Attention is directed to the opening of Grand View Hotel, Weesbeach, for she season, on June 10. This favorite summer resort, situated on Lake Huron, thage miles from Sarnia, has been very much improved since last season, and will now found to contain facilities for the accommodation, comfort and amusement of guests equal to the best to be hat any of the lakeside resorts this country. The dining-room, whim previous seasons was too small seat all the guests at one time, has been enlarged to accommodate 100 persons comfortably, The basement has been rearranged so that a number of sleeping apartments can be fitted up there for the accommodation of transient visitors; the grounds immediately around the hotel have been inclosed with a substantial fence, rendering them more private than heretofore, and within the inclosure a large amount of sodding has been done, to turnish tennis courts and croquet lawn. The beach is beautiful and inviting, furnishing unrivaled facilities for boating and bathing, the scine fishing daily in front of it also increasits natural attractiveness to the higuests. No finer view of Lake Hu than that obtainable from the balco and windows of Grand View can be anywhere. All the shipping of the glakes passes through the St. Clair Rive a short distance from Weesbeach. Proprietors, Mr. David Wees and Wyck, the able manager, will always be found round the hotel looking after the wants of the guests. Preston, Ont Weesbeach Improvements.

THE DYING STATESMAN.

At the hour of writing Sir John A. Macdonald, Premier of Canada and leader of the Conservative party, lies at the point of death. For some time it has been known that he suffered from physical and nervous exhaustion, and that his condition was serious, but only after the consultation of medical men on Wednesday night was danger of a fatal termination made evident. Since then, the patient has steadily become worse, and Friday the doctors gave up all hopes. His death will result in many changes, perhaps of a more startling nature than many look for. For years, public man in the Dominion. For over 40 years he was in public life, and during all that period he occupied a front rank in his party. There have been disputes about the and his colleagues gave place to a Reform place of his birth, but he himself settled nounced that he was a native of Glasgow, though his father, Hugh Macdonald, was a native of Sttherlandshire. When but 5 to Mr. Dorion it gradually drooped, and in 1864 was defeated. John A. Macdonald the spot a few years ago, when he annative of Sutherlandshire. When but 5 years old, in 1820, the future noted political leader was brought to Canada by his who began business in a small way in Kingston. There, at the Grammar School, and under Dr. Wilson, a wellknow graduate of Oxford, the boy received his education. He was an apt pupil, and speedily became proficient in his studies. At fifteen, he was sent to study law with Mr. George Mackeazie, then a prominent barrister in Kingston. In those days the what was regarded as treasonable edings, and who was alleged to have fostered the rebellion along the border. The speech of the young counsel was a brilliant effort, but it did not avail the prisoner, for he was found guilty of high treason and hanged. The interest developed by the incident, however, was the making of Mr. Macdonald, as it won him name, and brought him further oppor-anities to distinguish himself at the bar.

reeded him, being followed by the more popular Lord Eigin. In the hard political warfare of those days, the hope of the Tory party took a prominent part. In 1846 he was made Queen's counsel, and a year later he became a member of the Executive Council, taking the portfolio of Receiver-General. A few weeks later he was made Commissioner of Crown Lands, but he only held that office for a short time. A dissolution of Parliament resulted in the defeat of the Government, and a Reform Administration took office, under the leadership of Messrs. Baldwin and Lafontaine. As Mr. Draper took a seat on the bench, Mr. Macdonald became a leading factor in what was left of the Conservative party. Sir Allen McNab, of Hamilton, was elected Opposition leader, and with Mr. Macdonald as a his lieutenant a vigorous onslaught was made on the policy of the Liberal Administration.

