expansion of the manufacture of things like CFCs at the same time that the have not countries are saying "hey, wait a minute. You created the problem. You put the holes in our ozone layer, and now you are telling us that we cannot have the same kind of progress in relation to our Gross National Product as you have had". The have countries have milked the earth, and now we are telling the have not countries, the Third World countries, that it is their turn to bring forward regulations. That will obviously cost money.

• (1140)

At that meeting in Helsinki, Mostafa Tolba, head of the United Nations Environmental Program, suggested a specific initiative which would have created an international climate fund to assist developing countries to meet their obligations imposed on them by developing countries, for the most part under treaties and agreements like the Montreal Protocol.

As a result of that conference, Norway immediately offered to spend 0.1 per cent of its Gross National Product, approximately $105 million, on the international climate fund to save the world and to give developing countries the capacity to impose regulations that we want to impose upon ourselves. Why did Canada refuse to follow Norway's lead?

Let us examine the funding for CFC regulations that were gazetted on April 22, 1989. How much has the federal Government committed to spending on efforts to combat CFCs here in Canada? Is it in the millions? Is it in the billions? Is it half a million? It is a paltry, pathetic $223,000 from a Government that until a few short weeks ago was prepared to spend $10 billion on nuclear powered submarines.

Mr. Manley: That's even less than Marcel's book.

Ms. Copps: That is right. It might be a bit more, unless the book goes into repeat copies, but that is not likely to happen. It is approximately the combined cost of the appearance of the Minister of Communications at the Oscar ceremony and the cost of his book.

In my opinion and in the opinion of the Liberal Party, the Government is not committing funding and it is in fact cutting funding to CFC reduction and other specific strategies to clean up the environment because of what it has stated.

[Translation]

On a number of occasions during the election campaign the Prime Minister himself stated that the environment was the Tories' No. One concern. But then you look at the amount of money allocated to meet our obligations under the Montreal Protocol and it's $233,000 annually. That's laughable, Mr. Speaker, it's practically an insult. This government was ready to spend $10 billion on nuclear submarines, but it's going to pay $233,000 to meet our obligations under the Montreal Protocol! And now here they are urging us to pass this legislation right away, without any debate, without hearing from any groups like Friends of the Earth, who are currently busy exposing the complete bankruptcy of the federal government's environment policy. The government doesn't want to hear from Greenpeace either, which just yesterday announced that they were completely opposed to the Conservative policies, which talked a lot about the problem of CFCs but did very little.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that all this wearies the Hon. Member for Brampton (Mr. McDermid). He isn't interested in the fact that the ozone layer is in the process of being eaten away. But I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that many thousands—and even many millions—of Canadians would like to be able to breathe good Canadian air 50 years from now. They would like to be able to live in a country that was not overheating. And at the present time our own manufacture of products like chlorofluorocarbons, for example, is destroying the atmosphere's ability to absorb distant light, Mr. Speaker. We are going to create a situation where in 75 years this planet, including Canada, will be overheated to crisis point—we are seeing that already when every summer the earth heats up another degree or two or more. We are seeing—

[English]

It is the dog days of summer. They are increasing by leaps and bounds. It has very little to do with natural climatic change but has very much to do with the damage we are inflicting on ourselves.

If the Government is really serious about a major assault on chlorofluorocarbons, it should do more than it has. It has brought amendments before us which are mere housekeeping amendments to resolve a situation the Government created for itself by asking Parliament to pass a poorly worded and indefensible amendment to the Canada Environmental Protection Act. If the Government is truly serious, it should couple these amendments with other specific initiatives relating to refrigerants and CFCs escaping into the environment on a daily basis. Frankly, I doubt that the Conservatives will move in such a direction. As far as they are concerned, the philosophy of their Party and their Government is that everything is driven by the almighty buck.

Let us go back for a moment and examine statements made by various Conservative Members at a time when we were in a position to bring forward strong and specific legislation relating to CFCs and refrigerants. The then Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake, in a debate on a motion held on March 8, 1988, had the following to say about the fact that were killing ourselves with our own CFCs:

> Certainly, research is fundamental to getting environmentally safe substitutes to market. But given the potential profits, is this not an activity that would be best left to the private sector?

The private sector means companies like General Electric, a company which is right now in the process of leaking CFCs from one million refrigerators into the North American environment. If the private sector can do this cheaper and without the added expense of environmental protection laws, what incentive would there be for it to do it in a way that would be environmentally sustainable? The private sector looks for the bottom line.

Speaking of specific research, a representative of the Government of Canada, when confronted with this absolutely scandalous corporate behaviour of leaking CFCs into the environment, said that no technology exists which can actually effectively recycle CFCs. That is an absolute falsehood.

I do not have the resources of a multi-million dollar Department at my disposal. I have three people working in my office in Ottawa and two working in my office in Hamilton, and it did not take me that long to get in touch with Roger Dumais, the regional sales manager for ThermaFlo in Springfield, Massachusetts, a company with capacity to reclaim and recharge chlorofluorocarbons. This company recycles chlorofluorocarbons from used refrigerators to other units.

Notwithstanding the Government's claim that no technology exists, the brochure of this company says that now it is easy to recycle refrigerants, protect our atmosphere and, according to the brochure, save money. This company has developed the most effective, low cost, portable CFC reclamation and charging unit on the market today. It can be used in automobiles with air conditioners, buses, trucks, room air conditioners, refrigerators, commercial chillers, and virtually any refrigeration system utilizing CFCs as a refrigerant. At the moment this very company is in discussion with companies such as General Electric, so the technology exists. How can the Minister possibly justify a statement by his own Department that no specific technology exists to reclaim chlorofluorocarbons? That is simply false.

It is no wonder that the public confidence in the political process is undermined when we have a Minister of the Environment who is essentially the head of the Department that is spreading falsehoods about the capacity to reclaim chlorofluorocarbons.

When the Minister comes before the House, as he has by way of his Parliamentary Secretary today, and asks us to pass those specific amendments with respect to CFCs, we say yes. We want to support the Minister, even though it took him approximately three or four months to find out that his own legislation was not up to scratch. If he is to introduce specific legislation in relation to CFCs, surely he should deal with the over-all objectives of the reduction, not only in the manufacture and new production of CFCs but also in the recycling of CFCs as they are currently being used by millions of Canadians.

That is why today in committee we have suggested that in the course of approving this legislation we would like to hear from groups such as Greenpeace, the Canadian Environmental Law Association, Canadian Environmental Network, and Friends of the Earth to see what suggestions they may have to improve and ameliorate the legislation before us.

