FIRST SESSION—SEVENTH PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 21st August, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

RECKONING OF TIME.

Mr. TUPPER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 166) respecting the reckoning of time. He said: The House has been put in possession of the documents relating to the fixing of time, during the present session, and these have been printed by order of Parliament and are in the hands of hon. members. I do not propose at this stage of the session, however, to do more in connection with the Bill that stands on the Order paper than ask leave to introduce it, so that the important subject to which it relates will receive the careful consideration of hon. gentlemen at a time, perhaps, more auspicious than the present for the study of the questions and the examination of papers that have been distributed to Parliament. I may, nevertheless, in moving for leave to introduce this Bill, explain its object and the reason for bringing it to the attention of Parliament. It is well known that in various countries of the world, on this side of the Atlantic as well as the other, railway companies have already adopted this system and have found it an advantage in carrying on the work of railway corporations, such as the movement of trains and traffic. In 1884 there were assembled delegates from twenty-five nations of the world at a conference in Washington, to consider the subject of a common system for the reckoning of time. I may state to the House briefly the resolutions adopted at that conference. These resolutions are incorporated in the preamble of the present Bill. The resolutions are to the effect: 1. That the prime meridian common to all nations should be the meridian passing through the observatory at Greenwich. 2. That the mean solar passage on the anti-prime meridian should be the zero for reckoning time. 3. That there should be a universal measure or standard of time common to all nations; that such universal standard should correspond and be identical with the mean civil day at Greenwich except only with respect to the notation of the hours, which should be in a single series from 0 to 24. The resolutions adopted at that conference have been approved by very many eminent scientific and important bodies of the world. I may mention briefly, as appears in the papers before Parliament, that they have received the approval of the Astronomical Society, the Royal Society, the Imperial Board of Trade, the General Post Office of Great Britain, the Eastern Telegraph Company, the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company, the Eastern and South African Telegraph Company, the Society of Telegraph Engineers, the Trinity House, the Indian Office, the Colonial Office and the Admiralty. So that nothing really need be added to show the very great importance of the subject and the necessity of giving it very great attention. It is proposed that in the computation of time there shall be practically a universal day, and that this shall end at the same moment in this country as does the civil day at Greenwich, differing only in regard to the numbering of the hours. The day is divided, according to the Greenwich day, into halves, and, according to the notation contemplated by this Bill, into what is called the twenty-four hour system, and the numbers will be from 0 to 24. The universal time will be common to all localities, and under the provisions of this Bill the only difference will be as it passes from one meridian to another. There will be this uniformity, that the minutes and seconds will correspond, the hours merely differing as you proceed from east to west, the earth's surface being divided into twenty-four meridians or divisions from east to west, the difference between each being one hour. When it is 10 o'clock at a given point, and you proceed west one section or zone it will be 11 o'clock, the next zone 12 o'clock: the minutes and seconds corresponding, as I have said, the hours only varying according to the zones and divisions. The central line of each zone will be an hour meridian, and the hour meridians will be 15 degrees of latitude apart. They will be numbered in consecutive order towards the west from zero, the anti-prime meridian. I may mention as another reason for allowing the Bill to stand for consideration, that an examination of it will show that one of the first things to be determined is the longitude, and at present the longitude of various points in Canada is not definitely fixed. Under the work at present being undertaken by the British authorities, in connection with the Royal Society of Canada, or at all events by the authorities of McGill College, the longitude of Montreal will be fixed during the present year, and that being done, the longitude of any place in Canada can be determined. I may say that during the present year, in the Imperial Parliament of Germany, the great importance of the subject was referred to by Von Moltke in March last in dealing with a railway Bill before the German Parliament, and arguing in favour of adopting a universal standard of time; that eminent man said:

"Gentlemen, science desires much more than we do. She is not content with a German unity of time or with that of Middle Europe, but she is desirous of obtaining a world time based upon the meridian of Greenwich, and certainly with full right from her standpoint and with the end she has in view." * * * *

"I believe it will assist the movement if the Parliament declares itself in sympathy with a principle which in America, in England, in Sweden, in Denmark and Switzerland and in South Germany has already obtained acceptance."

In concluding the explanations of the object of this Bill, I may say that in order that it shall not be forced upon any section of the country, and in order that it shall have that consideration which is necessary to its successful operation, it is proposed in the last clause that the Act shall not come into operation in any province until the Legislature of that province has adopted a similar Bill, and, therefore, all complicated questions of jurisdiction are avoided, and the question as to whether, in reference to contracts or any other subject, this Parliament has power to deal with the subject will not arise. Even if the Act becomes operative, it cannot go into effect without the consent of the Legislature.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE CENSUS.

Mr. CASEY. Before the Orders of the Day are called, no doubt the hon. Postmaster General will remember the information he promised yesterday to give us to-day.

Mr. HAGGART. I made enquiries from the department to-day, and I learned that Mr. Johnson, the head of the bureau, has been obliged to leave, on account of a death in his family. The officer informs me that on Wednesday, at latest, you will have the full returns.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Wednesday of next week?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, next week.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) Before we pass to the Orders of the Day, I wish to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to a despatch published in the London Times of August 10th, stating that on August 8th I had admitted somewhere having received $3,000 from a firm of public contractors under accusation before this Parliament. This despatch is signed by the Reuter Agency. I am glad to be able to say that it is absolutely untruthful, and, I will add, intentionally untruthful, for its author—if my information is correct—was present on the occasion referred to. The incident was brought about by the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, when the hon. member thought fit to put to Mr. McGreevy a question in which the witness was asked if I had not received $3,000 from him——

Mr. SPEAKER. Have these proceedings of the Committee been reported to the House?

Mr. TARTE. I am referring to a question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to call the attention of the hon. member to the fact, that if a paper has published something in reference to him that did not occur in this House, I think it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. TARTE. Am I to understand that I am not allowed to refer to a telegram published in the London Times?

Mr. SPEAKER. Unless it has reference to something that occurred in this House.

Mr. TARTE. I am alluding to a false statement published against me.

Mr. SPEAKER. Only the statement of a newspaper respecting the proceedings of the House is a question of privilege.

Mr. CASEY. As I understand, Sir, the hon. gentleman refers to a matter which has been published against him, and which affects his honour and standing as a member.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. member has a right, as every member in this House has always exercised, to mention what he thinks of a certain passage in the newspapers received here. When Mr. Speaker told the hon. gentleman that he was out of order, it was not the London Times he had in his hands, but he was reading from the printed minutes of a committee which has yet to report to the House. I do not think he can be prevented from vindicating his own position or repudiating an article in a newspaper, but he has no right to read from proceedings of a committee that has not reported to the House.

Mr. TARTE. I was speaking in French, but I did not read a line of what took place before any committee. Of course, Sir, I am perfectly willing to abide by your decision. What I was saying in French is this, and I will say it in French again. (Translation.) I am referring to a despatch published in the London Times in connection with what took place before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I have the London Times in my hand, and I believe I have a right to refer to it. This despatch is untruthful, and as it has been said that I had somewhere admitted having received a sum of money from contractors under accusation before this House, I say that whoever stated anything or wrote anywhere, near or far, any such a thing, has stated an absolute untruth.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the House and the Government to a matter of considerable importance in connection with the Committee on Public Accounts. It has been known for some time that differences of opinion arose in that committee as to its powers and functions, and as to the scope of the investigation into the Public Accounts committed to that Committee during the session. So great, indeed, were the differences that existed, that on one or two occasions the time of the Committee was taken up in a discussion on the powers and functions of the Committee, much to the detriment of the enquiry which was submitted. This difficulty became so serious that the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright)——

Mr. TUPPER. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, is the hon. gentleman in order in referring to difficulties that occurred in the Public Accounts Committee?

Mr. SPEAKER. My hon. friend may ask a question of the Government in reference to some matter of public interest, but he cannot go on with the discussion or make a speech.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is impossible to state the facts unless I give the history.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. If the hon. member is going to discuss something that occurred in the Committee, it is out of order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am not going to discuss the matter; it is merely for the purpose of asking a question of the Government.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has got to put the question direct. I have already pointed out the inconvenience of discussions at this stage of the proceedings of the House.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I quite agree with you. I wish to ask the Minister of Justice if he has officially handed over to the Chairman of that Committee and to the members of the Government who attended that Committee, a copy of the resolution passed by the House on motion of the member for South Oxford, so that in future our meetings will be given to the conduct of the investigation?

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to refer, as a matter of personal explanation, to a statement made in the Globe: and I will take care that I shall not be out of order. The Globe quotes this statement, referring to me:

"I find in the Auditor General's Report for 1887—he was only three months a member of Parliament that fiscal year—he got $968.83; in 1885 he got $5,440.75; in 1889, $6,400.98; in 1890, $6,818.43; or in all for the three months to the end of 1890—or from the time he was elected, he got $19,598.99, besides his indemnity as a member of Parliament. To overcome his liability under the Independence of Parliament Act, he forms the Regina Leader into a joint stock company immediately after being elected. He divides it into 4,000 shares at $5 each, takes 2,000 shares himself and pays up $1,000. One or two others take a share or two apiece and pay in a trifle. This relieves him from his liability under the Independence of Parliament Act. If this is not boodling and fooling his constituents, then I am no judge."

And the Globe comments:

"What has Mr. Davin to say? Mr. Perley seems to be his mortal enemy, and is, therefore, not a good witness against him in ordinary matters; but there are the figures from the official reports."

I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have received no money whatever since I have been elected. I have to say this, that since I have been elected a member of Parliament, one word in regard to my private business, or one word in regard to any business of a commercial character with which I am connected, I have never spoken to a Minister, or a Deputy Minister. I have never sought to use my political position one iota to help myself. I have to say this, that the statement that I have in any way contravened the Independence of Parliament Act is untrue; and I have to say that the suggestion that there is any boodling is utterly false; and if any gentleman thinks that I have in any way contravened the Independence of Parliament Act, there are yet two or three weeks of this session, and I should be very glad, if he thought it necessary, to have me summoned before any of the committees and take my evidence.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Move to refer it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections at once.

Mr. DAVIN. The statement is made in a ribald, lying, scoundrelly letter emanating from Senator Perley.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid that it is not permissible to speak in disrespectful terms of a member of the other branch of the Legislature.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that an elevation of such a character should have been made to that Senate,——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DAVIN—as it reflects indelible disgrace to Canada and all connected with it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. It must be remembered that when an hon. member is called to order he must sit down, and afterwards rise to explain if he chooses.

The Orders of the Day having been called,

Mr. CASEY. Do I understand that such language, having been used, is to remain on record without retraction, or what is the ruling of the Chair in regard to it?

Mr. SPEAKER. I have already pointed out to the hon. member that he must not speak disrespectfully of a member of the other branch of this Legislature, and he must, I think, withdraw the words he has applied to a Senator.

Mr. DAVIN. Then I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the parliamentary thing is to say that the hon. gentleman is a truthful and honourable man, and a credit to the Senate.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must point out to the hon. member that a retraction must be full and complete; it must not be qualified. When a member is guilty of having used unparliamentary language and is asked to retract it, he must retract it fully.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I need hardly say that it is always my desire to comply with the rules of Parliament and with your ruling, and I, therefore, as you direct me, withdraw those unparliamentary words, as they are unparliamentary.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And use them elsewhere.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee o Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What amount are you taking?

Mr. FOSTER. A fifth.

Resolutions reported, read the first and second time.

CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Marine Hospitals..... ..... $34,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Would the Minister of Marine tell us how much of this vote for Marine Hospitals is recouped to us? What is the exact drain on the Treasury from this source?

Mr. TUPPER. There has always been an amount more than the taxes provided for, but latterly it has been getting better. Last year we received $6,000 more than we spent, and, of course, the Marine Hospital at Quebec made quite a difference. The expenditure up to the present has been altogether, for the years mentioned, $910,000, against $894,000 received.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So that practically at present the vote for the Marine Hospitals is met by the receipts.

Mr. TUPPER. Yes.

Steamboat Inspection..... $23,400

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How do you account for this increase in the vote for steamboat inspection?

Mr. TUPPER. It is to provide for the appointment of two additional officers to the present staff, one in Ontario and one in the Maritime Provinces. There is only one inspector in the Maritime Provinces now, and we find that the present staff is not able to do the work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How do the receipts from this source compare with the expenditure?

Mr. TUPPER. We have expended $319,000 since 1870 and we have received from dues on shipping $295,000. Last year we expended $1,000 more than we received, but we have increased the rate from six cents to eight cents, and under the power given to the Governor in Council to fix the rate as high as ten cents, we hope to meet this deficit.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not disposed to raise any objection either to the proceedings of the department or to the mode they propose to make both ends meet, but there are one or two points on which I would like information. In the first place, some persons have complained to me that in the case of small pleasure yachts in certain localities this Act has been captiously enforced; that they were compelled to have certificated engineers, which meant considerable expense, and was of mighty little protection to the public at large, inasmuch as these yachts are private affairs. Do the department require everybody who runs a steam launch to pass an examination before the inspector?

Mr. TUPPER. I remember a case such as the hon. gentleman has mentioned, which occurred very recently, and in which I thought it was very hard to enforce the Act; but, on a careful examination of the whole question, it was perhaps better in the interests of the public that the rule should be adhered to. Under the Steamboat Inspection Act, I have no discretion to make an exception in any case. Certain exceptional cases have been set before me, in which I would have been very willing, had I the power, to meet the requests made to me. In England no exception is made in the case of any boat carrying passengers; but in Canada we passed an Act recently which fixed the limit for the very purpose to which the hon. gentleman has referred. The only case in which we can depart from the rigid rule is that of steam yachts of three tons used exclusively for pleasure or for private purposes. The cases in which I have been unable to make an exception are cases in which the tonnage was larger, and the hon. gentleman will see the danger I would run in departing from the letter of this Act. Everything would be well, if no accident occurred; but if, after I had taken the responsibility of giving a permit, there should be an accident with loss of life, the hon. gentleman can easily understand the awkward position in which the head of the department who assumed that authority would be placed. And even had I given permits in those cases in which the Act did not allow them, the penalties could have been collected; my permit would not have been worth the paper on which it was written. There is always a difficulty in arriving at the exact tonnage that could be excepted, but that was the resolution of the Board of Steamboat Inspectors, after careful enquiry.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, no blame can possibly attach to the Minister for adhering to the law. As the law stands he must administer it; but though I am not going to suggest his adding to the legislation of this session, I do think it is a little too grandmotherly for us to meddle with very small private steam launches. The number of these is increasing pretty rapidly, and I think discretionary power might be given to the Minister to a considerably higher limit than three tons: I am hardly prepared to suggest a limit. Of course, where passengers are carried, I shall support the department in taking the fullest precautions; but in the case of purely pleasure boats which carry no passengers, I think that if boats under twenty tons like to blow themselves up, we might let them do it without detriment to the public interest.

Mr. TUPPER. Vessels of three tons are exempt altogether; but I forgot to say to the hon. gentleman that we are able to give permits to another class:

"The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, upon the report of the inspector of boilers and machinery, in whose district the steamboat is to run, may grant a permit to a fourth class engineer or other applicant, sufficiently qualified by his knowledge of steam machinery and his experience as engineer, authorizing him to act as engineer on a steamboat carrying passengers, and not exceeding twenty tons gross tonnage."

That is a discretion which we have; and in the case which I think the hon. gentleman has in mind, my difficulty was not that we could not meet the case, but that the vessel desired to come without any permit and without any inspection from a district distant from Ottawa, and I was confined by the terms of this Act to action only on the report of an inspector.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman can consider whether further relaxation can be given. There is another point of much greater public importance to which I would like to call the hon. gentleman's attention. I think the Act makes sufficient provision, but I do not think the authorities enforce it at all; that is, with reference to the very dangerous overcrowding, which, to my personal knowledge constantly takes place on steamers carrying excursions in the summer season. I have seen steamers going out of our lake ports so crowded that if the smallest accident had occurred, several hundred human lives would in all probability have been lost; and I know that the life-saving apparatus on board was wholly and utterly inadequate. I am aware that restrictions are laid down, but I am also aware that in the case of these excursions they are constantly and systematically evaded. I do not know whether the Customs authorities are supposed to look after these matters, or the officers of the Marine Department; but I do know as a matter of fact that great and unnecessary danger is run. I do not know whether any very great disasters have occurred in Canada, but the hon. gentleman knows that in other countries there has been great loss of human life on such excursions.

Mr. TUPPER. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman, and I have taken the most rigorous measures to enforce the provisions of the Act against overcrowding. The hon. gentleman will see, on glancing at the last report of the department, that we have undertaken not only to enforce the Act, but to prosecute every case of overcrowding brought to our notice.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many prosecutions have taken place?

Mr. TUPPER. There are quite a number in progress now, and on page 45 the hon. gentleman will see a report of quite an amount of litigation in these cases. The officers of the Marine Department are required to enforce the Act, and the Customs officers have power to refuse clearance to vessels violating the provisions of the Act. For some years the law was not enforced, but distressing accidents caused the matter to be brought up, and for the last two years we have prosecuted every case brought to our attention, and I have given my officers instructions to enforce the law very strictly.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I see that in nearly every instance the magistrates dismissed the case.

Mr. TUPPER. That is a difficulty we meet with in connection with a good deal of the legislation of this Parliament.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not surprised that the hon. gentleman meets that difficulty, and I think it is worth his while to consider in another session whether he could not introduce some legislation enabling him to carry out the law more effectively, so that technical objections should not be allowed to interfere with its operation, in cases where boats carry more passengers than the law entitles them to carry, or undertake to carry passengers in the absence of those things which the law prescribes they should have for the protection of passengers. The safety of the passengers ought to be of paramount importance, and I think a few good wholesome fines on steamboats who violate the law in this respect would have a good effect.

Fisheries—Salaries, &c., Nova Scotia..$23,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There was a little misunderstanding on the part of some of my hon. friends. They thought that all that we were going to do was to pass the five per cent. of the items.

Mr. TUPPER. I am quite willing to agree that latitude will be allowed in the Supplementary Estimates to go back to these items.

Mr. FRASER. Is the west branch of the East River still under the operation of the Fishery Act?

Mr. TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. My information is that the west branch of the East River was exempted from the operation of the Fishery Act some years ago.

Mr. TUPPER. Your information is wrong. There is no river in the County of Pictou exempted.

Mr. FRASER. I put a question on the Paper about the dismissal of Mr. Torey, fishery overseer in Guysborough, and the appointment of a man in his place, and I asked what were the reasons?

Mr. TUPPER. It was his duty as fishery officer and Customs officer to enforce the Fishery Act, particularly with regard to foreign vessels. This officer permitted an American fishing vessel, not having a license under the modus vivendi, to enter his port, obtain supplies, sell her cargo, and generally act as a trading vessel or as one of our own ships. He was an old officer, who had been employed at one time in command of one of our cruisers, and he knew the provisions of the law. Yet he allowed this vessel to go on the payment of a fine of $800, although the penalty was confiscation. The case being of that serious nature, it was impossible to retain him any longer. The explanation of the facts showed that he was not fit to be retained in his position. The whole transaction was hurried, the vessel was off before his report reached the department, and although the vessel had been detained by him for open violation of the Customs and Fisheries Acts, she was permitted to depart on the payment of a fine of $800, utterly disproportionate to the value of the vessel and against the law which imposes the penalty of confiscation.

Mr. FRASER. So far as Mr. Torey is concerned, I wish to bring the matter before the Committee. Mr. Torey has been an official in the County of Guysborough for over twenty years, and I am safe in saying that so far as ability and knowledge of the fishery law are concerned, and the performance of his duties both as a fishery and a Customs officer, no man in the Province of Nova Scotia has carried out the duties of his office better, if as well. Now, the seizure spoken of occurred last year, and Mr. Torey has written fully to the department about the matter. It was impossible for him to do anything more than he did. He took the $800, which was all he could get at the time, and, not having a force sufficient to detain the vessel, he had to take that $800 or allow the vessel to get away. That took place in 1890 and nothing was said in reference to it until after the general election. Mr. Torey has been in office for twenty years as chief collector of Customs for the county and has been in charge of the fisheries there. He had always performed his duty to the full satisfaction of the Government. He was not only a good official, but all his lifetime he was an ardent supporter of the Government. He ran for the county two or three times in the interest of the Government when it was a forlorn hope. As far as his relations with the people of the county were concerned, no one suggested that he was not an efficient officer, and nothing was said about this matter of the seizure.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong.

Mr. FRASER. Mr. Torey's attention was called to the matter and he made explanations. I have the correspondence here. Here is a letter dated Guysborough, June 28, 1890, as follows:—

"SIR,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23rd instant, fyle 1691-90, in reference to my report of the schooner Abbie M. Deering. In reply, I beg to say that the seizure was made principally for violation of the Customs law although no doubt the offence was a violation of the Fisheries Act. I dealt with the seizure under the Customs law, and when the amount of $800 was paid to cover the fines that the several parties were liable for under that law I acted on the impression it was my duty to set the vessel free. If I have done wrong by so doing it was from the want of not knowing better. I may further say that I am of the opinion that the whole amount was not paid by the master or owners of the vessel, but was made up by ten parties concerned in the transaction: the money was paid to me by the Messrs. Whiteman, who were also interested in the matter."

That was in reply to the following from the department:—

"Referring to your report of the seizure of the schooner Abbie M. Deering for infraction of the fisheries laws and regulations, I have to point out that you appeared to have released the vessel on a deposit of $800. The penalty is confiscation; the law admits of no compromise or of anything less than the value of the vessel being deposited. I am desired by the hon. the Minister of Customs to ask upon what authority you accepted a deposit of anything less than the value of the vessel, or released the vessel, without instructions or authority either from this department or from the Department of Fisheries?"

The explanation which Mr. Torey had given was as follows:—

"On the evening of the 22nd instant I received a telegram from a party at Canso informing me that the United States fishing schooner Abbie M. Deering of Gloucester, Jeremiah Gordon, master, had landed fish during the previous night and would sail the next day. I at once telegraphed word to Mr. Young and directed him to seize the vessel and I would go down on the following day, which I did, and after making further enquiry I found that the vessel was from the banks, had no license and that the charge was correct and could be sustained. I then proceeded on board, saw the captain and other parties concerned in the transaction, and they admitted the charge and stated there had been landed 4,6 0 lbs. codfish and a quantity of halibut, and had taken on board about 4 tons ice, and wished to have the violation arranged forthwith so that the vessel could proceed on her voyage. I made them the offer that they could do either, namely, let the law take its course or pay a fine of eight hundred dollars for the violation committed upon the Customs Act, the Treaty of 1818 and the laws in connection therewith, with the addition of whatever expenses were incurred in the matter. They accepted the offer and yesterday paid the money, namely, fine, $800, expenses, $25, and I released the vessel. This arrangement was made with the understanding that there was to be no further proceedings taken on either side in this case beyond the privilege of the owners appealing to the Minister's generosity for a reduction of the amount of fine if he thought proper to do so."

That report is dated the 25th April, 1890, and is the report which was put in by Mr. Torey previous to the letter I have read. This officer claims that in accepting $800 he acted in the best interest of the department. He says that at that time it would have been impossible for him to make this seizure because he had not the requisite power that he could call out at this place, and therefore he could not do any more than he did; but nothing further was said. The fine was paid and accepted and was returned to the Government. As a matter of course, Mr. Torey thought the thing was ended. Here was an officer who had been employed for twenty years and had been performing the duties of his office in a manner which gave entire satisfaction to the best people in the county. He was a man who was so vigilant and so energetic that he allowed no opportunity to pass without seeing the law carried out. In fact he had made many enemies on account of the vigilance with which he looked after smugglers and others, and saw that the law was put into operation. Yet he gets no notice in regard to this until after the election. I have said that Mr. Torey was a supporter of the Government, and he is so now. As far as an official could act, no man could be a stronger supporter of the Government than he was. Indeed it was claimed by the opponents of the present Government in the county, that he was so strong a Government supporter as to merit condemnation as an official. His house was the place of all others in the county where the supporters of the Government met, and he did all he could, consistently with his office, and, as his opponents claimed, more than he should for the Government. But, when the election took place last year, he did not see his way clear to vote for the Government candidate and he remained at home. I cannot understand why it was only after the election that this was considered a sufficient cause for his dismissal as a fishery officer. The truth of the matter was that Mr. Torey, having done this, his whilom Conservative friends thought that he was not a man who could be left any longer in office. His opposition was not against the present Government or their policy, his opposition was of a personal character, and just because he did not vote, the Government dismissed him. Now, I claim that when an officer has served them well for over twenty years he ought not to have been treated in this manner. Mr. Torey is not an old man, he is still able to do the work; I venture to say that he is better able to perform the duties of overseer of fisheries and collector of Customs, than any man in the county; I venture to say he knows more about the fisheries of the country and the laws relating to the fisheries, and can give better information to the Government, than any man in the county. Now, even provided the contention of the Government was correct, provided even that he did violate the statute, he did it not wilfully, but he thought he was acting in the best interests of the country. But I want to call attention to another matter in connection with it. It was not until this spring, some time in May, that he received a notice that he was dismissed. In May he wrote a letter to the department, complaining of the harshness of his dismissal after twenty years service to the best of his ability, and asking to be informed of the reason of his dismissal. The department returned answer that there were two reasons, the one on account of his conduct in the seizuze of the United States fishing vessel, and the other on account of his advanced age. I submit that his advanced age was no reason. Mr. Torey is not so old as to be unable to perform his duty. That was in May last, and between the autumn of the previous year and that time, there was nothing said to him about his contemplated dismissal; and I venture to say that only for the fact that Mr. Torey did not see fit at the last election to vote for the Government—and it was a personal matter—he would not have been disturbed, there would not have been a thought of dismissing him. If action had been taken immediately upon what the Government claim to have been a violation of the law with regard to the seizure, I could understand it, for we all know that the Government deal with these matters very summarily. Everybody knows that when Mr. Ross committed a violation of the law he was not allowed six or eight months to think over it, he was dismissed almost immediately.

Mr. TUPPER. No.

Mr. FRASER. How long was he kept in?

Mr. TUPPER. Over a month.

Mr. FRASER. Exactly, but the seizure was first made in April, 1890, and the notification of his dismissal comes to him on the 26th of May, or some time early in May, 1891. Here is the whole secret. There was no thought of removing him, and I venture to say that if Mr. Torey had taken his usual course and had supported the Government candidate, as in previous elections, we would not have heard a word said about his dismissal, and about this hatching of an excuse for dismissing him. Mr. Ross was dismissed at a month's notice, because no election was pending, but Mr. Torey was kept on. There is a general impression in the county amongst both Tories and Liberals, that Mr. Torey's head was cut off on account of his declining to vote. More than that, one of the largest petitions ever presented to the Government in favour of any one, signed by over a thousand men on both sides of politics in the County of Guysborough, including some of the strongest supporters of the Government in the county, was sent to the department about Mr. Torey. But Mr. Torey being a little inclined towards independence just about the time of the election, his past services all went for nothing, his past services to the Government were thought nothing of, and it was concluded that a blow must be struck at him to learn him and to learn all others that if they dared, when an election came on, to refrain from voting, they must understand that the law will be put into operation. Now, if Mr. Torey was an officer who had neglected his duty, there might be some excuse for his dismissal, but even if there had been a violation of the law I claim that he, as an officer who had been twenty years in the service and done his duty to the satisfaction of the Government, ought to have been treated with more consideration. Everybody in the county will tell you that he did his duty so far as he was concerned, and likewise in aiding others and doing what he could to stop smuggling, doing all that he could in the interest of the Government, and I say there ought to have been some consideration shown to an officer of that character. Is a man to be dismissed for one violation of the law? When I consider the further fact that he had grown old in that office, being now over 60 years of age, I think the conduct of the Government was reprehensible in dismissing him. I am not a political friend of Mr. Torey, he does not happen to be a supporter of mine, he did not vote for my party, and I do not think he ever once voted for the Liberal party in that county. His whole influence and the influence of his family were opposed to the party with which I am connected. But that makes no difference; I would claim for him the same rights that I would claim for a supporter of mine. I am bound to say that, although Mr. Torey was opposed to me, he was a good officer, and I claim that the Government ought not to have acted as they did towards that man. Why need his alleged offence go so long unpunished? Why not deal with it at once, if it was such a flagrant violation of the law? Why keep him on without saying a word to him about it? But an occasion arose when the Government, finding that Mr. Torey was independent and would not vote for the Government candidate, decided to dismiss him. Now, here let me say that so far as his knowledge is concerned in comparison with the man that was appointed in his place, it was like the knowledge of the Minister of Marine as compared with the knowledge of his youngest child. He knows just as much more about fisheries than the man the Government appointed as the Minister of Marine knows more than his infant child. I do not say that the new officer is not a respectable man; but he was a small huckster in the village, he knew nothing about anything except selling a few goods. Mr. Torey had been in the service for over twenty years, and had been a commandant of Government vessels. There is nothing in that service that Mr. Torey does not know. There is not an inch of the county that he does not know. He himself supervised all the officers of the Government in the county; indeed he was the Government in that county, he was the whole Government in the county. He collected their Customs, and looked after their fisheries, and everything of that kind. I say that the Government have done a wrong to a man who has been in the Civil Service for twenty years, and no complaint has ever been found against him. Mr. Torey is up as early as any man in that county. I have known him to leave before daylight to perform his duty. But he is declared to be an old man now, and so he must be laid aside. You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that both things are joined together. The Government were conscious that they could not dismiss him for the first reason, and so they found a second reason. The first reason was not sufficient, and, therefore, for the first time, they bring up his age against him. They say: You are getting too old; the Governor General is told that you are too old. I suppose the Governor General thought that he was a decrepit old man like some of the officers we see about the departments, sunning themselves on the lawn, and not able to move about, and consequently the Governor General thought it was in the interest of the service that he should be dismissed. I venture to say, if all the facts in regard to that seizure were brought before the Governor General and Mr. Torey's explanation was considered, the Governor General would not have dismissed him for that cause. It is a serious matter for all officials if they are to be treated in this way. I shall be very glad to hear what explanation can be given. Technically there was a violation of the law by the official, but I hold that there is no official of Mr. Torey's age in the Dominion who has performed his duties so well for twenty years and made so few mistakes. No one indeed, ever heard that he made a mistake before, and yet for that one mistake, and he claimed it was impossible for him to do otherwise, he is removed. If he had not accepted $800 as a fine the vessel would have gone out to sea, and at Canso there were many American vessels which might have taken the part of the vessel in question, and accordingly, in my opinion, Mr. Torey acted wisely. Where could he obtain men to make an arrest? The people were not in sympathy with action in the direction of arresting the vessel after this offer of $800 was made. It was not a case where the captain declared he would resist the law and get away. But when the people found the vessel had offered $800 for the violation of the law, they were in sympathy with it, and it was a question whether the officer should accept the amount or let the vessel go without punishment. That explanation was satisfactory to the Government at the time; and hence their silence, until Mr. Torey failed to come out and vote at the last election. I am simply claiming for him what I would claim for any official. I have nothing to gain from this matter; Mr. Torey is no political friend of mine, nor of my friends; he has no claim on me or any Liberal in the county. He has acted faithfully in his position for many years, and for this one act one of the best officials has been removed. I am sorry, for the sake of the service and for Mr. Torey personally, that this should have been done, and I regret that the Government, after keeping silence so long, found it necessary after the election was over, by the action of my late opponent, to initiate this action. The Government did not do this of their own motion, but my late opponent, seeing that Mr. Torey did not give him his individual support and refrained from voting, brought pressure on the Government to obtain his removal. I assert before the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that if my late opponent had not brought pressure to bear, the Government would not have taken this action in regard to Mr. Torey. I regard this action—I am not speaking in Mr. Torrey's interest but in the interests of the officials—as a great wrong committed on a good officer, a wrong which will be resented by many of the best friends of the Government; and though I might be presumed to wish that the Government should go on causing men to feel aggrieved, yet I am bound to say in regard to Mr. Torey that I expect no favour from him or any of his friends, but I am simply speaking of a good official and faithful servant who, I think, has been unfairly dealt with.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has taken an extraordinary position in this case. It seems we have done a great wrong to a Conservative, a party man, from whom he expects no favours, who, he says, is a supporter of the Government and whose name is "Torey." It so happens that another of the cases to which the hon. gentleman alluded was that of Mr. Ross, a case not so extreme as this, in my judgment, nor of such a serious character. I believe Mr. Ross, though at one time a Liberal, yet at the time the Government took action against him was a supporter of the Government and in sympathy with it. I may say at the outset to the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), who seems to know far more than anyone as to the reasons which prompted the Government, that, speaking for myself and for the Government—because it was by my action and that of the Minister of Customs that the step was taken in connection with Mr. Torey—I do not think he is acquainted with the facts. The hon. gentleman says Mr. Torey is still a Conservative. I did not know, and I did not enquire how he voted at the last election, and I never would have known so much about his political faith and actions at the last election had he not written to me since this action was taken by the Government in connection with his office. That was the first intimation I had of this gentleman's conduct in the last election; it was a long letter, in which he went fully into the reasons for not supporting Mr. Ogden. Much as the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) thinks he knows about the case, he has not studied it with that care which was necessary from the papers which he held in his hand. The cause of the action of the Government occurred long ago, and the burden of the hon. gentleman's argument was that it was not wrong to dismiss him, but if you had to dismiss him, you should not have permitted him to remain in office from April of last year to May of this year. So, instead of doing the officer the great injustice the hon. gentleman contends, the Government have given him a year, which they should not have given him according to the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman will not allow even extenuating circumstances to be pleaded on the part of this officer, that he was old in years; but he insists that he was a vigorous, vigilant and intelligent officer, thoroughly posted in his duties and able to carry them out efficiently. If that states correctly the conduct of that officer, he is without any excuse. The only conclusion from the argument would be that in superannuating that officer the Government had acted wrongly, and he should have been instantly dismissed. The hon. gentleman's statement of the facts is incorrect, and he could not support it by the papers he had before him. He seeks to lead the House to believe that this officer acted with great discretion and within his power as a Customs officer; that he found himself in this position: there was a violation of the Customs Act and a violation of the Fisheries Act, and with great discretion he extracted the highest penalty known under the Customs laws, because he felt it was impossible for him to do any more or go any further. If the statement be correct that this action was taken under the Customs law, this officer showed he had power to exact the highest penalty offered to him, and he did so. But the hon. gentleman took another turn, and, forgetting that statement, he said in effect he arrested him for an offence under the Fisheries Act, which he well knows to be a violation under that Act in the most important points connected with the fisheries and our contention in regard to them, and he attempted to do nothing. The hon. gentleman must bear in mind that that was an afterthought of Overseer Torey, and it places his position in a worse light. For this reason he sent in a formal report on the arrest and detention of the vessel for an offence against the Customs law; but he sent in a report stating exactly what he did:

"That he arrested this ship, to the value of $10,000, for an infraction of the revenue laws of the Dominion, for having, while in the harbour of Canso, on the night of 21st April, 1890, discharged and sold a portion of her cargo, namely, fresh and salted fish, and did also take on board ice and other fishing supplies, not having obtained a license or permission to do so."

Then he goes on to state all the particulars, stating succinctly that it was not only for a violation of the Custom and fishery laws generally, but pointing out in particular the laws that had been violated. For that offence against the fishery laws he knew the penalty was confiscation, and that the Act of Parliament gave no discretion for any less penalty. He had before him the case of Collector Ross that was discussed in this House last year, where some hon. gentlemen opposite complained of undue severity on the part of the Government. He knew that the answer of the Government had been: that, while the punishment was severe, it was necessary in the most emphatic manner possible to mark disapproval of an officer acting without authority in permitting a violation of the Fisheries Act, contrary to the terms of the Treaty of 1818, and that any other conduct on the part of the Government and any toleration of that irregularity on the part of the officers on our coast would injure our position in any international arrangements on every future occasion when the fishery treaties were to be considered, and when we insisted that these were not only our rights, but that we had maintained them, and permitted no exception to be made nor waiver to occur. He had all of that before him, yet he hastened to allow that vessel to depart on making a settlement, and he insinuates a personal reason for that conduct. He does not give as a reason want of force to carry the law into effect, but that the amount was made up by people of the locality. This popular officer, for whom a thousand on both sides of politics, as the hon. gentleman said, made representations to the Government to stay their hand and leave him in office; this popular officer no doubt obtained some of that popularity from the fact that in the discharge of his duties he considered all these circumstances on the part of his neighbours and the people of that locality. He has put forward several excuses, and each of these excuses makes the offence more serious than it appeared to be at first sight. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) complains bitterly that we did not dismiss him last year, but the facts in reference to the delay are these: The moment this office heard that he had, without any reference to the department, even by telegram, allowed this ship to go on the imposition of a penalty for the infraction of the Customs law, and no imposition of any penalty for the violation of the Fisheries Act, the department set about obtaining the full facts. The two departments whose officer obtained these full facts just about the time that the Cabinet breaks up in the summer, and the Council was not in a position to fully consider the case until later on. The hon. gentleman knows that the fishing season being over, there was no necessity, so far as the point to which I have alluded was concerned, for any quicker action to be taken. The main thing was that we did take action soon enough to prevent that officer holding that responsible position before the fishing season opened, and care was taken that we were in a position to say, that we have not waived our rights under the Treaty of 1818 in this respect; that there was no case where we allowed any officer to use a discretion of that kind and permit a vessel to come in contrary to the provisions of that treaty and of our Act, and that wherever it was the case, that officer was dismissed or his services dispensed with before the succeeding fishing season. Our position would be weakened and impaired greatly in connection with this subject, if we tolerated such loose conduct on the part of an officer of the department. The hon. gentleman will see, therefore, that the case of the Government has been most fair, that we laid down the principle in the case of Mr. Ross and we carried out the same principle in the case of an old supporter of the Government; a life-long supporter of the Government, as the hon. gentleman says, and a man who is yet in hearty sympathy with the policy of the Government, according to the hon. gentleman. The pretension which the hon. gentleman set up that this was done because it was desired to give his defeated opponent an office, is preposterous. That is entirely wrong. There is no foundation in fact for that, except the opinion which Mr. Torey has entertained, and which he has expressed in a letter addressed to myself. This matter did not sleep, as the hon. gentleman says; it could not have been considered until the full facts were obtained. Mr. Torey was told the impropriety of his conduct, and had every reason to believe, if he was half so intelligent as the hon. gentleman says he was, that his conduct was under consideration and that his case was not finally dealt with. Mr. Torey is an old man, he was long in the service, he had been a good officer, he had been in his earliest years a vigorous officer, he never sent such an excuse as that, he had not the power to enforce the laws over which he was appointed officer and guardian, and his age was considered, his past services were considered, and he was treated as Mr. Ross was treated in being given the benefit of the Superannuation Act. I mentioned before to the hon. gentleman, that this officer knew that an offence was committed against the Fisheries Act as well as against the Customs Act, and he stated so succintly. He never said that it was on account of his weakness, or on account of insufficient force that he acted as he did, but his own excuse, before he was dismissed, was as follows:—

"I beg to say that the seizure was made principally for a violation of the Customs laws, although no doubt the offence was also a violation of the Fisheries Act."

That was incorrect. But he said:

"I dealt with the seizure under the Customs law, and when the amount of $800 was paid to cover the fine that the several parties were liable for under that law, I got under the impression that it was my duty to set the vessel free."

The hon. gentleman knows that that excuse is inconsistent with the statement he gives to-day, to the effect that his reason for letting her free was that he had not force to detain her. The officer himself says:

"I set her free because I believed it was my duty to do so."

The excuse of the officer, I venture to say, if understood in the light it now presents, would have caused the officer to have been dealt with in a different way, and the argument of the hon. gentleman goes to show that the only mistake was, in giving this officer the benefit of the Superannuation Act. An officer who will report to the Government that his act was under the fisheries law and not under the Customs law; an officer who was in the service of the Fisheries Department for twenty years, the commander of a cutter, knowing that the punishment for violation of the Fishery Act in that regard was confiscation, and who writes in reference to the seizure of the vessel for the violation of that law, that he thought all he could impose was a fine of $800, and then after action was taken on that report, states that the reason he did not hold the vessel for confiscation was that he had insufficient force,—an officer who did all that was in the service a sufficiently long time. He puts forward an excuse on the 28th of June, and now he puts in the hon. gentleman's hands a statement that he had not a sufficient force to detain the vessel. On the 28th of June, a year ago, he says: "If I have done wrong, it was for the want of knowing better," and then he gives the excuse which I mentioned before, that the amount of the fine had been made up by the people of the locality. I know that has no relevancy at all; it is for the purpose of showing that he had exercised a discretion not vested in him, and had taken into consideration those mitigating circumstances, but not in the slightest way connected with the commission of the offence or with the offenders. Now, the hon. gentleman must remember, and the House should be informed, that this case also came up before the authorities of the United States; that is, the consul of the United States made representations in reference to it; and, therefore, the case was one in which the conduct of this Government had to be carried on with the greatest care, and the greatest regularity had to be shown in our dealings with the various vessels, not only the vessel in the case of Collector Ross, but in this case itself, which had come to the knowledge of the United States authorities. Now, there is a letter of recent date; I do not see it attached to this return——

Mr. FRASER. I may say that the Minister gave me those letters as being all the letters I asked for.

Mr. TUPPER. I say I do not observe here a letter sent to the department by this officer, in which he puts forward an additional excuse inconsistent with his first report. That is in April, 1890. The hon. gentleman obtained these papers from the Customs Department; but I have some other papers, which the hon. gentleman can see, and they will show the House that this officer has turned and twisted in regard to this matter.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do I understand that the alleged infraction of the law took place in April, 1890?

Mr. TUPPER. Yes, in April of last year, and the case was not considered when the report was obtained. When the full facts were obtained, we had reached the end of June of that year, and Parliament not being in session, the Council was not full when the question came up, and it stood over for consideration when the Council should be full; because we had before us, not merely the case of this overseer, the collector of Customs, but an international question that concerned our enforcement of this Act in reference to the fishing vessels of the United States, and we had the communication of the consul of the United States touching the subject. In consequence of its importance it stood over, and, as I explained before, the delay that occurred afterwards when the Council was ready to deal with the subject, at a time when the fishing had ceased, and the foreign fishing vessels were not on our coasts; but the action was taken soon enough in the public interest, previous to the fishing season, when the officer would have to enforce the Act.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When was he dismissed?

Mr. TUPPER. He was superannuated in May of this year. But the case which the hon. gentleman made out to-day, and the facts that occurred subsequently when he varied entirely his defence, and stated that it was from inability and want of assistance that he did not enforce the Fishery Act, show that there would have been, if these facts had been known, a case of absolute dismissal, instead of the treatment that was accorded to him.

Mr. FRASER. I would like to have all the correspondence.

Mr. BOWELL. I gave the hon. gentleman all the documents I had, and I am sure the hon. Minister of Marine will give him all that he has.

Mr. FRASER. I may say that the letter in which he gives the excuse that he was unable to make the seizure is dated previous to the letter which was read by the hon. Minister of Marine.

Mr. TUPPER. No: read the letter. The hon. gentleman will find that he is misinformed.

Mr. FRASER. The letter from which the hon. gentleman read was dated 28th June, 1890.

Mr. TUPPER. The letter I read was dated in April.

Mr. FRASER. It was in the letter of April, 1891, that he gives the excuse that he could not. I admit all that; but I submit that the Minister makes a very poor case when he says that this man was dismissed because the Government could not deny the matter. The official was continued in office, and the offence was not considered so serious by the Government up to that time. But my opponent said publicly on the streets after the election, that he would be dismissed.

Mr. TUPPER. I am not responsible for that.

Mr. FRASER. I am only showing that the force which was brought to bear on the Government was a force from without and not from within. My opponent said that openly, and he afterwards rejoiced that he was able to carry that threat into effect.

Mr. TUPPER. If that was done, it was without my knowledge.

Mr. FRASER. I wish to have the opportunity of dealing with this matter further, when I get the rest of the correspondence.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What became of the fine?

Mr. TUPPER. It went to the Receiver General.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 151) respecting the Ontario Express and Transportation Company.—(Mr. Sutherland.)

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House again proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Fisheries—Salaries, &c., P.E.I..... $4,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was not in the House when these items were passed in the Committee of Supply, and I have only a question to ask my hon. friend opposite. It is with reference to Morell River in Prince Edward Island, which is the best fishing rivers in the Island. Formerly very large quantities of the finest trout were caught in it, and efforts have been made by private individuals to preserve many portions of it. Formerly, also, salmon were caught there in large numbers, but of late years, owing to the abominable habit of netting, the river has ceased, to a very large extent, to be a good fishing river, though the sportsmen on the Island have made constant efforts to stop that practice. I think it was two years ago that the department, having already one or two local inspectors, appointed a third gentleman as guardian, Mr. Dowse. He was a resident of Charlottetown: and I find no fault with the appointment, because he had a good deal of knowledge of the fish in that river, had spent much time fishing there, and was well acquainted with the plans adopted by the poachers to net the river. He was appointed additional guardian, and, I understand, devoted a portion of one summer to protecting the river. Are there any outstanding claims of his against the department, or has the department settled with him, as there was a good deal of talk about this before the Fish and Game Society?

Mr. TUPPER. I will take a note of the question and find out.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Fish and Game Protection Society of the Island some time ago entered into correspondence with the hon. gentleman's department, and, with the laudable object of preserving that river, offered to pay the salary of a proper inspector if the Government would make the appointment, the society to name the man to be appointed. The department, however, refused. I do not understand why they refused. It may not be consistent with the policy of the department to make an appointment and allow a private game society to pay the salary; but so anxious were the society to have a proper man appointed, who would actually and not nominally alone protect the river, that they were perfectly willing to pay the salary if the department would make the appointment. The consequence of the refusal of the department is, that the river is being netted year after year, for want of proper guardians. That is a crying pity, because most excellent sport can be had there and magnificent fish. Some very stern measures will have to be taken to teach the poachers that their offence is not a slight one. They have the idea that netting the river and taking out baskets full of the finest fish is not an offence at all, and if an officer goes to arrest them they look upon him as an intruder, and call upon their neighbours to assist them and protect them when they are violating the law. There is a very strong effort going to be made by the Fish and Game Society to protect that as well as other rivers, and I hope my hon. friend will lend them his official aid in that. I would like to know whether it is true, as is stated, that the department has refused to nominate a man there, though the Fish and Game Society offered to pay his salary.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). The Morel is one of the most important rivers in Prince Edward Island, especially for trout fishing, and I think it is important that the department should protect that river. The fishery wardens in the past have, perhaps, not been properly situated, but I hope the new departure which is being taken by the Minister will have a good effect, and that this fishery, which is a very important one, will be better looked after. There is no doubt that the river is being fished and netted year after year, and to some extent the law is being set at defiance. I understand that the Minister is now going to place wardens on these rivers, and pay them for the time they are actually employed in looking after the stream. If those wardens are judiciously placed I think that will have a very good effect in preventing the netting which has been going on for years past, and I hope the Minister will give it his serious attention next year when the fishing season sets in, and will see that this river, which is the most valuable river we have in the province for trout fishing, will be properly protected.

Mr. TUPPER. I am in thorough accord with the hon. gentlemen who have spoken, as to the importance of giving better protection to the important streams in the different provinces. My difficulty in connection with the Fish and Game Club, who communicated with me, was that at the time I was not in the position which I am now, in regard to the re-organization of the fishery service. The hon. gentlemen very well know that in Prince Edward Island and in Nova Scotia we had a very large number of exceedingly useless officers, who had grown up under the old system prior to Confederation, where a man got a two-penny half-penny salary of $10, $20 and $30 a year. These officers increased in number, and the result was, that while we spent a considerable sum of money on that system, none of these men would take any trouble to enforce the Act, for the simple reason that their salary was nominal and the dangers they ran were exceedingly great, incurring the enmity of neighbours and troubles of all kinds in enforcing what were often unpopular regulations. Now, in such a scheme as is proposed we can co-operate very cordially with the clubs—that is, we can, under proper provisions, resort to the system which the clubs have adopted in regard to the rivers in New Brunswick, where they have their guardians and pay them a fair day's wage for a fair day's work, and they have the opportunity of watching them themselves, and of dispensing with them when they do not perform their duty. During the important seasons, when the fish are running, and so on, it is proposed to adopt that system, and we have been proceeding in that direction gradually in the different districts in Nova Scotia, and now we have reached the Island and intend to do away with the warden system, and appoint from time to time temporary officers, who will be guardians under the overseers, all being under the general supervision of the inspector. I do not remember exactly the issue of the correspondence to which the hon. gentleman refers. It has not been the universal rule to refuse the nomination of a club regularly made, and especially when they pay the salary. On the contrary, we have often clothed the officers of private lessees with the powers of fishery officers, but I suppose the chief difficulty here was that we had no appropriation to meet the cost of the officer, though that hardly meets the case the hon. gentleman refers to, because he says the club offered to pay the salary. I do not know what the objection was. We did to a certain extent co-operate with these people last year, and this year we have to some extent met their wishes. Our chief difficulty was that we were cramped under the old system. We have now taken a different line and the subject has been touched upon in the two last reports of the department.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would point out the needlessness of appointing a local man to do this work. He cannot do it. If his neighbour's sons are netting trout, and he attempts to arrest them, he makes a life-long enemy of his next door neighbour. He will not do that, and therefore the necessities require the appointment of a good, energetic, active man, not living in the locality, who could protect the whole river easily enough. I know the appointment of Mr. Dowse a year ago would have been satisfactory if he had been clothed with the proper authority. If you appoint local men, they cannot arrest their next door neighbours and their children, and haul them before a magistrate. The odium is too great, and therefore an outsider should be appointed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not going to enter into a discussion of the very large and important question which is presented to the House here in the vote which we are now asked to concur in. The department, so far, have adhered to their policy of attempting to promote the fisheries by the establishment of fish-breeding establishments: and I suppose that at the present time there is hardly sufficient information before the House to enable it to form any positive opinion upon the utility of this expenditure. I am not going to quote isolated opinions on this, although we have some opinions which are entitled to weight, and which go to show that we are spending ten times as much money as we get returns for. I wish rather to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to one specific point in connection with this vote, and that is the lobster fisheries in the Maritime Provinces. These are very important fisheries. The amount of money they yield and bring into the country every year, the number of men to whom they give employment, and who are engaged in these fisheries, are of themselves sufficient evidence of their great importance. The hon. Minister knows well that year after year there has been a constant struggle going on between the department and this trade for the closing of the lobster fisheries, and to agree upon some plan which will promote and improve the lobster grounds, and against those who are determined to fish them out at all hazards and at all seasons. Now, a great difference of opinion exists. The hon. gentleman appointed a commission some years ago, and I must say the commission presented a report which did not seem to me to be fruitful of very much thought, nor to be productive of very much good: but the result of it all was that the hon. gentleman determined—and, I think, correctly, from the judgment I could form—to shorten the time, not to lease the grounds, as it was once intended to do, to individuals, but to allow them to fish as they had been fishing, but still to form a close season, and to allow them to fish for a very short period, I think from the 1st of May to the middle of July—I speak now with reference to the Island. The results went to show that that was an eminently wise position, and I will challenge contradiction to the fact that after the close season had been in operation for two years the results were very highly satisfactory, and the lobsters have increased so greatly that some gentlemen who had thought of removing their factories to Newfoundland and other places determined to continue the fishery in Prince Edward Island. There was every promise, therefore, of a reasonable and fair catch for the present and for future years, and I think the best men engaged in the fishery, although they entertain, many of them, different ideas about it, have all come to the conclusion, after the experience of one or two seasons, that the policy of shortening the time for catching lobsters solved the whole question; at any rate, it solved it to such an extent that the grounds were improving, the quantity caught was enormously increased, and there did not seem to be any reason why, if that was adhered to, we should not have for many years to come, perhaps for all time to come, a continuance of that rich and productive industry. Now, for some reason or other, owing to some pressure, I do not know what, the hon. gentleman reversed his policy this year, and when that close-season had expired, on the 15th of July, I suppose on the application of a number of packers, he extended the time further. What was the result? The result is, that the grounds are being fished out again, and next year the results will be very much worse, of course, than they are this. On the one hand, he has paid out large sums of money to breed lobsters, and on the other hand he has extended the time during which they can be caught, and has left the lobster fisheries to be depleted. I will read to him a letter which I received from the owner of the large lobster factories the other day on this subject, and it shows, I think, the opinion of, by long odds, a majority of the lobster packers—I do not mean to say in number; I do not mean to say that a large number of smaller lobster packers would not desire to extend the time for a month, or six weeks, or two months; they would keep it open as long as they can catch fish, whether the fish is in a proper condition to catch or not. But I say the better class of the fishermen desire that this fishery should be conserved and protected, and do not desire to see the extension of time. I think the policy adopted by the department this year was a ruinous policy. The hon. gentleman is educating the lobster packers up to the belief that no rule or order passed by the department will resist the application of political influence. Now, I want him to explain, to-night, why it was that the season was extended when it worked so well the year previous. The letter to which I refer reads as follows:—

"The Marine and Fisheries Department are playing the mischief with our Island lobster fisheries. For your information, in case you may use it in debate, I will state the position. About six or seven years ago they wisely shortened the lobster fishing season from the 1st of May to the 16th of July. The waters of the Gulf had been fished out previously by allowing lobsters to be caught pretty much all the open season, and they had become so scarce that nearly all the small factories had to close and the large ones were hardly making both ends meet. There has been a marked improvement since, and for the last three years it has been a paying business. In addition to shortening the season, the regulations as to size and spawn fish have been very stringent, and the factories have been watched, fines, &c., inflicted. Of course, most of the factories thought the regulations were too stringent, but I am not going to enter upon that question now. They were all pretty generally agreed upon this point, namely, that with a view of preserving the industry the open season was long enough. Some few of the large factories would have preferred the season shortened to the 1st of July. This year, without rhyme or reason, the Minister extended the season to the 1st of August. Mr. Prowse, I, and some other large packers, close on the 15th of July. We considered the extension of time destructive of the business, and would not take advantage of it, but small packers have been fishing straight along up to the 12th instant, and have not been molested. The worst feature in the extension of time is that a large proportion of spawn lobsters come on the grounds about the middle of July, and the fish are also not in a good condition for canning, as it is the shell-casting season. Curiously enough, the Government have an artificial herring establishment on Pictou Island, and are at the same time allowing the ova-bearing lobsters to be destroyed by the thousands by giving the extension of time."

I cannot put the matter as tersely and as lucidly as I think my correspondent has put it. He has very great experience in this business, extending over a great many years, has a very large number of factories, and an enormous amount of capital invested; and having read his letter, I submit his remarks for the consideration of the Minister and ask for an explanation.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I would like to ask the Minister if this amount includes a sum for extending the hatchery for lobsters as well as other fish. I was going to say that that is the most important feature of the whole lobster fisheries just now, and I think it is a branch of business to which the Minister should give his attention. From correspondence I have had last year from Newfoundland on this question, I think, if my memory serves me right, that the lobster hatchery there met with wonderful success, and that something like 480,000,000 of young lobsters were put into the water that had been hatched by a very simple process. Now, if that is a fact, and if the hatchery that has been started in Pictou County this year has met with the success that I hear it has had, I think that contains the whole solution of the lobster business, and that if we can successfully hatch out lobsters in the way it is said they are doing in these hatcheries it will do away with any necessity of making stringent laws with respect to the protection of the fisheries further than shortening the season. The shortening of the season is ample and sufficient for the protection of the business. What I supposed the Minister had in view was the late season this year at which the fishery commenced and the serious storms that had occurred during the season, when he made the mistake of extending the season this year until 1st August. With respect to the fishing in our county, I can safely say that the fishermen as a whole were well pleased with the usual season they have been having of late years, and it would have been better had the season ended at the usual time. With respect to the size of the lobsters, I think that matter should be left very much to the fishermen themselves. All that is necessary, in order to preserve that valuable branch of the business, is to restrict the season to the time allowed for several years past. If that is done, the business will look after itself. In King's County those who prosecute the fishery have not been greedy about an extension of the season at any time, and they would always be perfectly satisfied and willing, if there was no law to restrict, to close at the period named, if not before, and in some cases they have closed before, but at all events they would be quite satisfied to close at the time set down by the department. I believe the fishery will be maintained and even improved by the short season, without imposing any further restrictions on the fishermen. That fact is to be seen established in the improvement of the fishery in our county, where the short season has been adhered to, and where the fishery is improving year after year. I hope the Minister will give his earnest attention to the lobster hatcheries, and if the process is as simple as I am given to understand it is, he will see it is introduced in every section, not only of Prince Edward Island, but of the lower provinces, where lobster fishing is carried on, and that the immense quantities of ova that are now destroyed and go into the boilers—for these lobsters will be taken as long as lobster factories are in existence—will be utilized. If the hatchery system can be carried out as regards lobsters we will be able to return to the sea more lobsters than are taken from it, and thus keep up the supply from a source that is now lost sight of. I hope the Minister will give this subject his close attention, and establish lobster hatcheries wherever they are required.

Mr. TUPPER. This subject is a very important one to the Maritime Provinces, and it is very gratifying to the Department of Fisheries to find there is an entire change on the part of the lobster packers in reference to the regulations which have been enforced, in the report of the Lobster Commission to which the hon. gentleman has referred. The chief feature of the report was the radical change which was recommended in regard to the open season. At one time the lobster packer took lobsters both in spring and fall, the close season varying nearly every year in the middle or summer months. That was a condition of affairs that was confusing and, certainly, not as it should have been. I have, with a great deal of difficulty, endeavoured to enforce this close season, notwithstanding the opposition of packers in almost every district. It shows how impossible it is to please everybody, when this year the extension given has aroused considerable displeasure among the packers of Prince Edward Island, or a certain number of them. But I may say, in explanation, that a large number of packers communicated with me, protesting against this extension, after the season had been extended, and they "let the cat out of the bag," by saying, not merely that it was against the interest of the fishing to make the extension, but that great anxiety was felt as to its effect on the price of the catch, and they mentioned in their telegram to me that an extension would lower the price of the lobsters already caught. Whatever was their chief consideration, the question is still before us as to maintaining rigidly this close season, which, in Prince Edward Island, ends 15th July. I can tell the House that the extension proposed in the Island and a part of New Brunswick was made under certain misapprehension, and to that extent is a reflection perhaps on my department. It is better to state how that extension came about. There were very strong representations from Cape Breton Island made to the department, setting out that there had been exceptional storms and an enormous number of traps had been carried away, that fishing had been interrupted during a large portion of the season, that the lobsters were in splendid condition, and that a short extension of time would not this year be injurious to the lobster fishing. That was during the early portion of this session. I gave directions to ascertain from our own officers how far those representations were correct. There was not much opportunity for careful enquiry, for this reason: that the request from the different districts had been received towards the end of the regular season, and the decision of the department was required to be very quickly made, in order that there might be no interregnum or lapse between the regular season and the beginning of the next. The representations were verified as regards Cape Breton. My directions were that when the circumstances were similar, when the condition of the fish was good, when there had been a great loss of traps, accordingly a smaller catch proportionately, similar treatment should be accorded to the different districts, so that the department would not be in the position of doing for one district what it would not do for another. There was a misapprehension, and instructions went out, before I had the opportunity to correct them, extending the season not merely there, but in Prince Edward Island, and in one of the New Brunswick districts. There was considerable complaint from many persons interested in New Brunswick. All these facts went to show that the salvation of the lobster fishery had been brought about by the regulations prohibiting the fall fishing. I agree that it is most dangerous for the department to grant an extension of time, but the circumstances as regard the Cape Breton fisheries brought to my attention were exceedingly strong, the lobsters there being in an exceptional condition as to size and quantity, and the fishery having been interrupted many weeks of the season. In many of the districts, unlike other districts on the southern part of Nova Scotia, they cannot take the lobsters until the ice is gone, and the season on the Island is for that reason very much limited indeed. It is true that the packers protested, but, under all the circumstances, the inspector is of opinion that an extension for ten days might with safety be granted, that is, with safety to the interest of the fishery, and the extension was accordingly granted in these districts.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Some of them fished up to the 12th August.

Mr. TUPPER. Of course, it is one of these many cases in which we have had tremendous difficulty, and one would require almost an army of men to stop that illegal packing; but the hon. gentleman will find on enquiry that it was not done by the regular packers. Hitherto the boiling of the lobsters had been left to the men who had possessed themselves of a certain amount of capital, and built factories, but the fishermen find that during this close season they can with very little expense boil the lobsters and pack them, and just as in the case of illicit stills against the Inland Revenue, all along the coast of Nova Scotia we have had a great deal of difficulty in breaking up that illegal business, which is a new difficulty in the experience of the department. I am not surprised that on the Island there has been that experience, although not on such a large scale. Between the last season and the one before there has been a great deal of difference in this, because during the last two seasons we have enforced the law so rigorously that the department has been sharply taken to task on many occasions for alleged hardship upon a class of very poor men, and the hon. gentleman knows that it is unfortunately true that those men who do enter that business are oftentimes strengthened by the excuse of the poverty of themselves and families. Now, with reference to the question of lobster hatcheries. I saw that in the sister colony of Newfoundland Mr. Neilson, whom the Government of that country very wisely employed a year or two ago, had met with great success in the hatching out of the lobster, and seeing the desperate condition that we were on the eve of in the Maritime Provinces in regard to that important business, we sent Mr. Wilmot there, and he came back and reported that there was no great difficulty in hatching out the eggs of the lobster; that it was very closely allied to the system of hatching out the ordinary fish eggs, and he selected a suitable spot in the County of Pictou, at Caribou, just across from the Island, in the Northumberland Straits.

Mr. FORBES. Might I ask the hon. gentleman where else these hatcheries will be placed?

Mr. TUPPER. We have every reason to believe that this will be a success, for although this hatchery was only built in the middle of the season, we were able to deposit 6,000,000 of young lobsters in the Northumberland Straits, and nearly all of these eggs would in the ordinary course have gone with the other lobsters to the hatcheries and been destroyed. If this is a success, as we have every reason to believe it will be, the policy of the Government will be to extend the hatcheries at proper distances through the Maritime Provinces. The present hatchery is situated in one of the most important lobster districts in the province, as will be seen by a reference to the number of factories along that shore, and the site is one from which a large district can be served. The hon. gentleman knows that the lobster travels very quickly and moves over a very large territory, so that the hatchery there will extend over a large area. It is also proposed at small expense to adopt these floating incubators, and some of the factories have taken them up, and under the supervision of Commander Gordon they have commenced hatching out the eggs from them. One of the hon. gentlemen who spoke upon this subject, and who is most familiar with the whole question, says that he does not sympathize with the regulation about the size of the lobsters caught. I think that objection will soon be removed on the island. It was a most serious matter, because the lobsters had diminished so much in size that the enforcement of that regulation meant, as was alleged, the prohibition of the fishery, but the inspector on the Island maintained that the regulation was necessary, and it would be unwise to depart from the principles laid down in this matter in the regulations of other countries. In Newfoundland, where a great deal of attention is paid to this subject, Mr. Neilson considers that regulation as most essential, and the regulation as to the sizes is larger there, and the lobsters, perhaps, may be larger, too. Experts, outside of the business, and not concerned in the moneyed part of it, are practically unanimous that a regulation size should be laid down, so that we have not been able to depart from that; but, as the hon. gentleman knows, it is most extraordinary what some packers will do on occasions. We have found them taking lobsters under 4 inches in length, and every one can see what a fraud it is to put an article like that upon the market, and the bad name it gives to the Canadian lobster, as well as the injury done to the fishery by the destruction in these young lobsters of millions of lobsters, which, if it were allowed to reach a mature age, would have gone to increase the fishery.

Mr. PERRY. I am very glad that a discussion has taken place with respect to the lobster fisheries of the lower provinces. I am not opposed to honest, fair and square regulations for the protection of these fisheries. I believe they require to be protected. But I am opposed to a vacillating policy of having one set of regulations this year and another set next year; I am opposed to having one policy for a certain class of people and another policy for another class of people. We know that it is dangerous to place so much power in the hands of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It makes him liable to be led away at the instance of political friends, and perhaps to cause loss and damage to political enemies. I know that in my own county two or three years ago several parties were fined for catching and packing lobsters undersized. Every Liberal was fined, but every Conservative, without exception, got free. One man's case was carried to the Supreme Court and he got free. Another man, who ran an election in the interest of the Conservative Government of the province, also got free; he was fined $100, but the fine was never collected. These things are not correct. I am informed that on the south side of the Island friends of the Government are still fishing lobsters. The Minister told us the other day that he had applied the pruning knife all the way round, and had now no fishery wardens. The result is, that he has no person to look after the lobster fisheries. It is not fair that the people on the north side of the Island have to submit to the regulations of the department, while their friends on the south side are fishing lobsters out of season. About the 15th of July the lobster fishing is over, but the Minister thought proper, at the suggestion of some political friends, I suppose, to extend the time to the 1st of August. The fishermen on the north side took up their traps; but on the south side, which from the west point of the Island down to Summerside is a lobster fishing ground, I am told by trustworthy people fishing is still going on. Does the Minister know nothing about this? Has he no person there to protect the fisheries? What is the use of his passing regulations if he does not take proper means to carry them out? There ought to be a fixed time for these traps to be taken up. If it is to be the 15th of July, let it be so; and if it is to be 1st of August, let it be so. It is wrong to have one regulation one year and another regulation another year. The Minister may be tempted by the prayers of his friends, or they may tell him that if he does not do this, that, or the other, they will put him out at the next election. We know that these influences are brought to bear in some cases; and a rule or regulation which is made by a Minister to accommodate an individual is likely to be against the interest of the great majority of the people engaged in these fisheries. These regulations ought to be more uniform than they are; and I would advise the Minister to make enquiries to-morrow as to the people who are still using the fishing grounds. I can name the parties; I know who they are, and I know they are friends of the Government. But by the time the red tape is put into operation and a message is sent to Prince Edward Island, I suppose these people will have made a snug little fortune, by being left free to fish for a month or six weeks longer than the people on the north side of the Island. It is not fair. The hon. gentleman told us the other day, in answer to my hon. friend from Queen's, that we have no more fishery wardens, and that the protection of the fisheries is to be left to some person specially appointed for the purpose. I would like to know whether anyone has been appointed to protect the fisheries of Prince Edward Island. Who is to protect the inland fisheries, the fisheries in the rivers and brooks, where the hon. gentleman expects to plant a lot of small fish? I do not know. I am sure he is not going to have the steamer Stanley or any other ship run up the brooks to see who are breaking the laws or the regulations of the department there. Those fishery wardens cost only about $30 a year, and there are not a great many of them about the Island. The Island is a small patch of land; but the fisheries around its shores are very valuable and worth protecting; the Minister knows that there are no fish caught about the coasts of the Maritime Provinces as good as those caught on the north side of Prince Edward Island. They are worth protecting. I know fishermen on the north side of the Island who have thousands of dollars invested in this industry, and who employ a great many men, who consume more dutiable articles perhaps than men following any other occupation. They have to buy their clothing, their flour, their molasses—I will not say their sugar, because my hon. friend would tell me they are getting it free, though I do not believe it. They are large contributors to the revenue of the country, and they are aiding in developing the resources of the country. Those people ought not to be trampled down by the arbitrary rules of the department; and the sooner my hon. friend the Minister of Fisheries makes uniform laws and regulations the better. Now, this year he has extended the time fifteen days. Does the hon. gentleman intend to do the same next year? He will not say so. I suppose if the Grits next year ask him to do it he will not, but if he is asked by the Conservatives no doubt he will. That has been my experience, and I believe the experience of every gentleman connected with the business. I am not opposed to having rules and regulations, but I am opposed to having one rule for one party and another rule for another.

Mr. FORBES. Before this item is concurred in I would like to give my approval to the remarks of the last speaker. I am a bitter opponent of the vacillating policy followed for the last few years by the Minister of Marine. It is absolutely necessary, in the interests of those who have invested their money in factories around the shore, that they should know when and for how long they require to engage their men. There may be occasions when, on the northern coast of Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island, it may be necessary to extend this season, but along the south shore I cannot see that it is very necessary to extend it beyond the regular stated period fixed by Order in Council.

Mr. TUPPER. There was no extension this year.

Mr. FORBES. I admit that, but we never know when there is going to be one. What jurisdiction has the department over the fisheries of Anticosti?

Mr. TUPPER. The same as over other parts of the Dominion.

Mr. FORBES. The hon. gentleman's policy in extending the time there I rather approve of, because the snow there sets in earlier in the fall and extends very late the next year. I have known it to be well up in June before the fishermen could get clear of the ice and make any headway. I would also ask the hon. gentleman if he can give us any definitive proposal as to the extension of this lobster hatchery business?

Mr. TUPPER. Nothing further than what I said, that until we have some experience—and we will have that this year—we cannot state how much money we will ask Parliament to sanction next year.

Mr. FORBES. Does the hon. gentleman intend confining his attempts to the County of Pictou entirely?

Mr. TUPPER. Yes; at present.

Mr. FORBES. I would submit, with all deference, that is hardly fair to the enterprise.

Mr. TUPPER. I know the locality will not please the hon. gentleman, but the principle is this: We have started with one hatchery, and it would be certainly unwise to experiment with more than one.

Mr. FORBES. I should imagine the best locality would be where the lobsters are either being depleted, as regards number or size, or where there are a large number of factories. On the south shore of Nova Scotia we have from ten to fifteen factories alone.

Mr. TUPPER. If the scheme is a success, the Government will be disposed to ask Parliament to extend the system into different districts where the lobster fishing is pursued. It has been started, and six million lobsters have been hatched out this season.

Mr. FORBES. Does the department intend locating the incubators around the shore?

Mr. TUPPER. The idea is to have the co-operation of the lobster factories. There will be very little trouble; as long as they take the supervision we will supply the incubator at very small cost. It is a flat box, and these will be given to the factories, which will take charge of them.

Mr. FORBES. Another thing is the enormous cost of the steamers and vessels mentioned in these estimates. It is put down as $100,000 for these few schooners and a couple of steamers. I submit that is an extravagant figure for the small service they perform.

Mr. TUPPER. You must not leave out the steamers.

Mr. FORBES. There are only one or two.

Mr. TUPPER. There are four. There is the Dream——

Mr. FORBES. She is a dream, as far as we are concerned, for we never see her around our section.

Mr. TUPPER. You do not require her.

Mr. FORBES. Positively the reverse. American fishermen have been known to come well within the three-mile limit and drop their purse-seines.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is hardly fair. He quarrels with the amount of money required to support a certain number of vessels, and then he desires us to have more vessels.

Mr. FORBES. What I object to is, that the amount is extravagantly used.

Mr. TUPPER. Prove it.

Mr. FORBES. I will give an instance. In the localities where these watch-dogs are required they are never found when the enemy is approaching. The whole coast can be protected if the Government will take the matter in hand. The vessels are kept on the inland waters and further up the Gulf of St. Lawrence, instead of being kept on the south shore, where the American fishermen can speedily approach from the outside limits. When the guard boats are not around they slip into the Canadian waters in broad daylight, and in open view of our fishermen. I have no desire to cut down the service, but in view of the insufficient return given for this expenditure I think there must be a leak somewhere. There are not so many seizures made as formerly, and the law is not so vigorously enforced. The fishermen rightly own the inshore fisheries and are opposed to any illegal and unjust interference. No doubt, that is due to a desire on the part of the Government not to irritate the Americans: still, if on payment of the paltry amount of $1.50 the American fishermen get almost equal privileges to our own, except as regards catching within the three-mile limit, our fisheries should be more carefully protected.

Mr. BOWERS. I have no complaint to find, as my hon. friend from Queen's has, with regard to the protection service. In St. Mary's Bay and the Bay of Fundy last fall, when the mackerel were in, the steamer Dream came over and did good work in keeping the American schooners out of the bay. I have nothing to find fault with in that respect. I would say to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that I do not think this rule in regard to lobster fishing should be a cast-iron rule. I think that, in our counties of Digby, Annapolis, Yarmouth, and along there, there should be an extension of fifteen days in the time for catching lobsters, and that is not only my opinion, but the attention of the Minister of Marine has been called to it, I think, by Lieutenant Gordon in his report on that subject. It must be remembered that in the Bay of Fundy we have no weather permitting lobster traps to be set much before the middle of May, and in some places before the 1st of June. And sometimes in the month of May violent gales of wind set in, whereby most of the traps are lost. The lobsters caught in traps in the Baie des Chaleurs are canned, but ours are shipped alive to the American market, and in July they rise in price to 8 cents and 10 cents apiece, when our fishermen have been getting only 3½ cents to 5 cents apiece in the earlier part of the season. If they could fish for this fifteen days longer, the pecuniary profit to them during the first fifteen days of July would be as much as the profit during the whole month of June, and it would make no difference in the price of the factory lobsters, because there are only one or two factories in our county, and they can only catch the small lobsters ranging from 9 inches to 10½ inches. I hope the Minister will not make the size for saving any smaller than it is now. I think our fishermen as a general rule would like to have the size 10½ inches, as it is on the coast of Maine, and that all under that size should be thrown overboard. This they regard as all the protection that is needed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand that among the vessels employed for the protection of the fishery is a vessel of the name of Dream, as to which I should like to have some information. If I am correctly informed, she is a steamer of 25 tons or 29 tons—I am not sure which—and a rental is paid for her of $3,600 a year. She is rented, I believe, from a Mr. Thorne, who occupies the onerous position of President of the Conservative Association down there somewhere.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; he is a first-rate man.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And from what I hear it is stated that:

"The Dream is fit only for service on St. John River above the falls—absolutely useless in the Bay of Fundy in winter, in even moderately rough weather. One of our 10-ton Irishman-rigged fishing boats, handled by a Grand Mananer——"

Whatever that may be——" would drown the Dream ten times in ten hours at any season."

I am not capable of forming an opinion as to what the Grand Mananer's craft might do; but, if this vessel is only about 29 or 30 tons, and if she is not fit to keep the Bay of Fundy in rough weather, even admitting that Mr. Thorne is a valuable friend of the Government, it seems that $3,600 a year is a dear figure to pay for her. These are the facts as they have been stated to me. I understand that the Dream is employed sometimes for other services, which, I suppose, are useful to the Dominion. I see, among other things, that it is stated that the Dream, a day or two before the 15th August, was utilized to carry a certain George J. Clarke to Grand Manan and the Islands to obtain Conservative names to be added to the list. I should like to know something about the Dream. It is clear that this Dream is a reality and not a vision, as for several years $3,600 a year rent has been paid for her, and I should be glad to hear the views of the Minister as to the services she can render. A craft of that size is certainly not fit to encounter very rough weather in the Bay of Fundy or elsewhere.

Mr. TUPPER. The Dream is not a large vessel, but she has performed very important work, and performed it well, since 1887, and the charter that the hon. gentleman alludes to includes not merely the ship itself but the keeping of her in repair by the owner. The repairs on these ships form a very expensive item, as I know by the ships owned by the department, and a very large sum has been spent by the owner, Mr. Thorne, from whom we chartered that boat. I think this boat cost originally $16,000. She was built for pleasure purposes originally, and it was thought she would suit the purposes of the department in 1887; and she is not required, for the purposes for which she was first got—guarding and protecting the herring fisheries of the bay—to stand out in very bad weather, but she is employed from one end of the year to the other at $300 a month. The only trouble we have experienced is when it is necessary to send her across the Bay of Fundy—for instance, to St. Mary's Bay, in Digby County. With a bad sea it would be difficult for the Dream to make that trip. That was not the original purpose for which she was obtained, nor was she secured to patrol those waters. With reference to Mr. Clarke's trip, I am responsible for that. I asked that gentleman to give me some advice in reference to the organization of the fisheries in that district in which he lives, and I authorized him to go to Grand Manan on the Dream. In reference to the obtaining of names for the voters' list, that is something I did not hear of until the hon. gentleman mentioned it; but I asked Mr. Clarke to go there and make enquiries for me in reference to the fisheries, and he asked if he could go on the ship. The commander of the ship would have no authority to allow anyone on her without permission given by the responsible head of the department.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman stated that she cost $16,000.

Mr. TUPPER. I am not sure. I am only speaking from recollection.

Mr. GILLMOR. I hardly think the Dream would cost $16,000. I have represented Charlotte County for thirty years, and I think I could have given my friend any information he required, without his having to go to the expense of sending Mr. Clarke to my county in the steamboat.

Mr. TUPPER. I might have asked the hon. gentleman to go away, but probably he would have preferred to stay here and vote.

Mr. GILLMOR. It would not have been at all necessary for me to go away in order to give the hon. gentleman the information. With regard to the Dream, there has been various opinions. It is my impression that the Dream is very well fitted for a large part of the service in the Bay of Fundy in the inner bays. She is a very nice little vessel. I do not know about the charter, whether it is very high or not, but I should think it was a pretty good price.

Mr. TUPPER. It would be high without the provision for keeping her in repair.

Mr. GILLMOR. All owners of vessels keep them in repair. I think the Dream is a very convenient and nice little vessel, and as far as I know she has rendered very good service. I would like to enquire of the Minister about those boats that were seized—have they been given up?

Mr. TUPPER. They have been given up.

Mr. GILLMOR. I am very glad they have been given up. I was very sorry they were seized. There is a dividing line there which is not marked off in any way, and they have always been in the habit of fishing close to that line. Now, with regard to protecting the fisheries, I hope the time is not far distant when our relations with our friends across the border will be such that we will not need to be watching when these vessels go across a certain line. I do not believe it is at all necessary for the protection of the fisheries. Two months ago we had a discussion here about the fisheries, and about the habits of the fish, and my friends from Nova Scotia concluded that the process of fishing was depleting the whole Atlantic fisheries, and that the herrings were all exhausted. What is the result now? Only a few weeks, and the herrings are as plentiful as ever. I am informed that you can get a hogshead of herrings now, five barrels of these small herrings, of which they make sardines, for $2. The mackerel are coming in, and yet only a few weeks ago we were told that the process of fishing had destroyed the fish. It is quite impossible for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to make rules that will satisfy everybody; he cannot make them to satisfy the few gentlemen that are here representing those constituencies. The fact is, that very little is known with regard to these artificial processes of breeding lobsters and salmon, and I think myself that it is money thrown away. I think that the natural, old-fashioned way of multiplying the fish and every thing else is the best way. You cannot make much of these artificial processes of incubating lobsters and other fish. I do not think that much good can come from money expended in that way. I know that the Minister of Marine is very anxious to make a record for himself with regard to protecting the fisheries, and I approve of it. Now, in these days we see rich gentlemen and societies trying to preserve the rivers for themselves to fish in for sport; I do not approve of that at all. In this country I would like to see the streams and the rivers open to all the people, so that they can go out and catch a salmon or catch a trout whenever they want to. I do not want to see the rivers locked up by a few wealthy men, and all the rest of the people prevented from catching a mess of trout, because these fresh-water fish do not come into the market. Latterly this new system of things has sprung up, so that rich men own streams, and companies are formed who own streams, and the Local Governments control them—the Dominion Government control them, or protect them at any rate, and give them the young fish to stock these rivers, while the people have got to stand aside and look on and see the rich man enjoy the sport. The masses of the people do not go there for sport; they go to get fish for food purposes, and they are prevented by this new custom that has sprung up. With regard to the protection of fisheries, I think a great deal too much effort has been put forth in that direction. I do not believe that the fisheries are going to be depleted; I do not believe it is in the power of people to exhaust the fish in the ocean. They increase so rapid that it is impossible to exhaust the herring especially, and, as I said before, the herring are the food for all the other fish in the sea. Members here talk frequently about the water becoming polluted in the Atlantic Ocean. How are you going to pollute the waters in the Atlantic Ocean? Why, the natural scavengers that are in the ocean eat up all the offal and the dead fish before they get to the bottom. There are all kinds of fish in the ocean, and they eat all sorts of food, and the offal does not go to make the water impure or to kill the fish. It is all a myth, all a sham, and all a humbug.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I wish to call attention to the Dream, which has been referred to by my hon. friend. She is in the service of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and Mr. Thorne, the gentleman in whose name she is leased for the Fishery Department, I think, ought to be exonorated from personally appropriating to himself the very large and enormous profits which he derives from leasing this boat. He receives $3,600 a year, and I have been told by a gentleman, within the last three weeks, that if she was not under charter to the hon. gentleman she would at once be sold.

Mr. TUPPER. No; we asked him if he wanted to sell it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Mr. Thorne is a shrewd business man, and would not sell what is giving him $3,600 a year. I want to call attention to the fact that $3,600 a year does not, by any means, represent what that little toy costs this country. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the Auditor General's Report he will find that the total cost of the boat is $8,240. In addition to paying $3,600 for the charter to W. H. Thorne we pay about $4,640 for running this little boat—say a total cost of $8,240. I would advise the Minister to buy him out or give up the charter. It is very well to have a joke over this matter, but it is rather too serious. I have been told by some gentlemen from St. John that one year's charter is more than the value of the whole boat, and if that is so, this is, on a small scale, a small outrage. Now, I want to say one word respecting the remarks make by the hon. member for Prince County (Mr. Perry). He states that the extension of the time for lobster fishing, which was extended beyond the 15th of July to the first of August, has been taken advantage of by these people, and that they are actually fishing up to this moment. Now, that is unfair in the interest of these lobster packers, and it is unfair to the general public besides. The hon. gentleman spoke of a representation made by a certain number of lobster packers against these people being allowed to continue to fish beyond the proper season, on the ground that it would impair and lower the value of the fish.

Mr. TUPPER. Their telegram mentioned that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not wonder at it; I do not wonder at their protesting. I want to point out to the hon. gentleman that the fish caught at this season—and I am speaking now with reference to the Prince Edward Island shores, of which I know something from the lobster packers—the fish caught at this season of the year are of a very inferior quality. The lobster is not a fit fish in August to be caught and packed, and the result is that the quality of the fish put on the market is so much inferior to the first-class fish we catch during the proper season the value of the catch is more or less affected. I have no doubt that is one of the reasons why the packers object to that being done. I do not place as much confidence in the rules of the department with respect to the size of the fish as I do with respect to the time during which the fishing should continue. How do the larger packers fish? A gentleman has a large factory and considerable money invested in it. He employs men in his neighbourhood, from 10 to 100, who go out in their own boats and catch the lobsters and bring them in. Very often they have a few lobsters under size. But I say it is not to the interests of the large packers to catch small-sized lobsters.

Mr. TUPPER. In one case we took 300 under 4 inches at a factory just as they were being packed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That statement is an important one. I assert, however, that it is not their interest to do it, but they cannot help it. The men go and catch the lobsters and take some small ones; and it is prejudicial to the owners of the factories to be constantly harassed by officers going to the factories to look at the size of the fish. This would not be necessary if the lobster packers understood that the department was determined that there should be a close season, and that on a particular day the factories should close down. But the lobster packers only laugh about the matter, and they do not believe there is a close season. They are fishing to the detriment of the industry and to the destruction of the quality of our fish in the markets to which they are sent. I know of nothing calculated to impair the high reputation which Prince Edward Island fish bear in the markets of the world than to permit those men to fish at this improper time, and send improperly-canned fish abroad to compete with the splendid fish we take and can at the proper season. Lobster packers should understand that the department mean business, and that when the time is up no political influence would be allowed to prevail to extend the season up to the middle of August, as it is now. I fear very great injury will be done, and the statements which my hon. friend made are not only confirmed by observations which I have made myself, but they are even worse.

Mr. TUPPER. I do not think the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Perry) is well informed; but in order to meet the chief point which he made, that there was favouritism, I can assure him that if he will give me the information he mentioned, when he said that people had violated the laws, I will see that everybody is prosecuted, and that will test the question whether there is favouritism, or that it is done, as he intimates, with the sanction of the Fisheries Department. I undertake that if he will supply me with specific information, which he says he has, of violations of the lobster regulations in Prince County or anywhere else, I will place it in the department and proceedings will be taken.

Mr. PERRY. It is not my business to give information to the department, but it is the duty of the department to find it out.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman said he had important information, and he should let the department have it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I suppose that, when a member representing the county states that he has information that a number of packers are fishing illegally, the Minister will telegraph the inspector that such representations have been made in the House and insist on the inspector taking means to stop it.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is worth while spending a little time discussing this item under consideration, and to offer that criticism it deserves. It appears that the steamer Dream is rented at an amount yearly that represents almost her entire cost, $3,600. When we note the fact that we spent last year $8,240 in keeping Mr. Thorne dancing round with a little boat professedly protecting the fisheries, it is the duty of the Opposition to closely criticize the item and ferret out the reason why that man is favoured—for it must be a favour—in this way.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the amount?

Mr. McMULLEN. $8,240 was the entire expense of the boat. It is so stated in C—127 of the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. TUPPER. That covers more than twelve months. The exact amount for the year is $787.88.

Mr. McMULLEN. We will call it $8,000.

Mr. FOSTER. We will not say that $8,000 were paid to Mr. Thorne, because it would not be true.

Mr. McMULLEN. We will call it that amount as expense for operating the boat.

Mr. FOSTER. $8,000 were not paid to Mr. Thorne to keep him dancing round for fisheries protection.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is true he got his rent, and all that was necessary in connection with running the boat down to the wages from the Dominion treasury. In that way there was, between rent and expenses, the sum of $8,000 expended last year.

Mr. FOSTER. He does not touch a cent of it.

Mr. McMULLEN. Am I to believe the Auditor General's Report or the Minister? I prefer taking the Auditor General's Report, for my experience is that I am more likely thereby to reach the truth than by taking the statement of any hon. gentleman across the House.

Mr. FOSTER. You would not like to censure any one?

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not consider I am censuring anyone, and I am only stating what I, in my experience, believe to be the truth. It is quite clear that that money has been spent on that boat. It has been stated by my hon. friend, and no doubt correctly, that the value of the boat is, perhaps, $3,600, or a year's rent. What position does this favoured individual occupy in St. John? I have heard it stated that he is president of the Conservative Association of that city. Perhaps that explains the whole matter. If that is the position, and if, in order to keep that association in a flourishing condition, it is desirable to spend on a boat of that kind the sum of money we annually expend on it, that fact may explain the whole thing. The owner, certainly, was not dreaming when he rented the Dream for a certain amount: he was wide awake. The Government must have been dreaming when they allowed themselves to accept a contract for running a small boat for $3,600 a year, professedly for the protection of the fisheries, and furnishing everything for the purpose of running it. Items of this kind should be dispensed with; we should agree to cut off such expenditures. There is no necessity for them, and whenever we strike a matter of this kind it is usual to find in it some political reason. It is done for a political purpose, for the purpose of keeping some person in a condition so that he can render very valuable services to hon. gentlemen opposite. I say if there is a reason of that kind the country has no right to pay for a little boat carrying 25 or 30 tons, $3,600 a year and paying a lot of money outside. It cannot be a very large vessel, for I see an anchor was rented for it at $4 a year. It must be a small institution when an anchor of that kind was quite sufficient to keep her in her place. It is quite clear in the face of the statements that have been made, that there is something wrong about this thing, and the Minister should not be deluded by a dream of this kind into spending so much money.

Mr. FOSTER. I would be sorry to see a statement of that kind go on Hansard and be a matter of record, in the shape in which it was placed before the House. My hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) says that he prefers taking the Auditor General's Report to the word of the Minister. That is a mere matter of taste; but I should imagine other gentlemen on the other side of the House would be somewhat anxious to keep within the lines of what was really true and in accordance with the facts. It is a fact that the Dream is rented, and that the rent which is paid to the owners—not the owner, but the owners—of the boat is $300 per month, and if my hon. friend had stated that he would have stated the truth.

Mr. TUPPER. That includes repairs.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, that rental includes repairs. It is to be borne in mind by the Committee, that when a sum of $300 per month is paid for that vessel, it means that the owners keep her in perfect repair year in and year out. That is true, but when my hon. friend, for whatever purpose, goes a little further and says that the Government find it convenient to pay a Mr. Thorne who is the head of the Liberal-Conservative Association in St. John, $8,000 a year out of the public funds, in order to keep him dancing around on fishery protection service, then my hon. friend goes entirely beyond the record of what is true. The Government pays, as I said before, $300 per month, and it has had that vessel now for a little over three years, during which time the owners have kept that vessel in perfect repair. If my hon. friend thinks that a bonanza has been realized on that by the owners he is very much mistaken indeed, for during that time, to my own certain knowledge, very large and heavy repairs have been put upon the vessel, and I doubt if the owners have realized very much more than a fair percentage on the money that she cost during the three years she has been in the service. My hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) is quite wrong. He leaps to conclusions, from wrong information given mainly by the member from Queen's (Mr. Davies), whose information is generally in that direction, that she is owned entirely by Mr. Thorne. Now, it may be news to my hon. friend from Queen's, but I would be willing to enlighten him so far as that goes, that Mr. Thorne is not the sole owner of that vessel. I am not sure whether he owns any part of the vessel now or not; he may, but the owner of the vessel, the man who is chiefly interested in her, has been, up to a very late period at least, a very strong right arm supporter of the party to which my hon. friend belongs. This gentleman is a gentleman, and a thorough gentleman, even though he has been a Liberal and a very strong Liberal: he has not been considering that he has been pampered and petted by the small amount he got from the Government for the rental of a boat of which he was the largest owner. So far as the economy of the boat itself is concerned, I may be a little interested in that, because I think I was Minister of Marine when this boat was chartered. I think I first chartered the boat. I did so because of economical considerations. We, at that time, had some steamers; we had the Acadia, a large steamer for the fishery service specially; she was a costly steamer and one which patrolled the whole coast. We then took schooners for which we paid a monthly rental, and we had to put a much larger crew upon these. The expenses were heavy, and the rapidity and facility with which they went over the ground is nothing compared with the steamer; so that, in looking over the case I took this little vessel and put her on the Bay of Fundy around the coast of Charlotte; and the purpose was simply at that time, as my hon. friend said, that that vessel was to be for the protection of Charlotte and St. John county fisheries in the Bay of Fundy. It was not supposed that she should patrol any portion of the coast of Nova Scotia. She has done that service for which she was intended, and I know my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) will say that she has done that service well. She has been very well fitted indeed for that, and if you take the three years she has been on that service, I am quite sure that you could not have done it in any more economical way; even though it may seem at first sight that $300 per month is quite a large rental for a steamer. I believe that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has now arranged for the purchase or building of a larger steamer, which shall not only carry on that service, but will be able at any time to cross the bay and to patrol a certain portion of the Nova Scotia coast. I think that is a good method. That vessel would be strong and would be able to do both these services, but it will be found when that is done, and when the cost of the steamer, the extra cost of handling, and the cost of repairs is taken into account, that the service will of course be much more costly than it is under the present arrangement. I rose chiefly to correct what I thought was more than mere misapprehension, because I informed my hon. friend that the $8,000 was not paid to this gentleman, and even though Mr. Thorne has committed the mortal sin of being a president of the Liberal-Conservative Association, yet I should think he demands fair treatment at the hands of this House.

Mr. PERRY. Does the hon. gentleman——

An hon. MEMBER. Already spoken.

Mr. SPEAKER. We must understand that this discussion should not be conducted as if the House were in Committee of the Whole on Estimates, unless an understanding of that kind is arrived at. Otherwise the discussion would be interminable.

Mr. DEVLIN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I did not say anything on the subject yet, and I think I may be permitted to offer a remark. I find in looking over the accounts in connection with the steamer Dream, that there is an item on page C—127 of the Auditor General's Report, "Hardware, $53.13." I contend that if the proprietors of the boat are supposed to keep it in perfect order, that item, at all events, should have been found in their own private accounts, and not in the account of the Auditor General. Then again, lower down, there is another item, "Rubber, $15.20," which shows that all the expense is not borne by the owners.

Immigration—Salaries of agents and employés..... $24,125

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to make some remarks with regard to the extravagance that appears to characterize the expenditure of many of these agencies. I really think it is time the Government should institute a thorough investigation into the expenditures of the agencies both in Canada and in Great Britain. At the Toronto agency, for instance, we find that an enormous amount of money is paid out every year, and whether it is closely and carefully criticized by the Government or not I cannot say. In the Auditor General's Report I find that there are 16 tons of coal——

Mr. SPEAKER. I would direct the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that we have not come to that item yet.

Salaries, agents, Europe..... $5,900

Mr. McMULLEN. Now, I wish to say that in Belfast I see that Mr. Merrick is paid a salary of $1,000, and a per diem allowance amounting to $1,460 a year, and travelling expenses of $17.05. In addition, there are some other expenses which run up to a very large sum. There is also an assistant who is paid $436 and travelling expenses. Now, I think that when Sir Charles Tupper is in London a thorough investigation should be made into the expenditures of the agencies in Great Britain. I think we should have some report as to the necessity of allowing to the Liverpool agent, for instance, travelling allowances largely in excess of his salary. I am sure that Sir Charles Tupper with his staff in London must do a good deal of the immigration business there, and it should not be necessary to travel in that direction. I think we should investigate these travelling expenses. It is quite clear they are excessive. This thing of allowing a per diem allowance for travelling expenses without this House knowing where the parties travel to, or whether they travel at all, is wrong. If these men are allowed to make their own bills and demand what they like for travelling expenses, the better way is to double their salaries. I think several of these items deserve investigation.

Quarantine, Charlottetown, P.E.I..... $1,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Who is the medical man at Charlottetown now?

Mr. HAGGART. Dr. Conroy.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When was he appointed?

Mr. HAGGART. About a year ago.

Tracadie Lazaretto..... $4,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What report has been made as to the extent to which this horrible disease may have increased? I observe that a small increase is asked for, and I would like to know whether any outside cases have come to light within the last year, or whether you have succeeded in isolating these unfortunate people?

Mr. HAGGART. There has been a decrease in the number of patients from 40 to 18. There are no outside cases known to the department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. By death, I presume?

Mr. HAGGART. By death.

Monuments for battle-fields of Canada. $2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What kind of monuments, æsthetically speaking, are we going to have?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I submitted to the Historical Society a plan I had drawn, without any expense, in my own department, and the society asked me to allow the matter to stand so that we might discuss the possibility of adding to the grant in order to obtain a monument more deserving the occasion. That is the reason the matter has been kept in abeyance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not want to encourage any unnecessary expenditure. There may be some question as to the expediency of the thing at all; but if you do it at all, it ought to be done in a decent, respectable fashion. It should not be done in a way that will make us a laughing-stock, especially when it is to be so close to the American frontier. Some of the designs I have heard of struck me as so ambitious, that if carried out at the figure named they would be a very curious testimony to Canadian valour and Canadian taste.

Mr. FLINT. Previous to the observations of my hon. friend from South Oxford, the same idea was passing through my mind. It would be a great mistake on the part of the Government to make an appropriation which would not provide us with a monument of respectable appearance. If the object is a worthy one, as I have an idea that it is, it would be just as well for the Government not to be in a hurry, and if they have a design drawn up in accordance with the views of the Historical Society and persons of artistic ability, Parliament would readily concur in voting a larger amount. I might however say, in connection with this whole subject of militia expenditure——

Mr. SPEAKER. This is not an item of militia expenditure.

Mr. FLINT. It is under the general head of militia.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is one resolution dealing with monuments for the battle-fields of Canada and nothing else.

Mr. FLINT. As it is not likely this subject will come before the House again——

Mr. SPEAKER. I draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the rule. These items must be taken as they are called, and no general discussion can be entered upon.

Mr. FLINT. On this subject I desire to concur most heartily in the remarks made by the hon. member for South Oxford. I think the Government might take into consideration the desirability of having a monument something worthy of the place, the occasion, and the people.

Railways and Canals, construction.... $50,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this a part of what we are having to pay for having exchanged Onderdonk for Charlebois?

Mr. FOSTER. It is the arbitrators' costs.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It will prove a costly construction, if that is the case.

Mr. FOSTER. This is not a part of the award, but the expenses of the arbitration.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the total fees as ascertained so far?

Mr. BOWELL. This is to provide funds to pay for the unsettled land claims, land appraisers' salaries, salaries and expenses of the arbitrators, their secretary, counsel, engineers, witnesses, stenographers, printing, &c. There are, I may inform the House, some twenty or thirty land claims still unsettled for land appropriated at the commencement of the building of the road, principally about Yale on the Fraser River and below that. I may also state that it was only to-day that, in looking into this question, we found it necessary, owing to the disputes which have arisen as to the value of the land by the appraised, and the parties owning the land refusing to accept the awards, to place the whole matter in the Exchequer Court, and Judge Burbidge, I believe, intends some time this fall to go to British Columbia principally for the purpose of settling these claims finally.

Prince Edward Island Railway..... $45,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) At an early period of the session, I made some remarks when the late Sir John Macdonald was alive and was the Minister of Railways, with reference to the rails upon the Prince Edward Island road, and I desire to repeat them in presence of the acting Minister. The road was built in 1873 as a narrow gauge road, and since then they have commenced relaying a portion of the road with steel rails. They have relaid the portion between Charlottetown and Summerside, 40 miles.

Mr. BOWELL. It has never been widened, has it?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No. And from Charlottetown eastward for 12 or 14 miles and a little westward of Summerside, making 60 miles out of 115. The original rails remain over the greater portion of the road. They have run this as economically as possible, and have actually taken the rails out of the sidings and put them on the main road in lieu of the worn-out rails there.

Mr. BOWELL. They are old iron rails?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes, laid in 1873, and they have lived already more than the life of an ordinary rail. They have actually cut off the bad part of the end of some of the rails and brought the rails together. A short time ago I took a trip over the road and entered into conversation with many of the conductors and section-men and others on the road with a view of informing myself as to its condition, and I learned that there was a prevailing impression that, unless these rails were removed and steel rails substituted for them, there would in the near future be a serious accident, that it could not be avoided, that the rails were worn-out and had almost carried the last car they could carry, and every day the men were expecting that an accident would happen. In fact there have been some accidents, though happily not attended with tragic results.

Mr. BOWELL. From that cause?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In one case it was certainly from that cause. I saw the chief engineer and told him the reports I had had on this subject, and that I was afraid, from the serious manner in which this information was conveyed to me, and judging the weight to be attached to it from the manner in which it was imparted, that unless he did something very soon he would be liable to hear of a serious accident, probably involving the loss of life. He affected to treat the matter lightly. He said these section-men were in the habit of making up that kind of story in order to get a better class of rails; but, from the manner in which they told me this, I am satisfied that it is essential for the safety of the lives of the passengers on that road that these old rails, which were very light at the first—as the chief engineer will tell you, for he was the contractor for the road—should be removed, as they are absolutely unfit for use. I think the hon. gentleman should see, if it is possible, that the remaining portion of the road should be relaid with steel rails.

Mr. BOWELL. I will call the attention of the chief engineer to the statement the hon. gentleman has made and to the importance of having an immediate report upon the state of the road in order to prevent the accidents which he fears may occur.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I called attention at a previous stage of the session to the fact that, while I made these statements, the department had been officially informed by the superintendent that the condition of the road was excellent. I said I had gone over the road and I believed that to be true as to the general condition of the road, but that, if it embraced the rails, it would be misleading the department, and that the chief engineer should be asked to report upon the subject.

Mr. BOWELL. One would scarcely conceive it possible that the chief superintendent would report the road in an excellent condition if the rails were not fit to be run upon.

Expenses connected with the drill and training of the Militia..... $250,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt the Minister of Militia received all imaginable varieties of counsel last night, but every hon. gentleman who spoke, I think, agreed that whether I had been a little too severe on these camps of instruction in alleging that, practically, they only gave five or six days' instruction, there was very little doubt that, in so far as the rural battalions were concerned, the time for drill, spread, as it was, over intervals of two years, was far too short to be of practical service. Now, the hon. Minister, in the few remarks he made, admitted that it was true, but he did not appear to have considered any practical plan for amending that fault. All he said was that if he had plenty of money at his disposal he would give longer instruction, and keep them out for 15 or 16 days if he could. Now, I have some doubts whether we can afford to spend more money, although we might use it better. After all, a million and a-quarter here, and seven or eight hundred thousand in the North-West, is a large proportion of our available resources—altogether about two millions a year, not to speak of the expenses of headquarters here—about two hundred thousand dollars, I dare say. As I say, two million dollars is a large proportion of our available funds at the disposal of the Finance Minister, which, as everybody knows, are vastly less than the nominal funds, owing to the immense amount of our fixed charges. The question, I think, will resolve itself into this: Whether this million and a-quarter could not be better expended. Now, without desiring to speak authoritatively on this subject, in particular in the presence of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Denison), I really think that the Government ought to consider one, or two, or three plans—either they ought to reduce the number of the militia to such strength as would enable the force, such as it is, to be kept in a state of reasonable efficiency by passing, as has been done in other countries, successive terms of three or five years, or whatever time the men choose to serve. Or they might adopt another plan which has a good deal to recommend it, they might insist on the commissioned and non-commissioned officers being drilled and kept in a state of reasonable efficiency every year, even if it was not found practicable to summon all the men of the rural battalions. I think we might also, without detriment to the service, make a pretty decided division between the city corps and the rural battalions; they could be treated, without detriment to the militia service, in a different way. There is no doubt that these city corps are very desirable to maintain for many reasons, wholly apart from the question of our being called upon to fight for our lives and our country against our neighbours to the south of us. There is no doubt that when you have large cities in which there is apt to be an element developed more or less dangerous, it is in the interest of the cities in particular, and of the country in general, that in these large places a tolerable military force should be, in case of emergency, at the disposal of the civil authorities, and both here and elsewhere good results have arisen from that precaution. I do think that the Minister, on his own showing, stands confessed as not believing in the efficiency of the system as now administered. As I understand, we are now attempting to maintain a force of about 40,000 men.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. 37,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Now, I recognize the political difficulty which stands in the Minister's way, if he attempts to reduce this force. That is no doubt a practical difficulty, although it ought not to exist in dealing with military matters. But, be our force large or small, it should be made efficient. With respect to what I said about camps, I am well aware that there are camps and camps. I am well aware there are some camps in which a creditable exhibit is made on the part of our volunteer soldiers; but there are other camps of which that cannot be said, and in which, unless I have been most grievously misinformed, the public money used to maintain them, is nearly altogether wasted. As far as instruction in marksmanship and rifle shooting is concerned, I need not tell the Minister, and I need not tell anyone who has witnessed the performance of our volunteers, that it is impossible to give it in the space of time at our disposal; and now-a-days, although, as I have said, I venture any remarks on military subjects with deference, I have no doubt that the efficiency of any such force depends in a very large degree on the skill in the use of the rifle obtained by the individual soldier, and that is tending to be the case more and more. I raised the question in a tentative fashion last night, and I think the Government—they can do it now—should seriously consider whether they will not adopt some one or other alternative systems, if they see fit to come down and demand more money, if the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Militia can make it up between them. If, as I rather suspect, the hon. gentleman has to make the most of the money at his disposal now, then I think it is high time for him to consider what course he will adopt: whether he will enlarge the vote at his disposal by reducing some of these other estimates, although they may be good in their way, and reduce the vote for some of the fixed forces; or whether he will reduce the number of the militia corps to such a point that he can get fair instruction for all; or whether he will try the plan of keeping the skeleton organization of non-commissioned or commissioned officers in a high state of efficiency. I am not prepared to say off-hand which would prove the best in the end, but the present system is pre-eminently unsatisfactory, and some effort should be made to get more value for our money than we do under the present system.

Mr, DENISON. I am glad the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has somewhat modified the remarks he made last night. Knowing the great interest he always takes in militia matters, I was rather surprised to find him pitching into the camps as he did. But the hon. gentleman has qualified his criticism to-day by saying there are "camps and camps," and in that he is no doubt correct. I have not attended the camp at Kingston, but I have almost every year attended the camp at Niagara, and I can testify strongly to the good effect it has on that portion of the militia force of Canada. I might say with respect to the remark made that the day going to camp and the day returning from camp are wasted is hardly correct. It must be remembered that it is part of an officer's duty to know how to entrain and detrain his men. A further part of his work is to instruct his men how to pitch their tents, and this is part of the work on the first day. This is a most important part of his duty, and the men learn to do it quickly by practice. The same remark applies to the task of striking tents, which is also part of their duty. After a few days' practice it is astonishing how the men improve, and do the work rapidly and efficiently that was at first so difficult. Altogether, the duties in camp, even for the short time we have at disposal, have a most valuable effect on the men. Personally I should like to see the time increased to 16 or 20 days; but before we endeavour to secure a longer time, we must have all the militia drilled. For myself I am strongly opposed to having the force reduced; in fact my idea has always been that the force should be increased. Where there are localities which desire to raise battalions or companies the Government should authorize them to do so, because we cannot hope to have too large an organization, for if we have trouble, as was referred to the other night by the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow), with our neighbours to the south, we could not have too large a force. It would be necessary, then, to have a large number of trained officers, and that was the reason I suggested the other day that if we could engraft on the present scheme some such system as we had before, it would be advantageous to us to have those men in our midst. No doubt some men would go into the schools for the purpose of getting the $50. Even so; those going through the schools would acquire a taste for military matters and take an interest in the force and join our battalions, and repay the amount of money that might be expended in that way. Further, those men who would enter the force for the $50 would not leave Canada, and they would possess the knowledge, and in case of trouble they would come into the ranks and do good service. I think the whole force should be drilled. Every session I have pressed on the attention of the Minister of Militia and the House the desirability of drilling the rural corps as well as the city corps. The rural corps, as a matter of fact, have not the same advantages as city corps possess. The city corps, having drill halls, can turn out at night and drill with very little loss to themselves, while the rural corps are unable to drill at night on account of the companies being scattered, and the distance the men are from company headquarters. The rural corps, therefore, require to be concentrated in camps and drilled every year more than the city corps, not that I am saying but what they should all drill. I hope next year the Minister of Militia will press the subject on his colleagues and secure the granting of a sufficient sum to drill the whole militia. Possibly he may be able to curtail some of the expenditure on the staff. I know our late Premier frequently said we had too large a staff. It seems a large sum to spend out of $1,225,000 nearly $1,000,000 on staff and paraphernalia, if I may use the term, while only $250,000 really goes to pay the drilling of the militia. By an additional grant of $150,000 we could obtain much benefit to the force, and that sum, added to $1,250,000, is not a large sum, while it would do a great deal to further the interests of the militia and enable all the corps to drill.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have only a few words to say in addition to what has been said by the hon.

member for West Toronto (Mr. Denison). Like the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) I happen to be a layman, and in discussing these matters I take advantage of the advice of the hon. member for West Toronto and other military men who happen to be in the House. I can tell that hon. gentleman that, in so far as I have been able to collect opinions, the consensus of opinion of those who have followed the progress and development of our force from year to year, is that we should have annual drill for the whole force, whatever that force may be. The hon. gentleman has spoken of the expensive staff. Ever since I have been Minister I have viewed the matter from the same standpoint as he views it, and, following that course, I have reduced the expenses of the staff by upwards of $11,000 per annum. I consider it is not necessary to have an expensive staff; but when the hon. gentleman speaks of the greatest portion of the money voted going to the staff, I am unable to agree with him.

Mr. DENISON. I meant the permanent schools and all.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not call the permanent schools part of the staff. I call the permanent schools training schools, which permit our officers to qualify by receiving certificates to obtain commissions. I consider that for the amount of money we have expended on the force, Canada can be proud indeed of the force as it now stands. I should like to have more days' drill than we have at present, but I believe that, if we have twelve days' drill annually, with the aptitude of Canadians for military training, we will have a force that will be unequalled for the purpose we require it in this country, more for protection at home than for offensive purposes——

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It would be no use for that purpose.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON,—but merely as the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has indicated, for use in great centres where it may be necessary at a moment's notice to call out an organized military force. I consider that we have a force that really we would not have paid too much for the service which they would be called upon to render. Whenever they have been called upon they have done their duty in a manner that Canada can be proud of, and I think that if Parliament in its liberality, and my hon. friend and colleague the Minister of Finance who is always prepared to accede to any fair proposition, agrees to add to the present vote for drill purposes, $175,000 next year, that would permit us to drill the whole force, the rural and city battalions, and I think it would be an immense benefit to Canada. These are the views I entertain, and I believe I am expressing the views also of all those who have taken an interest in the force and have looked into the question.

Mr. DICKEY. I would like to ask the Minister if it would not be possible in Nova Scotia, where the railways are owned chiefly by the Government, to furnish free passes over the railways to those going to the annual shooting competition. It would not cost the Government anything directly, and I think that the House would be willing that the Government railway should be put to that use, if such arrangements could be made so as to prevent fraud and imposition, by confining the passes to those going to the competition.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In uniform?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes, in uniform. I think it would be a great boon to the men themselves. It would increase the attendance, show an interest on the part of the Government in these competitions, and it would do a great service without costing the country anything. I hope that the hon. Minister of Militia will consult with the Minister of Railways, and see if an arrangement of that sort cannot be come to.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have been asked by several of the officers of the companies in Prince Edward Island to urge upon the military authorities the absolute necessity for permitting these rural battalions to drill at local headquarters instead of going into camp. The statements made to me were that the men from rural districts would not go to camp, and that the companies, under the present system, are dwindling to nothing. I am not personally in a position to know whether these representations meet the approval of the higher authorities or not, but they come to me from a number of the captains of the several companies.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I shall submit the matter to the Major General Commanding for consideration.

Mr. PATTERSON (Colchester). I wish to draw the attention of the Committee for a moment to a matter which has been referred to by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey), that is, in relation to militiamen in the Province of Nova Scotia getting passes over the Government railways to the provincial shooting matches. There appears to be a very strange anomaly in reference to this matter in connection with the militiamen of the Province of Nova Scotia. The militiamen of the City of Halifax can get to the Bedford shooting range for practice, and on all occasions that they appear in the railway depot in Halifax they are taken over the Intercolonial Railway free of charge, for even ordinary practice, while the militiaman in the County of Colchester, where we have some crack shots, cannot get to the annual match at Bedford without putting his hands in his pockets and paying his railway fare to and from Bedford station. That is a matter that should receive some attention. The other day I brought the matter to the notice of the Minister of Railways, and he referred me very coolly to the Minister of Militia, and there the matter seems to stand. In the meantime the provincial match has gone on and the competitors from the Counties of Colchester, Cumberland and Pictou have had, on the 18th of this month, to pay their way to the Bedford provincial match and back again. It does seem a strange thing that while that is the practice with the rural militiamen, that the militiamen from the City of Halifax can go not only to the provincial match, but to their ordinary practice, free of charge. I do think this is a matter which should receive some attention from the Minister of Militia.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am quite in accord with the remarks which were made last evening by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) and others, and I am also in accord with my respected friend from Toronto West (Mr. Denison) with regard to increased drill. It is called annual drill, but very often we find that rural corps are not ordered to camp the second year, and the drill becomes biennial. Frequently, some of the corps are not found in camp for three, or four, and, perhaps five years. Last year I heard one hon. gentleman say that his regiment had not been out for six years. I feel satisfied that we should have annual drill and that a period of twelve days is quite short enough. Remarks were made last evening that we had only ten days of drill, that two days were lost in marching in and out of camp, but I contend that these two days are profitably employed. The soldiers are taught the drill of marching on board the train, and of pitching and striking their tents, and whilst they are in camp for the ten days, they are actively employed from early morn until dewy eve, up to ten o'clock at night. There is no time lost, and when they return, as I know from experience of the last camp, the men were so well drilled that they felt they were quite equal, and I felt myself that they were all but equal, to regularly trained soldiers. When we find that two years elapse before they are brought into camp again, many of these men are so wanting or non-possessed of the drill they had learned, that they are as awkward as if they had never been put through drill before. I quite agree with the remarks of one of the gentlemen who spoke last night with regard to the training of children and young men in the common day schools. I feel that a very great deal of the time that now is occupied by children at physical exercise, known as recess, could be profitably employed in the training of these children to a knowledge of military drill, such as position, marching, facings, formation of sections, sub-divisions, and, I may say, ordinary company drill. They could be taught this within the building, or outside, weather permitting, for say, fifteen or twenty minutes each day, and thus form a miniature army, physically beneficial and practically most essential, as it would place the children in that position that they would move along with an easy and graceful carriage and with a martial-like, soldierly-bearing that would show its effects in after years. We would feel that these youths, receiving military instruction in that way, both theory and practice being imparted to them, would not be unmindful of that tuition or knowledge when they grew up; and as soldiers going into camp or in ordinary drill, would be more apt to receive instruction from their superior officers than if they had never received any in the schools. I strongly urge that some measure be taken whereby training may be given in that way at the day schools. Thus we should have a nucleus at all times for the regular army, and recruits could, with very little instruction or training, be placed in a position to be ready for active service. I urge strongly, I repeat, that instead of having biennial drill, we should have annual drill of not less than twelve days.

Mr. FLINT. A few minutes ago, while another item was under consideration, I intended to make some remarks on the general subject of the expenditure on the militia service. We have had several interesting discussions in this House, participated in largely by gentlemen connected with the military force; and, as one who knows scarcely anything of the technicalities of this question, I listened with a great deal of interest, and I may add instruction, to those discussions. We are aware, however, that there is a tendency among specialists of all kinds to get gradually into their mind a strong prepossession in favour of their particular hobby; and I am afraid that, in connection with the present organization of the forces in Canada, there is a strong tendency among military officers, a natural tendency, no doubt, to look almost entirely on one side of this important subject. I am glad, however, that the Government has been able hitherto to resist the strong pressure put upon them by the militia officers, accompanied with a great deal of earnestness, ability, and I believe patriotism, to extend the operations of the Militia Department and to add to the expenditures in connection with the militia force. It is gratifying to know that this year there is on the whole a decrease in the estimates for militia purposes. Though knowing what I do, and after hearing these discussions, I would not advocate any further reduction in the militia estimates, yet I would say as a layman, that I believe that on the part of a large number of the people of this country who do not sympathize with the militia officers on this subject, there is and will be a strong feeling of opposition to any further increase in our militia expenditure. I will not go into any of the details dwelt upon by several of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken, as to how best to administer the very generous fund which Parliament has placed at the disposal of the department. This fund has increased quite rapidly, From 1874 to 1879 it was on the average in the neighbourhood of $790,000; and we all know that in the discussion of the financial affairs of the country during that period, the Administration of that day were severely criticized for the slight increase which they made from time to time in the militia expenditure.

Mr. DENISON. It is very little more than it was at Confederation.

Mr. FLINT. A certain amount of increase is almost inevitable in consequence of the development of the country; but that expenditure, large as it was and criticized as it was, continued to increase during the next period. It increased on the average something over $50,000 per annum; and at the present time we are spending on the average about $1,250,000 a year. Now, I think the Militia Department—and I tender the advice with all deference to the opinion of the militia officers and the specialists in that department—will do well to make their arrangements with regard to perfecting the efficiency of the department, with reference to the view that it is very inadvisable to ask for any appreciable increase in the appropriation. There has been a great deal of discussion, and of a valuable character, in regard to annual drill or biennial drill; and I must say that I have been very much impressed in favour of an annual drill. But I think that some means must be employed by which a smaller number of men may be drilled annually; and a saving must be effected in some other direction in order to keep the appropriation within the present figure. I think the arguments for annual drill are almost unanswerable; and as a layman I would only say, from what I have learned in this discussion and from other sources, that, in my opinion, which I think is concurred in by a great many persons who do not profess to be technically informed on military matters, the true policy of this country is in the direction of educating and training efficient officers and drill masters. I think that with a small trained force, smaller even than what we have at the present time, and with officers capable of taking recruits and drilling them, the best interests of the country will be served. This discussion on military matters must have reference to difficulties of some kind in which we may possibly be involved in the future. It cannot be contended that, owing to popular outbreaks in certain localities, from the peculiar circumstances in those localities, the Dominion of Canada is, in the course of the future, likely to become involved in any very large military operations. The only nation with which we are at all likely to come into collision is of course the nation to the south of us; and I think, speaking in the least moderate manner of our population and resources and abilities, it is quite idle for this Dominion to pretend that we are spending money with any idea of being able to cope with that populous and wealthy nation.

Mr. DENISON. I quite disagree with you.

Mr. FLINT. I think the military idea in Canada should be discouraged rather than encouraged. While I agree that a military organization, with skeleton regiments and an efficient staff, together with military schools, and, possibly, the annual drill of a small number of men, with the view of making drill-masters and officers, ought to be the true policy of the Administration, there ought not to be any idea entertained that the people of the country will be disposed, without stronger reasons than have hitherto been given, to place at the disposal of the Government any larger sums for these purposes than are now voted by Parliament. I think, however, from the discussions which have already taken place in this House, and the further ideas that will be placed at the disposal of the Minister of Militia by experts, that it is within the bounds of possibility that greater efficiency will be secured, even with the funds already at his disposal, than we have at the present time. I desire to express my high appreciation of the Militia Department, and with regard to the small local corps with which I am acquainted, I desire to say that I believe they have in the main received such encouragement from the Government as has contributed very much to their efficiency; and I am gratified, as a private citizen, to notice the compliments paid that small force by those who have visited our neighbourhood, from time to time, to inspect them. I will heartily concur in any legislation to bring about greater efficiency, providing it does not involve any considerable increase in the general expenditure.

Mr. BOWELL. I desire to say a few words in answer to the remarks of my hon. friend the member for Colchester, with reference to the granting of passes to volunteers from Halifax to Bedford over the Intercolonial Railway. The hon. gentleman, on behalf of his constituents, the volunteers who are in the habit of attending the annual shooting matches at that place, applied for passes on the grounds he has stated. I made enquiry of the department, and was informed that passes were not granted upon any authority from headquarters. No doubt my hon. friend has been informed differently, but it is certainly without the knowledge of the authorities here that these men were allowed free passage. However, I will make still further enquiry into the matter. I may say that I fully concur in the remarks made by that hon. gentleman and others, that if the permission to travel free were given to any portion of the volunteers of Nova Scotia, it ought to be extended to all the others. My hon. friend said that I coolly referred him to the Minister of Militia. I know there had been correspondence between the Department of Railways and Canals and the Militia Department on this subject; and as far back as the time when Sir Charles Tupper had charge of the Railway Department he, at the instance of the Minister of Militia, reduced the rates, and the matter stands in that position at present. With reference to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Cumberland, and others, that the road should be placed at the disposal of all volunteers and militiamen travelling over it, that is a matter which would require very serious consideration. It is very well to say that because it is a government railway, it costs nothing; but the same argument would apply with the same force to the carrying of the mails. You might as well say that there is no necessity for charging the Post Office Department for carrying the mails, because that is only taking out of one pocket and putting in the other. I do not see why the Militia Department should not pay the fares of the volunteers when they are carried over our railway, as well the Postmaster General for the carriage of postal matter; but if that system were adopted, my hon. colleague would have to ask for a larger appropriation, and I have no doubt, if the generosity of his colleagues would lead them to give it to him, he would willingly spend it. If, however, he were called on to pay the passages of those volunteers who live along the line of the Intercolonial Railway, I do not see how he could refuse to pay for those who travel over the Grand Trunk Railway and other railways in other parts of the Dominion. This is a matter which must receive the attention of the department, as regards applying the one rule to all volunteers whether they live in Halifax or in other sections. Before sitting down, I desire to dissent in toto from the remarks of the hon. member for Yarmouth. I have no sympathy with the sentiment he expressed. If there is any logic in his reasoning, I cannot understand how it is he advocates the expenditure of one cent on the militia. To be consistent, he should oppose the expenditure of a dollar on the force. If his idea is correct, that in case of any difficulty with the country to the south of us, against which powerful and wealthy nation, he says, it is absurd to suppose that we could do anything, then we ought not to spend anything. But, Sir, the militia of Canada in the past have proved that they are quite capable of defending their homes and hearths; and I believe that if, unfortunately, which I trust may never occur, they should ever be called upon to do what their forefathers did, they will be quite prepared to defend their homes against any invader. It is not logical for gentlemen to stand up in this House and urge expenditure to perfect our militiamen, and then, in the same breath, tell us that no possible good can result therefrom. I am not prepared, if the hon. gentleman is, in case we are threatened, no matter from what part of the world, to throw up the sponge and cry peccavi. I do not think that is the spirit which actuates the people of Canada, and

I hope the views entertained by the hon. gentleman are not shared by any other member of this House.

Mr. BARRON. I wish to impress upon the hon. Minister the importance of having annual drill. That matter has been pressed by many members, and I am sure the hon. Minister will be glad to see that its desirability is so generally agreed upon. I was much impressed by the remark of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), last night, when he said that the increase to the country of expenditure would not amount to more than 10 or 15 cents per head. If that be so, let us have the annual drill. In my part of the country the volunteer system is suffering very seriously. I know in particular of one officer, a gentleman who stands very high in the volunteer force, who has said to me that he will have to leave the force unless the system of annual drill is introduced, because he finds that when he has to assemble his men for drill under the biennial system, he has to look for entirely new men, and it is impossible to keep up his corps, which is a cavalry corps. I hope that a little more attention will be given the rural battalions, and that the hon. Minister's care will not continue to be monopolized by the city battalions.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have only a word to say in answer to the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) who, I must admit, has been very fair in his criticism of the manner in which the department has been administered. I should like him to compare what we have at present to provide for with what we had to provide for in 1874. In 1874 we had only two batteries, and now we have all the other training schools which must be provided for. I think, under the present system, if the hon. gentleman looks into the matter with his critical mind, he will find that, for the surplus of money we are expending to-day, we have a system which is much more complete and which contributes more to the efficiency of the force than that which we had in 1874. We were then only beginning it, and we have been progressing in that respect, as we have been progressing in other branches in Canada. We have been trying to make it more complete, and we believe that, from what we had expended and are expending to-day, we have a system which is satisfactory in its results.

Royal Military College of Canada..... $77,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Last night this item was touched about half past one, and there was no possibility of discussing it to any purpose at that hour, so I let it alone, on the understanding that, if a discussion were wanted, it might be had to-night. I have some questions to put to the hon. gentleman in regard to this matter. I would be glad to know, in the first place, what the number of the graduating class was last year?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have not that information here, and I would be speaking merely from memory; but I can produce the list of the graduates at any time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. From recollection, what do you suppose to be the number of the graduating class of this year?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I should not like to speak from memory. Although the hon. gentleman's recollection and mine may differ, I think we discussed this matter for two hours last night, and I had my officers here then.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Allusions were made to it last night, but no information was given, as you will see from the Debates.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I know several allusions were made to it, but no allusion was made to the number of graduates. However, I can produce the list of those whose names were submitted to Council, and who came out at the last examination, without any trouble. I think it was between 22 and 25, but I would not be certain.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the number of those who passed the matriculation examination this year?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would not like to state that from memory. That is not information which I had in my book, but information which comes into the department, but I can produce it at any time. I think the number was about 10 or 16, but I would not be sure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is about one-half the number or thereabouts that the college was expected to receive. The hon. gentleman knows that the annual matriculating class should be 24 or a little more.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, the late Government were responsible for instituting the college, but it was our intention, as announced at the time, that, in addition to the four commissions which are given by the Imperial authorities to the graduates in each class, at least half-a-dozen of those who are most proficient should be given a chance of entering the Canadian Civil Service in connection either with the public works, or the mounted police, or the military service, or some other department for which they would be suited, and I have always felt that, practically, an injustice was done, if the college was to be continued at all, in not carrying out that project; and I believe also that it would have been very greatly to the benefit of the people of Canada if a considerable number of those graduates had been employed in connection with Canadian public works. That has been done in other countries. I think that has been done in connection with West Point to the profit of the American service, and I am perfectly certain that these men, most of whom are receiving an education which fits them more or less for the position of civil engineers, would be useful public servants, and that their employment would probably have tended to maintain a higher standard of honour in the Department of Public Works than has prevailed, as unfortunately we know to our cost. I think it is not too late even now. I have repeated that request to the Ministers time and time again. Since 1879, I think not a year has elapsed when I have not urged the expediency of offering a certain number of posts in the Civil Service to the most deserving of those graduates, not with the desire to benefit them, but because I think they would form that class of engineers which it would be most desirable to have in our public service. I am bound to say that the present Minister of Militia has endeavoured, on several occasions, when he was allowed to have his way, to give posts to the graduates of the Military College, but nothing has been done in a regular or systematic fashion, and, if that college is to be maintained, I think it would be very desirable that that should be done. I intimated last night what I now repeat, that I have reason to fear that the discipline and the general efficiency of that institution is not being maintained at as high a standard as it used to be, and I add this now for the consideration of the Minister and of the Government. There is no doubt they were actuated by a laudable desire to save the public chest when they raised the annual charge from I think $100 or $150 to $350 or $400; but the hon. gentleman will observe that, by raising the fee to the present rate, there is no doubt that he has practically converted this college into an institution where only the better class, or rather I should say the wealthier class, are likely to send their sons. In former times, and when the admission fee was as low as I mentioned, the choice for matriculants was much wider. It was a sort of prize in those days, and, as the entrance was determined by open competition, a much larger field, so to speak, was drawn upon for the persons who were admitted; and it is within my own knowledge that some of the most distinguished graduates who have left that college were the sons of farmers and men in comparatively poor circumstances, who certainly could not get admitted now. There is no doubt, as I have said, that, although the object of the Government may have been very good in desiring to save the public treasury, the practical effect has been to narrow the field of admission to a very considerable degree. As to the management, that I shall leave to the hon. gentleman to investigate. As to the question of the best mode of utilizing these young men's services for the benefit of Canada, I respectfully submit that it is eminently desirable, particularly in view of the fact that an immense number of them do not remain in Canada but are now employed to my certain knowledge in the United States, that an effort should be made to retain a certain number of them for the benefit of our public service. I think that these four commissions in the Imperial service should be supplemented by a moderate number—I do not suggest more than half a dozen—of posts in the public service of Canada being given as a right to the most distinguished of the graduates. There ought to be a graduating class varying from 20 to to 24 every year, and we ought to have, as well as the Imperial service, the pick of these men for our public service. That is all I desire to say upon the subject.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I wish the hon. gentleman to recollect that I have been speaking merely from memory, and I would not wish to be tied down to the numbers I have given to-night, but on Monday I can place on the Table the list of those who matriculated and of those who passed the final examination this year. As to the management, I can tell the hon. gentleman—and he no doubt may know it as well as I do—that the most brilliant class we have ever had in the Royal Military College has come out this year under the present management. The cadets who have left our college to seek in life the career for which their training has fitted them, have left under the most brilliant auspices. Now, Sir, it would not be right, I think, for us, after the great advantages which are conferred by the Royal Military College upon those who are trained within its walls, to say that because a man comes from that college, every position in the public service and in the force should be open to him. I stated last night that I believe it to be a correct principle to give Government commissions to cadets and to members of the force who distinguished themselves by past services which Canada cannot forget. I look upon the Royal Military College as an institution of which Canada may well be proud, but I do not think we should forget the services of the militia force of the country who have for years been fighting the battles of the country single-handed, and under disadvantages which the cadets have not known. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine has got cadets in his department; I have cadets in my department, and there are cadets in the different departments of the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many in all?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I can tell the hon. gentleman that there are six in the Government departments alone. In my department I have Mr. White, a cadet who carried honours in the Royal Military College, and who occupies a very prominent and responsible position. Now, the hon. gentleman has spoken of those who, after leaving the college, have gone over to the States or to other countries. I can tell him that they have not ceased to remain strong Canadians, even after they have left this country. In 1885, when the troubles broke out in the North-West, I received telegrams from every cadet, some of them occupying prominent positions and receiving high salaries, tendering their services to Canada. Now, Sir, I claim that the Royal Military College is an institution of which Canada can be proud; I know that my hon. friend from South Oxford views it in that light. I believe that every day we are gradually doing more and more for the cadets in that institution, but to say that we should set aside all others who have not been trained in that institution, but who are deserving of consideration at our hands, I think would be going too far. I venture to suggest that it would not be to the advantage of the college itself, because the public might consider that we were training up these young men as a privileged class, whereas in our country we have no privileged classes. I can tell the hon. gentleman that I hope to lay upon the Table, when we meet again, a list of the cadets who have been matriculated and graduated.

Resolutions concurred in.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 24th August, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

LT.-COLONEL WM. HERCHMER.

Mr. AMYOT asked, Has the hon. the Minister of Justice received the letter referred to in the following communication, to wit:—

"MACLEOD, ALTA., 6th August, 1891.

"COL. AMYOT, M.P.,
"Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR.—I see by Hansard of 27th July that, during the debate on Mr. Davin's motion asking for an enquiry into Commissioner Herchmer's conduct, you read from a letter published in L'Etendard, and translated into the Macleod Gazette, in which it was stated that Col. Herchmer said to Inspector Starnes that all Frenchmen were b——ds, sons of b——s, and sons of w——s. I also see that Sir John Thompson remarked that 'of course no officer could remain in the service of the Government an hour who has used such language as the hon. member has read from that paper.'

"He then goes on to say that 'I did not understand Col. Herchmer had ever been charged with using that language. I understood that the charge had applied to another officer of the same name, who, not only emphatically denies it, but tenders his oath in denying it. As to Col. Herchmer, although I understand that the charge was not made against him, he is ready to testify under oath before any tribunal that he never used such language.'

"Sir John Thompson has evidently confused Mr. L. W. Herchmer, Commissioner, with Lt.-Col. Wm. Herchmer, Assistant Commissioner. I have written by this mail to Sir John Thompson, distinctly charging Lt.-Col. Wm. Herchmer, Assistant Commissioner N.W.M.P., with having made use of such language to Inspector Starnes at this post. I have also offered to prove it by five witnesses who were there.

"I have also stated to him that Col. Herchmer admitted to Mr. Fred. White that he used that language, giving as his excuse that he was drunk at the time.

"Mr. Fred White is in full possession of the facts in connection with the matter.

"Now that Sir John Thompson has stated that an officer who made use of that language could not remain in the service of the Government an hour, and that the proof that Col. Herchmer did make use of it is at hand, there is only one course open to the Government.

"I mentioned to Sir John Thompson that I was writing to you.

"Although I mark this envelope 'Private' I give you leave, as I gave Sir John Thompson, to make whatever use of it you may see fit.

"Yours truly,
"C. E. D. WOOD.
"Editor, Macleod Gazette."

Do the Government intend to take any action in the matter? What action do they intend to take?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have received the letter referred to in that letter, from the editor of the Macleod Gazette, making that charge. It is not correct, as stated by him, that I confused L. W. Herchmer, Commissioner, with Lieut.-Col. W. Herchmer. On the contrary, I insisted that, on the charge being made in the House as it was against the Commissioner, confusion had been made by the gentleman making the charge, or by the newspaper from which he read, and I stated then: that the charge was not true as far as the Commissioner was concerned, and had been very emphatically denied by the Assistant Commissioner, who stated that he was prepared to deny it upon oath. As soon as I received the letter from the editor of the Macleod Gazette, which is referred to in the letter on the Notice paper, I sent his letter to the First Minister who has charge of the Mounted Police, and he immediately caused the officer referred to, Mr. Herchmer, the Assistant Commissioner, to be called on to answer the charge. Mr. Herchmer's answer is an emphatic denial of the truth of the statement. He says that in relation to certain officers of one of the battalions from Quebec, he made use of very strong language, in consequence of insults and outrages which he alleges were perpetrated on him and his family by them; that he made no such allusions to the French Canadian race, or people, or officers as a whole class, and that in relation to that language he apologized immediately to a representative of the Province of Quebec who was present, and that his apology was accepted. But, in consequence of the explicitness of the charge, and the offer to prove it, the First Minister has directed that that matter shall be investigated with other matters relating to the Mounted Police, when the investigation takes place next fall.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND TUNNEL.

Mr. WELSH (for Mr. DAVIES, P.E.I.) asked, Does the Government intend to take during the present summer any, and what, action with respect to the report made by Sir Douglass Fox on the proposed tunnel between Prince Edward Island and the mainland? Is it proposed that any further surveys or borings should be made or had with respect to such tunnel, or any other and what steps taken to obtain accurate data upon which reliable estimates of the cost could be based?

Mr. FOSTER. The Government does not intend during the present summer to take any further action with respect to the report made by Sir Douglass Fox on the proposed tunnel between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, other than to consider it. The matter referred to in the second part of the question is also under the consideration of the Government.

CARRIAGE OF MAILS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, 1. Who has the contract for carrying the mails between Ashcroft and Barkerville, and Ashcroft, Clinton and Lillooet, in British Columbia? If the contract is held by a corporation, what are the names of the directors and corporation? 2. What amount is paid for the service under the respective contracts? 3. The service given and the distance travelled? 4. Was the contract let by tender? 5. Was the lowest tender accepted? 6. When does the contract expire?

Mr. HAGGART. 1. The British Columbia Express Company. The names of the directors are not known. 2. There is only one contract for these services. The rate of payment was $24,000 from 1st of July, 1888, to the 30th June, 1890, and $23,500 for the rest of the term, which ends on the 30th of June, 1892. 3. Tri-weekly each way between Ashcroft Station and Clinton, a distance of thirty-two miles. Weekly each way between Clinton and Barkerville, a distance of two hundred and fifty miles. Weekly between Clinton and Lillooet, a distance of forty-seven miles. 4. The contract was let by tender. 5. The lowest tender was accepted. 6. The contract expires on the 30th June, 1892.

THE KEEWATIN.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. MULOCK) asked, Was a vessel know as the Keewatin in the service of the Government at any time since the 30th June, 1889? If so, what was the nature of such service and what was paid for the use of the vessel?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Police Patrol boat Keewatin was built at Selkirk in winter of 1888-89 for Government of Keewatin; received and paid for in spring of 1889 by Government; has been in service in 1889, 1890; and this year wherever required to prevent introduction of intoxicants, transport North-West Mounted Police and patrol in suspected waters, and is now out upon such service under orders of Inspector Bégin. Nothing was paid for use of Keewatin, which was built for and is the property of Government.

THE REGINA LEADER.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. TRACY) asked, What is the total amount paid by the Government to the Regina Leader for printing and advertising since 1886?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. From 1st July, 1886, to 30th June, 1890, several sums of money, the detail of which may be found in the Auditor General's Reports. Of the total paid, $1,488.19 was for advertising, and $515 passed through the books of the Printing Department here. The balance was certified and settled at Regina. Since 30th June, 1890, $315.76 for advertising, and $75.25 for printing, have been passed by the Printing Bureau.

WOOD SUPPLY FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Has Mr. John Heney the contract for supplying wood for heating the Public Buildings in Ottawa? If so, when did he first receive it, and was it by public tender? How long did the contract run? Has it since been renewed, and how often? If so, was it by public tender, and at what price per cord?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. John Heney has the contract for supplying wood for heating the Public Buildings at Ottawa. Mr. Heney was first awarded the contract for wood supply, after a call for tenders, on the 27th October, 1868, for three years. This contract was subsequently continued to him to the 21st December, 1872, when tenders were again called, and he was awarded the contract. On the 20th October, 1874, a contract was again entered into with him for one, two or three years. In March, 1879, a contract was again made with him. The contracts of 1868, 1872, 1874, and 1879 were awarded after a call for public tenders. The agreements of 1871 and 1878 were extensions of one year, authorized by Orders in Council. On the 10th March, 1881, the wood contract was awarded to W. McCaffrey, after public tenders: and by Order in Council of 17th December, 1883, this contract was continued until 1885, when new tenders were called for. Tenders were called for on the 11th March, 1885, for supply of firewood for three years for Public Buildings, Ottawa. J. M. Quinn was the lowest tenderer, and got the contract at $4.95 for rock maple, and $4.75 for mixed hardwood. On the 11th May, 1885, an Order in Council was passed allowing Quinn to transfer his contract to Heney, Heney to carry out the contract at the rates stated in Quinn's tender. The contract ran from the 1st September, 1885, to the 1st September, 1888. It has been renewed twice by Order in Council—on 7th December, 1886, for three years, from 1st September, 1888, to 1st September, 1891, and on the 24th April, 1891, for three years from 1st September, 1891, to 1st September, 1894, at the rates of Quinn's tender, namely, $4.95 for rock maple and $4.75 for mixed hardwood.

Mr. DEWDNEY.

EXPENSES FOR CABLEGRAMS.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, What is the total amount paid by the Dominion Government since 1886, on account of cablegrams sent through Reuter's Agency? Was any money paid on account of such cablegrams during the last fiscal year, or since the 30th June last?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am unable to give the hon. gentleman any information at present as to the first part of the question. I believe some small expenditures were made in that way some years ago, but they were not distinguished in the accounts from the other telegrams. As to the second part of his question, I may tell him that the amount paid on account of such telegrams during the last fiscal year was $89.84, and that since the 30th of June, the sum of $33.56 has been paid.

BREAKWATER AT MIMINIGASH, P.E.I.

Mr. PERRY asked, Have the Department of Public Works received, at any time between the 1st day of June, 1891, and this date, a petition from the fishermen and others of Little Miminigash, P.E.I., praying for a breakwater at that place? If so, is it the intention of the Government to grant the prayer of petitioners?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Such a petition was received on the 2nd of June. It is still before the Government, undisposed of.

RIDEAU CANAL RESERVE LOTS.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, How many lots, on the Rideau Canal reserve surrounding the basin, are occupied as piling ground by Mr. John Heney? How long has he occupied them, and what rent per lot does he pay yearly?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Heney occupies lots numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, part of 7, part of 8, 9, and part of 10, all on the west side of the canal. These lots were in possession of the Montreal & Ottawa Forwarding Company prior to January, 1886, when that company surrendered their lease. I have no reliable information as to the length of time that he has occupied them, but I believe about 25 years. He pays no rent to the Department of Interior.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Have any of the Ordnance lots on the Rideau Canal reserve surrounding the basin been transferred to the Department of Public Works? If so, how many, when and why? By whom are they now used, for what purpose, and what rent is received for them?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Lots 15 and 16 on the west side of the canal reserve, and also the land lying between lots 16 and the Sappers Bridge, were transferred to the Public Works Department by Order in Council of the 13th December, 1886, for the purpose of erecting a Custom-house and an examining warehouse thereon. These lands are now vested in the Department of Public Works for the purpose of providing additional Custom-house and examining warehouse accommodation if found necessary, and of course no rent is paid, therefore, by that department.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, What is the total rent per year received from tenants on Ordnance land on the Rideau Canal reserve surrounding the basin?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The amount is $1,167.25.

ROYAL COMMISSIONS.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, How many Royal Commissions have been issued since Confederation? For what purposes were they issued? What subjects did they enquire into? What was the date of issue in each case? What was the cost of each and the total cost of all, including printing?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I think this information should be called for by an Address, as it will take a long time to collect the papers from the various departments.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If you will allow this to go as a notice of an Address, I would like to add the names of the commissioners in each case.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am to-day sending notice to the different departments where these commissions have been issued, and I will give the information as soon as it comes.

MILITARY COLLEGE AT KINGSTON.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. AMYOT) asked, How many cadets have attended the Military College at Kingston since its foundation and received their diploma? What has been the total cost of the college to the Dominion since its foundation? How much does it cost the Dominion yearly to maintain the college? How many pupils of the college were granted their diploma during the scholastic year 1890-91?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. 309 cadets have attended the Royal Military College at Kingston, since its foundation, and 175 have received their diplomas. The total net cost of the college to the Dominion since its formation is $768,197.48. The average annual net cost of the college is $48,012. Eighteen cadets of the college were granted their diplomas in the year 1890-91.

WAYS AND MEANS.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER moved:

That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty, on an account of certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial year ending the 30th of June, 1892, the sum of $10,387,689.17 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

SUPPLY BILL.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 167) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service for the financial year ending 30th June, 1892, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 129) to amend the Acts respecting the North-West Territories.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DEWDNEY. The second clause was allowed to stand for two purposes: one, in order that the schedule might be prepared, and also, I think, with reference to the application made by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) regarding the police. Instead of repealing the whole of section 2, I would ask that only a portion be repealed. I propose to leave that portion which says that the members of the Assembly shall receive $500, as it is. With regard to the schedules, it is proposed to give the Assembly twenty-six members instead of, as heretofore, twenty-two members and three experts. That will carry out the proposition of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Davis) by adding two to Alberta, one to the Saskatchewan and one to Assiniboia, which will make the total number twenty-six. I have laid on the Table a plan showing the division of districts proposed under this Bill; and as I informed the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), we have to provide for an election which takes place in the course of a month or two, it will be for Parliament to say whether, in the future, the division of districts should be left to the Assembly. I think there would be no objection to that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think in the future it ought to be left to the Assembly.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We ought to decide the number of members.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The number may be indefinitely enlarged, and we have to pay them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If they had only a fixed amount of money appropriated, the more they multiplied the members, the less they would get.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Act says they shall get so much each. I think it right to allow them to alter the boundaries of the districts.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Do I understand the Minister of Justice to say that the Assembly will be allowed to alter the boundaries at any time?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is what is proposed.

Mr. CHARLTON. This Bill provides for a Legislature of 26 members. Is there any provision for a future increase?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; that is what we were discussing, and I was urging that that should be kept in the hands of this Parliament to arrange from time to time, so that the number should be definite, but that we should give them power to alter the boundaries of the electoral districts.

On section 10,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am astonished that the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) does not suggest some other name instead of Moose Jaw. That is the translation of an Indian name, and I am sure that it must grate harshly upon the exquisitely fine ear of the hon. gentleman. I will suggest that it be called Davin's Jaw.

Mr. DAVIN. The name is taken from a stream called the Moose Jaw. I believe it is the translation of an Indian word, but it is very appropriate, because the stream forms an outlet very like that of a moose jaw. But I object to Davin's Jaw for this reason—that we intend to have mills on the Moose Jaw, and if we have Davin's Jaw, probably some Mills would be afraid to go there.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the hon. gentleman will be content as long as the mills go after they are there.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to call the attention of the Government to a matter I raised in committee the other day, and it is a subject I dealt with on a motion for the first reading of the Bill to amend the Dominion Lands Act. It has relation to the clause that limits section 13. The Bill reads :

"7. Section thirteen of the Act is hereby repealed, and the following is substituted therefor :—
"13. The Legislative Assembly shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, or of any other Act of the Parliament of Canada in force in the Territories, have power to make ordinances for the Government of the Territories in relation to the classes of subjects next hereinafter mentioned."

Sub-section 6 has reference to the incorporation of companies for territorial objects, with the following exceptions : "railway, tramway, steamboat, canal, transportation, telegraph, and telephone and irrigation companies." I called the attention of the Government to this, as I thought it was unwise to limit the power of the Legislative Assembly in regard to railway or tramway, and other such companies, and, if I may refer to what I said on the motion for the first reading of the Dominion Lands Act, I may say that I pointed out that the United States was accustomed to give grants of lands for railway purposes to these territories and I instanced especially Minnesota. An hon. gentleman who is always well informed on railway matters, and who is especially well informed on matters connected with the United States, questioned the accuracy of the statement. Now, Sir, as a matter of fact the Territory of Minnesota obtained grants of lands from Congress to the extent of 4,051,140 acres for the purpose of giving lands to railways, and the advantage that has accrued to them is very great, because Minnesota derives a large revenue at the present time from a certain percentage which that State is entitled to on the net profit. I do not intend to move in this matter, but I call the attention of the Government to it, that perhaps we err on the side of not giving more power to the Legislative Assembly. I do not see that it would be any harm to give it the power to incorporate railways, tramways and irrigation companies. I call the attention of the Government to it because they may have to deal with the territories at some future session, and I think it would be well to consider whether the power to incorporate small railway companies should not be given to the Assembly ; and whether it would not be well, also, to do what was done in the case of Minnesota, and place at their disposal a certain amount of land which they could give to the railways.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

INLAND REVENUE ACT.

Resolutions reported from Committee of Ways and Means (18th inst.) concurred in and referred to Committee on Bill (No. 116) to further amend the Inland Revenue Act.

Bill considered in Committee, and reported.

Mr. DAVIN.

BEET-ROOT SUGAR BOUNTY.

Resolution reported from Committee of the Whole (17th inst.) respecting the payment of a bounty to the producers of raw beet sugar produced in Canada, concurred in.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 168) to encourage the production of beet-root sugar.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

Bill (No. 163) to amend the General Inspection Act, was read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

On section 1,

Mr. COSTIGAN. After a great deal of care and consideration, very high grades have been fixed for the inspection of grain grown in our country, especially in the North-West and Manitoba, which were justified by the character of the wheat generally grown there, taking the average crops. It is very important that the grades so fixed shall have a permanent character and not be changed from time to time, according to the growth of any particular year. The grades fixed may be higher than those fixed in Chicago. We have one grade not fixed there at all, called Extra No. 1 hard wheat. It occurs sometimes, from causes over which we have no control, that a large portion of the crop may not come up to the general average ; and if inspected according to the standard fixed, a large portion of grain would range very low indeed. Application is then made at once to lower our grade ; and we have thought it better to maintain the standard fixed, to be known as the official standard of the country, but to meet the requirements of a special season when, owing to drouth and other causes, the crop would not come up to such an average, samples may be selected of that particular season's growth and grades fixed, to be known as commercial grades, giving a commercial value, and the grains would go on the market in that way, the official standard remaining untouched.

Mr. LAURIER. I suppose this legislation is required by the boards of trade of the North-West ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes ; and generally by every one interested in the crop there.