About this time the Legislature met in Montreal, and some of the most exciting

He was the leader of the Independent Reormers, who opposed the Hincks policy, and yet could have nothing in comm with the McNab-Macdonald party, which umbered nineteen in the new House. By their united vote, however, the Government was defeated when it tried to elect a Speaker. Sir Allen McNab was sent for to form a new Ministry, though Mr. Brown eally led the more numerous party in the House. A coalition resulted between the Lower Canada Reformers and the remaining portion of the Hincks Administration, and John A. Macdonald was appointed Attorney-General for the West. The seat of Government became the burning question of the day at this time, and after a twoears' term the Government was defeated years' term the Government was defeated on it. Another Government was formed, with Col. Tache as Premier and John A. Macdonald as Attorney-General. His declared view at this time was that "no administration could hope successfully to govern the country by a majority of one section, and a minority of the other." Yet hewasnow confronted with a majority against him of fitteen from Upper Canada. His love of power, however, moved him to hold on to office at this time, as at later stages in his career, even when he knew that his course was contrary to his professions. course was contrary to his professions.
"The Queen's Government must be carried on," he said, in extenuation at one time,
"and I don't mean to resign till I am

The Government was defeated on the Militia Bill in 1862, and Mr. Macdonald Administration, under Hon. John Sandfield Macdonald, with Mr. Sicotte as leader once again became Premier, but his Government only existed for a week or two. The friction between the two two. The friction between the two divisions of the country had for some time been considerable. The Liberals of Ontario had been steadily battling for representation by population and for the Confederation of the whole of Canada. Though John A. Macdonald had opposed these political changes, just as he had opposed the settlement of the clergy reserve intensity until he could hold out no longer. At fitteen, he was sent to study law with Mr. George Mackeazie, then a prominent barrister in Kingston. In those days the legal apprenticeship was six years, and young Macdenald served that period, and was called to the bar of Upper Canada in 1836, when he had reached his twenty-first year. Shortly afterwards Mr. Mackenzie died, and John A. Macdenald succeeded to his practice. He entered into partnership with Mr. (now Sir) Alexander Campbell, Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, He bad a student named Oliver Mowat, who was destined to become the Premier of his native Prevince, and to cross swords in defense of popular rights in many a noted struggle with his instructor.

Mr. Macdonald made his first big strike at the bar by appearing for the defense of General Von Schultz, a United States of General Von Schultz, a United States citizen, who had been engaged in what was regarded as treasonable

On July 1, 1867, when the Confederation Act came into force, he was called upon to form the first Government of the Don which remained for a time on a coalition basis, but before many years had elapsed party lines became drawn as before. Mr. Brown and other Liberal leaders announced that, though they had united to secure As early as 1844, when he was but 29 years of age, Mr. Macdonald entered politics, which from that time onward became his profession. He was elected member for Kingston, and took his seat as a member of the second Parliament of United Canada. Lord Metcalfe was then Governor, and Mr. Macdonald supported the Government of Mr. Draper which pheld that unpopular administrator. Lord Metcalfe was recalled, and Lord Cathcart suc-Confederation, they had little in common claims, the labors of which resulted in the treaty of Washington.

Sir John Macdonald rushed the elections on in 1872 several months before the effluxion of the five-year term, having taken extraordinary precautions to secure success.
In Ontario Liberalism was a dominant power, and a determined effort was made to defeat the Ministry. In Kingston Sir John had to make a hard struggle; in South Brant Mr. Paterson made his first appearance and defeated Sir Francis Hincks; sing George Cartier was defeated in Quebec, By an enormous expenditure of money, obtained as was afterwards developed in the Pacific Scandal revelations, the Government was again returned to power with a majority of 31. Mr. Huntington made his famous agrainment of the Ministers as majority of 31. Mr. Huntington made his famous arraignment of the Ministers as speedily as possible, and a committee, and afterwards a special commission, was appointed to investigate. The friends of Sir John Macdonald, who had all along been Montreal, and some of the most exciting incidents in the history of Canada took place. The fiery debate on the Rebellion Losses Bill, the burning of the Parliament Buildings because the Conservatives disliked the policy of the Government; the rotten-egging of the Governor-General in Montreal and elsewhere, because his actions did not meet with the approbation of the party in Opposition, made attiring times for some years. Then came the manifesto in favor of annexation, which was signed by many prominent politicians of that day.