I must say again that I do not know to whom the Government is talking and with whom the Minister is consulting. He certainly does not seem to be consulting very much with environmental groups. If he had consulted with them, he would have known that according to a release which came out this morning from Friends of the Earth the technology is currently available to cut production of CFCs by over 60 per cent in three years and eliminated by 1995.

As we have stated both in committee and in the House today, the Government also has the capacity to use its emergency powers under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act to ban CFCs in aerosols, rug underpadding, and foam packaging immediately. The capacity is there. It is a fraud to state that the Government is not able to proceed in this area. The Government could move immediately to ban CFCs in polystyrene foam insulation, solvents for metal cleaning, and flexible foam by July 1, 1990. It would still have the capacity over the next year to move into other areas. The Government has the capacity to ban the use of CFCs in new air conditioners which are not hermetically sealed. If they are not hermetically sealed, they will leak, and leak they do.

If the Government moved immediately, using its powers of emergency under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, to ban the use of CFCs in new air conditioners which are not hermetically sealed as of the 1991 model year, it would begin to address the problem that it states it wants to address. It could ban CFCs used as solvents in the electronics industry and those used for sterilization by July 1, 1991.

Refrigerators are being brought in by the thousands and are finding their way into dumps all over the Eastern Townships. The Government must require recycling, recovery, system modifications, and selective replacement with alternative chillers by 1992 in the area of refrigeration.

Without those specific initiatives which are within the purview of the Minister under the specific emergency powers that are accorded him under CEPA, without those specific changes we are talking about merely window dressing. That was pointed out very specifically in the brief which was released on Monday by Greenpeace. That particular brief was made known to a Government that obviously does not appear interested in knowing about environmentally safe alternatives for CFCs, and that reduction in a major way is certainly not only feasible but possible and should be done if we are to deal with the problem of ozone depletion. If we do not, we will not be able to breathe.

The Government is talking about phasing it in in a gradual way. The Government is refusing to assist Third World countries by specific financial obligations. It is setting aside a paltry sum of $220,000. It is a farce and a joke.

The Government wants Canadians to believe that its number one priority is the environment. Yet, it is allowing CFCs to escape into the environment on a daily basis with no specific legislation to prevent it. Not only is the Government letting those CFCs escape, but it is actually setting up a situation where, under the almighty dollar of the Conservative philosophy, we are encouraging companies to import refrigerators into Canada for disposal. Whether or not the refrigerators are imported, CFCs will potentially escape into the atmosphere unless Governments globally deal with the issue of recycling as well as manufacturing.

I thought, until I started to examine the dossier a little more closely, that the statements of concern expressed by the Government were a forerunner to specific urgent and emergent activity of the Government. Instead, it seems that it never wants to act until it is dragged pushing and screaming into making specific changes.

The Ontario Government made its most recent announcement on February 16 with respect to a plan to phase out CFCs. The British Columbia Government followed suit on the same day as the federal Government. Once again, the federal Government did not take the lead but merely followed.

[Translation]

And I think that the Minister of the Environment, who's supposed to care about the Montreal Protocol—he's an example of complete bankruptcy as far as the environment is concerned. We know very well, Mr. Speaker, that it's in the Minister of the Environment's home province that all those refrigerators imported from the United States can be found. It's in the Eastern Townships where there are at this time thousands of second-hand refrigerators, brought in from the United States and dumped here.

It's the Minister himself who claims he's proud, oh so proud, of the Montreal Protocol, and who said in February that he would lead the world in reducing the use of CFCs everywhere on this planet.

I think, Mr. Speaker, the reason why he is not here in the House to discuss his own plans with respect to CFCs is because he is ashamed that he cannot—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin) on a point of order.

Mr. Marin: Mr. Speaker, I agree with our colleague who for the past twenty minutes has been discussing the importance of the environment. However, perhaps it would be best if she stopped making political hay of this issue and directing unfounded accusations at the government and other agencies.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. It is a point of debate. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: I'm not making political hay of this issue. I'm sorry but I'm a politician!

The point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that it is not I who mentioned the Montreal Protocol. Unlike the Minister of the Environment, I have not claimed since February to be deeply concerned about this issue, so concerned as to move quickly to draft amendments respecting CFCs to ensure that our obligations under the Montreal protocol were met. It was the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) who stated to those willing to listen that his primary consideration was his and Canada's obligation with respect to the Montreal Protocol. It's now— What day is it today?

• (1200)

Mr. Gauthier: June 20.

Ms. Copps: It's now June 20. February, March, April and May have come and gone. Now five months later, in June, all of a sudden the Minister discovers just ten days before he must meet his obligations under the Montreal Protocol that he does not have the means to do so because the legislation was poorly drafted in the first place. We commented on this fact when the legislation was drafted in 1987 and 1988, but the former minister insisted that we meet all of our obligations along with the passage of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act.

Mr. Speaker, if the Minister himself wants to show that he is truly concerned about reducing chloroflurocarbons, as he has stated on numerous occasions following the signing by Canada of the Montreal Protocol, why is he not prepared at the same time to introduce amendments respecting the chloroflurocarbons in refrigerators currently found in the Eastern Townships? Why is he not prepared to ban their use under section 35 of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act? He has the authority to take this kind of action. He has the authority to move immediately to prohibit one million refrigerators, including refrigerators in the United States— General Electric is currently repairing 25,000 of its refrigerators at its CAMCO subsidiary in the riding of Hamilton. General Electric is repairing these refrigerators without realizing that CFC leaks are occurring. Ours planet's ozone layer is endangered. If asking the Environment Minister to protect Canada's climate and atmosphere is viewed as making political hay of this issue—

An Hon. Member: No.

Ms. Copps: I will continue to make political hay of this issue because personally I'm not convinced by the Envrionment Minister's nice Words. Despite the statement made by the Minister on February 20 and his other statements in which the envrionment has been made the number one priority, the only way the Minsiter can succeed in convincing me is by taking concrete steps to reduce the use of CFCs in Canada.

We are seeing no evidence of this today. On the contrary, the Minister himself did not get involved in the matter until the eleventh hour, just before the Montreal Protocol was set to come into force. He arrives here in the House claiming that the legislation must be adopted as is or Canada will not be able to meet its obligations under the Montreal Protocol. I am willing to go along with the proposed amendments, but I think they should be adopted along with others that would provide greater environmental protection in Canada and would touch on international issues.