Mr. SPEAKER. The difficulty may arise that in establishing a grade for a special year, you may lower the general standard of the wheat grown. It seems to me, unless there is a general demand for this Bill, it is not the kind of legislation we should pass.

Mr. LAURIER. I suppose the best rule, under all circumstances, is to follow the advice of those interested. I would not venture my judgment against that of the boards of trade of Winnipeg and the other towns in the North-West, who are best competent to give an opinion.

Mr. MACDONALD (Winnipeg). I would inform the leader of the Opposition that this change is made at the request, not only of the board of trade of Winnipeg, but of the boards of trade of all the other towns of Manitoba and the North-West. Mr. Bell, the secretary of the Winnipeg Board of Trade and also of the grain exchange at that place, came down here a short time ago asking on behalf of those boards for this special grading. I do not profess to understand the question myself, but, as the leader of the Opposition has said, I suppose the boards of trade are best qualified to deal with it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suppose the object of fixing standards for grain is to obtain a standard by which you can compare the grain of the North-West with grain all over the world, where it is grown for the market. If you fix a special grade, then it seems to me it does not mean anything. I cannot see what purpose it is intended to serve. If, for instance, the wheat is unripe, or frozen, or affected in some particular way so that you cannot classify it as under first, or second, or any other grade, I suppose it would be sufficiently designated by mentioning its defect, but I do not see how you are going to classify it so that it will be to any advantage to the agriculturist or to any other interested in it as an article of merchandise.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I may say that I am influenced specially in this matter by the opinions of those who ought to know about the requirements of that country, the boards of trade. We have our grades established so high, that in special years a very large proportion of the crop would be rejected according to those grades. We have either to make an exception and leave the high standards untouched and permanent, making this exceptional ruling for a special crop, or we have to lower the general grades which Parliament has established, which would have a very bad effect.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You would not have to come down in the standard.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes: because these grades are fixed at the request of the North-West people themselves in order to meet the average crop of that country, which is an excellent crop, as hon. gentlemen know, in quality, in weight, in colour, and everything of that kind. Parliament has made the grades higher in the North-West than they are in Chicago. Now, if we do not agree to the suggestion in this respect, not to give the official character of inspection to this kind of grain, but to make this a commercial grade for a special purpose and only for that one season, you will have to abandon the high grades under all circumstances.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why should you touch the grades if you fix the standard according to the quality of the crop? If this does not come up to that standard it is not the less an article of merchandise, but is of an inferior quality, which the purchaser is able to judge for himself. You do not help him in the least by undertaking to fix an artificial grade which he cannot compare with anything else. He must see the grain itself before he can judge.

Mr. CHARLTON. We are not likely to have the grading of wheat in the great markets of the world affected by the views of the boards of trade of Winnipeg and the little towns in the North-West. Wheat is graded in Chicago, in New York, in Liverpool and the other markets of the world, and the grading is established there, and it is absurd to suppose that you can establish a standard which is fluctuating and goes up and down according to circumstances. If you have a crop of frosted wheat one year and very little No. 1 hard, you are proposing to make special standards for that year. That is a perfect absurdity. The wheat has to be sold in the markets of the world on the established grade in those markets, and you cannot make any grading in the North-West which will mitigate the results of not having your wheat up to the standards of the corn markets of the world. You may adopt the ordinary standards of grading, and I think the adoption of any other rule will beget mischievous consequences.

Mr. TROW. I think any rule adopted by Parliament for the grading of wheat in the North-West has a tendency to an imposition on the settlers and is altogether in favour of the buyers, who take advantage of those who sell on account of the grading.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is like a scheme to make a fiat dollar serve the purpose of a coin. I think the Minister of Inland Revenue had better let the usages of the world apply to the North-West, and I believe he will find it will be to the advantage of that country.

Mr. DAVIN. I think my hon. friends are entirely mistaken as to the way in which this clause would operate. Last year we had a good crop in the North-West, and we had a large amount of very peculiar wheat. It had not filled out in consequence of the absence of June rains, and some of the buyers at first graded it as if it was frosted wheat. They graded it low. By-and-bye, it went over to England, and there it was found to be of the very first quality, but it was only late in the season that anything like a proper price was given for this wheat. If we had had this legislation then, that wheat could have been graded specially in the way provided for in this clause. Nearly every year we have wheat in the North-West that should be thus specially graded, and I know that in my constituency there is a strong desire to have such legislation as this passed.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think this is very dangerous legislation. I would like to know if the Boards of Trade of Toronto and Montreal and other places throughout this Dominion have been consulted in relation to this matter. We are not here to legislate simply in the interests of Manitoba and the North-West or what they may conceive to be their interests, but we are legislating here in the interests of the whole Dominion. This grain which may be marked No. 1 of this Dominion under an enactment passed here, may grade very much lower when it is placed on the commercial boards in Toronto, Montreal and other points, and I think it is going to militate against the success of the North-West rather than in its favour to pass this provision. I agree with the member for Perth (Mr. Trow) that the members of the boards of trade and those who deal in wheat in the North-West will take the advantages which this Bill will give them in securing from the producers their wheat at perhaps a less price than they otherwise would do.

Mr. COSTIGAN. He did not say that.

Mr. MACDONALD (Winnipeg). It will operate the other way.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot see how that can be. Why should we introduce legislation affecting only the North-West? I should like to know if there is any legislation in the United States affecting Dakota and Minnesota alone.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think the member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) ought to support this Bill. He says the system, so far, has been in favour of the buyer and to the detriment of the seller. Here is a case where a large proportion of the crop, as stated by the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) does not come up to the standard, and the farmer is at the mercy of the buyer because his wheat will not grade at the standard. But for this exceptional circumstance we propose that the seller shall not be at the mercy of the buyer, and that the wheat which will not come under the higher grades shall have a special classification for that one year. The hon. gentleman says we ought not to legislate for the North-West specially, but the hon. gentlemen representing that section of the country all say they desire this legislation. It has been pressed upon my notice, and has passed the Senate, and now comes here. There has been no objection to it from any quarter.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to get an answer to my question. I asked the hon. gentleman if the proposition had been submitted to, or recommended by, the Boards of Trade of Montreal and Toronto; or has there been special legislation of this kind with regard to the North-Western States?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not know anything about the legislation of the North-Western States.

Mr. McMULLEN. With regard to the Boards of Trade of Montreal and Toronto?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not know that they expressed any opinion on the subject.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) says they did not obtain a proper price for their grain, although it was perfectly good and was of excellent quality, but it had been injured by the summer drought; that is, the wheat had matured, but it was shrunk. Well, under the existing provisions that grain would be graded as sound wheat, but it would not be graded as first-class wheat; certainly it would not rank along with wheat that was immature and had suffered from frost. If it were graded it would simply show the incompetence of those who had graded wheat in the North-West, it would not show anything else; it would not show that something novel and special was required. The statement of the hon. gentleman only shows that the work is imperfectly done under the law as it is, not that further legislation is needed. I am at a loss to understand why you undertake to make special grades. What is the object? Surely, if there is a certain year when grain is frosted, when it is not matured, there ought to be a grade for that, and whenever a need occurs, whenever that sort of wheat is put upon the market, there should be a standard by which it might be tried. The hon. gentleman proposes by this legislation to create a special grade for a particular year, by which you could not compare the wheat that was put upon the market under that grade with any grain elsewhere; there will be no possibility of doing that. Certainly in this matter the law must adjust itself to circumstances, not circumstances to the law. You are obliged to apply the same rules in Canada that are applied in the United States, that are applied in Russia. You cannot make a different rule, because when the grain goes to the markets of Europe where it is required for consumption, it will be judged by the standard that exists there; and you cannot make any standard that will be of any value, because it will only enable unscrupulous buyers to take advantage of the agricultural population that have such grain for sale.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is entirely in the interest of the agriculturists, and against unscrupulous buyers.

Mr. CHARLTON. How would the Minister of Inland Revenue look upon a proposition arbitrarily changing the grading of sugar under the present arrangement of the Dutch standard, and making an exceptional grade of sugar applicable to a certain province? It would be a piece of absurdity, yet it would be exactly on the same line as this proposed legislation. Here is the article of wheat which is known in all the markets of the world by certain qualities, certain grades, and it is impossible to change that when it reaches the ultimate market; and if you interfere with that grading in Manitoba, or the grading that will be applied to wheat in England, you are simply working mischievous consequences, and will do nobody any good. The idea of making special legislation in this matter applicable to one province, is, in my opinion, a wrong principle altogether. You might just as well introduce in one province a different standard of weights and measures instead of having it uniform throughout the Dominion. I think we had better retrace the steps we have taken here, and conclude that the grading of wheat, which is customary in the markets of the world, we cannot interfere with in this House. We cannot make of frosted wheat in Manitoba a No. 1 wheat, we cannot make No. 2 wheat No. 1 wheat, we cannot by legislation change the quality of wheat, we cannot change the grading that wheat will receive when it goes into the markets of the world, and consequently we had better let the matter alone.

Mr. MACDONALD (Winnipeg). I do not think some of the hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken on this question understand the real scope of this Bill. There is no intention of having frozen wheat called No. 1 hard—that is not thought of for a moment. The fact is that in certain years in the North-West a part of the crop has been caught by frost, or has deteriorated in value in other ways. In the past that wheat has been graded just as this Act proposes that wheat now shall be graded, that is to say, it is known as No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3, with the word "commercial" added. It is not understood by anyone there that "No. 1 commercial" means "No. 1 hard." The only object in asking for this legislation now is that, whereas in the past these grades known as commercial grades have been well known to the trade there. The inspector has felt uncertain as to whether he was justified in issuing certificates grading the wheat according to these commercial grades. If these grades are not established, this wheat has to be left ungraded altogether, and the consequence is that the farmer, whom hon. gentlemen opposite are so anxious to protect, is the very one who suffers, because instead of having his wheat graded, he is obliged to sell it by sample, which is very much to the advantange of the buyer. As long as the wheat is sold by sample it is impossible for the farmer, or for the man who buys from the farmer, and wishes to export it, to get it stored in any elevator. His wheat, if stored, can only be taken in by the car load and cannot be dumped into the large bins in which they store graded wheat, and the consequence is that he has practically to send on a car load of wheat as soon as purchased to whatever point it is destined for, having first sent the sample ahead, and in that way the farmer is very much at the mercy of the purchaser; whereas if these commercial grades were established, which are understood by the trade just as well as No. 1 or No. 2 hard, this would not be the case and the seller would obtain a fair price. The only change that is made now is to recognize the certificates which are already given by the inspectors appointed by the Government. The western boards of trade are very much interested in this, they are not interested in seeing the farmer cheated; they are interested in getting a fair price for the wheat purchased in that country, but they think, and apparently with unanimity, that the interest of the country would be better served by having this legislation passed. I have no doubt at all that those hon. gentlemen who have taken different views are perfectly honest in their opposition to the measure, and believe that it will injure the country, or will cause confusion in the grading of wheat. But I am of opinion that the members of boards of trade there, who have considered this matter very carefully for several years past, are quite as competent, and perhaps even a little more competent, to judge of this measure than either the gentlemen who have spoken or myself, or perhaps any other member of the House. I would simply submit that this legislation has not been proposed without being asked for, and asked for by those most deeply interested in the matter.

Mr. TROW. These grades in question are only known to the buyers. A farmer in Manitoba or the North-West knows nothing about them, and is only guided by the decision of the buyer. The buyer has, therefore, an opportunity to impose on the seller, because the farmer is not prepared to say as to how his grain should be rated, whether as No. 1, 2, or 3, and, of course, the buyer can impose on him by saying that his wheat is not No. 1 as he supposed, but No. 2, and the farmer will thus only receive the price of No. 2. Under other circumstances the farmer would be able to compare his wheat with that of his neighbour and draw a comparison of the value of his products.

Mr. McMULLEN. I regret that the Minister of Inland Revenue has not submitted this Bill to the different boards of trade of the Dominion, especially as this legislation is of a peculiar character, affecting only Manitoba and the North-West. I do not challenge the statements of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Macdonald). For my part, I would be very reluctant to stand in the way of any legislation of interest to the farmers of the North-West as well as other sections of the country; but, at the same time, we should, in passing legislation of this kind, see that we are not jeopardizing any interests of the Dominion. I hold that, under this Bill, Manitoba No. 1 may be graded either as commercial No. 1 or as standard No. 1. How is a man who buys flour to know, when he sees it stated to be Manitoba No. 1, whether it is No. 1 hard or No. 1 commercial? He may thus purchase flour of second class quality instead of No. 1 hard. This legislation will have a very serious effect on the manner in which flour is bought and sold. No. 1 Manitoba hard brings the highest price of any flour in Ontario. Suppose that a miller in the North-West finds, that by the passage of this Act, he can place on the Ontario market a large quantity of flour ground from No. 1 commercial wheat, how is the buyer going to know whether the wheat is of that quality or of No. 1 hard? Such legislation gives an improper advantage to the millers.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If this Bill is going to improve the condition of farmers, I should like to ask the Minister if they have petitioned in its favour? Farmers understand their business, and if the Bill is in favour of their interests, petitions will have been sent in its favour. Boards of trade do not usually look after the interests of the farmers as much as people imagine. A few years ago on matters affecting the farmers of the North-West they petitioned very numerously. If they have petitioned in this case, the petition will be in charge of the Minister, and we shall be glad if he will let us know the facts.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not think it necessary that the statements of every member should be backed up by petitions. No one asked the hon. gentleman during his speeches this session whether he had petitions behind him backing up the statements he made. The hon. gentleman has already heard that the people of the North-West desire this legislation, and that the boards of trade in all the towns and cities of the North-West desire it. He might also take it for granted that the statements made by members from that part of the country fairly represent the views of the farmers.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Why does the Minister bring forward the fact that the board of trade wished the legislation, when he finds fault with me for asking if petitions have been received from farmers? Why did he complain of my question?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I did not complain.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yes, you certainly have been complaining.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman must address the Chair.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I had almost lost sight of the Chair, because I was looking at a Minister who is very much bigger than the Chairman.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the Minister propose to adopt any provision to prevent flour manufactured from No. 1 or 2 commercial grade being confounded with No. 1 and 2 regular standard, and what are the regulations he proposes, because this Bill is a declaration to all the world that Manitoba and the North-West produce frozen wheat?

Mr. COSTIGAN. If there were any danger of that happening which the hon. gentleman suggests, I would be prepared to adopt safeguards. I do not, however, think there is any such danger. If flour is produced from frozen or unripe wheat the inspection must be faulty if it should not be classified according to the grade to which it belongs. No classification is given to the wheat ground, but to the flour produced, and if the flour is No. 1 it is so graded, irrespective of the wheat from which it is manufactured.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

WEIGHERS OF GRAIN.

Bill (No. 164) to make further provisions respecting Weighers of Grain was read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. COSTIGAN. This Bill provides for only an unimportant change, and I believe there will not be much discussion on it. As the law now stands, the boards of trade have power given them by this Parliament to issue licenses, after examination, to qualified persons authorizing them to weigh. They have petitioned now that at the most important points of shipping, weighers might be appointed by the Government on their recommendation, and this Bill provides that, in certain cases where it is deemed advisable, on the petition of the board of trade for the locality, the Government can appoint a nominee of the board of trade. The Bill further states that the inspector or assistant inspector, on the recommendation of the board of trade, would be eligible for that position.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 162) to correct a clerical error in the Act 53 Vic., chap. 81, respecting the Great North-West Central Railway Company.—(Sir John Thompson.)

LAND GRANTS TO RAILWAYS.

On the Order, receiving Report of Committee of Whole on a certain proposed resolution (30th July) respecting the expediency of amending the Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in land to certain Railway Companies,

Mr. DEWDNEY moved:

That the said resolution be amended by striking out all the words after the word "railway" in the fifth line to the end of the resolution, and inserting the following words instead thereof: "from the town of Calgary, in the District of Alberta, in the North-West Territories, to a point in or near Township twenty-nine, Range twenty-three, west of the 4th Meridian, a distance of about fifty-five miles."

Mr. CHARLTON. Has the line been surveyed, and is the distance accurately known?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; the line has been located.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is there some portion of it built?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; no portion of it has been built?

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to ask, also, what is the character of the land along that railway? It appears to me that we are giving away very large tracts of lands in the North-West to railway companies. At the time of the inception of the scheme for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, we were assured by the late First Minister, and by other Ministers, that by this year we should have received not less than $70,000,000 from that country from all sources to recoup this Dominion for the money it has expended on that road. Ever since, however, we have been giving the Government power to donate enormous tracts of lands to all the railway companies that choose to apply for them. I do not know the character of these lands. They may be good farming or ranching or coal lands; and if so, it seems to me that the prospect of opening up such a country to traffic ought to be a sufficient inducement to any railway company to construct a line 55 miles long through a comparatively level country, without asking us for a grant of 6,400 acres per mile. I think a return should be brought down giving us some idea of the quantity of land we have given away in this manner, and the quantity that we still have available for settlers. Will all the grants that we have given to colonization companies, ranching companies and railway companies, it appears to me that the land which was intended to recoup us for the enourmous sums which we have spent for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway is dwindling down to very small proportions, and that the country will find that the resources upon which we have been depending to relieve this Dominion of the burdens it has undertaken, have been frittered away. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) appears to be tickled at the remarks I am making. As one of the representatives of the North-West, he seems to be delighted that it is getting all it wants, while the poor taxpayers of the other parts of the Dominion have to pay the piper. That has been our experience in the past, and it is likely to continue so. I consider it my duty to raise this objection, whatever others may do.

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is an old line, which has had this land subsidy for two or three years, and this resolution is only to transfer the subsidy from a line from Cheadle station to a line from Calgary.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is always difficult to profit by the experience of anybody else; everybody generally has to learn from his own experience. If we could profit by the experience of the United States in subsidizing railways with land grants, it would be a very good thing for us. The United States have gone through the same experience as we are going through, but on a larger scale. A large portion of the public domain of the United States has been granted to railway corporations; and that experience has demonstrated that at least two-thirds of those land grants were useless, because the railways for which they were given would have been built without them. We are following in the same course. We have not the same kind of lobbying at Ottawa which used to prevail at Washington; but we have something nearly akin to it. We have the chartering of railway companies, formed not for the purpose of building railways, or with any intention on the part of the corporators to put their own money into them, but only for the purpose of getting a charter and a land grant so that they can trade on them and sell them to other parties who may be willing to build the road. If we adopted the policy in this country of waiting until the actual bonâ fide railway constructer wished to build a railway, we would no doubt save to this country vast areas of land, and would secure for this country just as good and rapid railway developments as we will under the present arrangement. I believe we are utterly reckless in frittering away that great heritage of the people and of the future, the public lands of the North-West. I believe we are not doing our duty to the present or to the future. We are not acting with common sense and prudence in this matter, but recklessly; and Parliament is lending itself to furthering the purposes of mere speculators and schemers. I do not know that I have anything to say in regard to this particular Bill, but I believe we should exercise the greatest caution in this matter. We have gone too fast and too far, and there is great force in what the hon. member for Wellington said. We are squandering the inheritance of the people. We are giving away the lands of the North-West; we are giving these lands away in blocks that would almost constitute a principality and a kingdom, and we require to act more slowly in this matter. The country, when it needs railway accommodation, will get it. The idea of projecting lines away in the wilderness, hundreds of miles, and giving large land grants, and then waiting for the construction of these lines until some degree of settlement renders them necessary, and allowing the companies that first obtain the charters to part with their charters to men who will actually build the road, is acting in anticipation of the wants of the country and on a principle entirely foreign to those of judicious business operations.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Perhaps the hon. Minister will tell us how much of the land appropriation to which the Canadian Pacific Railway is entitled has already been taken up, and how much yet remains to be expropriated from the Crown domain?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think last year I gave the exact information as to how the Canadian Pacific Railway land grant stood. It is now in the same position, except that the balance of their land has to be selected by the 1st January, 1892. They had up to last year selected, I think, nearly ten million acres on the main line proper, but they have given us no notification of any other lands selected in what is known as the northern reserve.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How much have they still to select?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Between seven million and eight million acres. They have had inspections made during the past eighteen months and have to make their final selection by the end of this year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is there anything to prevent their making selections within the very limits you now propose to grant by this Bill to another company?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They cannot do so, as that land has not been reserved for them to make a selection from. A special reserve is laid out from which they have to choose their land, and they cannot take outside these limits.

Resolution reported.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 169) further to amend the Act 52 Victoria, Chapter 4, to authorize the granting of subsidies in land to certain railway companies.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Would it be possible for the hon. Minister, at the next stage of the Bill, to give us an idea of the amount of lands held by railway companies in the North-West and Manitoba?

Mr. DEWDNEY. If I had known that this Bill was coming up to-day, I would have had that statement on the Table. There is another land subsidy to be granted, and I will then give the statement.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Not only to railways, but to colonization companies.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There will be very little there; but I will get that, too.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INSPECTION OF SHIPS.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 149) respecting the inspection of ships.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. TUPPER. Section 7 stood in order that I might draft a section, if advisable, to carry out the suggestion made to exempt from the operation of the Bill vessels classed in the different bureaus or registers. It was shown that these vessels had to undergo very rigid inspection in order to attain their class, and it did not seem necessary that most of the clauses should apply to them. I propose to go back to section 3, and add to the exempting clause the following:—

This Act shall not apply to ships classed in Lloyds' register of British and foreign shipping, or ships classed in any other corporation or association for the survey and register of ships, approved by the Governor in Council, provided that if any ship ceased to be classed as aforesaid, it shall be subject to the clauses of this Act.

Mr. CHARLTON. Would that apply to inland waters?

Mr. TUPPER. To any part of Canada. There are three bureaus: Lloyds, the Bureau Veritas, and the American Record; and in not mentioning any other than Lloyds I am following the lines of British legislation, notably in the case of the Load Line Act. No doubt the British Parliament considered it was not well to recognize in the same manner foreign organizations, and besides, new registers may spring into existence.

On section 7,

Mr. WELSH. There is a Government inspector of machinery and a Government inspector of steamships. I see this allows any port warden to go on board a steamer and inspect it.

Mr. TUPPER. He has that power now in regard to steamboats. This has reference to sailing vessels. I want to add a section to this Bill. As originally drafted, the Bill did not contain one of the most important subjects that I wished to deal with in sufficiently explicit language, and the Committee will remember, no doubt, that a number of petitions were presented to this House in reference to the unsafe tackle used in loading and unloading ships, in consequence of which many accidents have occurred. Some very distressing ones occurred last summer and the year before, and lives have been lost. The labour associations in Canada have been very anxious that there should be some legislation dealing with that subject. Consequently, I propose to add the following as section 8 of the Bill:—

Every inspector may at any time visit any ship, whether registered in Canada or elsewhere, and whether propelled wholly or in part by steam, and inspect and examine the tackle, machinery or apparatus used for the loading or unloading thereof, and if he considers such tackle, machinery or apparatus defective so as to be dangerous to life, he shall report thereon to the Minister who may order that such tackle, machinery or apparatus shall not be used until permitted by the Minister, and any tackle, machinery or apparatus used in violation of such order shall be liable to forfeiture and seizure by the chief officer of Customs at any port, and may thereupon be sold in the same way and under like provisions as goods liable to forfeiture for non-payment of Customs duties, and the owner of the ship shall incur a penalty of $100, and such ship shall be liable for the same.

The phraseology of the clause is similar to that in reference to the carrying out of the provisions regarding other unsafe features of a ship, and it is quite consistent with the principle of the legislation that we should treat it as quite as important for the safety of life that the tackle used in the loading and unloading of a ship shall be in proper order as anything else.

Mr. WELSH. I think it is very necessary that an inspection should be made of all the gear used in discharging ships, and I notice that the Government inspector of hulls, when he goes through our ships, is very particular to see that all the gear belonging to the ships is in perfect order: but, as he only makes a yearly inspection, it may be that coasters and other vessels visiting the piers occasionally may have defective gear. This penalty is very strong—seizure, and a penalty, and so on. I think the inspector should order its removal and renewal, and if that is not done within 48 hours, then he might confiscate and put what fine you like upon it; but if I say that a rope is worn out and fresh ropes and fresh blocks must be obtained and they must be replaced within 24 hours, that may be all right, but it is too severe and too arbitrary to allow anyone to go on board and confiscate at once. You might give them 24 hours' notice or 12 hours' notice: but it is going too far to give the inspector absolute power to condemn a thing of which he may not be as good a judge as the master.

Mr. TUPPER. The officer in none of these cases deals in that summary manner the hon. gentleman deprecates. The officer has no authority to order these things to be done, but he has to report fully to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries who may order it. The whole thing is based on the idea that there shall be no sudden action, but that there shall be careful enquiry.

Mr. WELSH. Then I think there is too much red tape about that. An inspector, if he is a competent man, should be able to deal with that himself. I know, if I were appointed inspector and went on board a ship, and I saw the gear was old and ought to be condemned, I would have it taken out.

Mr. TUPPER. But if I had you for an inspector I would not mind that being the law. But the trouble is that the ship-owners, and this House almost unanimously in committee, agreed that we should not clothe any man with such arbitrary authority, and the hon. gentleman will see the danger that, although one inspector might carry out those instructions very well and faithfully, the shipping interest itself is of such a character that it is proper we should proceed with great caution, and in the inception of this legislation it was deemed advisable that reference should be made to the Minister; and I may tell the hon. gentleman that it does not mean so much the individual who occupies that position for the time being, as it does the nautical advisers of that department who examine the reasons before any action is taken against a ship-owner which may mean the imposition of a penalty. It is in the interest of the ship-owner that the system is adopted which the hon. gentleman terms "red tape," rather than the clothing of any one officer at a port with power which he might exercise in an arbitrary way.

Mr. WELSH. Do I understand the Minister to say that when an inspector goes on board a ship and sees unfit gear in use and condemns it, the captain of the ship must stop using that at once?

Mr. TUPPER. No.

Mr. WELSH. Then, what is the good of it? You may have a dozen men killed between the time he inspects it and the time the Minister gives his decision on it.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will see in other clauses in reference to the safety of life, that the responsibility is cast on the owner. But in reference to the imposition of a fine because the owner will not do what he is told by the inspector, on reflection the hon. gentleman would be the first to complain if we did not provide that the complaint should be fully investigated.

Mr. WELSH. I do not understand it yet. I know that under the English Inspection Act, there is a Board of Trade inspector appointed at every port in Great Britain, and that inspector is at liberty to go on board any ship in the port. If he finds anything that needs to be renewed, he condemns it, he lays a complaint at the Custom-house and the ship has to be detained. The thing is done at once. There is something about this I do not fully understand. I quite agree with the principle of the Bill, that for the safety of life and the protection of property, you need to compel every ship-owner to have good and proper gear for the discharging and loading, the hauling and mooring of a ship. But I cannot understand that when an inspector goes on board and says: This gearing is deficient, these blocks and these ropes are worn out and are not fit to be used and are dangerous to life and property—I cannot understand that the inspector has no right to compel them to be renewed at once, but that he has instead first to report to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and in the meantime half a dozen men may be killed and the ship may get to sea.

Mr. TUPPER. In nine cases out of ten the repairs would be done at once.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think there is a good deal of force in what my hon. friend says. I do not see what is to be gained by reporting to the Minister. If there is a competent officer appointed upon whom the Minister relies for his judgment and whom he consults, why should not that officer decide directly that the ship must be repaired before it leaves port; otherwise, as my hon. friend says, she may be across the Atlantic before the Minister is heard from, and so no useful purpose is served by this regulation.

Mr. TUPPER. We find that our experience under the Steamboat Inspection Act, which Act this Bill follows, has been most satisfactory, and it prevents the possibility of arbitrary or hasty action on the part of the officers; there is no analogy between the circumstances in our ports and the circumstances in English ports, for the reason that they always have first-class competent men for inspectors. We have some good men, it is true. In the Steamboat Inspection Act that is the procedure that is followed—the officer takes direct authority. When a bonâ fide case is brought to the notice of the captains they are only too glad to take action at once. In the Steamboat Inspection Act, final action is not taken, nor is there a risk of penalty incurred, until the action of the department is known on report of the inspector.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The interest of the party regulates him.

Mr. WELSH. The Minister is very candid ; he says in some ports they have got efficient men, but he cannot say the same in all the ports. I quite agree with him. Now, suppose an ignorant and incompetent inspector goes on board a ship and condemns a perfectly good material, what appeal has the owner or master of that ship for redress for the injury that is done him by the inspector condemning good material?

Mr. TUPPER. The same as the owner of a steamboat has ; when the inspector orders certain things to be done, the owner has an appeal to the department.

Mr. WELSH. A sailing vessel is quite different from a steam vessel. I quite agree that in the steamboat inspection you have got good men, and you can depend on them. I have had a good deal to do with these men for the last twenty or thirty years and there are some of them upon whose judgment I can always depend. But what are you going to do with sailing vessels? The steamboat inspector does not inspect sailing vessels, and the Minister admits that some of his inspectors for sailing vessels are incompetent. One of them may go on board who does not know a good piece of rope from a bad piece, and he causes annoyance to the owner of the ship. I think it is very dangerous to have an incompetent inspector, and you ought to provide a real remedy so that if the inspector condemns a good material, he shall be liable for the damage, and the ship-owner may have some redress against the officer who has done him the wrong.

Mr. TUPPER. If an inspector does that, we will turn him out.

Committee rose ; and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

On section 15,

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it intended that this Act shall be brought into operation in one part of the Dominion and not in the other?

Mr. TUPPER. The object of this clause is that the Act shall not become law the moment it is approved, but a proclamation shall be issued which will have the effect of giving notice to parties interested.

Bill reported.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Public Buildings, Nova Scotia.....$ 10,000

Mr. LAURIER. Explain.

Mr. FOSTER. The first item is for Dominion public buildings. It is a vote for $1,500 to be used in effecting such repairs and improvements in Dominion buildings at Halifax as shall be recommended by the chief architect, with a view to keeping such buildings in proper order and in general repair. The amount is for general repairs on the large buildings.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then there has been no recommendation made by the chief architect yet. It is singular.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it is singular. All these large buildings require every year to have some repairs made to them. This estimate is for the amount of money required for the Halifax public buildings for the current year. It is for repairs and not for new buildings.

Mr. McMULLEN. What was the amount expended on this building last year?

Mr. FOSTER. $1,507.68. We have, besides, the examining warehouse and the post office, and the total expenditure on all of these, last year, was $3,934. In the Dominion building, the postmaster's office was fitted up and painted, glass doors were put up ; the post office inspector's office was cleaned, painted and furnished, and oil cloth and screens provided for the Inland Revenue office. The walls and ceiling of the office of the assistant Receiver General were cleaned and tinted and the woodwork painted, and there were screens, and carpets, and book cases, and furniture supplied. My hon. friend will see it is for that kind of repairs.

Mr. McMULLEN. The money was expended on those repairs last year, and it should not be necessary to repeat them this year. Is this money to be expended for draining, or roofing, or what else? The inside of the building appears to have been well attended to last year ; and can the Minister tell us if this money will be spent on the outside this year?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will easily understand that these buildings require some repairs every year.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can understand pretty well that it requires a considerable sum annually to keep these buildings in repair : but while it is quite right that Parliament should be asked to provide for these necessary expenditures, it is well that we should criticize them and see how the money goes. We are anxious to assist the Government all we can in economising, and we want to place you in a position to say to those who spend the money that a strict account shall be given for every dollar. It is well that economy should be practised, and that we should see that none of the money is squandered.

Mr. FOSTER. That is so.

Mr. CHARLTON. We heard no explanation as to the vote for Sydney post office and the Halifax immigrant building.

Mr. FOSTER. The vote of $1,000 for the Sydney (South) post office is required to complete the contract now under construction according to the estimate of the chief architect. A vote of $2,500 is required by the chief architect for carrying out indispensable improvements which are urgently required for the reception and accommodation of the large number of immigrants who arrive at the port of Halifax. There is also the cost of the fitting up of the office for a direct cable connection, and providing for incandescent lights and furniture. The appropriation of $5,000 for the Dartmouth post office is mainly intended for the purpose of purchasing a site for the projected post office at Dartmouth, and the starting of building operations in 1891-92. This is a revote.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is the revenue from that post office?

Mr. FOSTER. Postal revenue, $1,725; money orders issued and paid, $14,000; savings banks deposit, $7,791, for year ending 30th June, 1890.

Mr. CHARLTON. How much is the estimated cost of the post office, including the site?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not that information here.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the population of Dartmouth?

Mr. FOSTER. It must be four or five thousand.

Mr. CHARLTON. This system of building post offices in little country towns, such as in the county town of the County of Haldimand, with a population of five or six hundred, has been carried altogether too far. I question very much the propriety of the policy pursued by the Government in building post offices in those small country towns, where a building suitable for the purpose could be rented at less than one-third the interest on the money expended in erecting those public buildings. In the United States the building of post offices is restricted to large cities and in cities of 10,000 or 15,000 inhabitants, the department is restricted as to the rent which should be paid for the office, so that these large expenditures are not incurred in that country. We should take into account that this is a young country, that the burdens of our people are now excessive, that our debt is three times greater per capita than that of our neighbours of the United States, and we ought to begin to get into a line of economy in expenditure. There is certainly no feature of economy that we might practise more readily than to do away with these large and unnecessary expenditures for public buildings, except where they are absolutely necessary. I have no doubt that this is one case amongst dozens of others, where a building suitable for the post office could be obtained for perhaps $200 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think you could do that in a town of this size.

Mr. WATSON. What is the system pursued by the Government in erecting post offices in the different towns. According to the statement of the Minister the revenue for this office is only $1,700 a year, and yet the Government will not build a post office in towns where the revenue runs from $4,000 to $6,000 a year. I believe that the question of revenue should have a great deal to do with the erection of those buildings. I remember recently that when an application was made to the Postmaster General for a post office, the first thing taken into consideration was the revenue. Now, there ought certainly to be some rule laid down that a place would be entitled to a post office after the revenues reach a certain amount; but it is absurd to erect a post office at a place where the revenue is only $1,600 a year, while other places yielding $5,000 or $6,000 of revenue are left without a post office.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). A resolution was carried through this House last year declaring that the expenditure for public works should be made in those places which yielded the largest revenue, other things being equal; but, according to the appearance of these estimates, I do not think that rule is being carried out. For instance, I do not see any appropriation for the erection of a post office at Woodstock, which is a very much larger place, and yields a very much larger postal and Customs revenue, than many of those places where buildings are being erected.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that this vote for Dartmouth post office is a revote. The subject was thoroughly discussed last year. With reference to the revenue, that does not always show the importance of a place, so far as postal accommodation is concerned. For instance, Dartmouth lies pretty close to Halifax, being separated from it just by water and its postal revenue, I should imagine, is largely reduced on that account, because, many letters written by the people of Dartmouth are posted at Halifax, while the delivery is at Dartmouth. Therefore, the accommodation required is very much more than the amount of postal revenue would show. I quite admit what my hon. friend says with regard to the town of Woodstock. It is large and important, and I have no doubt, that in due process of time it will receive consideration.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But that is not the rule laid down.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is the revenue of Sydney, where you are building a post office?

Mr. FOSTER. The postal revenue is $2,900, the money orders issued $57,000, and the Customs duties about $10,000.

Mr. CASEY. Following the remarks of my hon. friend from Bothwell, I must point out another instance in which the principle involved in the resolution adopted last session should be followed. I think I have called the attention of the Government five or six times at least to the claims of an important town in my own riding, Ridgetown, a place of some four thousand people, about midway between St. Thomas and Chatham, about forty miles from either, and serving a very large and populous country. It is an outport of Customs now, and is a much larger place than many in which Custom-houses and post offices have been erected. The postal revenue of Ridgetown is $3,600, larger than that of either Dartmouth or Sydney, where the Government are erecting post office buildings. Under these circumstances, if the resolution of last session is to mean anything, that these public buildings shall be distributed according to the needs of the locality and not according to the political complexion of the constituency, I claim that Ridgetown ought to have a post office; and I hope that the Government will see their way to give it serious consideration. I cannot promise them of course that the representative of that riding, whoever he may be, will give them his support in the future; but they will be only doing an act of justice to the old, settled, populous and wealthy district served by this very important town.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to get an answer to my question. I would like to ask the Government on what principle they are erecting a post office where the revenue is only $1,700 while the town in which I live, which produced a revenue of $17,053 last year, is not to get one?

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears to me that the rule followed by the Government in the past has been to erect a post office in whatever constituency would give the Government candidate a majority of the votes.

Mr. FOSTER. No, you are quite wrong.

Mr. McMULLEN. In my section of the country they do not consider it necessary to bait their hook with a post office; but it appears that they cannot catch the Tories in the Maritime Provinces without baiting their hook with a post office or something of that kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is quite true, Mr. Chairman; we have had too many instances of it. We have witnessed in this House during the last eight or nine years the fact that the Government offered to build a post office in any constituency which they thought they could carry by doing so. I would like to ask the hon. Finance Minister what other reason he can give for building a post office at Dartmouth or at Sydney, and leaving towns in Ontario, yielding a revenue of $7,000 or $8,000 a year, without one. In the town in which I live, yielding $4,000 a year, there is no intention of building a post office. We have had a disgraceful instance of this kind of weakness in the past. In the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick they have to bait their hook with post offices, but our Ontario Tories will swallow the bare hook. They will even go Tory without a post office. We have had discussions on this subject for a number of years past, and every year it comes up afresh. Post offices have been built where there is no more necessity for them than there is for a fifth wheel to a coach, but though we have pointed this out over and over again, the abuse has gone on just the same, and the Government deserve very severe criticism on items of this kind. We are now asked for a revote, and this is the time to choke off this thing. The principle should be laid down that whenever the receipts of a post office reach a certain point, and then only, shall a post office be erected at any particular place, if there is none there already. At every election we have had the Minister of Public Works going around peddling post offices in exchange for constituencies, and in each case the estimated cost has been largely exceeded. This very Napanee post office, which we were told would not cost over $25,000, has cost $52,000. We cannot say whether there is any McGreevyism in the matter or not, for we have not time to investigate all the jobs that are perpetually coming up, furnishing primâ facie evidence for investigation. If the hon. Minister will turn up the estimate given the House by Sir Hector Langevin, when he controlled the Department of Public Works, he will find that he asked our consent to to the expenditure on the ground that this Napanee building would not cost over $25,000. How his estimate has been borne out is shown by the fact that it has cost $52,000. The same with every post office we have erected. Some particular thing was required to be done which has given rise to extras, and the result is that the House has been asked to double its vote. And not only is that the case with post offices, but there is not a single railway scheme which has been subsidized by the Government which has not cost 50 per cent. more than the original subsidy, and in some cases 100 per cent. more. Take every railway that has come before us, and what is the result? One year one sum is asked, another year an additional vote is required, the following year there is a further demand, and in the end we have to pay double the original estimate. It is the same way with dredging, and graving docks, and every other public work. Look, for instance, at the graving docks at Kingston, and Esquimalt, and elsewhere, all of which have cost double the amount originally contemplated. If any man, starting his career in commercial life, could not make a closer estimate of his expenditure he would soon find himself hopelessly sunk in insolvency. Yet we are supposed to have the best men employed in the departments to do our work. We pay them high salaries, and ought to have the best engineers, overseers, and deputy heads; and, no doubt, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, we have the best Ministers the country can produce. No doubt hon. gentlemen opposite imagine that their hats cover the best brains in the Dominion. But if the men we employ cannot estimate closer the cost of our public works than they have done in the past it is time we shipped the whole of them, and see if we cannot secure a more competent body. Every post office built for the past eight or ten years, since I have been here, has cost double the original estimate. After the building is up, another move has to be made to get the inside finished, then it has to be painted, and there are a hundred and one additions to be made, so that although the contract does not exceed the stipulated sum, the extras very often exceed the contract price. According to the evidence brought out before the Public Accounts Committee and the other committees, these extras cost as much as the original contracts. It would be only right that we should drop this revote, and I would move that it be struck out of the Estimates as unnecessary; and that we should incur no further expenditure of this kind until such time as the Government can decide as to what the revenue of any place is before undertaking to erect a post office.

Mr. FOSTER. What would you suggest as the minimum revenue?

Mr. McMULLEN. I will leave the hon. gentleman to think that matter over, for I am sure he would not avail himself of my assistance. If I were to offer my services to the Government, they probably would not accept them; and I do not desire to cast, I was going to say, pearls before swine.

Mr. FOSTER. Swine get into perils enough.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would suggest to the hon. Finance Minister that he should accept my resolution and wipe out this item. It is high time that we should put a stop to this expenditure on post offices, and not incur any new responsibilities until the Government decide that the revenue must first reach a certain figure, let it be $7,000 or $8,000 or $10,000, before erecting a building. But when we go on building post offices in places where there is only $1,000 revenue and in others where there is only $2,800 revenue, we are acting unjustly to those places which give a larger revenue and have not the necessary accommodation.

Mr. ALLISON. With regard to the Napanee post office, the hon. Minister informed me, in answer to a question I put to him, that the estimated price was $25,000, and that it had cost over $48,000. There must have been, therefore, $20,000 extra. I find in the Public Accounts, in connection with this building, one item charged for sharpening mechanics' tools. Is it customary for the Government, when they let a contract, to keep the tools in order? If so, that item is in order; if not, it certainly should not have been allowed. Again, I find an item for steps outside the building to reach the letter box. These are three little wooden steps, about 3½ feet long each, and mechanics say they could not have cost over $3. Yet we find a charge of $57 for these three little steps. If, Sir, you will examine the whole of that building, you will find that all the extras, for which we are charged $20,000, could not have possibly cost over $5,000. I think there is excess in this matter; I think the charges made are not reasonable. Whether the Government are to blame or are not, I am not going to say, but certainly some one is to blame, and the country has to pay.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I suppose we may assume that these estimates are a legacy left to the present Administration by what we may fairly call the late Administration, and that the present Administration may feel bound to carry them out. But I for one feel bound to say that this sort of expenditure which has been going on for a very long time is one of those things in which I trust the present Administration will make a very decided reform. The country must necessarily enter upon some degree of economy in its expenditure, and I do not think there can be a more desirable way to adopt than by putting a stop to these buildings, especially in places where everyone knows they are given simply for political favours. I for one am determined, as far as my vote goes, that I will not support any more of such grants as have been passed during the last few years. We are bound to curtail our expenditure. There are many things in regard to which we should not curtail it, if we can avoid it, but we can curtail in this sort of expenditure which has been too much indulged in during the last few years, and I tell the Government plainly that I will not support them in this class of expenditure, which we must put an end to if we are sincere in desiring to effect economy in the public expenditure. When the country had lots of money, when we had an overflowing treasury and a large surplus, a little extravagance might possibly be pardoned and many public buildings might reasonably be erected, although everyone knows that the expenditure in that direction was carried to lengths which were not justifiable. At present, under a totally changed condition of things, having struck off a large portion of our revenue, having, as the Minister has said, placed ourselves in a position where we must economize, let us economize in these expenditures which are certainly not necessary in the public interest. Besides that, I do not propose to vote for the expenditure of any large sums of money until I know who is to have the expenditure of them, and who is to be responsible for the expenditure of that money. That is the view which I intend to take of these questions, and the action which I shall take will be based on those considerations.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Last session, we carried a resolution laying down a general principle with which the Government concurred. It seems to me, judging by the Estimates which are before us, that there has been a departure from the spirit of that resolution and that there is a necessity to go further. I think this House will be wanting in its duty to the country if it separated without formally stating that expenditures should not take place on public buildings where less than a certain amount of revenue is collected. We ought clearly to affirm this principle, and we ought to take away from the Administration a discretionary power which enables them to expend money in places where a small amount of revenue is collected, while places where a large amount of revenue is collected are entirely overlooked, simply because, as far as it is possible to judge, those places are represented by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. I think there is a great deal of force, looking at the expenditures that have taken place for post offices and other public buildings, in the observation made by my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) that these offices have been peddled out by the Public Works Department and bestowed upon constituencies that would return supporters of the Administration. That is a most improper condition of things, and yet, when you look at the expenditure that has taken place, you can come to no other conclusion. When you find the County of Kent represented by a supporter of the Administration, there is a public building erected, there is a large sum of money expended for dredging, that was no improvement, but led to serious damage to property, and imposed a serious charge upon the public revenue. Then again, in the constituency of West Middlesex, which was represented on the floor of this House for some time by a member of the Opposition, an appeal is made by a supporter of the Administration who promises to have a post office erected at Strathroy if the electors support the Government candidate. A supporter of the Government is returned, the property is purchased, and the post office is erected, while other places four times the size and with ten times the revenue of Strathroy are left without the erection of any public building, but an inferior one is rented and considered adequate for the public service at those places. There is my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He has had a large expenditure on public buildings in his county. I am told that in the town of Pictou there is a very large public building and that the inhabitants of that town have under serious consideration the propriety of abandoning their own houses and moving into that public building to live.

Mr. TUPPER. Allow me to inform the hon. gentleman that that building was constructed by Mr. Mackenzie.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman knows that his town has not grown. It has grown backwards. This building is quite large enough to contain the inhabitants, and the hon. gentleman can furnish them with fuel and light probably without any cost to the parties. I understand also that the hon. gentleman has promised another public building in that town, that this one is not adequate for the needs of that place, and so another is to be erected. The hon. gentleman can say whether that is so or not.

Mr. TUPPER. I have promised no public building in the town of Pictou.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And none is to be erected there?

Mr. TUPPER. I hope there will be one soon.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And what is it to be?

Mr. TUPPER. I hope that every public building required by the necessities of the county will be supplied by the Government; but I never, either privately or publicly, promised any public building there.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suppose the hon. gentleman said one was needed?

Mr. TUPPER. I think one is needed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Of course the people would take that to mean that the hon. gentleman intended to carry out what he said, and, of course, he will act up to his convictions.

Mr. TUPPER. We will see when the time comes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No doubt he will act up to his views of what is needed there.

Mr. TUPPER. What item is the hon. gentleman discussing? We are not asking for a vote for the County of Pictou.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We are discussing the general principle.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is out of order.

Mr. TUPPER. What is the item?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman is the item just now, because he has laid down a proposition and has stated that the expenditure of a large sum of money is necessary there, and I am calling attention to the fact that the Government, in the Estimates before us, have departed from the principle they affirmed last session, that those places which are the most populous, those places were the largest amount of public business is done and the largest amount of revenue is collected, are the places where public buildings should first be erected for the accommodation of the public and to meet the requirements of the public, and that that is not the rule indicated in these Estimates, and is not the rule which the hon. gentleman has affirmed, as far as his own constituency is concerned.

Mr. STAIRS. I think the item for the Dartmouth post office is one that should pass. If hon. gentlemen knew the condition of the post office at Dartmouth for many years past, they would have no hesitation in voting this item. Dartmouth is an important place and has an important country surrounding it, and the people there have been very much inconvenienced for many years because the public building there has not given sufficient accommodation for the needs of the town. I think the hon. member for Bothwell gave a very unhappy instance when he referred to the construction of a public building in the town of Pictou, a building which as has been stated by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper), was constructed by the Mackenzie Government.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Which building do you mean?

Mr. STAIRS. I mean the only public building in Pictou, the Custom-house.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have a return in my hand showing that that building was erected in 1872.

Mr. STAIRS. I saw the vote the other day myself.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You had better get up your figures.

Mr. STAIRS. In reading over the Hansard debates not long ago I discovered that the item referred to for Pictou, was voted under the Mackenzie Government, and a discussion took place upon the construction of the Custom-house.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has made a statement which is not borne out by the books, and I wish him to retract.

Mr. STAIRS. I have nothing to retract. I said I saw the discussion in the Hansard on the item for a public building in Pictou, at the time the Mackenzie Government was in power. If that vote was initiated in 1872, according to the doctrine which hon. gentlemen opposite have enunciated to-night, the Mackenzie Government ought to have dropped that item. It has been said by the hon. member for Bothwell that the present Government has been in the habit of constructing public buildings in towns which returned members supporting this Administration. Now, I am quite confident that last year the late member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), advocated the construction of a public building in the town of Dartmouth, and at that time he expected that the County of Halifax was going to return a member to oppose this Administration; I feel confident that at that time he thought he was going to be returned himself. Now, that there may be no mistake in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite as to the need of a public building in Dartmouth, I will read what was said in the last session of Parliament by Mr. Jones. This discussion took place upon the vote for public buildings in Nova Scotia, when Mr. Jones was reported to have said:

"I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister to the claims of Dartmouth for a post office. It is a place of 6,000 or 7,000 people, and which gives a revenue of nearly $1,700. The building that the post office is in, is in a wretched condition. Considering the size of the place, the people are entitled to a respectable building."

When the hon. member for Bothwell stated that public buildings were constructed only for constituencies represented by supporters of the Administration, he was mistaken, and I think he will acknowledge that in this instance, at any rate, he was not correct. My hon. colleague from Halifax (Mr. Kenny) also advocated the claims of Dartmouth to public buildings, in a very strong manner. But what was said by the ex-member, Mr. Jones, I think answers all the criticisms that have been put forth this evening against the vote for the construction of public buildings in the town of Dartmouth.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have no doubt that a great many other towns about the size of Dartmouth are exactly in the same condition that the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) represents Dartmouth to be in, that is, in a very unsatisfactory state, and very anxious for a public building. Any town can feel anxious for a public building when it wants a few thousand dollars expended in it. But the question is whether the town of Dartmouth is entitled to a public building, whether a place like Dartmouth, that gives a postal revenue of only $1,700 a year, should receive a post office, while a city like Woodstock, returning a revenue of $15,000 a year, should receive none; or whether a little town like Cayuga, in the county represented by my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague), yielding a revenue of $1,400, should receive a post office, and the City of Woodstock should receive none; or whether a little country village like Hagarsville, with five or six hundred inhabitants, should receive a port of entry, and some place ten times its size in a Reform constituency should receive none. The whole business of the appropriation for public buildings has been handled by this Government purely for party purposes. If a town happens to be in a riding where the expenditure of money can influence the result of an election in that riding, public money will be lavished upon it; but if a town is not in a riding where the Government can hope to carry the election, it makes no difference what may be the claims of that town, how great the revenue it returns, how strong may be its claims upon grounds of public interest, it will get no buildings. We need a rule in regard to this matter, we need to establish a minimum amount of population and revenue that will entitle a town to a public building; we need to name a figure below which no town whether in a Reform riding or in a Conservative riding, shall receive a public building. It is my opinion that no town should be entitled to have a post office erected at the expense of the Government that shows a revenue of less than $8,000; but here is the town of Dartmouth, with a revenue of only $1,700, and the town of Cayuga with only $1,400, the latter with a public building and the former to have one. It is the height of absurdity to expend public money for the erection of post offices in towns like these. And I wish to express my entire concurrence with the remarks made by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), remarks that do that hon. gentleman a great deal of credit, when he says this kind of business has gone far enough. I think that the business of handling appropriations for public buildings for the purpose of producing political effect, is played out, and should cease henceforth, for it is the basest and worst form of bribery that can be indulged in. A member that spends a few thousand in a riding is infinitely less worthy of blame than a Government that spends millions of dollars for the purpose of buying ridings right and left over the whole Dominion. This vote for a little village like Dartmouth cannot be defended, and I second the motion of the hon. member for North Wellington that the item be dropped. And when we come to other votes of the same nature we will move that they be dropped also. I propose that we turn over a new leaf. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, who is very virtuous in discharging subordinates against whom improper practices have been proven, should be virtuous enough to drop this improper expenditure also, and then we will have a little better state of things inaugurated in the matter of expenditures on public works.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to call attention to the fact that a year or two ago we laid down the principle in this House that public buildings were only to be constructed where the public interest demanded it, and that thereafter political considerations should not govern and control the Government in the selection of sites of where public buildings were to be placed. One would suppose that when the Government accepted that resolution, they would endeavour to conform to it, but it appears to me that they have got worse instead of better. They have allowed public interest to go to the winds, and have allowed political considerations to govern them in the use of the country's fund to erect public buildings. From the very hour that resolution was carried, with the sanction and the approval of the Government, almost every public building they have constructed since has been constructed for political reasons only. Take, for instance, towns where we have no public buildings in Ontario. Look at the public interests in those towns, look at the public considerations that demand that those towns should receive public buildings, and see them all passed over; while smaller towns, deserving well in their way, receive more consideration than other towns of much greater importance. Take, for instance, Woodstock. The total revenue is over $15,000, but there is not a public building erected there. Take Sarnia, with a postal revenue of $5,000; no public building there. Sarnia is in the County of Lambton, which is represented by my hon. friend, Mr. Lister. Woodstock is in the county of South Oxford. Bowmanville has a postal revenue of $4,745, Oshawa $5,433, Whitby $4,233, Waterloo $4,264, Listowel $4,129, Owen Sound $9,626, Kincardine $4,735, Ingersoll $8,556. Ingersoll is represented by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and although it has a revenue of over $8,500, yet it has no building, while, forsooth, we have before us an item for a town where the postal revenue is only $1,700 or $1,800, and the Government has the audacity to come to Parliament and ask for this vote to Dartmouth, while it passes over towns of the importance I have named. We are paying dearly for the support the Government receive from the two members from that county. It is time the people should wake up. If politics are to govern the Government on every occasion, and if the public interests are to be sacrificed for party ends, it is time we knew it. I wonder where the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) is. I saw that he had been in Montreal and Quebec. Why does he not come back and attend to his work here? Why does he not go to Toronto harbour and examine it? Why does he not confine his operations nearer home? Why does he go to Montreal and Quebec to find fraudulent practices, when right under his own eyes he may see the most gigantic frauds that have ever been perpetrated? I believe in British fair-play and British practice, and I deprecate these practices as being disgraceful to the old flag. Dishonesty in the selection of sites, and dishonesty in public buildings, trails the old flag in the dust. Hon. gentlemen opposite who uphold the old flag at election times forget it when they are putting up public buildings.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a question of order. I think we should try to get along with business, and we will not do so unless we keep to the question in hand. I am quite sure we must have considerable latitude, but the hon. gentleman is going far beyond the point of a liberal allowance.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think the point is well taken, and the hon. gentleman should not allow any latitude. He has given us the revenue of a post office as $2,900 when it was only $290, and now he will not allow any latitude to me, and I must keep to the item. He will not allow me to say a word about the member for Centre Toronto or as to why he went down to Quebec.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. And there was a terrible state of things there. It did not matter about our railway subsidies—he never went there about them——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Two million dollars were stolen at the Quebec works. Now I am ruled out of order in speaking of his conduct.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Order. If the hon. gentleman wants to go into a debate on thieving and boodling he had better fight it out now. Let him move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I should not wonder if the Minister of the Interior will have had enough before we are done with him, and we have not done with him yet. He will not desire any further investigations before we are through with him. Coming back to the item, I think members of the House should waken up to a consideration of the fact that the public money of the country should be expended in the interests of the people. The money is not to be spent by boodlers, or for boodlers, or in the interests of any Government sustained by boodlers or boodledom. The public interests and the public interests alone should dictate the expenditure of public money.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I think we shall never get through the Estimates if speeches are made on the whole policy of the Government on every item. There is a motion before the Committee moved by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) that the item for the Dartmouth public building be struck out. I should like hon. gentlemen to stick as closely as possible to the item we are discussing and not ramble about.

Mr. CASEY. It is quite in order in discussing any item to point out it is part of a wrong policy on the part of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Mr. CASEY. I am speaking to a point of order. The Deputy Speaker has raised a point of order, and I am speaking to it. The hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) was entirely in order in discussing the policy of the Government as applied to this particular item, as to whether this expenditure of money was corrupt or not. If the hon. gentleman thought the expenditure was corrupt and that the item should be dropped, he was distinctly in order. I do not think it is proper for the Deputy Speaker to interrupt a member.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman has no right to discuss the authority of the chair.

Mr. CASEY. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I call order. The point of order has been decided. I said the hon. gentleman had not the right on this item to speak about Toronto and Quebec scandals and refer to the member for Centre Toronto. It is out of order, and I will not allow it.

Mr. CASEY. I call attention to the fact that my hon. friend was speaking distinctly within the bounds of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. FORBES. I should like to say a few words to justify the expenditures in the Maritime Provinces, one of which is the Dartmouth post office. The expenditure asked is a revote, which has already been discussed by Parliament. While there is no regular principle laid down on which money is expended on public buildings, there have been in the past a number of cases in Nova Scotia where money has been spent on public buildings. Among these several were proper and deserved. There are other counties in which no expenditure was made but which are just as much deserving. Exception may be taken in certain cases, when a rule has been laid down that a certain revenue shall be obtained from the county before a public building is erected; but in this particular instance the item is a revote, and there is no reason why the expenditure should not be made in accordance with a previous resolution of the House. If we look at the returns in the blue-book we will find that Annapolis has a public building, with a postal revenue of $2,300; the total amount of money orders issued, $24,000; total amount of orders paid, $19,000. Dartmouth has a postal revenue of $1,700; money orders issued, $9,000; paid, $4,000. Both of these towns have public buildings erected at the expense of the country, and there was no limit laid down as to what amount of revenue should be derived from any localities before the buildings were erected. Liverpool, the shire town of the County of Queen's, has a post office revenue of $1,850, total amount of money orders issued $30,700, total amount of money orders paid $18,600; and if the amount of money handled in the post office at Dartmouth is a criterion to go by, the town of Liverpool is much more entitled to a public building than either of these towns I have mentioned. I will not do otherwise than support this appropriation, although the Government have given us no information upon which we can decide as to whether they are doing right or wrong, further than the fact that we have two Conservative members representing that county in this House. During the last session of Parliament we had the honour of having one of the best Liberal members from Nova Scotia representing that county, and he supported that vote for Dartmouth post office of $5,000. I must say, however, that the Government should lay down some basis upon which they would erect these public buildings in towns and cities, and even though this constituency were represented by two Liberal members I would not protest against this, although the Government are departing from the golden rule which should be observed in this House. I rose to ask the attention of the Government to Liverpool, in the County of Queen's, and I have shown them that we are more entitled to the consideration of the Government for public buildings than either Dartmouth or Annapolis. I am quite willing to support a rule which shall be established by this Parliament that a revenue from a district must reach a certain sum before a public building is erected. When I look at the Province of Ontario I see that the appropriation for 1890-91 was $271,775, and the total amount of that which the House is now asked to revote is $138,000. The appropriation for the Province of Nova Scotia is $33,000, and the amount the House is asked to revote is only $10,000, or much less than one-fifth of that total. Now one-fifth of the appropriation voted for Ontario, which is asked to be revoted here would only be $71,000, whereas Ontario has got $138,000. The population of Ontario is 2,000,000 and the population of Nova Scotia is 450,000, so that upon that basis of the population we should be entitled to one-fifth of the public moneys that are voted to the Province of Ontario; yet Nova Scotia only gets $10,000 for public buildings this year, while $138,000 goes to Ontario, or very nearly fourteen times as much as the Province of Nova Scotia is getting. I know of no other basis upon which to compare the several amounts that are being voted out of the public funds than that. If there were a more equitable basis, such as the amount of revenue derived, established, I would be prepared to support it, and while the members from Ontario are perfectly right in condemning the reckless expenditure of money in counties that have supported the Government, still I think that the Government have some spark of fair-play and justice left in them, and it is to that spark of fair-play alone that I appeal to them for justice for my own constituency and for the Province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot allow the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Forbes) to go without reply. If he will turn up the expenditures in Nova Scotia he will find that within the last ten years this Dominion has spent over $8,000,000 directly in the construction of railways in Nova Scotia, while in the Province of Ontario they have only spent $1,950,000. We have been pouring money into the lap of the Province of Nova Scotia, subsidizing railways, and building them entirely at the cost of the people of this Dominion. Do the people of Nova Scotia, in the municipalities and towns contribute a bonus to the construction of the roads? They have not put a dollar into them, and yet the whole Dominion has spent $8,000,000 on these railways, while not $2,000,000 have been spent in Ontario. I give this to my hon. friend (Mr. Forbes) as an offshoot for his argument about public buildings. I notice that in the town of Dartmouth the gross receipts of the post office are $1,725; number of money orders issued, 754; total amount of money orders issued, $9,112-30; total commission received, $80.04; total amount of money orders, $4,919; compensation paid to postmaster, $28.11.

Mr. FOSTER. You must be wrong about the money orders.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am reading from the Postmaster General's report. Sometimes he is wrong, but the report is right.

Mr. FOSTER. I think you are reading it wrong.

Mr. McMULLEN. Let us compare that with the post offices in the County of Wellington. In my own town, Mount Forest, the gross revenue of the post office is $3,902.88; number of money orders issued, 2,428; amount of money orders, $29,884.74; total commission received, $215.93; total amount of money orders paid, $17,089.45; compensation paid to postmaster: money orders, $84.83; salary, $1,040. You will find that this is a very much larger business than is done in Dartmouth. In the Harriston post office, in Wellington County, the revenue is $3,092.68; number of money orders issued, $1,212; total amount of money orders issued, $13,884.88; amount of money orders paid, $7,744.84; salary of postmaster, $920. Both of these places exceed very largely the business done in the Dartmouth post office. I say it is time that some principle should be laid down upon which public buildings are going to be erected. If you are going to lay down the principle that the gross revenue of the town shall reach $8,000 or $10,000 before you erect a public building, well and good, but some principle should be laid down. Look, for instance, at what you did when you built a post office in St. Jérôme, a town in the constituency of the hon. Secretary of State, where the entire receipts were only about $2,000 annually, while places like Woodstock in Ontario, with a revenue of $12,000 or $15,000 a year, are left without a post office. I say that the policy adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite in the past has been humiliating, and it is time that the House should pronounce upon it. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Tupper) tried to show that it was under the Government of Mr. Mackenzie, that the building in Pictou was erected.

Mr. TUPPER. So it was.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was not. You are entirely in error; the vote was taken for that building in 1872.

Mr. TUPPER. Mr. Mackenzie built it in 1874.

Mr. McMULLEN. At all events it was not under the Mackenzie Government that the Pictou Branch Railway was built, simply in order to find a seat for my hon. friend to make him a Minister of the Crown. The country was asked to spend nearly half a million dollars in building two lines of the same railway to the same point, for the purpose of keeping my hon. friend in Parliament. In Pictou there were built two lines belonging to the same railway, the Intercolonial, and it has cost this item to make the hon. gentleman a Minister of the Crown.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The Minister stated that this Custom-house at Pictou was built in 1874. I have a return, which was brought down to the House by the Government of which he is a member, which says that the Pictou Custom-house cost $27,000, and that it was begun in 1872-73. Now, will you take it back?

Mr. TUPPER. I may tell the hon. gentleman that the chief ground on which Mr. Carmichael asked the electors of Pictou to return him as a pure Reformer and a supporter of Mr. Blake in 1882, was stated on the hustings on nomination day in the town of Pictou, to be because the Government of Mr. Mackenzie had built the Custom-house in that town. I repeated that statement here, and hon. gentlemen opposite say it is false.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would just like to say that if Mr. Carmichael had stated that Mr.

Mackenzie's Government had built a marine hospital there where it was very much needed, he would have been quite right.

Mr. TUPPER. The marine hospital was not built in Mr. Mackenzie's time. It was built in the time of a Conservative Administration.

Mr. LANDERKIN. No; the hon. gentleman is just as far away from the truth as before. When he takes up figures with me, he had better get the books, because he is all wrong. The marine hospital at Pictou was built in the year 1874-75, according to this return. You may falsify the returns, and justify your words.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman must not say that the Government falsify the returns.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would not say that for the world. It is the Minister of Marine who says so. He says this return is false; he says the Mackenzie Government did not build the marine hospital. I have no personal knowledge of the matter, but I take the figures, and if the Minister of Marine says they are false, you should ask him to apologize.

Mr. TUPPER. The marine hospital was not built till 1878.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do think that this discussion is about as profitless, useless and unedifying as it possibly could be. We are discussing estimates which we may fairly assume the Government have taken up as those of their predecessors, so far as these few items are concerned; and to go on bandying charges about expenditures one against another is not the way to keep to the discussion of the item before us. I think that the vote under consideration is comparatively an unimportant one, but I wish the Government to lay done some rule by which these expenditures shall be regulated. Then we shall not have these discussions, and the Government will not lie under the imputation of making grants simply for partisan purposes. If they will lay down a rule which will be fair and impartial, and adhere to it, we shall save all this crimination and recrimination and the time of the House, and the Government will have the credit of acting for the public advantage. I hope, therefore, that this discussion will come to an end, and that the Government will come to a resolution that in future all expenditures of this kind shall be governed by some rule that will appeal to the common sense of the House and the country.

Mr. WATSON. I asked a question half an hour ago which I think is a proper one, and to which I expect to get an answer before this item passes. In the last session of the last Parliament a rule was laid down by Parliament, and accepted by the hon. gentlemen who are now in power, and we are entitled to some explanation from them as to why they have changed their opinion.

Mr. FOSTER. It is just because we have not changed opinion that we ask for this vote. My hon. friend was here at the last session of Parliament, and he heard his colleague, who is held up to-night as one of the ablest Liberal members who sat in this House, make an earnest plea for a public building in Dartmouth. He knows as well as all of us who sit about these boards, that the Government last year put in the Estimates an item for this building when that constituency was represented by the Hon. Mr. Jones, who is not now here, as well as by my hon. friend who sits behind me; and I do not think hon. gentlemen opposite would ask us to repudiate that promise which we held out to the people of Dartmouth, or expect that when we commenced to vote what was necessary to erect a public building there, we should go back on our promise. I know that hon. gentlemen opposite have strictly criticized us for not going on rapidly enough with the expenditure of votes put in the Estimates, and not fulfilling the promises which these votes held out. My hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) may ask the House to repudiate its action of last year, which was based upon a presentment of the case made by his colleague who sat in the very seat he now occupies; but we have not changed our mind, and, therefore, we ask this vote, and we believe that the House will grant it on this representation of the case. With reference to the rule laid down. I was earnestly and honestly anxious for information, and knowing the large breadth of mind of my hon. friend from North Wellington, I asked him the question as to what he would fix as the minimum revenue to justify the erection of a post office, and I did not ask the question in any captious way. There was a resolution passed by this House, last session, and we are acting in the direction of that resolution. The Government have had under consideration different classes of postal and public buildings, which they propose to grade according to the requirements of the different places to avoid what I think have been extravagances in the past, in the shape of very large expenditures for public buildings at places which were not very important, expenditures which were larger than we intended them to be when the votes were first started. I hope that the Government will take measures, as they are determined to do, that such extravagances or excrescences, as they may be termed, will not again obtrude themselves on the policy of the Government. So far as this item is concerned, I think it ought to be passed, and no member of this House, if he considers all the circumstances of the case, would wish us to repudiate it.

Mr. BOWERS. I do not think we should always look at the postal income of a place to decide whether it needs a post office or not. Take, for instance, the county I have the honour to represent. The office of the shire town of Digby produces an income of $2,100, but that does not give a correct idea of the business done there. It is a large centre for distributing mail, it receives and sends almost daily from and to St. John; it has another mail every day from Halifax; it has one by way of Annapolis, still another by way of the Western Counties Railway; also one coming in from Bear River, and a daily mail coming from Westport and Digby Neck. It also receives mails from Culloden, Marshalltown and many other places, making it a very large distributing centre. There are also mails to be made up and sent to each of these places. The income, I again repeat, is not evidence of the amount of business done, nor can one judge from that the requirements necessary. Now, Digby has a very poor post office, one in which there is hardly room for a person to turn round. I called the attention of the Government to this and was told that no one had asked for better accommodation; but the place really needs better postal facilities and I hope the Government will take its claims into consideration.

Mr. BORDEN. I understood the hon. Finance Minister to say that this vote should be passed because it had been proposed last session and the people of Dartmouth had been led to expect they would get a post office, and it would be tantamount to breaking faith with them did we not pass this vote. I hope the Government has laid that down as a principle by which they will be guided hereafter; and in this connection I would point out that in the year 1886 they voted a sum to build a post office in the town of Lunenburg. In the following year, however, it happened that that county which, in 1886, was represented by a friend of the Administration, returned an opponent of the Administration, and the vote disappeared.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The money was spent in the purchase of a site.

Mr. BORDEN. Well, the post office was not built.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It will be.

Mr. BORDEN. Well, I will give a case more in point. In the town of Kentville there was a vote in 1886 for a post office, about equal to the present vote, but that vote disappeared if I remember rightly, in 1887, when I was elected. Now, I am glad to know that the Government have laid down the principle that once a vote has been passed in this House, they feel under an obligation to expend it in carrying out the work for which it was intended to provide, and I trust that the Government will redeem the pledge they have made to this particular town. Knowing the disappointment which my people have felt, I can sympathize with the people of Dartmouth, and propose to vote in favour of this item, being anxious to do as I would be done by.

Chatham post office, Custom house, &c... $7,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the total cost of that? I thought we had spent a good deal of money there.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a new thing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Surely, there was a post office there before.

Mr. FOSTER. Nothing has been spent there. There is a vote for $1,500, 1890-91. Nothing was expended up to the 31st of December, 1890.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is a building there erected at the expense of the Government, as a Custom-house.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a very disreputable building, built about fifteen years or more ago, but it has fallen out of repair, and has been an eyesore to the people for a number of years. The time has now come when a building commensurate with the the requirements of Chatham should be erected.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How came it to acquire the character the hon. gentleman had given it?

Mr. FOSTER. The rats got into it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What did this disreputable building cost in the first instance?

Mr. FOSTER. It was not so disreputable at first as it became afterwards.

Mr. BOWERS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was under the management of the Government it became disreputable.

Mr. FOSTER. It came out damaged during the regime from 1874 to 1879.

Grosse Isle Quarantine Station, Quebec... $20,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this wanted for?

Mr. FOSTER. For new and improved disinfecting appliances. There is a steam disinfecting apparatus, upright boiler and mountings. All of this disinfecting apparatus is of a new and improved character, and for the purpose of disinfecting vessels.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Could it be applied to the departments that require purification?

Mr. FOSTER. I think it could be applied for the purposes for which it is intended.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does it cost altogether?

Mr. FOSTER. The apparatus itself cost $11,750; connections for the same, $1,800; exhaust and vacuum pumps, $2,470; wind-mill pump in Grosse Isle, $1,460. Then there is ground floor pumping and galvanized iron works which make up the balance.

Mr. WATSON. Who manufactured this apparatus?

Mr. FOSTER. It is to be put in, I do not know where it is to be got.

Lachine post office, &c.—to complete... $7,000

Mr. WATSON. What is the total cost of this post office?

Mr. FOSTER. There was voted in 1889 $2,500; in 1890, $6,000; in 1891, $8,000; and the vote asked for is $7,000, but of the votes preceding this year only $7,000 have been expended, and this vote is to complete the works let by contract in connection with the new post office at Lachine.

Mr. MILL (Bothwell). What is the revenue?

Mr. FOSTER. The postal revenue collected is $800; money orders paid, $8,465; saving banks deposits, $8,258. That is the place where the postal revenue is not in proportion with the needs of the post office, which occupies in that respect a position like Dartmouth.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The revenue is $430, according to the Auditor General.

Mr. WATSON. Were there any plans provided for the building when the contract was let? When a contract is asked for the erection of a building, it should complete the building.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course the contract should be completed at the contract price, but often the expenditure is divided over two years. The site is purchased and the contract is let and partly completed, and the next year the vote is taken to complete it. My hon. friend will notice that is very common in our votes.

Mr. WATSON. Too common.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In explaining the first vote, the Minister takes care to explain that this is towards the cost, but is not expected to complete it. As far as I can see here, the total cost will be about $18,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. And the revenue is $759.

Mr. FOSTER. The revenue is no indication.

Mr. WATSON. Taking this post office as an example, I should like to know what was asked for in the first place, were plans made for the post office, was a site purchased, and were tenders asked for the whole building? We have great reason to believe that these extras and revotes are not all applied to the public building.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, it is all supplied to the public building. The land cost $2,000. That was covered by the first year's vote of $2,500. That was about the amount expended that year, $2,000. Then, in 1890-91, $14,000 was voted, but of that only about $5,000 was expended up to December, 1890, so there would be a lapsed vote there, and, as I said, the total cost is about $18,000.

Mr. WATSON. What means were adopted in this case? Were tenders asked for the completion of the building?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, tenders were called for.

Mr. WATSON. What was the price tendered for the completion of this building according to the original plan?

Mr. FOSTER. The contract amount was $7,950. That, of course, was for the building itself. Then the site cost $2,000, making $10,000 in round numbers. Then the other expenditure is for furniture and fittings, heating apparatus, fencing and sidewalks, the architect and incidental expenses.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do they run up to $8,000?

Mr. FOSTER. The contract was $7,950. Up to the 31st December, 1890, $7,911 was spent, of which $2,200 was for site and expenses of site. The balance due on contract on 1st January, 1891, was $4,000. That would make about $1,000 more than the original contract price. It would appear from that that there must have been some extras amounting to about that sum.

Mr. WATSON. It appears to take about $8,000 for furnishing and completing that building.

Mr. FOSTER. No, about $6,000. The estimate for furnishing and fittings, including lock-boxes—which, of course, are never included in the contract—was $3,000; heating with stoves, $300; fencing and sidewalks, $1,000; architect, $500; incidentals, $730; and a sum for the clerk of works. Those made up the difference.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You said $18,000 was the cost.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. What rent did you pay there for the post office?

Mr. FOSTER. What rent was paid?

Mr. GIROUARD. I do not know.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then I can tell you. The rent you paid for that post office was $50 a year. The receipts last year amounted to $759.93. The amount of money orders issued was $5,623, on which the total commissions received were $55; the total amount of money orders paid was $2,452; the compensation to the postmaster on money orders was $17.74. The salary of the postmaster was $580, and you paid a rent of $50, and now you are going to spend $18,000 to erect a post office in that place.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think we ought to have some definite explanation—explanation in considerable detail—as to why it is that at Lachine it is necessary to spend $18,000 for a post office. According to my hon. friend's statement the revenue is about $700 and the rent formerly paid was $50 a a year. I cannot for the life of me understand why Lachine, which is very close to Montreal, and, therefore, cannot be to any extent a distributing office, whatever else it may be, should require the expenditure of $18,000 for a post office, unless it be to gratify some political end or other for the benefit of my hon. friend who represents the county. I think the hon. gentleman is bound to give the House some detailed explanation of the causes which justify such a large expenditure at Lachine, bearing in mind the total revenue we collect there.

Mr. GIROUARD. When the hon. gentleman says that Lachine is not a distributing point, he makes a great mistake. There are many manufacturers at Lachine, and it is an important commercial centre. The construction of this post office has been asked for by the inhabitants, and by the manufacturers in particular. I believe the ground cost $2,500, and the contract has been given out for ten or eleven thousand. I have had nothing to do with the construction of the building since the contract was given out. The population of Lachine is about 5,000.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is clear that this is a wholly unjustifiable expenditure. The interest on $18,000 is far in excess of the amount collected, to say nothing about the cost of maintaining such a post office, such as the lighting, the heating, and all other like items of expense that will fall upon the treasury. It seems to me there can be no justification whatever for such an expenditure in such a place. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) says that there is a very large amount of business done in Lachine, that it is a manufacturing centre; but if that were so, there ought to be an advantage to the revenue, yet the revenue is under $800 a year, and is three or four hundred a year less than the interest upon the money that is required to erect that building, to say nothing of the cost of keeping it up. If such a rule were applied generally, the revenues of this country would be wholly unequal to the demands upon them. This is a monstrous expenditure; there is no ground upon which it can be justified to the public. It is perfectly clear that the expenditure has not been made in the public interest, and not made so as to serve the requirements of the locality merely as a post office centre. In all places where the amount of revenue is so small, a building can be rented at far less expense to the public treasury than one can be erected. This system of putting up post offices where there is but a small amount of revenue collected at an enormous expense to the public treasury, is wholly without justification. I would like to know how the expenditure can be made in face of the declaration of this House last year when we expressly declared, without a dissenting voice, that the expenditure on public buildings should be undertaken in those localities where there was the largest population, the largest revenue, and the largest amount of public business.

Mr. GIROUARD. I think the hon. gentleman does not realize the postal business of Lachine, when he considers the amount of revenue. The hon. gentleman must remember that Lachine is at a distance of about nine miles from Montreal, and a great many firms in Montreal do business in Lachine; they buy their stamps in Montreal and send their letters through the post office of Lachine; consequently, the necessity of having a large building became apparent. It was impossible to do without a building of considerable dimensions. The revenue is not to be considered in this case, because the most of it goes into the Montreal post office.

Mr. SCRIVER. The hon. gentleman evidently is not familliar with the methods of collecting the revenue in the post offices. He has just given a reason why the revenue for Lachine should be more than it is, because the revenue is counted on the stamps on the letters that are actually posted.

Mr. GIROUARD. I beg your pardon.

Mr. SCRIVER. Oh, yes; I have been postmaster myself, and I know that the revenue is calculated on stamps of letters actually posted.

Mr. FRASER. No man can be blamed for trying to get all he can for his county. In my county there is a post office doing three or four times as much business as Lachine, but we have no public building; indeed we have not a single public building in the whole county, because the county, since 1867, has sent to this House an opponent of the present Government, with the exception of four years. That is the reason why we never got a public building. The fact that a Lachine merchant buys his stamps in Montreal and posts his letters in Lachine, would evidently swell the revenue of Lachine, and yet we are told that Lachine only returns a revenue of $700. Now, in our town, that does three times as much business, we would be very thankful to have a post office costing $3,000 or $4,000. I am sure there must be some other influence than the public interest, which induces the Government to spend $18,000 in a town where the sale of stamps only amounts to $50. Is this money to be expended for the purpose of beautifying Lachine? I maintain that the Government should have one official public building in every county for the purpose of a Custom-house and post office. The county I represent is worse off than most counties. In the neighbouring county there is a public building in Pictou, and another one in New Glasgow, costing $40,000 or $50,000. I do not object to that, but I would like to see more equality shown in this distribution of public buildings. In my county there are over 20,000 people, and we have not a single ublic building. I think the Government should lay down some rule to guide them, instead of listening to the clamour either of members or of a locality who may get up a petition for a public building. Let the Government look into the circumstances of each case and expend the money in the public interest only. No business man in Canada would think of spending $18,000 on a post office in a town where there is only $700 revenue.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman no explanation to give? I asked the hon. gentleman if there is any special reasons for this vote. Is Lachine one of those points at which there is really such an amount of extra work over and above the receipts indicated in his report, as would enable him, on his responsibility, to justify this expenditure?

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to the hon. gentleman I may say that the statement of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) is strictly correct. Lachine has a population of about 5,000. The returns do not at all show the amount of business done in Lachine. The amount of revenue is calculated upon the sale of stamps, and the sale of stamps in Lachine does not at all represent the amount of postal revenue. The hon. gentleman from Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) is entirely mistaken, although he was a postmaster. Sometimes there is a calculation made at the end of the year for the purpose of correcting the returns, because sometimes some postmasters buy their stamps at places where a great number of stamps are sold, and they are distributed otherwise than through the post office, and they have been trying to collect revenue on those stamps. I can easily understand that in Lachine, a place of 5,000 inhabitants, there must be a large income from inland revenue. I do not think there is any Customs collections there—but it must do a business far in excess of the amount mentioned in the returns, and most of the inhabitants must get their postal matter from Montreal. The money from stamps would not appear in the return.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is in no respect a distributing office.

Mr. HAGGART. The amount appearing from distribution is $54. It is a place where from its population, if it were in Ontario, the receipts would show about $7,000. In Quebec perhaps it would not be so large; but $759 does not represent the large business which is done in postal matter at Lachine.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Would you not credit the letters that come to that post office?

Mr. HAGGART. We base the salary on the sale of postage stamps.

Mr. GIROUARD. The time to take exception to this item was when it first appeared two or three years ago. No objection was, however, raised to it on the part of anyone; I did not find it necessary to raise my voice in its favour. A petition was sent in the usual course to the Post Office Department, and its prayer was granted. There never was any question raised in regard to it. I am surprised that any one familiar with Lachine, which is an important summer resort, and which is a manufacturing centre also, should question the propriety of building a post office at a cost of $18,000. There is no other public building in the place.

Mr. KAULBACH. I can satisfy the agitated and apparently dissatisfied minds of hon. gentlemen opposite when I inform them that I represent a county which is one of the most populous in the province, and I can say with truth that I represent a town which is one of the most enterprising in Nova Scotia, a town with something like a population of 5,000 and a county with a population of 40,000. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) said that the county he represented had a population of 20,000, and I forget the population he said of the town. But when he contrasts the county he represents with my county he will see and be satisfied that the Government made no distinction on political grounds, and more particularly when I tell him that I have made appeals time and again for a public building for Lunenburg, he should be satisfied that his county has been fairly dealt with. I have asked the Government for a post office almost every year I have been here since 1878, and I have not got one yet. I hope, however, the Government will receive my request favourably, and that it will not be long before I obtain a structure for Lunenburg quite equal to any of those erected in neighbouring towns.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) was surprised that hon. members should object at this late date to a public building for Lachine. It should, however, be remembered that the original vote was for $14,000, it has since been increased to $18,000. It is to this increase we particularly object. If we knew the precise amount the building would cost the system would not be so objectionable, but we do not know on any vote that the Government will not apply next year for an additional sum to complete. The postmaster at this important office receives a salary of $580—probably that is all to which he is entitled—and the revenue of the post office should be taken into consideration when money is appropriated. The revenue of the office was $759 last year, and the other official revenues must be very small. Only 332 money orders were issued, for a total amount of $5,623. Compare that with Portage la Prairie in my own county, where the postal revenue was $7,351, number of orders issued, 2,169, for the amount of $38,263. It is not fair to erect a post office costing $18,000 at Lachine when there is another town, where the population is larger, where more business is done, and where the receipts are about ten times as large, and yet it has no public building. I am not saying that all the small towns should have a post office built—I do not think they should—but buildings should not be erected unless the returns will pay interest on the investment. The practice followed is that first a vote is taken for $5,000, then a vote for $20,000 to complete. Very often the money is spent before it is actually voted by Parliament, the expenditure being met by a Governor General's warrant. I have no doubt but that this money is spent for political purposes, and I have good reason to believe that the extras and the amount voted above the contract sum are the result of crookedness, and are probably not spent on the legitimate work itself. We find in this post office that the contract was for $10,000 and $3,000 were to be spent for lock-boxes. How many boxes will be put in for that sum? We want to know on what principle the money is spent in letting the original contract and also the payments of extra amounts to complete the work.

Mr. SCRIVER. The hon. Postmaster General will surely not contend that the business of a rural post office is shown by the amount of stamps sold. A great many stamps are sold that are never used in the post office, for the people use them to make remittances. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that the salary of the postmaster is based on the return from letters which actually pass through the office. The only way of ascertaining the business done is from the number of stamps passing through the office, and not from the stamps sold.

Mr. HAGGART. The return is only taken twice a year, and each six months the salary is calculated.

Mr. SCRIVER. It is for the purpose of calculating the actual business done in the office and calculating the salary of the postmaster.

Mr. MASSON. I think that each, from his own standpoint, is strictly correct. The hon. gentleman from Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) says that the basis on which the salary of the rural postmasters is computed, is by counting the number of letters mailed. That would not be the actual revenue obtained at the office, but the Postmaster General's returns would not take in a fictitious revenue; they would take the actual revenue. Therefore the return we have before us in which the $750 is set down, is the actual sale of postage stamps at that office which is the actual revenue at the office, but the postmaster's reports, on which his salary is based, shows the number of letters mailed, which, as I understand, is averaged once or twice a year, or sometimes once or twice in two years.

Laprairie Post Office..... $10,000

Mr. LANDERKIN. I see the revenue from this post office is $439, and an expenditure of $10,000 is going to be made. I do not see how the Government can justify this. I do not see why the Minister of Justice does not rise in his might to protest against this. I do not see how he expects to retain the character he came into the House with, if he allows such an expenditure as this. I have been looking at the items we have been going over in the Province of Quebec, and in all these little places where we are going to expend money, I find that the election of the member is contested. This, perhaps, may be the reason why these post offices are being built, because if their friends get out, they think perhaps a judicious expenditure of this money would help to elect them. I think that is the reason why the public money is expended here and there in places where it is not demanded in the public interest. Although the Government have never stated as much, yet it is the only reason which they can possibly give for a thing so utterly indefensible as this vote here.

Mr. FOSTER. I find that Laprairie is also one of the list of legacies. I find that in 1889 a vote was taken for a post office in the town of Laprairie, and in 1890, $2,000 was voted; but as there were some difficulties about the site neither of these sums was expended. In 1891, $5,000 was voted, and now I see that a site has been granted by the town council of Laprairie, and this vote is for the building of the post office.

Mr. LAURIER. Has the site been donated, or is it to be?

Mr. FOSTER. The site has been given by the town council. This building I have no doubt will be made to square with the importance of the place; it is not proposed to put up an expensive building.

Mr. BAIN. Could it not be made to square with the grant that was promised to the county of my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) and which was left out of the Estimates?

Mr. McMULLEN. I think it is well that we should give to the House, and to the country through the House, the facts about the post office at Laprairie on which it is proposed to expend $10,000. The receipts from the Laprairie post office amounted last year to $439.32; number of money orders issued at that place, 205 only; total amount of money orders issued, $3,268.31; total commission received from the public, $25.11; total amount of money orders paid, $1,208.69; commission paid to the postmaster on money orders, $9.35; salary of the postmaster, $230, and we paid no rent at all for the post office. There is not a sufficient sum collected at that post office that would bring it within the limit that would enable the postmaster to grant any rent at all for the place, so that we have now a free post office which costs us nothing: we have a postmaster at a salary of $230 a year, and yet we are going to build a post office in that place for $10,000. I think this is one of the most ridiculous propositions that has ever yet been submitted to the House. There are at least three or four hundred places in the Dominion that have four times the post office revenue that Laprairie has. This is one of the post offices that will certainly come within the meaning of the views expressed by my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien). There is not a dollar spent yet, the site has not been bought, the revenue of the post office is $450 a year, the salary of the postmaster is $230, and we have a post office rent free at present.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend must not put it as a ground why we should not go on and complete the building for which an appropriation has already been voted, simply because we have not to buy a site. It ought to be in the favour of the building that the site has been donated, and that we did not have to buy it. Now, on the promise held forth by the vote which has appeared for three years in the Estimates and is a result of negotiations with the people, I find that authority was granted by an Order in Council to accept the site offered by the town council of Laprairie for the erection of a public building. The site is cadastral lot 134, depth 76 feet, frontage 84 feet, on the west side of St. Joseph, opposite St. Mary Street, the principal thoroughfare of the town. The land measures 50 feet in front by a full depth of 76 feet, and the municipal authorities bind themselves to retain the remainder of the lot free of buildings or other objectionable obstructions for all time to come.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What was the date of the Order in Council?

Mr. FOSTER. 1889.

Mr. LANDERKIN. And nothing has been done since. Mr. Doyon was elected and he did not support the Government. Was that the reason why the building was not begun before?

Mr. FOSTER. It certainly was not.

Mr. LAURIER. What was it?

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose it was because the preliminaries were not arranged.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Has the Government adopted the rule, that when a small village donates a site worth from $25 to $50 they will bind themselves to erect a post office on it; for if they have done that, I fancy that they can get lots of sites throughout the country. This Government ought to adopt some honest system of dealing with the public money in connection with the expenditure for public buildings. I can understand very well that there has been no honesty in their dealings with the public money, or in the services they have rendered to the public in years past with regard to the erection of public buildings. I contend, and I think the official records of this House will show, that public buildings have been erected for the purpose of furthering the interests of the Government. In every province throughout this country public buildings have been erected in places where they do the most good to the Government and its supporters. The Government have followed out the plan, which they adopted years ago, of supporting their supporters whenever they had an opportunity. I say that there has been a gross injustice done to the public in this regard, that money has been squandered where it was unnecessary it should be spent at all in the public interest, and that this system of erecting public buildings has been reduced to a science as being a bribe to the electors in a constituency to induce them to support Government candidates. Now, this case is just one in point, because money was voted in 1889 which the Government did not expend because that county was represented by a Liberal; but the moment it is represented by a Conservative the Government see the necessity of expending the money, because the corporation has presented them with a valuable lot, on which there are to be no unseemly structures erected for all time to come, as guaranteed by the pledge of the town council. The moment the Government come into possession of this lot, they must erect this public building, and they erect it in the interests of the gentleman who represents that constituency in this House. I honestly believe that that is the reason the Government are expending money in all these towns and villages, not because the public service requires these buildings to be erected, but because they are required in the interest of the Government. That is the plain truth, and no member or supporter of the Government can deny it. This little town of Laprairie, which has a postal revenue of only $439, is to have a post office, while large and important towns in the Province of Ontario are neglected. Take, for instance, the town of Paris, which is in South Brant, adjoining my riding. That town has been an important town for years. Last year its gross postal revenue was $3,661.66; the number of money orders, 1,470; the total value of money orders issued, $13,241.82; the total commission received from the public, $116.88; the total amount of money orders paid, $10,007.54; the commission paid to the postmaster on money order business, $39.30; the compensation paid to the postmaster on savings' bank business, $43.08; the salary of the postmaster, $1,300; forwarding allowance, $80; and allowance for fuel, light and rent, $200. Now, compare that with Laprairie, and see whether any justice has been meted out to the town of Paris in regard to the erection of public buildings. I have heard the hon. member for South Brant bring this matter under the attention of the Government a number of years when the Estimates were under consideration, and the Government have paid no attention to him. Perhaps the town of Paris has not donated a town lot for a post office; but, by-the-bye, I do remember a deputation coming down here two years ago, and if I mistake not, offering the Government a lot if they would erect a post office. Then, we have the excuse made by the Finance Minister that because this Order in Council was passed and the money was unexpended for a number of years, and because they have now the offer of a lot, they must erect a post office there. Is it not possible to repeal an Order in Council, or is it not possible for this House to declare that an Order in Council shall not go into effect? I say this is one of the grossest instances of squandering the public money for the purpose of furthering the interests of the Government candidate than can be found. The members of the Government ought to be ashamed to stand up in their places and support a vote of $10,000 for the erection of a post office in a place like Laprairie, when the town of Woodstock, which might be a city if it chose to apply for a charter, and which does an immense business, is neglected. The total gross postal revenue of Woodstock last year was $15,432; the number of money orders issued was 4,835; the total amount of money orders issued, $47,364.59; and the total amount of money orders paid, $91,384.39. And yet the Government pretend that they are acting justly and fairly by the people of this country and that they are expending the public money in the interest of the public. How can they find any justification for this conduct? I contend that there is no justification for it; and this is a fair sample of the way in which the public money of this country has been squandered by this Government ever since they came into power, for the purpose of advancing their interests and the interests of their supporters.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to show the hon. gentleman how easy it is for him to arrive at wrong conclusions. He tried to impress on the House, with the view of supporting his general argument, that here was a case in which a certain amount of money had been voted, and that although a site had been offered nearly three years ago, and an Order in Council had passed, no attempt had been made to expend the vote already given, because the county was represented by an opponent of the Government; and now, when a turn has taken place, and it is represented by a supporter of the Government, the proposition is made to expend it. The facts will show how entirely wrong my hon. friend is in his conclusion, and I am sure he will acknowledge the error of his conclusion when he knows the facts. The facts are, that three years ago, a vote of $5,000 was put in the Estimates, that three years ago an offer was made by the municipality to furnish a site, and that an Order in Council was passed accepting the site. But a difficulty arose, I am informed by the deputy, in this way: The municipality had no right to give away property which belonged to it, and the Government had to resort to expropriation, and the expropriation proceedings terminated about only two or three months ago. So that although there was the willingness of the municipality to give the site, it was not able to do so, and these expropriation proceedings had to go forward, and it was impossible to expend the vote. The fact, however, that all the preliminary proceedings were taken when the county was not represented by a supporter of the Government, is almost fatal to my hon. friend's contention in general, and certainly fatal in this instance.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Will the hon. Minister explain why buildings have not been erected in Woodstock and Paris?

Mr. FOSTER. Wait until you see what you will see.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How is it that the municipality cannot make a gift of the property to the Government and that the Government requires to expropriate?

Mr. FOSTER. I leave that to the law lecturer.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is the hon. gentleman's duty to give the information. How are you going to get possession of the property after expropriation?

Mr. FOSTER. Cannot the municipality pay the expropriation price?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They cannot give away any portion of their property or their funds.

Mr. FOSTER. Can they not buy it?

Mr. WATSON. What is the property worth

Mr. FOSTER. Between $750 and $1,000.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman asks can they not buy it? Would it not be their property if they bought it?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot help the facts; they are there.

Mr. LAURIER. The municipal laws of Quebec will not allow a municipality to part with a property of this kind for the building of a post office; and I confess I do not understand how these proceedings in expropriation took place. At whose instance did they take place? Was it at the instance of the Government? Did they expropriate land in the village of Laprairie to provide a site?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me a curious way of proceeding.

Mr. FOSTER. They have curious laws down there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This seems a curious way of beating the devil around the stump. If, under the law, the municipality cannot give away this property, I do not see how the Government obtained possession of it.

Mr. FOSTER. The Dominion Government paid $5 as a compensation, so that it was not a gift.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And the municipality paid the balance?

Mr. FOSTER. They do not give it away when they sell it for $5.

Mr. LAURIER. If there was an expropriation at the instance of the Government, the hon. Minister of Justice ought to know something about it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. However, all that is wholly apart from the real vital question which is this: What justification have you for spending $10,000, whether you get a site worth $50 or $500 or $700, for the erection of a post office in a village where the total revenue is only $400? That is a job of the very worst kind. It cannot be justified; there is no possibility of justifying it on any argument so far advanced by the hon. Minister of Finance or anybody on that side. It is entirely indefensible. The building inevitably will cost us for ever $400 per year interest on the capital, and we will have to keep it up, we will have to provide for the heating of it, and more or less for the caretaker and the salaries of the officials, and fuel and light, and the net result will be that, on a revenue of $400, or thereabouts, we will have an annual expenditure of $1,000. We are not told that Laprairie is a distributing point, or that there are huge manufactories there which indirectly supply a large revenue to the post office, but simply that there was an offer made to give a piece of land worth on an average, about seven or eight per cent. of the total amount asked for now.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have just discovered one of the causes. This pledge was made at the time when a local election was about to take place, and that election was carried by reason of this promise. The people were assured they would get a post office erected there if they elected the Conservative candidate, Dr. Brisson, and I believe he was elected.

Mr. DESJARDINS (Hochelaga). He was defeated.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Well, he ought to be defeated. I am very glad he was. The promise was made, it was a diabolical promise, and may not have succeeded; but, at all events a grant was made in obedience to that, and the work was not gone on with, probably because Dr. Brisson was defeated. He was defeated, and then the Government did not go on with work, but held it in abeyance until the last election, when they said, we will go on with this work if you will elect a supporter of the Government. What a contemptible position for the Dominion to be in.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the population of Laprairie, and what is the estimated cost of maintaining this building annually, including light, fuel and the caretaker?

Mr. CURRAN. There are 1,800 in the village and 2,200 in the parish.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is that all the postal revenue derived from that number, and is that the excuse given for erecting a post office there, that there is that number of people in the place? There is something wrong. Take that back; I fancy that is an outrage.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Of course, in all these cases where you propose to erect public buildings, you take into consideration the question of revenue and the cost of maintaining a building of that kind. What is the estimated cost of maintenance?

Mr. FOSTER. I am sorry the hon. member for Bothwell has so little confidence in the calculations made by the hon. member for South Oxford, who just now gave the Committee what he thought would be the expenditure per year. There would be a percentage on the total outlay, if you want to take into account the interest on capital cost. In a small building of this kind, I do not think the cost of caretaking would be very much, as the postmaster will take care of the building himself. Whatever repairs are necessary will have to be made. The light and fuel for a small building is not a very large item.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And the postmaster's salary?

Mr. FOSTER. He has a salary anyway.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You will find the sum total will come altogether to $1,000 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Bothwell seemed to doubt that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I wanted to know the estimate, because I suppose you make an estimate in all these cases.

Mr. BARRON. One of the reasons the Finance Minister gave for the construction of the post office is the fact that a lot was donated to the Government, or, as he afterwards put it, was expropriated by the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. That is only half the reason. The other was that a vote was given which called for that expenditure.

Mr. BARRON. I think a vote should be given in several places in my riding.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us dispose of this first.

Mr. BARRON. I want to show by comparison how unfair it is to spend $10,000 in a place containing 1,800 inhabitants where the revenue is only $400, while the same justice is not meted out to other places in Ontario. Take, for instance, Fenelon Falls. The population there is about 1,800, the same as Laprairie; but the population who get their letters from that post office, including the village of Fenelon Falls, would be about 300 or 400 more. The revenue in Fenelon Falls is $1,864.56. I will make an offer to the Minister of Finance. If he will undertake to put up a post office there, to cost $10,000, he will have a corner lot, the very best lot perpaps in the village of Fenelon Falls.

Mr. FOSTER. A lot of what?

Mr. BARRON. Of land. But, of course, North Victoria does not happen to return a supporter of the Government, and I suppose that is the reason why they will not have the same justice meted out to them.

Mr. FOSTER. I will note that offer.

Mr. BARRON. Take the village of Bobcaygeon, in the riding of South Victoria. We should have some justice done to it too. There the revenue is $1,562.26. But no, Ontario, for some reason or other, is not to have the same justice done it as some of the villages in the Province of Quebec. Take again my riding. I could give the Finance Minister a list of perhaps half a dozen villages, each of which has a larger revenue than Laprairie, and many of them a larger population. Take the village of Kinmount, which has a gross postal revenue of $890. Take the village of Minden, which has a postal revenue of $800.44. Woodville has a much larger revenue, and yet no one ever dreams that the sum of $10,000, or anything like it, should be spent in putting up a post office there. The thing is a transparent fraud on the face of it and should not be permitted.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to give the House a little idea of how this goes on. I have in my hand a return to an Order of the House brought down this session showing the amount of money deposited in the several post office savings banks throughout the Dominion. In Laprairie the total deposit in the post office savings bank was $3,022. In Woodstock, it was $86,972; in Yorkville, it was $106,916. Yet in neither of these two places is there a post office, while there is to be one in Laprairie. There are three different towns in my own riding in which the deposits are $36,000, $40,000 and $30,000 respectively, without post office buildings, while one is to be given to Laprairie with its magnificent deposit of $3,022.

Mr. WATSON. I would ask the Minister if this is a growing town and likely to increase the revenue?

Mr. CURRAN. Laprairie is one of the progressive places in the Province of Quebec.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. CURRAN. It affords me very great pleasure to give occasion for so much hilarity to my hon. friend, but I say that in the last year or two Laprairie has taken a very decided step in advance. It is now in communication with many points that it had not been in communication with before. A new channel has been completed there which facilitates navigation, and when the new wharf is completed, which it is not yet, there is no doubt that a great deal of business will be done. I have in my hand Lovell's business directory for the Province of Quebec for 1890-91, and from that it appears that the population of the village is 1,800, and of the parish 2,200. There is a railway apart from what was there before, which has just been completed, and places Laprairie in connection with Rome, Watertown and Massena Springs.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Oh.

Mr. CURRAN. What is the matter with the hon. gentleman? I think he should get some of his colleagues in the medical profession to attend to him. He is hysterical. In addition to that, this village has lately been supplied with a fire engine, hook and ladders. They have built a new aqueduct, which is of great service. They are now putting down the pipes in connection with it. The pressure is very powerful. They have steam and air pressure which bring the water 1,350 feet from the St. Lawrence River. There is a telegraph office there also. Montreal is only nine miles distant and St. John's 18 miles, and the place is giving evidence of marked prosperity. I know myself that very large numbers of families are now making Laprairie a summer resort. Quite a number of people from Montreal and the vicinity have purchased lots there and intend to make it their home for the summer months, and no doubt many will remain there altogether, as the means of access to the city are becoming greater every day. I find here that the British North America Insurance Company, the Citizens' Insurance Company, the Commercial Union Insurance Company, the Northern Insurance Company, the Queen's Insurance Company and the Royal Canadian Insurance Company, all have offices in that place at the present time.

Mr. WATSON. What is the amount of business done?

Mr. CURRAN. This authority does not give that, or I would furnish it to the hon. gentleman; but I know personally that at the present moment Laprairie is a place where there is a very marked improvement, and I am satisfied that the amount now asked to be voted is an expenditure in the proper direction, and that Laprairie will give a very good account of itself in the near future as one of the most progressive places near Montreal.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think the hon. gentleman has made an omission. He has recited all they have got in Laprairie, but he has neglected to say if they have a wind-mill. Does the hon. gentleman intend to take up his abode in that place?

Mr. CURRAN. If the hon. gentleman goes over there they will have one.

Mr. GUAY. I would like to ask the Postmaster General whether the salary of one of the postmasters in the town of Lévis has been increased from $420 to $520, and the rent of his office from $60 to $80 since the 1st July; and also whether the salary of the postmaster of Notre Dame de Lévis, also in the town of Lévis, has been raised from $300 to $420, and the allowance for an office to $60 from the 1st July, and if so, for what reason?

Mr. HAGGART. I am very sorry I have not the information here at present; but, if the hon. gentleman will send me a note, I will get the information.

Mr. GUAY. I am informed that the department has raised the salaries of these two gentlemen, and I know for what reason. It is because the business has increased greatly in these two post offices, and, if the little town of Laprairie has a right to a post office, I think the town of Lévis, which has a population of between 8,000 and 9,000 people and is in communication with three important railways—the Intercolonial Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, and the Quebec Central—has a right to have a post office. This is not the first time I have risen to beg the Government to grant not a favour but a privilege which the city of Lévis has a right to have. The ex-Minister of Public Works promised me several times that he would come to a decision on the subject very soon; but is is stated that during the recess he has said that, as long as the electors of Lévis returned an opponent of the present Government, they would never have a post office in their city. I may assure the hon. gentlemen that if they wait until they have a good Tory member from that town there will never be a post office there, though it has a right to have one. The town of Lévis is the fourth city in the Province of Quebec by its population and its importance, and, therefore, I think it is the duty of the Government to accede to my just request.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have just looked over the list of the towns or the villages in my county where the amount of revenue collected by the Postal Department is greatly in excess of those two last items we have been discussing. In the village of Wallaceburg the amount of revenue from the postal service was $2,831; in Dresden, $2,278; in Bothwell, $1,770; in Thamesville, $1,536. Any one of these villages has nearly four times the amount of revenue derived from the post office that the village of Laprairie has. It is perfectly obvious that the Government are not paying the slightest attention to the rule which was laid down last year. It seems to me that appropriations in this way cannot be permitted to go on, and the House will be greatly wanting in its duty if, at a later stage of these proceedings, the vote is not questioned and the opinion of the House taken upon the course of the Government.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. member for Centre Montreal (Mr. Curran) has taken the trouble to read out of some document that one would suppose to be an advertisement of town lots for sale in Laprairie. I have made enquiries, and I find that the total number of people in business in Laprairie is ten, with three hotels, and a population of 1,800. The population of Laprairie is decreasing, and we have reason to believe that it will continue to decrease; still, we are asked to vote $10,000 for a post office in that village. We are also told that the people are about to have a fire engine, and they are laying down some pipes. Well, it appears to me that some persons are laying pipes for somebody, when we have the Government voting $10,000 for a post office in Laprairie. We are asked for $10,000 this year, but if the same system is followed in the construction of this post office that has prevailed in the public works generally, we shall be asked next year for two or three thousand dollars more in order to complete this building. If the information I have is correct, I have some reason to doubt the statement that a lot of land in Laprairie is worth $700. If that town is such as is described it cannot possibly be worth more than $150 to $200, and I have my information from gentlemen who are well acquainted with the town. I certainly think we should not vote this money. The Minister does not seem to be so well fortified with reasons in this case as he has been in some others. All that has been expended on this building so far is $5, which, we are informed, is to secure this lot. In the Province of Manitoba we can find a dozen places that are more entitled to a post office than Laprairie, because they are rapidly increasing in population, and in two or three years we expect they will have double the population of Laprairie. I am informed that Laprairie has been going back for the last 20 years, so far as railway communication is concerned. One of the first railways built in Quebec was built from Laprairie to St. Johns, and that road has been taken up. I say it is unfair and unjust to expend so much money in so small a town, that is decreasing in population, when there are so many other towns and villages more populous, and with a growing population, much more entitled to an expenditure of public money than this—I won't say miserable little town, because it appears likely to become a summer resort; but outside of that, there is no excuse at all for this vote.

Montreal post office—Electric lighting, extensions, alterations, &c..... $1,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to understand what the present arrangement is with respect to the electric lighting of the Montreal post office? I want to know what we are paying, and from whom we obtain the electric light used in the Montreal post office, and what time the contract has to run?

Mr. FOSTER. I find that the contract was entered into on 22nd October, 1885, with the Montreal Gazette Company, which offered to supply the electric current necessary for lighting 150 lamps of 16-candle power in the Montreal post office by means of the Edison incandescent system, for a period of five years, all necessary fittings, &c., to be furnished by the Government, the lights to be distributed all over the building, the contractor not to be liable for any damages which might be caused by temporary accidental stoppage of power, but he is to defray, at his own expense, the cost of lighting by gas or otherwise during such temporary deprivation of the electric light. The authority was granted by Order in Council and the contract was to run from July, 1888, to October, 1890. The rate to be paid for 237 lamps was to be $16 per lamp, instead of $18.33, and the number found to be necessary was only 150.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That seems to me a very high rate. That contract was out last year. What is the arrangement now?

Mr. FOSTER. That contract seems to have been out on the 23rd of October, 1890, and it has been renewed for three years at the same rate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Judging from what I have known in similar cases, it appears to me this is a very improvident contract. I want to know whether tenders were applied for for that contract, or whether it was given without tender by the Government to the Montreal Gazette office? I saw no tenders and heard of none.

Mr. FOSTER. At the time the contract was entered into there was only one electric light company in Montreal. Since then other companies have sprung up, and the rates have been reduced.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have there been any tenders applied for?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then it looks like a very great job for the purpose of benefiting the Montreal Gazette Company. I have reason to believe that had tenders been applied for a large reduction would have been gained for the public service. This plan of giving to such a corporation as the Montreal Gazette Company, a known supporter of the Government and a corporation which figures for many thousands of dollars a year in the Auditor General's Report, such a contract, is nothing more than a gross bribe to that corporation, and the renewal of it for a term of years, under the circumstances, is utterly and entirely at variance with every sound principle that can be imagined in carrying on our expenditures for public buildings. Even if there was an excuse, which I very much doubt, for making that bargain in 1885, it looks exceedingly like a gross piece of corruption to have renewed it without tender under the circumstances.

Mr. FOSTER. As the hon. gentleman will see, if there was only one electric lighting company in Montreal, the only thing to do was to make an arrangement with that company, if it were decided to have electric lighting. So, as regards the contract in 1885, the gravamen of the charge falls to the ground. The hon. gentleman has then to show that the amount paid now to this company is in excess of what should be paid. If that was not too great a charge at the time, and if, after three or six companies had become established, and the supply by this company had been satisfactory, the company had, to a certain extent, a right to be considered.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not at all.

Mr. FOSTER. If its work was satisfactory, and if the lighting was done at a fair price and not an exorbitant price—and the hon. gentleman has not shown that it was an exorbitant price—I do not see anything wrong in the transaction. But if the hon. gentleman can show that the price paid to the company was a great deal more than it should have been, then there was ground for a charge.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was your bounden duty to take all reasonable precautions by asking tenders, and ascertaining if you could not get the work done for a less sum. Evidently not the slightest pains were taken to do so. This has been made a means of giving a large sum per annum to the Gazette Company in return for political services rendered. I have no doubt, from information I have received, that if tenders had been asked for in Montreal a very considerable saving on these rates would have been obtained. I am told that no tenders were applied for, and that parties were expecting to be asked to tender; but it was done without giving any notice to the companies in the city to apply. It seems to be about as gross a piece of jobbery as we have yet heard, although it is not to the same amount as a good many others.

Mr. WATSON. What number of lights are kept burning all night, and what is the average number of hours for the 237 lights?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know the number of hours, and the payment is so much per light.

Mr. WATSON. They do not cost the Gazette anything when they are not burning.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The contract should be laid on the Table.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection to have the contract brought down. I find here a summary of the report of the chief architect, in which he says:

"The present arrangement is considered to be a reasonable one, more especially as since the original agreement was entered into the lighting time of the lamps has increased several hours per night. Many of the additional lamps are required for the greater part of the 24 hours."

Mr. WATSON. That is what I want to find out.

Mr. HAGGART. It is only an average of 4½ cents per light per night.

Mr. WATSON. It is a very high rate, when you put 237 lamps in a building. I question very much whether some are lighted at all any time during the year. When the Minister says he had a right to renew the contract because the company had done the work before, I say the Government have no right to do so, for the Government had paid for putting in the lights. There are two or three companies running the incandescent light in Montreal, and 4½ cents per lamp per night is a very high rate. It should be furnished as regards that number in a building of that description for three-quarters of a cent per hour, and I am satisfied these lamps will not average seven hours per night.

Mr. HAGGART. Some are burning 24 hours.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Outside of the cost of lighting the post office and of this contract, consideration should be given to the principle of letting this contract without asking public tenders. I received a letter from Montreal within the last few days calling my attention to this matter, and saying it should be thoroughly investigated by the House, because it was no doubt a huge job got up for the benefit of the contractors. I was informed by the party who wrote to me that at the time the contract was given to the Gazette there were two or three electric lighting companies in the city which should have had an opportunity to compete, and even the city postmaster did not know the office was to be lighted by electricity until workmen entered the building for the purpose of arranging the lights, and then the contract had been made with the Gazette proprietors. In matters of this kind public competition should be solicited, and everyone should be put on the same footing. The Montreal Gazette is not an electric lighting company, but is in the newspaper business, and why should that company be preferred to the companies regularly engaged in the business? I contend that the public should have been notified that tenders were required for lighting the post office, and if, when that had been done, the Gazette was found to have sent in the lowest tender, they would have had a right to the contract. But so long as there were other electric light companies doing business in Montreal, it was an underhanded piece of business to give the contract to a party not regularly engaged in the trade, and without soliciting tenders from others. There can be no justification for it whatever. Even without considering the question of price, and even if the Montreal Gazette offer was less than it could have been done by other companies, there was an injustice done to the public in not having competition and in not having offers from others. If a contract is to be let under open competition those in the business will put down the price to the lowest notch in order to get the work. If the Minister of Finance was going to have some work of this kind done for himself he would not select a private company not engaged in the business, but he would go to the regular electric companies and ask them the price of lighting the building and invite competition. He is trustee for the public, he is doing business for the public, and he ought to guard the interests of the public the same as he would guard his own interests. I venture to say that there is not a man sitting on the Government benches to-day, who would let a contract for lighting buildings of his own in such way as this contract was let. I consider it was a gross injustice to the public to give this contract at first, and further it was an injustice to renew the contract without giving the competing companies an opportunity to tender. This matter was discussed in the House some years ago, and the Minister must have known that the Government did wrong in letting the contract without asking for public competition. Therefore I say that they cannot justify this expenditure. I do not know whether this amount is excessive or not. I care not whether it is excessive or not; but I say that the principle is wrong and that the Government cannot justify it.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has allowed his enthusiasm to run away with him in his use of adjectives, and he characterizes this first as a job, and afterwards he declares it is a huge job. It cannot be a huge job, for the amount itself is very small, and I notice that in the talk of hon. gentlemen opposite none of them have attempted to show that this price is large. He asks what would one do if he had a building of his own to light? If there was only one electric light company in the city where I had a building to light, I should go to that electric light company, and that was exactly what was done in this case. If that work had been well done for three or four years, and if good satisfaction had been given, and it was done as cheaply as any other, I certainly would renew the contract with the person who was lighting my building. I find that is exactly what is done in this case, because there is a condition in the contract which makes it imperative for this company to furnish the light as cheaply as any other company would offer to do it for; or if they do not the contract is cancelled.

Mr. BARRON. Have you found that out?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How have you found out that they do it as cheaply as others?

Mr. FOSTER. Every company doing business in the city of Montreal is no doubt anxious for business, and none of these companies has ever offered to do it cheaper.

Mr. BARRON. Has the Government tried to find out?

Mr. FOSTER. I have asked the deputy to make enquiries as to the cost of electric lighting here and in other places, so as to bring that information down at the same time as the contract.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is a mere evasion of the question. The hon. gentleman does not state that notice was sent out to these companies when this previous contract expired on the 22nd October last. I have reason to believe that the hon. Minister is misinformed when he states that when this contract was originally entered into, there were no other electric companies in Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. That is my information.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am informed to the contrary. I am informed that there were electric light companies in Montreal at the time, and that these companies would have been too happy to have competed with the Montreal Gazette Company for the lighting of the post office if they had known. I am also informed that no notification whatever was given when this contract expired on the 22nd October last, that no steps whatever were taken by the department or by anybody in the public service to ascertain whether these companies would do the work cheaper or not. Now, if the hon. gentleman is able to contradict the information given to me on this head, if he is able to prove that notifications were sent to these other companies known to be doing business in Montreal and asking them to tender, there would be some force in his argument. It is quite clear that the Montreal Gazette, which is known to be a thick and thin supporter of the Government, has been allowed to retain a contract of nearly $4,000 a year without public competition. That is the state of the case and it is not creditable to the Government.

Mr. WATSON. It can be easily understood by anyone in this House acquainted with electric lighting, that it might be very easy for the Gazette people to give light to the Government for $16 per year per lamp, but it might not be so easy for any outsider who is not friendly to the Government. If the Government had asked for tenders for lighting at so much per hour per night per lamp, they would have paid for what they got. I am satisfied that these lights in the building at Montreal are not burning the average number of hours which has been spoken of by the Postmaster General. I venture to say that they will not average four hours a night. As a comparison I may say that in the town in which I live, where we have to burn wood or coal, the electric light is furnished at three-quarters of a cent per hour for a sixteen-candle lamp, while I am satisfied that they are getting one cent per hour in Montreal where they buy coal for about half the price it costs us in Manitoba. I certainly think there is quite a little job there. I say that the Government should advertise for tenders and get it at so much per hour, metre measurement.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). Many of these lamps are burning all day.

Mr. WATSON. It must be a very badly lighted building if the lamps have to burn all day. The Custom house closes at four o'clock in the afternoon, and I venture to say that these lamps do not burn on an average four hours a day. I am a little surprised that the Gazette Company have power under their charter to undertake the lighting of any buildings outside of their own, but I suppose they have that power, or these other companies in Montreal would have objected to it long ago. It is only just to the public and to the other companies which are engaged in the regular business of electric lighting, that they should have an opportunity of tendering for the furnishing of this light.

Mr. DESJARDINS (Hochelaga). I think the comparison made by my hon. friend for Marquette (Mr. Watson) between the Montreal post office and the post office at Portage la Prairie is a little out of place. When he says that these lights only burn for four hours a day, he does not seem to know that they work in the Montreal post office for twenty-four hours a day, and that the building must be illuminated the whole night, because the mails are coming in from every quarter, and being assorted for distribution, from the beginning of the day to the end.

Mr. WATSON. I spoke of a comparison in rates. I was not speaking of the number of hours at all. I said that the light was furnished with us at three-quarters of a cent per lamp per hour.

Mr. DESJARDINS (Hochelaga). How did you make out four hours?

Mr. WATSON. The number of hours does not matter. The longer number of hours the lamps burn the cheaper the light ought be obtained per hour. I said that the Government ought to get their light on the same principle as any business man would get it, and pay so much per sixteen-candle power lamp per hour.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think the Finance Minister ought at least to explain how this company were bound to furnish the light as cheaply as any other company, and how he ascertained that they were furnishing it as cheaply as any other company would furnish it. The hon. member for South Oxford asked him to explain that, but he has failed to do so. If he is in possession of the facts it is easy for him to explain. I think if he were in possession of the facts he would have explained it before now.

Mr. FOSTER. I may say to my hon. friend that I did not make that statement, that the Gazette

Company were furnishing the light as cheaply as any other company would furnish it. I said that the hon. gentleman had not proved that it was an exorbitant price. I also stated that there is a clause in the contract, and in the Order in Council as well, by which the contract was extended, that the Gazette Company was to give its light as cheaply as any other company would offer to put it in for.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. How do you know they are doing it?

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose they are. I did not state that they were, and nobody on the opposite side has said that they are not.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. You have not given the other companies a chance to say whether they would or not.

Mr. BARRON. The hon. Finance Minister tried to make the point that the country was losing nothing, because there was in the agreement with the Montreal Gazette Company a clause that they would supply the light as cheaply as anybody else. When he was asked: How do you know? he began to say that the other companies would find it out, and try to get the contract. In answer to that, we asked how do the other companies know about it? Here is a secret contract made with the Montreal Gazette Company, and the other companies have not a chance to tender, and know nothing about it. The transaction is, as my hon. friend has said, a huge fraud, not applying the word huge to the amount involved, but to the character of the transaction, which undoubtedly cannot be defended, because contracts of this kind should be let by tender, and this has not been done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On another ground this contract is one of the most objectionable imaginable. No Government ought to make a contract with a company in which they put a clause permitting that company to retain the contract on condition that they will perform it as cheaply as anyone else. To do that is practically to prevent any other company tendering, because, according to the statements made by the hon. gentlemen, they could not get the contract unless they would go so low that the Montreal Gazette Company would throw it up in disgust, which it is not likely they would do. So that that practically cuts off all competition, even if the companies knew of the matter.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Though I am not a lawyer, I understand that ignorance can be successfully pleaded against prosecution in many cases. In the matter under discussion, I venture to say that the hon. gentlemen who have been throwing observations across the floor of the House have not sufficiently acquainted themselves with the facts of the case before making these observations. It has been contended that the contract made with the Montreal Gazette Company—of the details of which I confess I am ignorant, because they were made without my knowledge—should have been made in 1885, when tenders were first called for. What are the facts? The post office had been lighted by the Montreal Gas Company at a cost of between $3,000 and $4,000 a year. A contract was made with the Gazette Company——

Mr. CURRAN. In the adjoining building.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). In the adjoining building, as my hon. friend says, but that is immaterial. At what cost was that contract made? At a less cost per light than the Montreal Gas Company had got at a time when no other building was in a position to light the post office: and the country saved, not a considerable, but a modicum of money on that contract. It ran for four or five years, at the end of which time it was renewed, and why? Because I presume the work of lighting the post office had been done satisfactorily to the Public Works Department of this country. It was lighted under a very much less rate than it was under the original contract, because competition had sprung up in the meantime. I am not concealing that fact for one moment. It was lighted at as low a rate as any other building in Montreal at that time. So that so far as the public interest is concerned, there has been not only no loss of money in consequence of the contract, but a saving to the country. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has talked about a price of three-quarters of a cent per light per hour as being the rate charged in his western country. That amounts to five and a quarter cents per week, or something like $30 or thereabouts per lamp per year.

Mr. WATSON. It depends on how long you burn them.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). This contract is $16 per lamp per year, which is one-half the price the hon. gentleman speaks of, and these lights are burning pretty much the year round, at least in some parts of the building.

Mr. WATSON. What average do the lights burn per night?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not know. I should think 12 hours at least. If you knew the locality of the building you would know that along St. François Xavier Street, and on Fortification Lane, it is utterly impossible to light one-half of that building by sunlight; you must have either gas lamps or electrical lamps burning the year round to light the building, so much is it obscured from the sun. However, the principal reason why I rose to-night—because, I confess I am not acquainted with the details of this transaction, which is not part of my business in connection with the Gazette—is that I want to repel a charge of the hon. member for South Oxford—and I do it without any kind of reservation at all—that this contract has anything whatever to do with the character of the editorial articles or the opinions of the Gazette newspaper. I have known the hon. gentleman to make the same charge in his own county against the Conservative press of Canada. I repel it on behalf of the Conservative press. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman might just as well make a similar charge against the Globe newspaper; he might as well say that forthwith, because that paper occasionally receives an advertisement from the Ontario Government, it is therefore under the hand and under the influence of Mr. Mowat, the leader of that Government, and that its principles are made and governed by the small pittance it receives from the local treasury. I might just as well charge against the Globe that its politics are governed by the pittance it receives from Mr. Mowat, as the hon. gentleman charges that the politics of the Gazette are governed by the pittance it receives from Ottawa. For whatever work the Montreal Gazette has done for this Government it has received a fair charge and no more; and its political opinions and course have never been influenced one iota by reason of its business connection with the Government at Ottawa. If the hon. gentleman ventures to say otherwise I challenge him to the proof. I say again that the Gazette is as independent of this Government as the Globe newspaper or any other newspaper supporting hon. gentlemen opposite is independent of any Local Government. It is my proud boast, as connected with the Gazette newspaper, that my opinions have never been influenced by the business relations that paper may have had with this Government, whether those relations be large or small, because I believe this, and I do believe it sincerely, that for whatever money we have received from the Government we have rendered value, and nothing less or nothing more. We have never received from this or any other Government anything more than was fair and just, and the political opinions of the paper have never been influenced in any degree by its business relations.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The pittance which the hon. gentleman's paper received last year was $669.17 for advertising and $5,252.53 for printing. Now, that is a very considerable deal less, on an average, than has been received by the Gazette for the last twelve years. During that time, if a true account were taken, I believe it would be found that that paper received close on $100,000 of public money, in one shape or another. For my part, although I do not suppose the hon. gentleman himself may have been influenced by it, I have not the slightest doubt that the Gazette has been very largely influenced in the course it has pursued with regard to public matters throughout this country by the amount of Government patronage it has received during the last twelve years. I have not the faintest doubt of that, and I have not the faintest doubt the same holds true of the majority of the other papers which have been participators in the plunder like the Gazette. I have not the slightest doubt that what is true of the Montreal Gazette is equally true of the London Free Press, the Moncton papers, and the St. John and Halifax papers, which, like it, have been sharers in the plunder.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I have too high an opinion of the hon. member for South Oxford to assume, for one moment, that he believes what he has stated. Why, Sir, look at his argument. He declares that the Montreal Gazette during this last year has received less money than it did during the preceding five or ten years. I ask him, in all candor, has the Montreal Gazette been a less staunch supporter of the Conservative policy this past year than it was ever before?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yes.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Has it been a less strong supporter of the Government than before? If it has not, and he cannot say it has not, how in heaven's name have the payments made by this Government to that paper been used to influence it in its support of the Government here. Why, his whole argument tends to show the utter fallacy of the pretension he makes before this House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think $6,000 is a goodly amount.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I do not know that the hon. member for South Oxford is exactly right in saying that the Gazette was influenced in its editorial opinions by this money; but I am satisfied if the Gazette was not influenced in that regard, the payment of the money was a substantial aid to the Gazette. There is no doubt about that; and if the Gazette received substantial aid, there is no reason why it should not go on in its old course of justifying and supporting the Government. This is just another indication of the manner in which public expenditures have been made by the Government. They have made it a principle to support their supporters on every occasion. They have supported them by building railways in constituencies where railways were not required in the public interests, and by building public buildings where the public necessities did not demand them. They have expended the public money in paying large sums to newspapers for printing and advertising ever since I have been a member of this House, and in doing that they have been supporting their supporters. The Montreal Gazette has always been a supporter of the Conservative party, and I suppose will continue to be so, no matter what amount of pay they may get from the public crib; but there is one thing I must say with regard to the hon. member for Cardwell's statement, that the Government have always received fair work for a fair price from the Gazette company. I cannot allow that statement to go without contradiction, because I proved in the Public Accounts Committee some years ago that the Gazette was paid in some cases fourteen times the amount the public contractors charged.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is a slander which has been sent abroad throughout the country and has never been proved.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I established that beyond doubt before the Public Accounts Committee and before this House. I established beyond doubt that, in some cases, the Gazette was paid fourteen times the value of work done.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Fourteen times the value for work they did in comparison with the prices the public contractors would have done the same work for. The Gazette got, in some cases, over $22,000 a year for public printing of various kinds and advertising, and in this respect I think the Government has supported its supporter very well for a number of years. I do not blame the Montreal Gazette for being desirous to maintain in office the present Government, as naturally enough the Gazette desires to reciprocate the favours it receives and assist the Government which assists them. It is the same with my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). He has been feeding liberally at the public crib for years. He has been getting from $5,000 to $7,000 a year for patronage to the Regina Leader.

The CHAIRMAN. Order. We are on the item of the Montreal post office, and the hon. gentleman knows he is out of order.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. There is some light in Regina, even when the bard is not here. In referring to him, I admit I was out of order, but I think I have a perfect right to refer to the Montreal Gazette, and, as I have said, that paper has been liberally supported by the Government. I do not say its opinions have been influenced by that support; but, to any ordinary individual, that support would probably have some weight in influencing the opinions of parties receiving such large sums from this or any other Government.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am not going to speak against this item, and I think hon. gentlemen, if they knew what I was going to say, would give me a little better attention.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It seems to be the function of the Montreal Gazette to shed light, and it is in keeping with that function that it should light up the Montreal post office.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That item is carried.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I say it is not carried. I had the floor before you said it was carried, and I say it is not carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The item was carried before the hon. gentleman got up.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. CASEY. I heard the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) address you before you said "carried."

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The item is carried, but I have no objection that the hon. gentleman should speak.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; chair.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I see, in looking at the Montreal Gazette of to-day, that it is not only shedding its light on Montreal, but it has invaded Spencer Wood——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN,—it has invaded Spencer Wood, and is giving its light to the Lieutenant Governor there as to what is his duty.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. We pay that paper for light, and it is but shedding its light out of the funds the Dominion Government give to it. There were $3,000,000 squandered at Quebec by the Dominion Government—did the Montreal Gazette ever say a word about that?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Millions of money have been squandered. Did the Gazette say anything about it?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. No; but it does now what no paper should do under a limited monarchy, it seeks to give light to the Lieutenant Governor as to what action he should take.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I wish to correct a statement made by the hon member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). I understood him to say that the Gazette had received $6,000. I find that last year the Gazette received $12,528.43, besides the amount for the electric light, $4,000, making a total of $16,528.43.

Rivière du Loup post office, Custom house, &c.—to complete..... $11,200

Mr. CASEY. What are the details of that?

Mr. FOSTER. This is to provide for the completion of the new post office building at Rivière du Loup. The total expenditure up to the 31st December was $9,227. The total cost of the building is to be $23,000.

Mr. CASEY. What is the population?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is there a protest in this riding?

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). There is a protest in this House against you.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I notice that there is. We can follow this. Wherever there is a protest there is a grant.

Mr. FOSTER. The population is about 4,000.

Mr. CASEY. What are the revenues?

Mr. FOSTER. The postal revenue is $2,500. The money orders issued amount to $19,000. The savings bank deposits are $6,700.

Mr. CASEY. This is also a much smaller place than the one to which I called attention earlier in the evening. If it is necessary to have a protest in a county before a grant for public buildings can be made, and if I had known that in time, there would have been no difficulty in getting up a protest in my county if any one would furnish the security. We will see about that at the next election.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Carried.

Mr. WATSON. Will this complete this post office?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This has been carried.

Mr. WATSON. I was on my feet asking a question of the Finance Minister before you said "carried."

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The Chairman has waited until time has been given for everybody to speak, and then I say "carried."

Mr. WATSON. The Chair has no right to say how long an item should take in discussion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The Chairman has a right to say "carried" when members have spoken.

Mr. CASEY. The invariable rule is for the Chairman to see if anyone desires to speak before he says "carried."

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. How long is he to wait—five minutes?

Mr. CASEY. When you have been there longer——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have been here long enough.

Mr. CASEY. When you have had a little more experience of your present position you will know better.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. This is not the time to discuss this matter.

Mr. CASEY. It is not the custom for the Chair to cry "carried" directly the last speaker sits down. There must be a decent opportunity given for other hon. members to speak.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. If the hon. gentleman would not think he can give lessons to everybody, it would be better.

Mr. CASEY. You want lessons, and you will get them.

Mr. WATSON. I asked a question of the Finance Minister.

Mr. FOSTER. I was going to give you the information, but you were quarrelling with the Chairman.

Mr. WATSON. It was the Chairman who was quarrelling with the members.

St. Henri Post Office, &c..... $7,500

Mr. HYMAN. What is the population?

Mr. CASEY. Where is St. Henri?

Mr. FOSTER. In Hochelaga County.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Who is the member for that county?

Mr. DESJARDINS (Hochelaga). There is no protest there.

Mr. WATSON. What is the revenue of this post office?

Mr. FOSTER. The postal revenue is $1,700.

Mr. LANDERKIN. According to the Postmaster General's Report, it was $1,667.74. However, the hon. gentleman is nearer to the mark than usual.

Mr. HYMAN. Is this the total vote, or is another to follow?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A vote was taken last year for $8,000. What is the total cost?

Mr. FOSTER. There was a vote of $4,000 in 1890, and that was for the site. That has been purchased, and nothing else has been expended up to the 31st December, 1890. This is now for going on with the work.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This will cost about $25,000 to collect $1,667.

Mr. O'BRIEN. As to sites for these post offices, in this case I understand the Dominion Government are paying for the site, while in Orillia, the town in which I live, the municipality is obliged to buy the site. Why, in one case, does the Dominion Government pay for the site, while in the other the municipality has to find the site?

Mr. FOSTER. I see that the amount of the contract is $7,770; the site cost $3,500, and this $7,500 is for proceeding with the work. The building will have a frontage of 43 feet 6 inches by 333 feet 6 inches, two stories, front walls of stone, rear walls of brick, and the roof of wood; the ground floor for the post office, and the first floor for Customhouse apartments.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So far as I can make out, the hon. gentleman must be under some misapprehension as to the cost. He says $4,000 were voted in 1889-90, $8,000 were voted in the year which has just passed, and we are asked for $7,500 more.

Mr. FOSTER. But of the $8,000 voted last year none of it was expended. A part of that will lapse. The contract and the cost of site both together amount to $11,700. Then come the fittings for the buildings, and the incidental expenses. The whole estimate is $19,000.

Mr. BARRON. The Finance Minister has not yet answered the question asked by the hon. member for Muskoka, with regard to the difference between this case and the case of Orillia.

Mr. FOSTER. There was a difference in the two. We did not have to buy the site for Laprairie. We cannot compel a municipality to give a site. A post office is a Government building, and very often the locality offers a site, and then the Government is very glad to accept it, and we will be still more glad if the example sometimes given will induce others to do the same.

Mr. O'BRIEN. This is a most extraordinary doctrine, that if a municipality offers a site, they will take it, but if the municipality does not offer a site they will buy it. Why should Orillia provide a site at her own expense, when the Government buys a site in a town like St. Henri, which has far less claim for a post office?

Mr. DESJARDINS (Hochelaga). The hon. gentleman speaks as if St. Henri was a small town: it has a population of 15,000. The accommodation at the post office has been so bad that people have had actually to go to the Montreal post office to be accommodated. It has been held in a little room about 10 feet square. St. Henri is about two miles from Montreal, and is a suburb fast increasing in population. It is a centre of distribution. There are many small post offices around Montreal which are to be served by the St. Henri post office. So I do not see why it should not be provided with a post office, unless it is because it is in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that the amount of money deposited in the post office savings bank was $330.31. In three towns in my riding there is an average of $30,000 deposited in the post office savings bank, and not one of them has a post office. The entire receipts of St. Henri post office last year amounted to $1,667.94; number of money orders, 241; total amount of money orders issued during the year, $3,110; total commission received from the public, $32; compensation to the postmaster on money orders throughout the year, $8.23; salary paid him, $528; and for the room the hon. gentleman has referred to we have been paying $60 rent; and in a place like that we are asked to contribute $19,000 to build a post office. This is even worse than the other cases; I cannot pronounce it anything else than a barefaced fraud. I cannot understand how hon. gentlemen opposite can ask the Committee to consent to such absurd nonsense.

Mr. DESJARDINS (Hochelaga). I shall make it my duty to inform my Liberal friends in St. Henri how they are treated by the Liberal Opposition in Parliament.

Mr. LANDERKIN. We have been discussing at some length the electric light item; this is the Rielite item. The hon. member for Muskoka understands that they are paying them off one by one, with either a post office or something else. We will soon get to the end of the Rielite vote, then I hope our Riel friends in the west will be satisfied.

Mr. CASEY. What makes this post office vote look worse than it is on the face of it, is the remark of my hon. friend who represents Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins). He says he will take pleasure in telling his Liberal friends that the Liberals in Parliament opposed the grant. By that remark he exposes the object of the whole proceeding; he shows that this grant was made for political purposes: he shows that when we, on this side, criticise a transaction that is scandalous on the face of it, he takes advantage of it and attempts to make political capital in his own county. I say that such a method of treating this subject is quite unbecoming to the member for Hochelaga, who has always borne a character that would not lead one to suspect that he would treat such a subject in this manner. The transaction is the most scandalous of any we have had before us. St. Henri is practically a suburb of Montreal, and the office is merely a sort of branch of the Montreal office. The people evidently do most of their business in Montreal, as is seen by the returns. Under the circumstances, the proposal to erect a post office suitable for a large town or small city is absurd. If the Government could show any reason for the expenditure it would be different, but they consider the House has simply to register and carry out the decisions at which they have arrived. The Minister of Finance dropped a hint that may prove useful, namely, that some municipalities offered sites free, so as to induce the Government to erect a public building. If the hon. gentleman will undertake to erect public buildings in all places where free sites are offered I can promise him applications from more important places than we are now dealing with.

Mr. FOSTER. And with your support?

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman has grown so accustomed to connecting the granting of public money with support for the Government he cannot disassociate them for a moment. Ridgetown is a vastly more important place than many of those named, and if a proposal were made to give it a public building I would give it my support.

Mr. BARRON. I was not surprised at the member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) rising, in view of the statement made by the Minister of Finance, that in St. Henri they are paying $3,500 for a lot and in Orillia they are asking a free site as a condition of erecting a public building. What possible fairness is there in that action when a comparison is made between the two places. At St. Henri the gross postal revenue was $1,667, whereas at Orillia it was $7,857. The number of money orders issued at Orillia was 2,043, while at St. Henri it was 241. The value of money orders issued at Orillia was $25,207, while at St. Henri it was $3,010. The total commission received in Orillia was $203, at St. Henri $32; and so the comparison goes all the way through. I am not, therefore, surprised that the hon. member for Muskoka or any hon. member should rise and protest against such invidious distinctions being made with regard to public works. Take the deposits: In Orillia they were $81,811; at St. Henri, $3,500. I hope some different system will be pursued in distributing the favours of the Government.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) said the post office at St. Henri was an important distributing point. I observe that not one dollar was paid for forwarding.

Mr. DESJARDINS (Hochelaga). It is becoming an important distributing centre, because the population is increasing in that direction. When the new post office is established it will be an important distributing point for western Montreal

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It may become an important distributing point in the future, but it is not an important distributing point now. With respect to the cost of sites, the Minister of Finance has told us that the site will cost $3,500. I remember cases where large bills have been sent in for law costs for examining titles. I remember how for the new departmental building $7,000 were paid the lawyers for examining titles. In connection with the post office at Hamilton, although the site had been occupied by Senator McInnes' warehouse for many years, a favoured lawyer in Toronto was employed to examine the title, and he charged $180 or $190. I want to know whether the price of $3,500 in question includes examination of title.

Mr. DESJARDINS (Hochelaga). The price seems to be high; but when it is remembered that there is not a lot to be purchased in that immediate vicinity for less than 50 cents or 60 cents per square foot, and that the site is on an extension of St. James street, and in a locality where land is very high, I do not think the Government could have done better.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I want to know whether it includes the examination of title.

Mr. FOSTER. The memorandum I have is that the cost of the site will be $3,500.

Mr. CASEY. If this policy of erecting post offices in suburbs is carried out in Montreal, similar applications will be made on behalf of suburbs elsewhere. The member for West York (Mr. Wallace) must have been neglecting his duty in not securing the erection of a Dominion building at West Toronto Junction. If the Minister of Agriculture had remained a member of this House he might have secured a public building for some of the suburbs of London that are not yet incorporated. The principle of putting up expensive buildings in the suburbs of great cities is one which, if carried out throughout the Dominion, would involve a tremendous expenditure, and one which seems to be improper and wasteful.

St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary..... $20,000

Mr. FOSTER. We will reduce this appropriation, because the Opposition have kept us so long discussing the Estimates that by the time we get the money we will not be able to spend it this year.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. In that case we had better keep you here longer. It will be a good thing for the country if the fact that the session was prolonged would reduce the public expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see the item is for penitentiaries, and so long as the Opposition keep us here there will probably be not so much necessity for room there.

Brantford, Ont., Battalion Drill Shed.. $10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is going to be done with this.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is proposed to give it as a Government contribution to the city of Brantford to build a drill shed.

Carleton Place Post Office, &c..... $12,500

Mr. LANDERKIN. $26,000.

Mr. WATSON. What was the original contract for the building?

Mr. FOSTER. $14,000.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. How was the price increased.

Mr. FOSTER. The $14,000 does not include the fittings or the price of the land, which cost $4,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should think from some discoveries that have been made in other parts of the building you had better enlarge them.

Cobourg Post Office, Custom house, &c... $1,500

Mr. BARRON. I would ask the Minister of Finance to allow that item to stand, because there is a matter in connection with it coming up before the Public Accounts Committee, and which would have been brought up earlier had we been able to get the returns in connection with it at an earlier date.

Mr. FOSTER. This is to complete payments for work done.

Mr. BARRON. I think we should have some discussion on this, because if the information given to some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House is at all correct there has been, in the language of my hon. friend behind me, a huger job in this than in anything we have discussed to-night. I happen to have seen the building, and to know something about it, and a most excessive amount of money has been already paid on it. Although the information was not given to myself, it was given to an hon. gentleman on this side of the House, and I can undertake to say that the Minister of Finance, if he had our information, would not wish to have the item pass at the present time without some discussion, which cannot be gone into until we have the matter brought up in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. FOSTER. All right, let it stand.

Government Printing Bureau, including electric light plant, &c.....$9,300

Mr. CASEY. The whole business of the Printing Bureau is so much in dispute just now that I think this item should be allowed to stand.

Mr. FOSTER. This is for the building and plant, which must be paid for. The chief architect says it is necessary for payment of contract on additional works carried out at the Bureau, inclusive of electric lighting, and to cover probable additional incidental expenses connected with the same.

Mr. CASEY. I must object to that item, for the reason that I think it is a very expensive way of obtaining light, both in the Printing Bureau and here, to have a separate plant for each. We have one plant for these buildings. Surely that could produce light also for the Printing Bureau, if necessary. But even so, I have every reason to believe that the light could be obtained much more cheaply from the electric company of the city; and, therefore, I do not see that there is any use of having a separate plant for each establishment. We all know that Government affairs of this kind cost a good deal more to run than those run on business principles. In the Printing Bureau the commission system has prevailed so much in regard to plant of other kinds that we may suppose it to exist in this case. That is why I ask that the item should stand, because a committee is enquiring into the affairs of that Bureau, and evidence might turn up in regard to this electric light plant similar to that which has turned up in regard to other services. The item is very vague, not mentioning anything but electric plant. Can the Minister state what this includes besides the electric light?

Mr. FOSTER. Here is an amount of $3,300 due for contracts, and a balance of $3,000 due on contract for additional work of fitting up electric light plant.

Mr. CASEY. Is the first item a balance due on building contracts?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; for other work besides electric light plant—for additional work on the building, fittings and furniture for the stationery office, all of which were by contract. The incandescent light was also by contract.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Who holds the contract?

Mr. FOSTER. Ahearn & Soper.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the amount of the contract?

Mr. FOSTER. $8,492 for the electric plant.

Mr. FORBES. How many lights is that to supply?

Mr. FOSTER. The power is to be sufficient to run 1,200 lights.

Mr. FORBES. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the contract has already been let?

Mr. FOSTER. The contract has already been let.

Mr. FORBES. Has the plant been supplied?

Mr. FOSTER. The plant has been supplied and is in operation.

Mr. FORBES. It strikes me that it would have been much more economical to have had first an estimate from the engineers as to whether it was advisable to put in a separate plant to light that building.

Mr. FOSTER. The engineers and the chief architect did certainly give their opinion.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Did the Government advertise for tenders?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; two tenders were sent in.

Mr. WATSON. Does the contract include steam plant and the dynamo?

Mr. FOSTER. No; simply the electric light plant. The new engines are got by contract for $1,000?

Mr. FORBES. It is certain that the same plant that supplies these buildings could easily supply the Printing Bureau. In order to put in an extra plant you have also to put in extra engines and boiler, and a separate staff of workmen. When these buildings are only a few hundred yards apart I do not see why the Government should go to the expense of a new outfit, when they had one already.

Mr. FOSTER. The power for lighting this building is not more than sufficient for that purpose.

Mr. FORBES. With the same boiler and the same engine and additional dynamo, and with the same men, you could run the electric light for the Printing Bureau.

Mr. CASEY. My hon. friend appears to forget that one of the objects in laying out Government work is to secure employment to as large a number of men as possible ; but in this case I find fault with the employment of a separate plant for either of these buildings. I have asked the Minister to give reasons why this is done, and why the light is not taken direct from the company that supplies the city and runs the street railway. Even if the Government, with its usual desire to create new positions for employés, insists upon having an electrical plant of its own, why is not the water of the Chaudière Falls used ? Surely the Government has a right to use some of that power. It is surely not all granted away to monopolists. If they must have a separate plant there is power enough there to run all the electric lights they want, even after all the mill-owners are supplied, and that water power belongs to the Government, and could be used, instead of this needless steam equipment. I would ask the Minister not to shelter himself behind the engineers, as other Ministers have done, but to tell me what reason of economy exists for having separate plants for the two buildings, or any plant at all, when the city is supplied by an electric light company. This is a question of policy, on which the hon. gentleman ought to have an opinion. He ought to be able to give reasons for the establishment of this plant. If a contract has been made and the money is due, it will have to be paid ; but there is no reason why we should not have explanations about it.

Mr. STAIRS. I cannot say I know as much about electric light as the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Forbes), but I have had some little experience of it, and I am confident that the hon. member and the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) are not correct in saying that the Printing Bureau could be lighted more cheaply by the plant which supplies the House of Commons than by a separate plant. The hon. gentleman must bear in mind that the plant which supplies the House of Commons is not run all through the year, and that a special staff has to be used for the purpose of lighting these buildings, whereas in the Printing Bureau they have their staff all the year round, and can utilize them in connection with their own plant. With all deference to the opinion of the hon. member for Queen's as to the importance of having highly skilled men to take charge of the plant, according to my experience there need be no difficulty in having the electric plant of the Printing Bureau under the charge of the engineers of that establishment, for both the dynamo and the electric engine are in the engine room. I am confident that any practical man, having to consider the question of putting in a separate engine and plant in the Bureau or lighting that building from a distant plant, intended only to run a few months of the year, would, as a matter of economy purely, adopt the system recommended by the Government engineer. As to the policy of obtaining the light from any electric light company in the city or of making the electric light in the Bureau itself, I am inclined to think, with all deference to the hon. member for Queen's, that, on the whole, it is cheaper for the Bureau to make its own light. I know, from what little experience I have had in connection with some factories at Halifax, that we find it is a great deal cheaper to provide the light from our own dynamos than to obtain it from any company, even at the lowest price the company will charge. It must be borne in mind by the Committee in considering the question of lighting an establishment like the Printing Bureau, or any printing establishment, where mechanics are about, and you have engines and boilers, you can utilize them in providing your electricity. I think that when my hon. friends opposite take these facts into consideration they will see that the plan adopted by the Bureau is, on the whole, a wise one, and one which, in the end, will prove the most economical.

Mr. FORBES. I quite agree with the junior member for Halifax that it is much more economical for the Government to supply the lights for its own buildings itself rather than take them from an almost monopolizing company like that of Ottawa. But what I object to is this : that having a separate public building it should be necessary to put in extra plant. The House of Commons is run from three to five months a year by electric lights, and the Printing Bureau is also run during that time. Why, then, should not the same staff of employés run both ? The same machinery which supplies electric lights to the House of Commons could supply them to the other buildings, and there would be a saving, at any rate, during three to five months in the year. The public offices of the various departments in the other buildings outside this House are run the year round, and are lighted by electricity also, and I do not see why the one plant cannot supply all the buildings, as they are all within an area not very large, through which lines can be easily strung. To put a separate plant in each public building is a gross waste of money. An engineer is necessary in each of the stations, and the dynamo station is not in the engine-room. You have an engineer and a fireman, and then your dynamo engineer and his employés in each separate building, and the staff in each one of these stations is enormous, and the cost of running them is something tremendous. A great saving could be made if the Government would look upon the matter in that light.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I would like to know the cost of the engine and boiler required to run this chamber.

Mr. FOSTER. The engine, I believe, cost $2,000 and is not included in this vote.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What has been the cost of this building up to the present ?

Mr. FOSTER. $242,201.01.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Does that include the plant ?

Mr. FOSTER. All cost of construction up to the present.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is the amount of the plant ?

Mr. FOSTER. That was up to 31st December, 1890.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Does that include the plant ?

Mr. FOSTER. That does not include what this item is to cover.