Sir Francis Hincks hadmean while become Premier, but in 1854 his Government was defeated on a want of confidence motion, brought about by dissatisfaction in his own ranks. In the election which followed, Hon. Geo. Brown proved himself a power. He was the leader of the Independent Reformers, who opposed the Hincks policy, the second party in the position of the most account of the Ministry when the Opposition on Oct. 23, 1873, moved an amendment to the address condemning their account of the Ministry when the opposition on Oct. 23, 1873, moved an amendment to the address condemning their account of the Ministry when the opposition on Oct. 23, 1873, moved an amendment to the address condemning their account of the Ministry when the opposition on Oct. 23, 1873, moved an amendment to the address condemning their account of the Ministry when the opposition on Oct. 23, 1873, moved an amendment to the address condemning their account of the Ministry when the opposition on Oct. 23, 1873, moved an amendment to the address condemning their account of the Ministry when the opposition on Oct. 23, 1873, moved an amendment to the address condemning their account of the Ministry when the opposition on Oct. 23, 1873, moved an amendment to the address condemning their account of the Ministry when the opposition on Oct. 23, 1873, moved an amendment to the address condemning their account of the Ministry when the opposition on Oct. 23, 1873, moved an amendment to the address condemning their account of th not harmonize with his previously expressed views, to attain power. Many members of his own party regarded the developments in the Pacific Scaudal as fatal to the future of the ex-Premier, but his opportunity came with the world-wide depression. Business was dull the world over. The demand for the products of Canadian labor fell off both in the old world and in the United States. The reaction from the boom days following the war was so great in the United States that many industries were paralyzed and millions of men were thrown out of employment. Canada was no exception to the rule. Hard times cannot prevail where our customers times cannot prevail where our customers are found without our being prejudically mportuned to increase the taxation of the people as a remedy for the depression. The reply of the Liberal Premier was that higher taxation would not relieve worldwide dullness in trade, and would only add to the burdens of the people. Sir John Macdonald's opportunity had come. The restlessness of the people showed they restlessness of the people showed they wanted a change. He would give them one. On March 10, 1876, he propounded his policy, which he declared to be "a broad national policy," and for two years he rang the changes on the necessities of "protecting" Canadians from "the products of the pauper labor of Great Britain" and "the surplus products of the United "the surplus products of the United States." He drew the most lurid pictures tive party. He has again and again, by the strength of his resources, and his wonderful management saved the party from breakup. The Advertiser had many processions to condemn his methods, but it has never lost sight of his personal magnetism, his remarkable power in managing men and in welding antagonistic influences to suit his purposes. His one besetting sin was love of power. He has been an over-shadowing figure on the Conservative side, and he leaves no man in that party possessed of a tithe of his ability to control the incongruous elements that enter into its composition.

The dying statesman was the best known public man in the Dominion. For over 40 the strength of the strength of the strength of the surplus products of the United States." He drew the most larid pictures of the enormous benefits which would flow from the adoption of "protection." He told how the tarmer would receive his intend for the enormous benefits which would flow from the adoption of "protection." He told how the atmer would receive his defeat of the Government in 1857. He had for his lieutenant in Lower Canada Sir George E. Cartier. The location of the seat of government in 1858, and the Ministry resigned. Hon. Geo. Brown was called in, and the Brown-Dorion Administration was formed. Sir Edmund Bond-Head, very unfairly, refused to grant the new Ministers a dissolution, and Mr. Brown and his associates had to resign. Then came what history records to resign. Then came what history records as the "double shuffle." By this consistence of the Tory Governor, the old correction of the people of the lower Provinces who were not enamount to resign. Then came what history records as the "double shuffle." By this consistence of the Tory Governor, the old lower Provinces who were not intend to increase the tariff, but would simply readjust it. How these promises were key it now matter of history. The people were thus

The arrangement of the new Pacific Railway bargain, the Northwest reand the Government neglect brought it about, and the which various devices which Sir his associates adopted to ward off popular condemnation of their trade and general policy are well known to ADVERTISER readers. Nor need anything be said here about the confessed failure of the high tax about the confessed failure of the high tax policy and of the last fight in its favor a month or two since. The work which Sir John Macdonald undertook in that prematurely devised campaign no doubt hastened his end. Indeed, such exposures to the elements as he encountered in London on the inclement evening when he spoke in the drill shed would have produced evil effects on a much stronger constitution.

Sir John was a Privy Councilor of Great Britain, a D. C. L. of Oxford, LL. D. of Queen's University, Kingston, and D C. L. of Trinity, Toronto. He was twice married, first to his cousin Isabella, daughter of the late Alexander Clark, of Dalnavert, Invernessshire, and on the second occasion to Susan Agnes, the present Lady Macdonald, laughter of the late T. T. Bernard, a memhad two children by his first wife, Hugh John, born in March, 1850, and now M. P. for Winnipeg, and a daughter. John Alexander died in infancy in 1847.