We know that following the signing of the Montreal Protocol, a meeting was held this spring in Helsinki to examine how developed countries could help developing nations to meet their obligations respecting the production of CFCs. Norway suggested that all countries contribute 1 per cent of their Gross National Product to an international climate fund.

Mr. Speaker, CFCs pose a threat to the whole universe. When CFCs leak from a refrigerator in Canada, our country is not the only one to be affected!

What we are considering, really, is the whole planet's atmosphere and, for that reason, Canada has a vested interest in helping under-developed countries to meet their obligations concerning CFCs as well as their obligations under other protocols dealing with climatic issues. But Canada has refused to give so much as penny and Mr. Wilson's last budget shows that the government is even reducing aid to Third-World countries.

Canada, as a developed country, has contributed to the problem in a big way and a lot of the CFCs in the environment come from Canada and the other developed countries. Now that our economy is developed, we would ask the Third World countries to stop developing, but we are not ready to assist them financially. That is another question that could have been raised when the Minister came to the House and asked us to amend the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. He could have raised the question of financial aid to the Third World.

He could also have raised the matter of research, because as far as research goes, Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that the Conservatives' policy is that everything must be done by the private sector. We have even seen, since this government has taken power, thousands and thousands of dollars for research on alternative energy forms being cut. We have witnessed, two or three months ago, the closing of all the offices with responsabilities in the area of alternative energy forms in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. At the same time, the Minister of the Environment comes here and asks us to meet our obligations under the Montreal protocol while his own government is cutting funds for research on alternate energy forms. How can we then believe what the government says on this matter. Why not ask the advice and support of environmental groups such as Friends of the Earth? Why not ask Greenpeace for expertise?

Why, for example, do we not ask the Thermaflow Company, from Massachussetts for their expert advice. Why not launch an appeal to all the stakeholders in the country? Why were we forced into a situation where we now have no choice but to say: "We are not in a position to speak with anyone because the Minister has not done his homework. He has not been doing his job since February 20th. If he had, we could have held these discussions in the month of March, in the month of April, in the month of May. We were available, we have been sitting and discussing the environment every week. But we have not heard a word from the Minister before the month of June. On May 31st, there was an urgent meeting in his office but, after that, we waited 20 days before the Bill was discussed in the House.

We would like to work with the groups that are the most knowledgeable in these areas. Yet all we see, is a Minister who's quite willing to make speeches, who's quite willing to hold cocktails to show off everything that he's been doing about the environment—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. She has but one minute left. I would appreciate it if she would wind down.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I thought I was wound up.

In closing, I must say that we certainly intend to support this legislation. We are very disappointed that the Minister failed in his responsibility last February to bring this matter properly to the attention of the House by way of a full Bill.

However, in the meantime, cognizant of our obligations under the Montreal Protocol, we hope to have a chance to hear from Friends of the Earth, Greenpeace, the Canadian Environmental Network, the Canadian Environmental Law Association and others in advance of the passage of this legislation within the next few days.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on Bill C–22. I share the concern on this side of the House that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) could not be here to speak to Bill C–22. I think the House and the country would like to know what kind of regulations and enforcement actions the Minister is proposing.

• (1210)

I know we heard from the Parliamentary Secretary, but the issue is of enormous import not just to Canadians but around the world. The holes in the ozone are growing and certainly CFCs are one of the most serious problems in relation to those holes. We know from scientific evidence that even if all leakage of CFCs into the environment were stopped now it would take several centuries for the ozone to return to a stable situation. It does not belie well in the House that the Minister did not come to talk about what steps he and the Government of Canada intend to take to move forward the date at which all CFCs will be removed from our environment. We have not heard yet from the Minister, even his own dedication on the concept of zero discharge of chlorofluorocarbons and other ozone depleting chemicals.

We particularly have not heard from the Minister or the Government about what kind of enforcement or plan they have in relation to CFCs. We have not heard of an action plan to advise the public so they know about refrigeration systems, about the air conditioner in their car or in the tractor, as my colleague reminded me, or the refrigeration units in freezers and refrigerators on their own property.

We also have not heard from the Government about what kind of steps are planned to be phased in so those who most often come into contact with CFCs, particularly those who are in the repair industry, whether it be motor vehicles, tractors, refrigeration units or some of the larger units that contain large amounts of CFCs, know that in fact there are enforcement and regulatory processes in place to make sure that those repair persons and those assembly plant workers where CFCs are still being used have absolute state of the art technologies to remove CFCs from old refrigerators before they go to the dumps and from cars before they go to the junk yard or are repaired. There is no enforcement process across Canada.

The Minister is really blowing in the wind when he talks about the need for this technical amendment when there is not a comprehensive plan in place. In fact, many people believe that CFCs could be dramatically reduced and, in many cases, removed from utilization in Canadian society by the year 1992. This is such a serious global problem in which Canada should take a lead.

I think it is unfortunate that the kind of steps necessary to lead us to zero discharge are not being implemented. Refrigerators are still going to landfills and dumps. Repair people are still venting what is left of the CFCs in tractors, refrigerators, freezers, and air conditioners simply into the atmosphere when they could have containment equipment on site to hermetically seal them prior to and after dealing with them and then properly dispose of those CFCs or recycle them into equipment on which they are still working as we head toward zero utilization of CFCs in all forms in our environment.

There are two notes which I believe are important for the record. One is an information note provided by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) to me. Having learned in the past that there are sometimes problems with information provided by the Government, I intend to put it on the record in its entirety. It states:

Information note.

Issue: Amendments to Sections 33 and 34 of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act.

Background:

The Canadian Environmental Protection Act received Royal Assent on June 30, 1988. Section 34 of the Act provides authorities to regulate toxic substances there added by order to Schedule 1, the List of Toxic Substances. The Act as passed in 1988 contains a List of Toxic Substances in Schedule 1 that were added by Parliament, not by order.

As a consequence, regulations developed under the Clean Air Act and the Environmental Contaminants Act and consolidated under CEPA were found not to be enforceable.

In addition, the current wording of S. 34 makes it impossible to develop additional regulations for the toxic substances that were listed by Parliament.

Existing regulations therefore were temporarily brought back into force by the use of Interim Orders.

Although the Act provides that Interim Orders are effective for two years or until replaced by regulations, the replacement regulations cannot be made without amending S. 34.

More importantly, Canada's commitment under the Montreal Protocol on the Protection of the Ozone Layer to Regulate Chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) by July 1, 1989, cannot be met, since CFCs are already on the List of Toxic Substances in Schedule 1.