Mr. WATSON. Have the Government considered whether it is advisable to use water power in furnishing the light? The other electric companies have seen fit to utilize water power, and it seems strange that the Government, which owns the water power, should not use it. Electric lights can be furnished much cheaper by water power than by steam power, and it does seem strange to me that in a city like Ottawa where you have immense water power belonging to the Government, you should have incurred large expense in putting in steam plant. Have the department figured on the cost of putting in a plant at the Chaudière Falls and utilizing the water power there instead of steam?

Mr. FOSTER. The matter was fully considered at the time, and it was considered by the engineers and architect to be cheaper to furnish the Printing Bureau with its own electric plant and running it in that way. The only cost extra was the cost of the engine.

Mr. WATSON. And the fuel.

Mr. FOSTER. That is only a small amount.

Mr. WATSON. It takes so much fuel to make so much light.

Mr. FOSTER. There would have been a great deal of expense in utilizing the water power, and that was taken into account. I am not an expert in the business, but those who are came to the conclusion that the cheapest way was to use steam.

Mr. CASEY. It is strange that a public company, which has electric light for sale, should find it cheaper to use water power, and that the Government should find it cheaper to use steam. The electric light company must have the same difficulties in using water power as the Government would have had.

Mr. WATSON. What is the comparison in the number of lights?

Mr. CASEY. If the engineers reported that steam power was cheaper than water power, it is pretty clear they did not know their business, because business men do not use it in that way.

Mr. WATSON. What is the capacity of the plant installed in the Printing Bureau?

Mr. FOSTER. 1,200 lights.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Surely we are not to understand the Minister of Finance to say that there is no surplus water power available at the Chaudière. As long as I have been at Ottawa, I have never seen the Chaudière without observing any amount of water power going to waste.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is all leased.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But there must be a large amount going to waste.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the electric light company leased their water power from those who had leases from the Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker is probably better qualified to speak on that subject than I am, but I should say, from seeing the place, that there was a huge waste there all the time.

Mr. SPEAKER. It requires a considerable expenditure of money to make the water power available, and, for a small plant, such as that in the Printing Bureau, I do not think it would pay the Government to take the necessary means to make the water power available. Take the two electric lighting companies now in existence in this city. Instead of leasing the water power from the Government themselves, and making it available by putting in wheels and so on, they have rented the water power from the lessees of the Government, and they pay a considerable amount of money for the use of those water powers, because the wheels are in and all the arrangements are made, so that they have only to attach their dynamos to those wheels. I think, if the Government undertook, for the running of a small plant, such as that in the Printing Bureau, to render the water power available, it would be found that the expenditure would be very much greater than it is under the present system. There are only 1,200 lights, a small engine has been put in, the steam from the boilers used for the printing presses is utilized. I have some experience in running electric lights myself, and on the whole I am convinced that the mode adopted by the Government is one which will involve the country in the least expense. As to the running of the lights from the present plant utilized for these buildings, I may say that a proposition was made for the lighting of the library by electricity, and it was found that the capacity of the present plant, of the engine and dynamos in use for the lighting of the House of Commons, would not be sufficient for the library. The capacity is taxed to the utmost for this House, and the lighting of the library would have involved an additional expense of $6,000 or $8,000 for that alone.

Mr. WATSON. If that is the case, I think there should be sufficient plant put in to light the library and the grounds, instead of continuing the use of gas: and, taking all this into consideration, I think the Government should have utilized the water power for the whole of these grounds and buildings, and the outside buildings. As to the cost of putting in the water wheel and so on, I am satisfied that the cost of the steam engine and boiler, and the installing of the same at the Printing Bureau, must have cost enough to put in the water power, even including the cost of a new bulkhead at the Chaudière Falls.

Mr. SPEAKER. My hon. friend must remember that it is not only the construction of the wheels, but the construction of flumes and other things, which would involve a very large expenditure, and, from the information I have had from the present electric lighting companies, I am convinced that if the Government had adopted the system proposed by the hon. gentleman they would have involved the country in a much larger annual expenditure than is entailed now.

Mr. WATSON. Of course, it is a matter of difference of opinion, but I am of opinion that it would have been cheaper to use the water power, not only for the present outlay but for the service in the future. One man could attend to all that is necessary to furnish light for all the Government buildings in the city. At present it will take a fireman and an additional man at each station, that is, four men, besides the fuel, and I am satisfied that the original cost of the steam plant would be sufficient to instal the hydraulic plant at the Chaudière Falls.

Mr. LANDERKIN. We formerly used gas in these buildings. Now we use the electric light. I understand that, since we have used the electric light, the gas bills are as heavy as they were before. Is that so?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the information here-

Pembroke Post Office, Custom-house, &c.
—To complete.....$2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost of that Pembroke post office?

Mr. FOSTER. The total cost, up to 31st December, was $31,294.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the cost of the lot?

Mr. FOSTER. $2,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the cost of building the requisite retaining walls to allow the lot to be used for the purpose of building a post office on it? I had the pleasure of paying a visit to Pembroke, and I was struck with the ingenuity which was manifested in fitting that lot for the purposes of a post office. It appeared to me that the lot had been selected with the laudable desire to give as much labour as possible. The lot seemed to slope down to the water's edge, and I noticed that there were retaining walls of excellent construction placed there. I should like to know the cost of the retaining walls.

Mr. SPEAKER. There are two sites available for the purpose of a public building at Pembroke. One was what was known as the O'Meara lot, which was valued at $6,500, and it would have been necessary, in order that the foundations might be properly laid, to have done a good deal of piling and concreting, which would have involved a considerable expense. The cost of the present lot was $2,500, and the cost of the magnificent retaining walls referred to by the hon. member for South Oxford was $4,000, making the total cost of the lot, including the retaining wall, no more than the price asked for the only other lot which was available. I think my hon. friend will agree with me that the building of that retaining wall was not only for the purpose of making the lot valuable, but also in order that it might serve as a foundation for the building itself. As a matter of fact, the retaining wall up to the street line, not only forms a foundation for the building, but it was utilized for all the purposes of coal storage, for weights and measures office, and an examining warehouse; so that the cost of building the retaining wall did not involve so much extra expense as the member for South Oxford believes it did.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It looked to be a very fine piece of architecture, in its way. But, seriously, it seems to me that $6,500, with all respect to the town of Pembroke, which is a thriving little town, is a tall figure for a site there.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid if my hon. friend wanted to buy a business site in the town, he would not be able to secure one for less money.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I was informed that an offer was made by extra patriotic parties to sell very good sites for very much smaller sums. But the hon. gentleman does not gainsay the fact which I mentioned to the Committee, and which was brought very forcibly to my own attention, that a very large sum of money had to be expended in building what was necessary in order to make that fit to use as a site at all. The hon. gentleman knows that this post office is built on a lot sloping very smartly down to the river, so smartly that I should say a retaining wall of about 20 feet was required for a large part of the construction.

Mr. O'BRIEN. What is the population of the town of Pembroke?

Mr. SPEAKER. Between 4,000 and 5,000.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Then, that brings me exactly to the point I wanted to get at. The population of the town of Barrie is 5,000, and they had to find a site for their post office and public building; the town of Orillia has about the same population, and they had to find a site for their public buildings. I would like to know how this favouritism exists. There are three towns in a somewhat similar position as regards population and business; two of them have got to find their own sites for post offices and public buildings; the other one is favoured and the Government buys it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Certainly it does not look like equal rights.

Mr. SPEAKER. The member for Muskoka will remember that although the town of Pembroke has a population of but a little less than 5,000, the amount of business that is transacted in the offices which this building will accommodate is very large. The postal revenue last year was $6,000, the Customs collections were $25,000, and the inland revenue collections between $20,000 and $25,000. All these services will be accommodated by the building erected at Pembroke.

Peterborough Custom-house.....$6,000

Mr. LANDERKIN. They have two sites for public buildings in Peterborough. This site was bought originally for the Custom-house and post office; another site was afterwards bought and the post office was built upon it. Then the Custom-house is built on this site. The Government there occupy two places of business, one for the Custom-house and the other for the post office, with officials in both, and they have to keep two separate sets of heating apparatus, two separate systems of lighting, &c. Would the Minister of Finance tell us a little about this?

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend has gone over that often and often in the House. The whole matter has been discussed here for two or three years.

Mr. BARRON. The post office and Custom-house are so intimately connected here that I would like to draw attention to the post office extras allowed, amounting to something like $10,000, and I fancy it would be the same thing with the Custom-house, and therein lies all this evil. I know myself that in the case of the Lindsay post office honest contractors have not any chances for tenders. Honestly agreeing at what they conceive to be a fair value for the building, they are cut out by those who tender at really too low a figure, but the person tendering at the low figure would get compensation in the way of extras. Now, in Peterborough, the post office is very intimately connected with the Custom-house, and there has been $10,000 paid to the contractor in extras, he knowing all the time that he was going to get this large sum in extras. The Finance Minister must not think that because this matter was discussed two or three sessions ago, therefore the huge fraud has been forgotten, because there never was a greater fraud perpetrated or assisted by the Government than this fraud in Peterborough. The Government found that by buying one particular lot they would offend certain people who expected to sell another lot to them, and they got two different syndicates both coming to the Government and asking them to buy their respective properties. The Government could not please both syndicates, which were composed of strong supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite, and instead of hon. gentlemen doing what was right and selecting the best site and disregarding everything but the public interest, they bought both properties, instead of buying only one, as they should have done, and as they would have done had they been actuated by proper motives. They have been forced to put up two large expensive buildings, whereas one would have done. In all other places they have the Custom-house and post office together; but in the town of Peterborough, for no reason except the fear of displeasing some friends, they not only went to the expense of buying these two sites improperly, but having got both sites then they erected expensive buildings on them.

Port Arthur Post Office and Custom-house $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. They have offered to give a site and, of course, the Government will take care that it is a proper site.

Mr. WATSON. If that is the reason, why is this vote in the Estimates?

Mr. FOSTER. The reason is that Port Arthur needs a public building, and has given us a site to have one built there.

Mr. WATSON. What is the amount of the population?

Mr. FOSTER. Population, revenue and increased business. The exports amount to the value of $219,000, imports to $310,000. Goods entered for consumption, $310,000; money orders issued and paid, $53,000, and postal revenue about $5,000.

Mr. WATSON. I can understand the plea for a post office at Port Arthur, as it is a growing place and an important point; but it is no justification for the votes passed to-night. This is the first item on which a satisfactory explanation has been offered.

Supreme Court, Ottawa, addition..... $17,000

Mr. FLINT. What is the total cost of the Supreme Court buildings?

Mr. FOSTER. The total cost to December, 1890, was $71,207.

Mr. FLINT. I think most visitors to the capital are rather disappointed with the architectural appearance of the Supreme Court building, and the Government, in spending this additional amount in this manner, while perhaps consulting the interests of economy, are not consulting the higher interests connected with the proper architecture for a building of that kind. I believe the time is coming when the Government should take into consideration, if they can utilize the Supreme Court building for some other purpose, the advisability of placing in the capital a building architecturally fitted for the high position the Supreme Court occupies in the country. Of course, this may be a matter that may take some time, as so much money has been expended on this building. I do not believe the situation, character of architecture and internal arrangement are such as should characterize our highest court. I believe this House would be disposed to be generous whenever the time should come that an appropriation was asked to place the building for this court on a proper footing. The public buildings in Ottawa generally, although no doubt considerable extravagance was displayed, which might, under other circumstances, have been avoided, are yet, on the whole, such as the people of the Dominion regard with pride on account of their architectural proportions, and I think the Supreme Court should occupy a building more worthy of the capital and the purpose for which the building is designed than is the building occupied by the court at the present time.

Toronto Drill Hall..... $40,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What quantity of land has been provided, and where is it?

Mr. DENISON. It is a large lot lying immediately behind Osgoode Hall in the heart of the city.

Walkerton Post Office, &c..... $8,000

Mr. LANDERKIN. What amount has been expended?

Mr. FOSTER. $10,000.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What amount will be required to complete?

Mr. FOSTER. About $20,000.

Mr. WATSON. What was the original contract?

Mr. FOSTER. The contract for the building was $14,550, site $1,491; then there were the necessary expenditures for fittings, heating, furnishings, incidentals and supervision.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Who had the contract for fittings?

Mr. FOSTER. It is generally given to the contractor under architect's estimates.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How much was paid to the clerk of the works?

Mr. FOSTER. $700.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I understand he has received $75 per month for over a year and a half, and that he is still employed.

Mr. FOSTER. At present he is not under pay.

Petrolia Public building..... $7,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the estimated cost of the building?

Mr. FOSTER. For everything included, $28,000. The postal revenue is over $6,000.

Public building at Smith's Falls..... $7,500

Mr. WATSON. What will be the total cost?

Mr. FOSTER. This is an amount to commence the work. I do not find any estimate.

Mr. WATSON. What is the population

Mr. FOSTER. The population is 5,400. The postal revenue is $6,000.

Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.25 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 25th August, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SUPPLY BILL.

Bill (No. 167) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 30th June, 1892, and for other purposes relating to the public service (Mr. Foster), read the second and third times, and passed.

SUPPLY—WEST INDIA STEAMSHIP SUBSIDIES.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I gave notice yesterday to the hon. Minister of Finance that it was my intention to-day to call the attention of the House to the services which are being performed by the several steamships running between the Maritime Provinces and the West Indies, and to move a resolution upon the manner in which those services are being carried out. In fulfilment of my notice, I now rise, Sir, on the motion to go into Supply, to state as nearly as I can the facts in relation to those services, and to ask the House to disapprove of the manner in which the hon. gentleman has conducted the negotiations for them, and the manner in which he has let them. This matter was first brought to the attention of the House by the hon. gentleman in 1889, when he moved that a subsidy amounting to $60,000 a year should be granted by Parliament for the purpose of procuring steamships to run between the Maritime Provinces and the West Indies. That amount of money was voted to the hon. gentleman, and I suppose, although the principle of voting those subsidies was questioned, and severely questioned, by some hon. members of this House, it is now too late in the day to debate whether it was or was not desirable in the first instance that this money should be granted. I remember very well that this question was debated more than once in this House by my hon. friend who then represented Halifax, and whose knowledge of the subject, gained from long experience, gave him a very great advantage in discussing it—knowledge which he had acquired in carrying on trade with the West Indies and which enabled him to speak with authority—and he thought, and a great many on this side of the House concurred in his opinion, that instead of promoting trade, the hon. gentleman would be more likely to injure it, because he would to a great extent destroy the trade which had been carried on for many years with sailing vessels. The hon. gentleman pointed out that it was impossible for sailing vessels to compete with highly-subsidized steamboats; but there would never have been any serious ground for complaining that the quantity of goods which the Dominion of Canada had to exchange for the products of the West Indies could not be carried as a commercial undertaking by the owners of ships which were not subsidized. However, Sir, the hon. gentleman got his grant, and having got it, he advertised in the following month of July for tenders for those services. He divided the tenders into four different classes, which he called the "A," the "B," the "C," and the "D" services. So far as the D service is concerned, it will, I fancy, be eliminated altogether from our discussion, because no tender put in for it was ever accepted by the Government, and no boats have been put on that route.

Mr. FOSTER. No tender was received

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman says no tender was received, and, therefore, so far as I am concerned, I do not propose to refer directly or indirectly to the "D" service. The other three services, "A," "B" and "C," consisted of the following services: "A," from Halifax or St. John to Cuba and return, calling at Havana and Matanzas; "B," from Halifax or St. John to Jamaica and return, calling at Bermuda and Turks Island; "C," from Halifax or St. John (viâ Yarmouth if sailing from St. John) to Demerara and return, calling at certain intermediate ports. The advertisement calling for the tenders contained the following statements, which are material to the argument which I propose to submit to the House at a later stage, to show that the hon. gentleman has not acted consistently with the best interests of the country:—

"The above services to be monthly, and performed by steamships of a speed of not less than 12 knots an hour; and as regards the services marked "A," "B" and "C," of not less than 1,000 tons register, and with accommodation for at least 30 first class passengers; and as regards the service marked "D," of not less than 2,000 tons register, and with accommodation for at least 30 first class passengers.

"As regards the services "A," "B," and "C," persons desiring to offer to perform the same with steamers of less capacity and speed than above mentioned may submit their tenders, specifying the speed and capacity of the boats which they desire to offer, although the conditions above specified are those desired by the Government."

So that it will be seen that for these three services the hon. gentleman desired to procure boats of 1,000 tons in size, capable of steaming 12 knots an hour, and with accommodation for 30 first-class passengers. The hon. gentleman, however, reserved to himself the right to accept steamers of less capacity, not only for the classes specifically mentioned, but, if he desired, for a lower class of boats. The hon. gentleman received a large number of tenders. I am not going into the particulars of them. I desire, in the first place, to call the attention of the House to one tender, which the hon. gentleman received from a Mr. Joseph Wood, of Halifax. The correspondence with reference to his tender is very meagre, but it does seem to me that Mr. Wood was very unceremoniously treated, and very unfortunately treated, in the interests of the country. Mr. Wood had written to the Government on the 15th of February, 1889, when the matter was first mooted in the House, asking the hon. Finance Minister to inform him as to the proposed scheme:

"CENTRAL WHARF,
"HALIFAX, N.S., 15th February, 1889.

"DEAR SIR,—I shall feel obliged if you will inform me what is the proposed scheme of sailings to the West Indies, &c., to which you propose to apply the vote of $60,000 of subsidy named in the estimates submitted to Parliament.

"I presume you will call for fresh tenders, and that all the subsidies which have been are to be rearranged, will be submitted to fair and public competition.

"Considering the trouble and expense I was put to two years ago making proposals, &c., for West India service, I hope you will favour me with full information.

"When your Government advertised in 1887 I supposed you really intended business.

"Steamers suitable for such a service as you require must be built, and unless you stipulate for new steamers with every modern improvement for saving coal, &c., any subsidy will be wasted.

"Yours faithfully,
"JOS. WOOD."

Mr. Wood, who wrote this letter, is, I understand, a gentleman who has been engaged for years in the steamship service, and is at present running a steamer between Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island; and evidently, from the tone of his letter, he had been engaged in negotiations with the department previously, and considered he had not been fairly treated, and hoped on this occasion that the Government really meant business. But he pointed out the fact, which subsequent events established, and which the hon. gentleman was not justified in ignoring, namely, that steamers suitable for the service must be built, and that unless the Government stipulated for new steamers, the subsidy would be wasted. When the tenders were called for by advertisement, Mr. Wood tendered in proper time. He tendered for the service between St. John and Halifax and Demerara, calling at intermediate ports. He said:

"I offer for this route one steamer of 700 to 800 tons register, speed 12 knots, and accommodation for thirty first-class passengers. The steamer to be built in Scotland and classed 100 A 1, at Lloyds, and to be ready for service by September 1st, 1890.

"The subsidy payable by the Government to be $20,000 per annum, payable at the rate of $2,000 per round trip for ten trips to be made in each year, and contract to be for five years."

Accompanying that tender was a letter in which he said that this would be a first-class boat, superior to any steamer now running in the trade, and that its cost would be about $110,000. He also spoke of the trouble he had been to, during the past three years, to establish a Canadian line of steamers to the West Indies, and went on to say:

"If this last effort which I now make proves to be without result, if there is much more delay in deciding the matter, I shall be compelled, of course, to abandon the project altogether."

On the 24th of September, he got a letter from the Deputy Minister of Finance, intimating that his tender was not considered adequate, and would not, therefore, be accepted. Before I pass away from Mr. Wood's tender, I desire to say that he offered a boat complying in all respects, with the requirements the Minister of Finance thought necessary, except as regards tonnage. The tonnage called for was 1,000 tons, and he offered a new boat of from 700 to 800 tons, and proposed to put her on the route by September, 1890. It will be noticed that the Finance Minister, in calling for tenders, although he said the Government desired a boat of 1,000 tons, asked other people to tender for boats of a less tonnage, and less capacity, and less speed. Mr. Wood's tender was unceremoniously rejected. Subsequently the hon. gentleman accepted tenders from Messrs. Pickford & Black of Halifax, for the "A" and "B" services—for the "A" service the steamship Beta, a vessel of 670 tons, with a speed of eleven knots only, and a subsidy of $20,000 a year; and for the "B" service the Alpha, 514 tons, stated by Pickford & Black to be, after having a second deck put on her, 750 tons, with a subsidy of $15,000 per year, and a speed also of eleven knots. So that, although Mr. Wood's tender offering a boat of 700 to 800 tons, and complying, as regards speed, capacity, and passenger accommodation, with all the requirements of the Government, was unceremoniously rejected, Pickford & Black's tenders were accepted for the "A" and "B" services, although they supplied boats much below the 1,000 tons and much below the speed required. The hon. gentleman, I dare say, will explain this. Then, among the other tenders, we have one from Mr. Furness, of England. Mr. Furness is the owner of a large steamship line, a well-known man, in every respect qualified for the undertaking and able to carry it out, his name itself being a guarantee that any contract he entered into would be faithfully and efficiently performed. He tendered at the same time through his agents at St. John; and I want to call special attention to the tender he submitted. On the 29th of August, 1889, he tendered to the Minister of Finance as follows:—

"DEAR SIR,—We are authorized by Christopher Furness, Esq., steamship owner, of West Hartlepool, England, to make the following tender to the Government for steam service between Canada, the West Indies and South America:

"PROPOSED SERVICE.

"A steamer to leave St. John, N.B., once each month for Demerara, calling at the following places, viz.: Bermuda, St. Kitts, Antigua, Guadaloupe, Dominica, Martinique, St Lucia, Barbadoes and Trinidad, and to return by the same route to St. John, N.B., and after landing her mails, passengers and other cargo there then to proceed to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, before departing from St. John on the next voyage.

"In order properly to develop this proposed trade and to establish a first-class service that will be creditable to the Dominion of Canada and likely to compete successfully with existing lines from United States ports, new and fast steamers will have to be built especially adapted for the trade, which Mr. Furness is willing to provide as follows:—

"DESCRIPTION OF STEAMERS.

"Two first class iron or steel steamers to be built specially for the trade, each about 1,100 tons net register, with a speed of from twelve to thirteen knots, accommodation for about fifty first and second class passengers, the Government mails and capacity for about 2,000 tons of cargo: these steamers to be of the highest class and fitted with all the modern improvements, their estimated cost being about £50,000 sterling each.

"In the present state of shipbuilding in England it will be impossible to get these new steamers completed and ready for work before next autumn, and in the meantime Mr. Furness would commence the service almost immediately, and continue it until the new steamers are ready, with either the two superior steamers, Rollo, 1,022 tons, and Orlando, 997 tons, at present engaged in the mail service between Hull and Gothenburg, which have large accommodation for passengers and are lighted throughout by electricity; or the two steamers, Belair, 872 tons, and Cipero, 868 tons, at present engaged in the trade between Glasgow and the West Indies, which have the highest class at Lloyd's (100 A 1), and have sufficient passenger accommodation, with excellent saloons, for commencing the service, the speed of all three steamers being about ten knots.

"TERMS OF CONTRACT.

"The contract to be for a period of five years, but owing to the very great uncertainty regarding the result of the business, which might prove very disastrous, Mr. Furness wishes to have the option of cancelling the contract at any time on giving six months' previous notice to the Government.

"The subsidy to be $50,000 per annum for twelve round voyages, payable in monthly instalments on the completion of each voyage, and with a proportionate allowance for the part of any voyage completed in the event of steamer being lost.

"Owing to the necessity of his giving an early answer to the builders with whom he is in treaty for the new steamers, Mr. Furness would like to know the decision of the Government regarding this tender by 5th September, and you will therefore please communicate same to us by that date if possible."

On the face of it that was a tender, which, one would imagine, would recommend itself to the acceptance of the hon. gentleman. In the first place, it came from a man of the very highest standing, a large steamship owner, who has proved by many years' experience in the business that he was competent to fulfil any contract he entered into; in the next place, the proposal was to build first-class steamships of the speed, size and accommodation called for, and put them on the route at the earliest possible moment: in the third place, he proposed, in the meantime, until the steamers could be built, to supply other steamers of proper capacity, size and speed. Nothing would seem to be wanting, and he winds up his tender by stating that it was necessary he should have an answer by the fifth day of the following month. I have to complain that when the hon. gentleman had it in his power to enter into a contract with this large steamship owner, he failed to do so, and he failed to give Mr. Furness any answer until the following 20th of September, so that over a fortnight was allowed to lapse after the period of time when Mr. Furness told the hon. gentleman it was necessary he should give his answer, before the Minister of Finance gave any answer at all. Before giving his answer, he reported to the Council on the 18th of September in favour of accepting Mr. Furness' tender for service "C," his tender being the lowest, namely, $50,000 a year, as against $54,000 a year, the tender put in by one Mr. Van Wart, of the Province of New Brunswick. On the 20th September, the Minister of Finance telegraphed to Mr. Schofield, Furness's agent, offering him $48,000 pro rata for the intermediate or substitute steamers to go immediately on the route, and $50,000 after the new ones were put on. I do not think he needs have haggled as to the $2,000. I think his subsequent arrangements with Van Wart and his associates, and afterwards with Pickford & Black, as to the terms on which they should undertake the "A" and "B" service, show that he was not very particular about $2,000, or about twice or four times $2,000, and I think he was to blame in not having let Mr. Schofield know by the 5th September, whether his tender would be accepted or not, instead of delaying it until the 20th of that month, and then offering $48,000 instead of $50,000 for which Mr. Furness offered to enter into the contract. On the 27th September, the Minister telegraphed to Furness' agent, and on the 10th October he appears to have had a personal interview with Mr. Schofield in St. John. On the same day Mr. Furness telegraphed from England declining to enter into the contract, and the reason he gives is set out in the correspondence which I hold in my hand. I may say, in reference to this correspondence, that it is brought down in such a slovenly way, not arranged at all in chronological order, that it necessitates anyone who is interested reading it over four or five times before he can get any proper idea of what it is about. August and September are mixed up together, and sometimes August correspondence is placed after October. Mr. Furness telegraphed:

"Steamers offered withdrawn. Agree, postpone until steamers can be obtained. Authorize you to close on our terms, subject to being able to purchase suitable steamers."

After some telegraphic correspondence had passed, and, as I said, a personal interview appears to have been had with Mr. Schofield by the Minister, we have a letter written on the 24th October by Furness' agent, in which he says:

"Mr. Furness states that, owing to the Government's delay in communicating with him, the substitute steamers which were under offer to him were withdrawn, and that his recent efforts have been entirely unsuccessful in securing either those steamers or any other suitable ones with which to undertake the service, and that, owing to the very great uncertainty and risk connected with the business, he would not be willing to build new steamers without having first had some little previous practical experience of the trade with second-hand ones."

Then the letter goes on:

"After full consultation with our St. John friends, we have, therefore, concluded to withdraw Mr. Furness's tender which we do with very great reluctance, and at the same time we desire to thank you for the very great consideration that you have extended to us in the matter."

So we have on the 24th October the unfortunate announcement made by Mr. Furness that, owing to the delay of the Government in communicating with him, he had lost the steamers which, when he made the tender, he had an opportunity of chartering and putting on the route, and that he had to withdraw his tender accordingly. The Minister of Finance seems to me to have been culpable in that he did not, within the time Mr. Furness asked him to do so, acknowledge the receipt of the tender or make any statement as to whether he would accept it or not. A very great misfortune happened to the service and to Canada in that way, because I do not think anyone who knows anything of these gentlemen would doubt that, if they had received the contract, it would have been carried out faithfully, efficiently and well, and that the subsequent evils to the Canadian trade arising out of the contract the hon. gentleman did subsequently make, would not have occurred. After Mr. Furness had been, as I may say, put out of the way, after he had withdrawn his tender, the hon. gentleman reopened negotiations with his friend Mr. Van Wart, who lives, I believe, in Fredericton, and he talks on behalf of himself and other associates, but he does not say who they are. The hon. gentleman reopens negotiations with Mr. Van Wart. He had put in a tender for this "C" service amounting to $4,000 more than the tender of Mr. Furness, and I find that on the 8th November, the Minister of Finance telegraphs to him asking for lower figures. The correspondence is very amusing which took place at that time between the hon. gentleman and his friend, and I will ask the permission of the House to read it, that is, the telegraphic correspondence.

"Can you offer any lower figures for 'C' service as advertised for? Also, for what can you put on 11-knot 750-ton steamers, same route?

"G. E. FOSTER."

This was replied to on the same day:

"Recent rise in freights and iron prevents reducing "C" service below forty-one hundred, eleven knot class thirty-six hundred. Can you give early answer? Would visit Ottawa immediately and arrange."

"J. A. VAN WART."

The first impression one would form from reading this telegram would be that, after Mr. Van Wart had tendered, there had been a rise in freights and iron, but that would have resulted in an increase and not a reduction in the amount of his tender, but it will be seen that he was willing to reduce his tender from $54,000 to $49,200, or just $800 below Schofield's offer. The hon. gentleman replies the same day:

"Forward immediately your tenders in writing. Accompany with statement of bonâ fides and probable time commence service."

And on the same day from Fredericton there comes the offer from Mr. Van Wart for himself and his associates, offering to perform the service from St. John to Demerara and return by steamships of not less than 1,000 tons register and a speed of not less than 12 knots for the sum of $4,100 for each round trip, to be commenced with one steamer on or before the 1st of January following, and every six weeks thereafter, and within one year such service to be performed with two steamers making monthly trips and not less than twelve round trips in each year. The hon. gentleman closed with his offer, and on the 10th November Mr. Van Wart was informed that the Government had accepted his tender, and the hon. gentleman took special pains, in communicating that to Mr. Van Wart, to repeat to him that the boats were to be of 1,000 tons register and 12 knots speed, and that the price to be paid was $4,100 per round trip. The contract then, excepting the signing of the formal document, was complete, and no sooner was it complete than we had an application from Mr. Van Wart asking the Government to yield and make certain concessions to them, and the first concession they asked was that the Government should accept, instead of 1,000-ton boat of a speed of 12 knots, a small boat of 732 tons called the Portia. They accepted Mr. Van Wart's offer and the Portia, of 732 tons, and of a much less speed than 12 knots an hour, went on the service and performed trips in January, February and March, notwithstanding that she was nearly 300 tons less than the size stipulated for, and notwithstanding that she was a hundred tons less than the boats which Mr. Joseph Wood had tendered to put on. The Portia performs her two round trips and receives the $4,100 subsidy each round trip. Sir, we find at this time appearing upon the scene and in the correspondence, a gentleman who is not unknown to the politicians of this country, a gentleman by name George F. Baird, formerly a representative in this House, or rather a man who sat in this House for some years pretending to be a representative for the County of Queen's, N.B. We find that gentleman appearing upon the scene just after Mr. Van Wart's tender had been accepted by the Minister of Finance; we find him telegraphing to Mr. Foster, Minister of Finance, over his own signature, stating that this Portia was a sister ship to the Miranda—whatever boat the Miranda might be does not appear—and that no other boats offered compared with these vessels. So we find the hon. gentleman acceding to his request, and on the 29th of October, Mr. Van Wart writes to the Minister of Finance—evidently on very confidential terms, because he addresses him as "Dear Foster," and stating that, after trying all available sources, the Portia was the best boat he could get. Well, Sir, she went on, and after she had run her three trips Mr. George F. Baird telegraphs to the hon. gentleman asking him to allow a vessel called the Loanda to go on the service, and the Loanda went on the service. On the 18th of March of that year, while Mr. Baird was a member of this House, he writes to Mr. Foster: "I have chartered the Loanda," &c., &c., for this service. Now, I want to state to the House that the Portia performed the service and earned the $4,100 for each round trip before the company, which was afterwards formed, had received its letters patent, and although the money was not paid to Mr. Van Wart and his associates, of whom George F. Baird was one, the service entitling him to receive the money was performed in direct violation, as I state, of the Independence of Parliament Act, and Mr. George F. Baird, during those months, sat in this House as a contractor for the "C" service, having chartered a vessel—and I have it here under his own signature that he had personally chartered it—and that vessel performed the service and earned the money which he voted in this House should be paid. Subsequently the Canadian and West Indian Steamship Company was formed, of which Mr. Baird and Mr. Van Wart were members amongst others—the others I do not know, and I am not interested in knowing—formed as nobody can doubt, for the purpose of avoiding the Independence of Parliament Act. I do not think anybody can doubt that if Mr. Baird, as he says himself, chartered that boat, if Mr. Van Wart tendered in the first instance on behalf of himself and Baird, and Baird chartered the boat, if the boat performed the service and earned the money, and Baird was a member of Parliament at the time, he was violating the Act when he was voting that money for this service, and when any hon. gentleman votes money in this House for carrying out a contract in which he is personally interested, he is acting in a manner that this House has already described as discreditable. The next step in the programme is that this Loanda is placed upon the service. The Loanda, I may state to the House, did not conform to the requirements of the service as called for originally by the Minister of Finance in his printed call for tenders, or as repeated in the subsequent call when he asked Mr. Van Wart to amend his tender. In both instances the boats were to be 1,000-ton boats, of the speed of 12 knots an hour. The Loanda was a boat inferior in strength, inferior in tonnage, and disgraceful in accommodation, as I will shortly prove to the House. I cannot find that before the hon. Minister accepted this boat of inferior tonnage, and inferior speed, and of disgraceful accommodation, he ever sent any gentleman, any ship-owner, or any person having a knowledge of ships, to inspect that boat and see if she was fit for the service which he was then undertaking. It must be remembered that the hon. gentleman was seeking, as he stated himself, to open up a good service in the interest of Canada. In the speech in which he moved the House to vote that money in 1889, he stated it was of the utmost importance, absolutely essential, that we should have, not ordinary steamships but first-class boats, capable of a speed vieing with the boats running between New York and the West Indies. The hon. gentleman knew, as he said when he was insisting upon a 12-knot speed, that he was insisting upon a rate of speed that involved the expenditure of a very large sum of money; and every hon. gentleman in this House who has had anything to do with steamships, knows that when you get beyond nine or ten knots at the outside for a steamship, every knot that you exact beyond that involves an enormous outlay of money; and when the hon. gentleman required 12-knot boats, he said he did it because it was essential in the interests of Canada that we should have a line running between the West Indies and Canada that would build up this trade by the certainty and frequency of the trips of the boats; and, Sir, by insisting upon these extraordinary requirements, the hon. gentleman frightened off all the class of men who were willing to tender and put on an ordinary boat. He had tenders by the score of boats of a less speed and a less tonnage, but he rejected them all with contumely, and he required this first-class boat. After Van Wart & Baird got the contract he put on the Portia, in the first instance, of a tonnage of 732, then he took the Loanda of 899 tons, and of a slower speed than twelve knots, of a speed of which I will give the House an idea directly when I read a letter from one of the passengers on that boat. Sir, I state, therefore, that there appeared to be a desire, from the very moment the hon. gentleman let that contract to Mr. Van Wart, to give him the contract on terms much more favourable than those asked for from the general public, a desire to grant concessions to him which were withheld from the general public, a desire, in other words, to treat him favourably at the expense of the country. Now, we find that that boat commenced to make her trips in May. On her first trip she left St. John the 27th of May, she made another trip on the 9th of July, she made another trip leaving St. John 20th of August, she made another trip leaving St. John the 17th October, and so far as Mr. Baird and his company are concerned, I think I am right in stating that the trip which she made in the following November was the last trip made by the Loanda under the ownership of the Canadian and West Indian Steamship Company alias Van Wart & Baird. I will point out to the House afterwards what became of the boat and why she was retained. It appears further from the papers that the Minister of Finance went down to the Province of New Brunswick and to the City of St. John, some time, I cannot ascertain accurately when, during the summer—August or September, I fancy it to have been—of 1890. It appears further that the hon. gentleman was informed by Mr. Baird, as he subsequently reported to Council, that this service was not a paying service. The hon. gentleman then and there, as he subsequently reported to the Council, agreed not only to continue this old boat the Loanda, inferior in size, tonnage and speed, and accommodation, so much inferior that she has been voted a disgrace to the whole service, but he actually agreed then and there with his friend to pay, not $4,100 per round trip, as agreed upon by the contract entered into by the Canadian and West Indian Company and the Government, but to pay him $6,150 per round trip for this very same service. And he agreed not only to pay $6,150, or $2,050 more than the contract stipulated for, but he agreed that the extra sum of $2,050 should be applicable, not to the future service to be performed, but to all the past service of the Loanda, and Mr. Baird at that time agreed to continue her on. The hon. gentleman, on 26th September, I think, reported to Council in that sense, and in his report he said he had made that arrangement with Mr. Baird when he went down to New Brunswick and before he went to the West Indies. The report was confirmed by Order in Council on 1st October, and it was said to have been made on 26th February, which is evidently a clerical error for 26th September, because it was confirmed on 1st October. In that report it is stated as follows:—

"The Minister further stated that in July last the manager of the company——"

Who was Geo. Baird, as he signs himself.--

—"informed the Minister of Finance that owing to the high price of charters, the heavy port charges in the West Indian ports, and the other large expenses incidental to the opening up and maintenance of the service, the subsidy agreed upon was insufficient to obtain the line, and that for each voyage made the company had been subject to a very considerable loss; and that it would be impossible for it to carry on the service under the existing conditions. The Minister of Finance, after consulting with the members of Council then in Ottawa, visited St. John and went carefully into the business of the company, and finally, in order to prevent an interruption of communication until Council should assemble in the autumn, he agreed to pay the company for each voyage made by the SS. Loanda on the basis of $49,200 for eight trips."

So the hon. gentleman personally undertook the responsibility, first, of doing what I think he should have delegated to a more competent man, a man engaged in shipping and acquainted with the shipping trade, which I do not think he ever was, of enquiring into the results of the round trips previously made by this boat; and, in the next place, he undertook personally to agree to the payment of $6,100 per round trip, instead of $4,100. When the contract was made in the previous March with the Canadian and West Indian Steamship Company it was expressly stipulated that they should put two ships on that route; that they should run every month a round trip, in accordance with the provisions of the tenders which were originally issued, and there was a provision made that for the first six months the company should be allowed to use the Portia, which was not of the size and tonnage required, but only for six months. The hon. gentleman appears to have violated the contract drawn. He did not require from Mr. Baird and his associates that two steamships should run after July, or that they should be of the size, speed and requirements of the contract; but he allowed the Loanda to go on running, making a round trip every six or eight weeks, and he paid them 50 per cent. more than under the contract they were entitled to receive from the round trip. The hon. gentleman may possibly be able to explain and justify to this House why he did so. But when the hon. gentleman made this report to Council he knew, although he did not state it to Council, that the time had elapsed during which they were permitted by the contract to run one boat only. He knew that under the contract which the Government had made with this company they were bound to put on two boats; he did not report that to the Government, nor did he report that they were running a boat in all respects inferior to the requirements of the contract. The Order in Council further said:

"The Minister also recommends that he be authorized to pay the Canadian, West Indian and South American Steamship Company (Limited) for each voyage made by the steamship Loanda, at the rate agreed upon by him, as above stated."

But that very report shows that the Minister did not stop there. He had learned from Mr. Baird, as he says, in that personal interview which he had with him in St. John, that it was a losing speculation, that they had not got the bonanza they expected when they tendered. He agreed to pay them, not only for future trips to be made during the year, 50 per cent. beyond the contract price, but this increased price was to apply to all the past trips, and he agreed that at the end of the season of 1890 that contract should be surrendered and accepted by the Government from the hands of the company. The hon. gentleman agreed, moreover, to recommend to Council that a bonus, as I understand it, and I can understand it in no other way, should be paid to another company to take that contract off their hands. Pickford & Black, who had entered into a contract for the "A" and "B" service, to run to Jamaica and Cuba, about this time, were asked by the hon. gentleman the price at which they would tender for this new service which Mr. Baird had found unprofitable, and they told the hon. gentleman, as will be seen at page 62 of the papers, that they were willing to tender at a certain figure. Now, Sir, I want to call your attention to the fact that on the 22nd September, 1890, we find the following offer from Pickford & Black addressed to the Minister of Finance:—

"OTTAWA, 22nd September, 1890.

"Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER,
"Minister of Finance.

"DEAR SIR,—I beg to submit the following offer to perform a steam service from St. John, Halifax, to Demerara, calling at Bermuda, St. Kitts, Antigua, Guadaloupe, Martinique, St. Lucia, Barbadoes, Trinidad, going and returning.

"Such services to be performed by boats classed A 1 at Lloyds, twelve knots speed, and of not less than one thousand tons net register, with accommodation for forty first-class passengers.

"Sailings to be on fixed regular dates and not less than one every four weeks, but I am to have the privilege of establishing sailings every three weeks, if in the interests of trade and the line it is thought desirable by me to do so.

"For a sailing every four weeks I ask five thousand ($5,000) dollars per trip, equal to sixty thousand dollars per annum, and for each additional sailing, not exceeding four, the sum of two thousand ($2,000) dollars is to be paid.

"If the Government promptly accepts this offer, I will guarantee to have two boats on the route not later than 1st January, 1891.

"Yours truly,
(Sgd.) "W. A. BLACK."

That is dated the 22nd September, 1890, but the letter asking them to make that offer does not appear in the correspondence. This offer is made after the hon. gentleman reported that he had had an interview with Mr. Baird in St. John, when Mr. Baird told him the service was an unprofitable one, and when he agreed to increase the subsidy from $4,100 to $6,150. This firm comes in soon after, on 22nd September, and agrees to perform this service with similar steamers for $5,000 per round trip, and to put on two steamers after the 1st January. The hon. gentleman accepts the offer; but mark you, at the very time that offer was made, and accompanying that letter and dated from Ottawa, showing that Pickford & Black were here in personal communication with the Minister, that very same time there comes an offer from Pickford & Black asking that the sum of $15,000 be paid to them on the "A" and "B" contract, and beyond what in their contract they were entitled to, or had ever asked for. The facts connected with that are these: That when the "A" and "B" contract was entered into—that is, the contract for running steamboats to Jamaica and Cuba—there was some delay in finally concluding on the terms, and in the month of November the Minister of Finance wrote to Pickford & Black, when the terms had been agreed upon, asking that firm from what dates they expected their subsidy to be paid, and Pickford & Black write, stating that they expect to be paid from November and December respectively. The letter in which they state that is dated on the 21st January, 1890, is addressed to the Deputy of the Minister of Finance and reads as follows:

"HALIFAX, N.S., 21st January, 1890.

"J. M. COURTNEY, Esq.,
"Deputy Minister of Finance, Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR,—We are in receipt of your favour of the 15th instant and note contents.

"On the 16th November, Hon. Mr. Foster wrote us advising that our tender for "B" service had been accepted, and on the 10th December we heard through Mr. Kenny that the Government had accepted our offer for "A" service.

"We suppose the contracts for these services will date from and with the November voyage of the Alpha which was begun November 15th, and for the Beta, with the voyage on which she started from here to Cuba, December 25th.

"We shall be glad to receive the contracts at your convenience.

"Yours truly,
(Sgd.) "PICKFORD & BLACK."

So that when they were asked in the month of January, 1890, from what dates they expected to be paid their subsidies, and they answered: "With respect to 'A' service, from November, and with respect to 'B' service, from December;" and the contract entered into between them and the Government contained a stipulation for the payment of these subsidies just as they asked it. They went on and performed the service and they got paid; but afterwards, when the hon. gentleman was negotiating with them in the month of September, 1890, to take off the hands of Mr. Van Wart and Mr. Baird the contract for the service, they asked him if he would not pay them $15,000 additional for the running of the boats Alpha and Beta on the "A" and "B" service anterior to November and December, and at a time when they were not under contract or agreement with the Government to run them at all. These gentlemen had been running the boats the previous summer as a commercial speculation without a contract with the Government direct or implied, and when they agreed with the hon. gentleman to take the contract off the hands of the Canadian West Indian Steamship Company, they asked at the same time by letter that they should be paid the sum of $15,000 for the time their boats were running before they ever entered into a contract with the Government at all. The hon. Minister of Finance bowed his head and accepted, and he reported in favour of their offer being accepted by the Government, and Pickford & Black took the contract off the hands of Baird and were paid the $15,000, and Baird was paid the $2,000 extra for the round trips the Loanda had run, or afterwards ran, and everybody appeared to be satisfied except the poor tax-payer who had lost from $35,000 to $40,000 by the transaction. But, Sir, what took place next? Did the Finance Minister exact from his new tenderers, or new contractors, that they would carry out the terms of the contract and put boats on, as they stipulated they would? Not at all. The hon. gentleman permitted the Loanda, a discreditable boat as I allege she was, to continue on-that route long after they had entered into the contract.

Mr. FOSTER. How long?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I will give the hon. gentleman the dates as nearly as I can gather them. They commenced in December, and they performed the service until the following April with the Loanda, and the expressed stipulation they made in the month of September, that on the first day of the year they would put on two new boats, was not carried out, and has not been carried out, as far as I know, to this date; at any rate, it was not carried out up to a very short time ago, as I will show. I do not know that upon that branch of the case I need say anything more. I state to the House, as I gather from these papers, that the hon. gentleman entered into an agreement with Pickford & Black to take that contract off Baird's hands, and having agreed the month before, or about the same time, to pay Baird 50 per cent. more than the contract entitled him to, he paid Pickford & Black $15,000, ostensibly for the running of their boats, before they entered into a contract with the Government, but practically and really, as I say, as a bonus to induce them to take the contract off Baird's hands. Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman in his report to Council, which is dated the 1st October, 1890, made a report upon both branches of the case simultaneously, as if they were one dependent upon the other. He reported that he had agreed to pay to Baird's company $6,150 per trip, instead of the contract rate of $4,100 per trip. He reported that Pickford & Black undertook to put on two steamers of a thousand tons capacity and twelve knots speed, and with passenger accommodation, and monthly trips, on consideration of being paid $60,000 a year, with the option of making extra trips not exceeding four, at $2,000 per trip. He recommended that offer be accepted for four years from the 1st of January, 1891, and recommended at the same time that Pickford & Black be paid the $15,000 I speak of. Of course, Council accepted his report, and these persons were paid almost immediately. The very month in which the hon. gentleman reported to Council, his report was ratified, the $15,000 was paid to Pickford & Black, and $2,000 per trip extra was paid to the Canadian and West India Steamship Company beyond what their contract entitled them to. At that time it was known that the Loanda was not a suitable boat. At that time the hon. gentleman had evidence under his eyes, in a letter addressed to him by Pickford & Black, that the Loanda was not a suitable boat. In a letter dated the 16th of October they say to the hon. gentleman:

"The Loanda is not a suitable boat in our opinion, and from reports which have lately reached us this opinion is confirmed. It may be that we shall be compelled to continue her after December 31st, but only because we are forced to shall it be done."

I mention that to show that that boat for which the hon. gentleman had a short time previously agreed to pay so much more than the contract had justified him in paying was an unsuitable boat in the opinion of the very men who had taken the contract off the hands of the Canadian and West India Steamship Company, and that boat was taken over by them during the months of January, February, March and April. Now, a short time after they got this new contract from the Government, knowing that they had contracted to put on two new boats, they also applied for remissions of their contract. On the 12th of February, Pickford & Black cabled from London to the Minister of Finance that the Loanda was the only suitable boat they could get, and asked if she could be put upon the route, although not up to the requirements of the contract. There is nothing on the face of the papers to show whether that telegram was answered or not. But I find these gentlemen writing on the 17th of March from Halifax to Mr. Foster in the following terms:

"Under the date of 5th March our Mr. Black (who has been for the past six weeks searching England and Scotland for 12-knot boats suitable in size and draft of water to fill the requirements of the contract) writes that he can find piles of 9 and 10-knotters, but as yet has been unable to come across anything of the size required of 12 knots. While we are most anxious to fill this contract in every respect, both as regards speed, passengers' accommodation and size of the ships, we would, at the same time, beg to call your attention to the fact that all the boats running from New York to the West Indies make a speed not exceeding an average of 10 knots, and that practically the service will be just as efficiently performed by boats of this class as those of greater speed, as under any circumstances there must be considerable loss of time in port when we have two boats running, as the requirements of the service will not, for some time, warrant us in making more than monthly sailings. With 10 knot boats, we would lose from a week to ten days on each trip, lying idle in port, and with 12-knot boats, this loss of time would be doubled. We feel confident that if, after due consideration, you would so modify the contract as to allow us to perform the service with 10-knot boats, you would have no reason to regret it and we would be quickly in a position to fill the service to the satisfaction of the public.

"Mr. Black also advises us that he can charter the S.S. Tolga to run in company with the Loanda, until new boats can be procured, but we think if you will allow us to place 10-knot boats permanently on the route, he would, probably, be able immediately to procure them, in which case the chartering of the Tolga may not be necessary.

"In conclusion, we beg to offer you our congratulations on your return, and that your Government has been so well sustained in the last election."

That was one of the most important paragraphs in the letter from those gentlemen, who were asking that boats which could be put on the route for $20,000 a year less than boats which their contract required, should be accepted at their hands at the same price.

Mr. FOSTER. Would you say just now whether they were?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I will say they were not accepted. I will say that the gentlemen were permitted to run old boats below the required tonnage, although on the face of the correspondence the hon. gentleman refuses their offer. I say that they were put on, with the consent of the hon. gentleman, after the Loanda had been driven off by an indignant public from the route, and the hon. gentleman appears, so far as I can gather, to assent to the regular subsidy being paid for the Taymouth Castle. Now, the hon. gentleman asked me to say whether they accepted that offer. I believe they did not accept it, and I will read to the House, as it is nothing but fair that I should, a letter which he wrote in the following month:—

"I have your letter of the 17th April, with reference to the substitution of the steamship Taymouth Castle for the Loanda.

"As you state, the former vessel is beyond the requirements of the contract, in size, but not so far as her speed is concerned, beyond nine knots. It would appear that she is to all intents and purposes a cargo boat, and will no doubt be an improvement upon the Loanda."

Here is a boat which they were offering to put on the line, which the hon. gentleman said himself was a cargo boat capable of running a speed of nine knots, which he acknowledges will be an improvement on the Leanda, and he goes on and pays the subsidy for it. That is my answer to the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman goes on:

"In this connection, I might call your attention to the comments in the press, which have appeared lately in the upper as well as the lower province papers, and which are not at all complimentary to the service as now maintained.

"It is of great importance that at the very earliest period you should advise me as to whether or not your firm will be able to put on vessels by the 1st July, which shall conform to the terms of the contract, and if arrangements are being made to build suitable permanent vessels for the route."

Now, on the face of the correspondence the hon. gentleman appears not to accept in so many words the offers which they made; but the hon. gentleman allows them to put on the Taymouth Castle, which he calls a cargo boat, capable of a speed of nine knots, and she has remained on that route from that day to this. They say that she is a better boat than the Leanda, and they have paid for her at the rate of $60,000 a year. She succeeded the Leanda, which remained the whole time that Baird's company had the contract, and after the time Pickford & Black took the contract off that company's hands and received a handsome bonus, till the following April. What was the character of this boat, the Leanda, for which such an enormous amount of money was paid? The hon. gentleman may in this connection recall the language he used to this House when he asked the House to vote that large amount of money for this service. He told them that he only justified it because it was necessary to have a service of first-class steamboats capable of highest speed, so that we could outvie New York; and I will read you a letter from a passenger on board of the Leanda which, in the month of April last, appeared in the Monetary Times; and to which the hon. gentleman, in his letter of 4th of May, no doubt, referred as some correspondence which was not complimentary:

"Editor Monetary Times:

"SIR,—It is a well known fact that the facilities afforded by the Canadian and West India Steamship Line sailing between St. John, Halifax and the West Indies are very poor, both for shippers and passengers, but few people know, perhaps, what a disgraceful state it has got into.

"I was unfortunately obliged to take passage on the SS. Leanda of this line on her last trip from Trinidad to St. John (being unable to get a boat of another line), having an idea that the accommodation was not very good, but not that it could have possibly been as bad as it is. I shall be pleased if you will show the matter up through your columns, as it is really to the interest of the travelling public, shippers, and I might say the public generally, that this state of things should be remedied, else they will go on and draw their subsidy and give nothing in return but very poor service.

"Complaints have been general for some time back as to the slow time this line makes, but their last trip beats the record.

"The Leanda left Halifax 10th February, reached Demerara 8th March, left on the 9th and arrived in St. John 31st March, thus taking 48 days to make the round trip.

"The boilers of the steamer, which had been leaking on the down trip, had got so bad after leaving St. Lucia that they with difficulty steamed four knots, and on reaching Barbadoes were obliged to remain a couple of days for repairs. By the time they had returned to Barbadoes the boilers again began to leak, and got worse as we went, until it was difficult to keep on the fires. And to add to this trouble, the coal was nearly all 'slack,' which fell through the grates in the furnace. The connections with the wheel on the 'bridge' were worn or broken, so that the steering had to be done from the stern.

"The worst time on an average was made between Bermuda and St. John, viz.: 4 1-5 knots, and that with good weather all the way. We had to stop during this run (which occupied seven days) three different times to tighten up the machinery, viz.: on 27th and 28th March, half an hour each, and on the 29th for fifty minutes.

"This line is the laughing-stock of the West Indies: neither shippers nor importers place any reliance on it. The passenger accommodation is of the poorest possible description, the staterooms dirty and improperly furnished. The food supplied is of the cheapest, and frequently unfit to eat; while the table linen is filthy, and the table napkins, especially, look more like dusters, and are all badly worn. The steward goes around with dirty grey flannel shirt, pants and boots; waiter No. 1 appears at table in a dirty pink woollen undershirt, pants (tied at waist with an old suspender), and a pair of boots. Waiter No. 2 wore similar costume, but no boots, and his feet looked as though never washed since he left home. The passengers were always glad to reach a port where they could get ashore and get a good square meal, and also procure provisions to carry them to the next port.

"The captain, by contract, supplies the food, and always turned a deaf ear when complaints were made. Even the men complained of not getting enough to eat, and three days before reaching St. John the firemen waited on the captain with a request for more food, or they could not work.

"The cook (an East Indian) was about as dirty a man as they could pick up, but then they got him cheap and it served their purpose. Passengers when passing the cook house had many a time to shut their eyes to what was going on. It is simply an imposition on the travelling public to advertise to sell tickets as they do for a first-class passage, with such miserable accommodation.

"ONTARIAN.

"13th April, 1891."

Mr. TUPPER. Is that signed?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes: signed "Ontarian." Letters making similar complaints, if I mistake not, appeared in the St. John Sun. The hon. gentleman himself, in his letter, calls attention to the disgraceful condition of the vessel, and the contractors themselves admitted that it was not a fit boat for the contract. In another letter, which will be found on page 73, they reply with regard to the qualifications of the Leanda:

They thus acknowledge that this boat, for which they were receiving $60,000 subsidy from the month of November to May, was a disgraceful boat and unfit for the service. Still, the Canadian and West Indian Company kept her on the route every month until November, when they handed her over to Messrs. Pickford & Black to continue the service. I have looked through the papers, but have been unable to find that a single dollar of reduction was ever made on account of the insufficiency of this boat, either from the moneys we agreed to pay the Canadian and West Indian Steamship Company or to Pickford & Black, who were paid $15,000 bonus for taking the contract off their hands. In that connection, a new contract was entered into with Pickford & Black, who obtained a much larger sum than was paid the other contractors. They put on the Taymouth Castle last April in substitution, and the hon. gentleman himself designated that vessel as a cargo boat capable of going nine knots per hour, and this is the boat that fulfils a service for which first-class boats of 1,000 tons registered tonnage and twelve knots speed, and first-class accommodation for thirty passengers, were required. Yet not a cent of reduction was made, and our money continued to be paid to the service, and, as far as I can ascertain, is being paid to this day by the Taymouth Castle. Taking the evidence of the hon. gentleman himself, that steamer not only does not comply with the requirements of the contract in any respect, but is totally unsuitable to perform this service, which alone, the hon. gentleman said, when the money was voted, would justify the House in voting it. I have stated to the House the facts as far as I could gather them. I hold in my hands the manifests of the cargoes carried by these boats during the time they have been in the service. I believe these manifests have been supplied to each member of the House, and if any member choses to examine them—these relating only to the "C" service, which I have been chiefly dealing with, running to Demerara—they will see that instead of a trade having been built up, it has depreciated, and the last cargo in that steamer Lounda from Demerara and the West Indian Islands to St. John and Halifax is a bagatelle, showing that the expense is not justified, and that instead of our building up a large trade, the trade has positively decreased, until it has dwindled down to really a trifle; and yet this is the service for which we pay this enormous sum. In view of these facts, I have determined to move a resolution, reciting them in chronological order, and asking the House to disapprove the conduct of the hon. Minister of Finance in the premises. I beg, therefore, to move:

That in the Session of 1889 Parliament voted the sum of $69,000 as a subsidy to provide for a line of steamships to run between the ports of Halifax and St. John and the West Indies and South America.

That in the month of July, 1889, tenders were called for by the Minister of Finance, to be received up to August 31st, 1889, for the several steam services required.

That three of such services were called respectively "A," "B" and "C" service; "A." being from Halifax or St. John to Cuba; "B," being from Halifax or St. John to Jamaica, and "C." being from Halifax or St. John (viâ Yarmouth, if from St. John) to Demerara, calling at certain intermediate ports.

That the advertisement for such tenders provided that the services were to be monthly, and to be performed by steam vessels of not less than 1,000 tons register, with a speed of not less than 12 knots an hour and with accommodation for at least thirty first-class passengers.

That such call for tenders also provided that persons desiring to offer to perform the same with boats of less capacity and speed than above stated might submit their tenders, specifying the speed and capacity of the vessels they desired to offer.

That pursuant to such call for tenders a large number were received, among them tenders for services "A" and "B" from Messrs. Pickford & Black, of Halifax, N.S., which were, after modifications, accepted, and a contract was on the 23rd day of April, 1890, entered into between said firm and the Government to perform said services as follows:—Service "A" with the steamer Beta (677 tons) and service "B" with the steamer Alpha (750 tons), and the said contract, at the request of the said contractors, was to be deemed to have been in force with regard to service "A" from the 24th day of December, 1889, and with regard to service "B" from the 15th day of November in said year, and to remain in force for the term of five years from said dates.

That among the tenders for the "C" service was one from Joseph Wood, of Halifax, N.S., providing a service, St. John and Halifax to Demerara, calling at intermediate ports, as required by the call for tenders, offering one steamer of 700 or 800 tons register, speed 12 knots, accommodation for 30 first-class passengers and classed A1 at Lloyds, and to be ready for service by September 1st, 1890, for the sum of $20,000, payable at the rate of $2,000 per round trip for ten trips to be made each year, and contract to be for five years.

That the Minister declined to accept such tender, on the ground that he did not consider the same adequate.

That in addition to the above tender for "C" service a number of others were received, but of those conforming to the Government's requirements (viz., 1,000 tons and 12 knots speed) the lowest were those of the said Pickford & Black, sailing from Halifax, $48,000 a year, and Mr. Furness, of England, sailing from St. John, $50,000 per year, and Mr. Van Wart (for himself and associates), sailing from St. John, $54,000 a year.

That the Minister of Finance on the 18th of September, 1889, recommended to Council the acceptance of the Furness tender.

That although such tender of Mr. Furness urged the necessity of his receiving the decision of the Government by September 5th such decision was not communicated to him until the 20th September, when the Finance Minister telegraphed his, Mr. Furness' agent offering $50,000 per year after the new boats referred to in Furness' offer were put on and $48,000 a year pro rata for the substituted steamers, until new ones were put on the route.

That on the 24th of October, 1889, Mr. Furness informed the Finance Minister that owing to the Government's delay in communicating with him the substitute steamers which were under offer to him were withdrawn, and that he had been unsuccessful in securing other suitable boats.

That on the 8th of November following the Finance Minister reopened negotiations with Messrs. Pickford & Black, and by telegraph with the said Van Wart for said "C" service, and on the following day the said Van Wart tendered, offering steamships of 1,000 tons and 12 knots speed, reducing his price from $54,000 to $49,000 or at the rate of $4,100 for each round trip, and providing one steamer making trips every six weeks for first year and two steamers making monthly trips in subsequent years

That on the 15th November following the Minister reported to Council in favour of accepting Mr. Van Wart's offer upon the above conditions, which report was concurred in.

That the said Van Wart, who had tendered for himself and associates, after the acceptance of his tender organized a company called the Canadian, West Indian and South American Steamship Company (Limited), and took out letters patent therefor under the Companies' Act and in the name of the said company, and on the day of March, A.D. 1890, entered into a contract with the Government to carry out such tender.

That Mr. Geo. F. Baird, then a member of the House of Commons for Queen's County, N.B., one of the associates of the said Van Wart in such tender, after the formation of the said company became the manager thereof.

That the contract so entered into provided that the said company should carry on said service with two steamers of not less than 1,000 tons register and of a speed not less than 12 knots, and with accommodation for not less than thirty first-class passengers, with a proviso that the service might be carried on for six months by the contractors with the SS. Portia.

That the Portia is a steamer of 732 tons only, and of a less speed than that tendered for, and was put on the route in the month of January, and performed two round trips in the months of January, February, March and and April, payment for which was not made till after the company was organized in March.

That in the month of May the SS. Lounda was placed on the route by the said company and continued thereon until the contract was abandoned by the company in November or December following.

That the Lounda did not comply with the requirements of the contract, being much below the same both in tonnage and speed, and being in other respects unsuitable and unsatisfactory.

That notwithstanding these facts the Minister of Finance agreed with the said C. W. I. and S. A. SS. Company, in the summer or autumn of 1890, that such steamer Lounda might be continued on the route during the year 1890, and that the Government would pay for each round trip by her the sum of $6,150, instead of $4,100, as provided by the contract: and, further, that such increased subsidies should extend to all previous trips made by the Lounda under the contract, and that such agreement was subsequently carried out and the increased subsidies paid to such company.

That after being informed by said company that they did not intend to carry out their contract beyond the year 1890 the Minister of Finance, without calling for new tenders, agreed with the above-mentioned Pickford & Black to give them a contract for said "C" service for five years—sailing from St. John, calling at Halifax—for the sum of $5,000 for each monthly trip by suitable steamers of the speed and tonnage called for by the former contract with the company, in all $60,000 per year, and at or about the same time agreed to pay and did pay the said Pickford & Black the sum of $15,000 in cash for certain alleged trips to the West Indies of the Alpha and Beta, made by said boats before the tender for their services had been accepted, and before the date from which the said Pickford & Black at the time of entering into the said contracts ("A" and "B") claimed they were entitled to be paid.

That subsequently to such arrangement between the Minister of Finance and Messrs. Pickford & Black the latter, with the consent of the Minister, continued the SS. Lucinda on the service till April, 1891, when owing to the many complaints and the unsatisfactory nature of the service she was withdrawn and the SS. Yarmouth Castle substituted.

That the said Yarmouth Castle appears to be simply a cargo-boat, of a speed of about 9 knots, and altogether inferior to the requirements of the contract, and the said Pickford & Black have never yet furnished the class of boats required by the terms of their contract.

That the conduct of the Minister of Finance in the premises has been detrimental to the public interest and merits the censure of this House.

Mr. FOSTER. I may say, in the first place, that I have no fault to find with my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) for the manner in which he has presented his motion, nor in the main have I any fault to find with his presentation of the facts, with the exception of two or three inaccuracies which I shall ask my hon. friend to amend, as I am sure he will, because I know he wants to give a truthful setting forth of the facts of the case. I find no objection to anything else except the resolution itself, and to that, of course, I am bound to object. Before the House has the opportunity of voting upon this, I think it right for me to traverse very briefly the ground my hon. friend has taken, and to supply some things which he has omitted, and I have jotted down the general run of the remarks I propose to make. The hon. gentleman dealt very lightly with the policy which was adopted by this House two years ago, when it decided to make an appropriation of $60,000 for the promotion of steamship services between Canada and the West Indies and South America. I shall be equally brief in my reference to that. The question of policy does not come up in this discussion to-day, but it is simply a question of administration. Suffice it to say, on the question of policy, that it was thought on both sides of the House that an experiment should be made in steamship services between this country and South America and the West Indies, and, after a thorough consideration of the subject, the vote was proposed and was carried by the House. As to the different arguments advanced on either side of the House for or against this policy, we have our opinions in regard to that, and that is not to-day under discussion. The next step that came, after that vote was granted, was the advertising for tenders. That was conducted in much the way my hon. friend has detailed to the House. It was the wish of the Government, if it could be accomplished without too much cost, to get boats of a thousand tons and of 12 knots speed, to do all these services which were to be performed between Canada and the West Indies and South America. It was also the desire of the Government to keep as well within the appropriation as could possibly be done, and therefore, in the advertisements themselves, the optional clause was placed so that if it were found that these boats of 12 knots speed and a thousand tons in capacity could not be obtained for this service without what might be considered too large an expenditure, we should have an alternative tender to be considered, of a lesser tonnage and of a lesser speed than that which we set down in the first part of the advertisements as what we should like to get if it came within our means. After these tenders were received, the services having been set forth in the three routes mentioned, "A," "B," and "C," the Government came to the conclusion, after looking over the tenders, that for the smaller services, so to speak, between Halifax or St. John and Cuba and Jamaica, those going, as it were, to separate individual islands, it would be all that we could expect to accomplish at present to get a service with vessels of about 700 tons and of a lesser rate of speed than 12 knots, say about 10 or 11 knots. It was, however, strongly held by myself, and I think the Council agreed with me, that for the longer service, that which had its outermost port at Demerara and the length of which voyage, a single voyage one way, was over 2,000 miles, with some 12 ports to be stopped at, with different ladings from those of the original ports of clearance, it was advisable to keep the tonnage up to one thousand tons at least, and to keep the speed at about 12 knots; so we acted in that determination. The tenders were given in, as my hon. friend has stated, and for the "A" and "B" services there was not much difficulty in choosing from the offers that were made. The offers were made, amongst others, by Messrs. Pickford & Black; for the "A" and "B" services their tenders were respectively $24,000 and $15,000. The Government at once accepted the $15,000 tender, but demurred to the $24,000 for the second tender, and ultimately they reduced that figure to $20,000, at which figure the Government entered into a contract with them. From that time till this those two services have been carried on in a fairly successful and satisfactory way, and my hon. friend has found no fault with these; therefore, I will dismiss them for the time being. When it came to the "C" service, more difficulty was experienced. The tenderers for that service were chiefly Messrs. Pickford & Black, Mr. Van Wart, on behalf of a company which he proposed to organize, and Mr. Furness, of the Furness line, a line of steamships well known in Europe, and, in fact, throughout the world. The tender which was the lowest of the three was that of Messrs. Pickford & Black, for $48,000. Mr. Furness' tender was, as has been stated, for $50,000, with a proviso that for six months he should put on temporary vessels as good as he could get and as near the requirements as possible, and that after that time, new vessels being in the meantime built, they should go on the service. Now, be it remembered that there is no difference of opinion at all between myself and my hon. friend as to the desirability of having got Furness & Co., under those conditions, to have taken up that tender, and although their tender was $2,000 more than the lowest tender of the three that we were especially considering, I thought it best under the circumstances to recommend to the Council that the Furness tender of $50,000 should be accepted. But I was also anxious to keep from giving more than the lowest tender for the temporary service, and, therefore, we coupled with the acceptance of that tender the proviso that so long as the temporary service lasted $48,000 should be given, but that when the new vessels were put on $50,000 should be granted, and I should have been very glad indeed if Furness & Co. could have accepted that. There was, however, one condition in the Furness tender which the hon. gentleman did not mention—it may have escaped his attention—it was this: They stipulated that at any time during the contract of five years they should be at liberty to withdraw from it on giving six months' notice.

Any hon. gentleman can see that that was a clause fatal to a continued service. If, after Canada had given her money and had put her part into the venture two or three years, the contractors were to say to themselves: We have something that will pay us better: this is not paying us as well as we thought it would, therefore we have a right to give six months' notice to terminate the contract, and we will do it—that would have left us in an unenviable position: therefore, I accepted, and the Council agreed with me, the tender of Furness & Co., under condition that this stipulation should be eliminated, and that they should take $48,000 while the temporary service was continued. Now, if that had been accepted everything would have gone on well and to the satisfaction of my hon. friend, so far as the tenders were concerned. Why was it not accepted? The tenders did not come in until late in the season: they came in just at a time when, as hon. members know, the Cabinet was dispersed to the four corners of Canada. August and the early part of September are the only period for a holiday that the Cabinet has, in ordinary years, and although those tenders came in, and although Mr. Furness was pressing in his desire to get an early answer, and although I strove to get that answer to him as speedily as possible, this was a matter which had so much depending upon it that it was impossible for a mere quorum of the Council to decide with reference to these tenders, and this answer was not given on the 5th of September, as requested, it was not given until a fortnight later, solely because it was impossible for the Council to be convened and to have a full number of its members to settle this affair. Those delays must inevitably take place, and I do not think that, under this version of the circumstances, there is much fault to be placed to my account, or to the account of the Government, in that respect. All possible speed was taken, but it happened to fall at a period of the year when it was impossible for Council to meet together in full numbers in order to settle the weighty matter of those contracts. Well, Sir, a fortnight after—not a very unreasonable length of time—an answer was given to Mr. Furness, in the line which has been stated. Mr. Furness replied that he would carry out that contract if he could possibly get the vessels for the temporary service; and, as I know, he set himself to work to get proper vessels, but such was the condition of freights at that time, and the call for vessels, and such are the peculiar requirements of the West India service, that he found it impossible, as he stated, to obtain the temporary vessels, and so, for that reason, and for another reason which my hon. friend read, but which he did not dwell much upon, he declined to carry out the contract. The other reason was one that tallied exactly with the provision that Mr. Furness put in his tender, as to being allowed to cancel it at any time at six months' notice; and it is borne out by the correspondence which has been brought down to the House, and borne out by the interviews I had with his agent in the city of St. John, the reason being that this was a new and untried service, in the nature of an experiment, that no full forecast could be given as to its outcome; and, as Mr. Furness himself stated, and as my hon. friend read, his other reason was that owing to the uncertainties of the new business, and the lack of information, the lack of knowledge as to how it would ultimately turn out, he was averse to entering into the contract unless he could have previously an experimental stage. I know that under the circumstances Mr. Furness felt glad that he was not called on to conform to his figures and to enter into that service for a period of five years, because he felt the uncertainties which were in the way, as the service had been untried and as one on which very few steamship companies could make any kind of a certain forecast. So much with regard to that matter. Mr. Furness' tender was withdrawn, not put out of the way, for there was nothing but a sincere desire on my part—and if the hon. gentleman knew the whole course of these transactions, as my colleagues in the Government know it, he would know that there was nothing which I tried for more than to have that contract taken, in the first place, by Mr. Furness, and carried out by him if it possibly could be done. It was not put out of the way, and when it went out of the way under these circumstances it was with my sorrow and my regret, and I have always thought since that it was a chance to have secured an excellent company, which possibly we would not get again. The first point in which I wish the hon. gentleman to amend his recital of the case is this—and it has escaped his memory, I suppose: After the negotiations were off with Mr. Furness there came the question as to what should be done with the "C" service, and on the advice of Council, after consulting with them, I had recourse to the next two available lower tenders. I opened up communication with Mr. Van Wart, representing a company to be formed, as the hon. gentleman stated; but I opened up at the same time communication with Pickford & Black, also tenderers among the lowest, pari passu with the negotiations with Mr. Van Wart, and I asked both of them to amend their tenders and send them into me, so that I could present them to Council. My hon. friend did not wish to do me an injustice———

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman may have done so, but I do not think it appears in the papers.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, in the Order in Council. I have the offer here. Perhaps just at this moment I had better read it. By Order in Council of 21st November, 1889, after stating that the negotiations are off with Mr. Furness, it continues:

"The Minister then entered into communication with Messrs. Pickford & Black and with Mr. Van Wart, two of the tenderers, and has received amended tenders from each for the 'C' service, viz.:

"Messrs. Pickford & Black offer to undertake 'C' service from St. John with the condition that their vessels should call at Halifax both inwards and outwards and that they be granted the subsidy for the 'A' and 'B' services at the rate of $20,000 and $15,000 per year respectively for monthly trips with vessels of 750 tons each and speed of 11 knots per hour. They offer for 'C' service,"——

And I ask the hon. gentleman's attention to this——"under these conditions, 750 ton boats with a speed of 11 knots, and ask therefor a subsidy of $45,000 per year."

So that my course was perfectly plain and perfectly consistent. The available tenders were, in my opinion, and that of Council, three—Mr. Furness, Pickford & Black, and Mr. Van Wart, for a company to be formed and represented by himself.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that when he opened negotiations with Mr. Van Wart it appears from the papers that he similarly opened negotiations with Pickford & Black, and that they sent in a letter with respect to the service when he reopened the negotiations?

Mr. FOSTER. At the very same date and on the same day. Two offers came in very nearly at the same time, and both were considered by Council on the same day: there is the report of them and the action of Council on them. I think that fact probably escaped my hon. friend. It is, however, very material in the effect it might have on those hearing the recital of the history of this matter; and consequently I know my hon. friend will amend the recital of the history of the case by saying that instead of opening negotiations simply with Mr. Van Wart I opened correspondence with the other two tenderers that I considered available, Pickford & Black and Mr. Van Wart. As a result of that negotiation my hon. friend said that the correspondence with Mr. Van Wart was very amusing, and he read it; but no one laughed, and the amusing part did not seem to strike anyone. It seems to me to be a straight, business-like communication with Mr. Van Wart, and the same with Pickford & Black.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The amusing part was that he reduced his tender because iron had increased in price and vessels were difficult to obtain.

Mr. FOSTER. I asked each to send in an amended tender for these services. They did so, and here are their offers. Pickford & Black say: "We will put on 750 ton boats, with a speed of 11 knots per hour, and run them between St. John and Demerara, with the condition that they shall call at Halifax, for a subsidy of $45,000." Mr. Van Wart says: "We will put on 1,000 ton boats, having a speed of 12 knots, for a subsidy of $49,200 per year." When these two tenders came in there was little of choice in the direction of the selection, and I took without any hesitation the offer which was in accordance with our desires as to the tonnage and as to the speed, and contrasting that with the smaller tonnage and less speed offered by Pickford & Black, I recommended to Council that Mr. Van Wart's offer should be taken. And Mr. Van Wart's offer was taken. So much for that. Now, let us go to the next stage in the history. If the hon. gentleman has read the Orders in Council he will notice the recommendation in my report to Council that the offer of Mr. Van Wart for a company to be formed by him, and which was represented by him, should be accepted. It was accepted. The first vessel, as my hon. friend said, put on the route, was the Portia. She was not equal to the requirements that the stated contract calls for; but hon. gentlemen have heard my hon. friend read to-day Mr. Van Wart's offer and the Order in Council accepting it, and it was provided that for the first year it was within his offer and within the opinion of Council that the service could not be brought up to the full measure of what the stated service should be when once it was permanently formed, and provision was therefore made in the Order in Council to meet the case. The Portia was the first vessel put on the route. My hon. friend, if he had paid particular attention to the state of the vessel market at that time, and been trying to obtain charters, would have known how difficult it was at that time to obtain charters for steamers at all, and how especially difficult it was to obtain charters on vessels filling the terms of contract such as they were laid down for that service. I know that Mr. Van Wart and his agents scoured every available port on this side of the water in the North American continent, and made enquiries at every place in Great Britain, and that the only available vessel they could get was the SS. Portia. The Portia was accepted as a temporary vessel; she was the best that could be got; she was chartered by Mr. Van Wart, who was the representative of the company, and she was put upon the service, and her first trip commenced in January, 1890. Now, my hon. friend has suggested, if he has not stated—I think he stated it—that suddenly in March there appeared the name of Mr. George F. Baird, a man who claimed to represent Queen's County in this House, as he says. My hon. friend (Mr. Davies) might have alluded in a more generous way to a colleague in this House, to a man every whit as honourable, every whit as able, and every whit as manly as my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies), or my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who, with his sceptical smile, rather leads me to think that he does not agree with my expressed opinion. I will take either of these gentlemen to the city of St. John, Mr. Baird's adopted town, and I will introduce him to the solid business men of that city, and he will find whether or not either of them can discover one man out of fifty in that city but who will give you the character that I have given of Mr. Baird. His question was discussed in this House; it was decided in this House, and I think my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) had better have taken that decision, and in speaking of past history in that way he might have avoided casting a slur upon a gentleman who, as I have said, is every whit as able and as honourable as himself. Mr. Baird, he says, crops up in March, 1890, in some answer to a question with reference to the vessel, and later in some negotiations for the vessel. Mr. Baird did crop up in March, and he had a perfect right to crop up in March. He had a perfect right to sit as a member in this House, and a perfect right to vote in this House, because Mr. Baird became a member of an incorporated company under the Companies Clauses Act on the 3rd day of February, 1890, and this was in March, 1890. I believe now, I may not be right in it, but I will state it and see whether I am or not: Will my hon. friend contend that if he happens to be in his capacity as a member of Parliament a director in a steamship company, or a member of a steamship company which is under subsidy from this House, that he is, therefore, violating the Independence of Parliment Act and subjecting himself to the harsh criticism of gentlemen on this side, because he is in the House when a vote passes, and because he is a promoter of a company to whom the appropriation is paid. I do not take that position, and I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) will take that position; and Mr. Baird was in exactly the same position in March, 1890, and at any day after February 3rd, 1890; and until that time it was Mr. Van Wart who did the business as a representative of the company. So much with reference to that. Now, Sir, we come to the next step in this history: that there immediately appeared a desire on the part of the Finance Minister to favour his friend, Mr. Van Wart. I come now to a part in this transaction in which theory and practice somewhat go apart. I dare say other hon. gentlemen have felt much the same difficulty. There is often an ideal plan that you may have and which you may wish to carry out in your business, or any enterprise that you may undertake, but there is scarcely a man who undertakes an enterprise or a business who does not find when he gets down to the practical working out of it that the actual outcome is not quite up to the plan or to the ideal which he had in his own mind. Now, Sir, I state here that there is no evidence to show that I evinced any desire to show favours to my friend Mr. Van Wart. Mr. Van Wart is my friend; he is an honourable man, he is an able lawyer, and he has a future before him in this country. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), I suppose, would meet me with the criticism that most men's futures are before them, as he did once in this House before; but, as far as wishing to, or actually granting, any favours to Mr. Van Wart from personal friendship, I have never been swayed by that and I have never done it. It does not appear in the evidence and it is not to be maintained by mere assertion. As I said before, the contemplation was, in the terms of Mr. Van. Wart's tender and in the Order in Council as well, that for the first year it would probably be found impossible to bring the service up to the character that it should have in its permanent form. The Portia was put on, and she was a vessel, I think, of 712 tons, or thereabouts. After the Portia had made two trips the Loanda was chartered, and the Loanda was a vessel coming up pretty nearly to the requirements in the point of tonnage; she was nearly 1,000 tons—nine hundred and some odd tons, I believe. The Loanda had a speed of 11 knots, and during the early voyages the vessel actually made a speed of 11 knots. She was allowed to be substituted instead of the Portia, as the best that could be obtained in the market at that time and as a part of the temporary arrangement. The Loanda remained in the service for a number of trips; and then comes another step in the history of the matter. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) says that it appears that about the middle of the summer, or in August, I went to the city of St. John and there I saw Mr. Baird, of the steamship company. That is true. The difficulties in the way of a sea service can only be known by a person who has gone into that matter experimentally and who has endeavoured to carry out such service in the teeth of the difficulties that occur. As soon as Mr. Baird, who is a gentleman of good business ability, went into that service and became the manager of that company, he put all his energy toward the fulfilment of the work which he had in hand, and those who, in the city of St. John, are conversant with that work, know that Mr. Baird did everything that a man could do in the inception of the service to make it successful. He spared neither his own means, nor his own time, nor his own ability, which he could have given to pursuits which would have brought in far more money and been more remunerative to him, But there were very great difficulties in the way. The service was a new and untried one, the number of ports to be called at was numerous, the distance was long, the vessel had to undertake a voyage of 2,600 miles there and 2,600 miles back, being a round voyage of over 5,000 miles. There was the difficulty of coaling, and the cost of coaling; there were the port charges, which are in some of these ports simply enormous; there were all the difficulties which I would not take the time of the House up in considering, to be met in the inception and first working out of a service of such a nature and plying to so many ports, and in a country of the aptitudes and habits of the West Indies and South American countries. These difficulties met Mr. Baird, and he struggled with them, and struggled with them manfully. He spared no expense in advertising; he spared no expense in the working of his service; but when June and July came Mr. Baird informed me that it was not possible to conduct that service with the subsidy which was given without a loss to the company of some thousands of dollars every round trip. I said to Mr. Baird, as manager of the company: "I do not want you to give it up; I want you to make the experiment, even though it cost you some money; make it, and make it as fairly as you can; it will grow better after a time." And Mr. Baird listened to what I said and went on with the service. But in July he informed me that it was impossible for his company to carry on the service any longer at the amount which was paid, but that they proposed, although they had sunk some $4,000 or $5,000 already, to venture the trip on which the vessel was then engaged, even though they should sink a large amount of money in doing so, and then to place the contract into my hands. I was met with that difficulty, in the middle of the season, when the Cabinet were separated. A portion of the Cabinet were here, and I consulted with them; we went over all the circumstances of the case, and I was authorized to proceed to St. John to consult with the manager of the company, and within certain limits to do what I thought was best to prevent a total cessation of that service, and of the traffic which was beginning to develop very well indeed —to prevent a complete stoppage before the experiment had had a chance to develop its prospects of success, though having been established upon a firm and steady foundation. I went to St. John; I saw the manager of that company; I went into all the affairs of his company; I went into all the details of its voyages. My qualifications for investigation may not be of a nature to be exactly agreeable to my hon. friend from Queen's, but what little ability and what little sagacity I could muster up I applied to the examination of the matter in hand, and I came to the conclusion, which no sensible man could avoid, that the company at that time were carrying on the service at a loss of some thousands of dollars for each round trip they made, and under these circumstances it was impossible for them to maintain it. I was, however, confronted with this difficulty, that before any new arrangement could be made, either by advertising for further tenders or by finding out from those who had already tendered if they were in a position to amend their tenders and continue the service, if this service was not maintained in the meantime a complete stoppage would take place, and the stream of traffic which was commencing to swell and grow would be entirely diverted, and it would be almost impossible to restore the prospects which I considered were good for a lucrative and profitable trade between our ports and the ports of the West Indies and Guiana. I, therefore, took the responsibility, upon the advice of the Council, of deciding the case there and then by a practical test —whether this service should be allowed to stop for six months, and this whole stream and tendency of traffic, which was being developed, and well developed in this line, should be diverted and dissipated, and that six months afterward we might again attempt the conditions which should be favourable to a continuance of such service on an improved basis; and I concluded there, as any sensible man would conclude, that I would rather add something to the subsidy in the meantime than to have the service cease, with all the evil consequences that I thought would ensue. It was on that consideration alone that I pressed that view upon my colleagues, and that afterwards, when we came together in full Council in October or November, they sustained me by Order in Council. That was the whole sum and substance of the matter; and I agreed to allow $49,200 for eight trips, instead of requiring twelve trips, for the trips being made by the steamship Loanda, and by that means I prevented the service from stopping. I kept up the connection, and I afterwards, I think, got a good offer; and this service now, I am happy to inform the House, is, I believe, placed upon such a steady and sound basis that we shall have no more trouble for the remainder of the contract time. That is the whole sum and substance of the matter, and I think I took a sensible business course. The cessation of the service was in the meantime provided against, I do not attempt to conceal, at an additional cost of $2,000 per trip; but the arrangement was one which left the promoters not gainers but losers to this day of over $5,000 on their venture. What I mean is, that the company, after all has been paid them on the eight trips that have been made, are out more than $5,000 of their own money. They referred the matter to me, not in any whining or complaining way. They have simply given me the facts of the case; and I have said to them: "It is impossible for me to recommend any more relief than that which I have done, to maintain the service; you entered this at your own venture, and must bear a portion of the loss;" but no one who knows anything of this enterprise will say that Mr. Baird and his associates have made money out of the transaction. Next came the question, how we should provide for the stated service. My attention was at once turned to Messrs. Pickford & Black, who were the next lowest tenderers, and I telegraphed to Mr. Black to meet me at St. John when I should be there. He came and met me. I canvassed the whole question with him, and I asked him to make me an offer for taking up that contract, with three more trips added. Mr. Black and I canvassed the whole question. He went and consulted his partner, and made the amended offer, which is a matter of record in the papers, and that offer I recommended to the Council, the Council agreed to my recommendation, and the contract for the remaining part of the five years—not five years from this time—was entered into with Messrs. Pickford & Black, by which we agreed to give them $60,000 a year for twelve round trips, with the option of making three extra trips at $2,000 per trip. Now, my hon. friend thinks that in this transaction there was something which knitted on to the dropping of the contract by the South American and West Indian Steamship Company, in providing for another claim by Pickford & Black in connection with this West Indian service. The thing is just exactly as it appears on the record. The papers are before the House, and there was no desire to conceal anything. If there had been any such desire on my part it would have been a very easy thing for me to have separated the transactions and put them in different reports. But there was no suppression in the transaction at all, for it was, I considered, a fair transaction, and I recommended it as such to the Council, the Council sustained my view, and the sums were paid. The claim of Messrs. Pickford & Black arose in this way: Parliament had been urging the establishment of a West India service for several years, tenders had been advertised for, and in due time this appropriation of $60,000 was recommended to the House. Messrs. Pickford & Black had tendered, and the year before they had put their steamers on the route but had received no subsidy. The $60,000 was voted for the West India and Canadian service from the 1st of July, 1889, to the 1st of July, 1890, and tenders were called for; and if it had not been for the difficulties that arose the tenders would have been accepted, and the contract would have dated from a period much anterior to the actual date and more favourable to the contractors than that ultimately assigned. But, owing to the various difficulties that arose, it was November and December before the contracts were actually entered into, and Pickford & Black laid their claim for subsidy from 1st July before the Government. They said that a vote of $60,000 had been granted for the year, from the 1st of July, 1889, to the 1st of July, 1890; that they had tendered for the service, that they had put on their vessels in any case, that they were given the mails on the 1st of July, and had been carrying on the service from the 1st of July to November, and that it was owing to the delays on the part of the Government that the contract was not entered into earlier in the season. They claim, therefore, that they having performed the service, and the Government having received the vote for that service, they ought to be paid for what they had done during those intervening months. I replied, at first, that this matter ought not to be brought up until the year had more nearly expired, since, at the best, I would only recommend to Council a consideration of this claim if anything remained over unexpended from the vote, that I did not propose that vote should be exceeded, and that I was unwilling to ask Parliament for more than it had granted. It was not until after I had found out that the services could be carried on for the year within the amount voted that I placed before the Council the claim of Messrs. Pickford & Black for their services, not alleged, as my hon. friend said, but actually carried on in the regular way from the 1st of July until November of that year. That is all there is to that transaction. Whether the arrangement has been made whereby Messrs. Pickford & Black took up the contract from the 1st of January, 1890, or not, I would have considered their claim, which was simply standing in abeyance; and if there had been money I would have recommended that they should be paid for the services they actually performed. Now, with regard to the last point, performance of their contract by Messrs. Pickford & Black. Their contract was for four years, and the conditions were as my hon. friend has said. But there arose the same difficulty as to the procuring of vessels. Mr. Black, in the last part of the year, as soon as it was definitely fixed by Council and arrangements had been made with him, went to the West Indies and visited all the ports, arranged all his agencies there, and thence went to Great Britain, where he endeavoured diligently to obtain vessels which would meet the requirements of the contract. At the same time, I was anxious that this service should go on uninterruptedly, and as the Loanda had carried on the service during the preceding year, I gave permission for her to continue carrying on the service for one trip. She did this for one trip and part of another, when her place was taken by the Ulunda. Thereafter the Taymouth Castle and the Duart Castle were approved for the regular service and they are now on the route. Now, there is something which needs explanation, so far as the Taymouth Castle is concerned. The member for Queen's was perfectly justified in his criticism upon me for having allowed that vessel to be put upon the route, from the papers that were brought down. I regret now that this letter was written. But when application was made to have the Taymouth Castle put on I asked one of my officers to get me a description of the vessel. He gave me his report, and from that I took the view which I penned as to the capabilities and style of that vessel, and wrote to Mr. Black that it did not seem up to the requirements of the contract. My hon. friend has the correspondence before him, and he will see that immediately upon receipt of that letter Mr. Pickford corrected my wrong impression with reference to the Taymouth Castle. I had that vessel fully inspected by the responsible officers of the Department of Marine, and I will read that report to the House:

"The Taymouth Castle is an iron screw steamer registered in London, G. B., and owned by Mr. Christopher Furness, of West Hartlepool. She was built by Messrs. Barclay & Carle, of Glasgow, in 1877, and classed 100 A1, her official number is 76,947 and the registered tonnage 1,172 tons. The length of the vessel is 300·1 feet, breadth 32·3 feet and depth 25 feet. She has five watertight compartments enclosed with strong bulkheads, the engines are of the compound type, with cylinders 36 by 63, and the nominal horse-power is 190. She carries six boats, four of which are life-boats, with room in all for 170 people in case of disaster, and the vessel has four good compasses, one of which is Sir Wm. Thompson's patent compass. She has also four winches for working cargo. At present there is cabin accommodation for 40 first-class passengers, with a ladies' cabin, water closets and 2 bath rooms. There are also closets and bath rooms for the officers. The cabin accommodation can be increased at any time by removing a bulkhead and putting temporary berths at short notice. Cabin passengers were formerly carried in this space. There is also a music room and a smoking room. The vessel carries two officers, one boatswain, one carpenter, eight seamen, three engineers, eight firemen and one donkey man. There is a large ice house, capable of holding twenty-five tons. The character of the vessel is good, and she is in first-rate condition at present, and fully equipped for carrying passengers and mails."

So that in these respects she is fully up to the requirements of the contract.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is her horse-power?

Mr. FOSTER. 190 nominal:—

"The capacity of the bunkers is 800 tons, and the consumption from 17 to 20 tons per day, with a speed varying from 10 to 13 knots per hour. The log-books for several voyages show that she has steamed from 10½ to 11½ knots per hour, and upon some occasions the speed attained has been 12 and 13 knots. The log upon the recent voyage states this latter rate, 13 knots, once or twice during the voyage. The speed of 12 knots can be attained at any time upon an increased consumption of coal when found necessary."

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the size of her cylinder

Mr. FOSTER. The engines are a compound type, the cylinders 36 by 63:—

"The Taymouth Castle is fully equipped for carrying cabin passengers. She is at present fitted with berths for the accommodation of 40 passengers. This accommodation can be increased at short notice. The general condition of the steamer is very good."

(Sgd.) "W. H. SMITH,
"Chairman."

Mr. Smith is chairman of the board of examiners, by whom, in connection with our engineers, she was thoroughly examined. This shows that the Taymouth Castle is not the kind of vessel which I at first thought she was. Upon inspection by our officers it appears that, in every respect, she is up to the requirements called for in the advertisement for tenders. Her speed is a maximum of 13 knots, and she easily attains 12 knots by an increased consumption of coal. The sister vessel to this is the Duart Castle, built, I believe, by the same firm, and formerly owned by the same. She is a vessel superior in some respects to the Taymouth Castle; and for the further information of my hon. friends, I may say that on these certificates given by our officers, and after a thorough examination of the vessels made by our officers, the Duart Castle and the Taymouth Castle have been accepted as vessels to be permanently placed on the route. They are both over 1,000 tons, both have a speed of 12 knots, both have the accommodation for passengers which is required. Their freight accommodation is, of course, ample, and I think I might in this connection read some of the notices that have appeared in reference to the Taymouth Castle.

Mr. FLINT. Is the Duart Castle on the line yet?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; she is at Halifax now. I find the Taymouth Castle in her first trip, from the time she reached St. John and Halifax and the various West India ports, has met with very general approval from all sources from which we can glean information, and I will read some of these. I will quote from the St. John Globe, which of course is not a supporter of the Government, as my hon. friend knows, but no doubt its report will be a very fair report. Its news reports are generally very fair. It says:

"The steamer Taymouth Castle, which arrived yesterday from the West Indies, is a decided improvement on the Loanda, and no doubt will give satisfaction to both pleasure seekers and shippers. Several alterations have been made in her accommodations to suit tropical weather. A large music room has been fitted up just forward of the main saloon. Her staterooms are large and airy, and her saloon is all that can be desired. All her rooms will be newly painted in Halifax, the material having just arrived in the Damara. Her decks are just the thing for promenading. The officers are capable and courteous. The steamer was hailed with delight at every port she visited in the West Indies, and a large number of persons visited the ship. She carried quite a number of passengers between the different islands, and the prospect of doing a good trade seems to be excellent. Her cargo is being turned over in splendid order, and so far only one cask of molasses has been found 'foaming.' This is a rare thing in a cargo. The Taymouth Castle will leave for Halifax Tuesday afternoon."

From the St. John Gazette we have much the same kind of a notice, and from the Globe we have another notice, which is an editorial notice. It says:

"The manifests show that the outward cargoes were large, and apparently they increased as the time went on. The return cargoes are not so satisfactory, but that is not to be wondered at, for the present tariff on West India goods is sufficient to kill the trade coming this way."

That is the Globe's way of putting it, you see:

"The general impression is that putting on the Taymouth Castle will stimulate the business, as she is superior to any steamer yet upon the route."

The Telegraph also gives a complimentary notice in the same way of the Taymouth Castle, and I have numerous others here which I will not read. They are all about in the same line, and all speak very complimentarily of that vessel. I have seen also from the West India press notices of a similar kind, and I have no hesitation whatever in saying that the Taymouth Castle in her first trip to the West Indies has proved herself to be in every way a staunch, good, reliable, pleasant vessel, and that the service has been excellent, and that, taking all in all, she fulfils the requirements of the service in a very reasonable and fair way. The Duart Castle, as I have said, is a still better vessel, and these two have now been advertised for regular sailings six months ahead. I may state that I made it a condition of this last arrangement with Pickford & Black that they should, in addition to running these steamers of the kind and quality and with the regularity we require, bind themselves to keep a good live agent on the West India side and on the Canadian side constantly engaged in working up and building up the business. I think, therefore, I may say to the House that the difficulties of the undertaking, which have been very great and very annoying, are now about over, that we have the service at last on a stated and regular basis, and, I think, on a satisfactory basis, as far as the vessels are concerned, and that we now have an opportunity for the next four years, or the next three years and a-half, of fairly testing what there is in the attempt to build up a trade between ourselves and the West India Islands and British Guiana by a service such as this. Now, as to the Loanda, I acknowledge the corn as to her condition in the last part of her work. At first she did good service. She steamed easily 12 knots. Sometimes she steamed 15 knots, but perhaps the tide helped her. In her first voyage she made easily 11 knots, but in the latter part of last year and the beginning of this year she depreciated, and the voyage in which my hon. friend's Ontario correspondent seems to have been a sufferer, was a most disappointing and disagreeable voyage. The fact is that the vessel broke down during that voyage, as better vessels will sometimes do, and the state of things was not at all creditable. However, that has been done away with, and would have been done away with before had it been possible for Pickford & Black to have got their vessels earlier. As to Mr. Wood's tender, he tendered for a 750 ton vessel.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Between 700 and 800 tons.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes: and we were of the opinion that we would not make a steady contract for any service for such a very long voyage with the prospects of full cargoes with any vessel of a less capacity than 1,000 tons. Mr. Wood's tender was not so satisfactory in other respects. Mr. Wood had been a tenderer before, and I do not think that he gave any very strong grounds—for the vessel was not built; it had still to be built—for assuring us that it would be to our advantage to enter into a contract with him under these conditions. It was on those grounds that that tender was ruled out. Now, one word in closing as to the route itself, as to an assertion made by my hon. friend, which he had no right to make if he had been conversant with the facts, as I must think he was. He states that nothing has been done; that there is no improvement. Now, that service commenced at a minimum. On her first voyage the Portia took $12,000 worth of goods, on the second voyage $16,000 worth, on the third $18,000 worth, on the fourth $25,000 worth, on the fifth $31,000 worth, on the sixth $37,000 worth, on the eighth $38,000 worth, and on the last voyage $36,000 worth. So that there has been a very satisfactory and a very large increase in the value of outward cargoes. It was stated by my hon. friend, in the course of last year's debate, that there would be nothing for this vessel to carry, except lumber—anybody would know that. My hon. friend from Halifax, Mr. Jones, at that time sitting in the House, declared that nothing would go from the port of St. John except a little lumber, if that did. Yet, Sir, the facts of the case were that an immediate and wide interest sprang up in this West India service, extending as far west as the western part of Ontario, and hon. gentlemen who will look over the statement which has been placed before them, of the goods actually carried, will see that lumber was the smallest element of the cargoes carried, and that manufactured goods, and produce from all parts of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, went in increasing quantities to British Guiana and the West Indies. I acknowledge at once that the volume of business is still small, but I must add that the increase which has taken place has been very encouraging, and I believe that the stimulus that has been given to our trade in the West India markets by the beneficial results of the Jamaica exhibition, by the exhibition of our wares in the other Islands, and by the actual sales that have taken place, the actual consumption which has taken place, by the business connections which have been formed, has materially helped to lay a foundation for a very large and very lucrative business between this country and the West Indies and South America.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have you any details of the cargoes that are now being carried?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not just now, but I am told that they are keeping up to the maximum amount; the details will appear in the manifests, but the manifests are not laid upon the Table later than the last month in the last year. I may say, with regard to steam vessels on this route, and the idea of this traffic being done by sailing vessels alone, that nothing was more apparent to me in my trip through the West Indies than this fact: That the reason why the United States of America supplied seven-tenths of the needs of the West India Islands in classes of goods which Canada produces to advantage and could easily supply, was because of the regular, and swift, and stated steam communication between the ports of the United States and those Islands. I believe that if ten years ago we had adopted the policy of subsidizing steam vessels, and had put them upon those routes and kept them there, we would have had a very large share of that traffic, and we should have kept it by our enterprise and by the business connections which we made. Business connections tend to prejudice in favour of or against a country's wares, and in every Island where the United States have made connections they look for a development of trade in that direction, and the influence is all in favour of the United States products; the difficulties, if there are any, are all against Canadian products and the products of other countries. So that prejudices, as unfounded as they possibly could be, existed in the West India Islands in reference to what Canada could give, and the quality of what she could give. That Canada could give good cheese, could give good butter, that she could give potatoes, that she could give flour that would keep, was scouted. I found no heresy more general than this, that Canadian flour was of no use to the West India purchaser, because it would not keep in a warm climate. That was mere prejudice, but it was effectual to bar out almost every barrel of flour from the West India markets. Well, Sir, that has been partly dispelled by the sending of a small cargo of flour to Trinidad, which was baked by their bakers after it had been kept there for two or three months, and pronounced to make as good bread as any they had had in that Island. This prejudice was dispelled by the experiment of the exhibition at Jamaica, where barrels of flour were kept for two, or three, or four months, and then baked up and distributed to the people, and the result was that it made as good and as sweet bread as any of which they had had experience of in this Island; so that to-day that heresy is entirely overcome, and cargoes of flour are going to the West India Islands, just the same as cargoes of flour are going from the United States of America. That prejudice is overcome, and a few years of constant communication will overcome other prejudices and give us a chance in our natural markets equal to the chances that the United States have. Their better chances, so far, have been because they had a regular and stated communication, and because of the connections which always grow up with these steamship lines. Now, I beg pardon of the House for having wearied it so long. If my hon. friend will amend a part of his recital, as I know he will, and make the facts all right, I will be obliged to him, and if he will strike out the codicil, so to speak, I would not mind voting for his resolution. However, I leave the case in the hands of the House. I have made this a business statement, because I thought it was the best plan to pursue, and having done so I leave the rest in the hands of the House.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance in attempting to explain the very remarkable circumstances attending the awarding of the tenders that have been referred to and of the general transactions in connection with the subsidies to further the West Indian trade, went into an elaborate eulogy of the benefits and advantages of that trade to the people of the Dominion of Canada, although, at the same time, stating, which is perfectly correct, that a discussion of that question is not pertinent to the resolutions under discussion this evening. I presume that the mover of the resolutions purposely avoided entering into a consideration of the general merits of the question as to the advisability of the Dominion of Canada heavily subsidizing steamers to compete with sailing vessels and to compete with other steamers in any branch of this trade, because it would open up a very lengthy and, to a certain degree, unprofitable discussion. But as the Minister of Finance has alluded to this question, perhaps it may not be out of place to call attention to the fact that, owing to the policy of the Government or, at all events, in spite of the much-vaunted policy of the Government, our trade with the West Indies has lamentably fallen off, and this in a large degree since the National Policy came into operation. A study of the details of our trade with the West Indies in lump and in detail would be very interesting, no doubt, and of great advantage, not only to the Government themselves in preparing to receive offers for steamers of this kind, but it would be of great advantage to the trading community generally. Unfortunately, the policy of the Government has been such as in a large degree to strike down the trade of the Dominion with the people of the West Indies and with South America, and it is no wonder that having thus by their policy to a large degree destroyed this very profitable trade to our people, they are now anxious to make use of the public funds in order to endeavour to repair that injury which their own policy has caused. A very casual glance at the Trade Returns show that our trade within the last ten years, as compared with that of the previous seven or eight years, with the West Indies, has fallen off more than one million dollars a year, and I think it is not unreasonable to say that the Minister of Finance and hon. Ministers opposite will require a large amount of subsidies granted to steamers to make up for the great loss their policy has brought on the people of Canada in connection with this trade. If we look back at the trade of the Dominion with the British West Indies alone we will find that during last year the total export trade was less by $700,000 than what it was in 1877, the trade in the latter year reaching $2,171,000. In 1879 the total export trade to these Islands was $1,943,500; in 1878, about the same amount; in 1873, $1,809,000; 1875, $2,254,750; 1876, $2,148,490; while in 1890, after the full fruition of the operation of the National Policy in so far as it affects this trade, our total export trade to the British West Indies was of the value of $1,460,659. One of the great objects of taking the public money to subsidize these steamers to produce a regularity of trade between the British West Indies and the Dominion of Canada has been to assist the manufacturing industries of the Dominion, because I have no doubt that, as regards the exports of natural products, ninety-nine hundredths of all our natural products would be exported with much greater advantage by sailing vessels and the ordinary means of commerce, without aid by subsidy, than by one, two or three lines of steamers, because the bulk is great, and one or two lines of steamers would scarcely affect the quantity of that class of exports to the West India Islands and the South American Main. But in manufactured products alone our exports have largely fallen off during the last 8 or 9 years. Had the present Dominion Government been able to show that the exports of manufactured goods to the British West Indies—and it is in consequence of want of time to tabulate the figures that I speak of the British West Indies, and do not refer to the Spanish West Indies or South America—now reached $298,804, as was the case in 1876, one can imagine the extravagant eulogy that would have been bestowed on the National Policy. Not only in this respect, but in other directions, has the trade declined. In 1875 our exports of manufactured goods to the British West Indies was of the value of $146,580; in 1874, $66,942; in 1878, $97,072; in 1877, $87,458; 1879, $100,000, while in 1889 the trade had fallen to the paltry sum of $36,300. In has increased during 1890 to $62,000; but this to a certain extent may be attributed to the operation of these subsidized lines of steamers, because there was a certain amount of anxiety on the part of traders in St. John and Halifax to try the effect of these steamers. But even with the aid of subsidized steamers our exports of manufactured goods has shown no appreciable growth; but as this is to a certain extent foreign to the line of the resolution moved by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), I will pass from that, and refer more particularly to the charges made by these resolutions and followed up by the careful and admirable speech of the mover. I notice that the hon. Minister of Finance avoided most carefully dealing with the trenchant points of these resolutions in the speech of the mover, and while he went into very lengthy explanations of some matters he failed to deal in a satisfactory manner with those points of the resolution which I think require explanation before Parliament. But as the subject is a somewhat complicated one to those who have not had the opportunity of carefully perusing the speech of the mover and perusing the papers to which they refer, I may be pardoned if, even at the expense of being somewhat tiresome, I go to a very great degree over the ground so ably trodden by the member for Prince Edward Island. In order to consider this matter clearly, let us state succinctly the nature of the contracts into which the Government entered in pursuance of the vote of 1889, and the circumstances which led up to that vote. The Government deemed it desirable to have offers for three lines of steamers between Canada and the West Indies, one line to extend its route as far as Demerara. In the advertisement for tenders the first was called "A," which was for a line from Halifax or St. John to Cuba and return, and the other was called service "B," which was a line from Halifax or St. John to Jamaica, calling at Turks Island and Bermuda. Before considering the circumstances in connection with contract "C," the correspondence of which is much more extensive, and which contract is open to more animadversion, if possible, than contracts "A" and "B," I will refer to the latter contracts first. What are the facts of the case in connection with contracts "A" and "B," to which the resolutions point? It seems that Messrs. Pickford & Black, an enterprising firm in the City of Halifax connected with the shipping trade, tendered for these two services. I need not go at length into the correspondence which leads up to the granting of the contracts, but I may say in general, in speaking of these contracts, that I think the Government was negligent and guilty, and merits the condemnation of Parliament for the unbusiness-like and careless manner in which these tenders were called for from ship-owners throughout the world. The resolutions were passed through Parliament early in the year 1889, after a long course of discussion in this House and throughout the country as to the advisability of opening up these routes. Parliament prorogued, I believe, on the 2nd May, and yet up to the middle of July the Government had not formed a scheme, or did not give to the world any idea as to the nature of the contract which they had in view; and not until the 15th July do the advertisements calling for this service appear before the public. Now, in business transactions involving such large interests I contend that a longer notice should have been given to the ship-owners and ship-managers in all parts of the world who desired to tender for these contracts, and the Government could not plead that there was not abundance of time to formulate the scheme, and to give intending contractors a more extended opportunity for studying the matter and for seeing whether they could offer tenders with satisfaction to themselves and with a likelihood of success or not. Taking the advertisements to have been issued by the Government about the 15th July, it is not beyond the grounds of probability to say that fully a fortnight must have elapsed before this notice could have been in the hands of the proper parties to tender, and then we find that they were limited to the short space of thirty days in which to tender for contracts aggregating an expenditure of from $50,000 to $100,000 a year. The contracts, according to the terms given by the Government, called for first-class ships of at least 1,000 tons, and a speed of at least 12 knots an hour. All who are acquainted with shipping are aware that steamships of 1,000 tons, with a speed of 12 knots, are very scarce; and the whole correspondence from Furness, from Joseph Wood, and from the Blacks, goes to show that such ships cannot be procured, except that they are built for this special purpose, and that vessels of a smaller tonnage and of a less rate of speed could be tendered for much more cheaply and are much more easy to procure. The Government so framed its tender that they did not give intending contractors a fair opportunity to study this question, nor did they give the people of this country the opportunity which they should have had to have had this service performed as cheaply as possible. I will call the attention of the House to the manner in which the tenders were offered and the manner in which intending tenderers must have been confused by the wording of the advertisement. It says:

"For each of the above mentioned services, proper accommodation for the transport of mails must be provided. The above services to be monthly, and performed by steamships of a speed of not less than 12 knots an hour: and as regards the services marked 'A,' 'B' and 'C,' of not less than 1,000 tons register, and with an accommodation for at least thirty first-class passengers: and as regards the service marked 'D,' of not less than 2,000 tons register, and with accommodation for at least fifty first-class passengers."

In the latter clause of the advertisement the Government makes an intimation as follows:—

"As regards the services 'A,' 'B' and 'C,' persons desiring to offer to perform the same with steamers of less capacity and speed than above mentioned may submit their tenders, specifying the speed and capacity of the boats which they desire to offer, although the conditions above specified are those desired by the Government."

Now, the first thing which must be noticed, and which is plainly admitted on this record, is that in regard to services "A" and "B" the designs and intentions of the Government have been frustrated and have been a complete failure, and we are carrying out to-day a service between Jamaica and

Halifax, and between Cuba and Halifax, with small steamers of an ancient style of build, in substitution for the steamers which the Government deem to be proper and fit for this service. The Minister of Finance has not stated upon what ground the Government, or his department, made up their mind to insist upon the class of ships which they called for in this tender, nor upon what ground they were induced to vary their determination in all three of these cases. At any rate, instead of having ships of 1,000 tons, as the Government desired, and as a result of the scheme which they promulgated to the world, we are now favoured in this service by old and small steamers, one of 677 tons and the other of 750 tons, and of a less speed than 12 knots an hour. Pickford & Black secured the contract for these two services, the one at the rate of $20,000 a year and the other at the rate of $15,000 a year. I will read some of the correspondence upon which this contract was entered into, because it touches immediately upon the gravamen of the charge laid before this House. Messrs. Pickford & Black were running these steamers as a commercial speculation previous to these tenders being called for. I believe they began their first trips in the fall of 1888. There had been subsidies previously paid for a service of this kind, and the Government had stopped this subsidy, I presume, for reasons satisfactory to themselves and to the country. This subsidy, after having lapsed for several years, and the service having been abandoned, was taken up as a commercial speculation by the enterprising firm mentioned, and they were running these ships to the West Indies on routes, which if they were not exactly the same, were very similar. They tendered for and accepted the contract to carry out the services "A" and "B" at $20,000 a year and $15,000 respectively. The contract was not signed until long after the tenders were verbally accepted by the Government, and they mention in their correspondence that when the contract was finally executed it might include two trips or more which took place previous to the execution of the contract. I cannot say that there was anything very unreasonable or unfair in this, and so the contract was made to provide for that. The contract was dated the 23rd of April; but the correspondence which practically concluded the contract closed about the latter part of November, and in their correspondence they ask that the trips beginning on November 24 and December 15 may be included in the contract, and they were accordingly included, and they received their pay for those two trips. It is fair to assume that the trips were performed satisfactorily, for we find that the firm received cheques for their money with due regularity, after filing with the department the manifests of their cargoes and the proper certificates that the work had been performed. After the lapse of about a year, towards the close of 1890, the other tenderers for contract "C" found that they had made a bad bargain, that they were losing money. They desired to get rid of their contract and they appealed to the Finance Minister to help them out of the difficulty in which they had become involved. At this juncture Messrs. Pickford & Black, who had the contract for the "A" and "B" services, and who were performing it satisfactorily, accordingly, dating from November and December, 1889, and receiving their proportion of the subsidy for each trip, stepped in, and at the suggestion of the Finance Minister offered to take the unfortunate contract off the hands of the St. John Company. At this juncture precisely they put in a plea to be paid an extra allowance on their contracts "A" and "B"; and as the correspondence on that subject is somewhat interesting, I will read it. The hon. Finance Minister had been in St. John looking at the books and affairs of the West Indian Steamship Company: and feeling disposed to accede to the request of this company to relieve them of their contract, and also to hand it over on more advantageous terms to the firm of Pickford & Black, we find that he suggested to Mr. Black, who was acting for the firm, to write to the department the following letter, dated Ottawa, 23rd of September, 1890:—

"DEAR SIR,—In September, 1888, my firm first commenced the West Indies steam service. During the session of 1889, $60,000 was appropriated as a subsidy for the development by steam of trade with the West Indies.

"In November, 1889, we completed arrangements with the Government to perform two of the services asked for, viz., Canada to Cuba and Canada to Jamaica, by which we were to receive a subsidy.

"Whilst operating these lines previous to November, 1889, we did so at loss to ourselves. The routes were very expensive ones and no return cargoes could be got.

"As a portion of the $60,000 placed at our disposal in the winter of 1889 has not been expended, I would ask that we be paid for the work performed from July 1st, 1889, (from which date the vote was available) until November, 1889. The country had the benefit of the services, which were as regular then as they now are.

"As I understand that unless the unused portion of the $60,000 is appropriated before the 30th instant it will be no longer available, and in view of your early departure from the Capital, I would ask you to kindly give this your immediate consideration."

On the 26th of September the Minister of Finance reports to the Council in favour of accepting this offer; on the 1st of October the report is approved in Council; and on the 3rd of October Messrs. Pickford & Black receive in cash from the Department of Finance $15,000. Now, I say, apart from charges of direct malfeasance or any charges which might imperil the seats in Parliament of those who had anything to do with it, you can scarcely find a parallel to this transaction in the Finance Department, or in any other department of the Government of Canada. While this Legislature or any Government would be disposed to deal fairly with contractors who are unfortunate enough to make errors of calculation, and who are carrying out a meritorious public service, and to be as easy as possible in the face of a written contract, yet I venture to say that you will never find, and you ought not to find, such barefaced robbery of the public treasury as we find to have been committed on behalf of this firm in its dealings with the Finance Minister. The sum of $15,000, which had never before been claimed, and for which there was not the slightest ground for claiming either in law or equity, was coolly paid out by the Finance Minister to this firm. Did this transaction stand by itself it would be perfectly inexplicable; no man in his sober senses could imagine for one moment why such a transaction could have taken place; but taken in connection with the other circumstances, and agreements, and payments, at the same period, the whole thing becomes clear and lucid; but it does not by any means lessen the culpability of the Finance Minister or of the Government in acceding to such a preposterous proposition. I do not blame Messrs. Pickford & Black for securing from the public whatever money they may think in their own minds they are honestly entitled to. They were running their steamers as an ordinary commercial speculation, and it may or may not be true that they were not making money out of them; but can this be put forward as any ground on which to support a claim on the public treasury—that because in the ordinary course of their business they are performing a service for the country, they should be rewarded? But when we consider this transaction in connection with the Baird contract we can see the motives underlying this large gift by the Government to Messrs. Pickford & Black, and the reason of the eagerness with which the Finance Minister ran to the rescue of his friends Messrs. Baird & Van Wart to relieve them from the difficulties in which they had placed themselves by their eagerness to secure the "C" contract. Let it be clearly understood, with regard to the payment of $15,000 to Messrs. Pickford & Black for the "A" and "B" services, that it is the flimsiest and most shallow excuse to say that they had earned this money, or had any other right to it than any commercial trader sailing his vessels around the coasts of New Brunswick or Nova Scotia. But when we follow the transactions which took place with the West India Steamship Company we see the motives and reasons, which were not creditable to the Finance Department, why this extraordinary transaction was permitted. Let me then direct the attention of the House from "A" and "B" services to the "C" service, which requires a little more lengthy examination. Service "C" was a line from Halifax or St. John viâ Yarmouth, if sailing from St. John to Demerara and return, calling at Bermuda, and certain West India Islands. For this service it was insisted, and is still insisted by the Government, that the ships must be of 1,000 tons burden, of a speed not less than 12 knots, of first-class accommodations and complete in every particular. It is somewhat gratifying, although at this late hour, over two years after these tenders were offered to the public, and nearly two years after tenders were accepted, to find that we are only now on the eve of having a service at all approaching that which the Government required. We find, for the first time, not from the papers before the House, but from information vouchsafed by the Minister of Finance, that at last we have, in the Taymouth Castle and the Duart Castle, two steamers which approach the requirements of the contract entered into by Messrs. Pickford & Black and the overthrown contract of Messrs. Baird & Van Wart. Now, the tenders for service "C" were advertised for at the same time as these other tenders; and we had in this connection this unfortunate circumstance, which is so peculiar in the conduct of the Government, namely, that tenders are so worded that when they come before the Government, the Government is almost in the same position as if none had been called for at all. We have this anomaly on the face of the record, that we have a hard and fast line, but with exceptions so large that almost any tender can be accepted by the Government without going outside the terms of the advertisement. Contract "C" required the ships to be of the speed and tonnage and to have the other qualifications I have mentioned; but tenders were allowed offering ships of a different tonnage and speed. All those desiring to tender had the short notice I have mentioned, a notice which was very unbusiness-like, and neither fair to the tenderers or the country. We find that Messrs. Pickford & Black made an offer of a line from St. John, by way of Halifax to Demerara; we find that the Messrs. Furness, of England, made an offer in precisely the terms of the main requirements laid down by the Government, and we find that other tenderers also made offers. There was a tender by Mr. Jos. Wood, which I will read. Mr. Wood, early in the session of 1889, wrote to the hon. Finance Minister, asking him what was the line that Parliament, or the Government, would be likely to require. He answered promptly, that the Government at that time had no scheme in their mind, but that, at a later period, they would inform him what their views were. But the only information he received must have been from the public prints, when the call for tenders was published. However, in the month of August, he made a tender, under the second clause, for the service "C"—a tender somewhat different from those required by the Government as regards the tonnage. His tender was as follows:—

"I beg to tender as follows, for the West India service; from St. John, N.B., and Halifax, N.S., to Bermuda, Martinique, Barbadoes, Trinidad and Demerara, calling at intermediate islands when sufficient encouragement offers, returning from Demerara, Trinidad and Barbadoes to Halifax and St. John, N.B.

"I offer for this route one steamer of 700 to 800 tons register, speed 13 knots and accommodation for 30 first class passengers. The steamer to be built in Scotland, and classed 100 A1 at Lloyds, and to be ready for service by September 1st, 1890."

Over a year ago, had this tender been accepted and a contract entered into, this firm would have been obliged to place this first-class vessel on the route, a vessel differing from the requirement of the Government only in the fact that it was 200 tons less than that called for; and they offered to put it on the line for a subsidy of $20,000, payable at the rate of $2,000 a trip for ten trips per year. Here was a most advantageous offer—an offer more advantageous by 60 per cent. than that which the Government have at present accepted for steamers of a somewhat larger size. In a letter accompanying this tender, Mr. Wood, referring more particularly to the steamer, says she must be superior to any steamer now running in the trade. In his first letter he gives the Government advice, which subsequent events have proved to be very wise and judicious. However, without much ado this tender was thrown aside and not the slightest weight attached to it. Another important tender for this service was received from the great ship-builder of Hartlepool, Mr. Furness, the owner of a substantial line of steamers running between various portions of the globe, and a gentleman whose name is a synonym for integrity and ability. But I need not enlarge before this House on the commercial standing of Mr. Furness. I will only say that so pleased was the Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick at the idea that Mr. Furness was likely to get the tender that he telegraphed him his congratulations and best wishes for success in his enterprise. The tender of Mr. Furness is worthy of consideration, because it was accepted by the Government, and because it was one which, if it had been carried out, would have given this country a line of steamers to the West Indies far superior to that which it has at present, or is likely to have for a long time to come, under the present contract. One reason given by the Finance Minister for objecting to the Furness tender is certainly a very extraordinary one, and that is, that Mr. Furness desired to be able to give six months' notice in case he wished to terminate his contract. This the Finance Minister declared to be a serious objection ; but he had no scruple about permitting the Canada and West India Company to throw up their contract after one or two months' notice, and in going personally to work, by private contract and tender, to induce other parties to come in and take the bargain off their hands. If a house like that of Mr. Furness threw up the contract at the end of six months as being unpracticable and unfair, the country would have a guarantee that the circumstance really justified them in throwing it up, and the Government would have been held blameless. But, owing to the delay of the Government in giving Mr. Furness a reply to his request, he was compelled to instruct his agent to withdraw from the contract, and the Government lost the advantage of having the business in the hands of a house of that standing. Then, Mr. Furness being out of the way, the Finance Minister opened negotiations with the parties he intended all along should have the contract. There can be no other reading of this extraordinary correspondence. No one acquainted with the facts could come to any other conclusion than that it was understood beforehand, if possible, Messrs. Van Wart & Baird should have the contract. During the time these appropriations were before the House Mr. Baird was a member of this House, supporting the Government. He is a legal gentleman by profession, but, to a certain degree, is engaged in commercial pursuits. His partner, Mr. Van Wart, is also a legal gentleman, who, so far as I am aware, was not previously engaged in any shipping transaction. The Minister of Finance has stated that charges were made against the personal integrity of these gentlemen. I challenge, however, the most careful criticism of the remarks of my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) to find the slightest indication of any such charge. It is true the hon. member for Queen's commented somewhat sarcastically upon the political position Mr. Baird then occupied, and I think that any such comments were perfectly justified by the circumstances of the case. But in regard to his commercial character, in regard to his commercial integrity, I have not heard that there was ever any charge, and I am certain that there was no charge or insinuation of that kind made in the speech of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) ; but we find that this gentleman was associated with Mr. Van Wart, a great friend and supporter of the Finance Minister, and they undertook to organize a company to obtain this contract and to carry out the trade which that gentleman had advocated in this House, and in order, as it appears here, to oblige the Finance Minister. At any rate, the tender they made was a lower tender than that of Furness. The first tender was $54,000. After the Furness Company was got out of the way negotiations were opened between the Finance Minister and Pickford & Black, and VanWart & Baird, to see if they would not take up the contract ; and here comes in a circumstance which I think is not creditable to the commercial sagacity of the Finance Minister or of those members of the Government who are concerned in working up this trade. All the correspondence that deals with this goes to show that from the first it was apparent that any trade which was to be built up must take in the port of Halifax as well as the port of St. John, but the Government determined that this should have a political character, and they rigidly insisted that Halifax should be excluded from the terms of the first contract, and that the trade should go from St. John to Demerara, though they allowed the vessels to call at Yarmouth. Messrs. Pickford & Black insisted that, in order to make this trade pay, they should call at Halifax, and the results have proved the wisdom of that course, because experience has shown that the principal trade has gone by way of Halifax. Mr. Joseph Wood also insisted and placed in his tender that Halifax should be a port of call ; but no, the Government had formed their plan and intended to stick to it. Finally, however, after the ignominious failure of their attempt to carry out the St. John idea, they were obliged to come to the terms which had previously been suggested, and the original idea of Messrs. Pickford & Black and of Mr. Joseph Wood was carried out, and the trade was transferred to a steamer that would call at Halifax and carry the commodities to the West Indies by way of Halifax. The situation then is this : A contract is entered into finally, after negotiations which I will not weary the House by reading, but which are very instructive, in connection with the strong suspicion which has prevailed that it was intended from the first that these gentlemen should have the contract whether or no, and I will read some portions of that contract. The contract was executed about the middle of March, 1890, although the tenders were accepted in the autumn of 1889. It is possible that one reason for this delay may have been the fact that a member of Parliament and his associates were engaged in endeavouring to get up a company in order that the contract should not be made with a member of Parliament, and the money should not be paid to a member of Parliament, but to a company of which he was the manager. The contract provided :

"That they would maintain during the continuance of this contract and carry on efficiently a regular service from the City of St. John, N.B., in the Dominion of Canada, to Demerara, calling at Yarmouth, N.S., in the said Dominion, and at certain islands in the West Indies, said service to be carried on with two steamers of not less than 1,000 tons register, with a speed of not less than 12 knots an hour, and with accommodation for not less than 30 first class passengers, all steamers to be subject to the approval of the Finance Minister ; provided always that the service may be carried on by the contractors with the steamer Portia for six months from the commencement of this contract."

Here we find an extraordinary arrangement that, whereas a first-class service is contracted for, to be worth $4,100 a round trip, the Government were to pay for an inferior steamer in size and speed precisely the same rate of subsidy as they were to pay for the first-class service. One would have supposed that both the tenderers and the Government would have made some distinction between the two classes of vessels, and that some proviso would have been made that the amount should be reduced if the service was not so efficient as the contract called for. Not at all. The Portia is to be paid at the same rate as the first-class vessels. The Portia, however, was unsatisfactory. She performed but two trips, and received her subsidy in due course. And then comes another violation of the contract with the consent of the Government. It appears that these contracts are not only made to be broken, but are made to be ignored from the first. With the consent of the Government, the Loanda is substituted for the Portia, and she performs six trips. However, the steamer being so unacceptable to the travelling and commercial public, being a perfect laughing-stock throughout the West India Islands, so that the very objects of Parliament and of the Government were liable to be frustrated by her operations, the company finds itself in a disastrous condition financially, and is determined to get rid of the contract. We find no proviso in the contract for any penalty in the case of non-fulfilment, we find no bond or guarantee that the company will perform the service, but on their simple demand they are released from the contract. We find the Finance Minister personally called upon to inspect the books of the company, and for what purpose? The most extraordinary errand that a Finance Minister of this country was ever called upon to perform, in my opinion, was when we find the Minister of Finance in the office of Messrs. Van Wart & Baird, in St. John, inspecting their books in order to see if their statements were correct that they were losing money by the contract. One would expect that the Finance Minister of Canada would have sent an expert there to examine the books, and would have had a report to lay before his colleagues, and would have had something to bring before the House to show why he did not inflict a penalty on this company, and why Parliament should deal generously with them, and should not exact the full penalty which should have been exacted under a contract of this nature. But, after the solemn assurance given throughout this correspondence that they would provide first-class passenger and freight accommodation in first-class vessels, and after providing first the inferior vessel, the Portia, and then the very unsatisfactory Loanda, according to their own reports, according to all the representations made, and according to Messrs. Pickford & Black, the Finance Minister relieves them of the contract and pays them a large additional sum, not only for future trips, but for back trips of this vessel. She was receiving $4,100 for performing a service which they had guaranteed they would place a 1,000 ton ship, making 12 knots an hour, on the route to perform; and finding they were losing money, that the public were becoming disgusted with the service of both of these boats, the Finance Minister agrees to give them $2,050 per trip more at the end of that year, and to pay them for the back trips; consequently, Baird & Van Wart, under the name of the Canadian West Indian and South American Steamship Company, received from the Finance Minister and the Government $8,200 in cash more than they were entitled to under the contract, and more than they were entitled to in law or equity. They were relieved from the contract, and a new contract was made with Pickford & Black to take this old and discredited steamship off their hands and put it upon this line, including a call at Halifax; and Pickford & Black, in order that they might be induced to undertake the new contract, received from their friend, the Finance Minister, an addition of $15,000 in cash. Here is a peculiar circumstance in that the letter asking for the $15,000 is dated on the 23rd September and the report to Council asking the Government to consent to relieve the West Indian Company from their contract and to pay them the extra $8,200 for services which they had guaranteed to perform with superior vessels for $4,100 and the acceptance of the new contract for the "C" service by Pickford & Black, all took place simultaneously, and were all included in the report of the Minister to Council, which was approved on the 1st October. We find, then, that the country is robbed to the extent of $23,200, and the country is worse off, in regard to this West India trade and in regard to the efficiency of the service, than it was before. Messrs. Pickford & Black go on with the Loanda, calling at Halifax and undertaking to carry out their contract. Now, I will call the attention of the House to the contract with Pickford & Black, after our friends in St. John were so handsomely provided for to enable them to wind up the transactions of their company without any loss. The contract of Pickford & Black was dated on the 3rd of November, 1890, and this provided that they would, during the continuance of the contract, undertake to:

"Efficiently establish, and maintain, and carry on, from the port of St. John, in the Province of New Brunswick, to Demerara, a regular and efficient service, by steamers classed as No. 1 Lloyds, of not less than 1,000 tons net register, and capable of a speed of not less than 12 knots an hour, and containing sufficient accommodation for 40 first class passengers, &c., &c."

We would have thought that after this experience on the part of the Minister of Finance, for which the country has had to pay so generously, he would have formed some contract with the new firm which would have been binding upon them and binding upon the Government, but up to this hour that contract has not been carried out. We learn from the speech of the Minister of Finance that now, for the first time, they are beginning to carry out this contract, and the two steamers (certainly not the class of steamers that are mentioned in this contract) are undertaking to carry it out. They may be very good vessels, but I think it is within reason to say that steamers built in 1877 and 1878 are not, at the present time, first-class steamers. They may have been first-class steamers at the time they were built, but when we consider the vast improvements that have been made in the construction of steamers, the construction of engines, the lighting, and all the arrangements of these vessels, a steamer built in 1878 would not to-day be considered a first-class ship in comparison with those that are turned out at the present time from the great shipyards of the mother country. My opinion is that the country is paying too much, that smaller sized vessels would be more satisfactory, because they can call at ports at which these large vessels cannot call. To sum up this whole matter, the Finance Minister has admitted the correctness of the statements contained in the resolution of the hon. member for Queen's, but he has demurred from the conclusion that the Government and the Finance Minister are to be condemned for the part they have played in this transaction. We find that from beginning to end the ideas and schemes which the Government have held forth to commercial men and the people of this country have not been carried out, that an inferior class of steamers up to the present hour have been employed, and they have been receiving the full amount of the subsidies offered for much superior vessels, that the terms of the contracts have been persistently ignored from beginning to end, and that the sum of $23,200 has been paid for which the parties receiving it have no claim in law, or equity, or justice. The most they could have asked for would be to be relieved from their contracts without any penalty. I think the whole conduct of the Minister of Finance and of the Government in this transaction has tended, not to advance the interest of the West India trade, not to advance the interest of the people who are interested in that trade, but their conduct has been a detriment to the trade, because it has created a prejudice in many of the West Indies which it will take months and perhaps years to overcome. I think the Government is censurable for handling the finances of the country in the way they have done in this instance, and the proposition that because tenderers and contractors with the public for certain services can make a plea that they are losing money, they can put their hands into the treasury and recoup themselves for their loss, that the treasury of this country can be used to relieve people from their contracts —I think these are propositions that ought to be condemned by this Parliament, and the Minister making use of his power for such purposes ought to receive the severe censure of the representatives of the people in this House. This whole transaction is unbusiness like, unsatisfactory, very suspicious in many of its circumstances, although there is no positive proof of direct fraud. These large sums of money have been paid out under circumstances that cannot be defended. At any rate, if principles of this kind receive the approval of this House, the road will be much easier to enable future Finance Ministers to tamper with public contracts, and to tamper with public funds, making things easy for those who deem themselves to have been unfortunate in their efforts to carry out a contract which they have entered into with the Government of the country.

Mr. KENNY. My hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), in his opening remarks, made the statement that the falling off which he alleges has taken place in the trade of Canada with the West Indies is due to the National Policy. My hon. friend is very apt on all occasions to attack the National Policy, and I assume that he means that the higher tariff which prevails to-day in Canada, and which applies solely to the imports, and not to the exports of Canada, is the cause of the diminution which he says has taken place in our trade with the West Indies. The hon. gentleman knows, because he has taken some pains to inform himself generally on this question, that the trade of the United States with the West Indies, the trade of that country whose tariff is much higher than ours, has increased very largely within the last 10 or 15 years; and I therefore think my hon. friend, when he considers that that highly protected country, the United States, was able to extend its commerce with the West Indies, can hardly blame our protective policy for the fact that our trade with the West Indies has not extended as rapidly as we would desire. But I think my hon. friend, if he had anxiously searched for a reason for the non-extension of Canadian trade, would have found it was largely owing to the fact that we have not had steamers to export our goods from Canada to the West Indies, while the Americans have paid very great attention to their trade with the West Indies and South America, and as a result of that attention their commerce with those countries has very much increased. It was stated earlier in the session that our exports to the West Indies had fallen off to the extent of $1,000,000, taking the commerce of 1873 and comparing it with that of 1890. If that is correct, it is certainly deeply to be regretted, and it behooves the Government and Parliament to see if some remedy cannot be applied. But I have taken the trouble to examine into the general trade, exports and imports, for some years past between Canada and the West Indies, and I find that in 1873 Canada's collective trade with the West Indies, the Spanish West Indies, the French West Indies and the other West Indies, amounted to the value of $6,163,425, and that in 1889 it amounted to $6,062,873, or a difference of about $100,000. It is true that the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), in the remarks which he made, confined himself principally to our trade with the British West Indies; but my hon. friend must remember that the steamers to which he has made reference during his speech ply not only to the British West Indies but to the foreign West Indies also. I, therefore, think it would have been more accurate, if the hon. gentleman desired to make a fair comparison, to have taken our trade with the West India Islands collectively. The hon. gentleman who introduced this resolution also attempted to convey the impression to the House that there was not much hope for the extension of Canadian trade with the West Indies. I must remind hon. gentlemen that this question of our trade with the West Indies was brought up in this House in 1887. It was discussed very fully, and the Minister of Finance of the day, Sir Charles Tupper, committed the Government to the policy of granting a subsidy for steamers in order the better to develop our trade with the West Indies. It is true, looking at the matter historically and chronologically, that no resolution was introduced to that effect till 1889. But hon. gentlemen who were here in 1887 will remember that several hon. members then contended that we had many articles of manufacture and many agricultural products which could be exported advantageously to the West Indies if we had proper facilities for so doing. I remember listening with pleasure to the remarks made by the present member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) on that occasion, in which he pointed out that there were many articles which we produce and manufacture that could be exported advantageously to the West Indies. If we will for a moment glance at the commerce which now exists between the United States and the West Indies we will, I think, find that the argument then made by the member for Kent was well founded, and that the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) is wrong in his contention that there is no prospect and no possibility of developing a large commerce with those Islands. I find that in 1889 the United States exported to the West Indies bread, and biscuits, and wheat flour, and other breadstuffs, to the value of $6,831,402. Hon. members from Ontario, no matter on which side of the House they sit, will admit that it should be possible for us to develop the flour and breadstuff trade with those Islands, or at least to secure for ourselves a portion of the large commerce which is now carried on in those articles with the United States. But, in order to do so, we must have the same facilities for exporting those articles as exist to-day in the United States. I find in 1889 Canada's total trade with the West Indies was only $6,000,000, and yet the United States, in the one item of breadstuffs, exported more than the total trade, exports and imports, of Canada with those Islands. I find, too, that in the item of hay the United States exported $71,800. We all know there is a surplus of hay in the Dominion of Canada, and if we had greater facilities to-day for the transportation of hay to those Islands we could compete on favourable terms with our neighbours for that market in that article. To show how large is the commerce between the United States and the West India Islands, I may say that in looking over the exports of that country I find that in 1889 the United States, in pork products, exported goods to the value of $6,000,000. In dairy produce they exported goods to the value of $777,000. No hon. gentleman will contend that in cheese we cannot compete with our American neighbours, if we have equal facilities of transportation. I find that vegetables were exported by the United States to the value of $610,000; and it was only the other day that my hon. friend from King's, N.S. (Mr. Borden) called the attention of the Government and the House to the anxiety which existed among the farmers in his fine county because they feared that under the new trade arrangements, which had been brought into existence between the United States and Cuba, possibly these farmers would be unable to export their vegetables to the Island of Cuba. My hon. friend placed before the House very fairly and very squarely the fact that it much concerned those he represented that every effort should be made on the part of the Government to secure, as far as was in their power, an arrangement whereby the products of Canada should be treated, in the Island of Cuba, on the same terms as those of the United States. I put it to my hon. friend from King's (Mr. Borden), if it is not necessary in conducting that trade, and in moving such perishable articles as vegetables and fruits, that they should be transported regularly and quickly, and that it can be done much more advantageously by steamers than by the old-fashioned sailing vessels. Therefore, I hope that I shall have the pleasure of voting with my hon. friend from King's (Mr. Borden) to-night. I wish also to point out to the House that in the item of manufactures of wood the United States exported to these Islands, in 1889, goods to the value of $2,174,884. Hon. gentlemen opposite have not a very high opinion of their own country, of its manufactures, of its products, or of its possibilities; but the most pessimistic amongst them will admit that in wood and wooden manufactures we are in a position to compete with our neighbours when we have equal opportunities and equal terms of doing so. Again, I find that the United States exported to the West Indies during the year 1889 furniture to the value of $590,500, and I am satisfied, from my knowledge of the manufacturers of furniture in Canada, that with an effort on their part, and an effort on the part of the agents of the steamship lines, a large trade could be done in that important branch of commerce if we only had the same facilities, the same regular, and rapid, and systematic means of transportation as the Americans are provided with. Therefore, I think that my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), instead of blaming the National Policy, because, he says, our trade with the West Indies has not been as large as it was some fifteen or sixteen years ago, should have attributed that diminution, not to the National Policy, but to the unfortunate circumstance that we have not had steamers to transport our products to the West Indies. The present Government, in its anxiety to increase the commerce of the country, to develop our manufactures, and to add to our foreign trade, asked Parliament to subsidize these lines of steamers to the West Indies. In my humble way I advocated that measure to the best of my ability, and certainly I never gave a vote, or expressed an opinion with more confidence, or that I looked back to with more pleasure, than the vote that I gave and the remarks I made in favour of subsidizing a line of steamers to the West Indies, and so endeavouring to secure new markets for Canadian products. Until recently, Canadian trade with the West Indies was very much confined to the Province of Nova Scotia alone, and for years it had been conducted with sailing vessels, and it was languishing for the reason that we could not expect these sailing vessels to compete with the numerous lines of steamers which plied from the United States to these Islands, and hence it was that the Government asked Parliament to grant a subsidy for a suitable steamship service. The subsidy was divided into three sections; section "A" being from Halifax to Jamaica, calling at Turks Island and Bermuda; and section "B," from Halifax to the Port of Havana, in Cuba, and back. There was no great difficulty in inaugurating these services, because there had been a service which had been subsidized by the Imperial Government from Halifax to St. Thomas, and, afterwards, for a short time, to Jamaica. That Imperial subsidy was withdrawn, the steamers consequently ceased running, and all steam communication between Halifax and the West Indies was stopped. When, in 1887, the Government of Canada proclaimed its intention of subsidizing a line of steamers to the West Indies, I understand that Messrs. Pickford & Black, and other friends of theirs, associated themselves together and bought two steamers for the purpose of placing them on those routes. They bought the Cunard boats, the Alpha and the Beta, and these boats have been doing the service between Halifax, and the points which are known in the subsidy as sections "A" and "B." Section "C" called for a service from the port of St. John to the Windward Islands and British Guiana, and at that time it appears no suitable boats could be immediately found for the service. It is stated in the papers now on the Table that Mr. Wood, of Halifax, offered a vessel of some 700 tons, but she was considered too small by the Government. Whilst the Minister of Finance was willing, in order to get these services promptly established, to take smaller vessels for the "A" and "B" routes, he believed that for the "C" service it was necessary that a vessel of larger tonnage should be secured, and, consequently, I believe Mr. Wood's tender was not accepted. Mr. Wood has, within the last few years, placed two very efficient steel steamers on the coasting service of the Province of Nova Scotia, and one of them, which has been engaged in the service for some years, has proved to be a very satisfactory vessel. The other one has only recently arrived in our waters; and I have no doubt that if Mr. Wood was as successful in the West India project as he has been with these two vessels the matter would have worked satisfactorily. Be that as it may, for the reasons which the Minister of Finance has given us this afternoon, he was not disposed at that time to accept Mr. Wood's offer. It appears, then, that the next lowest offer was that of Messrs. Pickford & Black, of Halifax, and there was an offer also from Mr. Furness, of the well-known Furness line of steamers. The Finance Minister has mentioned it, if I understood him correctly, that Messrs. Pickford & Black's tender was accompanied by the stipulation that those vessels should sail from Halifax; and it seems that it was desired that the vessels should start from St. John, call at Yarmouth, and then proceed on their voyage; and the hon. Minister intimated to Mr. Furness that his tender would be accepted, only stipulating, inasmuch as Mr. Furness had not time to build steamers specially for the service, that while he was using other vessels the sum should be reduced to $48,000. I think no great fault can be found with the hon. Finance Minister for having suggested this arrangement to Mr. Furness. I might be disposed to think that the offer of Messrs. Pickford & Black was an equally good offer; but, at all events, as it did not quite coincide with the views of the hon. Finance Minister, certainly the next best arrangement he could have made was to have accepted the Furness tender. Well, Mr. Speaker, the Finance Minister has explained to us this evening that there was some delay in conveying the intelligence to Mr. Furness that his tender would be accepted. That was an unavoidable delay, and when the intelligence was communicated to Mr. Furness he immediately cabled begging to withdraw his tender, and stating that he was not prepared to enter into a contract for five years, unless it contained a clause permitting him to withdraw from it at six months' notice, or unless he had an opportunity of testing what trade could be developed by experimenting with steamers on the route. Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that Mr. Furness should have taken that course, for the reason that he had at the time no steamer that was suitable, and it was unnecessary for him to build steamers. It was a new service, unlike the other services, the results of which were known; and he would, therefore, have been compelled to go to a large expense, probably £100,000 sterling, to build steamers for this particular service, of which he had no knowledge and of which he could not gauge the results from the experience of others. Therefore it was, I infer, that Mr. Furness declined to enter into the contract. Offers were then made for this "C" service by certain gentlemen in St. John; and one of them, Mr. Baird, has been referred to in a very unfair and uncomplimentary manner by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), who introduced this resolution. Instead of censuring Mr. Baird for the part he took in this transaction, I think he is rather to be commended. Mr. Baird was anxious to increase the trade of the country and of his own city, and to bring to it business from the West Indies which it had not at that time. Mr. Baird finally succeeded in securing the contract for the company with which he was connected, or rather the contract was given to the company; and having the contract they were obliged to look for a steamer, and they discovered that it was exceedingly difficult to get a suitable one; because hon. gentlemen must understand that the steamers are obliged to call at ten or twelve ports, and that in some of these ports the water is shallow and it is necessary to have vessels of light draught; and I assure hon. gentlemen who have no personal knowledge of these matters, and who have not perhaps taken the trouble to inform themselves upon them, that it is much easier to find a vessel of two or three thousand tons to engage in the trans-Atlantic trade than a vessel of one thousand tons to engage in this particular trade which we are now considering. The consequence was that this company was compelled to charter the best obtainable steamers—first, the Portia, which I know is a good, safe vessel, and subsequently the Lounda. It appears from what we have heard this evening that the Lounda made the first two or three voyages successfully. After that she seems to have broken down, and I am prepared to say, from what I have heard from others—I have never seen the ship myself—that the few last months of her employment in the West India service were very unsatisfactory, so unsatisfactory indeed that when the contract was ultimately taken up by Messrs. Pickford & Black they recognized her as unsuitable for the service; but having no boat immediately available, they asked the Government to employ her on one or two trips, and it was upon one of these trips that the accident occurred, a description of which was given to us by the hon. member who moved this resolution. Now, Mr. Speaker, Messrs. Pickford & Black are really not to blame for having failed to secure immediately suitable vessels for this service. I know, as a matter of fact, that one of these gentlemen, as soon as they secured the contract, went first to the West Indies to make their business arrangements there, to appoint their agents, and then proceeded to England to endeavour to purchase two suitable steamers. As a result of their visit to England, they finally chartered two steamers, the Taymouth Castle and the Dunvegan Castle, and these ships have been accepted by the Government as suitable for the service between Canada and the Windward Islands and British Guiana. I have not seen these ships myself, but I have read descriptions of them in our local newspapers, and I have heard them described by gentlemen of experience and knowledge in such matters, who have visited them, and I have come to the conclusion that they are in every way well suited for the work, and will conduct the contract satisfactorily. Mr. Speaker, I really expected, after the very clear and exhaustive and eminently satisfactory explanations which the hon. Finance Minister gave the House of this whole transaction, that, as his words fell upon the ears of my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I., he would have risen in his place and asked permission to withdraw this resolution. In fact, one wonders why such a resolution is introduced into this House; and seeking for a reason, the only explanation which suggests itself to my mind is the fact that when these hon. gentlemen last moved a vote of want of confidence in the Government they went over to the Pacific coast for a pretext, and moved a resolution assailing the policy of the Government for some transactions on the Pacific coast. That resolution fell very harmless upon the House, and still more so upon the Government and the country, and I assumed that, having failed in the west, they must now turn their heads to the east; and having ransacked the archives, they imagine they have discovered something here which partakes of the policy of the Opposition. The policy of the Opposition is a policy of scandal and slander. If they had not a scandal they would not have a political existence. They have never attained power since Confederation except through a scandal; and they are no good at anything except hunting up scandals. They do not always find them, but they are always zealous in the search. They take up a piece here and there, and hope, by putting the various pieces together, to succeed in making a case against the Government; but, when their work sees the light of the day, or the electric light of this House, it is easily destroyed and its falsity immediately recognized. That is the only explanation which suggests itself to my mind for the appearance of this resolution in this House to-night; and, I am quite sure that there is actually less cause for this—if it be possible to have less cause—than there was for the resolution moved in this House, only a few days ago, in reference to the conduct of the Government on the Pacific slope, and I am equally certain it will meet at the hands of members of this House that fate which it deserves.