RHEUMATISM and SCIATICA

London, April 26, 1891.

I am happy to acknowledge, and now testify, to the efficacy of your medicines in curing Rhematism. I have suffered with this painful disease in my shoulders, knees and hips for twenty-five years, also with sciatica for some time. I decided to try Histogenetic Medicines as a last resort, as nothing ever seemed to give me any permanent relief. The first week's medicine gave me relief, and it two weeks the sciatica disappeared and has not returned. I took the medicines for six weeks, and am cured of the rheumatism. I feel befter in every way. I am sixty years of age, and feel quite smart and active. I can cheerfully redomined these medicines to the public, and will be glad to tell any sufferer about my case. It is now nearly two months since I ceased taking the medicines, and the effect is permanent.

Attempted Suicide.

Near Ilderton on Thursday night, while temporarily insane, a prosperous and much respected farmer named Robert Balmer attempted suicide by cutting his throat. He came to London on Wednesday, and left for home on Thursday evening. He used the knife while in his buggy, and was found with his throat cut by a man named Scott near Thos. Paisley's gate. Dr. Robson, of Vanneck, was called, and the wound was stitched. His susters in Chicago were sent for. There is a probability that the unfortunate man will recover. Attempted Suicide.

the same year. Politics were of the rough and ready order in those days, and stormy scenes in hustings and at polling booths were the rule, rather than the exception. and ready order in those days, and stormy scenes in hustings and at polling booths were the rule, rather than the exception. Mr. Gemmill was a sturdy champion in the cause of Liberalism, as old files of the Observer will show and old readers will recollect. In 1878 he relinquished the editorial chair and proprietorship of the paper to Messrs. Eyvel & Gorman, and since then has lived the quiet life of a retired citizen. During his long residence in Sarnia he filled several public offices of trust, serving in the Countil and as school trustee, and as clerk of the County Court and registrar of the Surrogat Court for the county of Lambton. The latter position he resigned in tavor of his son, W. R. Gemmill, about the time he retired from the proprietorship of the Observer. Though the times in which the most active years of Mr. Gemmill's life were spent were noted for the bitterness with which political warfare was waged—a bitterness that extended into social as well as municipal matters—decased always commanded the respect of friends and opponents. The Observer under his management was conducted with scrupulous honesty and rigid regard for purity and morality in the matter that appeared in its columns. He was born in Dalrey, Scotland, in 1803, and reached the patriarchal age of 83 years. Death was more the result of enfebled vitailty resulting from old age than from any particular form of disease, and he passed peacefully away. He leaves a widow, one daughter and three sons—J. SR. failed to save him. But he could not keep down the strong sense of joy that overtopped all other feeling.

Dora did not reject him; that was what tingled in his heart.

In this exalted state of fancy he walked on without taking note of his direction. He had passed the by-road that led to Moyrath. Looking up he saw Dora step out of a coppice, and face him full, her hands laden with white convolvulus.

The great delight of meeting her thus, at the instant when the thought of her was kindling him, overcame what feeling of awkwardness or shame might otherwise have made the encounter difficult on his part. The soft look of pleasure of his face called up just such another look on Dora's; and so they met without restraint on the one side or the other.

Dora did not know that he had her letter; did not imagine that he could have it until the following morning. She had no clue to the feelings that expressed themselves so unmistakably on Trenchard's handsome countenance, but she said gaily: "Why, you don't look ghostly at all!"

"How should!" he answered. "I have just read your letter."

"Why, I only posted it at twelve today," said Dora. "I—I took it to the post myself."

Dora turned and gave her hand to Trenchard, who took it silently; a smile was their only good-bye.

The car drove on, and Trenchard, lifting his hat, turned about and walked briskly homewards. He felt in a much less degree than he had done earlier in the day the need of his accustomed stimulant.

"There is sustenance in love," he said. "I am sure of it."

Thus his thoughts were borne back again upon Dora; and thus there began in him again the same mental contest—to ask Dora to share his lot, or not.