The amendments to Sections 33 and 34 correct the wording error by removing the need for an order to be made to add a substance to the List of Toxic Substances before regulations can be made in respect to the substance.

That is what the Minister's note says.

Let me quote what the Library of Parliament has to say in its June 8, 1989 note to members of the committee:

An Act to amend the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, notes on Bill C–22.

Bill C–22, which received first reading in the House of Commons on June 1, 1989, would amend sections 33 and 34 of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, (CEPA), as proclaimed into force on June 30, 1988. The Bill, composed of two clauses, can be best described as housekeeping in nature. It would remove certain anomalies found in sections 33 and 34 that pose problems in respect of the regulation of toxic substances.

Environmental Protection

In order to regulate a toxic substance under CEPA, the substance must first be placed on the List of Toxic Substances found in Schedule 1 to the Act. Section 33 currently provides for the inclusion on or deletion of a substance from this List.

A substance is added to the List by order of the Governor in Council, but the order becomes effective only when regulations affecting the substance made pursuant to section 34 of the Act come into force, (subsections 33(1) and 33(2)).

Clause 1 of Bill C–22 would amend section 33 of CEPA by repealing subsection 33(2) of the Act and by making a consequential amendment to subsection 33(1) to accommodate the deletion of subsection 33(2). The effect of this amendment is to allow an order of the Governor in Council placing a substance on the List of Toxic Substances to take effect when it is made rather than when the regulations in respect of the substance are made. A considerable amount of time might pass between the making of an order and the coming into force of regulations during which the substance would technically not be on the List.

This amendment would ensure that the status List of Toxic Substances is not dependent on whether regulations are made under Section 34 of the Act. It is clear that subsection 33(2) is not essential to the statute's regulatory scheme and may in fact complicate the process of regulating toxic substances.

Section 34 of CEPA currently provides that where an order has been made adding a substance to the list of toxic substances in Schedule 1 of the Act the Governor in Council can, after an advisory committee has been given the opportunity to render its advice, make regulations in respect of the substance. It is important to note that this section states that regulations can be made only in respect of a substance that has been added to the List by an order of the Governor in Council.

There were a number of substances on the List of Toxic Substances when CEPA was passed. These substances are on the List not by virtue of an order in council but because they were already in the statute. Because Section 34 currently allows regulations to be made only in respect of substances that are on the List by an order of the Governor in Council, substances that became part of the List in any other manner cannot be regulated. It would appear, therefore, that there is no legislative basis under CEPA for regulating the substances contained on the List of Toxic Substances at the time the legislation was passed.

It should be noted that among the substances found on the List for which regulations cannot be made are chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs), in respect of which the Canadian Government is committed to regulate under the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer.

Clause 2 of Bill C–22 would remove from section 34 of CEPA the reference to orders placing a substance on the List of Toxic Substances, thereby making it clear that regulations can be made in respect of any substance found on the List.

We should look at exactly what is in Schedule 1 because this is what the nub of the amendment to Sections 33 and 34 is all about, albeit the Minister and the Government are particularly attuned to the July 1 date for the implementation of the 1987 Montreal Protocol. We find under Schedule I, which is the list of toxic substances passed by Parliament, the following categories. There are chlorobiphenyls which have the molecular formula C12H10–nC1n in which "n" is greater than 2. We have dodecachloropentacyclo decane. We have polybrominated biphenyls that have the molecular formula C12H10–nBrn in which "n" is greater than 2. We have chlorofluorocarbon, totally halogenated chlorofluorocarbons that have the molecular formula CnC1xF(2n + 2–x). We have polychlorinated terphenyls that have a molecular formula C18H14–nC1n in which "n" is greater than 2. There are four other families. I put those on the record to have some idea of how complicated the toxic substances in chemical families are. Then there are four that I think the Minister should have been here to address. There is asbestos, lead, mercury and vinyl chloride, substances that are extensively used and find their way into our environment.

• (1220)

Let us look at Bill C–22 because in fact it is going to require further amendments. I say that because when one looks at the wording of the new proposed Section 33 it says:

> Subject to subsection (4), the Governor in Council may, if satisfied that a substance is toxic, on the recommendation of the Ministers, make an order adding the substance to the List of Toxic Substances in Schedule I.

I have just listed those before the House.

If one looks at the English version of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act as is statute law in Canada, what Section 33(1) says now is the following:

> Subject to subsections (2) and (4), the Governor in Council may, if satisfied that a substance is toxic, on the recommendation of the Ministers, make an order adding the substance to the List of Toxic Substances in Schedule I.

So the amendment is quite clear in English. As one can see in C–22, the English amendment is listed both under the English section and under the French section.

This is where it becomes interesting and where all Members of this House should become increasingly suspicious of who is drafting this and why additional loopholes are being created without being forthright with Members of the House. You will have to excuse my pronunciation, Mr. Speaker, but I think you will understand the distinction between 33(1) as it is in English and in French in the Act now and what is being proposed in the English here will still no longer be comparable to the French that remains in the Act. The French in the Act says the following:

S'il est—qu'une substance est toxique, le gouverneur en conseil peut prendre, sur recommandation des ministres, un décret d'inscription de la substance à la liste de l'Annexe I.

[English]

That is not the same as the English in the Act, nor is it the same as the English that is being proposed as an amendment. Yet those who have drafted this from the Department of Justice and Environment Canada still have made no attempt to bring the French and the English into parallel.

As you and I both know, Mr. Speaker, when matters are taken before the courts, the courts are required with statute law to look at both the French and the English. One has to ask oneself, why are all of these sections of the Act not comparable? Why is it that in the English it is now going to say, if this amendment passes, "Subject to subsection (4), the Governor in Council may—" do the following, but in French it leaves the powers entirely to Ministers and Governor in Council?

Let us look at what subsection (4) is. Why is it that in the French part of the Act there is an attempt to avoid a very important procedural process that was put into the Act when it was originally drafted? Subsection (4) says:

> Where a Board of Review is established under Section 89 in relation to a substance, no order may be made under subsections (1) or (3) in relation to the substance until the board's report is received by the Ministers.

If we look over to the French we find a comparable translation. It says:

La prise des décrets visés aux paragraphes (1) ou (3) est toutefois subordonnée à la réception par les ministres du rapport de la commission de révision éventuellement constituée en vertu de l'article 89.