Mr. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has done me the honour to make a personal reference to myself, and I cannot do less than respond. I am sure the House will be glad to know that I do not intend to enter at all into the details of the letting of these contracts or the change of contract from one set of men to another, as that subject has been very fully gone into by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) and the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint). I do think that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), who is certainly very discursive in his observations, was rather unfortunate in the conclusion of his speech, when he charged the Opposition with taking great delight in scandals; and, from the tone of my hon. friend, one would suppose that he believes there are no scandals. Does the hon. gentleman desire to convey the impression that he himself has not been a witness to the discovery and proof of any scandal during this session? I think he will scarcely undertake to say that he has not; and, if it were only necessary to have a scandal in order to bring the Liberal party into power, it seems to me there will be a very short time indeed before that party will be in office. But I do not propose to be led away from the main question under issue in order to discuss these scandals, which, no doubt, Sir, will shortly be brought to your attention. I propose to address myself to the trade aspect of this question entirely. I might, however, premise my remarks by saying that no better argument as to the impossibility almost of creating trade between this country and the West Indies could be found than that which is furnished by the history of what has been described to-night as the "C" service—the service which was undertaken by the company managed by Mr. Baird, running a line of steamers between St. John and Halifax and Yarmouth and Demerara. We find that these gentlemen had to send to the Finance Minister to have their books examined in order to demonstrate to him that they were making a loss, and then we find the Finance Minister increasing the amount of their contract by 50 per cent.; and notwithstanding that increase, we find that those gentlemen were forced to give up that contract, and the gentlemen who took it over received the solace of $15,000 for doing so. But my hon. friend from Halifax, in referring to myself more particularly, said that he knew I would be favourable to this grant because of the importance of the trade to which he said I had referred on a recent occasion in this House, the trade in potatoes between the western portion of Nova Scotia and the Island of Cuba. He pointed out that I had said there was great anxiety on the part of the people with reference to that trade, owing to the new tariff arrangements between the United States and Spain; and he pointed out, further, that these potatoes are perishable articles, for which it is absolutely necessary rapid means of transit should be provided by steamers. Now, I can tell my hon. friend that the chief anxiety of the people engaged in that business in my county is that they should be left severely alone. So far from this subsidy having been any assistance to them, they consider it to have been a positive hindrance, and I will tell the hon. gentleman why. Last year, that trade having grown to such large proportions, four or five gentlemen living in my constituency chartered a steamer and put her on the route between the terminus of a railway in that section and the Island of Cuba. They did not ask any subsidy nor did they want any. If proper relations can be continued between this country and Cuba, if we can be put on the same footing with Cuba as the United States, we are prepared to go on with that trade; and not only do we not ask for a subsidy, but we ask that a subsidy be not granted, because that which has been granted has been a direct interference with the trade. What do we find? Since a steamer has been put on the route by these private gentlemen—and I am happy to say that their venture resulted in a very handsome profit to them—Messrs Pickford & Black, the favourites of the Government, endeavoured to make arrangements, which could only be temporary, of course, with certain speculators in the county to reduce the freight rate on potatoes to the West Indies in order to kill out the legitimate enterprise which had been established by these gentlemen. That is the way the subsidy voted by this Parliament and taken out of the pockets of the people has been made use of. I contend not one dollar of this subsidy goes into the pockets of the people and that it does not in any way aid the trade. So much for the potato trade to which my hon. friend has referred. He criticised the observations of my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), who said that the diminution of the trade of this country with the West Indies was the direct result of the operation of the National Policy. I heartily agree with that statement of my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), notwithstanding the ingenious argument which my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Kenny) attempted to adduce against it. My hon. friend from Halifax refers to the trade between the United States and the West Indies, and says that the United States is a more highly protected country than this country. Let me point out to the hon. gentleman that the United States is evidently not satisfied with the trade she is doing with the West Indies, because she is now taking steps to bring about absolute free trade with those Islands. Anyone who has studied political economy knows that, in order to have a large export trade, you must have an import trade, and that is what the United States is recognizing, and it is taking steps now, as I have said, in order to increase its trade with the West Indies, to have absolute freedom of trade with those countries. My hon. friend stated that there were many natural products which could be exported to the West Indies if there were proper facilities, but he had just before admitted that 16 years ago our trade with the West Indies was greater than it is to-day, and we have had the facilities offered by steamships subsidized by this Government for eighteen months past. The hon. gentleman surely knows that for half a century the Province of Nova Scotia has been exporting the natural products of fish, lumber and potatoes to the West Indies, and has been doing a large trade in each of these articles, and I believe that trade would have gone on increasing; but it seems that there was a feeling in this country, in Government circles, at all events, that we should emulate what was being done in the United States, and that, because trade was growing between the city of New York and the West Indies, we should do something to encourage trade with the West Indies by giving subventions to steamers. But my hon. friend knows well that the steamers to which he refers as plying between the United States and the West Indies are not subsidized steamers; he knows that not a dollar of subsidy is paid to encourage that trade. It is a trade which has grown up naturally and does not require subsidies, just as the trade between the western part of Nova Scotia and Cuba in the article of potatoes was a natural trade, and would have grown if the trade relations had continued to be as favourable between this country and the West Indies as they are between the United States and the West Indies. When this proposal was made to subsidize a line of steamers between Canada and the West Indies it was done with a view of developing the trade. Developing the trade in what respect? I have pointed out that, in so far as the export of fish, lumber and agricultural products is concerned, that trade was carried on to the fullest extent. Then, if there was any trade to be developed between this country and the West Indies it must have been in the way of manufactured goods with return cargoes of fruit, and that is the great trade which is done between the cities of the United States and the West Indies to-day. The Minister of Finance told us, in the concluding part of his speech, that the steamer going from St. John, and plying on what is known as the "C" route, began with a cargo valued at $6,000, and that the last cargo taken by her was valued at $36,000. But he did not tell us what sort of articles she carried. I venture to say that that trade, which is an export trade solely, was simply a displacement of trade, that we were simply taking away from the schooners the trade which legitimately belonged to them, and transferring it to the steamers, so that the subsidy is a positive injury to the large class of people who are engaged in the schooner trade between this country and the West Indies. It was then proposed to develop a trade with the West Indies in manufactured articles. I ask the House how these hon. gentlemen expect to develop a trade in manufactures with the West Indies or any other country, where they have to meet in the open market all the manufactures of other countries, when they are afraid in this country to meet the manufactures of other countries. Here surely, if anywhere, we could meet them on our own ground. They have against them—I refer to manufactures from England and from the United States—the natural disadvantage of distance, and freight rates to pay, but we have to erect barriers of 35 per cent. to keep those manufactures out of this country. Hon. gentlemen propose that we shall go into the West Indies and compete with free trade England and with the United States, when we are afraid to compete with those countries in our own market. Now, with reference to what these vessels are to bring back to this country, I have heard no one speak to-night of return freights. When the hon. the Finance Minister referred to the increase of trade in this particular line of steamers running to the West Indies, which he said had gone up in value from $6,000 to $36,000 per cargo, he referred to the value of the exports alone. If he had taken the trouble to look at the imports—and I have no doubt he knows that very well—he would have to admit that there was no increase in the imports, and there can be none. We have not the market. What is the great article of import which the vessels plying between the United States and the West Indies bring back? Fruit. The banana trade has grown there to immense proportions. If a steamer load of that kind were to be brought into Canada, where would it be disposed of? Take our own cities, such as Toronto and Montreal. Where do they get their supply of this fruit? Is it from steamers coming to Halifax and St. John? I never heard of it, and the manifests do not show it. That trade comes through New York; and unless a fast line of steamers can be put on at an enormous cost that trade will never come direct to Canada. The United States has an enormous consuming population, which we have not in Canada, so it is absurd to expect that we shall receive, within many years, at any rate, any return cargoes from the West Indies. Then, what is the object of giving this subsidy? Simply for no other purpose than to pay these vessels for coming back in ballast. That is the kind of trade it is proposed to tax the tax-payers of this country to build up between Canada and the West Indies. Trade is only desirable when it is profitable, and trade, in order to to be profitable, must be natural. Now, I would ask my hon. friend the Finance Minister, if all these difficulties beset this trade that he is now attempting to build up between this country and the West Indies, what is going to be the result after the treaty comes into force which we were discussing the other day, which has been made between the United States and the West Indies? What will be the result when the Spanish West Indies, San Domingo and the British West Indies are forced into closer trade relations with the United States? What will become of his subsidies then? He will have to increase them enormously in order to control any portion of that trade. In conclusion, I would point out to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance what, in my judgment, is the only remedy for these trade ills which are surrounding us on every side, and that is to adopt the policy of the Liberal party of this country. Instead of going from Dan to Beersheba, from one end of the earth to the other, to find a market, and subsidizing steamers in order to build up a trade, let him adopt the sensible policy of endeavouring to get closer trade relations with that country which it is most natural for us to trade with, the country lying right alongside of us. When that is done, and when this country is enabled to make a satisfactory treaty of reciprocity with the country to the south of us, then Canada will become a prosperous country, but I venture to say that it will take many subsidies such as the hon. gentleman is defending here to-night to give us the trade with the West Indies or with any other country for which we seem now to be languishing.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Minister of Finance invited me to amend one of the paragraphs of that resolution. I will make a change in the paragraph referring to the reopening of negotiations by the Minister of Finance, by inserting the names of Pickford & Black, so that it will read that negotiations were reopened with Pickford & Black and Van Wart.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. members for Quebec County (Mr. Frémont), and Beauce (Mr. Godbout), came into the Chamber after the question was partially read: more than two pages of it were read in French when they entered the Chamber.

Mr. SPEAKER. Was the hon. member for Quebec County in the House when the question was put?

Mr. FREMONT. I came into the Chamber when the question was being put by the Chair, and consequently I considered myself present.

Mr. SPEAKER. Was the hon. member for Beauce in the House when the question was put?

Mr. GODBOUT. (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I was in the House when the reading of the question commenced, and I have heard it sufficiently, I think, to understand it so as to be able to give my vote.

Mr. TAYLOR. When is the question considered put?

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule is as follows:—If a member is not present in the House when the question is put by the Speaker, he cannot have his vote recorded. Let the hon. members answer for themselves. Was the hon. member for Beauce in the House when the question was put?

Mr. GODBOUT. Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER. Was the hon. member for Quebec County in the House when the question was put?

Mr. FRÉMONT. I came in during the reading of the resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER. You must say yes or no.

Mr. FRÉMONT. Yes.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Brandon Post Office..... $16,500

Mr. WATSON. What is the total cost of the Brandon post office?

Mr. FOSTER. The total probable cost is $63,000. This vote is for the completion of the public building.

Mr. WATSON. What is the amount of the original contract?

Mr. FOSTER. The original contract for the building was $31,500.

Mr. McMULLEN. What was the architect's estimate of the entire cost?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know; but the contract was for $31,500.

Mr. WATSON. How much was paid for the site?

Mr. FOSTER. $5,460. It takes up four lots, and has a frontage of 96 feet.

Mr. WATSON. From whom was it purchased?

Mr. FOSTER. It was purchased from D. Hopp and W. Proudfoot, and the Scottish Ontario Land Company.

Mr. WATSON. Were public tenders asked for the erection of the building?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; tenders were asked for, and the contract given to John Hanbury, of Brandon, in June, 1889.

Mr. WATSON. Was his the lowest tender?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is the Minister not able to give the architect's estimate of the entire cost?

Mr. FOSTER. The estimate of the probable cost is $63,000; that includes land and all fittings, heating apparatus, lighting, and so on.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the population and postal revenue of Brandon?

Mr. FOSTER. The postal revenue is $11,000, money orders $83,000.

Mr. MULOCK. What amount is paid in salary to the postmaster?

Mr. HAGGART. The postmaster receives $2,300, and $300 for forwarding allowance, and $340 for rent, fuel and light; there is also a commission on money orders.

Mr. WATSON. How is the balance made up over the amount of $31,500 contract for building?

Mr. FOSTER. The amount for the building contract is as I have stated. The contract for heating is $4,750. There is furniture fittings, and so on, amounting to $8,000, and there is fencing, and footpaths, and incidentals.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is the postmaster there?

Mr. HAGGART. I think he is Mr. Kavanagh.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that he gets a salary of $2,300.

Mr. WATSON. Who is the clerk of works? How long has he been engaged, and what is his salary?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chubb is clerk of works, salary $75 per month, and he is engaged since the contract was gone on with, in June, 1889, I think.

Mr. MULOCK. There are $8,000 yet to be accounted for?

Mr. FOSTER. There must have been some additions to the original contract in order to make up the difference. The deputy will make a note of that, and I will be able to give an explanation later.

Mr. MULOCK. Then the item had better stand until the information is brought before the Committee.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it is necessary for it to stand.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it is. The Committee cannot discharge its duties intelligently and vote this sum of money unless the Minister gives an explanation about the $8,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I have explained every item, and stated that there must be some extras on the contract.

Mr. MULOCK. We have a little experience in dealing with extras, and as the time is coming for putting an end to that business we cannot begin earlier than to-night. The Minister speculates that this $8,000 must be for extras, but he has not the faintest idea of what it is for. Yet the hon. gentleman will not allow the item to stand. I think it would be very wrong that the Minister should press it without giving us that information. The House and the country has had a good deal of experience in extras, and for my part I protest against this vote being passed until the Minister gives us the necessary information.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think the request made by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) is a very reasonable one indeed. If we discharge our functions, and properly scrutinize these items, it is not only our right but it is our duty to ask the Government to give us full information as to the mode in which they spend the money, and if the Government is unable to account for $8,000 of a vote it is an unbusinesslike way to allow it to pass. While I am on my feet I wish to call attention to the general principle of the votes that we are giving for erecting public buildings. Here is a town of some 4,000 or 5,000 inhabitants, and I suppose it is a town that is likely to increase in size. We are now asked to expend $63,000 in that town, and the interest upon that sum at 4 per cent. is something over $2,500 a year, which represents the rental for a post office building in a town of 4,000 or 5,000 inhabitants. I cannot help saying that that is an extravagant mode of doing business, and under such a system as that we can easily account for the enormous debt and the enormous expenditure of this country. In the United States I believe they not only do not erect a building in a town of this size, but they confine the post office to a rental of about $500 a year. I may be mistaken in the amount, but I think it is the maximum allowance that the Government of the United States will pay for a post office in a town of this size, while here we are proposing to build a post office the interest on the expenditure of which will be five times as much as the allowance for rent in the United States would be. We have gone too fast and too far in this system of erecting public buildings in small towns, and it is good time to consider whether we cannot economize in this matter without injury to the public service. I think this vote is an excessive one anyway, and whether it is excessive or not the House is entitled to know how this money will be spent. They are not to take it for granted that this $8,000 will be all right, that it does not matter, and that it should not be subject to criticism. We should know how the Government propose to expend this money.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no objection at all to the information being given, but my hon. friend from North York preferred a demand rather than a request.

Mr. MULOCK. I used the word "suggest" to begin with.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we should be reasonable in passing these Estimates. I find that the contract for the main building was $31,500, but up to the 16th of March, 1891, $44,500 has been spent, out of which you take the $6,000 for the site, leaving $38,000 in round numbers; and I find that there is a balance due on the 16th of March, 1891, on a contract for additional work, of $4,000, which would make in all for the building $42,000, or something like $10,000 above the original contract. I find that this building is not simply a post office, but it comprises also the Custom-house, the examining warehouse, a gas inspection office, the weights and measures office, the inland revenue office and the land office on the first and second floors, as well as the caretaker's chamber, and the attic is to remain unfinished at present. These are under contract, and the money is due upon them. I think we shall have to vote the amount, and I will lay the full explanation on the Table to-morrow if they are wished for, so that they will be had before concurrence. The information may be satisfactory to my hon. friend the moment he sees it.

Mr. CHARLTON. If it were not satisfactory, we could not stop and discuss it on concurrence.

Mr. DALY. If the hon. member for North Norfolk will take the trouble to look at the Postmaster General's Report he will find that the postal revenue of the Brandon post office last year amounted to $11,232, the number of money orders were 2,322, the amount of money orders issued was $37,682, and the total amount of money orders paid was $44,776.

Mr. McMULLEN. We have seen all that.

Mr. DALY. If the hon. gentleman has seen all this, I think it would be sufficient to show him that this office is a necessity, and he would find that towns in Ontario, which are forty or fifty years of age, do not produce within $3,000 or $4,000 of the amount of postal revenue that the city of Brandon does. I may state, for the information of the hon. gentleman, that there are not over eight places in the Province of Ontario, excluding the cities of Toronto, Hamilton, Kingston and Ottawa, that have a larger revenue than the city of Brandon. As the hon. Finance Minister has stated, this building is not alone for post office purposes, but is to be used also for a land office, a Custom-house, an inland revenue office, a weights and measures office, and other purposes. The receipts of the Brandon land office are larger than those of any other land office in Manitoba or the North-West Territories, and the requirements are such, that a few years ago the building, which was then occupied as a post office and land office, was destroyed by fire, and, as it had not the proper vault accommodation, thousands of records were lost, greatly to the inconvenience of the Government and the public. In this building large vaults have been placed, so that the records of the several departments will be preserved. This building has remained in an uncompleted condition for six or seven months, and the people are waiting patiently for the accommodation until hon. gentlemen opposite allow these Estimates to pass. I am constantly in receipt of communications asking me why the building is not completed, and I have simply to reply that, until the Opposition allow these Estimates to pass, the people will have to remain without this accommodation.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman was not here last night, or he would not have made the statement he has. He talks about the large revenue of the Brandon post office. It was pointed out last night that in Woodstock there is a revenue of $15,432, and there is no post office there. So that the hon. gentleman can see that there are places in Ontario which yield a larger revenue than Brandon and which have no post offices, and I will tell him the reason why. Brandon is represented by a supporter of the Government, while the County of Oxford never sends a man here to support the Tory party. It is a good, honest, intelligent constituency, and it sends men here to represent honest principles, and the result is that it cannot get a post office or any other public building; but simply because Brandon sends my hon. friend here it gets a post office. These post offices are peddled around from one constituency to another, wherever they can do the most good.

Mr. DALY. Does the hon. gentleman insinuate that I am here to represent dishonest principles? I want the hon. gentleman to understand that I come here to represent just as honest principles as he or any other member of this House does. I want him to understand that my election was fought on as good principles as his, and particularly on the question of unrestricted reciprocity, and if the contest had lasted a week longer I would have had 600 majority instead of 400. The hon. gentleman asked for a post office at Listowel, which has a two-penny-half-penny revenue of $4,129, and one at Mount Forest, which has a two-penny-half-penny revenue of $3,902. I did not ask the late Minister of Public Works for this Custom-house, post office, inland revenue office and Dominion lands office until I felt that I was perfectly justified by the facts and figures in asking for this building as an absolute necessity; and if it is a fact that Woodstock has not a public building that is Woodstock's misfortune, and if the people of Woodstock send representatives here who do not show that enlightenment that others do, I suppose they will have to suffer.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman makes a statement that is not true. He says I demanded post offices for Listowel and Mount Forest. I have not made such a demand; but I compared the revenue at those points with the revenue at other points where post offices have been built. For instance, take St. Henri, in the Province of Quebec, where the revenue was only $423, and in towns like Mount Forest, and Listowel, and Harrison, where the revenue is much larger, no such buildings are erected. It is a gross injustice to build a post office at St. Henri, where the revenue is so small, and leave other places with a revenue of $4,000 and $5,000 without post offices. Yet the hon. Finance Minister laughs. Perhaps he can afford to.

Mr. FOSTER. Do not deny me some little luxury.

Mr. McMULLEN. We do not wish to do that: we understand what the hon. gentleman's laugh means: but, at the same time, we consider it our duty to discuss these points. I do not find fault with the erection of a building at Brandon if it is considered a necessity. Possibly the accommodation to be had there was so very poor that this building is a necessity; but we want to have an estimate of what it will cost. The hon. gentleman says it will cost $63,000, but he can only account for $48,000. The balance he says is extras. Well, $10,000 or so in extras is a little too much to put in the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite. We have done this thing before, and we always found the estimate exceeded by fifty or a hundred per cent. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Daly) has complained that the building has been standing there unfinished for seven or eight months and nothing done. I would ask the Finance Minister if there is not a clerk of works in charge, and whether he is being paid all this time, while waiting until Parliament will vote the money necessary to go on with the work?

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) denies that he ever asked for any post office for Mount Forest, Listowell and Harrison. Why, not later than last night he made that demand. He said there were post offices being put up in other places, and asked why there were none at Mount Forest, Listowell and Harrison. He has again brought up the question of Woodstock. I have heard many hon. gentlemen opposite refer to the fact that Woodstock, which has a revenue of $15,000, has no post office. The hon. gentleman ought to state the whole facts. Some years ago a gentleman put up a suitable building for a post office in that town and rented it to the Government for $400 or $500 a year, for a term of years; that building is in a central position and supplies all the wants of the town, and the town is not suffering in any way for want of postal facilities. I have no doubt that if other men in other places would put up suitable buildings similar arrangements could be arrived at, and these places would have all the accommodation they could desire. It has been said that the Government are building post offices only in those constituencies where they get political support. Well, we have a town in the riding of West York, which, in the near future, will be entitled to ask for additional postal accommodation, but which has not yet asked for it, although West Toronto Junction is a town estimated to contain 6,000 or 7,000 people. We have not even asked the Government to build a post office there, but we think a good time is coming in the near future, when in a year or two we will have 12,000 to 15,000 people there, and will then be in a position to ask the Government to build a post office; and I have no doubt, this Government being in power, as it undoubtedly will be, we will have a magnificent post office in that town.

Mr. CHARLTON. No doubt the hon. member for West York is correct in anticipating that when he asks the Government for an appropriation for a post office he will, in all probability, get it. He is not at all counting without his host in this matter, but I am afraid my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) will not meet with the same consideration should he make a similar demand. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), in dealing with the case of Woodstock, has stated a fact which illustrates the very principle I have urged the Government to adopt. Woodstock has a population of about 12,000 and a postal revenue of over $15,000, yet it has not been necessary to erect a post office there, because the Government have been able to rent suitable quarters for $400 or $500 a year.

Mr. WALLACE. The building was put up specially for that purpose.

Mr. CHARLTON. That does not matter. What I contend is, that in the case of Brandon and scores of other towns, where larger appropriations are expended in the erection of postal buildings, the Government might pursue the policy they adopted at Woodstock, and rent buildings. The building the Government propose to erect at Brandon will cost us in interest $2,500 at 4 per cent. a year, whereas, in Woodstock, which has three times the population, the people are well accommodated at a cost of $500 a year, because the Government have rented premises there, instead of putting up a building of their own. In the United States, where they have had long experience in postal matters, and have an admirable system, and where they have succeeded in making their postal service almost meet expenses on a postage of 2 cents per letter, they have pursued the policy of erecting post offices only in large cities, such as New York, Philadelphia and Buffalo. There is a sliding scale and rule in the department, which restricts the Government to the allowance of a certain rental in towns of a certain size, and having a certain amount of postal revenue, and the town of Brandon, under the American rule, would not be given an allowance of more than $500 a year for the rental of a post office. Yet our Government are asking us to vote an amount, the interest on which, in connection with the amounts already voted, will amount to $2,500 per year. The whole system is wasteful and extravagant, and is pursued for the very purpose the hon. member for West York has stated, when he says that in good time he will be able to get a post office in his riding. That is the policy pursued by the Government, the policy of making grants to hon. members, such as the hon. member for West York and others supporting the Government. The hon. member for Brandon waxed very warm in his defence of the Government in this matter. He says it is highly necessary to give the little town of Brandon $63,000 for a post office. I believe, that town could be adequately supplied with all the necessary postal facilities by a grant of $500 a year. The hon. gentleman told us there were only eight towns in Ontario that have a larger postal revenue than Brandon. He is entirely mistaken. There are thirteen or fourteen towns in Ontario which have a larger postal revenue than the town of Brandon, and I trust his statements are more correct in other cases than in this.

Mr. DALY. I am perfectly correct in saying there are only eight towns. Of course, I did not include towns such as Toronto.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman said there were eight towns, including Toronto, Hamilton and Paris.

Mr. DALY. If I did so, I was mistaken, for I find there are thirteen exactly.

Mr. CHARLTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of very great importance to this country to reduce its expenses. We have a public debt of nearly $50 a head, while the United States has a public debt of less than $15 a head. It is a matter of some consequence for us to see whether we are handicapped in the race of progress or not. When we have an enormous public debt, and enormous annual burdens, and cannot adopt a policy which is calculated to advance public prosperity because of the burden of taxation which weighs upon our shoulders, it behooves us to reduce our public burdens and to practise economy, and we should commence by curtailing these enormous expenditures on public buildings, such as this expenditure of $63,000 for public buildings in a little country town like Brandon. We should adopt a business system in our expenditures on public buildings and public works. The sooner the Government realize that in the public interest they should stop these excessive appropriations the better for the country. We have lately unearthed a great many transactions which have aroused public attention, and this is a time when we had better attempt at least to give the people economical government and honest government, and then we will put an end to the system of favouritism in the construction of public buildings all over this Dominion. What we are now discussing is a question of favouritism in the town of Brandon. If that district were represented by anyone who was not a supporter of the Government, does anybody suppose that an appropriation would be asked for a post office there? No; it would be placed in the category of Woodstock, where a building is rented for $500 a year and is pronounced ample for all the purposes for which it is required, as the member for West York (Mr. Wallace) has declared. We ought to see if we cannot manage to remove from the shoulders of the people some of the heavy burdens which are now laid upon them.

Mr. WATSON. While agreeing with the general principle laid down by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), I cannot agree with him that there are no grounds for erecting a public building in the city of Brandon. When we compare that city with some of the towns for which we passed votes last night, I say it is entitled to a public building. It is a growing town, and has a population of between 4,000 and 5,000, and the revenues received there are large. Take the town I live in, Portage la Prairie. It has a revenue of $7,500, and yet we voted last night tens of thousands of dollars for public buildings in towns with revenues of only $600 or $700. If the line were laid down in regard to revenues, there is no doubt that Brandon would come in. It is true that $63,000 is a very large amount for a public building for a town of the size of Brandon, but when we learn that is for a land office, a Custom-house and a post office combined, it does not seem so very extravagant. However, what we want to know is how the money is spent. As I said last night, we have reason to believe that all the money we vote is not expended as this House intends it should be. There is a discrepancy of $8,000 here between the amount expended and the amount for which the hon. gentleman who has charge of these Estimates can give an explanation. I will not discuss our elections in the North-West. I will not discuss whether the member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) would have been better off after two weeks more time to canvass, though I doubt if he would; neither will I discuss the cry he says he used against unrestricted reciprocity during that election. His constituents will have to judge of his action in regard to that matter. I will not discuss his support of honest government and honest principles, and the way in which he has carried that out. That is another matter for his constituents to judge of. What I want to get at is, what this money is to be spent for. If there is a discrepancy of $8,000 which cannot be explained, I think the item should stand until some explanation can be given.

Mr. FOSTER. I will have to give the explanation again. I do not think there is any possibility that any of this money is going into the elections, or is to be devoted to any other purposes than those for which it is voted.

Mr. WATSON. You are $8,000 short.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an amount of $31,500 for the building, $4,750 for the heating, and that makes $36,250. Then you must add $5,460 for the price of the lot, and you may round that up by expenditures which I suppose are necessarily incurred in getting the land, and the like of that. Then I find that, not for election expenses or anything of that sort, there was a total expenditure up to the 16th March, 1891, on the building, on the land and the contracts, of $44,500.

Mr. WATSON. What is that spent for?

Mr. FOSTER. For land and on the contracts. Then there is a balance due on March 16th.

Mr. MULOCK. If you want the Committee to give credit for the $44,000, it will be necessary to explain the difference between the figures you have given and the $44,000. The totals you have given do not amount to the gross sum you say has been spent.

Mr. FOSTER. I am trying to show that $44,581 had been spent on the contracts and the land up to the 16th March.

Mr. ALLISON. Is that item of $41,710 included in the $44,000?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. The amount expended up to the 16th March and due on the contract and additional works amounts in round numbers to $49,000. That leaves a difference of between $7,000 and $8,000. The only explanation I know of is that the $7,000 or $8,000 is expenditure over and above contract price.

Mr. WATSON. That is what we want to know.

Mr. FOSTER. That is information I have not here now, but I will bring it down. It is evident that it has gone into additions to the building, such, for instance, as the vaults.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think you had better let the item stand.

Mr. FOSTER. If the House is to take the position that every item in regard to which explanations cannot be given immediately is to stand, we might as well let the Committee rise. The hon. gentleman has had a fair explanation. It is patent to the Committee, and, as I have stated, the explanation will be brought down.

Mr. CHARLTON. I cannot see what difference it makes whether we let the vote stand now till we get explanations or wait till concurrence.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There was an announcement last evening that $60 were charged for steps three feet long for a certain post office that would cost only $2 or $3. The hon. gentleman knows that there has been a great deal of enquiry with regard to the management of this particular Department of Public Works, and these extraordinary excesses on every contract, no matter how simple the building may be, is certainly a suspicious circumstance, and the House is under obligation to the public to enquire with some care into all these excesses. I do not think it is an unreasonable request that the Minister should give full explanations with regard to this $7,290 before the item is passed. This is a very large percentage. What is there in the construction of a building of this sort that would lead an architect to go so much astray, or to be so careless in the preparation of his estimates?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is too suspicious about everything. I do not suppose he will maintain that a public building can be let to contract and can be finished within a dollar of the contract price. If he has ever built a house for himself, as no doubt he has, he will find that the estimate of the cost and the actual cost do not always tally. There is here only a discrepancy of $7,000 on a total of $63,000, which is not a large percentage.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). $7,000 on $41,000.

Mr. DEVLIN. I have called attention already this session to a point which is somewhat similar to those mentioned in discussion; it was about the Buckingham post office.

Mr. FOSTER. We are not on that item.

Mr. DEVLIN. You are on the Brandon post office, and your generosity with respect to the Brandon post office induces me to believe that you might be just if not generous in another point. To show how these building are distributed, I will take Aylmer East, whose gross postal revenue is only $1,238, and I find it has a post office costing over $12,000. Of course, I do not complain of that; on the contrary, I am perfectly satisfied. Take the City of Hull: it affords a gross postal revenue of $2,974, and I am informed by the Minister of Public Works that the post office of that city has cost over $30,000, and I do not complain of this. Now, the town of Buckingham, in the County of Ottawa, has a postal revenue of $2,327, much larger than that of Aylmer, and the money orders issued amounted to $19,968; so that, according to revenue and business, the town of Buckingham is as important as either Aylmer or Hull. Notwithstanding the fact that petitions have come to the Government over and over again asking for the establishment of a proper post office in the town of Buckingham, they have invariably been disregarded. The petitions, I know as a fact, have been presented generally on the eve of an election, and although perhaps the promise then held out was not an official one, still, it was asserted on many platforms that this post office would be erected. Yet they have but a little side building there, which I believe some time ago was broken into and robbed, and much money lost; it is a little side-room, the rental of which is only $100. In the consideration of this item for the Brandon post office it is well that we should exercise some caution, when we find that something like $64,000 is generously and quickly voted, whereas in a point of such importance as Buckingham nothing is done. Is it possible that unjustifiable delay is inflicted because the town of Buckingham happens to be in a county which does not send a supporter of the Government to this House?

Mr. FOSTER. Question.

Mr. DEVLIN. The question may not be interesting to you, but it is interesting to the people of my county. It is useless for me to draw your attention to these matters; I would get about the same answer which has been given to so many deputations that have waited upon the Government. Last night, when reference was made to the post office at Woodstock, you did not call question, nor did you call question when reference was made to many other post offices; but the moment that I mention a place, where a grave injustice is done, then you call question.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) stated that last night I demanded a post office for one or two places in my riding. The hon. gentleman's ears must have deceived him, for I challenge him to take up the Hansard and read it over and point out where I made any such a demand. The hon. gentleman makes the statement at random, and he does not attempt to educate himself as to the facts before he gets up and makes charges. I repeat what I said last night, that we can build post offices in places like St. Henri, St. Jérome, and other places in the Province of Quebec that do not give over $2,000 or $3,000 of a revenue, but the Government pass over places like Mount Forest and Harriston. I mentioned this last night, but I made no demand for a post office. In connection with this vote, we are quite willing, I am sure, on this side, to vote an item where a well-defined and well-outlined statement is presented of the reason for which the money is to be expended. Now, we are willing to vote the amount the hon. gentleman asks for, less the $7,000 for which he cannot give a satisfactory reason. If you will deduct that sum we will pass the vote. The late Minister of Public Works estimated the total cost at $31,500; we have now spent $49,000, and we are asked to increase it to $63,000, $7,000 of which cannot be explained. The item should be allowed to stand until the explanation is forthcoming.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The request made by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) is a reasonable and proper one. We know the administration of the Public Works Department has been scandalous during the last few years, and this is only another exhibition of it. A building that was estimated to cost $31,500 has had $49,000 already expended on it. We do not expect the Minister of Finance to know the details, but he should learn them from the officers of the department, and we should not be asked to pass these items without explanation. This is another proof of the incapacity of the officers and the head of the Department of Public Works, and I feel very loathe to vote one dollar to be expended by the Public Works Department until there is a complete change of every officer from the head down to the foot. They have not entered into a single contract for the last 10 or 12 years in which there have not been changes and alterations made, and the amount asked for has been exceeded by double and sometimes treble. We must obtain the explanation required in connection with this item. The officers of the department should have furnished the Minister of Finance with all the information, and we have the sorry exhibition of $49,000 having been spent, and the Government cannot tell the purposes for which it was spent. Under these circumstances, the item should stand until the officers have an opportunity to look over the matter and give particulars as to where the money was spent. It is anything but a business-like transaction to spend $63,000 in a place the size of Brandon, with the amount of revenue there collected, especially when by spending $400 or $500 annually the Government would be able to secure a good building. The fact is, there has been so much boodling, robbing, stealing and swindling going on under the administration of the Public Works Department during the last few years that it is our bounden duty to insist on the fullest information being furnished before money is spent by the present officers of the department.

Mr. HYMAN. The case of the Brandon post office is like several of those discussed last evening. First, there is a sum put in the Estimates for the purchase of land. Next year we have an amount for the contract. Next year we have an amount for extras and to complete. It seems to me, as a business man, that this Committee should insist that when any item is put in the Estimates the House should be put in possession of full information as to the amount of contract. We found last night that the same method was pursued in the case of other buildings as has been followed in regard to the Brandon post office. First, an estimate was put in for a certain sum. That money was expended, and in some instances not expended in the purchase of land. But even then the House was not put in possession of information to enable members to tell what the total expenditure would be for that particular purpose. That is the way the present vote is attempted to be forced through the present Committee. It is only right and proper that we should be placed in possession of the fullest information. We have at present these facts: that a certain amount of money was paid for the land, that a contract was entered into for the building, also contracts for heating and other matters, making in all $54,000. We are told in addition that the total expenditure will be $63,000. Surely we are asking nothing unfair in requesting the Government to allow the item to stand until we are put in possession of information in regard to the difference between $54,000 and $63,000. I quite understand the position of the Minister of Finance, who cannot be expected to have at his fingers' ends the details of the department, but we have a right to those details, and he should obtain them from the department before we are asked to pass this item.

Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is trifling with the Committee, after the reasonable request for information to which we are entitled, to insist on pressing this vote. I trust the Minister of Finance will understand that it cannot be done very readily. We stand in the position that we are entitled to the information. We readily understand that the Minister of Finance may not have the information. He may believe the matter is all right; but there are reasons which lead us to think it is our duty, before voting money, to know to what it is to be ultimately applied. I do not want to offer factious opposition in this matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CHARLTON. Hon. gentlemen opposite will swallow anything, and not hesitate to vote tens of thousands of dollars without stopping to make enquiries. We are here as custodians of the public interest. We are sent here to vote the public money and to keep down taxation, and we have a right to obtain this information before passing this vote.

Mr. FOSTER. It is plainly seen that the matter does not end there. My hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) says he is anxious to have this item explained, but the debate is not over before my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Campbell) rises and says that he is going to take a point in advance, and actually left it to be understood by the Committee that he does not think a dollar ought to be voted until every officer in the Public Works Department has been turned out and some one else put in. It is plain to be seen that the object of the Opposition side is that the item shall not be voted, and if one piece of information is given another will be demanded, and so it will be tried to prevent the vote. I think I have made a fair proposition to the House. Hon. gentlemen know that I am not the head of that department, and that I am simply doing the best I can. They know well that the gentleman here is not the gentleman who formerly has been here to give the information on the facts. I will bring the information down to-morrow, and why should not the items pass, especially when behind this objection comes up the threatening form that other demands will be made.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, the hon. gentleman from Kent (Mr. Campbell) must be responsible for his sayings. He stated that——

Mr. WATSON. I do not see that the Minister who has charge of these items has any reason for complaint. He is the Finance Minister, and after the exposures that have been made in connection with the Public Works Department he should wish to know how this $9,000 is added to the cost of the building.

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to know, and I propose that the Committee shall know before the item is finally passed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). As I understand this item, the Minister has shown that the original estimate for this building was $41,710, and he says there has been spent beyond that $7,290, making $49,000 in all, and he is asking a further appropriation of $14,850, so that the appropriation he is now asking for, added to the expenditure which has already taken place, amounts to something in the neighbourhood of $64,000—some $22,290 in excess of the original estimate.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is all wrong on that point.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to call his attention to what was said last year. Sir Hector Langevin being interrogated in regard to this Brandon post office, said :

"The amount expended up to the 31st December last is $16,919. When the work is completed it will have cost between $45,000 and $48,000. After this vote is taken we will have only about $550 to ask."

That was the statement last year. My hon. friend will see that Sir Hector Langevin, the Minister of Public Works, was gravely in error in the statement he made to the House of at least $15,000.

Mr. FOSTER. In view of that, I will let the item stand. If that statement was made I think an explanation is necessary, and we will see where the explanation comes in.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Winnipeg immigrant buildings—To complete..... $2,000

Mr. MULOCK. What is the explanation of this?

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend want all the explanation?

Mr MULOCK. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. This vote of $2,000 is required for completing during the fiscal year 1891-92, as per subjoined estimates of the chief architect, the immigrant building which is being erected at Winnipeg on lots Nos. 46, 47 and 48, Maple street, to replace that destroyed by fire. Total expenditure incurred up to March 16, 1891, $16,981.81; balance due on contract and additional works, March 16, 1891, $2,647; furniture and fittings ordered, $16; cooking ranges, &c., ordered, $585; one basin for agent's office, $50; fencing and footpaths, $660; superintendence and incidental expenses, $939; heating, electric lighting, removal of old building, and fitting up same as wood and coal shed, removing caretaker's house and repairing same, &c., covered by vote in Supplementary Estimates, 1890-91, $2,000; total probable cost of new immigrant building, $24,678.81. Deduct total expenditure up to March 16, 1891, $16,981.81; balance on hand, March 16, 1891, $3,697; vote in Supplementary Estimates, 1891, to reimburse Department of Agriculture out of their immigration appropriation for 1890-91, $2,000—total, $22,678.81. Grant required to complete in 1891-92, $2,000; contract No. 1793—on construction of building, $13,736; contractors, Dryden & Charlesworth, of Winnipeg; date of contract, 13th September, 1890; date of contract completion, 15th January, 1891; building heated with hot air and hot water by E. & C. Gurney & Co., at a cost of $950, the tender of this company being the lowest of the five received; building handed over to the Department of Agriculture on the 2nd April, 1891. The building measures 126¾ by 30¾ feet, is all of wood above ground, and has two stories and attic, with a kitchen in the rear, the whole standing over a basement of stone. The basement contains a wash-room, fuel-room, bath-room, w. c's., and the store-rooms. On the ground floor are located the men's and women's wards, the kitchen, intelligence office, agents' and assistants' offices, &c., and on the first floor additional men's and women's wards, dressing-rooms, store-rooms and baggage-rooms.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the Minister of Finance whether he stated that the original contract was for some $13,000.

Mr. FOSTER. $13,736.

Mr. MULOCK. I understood him to read from the memorandum that the total expenditure up to the 16th March, 1891, was $16,981.81. What was the difference on?

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose part of it goes for land, which cost $5,000.

Mr. MULOCK. I observe, in addition to this, the $16,981 is called balance on work, so that it would appear there was something spent on the contract before that.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg my hon. friend's pardon; I did not read it in that way. I read that the total expenditure incurred up to 16th March, 1891, was $16,981.81.

Mr. MULOCK. I understood the Minister to say that the item was $2,647.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a balance due on the contract and for additional work.

Mr. MULOCK. If the $16,981 was on the contract, and the balance on the contract and on additional works is $2,647, that brings the amount up to over $19,000 on an original contract of $13,700, or an addition of $6,000. I would ask the Minister to explain that difference.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know any explanation, unless the cost of the land was taken in. The land was bought in 1888 from Mr. A. M. McIntyre, at a cost of $5,000.

Mr. WATSON. When was the first vote taken for this building?

Mr. FOSTER. In 1888, which corresponds with the time of buying the land, and the expenditure in 1888 was just $5,041, which would pay for the lot, I suppose, and the little expenses which were necessary in connection with it.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister should be able to say whether that is on the contract or on the land. Can anybody give the information?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the information given ought to be satisfactory.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister says that he thinks this $19,000 includes the purchase of the land. We are simply asked to draw conclusions. Certainly the Minister in charge of these votes should give us authoritative statements. Does he take the responsibility of saying that the cost of the lot was included in this item, or does he simply quote from the paper put into his hands? He ought to know whether the purchase money of the land is included in this sum or not. He is the responsible person, and not the book. He cannot take shelter under the book.

Mr. WATSON. I think we are entitled to this information, and we will stay here until we get it. The Opposition are not responsible for the fact that we have not a Minister of Public Works who knows these items, and the very fact that there is a vacant chair there ought to make us more particular about passing these items. I understand that the hon. gentleman has his deputy sitting beside the chair, who might be able to give the information, because we have been given to understand lately that the deputies in the public departments know a great deal more than the Ministers.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would like to call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the peculiar position occupied by the hon. gentlemen who are discussing this item to-night. The Minister in charge of the estimates has given the Committee full information, and some gentlemen propose that the item shall not be passed because the Minister of Finance will not pledge his own word as to his personal knowledge that the statements on which the estimates are being passed are correct. I wish to say this: that such an assurance will not be given on the personal responsibility of any member of the Government. We are not in a position to tell the House the details of the expenditures in different parts of the country from our own knowledge and information at all. We are obliged to give the information with which the departments furnish us, and when we give that information we give all that we possibly can. To ask that a Minister in charge of Estimates should be put in the position of a witness, who has to make his statements on his personal knowledge, is to ask that which is entirely impossible. We can only give this information as it is furnished us by others, and not on our personal knowledge.

Mr. HYMAN. Do I understand that when statements are made in the House they are simply made on the responsibility of the officers in the departments, and that we have not Ministers who are prepared to state that they have any knowledge of the fact?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HYMAN. That is the statement of the hon. Minister of Justice. He tells us that we have to accept the statements of the officers of departments.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Certainly. Does the hon. gentleman suppose, for instance, that when I ask a vote for penitentiary buildings I am supposed to know the size of the masonry, the number of men employed, the number of tools they use, the number of nails driven? Everything of that kind which I give to the House I give on the responsibility of the officers from the information which they give me; and I could not attend to the duties of the Government or the department if I travelled around the country looking after these details.

Mr. HYMAN. I merely ask whether we are to accept the statement of the Minister of Finance. The simple statement is that there has been an expenditure of $5,041 for land, and we want to know whether that is included in the $16,000 or not.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Minister states that he is so informed.

Mr. MULOCK. No; the hon. Minister of Finance has read no statement from any officer stating that the cost of the land was included in the amount of the expenditure. He only guesses it is so.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I heard him say it twice.

Mr. HYMAN. I understand that the hon. Minister of Finance simply draws the deduction that such is the case from the information before him.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the Minister if the cost of the land is included in this amount. If the Minister says yes, he has the information there, we will accept it.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister will say what he has already said. That is the information as given here. I find that this land was purchased from A. M. McIntyre on the 3rd of March, 1888, at a cost of $5,000; in that year a vote was taken and an expenditure made of $5,041 directly after; and the total expenditure up to 16th March, 1891, was $16,981. I cannot draw any other inference than that. I have been passing Estimates here for three years, and I have seen a great many Estimates passed, and I have never seen quite such a scene in the House before on an item of this kind.

Mr. HYMAN. I understand the position of affairs is somewhat changed. According to the position the hon. Minister of Justice takes we are not in possession of the information as to whether the department itself says this $4,500 is included in the Estimates or not. The hon. Finance Minister says he finds from the statement placed before him by the department that there has been an expenditure of $4,500 on land. I am perfectly satisfied to take that information, if the hon. Minister is prepared to state that the department says the $4,500 is included in the $16,000. He does not say that, but says that the deduction from the information before him is that such is the case. He does not say the department says so.

Public Buildings generally—Manitoba..$2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that what may be called the ordinary expenses of repairs and caretaking in those public buildings, or is it for a special purpose?

Mr. FOSTER. It is to cover the cost of any unforeseen works, improvements or repairs that may have to be carried on during the fiscal year in the Province of Manitoba.

Winnipeg Military Buildings—Fort Osborne $1,500

Mr. FOSTER. This is to make provision for the construction of a new guard-room and hospital at Fort Osborne, as requested by the Militia Department. The new guard-room will cost $750 and the new hospital $2,000.

Mr. MULOCK. Are they under contract at present.

Mr. FOSTER. I should think not, as the vote is not given.

Public Buildings generally—North-West Territories $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is the same as the item for Manitoba. It is to meet unforeseen works, improvements and repairs during the year.

Residence for Lieutenant-Governor, Regina, including stables and other outbuildings, fencing, roadways, &c..... $6,310

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know what the total cost of the residence for the Lieutenant Governor is going to amount to.

We are asked this year for $6,310, and last year we voted $22,000 for the same purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. The total cost of the residence, including stables, outhouses and grounds, is $60,355.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I desire to call the attention of the House seriously to this. It does appear to me that the idea of expending $60,000 for the residence of such a functionary as the Lieutenant Governor of our North-West Territories is a huge mistake. It is about as gross a piece of extravagance as one can imagine. His income is about $7,000 a year, and why on earth ought he to have a residence costing $60,000 provided for him? Ordinarily speaking, a man occupying a $60,000 house would require, to keep it up and live in a style befitting the house, an income much more closely approximating $27,000 than $7,000. I think we are making a tremendous mistake in providing functionaries of this class, who ought really to be to some extent business men, with residences of this kind. It is absurd to suppose they can keep a court there. There is no doubt whatever that men in a house like that will be tempted to spend more than the sum we are able to give them for their ordinary expense. A building costing one quarter the amount would be amply sufficient for all legitimate purposes as the residence of the Governor in that territory.

Mr. FOSTER. It is almost too late now to raise the point, as the expenditure is pretty nearly all made. Of course, the building will last a long time; and as the North-West Territories become developed and populated it will remain as the Government building of that territory.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What was the original estimate of cost?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot tell. What I have here is the probable cost.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The mere fact that we were not advised, as I was certainly not, that we were about to expend that sum for the erection of a residence for the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories, does not alter the question of policy I have raised. Every practical man knows well that if you put an official in a very expensive house you add enormously to his expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. No doubt the expenditure is a large one.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the extent of the reserve of grounds? What is the building constructed of? Who received the contract? Was it let by tender? Who is in charge as clerk of the work? What progress is being made with the building?

Mr. FOSTER. The new residence we erected on the Government reserve; the walls are of stone in foundation and of brick above ground. The partitions, the floors and roofs are of wood. The main building is 64 feet 6 inches by 55 feet. Additions for servants, offices and bedrooms, 56 feet by 42 feet. The basement contains furnace, fuel and stoves, and a brick tank for rain and well water. The ground floor contains a lobby, vestibule, halls, stairs, dining-room, two drawing-rooms, library, wine vaults, billiard room, housekeeping room, kitchen, servants' hall, brick safe and lavatory, &c. On the first floor there are fifteen bedrooms, two dressing rooms with baths, and a bath room, &c. The contract was given on the 19th of March, 1889. The contract price was $26,950. The heating apparatus was also let by tender, the contract price being $5,150.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is it heated with?

Mr. FOSTER. Hot water.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Minister of Public Works last year, in reply to Mr. Wilson, who asked how much the residence for the Lieutenant Governor at Regina was going to cost, replied that it was expected it would cost about $42,000 altogether. Now we are asked for $61,000. This is another instance of the good management displayed by the officers of the Public Works Department.

Mr. FOSTER. That estimate was only for the Lieutenant Governor's residence, and did not take in the outhouses and stables and grounds. I have the figures here, showing that the building itself and furniture and fittings would cost $45,000, but there are besides the outhouses, &c.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The answer given by the Minister of Public Works that it would cost $42,000 altogether would be interpreted by the House to mean everything possibly connected with the building.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The hon. Minister ought to insist on his officers ascertaining what the whole thing has cost.

Mr. FOSTER. The whole cost would be about $60,000, which includes outhouses, stables and grounds.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Have there been any changes in the building itself.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who got the contract?

Mr. FOSTER. The contract was held by Henderson, of Toronto.

Mr. DAVIN. A first-rate Reformer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When this item was first introduced it had a very modest appearance. It read: "Residence for Lieutenant Governor, $12,000." That was as late as 28th April, 1890.

Mr. FOSTER. That must have been part of the vote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is stated that this is to carry on the work of construction, as Sir Hector Langevin appears to have stated. The botheration of all this is, that we are seldom put in possession of all the information. I am not blaming the Minister of Finance in this matter. I think the party to be blamed is the Departement of Public Works, and probably the late head of it. Instead of stating the amount the work is to cost, we are presented with little patches of it in this way.

Mr. FOSTER. Shreds and patches.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Shreds and patches, if you like, but the worst of it is that the patches grow so confoundedly. Now we find that the cost will run up to $60,000 or $61,000, or perhaps more. The item in the estimate at first is only $12,000, and no information is given unless there is a very close and critical examination, such as my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) is now instituting.

Mr. MULOCK. They do not seem to appreciate it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Finance Minister did not seem to appreciate it just now.

Mr. FOSTER. I will take it in later.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If it had been stated that a residence for the Lieutenant Governor would cost $20,000 or $25,000 none of us would have objected, but I think the line must be drawn at $30,000. I think such an expenditure is neither for the interest of the present Lieutenant Governor nor of his successors, nor of the country.

Mr. MULOCK. I see we must have more information on this subject. The hon. gentleman says the contract is $26,950. Is this contract for the main building, or for the residence, with all the outbuildings?

Mr. FOSTER. I judge it is for the residence, because there are additional requirements. There are additional requirements for outhouses, stables, fences, roadway and sidewalks, estimated at $14,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the size of the stables?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not that information here.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are they to be finished in mahogany?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think so.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand that we are now taking part of the item of $60,000. The hon. gentleman says the contract for the residence amounts to $26,950, leaving the outbuildings to be completed, which will cost $14,000, and that the heating will cost $5,150. What about the remaining? What are the details of that balance? Is it for furniture?

Mr. FOSTER. The furniture is included in the $45,000. Up to May the 1st, 1891, the total amount expended, with the amount due, was nearly $46,000, and that includes the furniture and fittings.

Mr. MULOCK. What part of that is on the contract for the outbuilding?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not separated here.

Mr. MULOCK. We should have that information. We want to see if what has been expended is within the contract.

Mr. FOSTER. I will bring down the information.

Mr. WATSON. How is the amount of $15,000 remaining to be spent?

Mr. FOSTER. For stables, outhouses, sidewalks, and so on.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister explains that $45,000 has been expended on the house, furniture and fittings. The contract on the house was $26,900, leaving $19,000 yet unaccounted for, unless it was expended on furniture and fittings. If it has been so expended we should know how the furniture was bought, and whether by tender or not.

Mr. FOSTER. That might be a very good thing to enquire into in the Public Accounts Committee, but this has been already expended, and will appear detailed in the Auditor General's Report. Surely the hon. gentleman does not want me to read over that account. It is not to be paid out of this vote.

Mr. MULOCK. This $6,310 is for general expenditure on account. Any amount that may be owing for fittings or furniture may come out of this.

Mr. WALLACE. It does not say it is for furniture or fittings.

Mr. MULOCK. There is an "etc." If the "etc." has no meaning let it be struck out. Do you propose to strike out that "etc."

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think so.

Mr. MULOCK. What is included in the words "et cetera"?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know.

Mr. MULOCK. Then the item had better remain until we find out.

Mr. FOSTER. Probably the vote had better stand until we get information as to the et cetera in this item. The objection is a tremendous one, no doubt.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that the et cetera be struck out.

Mr. DAVIN. These grounds have to be fenced and laid out. It would not do to have Government House without gardens around it. When one considers the importance of the place and the territories, I am surprised that hon. gentlemen carp at it. My hon. friend who belongs to the Reform party suggests that the member for Marquette should not be hypercritical, because, if their hopes are realized, he may one day be in Government House himself.

Mr. MULOCK. I want information from the Minister before this item is voted. I do not propose to vote the hard-earned money of the people without knowing what it is for, and that there is a sufficient reason. You are asking us now to take money from the people and put it into the construction of a luxurious establishment for a luxurious official, one practically unnecessary in conection with the affairs of the country. We are told now that out of $54,000 expended, $26,000 at most are for a contract for the building. What became of the other $19,500? All the information we have is that it may have been spent for furniture and fittings. Probably it was, and we want to know how much was spent for furniture and how much for fittings. Has the contract estimate been exceeded? Were there conditions and extras? These are points that should be furnished at this period of the investigation.

North-West Mounted Police Buildings, including water supply and fire protection $30,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is in pursuance of the expenditures which have been going on for a number of years for the accommodation of the Mounted Police. This vote is to make provision for barracks, officers' quarters and proper accommodation for the Mounted Police force in the North-West, the whole in accordance with the plan which has been adopted.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. At what particular points is that $30,000 to be expended?

Mr. FOSTER. In 1888 there was expended $129,000; in 1889, $84,000; 1890, $40,000; in 1891, $50,000 was voted, of which $19,000 was expended up to the 31st of December. I find that the buildings are scatttered over the different parts of the North-West where the police are stationed. The estimated requirements for 1891-92 are for Regina, Prince Albert, Battleford, Maple Creek, Medicine Hat, Fort Macleod, Fort Saskatchewan, Calgary and Lethbridge, amounting to about $30,000.

Mr. WATSON. We are taking large votes from year to year for the police in the North-West, and it appears to me that a number of these points mentioned here are accessible by railways, and we ought to be figuring on doing away with the number of police that we have in the North-West. It appears to me that if a certain portion of the money that is expended in maintaining the mounted police in the North-West was expended in trying to induce immigrants to go to that country we might be able to do away with this mounted police force altogether in a short time. This appears to be an annual and a permanent charge, because I suppose the buildings erected for this purpose will be good for nothing else after the police are through with them. Are these buildings erected by the police, or are they erected by contract, under plans and specifications?

Mr. FOSTER. They are let by contract, I should judge, because I see contracts are given here for certain ones. There are contracts as small as two or three thousand dollars.

Mr. WATSON. This fire protection—where is that?

Mr. FOSTER. There are eight portable fire extinguishers required for the different barracks.

Mr. MULOCK. Are these works let by contract?

Mr. FOSTER. The works of construction are let by contract and public tender.

Mr. WATSON. Are these fire extinguishers small Babcocks?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There was a large tank put up at headquarters at Regina very similar to railway tanks. It was in the centre of the barrack yard.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Last year $7,250 was voted for the Regina buildings under this same vote; Prince Albert, $12,000; Fort McLeod, $3,000; Medicine Hat district, $3,000. Is it proposed to do more at these places this year?

Mr. FOSTER. We are not at that item yet.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire an answer to my question.

Mr. FOSTER. Regina, Prince Albert, Battleford, Medicine Hat, Calgary and Lethbridge are the principal points at which expenditures will be made.

Mr. McMULLEN. What will be the character of the buildings?

Mr. FOSTER. Wood, lath and plaster.

Edmonton Registry Office..... $7,000

Mr. McMULLEN. For what is this money required?

Mr. FOSTER. It is required to build a registry office for the keeping of the papers. They are now in a wooden and unsafe building, and a fire would destroy most valuable records.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this the whole cost?

Mr. FOSTER. This amount is to make provision towards the construction of a fire-proof registry office at Edmonton. The office now used is a small one, rented and wooden.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will this complete it?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes. The most expensive part will be the vault, which will cost $1,500.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not understand it is necessary to build a registry with a vault, for the whole building should be fire-proof.

Mr. DEWDNEY. We have not been so extravagant as that in the North-West.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is in my own riding a brick and fire-proof registry office, and no vault is necessary. It would be cheaper to make the building fire-proof than to put in a vault.

Court House, lock-up, and police accommodation $12,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is this to be provided

Mr. FOSTER. At Grenfel, Maple Creek, Medicine Hat, and Moose Jaw.

North-West Council Chamber, Regina.. $8,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What will be the entire cost?

Mr. FOSTER. The total amount expended up to December 31st last will be $5,000. $15,000 will be the total cost, The building is stone.

Mr. WATSON. Is the building brick or stone? The member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) says it is brick, and I believe the Minister of Finance said it is stone.

Mr. DAVIN. It is composed partly of stone and partly of brick.

Mr. MULOCK. Has the work been carried out under contract?

Mr. FOSTER. The building is not completed. This is a balance required to complete.

Mr. MULOCK. What were the other votes?

Mr. FOSTER. $8,000 in 1890, of which $175 was spent; in 1891 $13,000 was voted, of which $5,000 was spent, and for 1892 this vote is asked.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the amount of the contract?

Mr. FOSTER. $8,993.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the balance of the $15,000 for?

Mr. FOSTER. For drains, cesspits, plumbing, &c., $1,000; heating, $1,800.

Mr. MULOCK. Who has the contract for heating?

Mr. FOSTER. The contract for heating is not let. Then there are fittings, window shades, tables, desks, mattings and general furniture, $2,500.

Prince Albert Crown Lands and Timber Agent's office..... $6,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What is this for?

Mr. FOSTER. To make provision for a suitable building to contain the offices of the Crown lands and timber agents and registrars, at Prince Albert, which is one of the chief centres of trade in the North-West.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the estimate for the completion of the building?

Mr. FOSTER. The chief architect places the probable cost of a building 50 by 30, as described by the Interior Department, approximately, at $15,000; however, it is not proposed to erect a building costing that.

Mr. HYMAN. Do I understand that $6,000 is to be the total expenditure?

Mr. DEWDNEY. That will about cover the building.

Mr. MULOCK. Including the furniture and fittings?

Mr. DEWDNEY. That would be extra, but it would not be large for a place like that.

Vancouver Post Office, Custom-house, &c. $40,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What are you putting up here?

Mr. FOSTER. We are putting up a fine public building at Vancouver.

Mr. PRIOR. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance what the total cost of these buildings will be?

Mr. FOSTER. I find the total probable cost of everything, buildings, and furniture, and fittings, and all, is to be about $85,000.

Mr. FLINT. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he thinks that good enough for the people of British Columbia. I think that is a small amount considering the speech we had from the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) the other day.

Mr. PRIOR. That was just the reason I asked the question, because I thought it was a very small amount.

Mr. FRASER. Are we to understand that this, in the meantime, will satisfy the hon. gentleman?

Mr. PRIOR. I may state to the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) that Vancouver is not in my constituency, but, knowing as I do, that the city has grown from nothing to be a city of 14,000 inhabitants in the last three years, I think it is only right that the Government ought to know what it is likely to become in a few years, and, therefore, I should not like to see the Government putting up a building which, in a few years, they will find inadequate for the requirements.

Mr. FRASER. My question was one of concern about the hon. gentleman as to whether this vote this year will satisfy the district.

Mr. CORBOULD. When you take into consideration that only six years ago there was no Vancouver at all, and that to-day it is a town of over 13,000 inhabitants, my only doubt is that the building will not be large enough. When the public buildings were erected in Winnipeg they were thought to be large enough, but in a very few years they found it necessary to enlarge them. I am only afraid that if Vancouver grows in the future as it has in the past, the building which is now going up will not, in a short time, be sufficient to accommodate the business which is done there.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to say that I think it excessive to spend $85,000 in a building of this kind in Vancouver. That city will undoubtedly be a shipping point on the Pacific coast of this Dominion, but there is no country around it that possibly can contribute to make it a large trade centre.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman has evidently never been there.

Mr. McMULLEN. I was there. I travelled all over the section, and it is a sand bank from one end to the other, with some timber.

Mr. CORBOULD. The finest land in the whole Dominion of Canada is in the district of New Westminster, and within a few miles of Vancouver.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, within twelve or fifteen miles on the other side of the Fraser River.

Mr. CORBOULD. Within six miles.

Mr. McMULLEN. I say there is nothing but timber and shipping there. It will, no doubt, be an important shipping point, but, at the same time, I consider the cost of this post office excessive. Is it to be built of brick or stone?

Mr. GORDON. I am afraid that my hon. friend must have visited British Columbia some years ago, and he must have had spectacles on him when he found sand around Vancouver. As far as my observation has gone it is a clay and gravel soil, all the way from Vancouver to Westminster.

Mr. WATSON. May be you had spectacles on.

Mr. GORDON. Perhaps I had, and they generally improve my sight. I think the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) could not have been based on any modern information as regards Vancouver. The building will comprise a Custom-house, post office, savings bank, inland revenue office: and I am satisfied that if the place grows as it has been growing it will require all the accommodation that an $85,000 building will afford. I say this from personal observation of the progress the place has made.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman tell us whether this building is to be of brick or stone?

Mr. PRIOR. It will be built on sand.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman want to know what the building is to be composed of?

Mr. McMULLEN. I want a decent answer, and if these gentlemen opposite want to make their hisses and cheers they can do so. I want the Minister of Finance to answer the question and I do not want him to sneer at me.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is quite out of——

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not out of order. I asked you a courteous question.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is quite off his base. Why all this perturbation? When the hon. gentleman asked for information I did not sneer at him.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, you did.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not. Surely the hon. gentleman will take my word for it. I had no purpose of sneering at my hon. friend. When he put his question I simply looked up and said: Do you wish a description of the building? What right had the hon. gentleman to "fly off the handle" like that? If he wants information he should surely conduct himself like a gentleman.

Mr. McMULLEN. I asked whether the building is stone or brick.

Mr. FOSTER. And when I commenced to answer, the hon. gentleman flew off into abuse. The main building of the new post office at Vancouver will be L shaped in plan, 81 feet by 64 feet, and three storeys high, exclusive of the basement, all of stone; in the rear a one-storey annex with basement 35 feet by 55 feet, is to be put up. Under the main building the basement is to be divided by brick partitions into furnace and fuel rooms, and post office store room, the basement under the annex will be use for bonded goods. The post office will be located on the ground floor of the main building and the examining warehouse on the ground floor in the annex. The first floor is to contain the Customs and Inland Revenue offices, also quarters for the post office inspector; the second floor is not yet allotted to anyone in particular. There will be a brick vault on the ground floor for the use of the post office, and two on the second floor for Customs and Inland Revenue purposes.

Victoria Drill Hall, locality furnishing site free of cost $20,000

Mr. WATSON. Will this complete the drill hall?

Mr. FOSTER. There has been no expenditure up to December 31, 1890. In 1890, $10,000 was voted, and this is to make provision for the erection of a drill hall in the City of Victoria during the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1892.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the estimated total expenditure?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not any estimate of that.

Mr. WATSON. Does the Government propose to pay the whole cost of erecting the building?

Mr. FOSTER. I believe the estimated cost of the building is $27,000.

Mr. WATSON. I understand that other cities are asked to contribute towards the erection of a drill hall. How is it that the Government propose to give almost the total amount for this building?

Mr. PRIOR. I might state that in other cases the cities where drill halls have been erected have been asked to supply the site free. Such has been done by Victoria already. The site has been supplied by the Provincial Government. At the present time there is a small drill hall in which a company cannot be manœuvred. We have four companies of artillery, and the place is not suitable to drilling; and the Government have seen fit to ask for a grant for a proper drill hall. I am sure that everyone will agree with me that if the militia is to be kept up at all it should be looked after. There is no use getting men to enlist if you do not provide them proper places to drill in. This drill hall will be 160 feet long by 75 feet wide. It is only large enough to drill a decent battalion in, and it will be put up in no more extravagant manner than any similar buildings in other places.

Mr. WATSON. How much did Victoria contribute?

Mr. PRIOR. Half an acre of land, which is worth $12,000.

Mr. HYMAN. I quite agree that Victoria should have a drill hall, and that it should be treated in this respect just the same as other cities in the Dominion. The vote to the City of Brantford appears by the Estimates to be in the same position as that of Victoria. It supplied a free site, but the total vote was only $10,000. I see that the total vote for Victoria is about $20,000. I quite agree that Victoria should have what is fair and proper, but it should not have more than other parts of the country.

Mr. WATSON. Has not Victoria been treated more favourably than Brantford? I understand that the Government are voting to the Brantford drill hall $10,000 and the city $10,000, but they are proposing to vote the whole cost of the drill hall at Victoria.

Mr. HYMAN. Is that the fact?

Mr. FOSTER. The fact with reference to the drill hall at Brantford is that $10,000 was what the Government agreed to give. Both Belleville and Brantford applied for assistance, and the Government agreed to give each $10,000. The City of Belleville itself put up its drill hall, and when it was finished and approved of a grant of $10,000 was given to it. To Brantford $10,000 was given in the same way.

Mr. WATSON. Why, then, make an exception of Victoria?

Mr. FOSTER. You might as well say why make an exception of Toronto or Montreal.

Mr. HYMAN. I do ask why make an exception of any place? This is not a local matter of Brantford, or Victoria, or Montreal. These men are for the protection of the country, and this House ought, I think, to adopt some principle in regard to the erection of all public buildings, and abide by it, and such principle should be applied to Victoria just the same as to every other place. I would go further and say that some exception might be made in favour of the cities of the North-West, agreeing that a somewhat larger appropriation might be made to them than their present population would warrant, but it also should be made on a principle applied to all alike. It seems to me entirely unfair that Brantford should be required to pay $10,000 towards its drill hall. I do not think this country should go begging in that way. I think in the face of other expenditures we are quite able to provide accommodation for our volunteers, and we should do so with no niggardly hand. I do not think it is fair or right to ask the municipalities to pay half the cost of those drill halls.

Mr. MULOCK. I think Toronto contributed more liberally to her drill hall than Victoria is doing. My recollection is that Toronto supplied the site and a large portion of the money too.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member is mistaken The city furnished the site only.

Mr. CORBOULD. If there is any town which has anything to complain of, I think it is the city of New Westminster. It has two companies and they have no place to drill in. That city has offered to contribute eight acres of land worth $40,000, and still it has not a drill shed. If it is ready to contribute in that liberal manner, a drill shed should be given to it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would advise the hon. gentleman to advocate the sale of four acres for $20,000, and then put up a building on the other four acres.

Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to: and House adjourned at 1.30 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 26th August, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

VOTING ON DIVISIONS.

Mr. SPEAKER. A question has been raised with reference to the proceedings on divisions, upon which I think the House ought to come to some decision to guide us in the future. It will be found, on reference to Bourinot's Parliamentary Practice, page 388, that the question is there referred to as follows:—

"When the clerk has declared the numbers, any member has the right to ask that the names be read in alphabetical order, in order to give an opportunity of detecting any errors or irregularities. The vote of a member may be challenged in the English Commons before the members are declared, or after the division is over; but this is generally done in the Canadian House when the House Clerk has given the result. If a member was not present in the House when the question was put by the Speaker, he cannot have his vote recorded."

Should a member after having voted, be asked by the Speaker whether he was present when the question was put, and reply in the negative, his name will be struck off the list, and the clerk will again declare the numbers. The point has been raised as to what is meant by the phrase: "If a member was not present in the House when the question was put by the Speaker." What is meant by the question being put? That is the point on which the House ought to come to some decision. I may state to the House, that my own opinion, after carefully considering the whole matter, is, that putting the question means reading the whole question, either in one or the other language, from the beginning. If the House comes to that or any other conclusion, their decision will guide us in the future as to what constitutes putting the question.

Mr. TROW. Suppose a member should have been in the House during the whole discussion and be absent a few moments while a part of the motion was being put, but be present before the whole motion was put, would he have the right to vote?

Mr. SPEAKER. I thought the reason for the conclusion I had arrived at was so obvious, that it was not necessary for me to state it. The reason is, that every member is supposed to vote intelligently on every question submitted to the House; and to enable him to do that, it seems to me he must hear the question put. The hypothetical case raised by the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) does not seem to me to affect the question, because the member in that case is not supposed to take for granted, that the question before the House is that which he had heard read prior to its being put. The question he has heard read may have been disposed of, and the question before the House, when he came in, may have been entirely different.

Mr. OUIMET. The interpretation which the Speaker has put upon the Rules in the case under consideration, seems to me to be the correct interpretation. Putting the question comprises the reading of the motion from the Chair, before the votes are called out and recorded. When a discussion begins on a certain motion, submitted to the House by a member, two or three other motions may be made while the discussion is going on. A motion may be made to adjourn the debate or the House, and if a member who was present when the first motion was read by the mover, leaves the House previous to the question being put by the Speaker, and returns just as the vote is about to be taken, he cannot say that the motion before the House is the one which he heard read, unless the motion to be voted upon is read to him by the Speaker or the Clerk. Again, the original motion may have been disposed of, and a new motion proposed since the member has left the House. When the Speaker rises to put the question, he says: "The question now before the House is as follows," and then he reads the motion, and that is putting the question. That is the knowledge which the members present must have of the motion put before the House, in order to be entitled to vote, according to the Rule as laid down in the Rules and Orders of the House. This is also in accordance with the practice ever followed since I am a member of this House. Therefore, I think the decision of the Speaker is correct, and ought to be adhered to.

Mr. TROW. Would you rule, in the event of a member coming into the House, before a motion like that of last night, which was very lengthy, is completely read, that the member would not have the right to ask the Speaker to read the question again, as he had only heard half of it?

Mr. SPEAKER. My opinion is he would not. The view is clearly laid down that a member who has indistinctly heard the motion read may require it to be read again: but the rule is that he should be in his place during all the time the question was being put, and he can only require it to be read the second time, in case he heard it indistinctly the first time.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). When you look at the English practice, you will see that it does not admit of so narrow a construction, because a member is held to be present when the question is being put, although he be in the lobby and may come in and vote afterwards. The doors are closed when a division is being taken, so that he cannot come in then, but when the question is being put—if that means when the motion is being read—surely a member is present, even if he has heard only a part of the motion; and our practice allows any member, after a motion has been read, to ask to have it read again, if he did not understand it. If a member were to come in while a motion was being read, you, Mr. Speaker, would find it difficult to say to him: You cannot ask that this motion be read because you were not present when the clerk began to read it. In my opinion, a member is present if he be here at any time while the reading of the motion is going on.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid the hon. member for Bothwell did not quite understand what I stated. I do not pretend to say that I could not be required to read the motion a second time if it was indistinctly heard; but what I do say is that the rule is absolute that a member must be in his place in the House when the question is first put. With reference to the practice in England, it may be desirable that I should read from the Hansard of 1855 a decision of the Speaker of the House of Commons with reference to a question which arose there. Before reading that, however, I would draw the attention of the House to the fact that we cannot draw an exact parallel, as we cannot find an exact English precedent to govern us in this matter, because in England the outer doors are locked after the members are called in, and no member can obtain admittance to the body of the House after the members are called in. Here the practice is different. The outer doors are not locked, and members may come in after the question has been put, without any obstruction. The following is what occurred in the English House of Commons:

"When the numbers were announced at the Table by the tellers, his (the Speaker's) attention was called by the learned member for Wallingford to the fact that three members, among whom was the Secretary of State for the Home Department, had voted in the majority although not in the House when the question was put.

"The right hon. Baronet stated that he was in the lobby beyond the folding doors, at the back of the Chair; and the question which he had to submit for the Speaker's decision was, Whether a member under such circumstances was entitled to have his vote recorded, or whether he is disqualified from voting, being considered not in the House?

"Whereupon Mr. Speaker said, That to entitle a member to vote he must have been in the House and within the folding doors, and must have heard the question put.

Further on he says:

"Strictly speaking, when the question is put, every member ought to be in his place—no member should be standing upon the floor. It is the duty of the Serjeant-at-Arms to clear the lobby of members, and those members who do not wish to vote have the liberty of retiring to the room beyond the lobby. All members who are in the lobby ought to come into the House and vote, but they ought not to be allowed to vote unless they are within the walls of the House—inside the folding doors."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Of course this question is to be considered altogether apart from past occurrences, and that is the most satisfactory manner in which to settle a matter of order and procedure, but it is well to come to some conclusion about it, because different impressions have prevailed, even amongst members themselves, as to what the law of Parliament is on this subject. Sometimes, a member who has not been in when the reading has begun either in French or in English has refrained from voting, and sometimes he has adopted the view that he has a right to vote if he was in when the Speaker asked whether the motion or the amendment should be adopted. In my humble opinion, there seems to be no doubt as to the correctness of the rule according to either English or Canadian procedure as you have laid it down, and I think it would be best for us to understand that that practice will be followed hereafter, so that any confusion on the subject should be removed. A great deal may depend on the wording of the resolution as it is put to the House, and the essence of the rule and its justice altogether depend on the fact that the language may be changed from time to time. Some of us may be in the House when an hon. member moves a resolution, and we may even participate in the debate on it and may be perfectly familiar with its terms, but it may be that, before it goes to a division, the language of the motion may be altered by consent of the House or otherwise, or it may be—though, of course, not in going into Committee of Supply—that amendments may be moved, and the essence of this rule is that a member should not have the right to vote unless he were present in the House and heard the whole of the motion either in English or in the other official language. This rule is well illustrated by the English practice of closing the doors and preventing anyone from coming in after the Speaker rises to put the question. If it were admissible in England that a member, after hearing part of the motion, should vote if he were in his place when the Speaker asks "Shall the motion be adopted," then the doors would not be closed until the question is put in that way, but the fact that they are closed when the Speaker rises to read the motion shows that the rule extends that far, and that the meaning is that the words of the motion should be heard by every member in order to entitle him to vote.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the House will permit me, I will read the following:

"When all the doors are thus closed, the Speaker again puts the question, and the ayes and noes respectively declare themselves. By the Standing Order of 19th July, 1854, the Speaker is obliged to put the question twice, because the sand-glass is not turned until the voices have been taken; and in the meantime, members who were not present when the question was put, gain admittance to the House. None of these could vote unless the question were again put; and it is, therefore, the practice to put the question the second time after the doors are closed, in order that the whole House having had notice of a division, may be able to decide upon the question when put by the Speaker."

That is the English practice. Then I would ask the attention of the House to this provision under our practice. Any member may ask to have the motion or resolution read again. Supposing a member comes in in the middle of the reading of a resolution and hears but a part of it, has he the right to have the motion read again?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why not? He is present.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. My hon. friend will see that only a member who has a right to vote has a right to have the question read again. The rule is that, after the vote has been taken, a member who has not heard the question may ask to have it read again in order that he may vote; but, if he were not present when the Speaker put the question, he would not have the right to vote, and therefore would not have the right to demand that the question be read again.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the Minister of Justice will see that he is begging the whole question. What is meant by putting the question? The Speaker asks the House if it is ready for the question, and he declares that the noes have it and then someone calls for a division. The question has been put. Are all those who are not present in the House at that time not to vote? Clearly that is not a rule which anyone recognizes. It seems to me that, if a member hears a portion of the question, it would lead to a great deal of difficulty and confusion if it had to be first decided whether he was in the House or not at the time the Speaker or the Clerk rose to read the resolution. Let us suppose, for instance, that we have a French Speaker, and that he commences reading the resolution in French, and subsequently the Clerk reads it in English. If an English member comes in during the reading in English, he may vote; but, if the member happens to be French and part of the reading is over before he reaches here, is he to be excluded from voting?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the fact to be ascertained is whether a member was present in the House while the resolution was being read, and then you cannot go back of that to find whether he was in the House when the Speaker rose to read the resolution.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is mistaken in attributing to the Minister of Justice a petitio principii.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh: translate, en francais: explain.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member for Bothwell said the Minister of Justice was begging the question, and the logical and technical term for begging the question is petitio principii. The putting of the question here does not correspond to the first putting of the question in England, but to the second. In England the Speaker puts the question, and the ayes and noes are cried. If there is a defiant "the noes have it" or "the ayes have it," then he sees there is to be a division. He takes his glass and turns it up and says "strangers will withdraw." Then the whips go out to bring in their men, and when the sand in the glass has run down, the doors are closed and the Speaker rises and reads the question. There is no case of the putting of the question in England which is analogous to our putting the question here in the way contended for by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). Therefore, I consider that, if we are to follow the English practice, we must insist that a man shall be present when the question is put; and though it may be an extravagant proposition that every member shall understand the question which he votes upon, yet we must abide by that proposition. I must say, however, that sometimes a motion is put before this House that it would require a Penang lawyer to understand. I will candidly confess that last night I voted for the first time, and I hope for the last time, without at all understanding the proposition of the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies).

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I will cordially excuse the hon. gentleman for the vote he gave last night, after the explanation he has made. The practice that prevails in this House is so different from the practice in England, that I do not think we can come to any sound conclusion from reading the English precedents; but I will say that adhering to the mere form in which the rule is expressed, is apt to lead us astray unless we get below the form and see the spirit which gave rise to that rule, and the object the rule had in view. Now, in England there is no difficulty at all, because the question is put a second time after the doors have been closed, and therefore every one in the Chamber must hear the question. Now, what is the substance and spirit of the English rule? It is that the member shall be present in order that he may hear the question read; that is attained by shutting the door, and I think that is the spirit of the rule that should apply to our practice. I agree with Mr. Speaker, so far as I may form a judgment, that the members of the House who vote should hear the question put before they vote, and that involves of necessity that they should hear the whole question put. But I differ very seriously with you on the construction of the rule which permits a member, who has not heard the whole question put, to ask that it be re-read to him. The object, I take it, that we have in view, is this: In the first place, to insist that members shall not vote unless they have heard the question put; and, secondly, to permit every member who is in a position to vote, to do so, so that you cannot deprive a man of his vote who is ready to give it, under ordinary circumstances. Now, a man may make a motion in this House that he may thoroughly understand, understand it better than anybody else, and he may have gone out into the lobby for a moment and then come in after the Clerk has begun to read the motion, and if you say that after the motion has begun to be read, although he is the author of it himself, he is to be excluded from voting, you do him a great injustice. I submit that if a fair construction was put upon that rule which allowed a member to have the question re-read to him if he had not heard it already, we will get rid altogether of the difficulty. We might, therefore, insist, in the first place, that no member should be entitled to vote unless he was in his place and heard the question put, and we could add as a rider that if a member was present before the question was actually put by the Chair, and had only heard part of it read, he should be allowed to have it re-read to him. That, I think, would enable everybody who votes to comply with the general rule that he shall understand what he is voting about, and, secondly, we would escape the undesirable consequence of excluding from actually voting an hon. member who understands the question and desires to vote.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may be permitted to say one word at this point of the discussion. I take it that the entrance of the Serjeant-at-Arms, after the members have been called in, is equivalent to the running out of the sand-glass in the English House of Commons; that is my view in regard to it. Now, it seems to me that if the practice were adopted of allowing members who came in after the motion had been put from the Chair, and who had not heard it read, to require it to be re-read again, our proceedings would be protracted almost indefinitely, because if that were allowed in regard to one hon. member, it must be allowed in regard to 20 or 30, and if 20 or 30 members were to come in one after another and require the question to be re-read, it would be a very inconvenient thing, and would protract our proceedings to such an extent that it would not be tolerable. I may say in regard to the remarks of the Minister of Justice on this question, that I think it should be viewed entirely from a non-partisan standpoint. Whatever rule we adopt will certainly apply to both sides of the House. It seems to me, if the House will agree with me, that we should adopt strictly the rule that a member who has not heard the question put from the Chair, and read either in French or in English, should not be considered as having been in the House, and as having heard the question read.

Mr. TROW. I agree with your ruling that a member should be within hearing of the motion when it is put to the House. Now, this question arises in my mind: Supposing that an hon. member should be in the gallery and had heard the motion, he is within the precincts of the House. I recollect on one occasion that I called Sir Charles Tupper from the gallery and he came down and voted, because he had heard the question distinctly.

Mr. SPROULE. It must be within the memory of several of the older members of this House that we have had a ruling upon this question several times. I know that I myself came into the House at one time when the question had been partly read, and I refrained from voting because I did not hear it all. At other times I know that members have come in while the question was being read, and when the vote was challenged they were asked if they heard the question read, because it was assumed, very properly, that if they did not hear the question read, they could not vote intelligently upon it. I may say that, according to the ruling that I have heard in this House several times, I have understood it to be the practice that every member should be in his place during the time the whole question was read. Now, take the motion that was put before us last night, after the question was put from the Chair and the order had been given to call in the members, the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) made several changes in the motion, and although a member might have heard the question put from the Chair and had gone out for a moment, and had come in after that question was read, he could not vote upon it intelligently, because the reading of it was materially changed after the order had been given to call in the members.

Mr. DENISON. I would suggest that the matter be left to the leader of the Opposition and the Speaker.

Mr. LAURIER. It seems to me that we must make a definite rule of some kind on this question, and it matters little what decision we come to, provided it is understood. Now, if the rule was adopted that henceforth no man will have a right to vote after a certain time limited by that rule, of course after that it must be adhered to. I remember distinctly that on one occasion in the past a member was allowed to vote when he stated that he had heard the resolution read in one language, and that was allowed after the Serjeant-at-Arms had come into the House. But if you make a rule that no man will have a right to vote after the Serjeant-at-Arms has come into the precincts of the Chamber, let it be so understood, and all hon. members will govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. CASEY. While agreeing with my leader that it does not so much matter what decision we may come to, I think it is very desirable to have the rule made as liberal as possible. The rules should be such that every member may be allowed to vote who wants to vote. Mr. Speaker has pointed out that the entrance of the Serjeant-at-Arms is equivalent to the running out of the glass in the English House of Commons, and he thinks no one should vote who is not in the House at that time. I beg to suggest as a relaxation of that rule that if any member has come in after the Serjeant-at-Arms has entered and can say he has heard the question read from the Chair, either then or at any previous time, or has read it on the Notice paper, he should be in a position to vote. Of course, the question is put from the Chair at the time it is moved. Every member in the House heard it then, and every member in the House should, in my opinion, have the right to vote, even if he had not heard the question from the Chair, if it be a motion of which notice had to be given, he had read it on the Notice paper. As a matter of fact, the obstacles placed in the way of members voting should be as slight as possible, and should only prevail when it is shown that the hon. member had no knowledge of the matter on which the division was taken. I do not agree with the rule suggested by you, Mr. Speaker, that no one should vote who came in after the Serjeant-at-Arms; but I should like to see any hon. member who asserted that he had heard the motion put from the Chair at any period of the debate, or that he had read it on the Notice paper, have the privilege of voting. It is very important we should have the fullest opportunity of exercising the duty which we are sent here to perform.

Mr. SPEAKER. Let me state my ruling, so that the House may thoroughly understand it. My ruling is, that a member must be in the House and have heard the question read from the beginning, in either official language, to entitle him to vote.

Mr. FRÉMONT. There is no doubt when I voted last night I thoroughly believed I had the right to vote. I have since hunted up English and Canadian precedents. I find no English precedent that can apply. I heard it mentioned on the floor of the House this afternoon that there were several Canadian precedents, but I have made search and I could not find any in Hansard or any other book. Of course, I accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker, with a great deal of respect, and as I voted, believing I had the right to vote, and as by your decision I had not such right, I wish to withdraw it.

Several hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. IVES. Mr. Speaker, under your ruling it will be necessary hereafter that the Clerk of the House should translate the main motion as well as the amendment. He has hitherto been in the habit of translating the amendment only.

THE MEMBER FOR EAST NORTHUMBERLAND.

Mr. FLINT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I rise to a question of privilege. It will be remembered that on 20th August, the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) rose in his place and made grave charges against the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane). Certain clauses in those charges were deemed by the House, as well as by the hon. member for Huron, to be too general in their character. I, therefore, rise to make the following statement:—

"Mr. Flint, the member for the electoral district of Yarmouth, states that he is credibly informed and verily believes,

1. That Edward Cochrane was, during the last Parliament, and now is the member for the electoral district of the east riding of the County of Northumberland.

2. That while he was such member it was corruptly agreed to by and between the said Ed. Cochrane and John D. Clouston, Wm. Johnson, Wm. Brown, and Robert May respectively, that if each of them would pay to him, or to certain other persons for him, or for political purposes, the sum of $200, he would procure for each of them the position under the Government of Canada, of attendant or keeper of one of the swing bridges over or across the Murray Canal.

3. That in pursuance of such corrupt agreement the said several sums of money were paid, and the said persons were so appointed to said positions.

4. That while he, the said Edward Cochrane, was such member as aforesaid, it was corruptly agreed by and between the said Edward Cochrane and one Henry May, that if the said Henry May would pay the said Edward Cochrane, or to other persons for him, or for political purposes, the sum of $200, he would procure for the said Henry May, the office or position under the Government, of foreman or overseer of employés under the Government.

5. That in pursuance of the said corrupt agreement the said sum of $200 was paid, and the said office or position duly received by the said Henry May.

I make this statement not asserting personally as to its truth or otherwise, but, being credibly informed, I make this statement as a member of the House. I, therefore, move :

That the foregoing statement be referred to the Select Committee composed of Messrs. Caron, White (Shelburne) Tisdale, Skinner, Mulock, German and Cameron (Huron).

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Allow me to suggest that the hon. member allow the motion to stand until to-morrow as an informal notice.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The hon. gentleman knows that the session is far advanced, and this is a matter that will require some considerable consideration. The motion was made on 20th August, and the other charges were referred to a Committee, which has not been called together. Unless some useful object is going to be served by allowing the motion to stand till to-morrow, I submit the motion should be moved to-day, and the matter referred to the Committee, so that the Committee should be able to get to work. The members have first to meet and organize, and then they will have to subpœna witnesses, and so it will be Tuesday or Wednesday before the first meeting for business purposes can take place. Of course, if the hon. member for East Northumberland desires the opportunity to answer, I have no objection to the postponement, but unless something of the kind is desired, it should go to the Committee to-day.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The charges which have just been read by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) have nothing to do with the charges referred to the Committee, and there is nothing in the paper read by the hon. member for Yarmouth to stay the investigation of the other charges for a single moment. Therefore, there is no excuse for refusing to give decent notice with respect to these charges. The hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) has said that unless some useful object is to be served, the matter should be disposed of to-day. There is a useful object to be served, for in a matter of privilege affecting perhaps the seat of a member of this House, we should be at liberty to give proper consideration to see that the charges are specifically made, and on the responsibility which should attach to the hon. member for Yarmouth if the charges are unfounded. It is simply for these reasons I made the request ; and although the rule may entitle an hon. member to move without notice as a matter of privilege, yet inasmuch as it concerns his own seat as well as the seat of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane), I think it is better that we should follow the practice of at least giving the House and the member charged, the courtesy of reading the document which is presented to the House. In ordinary course, what the charged member should do, is to rise in his place and make his answer to the charge and then withdraw. That can hardly be possible in regard to a set of charges read here for the first time, and besides that, members themselves have to consider the propriety of the course that ought to be pursued on such an occasion. We ought to see in every case that the charge is so clearly made that it warrants an investigation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I merely rise to say that I do not think the hon. Minister is quite justified in imputing to my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) that he acted with indecent haste.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I did not say that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman thought, at least, there ought to be decent notice given.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. member did not object to my suggestion.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to point out what the facts are. When a general resolution was moved the other day by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron), it contained specific charges and it also contained a general charge. It was then objected, and I think the objection was fairly well taken, that the general language used in the general charge ought to be withdrawn ; that the charge ought to be in its nature specific, so as to give the member charged something like fair-play, and a knowledge of what the charge was. That objection was sustained by both sides of the House, and the hon. member who moved the resolution withdrew the charge in its general terms, stating that he would formulate and present to the House a charge in specific language and reduced to a certainty. Under that notice this charge has been made to-day, and I would respectfully suggest to the House that my hon. friend is not open to the imputation of springing this by surprise upon the member charged, or acting with other than proper regard of the proprieties of debate ; because the notice was given the other day that this would be put in form and presented to the House.

Mr. BARRON. I should say, that knowing the charge was going to be made, I saw the member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) this morning, and I read the charges to him just as they are presented to the House to-day, so that I do not think it is fair to suggest even for one moment that any undue haste is shown.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The expression "undue haste" was made from the other side of the House and not from me. On the contrary, I judged from the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) that he acquiesced in my suggestion that it should stand over, and therefore it would be very wrong to impute anything undue to him in that regard. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barron) says that he showed the paper to the member for Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane), but I think we all have an interest in this, and we all have a right to see that the charges have been properly made.

Motion allowed to stand.

THE CENSUS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I believe my hon. friend the Postmaster General promised my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Casey) that he would to-day make a statement as to the results of the census. I suppose he is prepared to do it.

Mr. HAGGART. Not just now, but after dinner I certainly shall.

THE REGINA LEADER.

Mr. TROW. I wish to take the earliest opportunity to give the Secretary of State an opportunity of placing right an answer that he gave on Monday, in reply to a question that I put for an hon. member who was absent. The hon. Minister stated that for printing and publishing in the Regina Leader the expenses for 1886 were as follows :—1st July, 1886, to 30th June, 1890, $1,488 for advertising, and $515 for printing, and since the 30th June, 1890, $315 for advertising, and $75 for printing. I find by the Auditor General's returns for the various years that in 1887, for printing in the Regina Leader, there was paid $4,767.40, and for advertising $508.22. In 1888, for printing, $4,976.55, and for advertising $363.70. In 1889, for printing in the same paper, $6,060.90, and for advertising $340.08 ; and in 1890, $6,490.95 for printing, and $327.48 for advertising. The sum total of both amounted to $23,955.78. I merely wish to ask how the Minister made such a glaring mistake of thousands and tens of thousands of dollars.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend knows very well, and his smile tells me he knows, that I was not mistaken. If he quoted my answer from Hansard he would have known I was right.

Mr. TROW. I am quoting from the Conservative paper of the city.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If my hon. friend read the document that I have addressed to the person who prompted the first and second questions, he would have known what my answer was, and what my answer is. I answer for the department here in regard to printing and advertising, and I said that there were $1,488 for advertising, and $515 for printing, from the year 1886 to the year 1890, and from the year 1890, $315 for advertising, and $76 for printing, which I stated were exactly the figures that had passed through the Printing Department here which I control. I stated besides that there were other sums of money that had been paid to the Leader Printing Company (Limited), which were verified and settled at Regina, and which were all to be found in the Auditor General's Report. That was my answer.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend behind me (Mr. Trow) has learned the lesson, that it is not safe to believe in Conservative papers.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 116) to further amend the Inland Revenue Act.—(Mr. Costigan.)

BEET-ROOT SUGAR.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 168) to encourage the production of Beet-root Sugar.

Mr. BEAUSOLIEL. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I do not rise with the intention of opposing the Bill introduced by the hon. the Minister of Finance. I consider it a step in the right direction ; but as it is a very short step and I look upon it as an indication of an intention on the part of the Government to consider the question and propose to this House at a future session a definite measure on the subject. The result of the present measure may be to allow the Farnham manufactory, which has again been put into operation during the year, to live for another year or two, but this alone cannot justify the sacrifices which the Government ask of the House. The beet-root sugar industry may become a great source of wealth for the Province of Quebec in particular, and for Canada in general, but if such a policy is to be only for a year, and apply only to one manufactory for this short space of time, I say that it is not a policy, but rather a temporary expedient, unworthy of a Government. Therefore, I look upon the Bill introduced by the hon. the Minister of Finance, as a proof that the Government begins to realize the importance of the cultivation of beets, and of the manufacture of beet-root sugar in Canada. I look upon it as a promise of enquiry and information, and as an indication that the Government will propose, in the near future, the adoption of a settled policy, which will allow this industry to firmly establish itself, and to stand the competition of the foreign production, which, in the United States, is efficiently protected by a premium of two cents per pound for a period of fifteen years. Under such conditions I am glad to support the Bill of the hon. the Minister of Finance. But once more, I expect that at another session, the hon. Minister will have a more effective policy, a policy in all respects similar to that which obtains in the United States, and which is the only one which can create and bring into permanent existence the beet-root sugar industry in Canada.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, and reported.

INSPECTION OF SHIPS.

Mr. TUPPER moved second reading of amendments reported from Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 149) respecting the Inspection of Ships.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman explain what the amendments are ?

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman was not present, I think, when we were in Committee, but we adopted the suggestion he made—and I think I showed him the draft of the amendment before moving it—to exempt vessels of the Lloyds class.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do I understand that sea-going ships properly classed at Lloyds and at the Bureau Veritas are to be exempt from the operation of the Act ?

Mr. TUPPER. Yes, with this exception, that we only mention Lloyds in the Bill, on the ground that it is just as well not to mention the foreign register; but ships registered in the Bureau Veritas will be exempted by Order in Council.

Amendments read the second time and concurred in, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—GOVERNOR GENERAL'S WARRANTS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, it had been my intention, as I gave notice to the hon. Minister of Finance last night, to have brought up to-day the question of the use made of the Governor General's warrants, and I still propose to bring it up, at an early day. But I find that an important piece of evidence, which I had supposed was printed and in the hands of all the members, is only in manuscript, and there is only one manuscript of it, and consequently it was quite impossible for some hon. gentlemen who desired to take part in the discussion, to master the details. Therefore, although I am sorry to disappoint the hon. Minister of Finance, having communicated privately with him, and finding that he is willing to overlook the disappointment in consideration of my resuming the subject at an early day, I do not propose to trouble you this afternoon.

TRENT VALLEY CANAL.

Mr. BARRON. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire for a short time, assisted by some of my hon. friends opposite, to discuss the important question of the Trent Valley Canal. I desire to point out to-day, as I have pointed out before, that this great work——

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask my hon. friend if he has a motion to propose?

Mr. BARRON. No. This great work, Mr. Speaker, is considered of very great importance by a very large number of people in the Midland district of the Province of Ontario, many of whom, in fact all of whom, are very anxious to have the work speedily begun and rapidly completed. In approaching the discussion of this great subject, I do so well knowing that the Government of to-day is not the Government of a few weeks or a few months ago—that the hon. gentleman who leads the Government to-day——

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interrupt him one moment. The Minister in charge of the department is ill; he has been so for three days, though he came from his sick-bed, last night, to vote; and I am afraid that, if the hon. gentleman called the attention of the House to the matter to-day, neither he nor the House would get the information which it would be desirable to have, and perhaps, therefore, the hon. gentleman would take another day.

Mr. BARRON. Of course I am desirous of meeting the wishes of the Government as far as possible; but I was going simply to make a statement of the facts and discuss the merits of this project, and to ask the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who are living in constituencies affected by this great work, to join me in the discussion, and to present to this House, and through this House to the people of Canada, the merits of this great work. I do not see why the discussion could not be taken up later by the hon. Minister who has charge of the department, if he desires so to do; but if the Government really sees any reason why I should postpone my remarks, I am, of course, quite willing to accede to the wishes of the Government.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think it would be better in every point of view, inasmuch as there can be practically no discussion on the subject to-day without the Minister being present, and I do not know in what way he could avail himself of another opportunity of speaking on the question.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no doubt my hon. friend would desire in all respects to consult the convenience of the Minister in charge; but unless we are to understand that the Minister of Customs is going to remain permanently Minister of Railways and Canals, which I think is hardly likely, it is quite evident that no very special object could be gained by his presence. He is merely holding that portfolio, as I understand, perfunctorily, and has no special acquaintance, that is to say, in his official capacity, with what has been done in regard to the Trent Valley system of navigation.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He is acquainted with the present state of affairs with regard to that subject. From the observations which the hon. member from North Victoria has occasionally made on that question, I understand that the information in the department and the progress of matters in regard to the subject are within the knowledge of the Minister in charge of the department.

Mr. BARRON. Then, the hon. Minister wishes me to postpone my remarks?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think it would be better that the hon. gentleman should do so. I think it would be more satisfactory to himself in the long run, and I should be glad that he would do so.

Mr. BARRON. I am only anxious that the fullest discussion should take place, and that the people of Canada should know the position of the Government on this question, and should know all about it. For this reason I will be very glad to accede to the wishes of the hon. Minister and wait; but, of course, I expect that they will give me an opportunity to bring the matter up again.

SLAUGHTER OF AMERICAN CATTLE IN CANADA.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I would like to ask the leader of the House whether he is in a position to give this House to-day, or at any later time, any information as to an important subject which has been mentioned in the Senate by the First Minister, that is, the slaughter of American cattle within the Dominion of Canada, and the conditions under which it is proposed to permit it, and how far such a proceeding would interfere with, or in any way disturb our own trade in cattle? And how these cattle, coming to this country for slaughter, as now proposed, come in in bond for exportation or for competition with the cattle of the country? Would they be subject to duty, or to what duty? Those questions we would like to have a little information about, whenever it is convenient for the Government to give it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. One of my colleagues will be glad to make a statement on that subject to-morrow, or any other day that will suit the convenience of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Repairs, furniture, &c., Public Buildings.. $120,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I think a close, careful and searching criticism should be entered into with regard to the items under this head. I find by the Auditor General's Report for this year that we have spent $123,460 on repairs, heating and water for the buildings at Ottawa, including Major's Hill Park and the grounds here, without including charges under the contract for keeping the grounds clean. There must be an enormous unnecessary expenditure in this connection that could be well done without. For instance, it costs us $6,500 to keep Major's Hill Park in order. We are paying the City of Ottawa for water sprinkled upon it to keep the grass green, although the citizens of Ottawa are those who principally enjoy the park.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend would confine himself to the first item, we will take up Major's Hill Park later.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to draw attention to the enormous sums spent annually on repairs, and to the necessity for a considerable decrease.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that the wishes he has expressed from year to year have been very liberally met this year, as we have reduced this vote by $50,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that, and am very glad to see it.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the character of this expenditure?

Mr. FOSTER. Repairs and furniture, and all that sort of thing, in all the Dominion buildings in Ottawa and elsewhere.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does this include wood?

Mr. FOSTER. No; this is only repairs for furniture.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does it cover Rideau Hall?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. What amount of furniture was furnished the Langevin Block last year?

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to give my hon. friend that information, but that will be got in the Auditor General's Report, and is rather the result of last year's expenditure than what this is to apply to.

Mr. McMULLEN. I find by the Auditor General's Report that under the head of Ottawa building, repairs, and furniture, we have the item, W. Horace Lee, rent of building on Wellington street, twelve months, $900. What does that refer to?

Mr. FOSTER. That is the rent of the building which was occupied on Wellington street by officers of the Indian Department. They are now removed to their permanent quarters in the Langevin Block.

Grounds, Public Buildings, Ottawa..... $7,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to the fact that our grounds are extremely badly kept. I have noticed, strolling about our grounds, that this year, they have been in many cases scandalously ill-kept. The watering and general attention paid has been very bad. If we are to pay $7,000 a year for the care of the grounds, the work should be done properly. Only last night I noticed that one of the lawns contiguous to the building had been trampled over with horse hoofs. I suppose they had been using the lawn mower without protecting the hoofs of the horse.

Mr. FOSTER. Probably the pads were worn off and no supply to get others.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be, but it seems to me, whoever is the contractor, if you are giving him $6,000 or $7,000 a year he should be better looked after. I notice that the watering is extremely badly done, and that the whole thing practically, for a large portion of the year—there is some improvement now—is exceedingly ill-kept.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is quite right in asking that the grounds should be well taken care of. The work is done by contract.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is the contractor?

Mr. FOSTER. H. Robertson.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is that the gardener?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; he has been the gardener.

Mr. CHARLTON. Were tenders invited for this?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. How much does Mr. Robertson get?

Mr. FOSTER. $5,600 a year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I desire to add my protest to that of other hon. members in reference to the state of our grounds during the greater part of this summer. In the past we had been accustomed to look upon the grass plats and flower gardens around these buildings with pride. They have been very pretty things to look at, and to show to our friends who came here from a distance. They were very pleasant for those who could spare half an hour in the evening to walk around these buildings in order to get a breath of fresh air. But, before the heavy rains began about six weeks ago, and for six weeks before that, the condition of the grass plats was simply disgraceful. The contractor, instead of watering them with a proper hose and a fine spray, turned on the nozzle of the hose and sent a stream of water over the grass, with the result that the grass would not only not grow from the watering, but would be utterly destroyed. This is not only my opinion, but I have heard the same from at least twenty other members. I have spoken to the man who was handling the nozzle, and have asked him why this was being done. Sometimes he would dash his stream on to a flower bed and would destroy the flowers. I think these things should be brought to the attention of the contractor, and that he should not be allowed to carry out his duties so carelessly and inefficiently as he has done this year. I am the last to object to reasonable economy, but the manner in which these grounds have been kept for some years past has been creditable, and we do not want to degenerate and allow them to be in the condition which they were in six weeks ago before the rain came. Thanks to the rain, and not to the nozzle, the grass is now very nice to look at, but that is owing to causes over which the contractor had no control. The contractor's attention ought to be called to this matter.

Mr. SCRIVER. I would ask the Finance Minister if the appliances for irrigating are provided by the contractor or by the Government?

Mr. FOSTER. He has the stock. He has to keep it up to the conditions and to provide everything new.

Mr. SCRIVER. The hon. member has spoken of the method pursued in irrigating the land in the lawn in front of the building, but the use of the hose which has been adopted is calculated to do injury rather than good. I was struck with the difference between the appearance of the lawn in front of these buildings and that in the Major's Hill Park, the difference being principally due to the use on Major's Hill Park of those revolving sprinklers which throw the water over the grass in a proper way. I think that a change should be made in the mode of irrigating adopted by the contractor in front of these buildings.

Mr. CASEY. How is the Major's Hill Park attended to?

Mr. FOSTER. By contract.

Mr. CASEY. The Government must have been more fortunate in their contractor in that case, because the contrast is remarkable between these grounds and those in front of the buildings, not only in the character of the sod, but in regard to the floral decorations. The flower beds on Major's Hill are very fine, while those here are mean. They are filled with the cheapest flowers that you can find in a cottage garden, with the exception of a few specimens in each bed. The condition of these flower beds compels one to ask for what purpose our conservatory is kept up. I would ask if the maintenance of the conservatory is included in this contract.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, it is.

Mr. CASEY. I say that the shabby supply of flowers in the flower-beds around the House makes one ask why we should keep up this conservatory at a very considerable cost, for that must represent the greater part of the $5,600 voted for keeping up the ground. The mere cutting and watering of the grass is not the work of more than two or three men at the most, and would not be in the hands of a private individual, so that the maintenance of the flower-beds and the conservatory must be the principal part of the contract price. The conservatory is full of flowers in the winter time, when it is of no use to the public, and in the summer we find now that the flowers are not used to decorate the grounds, and the conservatory is not so placed that it could be a pleasant spot for the public to visit. Then, I ask, for what purpose is it kept up? All the conservatory flowers that are on the grounds could be hired from any florist for $50 for the season. Of course public rumour states that Ministers' dinner tables are supplied from this conservatory.

Mr. FOSTER. That was explained last year.

Mr. CASEY. Does the hon. Minister of Finance never get any for his table?

Mr. FOSTER. Never.

Mr. CASEY. And the hon. gentleman is in a position to say that none of the other Ministers or the Speaker get any?

Mr. FOSTER. I am only responsible for my own.

Mr. CASEY. Does the hon. Minister know that other Ministers get these flowers?

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman will name the Minister who has received the flowers, no doubt he will get an answer.

Mr. CASEY. It is reported that all the Ministers' tables are furnished in this way. I should like to know if any Minister will deny it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I deny it.

Mr. CASEY. Then, if that be so, we are absolutely wasting all the money we spend on that conservatory.

Mr. FOSTER. Now the hon. gentleman has catechised the members of the Government on this subject, perhaps he will allow me to ask if he never had a flower out of that conservatory himself?

Mr. CASEY. I had one bouquet once. If that conservatory is kept up for the benefit of Ministers it should be so understood, and if it is not we are wasting the money. The flowers bloom unseen and waste their sweetness on the desert air. They are not set out on the grounds, and they are not in a position where they can be conveniently visited by anyone, and the keeping up of that place is a waste of public money. There might be room to object to the Ministers getting floral ornaments at the public expense, but that might be regarded as one of their perquisites; but, if they do not get these flowers, I protest against keeping up an expensive conservatory with a man of high scientific knowledge in regard to floriculture, at a high salary, when all these flowers that are displayed could be got from a florist.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would draw the attention of the acting Minister of Public Works to the fact that the grounds here are not properly watered. I am sure that many hon. members have experienced the inconvenience that I have myself, of walking through clouds of dust in coming up to the buildings, dust so thick as to render it almost impossible to see our way. Once during this session I went across the House and spoke to the Minister of Public Works about it, and he immediately notified the man in charge and had it attended to. The improvement only lasted for a short time, and in dry weather now it is as bad as before. I think our Parliament grounds should be properly watered, so that members may not experience this annoyance. The streets of the City of Ottawa are well watered, and I cannot see why the approaches and walks about these buildings should not also be kept well watered. The man who has the contract for this should not be allowed to neglect his duty in this regard. I see the Government is asking $7,000 for the grounds and public buildings at Ottawa, and the Finance Minister states that the contract with Robertson is $5,600. What is the balance for?

Mr. FOSTER. For keeping the roofs clear of snow and ice in the winter, and for the distribution of ice in the summer.

Mr. CASEY. My hon. friend's remarks about the approaches to the House prompt me to ask the Minister in a friendly spirit why it is that we cannot have a plank walk in the middle of the avenue in front of the building, or sidewalks, instead of having a mere sand road? Have you any objection to making an asphalt pavement on the avenue, or putting a sidewalk through the middle of it?

Mr. FOSTER. We have been trying to keep down expenses as much as possible.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is right.

Mr. FOSTER. It would be expensive to make an asphalt pavement.

Mr. CASEY. The usual roadway put down on the streets of cities is not too expensive to be used on the approaches to the House of Commons. I think it costs as much to keep the present road clear from snow in winter and dust in summer, as it would to put down asphalt sidewalks.

Mr. CHARLTON. There is a difficulty from sand in the road drifting over the sidewalks. Along the parapet wall the walks are at times covered with sand. I would recommend narrowing the walk, and covering it with some substance to prevent the sand drifting upon it in dry weather.

Mr. FLINT. We are treated every year to a discussion on the conservatory, and some of the Ministers seem anxious to repudiate the idea that they get any flowers from the conservatory for their own use. As far as I am concerned, and I think that is the opinion of the House, I would not object to allowing the Ministers to get flowers from the conservatory, because they are under certain obligations that private members are not under. I do not think it is at all improper that the Ministers should be supplied in moderation with these articles.

Mr. CHARLTON. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. I see you are paving the way for the incoming Administration.

Mr. FLINT. As this appears to be a time for the ventilation of subjects of small importance in themselves, I would ask the Acting Minister of Public Works to call the attention of whoever may be acting for the department, to the unsightly appearance presented by the ends of the gas pipes cropping up from the ordinary stone fence surrounding the grounds of this building. I have counted as many as eight, which are certainly very unsightly. These grounds are very beautiful and the stone steps are certainly handsome, but it is unpleasant to see the ends of the gas pipes sticking up where there ought to be some stone ornament. I think $150 would supply something handsome, and I would suggest that the attention of the architect be called to this matter.

Mr. WELSH. The matter about this conservatory has been brought before this House time and again. I see by the Hansard that this matter was brought up on the 4th of March, 1890, when I made some remarks about it. I said:

"I do not profess to be a Minister, and if I could not make a better Minister than one hon. gentleman I am looking at, I would not be a good one."

He is not here now, he is not a Minister, thank God. I made the remark at that time that I had made it my business to call on the Public Works Department. I did not know whether I was going into a menagerie or a lunatic asylum, and I might have added, or a den of thieves. However, I made this remark over twelve months ago:

"If I could not make a better Minister than the Minister of Public Works, I would not be a good one. He has had a good raking over, and he will have many more if he does not mend his ways. I want to know who gets the flowers, what they are for, who has the right to them?"

I said afterwards to the Minister of Public Works:

"I want to know from the hon. Minister of Public Works, if I call in the morning and ask him for one of those flowers, if he can give it to me?"

"Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

"Mr. WELSH. Well, who can give it to me?

"Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Nobody."

Well, if that is the fact, if the new Minister of Public Works will give the same answer, what is the good of keeping that conservatory there? Why expend so much public money upon it, if neither the Minister nor the members can get a flower out of it? Now that we are going to have a change in the head of the Public Works Department, I hope this business will be attended to. If the conservatory is kept there I hope it will be for the use of the Ministers. I think they have a right to go there and get flowers, because they have to entertain and keep up their house in Ottawa, and it is perfectly right they should take flowers. I also think that if a member of Parliament goes and asks for a bouquet it is right he should have it. If the old Minister of Public Works was in his place I would not speak upon this subject now, because I know it would be useless. I have been deceived in every shape and form, in everything, and every time, that I have had anything to do with the Public Works Department, ever since I came to Ottawa, and I hope there will be a change for the better.

Removal of snow, Public Buildings, Ottawa..... $3,000

Mr. CHARLTON. I thought that $1,400 of the last item was for the removal of snow. Is this duplicated?

Mr. FOSTER. This is also a contract for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks and roads around the departmental blocks, Parliament Buildings, Rideau Hall and the other Government buildings in the city.

Mr. McMULLEN. Last year only $1,700 were spent for the removal of snow. Why is $3,000 asked now?

Mr. FOSTER. These contracts are let yearly, and it is desirable to allow a margin. For two years past the expenditure has averaged $1,800, and for three years it has averaged $1,900. The $3,000 were asked last year as well as this year. I will reduce the vote to $2,200.

Heating Dominion Public Buildings.. $60,000

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is this the total cost?

Mr. FOSTER. This is the total cost for heating public buildings at Ottawa, including wages of staff and fuel.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is the cost of wood per cord?

Mr. FOSTER. Maple $4.95, mixed $4.75, pine kindling $3.75. The contractor is Mr. John Heney.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How is it that for some hardwood $6, and even $6.50, has been paid?

Mr. FOSTER. That covered some of the hardwood cut into two or three short lengths.

Mr. CHARLTON. Was the wood reckoned by the cord of 128 cubic feet?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; that is provided in all Government contracts.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Wood is often reckoned 4 feet when it is only 3 or 3½ feet.

Mr. WATSON. The wood appears to be about 3 feet long.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The wood delivered in Ottawa is generally 3 feet long, as is that delivered to the Government; but when it is delivered a cord must be 4 feet high, 8 feet long, 4 feet wide. The contractor has to make the cord up to 128 cubic feet.

Mr. CASEY. I notice mixed wood is only 20 cents less than rock maple. The rock maple is not an extravagant price, but $4.75 for second-class wood is so.

Mr. CHARLTON. If we understand that the mixed wood consists of maple, birch and beech, it is all right.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what it is.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It strikes me it is a very expensive proceeding to heat this building with wood instead of coal, using the usual proportion of one ton of coal to two cords of wood. We are throwing away a great deal of money by using $33,000 worth of wood and only $14,000 worth of coal. I should imagine that if we had properly constructed heating apparatus coal would be cheaper and more efficient than the large quantity of wood consumed.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I notice the Government have a wood yard. There is a sign to that effect on the canal bank. Why do they keep a wood yard?

Mr. FOSTER. It is part of the Government reserve, and it would be impossible to pile the wood on these grounds.

Mr. CASEY. It is John Heney's wood yard?

Mr. FOSTER. It has been so for the last twenty-five years.

Mr. CASEY. He gets it without paying any rent.

Mr. FOSTER. He pays no rent under the contract.

Mr. CASEY. Why does he not pay rent?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is part of the contract.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Rent was paid up to 1886.

Mr. SCRIVER. I think it is a question for the serious consideration of the Department of Public Works as to whether they should not use coal rather than wood for heating the Dominion buildings. I fully agree with the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Chartwright) that when wood costs $5 a cord and coal can be obtained for $6 a gross ton, there is no comparison as to the comparative cost of using the two kinds of fuel, and the department should give its serious consideration to the expediency of making this change, if they desire to effect economy.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the department has carefully gone into that question. As coal gets cheaper, the argument is stronger in favour of its general adoption. That would necessitate a change in the furnaces, and that expenditure would have to be taken into account. Another element that entered into the choice of fuel was the effect of heavy coal smoke on the buildings themselves.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You could use anthracite.

Mr. CHARLTON. We could obtain smoke consumers, which would obviate the difficulty as to the dense coal smoke. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he is aware that the difficulty arising from the smoke could be entirely obviated by the use of smoke consumers, which will not only prevent the nuisance from smoke, but which will add to the fuel properties of the coal by consuming the smoke and gases? Is there any reason why coal could not be substituted for wood, with the present machinery and furnaces?

Mr. FOSTER. They would have to be altered.

Mr. CHARLTON. Anything more than the grate bars?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot say to what extent.

Mr. LANDERKIN. We want to find out just exactly what this wood costs. We want to find out what the value of the rents of these lots are, and if the canal tolls are remitted on the wood brought in here for the use of this House. I think this item had better stand until we get that information. Up to the year 1878, there was $296 paid for a small portion of the land that has been given away to the contractor for this wood yard, and I understand that the contractor does not pay canal tolls either. A portion of the land has been transferred to another department. The contractor for the wood has had all these advantages, and we want to know what they amount to. It is necessary for us to know this before we can discuss the item. We are paying in the neighbourhood of $60,000 for heating, and perhaps $20,000 or $30,000 more in the way of other perquisites to the contractor. It does seem a fabulous sum and we want to know all about it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is a great deal of information that the Committee ought to have with regard to this matter. These lots on the west side of the canal paid a rental until 1878, but since then no rent has been collected. The property was formerly in the Ordnance Lands branch, and it has been transferred to the Public Works Department. Here is a party entering into a private arrangement with the Government, without any contract based on tender, and he is given a large tract of valuable property and no rent is charged. Then he brings his wood into the city and all the canal tolls are remitted to him, and I have heard reported in the city that he often brings in wood purchased by other parties for sale to the citizens, who have it brought in in Mr. Heney's name, because by doing so they are not obliged to pay tolls to the Government. I say that that whole subject requires investigation. It is a matter about which, if the rumours have any foundation at all, serious abuses exist that require to be redressed. Wrong is being done to the public whose property is being used without any valuable consideration being given, and, in the second place, wrong has been done to the other parties who perhaps, if a fair opportunity were given them to furnish the fuel to the Government, would do so for a less sum than is now being paid.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend takes rather a responsibility upon himself when he argues from a basis that wholesale frauds are being perpetrated in the way in which he suggests; that is, that Mr. Heney, having the piling ground and bringing in the Government wood as he does without paying canal tolls, takes advantage of that to supply largely to the citizens, and that others take advantage on account of cheapness of getting their supply from him. If that were so that would be an outrage.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think so.

Mr. FOSTER. But is it so, and is it not rather a responsible thing for an hon. gentleman here, unless he has some pretty definite knowledge with regard to that, to set such a statement afloat and to base an argument upon it? If the hon. gentleman has any information that that is so, he should give us that information, because it is in the interest of the Government and of the public as well, to have any such possible abuse as that prevented.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But the hon. Minister will see that when he gives a large tract of land to a party without any rent being charged, and when he remits canal tolls, he invites abuses of that sort. It is perfectly obvious that if the ordinary rule was followed, and Mr. Heney paid rent and paid canal tolls, such an abuse would be impossible; but the Minister sees himself that whether the statement is well founded or not, it is a possible thing to happen. I would like to know whether the Minister does not know that Mr. Heney supplies wood to a very considerable number of citizens in the City of Ottawa. I would like to know whether he does not know that Mr. Heney piles the wood which he supplies to the Government and to citizens upon the same ground, or, whether that wood is measured until it is brought into the yard here; whether the whole of the wood in that yard is not Mr. Heney's wood, or one portion of it Government wood and another portion held to be delivered to private citizens. The hon. gentleman will see that he has made an arrangement that is unfair in itself. In the first place, every wood dealer ought to have an equal opportunity to tender for the supply of wood; but that opportunity has not been given. I have heard from various quarters, that the private citizens in Ottawa pay less for their wood than is paid by the Government. Then, in the next place, the other dealers who sell wood to the people of this city have to pay canal tolls, and have to pay rent on the land that they use as a wood yard. Mr. Heney pays neither. He has valuable land from the Government without giving the public compensation for the use of this land. Other parties bringing their wood from a distance have canal tolls to pay, and Mr. Heney has no canal tolls to pay. Can the Minister say that Mr. Heney has paid canal tolls on wood supplied to private citizens?

Mr. FOSTER. Do you say he does not? I think you have the onus of supporting the charges.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Government has devised a system which necessarily leads to abuse, because it invites abuse, and I call the attention of the Minister to the fact. The subject is, no doubt, a subject for enquiry, and it is one which I believe will be enquired into before the session ends.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think I can offer some explanation, as far as my memory goes, on some of the points raised by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. The remission of the canal tolls is a long standing claim from the time Mr. Heney became contractor. He held this same contract under the former Government, and the price of the wood was just about the same as it is now, in proportion to the circumstances of the two periods. Hon. gentlemen will admit that the principle has been acted on that, in the case of everything transported through the canals on a Government contract, the tolls should be refunded. That was the principle upon which Mr. Heney's tolls were remitted by an Order in Council passed some six or seven years ago; and after the transference of that branch to the Department of Railways and Canals, the officer in charge raised the question whether the Order in Council remitting the tolls in the past was sufficient authority for him to remit them now. The question was brought before the Council, and it was decided that the principle was the same, and another Order in Council was passed, affirming the principle that the tolls should not be charged on the wood delivered to the Government. I may say that when the original order was passed the question was raised whether it would cover wood other than that supplied to the Government, and the officers were instructed that the remission could not go beyond the amount of wood supplied to the Government. I am willing to admit that if the contractor should pile there wood to be supplied to private parties, it would not be fair or right.

Mr. CHARLTON. Can it be shown that he pays any tolls at all?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yet he sells wood to the citizens of Ottawa.

Mr. COSTIGAN. But the instruction was given that the refund should only extend to wood delivered to the Government. Then, with regard to the renewal of the contract, it was renewed at the lowest prices paid, and it was renewed for the same reason that the contractor during the Administration that preceded the Sir John Macdonald Government had his contract renewed. There was an impression that the wood was being paid for at a higher price than the wood supplied to the citizens, because there was an impression on the public mind that the Government were not paying for a full cord, that is, for 128 cubic feet, became some of the wood was only three feet long; whereas, if the wood was only two feet long, the contractor had to make up it up to the full 128 cubic feet. With regard to the privilege of piling wood along the canal bank, we all know that it was waste land, and for many years it brought no revenue to the Government.

Mr. LANDERKIN. When?

Mr. COSTIGAN. During the last twenty-five years.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Are you stating that authoritatively?

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the hon. gentleman will let me get through, my argument will bear criticism. The land was leased for a number of years during the time Mr. Heney had the contract and was delivering wood under the former Administration. That land, though leased, had paid no rent, and there was a large amount of arrearages because no rent had been collected, and it was arranged with the holders that the building owned by them should be taken for rents due. The reason Mr. Heney's rentals were remitted was because he supplied such an immense quantity of wood to the Government that there was not room to pile it in the yards near the furnaces. It is not possible to put one-twentieth part of the wood on these grounds which the contract requires him to deliver in the yards here, and he is necessarily obliged to handle it twice—to pile it in his yard on the canal, and deliver it to the departments at such times as will most suit their convenience. Therefore, it is for the convenience of the Government and the public that he is allowed to pile the wood there instead of piling it on the Government grounds. I think that explanation should be satisfactory.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How do we know what the amount of the contract is unless we know the amount of the tolls which have been remitted? The amount of $60,000 is put down for heating the public buildings, and then we are told that there is a refund of canal tolls. How much is that? Then, if he pays no tolls on the wood which he brings there for the supply of private parties in the city, we want to know that; we have a right to know that. As a matter of fact, so far as I am advised, rent was paid for those lots, and the last payment was made in April, 1878.

Mr. COSTIGAN. On part of the lots. There are several lots in the basin.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Since that time no rent has been paid on any of those lots by Mr. Heney. We were told the other day that Mr. Heney holds a great many lots there. I put a number of questions on the Paper with a view to discussing this item properly, and they should have been answered on Monday. Sufficient time was given to secure the answers, and why were they not answered? Those belonging to the Department of the Interior and the Department of Justice were answered, but the others were not. I think the Minister stated that there was rent paid for lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 up to 1878, but there has been nothing paid since. We know that the contract for this wood is at $4.95 and $4.75 per cord, and we know by the Auditor General's Report that $6 per cord is paid for some, and $6.59 for other wood. We do not know how many dollars a year the country has lost or has refunded to Mr. Heney on his contract. We want to know what he has paid for the privilege of piling his wood on those lots. I was told by the Minister, the other day, that some $1,167 was paid in rent by other people who have lots in the canal basin; and would it not be right and fair to charge rent to the contractor who has a contract with the Government?

Mr. CASEY. The others do not subscribe to testimonials.

Mr. COSTIGAN.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is this the reason why no rent is paid by the contractor for the ground he uses on which rent was paid up to a few years ago? Is this the reason why the canals tolls are remitted? If it is, we want to know it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is the hon. gentleman asking a question, and will he have a reply?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I want a reply. I want to know the amount of the canal tolls refunded to Mr. Heney since he has had the contract?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman asks a question, but he does not want the answer.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Very well; I will let you answer that question.

Mr. COSTIGAN. You ask if the reason for these remissions was that they contributed testimonials.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I did not say that.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman repeated it and I rose to answer it, and I answer in this way. That is not the reason, and the hon. gentleman who puts the question dare not assert it. Does he understand me now?

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is the reason the public are pilfered out of this land, and that the public domain is given to a contractor, and that the public revenues are given to a contractor, and that that contractor gets more per cord for his wood than he sells it at in the city?

Mr. COSTIGAN. He does not. I wish to say that I volunteered the statement of what was within my knowledge from having had to do with this branch of the service before, and I stated what I knew about it. But I have nothing to do with that service at present, nor have I had anything to do with it for years past. But speaking from memory, I offered what information I could to the Committee. In reply to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who said that under this system the present contractor had an advantage over other contractors from the fact that he was allowed free yardage and tolls, that remark might have applied to the past, but the hon. gentleman, if he will look into the matter, must admit that it does not hold good at present. The tolls were remitted several years ago, and the contract of which we are speaking now was entered into, and tenders were called for, after the principle of free canal tolls was well known to the public and after it was well known that that principle would govern the contract. All the tenderers were, therefore, after the principle of remitting the tolls had been adopted, in the same position as Mr. Heney in tendering. Before that, the hon. gentleman's argument would apply to some extent; but since the remission of the tolls, that being known to the public, and it also being known that no rent was collected for the storage of the wood on Government property by the contractor, the hon. gentleman will admit that every tenderer was in the same position.

Mr. MULOCK. Was it stated in the advertisement calling for tenders that the contractors would be entitled to remission of tolls and free use of the Government land?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not more than is stated when calling for tenders for works on canals, or for building or repairing public works. Every contractor who tenders knows that he will be refunded all tolls paid by him for the passage of material to be used in the construction or repairing of a canal.

Mr. MULOCK. I fail to see how a person tendering for wood would know he was entitled to use property belonging to the Dominion Government free from rent or payment of any kind. I fail to see how the general public would know that. Mr. Heney may have known it, as he has been a Government contractor for years, and may have acquired that knowledge from his experience. But he ought not to be the sole one to possess that knowledge. There is only one fair way of doing the business. Everything connected with the contract should be set forth in the advertisement calling for tenders, so that all tenderers would be on the same footing. There should be no opportunity given to bring a charge of undue influence. The Government were not bound, after this contract was awarded, according to the Minister's statement, to remit the tolls and allow the contractor to occupy the Government land free. Therefore, this contractor, after the contract was entered into, when given remission of the tolls and free occupation of Government land, was, in fact, actually given so much money without rendering value for it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not in this contract.

Mr. MULOCK. Can you show that he was entitled, as a matter of contract, to these allowances? The fact that he had been dealing with the Government in other years, and that the Government chose, from time to time, to make allowance to him, did not create an obligation on their part to do so at all. You were not bound to do so when this new contract was entered into.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. How were you bound, as a matter of law, to allow this contractor free use of the canal and of Government land.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I cannot answer the hon. gentleman; I do not know that anyone can.

Mr. CASEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. member for Elgin is so accustomed to applaud that he applauds before he knows what I intended to say, and will not wait for my answer. It is not information, or explanation, or reasonable statement the hon. gentleman wants, but merely to criticise and throw out insinuations across the floor of the House. At least, it looks very like that, and makes it unpleasant for gentlemen on both sides. When the claim of Mr. Heney was put before the Government, it was considered side by side with the principle adopted and carried out since Confederation on all other public works and contracts, when the canals were used. This was the only exception; this was the only case in which the drawback had not been allowed; and the case made out was so strong as to be irresistible. In accordance with the practice followed, of refunding the tolls on materials moved through the canals to be used on such works, the Government decided that this contractor, having established his case, had as good a right to a refund as other contractors had in other cases, and we laid down the principle that these moneys should be refunded. That was settled, and the hon. gentleman will see that the contract price for wood now is somewhat less than the price charged before, and it is reasonable to draw the conclusion that Mr. Heney and the other tenderers tendered, knowing that they would not have to pay the canal tolls and storage.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How did they know?

Mr. COSTIGAN. That, therefore, may have been the reason why Mr. Heney tendered lower.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How did the general public have knowledge of that?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There are several ways of informing the general public.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Were they informed.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman having asked the question once, I am intelligent enough not to require it to be repeated. I may not be so, from his point of view, but I would ask him not to interrupt until I have given him an answer. The public have the best opportunities of knowing all about these matters, not only through the ordinary means, circulating news by the press, but there is not a question of this character that has not been discussed from time to time in Parliament and the discussion published in Hansard and most of the newspapers. What better means of information could hon. gentlemen desire? Do they ignore the Official Debates and the press? They are the best means of giving information to the public; and no one will say that the people in Ottawa, and it was Ottawa people who tendered, did not know exactly how the case stood.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Has Mr. Heney been a contractor for the supply of wood continuously since 1878?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Has he not been a continuous possessor of this property since 1878?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not know anything about the possession of the property.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who have been the contractors during the past ten or twelve years?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There has been no rent paid since 1878. There is a large area of property on which wood is piled. Mr. Heney is a dealer in wood continuously.

Mr. DEWDNEY. A company owed the Government a lot of money and went into liquidation. The only thing the Government got out of them was one of their buildings.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). From 1878 there has been no rent paid; and surely if the company the hon. gentleman refers to were unable to pay rent, the property should have been taken from them before; but I understand Heney was using it before, and has been using it continuously since, whether he was a contractor with the Government or not.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have the tender here. This does not specify that he is to get his wood without paying canal tolls. This is what the public have to guide them in tendering. If others knew the canal tolls would be remitted, they would probably have tendered at a lower price. If that was the law, why did they not state it in the tender. You cannot find anything about a refund of canal toll, and we suppose that the tender is the basis upon which the contract is made. Then I will read the answer which was given to a question which I put in the House on Monday:

"Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Has Mr. John Heney the contract for supplying wood for heating the Public Buildings in Ottawa? If so, when did he first receive it, and was it by public tender? How long did the contract run? Has it since been renewed, and how often? If so, was it by public tender, and at what price per cord?

"Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. John Heney has the contract for supplying wood for heating the Public Buildings at Ottawa. Mr. Heney was first awarded the contract for wood supply, after a call for tenders, on the 27th October, 1868, for three years. This contract was subsequently continued to him to the 21st December, 1872, when new tenders were again called, and he was awarded the contract. On the 30th October, 1874, a contract was again entered into with him for one, two or three years. In March, 1879, a contract was again made with him. The contracts of 1868, 1872, 1874, and 1879 were awarded after a call for public tenders. The agreements of 1871 and 1873 were extensions of one year, authorized by Orders in Council. On the 10th March, 1881, the wood contract was awarded to W. McCaffrey, after public tenders; and by Order in Council of 17th December, 1883, this contract was continued until 1885, when new tenders were called for. Tenders were called for on the 11th March, 1885, for supply of firewood for three years for Public Buildings, Ottawa. J. M. Quinn was the lowest tenderer, and got the contract at $4.95 for rock maple, and $4.75 for mixed hardwood. On the 11th May, 1885, an Order in Council was passed, allowing Quinn to transfer his contract to Heney, Heney to carry out the contract at the rates stated in Quinn's tender. The contract ran from the 1st September, 1885, to the 1st September, 1888. It has been renewed twice by Order in Council—on 7th December, 1885, for three years, from 1st September, 1888, to 1st September, 1891, and on the 24th April, 1891, for three years, from 1st September, 1891, to 1st September, 1894, at the rates of Quinn's tender, namely, $4.95 for rock maple, and $4.75 for mixed hardwood."

What interest could the public have in that? Tenders were not asked. The contract was renewed without calling for tenders, and the public has no right in this tender whatever. Now, about the matter of testimonials. The Minister of Inland Revenue, when the member for Elgin (Mr. Casey) said the others had not subscribed and Mr. Heney had, seemed to get into a wonderful state of excitement. I do not know whether Mr. Heney took any part in regard to these testimonials or not, but I am advised that he not only subscribed to the testimonial to the Minister of Inland Revenue and to the testimonial to the late Minister of Public Works, but that he passed round the list and raised the money, or was one of those who did so. I do not desire to be offensive to the Minister, but I am offensive to the system. The Minister of Justice took the same ground the other day, that the principle of accepting testimonials on the part of Ministers was contrary to the independence of Parliament. That was my principle before, but it is a new principle for the party behind the Minister of Justice to adopt now, though they know that the Minister of Inland Revenue received a testimonial as well as the Minister of Public Works. You may gloss it over as you will, but it has the appearance that John Heney got these privileges, and that this was one of the considerations which paved the way to his getting them. Get angry or get excited as you will, but there is no view you can take except that the public domain was given away, the public revenues were given away to this man, and this man was one of those who took a hand in getting up testimonials for Ministers of the Crown. If it is fair to ask Mr. Bate to pay a rent of $466.25 for a lot there, why would it be unfair to ask Mr. Heney to pay rent for his lots? Did Mr. Bate subscribe to that testimonial or not? That is a question which should be answered. There are others who have to pay rent, and why should they pay rent and Mr. Heney not pay rent, when we are dealing with him to the tune of $40,000? Does Mr. Heney pay toll on the wood he sells to the citizens? There is no spirit of faction in what I am saying. I simply want to get at the facts of the case, and I do not want to be personal or offensive to the Minister or to anybody else, but I am stating things which I know and which I have heard in reference to this matter, and which I think the Government owe it to themselves and to their supporters to clear up. I think they owe it to the country to show why it is that they give these privileges to this contractor and why he is so favoured, why he gets these lots rent free when others have to pay.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DENISON). Is this item carried?

Mr. LANDERKIN. No; it cannot be passed till we get the information we have asked for.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Inland Revenue argues inferentially that the public must have known that these matters were to be part of the advantages given to the contractor by reason of the fact that to-day, as he says, the wood is being supplied at a lower rate than formerly. That is not a fair position from which to draw such a conclusion. It is no fairer than the argument which has been presented to the Public Accounts Committee, that the public is getting full value for the services rendered, though public servants are deriving advantage as well. I see by the Auditor General's Report that Mr. Heney in the last four or five years has received $157,846.10 or, one-sixth of a million dollars. That is to be found on page B—386. I ask whether, in a contract of this importance, business principles should not be applied to the letting of it? Will the Minister explain why, on each occasion, there is not a public advertisement issued asking for tenders and setting forth all the advantages each one is to get. I ask the Minister of Inland Revenue to explain how any one except Mr. Heney who might get the contract would be able to get possession of this property of which Mr. Heney has had possession for so many years, in time to store the wood there. The fact is that Mr. Heney being in possession of that property places anyone else at a disadvantage, so that Mr. Heney had the exclusive privilege of being in possession at the time of the expiration of these contracts. Am I to understand that there was no advertisement for tenders issued last November?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The contract has been extended.

Mr. MULOCK. There was no invitation to the public to compete?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No. The contract now held is held on an extension.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the date of the original contract?

Mr. FOSTER. 1885.

Mr. MULOCK. When did that contract expire?

Mr. FOSTER. In 1888.

Mr. MULOCK. It was renewed in 1888, and again in 1891 on the terms of the contract of 1885, and that without tender?

Mr. FOSTER. That is correct.

Mr. MULOCK. This book shows that from 1885 to 1888, about $100,000 has been paid under contracts, and since then we have about $30,000 a year under this contract. Now, this is an amount large enough to demand the application of strict business principles, and if the Government depart from business principles without being able to assign business reasons, they will expose themselves to observations that are equally painful to those who have to make them, and to those who have to listen to them. In this particular case I think every person who is familiar with what has occurred now, must come to the conclusion that for some reason, either negligence or something else—I hope and will assume that it is negligence or indifference—for some reason, this is given to a private citizen without tender. Now, the time has come when this has got to end, when the people of Canada must get value for their money, and those who are responsible for the people not getting value for their money, must be called to account for it. It is pitiable to observe what is going on here. No excuse is assigned for what has taken place. The Minister of the Interior gives certain reasons that in his mind are satisfactory, but they are not business views. He may think it is quite satisfactory for the Council to sit quietly down and renew contracts, but it is against all sound business principles. No county council would dare to do such a thing, no public body answerable to the people would dare to do what the Government are doing. They have come to the conclusion, apparently, from long enjoyment of office, that they are above and beyond the people. I trust they will become awakened to the fact that they are answerable to the people. It is the people's money you are wasting, and everything you are giving to John Heney illegally is the people's money, and it is a gross breach of trust to hand over their money to individuals without getting value for it. This same feature crops up in almost all the transactions we are called upon to consider, and until there is a proper application of business principles, the Government must expect to hear these criticisms; they cannot hear them too often, and if they are deaf they must hear them until there will be some ears that will hear them.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is not that a bull—if we are deaf we must hear them?

Mr. MULOCK. I say they must be uttered until other ears will hear them. I mean, that if the Government will not hear them, perhaps other men will be put in their places who will hear them.

Mr. DESJARDINS (Hochelaga). That will take some time.

Mr. MULOCK. I dare say it will, but while these methods continue we must continue to protest. At all events, it is our duty to protest until the people, whose money they are spending, calls them to account for their breach of trust.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman says no business firm would do what the Government are doing.

Mr. MULOCK. I said no public corporation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Well, the hon. gentleman is not aware of all the facts of the case. The Government of Mr. Mackenzie gave a contract for the supply of wood for the public buildings here in Ottawa, to this very same John Heney, and extended it by Order in Council. Did any Conservative on this side of the House feel justified in making the cowardly insinuation across the House that Mr. Mackenzie had been dishonest in giving that contract? No. The same explanation was made by the friends of the Mackenzie Government, and the same reasons were given, namely, that the prices under which the contract was extended at that time were satisfactory in the public interest—and they were higher than they are now. But no one charged the Government with wholesale bribery and corruption because they extended that contract, and hon. gentlemen opposite have no more reason for making charges to-day about the extension of the contract at a lower price than there was then for making a charge against the Mackenzie Government.

Mr. ALLISON. If all that has been said is correct, and if the Government stood in the position of an individual, I do not think that they would have any right to charge Mr. Heney rent for this property. According to statutory limitation in Ontario, ten years' possession gives a man ownership of the property, and if Mr. Heney has had this property in his possession ten years or over, he is the absolute owner of it, and the Government have no right to charge him one cent.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am sorry the hon. gentleman puts that idea into Mr. Heney's head.

Mr. McMULLEN. Hon. gentlemen opposite find fault with us for criticising this item.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can tell them that I have received no less than three letters since I came to Ottawa, from private individuals, asking me, as a member of Parliament, to investigate this matter. In the City of Ottawa, Conservatives have stopped me on the street, men that I know, and have told me there was a screw loose in connection with this matter. I would like to ask hon. gentlemen if it is any wonder that the Opposition consider it their duty to criticise these items. People in the City of Ottawa think that there is a job here. I casually happened down to Mr. Heney's yard a short time ago, not with the intention of looking after his wood or anything else, but with the intention of calling upon a friend in that section, and I was spoken to by no less than two men and asked why we permitted such a condition of things to exist as to allow Mr. Heney to occupy lands that belong to the Government, and to have advantages under his contract that others were not made aware of when the contract was let, and in this way, year after year, to pocket large sums of money. Now, the reason why people are beginning to get suspicious that Mr. Heney is making a very nice thing, is, I understand, that he is building a nice residence on Sandy Hill, and he has built a steam tug here, or a pleasure yacht, and he has honoured the retired Minister of Public Works by calling it after his name, he calls it Sir Hector. I dare say that he feels himself in duty bound to honour the Minister by so doing. Now, I say it is quite clear that we are using an enormous amount of wood. I would like to say to the Minister of Inland Revenue that, with respect to the statements he has made to this House with regard to the way the wood was measured, I venture to say that he is not correct in that statement, and I will tell him why. I will ask my hon. friend to go out and look at the wood and see how any person can possibly measure it so as to get 128 cubic feet in a cord the way the wood is piled up there now, some of it is only three feet long, some three feet and a half, some three feet nine inches, and so on, in one pile. I do not think my hon. friend, with all his ingenuity, is able to measure that wood so as to get 128 cubic feet in a cord long, in the way it is piled up now.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am satisfied the hon. gentleman is in error.

Mr. McMULLEN. Let my hon. friend get an engineer, or whoever measures the wood, to go down there and see if he can get his full complement of wood. I would like to know how you are going to get 128 cubic feet in a pile of wood 8 feet long, that is only 3 feet, 3½ or 3 feet 9 inches long. My hon. friend has given the amount paid to Mr. Heney for wood for the last four or five years. I would advise my hon. friend to look at the Auditor General's Report; indeed, I would strongly recommend all the Ministers to give a little more attention to that report than, apparently, they are accustomed to do, and then they will be better able to answer questions. In 1885-86 we paid Mr. Heney $25,140 for wood; in 1886-87 $31,490; in 1887-88, $33,996, or $9,000 more than 1885-86. This is a distinct increase, because the Langevin Block is not included in either estimate. How does it come about that at the same rate $9,000 more has been paid during one year than a few years previously. When we consider the amount expended on coal and wood it is evidently time some change was made. Coal and wood cost $61,899; lighting of Parliament buildings, including Rideau Hall, $28,483; water for grounds and buildings, $15,123; removing snow, $1,795; Major's Hill Park, $6,323; telephone rents, $3,285; and these items, together with the cost of maintaining the Parliament grounds, in the order in which they are kept, which is in very poor order, the expenditure has reached $123,460, or over $10,000 per month. It is time some changes were made in the mode of heating, because we are wasting money in burning wood rather than coal. Before the item is passed, we are entitled to know what is the refund to Mr. Heney on wood. The Auditor General's Report says the refund on wood bought was $1,000. Was any refund made to him in any other year? It is said that the Government allowed tolls to be refunded whenever Government work is done. I challenge hon. gentlemen to state any other case where a refund was made except in the case of wood.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman is evidently not aware of the facts as they exist. He is evidently under the impression that this is the only case where a refund has been made. I stated before that a strong argument in favour of acknowledging the claim was that in every case of contract for canal construction or repairs, the contractor pays the tolls on his barges going through the canals, and, on a certificate being presented from the engineer that the material is connected with a Government contract, the tolls are refunded in every case.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not admit it is right that this should be done. Why should these refunds be made any more than the duties collected should be returned on goods imported for militia clothing. The Minister of Militia takes contracts for overcoats and clothing for the militia, but he does not return the duty to the manufacturers on the materials imported. Again, do the Government return the duty on coal; and do the Government return the amount of the canal tolls when coal is brought here from the American side?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Will the Minister of Finance give the particulars in regard to the amount collected from Mr. Heney and the amount refunded to him? The department should know what tolls are collected and what tolls are refunded.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope that the position will not be taken that the questions asked as to the reservation of land, or the value of the rental, or the refund of canal tolls are sufficient to cause hon. gentlemen opposite not to pass this item. While these questions may arise in the discussion, they are not necessarily germane to it. What we are discussing is an item for so much money to provide wood and coal. Any information with respect to wood and coal, quantity and price, I am prepared to give, and I have given, and I have given all that a reasonable committee would ask in order to pass the item. If there is any question of policy, such as allowing a refund of tolls or regarding a piling ground, that is a question which stands by itself; but it is an unreasonable position to take that the item should stand until these questions are thoroughly debated and satisfactorily answered, and I do not think reasonable men will insist on that view. Any other information germane to the subject I shall be glad to furnish.

Mr. WATSON. We are thankful for that information. I should like to ask if the Public Works Department has arrived at the relative value of coal and wood; as to how many pounds of coal are equal to a cord of wood?

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is going too deeply into technical and scientific matters, and I do not possess any information on that point, which is not germane to the passing of the item. It may be quite germane as to the propriety of using coal or wood. But contracts are running, and amounts of money have to be paid.

Mr. WATSON. As the hon. gentleman cannot furnish this information, the item should be allowed to stand until he obtains it. We should not pass estimates for buying wood if coal is cheaper than wood. I know there are men in business using steam power who have estimated the relative cost of wood and coal, and have come to the conclusion that coal is the cheaper. I am satisfied that, at the present prices of coal and wood, the Public Works Department would find coal much cheaper than wood. But the department evidently has not made any calculations, and the Minister cannot answer the questions——

Mr. FOSTER. But the contracts are running.

Mr. WATSON,—we say the contracts should not run. The Government saw fit to renew these contracts by Order in Council without consulting Parliament. They have taken the responsibility of renewing these contracts, and they certainly must expect to have these items severly criticised if it can be shown that coal is cheaper than wood.

Committee rose; and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before six o'clock we asked for some information in reference to this wood contract, and we do not think until we get that information that the item should pass. We want to know the cost of the heating; we want to know the cost of the wood, we want to know what tolls were refunded to the contractor, and the value of the lots occupied by him. We think we should get this information, because, in the meantime, we do not know what we are paying for the wood.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this item be carried?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Not until we get the information.

Mr. FOSTER. I will give the hon. gentleman all the information that is pertinent to this question. This is a vote for heating the public buildings. The vote is for $60,000, and the following is an estimate of that sixty thousand in items. It is to pay for the wages of the heating staff, including the wood pilers and coal men, for the wood and coal itself, and contigencies $1,000, making up $60,000. Last year there were 2,980 cords of wood used at $4.75, 3,670 cords of wood at $4.95, 59 cords at $6, and 30 cords at $6.50. The price of the wood last year, as this year for the contract, was: maple, $4.95; mixed, $4.75, and pine, $3.75. The contractor is Mr. John Heney, of Ottawa. The contract was given by tender in 1885 to one Quinn, who afterwards assigned it to Mr. Heney, who carried out Mr. Quinn's contract. In 1888, on the advice of the engineer of the department, the contract was, by Order in Council, extended for three years, and about the expiration of that time it was extended for another three years at the same rates. The contract now has to run until 1894 on the last three years extension. So much for the wood. The lowest tender for coal this year was accepted, being for 2,600 tons of furnace coal, at $5.20; 50 tons of egg coal, $560; 140 tons of stove coal, $728, making a total of $14,508. I may say with reference to the coal that the tenders this year were about $1 per ton lower than the price paid on the tender last year; that arising from the fact that the Government proposed, unless it could get it cheaper, to make some arrangement of its own; and the tender prices this year seem to have come down about $1 per ton less than last year, and are very reasonable, as will be seen by the quoted price of $5.20. These are the items which make up that sum of $60,000 which is asked for. That, I think, is reasonable and fair information, and as such I submit it to the Committee. If my friends of the Opposition are willing to take the responsibility to obstruct Supply on fair information being given, they may take that responsibility.

Mr. McMULLEN. We do not wish at all to obstruct the proceedings. We ask what is the rent of the premises occupied free of charge by Mr. Heney the wood contractor; we ask the amount of canal dues that have been refunded to him in connection with this contract, and why the refund has been made? I think these are fair questions in connection with the wood contract, and the Minister should answer them.

Mr. FOSTER. These questions have been asked and have been answered as to the reasons why the refund was made; it has also been explained that this piling ground was allowed to be used by the contractor, and has been used by him for years. These are two matters of policy which do not affect the prices which are to be paid, and which the Committee is asked to vote for contracts that are running. If the Opposition do not agree with the Government in their policy in these two respects, that is no reason why this vote should not pass. That is a reason why the Opposition should characterize their opinion of that policy by a motion in this House if they please.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman give the information with regard to the amount of canal tolls that were refunded?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not that information, but I will get it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. When will you get it?

Mr. FOSTER. I will get it and bring it to the House as soon as it can be got; but it is not pertinent to this vote.

Mr. McMULLEN. The reason the discussion was somewhat extended before recess was to give the Minister an opportunity to get this information during recess. The hon. gentleman having undertaken the charge of the votes for the Public Works Department, it is not to be expected that he should have all these matters at his fingers' end; but I think, as a simple matter of courtesy, he might have met the Opposition to the extent of obtaining that information during the two and a quarter hours since 6 o'clock, and then he could have fairly asked that we should allow the item to pass, even though there might be other questions which he could not answer. We may sometimes in the view of the hon. gentleman be somewhat unreasonable in our demands, but I think this is a reasonable demand for the amount of the refunds which have been made on the canal tolls. If the hon. gentleman were himself at the head of the Public Works Department, I am quite sure that he would be in a position to answer that question, and would have taken pains to get the information. He has at hand the chief officials of the department; and why did he not suggest to them that they should return after recess prepared to answer this reasonable question as to the amount of the refund of canal tolls. If he had done that, I think the Opposition would have been prepared to accept a fair reply to that question, and let the item pass.