It was so at this crisis with Trenchard. He felt, and rebelled against, the weakness that made him hesitate to seize the chane of hope and happiness held out to him. Rebelling, he gained fresh strength.

"To be able for once to cast doubt and fear aside!" he exclaimed with a touch of passion in his voice. "If I could love her less, I should fear less."

He turned in at his own gate and approached the house with leisurely steps. The lamp was lighted in the dining-room, and the sergeant was preparing the table for dinner. Presently he came out to the door, and peered into the dusky garden for a sign of his master.

Trenchard, moving to and fro upon the lawn, saw him and called out:

"I'am here, William; is dinner ready."

"Twill be ready to come on in five minutes, sir," answered the sergeant.

Trenchard entered the house and went up to his room; and before he came down again he had taken his decision. He had decided to ask Dora to be his wife.

"No more uncertainty," he said. "I will try and see her to-morrow."

CHAPTER XXXIV.

When a man is no good at anything in particular his friends flatter his vanity by calling him versatile. ARTHUR QUITS HIS POST UNDER NECESSITY.

Anthony's sensations at the dinner table that evening would have been worth an effort to depict, had he known in what manner Dora had spent a portion of the afternoon. So at least Dora surmised, and doubtless correctly. She took little glances at him from time to time, laughing in herself at the expression of complacent cunning which settled on his face as often as he thought of the clever way he had gone to work to secure his brother's riches to himself.

She had not yet got over the excitement of her discovery, though her meeting with Trenchard had for the moment put it from her mind.

Now she began to be exceedingly puzzled as to Anthony's reasons for heaping his ARTHUR QUITS HIS POST UNDER NECESSITY. A Milwaukee man who contributed a plugged quarter to the foreign missionery society excuses his conduct on the ground that the heathen wouldn't know the differ-REASONS:::

Now she began to be exceedingly puzzled as to Anthony's reasons for heaping his money up in so useless a fashion. Whatever else his shortcomings, she had given him credit for sufficient shrewdness in his money matters. What was his purpose in piling his fortune into a vault where it lay more barren than seed upon a rock? All unwittingly she came very near to her uncle's secret.

"If," thought she, "he knew that I were his niece, that I expected some share of my father's money, there would an object then in hiding it away like this."

It was odd, their sitting opposite to each other, those two; he knowing her secret, she knowing his; each triumphing quietly over the other; and Barbara there, so simple and innocent of it all:

"You're greatly absorbed, you two," Barbara remarked at last. "Mrs. Lytton, you didn't tell me how you pent the day at all."

No, and Dora was not likely to tell it either.

No, and Dora was not likely to tell it either.

"I wrote a letter in the morning," she said, "and gave Mr. Ettrick a famous lesson in astronomy in the afternoon."

"Well, and what of your prisoners, Anthony?" pursued Barbara.

"Faith, they got off cheaply enough," returned her brother; "three months each and no, more. And to think they might have had me telescope broken, and I getting on so nicely with my studies."

Here his old eyes twinkled at Dora; for this last was a shameless utterance, and Anthony knew it; he having all but abandoned his astronomical pursuits.

"I hear," he added, "the Casey's are mad with Trenchard; though I declare I think he might have got them a heavier sentence."

he might have got them a neaver sentence."

"I am glad they did not get any more,"
said Barbara; "it's almost the first time we've had trouble with any of our own people; this will only stir up ill-feeling, and if we don't take care we'll be having the same trouble that there is at Doyne."

"How are they getting along there?" inquired Anthony.

"Not so badly at all," said Miss Nugent;
"though 'tis well we were able to help them out with their stores."

—In its report of the recent meeting of the East Lambton Teachers' Association at Watford, the Guide-Advocate says: "Mr. Geo. Cowan, barrister, London and Watford, was introduced by Inspector Barnes to teach a lesson in third class literature. Mr. Cowan, in his usual impressive style, led up to his lesson from the "Merchant of Venice" by a description of the first part of the play, and in a clear and lucid manner he began his lesson at the "trial scene." He dealt principally with the finer and deoper sentiments of the extract, bringing out the word-pictures, the figures of speech, and from frequent extracts from the Scriptures also showed his knowledge of that book." Mr. Cowan was fermerly a teacher in Lambson.