[English]

Let us look at Section 89 because this is where the paper trail becomes interesting as to what is going on in the Departments of Justice and Environment Canada. This House cannot and should not under any circumstances pass relevant sections of law that are not comparable in the two official languages of this country. Therefore let us look at Section 89, the Board of Review Proceedings. This is where the public, Greenpeace, Friends of the Earth, Canadian Environmental Law Association, people who are concerned about asbestos in Cassiar, people who are concerned about lead in gasoline affecting children have an opportunity to become involved in the Canadian Environmental Protection Act and the establishment of a Board of Review. I quote from Section 89:

> Where a person files a notice of objection under subsection 13(2), 48(2) or 86(4) in respect of a decision or a proposed order or regulation, the Minister or the Ministers may establish a Board of Review to inquire into the nature and extent of the danger posed by the substance in respect of which the decision is made, or the order or regulation is proposed.

So we have a process that is directly related to the amendments proposed in the House that is not provided for adequately in the two official languages as they are set out in the Bill brought forward by the Parliamentary Secretary today.

The Minister has asked us to support it and move it through quickly. We are certainly going to try and get it through the House and over to committee quickly because it is important that we have the powers to regulate in the country. But when we see a dirth of enforcement and inadequate proposals being made in terms of the removal of things like CFCs from our environment, when we know with absolute certainty what it is doing to the ozone of our planet, and then we get a piece of legislation brought to us that we are asked to move quickly forward we find it fatally flawed. How can there be such a distinct difference between Section 33(1) in English and French?

Let us look a little further. Under Section 89, is one of the interesting things that is referred to in English but not in French. I quote from subsection (2):

> Where a person or government files with the Minister a notice of objection under subsection 62(2) with respect to proposed regulations within the time specified in that subsection, the Minister shall establish a Board of Review to inquire into the nature and extent of the danger posed by the air contaminant in respect of which the regulations are proposed.

Subsection (3):

> Where the Minister has published a copy of a permit or of any varied terms and conditions under subsection 73(1), the Minister may, if he considers it advisable to do so, establish a board of review to inquire into complaints from members of the public in respect of the permit or the varied terms and conditions.

Subsection (4):

> Where a person files with the Minister a notice of objection under Section 51, 55 or 74 within the time specified in that section, the Minister shall establish a board of review to inquire into the matter raised by the notice.

These are very important legal processes provided to the public. Subsection (5):

> Where a person files with the Minister a notice of objection under Section 14 in respect of the failure to make a decision about whether a substance is toxic, the Minister shall establish a board of review to inquire into whether the substance is toxic or capable of becoming toxic.

So what do we have here? Let me quickly review. We had a situation where, under the existing legislation, the Minister was not as fettered as he now claims to be when utilizing subsection 33(1) en français in the Act. He was fettered though in the English because it said: "Subject to subsections (2) and (4)". Of course subsection (2), which is to be deleted says:

> An order adding a substance to the List of Toxic Substances in Schedule I is effective on the coming into force of regulations made under subsection 34(1) with respect to the substance.

I will be encouraged later in this day to hear from the Government side as to why this has been allowed. Why was it allowed in the first place that there be such an enormous distinction? My friend in the Liberal Party and I met with the Minister, Mr. Higgins and others from Environment Canada who are very knowledgeable in this matter. However, I cannot fathom why Bill C-22 would be brought to us and we are asked to pass an amendment in English that is not found to be represented in the legislation as it stands. Nor do they offer to provide us, without amending this, an opportunity to bring the French and the English in Section 33 into accord. I think that is of fundamental importance and should be part of the focus of the debate today.

• (1230)

Let me go back to the problem. I understand that the hope is that Bill C-22 will be before the Standing Committee on Environment on Thursday where witnesses will be heard from Greenpeace, the Canadian Environmental Law Association, Friends of the Earth, as well as those Justice people who drafted the legislation, and officials from Environment Canada.

The Bill is only one page long. It is not an horrifically difficult Bill to deal with, but I certainly put the Government on notice that I want adequate explanations of why we are asked to amend a Bill in which there is such a distinct difference between the French and the English in the law.

I will return to CFCs themselves. I have not yet heard from the government side, and in particular the Minister, what serious steps he plans to take in relation to CFCs. He has been on notice for weeks through questions I have raised in the standing committee, questions raised by my friend from Davenport, and questions by others in relation to the problems with existing refrigeration units, whether those be refrigerators, freezers, air conditioners in cars, trucks, tractors, or heavy duty equipment in large buildings which is the place where most of the CFCs in Canada presently reside.

Many Canadians scratch their heads and wonder why, although the Government of Canada entertains these plans vis-à-vis CFCs and wants to be involved on July 1 in relation to the Montreal Protocol, we see the rolling loonie every night on the television screen talking about Canada's sudden national debt of hundreds of millions of dollars. The Government is prepared to spend millions on that kind of advertising, but there is not even a leaflet which can be provided to people in the repair industry in relation to refrigeration equipment. Why is it that there is no material available in schools, at universities, in airports, or anywhere in the country on the hole in the ozone?

Canadians are deeply concerned about what is going on in the world's atmosphere. They know intuitively, almost instinctively, that the combination of the greenhouse effect, the hole in the ozone, acid precipitation, and general atmosphere and climactic change poses a very real threat to the survival of almost all species on earth, in particular our species which will not survive very well if the trends continue, in particular in relation to the hole in ozone.

I think this debate would have been much more healthy and more supportable if we had heard from the Minister today in an extensive speech on how he intends to lead Canada to the reduction, removal, and recycling of those existing CFCs by 1992. It is achievable. We have heard from experts that that is in fact achievable. Why is there this artificial date toward the middle of the next decade and the end of the century?

Those of us who have looked into this matter know that there are existing technologies for the rapid, safe and inexpensive removal of CFCs from existing technologies. They can be reinjected into other systems which should be sealed so that there is as little likelihood of leakage as possible.

We ask ourselves why the steps are not being taken. We are asked to pass regulatory change which is basically functus. I would certainly ask the Minister of Justice how he can explain such radical differences between English and French. I really look forward to learning on Thursday why they were so different in the first Act and why, even though we are making such radical changes in amending the Act, the French is going to stay the same.

I want to know where that rabbit burrow, as one might describe it, that tunnelling leads in legislation. Why is it being introduced? I do not like to know that the gnomes over at the Department of Justice are involved in this kind of chicanery and trickery of Members of the House in hopes that they can slip it through on an idle afternoon. They certainly will not, Mr. Speaker. They had better be ready with trepidation on Thursday, with some good explanations.