Mr. FOSTER. Nobody disputes that the hon gentleman is entitled to have that information, and I will get it. That is not the question in point at all, and I think that when I give him my promise that the information shall be furnished to the House, that is all that can reasonably be asked. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that the information will be brought down, and he knows that it was almost impossible to get it after all the offices were closed and everybody had gone away, even if it were pertinent to this item. Questions are on the Paper in regard to these canal tolls and refunds, and information is being gathered upon the whole subject, and will be brought down as soon as it is obtained.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The question of the policy of the Government in regard to the refunding of canal tolls to those who have contracts on the canal is one thing. Mr. Heney had no canal contract; his contract was a wood contract; and how is he affected by a question of policy in regard to those who have contracts on the canal? We do not desire to be captious, but we think the Government should come down with the information as to the amount of these refunds to Mr. Heney. Then we want to know the amount per cord that they charge on the canal. We want to know exactly how much this wood contract costs. We are asking nothing unreasonable; the information should be in the department, and it should be given at once.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman say who has the contract for the coal?

Mr. FOSTER. C. C. Rae & Co., of Ottawa.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman said last year that they were paying more for coal than they ought to pay. I inferred from his observation that the Government had notified the coal men that if they did not reduce the price, they would do something. They invited tenders, the result of which was that they got the coal $1 a ton cheaper.

Mr. FOSTER. Tenders were asked for every year for coal.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman said that on that occasion they had notified the tenderers that if they did not get the coal cheaper they were going to do something, he did not say what. We know that there is a sympathy between the price of coal and the price of wood; if the price of coal falls $1 a ton, the price of cordwood also falls.

Mr. FOSTER. Not always.

Mr. MULOCK. If the hon. gentleman had done a little kicking in the cord-wood line, does he not think that he would have saved something on that as well? If he had squeezed his friend Mr. Heney, he might have made Mr. Heney come down; but he did not want to squeeze Mr. Heney. There is no doubt that in this case the Government have done something which they ought not to have done, and it augurs very poorly for the Administration when we find a transaction like this defended by the Minister of Finance, who ought to take care of our funds instead of utilizing them apparently as if they were his own. That is not the true position for the Finance Minister to take. If he could have saved $1 a cord on wood, he ought to have done it. I notice that there are two items: one, "Heating public buildings, Ottawa, $60,000," and a little further down, "heating Dominion public buildings, fuel, &c., $60,000." In order that we should have no confusion between the two, would the hon. gentleman state what buildings are included in the vote now under consideration?

Mr. FOSTER. It is explained by the vote—Public Buildings, Ottawa. The other item is for all the buildings throughout the provinces.

Mr. MULOCK. The other vote has nothing to do with any of the buildings of the capital?

Mr. FOSTER. No; the two votes are quite distinct.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman explain why he did not do as well in the wood line as in the coal line?

Mr. FOSTER. In the wood line we did as well as we could do.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The Public Works Department did not give an opportunity to see whether it was possible to do as well as they could do; they did not advertise for tenders. They renewed the contract with Mr. Heney time after time at his own price. If the hon. Minister of Finance were doing business for himself, he would not do it in that way, but he would see that those in the wood business would have an opportunity of tendering for a contract of this magnitude. If we look at the county buildings all over the province, we find that the county councils advertise for tenders for the small quantity of wood or coal required for those buildings; yet here we have this Government renewing their contract with Mr. Heney, from year to year, without soliciting tenders from other people. He gets his own price for the wood for three or four years at a time, and the public are not allowed to compete at all. When the Finance Minister obtained a reduction in the price of coal, why did he not try his hand in getting a reduction in the price of wood? Was it because Mr. Heney is a favourite of the Government, and was of use to members of the Government in getting up testimonials on different occasions? The Finance Minister says the information asked for will be forthcoming, but this is the proper time when it ought to be forthcoming. The hon. gentleman knows very well that, though he may bring down the information on concurrence, there is no opportunity then for criticism. The request of the Opposition is a reasonable one, that we should have the necessary information before voting the money, and if the Minister cannot give the information the item should be allowed to stand. There is no excuse for withholding this information. The Finance Minister knew this item was coming up, he knew this discussion would take place, and as acting Minister of Public Works he ought to have seen that this information, which we have a right to expect, was forthcoming.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to repeat the question I asked before recess, as to the relative value of coal and wood. Has the hon. gentleman obtained any information on that point?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not, but I will obtain the opinion of the engineer?

Mr. WATSON. Could not the hon. gentleman's officer, who is here, give him the information?

Mf. FOSTER. He is not the engineer.

Mr. WATSON. I must say I consider it a great loss to the country to use wood instead of coal. I estimate one ton of coal is as good as two cords of wood. The Government have paid on an average $4.95 per cord for wood, and during the last year, they have paid $6 per cord. Everyone knows that coal can be handled at much less expense than wood. More than that, the wood runs from 3 to 4 feet in length; and I venture to say that if any portion of the wood is 4 feet in length, the gentlemen who measure it will measure it in the interest of Mr. Heney, and the Government will not get full value.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend raises a question which is quite proper to be discussed, as to the relative value of wood and coal. But while it is an interesting question, on which my hon. friend may have strong opinions, it is one rather for experts to settle than this House. Moreover if any change were made, it only could be decided upon after diligent enquiry on the part of the officers who have this matter in charge, and after they had come to the conclusion that it would be economical to substitute coal for wood. It would be impossible to make any change in the course of the fiscal year, some months of which have already passed, and these contracts are running. Therefore, although the hon. gentleman has raised an interesting subject for discussion, it is one which cannot affect one way or the other the passing of the item under consideration, and it is one on which this House could not come to a conclusion to-night.

Mr. WATSON. This is the only opportunity we get to criticise the public expenditure. This matter was criticised a year ago and the same argument used, and no change made. I find that for cutting the wood $1.25 per cord is paid for cutting it once, and $1.75 for cutting it twice. This is an expense which would not occur in the case of coal. I venture to say there is not a gentleman in this House who pays more than 50 cents per cord for cutting wood once and 75 cents for cutting it twice. This runs the price of this mixed wood up to $6 per cord if cut once, and $6.50 if cut twice, so that actually a cord of wood costs more than a ton of coal, and a ton of coal is as good as two cords of wood.

Mr. FOSTER. The officer informs me there is no such amount as $1.75 paid for cutting ordinary wood two cuts for ordinary purposes; but $1.75 may be paid for cutting up wood into very small pieces, splitting it, and making it into kindling wood.

Mr. WATSON. I take the Auditor General's Report, and I suppose that is accurate. I find on page 386—B that of hard wood there were 2,980 cords and 34 feet, at $4.75; of mixed wood, one cut, 59 cords at $6, or a difference of $1.25.

Mr. TISDALE. That is a small item. It shows that is for kindling wood.

Mr. WATSON. Then there is mixed wood, two cuts, 30 cords at $6.50. This wood is used for various purposes. I say that coal is cheaper than wood, and I believe the country would save thousands of dollars annually by using coal instead of wood.

Mr. FOSTER. Last year there were 59 cords of wood, one cut, at $6, and 30 cords, two cuts, at $6.50. That is only 50 cents extra.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know whether the contract with Mr. Heney stipulates for a certain quantity of wood per annum, or just for as much as you choose to take.

Mr. FOSTER. It is what is necessary to be used.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have you freedom to take 500 or 5,000, as you like?

Mr. FOSTER. We take what is necessary.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No quantity is stipulated?

Mr. FOSTER. No; but you know about the quantity, year in and year out—6,000 or 7,000 cords.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister may fancy that we are too critical, but I was talking to a wood contractor in Ottawa, and he said he did not know of the contract being renewed, and did not know that the canal tolls were to be recouped to the man who had the contract. There has been a good deal of query in Ottawa in regard to this contract. A good many people have an idea that Mr. Heney is having an advantage which many others are denied, and I intimated that before recess, and asked the Minister to furnish us with figures as to the amount of the refund of the canal tolls. There are many people in this city who are anxious to find out what that amounts to. We are within our rights in asking to have that. The Minister says he will give us that information afterwards. We have no other opportunity of getting that information except on concurrence. I think I came to this chamber about the same time that my hon. friend did, and, as a rule, my experience is that hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House are anxious to get away home at the time of concurrence, and a very great deal is put through in a very short time. I do not blame the Government for that. I know that sometimes my hon. friend is not prepared to take much cognizance of what I say, but I think he should have placed himself in a position to give us these figures, because it is in the interest of parties in this city who are anxious to know the bottom of this whole contract with Heney. We are trying to discharge a duty which is unpleasant to us. I do not wish to delay the proceedings of the House, but we should have that information.

Mr. HYMAN. It seems to me that there is a very important principle involved here. In the first place, I understand that tenders were called for. I would like to know whether it was understood by those tendering that the canal tolls would be remitted, and that the contractor would have free piling grounds. If it was understood in that way, there might not be so much fault found with Mr. Heney's original contract, but if it was not so understood, it would appear that the Government, after having let the contract, allowed Mr. Heney to have certain favours shown to him which those who might have contracted could have no cognizance of. I would like to know from the Minister if the specification included remission of canal tolls and free piling ground? Surely, this is a fair question to ask.

Mr. LISTER. The question of my hon. friend from London (Mr. Hyman) is a fair question, whether all the contractors were put on a fair basis, whether everyone knew that canal tolls were to be remitted, and that the piling grounds were to be free?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the drift of the discussion this afternoon shows that, in 1885, that information was given to the contractors.

Mr. LISTER. That does not answer the question: whether all the persons who were asked to tender were given to understand that they would have the canal tolls remitted and have free piling grounds?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the canal tolls were remitted long before that—I think in 1880 or 1881.

Mr. LISTER. I know, but that is not answering the question.

Mr. FOSTER. I think there is not the least doubt about that. My hon. friend might make some argument about the fact that specific information had not been given, but he knows that, setting aside all these matters, contractors, if there were no other sources of information, who were intending to tender for any given work would find out the conditions before they tendered. We know that this has been discussed for years and years. It is in the papers, it is in the discussions of Parliament, and any would-be contractors, knowing that the canal tolls had been refunded and that the piling ground had been used, would make themselves masters of the information they required : and it has always been supposed that we have received the wood at a cheaper rate on that consideration.

Mr. LISTER. You did not receive it any cheaper. I suppose there are specifications made by the proper officers which show all the conditions and all the privileges the contractor is to have, the prices he is to receive, and everything connected with the contract, so that it would not be necessary for the contractor to enquire from individuals because the specifications would show the conditions on which he tendered. As far as this wood contract was concerned, the wood contractors in this section of the country have concluded that it is of little use to tender to the department for this particular contract. It seems that Mr. Heney has a prescriptive right to it. No one else has any chance. A contract is entered into by the Government with him which does not show all the conditions and privileges which the contractor is to have. That contract, in some mysterious way, is renewed from time to time without asking for fresh tenders, and it is given to Mr. Heney upon the terms contained in his original contract. No person acquainted with business methods will say that this was a proper way of getting supplies for the public buildings of this country. Every citizen of Canada whether he lives in Ottawa or Kingston, or any other place, has a right to open and free competition for furnishing everything this country requires in the shape of supplies. It is a most suspicious circumstance that this Mr. Heney, considering his past record, considering that he has been a confidential supporter of the Government for a great number of years, should have a monopoly for the supply of wood required by the Government—and such wood ! I will venture to say that in no market except Ottawa could any person be found to buy the wood that is sold by him to the Government of this country. It is poor in quality, it is short, and in every way it is wood that would not be taken by any purchaser, hardly, in any town in this country. Yet the Government are paying this man the enormous price of $4.95 for this wood, when coal would be a great deal cheaper, and the only conclusion to be drawn is that the Government desire that this extensive contract shall be continued in the hands of this man that he may continue to make enormous profits out of it. I venture to say that in London, or Hamilton, this wood would not bring more than $2.75 a cord ; people would not have it at any price. This question has been a subject of debate for nine years at least. Every session this question of wood has come up, and for the Minister to come to the House now and say : Oh, let this item pass and we will give you the information on concurrence, is an old way the Government has of putting off these ugly questions. We know that the late leader of the House used to say : We will give you all the information in our power, if you will only let this matter stand until concurrence. When concurrence came, all a member could do was to ask about it once, the information given was scanty, and we received no satisfaction. The Minister of Finance is paid seven or eight thousand dollars a year for giving this House all the information it requires upon every item of the Estimates that he asks us to agree to, and it his plain duty to prepare himself, or at all events to have his deputy post him, when he asks this House to vote this amount of money. It is his plain duty to be in a position to give every possible information that members may require for the purpose of showing to them that the contract is a fair one, that the price is fair, that all parties are treated on equal terms. I say that unless the Minister is in a position to give the information asked for, this item should be allowed to stand until he can give that information.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the Minister explain the division of the $60,000 ? I have taken down the figures which he has given for coal and wood, and he will require $47,403.85. He mentioned there was something else to be defrayed out of that vote, wages and contingencies ; will he say what the contingencies are ?

Mr. FOSTER. The item of $1,000 for contingencies is for whatever small unforeseen requirements may arise in connection with the wood or coal supply, as if more help were needed than has been estimated for, or if any investigations were to be carried on with reference to the coal, or anything of that kind—whatever little incidental expenses that may be necessary. There must always be an amount for that.

Mr. MULOCK. Would it not be proper to separate the item ? The wages account is an entirely separate matter from heating.

Mr. GIBSON. I would ask the Minister what reason he has to give for the continuation of Mr. Heney's contract ? Does he call for fresh tenders for the wood ?

Mr. FOSTER. That question has been asked at least a dozen times.

Mr. GIBSON. Had I been here and heard the answer, I certainly would not have asked for the information again.

Mr. FOSTER. The principle which we might observe for the despatch of business in Committee is something like the principle recommended by the Speaker's ruling to-day, that a member ought to be in his place in the House when a question is being put or discussed.

Mr. GIBSON. Perhaps the Minister is not always in his place in the House, as well as I. I may say that I am always in my place in the House, I have never left this building until the House is closed ever since I came here this session. I have other duties to perform as well as to sit here, and I ask the Minister, in all fairness, to give me a reason why Mr. Heney's contract is continued without fresh tenders being asked for?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has put it so winningly that I cannot help but answer that question again, although it has already been answered two or three times. Before 1885 the Government advertised for tenders, and contracts were given by tenders, and these contracts were, from time to time, extended by Order in Council. That practice has existed ever since Confederation. When we took office in 1878 we found the contract, after having been extended, it was in 1879 given on tender to McCaffrey. When his contract expired it was given on tender to Mr. Quinn, that was in 1885. Mr. Quinn could not carry out his contract, and he transferred it under the same conditions to Mr. Heney, and from 1888 that has been extended twice, on the ground that satisfaction was given by the contractor, that the price was not considered to be more than a reasonable price, and it was considered that the Government was getting as good value from the contractor as could possibly be got. On these grounds, which are thorough business grounds, the Government extended the contract. The same is done in a man's own business, the same is done in the public business. In many cases contractors, who have performed their contracts to the satisfaction of the department, if the rate is considered to be a reasonable one, have their contracts extended, instead of the Government asking for tenders, although the general practice of the Government is to ask for tenders.

Mr. GIBSON. I am glad to get this information from the Minister. When the Government continue contracts of this kind do they ask from other people prices in order that they may not be giving Mr. Heney or any others undue advantage?

Mr. FOSTER. The Government possesses itself of all information to make sure as to their action; and the Minister must be possessed of that information and bring it to Council when such a proposal is brought to Council. He possesses himself of that information necessary to convince him and Council that this contract which he proposes to extend will give us the work or the supplies as suitably as they can be obtained elsewhere.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think hon. gentlemen will find reason to approve of this contract when they know it was made on the recommendation, or with the concurrence as regards its extension, of John R. Arnoldi.

Mr. LISTER. It is but fair to say to the Committee that there is a rumour in the city that Mr. Heney for years has supplied gentlemen occupying high official positions with wood, for which he has never rendered an account.

Mr. FOSTER. A similar insinuation, and I call it a mean insinuation, was made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) to-day; and when I asked him to inform me as to the particulars, so that the outrage might be stopped, he refused to give them, and said the onus rested on this side of the House. There is nothing worse in one respect than for responsible men to rise and give wings to a rumour of that kind, which is very damaging, and it should be given only on square and fair information. I ask the hon. gentleman if he has any information in that regard, such as ought to be sufficient to lead him to take the position he did to-night, and to give that information to the Government.

Mr. LISTER. I have in the discharge of my duties as a member of this House never hesitated to make charges, in spite of the fact that I have been threatened by the press supporting hon. gentlemen opposite that if I failed to prove them I must take the responsibility for them. I have made more than one charge against men occupying high official positions, and have sustained them in face of the fact that I have been assailed by the Conservative press of the country. I have been as much as told that if I failed in proving those charges my expulsion from the House would be the consequence. I will tell the Finance Minister what I have heard, and what is common rumour in this city, and if a man with his ears open wants to hear it he can do so: It is, that men occupying high official positions have received wood from that gentleman for years past, and he has never rendered an account. If the hon. gentleman wants me to be more specific I will give the information to him as a man, as man to man.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I shall be very glad for the hon. gentleman to do so. I want to point out the unfairness of this course. How many men are there in this city holding high official positions? There are dozens. Are none of them honest and honourable men, men with families and business reputations and the like of that? When the hon. gentleman gets up and makes that wide assertion without particulars, he exposes every honourable man who occupies an official position in this city to the finger of scorn and to the suspicions of an unjust kind, and in that respect it is a mean thing to do. Perhaps I use too strong a word when I say a mean thing; but it looks to me in that light. What the hon. gentleman might have done was to have given information privately to a member of the Government, to myself for instance, and then if we had not acted, he might have used his power as a member to see that the outrage was not carried on. But the hon. gentleman will see in a moment how unfair it is to loosen every tongue of slander and every suspicious mind in this city against every man holding a responsible official position; and, to-morrow, after this statement has gone abroad, every man holding an official position is liable to be hooted at in this city as a man who gets his wood for nothing.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. In the light of certain revelations made recently before a certain Committee the charge made by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) cannot be considered as anything very astounding or startling. We have had revelations which must have startled not only this House but the country at large; and I may say that I as well as the hon. member for Lambton have heard such reports. I fancy that if the Public Accounts Committee had the opportunity of sitting more frequently we would have a great many more revelations than have yet been made with respect to the transactions of public servants in Ottawa lately and for years past. But, aside from that question, the Minister of Finance stated a few moments ago that the Opposition were trying to impede the progress of the Estimates, that they were acting improperly in asking for information which, he said, he would give afterwards willingly. If there is any obstruction it is not on the part of the Opposition, who wish to decide this matter fairly. The members of the Government occupy official positions and are paid handsome salaries for performing certain duties. They know the duties they have to discharge and they come to the House with that knowledge. If they come here to beg from the Opposition to let them push the Estimates through without supplying the necessary information, it is the Government who are acting as obstructionists and not the Opposition. This evening the Minister has refused to answer questions put to him for the purpose of eliciting information and to enable hon. members to give an intelligent vote on the question and know whether they would be acting rightly in voting $60,000 for heating the public buildings at Ottawa. What have we been told by the Minister of Finance? That when the Government let the contract it was to be presumed that all those men who wished to tender were aware of the practice of the Government, that the contractor was allowed free land for piling ground and that his canal tolls were remitted. I ask the Minister of Finance if that is a proper way to conduct public business, that, if when asking for tenders for public works certain special arrangements not put down in black and white should be assumed to be made. How are public contractors to know this? If I wish to make a contract for wood with the Government, how would I know, except the Government in their advertisements and specifications stated the fact, that I would be supplied with piling ground free of charge and that the tolls on all my wood passing through the canals would be remitted? It is too much for the Minister of Finance to say the whole matter was fair and square, because men who tendered ought to have known these allowances were made by the Government; and how could they have known them unless the Government had put them in possession of the facts. To all appearance this contract cannot be justified before this House and the people. This man Heney has been a favourite, and his contract has been renewed time and time again without other people being asked to tender or given an opportunity to tender. Why should this be so? There must be some reason why this man, above all other men, should be favoured in this wood contracting business. It is a large contract, a large sum is expended, and we have a right to enquire into everything in connection with the matter. I say, as I said before, that unless the Minister of Finance—he having charge of this department at the present time—is prepared to give this House the information which is absolutely necessary that we should have before we can give an intelligent vote on this subject; instead of acting as an obstructionist as he has done in this matter by refusing to give us the information, he should say: I will let this item stand until I put you in possession of all the facts bearing on this matter. This I think would be the honourable course for the Finance Minister to pursue. It would be the course that would be proper, and that would be in the interest of the conduct of public affairs, and I feel satisfied that he will be doing credit to himself if he will adopt the suggestion made in a proper way by the members on this side of the House, and allow the item to stand until we get the information.

Mr. TAYLOR. We began about ten minutes to four o'clock to discuss this item and it is now ten minutes past nine.

Mr. SOMERVILLE.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Louder.

Mr. TAYLOR. If hon. gentlemen keep quiet, I will give it to them loud enough before I get through. A great deal of information has been elicited outside of the question at issue. My friend from Lambton (Mr. Lister) and my friend from Brant (Mr. Somerville) have endeavoured to paint this Mr. Heney in very high colours. I presume Mr. Heney, who has the contract for supplying the wood to-day, is the same Mr. Heney who had the contract for supplying wood to the Government under the late Mackenzie Administration.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What has that got to do with it?

Mr. TAYLOR. He is the same man and he had a higher price per cord in 1874-75 from the Mackenzie Government, when wood was cheaper, than he has now when the wood is dearer. When his contract expired under the Mackenzie Government he came to that immaculate and pure and honest Government and asked to have his contract extended for another term, and they extended it at the same price without calling for tenders.

Mr. LANDERKIN. For how long?

Mr. TAYLOR. For the time he asked.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Did you see the Hansard yesterday and what the Minister of Justice stated there?

Mr. TAYLOR. I heard the discussion and I did not interrupt my hon. friend opposite when he was speaking. The contract was extended by the Mackenzie Government and it was at a considerably higher price per cord, than this same Mr. Heney is obtaining from the Government now.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is the price?

Mr. TAYLOR. My friend has the price before him and he can read it if he wants to know.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. You should not talk about a thing you do not understand.

Mr. FOSTER. We would not get a word in a month if you apply that rule to yourself.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am making the statements in my place in this House and they are correct, if not more so than the statements my hon. friend makes. I say that the contract price to-day is cheaper than it was during the Mackenzie Administration.

Mr. WATSON. Give us the figures?

Mr. TAYLOR. The contract price is lower to-day than it was under the Mackenzie Administration, and the price of wood to-day is higher per cord, not only in Ottawa, but in every town along the line than, it was during the time of the Mackenzie Government. Hon. gentlemen opposite have wasted the time of the House from four o'clock this afternoon until nine to-night, and not one of them has made a statement that he, or any other person, could supply the wood at any lower rate than the present contractor. No fault has been found with the Government that the price is too high, and until they show that, there is no ground for argument in this discussion. The Minister has made a fair and complete statement of what this vote is for. The contract price is fixed, the Government can take as much of the wood as they require and not one gentleman opposite has risen in his place to say that he can furnish wood at a lower rate. My hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Lister) says the wood is not good, but I say that the wood delivered in that yard to-day is a first class merchantable article. I think I know as much about wood as any member in this House, for I have handled hundreds of thousands of cords during my life, having had a contract with the Grand Trunk for many years to supply wood. My hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) stated that some of the logs were only three feet three, and three feet six, and that no man could measure that wood to give satisfaction. Now, the Grand Trunk contracts were all in the same way, 128 feet per cord. The wood used to be put on the line, in some cases two feet six long, and some running up to four feet. The inspector would simply take the average length, height and width of the pile, multiply the three together and divide it by a hundred and twenty-eight to get the cords. The same system of measuring is carried out in the present case. You cannot have it all sawn to an exact length of three or four feet. The wood is measured from point to scarf and an average struck for the whole. But that is outside of the question here. The vote is for so much money to supply so much coal and wood and to pay the labourers, and when hon. gentlemen opposite are asking for unnecessary information they are simply burking the progress of the work of the House. They have been five hours discussing the question whether they will heat this building next year or not, and not one of them has made a charge that the wood could be bought for less than it is purchased for now. They are trying to blacken the character of the officials of this city, making assertions about Mr. Heney, the same gentleman who furnished wood during the Mackenzie Administration without contract, and had his time extended at a higher price. Whether he gave his wood to officials or not, is no person's business. If Mr. Heney wishes to make a present of a cord of his own wood to an official, that is Mr. Heney's business.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. I say that is Mr. Heney's business. I will just cite a case. There is the Customs Department here; and I will take the commissioner of Customs, or the assistant commissioner of Customs. They are officials occupying a high position in the service at Ottawa; and suppose Mr. Heney wants to send each of these gentlemen five cords of wood, what has that to do with the contract for supplying the House of Commons? If Mr. Heney sees fit to do it, it is his business; and the character of these officials should not be besmirched by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. You believe in taking boodle in wood or anything else.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is an insinuation my hon. friend has no right to make. I do not believe in taking boodle, and I will help to put down boodle transactions as fast, or a little faster than my hon. friend if he shows them. It is beneath the dignity of hon. gentlemen occupying a position in this House to try to besmirch the character of every public official in the city. The fact remains that Mr. Heney, whether he is an honest man to-day or not, was the same gentleman who under similar circumstances, but at a higher price, had his contract extended by that immaculate and pure Liberal Administration that my hon. friends opposite think so much about. They say they would not extend the contract and that they would call for tenders, but they did not do that when they were in power. We have heard it explained to-day, that before the Minister of Public Works came to Council and asked to have that tender extended, he made enquiries and found that Mr. Heney had fulfilled the contract satisfactorily, and at as low prices as could be obtained anywhere else, and no hon. gentleman on the opposite side of the House during the discussion has had the manhood about him to get up and say that he would deliver that wood at five cents a cord less than the present contractor. But they tried to blacken the characters of public officials in this city, many of whom I am proud to say have just as high a sense of honour as men occupying seats on either side of this House; and I think that hon. gentlemen ought to think more of the reputation of the officials of this country of ours than to say they could be bribed by a cord of wood.

Mr. WATSON. I am rather surprised that any gentleman should get up in his place in this House and attempt to read the members on this side a lecture such as the hon. gentleman has attempted to read just now. He tells us that we have no right to criticise these items——

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not do anything of the kind.

Mr. WATSON,—because we did not show that wood could be purchased more cheaply, and that nothing is wrong. We have great reason to suspect that something is wrong, particularly after listening to the hon. gentleman who occupies a prominent position on the other side of the House, I suppose next to that of a Cabinet Minister. He tells us on this side of the House and the country that Mr. Heney, who is getting $30,000 annually for furnishing wood to the Government, has a right if he sees fit to make presents to any high official of the Government—that that is his own business. We have evidence that the very man who inspects this wood, and who makes the contract, Mr. Arnoldi——

Mr. FOSTER. He does not make the contract.

Mr. WATSON,—that he did receive presents from persons who had dealings with the Government, and he has been dismissed for having done so—that very man who inspects the wood, and makes the report on which the contract is let, received presents of brass dogs, tandem harness, jewellery, and even horses; and we have a gentleman, the chief whip of the Government side, getting up and telling us that this is perfectly right.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order. I made no such statement, and the hon. gentleman has no right to say that I did. I did not refer to Mr. Arnoldi. I referred to officials occupying high positions in the Government. If Mr. Arnoldi did wrong, I am as ready to condemn him or any other gentleman occupying a position of trust in the Government of the country; I am just as ready to crush them as he is; but he has no right to put down my throat statements which I did not make.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The hon. gentleman did not refer to Mr. Arnoldi, but he said that the hon. Minister of Customs or the Deputy Minister of Customs might accept a present of cordwood.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman is entirely misquoting me.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. If the Minister of Customs had been here, he would have crammed those words down the hon. gentleman's throat, because it is well known that, if there is a Minister on the Treasury benches who desires to secure for his Administration a reputation which is above anything like scandal, it is the Minister of Customs; and the idea of a supporter of the Government getting up in his place and telling the Minister of Customs that it would be no harm for him or his deputy to accept a cord of wood from a contractor, is a direct insult to the Minister of Customs and his deputy: and I fancy that the Minister of Customs, when he comes to hear it, will sit on the member for Leeds with considerable vengeance.

Mr. TAYLOR. When the hon. gentleman reads my speech to-morrow, in Hansard, and then reads his own, if he has a spark of manliness about him, he will come forward and apologize, because I made no statement in reference to the Minister of Customs or any of the Customs officials.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. TAYLOR. I said this, that if Mr. Heney wished to make a present of a cord of wood——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Five cords.

Mr. TAYLOR.—of five cords to the commissioner, or the assistant commissioner, whose business was that, as to what Mr. Heney chose to do with his wood?

Mr. CHARLTON. That is correct.

Mr. TAYLOR. One of the hon. gentleman's intimate friends say that his statement was not true.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think that our hon. friend from Leeds was quite in accord with the action of the hon. Minister of Justice, in accepting the resolution of my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) the other night with regard to testimonials and presents; but he differs now. The other night when the hon. Minister of Justice accepted that resolution, my hon. friend sat in his seat and quietly acquiesced, and now he makes a difference.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not make a difference. I did not say it was right for the officials to accept it. I said that if Mr. Heney liked to give away his property, that is nobody's business.

Mr. McMULLEN. There was another statement which the hon. gentleman made to which I want to draw attention. He said that Mr. Heney had supplied wood in the year 1875 for more than it was supplied for during last year. Now, I hold in my hand the Public Accounts for the year 1875-76, and I find that for all the wood that Mr. Heney delivered for heating the public buildings in Ottawa, that year, he got $18,213.29, whereas last year he got $33,000 for heating the same buildings.

Mr. TAYLOR. I said that it was more per cord.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend may possibly have the advantage in that respect, because the book does not give the rate per cord. In the same year we only paid altogether for heating the buildings here $40,321, and we are now asked to vote $60,000, that is $20,000 more than it cost in 1876 to heat the same buildings.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Not the same buildings.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, what has been added? There has only been one wing added here.

Some hon. MEMBERS. The Langevin Block.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Langevin Block is not included in the accounts for 1889, which we are discussing; so that we have virtually the same buildings, which it then cost $40,000 to heat, while now we are asked to vote $60,000 for the same service. The accounts for that year do not give the number of cords.

Mr. WATSON. I am glad to know that the hon. member for Leeds does say that Mr. Arnoldi should not accept brass dogs, horses and harness.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Speak to the question.

Mr. WATSON. I am speaking to this very question. The man who inspects the very wood that we are discussing——

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is not right. That gentleman does not inspect this wood.

Mr. WATSON. He did inspect it.

Mr. FOSTER. He did not inspect this wood. He did not inspect a single stick of this wood.

Mr. WATSON. I understand that Mr. Arnoldi's position was to make purchases of coal and wood.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Arnoldi was not to make purchases at all. No purchases were made except by contract, which was sanctioned by Order in Council.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Arnoldi reported on the contracts, and I have information that Mr. Arnoldi, instead of dealing with the coal merchants of this city, because he did not receive the tandem harness in time, was going to buy the coal direct from the Pennsylvania coal mines; and I believe he was presented with the tandem harness by the Ottawa merchants for the purpose of securing the contract for that coal by the merchant.

Mr. FOSTER. You have no grounds for saying that.

Mr. WATSON. I have grounds.

Mr. FOSTER. Why did you not go to the Public Accounts Committee and state it there.

Mr. WATSON. I am not a member of that Committee; I wish I was.

Mr. FOSTER. You could have attended it.

Mr. WATSON. I am surprised that any gentleman in this House should say it is right for any contractor dealing with the Government to make presents to officials, as has been stated here to-night by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor). The Customs commissioner, to whom that hon. gentleman said there was no objection in a contractor making a present, has the duty of appraising goods, and should not receive presents from any contractor.

Mr. FOSTER. We are not discussing that.

Mr. WATSON. The explanation given by the hon. member for North Leeds (Mr. Taylor) makes things worse. He is troubled with a wooden head.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The Finance Minister has said that when the Government renewed the contract, they were in possession of sufficient information to enable them to arrive at the conclusion that it was in the best interests of the country the contract should be renewed. He will not deny that he said that. That information the Minister of Finance should put in our possession.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to Mr. John Arnoldi's connection with this matter I beg to call the attention of the House to the fact that on the certified copy of the report of the Privy Council, under which, as I understand, Mr. Heney's contract was arranged, it is stated:

"On the report of the mechanical engineer—[that is Arnoldi]—to the effect that the terms on which Mr. Heney has his contract are reasonable, and that it would be in the public interest to grant an extension of the time of the contract."

Now, bearing in mind what is known as to Mr. Arnoldi's habits and practices, surely the Minister cannot be surprised that when it turns out that this contract was renewed, without competition, for a sum involving $100,000 at least, on the recommendation of a public official who has, I believe, —the Minister will correct me if I am wrong—been dismissed by himself and colleagues for the grossest possible misconduct in office, surely he cannot say my hon. friends are not justified in looking on the renewal of the contract with grave suspicion.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend's position would be entirely fair if we were now entering on a contract and the House were asked to ratify a contract made on the recommendation of Mr. Arnoldi, under present circumstances. But this is a contract which has already been entered into, and which we are bound to carry out. The real point, however, in all this discussion, is, are we paying more than a reasonable amount for wood of that quality? No attempt has been made on the other side to prove that we are not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Unless you have the tenders, it is quite impossible for the members to know whether the contract was on the most reasonable terms possible or not.

Mr. CHARLTON. The assertion made by the Minister of Finance that this is not the time to enter into consideration of this matter, that it is simply a question of voting the money to carry out a contract in existence, will hardly hold water. We have a right at any time to scrutinize the conduct of the Government upon a vote for the expenditure of money; and if, as has been asserted, there has been anything irregular or improper in the awarding of this contract, it is proper for us, even at this eleventh hour, to enquire into that matter. The Minister ought to furnish us with the report upon which this contract was renewed. It seems, and the Committee is only in possession of the fact for the first time to-day, that this contract which was entered into in 1885, was renewed in 1888 by Order in Council without advertising for tenders, and again renewed in the same way in 1891. Then there are dark rumours, which have been made public for the first time, that the contractor, Mr. Heney, was a subscriber to the testimonials of the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Minister of Public Works, and was very active in securing subscriptions from others. Under these circumstances the subject is one that naturally begets suspicion in the minds of hon. members, and this is the time for bringing the matters to judgment. We are unearthing a good many things, and we want to know of the Minister of Finance if he had good reasons for renewing the contract. It has been said on that side that this course was pursued by the Mackenzie Administration, but that has not been established, and in any case it does not follow that the precedent was a good one. We are told that the price charged for this wood is as low as the wood could be procured at. But how do we know that? Here is a contractor who has private information to the effect that he will be relieved from the payment of tolls on this wood when brought through the canal, and that he will be permitted free use of the ordnance lands for piling ground. He has these advantages over others.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman means to misstate the case, and I would call his attention to the fact that he is making a statement for which there is no justification whatever. Mr. Heney did not get private information about the remission of canal tolls and the use of Government land, and there is nothing to justify any hon. gentleman who will consider the matter, in making such an assertion. Such an assertion is entirely unfounded. The tenders were called for after it was decided and generally known that the Government would refund the canal tolls.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does the Minister of Inland Revenue propose to tell this House that, in the specifications upon which that contract was let, the public were informed that the canal tolls would be remitted and free piling ground given? Does he suppose that we, for a moment, believe ex-Alderman Heney was not in full possession of all these facts and did not know he would have these special advantages? If he did not know that in 1885, he knew it in 1888.

Mr. COSTIGAN. So did every other tenderer.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Government did not allow other people to get that information.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; they accepted tenders.

Mr. CHARLTON. No.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. No; they renewed this contract twice by Order in Council; and if, in 1885, the Government had decided to give these special advantages, they should have advertised and stated the specific terms on which the contract would be let. We are entitled to demand that the information, the report upon which the Government acted upon both those occasions in renewing this contract by Order in Council, shall be furnished to the House. I believe a large sum of money has been lost to the country by not advertising for tenders in an open, business-like way, apprising the public of all the conditions upon which the contract would be given, including the remission of the tolls and free piling grounds. I believe the Government have not acted on business principles in twice renewing this contract when the public at large knew nothing about it when the contract was first let in 1885. We are entitled to have the report and the evidence upon which the Government acted, and the reasons that induced it to take this action.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The Minister spoke about the $1,000 for contingencies being required for investigations. What investigations have taken place in relation to this wood contract? Has there ever been one? Was it alleged that the measurement was short, and were any parties asked to investigate and enquire into it? This is a very proper question. I understand that there was an investigation.

Mr. FOSTER. Then you have more information than I have.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I understand that it was asserted that the measurement was short, and I am informed that Mr. Robertson, the gardener, was one of those employed on the investigation. There were a number of years when Mr. Heney did not have the contract. Was that because he gave short measure? Why was he reinstated? The Minister says the contingencies were set apart for investigations.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you not know that the contingencies have not been voted yet?

Mr. LANDERKIN. There were contingencies oted last year.

Mr. FOSTER. We are not talking about last year.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Are you going to have a change of policy?

Mr. MULOCK. It is the old policy.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yes, it is the old policy, and, if so, you are going to have contingencies this year. I should like to know whether Mr. Robertson and others were on an investigation in reference to the short measurement of wood?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Before the item is passed, I think I am entitled to an answer to the straightforward question I put to the Finance Minister on the declaration he made to this Committee, that the Government were in possession of certain information before they passed the Order in Council renewing the contract with Mr. Heney, which enabled them to come to the conclusion that it was in the best interests of the country that that contract should be renewed. The Finance Minister has stated that in his place here to-night, and this Committee has a right to be put in possession of the information upon which the Government concluded to renew this contract in the interests of the country. I ask the Finance Minister to be kind enough to give me an answer to this question, which I think is a fair and a pertinent question. If he has the information, we are entitled to receive it, and I fancy he will expedite business by giving it. There is no use his trying to obstruct this Committee any longer——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SOMERVILLE,—and, if the Government will persist in obstructing the business of this House——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SOMERVILLE,—the fault lies with the Government and not with the Opposition. I ask the Finance Minister to give me an answer to this question.

Mr. BARRON. I think this House ought to emphasize, and to emphasize most particularly, that the point in this discussion——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh; hear, hear.

Mr. BARRON. I say to——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARRON,—to emphasize the point——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh; hear, hear: en français.

Mr. CHARLTON. As there seems to be a disposition to prevent discussion, I think it would be better to move that the Committee rise.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. BARRON. The point is not——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARRON. The point is not that——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARRON. It is not whether the Government has paid too much or too little——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARRON. The point is, Mr. Chairman——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARRON,—in the Public Accounts Committee——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARRON—we are sometimes being charged with being obstructionists. I want to know why——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARRON. The hon. member for Leeds——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARRON. The hon. member for Leeds——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MULOCK. Mr. Chairman, keep order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. CHARLTON. I made a motion a few minutes ago.

Mr. BARRON. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) said a short time ago that there was great obstruction or delay by reason of the talking on this item lasting from four to nine o'clock. If the Finance Minister had given the information which was asked or had allowed this item to stand, as other items have been allowed to stand——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Louder.

Mr. BARRON,—but he has refused to do that. I say it is not fair in an important matter like this, where accusations have been made, that the Finance Minister should not allow this item to stand as he has allowed others to stand.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARRON. We must say that the simulated rage and the assumed indignation of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) of which he tried to make this House understand that he was sincerely possessed, on account of the action taken by hon. members on this side of the House, in regard to this item——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARRON,—I am bound to say that hardly any hon. gentleman in this House will believe——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARRON,—will believe in the assumed indignation and the simulated rage of the hon. gentleman opposite——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. BARRON,—when we see that he is always ready and willing to stand by and back up hon. members on the Treasury benches.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARRON. The Minister, or his Commissioner of Customs may receive a cord of wood from the gentleman who supplies wood for the Government, but if a poor official receives the present of a cord of wood he is ready to cut off that official's head. The Finance Minister seems so anxious to burke enquiry that he will not allow an item to stand, so that the people's representatives may get more information on the subject. The other night, on an important matter, he was willing that an item should stand, but to-night, when the most grave accusations are made, not against city officials, as the member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) tries to make out, but against men in high places in the Government, the Minister is anxious to burke enquiry by refusing to let the item stand.

Mr. TAYLOR. Name the officials.

Mr. BARRON. I name the hon. member for Leeds as a man always ready and willing to back everything, no matter how bad it may be, provided it is done by a member of this Administration, while he is willing to cut off the heads of some minor officials like Arnoldi and others, who have taken credit to themselves for having done so. The price of wood is lower now than it was in Mr. Mackenzie's time, and one reason for that, in Alderman Heney's case, is that the Government allow his wood to come up here free of toll, they give him low freight rates, and advantages which were not offered to other men. I think that all these contracts should be let by tender, and it is a matter of no importance whether you are geting the services at a reasonable price or not, so long as you observe the principle of doing the work by tender and giving every person the same chance.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the Opposition are not pursuing the best course to get information on this item, and I admit that they are fairly discharging their duty in endeavouring to get all reasonable information which would enable them to judge whether the price paid is too high or not. But that information has been given several times over to-night. As I understand the duty of an Opposition, if they do not want to let an item pass, they might either move that it should be struck out, and have it either voted down or carried, or they might enter a strong protest against it and allow the item to pass, thowing upon the Government the responsibility for it. But to continue a debate on an item from four o'clock in the afternoon until ten at night, and asking the same questions over and over again, looks more like obstruction than an honest desire to get information. I think hon. gentlemen would be discharging their duty much more fully to their constituents if they took either of the courses I have pointed out. We know that on almost every item the same demand comes from the Opposition: Let this item stand, there is something wrong about it. Now, we are making little or no progress with the estimates. Much more information, I believe, is given this year than has been given upon some other items in past years, and which was considered sufficient by hon. members in previous Parliaments.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We have had a long discussion upon this matter, with a good deal of warmth and a good deal of humour, and I want to address a few words to the Committee from a purely business point of view. Besides expressing an opinion, which any hon. gentleman may feel himself bound to express, upon the course of the Government, it is also the interest of everybody to get on with the public business, and I am sure that after the session has been nearly four months in progress it is no pleasure to hon. gentlemen on either side to see business move so slowly, unless they want to see the session prolonged till winter.

An hon. MEMBER. Stern duty.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It certainly must be a very stern duty which obliges hon. gentlemen to spend six hours in the discussion of a by gone question like this contract. I am not surprised, nor do we complain in the least, of the expressions of opinion of hon. gentlemen on your left as regards the conduct of the Government in renewing this contract. The facts are all before the Committee. What sense of duty, stern or otherwise, is served by constant reiteration of the complaint? This contract was renewed in accordance with the practice that has prevailed, rightly or wrongly, in relation to it for many years. The question is: What information can we give the Committee with respect to this contract? None that is not already before the Committee. The hon. member for North Norfolk or the hon. gentleman behind him declared that we ought to give all the information on which the contract was renewed. The Committee has it. Mr. Arnoldi's report on this question is set out verbatim in the Order in Council which renewed the contract. The report of Mr. Arnoldi is nothing more nor less than a statement which is cited in that Order in Council. There is nothing further. We are asked with respect to the refunds of canal tolls. The last refund was made by a vote of this Parliament. There has been no refund of tolls made since. Any other information which hon. gentlemen appear to desire they have before them in the contract and the fyle of papers laid on the Table of the House. With respect to the call for tenders, we have nothing to produce in regard to that matter. What possible information is there that we are able to give the Committee which it does not now possess? If there is any, we will table it to-morrow; but, in the meantime, provision must be made for heating the buildings during the coming winter, and that is all the item is to provide. We have heard much in regard to the impropriety or propriety of renewing the contract without asking tenders. All that has passed. The justification of the Government is before the Committee, and there is really nothing more, if the House discusses this item for a week, that we can lay on the Table.

Mr. LISTER. There is no doubt the position of the Minister of Justice is a very fair one on this question. I do not suppose it is possible to give any further information, except as to the ground on which the Minister recommended to Council that Mr. Heney's contract should be renewed. I do not agree with the Minister of Justice that no good can come out of this discussion. There will be much benefit derived. A contract, which we consider an improper one, was entered into with Mr. Heney under circumstances which we consider suspicious. If no other good has been done than to prevent in the future a system which I consider pernicious from every standpoint you can view it, then the work of the Committee to-day has not been lost. The Minister of Finance attempted to justify the extension of the contract by comparing it with the action of a business man. He said that if a business man entered into a contract and satisfied himself that the contract was fairly fulfilled and that he could not better himself in any other way, then he, as a business man, would renew the contract. I desire to say to the Minister of Finance that a business man can do what he likes with his own money, but the Government are in the position of trustees, and for the purpose of satisfying the public mind as well as being sure beyond peradventure that they were getting the best bargain it is proper and right, nay more, it is the imperative duty of the Government to ask, when a contract expires, that it should be re-let after public competition. They are trustees for the public, and they are bound to see that the best is done in the interests of the public, and that can be done in only one way, and that is by inviting public competition. The smallest corporation in this country contracting for the smallest article for the use of the town invariably asks for tenders at the end of each year for the current year. Looking at this matter from every standpoint, and considering the recommendation by Mr. Arnoldi, I hold it to be the duty of the Government to see that contracts are awarded after public tenders are invited and that the lowest tenderer obtains the contract.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In regard to the remarks made by the Minister of Justice, I may say that I want to ascertain if there has been any refund of canal tolls, and if any canal tolls have been commuted, not only on wood for the Government, but on all Mr. Heney's wood passing through the canal. The Government keep books, and can surely furnish this information. I contend they have not given the Committee the information we want, so that we can ascertain the amount we are really paying for the wood used in this House. I think it is due to themselves and their supporters that this information should be furnished.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will answer the hon. gentleman, as far as I am able to do so. I think that the last remission of canal tolls was made, to the extent of $3,000 or $4,000, by a vote of this House in 1886. Since that time, acting on the sense of the House, as then expressed, no canal tolls have been collected on wood for the Government, supplied under Government contract, by Mr. Heney.

Mr. MULOCK. How do you know, when wood comes through the canal, whether it is for the Government or for the public?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is brought in and laid on the piling ground for the Government. I do not know what particular means are used to identify it, but there is no authority to let a stick of wood pass except the Government wood. If a stick of other wood has been allowed to pass free of toll, it is in violation of the law, and if it is so stated it will be investigated.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Justice will see that if wood passed through the canal free there must be some way of identifying wood for the Government.

Mr. LISTER.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. Then the hon. gentleman can lay a full report on the Table as to this point. The member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville) made a very reasonable request, and it should also be complied with now or later on. It was, that the documents on which the Minister made the recommendation to Council be also communicated to the House.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have explained that it is there in the quotation from Mr. Arnoldi's report.

Mr. MULOCK. I have read the document in question, and that refers to the renewal in 1888, until 1891. It does not refer to the renewal that has recently taken place. It may be that the renewal which recently took place, was on the same recommendation; but this is not a copy of the recommendation for 1891. I understand the contract in question has been entered into this year.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There was nothing further except a report of the same kind and a comparison of the prices ruling at the time.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Justice was not in the House when the Minister of Finance stated that Council were advised that the prices were fair prices, that they were reasonable prices, and Council had full information on this subject before it approved of the memorandum authorizing this contract. If that was the case, there was a written communication on the subject to Council, setting forth a comparison of prices and the opinions of those qualified to advise as to whether the prices were fair or not. That information, the Minister of Finance told us, was submitted to Council, and if so it is the information for which I understand the member for North Brant asked. I ask whether, if the item now pass, that that information will be given?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Any information there is upon the subject will be given. My belief is that the report of Mr. Arnoldi may be, and probably was, that the prices were fair and just, and that a renewal would not be against the public interest, and there was nothing more than a statement made, probably verbally, of the prices ruling at the time. I think that is all the information that there could have been. Whatever information there is will be laid on the Table to-morrow. Even if it were produced to-night, and even if it were found to be wrong the Committee would still make provision for the coming year for the fuel. There will be no hesitation in laying all information on the Table.

Mr. MULOCK. That will be satisfactory.

Gas and electric light, public buildings, Ottawa, including roads and bridges	$26,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Where are these lights on roads and bridges? Do they include Major's Hill Park?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They are at Rideau Hall and at the Post Office and also at the Chaudière Falls.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How is the gas arranged for?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is only one gas company in the city; it is furnished by metre, at $2 per thousand.

Mr. WATSON. Has any comparison been made between the cost of electric lighting and gas?

Mr. FOSTER. I am informed that the price of gas is about equal to the cost of electric light, and is of better quality.

Mr. WATSON. I believe it is of better quality, and, as the prices are equal, the Government ought to do away with the old gas lamps around the buildings and put in electric lights. The Government ought to light these grounds with their own electric light plant, and do away with the gas bill altogether.

Mr. CAMPBELL. With regard to the price paid for gas, I certainly think the Government ought to make some effort to get it reduced. It seems strange that the Government, who use so much gas as they do about these buildings, should pay the enormous price of $2 a thousand for it. There is hardly a town in the Dominion where you could not buy even a thousand feet at that price, and even less. I am informed that in Toronto gas can be got for $1.25 a thousand, and in Montreal at $1.50. I think we had better start a gas company of our own.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I am informed by a gentleman who ought to know that the price of gas in Montreal is $1.50 a thousand, and gas ought to be manufactured as cheaply in Ottawa as it is in Montreal or Toronto. To pay such a price as the Government are doing is to encourage a monopoly. We have our own electric light plant, and I think it ought to be sufficient to do all the lighting of all the public buildings at Ottawa. It is well known that one of the senators owns nearly all the stock in this Ottawa Gas Company: he is an influential and wealthy man; and I suppose a favour is granted to him in giving him the gas contract from year to year at this exorbitant price. I think the Government ought to save this large sum of money by using the electric light altogether.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do we pay for the electric light?

Mr. FOSTER. One cent an hour in the post office. The lights we have here are generated by our own machinery.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Practically, what do they cost us?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot tell how much.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Because that question bears very directly on the point raised by my hon. friend. It does appear to me that the charge for such a large quantity of gas as we consume is high; and as we have an electric light plant, we should do very much better to supply ourselves entirely.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course we have only one gas company here, and if we take gas we have to take it at the same terms as the company charges private parties. It is true we make a very large purchase, and for that reason we might expect some discount on the price. However, the department is examining into the probable cost of generating sufficient power to light all the buildings with the electric light, and upon the result of this investigation will depend, I suppose, to a great extent whether we shall put in machinery, and use the electric light entirely in place of gas. If, after this investigation, it is found that this can be done economically, I have no doubt it will be done.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would suggest to the hon. Minister, that in the event of his adopting the system of lighting entirely by electricity, he should not remove the gas fixtures, because there are occasions when the electric light plant breaks down, and the light fails, and the gas fixtures should be retained, so that in the event of such accidents the gas might be utilized.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is quite true that such accidents do occur, particularly during thunderstorms. I should think we could easily enough extend our plant so as to supply ourselves with the electric light at a very much less cost per annum than we pay for gas.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask if the department have made an estimate as to the actual cost per hour of a sixteen-candle power electric lamp.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no estimate of that.

Mr. WATSON. How many lights are installed in the building?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the number.

Mr. WATSON. What is the cost of the present plant that is installed here?

Mr. FOSTER. I will make a note of that, and get the information.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I see that you purchased 1,200 incandescent lamps at an average price of 62 cents apiece. When purchasing that quantity of lamps you ought to get them at from 35 to 40 cents apiece.

Mr. WATSON. Where were those incandescent lamps purchased?

Mr. FOSTER. They were supplied by the two companies at the time of the installation.

Mr. WATSON. The price is very high. At page 386—R of the Auditor General's Report, 1,200 incandescent lamps are charged at $765, or about 64 cents each.

Mr. FOSTER. These were installed five or six years ago. They can be purchased much more cheaply now.

Mr. WATSON. This is the last Auditor General's Report.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You can buy them now in any quantity from the Edison Company at 35 cents.

Mr. WATSON. I am afraid the Government did not get the discount, but that the commission went to some other place.

Water, Public Buildings, Ottawa..... $16,500

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know whether the Government have to pay for all the water used on Major's Hill Park. That park is kept in a very good condition, but when the citizens of Ottawa are getting all the advantages of it, it is unjust that the Dominion should pay for all the water used there.

Mr. FOSTER. It is done under an agreement made with the City of Ottawa, which has been running for years.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has the Minister given notice to the corporation that the Government are not going to keep Wellington Street in order, now that the electric cars are running over it?

Mr. FOSTER. I think notice has been given to that effect.

Allowance for fuel and light, Rideau Hall.....$8,000

Mr. SOMERVILLE. This seems an enormous amount to pay for heating and lighting one house. As I understand, it is not all expended in heating and lighting, but is a bulk sum allowed every year. The proper way would be for the Government to foot the bills and not vote a lump sum.

Mr. FOSTER. This arrangement was made in Lord Dufferin's time to get rid of the difficulties and expense of supplying fuel and light to Rideau Hall under Government supervision or contract. Notwithstanding the positive assertion of my hon. friend, this amount does not provide what is actually expended. The matter came under my personal attention in this way: Lord Lansdowne kept an account of everything in this connection for one or two years. I saw the accounts myself, and they actually footed up over $8,000 for this purpose. If my hon. friend will look into the peculiarities of Rideau Hall, he will find that it seems to have been specially constructed with the view of consuming a great deal of light and heat. It would not be in the interest of the Government, or the country, to disturb the existing arrangement.

Mr. CASEY. It is quite true Rideau Hall appears to have been planned for the purpose of making it inconvenient to heat it, but this sum is so enormously in excess of what would be required to heat a rationally built house of that size, that suspicion must arise that whoever pays out this amount is being cheated by somebody in the matter. It would be better if the Government would secure every year the accounts and present them to the House. If they did so and compared prices, we might possibly be able to have the work done cheaper. There are great improvements in heating apparatus of late years, some of which might be utilized, as it is many years since the apparatus at present in use has been put in. It must not be forgotten that the engineer in charge for many years past has not been a cheap one, and perhaps a new engineer will find a cheaper way of doing things than Mr. Arnoldi did.

Mr. FOSTER. This was not under Mr. Arnoldi's charge but Mr. Ewart's. I do not think that we could make any change for the better and we must either do the work ourselves or keep our agreement. If we demanded the accounts, that would break the arrangement, and I know that no new arrangement would be found as satisfactory as the present one.

Mr. CASEY. Probably it would be better, under the circumstances, to sell Rideau Hall.

Mr. WATSON. If this enormous expenditure is to go on annually, it would be better to get rid of the rookery and put up a new building. Last year we spent $10,000 in ordinary repairs. It appears to me that $2,500 or $3,000 ought to be quite sufficient for heating any building sufficient to accommodate the Governor General and his retinue. Of course if Lord Lansdowne kept a strict account and gave a statement to the Government, we must accept that statement of the actual cost, but it seems an enormous sum to expend in heating and lighting any one building.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think that at the close of the present Governor General's term of office, we should wipe out this item altogether. The Governor General gets $50,000 a year, and if we give him a free house and furniture, he should pay for the heating and lighting. This country cannot stand more than $50,000 a year for this purpose. I do not know in whose time this expenditure on light and heat was instituted, but I believe it was in the time of Mr. Mackenzie, probably when Lord Dufferin was Governor. I do not care what Government did it, they made a mistake. I think we should go back to the first principle of giving the Governor General $50,000 a year, and let him find his own light and so on. I think it is extravagant for us to give him $5,000 for travelling expenses, $8,000 for fuel and light, and $50,000 for salary, and in addition to that to keep up the furniture in the place. The expenses run up from $90,000 to $100,000 a year for the salary of the Governor General, and keeping the building in repair and supplying additional furniture and so on. I think we should cut it all off. Come down to $50,000 a year salary, and let him do for himself. That is more than he is worth to us.

Mr. FOSTER. That is very free criticism.

Mr. MULOCK. It may seem plain talking, but when very serious matters are under consideration here and Parliament is in session, I understand that the duties of his office have not required His Excellency to be in attendance at the seat of Government, but he is able, I suppose, with due regard to the public interest, to occupy his time in perhaps more agreeable duties than attending to public affairs here. I am of the opinion that we hedge round the representative of royalty here with too much of the odour of sanctity, and that we avoid criticising the expenditure of public money in connection with that branch of the service when it demands criticism. For my part, I think it is quite as much open to criticism and that we should be quite as free to criticise it as any other branch of the public service. I feel quite as free to do it, and I always thought that the annual allowance of £10,000 sterling as salary was an excessive allowance. When we bear in mind what other large sums that institution costs us, when we bear in mind how much is paid directly and indirectly to maintain the office and the incumbent of the office, I think the clear sum of £10,000 sterling is more than this young country can pay. We are being ridden to death by officials. We have the Governor General and we have Lieutenant Governors from ocean to ocean. Last night we had a long discussion in reference to an amount of $60,000 for the Lieutenant Governor's residence in the North-West, and now we find the Minister suggesting that we ought to take into consideration at an early date the propriety of building another residence for the Governor General here.

Mr. FOSTER. That suggestion came from a member on your own side.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister set the idea going when he said that it costs so much because of the difficulty of keeping these old shambles in repair. Taking the price of fuel, this amount of $8,000 would represent 1,600 cords of wood at $5 a cord, or 1,600 tons of coal at $5 a ton.

Mr. FOSTER. This includes light as well as fuel.

Mr. MULOCK. Very well. What is the estimate for the heating, apart from the lighting?

Mr. FOSTER. This is in pursuance of an arrangement by which we pay a sum of $8,000 a year for that purpose.

Mr. MULOCK. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the amount was based on information he had received from his predecessor.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not remember the division.

Mr. MULOCK. Before the present incumbent of this office was appointed, the matter was under discussion, and then we were met with the objection that we could not change the amount during the incumbency of the then Governor General, and we are told to-night that the same difficulty stands in the way, and that we cannot change the arrangement during the incumbency of the present Governor General; and so it never happens that Parliament is in session and that the Government thinks of this matter until a new officer is sent out here. I maintain that there is no such contract with any Governor General. He is appointed by the home authorities, and the only contract is that contained in the Imperial Act which declares what his rights are. That Act declares that the Governor General is entitled to £10,000 sterling a year, and no more. It does not give him any more rights, and I presume he has no more rights than those which are set forth in the Act itself. He accepts the office with the emolument set forth in the Act and no other, and so I maintain that it is competent for the Parliament of Canada at any time to make any provision it likes as to the incidental expenses, which are pure gifts and not the payment of debts to His Excellency. I, for one, object, and shall continue to object, to any bulk sum being given, lumping, as it were, the amount, instead of giving the actual amount required. If it required more than $8,000 to perform this service, I suppose we would have to pay it, and if it required less we would simply have to pay what was necessary. It is an unsound principle to lump things in this way and give an enormous sum, which almost shocks one, to carry on a branch of the service such as this, and I trust that before we are called upon again to deal with this item, the Minister will have placed it on a proper system. If not, if he is here then, he will be inviting a much more severe criticism than he is receiving to-night.

Telephone Service, Public Buildings, Ottawa..... $3,500

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many telephones are there, and what is the annual rental of each?

Mr. FOSTER. You will find the information at page B—387 of the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I see that the telephones are rented at $35 and $40 apiece. Last year, the Minister of Public Works stated that the annual rental was $30. The price of the telephones, wherever I have been, is only about $35 a year, and when two or three telephones are taken by one firm, they get them for less than that. It seems strange that, when we get so many telephones and pay $3,500 a year for them, we should be paying more than any private firm would in any little town in this Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. We are paying no more, and I think a little less, than is paid for similar service in private houses in the city. I do not know that we can dictate our own prices. If we get these telephones we must pay what is the current rate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But, surely, when you take so many telephones, you should pay less than a private person?

Mr. MULOCK. How many in all?

Mr. WATSON. Is there a difference in the price of telephones in these departments?

Mr. FOSTER. I think not. Some of them may be for a portion of the year. I think the price is $35 a year.

Mr. WATSON. Probably they charge extra for the dual language.

Mr. McMULLEN. In my county they only charge $15 a year for telephones.

Mr. FOSTER. We get them just as cheaply as private individuals do.

Mr. MULOCK. At this rate you have 100 telephones—a very large number. There ought to be a list of the telephones placed on the Table.

Mr. FOSTER. They are to be found on page B—387 of the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. MULOCK. The schedule is not full. I see they are grouped together. Is there a fixed fee, $30 apiece?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; $35 each.

Mr. MULOCK. I think you are very luxurious in this matter of telephones. I think the officials are getting telephones in their private houses. Why is that?

Mr. FOSTER. The officers live at their private houses, and if they have telephonic communication with the office, it must be where they live. For instance, I have to have one in my house. I have no telephonic communication with my private secretary, but it might well be that I would wish to have it, and the telephone would have to be in his house as well as in mine.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is that the reason why telephones are kept in the houses of the Ministers?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly. I have none with my secretary, and I have often felt the inconvenience of having none.

Mr. MULOCK. I see there is one in the office of the Resident Comptroller of Stores, Mounted Police, office canal basin. Why should there be a telephone at the residence of the Comptroller of the Mounted Police? I do not understand that he has to carry on business at night. I make no objection to a telephone between the Minister and his secretary. According to this schedule there are telephones scattered all over the city in private houses.

Mr. FOSTER. Give those that you object to?

Mr. MULOCK. Agriculture Department, office of Minister and Deputy Minister. I do not object to the Deputy Minister, but I object to their being one in the office of the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. Why should he have a telephone?

Mr. FOSTER. That is a very important department, and if you raise no objection to the Minister having a telephone with his deputy, you can raise no objection to the Superintendent General having a telephone with Mr. Vankoughnet.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not think it is at all necessary that Mr. Vankoughnet should have a telephone at the public expense. I do not think there is any necessity for a telephone between the deputy who has charge of Indian Affairs, and the head of his department. I can understand a Deputy Minister being in direct communication with his chief, but I doubt if there is much communication between the head of the Department of the Interior at night, and the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs.

Mr. FOSTER. On the contrary, I think there is a great deal.

Mr. MULOCK. Why should there be a telephone at the residence of Mr. Justice Burbidge?

Mr. FOSTER. He is the judge of the Exchequer Court.

Mr. MULOCK. You might as well pay for blacking his boots, or carrying him home to his house, as to pay for a telephone to his house. I would like to know what occasion he has, as judge of the Exchequer Court, to communicate from his residence with the Government. You might with equal justice have a telephone in the residence of every judge of the Supreme Court. Then, there is a telephone in the residence of the Registrar of the Supreme Court. Why should he have a telephone at the public expense? He is not at the beck and call of the Government after court is over. In Toronto we have any number of officials in connection with the administration of justice, and there is the same need of their having a telephone as for this official at Ottawa. Such a thing was never dreamed of in Toronto. It is one of those methods of transferring private expenses to the public purse.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt that the Minister of Justice has good reasons for having telephonic communication with the officers named.

Mr. MULOCK. That may be the Minister's opinion, but I see no reason at all. I see no more reason that the judge of the Exchequer Court should have telephonic communication with the Government, than for the judges of the Supreme Court, for if any one is entitled to a telephone they are.

Mr. WATSON. Are these telephones supposed to be private, or are they in connection with the central office?

Mr. FOSTER. In connection with the central office.

Mr. WATSON. Will the hon. gentleman explain this first item under the Agriculture Department: Office of Minister and Deputy Minister, 12 months, June 30, 1890, $70; residence of Minister and Deputy Minister, 12 months, June 30, 1890, $75. There is a difference in the price. Now, why should there be two sets of telephones connecting the Minister and Deputy Minister? Certainly one telephone in each residence should be sufficient without two.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see how the Deputy Minister is to communicate with his officers in the buildings when at his house, unless he has a telephone in his office as well. He must have one at each end of the line.

Mr. CAMPBELL. For the Agriculture Department the telephones cost $161 a year; for the Finance Department, $150; and for the House of Commons, $265.

Mr. FOSTER. Would you go in for striking these off?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then we would have to employ so many more messengers.

Major's Hill Park..... $5,000

Mr. McMULLEN. There is a reduction from $6,000 to $5,000. I earnestly hope a further reduction will be made, and that eventually the item will be wiped out.

Mr. FOSTER. It is very nicely kept.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes. But it really is an imposition on the people of Canada that they should be called on to keep up a park for the benefit of the people of Ottawa. There is quite enough benefit secured to Ottawa by this city having been made the seat of Government, without furnishing it with parks.

Heating Dominion Public Buildings....$60,000

Mr. MULOCK. Is the work let by tender?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. The contracts are all the results of tenders. The prices, of course, vary at different points.

Mr. WATSON. Is there any system of renewing old contracts, as was the case with Mr. Heney's contract?

Mr. FOSTER. Fresh tenders are called for each year.

Mr. MULOCK. Who has the contract for fuel at Toronto.?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Burns had the contract last year. Tenders for this year have been received, and are being considered, but they have not been awarded. I will furnish the price paid to Mr. Burns.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is there a caretaker for every Dominion building?

Mr. FOSTER. Sometimes for a small building the postmaster acts as caretaker, but in most of the public buildings, there is a caretaker.

Mr. McMULLEN. At the Orangeville public building there is a caretaker, receiving $400 a year. It is not necessary to have such a man permanently, but the postmaster might be allowed a small sum.

Mr. WATSON. We have been discussing to-day the relative cost of coal and wood for heating purposes. For the Winnipeg post office the Government use coal which costs $9.45 per ton, while wood costs only $4 per cord. Why does the Government use coal at Winnipeg where wood is $4 per cord, when they use in Ottawa wood which costs more than coal for heating purposes?

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any difference in the quality of the wood?

Mr. WATSON. Tamarack can be obtained in Winnipeg at $4 a cord.

Lighting Dominion Public Buildings...$40,000

Mr. MULOCK. Does this include lighting public buildings at Montreal ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, and all through the Dominion. The price of coal in Toronto is $5.70, and $5.45 for anthracite and bitumen. The contracts were entered into in July.

Mr. MULOCK. I had to open tenders for certain supplies of coal at that time, and I think that this price was a good deal higher than we paid.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see how we can avoid it if we ask for tenders.

Sundry supplies for caretakers, engineers, firemen, &c., Dominion Buildings.....$5,000

Mr. CAMPBELL. I see in the Chatham post office we have a caretaker there to whom we are paying $400 a year, and he does nothing towards the caretaking of the building at all. He is, however, the secretary of the Conservative Association. The engineer of the Chatham post office is Mr. Dunn, a first-class man, and a very competent man, who takes care of the building. His salary is only $450 a year, and he is employed for nine months. We have Mr. Mitchell getting $400 as caretaker of the building, while Mr. Dunn, the engineer, does the work, and they divide up, and Mr. Mitchell pockets half the amount and does nothing at all. The Government might save $200 a year there by making the engineer the caretaker as well, and increasing his salary a little and letting the one man do the work.

Mr. McMULLEN. But the secretary of the Conservative Association would not be paid for this work.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Government I take it look after the interests of the country as well, and as Mr. Dunn is also a good Conservative he deserves a little more support from them. He only gets $450 a year, and that is not enough to keep him and his family. Mr. Mitchell receives $400 a year and does nothing at all for it.

Petty repairs in connection with Dominion Buildings.....$5,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to draw attention now to a matter in connection with the Lieutenant Governor's residence in the North-West. I see that last year he spent $4,185 in repairs about the House, and he actually expended $1,960 in making a conservatory. Amongst the items I notice, photograph of Sir John Macdonald, $25 ; one of Hon. Edward A. Morris, $15; Hon. David Laird, $15; Hon. Edgar Dewdney, $15, and one of Hon. Joseph Royal, $15, while I find that a photograph of the less important Lord and Lady Stanley only cost $7.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a very modest picture gallery.

Materials for repairs in connection with ventilation and lighting public buildings, Ottawa.....$4,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think we got very little value for our money as far as the ventilation of this chamber goes. Time and again I have come into this chamber in the morning and I have found the atmosphere positively foul after a long session ; but there may be reasons for that.

Mr. SPEAKER. It might be on account of the gas that escaped the previous night.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that it is within the resources of mechanical ingenuity to contrive that these windows shall be thrown open. I hope we never shall be condemned to any more summer sessions ; I thoroughly hate them, with all due respect to the City of Ottawa ; but I cannot see why these windows cannot be made to open in such a fashion that we shall get this cockpit thoroughly ventilated.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid that the people in the galleries would feel the draft on their heads.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am speaking of the time while we are out of the chamber. Unless you get the windows thoroughly opened, it will never be ventilated. It is a serious matter to some of us who have to spend a great many hours here.

Public Buildings, Wellington Street, Ottawa—To complete payments....$96,000

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to drop the "9" before the "6." The vote will then pay the claims that are now due and acknowledged.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask what is the amount of the claims still pending against that building.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the amount here, but that has been answered by the Minister himself from his place several times this session, and if the hon. gentleman will refer to Hansard, he will find it.

Mr. WATSON. We were told a couple of years ago that Mr. Charlebois had made the modest demand of some $400,000 for extras on that building. The late Minister of Public Works then told us that he thought he would be able to settle with Mr. Charlebois for $250,000. I would like to know if that claim has been settled ?

Mr. FOSTER. We are not asking for the money now, and the Government cannot settle without coming to Parliament for the money.

Mr. McMULLEN. You can tell Mr. Charlebois that he will be a bright boy if he gets any such claim as that through a Committee of this House.

Mr. FOSTER. I am informed that there was a report in Council against allowing the claims of Mr. Charlebois, with the exception of the small amount I am taking.

Mr. WATSON. Does this, then, settle all the claims ?

Mr. FOSTER. This settles all the claims that have been recognized.

Mr. WATSON. What is the total cost of the building ?

Mr. FOSTER. I will have that hunted up.

Cape Tormentine Harbour..... $93,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is being done there ?

Mr. FOSTER. The vote is a revote. The work is under contract and is now approaching completion, and this vote, the chief engineer estimates, will be required for completing the harbour works, and to afford the accommodation that was intended in connection with the terminus of the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railway.

River St. Lawrence—Improvement of ship channel between Quebec and Montreal.....$50,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What is this for?

Mr. FOSTER. It is a part of the $100,000 which a year ago was stated to be necessary to complete these works, and it is believed that the estimate will not be exceeded.

River Kaministiquia—Turning basin, &c..... $15,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There ought to be added to that a clause containing an apology to Mr. Mackenzie for all the abuse that was lavished on him for having selected the Kaministiquia River.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Last summer, when the department were advertising for tenders for the work in that river and on the bar, it was stated in the advertisement that plans and specifications could be seen at the Public Works Department, in Ottawa; but, when those who wished to tender for the work came down here, they could not find any plans or specifications at all. One of our dredging companies in the town of Chatham informed me, that, when their manager came down here and went to the Public Works Department to look over the plans and specifications, there were no plans or specifications to be found at all.

Mr. FOSTER. After the advertisements were out?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. The tenders were to be in on the 18th of July, and Mr. Martin, the manager of the Chatham Dredging Company, came down here a few days before that date for the purpose of putting in a tender, and he went to the Department of Public Works and saw Mr. Coste and the Deputy Minister, and asked for the plans and specifications, and he was informed that there were no plans or specifications. He then asked to see a map of the locality, and he was informed that there were no maps of the locality at all. He then went up to the engineer's office and asked there if he could obtain a map of the locality so that he could find out the nature of the soil, the distance that he would have to carry the material to dump it, and the depth of the cut in the bar and in the river; and he was there told that the map had been taken away. He found a map of the whole Dominion, but just the section that he wanted, showing the location of the work to be done, was removed, and he could not obtain any information at all. Now, it seems to me that it is useless altogether to advertise for tenders unless the necessary information can be given to those who would tender. I may say that Captain Murray, who was in the department when Mr. Martin went there, had the full run of the department. And he advised Mr. Martin that there was no use in his putting in a tender, because, he said, you will not get the work any way and will only hurt me. However, Mr. Martin did put in a tender. Captain Murray told him he would have to take the dredging seven miles to dump, but he afterwards found that he would only have to carry it a mile. It seems to me such a state of affairs should not be allowed to exist. The officers of that department should be severely brought to task if there is any such work as that going on, and I have the authority of Mr. Martin, who is one of our most respectable citizens, that the facts are as I have stated. If there is any such work as that going on in the Public Works Department, every man from the top to the bottom who had a hand in it should be at once dismissed.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). I am familiar with that work. I know the locality and the circumstances, and I tendered for it. If Mr. Martin informed my hon. friend that there was no specification in connection with that work, he was probably perfectly correct. There was no specification whatever necessary, and, as far as the material is concerned, you could only learn about that on the ground. With regard to hauling the material dredged out of the cut, it is necessary to dump that material some place where it will not be washed back and interfere with the cut. As far as the tenders were concerned, I bid for that work, and I was the second lowest tenderer. I think Captain Murray was the lowest tenderer, and, consequently, I did not get the work; but I am satisfied that the letting of the work was a fair and square letting, and I do not think Mr. Martin has anything whatever to complain about, as far as the specification is concerned and the dumping of the material. If he was deceived by Captain Murray, who was a tenderer, by Captain Murray telling him the stuff had to be hauled seven miles, that was his look-out. He probably was deceived, and if so, Captain Murray did that for the purpose of having a better chance to get the contract himself.

Mr. TROW. It is necessary, on all such occasions, that proper specifications should be furnished to the general public. It should be also made known whether it was the débris that came down the Kaministiquia that had to be removed or a new cutting that had to be made, because the latter would be much more expensive. All these things should be explained in the plans and specifications, as otherwise the party tendering would not have the proper information on which to base his tender. The distance necessary to carry the dredging also should be given. I presume the distance is a mere matter of form, and that the stuff had only to be removed sufficiently far to prevent its returning to the cut or impeding navigation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I may say that when any work, such as dredging, has to be done, and advertised for, the department always prepares a map of the locality. Here is a map which was prepared for a little work done in the River Thames, in the County of Kent, for which there was only $4,000 appropriation. Here is a plan prepared by the Public Works Department, showing the depth of water all along, the length of the cut, the length of the bar, the depth of water every few feet, and all the information any contractor could desire. A contractor will know from this exactly what he has to do. Will any man say that in the case of a work which it was estimated would cost $25,000, in the Kaministiquia River, there was no drawing such as this prepared? It is nonsensical to say so. There is no work ever done by the Department of Public Works without the department first preparing a sketch or drawing of the work required and the depth that has to be cut. Now, the advertisements calling for tenders stated that all necessary information would be furnished at the department at Ottawa. Here is a letter that I received from Mr. Martin in reference to this matter :

"CHATHAM, ONT., 19th May, 1891.

"A. CAMPBELL, M. P.

"MY DEAR SIR.—Your letter of the 15th instant, with enclosed copy of Hansard, came duly to hand. In reply to your letter, I beg to say that you were correctly informed as to there being no plans or specifications of the Kaministiquia River dredging worth speaking of. I went to Ottawa last summer in response to an advertisement from the Public Works Department to examine plans and put in a tender, and the only information I could get was a few remarks contained in the form of tender. Mr. Coste, the engineer in charge, treated me very courteously and kindly, and said he knew of no information about the work, only what the form of the tender contained. Captain Murray, a competitive contractor, kindly informed me in the matter; he told me about the depth of face a dredge would have to cut, and that the tow or haul would be about seven miles. Evidently this gentleman spoke only from memory, and had forgotten, as I understood afterwards that the distance was only about two miles. However, I put in my tender by random, with the necessary deposit. I got my deposit back, but never heard anything more about the work. I am glad you have asked for the papers on this matter and I shall anxiously watch the report.

"Yours truly,
(Sgd.) "S. T. MARTIN."

From this letter, it is clear that the information which the department had was not given to those who tendered for the work. I am quite certain that the department has a drawing of that work similar to the one in my hand. If it has not, then the officers of that department did not do their work properly. There must be a drawing of that work, and that drawing will show the face of the cut, whether the dredge had to cut seven feet, or three feet, or one foot, and all the other information the contractor requires in estimating for the work. Another information the tenderer is entitled to is the distance he must carry the material before dumping it. If proper information had been given this work would have been done a good deal cheaper than it was. There is no use in advertising for tenders if you are going to withhold from the parties tendering the necessary information which they must have. This is a matter which ought to be investigated, and if the facts are as I have stated the officers of the Public Works Department should receive severe censure from the Government.

Mr. TROW. If the department had not the proper plans and specifications when calling for tenders that certainly was a great omission on the part of the Government, because it cannot be expected of any party tendering that he should travel a thousand or two thousand miles to examine the ground. He might be living in this city, and could not be expected to go out and measure the locality for himself, but would be guided entirely by the plans and specifications in the department.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). Mr. Martin got exactly the same information that I or anyone else did in the department who was tendering on that work. The plan and specifications shown by the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) is for new work. There is no doubt that the plans and specifications are absolutely necessary in the case of a new work. In the Kaministiquia River this has been going on for a number of years. I think it was started in 1875, and portions of it have been done each year since that time, with a short intermission of a few years, when no dredging was done. Anyone in the habit of doing that kind of work will readily understand what I mean when I say there is no necessity for a plan or specification, because the contract is made to remove a certain amount of material in the bottom of the bay and the river, amounting to 150,000 yards. That is the information that was given at the Department of Public Works. A dredge goes there and digs the cut through, as directed by the official in charge. There is no specification necessary for that, because it is simply digging with the dredge, and no plan is necessary, because the dredging is done under the supervision of an engineer, who stakes out the work you are to do. Whether it be a cut of 100 feet or a cut of 50 feet, you are expected to do that work, and you get paid by the yard for the material you remove.

Mr. WATSON. It appears to me that is a very loose way of letting contracts, and that is one of the complaints which contractors should have against the Government; because, if it is left entirely with the Government inspector, as to where he shall remove the earth, where it is to be dredged from and where it is to be dumped, certainly a favourite of the Government would be able to get the ear of the department and the sympathy of the inspector, and an honest contractor outside, who was not ringing in with the inspector, would have no opportunity to get the work at all. Evidently Captain Murray had more influence and greater confidence as to how he would be handled by the Government inspector than the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Macdonell), or the gentleman from Chatham, to whom my hon. friend has referred. There should be no trouble in making plans and specifications as to the amount of work, the distance, the channel to be dredged, and where the stuff is to be dumped; and, after a gentleman comes here in consequence of having seen the Government advertisement, he ought to receive that information. Evidently, the member for Algoma (Mr. Macdonell) was not able to get the information. He had better opportunities for obtaining the information than the gentleman from Chatham had, but he was unable to compete successfully with Captain Murray. If Captain Murray is a friend of the department and can get the right kind of inspector to lay out the work and inspect it, no doubt he will make a good thing out of the contract, where another man might lose money on it.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). The insinuation of the hon. gentleman that there might be any collusion, not between the inspector, because there is no inspector, but between the engineer in charge, who is a trusted officer of the department, is utterly unfounded—and the hon. gentleman who has taken his seat (Mr. Watson), nor anyone else, would not dare outside to impute to him such motives as that. He has been in the Department of Public Works and connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway for years, and I defy anyone to cast the slightest suspicion upon him. In the first place, the work is staked out to be done. The whole thing is comprised in probably 1,000 feet laterally. Then the work is to be taken out to a sufficient depth to allow large steamers to go up the Kaministiquia River to the elevators which are built there. The engineer has measured the work to be done, and he knows how much excavating has been done by the dredge, and on the strength of that they are paid; but the breath of suspicion has never been cast against the engineer in charge of that work and of the other Government works in that district. I venture to say that no cheaper dredging was ever done in the Dominion of Canada than this which we are now talking about. Captain Murray's prices were the smallest prices I have ever known to be paid for dredging in the Dominion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What were the prices?

Mr. WATSON. I do not know what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonell) means by saying that I made certain charges against the engineer.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). No; I said you insinuated that there might be collusion between an engineer and a contractor.

Mr. WATSON. I still say so.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). I say that you will not say that in reference to that engineer outside of the House.

Mr. WATSON. I do not know or care who the engineer is, but I will not say anything in this House that I would not say outside of this House in reference to the engineer or in reference to the hon. gentleman himself. I say what I mean, that there was a possibility of collusion when the plans and specifications were not furnished as to where the work was to be done and where the material was to be dumped. We find that this gentleman who has the contract has done work in other places in Canada. We know from reports we have had he was a contributor of $500 to the testimonial to the late Minister of Public Works, and from evidence we have had in the last few months in a room in connection with this building, we have reason to doubt the honesty of these inspectors. I do not know who this engineer is, and I do not care who he is; but it is quite possible that Mr. Murray might enter into collusion with that gentleman, might secure the contract and make money, even at the low prices you have read. I do not know the gentleman from Chatham or his company, but from the letter which has been read by the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) he is evidently of the opinion that the work could be done for less than Captain Murray is getting for it. Plans and specifications should be furnished, especially in view of the distance the work is from Ottawa. The information should be furnished to all contractors, and every contractor should have a fair opportunity to obtain the fullest information from the Public Works Department.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This work was not the old work, but was a new work. It was advertised for last summer. It was not a continuation of the old work, but was advertised for as dredging to be done in the river and on the bar. Therefore, the plans and specifications would be required for this work. The House can easily see that this might take place. I venture to say now that there was a sketch-drawing of this work. There is no work done of this kind without there being a tracing showing the depth of water, the channel to be made, the depth of the place of the cut, &c. All this information is always furnished. Here is a little work of only $4,000, and yet full details are given. But the Chatham Dredging Company, when their manager came here, could not get these drawings at all, and it seems the hon. member for Algoma was in the same position. I have not the slightest doubt the drawing was there, and it was withheld, I believe, purposely, in order that Captain Murray might get the inside track. The hon. member for Algoma and the manager of the Chatham Dredging Company both agree that when they came there they could not get any information at all, they could not see any drawings or tracings for this work, and I have no doubt they were withheld for that purpose. Now, as to Captain Murray's contract being the lowest for the work in the river, I believe it was much higher than some of the others, although on the bar it happened to be a little lower than some of the others. If I am not mistaken, I think that his work was 19½ cents a yard in the River Kaministiquia, and that is a pretty good price. Then I am also told that Captain Murray has not a dredge of his own there at all, that American dredges are doing the work, and they are paying Captain Murray a commission on it. I am not positive as to that; perhaps the member for Algoma will know more about it than I do. But I have it on good information that Captain Murray has not a dredge of his own in that river; that the dredges that are doing the work are American dredges, and they are paying him a commission for doing it. Now, after the disclosures that we have had during the last month or two as to the way the Public Works Department has been conducting its affairs, we have reason to be suspicious that something of that kind is going on in reference to this job also. I do not know who the inspector was, but there were two inspectors on another work carried on under the Public Works Department in another part of the Dominion, and both of them were in the employ of the Government, as well as in the employ of the contractors.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). I repeat what I said before, that this is not a new work; it is the continuation of an old work, as I stated, from 1875.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was advertised for.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). Certainly, and I will explain that to you. There was $25,000 worth of dredging to be done in the Kaministiquia River for the Department of Public Works, and tenders were asked for, to give every contractor an opportunity of bidding on that work. It is the same old work that has been done year after year in portions, and this was the last portion of the work that was required to be done in that particular place. Now, with regard to the prices: Capt. Murray had 7 cents a yard for dredging on the bar, and 19 cents a yard for dredging in the river. The whole contract, I think, amounted to $22,500. I certainly knew the value of the work, and I think that my tender was only $500 above that of Capt. Murray's; consequently, being the lowest tenderer, Capt. Murray got the work. Had I been $500 below him, in spite of the remarks made about the Department of Public Works, I am satisfied I would have had that contract. Now, with regard to the dredges: the same dredges are working there now that have been dredging on the bar and in the Kaministiquia River for the last four or five years. Who owns the dredges I do not know.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They are American dredges, I am told.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). I do not know whether they are or not; I do not know whether it is American plant or Canadian plant. However, that is of no consequence. If Capt. Murray bids on that work and puts in the lowest tender, and he gets the work and does it honestly, it is immaterial whose plant does the work. If American dredges are doing it they have got to pay duty when they come into our country, so I do not think it makes any difference who owns the dredges, provided the work is properly done.

Mr. BARRON. Last year a sum of $3,000 was placed in the Estimates for dredging at Lindsay, and I have been asked several times to make some enquiry about it. I would like to ask, in regard to that $3,000 that was appropriated for excavating at Lindsay, in the Scugog River—and then I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if he has yet come to any conclusion as to the jurisdiction exercised with regard to the water there, and whether this Government pretends to control the waters there, or whether it is the Ontario Government, because, by reason of the conflict of jurisdiction, a good deal of trouble is occasioned.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not remember the question arising about any particular locality, but there has been a controversy between the Provincial and Dominion Governments as regards some localities which raised the question as to the ownership of the rivers in Canada. We undoubtedly claim the property in the rivers, excepting in so far as the beds of the streams were granted before Confederation. Some of the Provincial Governments claim that the property is vested in them, and disputes have arisen as to the construction of the British North America Act on that point. The matter is not one remaining for my opinion. I have given the opinion in so far as I can, and the Attorney General of Ontario is agreeing to a case which will raise the question for settlement in the courts, and I think the Province of Quebec has agreed to join in the case also.

Mr. BARRON. The Minister does not understand this particular locality. As it is now, this Government exercises a sort of control, its officials there exercise control right up to the lock itself, and yet the lock itself, within the town of Lindsay, appears to be exclusively under the control of the Dominion Government. At the same time, the Ontario Government is, to a certain extent, exercising control over the water too, so there is a conflict of authority. The Ontario Government does not like to go on, at least its officials do not know what to do, although they have latterly gone on, and the town, in the meantime, as the member for South Victoria (Mr. Fairbairn) could state if he were here, is suffering by reason of this $3,000 not being spent because of the conflict of authority.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In what way are our officials exercising jurisdiction?

Mr. BARRON. In regard to the fisheries; but that is not where the trouble is occasioned. You have to-day an officer in the Public Works Department, Mr. Rogers, and he exercises control over the waters. It seems to be his duty to keep the water clear of logs for steamboats.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That refers to navigation. I am sure that question as regards that place was not submitted to my department. The question has been raised as to the ownership of the Southampton River, but that is the only one.

L'Ardoise Breakwater..... .....$10,500

Mr. FRASER. Is this amount to complete the breakwater?

Mr. FOSTER. It is towards the construction of a new breakwater, which will cost $4,000 more than this vote, and what has already been voted. No amount has yet been expended. The total estimated cost is $18,000. The breakwater will be 400 feet long.

Cribbin's Point Wharf $6,900

Mr. FRASER. How does the Government arrive at a conclusion in regard to these particular wharves and breakwaters? What is the rule that guides them in building these wharves?

Mr. FOSTER. I find that petitions are sent praying for the works. Surveys have been made, plans have been adopted, and it has been decided to build the work and contracts have been let. This is the method of procedure.

Mr. FRASER. What number of petitioners is required; or what is the inducement that leads the Government to make these particular appropriations?

Mr. FOSTER. It is based on the necessity for the work.

Mr. FRASER. I will give a case where there seemed to be some necessity. In 1879 or 1880 an amount was voted to build a breakwater at New Harbour, in Guysborough County. The vote was made at the request of the member for the county. It was dropped, and never was thought of since. A very strong petition was sent from that place this year. I should like to ask if it is strong enough, or does it want more names to bring about the same result as other petitions. The vote passed long ago is the best indication that the work is needed, and if it was needed in 1880 it is more required at the present time. What should be done in order to put this particular place in the same position as the others?

Mr. FOSTER. I leave that to the hon. gentleman's well-known ingenuity.

Mr. FRASER. I would not like to state that the Minister is going to be guided by anything but the wants of the people. My ingenuity might suggest several reasons, some of which would not be complimentary. I have asked the Minister for information as to whether there is any chance of this place obtaining what is required—and it requires expenditure more than any of the places named here—or any way in which the Government could be induced to consider the matter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We will take it under advisement.

Mr. FRASER. My case might become old, as the revote became, and the vote struck out. There should be some means of ascertaining the real wants of the people. As the Minister of Finance is not able to give any rule or principle that guides the Government, I suppose my ingenuity could devise for them a reason, and I can only consider, when the hon. gentleman's suggestion is followed by the kindly remark of the Minister of Justice, that there is only one reason, the reason I did not want to give, because I did not want to be uncivil to the Government. There is a new steamer making the trip from Halifax round the shore to various places between Halifax and Canso and Guysborough County, and then going on to Prince Edward Island. At Sherbrooke the people sent in a large petition for a small wharf. The petition came here, but met with no response. As there is a large trade along the shore, a wharf is a necessity and should be built. If my ingenuity is asked to suggest a method by which to decide the question, I would ask the Government to build the wharf. That trade, I repeat, will be a large one round the shore, and a wharf is much more necessary than a breakwater at L'Ardoise, where there is not so much need now for a breakwater since the Cape Breton Railway has been built. Throughout the 200 miles between Halifax and Canso there is great difficulty as regards breakwaters. Beckerton is a flourishing place, although I was told that it was not found on the map when I asked that a breakwater should be built there; but it is a place easily found at election times, because it is a thriving place. Breakwaters are more required along the southern shore of Nova Scotia than elsewhere. Take New Harbour. Here is a large settlement, and the fishermen have no protection whatever for their boats there. It is with the greatest difficulty that they can get in with their boats, and the Government have recognized the claim of the people, and have made an appropriation for the work, but it has not been carried out. A sum of $6,000 or $7,000 would build a breakwater for that large section of the country, which would be of service not only to New Harbour but to people surrounding other fishing places. I am sure if I can appeal to the best sentiments of the Government—and there is a latent sentiment of good, if I can only get at it—I would succeed in this just demand. I would like to appeal to them in the most kindly way on behalf of these fishermen that a breakwater should be built there. I see that the Government are building breakwaters in other places where there is no such great necessity for them as there is here. The whole dependence of these people is on the sea; their little frail boats are exposed, and they ask that their case should be taken into consideration, not on account of their political principles, but on account of the justice of their claim. I say that in the district of New Harbour there are about an equal number of both parties in that section, but I appeal to the Government, are not the lives of the Liberals and Conservatives equally worth preserving in that county, even though they should return an opponent to the Government? I am afraid that when the Government is going to take this matter into consideration in the future it simply means that they will consider it until such time as the people will send a supporter of the Government. If I am to understand that, then it is not dealing fairly with the people. May I ask that the Government will establish some rule, not in the interest of a representative of a county nor even in the interest of the men who support the representative in the county, but in the interest of the people of Canada who live on the sea shore, and have to encounter all these difficulties in making a livelihood, that these works should be built in places where there is absolute necessity for them. I do believe that the lives of the people should be taken into consideration rather than their political leanings. I claim that not one of these breakwaters that the Government are building now, and for which the Government is unable to give a reason for building, is as necessary as the breakwater at New Harbour.

Digby—New pier at the Raquette.....$41,300

Mr. FLINT. I would like to ask the Minister, has a final decision been arrived at as to the location and plan of that pier? I believe, if I am correctly informed, that the plan and location had been decided upon, but subsequently doubts were raised by persons interested in the project as to whether the site was most advisable. It would be interesting to know if a decision has been arrived at.

Mr. FOSTER. A final decision has not been arrived at yet. Representations were made against what appeared to be the decision of the department as to the place where the pier should be built, and these representations have been taken into consideration, and are being carefully looked into; but a decision has not been finally given yet.

Mr. FLINT. I am glad to hear that, because from my knowledge of the locality, and the representations that have been made to me, and the great importance of a wise decision being arrived at, I trust the department will delay this until the fullest information can be obtained.

Repairs of Piers and Breakwaters—
Prince Edward Island..... $6,000

Mr. PERRY. I would like to know if that is the whole amount that is to be placed at the disposal of the Government for the repairs of piers and breakwaters on Prince Edward Island, because it seems to me that it is a very small sum. Last year an amount of $12,000 was voted for the same purpose, and I find by the returns that only about $7,000 were spent. What became of the balance?

Mr. FOSTER. It lapsed.

Harbours and Rivers—Prince Edward Island—Miminigash..... $1,000

Mr. PERRY. Last year $3,500 was voted for improvements on the Miminigash breakwater, and about $1,000 was expended last year. In the spring tenders were asked for and the contract was let, but the man who had the contract, I understand, gave it up. I would like to know whether the contract has been re-let; if so, for what amount, and what work is to be done. The people there are suffering and nobody seems to be looking after the interest of the public works at that point.

Mr. FOSTER. The work was let, but the successful tenderer, I find, declined to sign a contract unless the time for the completion of the work was extended; and this revote of $1,000 is called for to make provision for completing the work in 1891-92.

Mr. PERRY. Is the contract let now?

Mr. FOSTER. No; the new contract is not let. We must have the vote first.

Mr. PERRY. That is not satisfactory to me. How was it that the Government were able to let the contract in the spring with the balance of last year's vote left? The late Minister of Public Works informed me, and his answer is here in Hansard, that the contract was signed, sealed and delivered to a gentleman of the name of Macdonald, and that a month or six weeks after he got the contract he gave it up, and new tenders were asked for. The Minister says that a contract cannot be entered into until this $1,000 is voted. How could they enter into the contract in the spring without it?

Mr. FOSTER. We had the vote at that time, but the vote lapsed at the end of the year, and the contract was not signed. The Minister of Public Works may have stated that the contract was let; he may have been under the impression that it was signed, because it was sent for the signature of the successful tenderer; but the man refused to sign it unless he got an extension of time, and it fell to the ground.

Mr. PERRY. After Macdonald gave up the contract in April last, I am sure that the Government had plenty of time to advertise for tenders, and the work might have been going on now; but it is not going on, and there is nothing there to prevent the Miminigash breakwater being carried away by the fall storms.

Repairs to Breakwater at Negro Point, St. John Harbour..... $15,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What on earth is the total cost of that Negro Point breakwater?

Mr. FOSTER. The work was badly injured by storms a year or so ago, and this is to repair it. The total amount expended so far upon it is about $400,000. It is almost the sole protection of St. John harbour.

Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. (Thursday).

THE MEMBER FOR EAST NORTHUMBERLAND.

Mr. FLINT moved:

That Thomas Barnard Flint, the member representing the electoral district of Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, in this House, having stated from his place in this House, that he is credibly informed and verily believes:

1. That Edward Cochrane was, during the last Parliament, and now is the member for the electoral district of the East Riding of the County of Northumberland.

2. That while he was such member it was corruptly agreed to by and between the said Edward Cochrane and John D. Clouston, William Johnson, William Brown and Robert May, respectively, that if each of them would pay to him, or to certain other persons for him, or for political purposes, the sum of $200, he would procure for each of them the position under the Government of Canada, of attendant or keeper of one of the swing bridges over or across the Murray Canal.

3. That in pursuance of such corrupt agreement the said several sums of money were paid, and the said persons were so appointed to said positions.

4. That while he, the said Edward Cochrane, was such member as aforesaid, it was corruptly agreed by and between the said Edward Cochrane and one Henry May, that if the said Henry May would pay the said Edward Cochrane, or to other persons for him, or for political purposes, the sum of $200, he would procure for the said Henry May, the office or position under the Government of foreman or overseer of employés under the Government.

5. That in pursuance of the said corrupt agreement the said sum of $200 was paid, and the said office or position duly received by the said Henry May.

That the foregoing statement be referred to the Select Committee composed of Sir Adolphe Caron, Messrs. White (Shelburne), Tisdale, Skinner, Mulock, German and Cameron (Huron).

Motion agreed to.

THE CENSUS RETURNS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would suggest to the Printing Committee that they be kind enough to have the statements affecting the census which were laid on the Table last night, and those which I understand from the Postmaster General will be laid on the Table to-night, printed as soon as possible for the convenience of the House. They are exceedingly interesting and extremely important.

Mr. BERGIN. The clerk has had notice to have a meeting of the Committee called for to-morrow morning for that purpose.

LAND SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved second reading of Bill (No. 169), further to amend the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 4, to authorize the granting of subsidies in land to certain railway companies. He said: I promised the other day to lay some papers on the Table which were asked for in reference to land subsidies generally. I left them in my office, but I can bring them up when this other subsidy Bill comes up to-morrow, or the day after. I refer to the Calgary and Red Deer Railway.

Mr. MULOCK. When that Bill came up I was going to make a suggestion. The company is not a purely railway company, but one of its objects is to carry coal, and it is proposed to make a land grant to this company, to enable it to build a railway into coal lands, and a large portion of which, or some portion of which, at all events, is the private property of the railway company. Now, once this railway obtains access to this coal district, whether it owns the coal lands or not, it will be the only railway company to carry the coal of that district, and, therefore, all the owners of coal lands will have to pay tolls to this particular company. You will observe that the Railway Act, therefore, will not give relief to the owners of coal lands. The Railway Act does require railway companies to treat general shippers in the same way, but, in this particular case, it is a matter of indifference to the railway company what rate they impose upon coal, because, so far as their own coal is concerned, the tolls will be simply transferred from one pocket into another. They can, therefore, under their powers and under the present Railway Act, impose any tariff they like on coal, being their own coal, and that same tariff imposed on the coal of strangers would practically be a prohibitory tariff, and, therefore, will place all coal lands at the mercy of this particular company. Therefore, I was going to suggest to the hon. gentleman, before he gives effect to this Bill, giving of a grant to this railway, that there should be a special stipulation in connection with this gift to the railway company, that it shall be liable to change its rates from time to time as the Governor General in Council may deem proper. The hon. gentleman, a few days ago, when we were discussing these resolutions, mentioned that the Railway Act granted such relief. I do not know whether he quite understood me at the time, but I meant to say that the Railway Act is not applicable so far as granting relief is concerned. If he looks at the clause in the Act enabling the Governor in Council to cause a reduction of tolls, he will find that that Act will give no practical relief to the section of the country in question, having regard to the particular nature of this company. This company, not being a purely carrying company, but being a trading company, ought not to be entitled to all the privileges of the railway law, which is only applicable to common carriers. This is a trading company that is asking this Parliament for a grant of land, for a bonus, for a present, to enable it to develop its own mineral lands, not for the benefit of the community, but for the benefit of the company itself. This Bill, I say, ought to have a condition attached to it giving the Governor General in Council jurisdiction to affect the rates charged to the general community. Unless you do that you are simply making every acre of coal lands that is going to be served by this railway practically the private property of this company, for the coal land is of no value to the owner unless the mineral itself can be marketed, and if this company has the only means of transport to market, you are practically handing over the whole coal belt to this company. I make that suggestion now, hoping that the Minister will adopt it so as not to make it necessary for me to move a formal amendment to the Bill.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is no clause of that kind in any of our charters. I do not know that this will be essentially a road for the purpose of carrying coals to the point where it terminates, because in the near future it is expected that the road will be continued in a north-westerly direction towards Battleford, and that it will be a portion of a very extensive line of railway. I think I mentioned, when the Bill was up before, that I understood that the rates could be settled at different times under the Railway Act. Does the hon. gentleman think that is not the case?

Mr. MULOCK. I take it that there is power in the Railway Act, under certain circumstances, whereby the Governor in Council can cause a reduction of rates, but I say that these circumstances are such as would never exist in connection with this company so as to give practical relief. If you look at the section you will find that the Governor in Council can only interfere when the railway company has declared a dividend of 15 per cent. upon its share capital. In this case the share capital is only nominal, but it is paid up by some system of book-keeping. The Governor in Council cannot exercise his power to reduce the rates until 15 per cent. has been paid upon the book-keeping capital. That is the practical working out of that section. You will see that this company, being a trading company, ought not to be simply under laws that are not applicable to it. The Railway Act is only devised to meet the case of common carriers, companies the object of whose existence is to make money by carrying freight. If you look at the Act of incorporation of this company you will find it its empowered to do what common carriers are not empowered to do, that is, to enter into trade and to operate mines. It is, therefore, not a purely common carrier, it is a trading corporation, and, therefore, when it asks Parliament for a gift of land, what I suggest is that we should attach such a condition to that gift as will make it in the public interest. It will be no satisfaction to the people of Calgary to be compelled to pay high rates for coal simply to enrich this company. The coal lands are not for the company, they are for the people.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I understand that there is no dispute that this company will be subject to the provisions of the Railway Act. I understand that what the hon. gentleman desires is, that there should be a provision inserted in the Bill that the company's tariff should be subject to the approval of the Governor General in Council. Is not that provision in the Railway Act?

Mr. MULOCK. Not properly. A coach and four could be driven through it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SLAUGHTER OF AMERICAN CATTLE IN CANADA.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Is the Government prepared to answer the question I put yesterday respecting the slaughter of American cattle within the Dominion of Canada, which is a matter of considerable interest?

Mr. HAGGART. In answer to the hon. gentleman, I may say that an application has been made by a company with a view to manufacturing materials out of cattle imported into this country, and exporting the balance. The proposition is, I believe, to import cattle from a foreign country, the United States, and have them slaughtered in this country, and no part of the material will be used in this country, but it will be exported. It is proposed to be done under regulations as stringent as those in force at present in regard to cattle being taken through this country. The proposition is under the consideration of the Government. We have not come to a decision on the matter, but if it in any way endangers our cattle trade with England no concession will be granted.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Will the Minister kindly lay the regulations on the Table, if any are made?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. MARSHALL. I fail to understand what advantage it will be to the House for hon. members to have a copy of the regulations laid on the Table, after they are settled between the Government and the Three Rivers Dead Meat Company. It is the duty of the representatives of the people to know what is being done before the transactions are completed. In the early part of the session I placed a notice on the Paper asking for a copy of all documents and communications between the Three Rivers Dead Meat Company and the Government to allow American cattle to be slaughtered by the company. I was informed that no such action had been taken or would be, and I allowed the matter to drop. I think this House is entitled to further information on this important subject, and I will take the first opportunity of moving in the matter and protesting against anything that would interfere with the Canadian cattle trade.

Mr. HAGGART. I will state to the hon. gentleman that all the documents and papers in regard to the matter will be brought down to the House.

Mr. DAVIN. This is a most important question to us in the North-West. I hope the suggestions of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Marshall) will be acted upon by the Government.

SUPPLY--GOVERNOR GENERAL'S WARRANTS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair I desire to call the attention of the House to a question of very practical moment affecting our mode of administration. As every hon. member of this House knows, and I presume every hon. gentleman, not excepting the Ministry, will be willing to admit, the very A B C of our parliamentary constitution is this: That no money shall be expended by the Government of this country without the previous sanction of Parliament. I need not waste words, I hope, in this House in elaborating so simple and well known a proposition as that; but, owing to the necessities of the public service, we have by law established a certain exception to this fundamental rule, and it is to the very great abuse of that provision, which in itself was a fair and not unreasonable proposition, I desire to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, and that of the House today. The exception to which I refer is defined in our Audit Act. Whenever any extraordinary accident occurs to a public work, or whenever some extraordinary event happens, which could not be reasonably foreseen and which required an outlay of public money under penalty of great injury to the public service, then under certain protections and provisions, which I will presently enumerate, the Governor General is allowed to issue his warrant, provided Parliament is not in session, and under this warrant the Government are allowed, without first obtaining the concurrence of Parliament, to spend what sum may be deemed requisite. I do not object to the fair exercise of this provision under the conditions and safeguards laid down by Parliament and to be found in the Audit Act. But I do object, and object very strongly, to the manner in which this provision has been abused, and systematically abused, during several years past. Sir, it was my duty some four or five years ago to call the attention of the House to the manner in which Governor General's warrants were issued for purposes which I then contended were in no way contemplated by Parliament when it gave them that power, and which were in direct evasion, if not in direct defiance, of the plain terms and plain meaning of the Audit Act. These complaints were recognized even by hon. gentlemen opposite, and then it was promised, and the House may judge that the Government must have felt that they had stepped far outside all reasonable and ordinary bounds when I say that no less a person than Sir Charles Tupper was foremost in making the promise that there would be an amendment in that respect, and that the evils of which we complained would not again occur. Unhappily Ministers (no doubt owing to the absence of Sir Charles Tupper), have fallen from grace, and committed the very evils which I had occasion to denounce pretty vigorously from this side of the House at that time. The present year appears to be a particularly bad one. As I said, I do not object to a reasonable use of the discretion conveyed to the Government. But when I find that from 30th May, 1890, down to 28th April, 1891, and I call the attention of the House to the latter date, which was just one day before Parliament met, Government took authority by Governor General's warrants to demand no less than eighty-seven separate sums, aggregating $1,680,317. I cannot but feel that there is danger of all due parliamentary control being disregarded, and that there is very great danger that this House will lose entirely all effective control of the expenditure of money on the part of the Government. I do not think that at any time before, with the exception of the instance to which I called attention in 1887, has so large a sum of money been expended in this fashion; and when I come to examine these various items it appears to me that a very large number of these warrants have been issued under circumstances which in no way warranted their use. I have not time to go through them all in detail, but I will instance one which was issued on 28th April, 1891. That was a grant of $75,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for post office expenditures under a certain Order in Council passed on 10th February. I submit that in no shape or way did that particular item come within a fair construction of the clause in the Audit Act, which alone gives power to issue Governor General's warrants. That was not caused by any sudden accident to a public building, nor was it one of those classes of expenditure which required urgent and immediate action as contemplated by that Act. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company were abundantly well able to wait for their money until Parliament had voted it, and there was in that case as in many others, no reason, no excuse, no justification whatever for paying this sum of money over without the consent of Parliament. That, however, is only one case. The worst case, in my judgment, and the one to which I am going to call special attention to, is the one which regards a sum of about $300,000, expended for the service of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways. But before I proceed to deal with that in detail I desire to say this: That when it is found necessary to issue eighty-seven Governor's warrants in the interval between two Parliaments for a sum of money covering collectively nearly $2,000,000, it indicates very slovenly preparation of the Estimates, and it indicates also that the departments which have sent in their requests must have been guilty in many cases of very gross carelessness. Perhaps, judging from what we have seen and heard in other places in this House, the departmental officials were otherwise and more profitably engaged than in ascertaining what were the needs of the public service. Now, Sir, I can hardly conceive an instance in which all the proper rules and regulations which ought to govern in the expenditure of public money have been more openly and outrageously violated than in the case of this expenditure of $300,000 for the service of the Intercolonial Railway in the year 1890. Consider the circumstances of the case. Parliament that year sat until the 16th May, until within six weeks of the termination of the fiscal year. Now, what sort of business management, what sort of departmental management must the Intercolonial Railway have been under, if it were indeed the case that when Parliament rose on the 16th May, they did not know, within $300,000, how much money they would require to spend before the end of the fiscal year terminating in six weeks? Sir, it is hardly necessary to add one word to these facts. They carry their condemnation on the face of them, but lest peradventure there might have been some recondite reason which ordinary mortals cannot understand, I took occasion before the Committee of Public Accounts, to cross-examine the chief engineer of the department with respect to these unprovided items of $302,958, which evidence was reported by that Committee to the House. It appears perfectly plain from the evidence which was then given, and which was published in the public prints, that the department had the most ample means of ascertaining that this sum of money would be required, several days at any rate before Parliament rose. It appears, moreover, from the evidence of Mr. Schreiber, that the character of the items which caused this excess were ones which could most easily have been foreseen, seeing that the bulk of the expenditure had been incurred in the months of March and April; and furthermore—and this is a very extraordinary thing—although he declared that he was not aware that this amount of money would be required, that it had in some extraordinary and some mysterious way escaped his attention, and that his officers had not called his attention to it. Mr. Schreiber, in response to a remark from me, that he ought to have brought down another supplementary estimate, stated: "That he was not aware during the current year he could have two supplementary estimates;" showing plainly, that he was perfectly well aware, after all said and done, that the money would be required, but that he did not take the trouble to make himself acquainted with the state of the law, and preferred, I fear, to take the chance of getting the money provided in this irregular and improper way, to asking Parliament for the extra vote. Now, Sir, I need hardly say to any assembly of business men, that it is utterly impossible with any sort of proper management whatever that the department of the Intercolonial Railway should not have known before the 16th May, that their expenditure would be increased by $200,000 or $300,000, and knowing that and Parliament being in session, it was most undoubtedly their duty to have moved the Government, and the duty of the Government to have moved the House to provide the requisite sum. I strongly suspect, Sir, that the reason was simply this: A good deal had been said in that session about the management of the Intercolonial Railway, and no doubt it was perfectly obvious to all concerned that if a special supplementary estimate for the sum of $300,000 on account of extra expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway had been brought down, that it would have accentuated the dissatisfaction which existed with the management of the road, and would have probably led to a disagreeable debate on the floor of Parliament. That, I have not the slightest doubt in my own mind was the reason which induced the Government, or induced the department for which the Government is responsible, deliberately to neglect their plain duty and to have recourse to this evasion of the true meaning and intent of the Audit Act, and to rely, when the need arose, on a Governor General's warrant, instead of obtaining as they ought to have done the sanction of Parliament to that expenditure. The language of the Act is quite plain, and I will read it for the information of the House:

"If when Parliament is not in session any accident happens to any public work or building which requires an immediate outlay for the repair thereof; or any other occasion arises when an expenditure not foreseen or provided for by Parliament is urgently and immediately required for the public good; then, on report of the Minister of Finance and the Receiver General that there is no parliamentary provision, and of the Minister having charge of the service in question that the necessity is urgent, the Governor in Council may order a special warrant to be prepared for the purpose of supplying this."

It is scarcely necessary for me to point out that the obvious meaning of this clause is, that when any occasion arises when any expenditure which cannot fairly be foreseen by the department or provided for by Parliament is urgently and immediately required; then and then only, is it intended that such a warrant should issue. Now, Sir, I say it is an evasion, and it is a most dangerous evasion, of the principle intended and of the meaning of this Act, for the Government, or a department of the Government, first of all to neglect their duty; first of all to neglect to take proper precautions to inform themselves of what money would be required and to apply to Parliament; and then afterwards, to plead their own deliberate neglect of duty as an excuse for having recourse to this extraordinary provision and obtaining the use of the Governor General's warrant. Both sides of the House ought to be at one upon this question, both sides of the House ought to feel, that whether they have confidence in the Ministry of the day or not, it is their duty as members of Parliament, it is their duty above all as members of the House of Commons to insist that the Government do not put their hands into the Treasury or use large sums of money without the previous sanction of Parliament. Unless that principle is laid down, unless that principle is enforced, it is obvious that it is utterly hopeless to have any proper control over the acts of Government. Government might, if this construction which is attempted to be put, and is practically put on the Audit Act is allowed to prevail, Government might at any time—let us say before a general election—take one, two, three, or four millions of money out of the public chest, and might distribute it in a thousand ways calculated to promote their political interests. Now, it is not my intention at present—I do not want to distract the attention of the House from the question more immediately at issue—to discuss the various remedies that might be adopted, short of striking this provision entirely out of the Audit Act, and compelling the Government, as I think used to be done formerly in similar cases, to apply to Parliament for a formal Act of indemnity, when from any cause they are obliged to spend money without the authority of Parliament. That may be done more fitly hereafter. My present purpose is to call the attention of the House to the facts which I have stated—facts which I think admit of no dispute. Sir, it appears to me that the purpose of the Act is clear. I do not think any man can fairly contend that Parliament, when it allowed this extraordinary provision to be made for extraordinary accidents, for extraordinary and unforeseen circumstances, ever for one moment contemplated that two or three millions in eighty-seven different sums should be taken out of the public chest under Governor's warrants. Such a thing might conceivably occur in the case of an invasion or in the case of a popular outburst, when Parliament was not sitting; but that it should occur in time of peace is a thing utterly indefensible and unreasonable, provided that anything like decent care is taken by the different departments in the preparation of their estimates. Now, in the particular case to which I allude and which I thought fit to emphasize, the negligence is clear. There is not a shadow of doubt on my mind, after having listened to what Mr. Schreiber had to say, and after having examined the evidence, that the department were perfectly aware while Parliament was sitting, that this money was wanted, and that they deliberately allowed Parliament to rise without taking it into their confidence, and getting the proper sum from it, trusting by this misuse of the Governor General's warrant to obtain whatever sum was requisite for their needs. Now, I trust that the House will do its duty in this case without fear or favour. As I have said, this is a matter which does not concern one side of the House more than the other. This is a matter that goes to the root of all parliamentary control over Government expenditure. If you are going to allow our constitution, founded as it is on British practice and precedent, to be torn up in this fashion, if you are going to allow the Government to spend millions of public money without the slightest reference to Parliament in the fashion that I have now indicated, I say there is an end to all proper parliamentary control over Government expenditure; and in order that the sense of the House may be tested on the subject, I am about to place in your hands, Sir, the following motion:—

That by chapter 29, 49th Victoria, the Governor General in Council is empowered to issue warrants authorizing the expenditure of money not previously voted by Parliament, under the following circumstances:—

"If, when Parliament is not in session, any accident happens to any public work or building which requires an immediate outlay for the repair thereof, or any other occasion arises when any expenditure not foreseen or provided for by Parliament is urgently and immediately required for the public good, then, upon the report of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General that there is no parliamentary provision, and of the Minister having charge of the service in question that the necessity is urgent, the Governor in Council may order a special warrant to be prepared, to be signed by the Governor General for the issue of the amount estimated to be required."

That on or about the 25th day of June, and 16th day of October, 1890, His Excellency was advised to issue his warrants for the expenditures of $281,606 and $16,000, for the service of the Prince Edward and Intercolonial Railroads, during the fiscal year 1890, which terminated on the 30th day of June, 1890.

That Parliament remained in session up to the 16th day of May, 1890, being within six weeks of the close of the said fiscal year.

That no accident had occurred upon the said railroads, nor was there any reason whatever why said expenditure should not have been foreseen and provided for by Parliament.

That under such circumstances the issue of a Governor General's warrant for the said sums was a gross abuse of the power vested in the Governor in Council under the said Act, and that the conduct of the Government in neglecting to apply to Parliament in due time for the said sums, indicates great laxity of administration and deserves the censure of this House.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose that there will be much disagreement between my hon. friend and myself on the theory which he has just laid down as regards the source of supply for money expenditures made in the country. There is no doubt—of course we all know that—that Parliament is the source of supply, and that to Parliament we must as a Government or an executive body look for authority for expenditures. The clause of the Act which the hon. gentleman has recited, however, gives a discretionary power to the Executive upon certain occasions, in certain exigencies; and I have no doubt as well that when that power was given, although the wording of the Act is broadly drawn, the spirit and intention of the Act was to provide only for those expenditures which came to be considered as absolutely necessary and urgent, so far urgent as to make it a matter of public service and public utility that the expenditures should be made. It is true as my hon. friend has said, that with reference to the item he has specially mentioned and about which the discussion so far is mostly proceeding, it ought to have been foreseen and ought to have been provided for by Parliament. My hon. friend will recollect that evidence was taken on this matter in the Public Accounts Committee, and that the engineer of the department, Mr. Schreiber, in giving his evidence, recited the reasons for the omission; and although the evidence is not very fresh in my mind, the two chief points in it, if I am not mistaken, were these: First, that the major portion of that expenditure by Governor General's warrant on the Intercolonial Railway was due to re-railing with steel rails, and that, as a usual thing, this expenditure falls in the succeeding year, the re-railing being chiefly done at the very end of the one fiscal year and the beginning of the other. In this instance, however, a larger part of that re-railing was made earlier than usual, and as it was not anticipated that it would have been made so early, considerably over $100,000 of that which was required by the Governor General's warrant became necessary from that unexpected and unforeseen circumstance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it was in April and March he said that sum was paid.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, in March, It is true that sum was expended in the latter part of April and March, but, in explaining the transit of estimates and accounts from the officers upon the road to the department, Mr. Schreiber showed that the statements of these expenditures would not come to his knowledge in the department for some six weeks or two months after they had been made, the accounts taking a certain amount of time in their adjustment and transit. I think he also mentioned that in that year he was absent for some time, and, consequently, that was an added circumstance which led to this escaping his attention, when estimating what was necessary for the service. The other part was mostly made up, I think, from the over-expenditure in connection with the increased trainage upon the Intercolonial Railway between St. John and Halifax, the chief engineer having been led to suppose, from the preceding year, that no perceptible shortage would be made by the arrangements which would be necessary for that extra trainage. These two reasons were all he could give to account for this expenditure having escaped his attention, and for his not having drawn the attention of the Minister of the department to it. The point then I wish to make is this, that this did not come to the attention of the Government until it had been impossible to ask Parliament or to receive from Parliament any supply; that it was overlooked by the officer of the department, who, in his evidence stated that, and took the whole responsibility, and who, when questioned by my hon. friend, stated that he had not brought it to the attention of the Minister of the department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He said he did not remember.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, he did not remember having done so. That then is, of course, an instance of a lack of foresight and a lack, to a certain extent, of proper outlook on the part of the principal officer of the department. But what I wish to say is this, that when, in the course of the succeeding year, it came to the attention of the Government that the appropriation was insufficient by that large amount—and it was a large amount—and that the Intercolonial Railway and its system had to be kept running, it was then impossible, in the interest of the public service, to have stopped the traffic of the road or interfered with its trainage. It was, therefore, a matter which fell under the powers the Government have, under the Act, of taking Governor General's warrants for unforeseen and necessary expenditure. The Government certainly could not take the responsibility of allowing the operations of these railways to cease. The trouble arose in the department itself; the reasons were given, and very frankly given, by the engineer himself, and I suppose the best of men and most careful of managers will sometimes make mistakes, in this respect; but when the matter came to the attention of the Government, there was no other way open to us than to take the Governor General's warrant and keep up the service of the country in this regard. In looking over the list of Governor General's warrants, I find that quite a large number of them are to make up balances that have lapsed. Clearly, the distinction must be drawn between these and appropriations by Governor General's warrants for entirely new services. Here were sums—and in the case of the railway a part of that, I think, was a lapsed balance—that were voted, but, owing to circumstances not foreseen, it became impossible to spend them for the services for which they had been voted during the currency of the year; and under the present ruling and the state of the law, it is impossible to pay out of balances that run over any expenditure incurred for services during the year for which the money was not voted. Formerly, and up to within two years, it was possible to use the lapsed balances for services which had not been expended up to the end of the fiscal year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For three months.

Mr. FOSTER. For three months. But now, under the rule which has obtained for the last two years, and the practice of the last year and a half, I think, this has not been done; so that every dollar remaining over on the 30th of June for the service for the year which it had been voted, can only be applied for services which have actually been performed during the year for which they were voted, and not for new services beginning in the year into which the lapsed balances ran. So that in the case of public works, it happened over and over again that a public work had been appropriated for by Parliament, that the money had been voted by Parliament, that the contract had been let and that the works were under operation, but, owing to circumstances, the works had not proceeded with that rapidity with which it is thought they would have been proceeded, and consequently, when the end of the year came, it was found that a much smaller expenditure had been actually incurred and a much smaller liability, than had been provided for. Now, it is clearly impossible to stop a public work in the middle of the contract, in the middle of the work itself. It is clearly impossible to do that, and having in view the exigencies and the utility of the public service, I think in those cases it is not at all an unwarrantable stretch of power, under the authority given the Government by this clause, to carry on the work by Governor General's warrant. A large amount, then, of the sum which was called for by Governor General's warrants is of that kind which was required to keep on works which had not proceeded with the rapidity expected and for which lapsed balances went over into the next year, but which were made available, or an equal sum was made available, by Governor General's warrants. My hon. friend has spoken as to the number of these. Of course, the number varies. It may be perfectly legitimate that there should be forty, or fifty, or sixty Governor General's warrants. The number itself could not be made a charge against the Government as to the improper use of Governor General's warrants. An accident occurs at a breakwater, or a wharf, or a pier owned by the Government. This accident may take place at any part of the coast or of the lakes where these Government works are going on. There are hundreds of them—I was almost going to say thousands—and wherever these accidents occur they come within the line laid down for the issue of Governor General's warrants, and in order to keep these works serviceable and to prevent further destruction taking place it is perfectly right that Governor General's warrants should issue. I do not agree with my hon. friend at all that this Intercolonial Railway appropriation was retarded by the officers of the department, and certainly it was not by the head of the department or by the Government, in order to keep this large sum from being asked for in Parliament, and so precipitating a discussion. That course could not avail anything. The discussion must come sooner or later, and if it were simply put off for a few months the Government does not thereby escape the responsibility of the discussion—in fact, it would be rather heightened than otherwise by the delay.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How often do the officers report to the Government as to the state of the revenues?

Mr. FOSTER. The officers are in more or less continual communication with the heads of the departments with reference to the works that are under their charge.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But they make formal reports as to the revenues of the railway, do they not?

Mr. FOSTER. The head of the department, no doubt, keeps track of the revenue and expenditure, so far as he possibly can.

Mr. MILLS. (Bothwell). But the report is made monthly.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know it used to be.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know what the rule is in that department. I was going on to say that I did not agree with my hon. friend in imputing that motive to the officer of the department. He admitted the error that had been made, and was perfectly frank in the evidence he gave. As to the intimation that it might not have been agreeable to the Minister or to the Government to bring down the information, there is nothing in that. As I have said, it could not inure to the interests of the department or of the Government to have the discussion kept off for a few months so that it might come on later.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why not? It might be better after an election than before.

Mr. FOSTER. If it were on the eve of an election there might be something in it, but as a member of the Government I can say that I had no thought or idea of an election coming on, particularly when these estimates were being put through last year. As to the general principle which the Government ought to pursue in regard to these expenditures, I thoroughly agree with my hon. friend. A Governor General's warrant ought not to be used except for an urgent and necessary purpose, but if an error occurs, and a branch of the public service must be stopped unless appropriations are made which Parliament would have given but for the error, there is no choice between the two alternatives. The warrant must be issued, and the money must be made available. I think I need not go over all the warrants which are referred to. The resolution seems to have been almost entirely based on the case of the railway, and that is a branch of the service which must go on. Whether from error or from any other reason, an insufficient appropriation has been made by Parliament, whenever the Government comes face to face with the lack of money sufficient to carry on the service, and the alternative is between the service stopping or going on, the Government has no other course to pursue than to keep up the traffic and to keep up the business in this great branch of the public service for the benefit of the people of this country.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Finance has presented a most extraordinary defence for his Government on this occasion. He admits the gravity of the situation, he admits that the Government is bound to offer an excuse, and what is the defence? The defence is, that the department, or the administrative side of the Government, is so broken down that it failed to make known to the Government, the representative part of it, the needs of the department, and thus he asks Parliament to do away with the whole representative system and to throw the blame upon those who are not amenable to Parliament at all. He asks Parliament to transfer the blame from the responsible representatives of the people to the irresponsible servants of the Government. That is not responsible Government. It is a system which it is being attempted to introduce here now. Whenever a fault is discovered, it is said by the head of the department that it is not he who is in default, but it is the deputy or the officer of the department who is in default. I say this is not a Government of deputies, though my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) once said it was. The persons responsible to Parliament are the heads of the departments. Of course, accidents will happen, and, if the Administration do all they should, if they discharge their bounden duty, then we must be reasonable in regard to them, and hold them responsible only for what might reasonably be expected. But here, what is the excuse? The Minister does not defend the transaction itself. He admits that the necessity for this fund arose while Parliament was in session. He admits that the Government ought to have known that the account was overdrawn. He does not contend that the action of the Government was really within the spirit of the Audit Act. He simply pleads: You must not blame me because of the short-coming of one of the servants. I submit that the Administration, if they had given the first bit of attention to the affairs entrusted to them, would have known, when Parliament was in session, that there would be a default. On the 30th June, within six weeks after Parliament rose, they found there had been a default of $533,000 in the working of this road, and we are to be told that, within six weeks of that time, the Government were so uninformed that they did not know on the 16th May whether or not there was a surplus. This road had been carrying on its operations from the 1st July preceding, that is, for ten and a-half months, and yet within a month and a-half from the end of the year the Government say they did not know there was a deficit. They can only shelter themselves from the dilemma in which they are placed now by pleading that they were blind and would not see. They had monthly returns made to them, or, if not, whose fault was it? My hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) says it was always the custom to make monthly returns to the Minister of Railways as to the working of the Government railways. Were these returns looked at? If so, the growing deficit was known every month. It did not begin on the 16th May. We may assume that it began on the 1st July, 1890, when the Short Line Railway began operations, and the Government say they began to lose from that time. If that be so, they had daily, weekly and monthly notice of a gradually accumulating deficit until the 1st July following, when the total amount of that deficit was known. But they must have had notice, if they were attending to the department at all, month by month, of this accumulated default, and therefore it was nothing but the grossest negligence on the part of the Administration if they did not know. I therefore say, whilst I would be reasonable and excuse want of knowledge if there was a reasonable ground for excuse, that in a case like this, where they had the documents before them, and had only to look at them, and read them, and know there was a default, you cannot accept the plea of ignorance as a defence in this case. Although this motion is confined to one item, what do we find the Government doing? Parliament prorogued on the 16th of May, 1890. The month had not closed before they began to issue Governor General's warrants, first one for $2,000 for the Department of Justice; and on the 30th of May another warrant issued for $99,000 inconnection with legislation. From that time on they went thick and fast and made expenditures of money that was never voted by Parliament, issuing warrants amounting in the aggregate to $1,310,000. The Finance Minister says we must draw a distinction between warrants issued for lapsed balances, and warrants issued for moneys never authorized by Parliament. I agree with him there is a difference, but even that excuse will not get him out of this dilemma, because of the total amount of warrants issued only $450,000 embraced lapsed balances therefore, they issued warrants during that year for $860,000 in excess of all the lapsed balances of the year. Therefore, at best, he has to account for warrants to the extent of $860,000 never before submitted to Parliament, moneys taken out of the treasury without the sanction of Parliament. Sir, I think that the Government could not in any other way better manifest their indifference to the supreme power of the people than by taking their money without authority. There is no higher crime that an Administration can commit in a country such as Canada, where the people are supposed to control their own funds. The very aim and object of our parliamentary system, the very aim and object of requiring Parliament to assemble once a year, is to control the public expenditure, and the very clause of the Act which says that all balances shall lapse on a certain day is in order to compel the Government to come before the people's representatives and give an account of their stewardship, and then, and then only, receive a renewal of confidence by a renewed vote of Supply, if they are thought worthy of it. But here we have a new system set up. I remember well when the hon. gentleman issued a warrant a short time ago for $20,000 to pay a bill of law costs, as if that was an unforeseen expenditure urgently necessary in the public good. But you want no better argument to prove the careless laxity with which these warrants are issued than this one fact, that the Government issued warrants for $1,310,000 on the ground that that whole expenditure was urgently needed, and could not be deferred until Parliament assembled; and yet it does not appear that they spent it all. It is not often I have to complain of the Government not having spent all that they could legally spend, but that is no excuse for that part of their action. Therefore, the fact that they did not spend it all is another proof that their action was wholly unwarrantable. Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to dwell upon the language of the Act, because the Finance Minister has not ventured to defend the transaction under this Act. The Act says that these warrants can only issue under certain circumstances, namely, where there has been an accident to a public work, and that repair is necessary. That is not the case here—also, where some unforeseen circumstance arises, which is not before provided for, and which the public good demands shall be provided for. Now, when you may see, but won't see, is that "unforeseen." The Act must mean that where a demand for some expenditure exists, and that with reasonable diligence the Government have not been able to anticipate that need, then the power of this Act may be invoked, but not until then. Why, Sir, if the construction the Minister of Finance has placed upon the Act is admitted all he has got to do, if this action is condoned by the House, is to tell his officers: You need not make reports to me of deficits, there need not be any mention of them; as long as I do not know I can come to Parliament and say I issued a warrant because my officer below me did not tell me anything about the default. Why, Sir, it is offering a premium upon negligence; it is proposing that there shall be an absolutely irresponsible system of administration, the servants not being responsible to the Government and the Government not being responsible to Parliament. Now, I think that if we are to get back to a healthy state of affairs we must emphatically condemn the action of the Administration on this occasion. The Minister of Finance has stated from his place in this House that even the communications submitted to His Excellency the Governor General did not disclose the reasons for these warrants issuing. It certainly is contemplated by the Audit Act that the Governor General can only be requested to exercise his extraordinary prerogative of handing out the people's money after he has been fully advised of all the circumstances, and so that he might be enabled to see that they brought the case within the Act. Yet, Sir, we have the Minister of Finance saying here that the papers submitted to His Excellency the Governor in Council on this occasion disclosed no such state of affairs—gave no information whatever. Well, Sir, if that is the case, where is there a safeguard for the people's money? If a member of the Government can simply certify that he wants so much money, without assigning reasons to his colleagues or to His Excellency, if he can get it under those circumstances, then I think it is high time for the people to see that this lax system is changed. Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I feel that we must hold the Government responsible for not knowing what was their duty to have known. Mr. Schreiber says that part of this money was required for rails; he says that the rails were ordered eight months before the 1st of January; he says that in May there had been expended $107,000 for rails, that the expenditure began on a contract given eight months before the 1st of January; so that the order for rails which occasioned a difference of $107,000 was issued nearly a year before the warrant was issued. Under these circumstances, it seems impossible to understand how this default could take place and not be known by the head of the department. Is it the case that Mr. Schreiber can order $107,000 worth of rails without the authority of his superior officers: that all the vast supplies of the Intercolonial Railway can be purchased by the chief engineer without the previous sanction of the head of the department? Now, if the purchase of those supplies had been made with the knowledge of the head of the department, then the department had notice that this money would be required. I ask the Minister of Finance again, and I would be glad to have him tell the House upon that point, whether the engineer had power to order those rails without the authority of the chief of his department—because he tells us they were ordered eight months before the 1st of January, 1890, and, therefore, either he had to order them without authority, and under a lax system, which ought at once to be changed, or he ordered them with authority, and in that case the Administration had notice of the claim. Under these circumstances, I feel we must hold the Government responsible for the transactions, even if they take shelter behind a servant. We must hold them either not having knowledge of what they ought to know or as being negligent. I presume it is our duty to impute to them knowledge they should have: and under these circumstances the authority taken by the Government was, in my opinion, contrary to the Audit Act, against the interests of the people, unwarrantable, except as unauthorized by unwarrantable authority—unwarrantable, in fact, and therefore deserving the censure of this House.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am very glad to know that the Minister of Finance has the grace and good feeling not to differ from the view put forward by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). He declared he had no quarrel with the view my hon. friend put before the House This is comforting, because if there is one principle of responsible Government more firmly established than another, and if there is one principle more necessary to the success of representative institutions than another, it is the principle that no money shall be spent without the authority of the people's representatives. Then the Minister of Finance admits that the intent of the Act was to prevent the occurrence of such acts as are now complained of. So far, the Minister of Finance agrees with the mover of the amendment. But then he pleads that these expenditures, from certain causes, came to be necessary: he pleads there should be exceptions allowed under such circumstances as those under which the expenditure in question was made. Let us look at the circumstances, and it does not require much research to discover the facts, and see whether there is any real excuse for the expenditure or not. It will have been observed that the Minister of Finance does not pretend to defend all the warrants issued. He confines himself to one instance, that of the large expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway. Let us look at that expenditure, and see if the Government were justified in their extraordinary course. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has laid down that these warrants are only to be used in case of accident or necessity, under circumstances that could not be foreseen when the Estimates were submitted to Parliament. The Minister of Finance says the greater part of that expenditure was necessary for renewing rails, for re-railing, as he calls it, a part of the Intercolonial Railway, and for the drainage of a part of it. I appeal to common sense if those are not matters that might have been foreseen a year or two before, if they are not matters that ought to have been foreseen by any Government exercising even ordinary care. Surely one of the principal duties of the manager of a railway is to watch the wearing of the rails on the road: and I repeat that not only could it have been foreseen, but it ought to have been foreseen a year or two before this expenditure was necessary. Then there is the other point with respect to drainage.

Mr. MULOCK. It was extra train service to compete with the Short Line.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I always thought competition was supposed to diminish traffic on a road and to reduce the cost. If it has had the effect of increasing the traffic on the road, and the necessity for increased service and increased railway plant, then the best thing we can do with the road is to put another one alongside of it. The hon. gentleman fails to show that the case falls under the Act. What excuse, therefore, has he to offer for the action of the Government? The hon. gentleman first tries to evade the responsibility. He says the Government are not to blame, but the servants of the Government are culpable. Is that a valid excuse that either the House or the country should accept? If there is one principle that should be insisted on more firmly than another it is the responsibility of the Government for the conduct of public affairs. There is no justification in shifting the responsibility on an underling, for the first principle of Government is that the head of a department is responsible, and not a subordinate. Then the Minister of Finance, in order to extricate himself from the dilemma, throws himself on the mercy of the House. He admits, in effect, that the Government did wrong; yet he does not promise that they will not err again. We might be disposed to grant pity, but we have a duty to perform. The Government is a Committee of the House to give effect to the will of the House, to execute what the House orders them to do, and it is the duty of the House to hold the Government to a strict account. That is the theory of responsible government. When the Minister of Finance asks for the pity of the House, I say the House has no right to extend pity to him. The Government have done either right or wrong. According to the hon. gentleman's own confession, they have done wrong, and there is no excuse, because the necessities should have been foreseen long ago and provided against. So there is no reason why the House should extend any leniency to the Government under the circumstances. There is another reason why the House should not show any leniency. This is only one of many circumstances constantly coming to the knowledge of the House, showing the utter demoralization of our system of ministerial government. This is another case showing the utter incapacity of, and want of care shown on the part of the heads of the department; and the only cure for that is that this House as representing the people should pass upon the Government its most severe censure. I apprehend that hon. members of this House will show great neglect of duty if they condone this offence now under consideration.

House divided on amendment of Sir Richard Cartwright:

(In the Committee.)

Three Rivers Pier..... $10,000

Mr. LAURIER. Where is that pier?

Mr. FOSTER. It is between the Three Rivers Harbour Commissioners' and the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company's wharves. This vote is to carry on works during 1891-92.

Mr. LAURIER. Does this complete the work?

Mr. FOSTER. No; it will require $5,000 more to complete. The entire sum will be $15,000.

Lévis Graving Dock..... $7,500

Mr. AMYOT. What is this for?

Mr. FOSTER. This is to make provision for works to be carried out during the fiscal year in connection with the graving dock, according to the following estimate: The erection of a dwelling for a dock-master, dredging required at the entrance of a dock, repair to the ferry wharf, superintendence and contingencies. The total estimated cost of the improvements was $11,500, and $7,500 is asked now. The other $4,000 is not asked for, because I believe it is not intended to build a dock-master's dwelling this year.

Mr. AMYOT. Is that work to be done by day work or by contract?

Mr. FOSTER. The dredging will be done by the Government dredges.

Mr. AMYOT. I would like to enquire if there is much more work to be done at that graving dock, because it has cost a great amount. There were first some $300,000 to build the dock to a certain length; then thirty feet were taken away from the stipulated length, but the contractors found means of being paid about $41,000 for work which they did not do, though they were obliged to do it by the contract. That part of the work was given up as impossible, and then extras were paid coming from that. I want to understand what part of the dock requires repairs now, because it seemed to me the last time I was there to be in a perfect state of repair. I want to know this, because there has been more than lavish expenditure on this work.

Mr. FOSTER. The estimate here is for dredging required for the dock. That, I believe, is on account of some vessels of large draught having touched, so that some dredging is required there to make it perfectly accessible to some vessels. That is to be done by our own dredges, and will require $2,500, while the repairs to the wharf are estimated at $3,000.

Mr. AMYOT. Would the hon. gentleman tell me which wharf?

Mr. FOSTER. The ferry wharf.

Mr. AMYOT. Surely the ferry wharf has nothing to do with the graving dock.

Mr. FOSTER. The ferry wharf belongs to the Government.

Mr. AMYOT. Does the Government charge anything for the steamers plying there?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know, but I think not. The dock is entirely completed, and these are small expenditures required for the purposes I have mentioned.

Mr. LAURIER. It will be important to understand exactly where this dredging is to be done.

Mr. FOSTER. At the entrance to the dock.

Mr. LAURIER. I am not very familiar with the locality, but I think there must be a mistake.

Mr. LANGELIER. It must be a mistake, because the water is very deep at the entrance of the graving dock.

Mr. FOSTER. A bar forms on the Quebec side.

Mr. LANGELIER. It is all on the Lévis side. On the side towards Quebec the water is 150 feet deep.

Mr. FOSTER. It is on the western side.

Mr. AMYOT. I do not object to this expenditure, but I hope the Government will not use these works to persecute citizens who do not share their views in politics, or who decide to change their party allegiance. I put a question to the hon. Minister some time ago about a gentleman named Captain Giguère, who has been working for the department and for the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec. I hold in my hand certificates coming from the Department of Public Works and the Harbour Commissioners at Quebec, and from certain captains of ships, showing that he has always been recognized as a most competent man. Last year he was employed by the department and fulfilled his duty perfectly, and if my information is correct his services were retained for the present season. At the last general election, for reasons best known to himself, he decided to change his party allegiance; and he voted against the candidate of the Government for Quebec West. The matter was immediately reported to Ottawa, and a few days afterwards the order was sent to Mr. Bourchier, the engineer employed by the department, to dispense with the services of Captain Giguère. Captain Giguère, who had been engaged for the whole season, was not employed after that, and he suffered damages. It is no use for him to sue the Government for damages by petition of right, because very likely the expense and trouble that this would entail upon him would be more than a petition of right would bring to compensate him. But I say it is mean for officers belonging to the Government to persecute with the people's money those who exercise their freedom of franchise, and it is not right for the Government to sustain their action. It is a small affair, it is true, but a Government backed by a majority so large as that which the present Government has, or had, to have recourse to such paltry, mean ways of sustaining it, as persecuting poor seamen or labouring men who earn their money by honest industry, is unjust and unfair to the public. To resort to these, I will not say tricks, but to this breaking of faith in carrying out a contract, is wrong in small things as in great. A man who respects himself does not fail to carry out his contract, and the Government should act like a private individual in that respect; and any Government that intrenches itself behind the dignity of the Crown, where it cannot be reached, is unjust and unworthy of its position. I am sorry to have to say this, but this is the fact; and if the Government were a private individual Captain Giguère might say: You engaged me last year for this season, and you will pay me for it. The Government were satisfied with his services, and it is only because he did not vote for the ex-member for Quebec West—and he was quite right, as the withdrawal of that hon. member has proved since that the Government deprived him of his season's work. Now that the Government are informed of the fact they should at once see that this injustice done by the late member shall be repaired.

Mr. FOSTER. Did you say you had asked a question and had not received an answer?

Mr. AMYOT. I had an answer that was not satisfactory, and was not in accordance with the facts as I have them. It was denied that his services had been engaged. Let me read this letter:—

"QUARANTINE STATION,
"GROSSE ISLE, P.Q., 12th May, 1891.

"SIR,—Yesterday at Quebec I gave you verbal notice that your services will not be required in connection with the diving operations at this place. I have now the honour to intimate to you the same fact in writing, and to tell you that the Government has dispensed with your services, and those of your divers.

"I have the honour to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"GEO. L. BOURCHIER,
"Engineer-in-Charge."

"CAPTAIN CLAUDE GIGUÈRE,
"757 Champlain Street, Quebec, P.Q."

On the 12th of May, 1891, it is too late to say to him: The Government dispenses with your services. It is too late, after the Government by its officials had employed him in the preceding year and had retained his services for the next year, as those services were very valuable. I state these facts to the Government, and I hope that they will see that justice be done at once, and that they will start a new era, and undo the great injustice which has been done to Captain Giguère.

Mr. FOSTER. If I understand the case rightly, this man of whom the hon. member has spoken was not employed at the graving dock, but at Grosse Isle.

Mr. AMYOT. He was employed by the Government at divers places to dive; but the year previous he was employed by the Government at Grosse Isle, and his services were retained for the present year. But as soon as he had voted against Mr. McGreevy, this fact was reported to Ottawa, and from Ottawa was sent the order to discharge him, and this order was communicated to him by this letter; and so the Government has broken faith with him.

Mr. FOSTER. I have listened to the hon. gentleman, but not being the Minister of the department I cannot give full information with reference to the matter. I will have it looked into, and the answer will be given. I understand that this man was a diver, and, as my hon. friend says, was employed in divers places; but when his services were ended, he was not wanted any longer. I should not think that he was deprived of his pay and taken from his work for any such reason as my hon. friend has given, simply because he voted for some person supporting my hon. friend opposite.

Mr. LAURIER. This case, according to what has been stated by my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), seems to be one of these many cases in which the nefarious influence of the late member for Quebec West was exercised.

Mr. FOSTER. Don't strike a man when he is down.

Mr. LAURIER. This man has been employed for several years, but because at the last election he seceded from his allegiance to the Conservative party and voted for the opponent of the late member for Quebec West he was dismissed summarily and no reason given. He was told that his services were no longer required, without any reason whatever being given for dismissing him. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to say that a man who has been employed by the Government several years, and expects to be continued in its employ, can be dismissed from the service, even if there be no formal engagement, without cause, or reason assigned? The true reason is, no doubt, what has been stated by the hon. member for Bellechasse, that it was because he changed his politics.

Mr. FOSTER. I will try and find the reason for his dismissal, but I cannot subscribe to the doctrine that because the Government employ temporary help the parties employed have acquired a vested right to be continued in office. The Government may dispense with their services for reason at any time. I am not conversant with the reasons in this case.

Mr. AMYOT. I have certificates from the department of the harbour commissioners at Quebec and from divers sea captains as to his great ability, and I will privately give to the Minister the name of the party who came to Ottawa to obtain his dismissal. I do not like to bring the name of that party before the public, because he is not here to defend himself, but will give the information privately to the Minister.

McMULLEN. Under whose certificate is this appropriation made? Who is the engineer in charge? It is rather singular that an hon. gentleman on this side, who is quite conversant with that section of the country, is prepared to challenge the necessity of the expenditure. I would like to know what engineer recommended the work.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Valiquette.

Mr. AMYOT.

Mr. LANGELIER. This is not for the entrance of the dock, but for a certain distance above the entrance, where there is a sand bar.

Mr. GUAY. As there is no French Minister present to give the information, and as I live in that locality, I may state that this money will be well and properly expended, as it is really needed for the accommodation of the small boats which ply between the Island of Orleans and Quebec.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If my hon. friend can assure us that the money will be properly expended, he will give us an assurance we have not had for some time.

Mr. LANGELIER. Who is in charge?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Valiquette, I believe: a very competent engineer.

Mr. LANGELIER. It came out before the Committee that Mr. Laforce Langevin had been employed as an engineer. Is he there still?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Valiquette is the engineer.

Mr. GUAY. Why was Captain Bernier, who was there before Mr. Valiquette, dismissed?

Mr. FOSTER. The information my hon. friend desires was asked for in a motion for papers which are now being prepared and will be down in a day or two.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is not much to be wondered at that we should criticise expenditure in connection with graving docks, because they are institutions in which we have buried a great deal of money.

Mr. FOSTER. Do not go into the docks.

Mr. McMULLEN. No; it is the graves I refer to. We have never been able to exhume any of the money we have buried in those institutions.

River St. Louis, the municipality of St. Clement providing $400..... $2,000

Mr. SCRIVER. Will this be sufficient to complete the works?

Mr. FOSTER. The total estimated cost of the improvements is $4,400, so that it will require $2,000 more to complete.

Mr. SCRIVER. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, —and my remarks are intended as much for your ears as for those of the acting Minister of Public Works and the House, this work being in your own constituency—that very many complaints have reached me from constituents of your own as to the manner in which the money heretofore appropriated has been expended. I have been told—I do not know on what grounds, because I have not made personal examination of the work myself—but I have been told by more than one, apparently well-informed constituents of your own, that the money expended has not been judiciously expended, and that it has been expended under the care of men who are incompetent to supervise the work. The greatest good that might have been obtained from the appropriations has, therefore, not been obtained. If you are not aware of all the facts, I would suggest the propriety, when you next visit your constituency, of giving this matter your personal attention.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is some truth in what the hon. gentleman has just said. The work was commenced by dredging; there was very low water at the beginning of the work, and I believe myself that the Government, not being perfectly au courant of the work done there, some money may have been misspent. Still the work done has been of great importance: and the vote asked now is required simply for this reason: that the Government having deepened what is called the feeder between Lake St. Francis and River St. Louis, some work had to be done last year between the end of the feeder and the parish of St. Louis de Gonzague, to put the water at the same level as it is above. It is asked to-day to continue such work. I say the Government have not put a large enough amount in the Estimates, but still we have to take what they give. The municipality of St. Clement is giving $400. I think the Government should pay the whole cost, because it was the water that carried away the two bridges which it is sought to repair; but the Government have forced this municipalitiy to pay its share. The money at the commencement may not have been spent properly, but the work is a very important one and must be finished.

Coteau Landing Pier $1,500

Mr. MOUSSEAU. How much was spent last year on that wharf?

Mr. FOSTER. The vote was $4,000, and up to 31st December $2,139 was spent.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. I am not opposed to the voting of this sum, but there is an injustice done to the inhabitants of this county. There is a wharf there, and there is a freight shed built on the pier by the Dominion Government, but only one company has the right to use that freight shed. There are two other companies that stop at this wharf, but the steamers, the Garnet and the Chaffee, have no right to go in there and place their passengers and goods in that freight shed. Last May I complained of this, and the Minister of Public Works told me that he would look into it. A month after I spoke to him, and he said he had not thought of it. Now, I would like the Government to promise that the use of this freight shed shall not be confined to the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, because it was built with public money, and I think the other companies who have a right to stop there should also have a right to use that freight shed in behalf of their passengers and their goods. When it is raining, the passengers by the other lines, I believe, can get damages on account of being exposed to the inclemency of the weather.

Mr. FOSTER. I find the facts are partly as stated by my hon. friend, that the wharf is owned by the Government and the shed was built by the Government. The key was given by the foreman in charge by mistake to the officers of the Richelieu Company, but when representation was made in regard to this the key was taken away from their officer and the shed was used by any person who wanted it. That wharf is now being transferred from the Public Works Department to the Marine Department, under whose management it will be, as all the wharves along the river are after they are built. Then it will be carried on for public purposes entirely, and everyone will have an equal right to use it.

General repairs and improvements, harbours and rivers, Quebec..... $10,000

Mr. LAVERGNE. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to certain works which were begun about eight or nine years ago in Black River, in the County of Drummond. In February last I transmitted to the Minister of Public Works a demand from the inhabitants of the place in question asking that a certain appropriation be made for the purpose of completing the works begun on that river. According to the ground laid down by the Minister of Finance, when a work is begun there should be no objection to its completion. The Minister of Public Works solemnly promised me to send an engineer to visit the works and make a report. In July following I wrote to the department, calling the attention of the Minister to the fact that the engineer had not gone there and made a report. I understand that, the session having lasted until the end of June, the Minister had not had time to attend to the matter. In December last I wrote again, calling his attention to the fact, and so far I have only received from the department an acknowledgment of the reception of my letters. Now, I must say that in this matter we have not been treated fairly. I recollect that a few weeks ago the Minister of Justice, speaking in a debate on the timber limit question, stated that whenever members had occasion, on behalf of their constituents, to do any business with the department, they were always treated courteously and with the greatest impartiality. I must say that the hon. Minister who made that statement has, so far as I am concerned, always verified it by his conduct in all dealings that I have had with the Department of Justice. But I think the Department of Public Works, in this instance, has not acted with the same promptness and impartiality. I think the least any department could have done was to send an engineer, as had been promised. I hold in my hands three letters acknowledging receipts of my communications, calling the attention of the department to that fact, and I say the least the department could have done was to send an engineer and make a report, and if the officer reported that my request could not be complied with there would have been an end of the matter. Now, I was told during my election that it was no use sending me to Ottawa, that these works would never be completed, and my constituents were told that they ought to send here a supporter of the Government. As matters have turned out, it seems to me that that view was nearly correct. Perhaps if the hon. gentleman who preceded me in this House for nine years had still been the representative of my county he might have succeeded better than I have done. But I do not think it speaks well for the justice and impartiality which ought to characterize the dealings of the Government that such things can occur, and that people may be able to say to the electors that unless they send a supporter of the Government to Parliament their county can obtain no justice. However, I do not think that consideration weighed much with my electors, since they sent me here by a large majority. Now, I would ask the Minister to give us the particulars of this item of $9,000 for general repairs and improvements of harbours and rivers. I do not suppose that it includes any grant for the river in question: still, I would be very glad if he would give us the particulars.

Mr. FOSTER. This vote is to provide for the repairs and improvements which have been undertaken every year in connection with the piers, breakwaters and other harbour and river works in the Province of Ontario, as necessity arises. The engineers visit the place, and whatever repairs are considered necessary, the expenditure therefor is made out of this vote. But there is not any list of places for which estimates have been taken. This vote is for whatever may turn up during the course of the year.

Mr. LAVERGNE. Then I would ask the Minister to take note of my applications which were sent to the department, one dated 26th February, 1890, another one on the 10th of July, 1890, another one on the 12th of December of the same year, all setting forth these demands. I believe this work is just as necessary as any other work; at least, I believe that the promise which was made to me by the Minister of Public Works ought to be fulfilled, and that an engineer should be sent there to examine these works, which have cost several thousand dollars already, and they should not be allowed to become useless.

Mr. FOSTER. If that promise has been given to my hon. friend it will be carried out, and an engineer will be sent to make a report.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I would like the Minister to put $600 in the Estimates to repair the wharf at Berthier, in my county. The works were begun last year, but were not finished.

Mr. FOSTER. That could be taken out of this vote.

Committee rose; and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Cobourg Harbour, Lake Ontario..... $2,000

Mr. FOSTER. Drop.

Mr. BARRON. Why is this item dropped?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not necessary. I hope the hon. gentleman does not want to increase the expenditure.

Kingston Harbour, Lake Ontario..... $6,000

Mr. CHARLTON. How is it proposed to expend this money?

Mr. FOSTER. This vote is to be applied in continuing the improvements at Kingston during 1892, by proceeding with the removal of Point Frederick shoal, to give 15 feet depth at low water, as recommended by the chief engineer.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is that the shoal at the mouth of the harbour?

Mr. FOSTER. It is in the harbour.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the depth of the water on it now?

Mr. FOSTER. It is a continuation of the work going on in 1889-90.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it to dredge a channel through the shoal?

Mr. FOSTER. The shoal was 1,015 feet long and 35 feet in its greatest width, and had only 9 feet of water at its highest point. Work was commenced on this shoal, because it was deemed more dangerous than Carruthers' shoal, both of which block the harbour entering from the lake, and in storms and fogs vessels often strike there and remain until relieved.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is this expenditure to remove it entirely?

Mr. FOSTER. It is to be removed to that depth.

Mr. CHARLTON. When was the report made with respect to this work?

Mr. FOSTER. During 1890-91, 2,000 cubic feet of rock were removed, and in 1889-90, 233 scow loads.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is the excavation all rock?

Mr. FOSTER. In the chief engineer's report, a comparison is made between this shoal and Carruthers' shoal; and it was decided to proceed with this work first. The chief engineer's report of 14th February, 1883, is referred to.

Mr. CHARLTON. Was it on that report the work was decided on?

Mr. FOSTER. On that shoal rather than the other shoal.

Mr. CHARLTON. Then, on the other shoal nothing has been done?

Mr. FOSTER. Nothing. The estimated total cost of removing 19,729 cubic feet of limestone under water to obtain 15 feet on the shoal is $59,000. The expenditure up to the 31st December last was $49,000 odd. It will require $2,000 in addition to this vote to complete.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the contract price per cubic yard for the removal of the limestone rock?

Mr. FOSTER. It is done by our own dredging plant and our own officers.

Mr. CHARLTON. The cost is about $2.50 per yard.

Mr. MULOCK. What was paid for the removal of the rock last year?

Mr. FOSTER. It was done by our own dredges.

Mr. MULOCK. Did they drill and blast rock?

Mr. FOSTER. There is submarine blasting.

Mr. MULOCK. Is that done by the department on day work?

Mr. FOSTER. It was all done by the department on day work.

Mr. MULOCK. There is no contract work about it?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. MULOCK. In regard to the previous item for Cobourg harbour, I understood the Minister to say that it was dropped because no more work was required to be done at the harbour.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. Who so advised?

Mr. FOSTER. I find that work has been under way there, and that $169,803 had been spent on Cobourg harbour. It has been decided not to make any further appropriations at present.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman said the money was not required; and I asked him whether it was because the work is not needed.

Mr. FOSTER. No further work is needed there.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman say on what advice that statement is made?

Mr. FOSTER. I am stating that before the Committee. I think that should be satisfactory.

Mr. MULOCK. I presume it is on the advice of some person. The Minister has not been there himself.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not been there.

Mr. MULOCK. On whose information is it given to the Committee?

Mr. FOSTER. The Government have decided to make no appropriation for work there at present.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister has said the work was not required. On what evidence is that statement made?

Mr. FOSTER. I have been kind to the hon. gentleman in allowing him to go back to an item not under discussion, and I have answered his questions. He should be satisfied.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not satisfied. It is a matter of courtesy to let me speak to the item. The Minister said no further work is required. I ask whether that statement is based on evidence furnished the department. On what evidence of experts is this statement made?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think my hon. friend can ask anything more than that the Government do not propose to continue this item in the Estimates.

Mr. MULOCK. Is the withholding of the item because the work is not required in the interest of the public?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is inconsistent with the ground that has been held very strongly this afternoon by hon. gentlemen opposite—that is, that the Government must be responsible, and that they cannot put their responsibility off on the shoulders of subordinates.

Mr. MULOCK. You would not accept that doctrine.

Mr. FOSTER. When the statement is given that the Government has come to the conclusion that they do not intend to spend any money this year on that harbour I think it is quite sufficient.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister has not made a candid statement. The Minister made a statement which, to me, is misleading, and I want to know whether a Minister of the Crown can make a misleading statement of the kind?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; Chair.

Mr. OUIMET. I think the hon. gentleman is not in order. He has no right to say that any hon. gentleman in this House is making a misleading statement.

Mr. MULOCK. I said it was misleading to me.

Mr. OUIMET. That is contrary to the rules of this House. It has always been held as an unparliamentary expression, and as the hon. gentleman has been called to order, I would like to have your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MULOCK. I stated that the Minister had made a statement, and that it was to me misleading. That was the statement I made, and I repeat it, and I say that statement is perfectly in order. It may not be misleading to the general public, but to me it was misleading, and that is why I allowed the item to pass without any comment on my part.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. I am perfectly in order to say that I was misled by the statement.

The CHAIRMAN. I supposed that the hon. gentleman meant to say that the Minister misled the House.

Mr. MULOCK. I did not make that statement.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). You qualify it.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not qualify it. I repeat what I said, that the Minister made a statement which was to me misleading.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not responsible for your action of mind.

Mr. MULOCK. I know you are not, but the statement that induced me to allow this item to pass was misleading to me, and I say it for this reason: The Minister first of all said that the item was dropped because the money was not required, and the meaning that he desired to impart, or that any reasonable person would draw from that statement was, that the public service did not require it. That was the conclusion that I drew from his statement, and I now learn that this conclusion was not correct. I am informed by the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. Hargraft) that the harbour is in need of dredging, and that being the case, I simply asked for some accurate information as to whether the Minister in making that statement based it upon evidence furnished to him, that the harbour was not in need of dredging, or whether he was simply dropping it for some arbitrary reason. On that point I asked the information. Is it being dropped just from the arbitrary decision of the Government, or is it not required in the public interest?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has had the courtesy extended to him of asking a question that was not under discussion, and, as he has had my answer, I think he might drop that.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister got the item passed on information which has misled me.

Some hons. MEMBERS. Order; chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman should remember that this item has been struck out of the Estimates. We were discussing the next item, and I do not understand how the hon. gentleman can get any other answer than the one given by the Minister, namely: that the Government find it proper not to carry on that amount in the Estimates. I do not see that any other answer could be given, and I would like the hon. gentleman not to continue the discussion further.

Mr. HARGRAFT. I know that the work is required there.

Mr. MULOCK. I move that the Committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. The Minister cannot get an item passed in this way——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot move that.

Mr. MULOCK. Oh, yes; I can.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman moves that, he should not discuss it, but we should take a vote.

Mr. MULOCK. I have a right to speak to the motion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. I propose to speak to the motion, and it is quite in order. We have arrived at a stage in the Estimates at which an item was allowed to pass because the Minister made a statement which struck me as an uncandid statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman wants to speak to the motion that the Committee do rise, he must give the reason why he wants the Committee to rise, and not to speak to an item that has already been passed.

Mr. CHARLTON. I beg your pardon, Mr. Chairman. I always understood that a motion to rise to report progress and ask leave to sit again gives the utmost latitude of debate. On the Franchise Bill of 1885, in Committee of the Whole, the utmost latitude was given to the speakers, and that is the rule, in my opinion, with reference to a motion of this kind.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. On a motion of this kind the hon. gentleman making the motion cannot talk upon anything else than the item we are discussing, and the item under the consideration of the House now is the appropriation of Kingston Harbour in Lake Ontario.

Mr. MULOCK. Mr. Chairman, the Committee is asked now to rise and report progress, and the reason why I make that motion is this: We have passed an item owing to a representation made to the Committee which, at all events, as far as I am concerned, caused me to come to a different conclusion as to the reason of the Government dropping it than that which ought to have been drawn.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to submit this matter to the consideration of the House.

An hon. MEMBER. Speak to the question.

Mr. MULOCK. I am speaking to the question. I say we have been induced to advance in the Estimates——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is not the question.

Mr. MULOCK. It is a reason for not proceeding further. I maintain that in passing these Estimates we are entitled to have a full and clear statement, so that the reasons assigned cannot possibly be misconstrued. If, for example, a Minister of the Crown assigned other than the real reason——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; chair.

Mr. MULOCK. I am perfectly in order. I say that a Minister's conduct in that regard is open to comment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. You are not discussing the question before the Committee.

Mr. MULOCK. I am discussing what is correct, and I say that unless Ministers make correct statements they cannot be allowed to pass their Estimates here.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I see the point the hon. genteman wants to arrive at, and the same thing happened to me the other day. I was under the impression that the Government were going to——

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Order, Mr. Chairman. You are out of order in referring to a past debate.

Mr. DEPUTY CHAIRMAN. I am giving an explanation of what I am coming to. The hon. gentleman was perfectly satisfied when the item was first struck off, and he accepted that decision.

Mr. MULOCK. Because of the statement made.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We were discussing the item for the Kingston harbour, and it happened that the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hargraft) came into the House and instructed the hon. gentleman, when he began to refer then to an item which had already been passed. The hon. gentleman may do that on concurrence, but he is out of order in discussing it now.

Mr. MULOCK. I will accept your ruling, but I wish to make, at the same time, this observation: That I shall not be able to accept the representations made by the Minister of Finance upon all occasions.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I heard the Minister of Finance say that he had extended a courtesy to the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) in answering a question on an item which had already been passed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. member for North York was discussing that item, and then he made an appeal——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; chair.

Mr. LANDERKIN. He asked the House to discuss that matter.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has heard the decision, and I hope he will abide by it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. True, I have heard the decision, but I want to speak about the reference to the question. It was thought desirable that my hon. friend should be allowed the privilege of making what observations he had——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. It has been decided that we cannot go back to that item.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Then I do not think that the hon Minister of Finance should claim any credit for being courteous to the hon. member for North York.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CHARLTON. If we expect to make progress in our Estimates, I think it would be well to allow a little latitude in these matters, and not draw the line too strictly.

Mr. McMULLEN. In connection with this Kingston item, I would ask the hon. Minister of Finance how it is that we pay so much money for diving there. Three or four divers are employed continuously. What is the reason?

Mr. FOSTER. All this shoal about which we have been talking is submarine, and is limestone, which has to be blasted by submarine blastings, and divers have to go down to carry on these operations.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that there is a charge of 14 days' hire of a tug at $4 a day, from W. R. and S. Anglin. What is that used for?

Mr. FOSTER. To attend to the dredge. When the rock is raised it is taken away, and the tug is used for that purpose.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is the engineer in charge of the Kingston harbour?

Mr. FOSTER. Captain Fall.

Owen Sound Harbour.....$16,000

Mr. CHARLTON. I notice that the appropriation last year was $20,000. I would ask the Minister if that sum was all expended?

Mr. FOSTER. $17,000 was expended up to December 31st, 1890. This vote of $16,000 is to provide for completing the harbour works. The municipality contributed $20,000 towards the work.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it supposed that this will complete it?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the character of the work for which this money has been expended?

Mr. MASSON. Perhaps I may explain to the hon. gentleman. The contract which this sum of $16,000 is required to complete, and which was let some two years ago, is for dredging a portion of the west bank, which extends the accommodation of the harbour to a uniform width of about 350 feet. The first vote taken was to pile the west bank. That was delayed on the report of the engineer that it would be advisable to straighten it before it was piled, as the extra accommodation would be soon wanted. Therefore, it was delayed for a year. The town contributed $20,000. A certain portion of land had to be purchased, which caused some delay, and the work was started a year and two months ago, and it is now just about completed. The dredging is all complete, and the piling work I think is also about complete. There is some little work still to be done.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the amount of land purchased, and what was the purchase price?

Mr. MASSON. I cannot give the exact figures.

Mr. CHARLTON. Can the Minister give the figures?

Mr. FOSTER. The land and buildings were estimated at about $22,000.

Mr. CHARLTON. What was the character of the buildings on this land?

Mr. MASSON. There was a tannery and a pottery which had to be removed.

Mr. CHARLTON. Was that tannery in operation at the time?

Mr. MASSON. I think at the time of the expropriation it was in actual operation. At the time the scheme was inaugurated it was not, but it was leased.

Mr. CHARLTON. It struck me, when I visited Owen Sound before this land was purchased, that the buildings on this property were not very valuable. Property must be very valuable in Owen Sound if that small strip of land was worth $20,000.

Mr. MASSON. I am happy to agree with the hon. gentleman that land is very valuable in that portion of Owen Sound.

Mr. CHARLTON. Who was the owner of this land?

Mr. MASSON. The tannery belonged to a man named Griffith, the pottery to a man named Lemon, and there were other persons whose names I do not remember.

Mr. CHARLTON. What course was taken in the expropriation of this land? Were arbitrators appointed?

Mr. MASSON. I think half a dozen business men of the town were asked to value it, and they put in separate valuations; these valuations were placed in the hands of the Minister, who, on behalf of the Government and the town, negotiated the purchase.

Mr. CHARLTON. Who was the solicitor?

Mr. MASSON. John Creasor, now judge of the county.

Mr. LANDERKIN. We had an instance the other night in the case of a small village in the constituency of the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins), where the revenue was $400 or $500, and where the Government both paid for the site and erected the building.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am quite in order. We had the case also of Laprairie, which is not quite so important a place as Owen Sound. But the Government bought the site there and expended a lot of money erecting a building, while in Owen Sound we have to expend our own money; and moreover, in the County of Grey we have to build our own railways and donate to the public money the public should donate to us. Still, hon. gentlemen opposite are satisfied.

Mr. CHARLTON. Were the council of Owen Sound satisfied with the price at which the property was purchased?

Mr. MASSON. I think they were pretty well satisfied with the prices, except that of Griffith. The general impression was that Griffith's was perhaps too high. Of course, there was no definite consultation with the council, as a body, as to the various purchased properties; but before the money was paid by the town to the Minister of Public Works the town, of their own accord, had an estimate made, and it was on their estimate that the $20,000 was paid as an equivalent for the purchase of all the land. The town could not expropriate for that purpose, and for that reason paid the sum of $20,000 into the hands of the Government, the Government agreeing to expropriate if necessary, and by threatening expropriation they were enabled to cut the prices first demanded down about 50 per cent.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the depth of water now in the harbour?

Mr. MASSON. Sixteen feet.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it supposed to have capacity enough for the future wants?

Mr. MASSON. It depends on how the wants of the place increase. It has enough for the present. All the harbours on these waters have of late years been suffering a great deal through the lowering of the waters in Georgian Bay and Lake Huron. We have been caused a good deal of trouble in the Sound on account of the gradual yearly decrease of water. At present the water is some 3 feet lower than it was three years ago, and that lowering is general over all the ports of the lake and Georgian Bay. I made personal enquiry, and found the decrease universal over these two waters. Many reasons have been given. At first the old settlers thought nothing of it; they said that the water rose and fell in a cycle of about seven years. But when it has come to a continual gradual falling off for ten years, the cycle theory seems to be falling through. Another reason has been given, which, if true, is one that will demand attention later on. That is, that the straightening and deepening of the channel out of Lake Huron has caused the outflow of water to increase to such an extent that it is getting out much easier than it did before and the water is gradually lowering. If that is the case, it will, perhaps, have to be met by obstructing the channel in that locality.

Mr. CHARLTON. With a fall of 3 feet, have you still 15 feet in the harbour?

Mr. MASSON. Yes; because we have increased the dredging there.

Mr. CHARLTON. Would the Minister give any information he has with regard to the negotiations between the Government and the city council concerning this contribution?

Mr. FOSTER. I have no information on that point. This work has been going on for a number of years and votes have been taken, and those explanations have probably been given before.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is a recent arrangement.

Mr. MASSON. The arrangement was made in 1888.

Mr. FOSTER. In 1888 there was a small appropriation, and every year since appropriations have been regular.

Mr. CHARLTON. Will the hon. gentleman bring that information down to-morrow?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In Owen Sound the people have to contribute their own money in order to get public buildings. We find the same thing in the town of Orillia. These are important growing towns, and the Government compel them to furnish sites and money to aid public works, but in the less important places, such as those we were discussing the other night, the Government buy the sites and equipment and put up the buildings. Upon what principle is the Government guided? Is there one system for one district and another for another?

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that we paid last year about $5,000 for the purchase of land for increasing the harbour. What rate per acre was paid? The Minister said we spent $15,000 last year, and I see that there is included in that amount $6,280 for the purchase of land, and $768 for law costs in that connection. What amount of land is included in the purchase?

Mr. MASSON. The amount paid last year would be the balance of the original purchase. It was all made at the same time; but, owing to defects in the titles of certain properties, on account of infancy, payment of these was delayed.

Mr. McMULLEN. What increase of acreage have you by the purchase made?

Mr. MASSON. I cannot give you the exact size, but it is about fifteen hundred feet frontage on the river, and has a width of one hundred feet, which is about the length of a municipal lot. We had, therefore, to pay frontage price all down the river.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it west or east?

Mr. MASSON. It is west of the river, immediately opposite the Canadian Pacific Railway station.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can easily understand that, when people are selling out property of that kind to a Government, they try to get all they can. There were a number of valuators appointed, and I see that we spent $150 in commissions to valuators for the purpose of making an estimate in this case. Were those valuators chosen by us, or were they chosen mutually by the two parties concerned?

Mr. MASSON. They got their appointment, I think, from Mr. Creasor, who was acting for the Government, but he appointed them on the recommendation of the Board of Trade. I think all but one were recommended by the Board of Trade.

Mr. McMULLEN. Did the other parties pay their share of the expense, or did the Government pay it all?

Mr. MASSON. The Government paid the expenses.

Mr. McMULLEN. I know a good deal about the Owen Sound harbour, and I think this is a very proper appropriation. Still, I think it would be in the interest of the Owen Sound harbour and the country for the Government to make a thorough and searching investigation as to the reason for the filling up of that harbour. I have spoken to a number of gentlemen about Owen Sound harbour, and they all agree that, until some change is made in regard to the creek which comes down from the hill, and washes down a lot of sand and stuff like that into the harbour, it will be very difficult to keep it clean. That is the most important harbour on the Georgian Bay, and Owen Sound is improving and becoming an important place, but I believe it would be wise for the Government to get some experienced engineer to make a searching and exhaustive investigation of the surroundings of that place, and to see if something could not be done in the matter, perhaps by turning the stream by a circuitous route. I am told that the difficulty in keeping that harbour open and the reason for this expenditure is largely owing to the sediment which is carried down by that stream into that harbour. My hon. friend, who comes from Owen Sound, will, no doubt, be able to speak in regard to that. It is highly desirable that this harbour should be looked after; and, while I admit the necessity of increasing the accommodation there, I think the price paid is large. If, however, it has been settled by arbitration, the country cannot complain, and I know that a number of the men who are arbitrators are honourable men, and would simply do what is right in the interests of their town and of the country. I would like to know whether the Government have made any recent investigation as to the cause of the filling up of the Owen Sound harbour?

Mr. MASSON. I am very glad my hon. friend has given me the chance to say that the charge in reference to the filling up or the harbour has been long ago exploded. That was an old slander which was introduced and formulated against the harbour by rival places. The idea got possession of the officers of the Public Works Department, and when I first had to press the claims of the Owen Sound harbour I was met with the statement that it was a place which the town itself should keep clear, because the filling up was a yearly occurrence, and was caused by débris coming down the river. I knew that was unfounded, and I represented to the municipal authorities that it was necessary that that should be proved to be incorrect, and that the town should have a careful survey made of the harbour. A survey was made, and it appeared that where the dredging had been done some twenty years ago, far up the river, up to the swing bridge, and down to the harbour bar, the turning places at the extremity of the harbour were wider and deeper than they were below, and that the dredging done twenty years ago had not filled up, except to a very trifling extent. Dredging has been done since. A contractor did some dredging about twelve years ago, and it was supposed that he had left a certain depth of water, but a vessel grounded there, and it was said that the channel had been filling up. A careful survey of that spot showed that this was a hard part of the channel, and that the contractor had taken his dredges on one side of that hard spot, and to make up for it had dredged elsewhere 20 feet instead of 16 feet. This is a small stream which is fed from springs which issue from the solid rock. Immediately above the harbour is a mill-dam which dams the water back for three-quarters of a mile or a mile, and that is sufficient to keep back any débris which might come down in the river. From Ingall's Falls down there is no débris at all, so there is no filling in of the harbour to speak of. Of course, all rivers will bring down some débris, but I have known of none that bring down so little as this.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am glad to hear this statement of the hon. gentleman, because, as I have said, Owen Sound harbour is the most important harbour on the Georgian Bay. In fact, I believe that the other harbours on the Georgian Bay coast will have to be abandoned for any extensive trade, but the Owen Sound harbour, if the North-West trade increases, as we hope it will, will be a very important harbour. I am glad to learn that the Grand Trunk is trying to reach the harbour as well as the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that will increase the trade there, so the harbour should be kept in a proper condition. I am glad to hear the statement of the hon. gentleman in reference to the water. I have no doubt, as the hon. gentleman has stated, that there has been a good deal of rivalry between Owen Sound and other points on the Georgian Bay, but I am glad to learn that the condition of the harbour in reference to the débris is what the hon. gentleman says it is. I hope the money voted to-night will be properly and judiciously used, and that the harbour will be very much improved by this expenditure, because it is a very important harbour.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister has not yet given the information which was asked for as to whether the council for Owen Sound, who have contributed towards this improvement, were consulted as to the selection of a site and the cost of it. When I asked him to answer that question awhile ago he said that anybody in the House who had the information might give it. Now, we expect the information, and are accustomed to get it from the Minister, but of late the hon. the Finance Minister has fallen into the habit of refusing or neglecting to give information, and occasionally it has to be supplied by one of his supporters. I think he would find that, on the average, it is to his advantage, to the advantage of the Government, and a saving of time to the House, if he will at once, on being asked a question, either give the information required, if he has it, or if he has not got it, to say so, and tell us when he can get it. Of course, this not being his special department, he cannot be expected to have everything at his fingers' ends, but if he will admit that, and make enquiry, most of the information can be obtained on the spot from the deputy in attendance on the floor of the House, and the rest of it can be obtained in a short time from the department. He will find that that course will facilitate him in getting through with his Estimates, and he will not facilitate the business by making catch answers, such as he made to me when I asked him to answer this question. It is not becoming to his dignity, or to the dignity of the House, to answer in that manner. Now, I think it is of some importance to know whether the council of Owen Sound were consulted about this matter. It is natural they should be consulted, seeing they bear part of the expense, and they are also more likely to be able to judge as to the proper selection of a site and as to the cost. The information given by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Masson) appears to be pretty full, but it should have come in an official way from the Minister. This particular question can only be answered properly and officially by the Minister himself. I think the Minister will see that it is proper for him to give that information. Is he prepared now to give it, or to say that he does not know?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not clearly understood my hon. friend's question. He took so much time in reading his lecture that he forgot to ask his question.

Mr. CASEY. I did not know the hon. Minister was hard of hearing. I have stated the question very distinctly. The question is, whether the Government consulted the council of Owen Sound, who, I understand, contributed something towards the cost of these works, as to the site and the price of land bought?

Mr. FOSTER. I think, on that point, my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) received his answer and was perfectly satisfied with it. In addition to that, I promised him that all the papers would be brought down, and I told him, as my hon. friend may recollect if he was in the House, that this item of expenditure having commenced three years ago, at that time, and in previous sessions of this House, that information was given to the House, and that matter was discussed. But as the member for North Norfolk does not recollect it, I promised to bring it down, and it will be on the Table to-morrow.

Mr. CASEY. Certainly I did not hear the Minister give any answer to that question, otherwise I would not have asked him again about it.

Port Hope Harbour—Repairs..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. It is proposed to apply this vote in continuing the works of repair commenced in 1889 on the superstructure of the railway or central wharf, and to make general repairs to the east and west of the piers in the harbour of Port Hope. The total length of the crib-work and superstructure is 1,200 feet. Previous to the 1st of February, 1891, $5,482 have been expended in connection with the work, and this vote is to continue. It is a work of repair.

Mr. CASEY. Is this work being done by day's work?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. Why is it not done under contract?

Mr. FOSTER. It is entirely out of repair; it is tearing off and replacing the superstructure, and it is difficult to estimate for that.

Mr. CASEY. Even in repairs you can give the work to be done by contract.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not easy, at the inception of the work, to stipulate what is to be done and what is to be paid for it.

Mr. CHARLTON. How much has been spent here altogether?

Mr. FOSTER. $89,000, not including the present vote.

River Ottawa—Improvement of steamboat channel through Narrows at Petawawa, above Pembroke..... $1,500

Mr. SPEAKER. I want to suggest to the Government, whoever may be the Minister in charge of this department, that whatever engineer is charged with the expenditure of this small sum should put himself in communication with the owners of steamboats in that particular locality, so that the greatest advantage may be derived from the expenditure of this money. Of course, it will be impossible, in a small appropriation such as this, to make an extensive survey: but I think that if the engineer who is charged with looking after this expenditure will put himself in communication with the owners of steamboats running on that particular route, the places where dredging is most required can be pointed out, and the greatest advantage can be derived from this small expenditure.

Mr. CHARLTON. What depth of water is required there?

Mr. SPEAKER. The depth of water required to be obtained is about 8 feet at low water.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is considerable dredging necessary to be done to obtain that depth?

Mr. SPEAKER. The dredging provided for in this vote is in that portion of the river which is studded with islands. Small shoals are required to be dredged out, so as to make the channel an uniform depth at low water.

Mr. DEVLIN. I do not object to this vote; but is it for the purpose of deepening that portion of the river?

Mr. SPEAKER. I have intimated to the hon. member for North Norfolk that the object to be obtained is this: My hon. friend will know that 5 or 6 miles above Pembroke there commences a series of islands, and that the river is studded for three or four miles with islands, more or less rocky. The channel is somewhat intricate for about 4 miles between the Lower Narrows and Petawawa, and it is for the purpose of taking out some of the shoals, and thereby straightening the channel, that this expenditure is needed.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. DEVLIN. The suggestion I was about to make may not be altogether pertinent to the point, but it is pertinent to the River Ottawa, and it is this: I understand that on the north shore of the Ottawa River, a little below this city, the channel is rapidly filling up, owing to the fact that the Government dredges which are employed on that part of the river usually dump the earth in the north channel, and, as a consequence, in a very short time, perhaps in a year or two, that will have to be dredged out again. I called the attention of the Minister of Public Works, at the beginning of the session, to the fact that it might be well to give a little consideration to the demand made in connection with the channel between Aylmer and Pembroke. The channel is filling to such an extent that the wharf at Aylmer cannot be reached.

Belleville—To complete harbour works.. $3,900

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the character of this work?

Mr. FOSTER. This is for the proposed dam, 825 feet long, from the island in the River Moira to the mainland on the eastern side, on condition that the local authorities undertake the protection of the island shores with crib-work.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the object of the work?

Mr. FOSTER. To increase the scour through the channel, dredging the mouth of the river, especially at low water, to keep it clear of sawdust and débris.

Mr. CHARLTON. By heading the water off?

Mr. FOSTER. By directing it down one channel.

Toronto Harbour Works. $75,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This item had better stand.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; this will stand.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister says this item will stand, and I have no objection to it standing. Will the Minister let us have notice when he will bring it up? These debatable items are allowed to stand and then brought on unexpectedly, when it may suit the convenience of the Government. This is an item of very great importance, and one on which a good deal will be said. Will the Minister mention, a day in advance, the time it will come on? I propose to discuss it fully.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the hon. gentleman is right in his imputations that we are trying to get through the debateable items by bringing them on when certain persons are not here. It may be that some items go through when the hon. gentleman is not here to discuss them. It is impossible to slip this item through. I do not propose to do that.

Mr. MULOCK. All I want is to know the day before.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I have no doubt there will be discussion.

Mr. MULOCK. Then it will be mentioned the the day before?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt there will be a discussion. It has come up now in the ordinary course at a time when we would have a very fair opportunity of discussing it. My hon. friend's request is a reasonable one, that due notice be given.

Mr. FOSTER. I have asked it to stand to-night, and it is quite right I should give notice when it is coming up.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If it is understood that notice will be given, or in event of the hon. gentleman bringing it up suddenly, that he will not object to let it stand if our friends are out of the way, it is all right.

Mr. MULOCK. Then the Minister says it will be mentioned the day before it is brought up?

Mr. FOSTER. I will actually go so far as to send my hon. friend notice the day before.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I also suggest that notice be sent to the member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn).

Mr. FOSTER. He is always here.

Mr. LANDERKIN. He is engaged in the Quebec railway investigation, and until he gets through that investigation it will be scarcely fair to bring this item on.

Mr. McMULLEN. I ask the Minister of Finance if he will kindly lay on the Table a report which the Minister of Public Works had prepared, under the inspection of engineers, two or three years ago, at the time the breakwater was erected there. The hon. gentleman will remember that I moved for papers with respect to blind-bolts used in connection with the breakwater. The different portions of the work were to be thoroughly bolted together with bolts going through. In place of that, when the work was inspected, after the contractors had been paid, they were found to be blind-bolts, a head at one side with a piece of bolt, with a nut added, at the other. The Minister of Public Works stated that he would make a thorough investigation, and lay it before the House. I should like the Minister to obtain that report, so that we can ascertain the amount of loss sustained at that time.

Little Current..... $10,000

Mr. CHARLTON. What is this work?

Mr. FOSTER. This vote is called for to make provision to continue during 1891-92 the works to increase, by certain submarine blasting, the width of the steamboat channel at Little Current to 15 feet at ordinary low water, and 14 feet at extremely low water, so as to enable vessels to pass through with safety at all times.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the width of the channel?

Mr. FOSTER. 300 feet.

Mr. CHARLTON. How much is it proposed to make it?

Mr. FOSTER. 500 feet.

Southampton—To complete..... $1,500

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the nature of the work being done?

Mr. FOSTER. This is to complete the work under contract there in connection with the proposed extension of the landing pier.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Southampton is a harbour of refuge, is it not?

Mr. FOSTER. It is a harbour, anyway.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not wish to raise any particular objection to the vote on the expenditure for the harbour at Southampton: but I just wish to call the attention of the Committee to the fact that Southampton is a port where there is very little business done. The fact is that, I believe, it is one of the smallest ports as regards business on Lake Huron. As I said before, I do not wish to object to the expenditure, because even a small place ought to be looked after and proper provision made for doing safely the business that is done: but I want to draw the attention of the Committee to the fact that there ought to be something like equality and fair-play in making these appropriations, and that while these small harbours are attended to, that larger and more important ones ought not to be neglected. Now, Sir, it has come to my knowledge that the harbour of Cobourg, on Lake Ontario, one of the most important harbours on Lake Ontario, and a harbour on which a very large volume of business is done, is in a very unsatisfactory condition. I am credibly informed on the best of authority that vessels entering and leaving, bringing in coal and taking out grain, are pretty frequently running aground. I am told that on the best authority, and I say that while we should not neglect the small places, yet it is surely a matter of importance that such a large and important harbour as that of Cobourg should not altogether receive the go-by, but that sufficient provision should be made for doing safely the business there.

Mr. MULOCK. What amount has been expended by the Government on Southampton harbour?

Mr. FOSTER. This amount of $1,500 is to complete, and the expenditure so far has been $35,000.

Mr. MULOCK. How was the $8,500 voted last year expended?

Mr. FOSTER. Up to 1888, $24,230; in 1888, $1,400; in 1889, $1,800; in 1890, $3,000; and last year a vote of $8,500 was made, of which $4,366 was spent up to the 31st September. The object was to make this proposed extension of the landing pier and a basin 15 feet deep at low water.

Mr. MULOCK. Who was the contractor?

Mr. FOSTER. Nicholson & Bates, of Toronto. They were the lowest tenderers.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was not there a portion of that harbour washed away?

Mr. FOSTER. I am informed that there was a small portion of the breakwater washed away.

Mr. HARGRAFT. I understand that there is only about one vessel goes into that harbour every year.

An hon. MEMBER. That is not so.

Mr. HARGRAFT. I heard so, and if the Government is spending money on small harbours like that, which are not of much importance, they should consider the necessities of the large and important harbour of Cobourg. I know that the harbour of Cobourg is full of weeds, and is badly in need of dredging.

Georgian Bay—Removal of Robertson Rocks in main passage between Clapperton and Croker's Island..... $2,500

Mr. CHARLTON. What is this for

Mr. MASSON. It is for removing a rock between Mudge Bay and Gore Bay. Vessels formerly had to go around Clapperton Island, but they discovered a passage inside of the island, which is very narrow and dangerous, and this appropriation will make it a safe harbour.

Mr. CHARLTON. How much will it shorten the distance?

Mr. MASSON. About two hours.

Beaverton Wharf.....$5,000

Mr. ALLISON. I would like to ask is this the Beaverton that is located on the south-east corner of Lake Simcoe?

Mr. FOSTER. This is the Beaverton in North Ontario.

Mr. ALLISON. Beaverton is a very rich little town, and it certainly cannot be for the purpose of charity that you are building this wharf, and Beaverton is on the lake, and this cannot be for a refuge. There are a few boats sailing on that lake; I think two small steamers, some skiffs, some canoes, and a few little sailing boats, and a scow. I would like to ask who represents that county? Is he a Conservative or a Reformer?

Mr. FOSTER. A Conservative represents that county.

Mr. ALLISON. Oh, then, it is no use to oppose the item.

Mr. CHARLTON. I doubt the necessity of going into river and harbour improvements at Beaverton, when the shipping, as represented by my friend from Lennox (Mr. Allison), consists of some scows and a few canoes. I think you had better take this appropriation and transfer it to Cobourg, where there seems to be some necessity for it.

Mr. BARRON. I have a communication here in connection with this work, which I had better read, and if the Minister of Finance wishes, I will let him know the gentleman who writes to me. It is as follows:—

"In the above connection you have probably heard something before, but in placing this matter before you for information I do so for the purpose of ascertaining, if possible, in the public interest, why this work has cost between three and four thousand dollars more than the original estimate, why a political partizan of the rankest type was appointed as inspector, without possessing the necessary knowledge of such work, and if it has been passed by the Government inspector why it was so, seeing that the work was in anything other than a satisfactory state. The question why the original survey was departed from is one of considerable importance to this community, for it in point of fact has the result of defeating, in a great measure, the intent and purpose of the wharf as at first projected. The wharf was to have been placed at the north side, the entrance to the Beaver River. I understand the engineer and surveyor located it there, an excellent bottom being found on which to build, profiles being made for this location. Had it been placed there the Midland Railway would have gained access to it and it would greatly have facilitated shipping at this point. Some mysterious influence was brought to bear in the matter, however, and its location altered to the south side the river mouth, with the result that the railway will not now approach it, and for most purposes other than pleasure it is practically worthless. The village gave a bonus of $1,500 towards this work, with the hope that it would prove of great benefit to the public. Again, its present location has given a very insecure foundation. Even before the cribs were finished several of them settled out of level several feet, and instead of being raised and properly placed, the superstructure was built on the inclined plane by the assistance of a few wedges on the low side. I understand the contractor stated he was guaranteed a solid bottom, and when it was not there it did not concern him how the job went, or something to that effect."

Mr. CHARLTON. Now, this letter, I will ask the House to take my word for it, is written by a gentleman, a most honourable man, who is not at all inclined to find fault where there is no ground for fault being found. If my information is correct, the change was made from one locality on the lake shore to another, whereby a great advantage was given to the contractor, and he was enabled to put in a claim for extras which he otherwise would not have been able to put in, and was thereby enabled to recoup himself for what he would have lost by taking the original contract at too low a figure. That brings us back to this Government's method of doing business, so far as public works are concerned. The habit of this Government is to grant contracts to favourite contractors for low sums to the detriment of honest contractors, and then to make up to them the deficiency in the way they have done in this particular case. If there is any truth in this statement, a most serious wrong has been done, simply for the purpose of putting money into the pockets of a favourite contractor. I would not read this letter but for the fact that it is written to me by a gentleman of undoubted integrity, who has the confidence of the community in which he lives, and who I know would not write that which he did not believe to be true.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman's letter has gone on record, and I will see that it is considered. The allegations in it may be true or may be not. I am informed that the site was chosen because of the convenience of being on the side where the town of Beaverton was situated. If it had been placed on the other side it would have been necessary to have had a bridge at an additional expense. I am told that the contractor is one of the most reliable that the Public Works Department have had to deal with—I think, Mr. Porter. I believe he feels that he has been put to very large expenses which he had not contemplated, and he has made a claim for extras, which is now under adjudication.

Mr. BARRON. The hon. gentleman has not yet answered the statement of facts that I have made.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot do that. I would have to refer that to the officers of the department.

Mr. BARRON. Then ought we not to have some person here to give us information?

Mr. FOSTER. We give all we can.

Mr. BARRON. Any person can do that.

Mr. FOSTER. I have always found that it is easier to ask questions than to answer them.

Mr. BARRON. The hon. member has not told us why the change was made at all.

Mr. FOSTER I have told you why the change was made.

Mr. BARRON. Oh, no. The hon. gentleman told us why the site was selected, where the wharf was finally built, but he has not told us why an improper site was selected in the first place. If I am informed correctly, the change is a detrimental one. The railway cannot get to the place at all, if the statements in this letter are correct, and it is written by a man who has no political feeling at all, but merely from an independent standpoint. But if the hon. gentleman will change places with me, and let me take his place, I will tell him why the change was made.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be too costly.

Mr. BARRON. The reason was to favour a favoured contractor, and no other reason in the world. The fact is, honest contractors cannot get any show with this Government at all. Here is one right in front of me (Mr. Gibson).

Mr. FOSTER. He says he has had a contract.

Mr. BARRON. You could not help yourselves, because he got it when the favoured ones did not tender; and what was the result of giving him a contract? You had good work done, and not a dollar of the public money was lost. That is the effect of giving a contract to gentlemen on the Reform side. But in this case, to use a vulgar expression, there has been a "nigger in the fence," there is no question about it; and if the hon. Minister of Finance undertook to find the real facts, he would perhaps be astonished and ashamed himself.

Mr. FOSTER. Send me over the letter. I will not divulge the name of the writer, and I will have a categorical answer made to each of the statements contained in it.

Mr. BARRON. Will the hon. gentleman let the item stand?

Mr. FOSTER. I will bring down the answer, and I will not wait till concurrence.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. member for North Victoria states that the original site for this pier was changed, and I can only express my surprise that such a material change as that should take place in connection with a simple work of this kind. I should like to know on whose recommendation the original site was chosen?

Mr. FOSTER. I am informed that the first site was chosen and recommended by the chief engineer of the department, and that, as between the two sites, there is no difference as regards their fitness for a wharf. Either of them is a valuable site; but, on representation of the townspeople that the site first chosen would necessitate the building of a bridge, and consequently increase the cost, it was changed to the site upon which the town is, and that change was made on the recommendation of the chief engineer.

Mr. MULOCK. It appears to me that the best position should have been chosen before inviting tenders. Was the contract let before or after the change?

Mr. FOSTER. Before the change.

Mr. MULOCK. Did the change give rise to a claim for extras?

Mr. FOSTER. There has been no change in the contract. The site was simply changed, and the contractor put the wharf upon the new site.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the contractor make any charge for extras by reason of the change of site?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. BARRON. The information which the Finance Minister gives is not exactly that which was given by the late Minister of Public Works. In reply to questions put by me that hon. gentleman said:

"Contractor, David Porter. Contract price, $7,500. Additional work was asked for by the Government, being the filling between the two outer blocks of the structure, for strengthening the same, and adding to the protection of vessels lying there. The same contractor got the additional work. In the case of additional works, arrangements are always made with the contractor for their execution."

So that additional work was asked for and done on the first site, and the site was afterwards changed.

Mr. FOSTER. There was no work done on the first site, and the answer of the Minister does not say there was.

Mr. BARRON. The letter says work was done on the first site.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not responsible for the letter.

Mr. BARRON. You are responsible for the facts.

Mr. FOSTER. I am giving you the facts.

Mr. MULOCK. What was the amount of the original contract and the contract for additions?

Mr. FOSTER. The total probable cost of the wharf is estimated at $8,000. There was no work done on the first site chosen. A contract was let for the building of a wharf of certain dimensions and in a certain way, and when the site was changed, exactly the same kind of a wharf was to be built on the new site, and there was no change in the contract. It was simply a transfer of the work from one site to an other. It was then found that in addition to the plan, some filling in between the sides was necessary. This filling in would have been necessary on the first site just as well as on the second. All that the extra work amounted to was $500.

Mr. MULOCK. How is it this filling in was not mentioned when letting the contract?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend no doubt finds it often happens, when he gives contracts for erecting buildings himself, that some improvements will suggest themselves afterwards.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the precise reason for our undertaking to construct a wharf in this inland water? We have a vast number of lakes in Ontario, over a thousand, I believe, and a good many of the surrounding inhabitants would like to have wharves built on these lakes, no doubt. Why, in particular, was this little inland lake selected to have a wharf provided for it?

Mr. FOSTER. It is with a view of enabling a large fleet of steam vessels, tugs and passenger and freight boats on Lake Simcoe and Lake Couchiching to call at Beaverton. In 1889, Parliament appropriated $2,000 for this work, on the condition that the locality would appropriate an equal sum. Before proceeding with the dredging, the chief engineer reported that in order to get seven feet in depth a channel of 1,300 feet would have to be opened at a cost of $23,000. The chief engineer therefore advised that the construction of this wharf be undertaken instead of going on with the dredging and protecting the channel as asked for by the inhabitants.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has any other work of a similar kind been done on this lake, or is this the solitary case?

Mr. FOSTER. I think this is the only wharf of the kind.

Mr. O'BRIEN. This lake is of very considerable extent, about thirty miles square, and there is a considerable local traffic upon it, and the side of the lake on which this wharf is constructed is exposed. The inhabitants have repeatedly built wharves at their own expense: but, owing to the action of the ice, those wharves have been washed away. If the Government is justified in making any expenditure of this kind and placing wharves of this description on waters of this description, this expenditure would be justified.

Mr. BARRON. The hon. gentleman ought to admit that no expenditure of this kind is justified.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I did not say so.

Mr. BARRON. The Minister of Finance should agree to that, and the Minister of Justice also, because this brings up the question of the jurisdiction of the Ontario Government.

Mr. O'BRIEN. How does the hon. gentleman prove that? Lake Simcoe is a navigable lake as much as Lake Ontario.

Mr. BARRON. That is a question to be settled in the courts in a very short time; but the inland waters are controlled by the Provincial Government. We have perhaps as large lakes as this in the county in which I live, and the control of the waters belongs to the Ontario Government. This is a place where the Ontario Government have exercised control over the lot, but the gentlemen opposite are exercising control, through their officer, Mr. Rogers, over the navigation. It is not wise on the part of this Government to make these expenditures until the question of jurisdiction is settled one way or the other. The Minister of Justice said last night that the question was soon to be settled.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Not in regard to any lakes.

Mr. BARRON. In regard to the inland rivers. These lakes are only an enlargement of the rivers.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The building of a wharf does not affect any question of jurisdiction.

Mr. BARRON. You cannot build a wharf except on the edge of the lake, and the title to the land is in the Province of Ontario. That question is to be settled by the courts, and until it is settled you have no right to build wharves or any other structure on other people's property, and that land is reserved in all patents to the Province of Ontario. If my information is correct, the Government, if they had built this wharf on the first site would not have been put to the expense of filling in between the outer and inner parts of the structure.

Mr. FOSTER. This filling would have been necessary just the same on the other side.

Mr. BARRON. Then the engineer must have known that, and I should like to know why the filling in was not included in the contract at first?

Mr. FOSTER. If the engineer had been of the same mind at first as he was afterwards, and had believed that was necessary, he would have recommended it, and it would have been placed in the contract; but, after the contract was given, the engineer came to the conclusion that it would be necessary to have this filled in instead of leaving the open work.

Mr. BARRON. Second thoughts are very nice things for the contractors.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; but in this case the structure when completed will be more valuable and more durable than it was before.

Mr. BARRON. Who was the engineer?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Graves.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is the wharf a pile wharf or crib-work?

Mr. FOSTER. Crib-work.

Mr. McMULLEN. Did the chief engineer recommend a crib-work at this point on that lake?

Mr. FOSTER. All recommendations, I suppose, ultimately come from the chief engineer. He makes up his mind, either from personal visitation or from the reports that he gathers from his officers and his knowledge of the situation.

Mr. McMULLEN. We are to understand, I suppose, that it was Mr. Perley who made the recommendation with regard to this wharf. Now, he sends out some special engineer to make an inspection. My hon. friend states that after they had proceeded with the work some time, a portion of the crib-work gave way, and they added to it by putting in beams like wedges in order to level it up. That proves conclusively that the erection of crib-work there was a mistake. Had they put in a pile wharf and filled it in by putting in cedar piles and facing it, they would have made a more permanent job than by putting crib-work on such a miserable bottom.

Mr. FOSTER. That would have done very well, but I am informed it is a rock bottom.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then there has evidently been a great mistake made in not going to the rock bottom at the start, and erecting your crib-work on a sound foundation. The crib-work has gone over to one side a little.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the engineer say this is a rock bottom?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know how the engineer explains the upsetting of the crib-work. If it is a rock bottom and the crib-work was set on the rock, I cannot see how it got into that condition.

Mr. FOSTER. The rock might have been covered with some soil.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is only treating the matter lightly to say that the rock might be covered with soil. I mean that if the crib-work was set upon the rock, if they had commenced the erection of crib-work by laying their sleepers on the rock first, and had then added thereto, it could not possibly upset or veer over to one side.

Mr. CHARLTON. I want to ask the Minister when this work was first determined upon?

Mr. FOSTER. It was after 1889, because in 1889 Parliament appropriated the sum of $2,000 for this dredging about which I read a moment ago. Then it was found that it would cost so large an amount that it was determined to build this.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is a singular thing that the Government should decide to expend money upon an inland lake of this character, that they should do in this one instance what they have done in no other instance, almost, of the kind. It strikes me that possibly we might enquire into the probable motives of the Government in this matter. Is it possible that the expenditure of this money might benefit the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Madill)?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no.

Mr. CHARLTON. That hon. gentleman, I understand, was in rather bad odour with his constituents on account of his vote on the Jesuit question. It is possible that this expenditure may have been promised to make things easy for him. I do not know that there is anything in the antecedents or character of the Government to warrant that suspicion.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.

Mr. CHARLTON. It seems to me singular that an appropriation of this kind should be made on Lake Simcoe in the riding of that hon. gentleman, an appropriation calculated to benefit that gentleman, and perhaps secure his election. I am afraid this is an appropriation of a character that I hardly feel like justifying.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it was sympathy. They say that three wharves have been built there before by private enterprise, and have been carried away by the ice.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Government is not in the habit of exercising that degree of sympathy with private individuals whose wharves have been carried away. There are many other cases in Ontario where wharves erected by private enterprise have been carried away, and the Government does not feel itself under obligation, out of sympathy, to reconstruct those wharves. I believe that this appropriation is out of the usual line, it is not a justifiable appropriation, and it is one of the numerous instances where the Government have made a public appropriation for the purpose of influencing an election in a riding. I cannot help considering that this is the true solution.

Mr. McMULLEN. After making some enquiry with regard to the cause of the veering over of this particular wharf, I have come to the conclusion that the engineer did not make that searching and thorough investigation, as to the bottom upon which he was to start his construction, that he should have made, or it would not have sided over. Now, it appears that the rock bottom is not a level one, that in some places there is a kind of hard pan upon the rock. It is a pity that a proper start was not made, because if he had started as he should have done, by removing everything in the way of hard pan and got right down to the rock, he would not have had the difficulty he has now by this work upsetting. I do not know very much with regard to the need of a wharf at that particular point. I have learned that since the construction of the railroad, there is virtually nothing done there, unless some pleasure boats are kept on in the summer time. But outside of that I do not know of anything that would necessitate the construction of a wharf. I agree with the remarks of my hon. friend with regard to the propriety of spending this money. An hon. gentleman has mentioned to me that the City of Toronto were going to take their water supply from Lake Simcoe, but after making an investigation they came to the conclusion that if they did, they would drain it dry. It must be a very small lake, if that is the case.

Mr. FOSTER. They are heavy drinkers.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is no compliment to the member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn), and perhaps he will defend his constituents. This is another sample of the policy of the Government, who believe in supporting their friends and doing nothing for the constituencies of their opponents. It is well that the country should know that this is the way the public money is expended. It is to be regretted that such is the case, and we have examples of it both in the erection of this wharf, the case of Colbourg harbour, and the dismissal of a poor man in charge of a bridge.

Mr. BARRON. Was any other inspector employed besides the inspector, Mr. Grey?

Mr. FOSTER. There was a local inspector.

Mr. BARRON. My information is that he was utterly unfit for that purpose, that he knew nothing about the work.

Mr. FOSTER. I understood I was to get categorical answers to the points in the letter read by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McMULLEN. What was the amount paid to the inspector?

Mr. FOSTER. $2.50 per day. He was employed a little over 4 months.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I notice in the Estimates that an item for $1,500 for McGregor's Creek has been dropped. The sum was voted last year, but was not expended. Why does that item not appear in the Estimates this year?

Mr. FOSTER. I will get the information.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The reason should be furnished, and it must be known to the officers of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. The officers cannot remember the thousands of details, and the reports on all the works.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not care personally in regard to this matter, but I know the item was for protecting the banks of McGregor's Creek in Chatham. The Government went to work a few years ago, without anyone asking them, and dredged the creek at a large expense; and the buildings are coming down. There are large elevators and mills there which the protection works were supposed to save, and, unless this is done, there will be heavy claims for damages against the Government for property going into the creek. Last year $1,500 were voted by this House, but nothing expended. This year the item is dropped, although the necessity for the work is even greater than before. There must be some reason why the item is dropped from the Estimates.

Parry Sound Narrows..... $6,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is to provide for deepening to 18 feet the inner or north channel to Parry Sound, next the Georgian Bay at points two and seven miles to the southward of Parry Sound.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think I can give an explanation to the hon. gentleman in reference to this matter. This channel is what is called the inside channel by which all the coasting vessels between Parry Sound, Penetanguishene, Collingwood and Parry Sound pass up the lakes. All the tugs going up and down and all the smaller coasting vessels use this channel. Owing to the fall of water in Lake Huron, which has already been discussed, the water in this channel has been gradually growing less, until, during the last two or three years, the low water has made it impossible for ordinary vessels to pass this channel, and the Government very properly made an appropriation to deepen this channel, so that the vessels which were in the habit of using it may be able to use it in future. I may say that I was glad to find in the newspaper published at Parry Sound, a strong Reform paper, a very commendatory notice of the way in which this work is being conducted by those who have it in charge.

Rondeau Harbour—Repairs..... $3,500

Mr. CHARLTON. I would like to ask the Minister what this money is to be expended for?

Mr. FOSTER. For repairing the remainder of the old superstructure of the east pier 135 feet in length at the outer end where the lighthouse stands, and making slight repairs to the west pier.

Mr. CHARLTON. What amount of money has been expended on that harbour?

Mr. FOSTER. $217,216.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are the works in a good state of repair now, or will they be put in repair by this appropriation?

Mr. FOSTER. I believe the works are not in the best state of repair.

Mr. CHARLTON. Rondeau Bay is of considerable size, but the water is rather shoaly, being not more than eight or ten feet deep, and some years ago, I believe, the Government dredged a basin of about 15 acres inside the pier. It would make a magnificent harbour of refuge if the work were properly done, but owing to the small sums expended, this basin is partially filled up. I have visited Rondeau harbour and had occasion to go in there with vessels for refuge, and the piers, when I saw them last, were in a very bad state of repair. The work was well done originally, but it has been allowed to fall into a bad state of repair, and it is a question in my mind whether the Government would not be justified in making a more liberal expenditure at this place for the purpose of putting these piers in good repair and dredging the basin on the inside.

Mr. FOSTER. In the meantime this is for necessary work.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is this work being done by days' work or contract?

Mr. FOSTER. It is done by days' work. The superintendent is Mr. William Blight, who receives $3 a day, and the engineer is Mr. Grey.

General repairs and improvements—harbours and rivers (Ontario). $10,000

Mr. CAMPBELL. I want to bring before the attention of the Committee the condition of the River Thames. Some work was done there and the Minister of Public Work in his report for last year states, that "difficulties being experienced by vessels entering and leaving the river, owing to the bar off its mouth at Lake St. Clair, a dredge operated in opening a passage there this season." I may say that $4,000 was appropriated two years ago for this purpose, but the $4,000 was not enough to open the passage through the bar, and the passage was made for only about one-half the distance, when the appropriation ran out and the work was stopped. I have a map here, and it shows the depth of water on the bar in the narrowest point to be only eight feet five. The bar is 4,300 feet long. This work has been brought before the attention of Parliament for a number of years, and it has been promised almost every year by the Minister of Public Works that an appropriation would be put in the Estimates for it. The necessity for the work has been admitted, year after year, by the Minister of Public Works in his reports and in his remarks on the floor of this House: but, as I have stated before, only $4,000 was voted for it, and, before the passage was open, the money ran out and the dredges were ordered to stop. The work that was done on the bar was simply thrown away, because it did not open the passage through the bar. The great importance of this work is such as to commend it to the attention of Parliament, and the Government ought to consider this matter and put in the Supplementary Estimates about $5,000 to complete the passage. I may say that one of the engineers who was sent up to report there, reported that it would be necessary to have crib-work on both sides of this passage, and that it would cost about $80,000 to complete this crib-work, to make a permanent way through. In my own opinion, as well as the opinion of those who know this channel, the erection of crib-works at such an enormous expense would not be a wise proceeding, because the interest on the money would more than clear the passage out every year, if that were necessary. It is generally believed, and I have no doubt it is correct, that, if this passage were dredged out now, it would give an opening to the vessels for five or six years to come. I see that there arrives and departs from the town of Chatham 250 vessels a year, which shows that there is quite a large business done there. The river, for 18 or 20 miles from its mouth, has a depth of 18 or 20 feet of water, and the only obstruction is the bar 4,300 feet long at the mouth of the river, which prevents vessels from entering and leaving. It is an enormous expense to the people of that part of the country to get in their lumber and coal and to get out their shipments of grain. All the vessels that go out have to be guided over this bar, and considering that this is a navigable stream, and that the Government are building works all over this country which, in my humble opinion, are unnecessary, I think it is a scandalous shame to allow this work to remain in its present shape. I think it is time the Government appropriated a sum of money to remove this obstruction to navigation in that river. I am sorry that the acting Minister of Public Works takes so little interest in the matter, which is one of very great importance to the people of that part of the country; but I hope that the Government will give it their attention, and will recognize the justice and propriety of the work by placing a sum in the Supplementary Estimates for this purpose.

Mr. HARGRAFT. I would like to ask if it is the intention of the Government to devote any portion of this vote of $10,000 to repairing the Cobourg harbour. There was $2,000 in the Estimates for that purpose, and when that was put there, the hon. Minister must have thought that the work was required, and I should like to know what has changed his mind since that time? It looks to me very much as if it has been dropped for the same reason that the Government cut down the item for commencing the construction of the Cobourg, Peterborough and Northumberland Railway, that is, that they hope to have a by-election this fall, and they expect to carry out the idea that they tried to convey to the people during the election, that if they did not send a supporter of the Government here, they need not expect anything from the Government. In justice to the town of Cobourg, I think they should at least send an engineer there to look at the harbour, and if the hon. gentleman thinks the work is not required, the engineer will tell him that he has been misinformed. It is an important harbour on that part of the lake, being used a great deal as a harbour of refuge, and the work should be done.

Mr. McGREGOR. I feel like my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Campbell), that something should be done to remove the bar at the mouth of the River Thames. A very small amount would do the work, which would be greatly to the advantage of the town of Chatham and the surrounding country. The town is growing rapidly; there is no portion of Canada which is growing more than the two counties of Kent and Essex, as you will see by the census returns, and the principal products of those counties, corn and wheat, are shipped very largely by that river. Several passenger boats also pass up and down it. With a very small expenditure the bar could be removed, and we hope the Government will see their way to place a small amount in the Estimates for that purpose.

Mr. BARRON. I would like to ask if the hon. Minister of Finance is going to pay no attention to the remarks of the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. Hargraft). The item for the Cobourg harbour works was called this evening sharp on time, and nobody had a chance to discuss it. I asked why the item was dropped, and the only information I got was that it was not necessary. This seems a very unsatisfactory answer. If it is not necessary now, when West Northumberland is represented by Mr. Hargraft, surely it was not any more necessary when that riding was represented by Mr. Guillet.

Mr. FOSTER. We can scarcely discuss that item now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We can fairly do so on this vote.

Mr. FOSTER. This vote is to provide for repairs and improvements generally in harbours and rivers in the Province of Ontario, for which no special appropriations have been made by Parliament, and also for the salaries and travelling expenses of engineers.

Mr. HARGRAFT. I asked if it was the intention of the Government to devote any portion of this vote to Cobourg Harbour?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot tell, because these general votes are for whatever may occur. It is not impossible, if anything were found necessary to be done at Cobourg, that the cost would be taken from this vote; but no plans have been laid down as to what may be taken from this vote. As its name implies it is for what may arise, for which no appropriation has been made.

Mr. BARRON. There has been no appropriation made for the Cobourg works thus far. I think we ought to know why the item was dropped. We find in the Estimates, as they are brought down, a large sum for a specific work.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is discussing an item that we have long passed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Strictly speaking, it is quite in order on this item, if you follow the technical rule; but I have never known when an item of this kind has been passed in the absence of the member specially affected, that the information has been refused.

Mr. FOSTER. The information was given.

Mr. BARRON. The only information given was that it was not necessary. If it is not necessary now, surely it was not necessary when it was put in the Estimates. But if the hon. gentleman wants to know what the public mind is seized of as to why this item has been dropped, I can tell him that it is supposed to be that the hon. gentleman and his colleagues are so regardless of the true interests of the country that they are willing to drop a work that is necessary simply because the constituency returns an opponent of the Government. I ask if that is fair-play, or if it is serving the true interests of the country? We want to have works done in the true and real interests of the country, regardless of whether a Reformer or a Conservative is returned. Surely, it is not right to measure the need of public works by the political complexion of the riding, but that is what the hon. gentleman is doing. I am sure that when he said it was not necessary, his real meaning was that that was because my hon. friend at my left had been returned for the riding, and not the late member. We should know why the Government have changed their minds.

Mr. MULOCK. The resolution does not appropriate this money to any particular harbour, and the Minister says it may be found that one of the works on which a part of it will require to be expended will be Cobourg harbour. It is, therefore, in order to discuss the requirement of that harbour. When the Minister states that the harbour does not need the expenditure of public money, it is due to Parliament that he should give us the information on which he bases that statement. The representative of that place, who knows more of its requirements probably than the Finance Minister, says that the channel is filling up and needs dredging. In the face of that statement, the Finance Minister allows his assertion to remain and will not withdraw it. I have before now seen Ministers of the Crown refuse votes of money for various reasons, which they chose to consider sufficient; but this is the first time in my political life that I have heard a Minister of the Crown give such an excuse as the Finance Minister has given for the withdrawal of this item. It is an excuse from which he desired afterwards to recede. He said first that the money was not required, and afterwards that, for some unassigned reason, the Government did not propose to attend to the harbour in question. I have that regard for the honour and the obligations of Cabinet Ministers that I consider they are bound, especially when dealing with the finances of the country, to state the absolute, unvarnished truth, and to exercise the very best faith in their dealings with the people's representatives. I would ask him whether, in view of what has fallen from the hon. member for West Northumberland, he still feels justified in adhering to his statement that the harbour is not in need of expenditure. In view of the more reliable statement of the hon. member for West Northumberland—I do not use the word in any offensive sense, but from the nature of the case that hon. gentleman must have more accurate information—I ask the Minister of Finance whether, as a man, he still adheres to the statement he made when he withdrew the item from the Estimates?

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend takes rather untenable ground when he concludes that because the representative of a place desires an appropriation and considers such an appropriation necessary, it must be provided. Hon. gentlemen who represent their constituencies have their ideas, which may be correct ideas, of the wants and interests of their localities; but it is impossible for the Government to agree in every case to provide appropriations to carry out what these gentlemen may deem necessary. Cobourg harbour has certainly not been neglected. I believe that $160,000 or $170,000 have been expended there; and although it is a harbour of some importance, the expenditure of that amount does not show any ungrateful treatment of it at all. Those works are in a condition which, in the opinion of the Government, do not require at present further expenditure. This vote is for whatever may be necessary in general works that are not provided for; and if at any time during the year it becomes patent to the department and the Government that repairs or improvements are necessary in Cobourg harbour, in consequence of accidents or storms, this vote will be available for that purpose, intended, as it is, to meet unforeseen and unestimated expenditures in general.

Mr. HARGRAFT. It seems to me rather strange that the Minister should say that because $160,000 have been spent on the harbour, nothing more should be done. It is a Government harbour, and surely the Government intend keeping it in repair. What is the use of having a harbour if vessels cannot get into it? You might as well spend a lot of money building a house and then let it go to ruin for want of repair. Repairs are certainly needed there; and the Government must have thought so, or they would not have put the item in the Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not an unusual thing to drop or lower an estimate. It has been done on several occasions.

Mr. BARRON. The Finance Minister has made the case out worse. He admits that the sum of $170,000 has been spent. Now, when this additional appropriation was put in the Estimates, it must have been put there so that every possible advantage might be derived from that expenditure, and although so much money has been expended on that harbour, the Government are not willing to spend the small sum of $2,000 additional to protect the works. No doubt the reason for this is that which I have mentioned. Take the whole facts of the case. Do not we find, with regard to the time for the construction of the railway there, that since the return of the hon. gentleman who now represents that constituency, the time has been shortened—a most unusual thing, and the only instance of it in this Parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. You are not discussing the question.

Mr. BARRON. A sum was put in the Estimates for this harbour, and, therefore, it must have been put in on the recommendation of some engineer. Who was the engineer? If it was dropped, why was it dropped? Was the dropping of the item recommended by any engineer, and if so by what engineer?

Mr. FOSTER. We are not on that item now.

Mr. HARGRAFT. Would it not be possible for the Government to allow an engineer to go up there and examine that harbour? I am sure he would impress on the Government that something should be done there.

Mr. FOSTER. I will communicate that to the acting Minister.

Mr. BARRON. Does the Finance Minister say he will not give us the name of the engineer now when we are discussing this item?

Mr. FOSTER. We are not discussing the item. I have informed the hon. gentleman already that the Cobourg harbour does not come under this item. It is not specially estimated for, and cannot come under this item unless during the year it becomes evident that work is necessary there.

Mr. BARRON. Then there is a contingency that it may be within this item, and, therefore, we are in order in discussing it. I, therefore, ask the hon. gentleman if he will answer the questions which I have asked him?

Mr. FOSTER. It makes no difference at all to this item. We may have reports of engineers by the basketful.

Mr. BARRON. Then, it is to go out that the Finance Minister will not give this information?

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not think it is courteous for the Finance Minister to treat members on this side as he has done this afternoon and to-night. I remember the courteous manner in which the First Minister, who is now no longer a member of this House, treated the Opposition in passing items in Committee. There was scarcely a question put to him that he did not answer, whether it bore directly on the item or not, and I would recommend my friend the Finance Minister to take a lesson and cultivate that courtesy which is so becoming in members of the Government, and on the part of a young man, inexperienced as he is, towards those on this side of the House who put questions to him. My hon. friend laughs. He thinks he is a Solomon, but I am afraid he will find out after all that he has a good deal to learn as well as the rest of us. I do not think he treated the member for North York (Mr. Mulock) courteously this afternoon, and, although the item had been passed, in former years we were allowed to refer to any of the items which were within the vote, though this year we have carried out the principle that, when one item is passed, we do not refer to it again. It is a pity that my hon. friends should show so much bitterness, and that they should withdraw the paltry sum of $2,000 from Cobourg harbour because the county which has so long supported them did not see fit to send a member to support them at the last election. That may not be the reason. If any other reason has actuated the Government in wiping out that item, that would relieve them of the charge that they have acted in this way, but as the Finance Minister will not give any reason, we can come to no other conclusion than that it is done because my hon. friend (Mr. Hargraft) happens to be the representative of that county. I think he has made a very fair and courteous proposal to the Government, and that they should accept his proposition and send an engineer there to examine the wharf. He could go and come in 24 hours, and then the Government could submit a sum in the Supplementary Estimates for this harbour.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Owing to the absence of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) who is attending to public business in another part of this House, I have to bring before the Committee the question of the River Sydenham which runs from Lake St. Clair to the town of Dresden. Last year I think the Government did some work at Dresden, but it is almost useless on account of the river having become filled up with sunken logs, and snags and rubbish, so that vessels cannot get up or down. I hope that out of this $10,000 a small sum will be spent on the River Sydenham. Though that is not in my constituency, I know the importance and necessity of the work, and that it would be of great assistance to the people of the county, because they ship a great deal of lumber and grain, and that is the only way they have of getting it out.

Mr. FOSTER. I will have that noted.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I want also to mention the River Thames. I know the Minister is not personally acquainted with the Public Works Department, but, as he has charge of these works now, I have to address myself to him. This is a work of very great importance, and I am sure that the amount of $5,000 or $6,000 that would be required to open up that channel would be well expended. The amount that has already been spent on this bar has been thrown away, it is of no use; because the channel was not open through the bar, and vessels cannot get across at all. I think a small expenditure, of not more than $5,000 or $6,000, would open up a channel 100 feet wide and 12 feet deep, and would enable vessels drawing 12 feet of water to have ready access across the bar in and out. As it is now, every lumber vessel that comes in, every coal vessel that comes in, all the grain that is shipped through there, every vessel has to be unloaded partly, and part of the cargo removed in order to get the vessel over. I know of one man that made a sale of one million brick that they are making on the banks of the river for Port Arthur, and the contract had to be cancelled because vessels could not get in, and it was too much expense to lighten the vessels. I only mention this as an instance of the great loss that it is to the people, not only to the town of Chatham, but to the whole County of Kent and the County of Essex as well. Inasmuch as this work has been promised for a number of years, I think it is the bounden duty of the Government to put a small sum in the Estimates to complete it. I hope the Minister of Finance will make a note of it.

Mr. FOSTER. I will make a note of it.

Mr. BARRON. There is an item of $3,000 for the town of Lindsay, which has never been spent. It has been put in the Estimates now for several years, and if the member for South Victoria (Mr. Fairbairn) were here, I am sure he would back me up in saying that the money ought to be spent. I sent word to him, but I find he is not in the House to-night, because I know he is anxious to have this $3,000 expended. The item appears here, but it is an old vote. The Finance Minister knows it was put in the Estimates just before a by-election, and it answered the purpose, because it made the people believe it was going to be spent. I should like to have the Minister say why it has not been expended?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot tell.

Mr. ALLAN. Before this item passes I desire to make a few observations with respect to the bar at the mouth of the Thames River, and in doing so I fully endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) and the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) as to the necessity of this work. It is a work of considerable importance. At the mouth of that river the water is only 8 feet deep, above it the river is navigable, and considerable commerce is done upon it. Now, I think it is very important, seeing that the Government has expended a sum of $4,000 in previous years, that the work should be completed. As that sum has been deemed sufficient to construct a part of that work, I think an appropriation should be put in the Supplementary Estimates to go on with it. I cannot understand how, when a vote for expending money on such a work as the Tay Canal succeeds in passing through this House, a work of this importance is overlooked. The Thames River drains one of the most important sections in this country. The western part of Ontario is probably as rich in agricultural resources as any other part of Canada, and a small appropriation would suffice to make that river navigable for pretty large crafts. The town of Chatham is a very important town of about 9,000 inhabitants, with a very large trade, and an appropriation for this purpose should be justified and supported unanimously by this House. In reference to the town of Cobourg, the position taken by the Minister is a little singular. Here is a constituency represented by a Liberal: an appropriation, I believe, was put in the Estimates, and now it is allowed to drop. According to the admission of the Minister, a large expenditure has been made in that harbour, and the fact of withholding the appropriation of $2,000 will be a loss to that section of the country. Everyone knows that harbour works like that must be kept up, and if the Government neglect to do so, they become a loss to the country.

Mr. MULOCK. I wish to endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) on behalf of the improvement of the navigation of the River Thames. Everyone knows the important service that that river is calculated to perform, and the rich section of country that is served by it demands that that highway should be utilized to its fullest extent, bearing in mind how trifling would be the expenditure in comparison with the returns. When one thinks of the perils incidental to navigation on Lake Ontario, and thinks of the few harbours there are on the north shore, it is, to my mind, incomprehensible that any person charged with the responsibility of looking after the navigation of those waters, should for a moment imperil commerce, aye, and life too, for any narrow views, when only a trifling expenditure is required. Cobourg harbour, for example, is the only harbour between Port Hope and Presqu'Isle, a distance of thirty-five miles or thereabouts. It is a harbour of refuge, and was so constructed with public money, not so much as a local harbour in the first instance, but because of its general character, because it is specially designed to be a harbour of refuge. When we think that governments in the past have taken a large view of the requirements of the country, and have expended public money in the general interest of the country, it is with some disappointment, if not surprise, that I find these great interests are now being jeopardized for undisclosed reasons, and to save the paltry expense of a few thousand dollars. It may be that the powers that be may withhold their consent to such an item as this; but I venture to say they will do so at very great expense to themselves, not only to themselves, which would be a trifle, but to the trade and perhaps the lives of the people; and let them bear in mind this warning, that if disaster is the outcome of this narrow policy, if I can so much as designate it by the title of policy, this action of puerility is not fair, and is not right, and is unworthy of the people's representatives.

Repairs, Harbours and Rivers, Manitoba. $3,000

Mr. WATSON. Where is it intended to expend this money?

Mr. FOSTER. This is a vote for general repairs and improvements such as we have just passed, and wherever it may be required in the course of the year so far as it goes it will be expended.

Mr. WATSON. Does it include an item for dredging White Mud River?

Mr. FOSTER. No; it is for general repairs and improvements.

Mr. WATSON. There was a vote last year for $2,000 for Red River survey, which I suppose was for St. Andrew's Rapids, below Winnipeg. Will anything be done this year respecting that survey? The attention of the Government has been called on several occasions by deputations to the fact that these rapids, if improved, would not only give communication for lake-going boats from Lake Winnipeg to the City of Winnipeg, but would create an immense water power. The Government have led the people of Winnipeg to believe they intend to improve these rapids; but that has not been done. Promises were made in my hearing to deputations by the late Minister of Public Works, that these rapids would be improved, either by making a canal, or putting in wing dams sufficient to hold the water and give a draught of six or seven feet. I should expect to hear from the members for Winnipeg and Lisgar on this question. This should receive the attention of the Government and the improvements should be carried out. The Government spend large sums, as has been done on the Tay Canal with poor results, when this valuable improvement could be carried out for one-tenth of the money which we know has been practically stolen from the country by contracters. This work should receive the attention of the Government, not only as one benefiting Winnipeg, but the whole Province of Manitoba. On the shores of Lake Winnipeg there is an immense supply of firewood and a large lumber trade is done there every year; but as the rapids are not improved, all the traffic has to be trans-shipped at Selkirk and transported to Winnipeg by rail, with the effect of increasing the cost of firewood $1 per cord. There are also valuable stone quarries that might be developed. Then, as Winnipeg is a railway centre, it would cheapen the cost of all materials that can be procured on the shores of Lake Winnipeg to the whole Province of Manitoba. I am surprised there is not an item this year in the Estimates for this work. The Government have kept the people of Winnipeg in suspense, expecting from year to year the work would be carried out; but it appears that sufficient influence has not yet been brought to bear on the Government by the people of Manitoba. I am of the opinion that if the representatives of that province were not servile followers, as they are, of the Government, they would yield to the demand of the Province of Manitoba and the people of Winnipeg, and get a reasonable amount of money for the purpose of improving the navigation of Red River.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Denison). The hon. gentleman should take back the word "servile." It is improper to use a word of that sort.

Mr. WATSON. If it is unparliamentary, I suppose I shall have to say they are not servile; but, as I have some regard for the truth, I am sorry to make the statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman should take it back in a gentlemanly manner.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the hon. gentleman is called upon to withdraw an expression, he should do so according to the rule.

Mr. WATSON. I shall have to comply with the rules of the House, and withdraw the expression.

General repairs and improvements, North-West Territories..... $4,500

Mr. MULOCK. What is proposed to be done; are there any works in view?

Mr. FOSTER. General repairs. No works are estimated for.

Victoria Harbour, B.C..... $6,000

Mr. PRIOR. It seems to me this sum of $6,000 is an absurdly small sum to be voted for the improvement of Victoria harbour.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You want to be careful or the Government will drop the item.

Mr. PRIOR. I had the opportunity, a few days ago, of showing this House, by statistics, the importance of Victoria harbour. I showed that one million and a quarter of tonnage entered the harbour during the year. Up to the present we have had a small sum voted every year, $6,000, for that purpose; and I must say, for the amount voted, good work has been done; but the sum has been altogether inadequate for the purpose intended. The dredging plant used was very old and out of date, and, therefore, not so much work could be executed as might have been done with modern plant. Lately there has been a report made on the requirements of the harbour, and it has been shown that for $75,000 the harbour could be made as good as any one would wish it to be, considering its size. I only hope the Government will see their way, before the Supplementary Estimates are brought down, to put a good round sum, say $25,000 this year, in the Estimates for Victoria harbour. The British Columbia Board of Trade has brought this matter to the attention of the Government time and time again. When the Ministers have visited Victoria they have had their notice called to the matter, and have promised to give it their attention. The members representing Victoria have repeatedly shown the advisability and necessity of a good amount being given for that purpose; and I trust that before the Supplementary Estimates are brought down, the Government will take this into consideration and will see their way clear to give a sum of money that will be of some benefit and will make the harbour as good as it should be.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a small vote which is for the particular object of carrying on the work, which has already been commenced there in the removal of rock, but it is inadequate for the larger and necessary works which have been spoken of by my hon. friend (Mr. Prior), and which the Government have under consideration at the present time. I think my hon. friend is perfectly right in stating that the dredge which has been at work there for some years, is not suitable for that harbour, and whatever work is done in future in that harbour will be done with a dredge of a better class.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How much has been spent on this harbour?

Mr. FOSTER. $106,002.01.

Mr. MULOCK. Is this work done by contract?

Mr. FOSTER. The work is done by our own dredge, under the supervision of Mr. Gamble, the engineer.

Mr. MARA. The dredge belonged to the British Columbia Government before Confederation.

Mr. MULOCK. Is the engineer there during the whole progress of this work?

Mr. PRIOR. Victoria is his headquarters. He sometimes goes to other parts of British Columbia, but the majority of the time he is in Victoria. There is a foreman over the work.

Mr. MULOCK. Foremen may be very necessary, and no doubt they are if they do their duty; but if they do not they are not, as we have had reason to know. I find that in Toronto harbour we have been expending a large sum of money for what are called inspectors; men overlooking the work, in fact literally overlooking it.

Mr. FOSTER. The captain of the dredge is foreman here.

Mr. MULOCK. There is no man with a spy glass.

Mr. PRIOR. I may say that the captain of the dredge, Mr. Robert Dexter, is most capable of taking charge of the work, and I am perfectly certain that not a dollar is expended under his supervision that is not spent in the best possible manner.

Fraser River..... ..... $20,000

Mr. CORBOULD. I may say that the work commenced by the Government on the Fraser River has already been the cause of very beneficial results. The channel from the mouth of the Fraser River was very crooked and shifting, but the improvement that has been made there has apparently made it straight, and deepened the water at low tide to 14 feet and at high tide to 28½ feet, so that already very large ships are able to enter the mouth of the Fraser River. The river in former years was difficult of navigation, but the result of this work has been a great improvement. It has been found better that the work should be done yearly than all at once. The engineer, Mr. Gamble, who is in charge of the work, is a very capable engineer, and the money, I am sure, has been very well spent. The foreman in charge of the work is Capt. Robinson of the dredger, who is quite capable of carrying on the work.

Harbours and rivers generally, British Columbia..... ..... $6,000

Mr. GORDON. Before this item is adopted, I would like to make some enquiries of the Government with regard to some improvements in connection with the rivers in Vancouver Island, and also in regard to the Nanaimo harbour. Applications have been sent to the Government urging very strongly some improvements on the Cowichan River in order that the large milling interests now developing there may have access to their timber limits. Last autumn a very heavy flood occurred in that part of the province, and destroyed the Nanaimo railway bridge, carrying it entirely away, destroying all the works which the Government had constructed in that river, and blocking it up completely with drift timber from the mountain. A large milling company have built their mills near the mouth of the Cowichan River and they depend largely upon their supplies from the interior. Unless they can induce the Government to make some improvements in that river their timber trade will be almost worthless. In addition to the damages caused to the river works, the flood has diverged and destroyed a great quantity of Indian lands, the alluvial soil being carried away. There was also an application for some works at the junction of the Courtenay and Tsolan Rivers in the district of Comox, a very important and necessary improvement, to which I wish to call the attention of the Government. I wish to point out to the Minister and to the Government, that Nanaimo harbour is a harbour of considerable importance. A portion of Nicol Rock was removed from that harbour, but part of the rock remains and is dangerous to shipping, and it will require perhaps a sum of ten or twelve thousand dollars to finish the removal of the rock and perform some necessary dredging at the entrance to the harbour. I may say that at the entrance of the harbour a number of our ships have grounded with cargoes, and although no absolute damage was done, the ships were for a time in very great danger. I cannot urge too strongly on the Government the necessity for making improvements in this harbour. If I am not intruding too much on the time of the Committee I will read a statement which will show the importance of the trade of the port of Nanaimo:

FISCAL YEAR ENDING 30TH JUNE, 1891.

PORT OF NANAIMO, B.C., EXCLUSIVE OF COASTING.

The Government will see, from this statement, that in asking for these necessary repairs and improvements, I am not going beyond the limits of reason.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to say to my hon. friend that the representations that have been made with reference to the harbour, especially with reference to the removal of what remains of Nicol Rock, and also with reference to the Cowichan River, where the improvements were swept away, are being carefully considered by the Government.

Harbours and Rivers generally..... $6,000

Mr. FORBES. Will the Minister tell me whether this item has been appropriated to any particular work yet?

Mr. FOSTER. No; it is for whatever may come up in the way of improvements and necessary works in harbours and rivers throughout the Dominion.

Mr. FORBES. Then it will not be out of place for me to offer the Minister a little advice on this matter. There are one or two places in the Province of Nova Scotia needing repairs, one in particular on the coast of the County of Queen's, to which I would like to direct his attention. The harbour of Liverpool is about three and a-half miles in length, and near the eastern end is what is called Coffin's Island, behind which is a very nice cove. This cove has been formed into a harbour of refuge and safety by means of a line of piers or breakwaters constructed at an expense to the country of some $5,000 or $6,000. One of these piers has partially sunk, which renders the harbour there quite unsafe. For very little expense this pier could be repaired and the harbour made quite safe for fishing vessels. I have made application to the department to have a dredge put at work on this harbour, as the sand or wash from the ocean has filled it up in the neighbourhood of those piers in consequence of the sinking of the middle pier, thereby rendering the harbour comparatively useless. I hold in my hand a letter from one of the residents of that locality. It is quite true, he is an official of the Government, but he speaks with authority the views of the people of that neighbourhood. He says:

"I herewith enclose a petition handed to me to be forwarded to you for presentation and explanation to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, or the hon. Minister of Public Works. The copy sent you sets forth the wish of the petitioners quite distinctly, and I may say it is a work that is very much needed, and would not only be a great accommodation to the people of the whole eastern shore, but would, in a great measure, benefit Brooklyn and Liverpool as well. Some of our young men would build small fishing schooners and sail them if they had a harbour short of Liverpool or Port Medway, to which they could run, or in which they could leave them for a few days, and yet have them near to their homes where they could look out for them. Such a harbour could be made here with very little expense."

The distance from this harbour to Liverpool is 3½ miles, and to Port Medway 7 or 8 miles. These are the only two available harbours for fishing schooners making an entry into Liverpool; and this shows the necessity for the improvements to the harbour to which I refer. It is a work which would require very little expense on the part of the Government, and I would humbly request the Minister to give the matter his earnest attention. We have had it exemplified, in the returns brought down to-day, that a large number of our young men have left the Province of Nova Scotia. I like to have every opportunity given our young men to induce them to remain at home. A small portion of this item would give these people better fishing facilities and make this place a second Gibraltar to them. The records of the Public Works Department will show exactly the locality of this breakwater and the necessity for dredging the harbour. Plans are in the possession of the Government, the engineer has reported, and the Government are in a position to order immediately that the repairs be made, and save from destruction the works that are there.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). A most important breakwater in Prince Edward Island is the harbour of Souris. Certain repairs were made last year, but a further sum is required to complete them. There is also another very important harbour for fishermen, on the north coast of the Island, where they have no natural harbour whatever. It is formed by a very necessary work built by the Dominion Government at a place called Campbell's Cove, the most important fishing section on the north shore, and is the only refuge the fishermen have for their boats. It stood exceedingly well until last fall, when the great gale and enormously high tide were the means of carrying it away to some extent. It now requires repairs to prevent its being washed away by the storms next fall, and I trust the Government will see their way clear to place a vote in the Supplementary Estimates to cover those two works, if there is not sufficient in the vote before us.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not wish to detain the Committee, but merely to call the attention of the Government to the fact that in the earlier part of the session I spoke about some improvements on the Grand River. I wish the Minister would take a note of it. I understand that two or three years ago a survey was made of the improvements which might be required. They are very much needed, and I do not think would cost very much.

Mr. BORDEN. I would like to call the attention of the Government to a matter I brought up last year with reference to a harbour in my county, called Hall's harbour. In 1884 a large portion of the breakwater there was carried away. A survey was then made by an engineer from Ottawa, and surveys have been made on several occasions since at considerable expense, as I discovered by the papers which have been brought down. I suggested last winter that I thought sufficient surveys had been made, and that it would be a good plan now to vote a little money. I called upon the Minister at his office and was treated with a great deal of attention. He sent for one or two engineers, and impressed me with the idea that I was going to succeed in getting the grant. In fact, he went so far as to say he would recommend it to Council; but the other members of the Administration must have been opposed to this grant, since none has been made. Therefore, I take this opportunity to see if I cannot induce the Government to consider this most important matter. The breakwater was carried away in 1884, and the department is in possession of all the information required on which to base a grant for the work. The town is quite an important one, and at present is suffering severely from the effects of the loss of this 100 feet of breakwater, which prevents vessels of any size coming into that harbour, and is most disastrous to the trade of the place. It may not be necessary to make a special grant, as I do not think a very large amount is required, and the money might be taken from the grant now under consideration. There is also another harbour in my constituency, called Morden harbour, to which I called the attention of the ex-Minister of Public Works. I endeavoured to make him understand that what is left of the pier at Morden is in danger of being carried away by the storms in the Bay of Fundy during the fall. A very small grant would make that pier secure, whereas, if it should be carried away, it will cost $10,000 to $15,000 to rebuild it. The Minister of Justice will know about these matters, and I hope will insist on his colleagues agreeing to provide for the necessary repairs required in these two harbours.

Mr. McMILLAN. I brought up the question of Bayfield harbour before the Minister of Public Works both last session and this session, and I was led to believe that a sum would be placed in the Supplementary Estimates this session to repair that harbour. Three years ago a part of the pier was carried away, and the Government contractor, instead of building on the crib-work, put in pile-work, which did not take a proper hold, and the first storm that came swept it into the river. I think it is too bad that this harbour should be allowed to go entirely to decay. The people went to a large expense themselves, and contributed nearly $30,000 towards the building of it, and the fishermen who used Bayfield harbour cannot now get in there at all. A small sum of money would be enough to put on a little cribwork and to clear out the deposit in the river, so that there would be a good harbour. I hope the Government will take this into consideration. I have been waiting patiently to see the Supplementary Estimates, and I understand there is a report in the Public Works Department as to what this harbour would require.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) When I was speaking, I forgot to mention another important breakwater in St. Peter's harbour. It is not exactly a breakwater, but is a structure to confine the water at the entrance of the harbour so as to deepen the water on the bar. It is an important place for fishing, and is a harbour of refuge. The work was carried away by the storm to which I refer, and probably it will be all carried away next autumn if it is not attended to. I hope the Government will not lose sight of this important work, especially important to those people who earn their living on the sea, and I hope something will be done before the autumn gales come on.

Mr. PERRY. My hon. friend from King's County (Mr. Macdonald) complains that he has harbours in his county which are not accessible to fishermen, and that the fishermen are suffering, that the water is shoal, that the breakwaters are carried away, and that not enough money is expended there to keep up the public works. I have no doubt that he is quite right in regard to King's County, and I am sure that the same thing could be said in regard to Queen's County and Prince County and all parts of the Island, under the penurious administration of the Government, as far as Prince Edward Island is concerned. Last year the sum of $12,000 was appropriated for breakwaters, piers and wharves, under the charge of the Dominion Government in Prince Edward Island. I find, from the returns of the Public Works Department, that only $7,000 was expended. What has become of the other $5,000? The hon. the Minister of Justice stated the other night that this amount was lying over. Why should it lie over? What is the good of voting money and leaving it there while these public works are going to destruction? The Minister of Justice will shiver in his boots when I tell him that the people of those districts have to take their axe and their auger and go out themselves to repair the wharves, in order to save the lives of their horses and their fellow-creatures. I find that less than half the breakwaters, and piers, and wharves in Prince Edward Island, are reported on. What has become of the others? The hon. gentleman kindly gave me the names of the wharves on which money had been expended, and the whole amount was $7,000. Is there no wharf, or pier, or harbour, in the Island on which the balance of $5,000 could be expended? I could name fifteen places where the money might be well expended for the benefit of the fishermen. Take the breakwater at Miminigash. Last year the Government were kind enough, I believe through a mistake, owing to the persistent efforts of my colleague at that time and myself, to pass an item of $3,500 for repairs to that breakwater. There was a sum of $800 or $900 expended in repairing the outer block. That breakwater was commenced under the late Administration of my friend, Mr. Mackenzie, and I have no fault to find with the way in which the money has been expended; but the Government have allowed the whole winter to pass without doing anything to enable the contractor to get the stones and timber at the proper time and make his arrangements. Tempus acceptabile—the Minister of Justice will understand what I mean. Tenders were not asked for until after the election. I believe they intended to keep that as a lash over the electors of Miminigash to compel them to vote for the Government candidates. However, in April, I think, a contract was signed between the Government and a Mr. Macdonald to do a certain amount of work. I have asked for the tenders, and for the amount of money which was to be expended and how much work was to be done, but I have not had the information. However, Macdonald, when he had the contract, found it was not a very good paying matter. I suppose it would not pay as well as the Lévis dock or the works in Kingston. He gave up the contract, and the Government slept over these things, and after awhile they woke up, and I believe they have asked for new tenders. The summer is nearly over, the contract is not let, the fishing is nearly done and storms may carry away the breakwater, and the Government are still sleeping. Is that fair? Yet we are told that Prince Edward Island gets more money than it is entitled to. These amounts look very well on paper, they look very well in the Estimates, but they are not expended, and any money that goes there is not expended very judiciously or very properly. In the harbour of Cascumpec, in my county, tenders were asked for some time last spring for new buoys to be built and placed there. A certain gentleman got the contract. The buoys were placed. The contractor got a certified account from the harbour master. This was done, I think, in June. This Committee will be astonished when I tell them that this amount is not yet paid. Is that fair? Is it honest? Is it right to keep this man four or five months out of his pay? I will go bail that the Ministers of the Crown will not wait so many months for their pay, they will not wait so many weeks for their pay, they will not wait so many days for their pay. I am doubtful if they would wait so many hours—perhaps I may put it down fine enough to say minutes. I do not blame them for getting their pay, but there ought not to be so much red tape used. If this man in Cascumpec wants to send his complaint to the Department of Marine, a lot of red tape has to be used to send it to the agent at Charlottetown, the agent there sends it back to Cascumpec, Cascumpec sends it back to Charlottetown, and Charlottetown sends it to Ottawa, and all this red tape costs as much as the buoys in Cascumpec harbour, and this poor man has not got his pay yet. I will go bail that if there was a favour to be given here in Ottawa, if the Government wanted to give to a private individual a piece of ground to pack his wood on without fees, it could be done in one minute; a telephone would be made use of at the public expense, from the residence of that gentleman up to the department, and the favour would be granted at once. If slide dues were to be remitted to any favourite of the Government it could be done in a few minutes; but when the smallest province in the Dominion, the gem of the Dominion, that the Dominion fought so hard to get into its claws, and having it now in its claws it disowns it—it is unpatriotic, it is inhuman for a parent to disown its child in that kind of way. If that is the way the Island is to be used, I say the sooner it cuts adrift from the Confederation the better. It is not afraid to go on its own hook, it lived and prospered before it was humbugged by the Dominion into Confederation, and it can live yet. Cascumpec harbour has been neglected. In that harbour the present Government thought proper to expend $17,000 in blasting rock. They blasted that rock, and allowed the refuse, or the stones that they took out, to fall right back where they took them from, and where the rock stood about 8 or 9 feet below the level of the water, when this refuse was thrown back, it gave 18 inches or 2 feet less water than there had been before. I remonstrated with the Government a year or two ago, and notwithstanding these remonstrances the same practice was allowed to go on till last year. Last year they took the blasted rocks and carried them out in a dredge. This year I see in the Estimates $2,000 for blasting in the harbour, and so far not one dollar has been expended. Why not make use of this money? What is the use of voting the money if the department do not intend to expend it? The dredge, instead of being in Cascumpec, is in Summerside. I want to tell you that the dredge is now doing good work in Summerside. I thank the Government for these small favours. I thank them that they woke up, in a moment of weakness, and sent the dredge down to Summerside, in order to dredge the harbour and give the new steamer Northumberland room enough to lay at the warf. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works where the dredge was this spring. She did not go there until late in July. Let me tell the Government that this dredge does not work more than three months at the outside in the whole season, and the rest of the time she lies idle. They pay the captain of that dredge $90 a month, whether the dredge works or not. Now, why should the captain of that dredge be paid such a large amount of the public money for doing nothing? Why, Sir, when that dredge was wanted to work in the spring, it was said she was not fit. We were told by the department that the dredge was under repair. Now, why was not that dredge repaired in the winter? Why not compel the captain to see that the dredge is kept in repair, in the room of paying him $90 for doing nothing, for walking the streets of Charlottetown with his hands in his pocket, and canvassing all he could—and I suppose making use of some little boodle, for all I know—in favour of the Government candidates. That is the work he was doing in the winter; he was doing nothing in return for $90 a month he was getting from this country. Now, if the Government intend to do what is right they would get another dredge. One dredge is not sufficient for Prince Edward Island. My hon. friend from King's County complains, and rightfully complains, that the Island is neglected. I make no doubt that his word, his voice, his eloquence, his influence, will be heard in this House at the present time by the Government. The Government will acknowledge his words a great deal sooner than they will mine, because they expect a vote from him, but they do not expect one from myself. I can tell him this: that in my view the Government has no right, now that the dredge is in Summerside, to take her away from there where she is required, and send her somewhere else, spending nearly one-half the dredging season running from one port to another. Some gentlemen, perhaps Mr. Hunt in Summerside, or some other friend of the Government, will wire over and say that the dredge is required in a certain place, and if there is an election coming on she will be sent there in order to make a show. I see by one of the Ontario papers to-night that we are on the eve of an election. Then some influential man in the Government will send back a message that the dredge may be used for a political purpose. Then some one else may wire up to Ottawa: Send the dredge here if you want to get the votes of the people. They may take it into their heads to order the dredge from where she is now working to go somewhere else, and the work that she is doing now would be left unfinished, and would be altogether useless for the public benefit. In Cascumpec harbour, as I said before, the Government have spent nearly $20,000, and what good has it done? So far, not more than 5 per cent. of the work has been completed—because if there are 500 feet in the bar, and only 300 feet of that on each side taken away, the rest is in the way, and the vessels cannot get over. The work is commenced, and it is badly needed. We know very well that Cascumpec harbour would be one of the best harbours of refuge if this rock was blasted and dredged in the outward bar, on the north side of the Island. It is a harbour of refuge, for the most part, of the fishing vessels from Nova Scotia; it is the only refuge of the American vessels, which have to come in there very often when they are not prevented by the Government cutters. The harbour is also wanted for the inhabitants of Prince Edward Island. We have a lot of large fishing boats from New Brunswick, from Caraquet, from Shippegan, from Tracadie, and all along there—all these boats have to come across in a storm, and they must get into that harbour. I do not hear one word spoken by the representatives of that part of the Dominion asking for justice and fair-play for their constituents. Why? Because, I suppose these people are only fishermen. Why, we are told to believe that fishermen in the days of old were very much respected; fishermen were taken up by High Authority, and were made companions. But it appears to-day in the Dominion of Canada that fishermen are looked upon by the Government as a body of men of no account, except for their votes on election day. The votes of the fishermen count as much at elections as do the votes of Ministers. I advise the Government, if they wish to do right and give justice to the people, that to-morrow morning a cheque will be sent to Cascumpec by mail in order to pay this man the debt the Government owe him. The dredge Prince Edward should be left at Summerside until she completes the work, so that a steamer can come up to the wharf. We know that Summerside is not to be trifled with. A million dollar's worth of produce is shipped from that one harbour. I hope the Government will not neglect the public service of Prince Edward Island, but will see that these suggestions are carried out. The dredge, I repeat, should not be taken away from my county until it has finished the work, for, if it is half done, the public money will be wasted. I do not think one dredge sufficient for the Island. The harbours are in a bad state; we hear complaints daily, not only from Grits, but from Conservatives. The member for King's is complaining, and I am willing to give him my influence to get justice to the county. Although the Grit was defeated at the last election, I have not lost faith in the people of King's, and, no doubt, they will redeem the county at the next election.

Mr. BARRON. The hon. member for South Victoria is now present, and I should like to ask his assistance in regard to the expenditure of $3,000, in addition to the placing of a light at the entrance of Sturgeon Lake.

Mr. FAIRBAIRN. I am very thankful to the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) for his kindness and sympathy, and for the very great interest he has taken in South Victoria. As the representative for South Victoria, I know that if the Government have made any promise they will fulfil it. We need not charge the Government with spending all the money, but we can charge some of it against the Opposition for keeping us here so long. I have faith in the Government, which I am proud to support, that they will carry out any promises made. I am thankful to the hon. gentleman for watching the interests of my county so faithfully, but still I have greater confidence in the Conservative Government than in him, and I hope in the future he will look after the riding he is the representative of, and leave South Victoria to the care of the representative whom the people of that riding have sent to Parliament.

Mr. BARRON. I ask the hon. gentleman if his patience is not exhausted, as the Government have already taken three years about the work.

New dredging plant..... $30,000

Mr. ALLISON. Before the item for new dredging plant is finally passed, I should like the Government to comply with the promise made by the late Minister of Public Works. In the first Supplementary Estimates there appeared an item of $6,000 for the building of new dredging plant. During the discussion I asked the Minister of Public Works three questions: First, where was the plant built; second, by whom was it built; and third, who has the plant now in possession? In answer to my question, the Minister of Public Works spoke as follows:—

"As these are purely and simply the balance of accounts voted last year, I would ask the hon. gentleman to defer his questions until we come to the item in the main Estimates for new dredging plant for the current year, and I will then be in a position to give the information he requires. In the Estimates for the current year there is an item of $24,200 for dredging plant, and if the hon. gentleman will be kind enough to put me his questions when this comes to be voted I will give all the information then."

That time has arrived. We are now considering the Estimates for new dredging plant, and I now ask for answers to the questions I submitted. It is true the same Minister is not now in charge of the Public Works Department; but he has a successor, and I suppose it is his duty to comply with any agreement entered into by the late Minister. You will find the item to which I refer appearing as No. 53 in the Supplementary Estimates, the amount being $6,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That item, of course, was in the Supplementary Estimates, which have been already passed; but I will have the explanation here in a little while.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When the Minister of Finance comes down and asks $30,000 for new dredging plant, instead of the hon. gentleman crying "carried," it is his duty to give explanations to the House, without being asked to do so.

Mr. FOSTER. No one objects.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I object to that mode of carrying through Estimates. It is the bounden duty of the Minister of Finance to offer explanations of all moneys voted.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has misunderstood me. The hon. member for Lennox

(Mr. Allison) has asked me for an explanation of an item in the Supplementary Estimates which was passed two months ago. This is not the Supplementary Estimates we are passing, and I have not the book here. I have sent for it, so as to give the hon. gentleman that explanation to an item which we passed six weeks ago. He is satisfied with that and while I am waiting for it I propose to go on with this vote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not object to that, but you should state the reasons in detail when you are wanting money.

Mr. FOSTER. This vote is for $30,000 for new dredging plant for the New Dominion, the Canada, and the St. Lawrence, and it includes a new crane, a new bucket, and other machinery.

Mr. WATSON. Are these goods manufactured in Canada or the United States?

Mr. FOSTER. So far as possible, we get them in Canada and by contract. All the articles that are required in this item are got in Canada. We have a ship-yard of our own, and the workmen are making the buckets. The crane is under contract by Convery, of St. John, N.B.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You say you have a ship-yard at Sorel?

Mr. FOSTER. We have a sort of a ship-yard, where repairs are done during winter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I was not aware that there was any Government establishment of that nature.

Mr. WATSON. What number of men do you employ?

Mr. FOSTER. There are 19 men engaged there at the present time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I never heard of this before, and if the Government are starting a sort of ship-yard of that description, some sort of permanent staff has to be paid and some buildings to be rented. We ought to be able to ascertain what the cost of that establishment is. It certainly is news to me, but I was not aware you had it.

Mr. FOSTER. When we took over the plant from the harbour commissioners, who were deepening the channel, the establishment at Sorel came into our hands. That is three years ago.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So you have practically a kind of ship-yard for three years.

Mr. FOSTER. They have done all the repairs of dredging plant there.

Mr. CURRAN. When the Montreal Harbour Commissioners carried on the work of deepening the channel they had blacksmith shops at Sorel for the repairs of the dredges. This dockyard at Sorel, which was on the old McCarthy property, has been in existence for fifteen years, and two years ago it was taken over by the Government, when they took over the plant from the harbour commissioners. The establishment at Sorel was well known during the Mackenzie Administration, and it has been there ever since.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What I want to know is, where I will get the details of the expenditure of this yard?

Mr. FOSTER. I should think it is to be found in the Auditor General's Report.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Auditor General's Report shows that there has been an expenditure of $121,000 under the head of St. Lawrence ship channel.

Mr. FOSTER. That vote has been taken for two years. This year's vote finished it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In that amount I see such items as mechanical staff, $26,686. Are we to understand that it is the policy of the Government to maintain a regular ship-yard?

Mr. FOSTER. I think not; but it has to be maintained, I suppose, so long as this work is to go on. When that is done, it will be a question for consideration as to how to dispose of the plant.

Mr. MULOCK. What is done at this place?

Mr. FOSTER. All the dredges, vessels and scows are repaired.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many dredges are under repair at that place?

Mr. FOSTER. Six dredges, seven tugs and scows.

Mr. MULOCK. There are in all 18 vessels.

Mr. FOSTER. They do the whole of the work on the channel during the summer season. In the winter time the dredges are repaired, and when the season opens for work on the channel they are ready.

Mr. McMULLEN. Judging by the statements in the Auditor General's Report, our dredging costs a very large amount of money. I think it would be almost better to dispose of all our dredges and let out the work of dredging by contract, even if we have to pay McGreevy prices. My impression is that we are paying that much now, when we consider that we are keeping up two staffs and this expensive plant. I think the Government should consider the propriety of parting with the whole dredging plant and letting the work out by contract.

Mr. CURRAN. I think it will be admitted by those who are taking an interest in this matter that the work done under the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal in deepening the channel of Lake St. Peter has been done at remarkably low prices—as low as 12½ cents.

Mr. MULOCK. What depth?

Mr. CURRAN. Twenty-seven and a-half feet.

Mr. MULOCK. Cheaper than that done at Quebec.

Mr. CURRAN. In some respects. When they took out rock it was not so cheap as that. That is the cheapest. But the work has been carried on with very great skill and success, and the plant now owned by the Government is as fine as anything on the continent of America. Mr. Kennedy, the engineer of the harbour works, is a man of eminent ability, as everybody knows, and the staff of men under him are all picked men. The work carried on since the harbour commissioners have ceased to have authority has been merely trimming the channel at certain points where there were projections, and it is understood that during the present season the work will be absolutely finished, so far as a 27 foot channel between Montreal and Quebec is concerned. The sum mentioned in the Estimates is for the dredging as well as for the other works carried on by this staff of men, who were transferred to us at the same time as all this plant; and I am satisfied that anyone who will take the trouble to read the reports of the harbour commissioners of Montreal—the chairmen of which have been such men as Sir John Young, Mr. Cramp, the late Mr. Robertson, Mr. Bulmer—will agree that the works have been carried on in such a manner as to reflect credit on the harbour commission.

Mr. McMULLEN. Notwithstanding the remarks of the hon. gentleman, I must say that our experience with regard to dredging has pretty well established that the dredging companies have not taken out the amount they declared they had. We spend enormous amounts on dredging. We keep a big staff roaming around the different channels doing dredging work, and every year we get extensive and detailed reports, but when we come to the test of experience we find that the work has not been done. It would better if the Government would let the work by contract and then see if the contract was properly carried out. I can easily understand why the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Curran) should advocate a continuance of the present system, as he has no doubt many friends interested in the operations of the dredge.

Mr. CURRAN. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I have no earthly interest in the dredging, but I do know that the criticisms which have been made have no application whatever to the work carried on by the Montreal Harbour Commissioners. These gentlemen are deeply interested in seeing that the material is all taken out and proper navigation secured between Montreal and Quebec. It is a matter of vital importance to the port of Montreal that vessels of a certain draught should be able to come up without an accident or hindrance. Every vessel that comes up is watched carefully by those who are jealous of the trade of Montreal, and it became of paramount importance to those carrying on the work that it should be effectively done. The only work required to be done now is to clear away any slight encumbrance there may be in the channel. We know that when the ice leaves in the spring, frequently boulders on either side are moved into the channel and require to be removed. It is absolutely necessary to keep constant supervision of a work like this, in order that the Dominion may get the full benefit of the expenditure made, and in order that the sea-going vessels may reach the furthest point inland with their cargoes, thus saving cost of transportation.

Mr. McMULLEN. I accept, of course, the hon. gentleman's statement; but there is a division of responsibility, and the harbour commissioners may consider it rests on the Government to see that the work is properly done, while the Government may depend on the harbour commissioners. When we look back at the amount of money we have expended in enabling vessels of considerable draught to reach Montreal it must be patent to anyone that we are paying more for the work that is done than it is worth, and it appears to be a perpetual drain on the resources of the Dominion to keep up this dredging. If we were to let it at even prices in excess of what we are paying it might be better. It is desirable, no doubt, from a Dominion standpoint, that Montreal should be kept an open port, but at the same time the amount of dredging we have done is something enormous, and I have no doubt that the Montreal Harbour Commissioners will agree with me.

Mr. McMILLAN. Are the men engaged by the year, or only during the summer?

Mr. CURRAN. Those who are working on the dredge work only during the summer, and are only paid during the summer; but those who work in the repair shops are kept going all the time.

Mr. McMILLAN. How many men are engaged altogether?

Mr. FOSTER. The 128 would not be on one dredge, but would be distributed among the different dredges, barges, tugs, scows, and so on.

Mr. McMULLEN. What does it cost per yard to remove the dredging that we do?

Mr. FOSTER. It is impossible to give an answer to that, because the cost is very different in one place to what it is in another.

Mr. CURRAN. It costs from 10 cents to $1.50 a yard.

Mr. MULOCK. Where is the dredge for which this crane, which is to be made at the St. John foundry, is required?

Mr. FOSTER. In the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. MULOCK. Where are the other repairs to be made?

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the hon. gentleman refers to the new dredging plant. The new crane is to be made at St. John, and it is for the dredge there.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the price of that?

Mr. FOSTER. The estimate is $1,200. The bucket is to be made at the Sorel yards, the only place where it can be made. That is for the Canada. The new boiler is for the St. Laurrence, and as that dredge is in the Maritime Provinces, the boiler will be constructed at the nearest and best place in those provinces, if the most available tender is from those provinces. The contracts for the steam winch, boilers, and so on, are not given out yet.

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose you advertise for tenders for all the works you do not do yourselves?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. McMILLAN. Is this item for the board of the men on the dredges? I suppose the mechanical staff would board themselves.

Mr. FOSTER. They are paid so much a day and they are boarded.

Iron bridge over the Grand River at York.....$12,100

Mr. MONTAGUE. I wish to correct a misstatement made in error by the Minister last year when I was unfortunately unable to be present. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) asked if this bridge had been built, and the Minister answered in error, "Yes." The hon. member asked where the bridge was, and the Minister said, "At Cayuga." That is an error.

Mr. MULOCK. What was got at Cayuga?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Nothing at all.

Mr. MULOCK. Only a post office?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is to be the total cost of this bridge?

Mr. FOSTER. The total cost, when completed, with the approaches and trestle work, will be $26,282. The sum asked for here is to be reduced to $7,300, as we find that this amount will not be required.

Mr. WATSON. Does the Government pay the full amount for the construction of this bridge?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It does, in consideration of our giving up the claim against the Government of $18,000, with interest since 1871, upon one bridge, and the claim established before the commission upon this bridge. It is a very good thing, as the hon. gentleman's friend, Mr. Colter, who is not here now, would tell him, because, as solicitor of the council, he advised the county council to enter a petition of right and sue the Government in the Exchequer Court for this.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is this a navigable stream?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No; at one time it was connected with a system of navigation of which the late lamented member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) was the president, but since that time the canal works have been allowed to go to decay and the Grand River Navigation Company no longer exists.

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose this was under contract?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. How much has been paid for inspectors on this work?

Mr. FOSTER. Two dollars a day during construction.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I heard the inspector himself say that it was something like $500.

Mr. MULOCK. How much has been paid out for the work of the inspector amounted to?

Mr. MONTAGUE. He gets $3 a day for the number of days he is at work. I think he worked ten months less nine days. He claimed a month which the Government would not pay.

Mr. FOSTER. Three dollars was his allowance.

Mr. MULOCK. For how many days was he paid?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not that information; I have taken a note of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The member for Haldimand said he was employed for ten months.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think I must be wrong in that, because I am almost positive the amount was $540.

Mr. MULOCK. Is the work completed now?

Mr. FOSTER. It is all completed now. We asked for $12,000, and that has been reduced to $7,000.

Mr. MULOCK. Who had the contract for the iron bridge?

Mr. FOSTER. The Hamilton Bridge Company. They tendered, and their tender being the lowest, was accepted. There were no extras at all.

For the construction of a free bridge over the Old Man's River at Fort McLeod..... $15,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT What is the cost of this altogether?

Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. FOSTER. $10,000 of this is a revote. The contract has just been let—about six weeks ago. The total cost of the bridge will be $28,000, and it will require an additional grant of $8,000. All the material is of wood. The length of the bridge proper, including abutments and centre pier, is 322 feet. The contractors are Smith & Heney, of Ottawa.

Resolutions reported.

THE CENSUS RETURNS

Mr. HAGGART laid on the Table the census of Canada for 1891, by electoral divisions, and the census of cities, towns and villages in comparison with the census of other years.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.10 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 28th August, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—INVESTIGATIONS.

Mr. SPROULE presented the Twenty-first Report of the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. BARRON. I would ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee why it is that the evidence given by the Auditor General a day or two ago, in regard to the Post Office Department, has not been printed? I see the evidence given on the same day by Mr. LeSueur and by Mr. White has been printed, and I do not see why the evidence of the Auditor General, in regard to certain witnesses, which evidence was undoubtedly aimed at the investigation then going on in regard to the Post Office Department, has not likewise been published.

Mr. WALLACE. I will make enquiry of the Clerk of the Committee.

TRADE WITH THE WEST INDIES.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the other business goes on, I will take this opportunity of making a statement to the House on account of its importance, not only to the members of the House, but to the country generally, especially those portions of it more particularly interested in the West India trade. It will be remembered that we had some discussion the other day with reference to the recent arrangement between the United States and Spain, with regard to our trade with the Spanish Antilles. It will be remembered that I then expressed my opinion that Canada would have, until the 30th of June, 1892, privileges equal to those accorded to the United States in products of a similar kind. I am happy to be able to inform the House that I have to-day received intimation from the Governor General that such is the case.

Mr. LAURIER. And what after?

Mr. FOSTER. That remains to be seen.

LAND SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 169) further to amend the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 4, intituled: "An Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in land to certain railway companies."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman explain what the real meaning of that Bill is? We cannot understand by reading it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I explained it when I first introduced it, and I explained it again the other day. The Bill proposes to give a land grant to 56 miles of railway from Calgary to Red Deer. The original charter allowed the line to be built either from Blacken, a point 45 miles east of Calgary, to Red Deer, or from Calgary to Red Deer. The land grant was given to the portion from Blacken to Red Deer, a distance of about 55 miles. We now ask for the land grant to be transferred from the Blacken and Red Deer line to the Calgary and Red Deer line.

Mr. CHARLTON. Has the Minister laid a statement upon the Table covering the amount of land grants to various railways, which was promised a few days ago?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I promised to do that when next this Bill comes up. I have got it already.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. MULOCK. I find that I was somewhat in error yesterday when referring to the Railway Act, and therefore part of my remarks, yesterday, have really no application to the Bill before the House. But now we come to the question of granting this land to this particular company. The Minister of Finance will remember that when the resolution in question was under discussion I asked him to tell us what the financial basis of this company was, and he referred me to the Act of incorporation. On reference to the Act of incorporation it appears that among the names of incorporators, some of them, one, at all events, out of the five or six, is a man of no substance whatever. We are told by the Minister that the road has passed out of the hands of the original promoters and is now in the hands of someone else. Now, it appears to me that before we grant a large tract of land to a company we ought to know who are the persons interested in that company, what money of their own they propose to put into it, whether it is really a grant to a private individual for private advantage, or whether it is of a public character; whether the public interest is being considered, or whether it is a private gift in fact. Now, whatever laxity may have obtained in the past ought to be a warning to us not to be lax now. Large tracts of public lands are being handed out to corporations with a good deal of freedom. I very much doubt if any individual would part with his property on any such terms. In this particular instance, if what I gather from the remarks that fell from the Minister of the Interior and the member for Alberta (Mr. Davis), when the matter was before the House a short time ago, is correct, then it would appear that this is purely a speculative concern. Certain persons, said to be persons of means, are anxious to obtain a grant of land for the promotion of an enterprise purely of a private character, a purely private enterprise. It is a proposition to grant land to enable an individual to develop coal lands for his own private gain, having no regard to the public being benefited, further than by being able to purchase coal or by the railway service. Now, this is not the sort of a company, in my judgment, that ought to be aided out of the public exchequer, or out of the public domain. If it is aided, if there are no guarantees of bonâ fides, then there ought to be other stipulations, other safeguards cast around the enterprise for the benefit of the public. This is not merely aid to a railway; that must be borne distinctly in mind. A railway, if one is built, serves the public, no matter if it is entirely controlled by private individuals, or even if it were an enterprise of speculators. But this is not an ordinary case of a common carrier, but it is the case of proprietors of coal lands obtaining grants of land for the extension of a railway to a coal district to enable them to market their own coal to special advantage. There is a wide distinction, therefore, between aid to an enterprise of this character and aid to a purely railway enterprise. That being the case, the Railway Act does not, in my judgment, furnish the guarantees to to which the public are entitled. It is true, as the Minister of Justice kindly pointed out to me yesterday, that section 228 of the Railway Act enables the Governor in Council to revise, and I presume that means to reduce, the rates. But when you bear in mind that the principle will only be affected if you can show a discrimination, and when you remember that in this particular case the carrying of coal will be the main enterprise, and that being the coal company itself, it is clear that the question of discrimination will never arise, and therefore the power under section 228 is not likely to be exercised. The company might impose the most excessive tolls on coal and still not discriminate against the public, and yet those rates might be so excessive as to render valueless the coal lands of others than those controlling this road. They only want to carry their own coal, or to get possession of other coal lands, and therefore may say, "We charge $1 a ton for a given distance." It may be an exorbitant rate, but this company has fixed it, and they charge themselves at that rate as well as the public, and thus the company will say, in answer to an application to reduce the tolls, there is no discrimination. It is immaterial to them as owners what rates they charge for carriage—it is a mere matter of book-keeping; and therefore the provisions of the Railway Act will be a dead letter, because it will never be possible to show any discrimination. This company as customers of themselves will never be prejudiced by any excessive rate on coal. No matter how excessive the rate is it will not hurt this company, because whatever they charge themselves for carrying their coal they recoup themselves. The general public are, therefore, left entirely at the mercy of the company in this case. The power of revision is never likely to be exercised, and therefore, when private individuals are coming here under cover of a railway charter and are asking for a grant of land to develop their own private property for their own private ends, the case demands safeguards not to be found in the Bill. I maintain there should be a maximum limit placed on rates for coal carriage or other safeguards : I suggest that as one of the safeguards. I ask the Minister of the Interior if he has any objection to such a provision going into the Bill? The company cannot take this gift without attendant conditions. It would be as reasonable for owners of a timber limit to apply to Parliament for a grant of money to extend a railway into their own limit. It is true that there might be other limits all round, and the timber of others might be carried by the road as well, but the company would have an advantage unless they were limited in regard to the rates they should charge their neighbours. If you do not limit, then you practically establish a monopoly for the benefit of the company in regard to timber limits in the vicinity of that road. And the same result would follow in the case of coal and mineral lands. Therefore, when these individuals under an Act of incorporation come here as a company, a purely private speculative company, for private gain and not for the public good, and ask for public aid, for a gift, we should attach proper conditions to that gift. If they do not think proper to take the gift on those conditions, others will. I ask the Minister if he considers it desirable to fix a maximum rate for the carriage of coal? That is the article they are engaged in carrying, and therefore there is no real competition ; nothing is going to reduce the price, and the company will be able to exact the most excessive rates for the carriage of coal in order to make the coal lands in the country their own private property in fact. It is exceedingly important that these safeguards should be imposed. Take the town of Calgary, which is not far distant from this district. If Parliament fixes a maximum rate for the carriage of coal it will be infinitely better for the district as a whole. The coal will come out at a fixed rate ; everyone will be benefited, not only the people who own coal lands, or the Government if they own them, but also those who buy. Why, therefore, should there not be proper safeguards inserted in the Bill at this stage? I hope the Minister of Interior will consider, and accept with favour, the suggestion I make on this point.

Mr. TROW. The proposition of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) is quite reasonable. The lands in that locality are quite valuable, and for a distance of 55 miles we are giving away lands to that company for the construction of the road, or a total of about 352,000 acres. It is not in the interest of the settlers, or of the Government, or of the country at large, that this company should acquire those lands in this locality, and it would create a monopoly in the carrying of coal to Calgary and other points on the road.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think hon. gentlemen opposite have taken a very unreasonable course in regard to this company. I do not see why this company should be made an exception. It does not own an acre of coal. It is building this road for settlement as well as for the carriage of coal, when the coal mines are worked there. I do not anticipate that the building of this road will create a monopoly in the coal business for the whole of the country. Calgary is being supplied from coal mines worked in its immediate neighbourhood. I do not see, therefore, any reason why this company should affect the prices of coal in that locality. I think the provision in the Railway Act is quite sufficient to guarantee that no excessive rates will be charged. The Act gives power to the Government to regulate the rates from time to time. So far as this company is concerned, it is no more speculative, and not so much so, as others, but it is one that is now being formed on a business basis, with men of capital at its back who will ensure the construction of the road. The hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) states that the land grant given to this company will be some 3,000,000 acres. He has made a slight mistake there, because the land grant is 352,000 acres, or 6,400 acres per mile for the 56 miles. I may say that I cannot agree to the proposition of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), and I would much sooner withdraw the Bill than agree to such a clause being inserted in it. If I should be forced to do that, the hon. gentleman must take upon himself the responsibility of preventing a bonâ fide undertaking in the west ; and probably that is the object he has in view.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I wish to say one or two words on this matter. I know nothing personally of the enterprise itself, but I have a very strong objection indeed to the insertion of that clause in a particular Act, when we have a complete provision in the Railway Act ; a more complete and effectual provision on that very subject than we can insert here. There can be no object in repeating that provision in this Act. We must select some other mode of arriving at the object, and it seems to me that the mode suggested by the hon. gentleman is not one that will commend itself to the House. What is the grievance that he apprehends may arise? It is: That an exorbitant rate may be charged on the coal carried by the company for other persons than the company itself. I would point out to the hon. gentleman and to the Committee that, under section 227 of the Railway Act, no toll whatever, exorbitant or otherwise, can be levied by this company on the coal of any person or any other company, until that toll has been approved by Order in Council. Section 227 says :

"No tolls shall be levied or taken until the by-law fixing such tolls has been approved of by the Governor in Council, nor until after two weekly publications in the Canada Gazette of such by-law and of Order in Council approving thereof; nor shall any company levy or collect any money for services as a common carrier except subject to the provisions of the Act."

Now, what is the next greviance that he apprehends will arise? That the tolls, although perhaps reasonable in the first instance, may be found unreasonable as time goes on, and he apprehends that the Governor in Council has not the power to modify the tolls so fixed if this discrimination exists. Under section 228 of the Railway Act :

"Every by-law fixing and regulating tolls shall be subject to revision by the Governor in Council, from time to time, after approval thereof; and after an Order in Council altering the tolls fixed and regulated by any by-law has been twice published in the Canada Gazette, the tolls mentioned in such Order in Council shall be substituted for those mentioned in the by-law, so long as the Order in Council remains unrevoked."

So that no toll can be charged until there is an Order in Council approving of it, and then, when we find they are too high, they can be reduced by Order in Council without the consent of the company at all. Under these circumstances, we have complete control, as complete as can be given by the Act ; and what purpose would be served by inserting a provision that there should be a maximum rate? I think that would be very unwise, and certainly the House would not be disposed to fix an unreasonably low maximum.

LAND SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We would not feel disposed to adopt a maximum which might be found on investigation to be too severe; and if we adopted a liberal maximum, in all probability it would be found that a lower rate would be a fair rate, while parliamentary sanction would be given to a higher rate than would be charged under other circumstances. It would be simply an invitation to the company to charge a higher rate of toll than the Governor in Council might be disposed to sanction, and, besides, it would be putting this company in an exceptional position. We know that rates of tolls are subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and I think it would be in the public interest that this company should be left to be dealt with in the same way as other companies.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to point out to the Minister of Justice that this company stands in a wholly different position from almost any other company that comes before us. In the first place, it is not a railway company at all. It is a coal company that is seeking, in order to promote its coal trade, to obtain railway powers and large grants of land; and, under these circumstances, stipulations and conditions may be justly imposed by Parliament which would not be advisable in the case of other railway companies. It is a coal company first and a railway company after. There is a great deal of force in what my hon. friend says as to the probable objects of the speculators—I believe they are nothing better—who control this road. However, my purpose was not so much to deal with that aspect of the question as with others and much more important ones. One of these is the extremely reckless and mischievous prodigality with which the Government have been dealing with land subsidies in the North-West. I turn to page 90 of the Public Accounts, and I find that, wholly apart from the huge grants which we have given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, we have, largely within the last two or three years, promised away over 24,000,000 acres in the North-West to a variety of railway companies, some of which may have some grounds for receiving them, but a great number of which are speculative companies. Now, 24,000,000 acres, the House must understand, is nearly 4,000,000 more than the whole occupied area of the Province of Ontario. I must say, for my part, that I have protested very often in this House against this practice, and I shall not allow a single subsidy to pass now without again calling the attention of the House and the country to the scandalous and shameful waste of our resources which is going on under the pretext of grants to these railway companies. Every man knows that the management of the North-West lands from first to last has been a scandal and a shame—that the pledges to the people of this country have been impudently broken, that of the huge sums of money promised us, not the first farthing has been realized; that, on the contrary, there are heavy deficits; and that the colonization of the country shows results the most deplorable. Under these circumstances, I am opposed in principle to granting one acre of land to these companies in future. I think we ought to call a halt, and this is a very good occasion for commencing it. And I have another thing to say: there has been no greater source of corruption than the grants of railway subsidies which have prevailed, contrary to our remonstrances and our opposition in this Hou e, for a period of ten or twelve years back. dW have innumerable cases of the most gross an iu famous corruption practised by members of the former House and practised by members of the other Chamber with respect to railway subsidies : and it does not matter one straw whether they are subsidies in land or in money—before we grant another subsidy, in view of the facts as we now know them, in view of the disclosures with which this country is ringing, as to the way in which railway subsidies are used, we ought to insist on having the most perfect and absolute proofs of the bon fides of the projectors, of their honesty and probity, and of their ability to carry out, largely from their own resources, the railway projects which we are asked to assist. Now, we have not yet had any evidence as to who the projectors of this company are, or as to their means of building these 55 miles of railway ; and I think we ought to have that clearly established by the Minister of the Interior. We ought to be perfectly satisfied as to the character and the means of the men who are asking for 352,000 acres of land from the public : and, wholly part from that, we ought to consider very carefully what we are doing in thus further—I will not say plundering, although that has been the result in many cases—but in thus further depleting the public domain, under the circumstances. These are important points which the House should consider very carefully, and they are wholly apart from the point raised by my hon. friend, which also deserves separate discussion. Before we go on, I want the Minister of the Interior to state explicitly who these people are, what they have done to the present time, what amount has been subscribed by them, what amount they have paid in, and what warrant the hon. gentleman has—when he comes down to Parliament to ask for an area equal almost to two ridings in Ontario—that these men will build this railway in a reasonable time if the grant is given. Having established that point, it will become him to show that there are urgent grounds in the public interest why this great tract of land should be given to them ; and then we can discuss the other questions which have been raised by my hon. friend.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think that, when this Bill was up before, discussion of a similar character took place, and requests were made of the same nature as those made by the hon. member who has just spoken. I think I told him then who the old incorporators were. This is not a new company. It is a company which was organized and given a charter two or three years ago. A land grant was then given by this Parliament, and all we ask is to transfer the land from one branch to another. I then stated that the present owners of the charter had made arrangements with English financial gentlemen to go on with the work, and I mentioned that Mr. Alexander, of Calgary, a gentleman who is largely interested in financial operations in the West, had assured me that he and his friends were in a position to go on with the work of the road, and that the money was on hand for that purpose. A gentleman who was on his way back to England but had been to Calgary on some other business, looked into this work and agreed to take it up, and this is the letter I received from him, dated 12th May :

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

" SIR,—Referring to my interview with you yesterday morning, I have the honour to state that in the event of the necessary extension of the above charter being obtained in the present session of Parliament, together with the required alteration in the terms of the Order in Council, dealing with the land grant, the syndicate in England whom I represent will proceed at once with the construction of the line. The amount necessary for this purpose, which I at present estimate at $500,000, will be available as and when required. In case you should desire to satisfy yourself further as to this, I may mention that the solicitors to the syndicate are Messrs. Ashwest, Morris, Crisp & Company, of Throgmorton Avenue, London, who are in a position to supply any information on this point.

" Should you desire to know the personnel of the syndicate, Mr. George Alexander, of Calgary, will, I am sure, be happy to supply it.

" I have the honour to be,

" Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) " J. GODOLPHIN OSBORNE."

This letter I had when the objection was raised by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), and I promised that I would get further information if he desired it. I then telegraphed Mr. Alexander that I thought it was advisable he should come down. He replied that he was just starting for Vancouver and would not be able to do so, but he cabled to his English partners, and I received from him this despatch :

" Have cabled London : reply received guaranteeing construction : financial ability absolute."

I subsequently got the following despatch from Mr. Alexander, giving the names of those who were interested with him :—

" Colonel Baldwin, of Lancashire, whose solicitors are Freshfields & Newman, of Bank of England : Surgeon General Whitla and Colonel Bassett, whose bankers are Cox & Co., Dr. Fyfe and Osborne : cable address, Avernment, London."

I felt quite satisfied from the conversation I had with Mr. Alexander, when he waited upon me with Mr. Osborne, whose letter I have read, as to the financial ability of the company, that the money, to the extent of $500,000, was waiting the passing of this resolution in order that the work might be at once commenced.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have seen a good many of these companies floated. These men may be solvent, respectable men, but I know how these matters are apt to be manipulated, particularly in the case of men residing in England, who go into these matters as a pure speculation. You may have very excellent men making just such communications as the hon. gentleman has read to us, and within a year, or a day, or a week, or a month, you may find that these same respectable, honourable gentlemen have sold out their interest to a company of speculators, to use a very mild term. I do not believe there is any security at all in such statements, unless they are accompanied by a handsome deposit in hard cash to be placed in the hands of the Government and forfeited in case of non-compliance.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Of course, the hon. gentleman knows that they do not get an acre of land until they finish the work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know that well enough. I know that the work must commence, but the practical result is that these lands are locked up, and that a kind of lien or claim is established, which may run from three to six years before it is finally demanded at the hands of the Government. I am not speaking now of the other question, as to the advisability of giving these huge tracts of land to railway companies at all. That is a separate question. I am speaking now of the communication the hon. gentleman has read. From what I have heard of Mr. Alexander, I have reason to think, as far as my slight knowledge goes, that he himself is a man of some means, and probably a respectable person; but I object entirely to the principle of allowing these persons to obtain the control of these Orders in Council until some substantial deposit is put up. These things, we all know, have been hawked about, not merely in Canada and England, but in other countries; and the Order in Council gives them the power of selling the charter, as has been done time and again, with a grant of this kind attached, for a very considerable sum of money. And by various means and devices, which the hon. gentleman can easily understand, the promoters can entirely escape all responsibility. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that there has been an immense deal of traffic going on inside and outside this House in precisely such charters, with railway subsidies in money or railway subsidies in land attached. And although it may be true enough that, two years ago—before the eyes of the people were opened to the rights of Canada as fully as they are now and to the pranks that have been played with the aid of railway subsidies—this land grant was made, the time has come to turn over a new leaf and exact a penalty in case of failure, before we part with any more of our public domain to these companies.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I opposed the granting of this charter when the proposition to incorporate the company first came up, and I have seen no reason to change my views since. I do not think it is in the public interest, looking at the moneys granted to railways that were built in the North-West Territories, to undertake to stimulate railway construction further at present. I have never held to the view that it was proper, in cases where land subsidies were granted to railways, for the Government to part with control over the lands. Those lands, as soon as it was thought necessary to give them in aid of railways, ought to be retained in the control of the Government in order that they might be put on the market for settlement, and in order to prevent settlers being excluded, by speculative prices being fixed by railway corporations. Whatever views may have been entertained by hon. gentlemen on either side of the House years ago, with regard to the importance of giving land grants to railway companies for the purpose of securing the colonization and settlement of the country, our experience, during the past ten years, has gone far to show that the railway corporations which acquire lands are not necessarily excellent colonizers of these lands. Look at the immense tracts of land now held, as the hon. gentleman for South Oxford has already mentioned, by the various railway corporations to whom these lands have been granted, and see how very little has been done by them to secure the settlement of the country. Why, we were told that when large grants were made to the Canadian Pacific Railway we would not require immigration agents in Europe, that the best immigration agent we could get would be the railway company itself; that the company, in order to secure settlement of the land which had been granted to them and to convert their real estate into cash, would put forth extraordinary efforts to secure immigration and the occupation of their lands in Manitoba and the North-West Territories. Will any hon. gentleman on that side of the House say that these expectations have at all been realized, that this colonization has gone forward, and that the lands of the railway company have been occupied, and that we have added large numbers to our population in consequence? The census which was recently brought down shows that that is not the case; it shows that these companies have not taken special pains to secure the settlement of the country, and it is not too much to say that if these grants had not been made there would have been a larger population there than there is at the present time. In fact, while a very much smaller territory might have been occupied by the settlers who went into Manitoba and the North-West, a very much denser and more satisfactory colonization would have taken place than that which has taken place under the existing arrangement. One of the things which I object to is the policy of scattering our population over an immense area. You can never advantageously occupy 700,000 or 800,000 square miles of territory with a small population. The attempt to do so will seriously affect the value of real estate throughout the Dominion, and will continue to do so as long as you pursue a policy of that kind. You have only to draw a small number of people from the older provinces, and you will immediately affect the value of real estate, because you have taken away the people who would be expected to buy up the local lands when they were put on the local market. Now, the hon. gentleman proposes to stimulate colonization at the foot of the Rocky Mountains. That is the meritorious object that the hon gentleman submits to this House, and he proposes to take 350,000 acres of land for the purpose of attaining that object, and these lands he assures us are not only well adapted to agriculture, but contain immense coal beds: the finest coal fields to be found in the Territories are to be found in those limits. I pressed upon the House, when the hon. gentleman first proposed this measure, and I press upon the House again, the importance of retaining control by the Crown of the minerals below the surface. So far as the actual settlement of the country is concerned and its occupation by an agricultural population, those mines may not be of any very great or immediate advantage to the farming population, but it is of the first consequence that these coal fields—hundreds of square miles of them—should not pass into the hands of speculative companies. Why, one of the most important things to the agriculturist and to the urban population of those territories is cheap fuel. How are they to have cheap fuel if you provide for the constitution of monopolies, if you make provision in advance, before these coal fields have acquired a great monetary value, that they shall go into the hands of a speculating class of the people, few in numbers, who are capable of combining and keeping up the prices enormously, as the prices are kept up at the present time? With the abundance of coal in the North-West Territories, there is no country in the world that ought to be furnished with fuel within reasonable distance of the railway cheaper than the people of the North-West Territories. There is no country in the world where fuel is so abundant, and at the same time so dear, as it is in those territories. How can you expect to secure the colonization and settlement of those territories when you make it almost impossible for the agriculturist to produce enough from his fields to purchase sufficient fuel to prevent himself and his family from being frozen to death in the winter time? That is the policy which has been pursued for ten years, and that is the policy which I hope this House will at once put an end to. It ought not to be continued any longer. In Ontario and other provinces we derive large amounts of revenue towards the Provincial Administration, from our forests. There is nothing of that kind in the North-West, but there are large beds of coal. If the Crown retains control of these, and, when provinces are established there, passes the royalty in these mines over to the Provincial Governments, they may from a moderate charge raise a considerable portion of the revenue required to carry on their affairs. But you throw that away; you abandon it without any advantage to the country, and at the same time you impose great burdens on the population, because you give it to men who are enabled, because it is a necessity for the people, to charge exorbitant prices for it; so that, instead of their ownership being an advantage to the people, it becomes a serious detriment to the settlement of the country. I think the time has come when we should cease to look after the interests of monopolists and those who are simply seeking their own interests, and when we should give some little attention to the well-being of the people at large. If we do that, we must change our policy. We must make a change which is little short of revolution. If you find it necessary to grant lands in aid of railway corporations, retain control of the land and give them the assurance that the proceeds up to a certain amount shall become the property of the company, but do not give them control of the lands and allow them to charge exorbitant prices and so exclude settlers for years. That is what you propose to do. But, if you part with the lands at all, retain control of these mines. They ought not to be in the hands of the railway corporation, but should be free to anyone who chooses to invest capital to acquire an interest in, and work them for the general benefit of the population that may settle there. You give up all control, you abandon all right, you pass both lands and mines over to a corporation that puts none of its own money into the business, but simply undertakes to raise the amounts for the purpose of constructing the roads out of the amount of capital that you have in this form placed at its disposal, and which it can pledge to those from whom the money is obtained. And so you do serious injury to the country. It is infinitely better that that country should not have a settler for years to come than that it should pass into the hands of men who will do nothing to promote settlement, or will do so only in order to make enormous gains for themselves. Let us see that the lands are occupied where railways are already built and the lands are already opened to settlement. There are hundreds of square miles and millions of acres near the railways now waiting for settlement. Why should we waste the lands of the country in order to obtain more roads, when you have so many lands lying waste along the roads already built? Why go on imposing additional burdens, diminishing the population and the value of real estate, and impoverishing the people? Look at the census. Will not the ten years' experience of the census teach the members of this House something? We should change our policy, and it is of the utmost importance that we should make no further grant to railways out of the public domain without a careful consideration of the whole question. The hon. the Minister of Justice has said that, so far as the rates and charges are concerned, the public are sufficiently protected by the power which the Governor in Council possesses. Well, Sir, in some portions of this Dominion parties are charged five, six, and as high as seven cents a mile for travelling on railways. We had it argued here not long ago that half a cent, or less than half a cent, per ton per mile on freights, was a paying rate on the Intercolonial Railway, and yet you have as high as five cents a ton per mile charged on some of the roads of this Dominion. Why has not the Government interfered? Why have not reasonable rates being fixed? Why has not an Order in Council been passed? Because the power that the Governor in Council possesses is not adequate to meet the requirements of the public in this particular. I say, Mr. Chairman, that if the hon. gentleman carries out his threat and withdraws his Bill for this session, at least it will be to the general advantage of the country.

Mr. WATSON. I think this is a matter for the serious consideration of the House and the Government. We are told by the Minister of Justice that the Governor in Council, or the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, have power to regulate the rates charged by railroads. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if he can point to any one instance where the Government have interfered with the rates submitted to them for consideration? I have never learned of a case. But I would inform the hon. gentleman that the Canadian Pacific Railway is allowed to charge 1½ cents a ton per mile for carrying coal on the long haul in Manitoba, for about 450 miles. I certainly think, with the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), that when we are making a land grant to this company this House should ask for a cash deposit as a guarantee of good faith that they will go on and construct that work. The Government have already had two or three instances where they would find it very convenient if there was some deposit made, or some penalty provided, to compel railway companies to operate their roads. Take the Great North-Western Railway, a railway whose charter and history this House is familiar with, a railway which has been before this House for the last ten or eleven years; 50 miles of this road was built years ago, and it is not operated to day. The farmers through that section of country have abundant harvests, they had an abundant harvest last year, but there was no locomotives run over that track, and not a car load of freight was taken over that road. Still, we give a large land grant to that company. No penalties are hanging over them that they would have to pay for not operating the road. I do think, at this particular time, with these evidences before us, we should guard ourselves against giving any other company such privileges as the Great North-Western Company have received, when we gave them large tracts of land without taking some guarantee that they would build and operate that road. Then we ought to fix the maximum rate. We are told by the Minister of Justice that the Government have that power. Well, I would be liberal with this company and would give them a much better paying rate than the Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated was a paying rate over the Intercolonial Railway. It can be clearly shown that these companies who have received land grants from this Government have not given back to the public the expected benefits for the gifts they have received. Take, for instance, the Galt Coal Company. We subsidized a railroad from Dunmore to Lethbridge for the purpose of encouraging that company to open and develop the coal region of that section, and what has been the result? I asked this House to fix a maximum rate on coal over that line, but such was not done, and what do we find? We find that the coal is simply held as a monopoly, and although there may be some who get coal in this region of the Lethbridge coal mine, still we have no advantage from it. That railway in the west simply gives the Galt Coal Company a monopoly over the line upon which that coal is carried, a road subsidized by this Government. Now, in looking over the Auditor General's Report it will be interesting to see the prices of coal at different points on the railroad. You will find, Mr. Chairman, that the price of coal from the west is only regulated by the competition of coal from the east. For instance, I find at Calgary the price of hard coal is $19.35 a ton. This price is paid by the Government for coal for the use of the Mounted Police. Why they should ship hard coal into a coal region is something I cannot understand. I think the coal in that region should be sufficiently good for the use of the Mounted Police. We find that at Calgary, for soft coal, they pay $8.50 per ton. Now, you would naturally suppose that in coming east to Regina coal would be dearer. The distance from the Lethbridge coal mines to Calgary is about 150 miles, and coal is $8.50 per ton. The distance from the Lethbridge coal mines to Regina is about 375 miles, and the price at Regina is $8.25, or 25 cents a ton cheaper than it is on the short distance to Calgary for the same quality of coal. Then we find in Winnipeg, a distance of about 800 miles from the Lethbridge coal mines, the same coal is sold for $7 per ton, or $1.50 cheaper than at Calgary, which is only about 150 miles distant from the coal mines, showing clearly that we are practically giving a monopoly of the coal mines to this railway enterprise, and we are actually giving them a land grant to assist in maintaining that monopoly. I do say that this House should fix a maximum rate for carrying coal. If we are to give them a land grant, in the first place, I should ask some guarantee from the company to which we give that land grant, that they should build that road, equip it and operate it within a given time, as we are giving them a large franchise, we are giving them a valuable tract of country. I am informed that the section of country through which this road is going to pass from Calgary to Red Deer is a level prairie. Now, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated the other night that coal could be carried at a profit from Springhill coal mines, in Nova Scotia, to the Londonderry iron works, at a rate of half a cent per mile, where they have snow to contend with and other obstacles of the kind; but where this road will run they have little or no snow. I question if they will be bothered once by a snow storm during the whole season. I do think we should fix a maximum rate: I think we ought to ask that guarantee, and certainly if we give this land grant we should ask the Government to fix a maximum rate. I beg leave to move that the following provision be added:—

Provided always, that in consideration of such grant of land the railway company shall not be entitled to charge more than one cent per ton per mile for each ton of coal carried over this road in car lots.

I think that is a fair proposition, and a fair condition to be attached to this Bill, when we are informed that coal may be carried over the Intercolonial Railway for half a cent a ton per mile at a profit. Although we have given a practical monopoly to the Galt Coal Company, there is no reason why we should follow that up by giving a monopoly to this other company. We know what the results have been of giving a monopoly to the Galt Coal Company: they have exercised their full monopoly, and charged more for their coal, close to the coal mines, than they do seven or eight hundred miles distant. This coal company will do the same thing if they have the power, and will probably combine with the other company. We should guard against giving any corporation such extensive powers as this corporation will obtain, to whom we are granting so large a tract of the public domain. From the description of the country I have obtained I believe the land grant alone will be sufficient to build the road. If that is the case, we are practically building the road for the company, giving it the coal lands, and also a monopoly. It is the bounden duty of the House, and particularly of the members from Manitoba and the North-West, for we in Manitoba are as much interested in coal development and cheap coal as are the people in the North-West, to carefully consider this a question, and I expect before the debate closes to hear from the members from the North-West, particularly the member for Calgary, who knows exactly what the people pay for coal and knows what it would cost to deliver. I question whether coal cannot be teamed by cart from Lethbridge coal mines to Calgary and delivered successfully in competition with coal laid down by rail. If such is the case, the members from the North-West should bring their influence to bear to lead the Government to adopt the amendment which I have moved to be added to the Bill.

Mr. TISDALE. In all the numerous charters granted for the development of the North-West, and of all the numerous charters that have been granted in the territories in the United States, the hon. gentleman will fail to find a parallel to the clause he proposes to be added to this Bill.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You will find plenty of such clauses in Acts of the Ontario Legislature—such clauses having reference to the carrying of cordwood.

Mr. WATSON. You will find the legislation passed, not in Manitoba, but in Ontario, that where bonuses were given to a railway company the company were compelled to carry cordwood at certain rates. If that is the case in regard to the carrying of cordwood in Ontario, why should not such a condition apply to the North-West Territories in regard to coal rates? That is all we desire to accomplish. We have had experience in the North-West in regard to this matter, owing to conditions not having been attached to charters in the past.

We have in my country a railroad that received $6,400 per mile, whose charter was before the House for years, and was at length proceeded with by a company that succeeded in obtaining the land grant for over 450 miles—I refer to the Great North-West Central. Although the road has been constructed two years, not a bushel of wheat was carried over it last year, and although we have the promises of the promoters, it is very questionable whether the road will be able to carry the crop out of the country this year. With that experience before us, we should be guarded as to the future. Now is the time to act, when a company is coming here and asking for a land grant, and when certain conditions can be attached to it. If the Minister of Marine was correct in his statement the other day, and I have no reason to doubt its accuracy, coal is carried on the Intercolonial Railway in Nova Scotia at half a cent per mile, and if that can be done over the Government road, and under more difficulties than are met with by a railway in the North-West running through a prairie country, we are not imposing too severe conditions when, in giving a land grant, we provide that the company shall carry coal at a rate equal to double the rate charged by the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. TISDALE. The hon. gentleman, if he had examined the laws of Ontario, would find that when any such conditions were imposed they were imposed under different circumstances and for different reasons than have been suggested. The only cases in which such were imposed were those in which the request was made by the promoters to help them in getting money from municipalities, or as the result of a bargain with municipalities for money grants upon such conditions. In not a single case in Ontario will the hon. gentleman find that the Provincial Government imposed, or desired to impose, any such conditions. Further, if the hon. gentleman will inform himself respecting the territories of the United States, where hon. gentlemen opposite frequently claim they are more intelligent in regard to promoting settlement and making favourable terms to settlers, what will he find? He will find that in addition to these grants, special powers are given, exempting the companies from the ordinary railway Acts, and authorizing them to charge 4, 5 or 6 cents per mile for a certain number of years. I do not suppose the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) will go the length of proposing that no aid be given to these railway lines for the development of the North-West Territories.