We in this House all have a desire to do serious things about the atmosphere, to try to bring greenhouse gases under control, and to try to deal seriously with CFCs. However, we are not seeing that. I am not suggesting for a moment that we on this side of the House should in some way delay or hold up the movement of Bill C-22 into committee. It certainly will be held up when it comes back to the House if there are not adequate explanations of what has gone on to this point in relation to why it was fumbled in the first drafting and why it has been fumbled in the drafting of the amendment before us in the House.

We will certainly be waiting expectantly on Thursday to hear from the Government exactly what are the new enforcement procedures. Are we to stop the dumping into land fill sites in the Quebec townships of refrigeration units coming from the United States? The contents of those refrigerators are on Schedule 1 of the toxic substances list of CEPA now. The Government is going to have to demonstrate very quickly and in all good faith what regulations the Minister is proposing once he gets this amendment.

Why have we not seen those yet? We should see them on Thursday, and I hope we do because that may lead to rapid passage of this Bill at third reading. If we do not get some co-operation and some idea of what kind of enforcement procedures are going to be forthcoming, there will not be much co-operation in the future.

Having studied the law and having noted the problem that exists, we know that this is a serious technical problem which must be overcome by amendment, but I am not certain that this is the amendment. I certainly hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will take the time to drop by the Department of Justice, to speak to Peter Higgins, to find out exactly who hatched this particular approach, and to find out whether or not in the hatching they might want to bring a few other eggs to hatch in committee on Thursday in order that the amendments to Bill C-22 can be properly made while it is before committee.

I know that my colleague wants to speak before one o'clock. I think I will give him the opportunity to do so. I believe that I have covered the problems I see with the legislation. The Government's approach is too slow, too ineffective, without enforcement, without teeth, and without taking seriously the kind of leadership role that Canada should be playing on CFCs. I am concerned and dismayed that on this day the Minister is in Canada, in Ontario, in Ottawa, and not in the House. He did not choose this opportunity to come and speak on an issue of global importance and of great importance to Members of this House, particularly on this side.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is a tradition of the House that we do not discuss the attendance or non-attendance of Members of Parliament in the House of Commons. The comments made by the Hon. Member at the end of his remarks, to which we listened to attentively, were totally uncalled for and I think he should apologize.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Skeena is a long time Member and I am sure he knows that. I did not hear the remarks at the end of his speech, but if he made such remarks I am sure he will apologize.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, I am very sorry that he is not here, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this is a constructive debate, and I will continue in the same vein as my colleagues by drawing to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary the fact that there may be another puzzling shortcoming in Bill C–22, namely, the omission from the French version of Bill C–22 the words "par décret", the equivalent of the term "by decree", which also is not present in the English version of the Bill.

• (1240)

Constitutional experts would draw to the attention of the Government the fact that such an omission would mean that the Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments would not have the power to examine, in due course, the performance and the consistency of this Bill with other pieces of legislation.

Maybe the Parliamentary Secretary would like to make a note of it and check it with the overworked Department of Justice, which evidently reflects a low budget, too few lawyers for too much work, and the inability of the Government to provide enough resources in the Budget so that Bills are properly drafted.

I am sure that the Parliamentary Secretary understands and that he will look into this matter.

What worries us is that behind this measure is of course the urgent question of chlorofluorocarbons and how they might affect the ozone layer and human health. Others have already referred to it. I would like only to register through the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister the fact that while the Minister of the Environment has promised to reduce the production of chlorofluorocarbons by 85 per cent, the regulations that are being presently proposed would achieve only a reduction of 50 per cent. That would be a very disturbing, large gap.

I would hope, if that turns out not to be the case, that in his opening statement in committee the Minister will clarify this matter so that we will have a confirmation that the regulations are consistent with his promise. This is very important because of the fact that the health of Canadians is at stake if we do not move quickly.

We also need to consider the necessity, if alternatives to chlorofluorocarbons are not technically in existence, to forgo certain products and to forgo certain uses, certain consumptions in society, because if we do not the damage is irrevocable. We are dealing here with the immune system of human beings, and therefore, with a very important and central question of health.

I would also reinforce the notion of others that the Bill would actually require further amendments. Unfortunately, this is not the case today, but we would certainly want to register with the Government the necessity to introduce further amendments. The law as it functions at the present time is flawed.

The Government at the present time cannot set enforceable national standards as demonstrated in the case of PCBs. I will go into that in a moment. Second, the Minister of the Environment is the only person in the country who can seek an injunction to stop a violation of the Act. Third, another shortcoming is that the law as it stands now lacks a general prohibition clause as we have in Section 33 of the Fisheries Act, which would make the release of any pollutant an offence, not just the ones listed in the schedules of the Act. This is a very central question. Finally, in the event of an emergency, the federal Government cannot move alone. Mandatory consultation with the provinces affected is required.

I will not elaborate at length on the lack of national enforceable standards. The enforceable national standards were lost between December 1986 when the proposed Environmental Protection Act was released as a draft for public discussion and the final clause by clause work in committee. Over the period between December 1986 and the spring of 1988, as a result of Meech Lake influence on the thinking of the Government, we lost the capacity for the federal Government to establish and impose enforceable national standards. I will not elaborate on how this took place. It makes very interesting reading.

All that needs to be said is that today we are asked, as a result of the law which was finally passed, to make a change in a law that at present indicates that no regulations could be made until after a federal–provincial advisory committee, and I quote, "is provided an opportunity to render its advice". That is how the Bill reads at the present time.

For some reason that phrase has to be amended through Bill C–22. The word "given" has to be substituted for the word "provided', and "provide" has to be substituted for the word "render". The new clause would now read that a federal–provincial advisory committee "is given an opportunity to provide its advice", instead of "is provided an opportunity to render its advice".

Since you probably understand, as a literary man, Mr. Speaker, the English language much better than I do, what is the difference between these two phrases? I have enormous difficulties in understanding it.

I followed very carefully the excellent presentation by the Parliamentary Secretary. He certainly gave us a very interesting technical insight into the reasons. However, when it comes to the language, which in the end what we have to look for, I really have difficulty understanding the difference between "is provided an opportunity to render its advice" and "is given an opportunity to provide its advice".

Maybe, when the Bill goes to committee, an explanation as to the profound semantic reasons for this change will be given so that we will be enlightened. We are in the dark. We do not know whether this amendment will strengthen the Bill from a federal point of view, whether this amendment will weaken it, or whether it will make it indifferent.

You will understand, Mr. Speaker, that as legislators some light needs to be cast. It is interesting to note that a former Minister of the Environment admitted that the weakening or the relinquishing of powers to the provinces in making national enforceable standards in the environment was a result of negotiations with the provinces behind closed doors. These negotiations were held at a time when the former committee was holding public hearings on the Bill preceding the one we are debating today. Of course we felt at that time as if a mockery was made of public consultations. When the various organizations appeared before us we were looking at a different Bill. It caused consternation and the quality of the relationships in committee was deeply affected.

We know what the result was when it came to PCBs in the aftermath of St. Basile le Grand. Safe storage was the first item on the agenda. The former Minister of the Environment was quoted as saying: "The actions I am taking ensure that PCB storage sites in every part of Canada meet high national standards".

Within two months nine provinces had sought from Ottawa to be exempted from such standards under the equivalency provisions of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act.

• (1250)

On May 12, 1989 all provinces except Prince Edward Island were granted exemption from high national standards. It must be noted and underlined that none of the provinces have the same penalties and fines in place which exist under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. Nor do the provinces guarantee the investigation of infractions of the law as the Canadian Environmental Protection does. Yet, it was ruled that provincial laws are equivalent.

In the case of PCBs—and I want to make this case to the Parliamentary Secretary who is patiently following this matter—instead of a single national standard for the storage of PCBs we have the federal national standard in P.E.I. and in the Territories. Then we have nine different provincial standards. We have uneven regulations which can lead to the creation of pollution havens where regulations are weakest. This unevenness is made worse by enforcement practices which vary from one province to another.

With PCBs we begin to see the emergence of a veritable environmental quilt. The environment is no longer a federal responsibility. It has been fragmented and Balkanized. Therefore, the experience with PCBs in the application of existing legislation erodes our confidence in the commitment of the Government to bring in tough enforceable national standards for the substances which have not yet been approached, such as CFCs, dioxins, furans, and other toxic substances. This is why we are preoccupied and why we must take the opportunity to raise this matter at second reading with the Government. The experience with PCBs is one that has led to a predictable Balkanization of standards. We urge the Government to ensure that the experience with PCBs does not repeat itself with other toxic substances which are included in the schedule the Parliamentary Secretary recited for us earlier in his presentation.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I want to comment on some of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Davenport.

It is always a pleasure to listen to the Hon. Member for Davenport speak in this House about the environment. The Hon. Member comes by this honestly. As a matter of fact, people are just starting to get into some of the things that he has said about the environment. He was ahead of his time. I want to say that to him, and I wish he were the environment critic for the Liberal Party. I say to him not to worry. He will resurface because he has the knowledge and vision about the environment, together of course with my own colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena who also has the environment in his bones. There are some comments I did not understand. If the Parliamentary Secretary wants to talk about acid rain back to 1979, that is fine.

What the Hon. Member for Davenport underlined about this Bill is very important. This is a Bill to amend the Environmental Protection Act which was a law enacted last year. I had the pleasure—sometimes it wasn't too pleasurable; it was a lot of work—to sit for a couple of weeks on the legislative committee that considered the Bill. The committee went through the Bill clause by clause. The Hon. Member for Davenport said where we failed in that Bill was to establish enforceable national standards. The Government originally had that as a concept. The former Minister of the Environment, Mr. McMillan, had that in the Bill. Then he ran into the opposition of the provincial environmental Ministers, and he withdrew this national thrust from the Bill. The committee members asked the Minister what would happen if there were a spill of PCBs or another disaster. Subsequently we have seen a spill of PCBs on the Trans-Canada Highway, a fire in St. Basile le Grand, oil spills on the coast, and other things. The environment became a national crisis, and Canadian people by any standard consider it the number one issue.

The Hon. Member for Davenport pointed out quite rightly that this Bill lacks enforceable national standards. What the Government should be doing is bringing in amendments to put these standards in the Bill.

Finally is the concept of the public being able to sue polluters of the environment; not just the Ministry of the Environment, which may do nothing but do as California does and give the public rights to take polluters to court. Where there is a polluting chemical company such as in Port Moody, the local residents would have authority under a federal Act with a national enforceable standard to go to court against that company. Then we would see some real action on the environment. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on these matters, but he need not comment on the nice things I said about him.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to disagree at this stage. Therefore, I am glad that the Hon. Member sees the necessity as we do of having national enforceable standards. He has developed the issue extremely well and I am very grateful to him.

Anyone who believes in strong federalism and does not think the answer to Canada's problem is the devolution of power to the provinces feels very strongly that beginning with the environment, followed by spending powers, by aboriginal rights, and a number of other crucial issues is one, we must stay on the road of strong federal powers.

The Canadian Environmental Protection Act is a classic example of where a Minister of the Crown, having first introduced a Bill which did have the measure required to establish national enforceable standards in the environment, had then to turn 180 degrees and abandon that track. We regret it very much. If everyone in this House feels as strongly about the environment as does the Hon. Member who just spoke, I am sure that we can amend the Bill at a future opportunity to have enforceable national standards in the federal legislation.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I have one short comment and a question for the Hon. Member for Davenport. In the case of the environment as it relates to the Rafferty-Alameda Dam—and this affects my riding right now—there is a great deal of concern that those from outside the area who do not know the valley and do not know it is barren are rendering opinions and decisions without knowing the facts that concern the environment on the local scene. This poses a problem for the environment. I think it is most important that there is a balance and that when people make comments, whether as Opposition critics or as Members of our own Party, they ought to realize what they are talking about and deal, in the case of the Rafferty-Alameda dam, with the situation on its own merits for the benefit of the environment world-wide.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I would only refer the Hon. Member who is genuinely interested in the Rafferty–Alameda issue to the former Minister of the Environment who made a profound mistake in the interpretation of his mandate. He had to be reminded of his duties by a non–governmental organization, the Canadian Wildlife Federation, which took the matter to court in order to straighten him out on this very important matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.02 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ELLIOT LAKE

NINETEENTH URANIUM FESTIVAL

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of Members of the House that the town of Elliot Lake is celebrating its nineteenth annual Uranium Festival from June 23 to July 2, 1989. Being the largest summer festival in northern Ontario, those two weeks promise to be a celebration of the community pride and spirit that all Elliot Lakers feel.