Mr. WATSON. I will go that far, unless you impose conditions.

Mr. TISDALE. The hon. gentleman is against making land grants to railways in the Territories?

Mr. WATSON. Unless they are going to benefit the general public.

Mr. TISDALE. So the hon. gentleman is in favour of them under certain circumstances. He may accept whichever horn of the dilemma he pleases. What is the hon. gentleman's proposition? I know that as regards all the charters heretofore granted for railways to be built in the North-West Territories, no such condition as is suggested has been imposed. Further, I will tell the hon. gentleman that the means whereby the price of coal is reduced is by competition. This is the first time that a railway receiving Government aid is attempted to be burdened by impracticable conditions. If the hon. gentleman knew anything about financing and constructing railways he would be aware that such conditions would prohibit the building of the proposed road. It is all very well to say that other people stand ready to build the road with such conditions attached. The proof that the contrary is the case is that no such road has ever been built with such conditions attached; no sensible men would under such circumstances build a road, and no sensible capitalist in any money market would purchase bonds with such conditions, because you cannot look into the future and tell what their effect would be on the road. The adoption of such conditions would simply mean that the road would not be constructed. If the hon. gentleman desires to obstruct the building of this road in the interests of a rival scheme, very well. I am speaking in entire ignorance of anything connected with the road except the charter and the charter of similar roads granted by this Parliament; and I am aware that a number of such companies have had land grants given to them, but the roads have never been constructed, for they were unable to build the lines even with the assistance of such grants. I believe that most of the members from the older provinces support these Bills for railways in the North-West on the ground that they promote settlement and prove advantageous to the Territories. It is very difficult for the Territories, as the hon. member for Marquette should know, to obtain capital for such enterprises. I am quite sure he would be one of the last to invest in the undertaking now under consideration if it were burdened with the onerous conditions he suggests, conditions that no Legislature in this country, or in the adjoining country, has ever imposed on a pioneer railway. Such action simply means the obstruction of the undertaking to such an extent that I do not believe responsible men would enter upon it or be able to float their bonds, and the attachment of such conditions, therefore, practically amounts to a rejection of the scheme. Unless the hon. gentleman can give some better reason why these conditions should be imposed his amendment should be rejected. What has been the result of railways getting into the coal lands? It has been to make coal cheaper. I know that the price of coal in the North-West has fallen more than 50 per cent.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. TISDALE. I hold that this House should give fair-play and justice to these railway enterprises. The people of the North-West are interested in seeing that they are placed on such a basis that there is a reasonable chance of the roads being constructed. That is really the object of making these grants, and if we load them up with conditions that are unfair and unjust, the roads cannot be built; and surely it is rather early in the day, when these roads are necessary to the development and settlement of the country, to needlessly throw obstacles in their way, for it must be remembered that, unless there is something different in our North-West from other countries, the more railways constructed in the coal regions the cheaper coal will become. That has been the effect in the United States. The Government, states, counties and cities, have assisted the mining roads and those roads owned by mining companies. Has not the result been to make coal cheaper every year in the United States? Has coal ever been cheaper there than it is to day? If we want to have our coal mines opened we must aid the building of railways into our coal regions, and not impose conditions that will obstruct their building or operation.

Mr. DALY. I desire to say a few words in reply to the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) and as to his amendment. I think his amendment is ridiculous on the face of it. This line of railway is only 56 miles long, and he proposes to impose this restriction on that railway, in favour, he says, of the interests of the people of Manitoba. He tells us that coal cannot be got from Calgary to Winnipeg unless it travels 800 or 900 miles over the Canadian Pacific Railway: and I would like to know, under the circumstances, how any portion of the people of Manitoba could be benefited by this. The people of Calgary at the terminus of the 56 miles of railway might be benefited, but there would be no benefit conferred on any others. The imposition which the hon. gentleman wishes to put upon this railway of 56 miles would not benefit anybody except those living at the terminus of the road. It would not lessen the freight on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and, therefore, as I said before, the proposition is ridiculous on the face of it. It is ridiculous to pretend that you will cheapen coal in the Province of Manitoba by imposing a restriction on this line of railway. I do not wish to follow the hon. gentleman in the very rambling remarks he has made, or to reply to the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), or to the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), because the people of Manitoba know too well the opinions these hon. gentlemen have of our country, and the efforts they have made to injure it, session in and session out, for the last five years in this House. I can tell these hon. gentlemen that their remarks will be received by the people of the territories and Manitoba with all the weight they call for. I am perfectly satisfied, so far as our people are concerned, that, as the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) has said, when our railways increase and the country develops so the coal will become cheaper. We can get coal to-day at $10 per ton cheaper than we could buy it in Brandon eight years ago, and so, year after year the prices will become less. The proposition of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) would simply apply to a railway 56 miles long, and to get coal to the town I live in, it would have to be carried some 800 miles over another line of railway, so that the imposition he seeks to impose could not in any way cheapen the coal.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) says that he does not wish to follow me in my rambling remarks, and probably the less he says about this matter the better for himself among his constituents. The hon. gentleman admits that coal has got to be carried over a distance of 800 miles to Winnipeg, where I have shown that coal is sold at $7 per ton, and I would like to ask him what freight the Canadian Pacific Railway gets on that coal coming from the west, when it is delivered at Winnipeg at $7 per ton? It is the rates which the coal company take advantage of on their own line of railway, in delivering that coal to the Canadian Pacific Railway, which increases the price of coal; and because we find that the Canadian Pacific Railway must carry that coal 800 miles over their road at a rate of about half a cent per ton per mile coming east. The coal at Dunmore would only be worth about $3 per ton, and then it is delivered in Winnipeg for $4 more, which is a rate of about half a cent per ton per mile. I think that will clearly show that the extra dollar, if there is an extra dollar charged, is charged by the company which has a monopoly of the coal mine, and of the railway which delivers that coal to the Canadian Pacific Railway. It may seem inconsistent to say that the Canadian Pacific Railway charged 1½ cents per ton per mile from Port Arthur west, but they do charge that; and if we get any advantage at all from the fact that we have coal mines developed in the west it is because there are a large number of merchants in different towns along the Canadian Pacific Railway who bring in American coal, and that coal is sold in competition with our coal and reduces the prices. I say that we are deriving no benefits from the land grants we have given to assist these coal companies in the North-West. I may state to the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) that I am opposed to granting any public aid to any corporation, unless the public are to receive some benefit from it. I am not here as an advocate or champion for railway corporations. I am here to advocate the interests of my constituents and the general public. I take it for granted that the railway companies have men at their head who are quite able to take care of themselves, and it is our business as representatives of the people to see that the interests of the general public are looked after, and to see that the public domain is not given away without doing any good to the country. It is our duty to prevent that our valuable lands in the North-West shall not be given away to private individuals for the purposes of speculation. The hon. gentleman has stated that railways cannot be built even with the land subsidies now received, but that is simply because the original promoters of these companies who have got the land grants want too much of a bonus from practical men who would build the road. We very well remember the old story of the boodle boy Beaty. He wanted too much for the "boy," and would not leave anything for the men who were actually building the road There has been too much of that kind of thing going on in this Dominion; there has been too much speculation going on by individuals at the public expense. I am elected in this House for the purpose of advocating what I consider the interest of the general public and the interest of my constituents, and that is the course I intend to pursue here. I believe that the amendment now before the House is fair and just, and I believe we should ask this railway company to carry that coal at a rate not exceeding one cent per ton per mile. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) says that this is a short line of road, but I point out to him that it is not as short as the road between the Springhill mines and the Londonderry iron works. That is a road of only 27 miles, I think, and yet we were informed the other night that even that short piece of road carried coal for the Londonderry iron works at half a cent per ton per mile, and that the rate paid. If a road 27 miles long can carry coal at half a cent per ton per mile, surely a road 50 miles in length can carry it for that rate and make a profit; but still I am generous enough to propose that the maximum rate shall be one cent per ton per mile.

Mr. SPROULE. It must be apparent to any one, and especially to the people of Ontario, who use railways extensively, that the proposition made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) is absurd. If we compare the rates which he proposes to subject this railway to with the rates that are being paid in Ontario at the present time, it will be seen how absurd his proposition is. Let us take the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I think it will be acknowledged that we can make a fair comparison on it with respect to the rates in the Province of Ontario. In that province, where they have so much freight to carry, they are charging in my own part of the country from $20 to $22 a car for 92 miles; whereas, the rate proposed by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) would be only $6 per car for 50 miles.

Mr. WATSON. What kind of freight is that?

Mr. SPROULE. Wheat, if you like, or coal, or any freight of that kind. It is $20 to $22 per car for 90 miles; and yet the hon. gentleman proposes to allow only $6 a car for 50 miles. That would be about one-third what they charge in the Province of Ontario, where railway competition is so active compared with the North-West. If this were a long haul I have no doubt that the proposition of the member for Marquette would be a reasonable one, but for a railway 50 miles long in the North-West it is absurd. The hon. gentleman said that bonuses or support was given to railway companies in Ontario, and that a similar provision was inserted in their charters. We made a provision of that kind in our county, but our experience was that the provision was practically no good. We found that the railway company did not live up to it, and that, although it was made, we might just as well have never attempted to have it enforced, because it was impossible to enforce it, and the railway company entirely ignored it. The railway company assured us that if they were compelled to carry out that provision they would never have built the road. I believe that the case would be similar in the North-West. If you impose such restrictions upon a company, which must raise money to build the road, they would simply withdraw from the project altogether, and the people of that country would be left without a road for perhaps a long time to come. In view of the urgent necessity for railroads in the North-West, it is important that we should impose as few restrictions as possible, because if any restrictions of this kind are imposed, people will not put their money into the enterprise, and the North-West will have to do without the railways. I think if this amendment were adopted there would be no railway built in the present case. More than that, I believe that one cent per ton per mile would never pay on a short road like this.

Mr. WATSON. What rate do you think would pay?

Mr. STEVENSON. The Grand Trunk charges 60 cents a ton for 30 miles.

Mr. WATSON. That is a monopoly.

Mr. STEVENSON. If it is a monopoly, you have it all over.

Mr. WATSON.

Mr. CHARLTON. The system of granting railway subsidies which the Government have hitherto pursued is well illustrated in the case we are discussing here to-day. The position has frequently been taken on this side of the House that the granting of speculative charters to companies for railways that would not be built till some time in the future was an abuse. Now, it may be, as the Minister of the Interior represents, that the promoters of this railway—this Mr. Alexander and those associated with him—mean in good faith to go on now and construct this railway. But I have here the original charter of this Red Deer Valley Railway Company, which was granted by this House a little over two years ago, and assented to on the 26th day of March, 1889; and I should judge from the names of the incorporators that the charter was of the character that we have so often condemned—one obtained by these parties without any intention of building the road. They have now parted with their franchise for some consideration or other, and possibly the people who have purchased the charter from these speculators may intend to build the road. Who were the original incorporators of this railway? I find their names in the charter, 52 Victoria, chapter 52. We have first the name of Joseph Ick Evans, a saloon keeper, I believe, of the city of Toronto.

Mr. DEWDNEY. He is dead; leave him alone.

Mr. CHARLTON. Well, he was not dead when our friends on the other side of the House gave him the charter. Then there was Daniel McFarlane. I do not know him; he may be a capitalist or a railway constructor. Then there was J. T. Johnston; this may be the man who figured here before a committee the other day as having sold wares to the Printing Bureau.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CHARLTON. If he did so, it would be as legitimate a business as that of charter brokerage. Henry Percy Withers was another incorporator; John Bain, a Toronto Tory lawyer and a defeated Government candidate, was another. These were the incorporators; and what kind of a company is this to have a railway charter and 6,400 acres of land a mile given to it? Had the Government any assurance that these men would build the road?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; they spent $20,000.

Mr. CHARLTON. They could not have had any idea that they would build the road; but they were friends of the Government, and they were placed in a position to control the charter, and to make the best terms they could at such time as men would be found willing to buy the charter and build the road. We are told that the men now controlling the charter intend to go on and construct this road. If so, it is for us to consider what restriction we ought to place upon them in the public interest in making them this grant. This road, I understand, is to be built through a prairie country where its cost will not exceed in all probability $10,000 a mile, without the cost of equipment; so that we are proposing to give them a grant of land, the value of which, at $2 per acre, is more than sufficient to compensate them for building the road. If we are to give the company the means of building the railway, I think it behooves us to consider carefully what conditions we had better impose for the protection of the public interest in making the grant. My hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) pointed out that this was a mere trading company, a company owning coal lands and mines, and having power to acquire other coal lands; and as they might find other coal lands in this land grant, it was necessary to impose some restriction as to the rate which they might charge for carrying coal, because if this is not done they will be able to freeze out all competitors in the coal-mining industry. It does not matter whether they do this by charging undue rates for carrying coal over their line, or by raising the price of the coal at the pit's mouth; it all goes into their own pocket. It does not matter whether they rob Peter to pay Paul, or rob Paul to pay Peter, so long as they are the owners of both Peter and Paul. Therefore, if we give this 352,000 acres of land for the purpose of enabling them to develop their coal lands, we should profit by the experience that we had in the case of the Caraquet Railway, which we endowed for the purpose of enabling my hon. friend from New Brunswick to develop his timber limits, and we had better impose some restrictions in the public interest. The question is, what will be a fair rate for the transportation of coal over this road? If a cent a ton a mile is not enough, make it a cent and a-half; but if we can ascertain what will be a fairly remunerative rate, in my opinion, when we are investing the company with all the means they will require for constructing the road, it is necessary and proper in the public interest that we should restrict them as to the rates they should charge; and I think that the Minister of the Interior ought not to object to a proper restriction being placed upon them. In addition to this, I believe another restriction should be imposed. It is the interest of all the people of the North-West that the lands which we are proposing to grant to this company should be sold at such a rate that settlers will buy them, and settle upon them. If the railway company hold these lands at a price above the rate at which settlers can afford to buy them for the time being, and wait for settlers to settle on the even sections, and thus make valuable the odd sections held by the railway company, the settlement of the country will be retarded. Therefore, in addition to fixing a maximum rate for carrying coal, we should fix a maximum rate at which these lands shall be sold, say $3 an acre, which would give the company a handsome profit over the cost of the construction of the road and the cost of selling the land. The Government should take proper precautions and require the proper safeguards in this matter for protecting the public interest. When a land grant is made, there should be restrictions as to the maximum rate at which the lands may be sold and as to the rates of freight to be charged. Having taken these precautions, we will have done what may be required of us by the settlers and the people. If we fail to do that, we endow a speculative company with the means to build lines and leave the settlers unprotected against any excessive rates that the company may charge for carrying freight or for its lands. The hon. gentleman who represents the division in which Calgary is situated is present, and perhaps that gentleman will speak on behalf of his constituents and urge upon the Government, as he ought, the necessity, in the interests of his district generally, of their imposing restrictions on this company, both as to the rates of freight they may charge for transportation of coal over the line and the prices they may demand for their land. I am sure the hon. member for Alberta will urge upon the Government the propriety and necessity of protecting the interests of the people he represents.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is quite evident that in this House there is a sufficiency of advocates of railways, but rather a deficiency of those who understand the feelings of the public with regard to what they are now called on to pay for the benefit they derive from railways. The hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) was slightly unfortunate in his reference to the Western States, because he must know well that the railways there, which were largely aided by Government assistance, charged such exorbitant rates upon the productions of the farmers that the people rose in rebellion and brought about a complete revolution in railway matters in the United States, and these matters are to-day regulated there by a commission. That is a system I devoutly wish we had in existence in this country. All this talk about railway competition is pure theory; experience has shown that it has no practical existence. We have two great railway corporations in this country, and I would like any hon. gentleman to mention a single instance in which the competition between them has been of any benefit to the public as regards their rates of freight. The evil is a crying one, one we are beginning to feel every year more acutely; and, when certain questions now greatly exciting public attention have ceased to occupy the position they do in the public mind this question of railway rates will come before the country as one of paramount importance. The day is not far distant when it will be forced upon the attention of this House, just as it was forced on the attention of Congress by the people of the Western States, where a complete rebellion broke out against the power which the railways had enjoyed under the old system, which had been productive of the most baneful results. Of course, the case under discussion is a special one, and I think the arguments of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) and the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) are reasonable. We have had a good deal of experience, up to the present, of the management of railways; that experience has not been altogether satisfactory, and the time has come when we should entirely revise our system of granting railway charters. I hope the Government will take this matter seriously into consideration. It will be well for us, supplied as the country is now with railways, to consider, in granting future charters, whom we are granting them to and what are the prospects of those who have these charters in their hands of doing more than make a mere speculation out of them. This matter requires special attention, more particularly as regards the North-West. Railway charters are not so much now asked for in the older provinces, but even there a great deal of careful revision is required; and in the North-West Territories, where we have expended a very large portion of our lands by means of grants every year, we ought to be exceedingly careful as to the parties to whom we make further grants, to the manner in which they are to be used. Certainly in a Bill of this kind, dealing with a railway specially intended to carry an article of such general use as coal, in which for many years there will be an absolute monopoly, it is not unreasonable that we should, when giving these people aid to build the road, take every precaution to see that they will not use the monopoly in an unreasonable manner. The proposition is a reasonable one, and one the Government ought to accept.

Mr. CASEY. I am glad to be able to agree thoroughly in the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. Any railway charter is, in the nature of it, more or less of a monopoly, because it necessarily monopolizes for some years the transportation in the district it serves; and in a thinly-settled country, which the railway is intended to develop, the monopoly may be looked upon as absolute for at least a long time. I think, therefore, we will be justified in making provision to protect those who are necessarily subject to this monopoly. I think more, we would not only be justified in doing so, but it is our duty to do so. The very franchise creates a monopoly, and the creation of that monopoly brings about on our part the responsibility, to see that the monopoly we have granted is not injurious to anybody interested. But in a case like this, where there is a treble monopoly, our duty is very much clearer and stronger than an ordinary case. This company not only are to own the railway, but they own the coal mines whose product is to be carried by them, and they are to own a very large proportion of the land on both sides. They will have a complete monopoly of the transportation of that coal, and a monopoly in the possession of half the land adjacent to the road. Under all these circumstances, our duty to restrict the operations of the monopoly becomes very strong indeed. The hon. member for North Norfolk thinks that we ought to restrict also the rates to be charged for the land. This is a very salutary and reasonable proposition, although it is not directly involved in the motion now before us, but it is reasonable to suppose that when the Government grant to a railway, and the railway accepts, so many acres of land, the value attached to that land at the time by both parties being accepted as a sufficiency, and being that on which the company base their calculations, it would not be unreasonable to provide that should the land acquire a higher value that increase in value would go, not to the company, but to the Government or to the settler. It is unreasonable when we give a railway company practically all the means of constructing the road, that the company should have all the profits arising from the land itself. In fact, the land grant should be looked upon rather in the light of a guarantee of a certain sum on the part of the Government than in the light of an absolute gift. This principle has been applied—I may say, turned round and applied—in the terms arranged between the Government and the Calgary and Edmonton and Regina and Long Lake and Hudson Bay Railway, in which the Government, after making a land grant, have agreed to advance certain sums to these companies on the security of that land grant and resume the land if the company is not able to pay the advances. This shows the intention on both sides to regard the land grant rather as a guarantee that the company should be put in funds to construct the road than as a clear present to do what they like with afterwards. I think we should establish the principle that, when we give land grants to companies, they should be looked upon as a trust or a guarantee rather than an actual gift. The late discussions as to giving land grants and as to the commutation of grants in different provinces call our attention more strongly to this matter and would lead us to believe that on the whole the most advantageous arrangement for the Government and the one most calculated to promote the settlement of the country would be to substitute cash grants for the land grants or to give a guarantee which would allow the company to float their bonds, reserving to the Government the right to dispose of the lands at such increased prices as they might bring, or, if they saw fit, and believed it would be more for the benefit of the country, to give them away to settlers. It is a very grave responsibility which the Government assumes when it surrenders forever the right to say what the policy shall be in regard to the disposal of these lands and at what prices the public domain in any district is to be disposed of. By adopting the suggestions made, that of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson), that the company should be restricted from pushing their powers of monopoly beyond the bounds of justice, and that of my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), by which either the Government might secure any profits which might be made upon these lands or the settler might be assured of having them at a certain fixed rate, we would be doing what is right and just in dealing with a company so favoured as this is. As to the actual price at which freight rates for coal should be fixed, I am not in a position to speak, but one thing is clear, that this company must be able to carry the coal much more cheaply than any ordinary railway company. Of course, a company which has the monopoly of the production of coal and the monopoly of its transportation, which burns its own coal and uses its own locomotives and cars in moving its own coal, must be able to do it cheaper than an ordinary company that has to buy its coal from the mine owner for the purpose of transporting other coal. If we ascertain the prices at which other companies carry coal at a profit and fix that as a maximum, we are not only doing no injustice to the company but leaving them a considerable margin of profit. Under these circumstances, I shall vote for the amendment of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson), and I would urge most strongly on the Government the necessity of considering this whole question of monopoly in connection with railway charters. It has become a very grave and serious question, not only in the United States, but in Canada. We have only two main lines in Canada for purposes of competition. Monopoly is felt all over the country, and it is contrary to the genius of the age, and to the genius of Canada in particular, to allow monopoly to exist unrestrained. I think it is one of the most serious questions which should engage the attention of the Government, in dealing with railways, how far they can restrain the exercise of monopoly powers by them, and more especially by such as receive Government assistance.

Mr. DICKEY. I think it is admitted that this company has the monopoly of the mine as well as the railway, and, therefore, I think the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) will take nothing by the amendment he proposes. It is a mere matter of book-keeping, when the company has a monopoly of the supply of coal.

Mr. WATSON. There is a lot of coal all round there.

Mr. DICKEY. I understand that there are four coal mines there, but no company is operating them at present. I think there is a good deal in what the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) says as to monopoly, but it must be evident that that is a matter which can only be dealt with after careful consideration, and only by treating all railways in the country alike. If a land grant to this railway is right, by all means let the House grant it. If it is wrong, let the House refuse to grant it. But, if we give it, let us give it fairly and honourably, and not put a stigma on this railway which is not put on any other railway in the country. The United States has been referred to. The hon. member for Muskoka knows that the system adopted in the United States was only arrived at after a commission had carefully considered all the points and had received the evidence of experts. The hon. gentleman does not know whether one cent a ton per mile is sufficient. The gentleman who spoke last (Mr. Casey) admitted that he did not know what the rate should be, and yet I suppose he will vote for a proposition, of the reasonableness of which he knows nothing. That shows that the proposition is unfair as applied to this railway alone in Canada. It should only be moved after consideration by experts who would decide what is a fair rate and what are fair regulations. I, therefore, think the Committee should not seriously consider this amendment.

Mr. DAVIN. This is a very small question in itself, but a very large question has been raised and to some extent discussed. That question is the relation of railways in this country to public convenience and even to public liberty. I will deal for a moment with the question as it affects the North-West. I am very much interested to see the extreme sympathy that is always shown in this House for the poor railways and the poor railway projectors. Sir, there is an element of great danger for all Canada in what is always manifested in this House and in committees of this House whenever a railway question comes up. I should like, in order that the people of Canada would have a moral picture of what this House is, to have the men who are connected with railways, who are solicitors or prospective solicitors for railway companies, or who are shareholders in railways or directors of railways, eliminated, and, if you eliminated them I fancy you would have a very small residuum indeed of men who could apply their minds without bias to such a large question as has been raised here to-day. I should be very glad indeed if I could persuade myself that, if parties crossed the House and my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) were occupying the place of the hon. member for Eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Dewdney), and if he were proposing the scheme which has been proposed to day by the member for Eastern Assiniboia, if I could lay the flattering unction to my soul, and, what is much more important, to the soul of the people of this country, if I could persuade myself that my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock), and my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson), would then stand up and criticise with the same adverse insight the proposal of the hon. member for Bothwell as they have criticised the proposal of the hon. member for Eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Dewdney). Now, Sir, my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) is a very old friend of mine, but when a railway question comes up he invariably takes the side of these poor railway people. What is the experience, after all, in the North-West? Sir, I may say that I will qualify my statement by saying that there is no admiration too high, in my opinion, for the patriotism shown by Mr. Van Horne towards the country and towards his line. As a fact, he has not taken advantage of the monopoly that he possesses. Farmers have admitted to myself, when we have been discussing it, that he has run that line as near as ever he could in the interest of the North-West. But, Sir, the fact that he, a very wise and far-seeing man, a man of forecast, a man who has had large experience in western railways—the fact that he has behaved in that way is no reason, when we are discussing a question of this kind, why we should not take safeguards against mismanagement, against avarice and greed. The member for South Norfolk points us—it is a standing argument that I am utterly sick of; we hear it on all hands—we hear it in the press, we hear from all sorts of benches—to the experience of the western states. In the name of Heaven, Sir, has not the schoolmaster been abroad for a sufficient length of time, that when we are dealing with a large question affecting the interests of Canada we cannot apply our reason to the conditions that exist without asking ourselves what is done in the western states of America, or what has been done in Canada? I rather think that what has been done in the past in Canada is more honoured in the breach than in the observance. I rather think that what we should do now is to look to our past in order, not to imitate that past, but to take the honey out of the dead lion, to take the honey out of the carcass that lies there on the road of our history, and learn from the better experience of the past a lesson for the future. Why, Sir an original idea, a new idea, a fruitful idea, from a prominent politician in Canada would almost strike one like lightning from a summer sky. Read the history of the Administrations of Canada; take the men who composed those Administrations; take the plans they have given us for the benefit of the country, and I say that if you found one fruitful scheme dealing with any question of public interest it would strike one as a marvel in itself. Sir, I am not to be led off the question right before us by being told what they do in the Western States. Let me tell my hon. friend who is so well acquainted with what takes place in the Western States, that they give grants to railways, not directly from the Federal Government, not even when they have territories, but they give grants through the legislatures of those states and territories, and in that way the legislatures have kept a lien on the railways. Now, what is the fact in regard to the price of coal in the North-West. Every word that is said by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) about the price of coal is perfectly correct. We have given a franchise to the Galt Coal Company, we have given them a mine of great value, we have made them rich men, merchants and princes and kings in the land—that is what we have done with them. I might quote the language that is applied to the merchants of Tyre to show what our country does for these men, and ask what will they do for us. They simply look at the matter in the coldest and most calculating way, as to how they can make the most out of their coal. And is not that human nature? Do we not know that men will always act that way? And in regard to this little 50-mile railway, I am not fain to discuss the immediate proposition of my hon. friend, because, after all, the question immediately before us is a small one compared with the large question. I may parody what a great man said of Italy in time of her lethargy—"Would to God," he said, "that I had my hand in her hair," meaning that he would be glad if he could put his hand in her hair and wake her up from that lethargy. And I would fain wake up the people of Canada to the danger that is imminent, because a danger is at hand when a railway magnate may actually dictate to the people of Canada who shall rule them. If the thing goes on as it is going on at present, what will happen in regard to this railway? That will infallibly happen that has happened in regard to the Regina and Long Lake Railway—I am not objecting to it from the point of view of efficiency—it will pass into the hands of the great railway corporation that has with so much skill, so much enterprise, with so much energy, constructed an iron road across this continent. And much as we are pleased with what has been done, much as we are pleased with the fact that this iron band put across the continent with so much skill has given a guarantee to the world and to ourselves of our national development, we cannot close our eyes to the danger that the day may come, the day may be at hand, when the whole railway system of this country may pass into the hands of one great corporation, or of two great corporations, and the man who controls that corporation is practically the director behind the Throne. I will just tell you the experience I have had since I became a member of this House. A man came to me with three of my constituents, and proposed that I should go in as one of the projectors of a railway. He explained it all. It was as plain as A B C, and at last, after telling me how the line would be bounded and how guarantees would be taken to the line for a year and a-half, he concluded by saying: "We will step out with $20,000 apiece"—that was $80,000. I said to him: "What will the public of Canada get for the $20,000 I am getting?" "Oh, well," he said, "if I am not talking to a practical man, there is no use in going further." And that is the way these railways are built that my hon. friend from South Norfolk sympathises with. They must have running rates; they must have this, that and the other thing. But the fact is, we find that these men are very prosperous people. They have everything they want; they are elevated to a very high position, commercially; they have everything that can be given to them in Canada. Now, the proposition of the hon. member for Marquette is not an extravagant proposition. The Grand Trunk Railway takes freight from Suspension Bridge to Jarvis, 60 miles, at $1.10 per ton, and that is less than 2 cents per ton a mile; that is to say, this company, having no such advantages, running merely on commercial lines, takes for a distance of 60 miles coal at a rate of $1.10 a ton. Now, here you have a coal mine, and you have other mines there. The argument made by my hon. friend from the Maritime Provinces was a perfectly cogent argument, if there was only one mine, but we have other mines there, and with our experience, and in view of the rigid Shylock measure dealt out to us in regard to the price of coal in the North-West hitherto, I say that when we are chartering another railway, when we are giving another company 6,400 acres of land per mile, we should take proper garantees. Remember, that 6,400 acres per mile means, for 50 miles, 320,000 acres. If that is worth $5 an acre, you have $1,600,000, and we know very well that over a prairie country you can build a railway for $6,000 a mile, so they could build a railway at, say, $300,000, or to put it at the very utmost, $500,000, and then they would actually have a profit on the land. But not merely have they a good margin to go on as regards the land subsidy, not merely have they to go on velvet from the point of view of the land grant; they may charge what they like for carrying coal, and in that way I hold they are given an advantage larger, greater, wider and more sweeping than should be given them. I say the proposition of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) is not an extravagant proposition. If you give this company that land grant of 6,400 acres per mile, it is not too much to say to them: You must carry coal along the railway at a certain rate. We have had an experience of the conduct of the Northern Pacific line in reference to the Galt mine. That railway, built by the public money of the United States, refused to carry Galt coal. Why? They said: We have mines of our own, and we are not going to help you. A corporation has neither a soul to be saved, nor is there any means of effective punishment available. We must remember this, when we are dealing with a railway corporation, that we are dealing with a body of men who will get the most they possibly can out of the franchise we give them; and I say this, that it is the duty of men who have no interest but the public interest to serve, to alarm the public mind on all occasions like this into watchfulness, so as to secure that we will take care in the future to minimize the dangers of railway power to the progress and the liberty of Canada.

Mr. CASEY. Hon. gentlemen opposite think there is no danger of monopoly in this case because there are other coal mines in the neighbourhood. But it must not be forgotten that if we leave to this road the unlimited power to charge what they like for coal they will charge such a rate as will give them a monopoly, not only of transport, but of the sale of coal. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), the company may refuse to carry coal altogether, unless we make a condition that they shall carry it, and at a reasonable price. The hon. member for Assiniboia said that the time might come when railway monopolies might dictate who should rule in this country. I fully agree with that sentiment. I only differ from the hon. gentleman by thinking that the time has come already; that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the creation of this Government, has become the ruler of the Government already; that at the last election that powerful organization did all it possibly could do, and no doubt it will continue to do all it possibly can do in the future, to return this Government to power. That company naturally comes to Parliament, after carrying the Government into power, to ask for favours. As a matter of fact, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company does rule the Government at the present time in regard, at all events, to all questions concerning that company. The company does not care what the Government do about other questions. I took the liberty some years ago to allude to the president of that company as King Stephen the First. That gentleman has been getting along rapidly as regards promotion since that time. He has not yet been officially recognized as king, but he has got as far already as being made a member of the peerage, and I do not know what will be his title in the near future. At first, we had one of the most prominent mountains in the Rockies named after that gentleman, and now we have that gentleman called after the mountain. What may happen in the future we do not know. It reminds me of an old woman in the country who said she had had a vision in which she learnt that her eldest son was to be a prophet. She said: He is not that yet, but he is an elder now, and an ornament to society, and there is no knowing what he may be yet. I may say the same thing in regard to the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He is, no doubt, the ruler of this country in railway matters, not only those concerning his own railway, but with other railways, and he is able to enforce his will and obtain Government assistance in building feeding lines and gobbling up all the new roads started for the purpose of securing competition.

Mr. CAMPBELL. After the able speech delivered by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), I am surprised that the Government have not at once acceded to the proposition made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). Looking at this matter from a business standpoint, I think we have a right to provide certain conditions. We are giving this company a valuable tract of land, 6,400 acres per mile of road. It has been estimated that this land is worth about $5 per acre, and 6,400 acres at $5 per acre gives $32,000 per mile for building the road. I am stating the value of the land as given by the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). He did not say so.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The hon. gentleman has far better knowledge than the hon. member for South Leeds.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). No; because I have been on the ground and he has not.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You never were there.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). Yes; I was there before you were in this House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; you were medical officer to the Indians. Suppose we say the land is worth $3 per acre; that would give $19,000 per mile for the building of this railway, that can be built for at least $7,000 or $8,000 per mile. So we are actually paying to this company far more than the whole road will cost. Then, when the proposition is made that the company should carry coal at a certain rate per ton per mile objection is raised by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) that this is a new departure and there is no precedent for it. Well, if there is no precedent, let us establish a precedent now. If we have made mistakes in the past, let us learn a lesson from them and avoid them in the future. I believe, in giving such a valuable franchise to this railway, we should insist on certain terms being charged for carrying freight. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Sproule) stated that the Grand Trunk charged $22 a carload for carrying wheat 90 miles. Wheat is of much more value than coal and always take a higher rate. But the hon. gentleman was simply quoting a little freight rate between two points. I know as a fact that the Grand Trunk to-day is carrying coal at 1 cent per ton per mile. You can get coal shipped from any of the mines of Ohio to Ontario at $2 per ton. It is an established rule that the great bulk of the freight carried over the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific roads will not average the companies 1 cent per ton per mile. Now, we know it is a fact that the Intercolonial Railway is carrying coal for $\frac{3}{10}$ of a cent per ton per mile, and I believe it has been established that at that rate they are not making a loss. I believe it is admitted by all railways that they can carry most freight for $\frac{5}{10}$ of a cent per ton per mile. If that be the case, then what objection can there be to limiting this railway to 1 cent per ton per mile, which is surely a paying rate. I, therefore, think that the proposition of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) is a reasonable and fair one and should be accepted by the Government. For my own part, I am of the opinion that we are making a great mistake in locking up such large tracts of our territories in the hands of these railway companies. We have made great mistakes in this direction in the past, and as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) put it, we should call a halt and stop locking up so much land to build railways, thus depriving the settlers of their rightful territory.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This question is a very important one, not so much on account of the Bill itself as on account of the principle that is involved in it. We have had several years experience, as I have already stated, with regard to the effect of this policy on the progress of the country, and it is time that we should now stop and seriously consider that policy. I have already pointed out incidentally the importance of controlling the lands granted to railways, if it is thought desirable that this policy of grants should continue. I have also pointed out in the few remarks I addressed to the House the importance of separating the ownership of the mineral resources of the North-West from the granting of the soil, in order that some source of revenue may be retained to the population of that country. There is another very important question involved in this charter and one deserving the serious consideration of the representative of the district in which this railway will be located, and that is, the parties to that charter. It must be borne in mind that persons coming to this House seeking to control a railway charter, and who are without capital, cannot put that charter upon the market without entailing for all time to come very serious burdens upon the population, over and above what would have been imposed upon them if the road had been constructed directly by the parties who furnished the money. What is the object of getting this charter? It is precisely that stated by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr.

Davin). The object is to make gain without the investment of capital of any sort whatever. We have had parties coming to this House within the last ten years obtaining railway charters and going to New York and to London seeking to dispose of these charters; and if large sums of money are paid for a charter there will of course be a larger tax upon the population in order that the persons in whose hands the charter ultimately comes may make a reasonable profit by it. The hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) has informed this Committee that it would be unprecedented for this House to fix a rate of freight upon coal, or upon any other article of merchandise that is being sent over the railway. Now, we ought to consider for one moment the fact that, although a railway company may become the owner of valuable properties, a railway company has at the outset no property whatever. It possesses certain franchises which are conferred by this House, and among these are certain sovereign rights which are necessary to the calling of the railway itself into existence. You do not give to any individual the right under the law to expropriate the property of other people and to appoint parties to determine the value of the property so taken; you confer that power upon a corporation, and in so doing you are conferring upon it certain sovereign powers; you are conferring upon it powers that belong to the State or to Government rather that to a private corporation. You can most assuredly stipulate upon what conditions these extraordinary powers will be conferred. Now, Sir, experience has shown us that it is not enough to depend upon competition for the regulation of rates of charge, because in many cases there is no competition, and so you have given to the Governor in Council the power to regulate the freights from time to time. I would like to ask the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) whether there is any difference in principle between conferring that power upon the Executive of the country, or actually exercising that power directly by Parliament itself? It is an act of Parliament that confers the power upon the Executive; it is not an inherent power, and we therefore assume that it is right and proper that such powers should be vested somewhere, and we say that experience shows that it is not effectively exercised by the Executive authorities, or at all events that it would be right and proper for Parliament in the first intance to fix a maximum rate which ought not to be exceeded. The hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) would not object to the present practice of regulating the rates of cab-hire. Upon what theory do you interfere with the cabman and say to him: You shall not charge more than a certain rate. You would think that it was very unreasonable to leave the matter to the discretion of the cab-man, although at most stations in towns and cities there is an active competition amongst cabmen. If the hon. gentleman were to find a solitary cabman at night, and he had occasion to drive to his home or to the railway station, and it was a stormy night, he would not like to be compelled to pay four or five dollars, and I will venture to say that he will argue that the law which regulates the cab fare is a reasonable law. Experience shows that it is right and convenient to interfere and to regulate the rates charged by cabmen, and does not experience show——

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not wish to interupt the hon. gentleman, but we do not want to waste much more time over this Bill to-day. I thought of moving that the Committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have no objection to that.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee.

Committee rose, and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Dredge Vessels, repairs..... $34,700

Mr. McMULLEN. There was some further information which we expected in connection with this.

Mr. FOSTER. That was for new dredging plant. This is a different item. It is to cover the cost of repairs to dredge vessels, in the different provinces, recommended by the chief engineer. In the Maritime Provinces the vessels are the St. Lawrence, the Canada, the New Dominion, the Prince Edward and the George Mackenzie, and the amount for repairs is estimated at $13,500. In Quebec and Ontario the vessels are the Challenge, the Trudeau, the Nipissing, the Queen, the St. Louis, the Ontario and the Octopus, and the amount for repairs is estimated at $13,200. In Manitoba and British Columbia the vessels are the Winnipeg, the Priestman, the Pacific and the Samson, and the amount for repairs is estimated at $8,000—making up the total vote.

Mr. McMULLEN. Could the hon. gentleman give us any idea of what it costs us for dredging, compared with what the dredging costs which we let by contract? That would enable us to form some idea as to whether it is prudent to keep on hand a number of dredges and do the work ourselves, or whether it would be better to let it out by contract.

Mr. FOSTER. One difficulty, I suppose, in the way of the letting-out system would be to find a service that would be requisite. Suppose we were to throw this plant all aside, it would be impossible to get done by private dredges the amount of dredging that is required; there would not be enough of them. As to the cost of dredging, we know the length of time a dredge vessel is at a given piece of work, and the cost during that time; and if you take the amount she excavates, and take the cost for the time being, you get at the cost per cubic yard. As my hon. friend knows, everything depends on the nature of the soil that is to be dredged, whether it is sand or clay, or shale or hard rock; so that it would be very difficult to get at an average. I find that the dredge Canada, at Barrington, N. S., dug 8,460 cubic yards at a cost of $3,276. At Cow Bay 3,225 cubic yards were dredged at a cost of $1,892. In St. Peter's Canal 270 cubic yards were dredged at a cost of $156. In Prince Edward Island, at the Red Point wharf, 2,442 cubic yards were dredged at a cost of $861. These results will give some idea of the cost.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can quite understand that it is necessary to provide for the dredging in the interest of the trade of the country; but if the Government were to intimate their intention of dropping the business of dredging, I have not the slightest doubt that it would be very easy to form two or three joint-stock companies that would be willing to take up the work. My reason for making that suggesion is that I believe a very large amount of the work done in this way is done very expensively. The expenses in connection with the working of the dredges, boarding the men, furnishing supplies, and making repairs, are all sources through which large amounts of money are frittered away, I am afraid; and unless a very careful supervision is kept over the dredging, and every expenditure in connection with it, I am afraid that the cost will grow upon our hands. Can the Minister say what is the entire value of the dredging plant we have now?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not got the information. I can get it, however.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). What is the name and the value of the dredge engaged at Barrington?

Mr. FOSTER. It was the Canada. I do not know the value. If my hon. friend wants to pursue the question of the cost of these excavations he will find a very comprehensive table in the report of the Minister of Public Works for the last fiscal year, page 148. That report shows the work done in the different provinces and the cost per cubic yard in each case.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). What is the depth of water where the dredge was working at Barrington harbour?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not that information. That would be simply given on the votes for the harbour.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). According to the hon. gentleman, there were 8,450 yards of dredging done at a cost of $3,256. That does not include the cost of the dredge or the interest on the investment.

Mr. FOSTER. No, it is simply the cost of doing the work.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). We have had the evidence of experts under oath that the cost of dredging ranged from 17 to 35 cents, according to the depth of water, say from 15 to 25 feet. The dredging at Barrington harbour cost 40 cents per yard. It would seem to be more economical to employ contractors than for the Government to do the work.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend does not know the depth of water or the kind of bottom or the nature of soil taken out, whether rock, or part rock, or what it was; and he cannot form a conclusion without knowing all this.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I am assuming it was the ordinary kind of dredging and that the depth of water ranged from 15 to 25 feet. In that case, we should have had the work done at from 17 to 35 cents per yard. I presume you do not take out rock with the dredge. It must have been clay of some kind.

Mr. MULOCK. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that rock excavation is done by dredging?

Mr. FOSTER. It is sometimes.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), who is an expert, says dynamite is necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. So it is, if the rock is of a certain kind.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Under whose direction is this dredging done? What is the system followed?

Mr. FOSTER. It is this. Take, for instance, the Provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. There is in the City of St. John Captain McCordick, who has charge of the dredging operations in that district. Any dredging required to be done is done on the report of that responsible officer, approved by the department. He is responsible for the operations of the dredges in his district, and the same system is followed in other districts. With reference to dredging in a place like Barrington, on a coast like the Atlantic, it must not be forgotten that storms and heavy winds often prevent the dredge from working; and during the time she is not working, the expense runs on pretty nearly the same. This does not occur in inland waters to anything like the same extent. That would make the average cost of the dredging higher.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I do not think that the Government exactly follow the system explained by the hon. gentleman. I have a letter in my desk from a leading mill-owner of Port Albert in my county, where the Government dredge was employed last year. The dredge got out of repair and was sent to Kincardine to be put in order, which is fifteen miles away from Port Albert, instead of going to Goderich which is ten miles away. The captain of the barge went to Kincardine and lost two weeks. My correspondent reports to me that if the captain had gone to the foundry at Goderich, he could have had the dredge repaired in twenty-four hours, but unfortunately for the Goderich foundry, it is owned by people who are on this side of politics, while the owners of the Kincardine foundry are supporters of the Government. The gentleman who has reported this to me is the largest proprietor in the place, and does more shipping than all the rest put together from the little port of Port Albert. I apprehend that the captain of the barge, if he had not the authority, assumed it to have these repairs made how and when he liked.

Mr. FOSTER. The system is as I have described it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) My hon. friend seems somewhat surprised that two weeks should have been taken to repair a dredge, but if he wants to know how the system is carried on in the Maritime Provinces, I will tell him. In 1888, at the close of the season, the dredge Prince Edward was found to be out of order. She lay in the ice all winter without a stroke of work being done to her, and the captain was kept on wages doing nothing. When the spring came, when she ought to have gone to work, she was placed in the hands of the agents of the Government in Charlottetown, who gave out the contract by days' work to a supporter of the Government. She was hauled on to a slip in the early spring, and remained there the whole of the summer of 1888, and was launched on the 7th of November when the season closed, and the scows which were repaired at the same time, were launched on the 22nd and 23rd of November, so that the winter went by, the dredge being frozen up and the captain remaining on wages doing nothing, and she only went to work in the spring of 1889.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Was she frozen up both summers?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) She was frozen up both winters, and in the summer, when she ought to have been at work, she was hauled up on the slip and repaired by days' work, rebuilt at the cost of many thousand dollars.

Mr. PERRY. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cameron) is comparing the climate of Prince Edward Island to that of the County of Inverness. I suppose that county may have frost in July and August, but that does not occur in Prince Edward Island. I can corroborate the statement of my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) in reference to this dredge, because I was present when she was launched from the blocks. She was kept idle all the winter. The captain was getting $90 a month for doing nothing but walking up and down with his hands in his pockets. She was laid on the blocks in the month of June and it took the whole summer to repair her, and then she was launched in November, and, of course, was of no use for that year. The information the House has in regard to these dredges is very small and unsatisfactory. It only goes up to the end of June, 1890. I do not see why we should not have the report from the Department of Public Works for the fiscal year ending with June, 1891. There are plenty of officers in that department to do all the work required. It is now about nine months since the dredging of 1890 was finished, and yet we have not a line to show what was done by these different dredges during the summer of 1890. The Minister of Finance, speaking for the Minister of Public Works, states that he does not know what it costs per yard to dredge throughout the whole Dominion. I find, in the report of the Public Works Department, for the fiscal year ending June, 1890, there is an estimate made of the cost per yard of dredging by the different dredges in Canada. First, as to the St. Lawrence, the report says the total quantity of work done during the year was 59,676 cubic yards, at an average cost of 25 cents per cubic yard. The dredge Canada, during the year, removed 29,855 cubic yards of material, at an average cost of 37¾ cents per cubic yard. That is very near the Quebec price. Then, the New Dominion did work amounting to 42,880 cubic yards, at a cost of 19¼ cents per cubic yard. The dredge Prince Edward removed 31,422 cubic yards, at a cost of 31½ cents per cubic yard. The dredge Geo. Mackenzie, during the year, took out 15,440 cubic yards of material of different kinds, at an average cost of 26¾ cents per cubic yard. The Nipissing dredged materials of different kinds amounting to 37,185 cubic yards, at an average cost of 16 cents per cubic yard. The dredge St. Louis did work to the amount of 13,975 cubic yards, at an average cost of 27⅜ cents per cubic yard. The Queen removed material during the year amounting to 4,035 cubic yards, of which 2,502 were boulders and 478 hard-pan, which had to be loosened with dynamite. The average cost per cubic yard was $1.31¾. The dredge Ontario removed 45,910 cubic yards, at an average cost of 13 cents per cubic yard. The dredge Challenge did work amounting to 44,775 cubic yards, at an average cost of 20⅝ cents per cubic yard. The Winnipeg removed material amounting to 65,880 cubic yards, at a cost of 14.047 cents per cubic yard. I think, if the Government desired to give the information asked for by my hon. friend from Huron it would be easy to ascertain the average cost of the dredging. If that report is correct, and I have no doubt it is, it would be easy to ascertain the average cost per yard of the work done by the Government dredges and compare it with what is let by contract to other parties. Referring to the dredge Prince Edward, I find here, and my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) has already stated, that the captain was paid $90 a month, and $180 of that was charged to repairs and plant. That would represent about two months of the year according to the wages he gets, and one would think, if he was not pretty well acquainted with the dredge, the country and the captain himself, that the dredge had been working for ten months, when, in fact, she had not been working for four, so there is another account falsified. This represents $918.83 for twelve months, $900 for dredging and the rest for repairs and plant. One would think the dredge had been working for twelve months, when she was not actually working for four months. Why these accounts are kept in this way, I do not know; the Minister of Finance ought to be able to give an explanation. If the dredge only worked four months in the year, then she must have been eight months idle, and the wages of that man should have been under the head of plant and repairs. But this is to cover up the wrong way that the business is done by paying this man for twelve months when he only worked four months. Last winter this dredge was in Cascumpec harbour and remained there all winter, fast in the ice. She was in need of repairs, but no repairs were made. This spring she moved to Summerside, where I believe she is doing very good work, but she might have commenced a month sooner than she did if the orders had been given properly. If the department had their minds made up last fall to dredge in Summerside, why did they not send her there last fall where she might have undergone repairs and have got to work a month sooner than she did? There are several other places in Prince Edward Island where a lot of dredging needs to be done. Now, I have not heard any reason why this man is allowed $90 a month for doing nothing: I supposed he must be a friend of the Government. In fact I do not know what is the use of having him there at all. I find that dredges in different parts of Ontario work without any captain, and I believe those dredges are of more importance than this one. From the quantity of work that they are doing and the quality of it, they seem to be getting on just as well as the dredge Prince Edward, which has a captain that the Government is paying $90 a month. I say it is ridiculous, it is robbing the country to pay this man wages for doing nothing. Even the Ministers themselves will not dare to take pay without earning it, and no other man should. This country is not able to stand such a wrong as this. I contend that Captain Doyle has no right whatever to be paid when he does not work. Now, I hope and trust that the dredge will not be disturbed from Summerside until she has completed the works that she ought to do there. Summerside is a harbour of great importance for a large portion of the Island of Prince Edward. We have there now a fine steamer called the Northumberland making daily trips, and we have other steamers that are put on when they are required in order to carry freight. This steamer draws more water than the old steamer used to draw before her. She has some difficulty in getting up to the wharf, and this dredging is done in order to allow this new steamer to be able to lie at the head of the wharf. I hope the Government will leave the dredge there until this work is all completed. There is a middle ground in the harbour which requires to be dredged, and I think the dredging is easily done, the material being either mud or sand. I see no need for the Government keeping this captain on the boat at all. When the engineer is there to look after the boiler and look after all the material on the vessel, what is the good of having a captain there? In fact, he does not stay there, he goes home to Charlottetown and lives there, and perhaps he does not see the dredge once from the time she is laid up until she goes to work again.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is an enormous discrepancy between the cost of dredging. In the year 1888-89, according to the report submitted here, some of the dredging cost, per cubic yard, as much as $2.57.

Mr. FOSTER. And some as low as 13 cents.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Not in that year. I see the New Dominion dredging cost 21 cents per cubic yard, the Prince Edward cost 63 cents, the St. Lawrence, 39, the George Mackenzie, $2.57. They vary from the New Dominion, 42; the Canada, 27; the Prince Edward, 31.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a different kind of dredging.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No; the same dredging, the same character of soil exactly. Last season she was dredging at Summerside in the same character of soil. It seems to me very extraordinary that the cost of dredging per cubic yard is less than one-half in 1890 what it was in 1889 by the same boat, digging the same soil, and at about the same depth.

Mr. McMULLEN. What particular officer registers the amount of work done by each dredge?

Mr. FOSTER. The chief officer.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is danger that, in order to make a fair showing of work done, an excessive quantity may be recorded. I dare say many of the captains are very honourable men; but there is danger in this respect. The reason I make these remarks is that after dredging had been done on certain points on the St. Lawrence, and an enormous number of yards taken out, some soundings have shown that much work was still required. About what is the average cost of a dredge?

Mr. FOSTER. It is shown in the Public Works Report.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the number of years a dredge is supposed to last with ordinary repairs?

Mr. FOSTER. Eight or ten years.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice the repairs on the Canada amounted to $2,600; this is a large sum. Did anything particular happen that necessitated those repairs?

Mr. FOSTER. New buckets were required.

Mr. BOWERS. In regard to dredging in Nova Scotia, I may say that a certain sum was put in the Estimates for the dredging of Weymouth River in the county I have the honour to represent. I understood the Minister of Public Works to state, at the beginning of the session, that the material to be removed was found to be of a very hard character, and the dredge did not seem to make much impression at the mouth of the river. Do the Government intend to provide any other means of removing the obstruction? The village of Weymouth is becoming quite a shipping port, and the river is tortuous and requires dredging. I do not think the public money could be spent to better advantage than to provide a dredge or two to be employed all the time in the Maritime Provinces. This place should be looked after, as at present the water is very shoal and vessels cannot enter until high tide. I notice that dynamite is used on certain occasions to remove obstructions, and it might be used at Weymouth River.

Mr. FOSTER. I see that we had a dredge at work at Weymouth last year.

Mr. BOWERS. When the dredge came there last year it was pretty late in the fall. That is a poor time to do work in open harbours, as there is so much windy and rough weather it would be dangerous for the dredge to venture outside when loaded with mud to discharge same into the bay. It is better to send a dredge in the summer season.

Mr. FOSTER. Every season some place must be the last visited.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who purchases the supplies for the dredges?

Mr. FOSTER. They are purchased under the supervision of the district officer. He has entire supervision in all these respects.

Mr. McMULLEN. In looking over the items in connection with the Fisheries Department, I was surprised at some of the prices paid for supplies. As the items are not given as regard supplies for the dredges, I ask if there was proper supervision exercised?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Is the account for repairs included in the item $5,316, total annual expenditure for Challenge?

Mr. FOSTER. No. That includes the maintenance and wages while the work is being done.

Quebec and Ontario $40,000

Mr. McMULLEN. How many dredges are employed in Toronto Harbour?

Mr. FOSTER. It is under contract, and none of our dredges are employed.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the number of dredges in Ontario, and where are they; and what is the number in Quebec?

Mr. FOSTER. The Challenge was at work at Kincardine, Southampton, Port Elgin and Goderich. The Nipissing was at work at St. Basil, Quebec.

The Ontario was at Port Hope, Bowmanville and Brighton. The Queen was at Kemptville.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is the machinery and outfit of the dredges furnished in Canada or in the United States?

Mr. FOSTER. Everything that can be bought in Canada is bought here. The majority of the supplies are furnished in Canada.

Dredging, Manitoba..... .. $15,000

Mr. WATSON. How much is to be spent on the White Mud River?

Mr. FOSTER. Last year there was $5,329.25. There is no estimate this year.

Mr. WATSON. The work at the White Mud River is going on very slowly and I have received a letter from a gentleman interested in shipping there, from which it appears that the work is not proceeding as it should. The letter is dated on 4th July and it says:

"You are aware, I think, of the very slow way in which the dredging has been done at the mouth of the White Mud River here. But this season there has been nothing done so far and there is little prospects of anything being done for at least a month. The people in charge of the dredge are now repairing it, and have been so engaged for two months, whereas three weeks ought to have been sufficient for these repairs."

Mr. FOSTER. The best answer to my hon. friend is that you have not given us the money.

Mr. WATSON. Are the dredges standing idle for the want of money?

Mr. FOSTER. You remember I got a tenth of the estimates to keep it going.

Mr. WATSON. But it would not be stopped in July?

Mr. FOSTER. That is just the time: the appropriation would run out in the last of June.

Mr. WATSON. I suppose it would be just as expensive to repair them as to operate them. This letter which I have referred to, goes on to say:

"I am interested mainly in getting a good channel to come in by as soon as possible. As it is now, my steamer has to lay out sometimes for two days waiting for a change of wind to come in by, and on the average it costs me as much to come in and go out of the river as to make the trip to Fairford for a load of lumber. This dredge was built in 1884 and began operations in 1886, and there has been a crew of from 10 to 14 men kept up on her every season since. The draught of water on the bar is 8½ feet at the shallowest place, and it is not a fourth of a mile across, and yet with a south wind we cannot get in through the channel for want of water with a draught of 4 feet 4 inches. The material, as you perhaps know, is sand, mud and clay; mostly mud. If no change is made, we will not have a suitable channel for five years yet or perhaps more, and this has a most depressing effect on the lake trade."

It appears to me that if this is the only distance, and from my knowledge of the locality I believe it is, then the dredge must be doing very little. Last year they only dredged 15,318 cubic yards, at a cost reported here of 28¾ cents, but I find there are other expenses connected with the dredging that brings the actual cost up to 28¾ cents. It is quite plain that something should be done by the department to hurry on the work there, and to have more dredging accomplished during the season. The material dredged is not carried away in scows, but they are simply lifting it out of the channel and dumping it on the edge of the bank, which is not a very good way of doing work, because it is not piled, and it seems to me that if any flow of water was to come the material would be swept back into the channel. I wish to call the attention of the Government to the particular course in which the engineer has seen fit to lay out that work. The prevailing winds there are from the north-west direction, but this channel is surveyed and the dredging is going on in a north-easterly direction, and consequently it being a very narrow channel, sailing vessels, particularly, find it very difficult to get into the White Mud River on account of the northerly winds. There is a large steamboat there which carries lumber, and that vessel has often to lie outside, even when the wind is from the north, on account of the channel being very narrow and the vessel is driven on to the south channel. I am informed by gentlemen who are acquainted with the navigation of the lake that a much better channel could have been secured in a north or north-westerly direction. The engineer was advised by gentlemen who knew all about the navigation of the lake of this fact, but he paid no attention to them and persisted in having that channel in a north-easterly direction. I think the Government should now call the attention of the engineer to this matter, and they should also order the work to proceed more rapidly in the future than in the past. If that bar is only a quarter of a mile in width, and if the dredge Priestman has been working there so long, it seems to me she is making very slow progress. I know that last year this dredge was very late in starting work, and this year she apparently has not been working for a month previous to this date. I hope that the Government will see to it, that the work is done more expeditiously.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that John S. Smith, master of the dredge Priestman, gets $75 per month, while the master of the dredge Winnipeg, gets $120 a month. How do you account for this difference?

Mr. FOSTER. It is on account of the size of the dredges, and the work done by them.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is rather a singular thing that the size of the dredge should have anything to do with the wages of the master. Are they paid by a percentage of the work done?

Mr. FOSTER. They are paid by the month.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know how it is that the man on a smaller tug is paid $75 a month when the man on the larger one is paid $120 a month, if both are equally skilled men?

Mr. FOSTER. That often happens. The captain of an ocean steamer gets more that the captain of a smaller vessel.

Mr. WATSON. The same is the case with the engineers.

Mr. FOSTER. The more complicated the machinery, the better man you should have: but these are both good men.

Mr. BOWERS. The captain of one of our full-rigged ships hardly gets more than $75 or $80 a month to cross the Atlantic, and I think that for the captains of dredges on our inland waters these wages are exorbitant.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the difference in the capacity of these two vessels?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know their capacity, but they are very different one from the other. The larger dredge requires a skilled man to operate it. The other is smaller, and does not require the same capability. That is the reason the wages differ.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that we pay $7 a ton for the coal used and 50 cents a ton for transshipment.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think $7 is a high price for coal there. The hon. member for Marquette can speak as to that.

Mr. WATSON. That is about the ordinary price of coal there. That shows what we have to suffer out there. I see that the caretaker on the dredge Winnipeg, I suppose only a common labourer, is paid at the rate of $80 a month.

Mr. FOSTER. He is the same man. He is the master for eight months at $120 a month, and for three months during which the dredge is laid up he has charge of the dredging plant.

Mr. WATSON. A man to be a caretaker only requires to be an honest man, and to protect the property.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another circumstance. If this man is a skilled man, he does not wish to be out of work for three months every year, and we probably could not keep him if for three months in the year he had to be out of labour or employed at a very low rate.

Mr. McMULLEN. Could the hon. Minister explain why a portion of the wages are charged to dredging and the other portion to repairs and plant?

Mr. FOSTER. The men are at work during the season dredging, and when the season is over, a number of them are employed at repairing the dredge. In the general report you will see these expenses divided into three departments—expenses, ordinary repairs, and extraordinary repairs.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears that the captain was only actually at work six months, and was virtually idle for two months when repairs were made, during which he received the same rate of wages.

Mr. FOSTER. If he is a skilful engineer, he will no doubt find work to do. West is the master of the dredge and also a skilful engineer, so that during the three months that he is paid $80 a month he is not walking around with his hands in his pockets.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is he in charge of the engines when the dredge is at work?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. I suppose these men have to be kept all the time, but it appears to me that there ought to be some arrangement made that when they are not actually at work, they should not be paid the same amount.

Mr. FOSTER. To get good men you must pay them what will be a fair wage for the year.

Dredging, British Columbia..... $15,000

Mr. CHARLTON. Where is that to be spent?

Mr. FOSTER. It is for the two dredges, the Pacific and the Samson. $15,000 was voted last year, and the dredges were at work on the Fraser River and in the Victoria harbour.

Mr. CHARLTON. What depth of water have you at New Westminster?

Mr. FOSTER. Twenty-eight feet at high water. Some of the heaviest draught vessels come in there for loading lumber.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the difference between high and low water?

Mr. FOSTER. Fourteen feet low water up to twenty-seven or twenty-eight feet high water.

Mr. MARA. Vessels drawing twenty feet can go in since the improvement has been made. A new channel has been made that allows vessels of large draught to go up to Westminster.

Dredging, general service $10,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What portion of this was used?

Mr. FOSTER. There was a vote of $10,000, of which $5,400 was used up to the 21st of December.

Slides and Booms..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is required to carry out works not definitely determined upon, but which may become necessary in the different lumber districts during the fiscal year 1891-92. During the first nine months of 1890-91, expenditures were made at Madawaska, Lake St. John, Saguenay, and Ottawa River, amounting to $1,762.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the revenue from these?

Mr. SPEAKER. In the Ottawa district, the revenue from the works last year was $96,542, and the expenditure would be very much below that.

Mr. FOSTER. Of the appropriation for 1889-90 the following has been applied:—Ottawa river works, $64.97; Newcastle district works, $134; St. Maurice works, $104.

Mr. CHARLTON. Has anything been expended at the Quinze Rapids?

Mr. SPEAKER. The work there was done by a private firm to whom the appropriation was paid—I think the firm of McCoomb & Co.—They did it under the supervision of the engineer in charge of these works. I am inclined to think that the works are not of so extensive or complete a character as perhaps they ought to be.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it possible to pass logs over them?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have a handsome revenue, no doubt, from the Ottawa slides and booms, but I notice that in the Saguenay district, where the expenditure for maintenance is $3,139, not a farthing appears to have been received of revenue. In the case of the St. Maurice district, the expenditure was nearly $20,000 and the receipts not quite $7,000. In the case of the Ottawa district the receipts were $98,000 and the expenditure only $4,000. In the Trent there are no receipts at all.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Trent works have practically gone out of use, and very little timber passes through them now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But they cost $2,915. Why should we pay $3,000 a year and not get a sou?

Mr. FOSTER. So far as I can learn, on the Saguenay there has been a certain amount of business done on which dues have accrued. There is a counter-claim made by the lumbermen for some works they have erected, which they declare to be necessary for the working. That is now being considered by the department. In regard to the Trent River, the trouble, I think, is that the collections have not been made, but I am informed that a new collector has been appointed and that he is now at work making the back collections and looking after the operations of the present year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to be a bad way of doing business to expend $3,000 when not a farthing is collected, and I should think the department should have some better explanation than that to offer. What department is this under?

Mr. FOSTER. The Public Works Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So there is nobody to pitch into.

Mr. FOSTER. You can pitch into me and I will transfer it.

Slides and Booms, Petewawa River.....$3,000

Mr. SPEAKER. What is proposed to be done with that $3,000?

Mr. FOSTER. It is to be applied in reconstructing, during this year, such portions of the dilapidated works built some thirty years ago between McDonnell's Chute and the mouth of the river to facilitate the descent of timber as may be required.

Mr. SPEAKER. I call the attention of the Minister in charge of these Estimates to the utter inadequacy of the appropriation for this particular river, and, if the Committee will bear with me, I will give the authority on which I make that statement. I find in the report of Mr. Brophy, the superintendent engineer of these works, the following:—

"On this river, the works have a long range from the mouth to the outlet of Cedar Lake, and mainly consist of booms and piers at the mouth, single-stick slides, with their necessary dams and guide booms, at First, Second and Third Chutes, Bois Dur, Crooked Chute, Lake Traverse, and McDonnell's; together with large retaining dams at Thompson's Rapids and Cedar Lake, and a great number of piers and flat-side dams at points between these stations. As many of these improvements have been built upwards of thirty years, and often repaired, they cannot be depended on for further service. The same remarks that apply to a section of the Madawaska works, in regard to their not having any great strength to withstand the pressure due to the spring floods and the movement of ice, may be considered as having more force when the Petewawa works are spoken of. Last spring, they received very considerable damage and will soon have to be extensively reconstructed. During the winter months, such temporary repairs as could be done, were carried out."

I am informed, on the best authority possible, that it will require at least $20,000 to put these works into an efficient state for the passage of timber and logs through them. I am also told that mere patching up of the old works will be a very ineffective way of dealing with these works. They were constructed originally for the passage of square timber, and the slides are, as Mr. Brophy says, single-stick slides, but the character of the operations on that river, as well as on most of the tributaries of the Ottawa, has almost entirely changed, and the operations now are conducted in the shape of sawlogs instead of timber. The result is that wider slides are required because there are so many more pieces to be passed through, that unless you have a large space to pass them through, the whole summer will be consumed in getting down the timber through these works. I would suggest that, instead of spending money uselessly in repairing the old works, the department should make a substantial appropriation for reconstructing the works on that river. I suppose my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) would say this will be an expenditure solely in the interest of the lumbermen, but I think I can show that that is not the case, because I find that the tolls on that river on the timber passing through last year amounted to $17,763, while the whole cost of repairs and maintenance was only $2,081, leaving a net revenue to the Government of $15,682. I do not think the people who are operating on that stream are asking too much from the Government when they ask, in return for the large amount of tolls the Government exact from them, that they should put the works in an efficient state so that they may be used to the greatest advantage of the lumbermen.

Mr. CHARLTON. What it the rate of tolls?

Mr. SPEAKER. The rate varies. The rates are graded according to the stations. At each of the series of works a different rate is imposed, so the whole rate is high. The report of the collector upon that is this:

"This river flows from the south into the Ottawa, at 112 miles above the City of Ottawa. The improvements, which were commenced in 1857 and gradually extended from time to time since, are more numerous, and the cost vastly greater than the works on any other tributary of the Ottawa, owing to the short intervals at which rapids, swift currents and chutes are encountered. The tolls on timber passing through all the works on this river are the highest to be found in the tariff; they amounted to $1,260 in 1858, $5,006.25 in 1864, and $17,763.36 in 1889."

Mr. CHARLTON. If the works are in the state the Speaker represents and are paying such a revenue to the Government, I think the claim that there should be a larger sum spent and that the works should be put in an efficient state is a reasonable one.

Mr. FOSTER. The report corroborates the statement of my hon. friend, but the chief engineer's estimate of the cost of putting the works into a thoroughly efficient condition runs up to $38,000, which is a pretty large estimate. This year the expenditure in the St. Maurice district has been largely cut down, as it has been almost unprofitable and it is the intention to reduce the staff to reasonable proportions. Some $3,000 have been taken off there this year. I will draw the attention of Council to the representation the Speaker has made, and also the attention of the acting Minister.

Experimental farms, buildings, fences, &c..... $20,000

Mr. McMILLAN. I would like to have an explanation as to why this large sum is put in the Estimates. Last year when $30,000 were in the Estimates the Minister stated that that would complete the buildings on all the different experimental farms, and that it would require but a very small sum annually after that. I want some explanation of how this large sum for buildings and fences comes to be in the Estimates this year?

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister started out with the intention of fulfilling the promise that he made in bringing the cost of the buildings within his estimate, but he found the experimental farm idea so popular and there was such pressure brought upon him, from both sides of the House, to put these farms into the very best possible state that the estimate has been slightly exceeded. I will commence, however, my remarks by saying that this is to complete, and when this sum is expended all the farms will have their buildings, fences and the like of that, completed and in first rate order; so that whatever else will be required will be for the maintenance of the farms. There is a balance of $2.386 due on works let by contract on the farm at Brandon, together with $99.86 due for superintendence, making $2,485.86. There is due for work on the farm at Nappan, Nova Scotia, $200; Indian Head, $100; buildings, fences, drainage, roadways, required in connection with the experimental farms in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and British Columbia and at Ottawa, requested by the Minister of Agriculture, total amounting to $25,000. Then for contingencies a sum of $1,000, which makes up the estimate asked for. The detailed estimate is as follows:— At Nappan farm, structure required for implement house; at the central experimental farm, extension of the poultry building, fence for yards, &c. The chickens are accumulating at such an extent as to require more room, and we must take care of the Canadian hen under the present circumstances. Then, for wages, repairs to buildings, wages of carpenters, lumber, hardware and other materials, making $2,500 for the experimental farm. At Indian Head there is required an implement house with room for vehicles and workroom for men during winter months, and fencing, enclosing pasture for cattle, on all of which it is proposed to expend $3,500; at Agassiz there is required to build a house for the superintendent, $3,500; barns, stable and fencing, making a total of $5,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. When these experimental farms were established it was expected that they would lead the farmers, instead that they would be lead by the farmers. I find that on this experimental farm at Ottawa there is not a single fence equal to what is being put up by the most advanced farmers of Ontario. The new fences are hedges of a certain description, and they are being adopted all over the country, whereas the experimental farm is behind the times in this. If we are to have an experimental farm it should be for the purpose of teaching the farmer and not for the purpose of being taught by the farmers. I hold that the experimental farm here should adopt these new fences. There is a company which prepares the land, plants the hedge, takes care of it for four years, and at the end of the four years these fences will turn animals of any description. That has been adopted all over the western part of Ontario, and I do not see why the experiments should not be made here. I would ask the Minister is there any intention of experimenting with those hedges on the central farm here?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has got me at a disadvantage. I have no means of giving him the information now, as none of the officials of the experimental farm are here. If the hon. gentleman states the information he wants, I will see that the Minister of Agriculture reads it and he will get that information.

Mr. McMILLAN. That has been the way every year with the experimental farm. It was the same way for the last two years, we could not get the necessary information and it will be the same way this year if we pass this item. Some person ought to be here to give that information and the Committee should be in possession of it before the item is allowed to pass.

Mr. HAGGART. The two items of "immigration" and "quarantine" were allowed to stand on the understanding that this whole question would be discussed when they come up. My hon. friend will get all the information possible when these items come before the Committee.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then let the item stand until we get the information.

Mr. FOSTER. I have given my hon. friend the information as to what has been expended and what this vote is for.

Mr. McMILLAN. I want the information about last year. There was $900 paid for the site of a building on this central farm, what building was that for?

Mr. FOSTER. That is information in connection with the past expenditure. My hon. friend has a perfect right to ask for that information, and he will get it when these other items come under discussion.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do think this item should be allowed to stand until we get proper information about it. We were told when these farms were to be established that $240,000 would be sufficient to complete them all, buildings and everything else; but if we pass this item we find that over $700,000 have been already spent on the farm. When the Minister gets the item passed he will give me just such information as he chooses. The same thing was done last year.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will have a perfect right to ask the information when the item comes bofore the House, and it cannot be smuggled through, because it has been allowed to stand on the distinct understanding that the whole question will come up on it.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am going to keep my position. Last year I got the item to stand over, and why should not the item stand over this year if the information cannot be given now. The first year the item was allowed to pass, I was told I would get the information, but I never got one single sentence of an explanation afterwards. This is the only opportunity we will have of criticising this item, and when the opportunity is past there will be no other opportunity given.

Mr. FOSTER. But you will get an opportunity, of course.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have not received the information. I allowed the item to pass on a previous occasion, and I am not going to do so now.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the hon. gentleman is quite within his rights when he makes that request. If he has sought for this information ineffectually three times, it is imposing on his good nature to ask him to allow the item to pass without it. If, during two years, he has made this request and it has not been complied with, the least the Government can do is to defer its further consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. I rather suspect the hon. gentleman did not get the information he was supposed to wish because he was not in his place when the item came up last time. If he had been here he certainly would have been in a position to have forced the information, as he appears to be determined to do to-night. If the hon. gentleman has any regard for the experimental farm he must not take the ground of obstructing the passage of an item to put the buildings in repair, simply because he cannot get the information respecting past expenditure, especially when the Government assures him he will have an opportunity to obtain it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would be a strong argument in favour of my hon. friend, that he should get the information when he can. Members cannot be expected to sit here at all hours, and a very considerable number of items are passed between one and two o'clock in the morning. We cannot expect hon. members to stay here until one or two a.m., except in the case of the Minister of Finance, who is paid for it.

Mr. FOSTER. I have a suggestion to make. I take the responsibility of saying that the hon. gentleman will have an opportunity to put all his questions and get all the information when the two items yet remaining, spoken of by my hon. colleague, come before the Committee. I promise that; and as the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) would no doubt be willing to accept that promise himself, will he be good enough to use his persuasive powers to convince his hon. friend that he will not be deceived this time?

Mr. McMILLAN. The Minister is deceiving himself. I never was out of my place when this item came up.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman was here when every item in regard to the experimental farm was passed. I gave him the amount on capital expenditure, and other expenditure, on all the farms, and we had a whole evening's debate on it?

Mr. McMILLAN. When did you give it?

Mr. HAGGART. When the items were up?

Mr. McMILLAN. This is the first time I have heard that the papers containing this information were brought down. I have never seen them.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not referring to papers. I made a statement as to expenditure. I told the hon. gentleman the total cost, and I made a comparison between the total cost of the experimental farm here and the Government farm in Ontario.

Mr. McMILLAN. That was last year.

Mr. HAGGART. It was this session.

Mr. McMILLAN. I was present when the experimental farm was discussed. Those matters were mentioned, and I got all the information I asked then. But the information I ask now is very different information. If hon. gentlemen are prepared to give me this information I am prepared to go on; but if the information is not forthcoming I will not.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman has had the total expenditure. I agreed with him in his figures and showed the cost, and that it agreed with the statements of officers here.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the hon. gentleman should allow the item to pass. He will get the information.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is as to the buildings we are talking now. I hold Ministers should not come here and say they have not the information ready. It is as easy to get the information now as two or three months hence.

Mr. FOSTER. I have given the information in the item before the Committee.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then I have to let it drop.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman will obtain all the information when the item comes up. By an understanding with the leader of the Opposition all the items were passed with the exception of two, on which the fullest discussion will be allowed on all questions in regard to the experimental farm, immigration and quarantine. The Minister of Finance representing the Public Works Department shows to the fullest extent what this appropriation is for. The information asked for by hon. gentleman is outside this appropriation, and it will be given to him when these items in connection with the Agriculture Department which have been allowed to stand over, come up for discussion.

Mr. McMILLAN. At one time when I allowed the item to pass I brought it up on another item in connection with the farm, and I was told that it belonged to the Public Works Department, and for that reason got no information. However, as I have got the promise of the Minister of Finance and the Postmaster General that all the information will be given, I am willing to allow the item to pass upon that ground.

Mr. HAGGART. Would you be kind enough to state what information you desire?

Mr. McMILLAN. If you will go over the Auditor General's Report and see what has been done with respect to buildings last year, you can give me the information. I want all information with respect to whether the buildings were erected by contract, and whether the contract was kept to with respect to the plans and specifications. I want all that information.

Miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for..... $7,500

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose some of this is intended for the Cobourg harbour.

Mr. MULOCK. I would remind the Minister of Finance with regard to the Cobourg harbour that I understood a Cobourg paper, in which the hon. gentleman has great confidence, has, in the issue which arrived in town to-day, contradicted what the hon. gentleman had stated in his remarks last night, which remarks, of course, it could not have time to learn when the paper was issued. It stated, as I was told, that the harbour was grievously in need of repairs in question, and that in consequence of the neglect of the Administration to do its duty, the people of the town this year would be obliged to bear a rate of taxation that they never had been called upon to bear before. It is, therefore, quite clear that the town had in some way advanced information as to the decision which the House was only advised of when the item was reached last night. I should like to know whether the country is taken into the confidence of the Government on an item like this, in advance of the House?

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Finance cannot do any good by any such observation. I would like to know how the town of Cobourg came to know the decision of the Government before the House did?

Mr. FOSTER. Then you will have to find out.

Mr. MULOCK. I am here to find out.

Mr. FOSTER. Find it out here or elsewhere.

Mr. MULOCK. I will try.

Mr. FOSTER. It will take you some time.

Mr. MULOCK. I dare say it will take me some time, but if I cannot find it out perhaps we can turn the Minister out.

Mr. FOSTER. You have been trying that for some time.

Mr. MULOCK. We will succeed probably too when you are found out.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not discussing the question.

Mr. MULOCK. I am quite in order, I am speaking to the question.

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister will please keep order. Will you please, Mr. Chairman, see that the Minister of Finance keeps order. I am now discussing the item of Cobourg harbour, and I wish to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that the item before it is quite large enough to meet the case of the Cobourg harbour. I wish further to state that the Minister of Finance informed this Committee, last night, that the item of $2,500 was not required for the Cobourg harbour, and he made a statement which is not in harmony with a statement made by a journal in that town, which knows what it is speaking about, I presume. In fact, the withdrawal of the item was not apparently for the reason assigned to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. Yes. I say it was apparently withdrawn not for the reasons given to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. I say it, and the Minister may say "order," but he will not say it is not a correct statement.

Mr. FOSTER. I would waste a great deal of breath if I criticised every one of your statements.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister will not venture to say on the floor of this House to-night that that item was withdrawn from the Estimates because the public interest did not demand the expenditure of the money. If he wants to take the responsibility of saying that, then he must admit that he was guilty of an error at least, when he made the statement last night. I ask him now if the reason he gave last night was the correct one.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly it was.

Mr. MULOCK. Then the Minister sticks to the statement that the item was withdrawn because the condition of the harbour did not require the expenditure of the amount in question. How did he come to put the item in the Estimates, or on what information was the suggestion given to the Minister that it should be withdrawn? My own view upon it is, whether the Minister will admit it or not, that that item was withdrawn as part of the —I cannot dignify it by the term of a policy——

Mr. FLINT. Scheme.

Mr. MULOCK. "Scheme" is a more fitting word. My own view is that it was withdrawn as part of a scheme to make public works depend upon political action on the part of the electors. Now, we have been told that the Government are about to inaugurate a new policy, that hereafter public money is to be expended on public works according to their merits, and that constituencies are no longer to be debauched by the giving or withholding of public works. If that is the case I would like to know how an action like this can be said to harmonize with the professions of reform made by this Administration.

Mr. DEWDNEY. You will see.

Mr. MULOCK. We do not expect anything from the Minister of the Interior in the way of reform.

Mr. DEWDNEY. You do not want reform.

Mr. MULOCK. I hope we shall never have to depend upon him for the application of such a principle. It is a disappointment to me, because I was in hope that the Government were in earnest——

Mr. FOSTER. Is this in order?

Mr. MULOCK. I should like to know if it is not in order to discuss the Cobourg harbour?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. In the Committee of the Whole House we have to follow the Rules of the House, and the hon. gentleman is referring to a past debate; secondly, we are not dealing with the item of which he speaks; and, thirdly, my impression is that if he spoke twenty-four hours, he could not get any other answer from the Government than the one he got last night.

Mr. MULOCK. I will not controvert your statement, Mr. Chairman, but I have no recollection of any past debate in which this Government declared that they were actually to turn over a new leaf. I was referring to utterances which, I understand, were given to the public to try to make the people believe that this Administration——

Mr. FOSTER. Order. The hon. gentleman has been called to order.

Mr. MULOCK. I am perfectly in order. The Minister of Finance seems to think that by saying "order" he can put people out of order. He will be good enough to keep in order himself. I am perfectly in order in expressing the hope that the Government will do justice to the section I refer to and to every other section of Canada, and not exercise the arbitrary power they temporarily enjoy by giving or not giving as they may perhaps serve a political exigency. Is that in order?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is not in order; but I suppose the hon. gentleman will come to order very soon.

Mr. MULOCK. I am begging the Government to do justice; surely that is in order. I am begging them to be true to the trust they have taken; is that not in order? I am begging them even in the case of this small vote of $7,500 to make an honest application of the fund; is not that in order?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Not on this item.

Mr. MULOCK. If it is not proper to ask the Government to spend this money where it is applicable, what is this Committee for? I think Cobourg is entitled to it, and to expend it——

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I rise to order. You have given a decision on this question, and the hon. gentleman cannot discuss a question after it has been decided to be out of order.

Mr. CHARLTON. What are we talking about? Miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for. If Cobourg has been otherwise provided for, I would like to know it.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not a miscellaneous work.

Mr. CHARLTON. If it is not, I would like to know what it is.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I decided that the hon. gentleman was out of order, and I thought he was finishing. The question is entirely out of order.

Mr. CHARLTON. We may get into a position where we cannot discuss anything. The Cobourg harbour is a work which we claim requires attention; here is a vote not specifically devoted to any purpose; and, if it is out of order to suggest that a portion of this money should be used on the Cobourg harbour, it is astonishing to me. If it is distasteful to the Government to have that question brought up, as to the nature of their motives——

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. A question of order cannot be discussed after it has been decided.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What my hon. friend has stated is, I think, correct enough. This is a general appropriation, and my hon. friend is suggesting that a portion of it be employed in a particular way. Surely the Minister of Justice will hardly say that that is out of order.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That must be the hon. gentleman's impression of what he was doing, but he was not doing that at all. He was discussing an item which had been dropped some days ago, and the propriety of dropping it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Even supposing that was dropped from its specific place in the Estimates, you cannot contend that a member may not suggest, on a vote which distinctly covers such uses of the money as I understand this does, that it be employed for that particular purpose, or for any particular purpose.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I can easily understand how it would be in order even to raise that question; but the hon. gentleman was ingenious enough to get out of order by discussing another question.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hold that in this matter we have taken a perfectly legitimate course with regard to the dropping of a vote, which we believed was dropped for reasons not creditable to the Government; and if we choose to urge the Government to retrace their steps in this matter and do justice to the town of Cobourg, I believe we have a perfect right to do that.

Mr. FOSTER. Then you are going back to an item that was disposed of.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Government dropped it, it is true, but you cannot say that my hon. friend cannot discuss the desirability of applying this vote to the purpose he suggests.

Mr. CHARLTON. I understand the right of a member of this Committee with reference to this matter, and if the Government choose to call on the Chairman to declare a thing out of order that is clearly in order, I think the Opposition had better stand upon their rights. It is absurd that a miscellaneous vote——

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to make a suggestion to him? The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has suggested a mode by which he can put himself in order and discuss the Cobourg harbour; but surely the hon. gentleman does not want to discuss a past ruling of the Chair, or to discuss an item that has been decided?

Mr. CHARLTON. I understand the Minister of Justice suggests that if I do not call into question your ruling in this matter, I may be allowed to say a few words as to the proper application of this vote. Am I permitted to say something on this subject?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. CHARLTON. Very well. I would suggest that through an oversight of the Government the claims of Cobourg harbour have been overlooked; and inasmuch as the Government have been under a false impression as to the wants of that important point and the interests of the public at large in this matter, they should use part of of this vote of $7,500 for necessary repairs on the Cobourg harbour.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I said a moment ago that this question of Cobourg harbour was disposed of yesterday after an hour's discussion; and in my opinion—I give it with all modesty—it is out of order to discuss it now.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Justice will admit that possibly a part of this money, or even the whole of it, may require to be expended on Cobourg harbour, and that, therefore, we have a right to impress on the Government the necessity of making repairs to that harbour.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I cannot agree at all with the proposition that on a general vote such as this, we have the right to discuss the merits of every harbour and river in Canada, under the pretext that some of this money might be properly expended there. The item, under such circumstances, would never be passed. All that is open for discussion is the propriety of passing a vote for expenditures not otherwise provided for. I would suggest, however, that we should agree to hear what the hon. member for North Norfolk has to say, although, in my opinion, your ruling, Sir, ought to stand.

Mr. CHARLTON. I thank the hon. Minister for his courtesy in allowing me to say a few words about this as a matter of privilege, if he does not conceive I have the right to do so. I notice that in a Cobourg paper to-day, the public of that riding are warned of the great mistake they made in sending a member to this House who was not a supporter of the Government, the result of their course being that the harbour would be neglected and they would be under the necessity of paying heavy taxation. I do not know whether that statement made by the local Tory paper is correct or not, but the fact that a vote was first put in the Estimates and then dropped gives colour to it; and, under the circumstances, the Government can scarcely remain under the imputation of having been actuated in this matter by a desire to punish a riding for having sent to this House a gentleman opposed to them, thus making political capital by leaving the people of that riding to suppose that in the future, if they wish to have appropriations made, no matter how necessary they may be, they must send a member here supporting the Government. I believe that the character of the works in the harbour render it particularly necessary that an appropriation should be made, and the Government, by unjustly withholding it, are liable to the imputation of doing so for a sinister purpose. Therefore I think it advisable they should use a portion of the appropriation devoted to miscellaneous work in providing for the works which require to be done in that harbour.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to have a distinct understanding, Sir, as to the position assumed by the Minister of Justice and by yourself. I said a little while ago that this appropriation, being general in its terms and presumably covering any possible case, if any member chooses to suggest to the Government the advisability of carrying out any particular expenditure in any particular direction, he has a perfect right to do so. That, I think, is the natural inference to be drawn from the general terms in which this item is clothed. That may lead to great delay, and that is one of the reasons why it is not expedient for the Government, as a rule, to take votes without specifying the particular purposes for which they are to be applied. If, however, they do not do so, but ask for a general vote, I do not see how you, Sir, can possibly prevent members from pressing the claims of their constituencies on the Government.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Of course, if a member merely suggests that something ought to be done in a certain locality which he represents, the point would never arise; but, it is quite inconsistent with a general vote, not taken for substantive works but for incidental purposes merely, to proceed, with regard to a substantive work such as Cobourg harbour for which there was an item dropped, to discuss the policy of dropping the item.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You do not object to a member pressing the desirability of spending money there, but to his discussing the policy of not spending any.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is the reason I ask that the point of order be not pressed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Last year there was a vote taken for $1,500 for some work on Macgregor Creek in the town of Chatham. I see by the Estimates that that sum is not to be revoted this year, although it is highly desirable that the work should be done. There is even greater necessity now than there was last year for it. I may say that the necessity arises on account of some work the Government did a few years ago in dredging the creek, thereby endangering buildings along the bank of the creek. To prevent their falling into the river, the Government found it necessary to sheet-pile one side of the creek, and on the opposite side there are some large mills and warehouses which are in danger on account of the creek being narrowed up by the sheet-piling. This appropriation was made last year for the purpose of protecting the mills on the other side, and they are being undermined actually and eventually will fall into the creek. I believe one large woollen mill there belonging to Mr. Taylor is already cracked, and his warehouse is in great danger of being undermined by the action of the high water in the spring, and an appropriation was made last year for the purpose of protecting this by sheet-piling. Although nothing is done, yet certainly it was wrong to drop the item this year because the necessity exists all the greater now, and, unless something is done, undoubtedly these buildings will be greatly in danger and a good cause for action against the Government will exist. I, therefore, think that a small appropriation ought to be made and the work proceeded with this summer in order that the greater damage may not occur, and it might possibly be taken out of this item.

Mr. FLINT. I have called the attention of the Public Works Department formally by representation in writing to the necessity of repairing certain breakwaters and wharves in the county I represent. I understand that in two or three instances the delay which has occurred has been detrimental to the public interest, and, if the winter is allowed to pass, I fear the storms and the ice which accompany that season will damage these works and the consequent expense to the Government will be very much greater than a small expenditure on repairs would be now. I, therefore, press this upon the attention of the acting Minister of Public Works.

Surveys and Inspection $16,000

Mr. MULOCK. What is this for?

Mr. FOSTER. This is to pay the costs of surveys and inspections. A demand is made for dredging or for a wharf, and, if it is considered to be worth while, some officer is despatched to the place and makes a report, and on his report the action of the Government is based.

Mr. FLINT. I think that might apply to the works to which I have referred.

Mr. MULOCK. I see there is an increase from $15,000 to $16,000, which would appear to show that the Government have something definite in view, and, therefore, we should have the details.

Mr FOSTER. It cannot be stated what this is to be used for, but the expenditure last year was divided over the provinces generally. Up to the 31st December, 1890, it amounted to $13,654.

Mr. WATSON. Why do you ask $16,000 this year?

Mr. FOSTER. The department supposes that amount will be necessary. The year before $24,000 was asked and required.

Mr. CAMPBELL. By the Auditor General's Report I see that G. M. Graham, of Perth, was paid $117 for surveying. Was that on the Tay Canal?

Mr. HAGGART. There were some surveys on the Rideau Canal, I think.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I thought, perhaps, it was on the extension of the Tay Canal.

National Art Gallery..... $1,000

Mr. FLINT. What is that for?

Mr. FOSTER. It is a yearly expenditure, and it is a very modest amount.

Mr. CHARLTON. How is it expended?

Mr. FLINT. Where is this Art Gallery?

Mr. FOSTER. It is over the Fisheries Exhibit. This is for care of the building and framing of pictures and repairs.

Mr. MULOCK. It is not for the purchase of pictures?

Mr. FOSTER. No; it is for taking care of them.

Mr. MULOCK. Who is in charge of the gallery?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Watts is the curator.

Mr. MULOCK. Is that his whole duty?

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose so.

Mr. MULOCK. When it comes to the purchasing of pictures, on whose advice are they selected?

Mr. FOSTER. The purchase is recommended by Council.

Mr. MULOCK. Is every expenditure on the gallery of that kind by Order in Council?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; it is always considered in Council.

Collection of Slides and Booms dues....$6,500

Mr. FOSTER. This is to cover the expense of the staff: Ottawa district, salaries, $2,500; St. Maurice district, salaries, $200; boatmen, travelling expenses and contingencies—in all $6,500.

Mr. MULOCK. Are these people employed by the year?

Mr. FOSTER. Some are employed the whole year. Formerly we had quite a large staff, but it has been reduced. There is a collector at Ottawa, Mr. Smith, and an assistant collector, and a deputy collector at St. Maurice at a salary of $200. The boatmen are only employed during the season. The total revenue last year was $96,542.

Mr. MULOCK. Any arrears?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; uncollected on the first of July, 1890, $4,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think there is $74,000 uncollected.

Mr. MULOCK. When does the rent of the year expire?

Mr. EDWARDS. The dues are payable on the 30th November. If not paid then, 6 per cent. is charged, but they must be paid by the 30th June on the following year.

Mr. FOSTER. I will give the statement I have here. The revenue for sliding and boomage for the year was $96,500. There was collected $84,889. There was written off by Order in Council $221. Ordinary dues uncollected 1st July, 1890—I take that to be for the fiscal year—$4,529. Then the Chaudière boomage in suspense, $6,903, making up the total of the dues accrued during that fiscal year. Outside of that there was collected from dues outstanding the previous year $17,526. I suppose it would be almost impossible to have everything collected right up to the end of the year. Heretofore there were very large arrears, running over a long series of years, but an attempt has been made, and made successfully, to collect them. So, altogether, the amount of collections last year was $102,400.

Mr. MULOCK. Are there any arrears beyond that year?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, there are some arrears from bankrupt firms and the like.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there any reason why the business could not be placed on a cash basis?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether that is practicable or not.

Mr. FLINT. Am I correct in assuming, from the Auditor General's Report last year, that the increase from slides and booms was $105,000 and the expenditure $114,000. This was startling to me, because I always imagined there was a profit.

Mr. FOSTER. Those were not working expenses.

Mr. FLINT. Staff and repairs.

Mr. FOSTER. It would appear from the statistics last year that we were $5,000 or $6,000 behind.

Mr. EDWARDS. It would be most awkward to collect slidage from time to time as logs pass through. The custom is to make the slidage due on 30th November. If it is not paid on the 30th June there is still perfect security, because the Government will not give passes to allow lumber to pass through the canal unless the dues are paid.

Mr. MULOCK. On 20th January, 1890, I find among the balances due on slides and booms the following:—$6,426, $11,482, $1,151, $16,684, $4,690, $820, $5,850, or a total of $101,057. The Minister says there have been collected since that time, $17,000, thus leaving outstanding $83,000 at the time of making up the returns. If the Government have undoubted security, as it appears, namely, a lien as it were on the timber itself, why should not this amount be collected if it is a good debt? If it is a bad debt, why was it allowed to accrue?

Mr. FOSTER. These have been standing for a long while, many of them twenty-five years.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the Minister lay on the Table a schedule showing the dates of the arrears, less what amount has been collected, with the amounts, and names, and years when due?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I will see that is done.

Mr. MULOCK. When that is submitted, will it be in order that any discussion arising on the statement will be as much in order as discussion is now?

Mr. FOSTER. It can be discussed.

Mr. MULOCK. We will be able to discuss it on Concurrence as freely as in Committee of Supply?

Mr. FOSTER. All right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suggest the expediency of considering whether it is not wise to strike off debts that are absolutely uncollectable.

It is bad book-keeping to keep known worthless assets on our public accounts.

Mr. FOSTER. That is quite true, and there are a number of that class.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before doing so, the statements promised by the hon. gentleman will be submitted, and it will need to be looked over and carefully criticised.

Repairs, &c., harbours, docks and slides..... $115,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What have we particularly to do with the River Yamaska?

Mr. FOSTER. We had a lock built there?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In case of Esquimalt graving dock, there is a charge of $5,600 for repairs executed in 1891. Was not that dock constructed a very short time ago?

Mr. FOSTER. The repairs include the coal required for the working of the dock—350 tons, at $5.50 per ton.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And that is within touch of some of the richest coal fields in America.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it one of the results of handing over our coal fields to some of our confounded speculators? It appears most unreasonable that within a few miles of a coal field we should have to pay $5.50 per ton.

Mr. FOSTER. That is always the place we pay most.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have resided near coal fields, where I paid 4 shillings a ton.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the cheapest rate for which it can be obtained. It was obtained by contract after tenders were invited. There is for water, 350 days, waste, oil and tallow, and repairs and renewals amounting to $5,600.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We spend $13,000 a year on maintenance, besides the building of this dock, and what do we get in return?

Mr. FOSTER. From the 22nd July, 1889, to 25th June, 1890, the dockage received was $13,563. That was the first working year, and it is a very respectable revenue.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Considering that it has cost us $750,000, I fail to see that it is a respectable investment if it pays its working expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. I was speaking about the revenue, not about the investment. The investment is forthe good of the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am bound to say that, compared with some of your other investments, it is not a bad investment.

Mr. FOSTER. That is some praise.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is the best I can say for it. We have an outlay of $30,000 a year for interest and apparently we make both ends meet on working expenses. How many ships were docked?

Mr. FOSTER. There were twelve. The dockage on Her Majesty's ship Amphion was $7,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do we get from the Lévis dock?

Mr. FOSTER. The revenue from the 28th September, 1888, to the 25th November, 1889, was $19,848. There were five vessels docked, so that the dockage was fairly good.

Mr. MULOCK. I observe at page 85 that you are already commencing expenditure on repairs for the Kingston graving dock. How does that come?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I doubt very much if it is finished yet.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, it is nearly finished; it is not in working order yet.

Mr. MULOCK. Has it been taken off the contractors' hands yet?

Mr. CHARLTON. Has Bancroft surrendered the dock?

Mr. FOSTER. It is in the hands of the contractors yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think we ought to have a receipt produced from Mr. Bancrott freeing us from all claims.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There will be no difficulty about getting that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How will you do it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We got a cheque from him.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to understand how an account for repairs can be put in before the work is finished.

Mr. FOSTER. That is an estimate for slight repairs which may be necessary after the dock is opened.

Mr. MULOCK. Is there a staff already appointed for the graving dock at Kingston?

Mr. FOSTER. The staff is not appointed, but whenever the dock is opened and is ready for business we must have some money to work it, and the engineer has given his estimate of what the staff will consist of, and what it will cost. We will require a dock man, foreman, engineer, assistant engineer, two firemen, and a night watchman.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the estimated salary per annum of the staff?

Mr. FOSTER. A dock man, $1,500; the foreman, $60 a month; the engineer, $100 a month; the assistant engineer, $50; two firemen, $45; and the night watchman, $1 per day.

Mr. MULOCK. What does that amount to per annum?

Mr. FOSTER. $6,000 per annum, according to this estimate.

Mr. MULOCK. This dock is not yet taken off the contractors' hands. These appointments are not going to be made for some time.

Mr. FOSTER. The appointments will not be made until the dock is taken off the contractors' hands and is ready for use. Then, of course, we shall need the officers.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the condition of the work? When are you likely to take it off the contractors' hands?

Mr. FOSTER. At the end of November.

Mr. MULOCK. Then there will be no staff appointed until the opening of navigation or thereabouts?

Mr. FOSTER. We shall need to have engineers and dock masters.

Mr. CHARLTON. You do not want them during the winter.

Mr. FOSTER. They are necessary in the winter.

Mr. MULOCK. If they are, it is not necessary to take a year's vote, which you do not require, to provide for not more than half a year at the outside.

Mr. FOSTER. If it will not be opened till November, of course we shall not use it all.

Mr. CHARLTON. You do not require an engineer for pumping the dock out or for watching it. It is not necessary to put the staff on until you want to use the dock, which will be in the following spring.

Mr. FOSTER. It is possible to have a vessel in during the winter.

Mr. CHARLTON. Oh, no. The navigation is suspended during the winter.

Mr. FOSTER. It might be possible to put a vessel in the dock after November.

Mr. MULOCK. These Estimates were prepared many months ago, and perhaps at that time the Government thought that the work might be sufficiently done to enable them to make use of it. But now we know that you will not have to pay for this staff for more than half a year; therefore, they take a year's pay. If you take this $6,000, and if there be $3,000 over, you will probably smuggle that some way into fixing the Cobourg harbour, but I want that done openly, by a separate vote. I think this item should be reduced by $3,000. Are any appointments made at present?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. MULOCK. Then there are no salaries running at present?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. MULOCK. Then, on what principle can you ask to have the whole year's salary voted?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend knows as well as I do that if it is not needed, it will not be used.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have understood that last February three distinct fellows were promised the appointment of engineer.

Mr. CHARLTON. When the Committee are informed that the vote will not be required, I do not see the propriety of voting $6,000 when only $3,000 will be needed, and possibly not more than $1,500.

Mr. FOSTER. We are not voting the details; we are voting the general sum. For the convenience of members, the details are set out; but this is the general vote.

Mr. MULOCK. If the Minister takes that view of it, that under cover of $3,000 for a half year's salary that can never be called for, he is getting a vote of $3,000 that he may apply to other purposes, that is a more vicious system than I thought.

Mr. FOSTER. It cannot be applied for any but legitimate purposes.

Mr. MULOCK. No; but he tells us that this is a bulk sum, and that if it is not available for this purpose it will be applied to something else. I think this vote should be reduced by $3,000.

Telegraph line between Prince Edward Island and the mainland..... $2,000

Mr. CHARLTON. What is this?

Mr. FOSTER. This is for the maintenance and working of the cable line between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. This line was constructed as one of the conditions of union at the time Prince Edward Island came into Confederation, and it has been kept since that time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I never could understand why telegraphing to Prince Edward Island was so high as it is. Do the Government own this cable?

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) When the Island came into Confederation, the Anglo-American Company had a monopoly of telegraphic communication with the Island, and the Local Government gave then a subsidy. When we joined Confederation the Dominion Government assumed the line and this is the annual vote.

Land and Cable Telegraph Lines of the Sea Coasts and Islands of the Lower Rivers and Gulf of St. Lawence and Maritime Provinces, including cost of working steamer Newfield, or other vessel when required for cable service..... $30,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is the usual vote. The Newfield is a Government steamer in the Marine and Fisheries service, but she is specially arranged for the taking up and laying of these cables, and whenever wanted for these purposes, the cost is paid out of this vote.

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose these cables are not maintained by virtue of any agreement with the Island?

Mr. FOSTER. These are telegraph lines which have been laid along the sea coast for marine purposes, and they play a very important part in the gulf and outer islands. They have been extended by gradual yearly extensions at small amounts each year down to the Labrador coast, where they enable people who live almost outside of civilization to have some communication with the world.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are the receipts equal to the expenditure?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think they are. The revenue from all our telegraph service is $11,829.

Telegraph lines, North-West Territories..... $25,000

Mr. FOSTER. These are our own property. They were rendered necessary, when the country was opened up, to give us communication with the different posts throughout that country; but as railways are being built and the railway telegraph lines come into operation, we are dispensing with them.

Mr. MULOCK. Do not your lines go to centres of population in the North-West?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They branch off at Qu'Appelle Station, thence to Touchwood and cross Clark's Crossing to Battleford, from Battleford to Fort Pitt and thence to Edmonton. From Clark's Crossing to Prince Albert, about seventy miles, the wires were taken down, as the railway has built its own line, and the wires are on hand to be used elsewhere when required.

Telegraph lines, British Columbia.....$10,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is for the same purpose as the lines on the gulf coast. A line runs from Victoria out past Bonilla Point and up to Cape Beale on the western coast of the Island, and is used entirely for marine purposes. That is the only line the Government maintain there.

Telegraph and signal service generally..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is for the stations from which we get our reports. The Government pays the entire cost.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are they all in connection with the meteorological service?

Mr. FOSTER. This is for the Government signal service, and has nothing to do with the meteorological service?

Public Works Agency, British Columbia. $6,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is the agent there now?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Gamble is the resident engineer and agent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was not that position held by Sir Joseph Trutch formerly?

Mr. FOSTER. No; not that agency.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the increase of $1,200 for?

Mr. FOSTER. That is to avoid the necessity of charging the travelling expenses of Mr. Gamble and other incidental expenses against special works in British Columbia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the details of this expenditure?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Gamble receives $2,200 salary; Mr. McDonald, $1,400; clerk and draughtsman, $1,000; messenger, $400; stationery and printing, $200; fuel, $100; travelling and contingencies, $1,200. That last item is the increase, and that is simply a transfer. It is charged to that service instead of being charged to the different works which Mr. Gamble would be sent to report upon.

Mr. MULOCK. Is any other account reduced by that amount?

Mr. FOSTER. If a public work is to be built in British Columbia, instead of Mr. Gamble's expenses being charged to it, they will be paid under this item.

Mr. MULOCK. Cannot you show what other estimates have been reduced to make up for this?

Mr. FOSTER. No; but there will be a reduction on each expenditure on public works in that province.

Mr. MULOCK. The only thing we can understand is that this is an increase of $1,200, because the Minister cannot show where the reduction takes place. I should like to know what public works are under this agency?

Mr. FOSTER. The agent is the representative of the Department of Public Works in British Columbia in regard to dredging, the different harbour improvements, the penitentiary and all the public works.

Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 31st August, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE MEMBER FOR EAST NORTHUMBERLAND.

Mr. TISDALE moved:

That the Select Committee appointed to enquire fully into the charges preferred against the member for the East Riding of Northumberland be granted leave to sit during the time the House is in session.

Motion agreed to.

COMMERCIAL TREATY—ENGLAND AND FRANCE.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. RIDER) asked, 1. Is there a commercial treaty in force between England and France? 2. When was such treaty made, and how long will it remain in force? 3. Are butter, cheese and other farm produce, in virtue of this treaty, admitted into France at lower rate of duties than similar articles coming from countries with which France has no such treaty? 4. Are butter, pork, lard, when imported direct from Canada, admitted into France at the same rate of duty as similar articles of English production?

Mr. FOSTER. 1. There is a commercial treaty in force between England and France. 2. It was entered into 28th February, 1882, and came into operation 16th May, 1882, and will continue in force until 1st February, 1892, to be then or thereafter terminated by either party on 12 months notice to the other. It does not appear to be applicable to English colonies. 3 and 4. By this treaty the Customs tariff for goods, the produce or manufacture of either country, is to be regulated by the internal legislation of each, they guaranteeing to each other in all other matters in the United Kingdom, France and Algeria the treatment of the most favoured nation. By a French law promulgated on 27th February, 1882, it was declared that from that date goods of English origin or manufacture should be liable on their entry into France to the same treatment as those of the most favoured nations, with the exception of colonial produce, which it was declared would remain subject to the general Customs tariff. France has two Customs tariffs, one, the general tariff, which can be modified at the will of the Legislature, and which is applied to the goods imported from such countries as do not enjoy most favoured nation treaties; the other, the conventional tariff, which is a combination of the various special tariffs granted by France to other countries. Corn, live stock and many raw products have not been included in the special tariff, and have therefore to pay the rates of the general tariff, even when imported from countries enjoying most favoured nations treatment. The conventional tariff rates are usually about 24 per cent. less than those of the general tariff, and Great Britain enjoys the benefit of the lower tariff by law and not by the treaty of 28th February, 1882. It would seem that the higher tariff applies to imports into France by Canada, and in addition there is, I understand, a surtaxe d'entrepôt on any merchandise imported into France viâ British ports.

PURCHASE OF LAND FROM HON. SENATOR GUÉVREMONT.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. BRODEUR) asked, 1. During the course of the elections now last past, did the Government authorize any person to negotiate with the Hon. J. B. Guévremont, Senator, for the purchase of a lot of land of which the latter was the owner? 2. If so, on what conditions was the sale completed? 3. What was the price paid by the Government for this land? 4. Did the said vendor, the Hon. Mr. Guévremont, reserve any rights over this land? If so, what were these rights? 5. Before buying this land did the Government search in the Registry Office for the County of Richelieu, where the said land is situate, for the charges paid upon it? 6. Before buying this land did the Government obtain knowledge, either by its own act or by that of its attorney, of the deed of sale which had been accepted by Mr. Guévremont in respect to this land? 7. If so, did it ascertain that this land had been bought by the said Mr. Guévremont for about $500 without any reservation on the part of the person who sold to him?

Mr. TUPPER. 1. During the course of the elections last past, the Government did not authorize any person to negotiate with the Hon. Mr. Guévremont for the purchase of a lot of land of which he was the owner, but the Minister of Marine and the officers of his department had been carrying on negotiations for a considerable time. These negotiations began upon Mr. J. B. Labelle, M.P., in April, 1887, writing to the Minister of Marine on behalf of the pilots, asking for the purchase of the property by the Government in order that the trees thereon might be preserved. 2. The land was heavily timbered. The trees were important to shipping both as affording a shelter and as an aid to navigation. The Minister of Marine, under authority of an Order in Council, offered $66 per acre for 64 acres, this value being first fixed by the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. 3. $66 per acre was the price paid. 4. There was a complete purchase without any reservation of rights. 5. Before buying the land the Department of Justice examined into the title and caused a lease to be made in the Registry Office. 6. The Marine Department did not know what the land cost Mr. Guévremont, when a price was agreed upon between Mr. Guévremont and the department. 7. The department was not aware of the circumstances or conditions upon which Senator Guévremont bought the land.

APPOINTMENT OF MAIL CLERK.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. BARRON) asked, 1. When was William McArthur first appointed mail clerk between Lindsay and Haliburton? 2. Did he resign? If so, when, and who succeeded him? 3. What was his salary, and what was the salary of his successor? 4. Was said McArthur reappointed; if so, when, and who was mail clerk immediately prior to McArthur's reappointment? 5. Before McArthur's reappointment, did he hold any office under the Government? If so, what office, and what was his salary pertaining to such office? 6. Who is now lock master at Fenelon Falls, and what is the latter's salary? 7. Has said McArthur passed the civil service examination?

Mr. HAGGART. 1. William McArthur was appointed a railway mail clerk of the third class on 29th April, 1879. 2. He resigned 1st April, 1887. William Joseph Meagher was appointed on 1st April, 1887. 3. McArthur's salary was, at the date of his resignation, $720; he being at that time a second class clerk. Meagher was appointed a third class clerk, at a salary of $480. 4. McArthur was appointed as a temporary clerk, at $480, on 7th July, 1891, to replace Meagher who died on 19th May, 1891. 5. Not in Post Office Department. 6. The department is not in possession of that information. 7. He has not passed the civil service examination.

Mr. FOSTER. John Jordan is lock-master at Fenelon Falls. His salary is $250.

TAY CANAL—BASIN AT PERTH.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. CAMPBELL) asked, 1. What was the amount of the contract entered into with Messrs. Davis & Son for the construction of the basin at Perth, on the Tay Canal? 2. Were any changes or alterations made in their contract? If so, what were they? 3. What was the total cost of the work, including extras and all changes and alterations?

Mr. FOSTER. The amount of the contract entered into with Messrs. Davis & Son for the construction of the basin at Perth on the Tay Canal, was $44,437. No changes or alterations were made in their contract. Authority, however, was given by Order in Council, 12th November, 1888, to wharf in and deepen the east side of the basin at a cost not to exceed $7,500. The actual cost was $6,985.05. The total cost of the work, including extras and all changes and alterations, amounted to $53,614.62.

PREVENTIVE OFFICER AT POWNAL BAY.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) asked, Has Mr. James McRae, the preventive officer at Pownal Bay, P.E.I., been dismissed from or relieved of his office? If so, for what reason? Has anyone been appointed in his place?

Mr. FOSTER. The services of Mr. McRae were dispensed with, as per Order in Council, on the 21st July, 1891, for the reason that the Inspector of Ports reported that no revenue was collected at Pownal Bay, that a few small vessels loaded there with produce late in the season which could readily enter and clear at Charlottetown, 7 miles distant; that the office was of no service whatever and was simply a useless expenditure. No one has been appointed in his place. The salary was $50.

PAYMENT TO C. N. ROBITAILLE, OF QUEBEC.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. CHOQUETTE) asked, On what grounds and for what services did C. N. Robitaille, of Quebec, lately receive a sum of $135 from the Customs Department?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. C. N. Robitaille, of Quebec, was appointed for one month at $3 per day and expenses, and paid out of the Contingent Fund on the order of the Minister.

Mr. MULOCK. What was the service?

Mr. FOSTER. The service is not stated in the reply I have here.

HARBOUR MASTER AT TIGNISH, P.E.I.

Mr. PERRY asked, Has the Minister of Marine and Fisheries received the report of George Conroy, Esq., sub-collector at Tignish, P. E. I., appointed to enquire and report why Benjamin Gaudet, harbour master and wharfinger at Tignish, made no report of what money he collected at Tignish Harbour for the year 1890? Is the said Benjamin Gaudet still acting in the capacity of harbour master and wharfinger at Tignish, P.E.I.?

Mr. TUPPER. I have not received the report of the sub-collector who was appointed to enquire into the case of Benjamin Gaudet, who is still harbour master and wharfinger at Tignish. On 23rd July, 1891, Mr. George Conroy acknowledges receipt of departmental letter appointing him a Commissioner under Order in Council, to investigate into conduct of Benjamin Gaudet as harbour master and wharfinger, and states it may be a fortnight before he is able to transmit report as the captains of the vessels who paid wharfage are coming in and out of the port. He states he will forward report as soon as possible.

LOCKS AT FENELON FALLS.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. BARRON) asked, Is the Government erecting a house or office for the lock-master at Fenelon Falls? If so, what are the dimensions? Who is the contractor? Was the contract let by tender? What is the cost? What were the canal tolls last year, and this year, up to date? What has been the cost of the construction of the lock, &c., at Fenelon Falls to date?

Mr. FOSTER. The Government is not erecting a house or office for the lock-master at Fenelon Falls. The canal tolls collected this year up to date during season of navigation were $35.60; to 1st May, 1891, $3.25; during fiscal year 1890-91, $34.56; current fiscal year, 50 cents. The cost of construction of the locks was, by contract, A. F. McNally, $114,355; Charles Young, lock gates contract, $11,174.81.

CHARGES AGAINST INDIAN AGENT JONES.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. LANDERKIN) asked, Does the Government still adhere to their decision in relation to the following matter:—

"In view of the fact that the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs has refused to allow our Council to appropriate money for the purpose of retaining a lawyer to manage the prosecution of the charges made against Peter E. Jones, as agent of the Mississauga Indians of the Credit, and also for the purpose of subpœnaing witnesses necessary to prove the charges; and further, in view of the fact that an investigation without legal assistance on our part and without the means of compelling the attendance of witnesses would only serve to whitewash the accused, if guilty of the charges preferred, and thereby to defeat the ends of justice: Therefore, be it resolved by the Council of the Mississauga Indians of the Credit, that the further prosecution of said charges be abandoned.

(Sgd.) "GEORGE HENRY,

"Chief Councillor of the Mississaugas of the Credit.

"The above resolution passed in a Council held on the New Credit Reserve, 30th June, 1891."

Mr. DEWDNEY. The question of the employment, at the expense of the band, of a lawyer to act for the complainant in the investigation into the charges made against Mr. Indian Agent Jones, is, by decision of the council, to be submitted to the voting members of the band on the 15th proximo, at a meeting of the band to be summoned for the purpose of considering the same.

PUBLIC WORKS IN JACQUES CARTIER COUNTY.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. BRODEUR) asked, Whether the Government, or the Minister of Public Works have received a petition from the Corporation of the parish of Isle Bizard, asking for authority to erect an iron bridge on the river separating the parish of Isle Bizard from the parish of Ste. Geneviève, in the County of Jacques Cartier? If so, have the Government granted the authority asked for? If the Government have not yet granted the said authorization, why have they not done so?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The petition has been received, and I shall be able to inform the hon. member in a few days of the action taken upon it.

BRITISH COPYRIGHT LEGISLATION.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. EDGAR) asked, Has the Government been informed of any legislation of the Imperial Parliament during the late session affecting the subject of copyright in Canada? If so, what is the general effect? Will it enable the Canadian Government to issue a proclamation bringing into force the Canadian Copyright Act of 1889?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I believe that no legislation of the Imperial Parliament during the late session has taken place affecting the subject of copyright in Canada.

LABOUR LEGISLATION.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. McMULLEN) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce during the present session any legislation based upon the Report of the Labour Commission? If so, what is the nature of it to be?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. On this subject legislation based on that report was introduced and adopted last session. The Government intend immediately to carry out that legislation and complete its design, and they will give further consideration to matters arising out of the report at a future session.

PURCHASE OF CEMENT.

Mr. FORBES asked, Whether the Government have purchased any cement from the Rathbun Company, during the fiscal year of 1890 and 1891, or between the 1st of January and the 15th of August, 1891? If so, what quantity has been purchased and what price has been paid for the same?

Mr. FOSTER. There has not been any cement purchased by the Department of Railways and Canals from the Rathbun Company during the period mentioned in the above enquiry.

QUEBEC CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. GODBOUT) asked, What portion of the $288,000 voted by this House, by 53 Victoria, chapter 2, section 1, has been paid over to the Quebec Central Railway Company? If no portion of this subsidy has been paid over, what is the reason? Is this amount of $288,000 still at the disposal of the said company? If not, what is the amount still at the call of the said company?

Mr. FOSTER. No portion has been paid over. The reason it has not been paid over is that it has not been earned. The full sum of $288,000, therefore, is still available to the company.

MONTREAL CUSTOMS SERVICE.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (for Mr. MCMULLEN) asked, The name or names of the defaulting clerks in the Montreal Customs service? The amount of default of each? Have they or any of them been prosecuted for their offence? If not, why not? Did any of the defaulting clerks abscond? If so, is their whereabouts known? Have any of them returned on condition of not being prosecuted?

Mr. FOSTER. John F. Campbell and Richard Thomas are the names of the defaulting clerks. The amount of Campbell's shortage is $3,500. That of Thomas is not yet reported to the department. They have not been prosecuted for their offence. Campbell having secured the amount, his books having been found correct, having made no attempt at concealment, and having secured the payment of the shortage, dismissal was considered sufficient punishment. Thomas died before the deficit was discovered. Campbell was absent when the deficit was discovered, whereupon he was placed under suspension. He subsequently returned. Campbell's whereabouts is known. To the last part of the question the answer is, no.

OFFICIALS ON THE MURRAY CANAL.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. HARGRAFT) asked, 1. Have any engineers been employed by the Government on the Murray Canal, during the year ending 30th June, 1891, or any part of it? 2. If so, who are they? What are the names of all, including the chief engineer? 3. How much was paid each? The name and amount? 4. What is the nature of the work done by each? 5. Are any of these engineers still under pay? If so, which of them, and how much are they now receiving? 6. Is a man by the name of James Forge under pay on or connected with said canal? If so, what are his duties? How much has he received last year? If under pay now, at what wages?

Mr. FOSTER. 1. Yes; two persons, 12 months each. 2. G. E. Rosamond and W. M. West. 3. $2,000 to Rosamond, $960 to West. 4. Rosamond is in general charge of all duties connected with construction and surveys; West gives lines and levels and makes measurements. 5. Yes; both Rosamond and West are under pay; Rosamond receives $166.66, and West $80 per month. 6. Yes; James Forge is under pay. He is employed as axeman and office-keeper. He received last year $438.20, and is still under pay at $1.40 per diem for working days.

RIDEAU CANAL TOLLS.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. LANDERKIN) asked, What was the total amount of canal tolls collected on the Rideau Canal in the fiscal years ending 30th June, 1890 and 1891?

Mr. FOSTER. The amount of tolls collected on the Rideau Canal in the fiscal years ending 30th June, 1890 and 1891, is as follows:—In 1890, $6,631.34; in 1891, $5,954.99.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. LANDERKIN) asked, Does Mr. John Heney, wood contractor, pay any canal tolls or dues on wood he brings through the Rideau Canal? If so, how much has he paid yearly since the contract began? If he does not now pay any tolls or dues, how much has been refunded or commuted him in that time?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. John Heney, wood contractor, paid tolls and dues on firewood from 1st September, 1873, to 21st August, 1884, as follows:—

		Tolls and Wharfage.
1st Sept. to Dec.,	1873	$471.81
Year.	1874	619.13
do	1875	298.93
do	1876	691.57
do	1877	172.66
do	1878	288.63
do	1879	286.67
do	1880	201.12
do	1881	169.11
do	1882	256.66
do	1883	214.01
To 21st August,	1884	321.19
	Total	$3,850.49

The answer to the succeeding portions of the question is found in two Orders in Council, from which the following appears:—Since 21st August, 1884, Mr. John Heney has not paid any tolls and dues on firewood he brings through the Rideau Canal. The amounts of tolls refunded and commuted is as follows:—Amount refunded 28th June, 1886, $3,850.49; amount of tolls and dues commuted, not collected, from 4th August, 1885, to 30th June, 1891, $2,704.84. Total, $6,555.33.

RIDEAU CANAL TOLLS REFUNDED.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. LANDERKIN) asked, What was the total amount of canal tolls refunded on the Rideau Canal in the fiscal years ending 30th June, 1890 and 1891?

Mr. FOSTER. The total amount of canal tolls refunded on the Rideau Canal during the fiscal years ending 30th June, 1890 and 1891, was as follows:—1890, J. P. Tett & Brother, tolls refunded on let-passes (not used) to the amount of $3.40. No refunds were made for fiscal year 1891.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. LANDERKIN) asked, Was it by Order in Council that canal tolls were refunded on the Rideau Canal? If so, when was the Order passed?

Mr. FOSTER. The above refund was made under authority of Order in Council, dated 10th July, 1889, as follows:—Railways and Canals, that authority be given for the refund of $3.40 to J. P. Tett &. Brother, being the amount of tolls paid on certain unused let-passes, Rideau Canal.

STATION MASTERS, CAPE BRETON RAILWAY.

Mr. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton) asked, Has the Department of Railways an agreement with the Western Union Telegraph Company to the effect that station masters at Grand Narrows, North Sydney Junction, and other stations on the Cape Breton Railway, will do telegraphing for the public without any compensation being paid to such station masters, by the Western Union Telegraph Company, except their salary as station masters? Are such station masters expected to attend to public messages during regular telegraph office hours of the day, and attend to such other railway station work as is required, such as receiving and delivering freight and baggage, and attend arrival and departure of trains during night and day, and do such work without assistance? What salaries are paid such station masters, and are such salaries the same as are paid to station masters on the Intercolonial Railway, through the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick? If so, what are the names of such similarly regulated stations?

Mr. FOSTER. The Government have an agreement with the Western Union Telegraph Company for the telegraph service on the Cape Breton Railway, by which the sending and receiving of messages for the public, &c., form a part of the duties of the station masters, and which service is covered by their official salary. Such station masters are required to attend to all the business of the stations where no other person is employed. The salaries of the station masters on the Cape Breton Railway are $40 per month, with house, fuel, and light free: at Point Tupper and North Sydney, also Sydney, $30 per month, with house, fuel, and light free; at McIntyre's Lake, West Bay, River Denny, Orangedale, Iona, Grand Narrows, North Sydney Junction, and Leitche's Creek, for similar stations, with new men entering the service, they are the same as on other portions of the Intercolonial Railway. The names of the stations in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, at which like salaries are paid, are Pleasant Beach, Millstream, Moffat's, Eel River, Charlo, Belledune, Gloucester Junction, Red Pine, Bartibogue, Beaver Brook, Millarton, Barnaby River, Kent Junction, Cold Brook, Quispamsis, Passekeag, Calhoun's, Wentworth, East Mines, Valley Milford, Elmsdale, Enfield, Wellington, Rockingham, Denmark, Merrigonish, Avondale, James River, South River. All the foregoing receive salaries not exceeding $30 per month.

SUPPLY.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MULOCK. I understood the first order was to be the Quebec resolutions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I said we would take up the North Shore Railway resolutions, but the acting Minister of Railways, as the hon. gentleman knows, is ill, and although I might go on with the resolutions, I do not think I have the information the House would expect me to lay on the Table. For that reason I will postpone these resolutions until to-morrow.

Motion agreed, and House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Steam communication with the Magdalen Islands..... $8,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is the same as last year. We have a contract for four years, three of which have still to run. The contract was let at a lower rate than the preceding arrangement, about $3,000 lower. It was put up to tender two years ago and given to the same contractor. The vessel is the St. Olaf.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Was there a resolution of the House authorizing the Government to enter into a contract? Or was it entered into simply as a departmental arrangement?

Mr. FOSTER. A sum was voted by the House and the whole matter was canvassed. The contract had actually been let at the time.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Before the appropriation?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Steam communication between Grand Manan, N.B., and mainland..... $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. The steamer that is performing this service is the Flushing. She has performed it for many years, the service being from Grand Manan viâ Campobello and Eastport to St. John and return, one trip each week; from Grand Manan viâ Campobello, Eastport and St. Andrews to St. Stephen and return, one trip each week, and during summer one trip per week from Grand Manan to Eastport and return.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does one vessel perform all the service?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is this let by tender each year?

Mr. FOSTER. Tenders were invited last year, but this is not a very paying service and there is not much competition, and, this steamer having been got for that service, there is not enough in the contract to induce others to go into the service.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is not this steamer suited for any other trade?

Mr. FOSTER. She would not be able to do much outside service.

Mr. CHARLTON. How large a vessel is she?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the figures here. It is the same vessel that has been performing the work for five or six years.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I did not hear the Minister state with whom the contract had been entered into for steam communication with the Magdalen Islands.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Halliday.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the name of the vessel?

Mr. FOSTER. The St. Olaf.

Subsidy to a line of steamers to run between Liverpool or London, or both, and St. John, N.B., and Halifax, N.S., a port in the Dominion to be the terminal port	$25,000

Mr. BORDEN. Is this a mail subsidy?

Mr. FOSTER. These steamers are under contract to carry mails if they are offered to them, but they are not offered to any great extent, as they can be carried better by the Dominion line or the Allan line. This subsidy has been paid for a number of years to vessels running from these ports to London, and the trips have been made monthly. Last year I mentioned that we had completed a contract with the same line to put on one new vessel, one being a very fine vessel, to run the service in such a way as to make the trip within 17 or 18 days for the same amount of money we had been paying for monthly trips, the compensation given being in part that the contract should be given for four years instead of from year to year. That contract has three years yet to run. I immediately closed with that offer. In fact that offer was in part due to some pressure which the department put upon the company for more frequent service, to which Mr. Furness responded very fairly.

Mr. BORDEN. Tenders were not invited?

Mr. FOSTER. No. They were invited at first and the service was going on from year to year, and last year they made a contract for four years, and we get nearly double the benefit we had under the old service, for the same amount.

Mr. LAURIER. Is Mr. Furness the contractor?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the name of the vessels that are on this route?

Mr. FOSTER. The Damara is one, and, I think, the Ottawa is the name of a new one.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It seems to me that it is out of the ordinary course to subsidize a line of steamers from London and Liverpool to Halifax and St. John. I can understand subsidizing steamers to Grand Manan or to the Magdalen Islands, or any out-of-the-way ports, but this seems to me not to be the business of the Government at all. I think this is a matter which should be left to private enterprise. There are numbers of private men running lines of steamers and lines of sailing vessels to those ports, and I do not see why the Government should subsidize a line of steamers there.

Mr. BORDEN. It is the general opinion in Nova Scotia that this subsidy, instead of being of any benefit to the trade between Nova Scotia and Liverpool, has a decidedly opposite tendency; that, as has just been remarked, private enterprise would do all that is necessary for this trade and would do it much better for this reason: The gentlemen who are managing these boats, Messrs. Pickford & Black, and I think you have heard of them before, seem to have used this subsidy in order to lower their rates at a critical moment, when they have been threatened with opposition. When a new line comes in to compete for the trade, down go the rates. When the competition is killed off, the rates go up. This subsidy is used to cut legitimate rates and it is not in the interest of the people that this kind of subsidy should be continued. I have had representations from various parts of the province this year, and also in former years in reference to this matter, and I assure hon. gentlemen opposite that it is not believed that this policy is in the interest of the people. I hope it will be discontinued at an early date, and I should be glad if it were discontinued now.

Mr. KENNY. This subsidy has been so frequently under discussion in this House, that I feel like apologizing in the first place for making any further reference to it. I cannot agree with my hon. friend from King's (Mr. Borden) when he says there is a general consensus of opinion that this subsidy is not in the public interest. My hon. friend mentions the fact that at certain periods of the year it becomes necessary, or advisable, or expedient, that special steamers should be put on between Nova Scotia or New Brunswick and Europe, to carry certain perishable articles. My hon. friend, I think, will admit that he has a much better chance of securing low freight from these special steamers when they know that there is a regular line on the route; and I must say that although I do not pretend to be familiar with the business of this company, or with the details of its management, it has not come to my knowledge, at least, residing, as I do, in Halifax, that the agents or owners of these steamers have at any time taken unfair advantage of the position they occupy. I am strongly of the opinion that this line of steamers has been exceedingly useful in developing our export trade from the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Are they the only line?

Mr. KENNY. I think they are the only line of subsidized steamers. The Allan boats call at Halifax fortnightly, but I am not sure whether they receive a subsidy or not.

Mr. FOSTER. They do not.

Mr. BORDEN. I would say, in reply to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), that the Fruit Growers' Association of Nova Scotia has had this question up for consideration on several occasions, and I think they passed resolutions; at any rate a very large majority of the members of that association have expressed opinions adverse to the continuation of this subsidy. I had that association in mind more particularly when referring to representations that have been made, and other representations have been made as well. Now, the hon. gentleman has said that he has heard of no instance in which this subsidy has operated in the direction which he mentioned. I will tell him one that happened under my own observation last year. A number of gentlemen put on a steamer to ply between the Basin of Minas, in western Nova Scotia, and Liverpool. She made one trip, carrying apples, and the rate of freight was reduced to 75 cents, whereas the rate vid Halifax is $1. This vessel having reduced the rate to 75 cents, immediately afterwards agents of these steamers came up into the country and made arrangements with all the large shippers of apples offering them a rate of 70 cents. The result was that the line which had been put on from the Basin of Minas had to be discontinued, because they could not carry freight at that rate and make it pay. So there is an instance in which a legitimate undertaking was killed by the aid of this subsidy, and if they had not had this subsidy I do not believe it could have been done. I give that instance to my hon. friend, and I can vouch for its truth.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the observations made by my friend from King's, N.S. (Mr. Borden), show the impropriety of this subsidy now under consideration. The hon. gentleman does not pretend that there would be no steamers running between Liverpool and Halifax if this subsidy was not granted. Then I would like to know how the hon. gentleman's conduct, or the conduct of Parliament, squares with what is right and fair to those who are unsubsidized. Here are steamers running between Halifax and Liverpool and Halifax and London, that receive no subsidies or aid from the Government. Do they stand upon a footing of equality with the others? Where is the justice in an arrangement of this sort? It is made possible by this appropriation, as my hon. friend from King's says, to cut down rates whenever there is active competition, and so to deal unfairly with those lines of steamers that are not subsidized. It seems to me this appropriation ought to be struck out altogether. Why should the people of this country be taxed to promote the interest of the proprietors of those vessels that receive this subsidy? Why should they not depend upon the ordinary principles of commercial enterprise just as well as those with whom they are competing? It seems to me a monstrous proposition that this House should single out the proprietors of certain vessels and say to them: We will deal with you in a way which we will not undertake to deal with any other class of persons similarly situated; we will make an appropriation of $20,000 a year which we will pay you out of the public treasury in order that you may kill off the competition of those who are putting on lines of steamers between Halifax and Liverpool. I say that is a most unjust act; it is unjust to those who are competing with the steamers owned by Pickford & Black, and it is unjust to the public at large. Why should the House undertake to take from the pockets of the people of this country nearly $30,000 a year and hand the money over to Pickford & Black? What right has Pickford & Black to that appropriation any more than a man who is hoeing potatoes in his field? Why should these men who have their capital invested in this enterprise be dealt with differently from the men who have their capital invested in land or in any other property? The whole thing is monstrous If this was for the purpose of furnishing accommodation to people in certain localities, to people in inaccessible districts without mail accommodation, or without other necessary accommodation there might be some justification for it. There might be some justification for it on the same principle that we grant contracts for carrying mails by railway, or by stage, or in any other way; we may grant it to vessels carrying the mail just as we grant it to railway companies. But that is not what the hon. gentleman does by this appropriation, he gives the appropriation for other purposes, and he undertakes to subsidize a line, not simply to trade between Halifax and Liverpool or Halifax and London, but to enable the parties to whom the appropriation is given, to kill off their rivals who are just as well entitled to live as they are.

Mr. WELSH. I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills); I think this grant is wrong altogether. The marine interests of the Dominion used to be very important, but during the last few years you have done your best to kill them off by subsidizing steamers for mercantile trade, thereby handicapping private interest and private speculation. You are taking this $25,000 out of the pockets of the tax-payers of this Dominion, out of the pockets of the ship-owners, and owners of sailing ships and private steamboats, and giving it to the subsidized line. I say the principle is wrong. Ever since I have been in this House I have opposed the granting of subsidies to all mercantile steamers, to all steamers and vessels engaged in mercantile trade; I have always opposed this principle except for the purpose of carrying mails and passengers. I think when you go beyond that point, you take a step in the wrong direction. While I have a seat in this House I shall oppose every grant of this kind, because it is doing an injury to the marine interests of this Dominion that have been at a low ebb for some years. We know that if at any port of the Dominion there is a cargo to ship, there are twenty vessels to take a charter. What necessity is there for this subsidy of $25,000? Who asked for it? No one but the steamboat owners, some of whom wanted to get an advantage over their neighbours. I am opposed to this grant and to all subsidies of this description; but where there is an opening as regards the carrying of mails and passengers, I do not object to a grant. I object to this grant, for it is a very wrong one.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad to hear the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Welsh) give utterance to the sentiment he has expressed. I think we will bear it in mind when the contract for the line of steamers for which the hon. gentleman, I think, has pleaded in this House, falls in, a line of steamers running on an old route between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. It is true they carry mails and passengers, but it is also true they carry cattle and all kinds of produce.

Mr. WELSH. I advise you to strike it out now.

Mr. FOSTER. I dare say when you come down to fine reasoning you could not make very much difference between the argument in regard to a subsidy to that line and the argument of the hon. gentleman in regard to this line. Almost everyone seems cut off from competition on account of the subsidy being given to that line of steamers; and the only logical conclusion is that the service should be thrown open and an amount paid to any vessel which may carry the mails at any time. There is an advantage, however, in obtaining the service of a company, a monopoly if you wish to call it so, to carry the mails, because you can then obtain regularity, and you can have the mails carried with greater satisfaction to the public service than otherwise would be the case. With respect to the other subsidy, the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) waxed righteously indignant; but he is just one year too late in his indignation. The question was thoroughly canvassed last year, when the contract was about to be made and a vote was asked.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I opposed it.

Mr. FOSTER. And a contract was entered into to run till 1894.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman must permit me to know how long the contract was made for, and I say it was to run till 1894. I do not think the hon. gentleman will contend that this item should be struck out of the Estimates after Parliament has approved of the subsidy, and after a contract has been made with responsible parties on this vote of Parliament.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It has been done in England.

Mr. FOSTER. It may have been done in England, but I do not think the Canadian Parliament is prepared to do it. We should keep faith in any public contract made by the Dominion Government with the approval of Parliament. My hon. friend asks why should nearly $30,000 be taken out of the public funds for this purpose? It is not nearly $30,000, but it is exactly $25,000. The hon. gentleman then asks, why should this sum be put in the pockets of Pickford & Black? I beg to inform him that it is not put into their pockets. They simply are agents of Mr. Furness for the line of steamers. They will receive the agents' commission, but that is all; the subsidy goes to Mr. Furness. The subsidy dates back for a period of years when it was thought that the trade between the two maritime ports, Halifax and St. John, should be stimulated by the granting of a subsidy and the putting on of a regular line of vessels which would run at stated periods. That ran on from year to year at the rate of $25,000 per year. The year before last a proposition was made, after negotiation, that the trips should be made every seventeen days, or twenty or twenty-one trips in the year, the same amount to be paid for this vastly improved service. Just about that time the Short Line was opened out, and it was thought to be a very good opportunity to obtain an increased and better service from three years from that date at the same figure, in order that at the opening of the line and the beginning of traffic in that direction, the vessels might be running steadily between those ports, and so traffic might be encouraged and built up between this and the old country. Parliament discussed the subject last year, made an appropriation with full knowledge of all the circumstances, and I do not think the hon. gentleman will advocate the destruction of that contract and the blotting out of this sum from the Estimates.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman quite forgets that contracts of this sort made by the Government for a long period of time do not bind Parliament. The House of Commons is bound simply by its appropriations. This House makes appropriations from year to year. It is true you might have a parliamentary contract. The Government might have come down stating that they had entered into the contract for a certain sum, and have undertaken to carry through the House a Bill providing that a certain payment should be made every year for a certain number of years, as was done by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company when a contract was entered into with that company. But that is not what the Government did. They made a contract and came down and asked for a year's appropriation. Now the Government ask for another year's appropriation. It is open to this House to consider whether it is proper to grant the appropriation or not. This whole question was discussed in England on the report by the Select Committee on Packet and Telegraph Contracts. I will read some extracts from the discussion in order that hon. members of the House may see where they stand on this matter, and that the House is as free to consider this appropriation as it was the appropriation of last year. Sir Francis Baring, afterwards Lord Northbrook, in speaking of this matter, when the same argument was used as was used by the Minister of Finance a few minutes ago, said:

"Suppose the Admiralty had entered upon a contract for 100 years at £1,000 per year—suppose, again, the Government has promised a public servant a high retiring allowance in order that they might appoint to his place—were they to be told, on the vote for such a contract or such a superannuation allowance, to enquire into the arrangements? If they carried the doctrine of the conclusion of contracts to such an extent it might be put almost beyond the power of Parliament to exercise its power in such matters."

Then Sir Francis Baring goes on to point out that the same rule was recognized in the treaty of Utrecht. He said that in the case of the peace of Utrecht there were two treaties, one a political and the other a commercial one. In regard to the commercial treaty, the Crown pledged itself to France to make certain reductions in duties; but when the reductions were proposed, the House of Commons rejected them, because it held that the Crown could not enter into any contract that would in the remotest degree curtail or interfere with its rights. Let me read another extract. Mr. Laing, speaking on this subject, said:

"The course proposed to be taken by the Government in reference to this contract, was a very clear one. [That was a contract with Mr. Churchward to carry the mails from Dover to Calais, and from Calais to Ostend.] The House refused last session to vote the money under the contract now in question, and he supposed that the Government could not properly have taken on itself to reverse the decision of the House of Commons.

"Sir FITZROY KELLY. Then the whole contract was at an end.

"Mr. LAING. The Government could not, after the refusal of the House of Commons, pay the money in the face of such decisions, for if they had done so, they would have rendered themselves personally liable."

That is clear. We are considering this appropriation, and we can affirm it or object to it. It would be the height of nonsense to submit an appropriation to this Committee of the House, if the House were not free to accept it or reject it. So the Minister of Finance will see that while he has bound himself to a contract with a company, that contract is to be read and understood with respect to the powers of this House. It is a conditional contract in law, whether conditionally expressed or not. The hon. gentleman will find the whole subject discussed in the case of Churchward vs. The Queen, where the doctrine laid down by the court was precisely the same as was laid down by Parliament, as these extracts show. Mr. Gladstone, in speaking on this same subject on that occasion, said:

"Are we to be told that the House of Commons under circumstances such as these, is bound to vote money without taking notice of these proceedings? On what principle is such a doctrine to be sustained? I maintain, on the contrary, that the Executive has no constitutional authority to make a contract binding on the House of Commons."

That is clear and explicit enough—

"It is a pure question of policy for the House of Commons to say how far it will allow the practice to extend. I ask, can the proceeding be justified where parties attempt to enter into a contract by the use of means which may be held to be construed a breach of the privileges of the House, tending to degrade it and the representatives of the people."

Here certain charges had been made against a contractor and had been enquired into, and there were suspicious circumstances connected with it, and the House had the previous year refused to make the necessary appropriation, and it was held the contract was at an end. That was the view taken by the House. Mr. Churchward was not satisfied with that, and he took the matter before the court on petition of right, and the court upheld precisely the same view. So that we have here a perfect right, where there is an annual appropriation, to consider the propriety of the object for which the appropriation is sought. We have already voted a portion of this appropriation, and the hon. gentleman to-day asks us to vote $20,000, not on the merits of the case at all, but on the ground that we are precluded from withholding our support to this proposition. I deny that altogether. We are as free to consider this appopriation to-day as we were when the hon. gentleman submitted it last year, and if this House should think it is not in the interest of the public that this appropriation should be continued, it is as free to discontinue it now as it will be at the end of four years. The hon. gentleman has not embraced the appropriation for the four years in any parliamentary contract. He has simply made a contract on his own behalf, or on behalf of the Executive, with Messrs. Pickford & Black, and we are free to say whether we shall continue that contract or not.

Mr. FOSTER. It is all very well for my hon. friend to make this argument if it pleases him, but I think there is an equitable side to this. I think there is some moral obligation resting on us. I am not going to dispute the right of Parliament to revise its own action, if it wants to, but I am quite sure that Parliament would not, under the circumstances, attempt to do that in this case, because the obligation has been created by the action of Parliament itself. If the Government without the consent of Parliament, or an appropriation therefor, had made a contract, the case would be on quite a different basis from what it is on to-day; but last year the whole arrangement was explained to the House, as well as the basis upon which Mr. Furness was willing to put on a new vessel and carry on the improved service; the basis being that he should receive a contract for four years from that date rather than be subject to the uncertainty of running from year to year as had been done for quite a long series of years preceding. That was explained to Parliament last session and the merits of the question were debated then. My hon. friend (Mr. Mills) says that I wish to have this put through, not on its merits but on the ground of contract. That is not it at all. The merits of the case were submitted to Parliament and were discussed by Parliament last year when the appropriation was made for the first one of the series of four years, and it was on the faith of that approval of Parliament that the service has been going on, and that Mr. Furness has put on his new vessel and made his improved service. Now, I put this case to my hon. friend. He may have a right to say to a man: You come to work on my farm and I agree to give you four hundred dollars a year, and he may keep him on that year and pay him that money. At the end of the year he may say: I will take you on the same conditions, or I will not take you at all. But if he says to the man: You move your family here and build a house, and I will keep you on my farm for four years; he may if he has no written contract say to the man at one year's end: I do not want you any longer: but provided that man has done his work to his satisfaction, I think there is an obligation, written or moral, for him to fulfil to the letter his agreement with the man. It is the same way between this Government, this Parliament if you like, and Mr. Furness. He said: I will put on a new vessel and give you improved service, if instead of receiving a yearly subsidy I will get a subsidy for a stated period of four years ending in 1894. Parliament saw that, and passed upon it after consideration, and gave the vote of the first year's money in accordance with that plan. Mr. Furness put on a new vessel and gives a service almost twice as frequent as it was before, and now that service has been running a year and a-half. Yet we are told in Parliament that no stigma would attach to us if we broke up this arrangement and refused to grant the money. I do not think that my hon. friend, apart from his theoretical right to make an argument, can justify such a proposition by any sound reasons whatever. I take it that, under the circumstances, we should not do what the hon. gentleman asks.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman has not at all answered the argument of my hon. friend in any way. Of course the Minister of Finance, speaking and acting on behalf of the Government, has a perfect right to enter into a contract for the carrying of mails or anything else, and to say that it will endure for any length of time he chooses. But when he comes to Parliament to ask its sanction for this act of his, he must ask of Parliament their sanction for the whole contract. If he has entered into a contract for five years, he must ask Parliament to ratify the whole contract such as he had made it. If he were to take that ground this Parliament might decide whether or not it chose to be bound for a term of five years, or ten years, or twenty years; but if, on the other hand, instead of that, he asked from Parliament a yearly appropriation, Parliament only ratifies the act of the Government each year, by the appropriation for one year.

Mr. FOSTER. But under the circumstances as detailed.

Mr. LAURIER. Under the circumstances, the party with whom the hon. gentleman has contracted must undertand, as a matter of course, that it is within the power of Parliament, at any time, to cancel the contract. And why not? If the hon. gentleman made a contract for five years, why not ask the appropriation at once for five years, and not a yearly appropriation. What can he say to the argument of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills)? Why do you ask an appropriation from Parliament every year, if Parliament has no moral power to refuse it or to grant it? You ask this appropriation every year because we have the right to grant it or to refuse it. Under such circumstances, Messrs. Pickford & Black, with whom my hon. friend contracted, understood, last year before they undertook the service, that they had an appropriation only for one year and not for the five years for which they had contracted. Therefore, they must have understood that Parliament had ratified that contract, not for five years, but only for one year, and the hon. gentleman must himself see that under such circumstances there is not even a moral obligation on the part of Parliament to ratify that contract. I cannot understand such a thing as moral obligation arising, when it was within the option of the Government to ask an appropriation for the whole term covering the contract, and when they have failed to do so. Under the circumstances the argument of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is not only legal but equitable as well. The party himself with whom the hon. Minister has contracted cannot at all complain if to-day Parliament says: We thought it well, in our wisdom last year, to grant you this appropriation, but we have changed our minds and we do not choose to ratify that contract any longer. As my hon. friend said, this has been done in England, and in the case which he quoted the conclusion arrived at was that if it were possible for Government to enter into a contract for a hundred years, it would be monstrous to contend that under such circumstances Parliament, because it had voted the money one year, would have been bound to vote the money for ninety-nine years afterwards. There is only one way of dealing with these matters. If the Government make a contract, they can ask the whole appropriation from Parliament on the terms of the contract, and if they fail to do so, each time they come to Parliament, Parliament has the right to exercise authority upon it.

Mr. WELSH. I know that when the Government put an item in the Estimates they do not usually like to strike it out, but that is not always the case. Last year there was in the Estimates a vote of $1,000 for the New London breakwater, and I wanted it increased to $3,500; but in a moment of weakness the Government moved that it be struck out, and it was struck out, although their own engineer had reported that $3,500 was required to repair this breakwater. They could strike out that vote, and we shall see whether they can strike out this vote, which is not required at all. My hon. friend must remember what I said, because I spoke plainly enough. I said that I was opposed to subsidizing steamers for any purpose except for conveying the mails and passengers. The hon. gentleman is quick enough to remember that I am a shareholder in a company which has a contract with the Government for carrying the mails and for which there is a vote here of $5,500. Let me say to the hon. gentleman, that if he moves to strike out that item, I will vote for the motion. The company have spent $160,000 this year for one steamer for that service, and we have to keep four steamers for the purpose, and what do we get? Thirteen dollars a trip for carrying the mails across the gulf. I tell the hon. gentleman that this service will not be continued unless the Government are prepared to give $20,000 instead of $5,500. I challenge the hon. gentleman to strike that out, and, although I am a shareholder, I will vote with him. I know something of these subsidies. They are based on a false principle. I remember that in 1871 I was a shareholder in the first Atlantic steamer ever registered in this country; that was the Prince Edward. She paid a fair dividend until the National Policy was introduced into this country, and three months after it was introduced we found that we were losing money. The Dominion Government asked us not to take off the vessel and promised to give a subsidy of $1,500 a trip to the company. We held a meeting to consider it, and I advised the company not to take it; but they decided to take it, and the result was that they lost money. Any trade that is an honest trade will support itself, and we do not want any of your boodling money to keep it up. It takes all the enterprise out of business. You handicap the vessel owners by giving subsidies to certain lines, and the ordinary commercial marine of the country suffers. I am opposed to the whole system. Now, I hope the hon. gentleman will not forget the challenge I throw in his teeth, and we will see who is game, he or I. I move that this $25,000 be struck out.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). It is highly amusing to hear hon. gentlemen suggest that the National Policy and these subsidies to steamship lines have reduced the merchant marine so much in the Maritime Provinces. These hon. gentlemen expect us to take their bald ipse dixit; but what are the facts? In 1887, Nova Scotia built 87 vessels, comprising 12,300 tons; in 1888, 116 vessels, comprising 12,900 tons; in 1889, 106 vessels, comprising 46,645 tons; and in 1890, 148 vessels, comprising 83,746 tons. This does not look as if by reason of the National Policy and steamship subsidies the merchant marine of Nova Scotia is suffering very much. If these merchant shippers did not make money out of their vessels, would they go on and increase their tonnage year after year? It is mere talk for hon. gentlemen to stand up in this House and tell us that the merchant shipping of the province is going behind. In my county, I have heard some argument with reference to the Furness line not being conducive to the interests of the apple shippers in King's and Annapolis counties; but when the matter is thoroughly looked into, by unbiassed and unprejudiced minds, it is found that there is no ground for the idea advanced by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Borden) in favour of large vessels, which will carry some 15,000 barrels of apples to the London market at one time. It is more to the advantage of shippers that smaller quantities should be sent, and you can only have that done by means of subsidized lines which are certain to go at stated periods, such as the Furness line. What are called ocean tramps occasionally come to Annapolis and load largely with apples, sometimes taking four or five loads in a year, but, although the London market is sometimes called an unlimited market, it is found that even that market can be glutted by a vessel load of 8,000, or 9,000, or 15,000 barrels of apples, and the result is that prices are not so good as they are when apples are sent in smaller lots by these subsidized lines.