Last year, more than 20,000 participants took part in such diverse activities as mucking and drilling competitions, parades, tennis and soccer tournaments, antique car displays, and a final fireworks display, to name only a few. This year many more people and events are expected.

The theme of the 1989 Uranium Festival "A Salute to Mining" reflects the great importance that the mining industry plays in the economic life of towns such as Elliot Lake and many other communities across Canada.

Anyone who has ever attended this festival will tell you the excitement that is generated is contagious and that makes it easy to see why Elliot Lake is known world–wide as "the jewel in the wilderness".

HOUSING

CMHC FUNDING FOR PRINCE CHARLES SENIORS PROJECT

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I am again raising a subject that members of the other Parties are running away from, namely, the activities of the Toronto political fund– raiser Patricia Starr.

Yesterday, I asked the Minister of State for Housing (Mr. Redway) to account for the misuse of CMHC guaranteed funds from the Prince Charles seniors' housing project. I asked specifically whether proper CMHC procedures had been followed in filing and authorizing consultant contracts and payments.

In his answer the Minister finally conceded that CMHC guaranteed funds were spent "inappropriately". According to a lawyer's report, $2,000 went to the PC Canada Fund.

In view of this, will the Minister now table all financial documents for the Prince Charles project, including authorized expenditures, contracts, claims, vouchers, and invoices that were used to authorize the release of funds to this project, or to any other CMHC guaranteed project involving Patricia Starr or the Toronto section of the National Council of Jewish Women?

I would also like the Minister to inform the House on the progress of recovering the misspent funds, and advise us on the penalties to the people involved for misappropriation.

AGRICULTURE

NATIONAL FARM SAFETY WEEK

Mr. Guy St–Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, "Protect children on the farm" is the theme for National Farm Safety Week, July 25 to 31, organized by the Canada Safety Council with Agriculture Canada and in cooperation with provincial safety organizations and the Farm Safety Association.

Growing up on a farm can be a wonderful experience for children, but by its nature, a farm is a dangerous place and every year, many children lose their life or are injured in accidents there.

Mr. Speaker, children are our future. Let us protect them! This year, farmers will be made aware of their responsibility for their children's safety, which involves identifying and eliminating accident risks, setting a good example and informing young people about the safety rules to observe in buildings and around livestock and machines, both indoors and outdoors.

CANADA DAY

TWINNING OF WHITBY, ONTARIO AND LONGUEUIL, QUEBEC

Mr. René Soetens (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, as we approach Canada Day, a time for all citizens to celebrate their citizenship, we should all use the opportunity to take stock of our many blessings as a nation where peace and prosperity abound.

Twenty-two years ago, a company of venturers from the Boy Scout movement of Whitby, Ontario, reversed the route taken by Jacques Cartier and arrived in Longueuil, Quebec. This trip culminated in some dialogue, and the decision to have a twinning program between the two communities.

The citizens of each municipality, with the active support of their local municipal councils, have for 21 years now sent delegations to visit each other to learn and promote a better understanding of their cultures and communities. For three days each year, 50 residents of each community are hosted in an excellent setting of friendship and goodwill.

The reason I bring this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, is so that you and other Members of the House can take this idea back to your own ridings and encourage your citizens to undertake a similar program. Would it not be great if we could influence more Canadian municipalities to twin with other municipalities and follow the lead of Whitby, Ontario, and Longueuil, Quebec.

Congratulations to both municipalities for doing their part in making Canada such a great place to live.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION OF THE TURKISH MOSLEM IN BULGARIA

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, in the last few days, we have received many reports that thousands of Bulgarian citizens belonging to the Turkish Moslem minority were issued passports and suddenly expelled to neighboring countries. Press reports indicate that the number might be over 30,000. This sudden exodus is of great concern to Canadians. Since 1984, they have been very concerned by the Bulgarian authorities' assimilation campaign which has resulted in name changes and restrictions on the use of the Turkish language and expressions of Turkish culture.

On Friday, June 16, at the Paris conference, Canada's Ambassador, William Bauer, strongly criticized the treatment given to the Turkish Moslem minority in Bulgaria and in particular, the recent expulsions. He drew attention to the human suffering caused by the Bulgarian authorities.

I know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) remains concerned by a situation that raises tensions in the Balkans and detracts from cooperation and security in Europe. I am pleased to point out that on Friday, June 16, he issued a communiqué expressing Canada's concern about the recent expulsions and the Bulgarian chargé d'affaires was called in so that our disapproval of his government's actions could be conveyed to him.

THE ECONOMY

ATLANTIC CANADA—VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, a proposed business plan of VIA Rail recently obtained by The Globe and Mail has confirmed some of the worst fears held by Atlantic Canadians. The proposed cut-backs have guaranteed a minimum of 2,500 employee lay-offs, as well as the complete elimination of all regional train services. This is in light of the election promise to enhance the quality and reliability of VIA services.

I find it disturbing that various cabinet Ministers have praised the new Budget for helping the welfare of the Atlantic provinces. In reality, Atlantic Canada is being ruined by the incredible burden it has to assume in dealing with the current deficit. Major cuts in ERDAs, ACOA, VIA Rail, and the closing of Canadian Forces bases have promised to inflict devastating impacts upon the region.

I call upon the Government to reassess the negative priorities applied to Atlantic Canada. This region, which recently began upon the road of economic recovery, has once again been thrown into a situation that guarantees hard times in the Maritimes. Atlantic Canadians should be allowed to reap the benefits of economic success.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSING OF CFB SUMMERSIDE

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, yesterday more than 300 Islanders travelled to Ottawa to make it clear to the Government how they feel about the closing of Canadian Forces Base Summerside. Yet the Government has not made it clear to the people of Prince Edward Island what research was carried out to back up this reckless decision.

What is frightening is that this decision, which will seriously affect the economy of Summerside and the entire province, was made without an impact study. The people of Prince Edward Island deserve better.

I demand that the Government take responsibility for its actions against Summerside and area and keep the base open.

In all fairness, the federal Government cannot arbitrarily decide to shut down one-third of a community's workforce. Islanders have proved that they are determined and ready to keep CFB Summerside open, and my colleagues and I are determined to support them.

THE ECONOMY

ATLANTIC CANADA—DEVELOPMENT FUNDS

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to answer a question posed by the Premier of Nova Scotia last night after a starry-eyed meeting with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) regarding cuts in development funds that have devastated Atlantic Canada when he stated: "Cuts? What cuts?" I am here today to edify the Premier of Nova Scotia and answer those questions for him.