Mr. FORBES. I would like to correct the last speaker in regard to the extent of our shipping. If he looks at page 803 of the Trade and Navigation Returns, he will find the total tonnage built in Canada from 1868 to 1890.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I was speaking entirely of Nova Scotia.

Mr. FORBES. We want to stand by Canada as a whole and not pick out any one section of this young nation. From 1868 to 1874 we built 811,775 tons, or an average of 115,969 tons; from 1875 to 1879 inclusive, those years to which the Conservatives like so much to point as the blank years of the country's properity, we built 690,963 tons, or an average of 138,933 tons yearly. Now, from 1880 to 1890, which are supposed by hon. gentlemen opposite to be the most prosperous years of Canada's history, when the National Policy is supposed to have done its best work and to have made its most fruitful returns, what do we find? We only built 568,000 tons, or an average of 51,636 tons. Still the hon. gentleman tells us that the merchant marine of Canada is increasing.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I said no such thing.

Mr. FORBES. I do not impute to the hon. gentleman any desire to deceive the people, but why should he take as a criterion of the whole Dominion an isolated province which he knows is more particularly a great ship-building centre, and endeavour to create the impression that the ship-building industry is progressive, and I doubt if his figures for Nova Scotia are correct. I have shown him that during the ten years, from 1880 to 1890, we have only built 51,000 tons per year, against 138,000 tons per year during the low tariff regime of Mr. Mackenzie. The hon. gentleman can refer to the Trade and Navigation Returns for the facts I have given.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The right of this Committee to discuss this item, and, if need be, decline to vote the money, is beyond question. If the hon. gentleman desired to bind this House to a contract exceeding one year, he should have asked us to agree to a statute authorizing him to conclude such an agreement; but, in the absence of any such authority, it is plain that Parliament is not bound by the action of the hon. gentleman and need not vote the money he asks. Constitutional law and doctrine, as laid down in the English House of Commons by the authorities there, confirm this opinion, and in the judicial decision given in the Churchward case, this principle is equally affirmed. If the Government should desire to bind the country and Parliament to a contract, they must introduce and carry through a Bill giving them authority to enter into that contract. Otherwise the House does not part with its right to refuse to vote the money in Supply. The hon. gentleman might come down and state that he proposed to enter into a ten-years' contract with Mr. Furness during the recess, he might enter into it, and then I ask him would it not be in the power of the House each year to repudiate that contract by refusing to vote the money, when that contract had not been entered into by virtue of statutory authority? No doubt can exist on that point. If any did, we need only refer to the reasons given for the decision in the Churchward case. Chief Justice Cockburn said:

"I take it, if the other contracting parties then endeavoured to enforce the contract, equity would relieve the contractor from the obligation to obey it: and if an action were brought at law, I doubt very much, indeed, whether a court of law would not say that the providing of the fund by Parliament was a condition precedent to the fulfilment or necessity of fulfilling the contract."

And Mr. Justice Shee said:

"In the case of a contract with commissioners on behalf of the Crown to make large payments of money during a series of years, I should have thought that the condition which clogs this covenant, though not expressed, must, on account of the notorious inability of the Crown to contract unconditionally for such money payments in consideration of such services, have been applied in favour of the Crown."

Ex necessitate the power must rest in this House from year to year of either maintaining or rejecting the votes proposed to us. The power to do that is in this House beyond doubt, and the question of policy is one we may fairly discuss now. The hon. gentleman said that last year he informed the House that he intended to go into this contract with the Messrs. Furness. I am not going to challenge a statement made in such positive terms, but I do not recollect any such statement, nor do any of the hon. gentlemen around me recollect it. I turned up the Debates, and, so far as I can see, the hon. gentleman led the House in the directly opposite direction. This vote was challenged by Mr. Jones, then member for Halifax, on the ground that it was impolitic, and unjust, and unfair, from a commercial standpoint, to pay a subsidy of $25,000 a year to a line of steamboats running as the rival of commercial lines, the Dominion and the Allan. My colleague from Queen's (Mr. Welsh) showed to-day the injustice and unfairness, from a commercial standpoint, of subsidizing steamers. He made a qualification, the justice of which the House will recognize. If the Government seek to have their mails carried by any particular line of boats, they should pay for the carriage, but such a case is not analogous to the one before the House. The question before us is simply whether a line of steamers running for commercial purposes should be subsidized or not. It has been laid down by many members that when you seek to open up a new trade between Canada and some other country, you may be justified for a time in giving a subsidy to steamers to open up the trade, but that argument would not apply to an existing line which runs in competition with the greyhounds crossing the Atlantic every day in the year from English to American ports. This line was subsidized many years ago; and when the necessity of the subsidy was challenged last year, so far from the hon. gentleman leading the House to believe he was going to enter into a new contract for three years longer, he led the House to understand that he had been convinced by the arguments on this side and would not repeat the subsidy. He said that he looked forward to an early time when it would be discontinued. These are his words:

"Mr. FOSTER. It is a condition incident to the payment of the subsidy, that we get the manifest of these steamers on their inward and outward voyages. I must say that the Furness Line has been, in the main, about as satisfactory a line as we have subsidized, both in the way in which it has conducted its business and in the development of trade. At the same time, it is only fair to say that the line has not yet developed business sufficient to pay for carrying on its monthly trips, unless aided by a subsidy. I looked very carefully into that last year, and I became convinced that, if the $25,000 were taken off, the vessels themselves would be retired from that route. I do not, however, hold out the idea that these $25,000 are to be paid always; and, in fact, I have informed the managers of the line that we look for it to be self-supporting. My great hope is that, when the Canadian Pacific Railway gets into thorough working order, and has its connections made, that there will be a large attraction of freight for that line of steamers, to St. John and Halifax, and by which their present cargoes can be largely supplemented. The company itself is looking towards that. We believe that in the course of time, trade will so develop that a monthly line, and I hope a fornightly, or weekly line, self-supporting, will be found running between these ports and Great Britain."

So far from the hon. gentleman stating to the House that his intention was to enter into a new contract for three years, he desired the House to come to the conclusion that at an early day, when the Canadian Pacific Railway line was in working order, the subsidy would be discontinued. I say, therefore, as a matter of constitutional right we are well within our bounds in discussing it. It is a matter of policy, and judging from the statements of hon. gentlemen last year, so far from the House being asked to vote $25,000 for three years more, we had a right to expect that this would be discontinued altogether.

Mr. McLEOD. The object of this subsidy, as I understand it, is to build up a Canadian trade, to have a regular line of steamers running to St. John and Halifax. There is no regular line of steamers going to St. John except this one. It is true that this line happens to compete with the steamers from New York and Boston, but that is all the more reason for granting it a subsidy. It is neither desirable nor necessary that this subsidy should continue for all time, but it is desirable and necessary that it should continue until we have a trade built up between St. John and Halifax on this side and Liverpool and London on the other. I have always believed that the policy of this Parliement should be to grant such subsidies as would lead to the development of an entirely Canadian trade. In St. John and Halifax we have felt in the past that we have paid pretty heavily for railways which were built out west, but we did not grumble, because we knew it was for the benefit of Canada at large, and we believe that the whole system will not be completed until all our trade is sent by our own Canadian ports, either Halifax or St. John, and, therefore, we think this subsidy should be granted. I think my hon. friends opposite will agree that this is not an unreasonable or unusual thing to ask, so that the trade by those ports may be developed.

Mr. WELSH. My hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Mills) spoke almost altogether in regard to the shipment of apples. No doubt that is very important to the people of Annapolis, but, even if there is a subsidy granted to a line running to St. John and Halifax, the people of Annapolis will have to send their apples there in order to meet the boats. The hon. gentleman knows that every week there is a steamer leaving Halifax for Great Britain without this Furness line being required at all. The hon. gentleman replied to my remark as if I did not know what I was talking about when I said that the marine interests of the Dominion were at a very low ebb and had been going down for ten years. I must be a blind man if I do not know that to be the truth. Five years before the National Policy came into force we built more shipping than we have in ten years since the National Policy has been introduced. It is just as the census returns show how the population has been increased in the last ten years. They show that the population is at a standstill. It is just the same with the population as it is with the shipping. You are ruining the best interests of the Dominion by your policy, and I say that the granting of this subsidy is handicapping private enterprise and speculation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. HAZEN. I notice from Hansard that, when this item was before the Committee last year, very little hostility was shown to it from the other side. Neither the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), nor the leader of the Opposition, nor the senior member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), had much to say in regard to it. Of course, it is true that the hon. gentleman from Queen's who has just spoken (Mr. Welsh) was against it, but he was more opposed to subsidies altogether than to this particular subsidy. I fail to understand why so much hostility should be shown to this vote this year, when last year scarcely any was shown.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Oh, yes; Mr. Jones opposed it.

Mr. HAZEN. The hon. gentleman himself did not oppose it, nor the hon. member for Bothwell, nor the leader of the Opposition. I thought there must be some reason for the change. What is the reason? Why last year were they sitting silent and offering no opposition to this vote, while this year they are up in arms against it, and are trying to bring it into ridicule and say it is not a proper item for the House to vote? It may be that last year hon. gentlemen were influenced by the fact that, sitting beside them on the other side of the House, were two gentlemen from the City of St. John, who were prominent in the counsels of their party, and, therefore, they did not like to take the grounds they are taking now. To show that this is not a party vote at all, and to show that the people of St. John, whether Grits or Tories, Liberals or Conservatives, are in favour of this vote, I need only refer hon. gentlemen opposite to the speeches which were made last year. I find Mr. Weldon is reported in the Hansard as saying:

"If the system of subsidies is to be maintained, I think that this subsidy is one which well deserves the attention of Parliament."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. HAZEN. The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear," because he thinks there is this saving clause, "If the system of subsidies is to be maintained." I have not heard that the policy of those hon. gentlemen is to abolish subsidies, and, if they have not adopted that policy, they cannot conscientiously oppose this item until they decide that these steamship subsidies are to be done away with altogether. Mr. Weldon goes on:

"The Allan and Dominion lines go to Quebec and Montreal in the summer, and, with the exception of a few freight steamers, the Furness line, which runs direct from London to Halifax and St. John, is really the only passenger and freight line carrying on trade regularly with these two ports, and it has been a great accommodation not only for freight traffic, but for passengers as well. It seems to me that so long as subsidies are granted, this line is entitled to a subsidy, and that the granting of it is not unfair to other steamers. The Furness line has carried out the terms of its contract remarkably well, and persons who have travelled by these steamers speak of them as being very good vessels. So far as the Province of New Brunswick is concerned, the Furness line has been a great advantage and convenience to us."

I find, also, that the hon. gentleman who represented the City of St. John (Mr. Ellis), after the Finance Minister had spoken, very shortly afterwards, said:

"It is quite apparent that any line of steamers to the St. Lawrence, subsidized for the transport of mails and passengers, and carrying freight, must have the effect of discriminating against the port of St. John, N. B. I think this is the strong ground upon which the mercantile community of the Maritime Provinces place their claim for a subsidy. The effect of paying subsidies to steamers on the St. Lawrence route was to cheapen freight to the St. Lawrence, and, therefore, to make it more difficult for the merchants of St. John to carry on an independent business."

What Mr. Ellis meant to say, and what he did say in effect, was this: That the subsidizing of the Allan line of steamers which run to Montreal during the whole period of navigation, made it almost impossible for the merchants of St. John to carry on business on an equal footing with the merchants of Montreal, unless a like advantage was given to them in the way of a subsidy to a line of steamers from St. John and Halifax to Liverpool. Now that, I think, is the real point, all sides agree this is an advantage. Certainly it is to the advantage of the trade at St. John; and when the vote passed last year without any opposition at all, and I think the previous year also, without opposition, I can hardly understand why hon. gentlemen opposite should now feel it their duty to oppose this subsidy, which is one of the few subsidies, which is the only subsidy, which is given for such a purpose in the Maritime Provinces. I trust that spirit will not actuate hon. gentlemen opposite. We were perfectly willing to pay our share of the subsidy to the Allan line of steamers to Montreal, and we think that gentlemen from the other provinces will be perfectly willing to pay their quota of a subsidy to steamers running from the Maritime Provinces to Liverpool. If hon. gentlemen opposite take the ground that this is not a proper subsidy, then I think they must, in order to be consistent, also take the ground that the subsidy to the Allan line was not a proper subsidy. I trust this item will pass the House. I feel satisfied that the merchants in the Maritime Provinces fully approve of it, and in asking for a subsidy they do not feel they are asking anything which is not fair and right, or that should not be granted as a matter of right by this Parliament.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the hon. gentleman is placing his plea for this grant upon a most unstable and unjust ground. He does not defend the granting of the subsidy on its merits; he is not prepared to ask that this line should be subsidized as a commercial undertaking. If he is prepared to take that line, I can quite understand it, but he gets up and says that because it comes from the Maritime Provinces it has got to be subsidized. That is no reason in the world. The hon. gentleman is labouring under an entire misapprehension when he states that the Allan line is a subsidized line. The Allan line is paid at times for carrying the mails, when it does carry them, and it is a legitimate function of the Government to pay for the carriage of its mails—nobody denies that. You cannot expect steamboat companies, or railway companies, or any other corporation, to carry the mails or to do other service for the Government, unless they are paid for doing it. It would be absurd for Parliament to expect private enterprises to do Government work for nothing. So far as this line or any other line—I care not if it is the Allan line or any others—are engaged in the public service in carrying the mails, they ought to be paid what is just and reasonable. I do not think that hon. gentlemen will offer, from this side of the House or anywhere else, any complaint against that principle. But that is not the point here. The hon. gentleman complains that we did not oppose it last year more bitterly than we did. The Opposition last year was led by Mr. Jones, of Halifax, one of the leading members of the Liberal party, and he opposed it on this ground—and I want to call the hon. gentleman's attention to it—he opposed it on the ground, and it was acquiesced in by the Finance Minister, that it was a commercial undertaking, on the ground that this line of steamers was running in competition with other commercial lines, and, therefore, it was an injustice to give public aid to the one which was not given to the other. What was the conclusion of the Finance Minister in answering that argument? After using the words which I have read previously, he said:

"I do not believe that subsidies ought to be granted to steamship lines for commercial purposes to any greater extent than will enable them to develop a self-supporting trade."

And he told the House that as soon as the Canadian Pacific line was completed this would be self-supporting; therefore, there was no object in offering any violent opposition to a line which seemed to be, from the statement of the Minister, about expiring. But now the hon. gentleman tells us that not only is it not expiring, but he is entering into a new contract for the next three years. The hon. gentleman will see, therefore, that so far as the members of this House are concerned, they do not believe in the policy of subsidizing steamboats as commercial enterprises; consequently they are not only justified, but compelled on an occasion like this, at least to put their protest on record. I would like to ask what are the new cargoes to be carried by that line of steamers from St. John? I would like to know what we ship, what we export from the Province of New Brunswick? Is it to a large extent lumber, deals? If it is, it seems to me a monstrous proposition that you should subsidize a steamboat company to come into competition with sailing vessels to carry deals. The House is not informed on that point, but we ought to have the information, and we ought to be told upon what ground the hon. gentleman attempts to defend what is certainly most untenable.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend the junior member for the City of St. John (Mr. Hazen) almost insinuated that the opposition to this grant from this side of the House arose from the fact that the City of St. John had changed its political complexion. I must assure my hon. friend that such is not the case. It is already a misfortune for St. John to have changed its political complexion, without putting upon it another misfortune by refusing to subsidize a line of steamers in its interest. The hon. member for St. John stated that this subsidy would build up Canadian trade. Very well, that is a laudable object, and is to be supported so far as the object is attained; but in this case, in order to build up Canadian trade, you do it by subsidizing an English line, because this is not a Canadian line but an English line. You have it in evidence now, that this line is coming into competition with Canadian lines, because it was stated a moment ago by the hon. member for King's, N.S. (Mr. Borden) that this line had already had the effect of killing off a Canadian line.

Mr. HAZEN. There is no Canadian line, and there never was.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend stated a moment ago that a Canadian line had been established between the Basin of Minas and Liverpool, that had carried one cargo of apples for 75 cents, and immediately this subsidized line brought down its tariff from $1 to 70 cents, the effect of which was to kill the Canadian line. This fact is an exemplification of the arguments which were used last year against this subsidy, and which are confirmed this year by the instance mentioned by the hon. member for King's, Nova Scotia. Therefore, this is a good reason, it seems to me, in the eyes of my hon. friends opposite, for agreeing to cut off this subsidy, namely, that instead of encouraging Canadian enterprise, it really has the effect of stifling Canadian enterprise.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This subsidy of $25,000 a year to this line of steamers represents a sum of $625,000 which the people in all parts of the Dominion will be pledged to sustain. The subsidy represents about 4 per cent., according to the average income from real estate in this country, on $625,000. You are taking from the pockets of the people of Canada $625,000 and are setting it apart to furnish the means to subsidize this line of steamers.

Mr. HAZEN. Will you apply the same argument to the canals of Ontario?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Certainly not. The canals of Ontario are governed properly. These steamers do not belong to the Crown, and are not even owned in Canada. Does not the hon. gentleman see any difference between public property that belongs to the Government of the Dominion, and private property? What does the hon. gentleman propose to do with the canals? Does he propose to close them up?

Mr. HAZEN. I am not making any proposition. I am perfectly satisfied.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the hon. member were to compare the canals with the Intercolonial Railway there might be some analogy, but the Minister of Finance is asking us to pledge $625,000 worth of property to subsidize a line of steamers to run in competition with other steamers equally meritorious and equally advantageous to this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. What other line?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. member for King's has mentioned other steamers.

Some hon. MEMBERS. There is no other line.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the Minister of Finance has misled the Committee, for he said there were other lines, and he mentioned the Allan line and the Dominion line.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say they ran to St. John.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman said they ran to Halifax.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, that is not St. John.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). The hon. gentleman says there is a Canadian line of steamers running to the Bay of Fundy. I know of none. There are a few steamers chartered to come there and get freight at certain seasons of the year, but there is no regular line.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suppose the only reason there is not a regular line is because there is not sufficient business to maintain one. Demand and supply will regulate matters of trade if the Government will keep its hands off, and allow trade to regulate itself. There is no reason why there should be the slightest interference in this case any more than in a hundred others, and I venture to say there are a quarter of a million dollars of Estimates here that have no more merit in them than the item we are now considering and that should be struck off, and the people relieved from the burdens which are being imposed on them by the imposition of these charges.

Mr. HAZEN. I do not wish to weary the Committee, but I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the canals in Ontario and Quebec are not paying, and cause a great deficit, but when those items are before the House I do not think members from the Maritime Provinces are ever found objecting to them. On the other hand, when the Intercolonial Railway is before the House we find the members from Ontario stating that the road must be made to pay or be closed up, and when these subsidies are before the House, in which the Maritime Provinces are interested, we find hon. gentlemen taking the very same ground. What I want to say is this, if it is proper that all enterprises connected with the Maritime Provinces be viewed purely on a business and commercial basis, as is put forward by hon. gentlemen opposite, if in regard to subsidies granted the excess of expenditure over income should not be paid out of the Dominion exchequer, it is equally proper that the expenditure over income should not be paid out of the public exchequer in the case of the canal system. If it is a good argument in one case it is equally good in the other. So far as regards the Maritime Provinces, we are perfectly willing, looking at the general interest of the country, believing that our canals are important and necessary for the business of the country, although we practically do not derive one atom of benefit from them, to pay our share with the people of the rest of the Dominion, in order to maintain that canal system. But, on the other hand, we claim equal justice and fair-play, and when items concerning the Intercolonial Railway, which is of advantage to the whole Dominion and not alone to the Maritime Provinces, and when the subsidies come under consideration, which are not only of advantage to the Maritime Provinces but of advantage also to the people of the Upper Provinces, because they can ship goods from St. John and Halifax as well as other ports, we ask to be accorded equal fair-play. It is not fair, that on questions of this kind it should be said that these sums are unjustifiable and should not be voted. I fail to see a difference, although the hon. member from Bothwell sees a difference, between a deficit on a railway owned by the country or on an undertaking carried out by private parties. The tax-payers have to pay the deficit in each case, It requires an hon. member who is very philosophical to see the actual difference to the rate-payers and tax-payers of the Dominion.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is exceedingly unfortunate in bringing this argument down to the level on which he has placed it. He has attempted to divide this House into sections.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman was arguing the question solely on that ground. He does not defend that item on its merits; but simply because it will benefit the Maritime Provinces, we must speak of it with bated breath. I hope that we in the Maritime Provinces do not want anything except what is fair, and that we are prepared to defend any grant and appropriation made on its merits and not because it will benefit us locally. The hon. gentleman did not even scruple to introduce incidentally the Intercolonial Railway and say that members from Ontario were constantly carping at that road because it runs to the Maritime Provinces. Let us be just in this matter.

Mr. HAZEN. I did not say that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The deficit on that railway has alarmed thinking men on both sides of the House. The extravagance which reigns throughout the department and on the road has made the hon. gentleman who sits alongside the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) pause and think, and it was only the other evening a proposition was made to this House by the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) that the Intercolonial Railway should be taken out of the hands of the Government entirely and vested in a commission, so that political influences and jobbery might be eliminated, and the awful deficit, which has year by year prevailed, might be wiped out if possible. We will discuss the Intercolonial Railway, and a very serious problem it is, on its own merits, and I do not think the hon. gentleman, and I say it with all fairness, forwarded the interests of his native city and province by defending a grant to a steamboat company because the line runs to his particular locality. Let us vote money on the merits of the service and on no other ground, and the sectional cry, that this amount must be granted, or that amount refused because it goes respectively to a certain part of the Dominion, is not such as will receive the sanction and approval of members of this House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I wish to say a word in regard to canal tolls. I deny altogether that the representatives of the Province of Ontario ever asked that the canal tolls be put down to non-paying rates. That demand has been made by people living east of Ontario, and it has been made for the purpose of securing, not merely the traffic of Western Ontario, but of the Western States for cities lying along the St. Lawrence. That reduction was made on grounds of public policy, and it interests those who live outside rather than those who live inside of Ontario. This demand, I repeat, has been made by people living in other provinces. Likewise the demand to reduce the rates on the Intercolonial Railway has been made by people living further east for similar considerations. I say with respect to both these matters that the object should be to impose as large rates as possible, consistent with the general public interests, and there is no analogy whatever between either an increase or reduction of tolls on the canals and the subsidy proposed to a private line of steamers enter into competition with other lines of the Dominion.

Mr. BORDEN. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) made an argument which is quite common on the stump in the Maritime Provinces, but which we do not very often hear in this House. He took the ground that because this particular item happens to be a subsidy given to the Maritime Provinces and not to Ontario, that therefore it was being opposed by the members of the Opposition in this House. He was unfortunate in making this argument here, particularly so as this item is being opposed by the hon. member for Queen's P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) and by myself and other Maritime Provinces members, who, I think, may fairly claim to be as loyal to the interests of the Maritime Provinces as the hon. gentleman; certainly as far as our capacity will permit us to be. This is a question that has to be considered on its merits and not with reference to the canal system or the Intercolonial Railway. I believe that I originated, by accident perhaps, the opposition to this subsidy. I happened accidentally to come first on the list of those who objected to it, and I stated specifically my reason for objecting, and that reason was that I believed the subsidy for these steamers was opposed to the development of legitimate trade. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance stated last session, as was quoted by my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies):

"I do not believe that subsidies ought to be granted to steamship lines for commercial purposes to any greater extent than will enable them to develop a self-supporting trade."

Will the hon. gentleman say that if the subsidy were withdrawn these steamers would be taken from that route? Will the Minister of Finance or any other gentleman undertake to say that? I do not believe they will. Last year the Minister of Finance did say that he had looked into the matter and that he was doubtful whether the monthly trips could be sustained without a subsidy, but now it turns out that we are to get a fortnightly service.

Mr. FOSTER. With a subsidy.

Mr. BORDEN. So it would seem to me that he has contradicted the statement made last session, and that had he retained the service as a monthly service, that service at least would have been enabled to be performed without any subsidy. Some question has been raised as to this line of Canadian steamers to which I referred, and I desire to say one word of explanation as to that. What I stated was that steamships had been brought to the points on the Bay of Fundy for the purpose of carrying apples from the western parts of Nova Scotia to London and Liverpool, and at a cheaper rate than the rates maintained at Halifax; but that, whenever a line was established from these western points to England, Pickford & Black, taking advantage of the subsidy which they receive from this Government, reduced the rates at Halifax and killed off opposition. That is what I stated. I might state further, that a few years ago this House voted a considerable sum of money for the construction of a frost-proof warehouse at the town of Annapolis. I see my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Mills) is not in his place now, but if he were he would bear out what I say. A large amount of money was expended in constructing this frost-proof warehouse, and if I remember aright, stock was subscribed and a line of steamers was put on between Annapolis and Liverpool or London, but owing to the opposition of the subsidized steamers that line of steamers was withdrawn and the money which had been expended on that frost-proof warehouse at Annapolis has been unprofitably invested for this country. The hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) advanced some arguments here in favour of this steamship subsidy which occurred to me as being somewhat extraordinary. He said that the bringing of these steamers around to the town of Annapolis and to the towns on the Bay of Fundy had a tendency to cause shipments to England which would flood the London market. Well, I am not aware that the steamers which are brought to these points carry any more apples than the steamers which go from Halifax, and I am at a loss to know why a cargo of apples carried by a non-subsidized steamer would have the effect of flooding a market which would not be flooded by a line of steamers which is subsidized. I think the steamers from Halifax carry quite as large cargoes as the steamers which ply between Annapolis and Liverpool or London. The fact is, as I have stated, that this subsidy practically operates to kill off legitimate trade and to prevent opposition in the freight-carrying business. I have no doubt whatever that if the subsidy were withdrawn, that there would not only be as good a service as there is now between Halifax and Great Britain, but that there would be a better service, and that the people would have the advantage of having opposing lines coming to these points. The Minister of Finance has not replied to my friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies). I understood the Minister to state here that last session he called the attention of the House to the fact that a contract had been entered into between the Government and the Furness line, and he said that Parliament had voted a subsidy last year which was the first instalment of the contract, and that, therefore, we were morally bound to vote the subsidy this year and the following three years. I have looked carefully in Hansard and I fail to find a single word to that effect. In fact, as pointed out by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), the whole trend of the discussion at that time would be in precisely the opposite direction, and would indicate quite the opposite of the statement which the Minister of Finance has made here this afternoon. In view of the statement of the member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), I think it is only fair that the Minister of Finance should give an explanation, and if he is labouring under a misapprehension then the only argument he advanced, namely, that because Parliament, in the face of the fact that a contract had been made, voted a subsidy last year, binds Parliament to do so for the future, falls to the ground, and it would be in order therefore to strike out this subsidy.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I would like to make a short explanation with reference to the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Borden). He has forced me to make this explanation because I do not wish to be misunderstood. As I understand it, the granting of these subsidies creates a regular line of steamers from St. John and Halifax to London and Liverpool. Now, with reference to the steamers which have been denominated here to-day by the leader of the Opposition as a line of steamers from the Basin of Minas to London and Liverpool, I may say that we have no such regular line of steamers as that at all. There are, what are commonly called ocean tramps that are chartered at certain seasons of the year for the purpose of taking certain cargoes from the ports of the Bay of Fundy to London or Liverpool and other ports in Great Britain. I state as I said before, that some of the apple growers in King's and Annapolis counties at one time thought that the subsidizing of lines of steamers made it unfavourable for them to get their apples to the market, but when they came to thoroughly investigate it they saw that by a regular line of steamers they were in a position to ship smaller lots with more frequency to the British market, than they could by shipping a large cargo by these chartered boats, from Annapolis and from the ports of the Minas Basin. I say now, as I said before—and the speculators in apples and the farmers have found it to be the case—that it is possible to glut even the London market by a large cargo of apples being put at once on that market. Whereas if they are sent in small lots at regular intervals by these subsidized lines of steamers, there is not that possibility of glutting the London market with this particular cargo. Therefore, there is not as much opposition in Annapolis and King's counties now to these subsidized lines of steamers as there was formerly. The people there realize that by means of the competition afforded by them freight rates are reduced rather than increased.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to ask some of the hon. gentlemen representing St. John, N.B., whether my information is correct, that the cargoes which this line of steamers carry from that port are largely or chiefly composed of deals?

Mr. McLEOD. I believe they do carry some deals; but they carry a large quantity of other goods, including Ontario goods. I may say that the Canadian Pacific Railway line has been completed to St. John only this year, and it is expected that the quantity of freight will largely increase.

Subsidy to steamer between Campbellton and Gaspé and intermediate ports..... $12,500

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is this the Admiral?

Mr. FOSTER. This is the Admiral.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman think it desirable to carry through this item, before the Committee which is investigating the case of the Admiral has reported?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that affects the fact of the service being necessary. It may affect the question as to who should receive the contract; but the service is considered necessary, and the vessel is considered suitable for the service.

Mr. LAURIER. But if the hon. gentleman were to wait until the evidence taken before the Committee were presented to the House, he might come to the conclusion that the subsidy is extravagant. If it is true, as I understand, that the value of the steamer is only $16,000, to give it a yearly subsidy of $12,000 is an outrage. Perhaps under the circumstances the hon. gentleman would consider it possible to diminish the subsidy, and therefore I think it would be wise on his part to let the item stand until we have the report.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well, let it stand.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was going to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that, if my recollection serves me rightly, there was a profit of $8,000 or $10,000, almost equal to the amount of the subsidy.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a mistake.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not make the assertion one way or the other, but I think my recollection is correct.

Steam communication between Port Mulgrave or Pictou Railway terminus and Cheticamp..... $2,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What boat is on that route?

Mr. FOSTER. The same as that on the Magdalen Island service.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the name of the gentleman who entered into the contract?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Halliday.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) A Pictou man?

Mr. FOSTER. No; a Quebec man.

Steam communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland... $5,500

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. Minister of Finance has referred to the fact of this subsidy being granted to a company in which my hon. colleague and myself have shares. Now, I wish him distinctly to understand that, although I am unfortunate enough to have a share in that company, I do not consider myself or the company under any obligation to the Government for paying them $5,000 for carrying the mails. The incidents connected with the ownership of that share, so far, have largely consisted of payments out, and not receipts in. As my hon. friend has stated, this company spent over £35,000 sterling last year in building one of the finest steel steamships, I think, to be found in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. TUPPER. You will have good returns now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We may, but we shall not if the directors are foolish enough to carry the mails day by day for the paltry sum of $5,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman knows very well how that was accomplished, and it is just as well to have it discussed. The hon. gentleman had a steamship built for the winter route, and it was thought she could carry on the summer service between Shediac and Charlottetown; but as a matter of fact she is not fitted for that route, owing to there not being a sufficient depth of water in the Shediac port; and in a moment of weakness the directors of the company consented to reduce the subsidy from $10,000 to $5,000. I think they made a mistake, and they would have been better off if they had refused to carry the mails at all. The hon. gentleman intimated the other day that because I was a member of the House and owned a share in that company, I could not vote the money. I do not know what he meant by that statement. If I stood here and voted a subsidy for a company about to be formed, and behind the name of that company sheltered myself, I would be doing something unconstitutional. I was not an original member of this company, but I became possessed of a share in it some years ago in a moment of weakness, but I think the Government will have to deal with the company in a more liberal way than they are doing now.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentlemen complains about what the company are getting for carrying the mails. They are getting about twice as much for carrying the mails between Prince Edward Island and the mainland as would be paid for carrying them from Montreal to Liverpool.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) How much does the hon. gentleman pay for carrying the mails from Montreal to Liverpool?

Mr. HAGGART. At the rate per pound my duputy tells me that this company is getting double what is paid for carrying the mails from Montreal to Liverpool.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Would the hon. Postmaster General apply that rule all around?

Mr. HAGGART. Not at all.

Steam communication between Canso, Arichat, Guysborough, Port Hood and Mabou, and such other places between above limits as may be agreed upon, touching daily at Port Mulgrave, and also to provide for continuance of service during winter on the Port Mulgrave and Canso Section $4,000

Mr. FRASER. Would it not be possible that this communication should be confined to Canso, Arichat and Guysborough? I should think that the former item for steam communication between Port Mulgrave or Pictou Railway terminus and Cheticamp would serve the County of Inverness.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). No.

Mr. FRASER. The service touches the two points, Port Hood and Mabou, to which the service we are now subsidizing is also to go. Canso is the most important section in eastern Nova Scotia. A very large trade is done there, as also in Guysborough in winter in fresh fish, and there ought to be a daily trip made between Canso and the railway station at Port Mulgrave. It is the most important point in Nova Scotia, so far as telegraphic communication is concerned. The large offices built there by the commercial and other companies have made it the most important telegraphic town in Nova Scotia. The Rimouski only goes there two days in the week and two days to Guysborough, and on the other days it goes in other directions, that is two days to Port Hood, two days to Canso and two days to Guysborough. It might be possible, particularly in summer, that the Rimouski would go to Canso and Guysborough every day. That county except at the point Port Mulgrave, has no railway communication whatever. The amount voted for communication between Port Mulgrave and Cheticamp ought to serve the County of Inverness and let the Rimouski go to the County of Guysborough and Richmond. She has to serve both counties in going the other direction, and while she gives twice as much service to Guysborough and Richmond as to Inverness, she serves the two counties. Inverness has, therefore, two services, although Guysborough and Richmond have twice as much trade, but the amount of trade done between Canso and Mulgrave is larger than the amount done with all the other places, including Cheticamp, Port Hood and Arichat. The Government ought to take that into consideration, and Inverness will be served sufficiently by the other line, because the steamer could make two trips a week, which ought to be enough.

Steam communication between San Francisco and Victoria, B.C..... $17,640

Mr. FOSTER. This is voted each year, and is one of the conditions of the union. We have tried to get it transferred from this road where it is not so necessary and have it apply to more necessary service, but so long as that transfer is not agreed to we must provide this amount.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We are the only Government in christendom which has a steamboat in its constitution.

Mr. GORDON. I would like to call the attention of the Postmaster General and the Minister of Finance to the great importance of providing for a mail subsidy between Victoria and Comox. There is a large number of intervening islands at present which have nothing but a weekly mail communication, for which is paid 10 cents a mile. Between Nanaimo and Comox the country is almost a wilderness, there is no public highway by which a land mail may be transported, so that the people have to depend entirely on this weekly mail. The trade of the district of Comox and adjacent intermediate islands is of great importance. Comox alone, during the month of July, exported $55,000 worth of coal to the markets of California. There is also a large agricultural district in the immediate vicinity which has considerable export and is developing rapidly. It is utterly impossible for a steamboat company to perform the mail service more than once a week at 10 cents a mile. While that rate might be satisfactory between cities, it is utterly inadequate for the conveyance of mails between agricultural communities, in new and sparsely-settled districts. Ever since 1885 the people have been petitioning for a better service. I am satisfied that the exports of Nanaimo during the past year and those of Comox will be increased next year by half or even double that amount. I hope the Government will consider this matter, and see that we get the accommodation so necessary and so much desired.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see this vote is $17,640. Is that the sum that has been annually paid for this service since the union?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. What service is performed? How many boats along the line? How often do they run?

Mr. FOSTER. This is to keep up the steam communication between Victoria and San Francisco.

Mr. CHARLTON. How often do they run?

Mr. FOSTER. I think three times a month.

Mr. HAGGART. They perform this service once a week. They perform it oftener than they are required by the contract.

Mr. CHARLTON. Who is the contractor?

Mr. FRASER. Do they receive a subsidy from the American Government?

Mr. HAGGART. No. It was one of the terms of Confederation with British Columbia that a certain sum should be paid for steam communication with San Francisco, and we pay this under the Act of Confederation. We endeavoured to arrange with the Government of British Columbia to have the amount transferred to some other service which would be of more benefit, but they have the right to get this under the Act of Union.

Mr. FRASER. Is not the railway built through Northern California now?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. The reason for this original agreement was that we had no railway across the continent and the passengers and mails from British Columbia had to go to San Francisco in order to reach Ottawa. Has not that necessity been removed?

Mr. HAGGART. Unfortunately, the object is not stated in the Act.

Mr. FRASER. I am aware of that; but surely a statute is to be construed with a view to the reason for which it was passed. The statute is not to stand when the conditions under which it was passed have been removed. If the reason I have given is the correct reason for this provision, and if that reason has been removed, surely it cannot be contended that the provision is to remain. Suppose this boat ran on this subsidy alone and made nothing, is the Government to keep up that vote because it is in the statute? The railway is built now. Suppose this route would not pay and the company would stop running their boats, would this vote have to be paid when there was no boat to receive the money? Is not, as a matter of fact, the greater part of the trade now to San Francisco through California by the railway?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Section 4 of the terms of union provides for a service between Victoria and San Francisco and Olympia for freight and passengers, but ours is a very extraordinary constitution, and I suppose this provision is looking rather to a union with the state of California than one with British Columbia and the other provinces. It is a prophetic constitution, seeing that it originated with hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. There is a good deal to be said in regard to the construction my hon. friend from Guysborough has put upon this part of the constitution. When this provision was made there were no other means of communicating with the other portions of the Dominion except by way of San Francisco, and, as San Francisco was the western terminus, postal facilities were provided to convey the mails by that route to Canada. That being the case, the ordinary legal principle would apply. Where the reason for this rule ceases, the rule ceases also. But I do not know that British Columbia would be willing to accept that construction. Still, it is extraordinary if, for all time, we are to keep up a fortnightly service between British Columbia and a city of the American union. Suppose war were to break out between Great Britain and the United States, then all communication would cease and yet this term of union with British Columbia would be as operative as ever. The Government would be under as great an obligation as ever to provide for a postal service with the City of San Francisco as if peace existed between the two countries. That shows how ill-considered were the terms and conditions of union, when they were agreed upon, because this assumes a perpetual condition of perfect peace, which cannot be assumed.

Committee rose.

CENSUS RETURNS.

Mr. HAGGART. I beg to present a correction of the census returns in regard to the district of Alberta, showing that instead of the population being 20,056, it should be 26,123.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of supply.

Post Office—Mail Service..... $2,010,000

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Postmaster General will no doubt give us some explanation of this vote, of the amount of the vote, and of the number of sub-contracts for subsidies that have been entered into since the last session of Parliament. I see that the hon. gentleman is granting the Canadian Pacific Railway a large subvention, and one proportionally larger than has been given for the carriage of mails by railway in the case of other railways. The hon. gentleman must be able to give us full information in regard to that matter.

Mr. HAGGART. There is considerable increase in the payment for the mail service. The amount paid to the Grand Trunk Railway for 1888-89-90, by the Auditor General's Report, was $328,552.11; for 1891-92, $338,000. The increase is caused by the estimated increase of the service on the Wellington, Grey and Bruce, and the Georgian Bay and Lake Erie, of $8,265.54. The amount paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1890 was $372,825.07. The New Brunswick Railway, $25,670.88; Great North-Western, $160. These were both included in the vote for railways last year. The rate paid last year from Montreal to Vancouver was 12 cents a mile. The increased rate would be about 12 cents per train per mile, which would be about $75 per mile. It is increased this year to $105 per mile, or an increase of $75,936. There is also an increase on the Montreal and St. John service. Prince Albert branch, $2,000. This road is from Regina to Prince Albert. The Mission branch, that is a little road from Vancouver down to the boundary. Winnipeg to Glenborough, $1,081. That means a total of $505,992.31, less arrears paid in 1890, $39,261.20, which leaves $485,731.11.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What was the amount paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. HAGGART. The amount paid to the Grand Trunk Railway is $160 per mile for 884 miles over the main line, and $124 per mile per annum for 369½ miles. Then there are $25,000 for increased accommodation, that is, large-sized cars from Montreal to Toronto. There is also $5,725 for carrying the American mail. These items make up the estimates for 1891-92 of $483,500 for the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How many trains per day carry mails on the Grand Trunk?

Mr. HAGGART. Two each way.

Mr. BORDEN. Does that list include all railways intended to be used next year? The hon. gentleman will remember I brought to his attention another railway.

Mr. HAGGART. There are some others we may possibly use, but this list is as nearly correct as possible. I know the hon. gentleman brought to my attention a small line on which we may possibly put the mails. It takes, however, some time to arrange the matter and get rid of the contract already in existence.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We desire an explanation particularly with regard to the increased amount paid for mail service to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Last year the amount was $340,000; this year the proposed amount is $483,000, or an increase of $143,000, equal to 42½ per cent.

Mr. HAGGART. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have been urging for a long time on the Government the small amount paid them for mail service. For the last two years they have been in correspondence with us upon the subject. They stated that they were the lowest paid of any railway in the country, and perhaps I had better read some of their communications to me on the subject, as well as my report to Council upon which the Order in Council was founded. I should mention that there is no increase in prices between Ottawa and Toronto on the 12 cents per mile, and the small allowance we give them between Smith's Falls and Montreal, which I think is 4 cents per mile. This is a communication from Mr. Van Horne, dated 27th January, 1891 :

"CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY,
"MONTREAL, 27th January, 1891.

"SIR,—I regret that up to the present time this company has received no favourable reply to its several applications for an increase in the amount allowed the company for carrying mails.

"You have had in your possession for eighteen months a memorandum showing the very great difference existing between the rates paid to this company and those paid to the Grand Trunk and other Canadian railways and to the transcontinental railways in the United States, while the highest rate received by the Canadian Pacific Railway is $75 per mile per annum, the undermentioned rates are paid to the railways named, for the postal service on their main lines:

"Grand Trunk Railway, $160 per mile per annum, with $25,000 per annum additional for special train service between Montreal and Toronto.

"Great Western Railway, $124 per mile per annum, with $5,725 per annum for carrying the American mails.

"Intercolonial Railway, $130 per mile per annum.

"The payments by the United States Government for mail service during the year ending 30th June, 1890, were as follows:—

"Northern Pacific Railway about $200 per mile; Union Pacific Railway, with an additional allowance for use of postal cars, $689 per mile; Southern Pacific Railway, with the same allowance, $467 per mile.

"With the exception of one or two divisions of the Grand Trunk where more than the ordinary number of cars are run, the mail service on the lines of this company is just as frequent, and certainly as good, as upon any other railway in the country, and our directors, therefore, find it difficult to understand why this company should be allowed only about 50 per cent. of the amount paid to other companies for doing the same work.

"We have had reason to expect, for eighteen months back, that the company's applications and representations in this regard would be favourably acted upon, and we have been accepting payments during this time on the original rates, in the belief that no advantage would be taken of the delay and that justice would be done.

"I beg, therefore, that this matter may receive the earliest possible consideration of the Government, and that the rate for postal service on the company's main line, from Quebec to Vancouver, be fixed at one hundred and fifty dollars ($150) per mile of railway per annum, so as to make it conform in a degree to the rates in force on other Canadian lines, and that the rates so fixed be made to apply at least to the past year.

"As something has been said in the discussion of this matter about the revenue of the Government from the service in question, I beg leave to say that, in the case of lines through new districts and on the frontier, the proportion of revenue to expense has never governed the compensation to the mail-carriers, either in Canada or the United States, mail service having, from the nature of the country, to be frequently maintained at a cost of more than one hundred times the revenue. The expense of our service north of Lake Superior and through the mountains, and on our main line generally, is much greater than on the lines in the best developed sections of Ontario and Quebec. Such conditions have always been recognized by the United States Government in fixing the mail compensation for their transcontinental railways. The revenue to the Government from mails is a matter beyond the control of the carrier, and the compensation for the carriage of the mails should not, therefore, be based on such revenue, but on the fair value of the services performed.

"For the mail service on the Short Line between Montreal and St. John, the Post Office Department only allows the ordinary compensation for baggage-car service, although the business is quite large enough to warrant a 24-foot mail compartment. The mail matter cannot be handled in the baggage cars without absorbing space required for passengers' baggage, and, on more than one occasion, I believe, mail bags have been left over because there was not room for them in the car. We have been expecting, from month to month, since the attention of the department was called to this fact, that instructions would be given to put on a suitable car for the mail and the messenger in charge, but, up to this date, no such arrangement has been made."

That was the last application I got, and upon that I founded the report to Council on the 3rd February, which was as follows :—

"POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, CANADA,
"OTTAWA, 3rd February, 1891.

"The undersigned has the honour to represent to Your Excellency in Council that for some time past an application from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has been before this department for increase in the rate paid to them for mail service over the line between Montreal and Vancouver, the ground of which is the higher rate at which certain other railways are paid for similar service. In connection with this, it is observed that at present the rate of payment for the service over the line in question is twelve cents (12 cents) per mile, for a space equal to one-half (½) a baggage car, no regard being had to the special character of this railway as an interprovincial link. This feature, in a railway's importance, has not, however, been overlooked in determining the rate of compensation for mail service in the case of other railways furnishing similar connections, a special rate of one hundred and sixty dollars ($160) per mile having been given to the Grand Trunk Railway Company in 1865 on account of its bringing Upper and Lower Canada into closer communication, and afterwards the Intercolonial Railway was paid one hundred and thirty dollars ($130) per mile for a service of a similar nature between the older provinces and the Maritime Provinces. It is conceived, therefore, that the Canadian Pacific Railway may fairly maintain a claim as respects the portion of the railway in question, based upon the same ground. As, however, the frequency of service over this line is not now, nor is likely to be for a long time to come, as great as it is over the other railways mentioned, it is not thought necessary to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway as high prices as are paid to other railways, but one hundred and five dollars ($105) per annum would seem to be an equitable recognition of the special character of the service rendered by this railway company. At this rate the amount payable for the service between Montreal and Vancouver would be three hundred and six thousand and seventy-five dollars ($306,075) per annum, an excess of seventy-four thousand nine hundred and thirty-six dollars ($74,936) over the amount now paid.

"It is, therefore, recommended that the Canadian Pacific Railway be paid at the rate of one hundred and five dollars ($105) per mile per annum over the line between Montreal and Vancouver, and that in consideration of this payment this department shall be entitled to call upon the railway company to carry mails by any train now running, or that may hereafter be run between the points mentioned."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The increase is $143,000, but that only accounts for $74,000 of the increase.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understand from the figures given us that the Grand Trunk Railway receives $160 per train per mile for two services each way per day, and the Canadian Pacific Railway receives $105 per train per mile for one service each way.

Mr. HAGGART. Some portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway run two trains each way per day.

Mr. CHARLTON. How is the balance of the increase accounted for? There is $69,500 increase to the Canadian Pacific Railway not accounted for yet.

Mr. HAGGART. There are some of the branches being added, and the line between Montreal and St. John is put on the same footing as the other lines, 12 cents per train per mile. Instead of the baggage car we put on a postal car and run it through.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That surely cannot account for the other $70,000.

Mr. HAGGART. There is an increase between Montreal and St. John from $7,023.72 to $35,982, making an increase of $28,958. Then, there is the increase on the main line and a small allowance for the Mission Branch and the line to Prince Albert.

Mr. CHARLTON. That $28,000 fails to account for the $69,500 by $41,500.

Mr. HAGGART. The $25,670 paid to the New Brunswick Railway was charged last year to other railways; this is now paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway; to the Great North-Western Railway, $160; increase for the service from Montreal to Vancouver, $75,936; increase for the service from Montreal to St. John, $28,958; service from Regina to Prince Albert, $2,000; the Mission Branch, $300; and the Winnipeg and Glenborough service, $1,081. These are the increases.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is more than $10,000 short yet.

Mr. HAGGART. The total of the amounts which I have given is $505,992.31, less arrears paid in 1889-90, $20,261, which leaves $485,731. There is an increase of about $105,000 paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway this year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That may be so, but it does not appear from the Estimates. We have in the Estimates an appropriation for the year 1890-91 to the Canadian Pacific Railway of $340,000, and for the present fiscal year $483,500, or an increase of $143,000. The hon. gentleman when invited to account for the increase, accounts for $132,000. There appears to be a hiatus somewhere.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is taking the amount that was voted last year, $340,000. The amount actually paid was $372,825.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does the increase for this year cover that deficiency of last year, besides the increased expenditures?

Mr. HAGGART. No; the vote taken this year is for the purpose of covering the amount to be actually paid.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon gentleman has not accounted for the increase in the appropriation by about $10,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think we can congratulate ourselves upon the condition in which our Post Office Department is at the present time. It is the department which above all others ought, I suppose, to be free from political influence or taint. The hon. gentleman may have satisfied himself and his friends that the deal which he made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company just before the last election was a square and honest one, but I think a great many in the country will doubt that. It is within the recollection of everyone that just previous to the last election the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company published a most extraordinary political manifesto, and it was generally believed, and is believed to this day, that that manifesto was published after the hon. Postmaster General had made this political deal with Mr. Van Horne. Now, we have the proof, to some extent at least, in the fact that the letter conveying the application for this enormous increase was dated on the 27th day of January. The hon. Postmaster General paid a visit to Mr. Van Horne on or about that time, and on the 3rd of February he made his report—not, it is true, conceding what Mr. Van Horne wanted, but conceding a large portion of his demands. Mr. Van Horne was modest; he only wanted $150,000, and the hon. Postmaster General compromised with him for $105,000. The long and short of the story is this, that just before the last election the hon. gentleman promised to pay increased subsidies to the Canadian Pacific Railway by about $143,500 a year. My hon. friend beside me says $150,000, but I take the figures from the Estimates. There may be something else beyond that. At any rate, I am well within the lines in saying that.

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has just been giving the details. He has paid $76,000 increase for carrying the mails between Montreal and Vancouver; $28,000 for the St. John line; $25,600——

Mr. HAGGART. That was paid last year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Just so; the two items are increased.

Mr. HAGGART. It is just simply a transfer of account.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has stated that there is an increase of $76,000 between Montreal and Vancouver over last year, and $28,000 from Montreal to St. John. That only makes $104,000, and leaves the other $40,000 to be accounted for; and he accounts for part of that by saying that $25,000 paid under another name last year are now paid the Canadian Pacific Railway, but that there is over $100,000 increase paid in consequence of the application of Mr. Van Horne addressed to the hon. gentleman and to which he acceded in his report to Council. As a matter of fact, how does the Post Office Department stand? I would have imagined that the hon. gentleman would have embraced this opportunity of making a few general statements upon the condition of his department, which is not one on which we can congratulate ourselves. I find that the total expenture last year was $3,074,469 and the net revenue $2,357,388, leaving a loss of $717,000. One would have thought that the hon. gentleman would have taken pains to explain how this arose, and whether he has any policy which, in his opinion, would result in diminishing it. Instead of that, his policy has simply been one of increasing the payment to the Canadian Pacific Railway to an amount which

I do not think can be justified. We never heard in this House before, certainly not last session, from the hon. gentleman, that there had been any claim from the Canadian Pacific Railway that the mileage they received for carrying the mails to British Columbia was unjust or unfair, and now he increases that by $30 per mile. That may be justified, but it is a very suspicious circumstance that the negotiations took place just previous to the general elections and the issue of the celebrated manifesto against reciprocity. A great many people believe that this demand which the Government complied with was simply complied with as an inducement to the company to lend their political influence to the support of the Government. Certainly the hon. gentleman has not made any pretense whatever of defending it. He simply reiterated to us in a laconic manner what he reported to the Council. He has not attempted to justify his action by showing what the United States pay for carrying mails across the Union Pacific or Northern Pacific, or any of their great lines; and I suppose he relies on the House carrying the vote without explanation. In my judgment, the hon. gentleman has shown no grounds to justify the heavy loss in the yearly administration of the department. Both the circumstances of the increase and the time it was made are peculiarly unfortunate, inasmuch as immediately after this enormous sum was granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway they issued their political manifesto, so that it would seem the payment made them was in the nature of a payment for value received.

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to the statement of the hon. gentleman that the financial position of the Post Office Department is worse than it has been in past years, let me inform him that the deficit has been growing gradually less those few years back, and last year it was $50,000 less than the year before. The hon. gentleman has said that I did not make any comparisons, but I made a number of comparisons with other railways in the United States in precisely similar circumstances, and showed that they are paid more than double what we pay. I could show the hon. gentleman, but it would only excite, perhaps, the cupidity of railway companies, that we are paying far less rates than are paid by the United States. Some of the railway companies in the United States are paid as high as from $1,200 to $1,500 per mile per year; and with reference to the statement of the hon. gentleman that a manifesto was issued immediately after the interview I had with Mr. Van Horne, I had no such interview with Mr. Van Horne and there was no such arrangement made with him. I recommended this increase to the Council solely on the ground——

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman deny that he had an interview with Mr. Van Horne?

Mr. HAGGART. I had no interview with him. I may have met him, but not on any subject with reference to this. I had no communication with him on any political subject. I do not remember having had any interview with him, even on postal matters. In fact, I am certain I never had. The only communications I had were those I had in my office with Mr. Drinkwater, who frequently represented to me the small amount the Canadian Pacific Railway were receiving for their services, and with Mr. Shaughnessy. I made comparisons, which may have been laconic as the hon. gentleman states, but were as complete as I could possibly give them, with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Intercolonial Railway, and also with the Northern Pacific and the two other Pacific lines running to California.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think the hon. gentleman mentioned the Union Pacific.

Mr. HAGGART. I mentioned the three of them. It was mentioned in Mr. Van Horne's letter which draws a comparison between the amount paid by us and those paid by the United States; and I think the service we are receiving from the Canadian Pacific Railway at $105 per mile per year is a service which has a very small compensation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be a matter of opinion. Over a very large portion indeed of their route traversed between Montreal and Vancouver there is, as the hon. gentleman knows, absolutely no inhabitants whatever. After you leave Nipissing until you get to Port Arthur there are very few people indeed. From Port Arthur to Winnipeg there are very few people indeed. For a few hundred miles past Winnipeg there is some considerable settlement, and from that time on, until you get very near the coast in British Columbia, settlement is of the sparsest possible description. It is a very extraordinary circumstance that whereas the Grand Trunk Railway presumably serves a very much larger number—I suppose seven or eight times as many as the Canadian Pacific Railway can serve—you find that $338,000 compensates the former, while it takes $483,000 to compensate the latter. But I rose more particularly to call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that the figures he gave, large as they were, and they are very large indeed, do not show the true deficit on the post office service. We have the large amount of $3,360,000 here, but we have besides that the large sum of $201,360 for the office at Ottawa, and the large sum of $35,000 for contingencies of the office at Ottawa, and, of course, there is the Minister's own salary to be added. So that in all we spend $3,604,310 on our post office service, and the net receipts last year appear to have been $2,357,388; so that at present the net loss on the post office service amounts to close on $1,250,000 per year. And this is the time when the Postmaster General thinks it expedient to add this large amount to the expenditure of the mail service. It appears to me that this is a very unfortunate time to choose for that purpose, when we have a deficit of a million and a quarter. The Canadian Pacific Railway, which has received enormous benefits from this country, which has received enormous subsidies, in cash and in land, put in a claim in the very heat of an election for a large additional subsidy. If there were any railway which the Government would have been justified in requiring to be satisfied with a moderate subsidy it is that railway, especially in view of the fact that they traverse what is almost an uninhabited territory from about the end of Lake Huron until they get to the Pacific coast. I would ask the Postmaster General to tell me what is the sum total paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway for their postal service, from such a point as Pembroke to Vancouver. The population served is very small and very sparse. I presume that, all told, it can be very little more than 300,000 and yet for that service it appears that we are expending $300,000 or $400,000 a year.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would call the attention of the Committee to the unintentionally misleading character of the Minister's comparison between the amounts paid on the Canadian and the American roads, between the cost of the mail service on the Union Pacific and the Canadian Pacific Railway. These American roads, which are receiving from $1,200 to $1,500 a mile, run two or three mail trains each way, sometimes from New York to the west with four or five mail cars, and they are simply mail trains. They run at 50 miles an hour, and this rate is maintained from New York to San Francisco. While we are serving 90,000 people west of the Rocky Mountains, the American mail trains are serving a population of 2,000,000 west of the Rocky Mountains. The service is vastly better than ours, the time is more speedy and the accommodation is vastly greater. These mail trains are models. They are entirely mail trains, with nothing but mail cars on them, and the comparison between the American roads which serve 63,000,000 people and the Canadian roads which serve only 5,000,000 people is very difficult to make correctly. We have to take all the circumstances into account before we institute a comparison between their roads and our own.

Mr. HAGGART. Oh, yes; no doubt the hon. gentleman is correct. For instance, the rate between New York and Buffalo, 439 miles, is $2,080 per mile per annum. From New York to Philadelphia, 90 miles, the amount is $2,824 per mile per annum. But I was trying to draw a comparison with roads which are very similar to the Canadian Pacific Railway, such as the Northern Pacific from St. Paul to the sea coast, which receives more than double what we pay to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was asking what the amount was which we paid from Pembroke to Vancouver. I have not that calculation. The distance I have is from Montreal to Vancouver, the increase being $75,936. That would be the difference between $75 and $105 per mile for 2,915 miles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose the distance from Montreal to Pembroke would be about 250 miles.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes. The hon. gentleman draws a comparison between what we pay to the Canadian Pacific Railway and what we pay to the Grand Trunk Railway, and he says that the Grand Trunk Railway serves a population seven or eight times greater than that served by the Canadian Pacific Railway. He must remember that the Canadian Pacific Railway have their lines in every portion of Canada. They have lines from Montreal vid Smith's Falls to Toronto. They have another branch along the Ottawa River.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the hon. gentleman did not quite follow what I was pointing out, which was, that on the road from a point like Pemkroke to Vancouver the amount paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway was very much larger than the whole amount paid to the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. But I show that, in Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick, the Canadian Pacific Railway have nearly as large a railway mileage as the Grand Trunk Railway. They have their line from Montreal to Toronto. They have their line along the Quebec side of the Ottawa River to the City of Ottawa. They have their line to Carleton Place, to Pembroke, to Owen Sound, to Woodstock, and from Woodstock to Detroit. They serve nearly as large a population as the Grand Trunk, and, taking in their line in New Brunswick, they probably serve quite as large a population, and they receive not a tithe of the amount which the Grand Trunk Railway receives in the older part of the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That does not alter the fact that, from Pembroke to Vancouver, they receive very nearly as much as the Grand Trunk is paid for the whole of the service it performs. At $105 a mile, the Canadian Pacific Railway receives close upon $300,000 from Pembroke to Vancouver, and that is exclusive of a large amount paid for what may be called the side lines in the North-West, the amount of which I have not got.

Mr. HAGGART. I gave that before you came in.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Taking Pembroke as your starting point, you are paying to the Canadian Pacific Railway for the purpose of serving a population scarcely 300,000 strong, scattered over the North-West and over part of the unsettled portions of Ontario, and over British Columbia, as much and probably more than you are paying to the Grand Trunk for all the work they do from one end of Canada to the other. In what we may call the unsettled part of our territory, there are great regions extending to 400, perhaps to 600, perhaps even to 800 miles, together where there is no settlement, whatever there may be in the future. And to all this service on the main line which we pay for there is to be added what is paid for the branches in British Columbia and Manitoba and elsewhere.

Mr. HAGGART. The amount paid for the Prince Albert Branch is $2,060; for the Mission Branch, $300, and for the Winnipeg and Glenborough Branch, $1,081.60.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You pay on the Manitoba and South-Western?

Mr. HAGGART. That is what is known as the Glenborough Branch.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would make in any case close on $300,000 paid for the service of 300,000 people. Now, it does appear to me, all things considered, that it is a very monstrous charge to make for the service. As I said, I do not regard the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has received donations to the tune of close upon $100,000,000 in cash and property, as being entitled to exact the last farthing from the post office or any other department of this Government. On the contrary, I think there is very good ground for keeping it close. Now, the hon. gentleman has not gainsaid the accuracy of my statement, that instead of a deficit of seven or eight hundred thousand dollars, under present estimates the deficit in the post office will be, all told, $1,250,000, unless there be a large increase in receipts, which, to the best of my knowledge, he did not count upon, did not expect, and probably will not realize. In charging and accounting the cost of the Post Office Department you must add not merely this $274,000, but you must likewise add the cost at headquarters, which comes close to a quarter of a million dollars that it is necessary to charge against the post office expenditure.

Mr. HAGGART. That always was a charge, and very nearly of the same extent. The increase in the post office management since I have been in charge has been very little at headquarters, and the deficit this year $50,000 less than last year, and last year it was less than the year before. The hon. gentleman must remember the amount paid from Montreal to Vancouver, and the service of the line from Montreal to Toronto, one portion of it from Montreal to Smith's Falls at $25 per train mile per year. We are paying over some of the distance on the Grand Trunk Railway $160. We are paying from Smith's Falls to Toronto, and from Ottawa to Toronto, only $75 per train mile per year, while on the Grand Trunk Railway we are paying $160 per mile, besides $25,000 added to it for special mail accommodation on the road. The Grand Trunk Railway is receiving for the service in Ontario over double what the Canadian Pacific Railway are receiving.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This road from Montreal to Toronto passes, as the hon. gentleman knows, over a comparatively thinly-settled portion of the country for a great part of it. There is a long distance from Perth till you get near Peterborough, in which settlement is very sparse, in some parts of which there is no settlement at all. But the Grand Trunk Railway goes along the St. Lawrence, through the oldest and most populous portion, almost, in the country; necessarily, it does a great deal more work, and serves a great many more people, and should receive the larger subsidy.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think the hon. gentleman will break his record for reducing expenses in the Post Office Department with this increase of $274,000. I had been looking with some hope to the time when we would reduce our postage to two cents per letter, but with this large increase in the expenditure I suppose we must consider the realization of that hope deferred for some time.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is fond of making comparisons with the United States. I can tell him that we have mail contracts and post offices to a far greater extent, and more of them, than they have in the United States, according to the population. In Canada the distance travelled comparatively is far greater than in the United States, and the number is nearly double for the same population.

Mr. FRASER. I submit that the post offices are not as well organized, nor are the postmasters as well paid, as in the United States. The allusion of the Postmaster General reminds me of a case that I am acquainted with. Previous to Confederation, the postmaster of a small settlement in my county received some $30 a year. After some time there was a representative sent to this House opposed to the present Government, and his salary was at once reduced from $30 to $14. He did not want to keep the office at all at that amount, and notified the department. They tried to get somebody else to take his place, but they could find no one for that amount. Mr. Maguire, of Steep Creek—that is the name of the gentleman—is a very decent citizen in my county, and he asked the department to take the office away. However, the department sent him the salary from year to year, and Mr. Maguire credited them with the amount. Finally, they wanted him to pay back the sum of $90, and for the last three years they have neither taken his post office from him, nor have they sent him any stamps, and so the man has actually to buy the stamps that are used, and pay for them himself out of his own pocket, and the Government will allow him neither salary, stamps, nor anything else. It is very easy to run a Post Office Department in that way. At the same time, they are voting $75,000 to carry the mails on the Canadian Pacific Railway. Well, I admit if you carry on the post office service like that you may pay the railways liberally. With the means at our disposal, we have in Canada, I admit, a fairly good service, so far as serving the people is concerned. In Nova Scotia generally we are well served, so far as offices in the districts are concerned. But no thanks to the Government for that, because the people will have post office matter, we are a reading people, and we must have post offices. I do not know whether there are many cases like the one I have mentioned. I hope the Postmaster General will attend to this matter, and that he will get some other postmaster, and pay this man the amount that is due him, and not allow him, at his own expense, to carry on a post office in that district.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know the post office nor the requirements. But every postmaster in the country is paid upon a principle that he knows perfectly well, entitling every postmaster to a fixed salary, as well as the Postmaster General, or any other officer. As to stamps, very likely it is a small office, a non-accounting one, and we do not give stamps to any of the small offices unless the postmaster sends money in for them.

Mr. FRASER. You might at least give him a salary in order that he may buy the stamps.

Mr. HAGGART. The salary will be sent him regularly. I will make enquiry about it.

Mr. HYMAN. It will be remembered that some time ago the rate of postage in cities where there is free delivery was raised from one cent to two cents. There is a class of matter which it seems to me might be excepted by the Postmaster General from the class of written matter and might be carried at the rate of one cent, the same as circulars. I refer more particularly to statements which are sent out by friendly societies. I think these should be sent out at the one cent rate. The rate has been raised to two cents for drop letters, which includes ordinary writing matter. I think that the Government might consider this matter and take some discretionary power, by which the Postmaster General by an Order in Council might designate what particular circulars could be put under a one cent rate. I may say that the matter has already been referred to in England, and the post office authorities have taken action in the matter. At a meeting of one of these societies the following letter was read :—

"GENERAL POST OFFICE, Aug. 4.

"DEAR SIR ALBERT ROLLIT,—The Post Office Act Amendment Bill empowers the Postmaster General, with the consent of the Treasury, to determine what circulars shall be charged with rates of postage as letters, and it is proposed under this authority to allow circulars to be sent by book post, whether attached or not to other documents, such as a statement of accounts. This proposal will admit to the privilege of the book post arrears notices sent out by friendly societies, which are at present inadmissible."

I should be very glad if the Postmaster General would take the matter into consideration, and see if some arrangement of this kind can be made in Canada.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is no doubt aware that it is out of my power to make this change. That can only be done by a change in the Act. Consideration will be given to this subject. I am glad to obtain all suggestions for improving the service.

Mr. FLINT. What rule of the department exists in regard to decisions being arrived at by the Government as to whether they will allow a daily mail in different sections as an improvement on a weekly or semi-weekly mail? Has the department fixed any particular limit of population or of postal revenue on which this basis is made? While on this subject, I may say that, in the constituency I have the honour to represent, there are one or two, and perhaps three cases, in which strong representations have been made to the department asking that a semi-weekly and in some instances a tri-weekly mail may be displaced in favour of the daily mail. I will not dwell on the reasons given, because I believe they are fully contained in the correspondence under the hand of the Postmaster General, but I would strongly urge that these cases be favourably considered by the department, because I believe the case made up by the petitioners is practically unanswerable. These communities that ask for the daily mail are growing communities, and great financial loss is sustained by business men sometimes for want of more frequent communication. There is, an addition to these cases I have in my mind, and which are probably well understood by the department, a claim made by a community on the border line between Digby and Yarmouth counties. The mail now, I believe, is semi-weekly and ends at the post office at Carlton, in the County of Yarmouth, the post office being about the same distance on the other side in Digby County, leaving Forest Glen, between the counties, without other mail accommodation but that furnished by the two post offices 7 miles apart. If the department could manage to make a contract by which the mail would be carried from Carlton through Forest Glen to the other post office in Digby County it would be of great advantage to the people of the community. It is a growing community, and the people, numbering 40 families, are put to great inconvenience and loss, in consequence of the fact that they have to send or go 6 or 7 miles in either direction in order to secure their correspondence and papers. So great has been the inconvenience that many of the inhabitants have given up their weekly papers, because it is dead loss to have them lie in the post office for some time before they obtain them. I hope the Postmaster General will give his patient consideration to the claims made by these people and, if possible, give them an answer in accordance with their wishes.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no principle on which increased mail accommodation is given; it is simply a question as to whether the revenue will justify it or not. When there is an application made to the department the first action taken is to obtain the revenue derived from the offices, and next the cost of the proposed service. Then the report is sent down to the inspector, and he reports as to the necessity of it. No doubt this application was sent to the inspector to report, and if no action has been taken it is because the revenue did not justify an additional service. However, the hon. gentleman can see the report and the grounds given by the inspector by calling at the department, or I will bring up the papers.

Mr. FLINT. I will accept the invitation of the Postmaster General, because there may be certain statements in the report that may be of interest to the petitioners in order that they may reply to them.

Mr. BORDEN. A short time ago I asked if the railway of which I have spoken and written to the Posmaster General, the Cornwallis Valley Railway, was to be employed to carry the mails. It was not included in the list of new railways to be employed. The Postmaster General said it might possibly be employed next year. I find that railway is the only railway in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick that is not employed, and it is a very remarkable circumstance, because the hon. gentleman has had the matter pressed on his attention ever since January last. The road was opened in December, and the president of the company promptly informed the department that the company were prepared to carry the mails, as the road passes near many post offices. The Postmaster General said he would refer the request to the inspector for his report; and I believe he reported favourably. I assure the hon. gentleman that it will involve very little increase in the expenditure, and it will give enormously better service to that section of the country. The people are almost entirely in favour of this change. I think when the hon. gentleman has time to give the matter attention he will not refuse the people of that section and the railway company that which is granted to every other railway, and all the people living in the neighbourhood of railways in the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. HAGGART. I have had representations from the hon. gentleman with respect to putting the mails on that road. I caused enquiries to be made, and if the mails are not on that road I believe it is because the report was unfavourable. But there are several roads in precisely the same position, that the mails have not been put on them for some time—the Glasgow and New Oxford, and some other railways. My intention is, whenever I have means at my disposal, to use the Cornwallis Valley Railroad for the purpose of carrying the mails.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). There is the Nova Scotia Central.

Mr. BORDEN. They are on the new list.

Mr. HAGGART. It will involve the expenditure of a very small amount, and we will be able to take it out of another vote.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Postmaster General stated there was a fixed rule by which compensation to postmasters was arranged. Will the hon. gentleman please state what the rule is?

Mr. HAGGART. I brought down a return to the House a few days ago in answer to a similar question, and it will be found in possession of the clerk. The whole matter is carried out on a principle, and the amounts of salaries are fixed and revised every year.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are the enumeration weeks for the different officers uniform throughout the Dominion ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes; they are all taken at the same time.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see the allowance for the Northern Pacific Railway is $2,500. How many miles of this railway are covered by this allowance ?

Mr. HAGGART. I have not got the number of miles here, but the line runs parallel with portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it was by special arrangement with the agent of the Northern Pacific that the mails were carried at a very low rate.

Mr. CHARLTON. Do they run a mail car, or are the mails carried in the baggage car ?

Mr. HAGGART. I should think they cannot run a mail car for the small amount of money allowed them.

Mr. TROW. I wish to ask the Postmaster General upon what plea the increase of $30 per mile was given to the Canadian Pacific Railway ? Was it on account of the increased population along the line ? I notice by the census that in Muskoka, Nipissing, Parry Sound, and a few other places, there is some increase of population, and was it upon that plea, and upon that only, that the increased mail subsidy was given ?

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the hon. gentleman was not in the House when I went over the whole of that subject. The increased allowance was made at the request of the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who set forth a number of reasons why he was entitled to it.

Mr. TROW. Was the increased population one reason ?

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Post Office—Salaries and allowances...$1,144,950

Mr. HYMAN. There is one class of servants who are paid out of this item that I desire to bring to the kindly attention of the Postmaster General, and that is the letter carriers. I see that the letter carriers when they first enter the service are paid the munificent sum of $360 per year. I think that this is rather a small remuneration, and it is certainly not in proportion to the work they are called upon to do. There are peculiar requirements necessary for the men in that service. They have of course to be faithful, they have of course to have a fair education, and have at all times to travel in inclement weather of all kinds and be on duty for very long hours. I think that to such a man as could fairly be said to fill that position the sum of $360 a year is rather a small amount on which to begin. I may be misinformed, but I understand that in the time of the Mackenzie Government the letter carriers started at a salary of $400 a year, and if that be the case, it does seem that it is a small enough amount to ask such men to work for. There is one circumstance which happened in the city which I have the honour to represent, and which I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister. That is, in regard to the delivery of mails upon holidays. I understand that it is the custom of the department that on ordinary holidays the letter carriers are only called upon to deliver one mail in the morning. However that may be, I know that in the City of London, on the civic holiday, which is observed probably more than any other holiday in the year, the letter carriers were called upon, owing to some order having been sent from the Department of the Postmaster General, to deliver two mails that day, one in the morning and one in the afternoon, the same as they do on ordinary days. It seems to me there must have been some red-tapeism that such was the case, because when all the business houses in the city were closed up these men were certainly just as much entitled to a holiday as any one else.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is perfectly correct as to the salary at which the letter carriers commence. It compares favourably with the salaries paid to carriers in any other portion of the world. In the United States the salary of the letter carriers is nominally a little higher, but you must remember that in Canada they are sometimes entitled to a superannuation allowance; they get their uniform free, and there is no reduction for any time they are absent on holidays. It is a strict rule in the United States that any day they are absent there is a reduction in their pay. In this country they have the right of rising in the service up to $600 per year, and we have not any difficulty in filling the situations when any of them are vacant. The hon. gentleman is right in saying that the commencing salary was $400 some time ago, but that was only in force for a short time. As to the other matter, persons want their letters on holidays, and it has always been the custom of the department that letter carriers should make one delivery at least on a holiday.

Mr. HYMAN. That just bears out the complaint I was making in regard to the letter carriers in the City of London. I am informed that the last civic holiday they were called upon to make two deliveries, and I always understood it to be the rule, as the Postmaster General stated, that there was only one delivery made on a holiday. I would like the Postmaster General to look into the matter and see how it is that they were called upon to make two deliveries on a holiday generally observed in the city.

Mr. HAGGART. I think the department only recognizes statutory holidays, and not civic holidays.

Mr. TROW. I think it is perfectly right that the general public should be accommodated in receiving their letters, and that they should not be deprived of this convenience for the sake of one or two individuals in the post office. People require their mail matter on these days just as well as any other day, and I think it is perfectly right that these parties should be employed a part of the day at all events. In my opinion the system of economy on the part of the Postmaster General is rather rigidly enforced with regard to country postmasters. I know of many instances in my riding where the postmaster, in receipt of $10 or $12 per annum, has got to be in his post office daily, and for a good part of the day in many instances. Is it the invariable rule of the Postmaster General that the postmasters receive forty per cent. on the income, and is that rule universally in force?

Mr. HAGGART. It is universally enforced, except in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, where the postmasters who have been in the service before Confederation receive the same salaries as they did then. The new incumbent of an office, however, has to come under the general regulations. In no case that I know of throughout the Dominion is any other system adopted.

Mr. BORDEN. I wish to ask some information from the Postmaster General in reference to the post office of Kentville. I put a question on the Order Paper early in the session with regard to that office, asking if the Postmaster had been suspended there, and I was informed that he had been suspended in January last for being short in his accounts. There has been no postmaster in that office since January, and the inspector at Halifax has been sending a man from the Halifax office to discharge the duties. There have been several changes made there within the past few months; the people are complaining very much of the unsatisfactory condition of things, and representations have been made to me that it is desirable that a permanent postmaster should be appointed. Even on the score of expense, that is quite a heavy loss to the department, because the officer who has been doing the work there was receiving $1,000 at Halifax, and I presume that he is getting the same salary at Kentville, and a clerk is receiving $260 a year, which makes $1,260, while the postmaster's salary is $840, showing a loss of some $400 a year to the country. I do not know why the hon. gentleman does not make an appointment. If he cannot find anybody there in the Conservative ranks, and if he will consult me, I think I can find a man in King's County who will be competent to fill the position, and I should be delighted to give him the benefit of my assistance.

Mr. HAGGART. I answered the hon. gentleman's question the other day. I stated that on account of some deficiency in the accounts of the postmaster at Kentville, an officer from the inspector's office at Halifax had taken charge of the post office at Kentville. I do not think the hon. gentleman can complain that the service is not as efficient as formerly, because I think an officer of that kind would see about it being conducted in the best manner. The fact is that I have not yet received a nomination for the position of posmaster at Kentville, but I hope to make the appointment shortly, and I hope to obtain a postmaster who will satisfy the hon. gentleman and all the people of the locality.

Mr. BORDEN. I thought the trouble generally was that there were too many applicants. One other thing I wish to say. It is currently reported that the post office inspector has said that the shortage in the suspended postmaster's accounts is being made up out of his salary—that the salary is really being paid, and that the money is going to his sureties.

Mr. HAGGART. Since the suspension?

Mr. BORDEN. Yes.

Mr HAGGART. Oh, no.

Mr. BORDEN. I asked the Deputy Postmaster General, and he stated that this was not true, and I mention it in this public way so that it may be contradicted.

Mr. HAGGART. If the inspector or any other officer allows anything of this kind, I will take it out of his salary.

Mr. FLINT. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General what the rule is with regard to free delivery—what size a city or town must be to entitle it to have a free delivery. I should think that towns like Yarmouth and Truro ought to be entitled to a free mail delivery as well as some larger towns.

Mr. HAGGART. There must be a post office, the postmaster must be on the Civil Service List, and there must be as nearly as possible a population of 10,000.

Mr. PERRY. The Postmaster General is not so active in appointing a postmaster at Kentville as he has been at Summerside, P.E.I. The postmaster at Kentville was suspended in January, and his successor has not been appointed yet; but the postmaster at Summerside, Mr. Green, was dismissed on the 5th of this month, and his successor was appointed on the same day. In answer to a certain question I asked, the hon. Postmaster General undertook to give reasons why Mr. Green was dismissed, but the reasons were frivolous; there was no reason at all. Mr. Green, it appears, wrote to the hon. Postmaster General, making a statement, and writes to me to say that the Postmaster General has not even answered his letter. I do not know what sort of a court his subordinates on the island have held over the conduct of Mr. Green; but Mr. Green has not been tried. He got no notice that he would be dismissed; but Mr. Campbell walked into the post office at about ten o'clock on the morning of the 5th of this month, and he said to Mr. Green: "You have no more right here; your services are no longer required in this office; I have authority to take charge of the office;" and on that very same day his successor was appointed by the Postmaster General. If that be British fair-play, I do not understand it. Why was not Mr. Green given a chance of having a trial? Is it because Mr. Hunt, or Mr. Somebody else, stated to the Posmaster General that Mr. Green should be dismissed without any reason? I would like to ask the Postmaster General how he would like to have an accusation made against him, and be turned out of his department to-morrow without a trial? Would he say it was fair-play? No; he would resent it, he would kick at that, and he would be right. The same justice which the Postmaster General would expect to be meted out to him he ought to mete out to his subordinates in Prince Edward Island. If Mr. Green was guilty of any misconduct, and if after a fair trial he was proved guilty, then it would be right to dismiss him; but he is justified in claiming a proper investigation. It looks very suspicious that the man who is now the incumbent of that office was here in Ottawa shortly before Mr. Green was dismissed. Mr. Green has served the country in Summerside for 23 years, and no fault could be found with him during all that time. The only reason that could be found was that a letter had fallen out of one drawer into another drawer underneath. It was not a letter of any particular importance; it was not registered; there was no money in it; and in a few days it was found and handed over to the proper party. I am here to say that greater irregularities than that may exist in higher places, and no notice is taken of them; but it seems that Mr. Green should be satisfied with being remunerated for his past services. Mr. Hunt is a pet of the present Administration. He had done some service, he had worked hard, he had been in harness until he had almost broke the harness, he had canvassed the whole county and told a good many things that were not altogether the whole truth, any more than what was told by the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General had said that Mr. Hunt had never applied for the post office. Will he say that when he went to Ottawa Mr. Hunt did not go to the department and whisper into somebody's ear that he wanted the office? They gave him the office because he asked for it, and the Postmaster General must now explain why this request was granted. The department has not been fair to Mr. Green or to the Summmerside people. Mr. Green has served his country for almost a quarter of a century; no fault can be found against his administration. All of a sudden, just because a small irregularity occurred through a letter having been dropped by mistake into one drawer instead of another, he was dismissed. There have been greater irregularities in the Charlottetown post office, and in many of the departments here at Ottawa, but these gentlemen still hold their portfolios. I do not mean to say that they should be dismissed without an investigation, as Mr. Green was. In his letter, Mr. Green says that before the new post office was built at Summerside he spent $500 from the time he commenced until the new post office was built in making the office fit to receive Her Majesty's mails. What remuneration has he got? What remuneration is he going to get for that? How much superannuation is he going to get? My hon. friend told me that he was not entitled to superannuation. No: he kicked him out on the road because he was so unfortunate as to have voted for one of the Liberal candidates at the last election. Is that British fair-play and justice? Just because he would not gratify Mr. Hunt by giving him a vote he was taken by the back of the neck and thrown out, without even a month's notice. The Postmaster General says he was dismissed on the 5th and that his successor was appointed on the morning of the 5th, and the first notice Mr. Green had of his dismissal was the announcement by Mr. Campbell that he was no longer postmaster at Summerside and that Mr. Hunt was to take charge of the office, which Mr. Green had managed for twenty-three years. Would the Postmaster General himself like to be served in that way? I am sure I would not, and I would not like to see him or anybody else handled in that way. Mr. Green had a right to a proper investigation, and the Postmaster General should have ordered a court to be held at Summerside, by the inspector, and witnesses heard, so that Mr. Green might have been given a chance to clear himself, but he did not do that. Mr. Green writes a very doleful letter, which I am sorry to say the Postmaster General did not think it worth while to answer. I know that Mr. Green wrote nothing but what was true and correct, and I am sure he did not insult the Postmaster General, because insult is not in him, and he was only waiting to be asked by the Postmaster General to come to Ottawa and be given a chance in the department to vindicate his character. There is not an honest man in Summerside whom you could call upon to give a certificate of character who would not give one attesting to the integrity and honesty and every other good quality of Mr. Green required in a postmaster. I hope the present incumbent will be able to get such a recommendation. Who recommended Mr. Hunt to be postmaster at Summerside? Did he constitute himself the disposer of all the patronage of the county—he, a defeated candidate—not only the Post Office Department, but of the Public Works and the Marine and Fishery Departments and every other department. Would my hon. friend the Posmaster General stand up here and tell me at whose recommendation he appointed Mr. Hunt? Where is the petition? What names are signed to it? Who wrote to the Postmaster General recommending Mr. Hunt? I would like to know how many names there are on the petition, if there is any. Is Mr. Holman's name on the petition? Is Mr. David Rogers' name on it? I will be told, as I was the other night respecting the dismissal of the two men on the railway, that someone whispered to the late Minister of Railways that the two men had to be dismissed, and he gave instructions to dismiss them. Who is the little bird who whispers in the ear of the Postmaster General, and asked him to perpetrate what I consider an injustice of the worst kind. If Mr. Green be not reinstated in the department he is entitled to consideration. He is now thrown on the world penniless, after having served his country for a quarter of a century. He is a man now about seventy-five or eighty years of age, and I ask how is he going to earn his living? Does the Postmaster General expect that he could take an axe and go to the woods and cut down the forest and plough the land and plant potatoes? When the Postmaster General is twenty-five years in the department he will not be fit to go to the woods and till the land; and I for one, if he serves his country for that length of time, would have no objection to his getting fair remuneration. Let the grand old motto apply to every one alike, and as the Postmaster General would wish to be served himself let him serve others.

Mr. McGREGOR. I would ask the Postmaster General if there is not some way of giving us letter carriers in the town of Windsor, which is a fine growing town, with a population of 11,000? The facilities there for the delivery of the mail are very poor indeed.

Mr. HAGGART. Windsor has hardly a population that would entitle it to letter carriers. There are far larger places that have no letter carriers, and there has not been any application made from Windsor, as far as I am aware. Mr. Green was dismissed from the post office on a complaint made by the Merchants' Bank of Halifax, not only for one irregularity, but for several of the grossest irregularities. The enquiry was made by the inspector, Mr. Brecken, and on his report it was shown that Mr. Green had been guilty of the grossest irregularities, and he was therefore dismissed. As to the statement that Mr. Hunt was an applicant for the office and was in Ottawa at the time and no doubt visited me, I can only say that he never visited me, and that I never knew that he was an applicant for the office, As to the statement that I did not answer Green's letter, I can state that I took it to the deputy at the time I received it, and asked him to pay particular attention to it and to see that a letter was sent to him.

Mr. McMILLAN. Has the Postmaster General made any change in regard to the mail route, in regard to Bayfield, from Clinton to Seaforth and Priceville?

Mr. HAGGART. I think so. I think it was ordered to be the same as before the last change.

Post Office—Miscellaneous..... $206,000

Mr. HAGGART. There is an item in reference to St. John there, the payment of an officer in the New Brunswick division—a first-class clerk—for whom I am asking $1,400, which is as much as the assistant inspector receives, and I propose to reduce that by $50.

Geological Survey..... $60,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You might explain what you propose to do this year.

Mr. DEWDNEY. This year the geological surveyors are mostly in the same districts as they were last year. The director has lately made a visit to the Crow's Nest Pass, in order to examine the petroleum and coal districts there, and, I believe, to-morrow he leaves for the Sudbury district.

Mr. CHARLTON. What report does he make about the petroleum deposits at Crow's Nest?

Mr. DEWDNEY. He makes the most favourable report. He brought some specimens of the petroleum. One was a dark crude oil, and one was a lighter oil, which looked as if it had been distilled.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are these oils obtained by exudation or by digging?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are all on the surface. They seem to come into the lake from the hill side. There have been no borings yet. The director was greatly impressed, not only with the oil indications, but with the deposits of coal, which were most extensive.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it anthracite coal?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; but is very good bituminous coal. Professor Macoun is at Banff; Dr. Bell is in the Algoma and Sudbury region; Professor Laflamme, who, I believe, gives his services gratuitously, is in Quebec; Professor Adams is in the counties of Montcalm and Berthier; Mr. Tyrrell has gone to Lake Winnipeg, where he previously discovered those extensive amber deposits, and also large deposits of phosphates; Professor Bailey is occupied in Yarmouth, Shelburne and Queen's counties, Nova Scotia; Mr. Fletcher is in Hants and Colchester; Dr. Ells is in Terrebonne, Two Mountains and Beauharnois; Mr. McInnes and Mr. Smith are in the Rainy Lake district; Mr. Low is in the counties of Champlain, Portneuf and Montmorency.

Mr. CHARLTON. That is where he was last year?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes. Mr. Chalmers is engaged in the counties of Kent, Albert and Westmoreland, N.B., where he was last year. Mr. Ingall is in the Kingston and Pembroke Railway phosphate district, and is engaged in a general investigation in regard to that. He has charge of that portion of the work. Mr. Giroux has gone to the counties of L'Assomption, Joliette, Berthier and Montcalm; Mr. Faribault is engaged in the county of Halifax; Mr. J. McEvoy, who is Dr. Dawson's assistant, is in British Columbia, and is completing a portion of the work which Dr. Dawson had to leave unfinished when he left as commissioner on seal fishing. Mr. Ami is in the Rocky Mountains. That is the whole of the staff.

Mr. CHARLTON. Has any examination been made of the petroleum district in the Athabaska valley?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. McConnell was there last year and the year before. His reports as to the indications are most encouraging, and show the existence of petroleum in a very large district, 200 or 300 miles in extent. He speaks of large deposits of oil-tar sand banks, of from 20 to 200 feet in thickness. We pressed a portion of it into a box this last winter and exposed it to the coldest weather we had, 50 degrees below zero, and it stood perfectly hard and solid. But there has been no boring there yet. Consequently we cannot tell what is the extent of the basin.

Mr. CHARLTON. No doubt there is a very rich petroleum region in that valley. What length of railway would be required to reach it from any present line?

Mr. DEWDNEY. From the present terminus it is estimated that a railway of 80 miles would reach the basin. It is estimated that the oil could be found at from 1,200 to 1,500 feet. By going further they may possibly reach oil at a depth of 600 or 700 feet, but it is utterly impossible to tell much about it without boring.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What are the receipts from the Geological Survey? I suppose they must have disposed of the large stock of reports they had on hand.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The number of reports we have of different years varies a great deal. Of some years we have really none for distribution and in others we have a large number. I have not a memorandum by me showing the receipts for this last year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A gentleman wrote to me asking me to procure a report for him, and on applying at the department I received the answer that it could be had for a small sum at the book store. I went to the book store and was unable to obtain it. I thought if there was such a large stock on hand, as was represented, that probably it might be distributed to parties who actually wanted it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Do you mean at the different points where they are sold?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I mean here in Ottawa.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It can be obtained of course at the museum here. If application had been sent to me by any member I think I could have procured a copy for him. Where we have a surplus printed on hand there is no difficulty. But the issue of this report is regulated by Order in Council, and the director is bound by that. If the hon. gentleman could tell me any numbers that he wants I can get them.

Mr. CHARLTON. Where is the report printed now?

Mr. DEWDNEY. At the Printing Bureau. This is the first year.

Mr. CHARLTON. Can the Minister give us any detailed information with regard to the discoveries made by the director at Crow's Nest Pass with regard to the thickness of the coal seam?

Mr. DEWDNEY. One seam is 30 feet thick; the coal is exposed at a number of points. The main exposure is on Elk River, on the western slope of the mountains. There is a valley some miles on this side higher up on the mountains, where some coal is exposed, no doubt the same line of coal, showing that the whole of that country is of the same description of coal—some ten miles apart. It has been tested, and Dr. Selwyn himself brought down a very large specimen, which is at the museum. It is bituminous coal of good quality.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About what does it grade?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The assay has not been made since the doctor came back.

Department of Indian Affairs, Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, relief of distress $4,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In what way do you spend this money? Does any portion of of this go into salaries?

Mr. DEWDNEY. $4,200 were voted and $5,701 has been spent, and there was a sum of $1,501 voted in the Supplementary Estimates this year. Relief was furnished to the Lower St. Lawrence Indians to the amount of $1,150; Cacouna, $100; Rimouski, $100; Abenakis and St. Francis, $150, and so it goes on, taking in all the reserves of those Indians who have no money of their own.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe, last year, that the whole grant went to the relief of Indians in the Province of Quebec. I am aware they are more destitute than in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There are very few in the Province of Quebec who have money of their own. The provisions are purchased and distributed as they are applied for, and so much is given to each of the agencies for that purpose. It is impossible to call for tenders for these supplies, because, until they are wanted, it is never known what is wanted, or what class of goods are wanted. The supply consists of flour, tea, tobacco, sometimes a little clothing, and a few boots.

For Indian schools in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. $25.032.50

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is distributed principally amongst the school teachers in Ontario and Quebec for those bands who have no money of their own. But many of the Indians are paying for their own teachers. This year there is a decrease in this way of $3,000. We have effected a saving by causing some of the Indians, who are able to do so, to bear the cost of the education of their children.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In most cases these schools appear to be conducted by clerical bodies.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; most of them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that done discretionary fashion, at the pleasure of the department, or are the Indians consulted in any way?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are consulted in accordance with the Indian Act. The majority of a body belonging to a certain denomination have the school of that body.

For payment of annuities under Robinson Treaties $16,806

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How did the department come to pay $18,000 in 1890, when the vote was only $16,800?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The amount paid under the Robinson Treaty varies considerably.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the number of Indians known?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Sometimes they do not come in from their hunting grounds.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the terms of the Robinson Treaty? Does it bind you to pay so much to each Indian?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; $4 a head. They were not paid so much for a long time, but when their lands were sold it was increased to $4.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are there as many as 4,000 Indians in that range?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; the number varies from time to time. In 1889 there were 5,200, owing to natural increase and the stragglers who were out hunting.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is the natural increase considerable?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; the natural increase is fairly large. A good many of the Indians lived in the interior and did not come to the front, but they are coming out by degrees.

Removal of the residue of the Lake of Two Mountains Indians from Oka to Township of Gibson (revote).. $4,865.83

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like that the hon. gentleman would give the House some statement of the position in which these matters respecting the Oka Indians now are. Apparently, the purpose for which the vote was given last year has not been carried out, for I see that almost the whole of this sum is a revote. I should like to know from him how the Indians on the reserve are satisfied with their condition, and also, what is the exact condition of the remnant of the band who remain at Oka and have not yet removed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I fancy the position is similar to what it has been for the last two or three years, and this vote has varied very little ever since I have been here. Last year I stated that negotiations were in progress, and I thought that a considerable number of those who might wish to go to Muskoka would leave. Negotiations were entered into and extended for some little time; but when we thought we had got them in the humour to move something interfered. It takes very little to upset the mind of an Indian, and at any rate our expectations were not realized. I think, with the exception of one or two, none have left to go on the new reserve at Algoma. They ar exactly in the same position as they were when Chief Angus Cook and his party left. The remainder insisted on stopping, and until they make up their minds that they can better themselves or will accept of the offer which was made by the Government I think they will remain there. The Seminary is, of course, very anxious to get rid of them, but you cannot force them to leave; you cannot take them bodily and transfer them to the reserve, and we do not wish to do it. We wish them to be able to realize that their friends who have gone to Algoma are doing well, as they certainly are doing well, and we are then in hopes they will change their minds and move to the reserve.

Mr. CHARLTON. Why are the Government desirous of having the Indians removed, if they are adverse to doing it themselves?

Mr. DEWDNEY. We think they would be better off and more independent, and they would be relieved of this continual trouble and difficulty that they are in while residing at Oka. The hon. gentleman is familiar, probably more so than I am, with the difficulties——

Mr. CHARLTON. I confess I am not.

Mr. DEWDNEY,—with the difficulties they have had with the Seminary, and which has extended over a period of ten or twelve years. The arrangements which we are completing were first made during the time of the Mackenzie Government, and the offer was made to these men, and some of them took advantage of it and left for the reserve. I am not aware whether any lawsuit took place, but I think there has been a ruling of the courts that the property belongs to the Seminary, although the Indians and their friends contend that such is not the case. I think, in the interest of everybody, it would be very much better that the Indians should remove and go to the new reserve.

Mr. CHARLTON. Will they receive any compensation?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They have been offered to have houses built, and any improvement which they abandoned paid for at so much per acre. I forget what other concessions are given them, but at any rate they would be placed in a very comfortable position on the new reserve. The Ontario Government granted us a township or two for that purpose, and those that have gone there are doing very well.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many of this tribe are yet to be removed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think there are 100 or 120 remaining.

Indians, Nova Scotia..... $5,520

Mr. FRASER. Some time ago I asked for a return, to which I now wish to call the attention of the Minister, in regard to the method pursued by certain Indian agents in the Province of Nova Scotia. Whether the practice is general or not I know not, but I have heard the statement made that much more money remains in the hands of the agents than ought to remain, and that the Indians, though they are the wards of the Government, do not receive anything like the amount they ought to receive. A glaring case is one which I am going to bring to the notice of the Minister. I find that there were purchases of provisions, clothing, lumber, cattle, &c., for the supply of the Indians of Antigonish and Guysborough, in 1887 and 1888. Among these was one yoke of oxen charged at $73 and one yoke charged at $70. On making enquiry I find that the oxen did not cost that much. I have a certificate signed by Donald Chisholm, who sold the oxen, stating that he had sold a yoke of oxen to the Indian Agent, W. C. Chisholm, for $60, and that he found that the agent had charged the Government $70 and $73. Of course, this is a small sum, and the man who sold the oxen does not know whether his oxen have been charged to the Government at $70 or at $73; but this is a matter which the Government should enquire into. I give the name of the agent, and the name of the man who sold the oxen. I take for granted that this is a general principle acted upon by the agents in dealing with the Indians, though not, of course, with the authority of the Minister. I suppose these men feel that the Indians are never going to enquire or say a word about the matter. I notice that the agent sold one yoke of oxen again for $66. I do not blame him for that, if he could not get any more. There were got also a plough, and ox-cart, harrows and picks. I understand that the plough is lying by the fence side summer and winter, and is never used. I would like to know what system is pursued—whether there is any check upon the agents, or whether the Government simply accept any bill they put in.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am very glad the hon. member has brought the matter to my notice. It is the first intimation he has given me that the price for which the oxen were sold was not the price received, and I fancy there must be some misunderstanding with regard to that.

Mr. FRASER. I can scarcely understand why the yoke sold for $66 did not bring more, because they were sent to Newfoundland, and cattle sent to Newfoundland from Antigonish bring a very good price.

Mr. DEWDNEY. With regard to the purchase, I shall make enquiry. That is a serious accusation, and if it could be proved the agent would not remain in the service an hour. A letter was written by Mr. Chisholm to the department to this effect on 28th October:

"About four months ago Charles Pullet, an Indian of this reserve, who had charge of a pair of oxen given him by the Department of Indian Affairs, wished me to sell them for him and get him a younger and more active pair of cattle. Considering his request a reasonable one, I disposed of the cattle to very good advantage. I then told him to be on the look-out for a younger and more suitable pair. Shortly afterwards he informed me that he did not intend keeping any cattle during the coming winter, and despite all my advice and persuasions to the contrary he remains obstinate in this determination. The proceeds of the cattle, $66, I have placed in the Halifax Banking Company, Antigonish. Now, Sir, I would like to know what I shall do with this money?"

He received a letter from the department to this effect:

"I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th ultimo, reporting that by the request of Charles Pullet, an Indian of your agency, you sold the pair of oxen entrusted to his care by the department, and requesting to be advised as to what you should do with the proceeds of the sale, $66, which you state you deposited with the Halifax Banking Company. In reply I have to inform you that your action in selling the cattle without express permission from the department was most improper and irregular; and you should at once place the amount to the credit of the Receiver General on account of Indian funds, and forward bank certificates of deposit of draft for the same to the department."

Then, the agent writes:

"I beg leave to acknowledge yours of the 8th instant, No. 30682, and as requested, I enclose a cheque in favour of the Receiver General for amount of $66. I regret very much I acted irregularly in the sale of the oxen. I was urgently requested by the Indian Pullet to sell the cattle and get a younger pair which would suit him better, and I considered that the time I sold them was the most favourable time. No doubt the Indian will require another pair of cattle next spring, but he wants exclusive rights to them, and besides, he is, as well as most of the Indians are, so fickle it is almost impossible to satisfy him."

The pair he sold, I do not know whether it is the pair of oxen for which he paid $73 or $70, but I do not think there is anything wrong in regard to the sale. Probably $66 was all he was able to get. At any rate, the money is deposited with the Receiver General, and he was told that the transaction was irregular. I would ask the hon. gentleman to send me the delaration he has in regard to the matter and I will enquire into it.

Mr. FRASER. I will give a copy; of course I wish to keep the original.

Nova Scotia, Indian Fund..... $5,520

Mr. CAMPBELL. In looking over the Auditor General's Report, I find that in Digby County we have $50 for the agent's salary; relief grants, $100; seed grain, $107; and then for medical attendance, $625; and burial expenses, $27; so that while we are granting to the Indians $107 we are paying the doctors $625.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I noticed that myself when I came to look at the Auditor General's Report some years ago, especially with reference to the Maritime Provinces. But there is very little else done for the Indians in the Maritime Provinces. Instructions are given that no doctor can be paid for his services to an Indian unless he receives an order from the agent. The doctors are paid 50 cents a mile one way for road travel, and actual railway fares, and cost of medicines and extra charges in the case of operations. We are continually receiving, besides these accounts authorized by the agents, other accounts from doctors who have attended the Indians. As soon as an Indian gets ill he will go to the nearest doctor and the doctors cannot send them away, so that there are many accounts which are not paid because they are not certified by the agents. These accounts which we pay every year in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are not excessive, and they are only paid on the certificates of agents who have a knowledge of the circumstances.

Mr. FRASER. While that may be the case in the district to which I refer, the charge for medical attendance last year was more than twice as much as the previous year. Of course, there was a change of doctor.

Mr. WATSON. How many Indians are there under treatment for this amount?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot tell without going through the accounts.

Mr. WATSON. Are the Indians diminishing very rapidly?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I fancy they are.

Mr. WATSON. They must be, if they get so much doctoring.

Mr. DEWDNEY.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It would be better if there was a physician appointed to attend each band. In this district there are no less than six doctors paid for treating the Indians.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Indians there are very scattered.

Mr. BORDEN. Was the attendance in Digby County, N.S., for one year? Here are two accounts from the Doctors Ellison, father and son, amounting to nearly $500, or $1.50 per day for the year. That seems most outrageous, and I speak with some knowledge.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Digby County is the largest reserve we have in Nova Scotia.

Mr. BORDEN. How many Indians are there?

Mr. DEWDNEY. About 200 or 300, and I think they had the epidemic la grippe among them.

New Brunswick, salaries—Indians..... $2,005

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe a curious item here under the head of New Brunswick, salaries of agents, $950; constable, $20; medical officer, $320; missionaries, $1,015. I have no objection to good people doing their best for the spiritual welfare of the Indians, but if we are going to undertake to look after their spiritual welfare as well as their bodies, I should like to know some of the details. I am not aware that in any other case we have undertaken to provide missionaries, and it squints towards the establishment of a state church. It seems to me the missionaries are much more needed nearer home.

Mr. DEWDNEY. One year there were special appropriations made to several of the priests who had been giving a great deal of their time for years to Indian work, and that was given to them as a bonus. I have not the names here, unless it has been mixed with Nova Scotia, and in that case the names are the Rev. Mr. Cameron, the Rev. Mr. Richard, the Rev. Mr. Smith and the Rev. Mr. Morrow. They received bonuses varying from $100 to $200 apiece for services of that nature, and they were given once and for all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that should have been made a special vote; the special attention of Parliament should have been called to it, and the reasons should have been stated before you undertook to pay it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think the reasons were stated last year, before the vote was asked for.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think so. We can easily see by a reference to the Hansard. I have never, to my knowledge, seen such an item before.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I find the details are in the Indian report, page 26, part 2. This appears to have been a regular payment for some years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was not a grant once and for all?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Not in regard to all of them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who are these gentlemen? There appear to be eight or nine of them. What denomination do they belong to?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are all clergymen.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of what denomination?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are all Roman Catholics, I think. The Indians there are all Roman Catholics.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that this is a new departure that the House is not acquainted with, and this should have been taken as a special vote and discussed. Here you find that, out of a total vote of about $6,000, $1,000 have been appropriated to the payment of salaries of a number of clergymen. That certainly, as far as I know, was not contemplated by the House at any time, and I think the House should have had its attention specially called to it, and ought to have discussed the matter. The hon. gentleman is aware that clergymen in various parts of the Dominion have devoted a great deal of time and attention to the spiritual welfare of the Indians, but it was not contemplated by us to salary all these gentlemen, and if it is to be done in New Brunswick I do not see where you are to stop and draw the line. The amount is not large, and it is most probable that these reverend gentlemen have taken a great deal of care and pains in regard to these Indians, but the question is of considerable importance, and I should like to know how long this has been done and what relation these gentleman bear to the Indians in New Brunswick. Out of this whole item for salaries, as far as I can see, considerably more than half is likely to go for clerical services.

Mr. FLINT. I think it would be an improvement to give this money to the Indians in the shape of physical food for their bodies, and, on behalf of the Indians of Nova Scotia, I must complain that their spiritual welfare is not paid for by this Administration. I think they are as worthy of having their souls looked after as the Indians of New Brunswick. This brings us to the point mentioned by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), as to whether the principle is a sound one, and I think the department should consider it carefully, because the different provinces and the different denominations will be inclined to come to Parliament to ask for assistance for their missionaries of all classes who have been labouring and are labouring among this class of people. I think that, in addition to the amount expended for agents and for food for the Indians, the amount for medical attendance is very large. I have no doubt that the attention of the disbursing officer will be called to that, and that he will see that the medical men are not making too much out of their position in regard to the Indians. If the bulk of the Indians in any district are mainly of one religious persuasion, it might be desirable that the agent should be a clergyman, and that he should look after their spiritual and their temporal welfare at the same time.

Mr. DEWDNEY. In Nova Scotia most of the Indian agents are Roman Catholic priests. They attend to the Indian work as well as to the spiritual wants of the Indians. New Brunswick appears to be divided into only two agencies, and the rest of the work has been come by these reverend fathers who have been receiving salaries for years back.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For how long?

Mr. DEWDNEY. For some years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Although the amount involved is not large, the question is one of importance, and, when this is known and attention is called to it, you will have a number of applications made from various denominations who have been concerning themselves in looking after the Indians, and we require to know what the Government propose to do about it. Here you have seven or eight or nine gentlemen, who, you tell me, have been for years in receipt of a regular salary as missionaries, as the spiritual pastors and masters of these Indians. What are you going to do if the other clergy, scattered over the whole of the North-West apply for similar salaries? It seems to me that it is a precedent which may give considerable trouble.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I will look into the matter. It appears to me they must have been doing a good deal of Indian work as well, but this did not strike me before. In Nova Scotia we have a number of recognized agents. In New Brunswick we have only two.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many Indians are there in New Brunswick?

Mr. DEWDNEY. About two thousand.

Mr. BORDEN. All the agents in Nova Scotia are not clergymen?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Not all of them.

Mr. BORDEN. I want to know to whom the hon. gentleman entrusts the souls of the Indians in my part of the country. Perhaps it is to the Indians' doctors?

Mr. TROW. Has there been an epidemic among the Indians of New Brunswick? I see between the preachers and the doctors they have taken one-half of the whole amount in the province. There must be something radically wrong. I see $1,800 goes to ten doctors.

Mr. DEWDNEY. We are very fortunate that the money goes in that direction; we pay very little for anything else. Hon. gentlemen know that wherever there are Indians there are diseases. They worry the life out of the doctors. They go to the agents and beg for orders to visit the doctors, and they go to the doctors without orders. I have in my department several applications from doctors asking to be paid heavy bills because the Indians came to them to be treated, and they could not send them away.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have had no answer as to the question of policy.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I shall enquire into it and see if any change can be made and to what extent these gentlemen have given their services to purely Indian work outside of religious work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me, as I said before, that if you are going to undertake to pay clergymen as clergymen, the House must be distinctly consulted about it. I do not at all like this mode of smuggling in votes to missionaries, no matter how zealous, and faithful, and useful men they may be. I do not want to have the votes for missionaries smuggled into our estimates, without a distinct understanding of the why and the wherefore, and all about it. If I had noticed before how this money had been used I would certainly have called attention to it, and I call the attention of the House and of the Government to it now, because I know right well that the moment it appears, as it will from to-night's discussion, what has been going on, there will be a very considerable amount of comment and a very considerable number of demands, in all human probability, made upon the Government. The moment you recognize spiritual services in one province and refuse to recognize them in another, you must see that from the explanations given to-night, and from the mode of entry here, the hon. gentleman is preparing, for himself and for us, a pretty difficult question to solve, if this item remains in the Estimates. Now, of this $2,000, what are you going to apply to the payment of clergymen in the present year?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The amount would be similar to that of last year, I think, with the exception of one, the Rev. Mr. Bannon.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How is this $2,000 going to be distributed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I will get the details of that to-morrow.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then, I would suggest that the item be allowed to stand.

Mr. DEWDNEY. All right.

New Brunswick—Medical attendance to Indians..... $1,195

Mr. CAMPBELL. Of that amount, $6,518 that has been asked for. I find that $3,712 goes for medicines and salaries to agents, and only $2,806 really goes to the Indians.

Mr. DEWDNEY. We have physicians who receive salaries, three at $100, one at $50, and one at $20 per annum. The balance of the medical attendance is paid for in the same way as in Nova Scotia.

Prince Edward Island Indians—Salaries..$500

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many Indians are there in Prince Edward Island?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Between 200 and 300.

Mr. FLINT. In connection with this item for seed grain, I would like to ask if the Minister has any report as to the progress the Indians are making in adopting civilized habits in the matter of becoming farmers, making suitable houses, &c.?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I fancy in the Maritime Provinces they are not making very much progress. In New Brunswick a majority of the men work a great deal amongst the lumbermen. I fancy the farming is done mostly by the old men and the women.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I see an item of 2 barrels of flour for Indians, at $6.50.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That question came up, and I found the same price in the Auditor General's Report last year. It appeared a large price, but on enquiry it turned out to be the ordinary price of flour in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you furnish the very best patent flour to the Indians?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not know much about our eastern Indians, but our western Indians are very particular. We supply strong bakers' flour.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This flour was about $3 per barrel above the market price.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. McDOUGALL. No; that is very nearly the price at which it was quoted at that time. It was, no doubt, bought in the spring of the year.

Manitoba and North-West Territories, Annuities and commutations.....$130,080

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the Minister explain exactly what is meant by commutations, and on what principle they are made?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Under the Indian Act, if an Indian woman marries a white man she can commute her annuity for 10 years, for which she gets $50 and a certain quantity of clothes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Married in what way?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Legally married. This commutation is only made in the case of Indian women.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not see the advisability of offering a premium of $50 to an Indian woman to get married to a white man. I have strong suspicions that such marriages are often made one day and dissolved the next. We who have visited Manitoba know something of the notions that prevail in regard to marriage by Indian women.

Mr. DEWDNEY. When I said white men I include half-breeds; 90 per cent. of those women are married to half-breeds.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About what is the total number of Indians this vote covers?

Mr. DEWDNEY. 23,710 Indians, including 19 chiefs.

Mr. WATSON. Are the Indians increasing or diminishing?

Mr. DEWDNEY. In some parts they are decreasing, in others they are increasing. They are decreasing as a whole.

Mr. WATSON. Independent of those who are being paid under the treaties?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. These 23,000 odd Indians represent 6 or 7 treaties.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes, in Manitoba and the North-West. There are a few non-treaty Indians still hunting and making their own living, but they are far north. I heard of a band recently that had gone out very well equipped and outfitted, and they were very independent; they were even better off than our own Indians.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the number of Indians a year or two ago?

Mr. DEWDNEY. For the last half-dozen years there has been a continual decrease. Only within the last two years have we been able to know almost every man, woman and child. For several years we were grossly imposed on by the Indians; it was utterly impossible to keep a check on them. I took charge of a band myself four or five years ago, one of the smaller bands, and I tried to check them. After I had paid off the number I felt convinced was the number of the band, 150 of them turned up at Fort Macleod and insisted on being paid. I refused to pay them. Some few were left over unpaid, and I had every man, woman and child brought out in front. Every man was then called upon to pick out his wife and children. Before that, a man simply stated the number of his wife and children, and he always counted over the fingers of his hand and generally went over them again. When I had the Indians point out their wives and children, I found that the average was four or five. There was the case of a woman who applied twice for payment. After being paid she went away and painted her face yellow instead of red, and put on a different blanket, and sat down to be paid again.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I always believed we had been imposed on a good deal. Are 20,000 odd Indians located on different reserves?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes, on separate reserves, and we know every man, woman and child among them.

Mr. WATSON. With respect to those who receive payment in scrip in Lake Manitoba district, are they satisfied to be severed from the treaty, or are they anxious to get back?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have not had any request from them. We have had a request from others in the Cumberland country, especially, and also from some near Edmonton belonging to the Bobtail band. They really were Indians, although they contended they had white blood in their veins, and inadvertently we gave them scrip. I then issued instructions that none should receive scrip unless he had a certificate from the agent that he was entitled to it. This Bobtail band slipped out, but they begged to come back and they were allowed under special conditions.

Mr. WATSON. It is rather a serious thing that we should pay $160 worth of scrip to these people, and then take them back. I believe, in the first place, they should never have been given scrip, nor left the reserves at all. I may say that a few years ago when the Indians under Mr. Martineau's superintendence took scrip, I called the attention of the then Minister in charge of the department to the fact that I was informed that Mr. Martineau received a consideration for advising the Indians to take scrip, he giving them to understand that within a short time their treaty money would be stopped, and a great number of them took scrip at that time. I made that statement in the House, and stated that I was informed that people interested in speculating in scrip used Mr. Martineau for that purpose. The late Sir John A. Macdonald promised to make enquiries into the matter, and if he did so there must be a report in the department. These Indians are not in a position to support themselves, are not sufficiently well educated in agriculture to make their own living, and it was a great mistake to advise them to take scrip. It would be much cheaper to provide for them on the reserve than to give them scrip and then receive them back again after speculators got the benefit of the scrip.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Indians that were taken back get their rations, but they do not receive any annuities. With regard to the statement made about Mr. Martineau it is the first I have heard of it.

Mr. WATSON. I made the statement in the House.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Our agents were all instructed to be very careful with regard to what certificates they gave. I would like very much to get to the bottom of it, and find if that was the case.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I find that it costs about $200 per family. What do you average a family at?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Five. Our vote last year was considerably less than the year before. We have also made a very considerable decrease this year, and I expect to be able to keep the expenditure well within the vote.

Mr. WATSON. Is it not a fact that the percentage of children in the Indian families is decreasing?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They have not been increasing since I have been in the North-West. There have been one or two epidemics which carried off a great number. The Bloods had the grippe amongst them and it carried off a great number. The number of Indians in the Pelly Agency, in 1891, was 651, and there were 30 births and 25 deaths; in Birtle, there were 20 births and 43 deaths; in Moose Mountain, 5 births and 14 deaths. On the Onion River, where there is no doctor, there were 35 births and 18 deaths.

Mr. WATSON. You had better have no doctor at all at that rate.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Amongst the Bloods where there are 2,041 Indians there were 59 births and 180 deaths; Blackfeet, 73 births and 56 deaths; Piegans, 36 births and 30 deaths.

Live stock for Indians..... $6,905

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What plan are you adopting for distributing this live stock?

Mr. DEWDNEY. For the last two or three years we have been starting small herds of cattle at different points in the territories. We do not distribute the cattle amongst the Indians, but they cut the hay and take charge of the cattle and raise them for beef. The cattle are mostly amongst the Crees and we expect that next year one band at Battleford will raise all the beef necessary for their own use.

Mr. WATSON. It appears to me that it is a very good idea, and if the Indians take an interest in it, there is no reason why they should not be self-sustaining in a very short time.

Supplies for destitute Indians..... $230,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this large reduction of $100,000 a mere speculative reduction, or is it based on actual facts?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is based on our experience of last year. The buildings and farms of the Indians are now in a first-rate condition; they are working better, putting in their crops better, and improving just as the white settlers do when their lands are in better cultivation. The Assiniboine and Crooked Lake Reserve used their own flour for six months last year. This year I expect even greater results. Besides allowing them to feed themselves with their own flour, we allow them to sell a certain amount to encourage them, if they take it to the mill themselves, and we allow them to spend their money in the purchase of some useful articles. We keep an account of what goods they purchase with money obtained from the produce of their farms. I have a statement here of the money earned by the Indians. This year the Indians on the Crooked Lake Reserve received $1,279 from the sale of hay, wheat and rye, and those on the Piegan Reserve earned in money $1,151.41. I have a statement showing that from 1886 to the present year the Indians have increased their earnings of money from $12,000 to $32,000 from their own work, and from the produce they have raised on their farms.

Triennial clothing.....$4,490

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that you have a pretty large increase on last year's vote.

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is for treaty clothing. It varies each year. For Treaty No. 3 we require $2,970, and for Treaty No. 6, $1,520.

Mr. WATSON. Where is this clothing procured?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is to provide clothing to 30 chiefs and 139 headmen. The clothing is made at the penitentiary, I believe.

Mr. WATSON. Have you any idea of the cost of the suits, and what it might be furnished for by outside competition? Are tenders asked for?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; the penitentiary supplies it. This is the way we have obtained the clothing for some years. It costs something under $20 a suit.

Mr. WATSON. It must be a pretty good suit for an Indian.

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are very good suits. Those for the headmen are made of blue cloth, and those for the chiefs of red cloth. They are made in accordance with the treaty, and the Indians will not accept anything else. This is for the dress suits, which they get every three years.

Day, boarding and industrial schools. $200,000

Mr. FLINT. As this is a rather important item, perhaps the Minister would give us some information as to the number of the schools, the attendance and the work that is being done?

Mr. DEWDNEY. We have in the North-West and Manitoba 88 day schools, 20 boarding and seven industrial schools. The Roman Catholic schools are 19 day, 10 boarding and three industrial schools; the number of pupils on the roll is 923, the average attendance 607, and we pay $55,426.83. The Church of England has 46 day, two boarding and three industrial schools; the number of pupils is 1,414, the average attendance, 681, and the amount we pay $67,832. The Methodist Church has 12 day and one boarding school; the number of pupils is 401; the average attendance, 180, and the amount paid by the Government, $6,010.82. The Presbyterian Church has three day, seven boarding and one industrial; the number of pupils is 275; the average attendance, 180, and the amount paid by the Government, $46,583. There are eight non-denominational day schools, the number of pupils on the roll is 201 and the average attendance 103, and they cost the Government $1,576. Since this return was made up another Methodist industrial school is being built on range 4, Red Deer River, and one in Manitoba.

Mr. WATSON. Where is the industrial school in Manitoba to be located?

Mr. DEWDNEY. We are endeavouring to secure a location near Brandon. There are two locations, one at Carberry and one at Brandon, and the Methodists generally prefer the latter, but it appears we would be unable to get the land there unless at a higher price than we can afford to pay.

Mr. WATSON. I understand there is a very fine location, which could be secured very reasonably, very near Carberry, and I believe there is a half section of land in Southern Manitoba reserved for that purpose. That could be taken in exchange for part of the school section near Carberry. I was under the impression the Methodist Church was favourable to the site near Carberry.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Dr. Sutherland indicated some time ago he was very anxious it should be near Brandon. With regard to the section in Southern Manitoba, I do not know how that compares in value with the section near Carberry. We want, of course, to get acre per acre as nearly as possible.

Mr. WATSON. The objection to Southern Manitoba is that it is too far from the reserve, most of the Indians being north, and Carberry is on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway easily accessible to everybody.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We are paying a very large amount for these industrial schools, nearly $200,000. According to the hon. gentleman's figure the number on the roll is only about 5,000, and of these probably not more than 2,000 or 2,500 attend. It appears that the average charge for the pupils in attendance is $70 to $80 per head, which is a very tall figure indeed to pay for Indian children. I suppose, out of the 23,000 Indians for which the hon. gentleman says we are more or less responsible, there are available for the schools not more than the 5,000 or 6,000, and they are not likely to be all on the rolls of attendance.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is no doubt we are paying a great deal for our schools, but it appears inevitable. The larger the number in attendance, of course the more reasonable will be the figure per head. There were 2,181 children at the schools, including the day pupils.

Mr. WATSON. That charge includes clothing?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. There is quite an amount of clothing supplied by charitable contributions.

Mr. DEWDNEY. If it were not for that we would have to find a great deal more. The denominations send large quantities, and they are sent free from the shipping points to the agencies. There are different schools. There are the large industrial schools on which we pay the whole cost of maintenance. There is one at Fort Qu'Appelle, another at Battleford, another at High River, of which we pay the entire cost. The Battleford is a Protestant school and the Qu'Appelle and High River Roman Catholic. At Qu'Appelle they are all boarders, 178 boys and girls. In 1885 the average was $280 per pupil; this year it is $162. Their ages vary from four to five up to sixteen and seventeen. We have sent out from seventeen to twenty-five boys and girls, and they are doing very well. At the Battleford industrial school, we had 120 last year, and they cost on an average $269 per pupil, but Battleford is a good deal up in the north which makes increased cost of transport and prices. At St. Joseph's, where there are 60 pupils, the average is $209, but that is nearer the railway.

Mr. BAIN. I see the salaries are $5,000 at Battleford. That is pretty high for 120 pupils.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is a principal in charge, a head teacher, a matron, a cook, a farm instructor and a trade instructor and two or three other helps about the kitchen. The principal gets $1,200 a year. Battleford school has been established since 1883.

Mr. WATSON. There should be sufficient pupils educated to become teachers.

Mr. DEWDNEY. A great deal of the work done around the schools is done by the girls, They have their regular work cut out every day, for which of course they are not paid.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Can the hon. gentleman give a general idea as to how far the experiment made some years ago has been a success? We have spent an enormous sum in the last ten years trying to educate the Indian and make him self-sustaining, but I have not been able to see, by the late records of the department, that we have had very much success in that direction. We pay nearly as much now to sustain the Indians as we did four years ago. We entered upon an experiment in 1882 to train the Indian and make him self-sustaining. It appears to me that the experiment has not been much of a success. As to this item, I would like to have some general idea as to how far the experiment of educating, christianizing and civilizing the Indians has been a success. I should like to know where the young girls go who come out from the schools? Are situations secured for them? Are they trained sufficiently to teach their own people, either in their own language or in the English language? We ought to have some information as to the practical results of this very large expenditure. I have not been able to judge much in regard to it from the report of the department, and I regret that the information given in that report is so meagre.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon gentleman will recollect that we are not very old in this matter. We only started our industrial schools a few years ago, and a large number of those who went into the industrial schools as children are still there. They are taught housework, needlework, knitting and the sewing machine, as well as other things. The Indian girls at Qu'Appelle, for instance, make all the clothing required for the children. We supply them with the material, and they cut out the boys' pants and coats and make them there.. We have not yet been able to place many outside, but there are a certain number leaving every year and being placed out in service, and they are doing very well. Some of the young boys are also doing very well. I specially recollect one of them now. He is the son of one of the chiefs, and he is at home now taking entire charge of his father's farm. This year he has 50 acres of wheat and a considerable amount of stock. My experience is that we have done fairly well in this regard. I think there is every chance of our industrial schools being a success, and educating properly the young Indian boys and girls. I cannot say so much of the success of our day schools. I have never had much opinion of these day schools, but we have had to establish them on the different reserves because we are bound to do so by treaty. The Indians say they have a sufficient number of children on the reserve to attend a day school, and we have to establish one; but where these children go to school for a few hours and then return to their wigwams or houses, there is not much chance to improve them. I am anxious to curtail the day schools and increase the number of boarding schools. We have different kinds of boarding schools. We have the industrial schools, where the pupils are taught trades. They are taught shoe-making and harness-making and carpentering. They make whiffletrees and yokes and other things of that kind for our institutions, and work on the buildings, and the boys become very handy and progress very well. Then we have boarding schools which are carried on by the different denominations, who take pupils at a fixed rate of $6 per annum, and they find what is necessary for them, such as clothing. But they are not taught any trades there, only reading, writing and so on. In the day schools the pupils are taught their A B C, and only the younger children go there. The sooner we can close the day schools and send the children to the boarding schools, the sooner we will be able to do something with them.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I had more reference to the day schools than to the industrial schools, because the latter have not been established so long. In six years I find that we have expended about $300,000 on the schools. There ought to be some effective results from that large expenditure. I do not find in the report any results commensurate with the expenditure that has been made. While dealing with this subject, I have some observations to make on the general policy of our management of Indian affairs in the North-West Territories. I believe it is an extravagant policy. I believe that far more money is voted by Parliament for the support and training of Indians than we ought to vote for that purpose. I believe that a large amount of that money does not find its proper destination. I believe there is extravagance —I do not go further than that now—and that the Minister would do well to investigate and consider that extravagance. I find that in the Carlton agency there are only 680 Indians, men and women, little and big, old and young, and upon that agency we spent last year $25,211. Of that sum, no less than $4,786 was expenditure in salaries and travelling expenses. Now, it is impossible, or it is improper if it be possible, that any such sum as that could be expended for salaries, &c., of people to look after 680 Indians, Indians and squaws and papooses. I find that, in Crooked Lake Agency, there are 654 Indians in the tribe, but there are only 135 grown up males. Yet last year you expended on that agency $21,160, and you actually extracted from that amount $6,245 for travelling expenses and salaries. I submit that is a matter which requires investigation, more than investigation, it requires the application of the pruning knife so that such extravagant expenditure may be cut down. Is it conceivable that 135 adult male Indians should require such an expenditure for travelling expenses and salaries? How do they spend it? Who gets it? That is not the only one. The same plan runs through almost every agency in the North-West Territories. Take the Edmonton Agency, which expended $33,424 on 129 male adults; and out of that sum $6,574 was for salaries and travelling expenses. Has the Minister had his attention directed to that? Has he ever examined the Public Accounts with a view of seeing exactly whether that money is properly expended or not? Take the Muscowpetung, near Regina, about 23 miles distant. In that agency there are 122 male adults, and altogether 537 individuals. You spent $24,000 upon that band last year, and out of that you have taken $7,576 for salaries alone. The agency is right in the heart of the territory, near the capital. The item is so charged in the Auditor General's Report in connection with that band. Now, there is a third of the sum appropriated by Parliament for the agency used up in salaries. I say that circumstance requires investigation by the head of the department, and the head of the department is not doing his duty to the Indians or to the tax-payers of this country without making a thorough investigation, and, if the facts that appear in the reports are true, without cutting down this enormous expenditure. I make these observations to draw the Minister's attention to it, in the hope that before next session of Parliament some change will be made in this respect. Now, I think it is an unreasonable expenditure for the services that are performed. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that a good deal more of the money voted by Parliament for the support of the Indians in the North-West never reaches the Indians themselves. In the Auditor General's Report for the last year, at page C—171, I find, under the heading of "supplies and presents, Governor General's visit," a most extraordinary class of items. Does the hon. gentleman mean to tell us that when dignitaries visit the North-West Territories and see fit to make presents to the Indians, that the Indian fund is to be charged with them? Does he mean to tell us that when some of the officials in the North-West Territories see fit, for their own benefit, to get up a jamboree in the agency, that all this is to be charged to the Indian account? I have no objection to the officials in the North-West getting up a fandango to the dignitaries who may visit them, but I object to that money being charged to the Indian fund. Let those who enjoy themselves pay the piper. I find here some extraordinary things—candies, nuts, raisins, fruits, groceries, beer and cigars. How much of that did poor Lo the Indian get? Not very much, I think; yet every farthing of that is charged to the Indian fund. There are some charges elsewhere, under the heading of presents made to the Indians. Well, it is a nice way to make presents to the Indians and charge the Indians with them. I find Old Sun and Crowfoot, and some of these dignitaries in the North-West, get fancy blankets, fancy bridles, fancy shirts and things of that kind, as presents, and they are all charged to the Indian account, all taken out of their own money. I do not think the hon. gentleman would care much about that sort of thing applied to himself, but that is the way they treat poor old Lo.

Mr. BAIN. They make him pay for his coffin.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I do not object to buying him a coffin; he has trouble enough in this world, I hope he will not have so much in the next. It is wholly inexcusable that such items should be allowed to pass. That is in the Blackfoot Agency. In the Blood Agency you will find the same charges under the same heading. Now, I trust, for the sake of the tax-payers of the country, as well as for the sake of the Indian himself, that these things will not occur any more. They have been occurring from year to year for the last eight or ten years, against my solemn protest, at all events, when I was in Parliament before. Things are better, I must admit, than they were under a former Superintendent General, but there is room for a good deal of improvement still. I intended to draw the Minister's attention to it at some length, knowing that there were reasonable grounds for complaint. I have gone over the Indian reports since I came to Parliament this time, and I venture to think that if the Minister of the Interior will take the trouble of going over the reports upon two or three items for the last eight or ten years, he will be startled. Has the hon. gentleman any suspicion at all of how much the public expend on certain bands of Indians in the North-West Territory for agricultural implements alone? Has he any suspicion how much has been expended for cattle alone? I am quite sure he has not. He has not figured it up for a series of years, because I am sure that if he had done so, he must have been startled at the results. But at this late hour of the night, and at this late hour of the session, I do not feel inclined to discuss the matter at any length. I only wanted to draw the Minister's attention to that aspect of the case. Now, I will just give him one illustration. Under treaties Nos. 1 to 7 from the year 1883 to 1889 inclusive, we expended on implements alone $218,615.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think there is some mistake about that.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). If it is a mistake, it is one in your book. I have taken it from the book, and I am not responsible for its accuracy.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Is it not for the whole of Manitoba?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It is given in the book as under treaties Nos. 1 to 7. Under treaties Nos. 4, 6 and 7, with a population of 12,000, big and little, young and old, male and female, we spent from 1883 to 1889, $201,000 of agricultural implements. We have spent during six years on agricultural implements, cattle, wages, schools and what are called general expenses, which amount to $967,000, to treaty Indians alone, the enormous sum of $2,060,475. If an opportunity presents itself, which I hope may be the case on a future occasion, I propose in a friendly spirit, and with a view to rectifying the wrongs I believe to exist in the North-West Territories, to draw the Minister's attention especially to a great many more of the extravagant charges that appear to be made against the Indian account in the North-West Territories. It is worthy of the attention of the Committee, and it ought to be worthy of the attention of the Minister.

Surveys..... $5,000

Mr. WATSON. For what purpose is this money to be used?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There are sub-divisions to be made on a great many reserves. What we propose to do this year is to sub-divide the reserves in Duck Lake Agency. We also propose to put in iron angle posts at all the reserves. There has been great difficulty with respect to the boundaries, and heavy iron posts 2½ inches square will be let down into the ground some distance, and 6 inches left above ground. The Indians take a great interest in this proceeding and assist in putting down the posts. The Duckwood Hills Agency will also be sub-divided. A new reserve will be surveyed at a cost of $300.

Mr. WATSON. What is intended to be done with the proceeds of the Paspaschese reserve?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They will be placed to the credit of the Indian fund.

Mr. WATSON. How are the Indians on the reserve being disposed of?

Mr. DEWDNEY. With the exception of half a dozen, they all took scrip. The total number was 30 or 40 families.

Mr. WATSON. You pay an Indian off with scrip out of the general funds of the country, and when you sell the reserve you credit the Indian Department with the proceeds. The proceeds of the sale of the land should not go to the Indian Department.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Those were really half-breeds, and should never have been on the reserve.

Mr. WATSON. It was made exclusively for those particular people.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I understand it, you first issue the Indian scrip, which is equivalent to the value of their reserve. Then you sell the reserve, and credit the Indian fund with the proceeds of the sale. Thus you are paying the Indians twice.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is the system that has been adopted throughout the country. A portion of those on this reserve are true Indians and did not get scrip. They went to another reserve.

Mr. WATSON. I call the attention of the Minister to the Silver Creek reserve. There are very few Indians remaining there, probably eight families, and thirty square miles of land are reserved in the centre of a very good settlement. There is difficulty in regard to establishing public schools for the benefit of the settlers on account of the Indian reserve lying almost in the centre of the municipality. The people there are very anxious that the Indian reserve should be done away with. I am credibly informed that the Indians remaining there will be well pleased to take a patent for an ordinary homestead of 160 acres, and go out of treaty altogether. They are doing as well as most of the white settlers in that country; they have a large number of horses, cattle, sheep and pigs, and quite a large amount of grain. If the Indians took homesteads and broke up the reserve it would be an advantage to themselves and a great convenience to the settlers, because their stock is running at large, and it is very inconvenient for school purposes to have that reserve there. It comes within a short distance of the village of Binscarth.

Mr. DEWDNEY. We are very careful in interfering with Indian reserves when first established. There are very few Indians now left at Silver Creek, and our surveyor has got instructions to go there this year and cut off half of that reserve at Silver Creek, and add on a small piece again to the other reserve. Then we shall be able to open half of that reserve. That is the present intention, so that I think we will be able to meet the hon. gentleman half way immediately, and at a later date, perhaps, be able to take it all over.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. gentleman might ask his agent to enquire from the Tanners if they would not be satisfied to take 160 acres of homestead.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Nelson, the surveyor, is a first-class Indian man, and I have carried on many negotiations of that character through him. I will give him instructions with regard to that before he goes.

Supplies for farmers.....$14,925

Mr. WATSON. What is this for?

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is for the different supplies required. I may say, to show the progress that has been made, that in 1885 we had 159 white men as farm instructors, and now we have only 58. We have been able to substitute a large number of Indians for white employés, who received high wages. The agencies are made smaller, and the agent himself gives a great deal of attention to the farming business.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). How is it there is no depreciable reduction in the expense? If you dispense with the services of these employés there ought be a corresponding reduction in the expenses. The general expenses for the Indians is reduced during the last two years, but in these particular items I do not see any reduction. Can the hon. gentleman tell me how it is that on the Muscowpetung reserve, where there are only a small number of Indians, $7,000 were required for salaries?

Mr. DEWDNEY. These salaries included school teachers, farm instructors, labourers, agents, doctors, &c.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The expenses of the doctor is under a separate item, and this seems altogether out of proportion. You have spent only $24,000 on this band, and out of that you deduct $7,576 for salaries, which is about one-third of the whole sum voted by Parliament for these. I want to get some explanation of that. It looks to me to be out of all reason. There are only, according to the report, 573 Indians, of whom only 122 are men. This band must be pretty well civilized and christianized.

Mr. DEWDNEY. They must be almost self-sustaining. They have found their own flour five months of this year.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Then, why do you require $7,500 for salaries?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There are 577 Indians, of whom about 150 are men. There are three bands—the Muscowpetung's, Piapot's, and another band.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that this band is nearly self-sustaining?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; it is one of the first we expect to be self-sustaining.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The report shows that the band has been making great progress in the last two years, and yet I find a large expenditure for supplies and maintenance.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon. gentleman will find a great decrease up to the 30th of June last.

Sioux Indians..... $5,669

Mr. WATSON. Why this increase?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is a grant of $1,300 to Portage la Prairie school, which is charged to the Sioux for the first time this year.

Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.45 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 1st September, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SEAT FOR QUEBEC WEST.

Mr. GIROUARD presented report of Sub-Committee of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which was referred the matters contained in the Order of Reference from the House of the 19th August, with instructions to search for precedents, and to report the result of their deliberations, as follows :—

That the election of the Hon. Thomas McGreevy was lawfully contested on the 15th day of April last past, and that the said contestation was pending at the time that he tendered his resignation to Mr. Speaker.

That under the circumstances, your Sub-Committee recommends that the said resignation be not acted upon by Mr. Speaker, and that his Warrant for the issue of a new Writ be recalled.

Your Sub-Committee is also of the opinion that, under the present state of the law, the Speaker, when not aware of the contestation of the election of a member, may properly act upon the resignation of such member, and issue his Warrant accordingly; and, should clause 7 of Chapter 13 of the Revised Statutes be continued, they beg to recommend that this want in the Statute be remedied by providing that, in the future, the prothonotary or clerk of the court where an election petition is fyled and pending, shall forthwith notify the Speaker of such election petition.

Your Sub-Committee finally, without expressing any opinion thereon, recommends the advisability of the House considering whether the said clause 7 of Chapter 13 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, should not be repealed.

ANDRÉ SENÉCAL.

Order for André Senécal, the witness named in the report of the Public Accounts Committee submitted to the House on Thursday, 27th August, to attend at the Bar of the House at three o'clock in the afternoon, read.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is André Senécal in attendance?

The DEPUTY SERJEANT-AT-ARMS. Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to report that the witness Senécal left Ottawa on or about the 24th ultimo, and, although I have made careful enquiry, I have been unable to ascertain his present whereabouts. In consequence of his absence, the Order for him to attend at the Bar of the House this afternoon, was left with a member of his family at his Ottawa residence.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, when was the service made at the residence of Mr. Senécal?

Mr. DEWDNEY.

Mr. SPEAKER. When was the service made?

The DEPUTY SERJEANT-AT-ARMS. On Friday last, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LISTER moved :

That André Senécal not having attended this day at the Bar of this House, pursuant to the Order of this House of the 22nd August last, he be taken into custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms attending this House, and that Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

NORTH SHORE RAILWAY BONDS.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (7th August) providing for the cancellation and discharge of certain mortgage bonds of the North Shore Railway Company held by the Government.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The resolutions themselves state in very considerable detail the case which is presented to the House on behalf of their passage, and, therefore, it will not be necessary that I should trouble the House with a long explanation. In 1884, the policy of Parliament with regard to the North Shore Railway was embodied in a statute. That policy was to provide for the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the harbour of Quebec; and inasmuch as the Provincial Government of Quebec had incurred large expenditures in completing the railway along the north shore to connect Quebec with Montreal, the aid that was given in 1884 to provide for a complete extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway facilities to the harbour of Quebec, necessarily included the absorption of the North Shore Railway and the relief of the Provincial Government in regard to the expenditure which the province had incurred in that undertaking. The form which that relief took, not only in the statute of 1884 which gave the aid, but in the agreements which were subsequently made, has given rise to the occurrences which seemed to the Government to make these resolutions necessary. The statute of 1884 contained an appropriation not exceeding $6,000 a mile, to enable the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to extend their line from St. Martin's Junction to the harbour of Quebec, in such manner as might be approved by the Governor in Council, not to exceed $960,000. At that time the North Shore Railway, although it had been built by the Province of Quebec, was in the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and a reasonable time was allowed to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to acquire it from the Grand Trunk Railway Company; and failing the acquisition by the Canadian Pacific Company of the North Shore road within that time, the Canadian Pacific Company were allowed to extend their own line to the City of Quebec, and to make this subsidy available. The interval of the time was given in order to avoid duplication of the lines, and to make the one which had already been built at the expense of the province available, as I have said, for forming the connection with the City of Quebec. In the course of the negotiations which ensued it was found impracticable for the two companies to come to an agreement between themselves, and the Government interfered in the negotiations, with the result that Parliament was asked in 1885 to vote an additional sum of $340,000, which, added to the $960,000 appropriated in the previous year, and $200,000 voted to acquire the Jacques Cartier branch, made a total of $1,500,000 available for the purposes of that policy. The Government then proceeded to acquire the rights of the Grand Trunk Railway Company in the North Shore Railway. They purchased the rights for $530,000, and then there remained the $970,000 which was appropriated by the Government to the purchase of the North Shore Railway Company's bonds which were secured by a second mortgage on that line of railway. The outstanding bonds amounted to $1,108,626; so that the Government itself became the owner of the North Shore Railway, subject only to the first mortgage, which was in favour of the Provincial Government, to the extent of $3,500,000. That mortgage was, as I have said, a first lien upon the road, and was connected likewise with the lien of the unpaid vendor, as we style it in English law, or privilège de bailleur de fonds according to the law of the Province of Quebec. The road was then transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company upon certain conditions which are to be found in the agreement which was made between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the year 1885. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company having, in pursuance of the policy adopted by the Government and Parliament, become the owners of the road subject to the two mortgages, were, of course, subject to the second mortgage to secure the bonds to the extent of $1,108,626; and it was deemed by the Government in 1885 the best policy, instead of paying the company the $970,000 which remained in their hands, and instead of extinguishing the mortgage, to spend the $970,000 in purchasing these outstanding bonds which were secured by the second mortgage on the road. The Government then, in 1885, entered into an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, by which it was stipulated that this sum of money at the disposal of the Government, in accordance with the two statutes of 1884 and 1885, should be invested in the purchase of these bonds, and it was stipulated that this purchase should be made on a condition which I shall now read to the House:

"That in the event of the net receipts of the operation of the said railway, after paying the operation expenses thereof, proving insufficient to meet the interest on the first mortgage bonds of the said North Shore Railway Company, including those held by the Government of Quebec as collateral security for the balance of the price of the said railway, the Government will apply the interest on the said sum of $970,000 at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum in whole or in part, as may be required, towards the payment of the deficiency. But if or when after payment of all such deficiencies, the net receipts of the said railway, as aforesaid, shall be sufficient to pay the interest on the said bonds, the said company shall cease to have any further claim or demand upon the Government in respect of the said sum of money; provided, as regards operating expenses, the cost of no new works or renewals of a more expensive character than existing works were when new, shall be accounted as forming part of such operating expenses, unless the previous consent of the Minister of Railways and Canals has been obtained to their construction."

Going back now for a moment to the point of my remarks, when I stated that a sum of $970,000 remained available for the policy which Parliament adopted in 1885, and referring to my observation that it was considered best to apply that to the purchase of the outstanding bonds secured as a second lien upon the road, I would observe that instead of putting upon the face of the agreement the fact that the $970,000 was to be so expended, it was made to appear as one of the stipulations of the agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—and that may have been because it was in advance of what was afterwards done—that that sum of money should be held available for the purpose of carrying out this policy, and that the Government would appropriate the interest of that sum towards making good any deficiency in the earnings of the road towards the payment of the sum secured by the first mortgage. But, as a matter of fact, the way in which that $970,000 was applied was in the purchase of the North Shore bonds, which amounted to $1,108,626. The Government then stood practically in this position, as the result of this agreement: that the sum which had been voted by Parliament was applied to the acquisition of this road; but instead of giving the subsidy out and out to the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Government continued to hold a lien upon the road for the subsidy which had been voted by Parliament. It has been contended from time to time, not only by those connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway, but more strongly by those who are interested in the welfare of the City of Quebec, as affected by this policy, that the Government hardly carried out to the full the intent and meaning of the statutes of 1884 and 1885, that the meaning of these statutes was that the aid should be given out and out, and not that the Government should hold any lien for it after it had thus been voted by Parliament. But the effect of the agreement was that the Government did hold a lien upon the road, subject only to the one condition, namely, that the earning powers of the road should be equal to the payment of our interest, and that otherwise we had no claim for the interest on our security. As a matter of fact, it resulted, as I suppose it was anticipated at that time it would, that the earnings of the road have not been sufficient to allow the Government any interest upon the money so invested; and from that time to this, that $970,000, although forming a lien upon the railway, has been an unproductive investment, as indeed it was expected by Parliament when it was first voted. The accounts of the railway company have been kept with regard to the earnings of the North Shore Railway and its ability to pay the interest on the security, and these accounts show that the net receipts of the company have never been sufficient to entitle us to claim any interest upon our investment. It has been pressed upon the Government from time to time, that the disadvantage of a policy of this kind, giving a lien upon the railway instead of paying the money as an out and out grant, has been that the company has been hampered in the operation of its enterprise, and that the Province of Quebec had not derived the advantage which Parliament intended it should have when it made the appropriation, especially in view of the latter clause of the agreement which I have read and which states that:

"Provided, as regards the operating expenses, the cost of no new works or renewals of a more expensive character than existing works were when new, shall be accounted as forming part of such operating expenses, unless the previous consent of the Minister of Railways and Canals has been obtained to their construction."

Application has been occasionally made to the Minister of Railways, according as structures went into decay, for permission to renew them by more permanent structures, and that permission has been granted in every respect, except that the right has not been conceded to charge as working expenses a sum any greater than was necessary to provide works similar to those which required to be replaced. We have declined to allow the company to charge as against working expenses the additional cost of iron over wood, and we have done that simply because we felt that until we asked Parliament to recast the terms of this agreement, we were not entitled to waive the provisions of any security we had taken in favour of the Crown, notwithstanding the fact that the security itself contained in that agreement was an unproductive one. The negotiations have resulted in the policy these resolutions now embody, and by which it is proposed that, in consideration of large expenditures in the way of improvements on the line of railway and improvements at the terminal port at Quebec, the security so taken by the Government shall be relinquished. The terms and conditions upon which it is proposed to relinquish the security are expressed in the resolutions. They include the provision that the company binds itself to complete and provide, with all due diligence, the following works and improvements:

"Rolling stock, including sleeping cars, day coaches, baggage, mail and express cars, locomotives and freight cars, of a standard equal to that used on other portions of the company's railway system, involving an outlay of about $350,000.

"Improvements over the whole line between St. Martin's Junction and the City of Quebec, of such a character as to bring that section up to the highest standard of the other Canadian Pacific sections, including additional accommodation for passengers at nearly every station, and increased space for the handling of freight, the lengthening of platforms and sidings, the furnishing of new sidings for the development of stone, lumber and other traffic, the substitution of iron for wooden bridges on the line of the North Shore Railway, and the construction of the following specific works, that is to say:—

"(1.) In the City of Quebec:
(a) One grain elevator.
(b) One flour shed.
(c) Such local improvements and facilities as are necessary for the handling of the traffic of that city.

"(2.) In Three Rivers:
(a) One grain elevator.
(b) Improvements over the loop line.
(c) Improvements on the Piles Branch.

"The said improvements over the whole line involving an outlay of about $300,000 in addition to the said outlay on rolling stock.

"The whole to be completed to the satisfaction of the Minister of Railways."

And we recommend, in view of that undertaking being given on the part of the company, that the bonds which we hold to the amount I have stated, namely, $1,108,626 of nominal value, but in which we have invested $970,000 of subsidies voted in 1884 and 1885, shall be relinquished and cancelled by the Government. We are led to believe that this will, as provided by the terms of this agreement, lead to the complete and efficient equipment of the line of railway, both as regards permanent way and rolling stock, and likewise as regards terminal facilities which will be provided at Quebec and some other points along the line for the accommodation of business. As to the question whether it is contemplated that the bonds shall be cancelled on this agreement being entered into, it is so contemplated. The reason for that is obvious. The expenditure which is to be made by the terms of this agreement involves nearly $700,000. It is only reasonable to give the company the means of raising the moneys necessary for that purpose on the road itself if they should desire to do so. It would be hardly reasonable, with these bonds outstanding, to expect the company, charged as it is with very onerous undertakings, to raise a sum equivalent to about three-quarters of a million of dollars, to be expended in the improvement of this road, unless it has the means of pledging the road as security for that advance. The documents on the subject which contain the history which I have thus briefly referred to are, I think, all to be found in the Sessional Papers of 1885, volume 12. The agreements which were made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and with the Quebec Government, all appear there. It may be possible that some other documents may be desired by the Committee, and if so, I shall be glad to lay them on the Table before the resolutions reach a further stage.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not apprehend that upon the principle involved in these resolutions any objection whatever can be taken. This is only carrying out a policy which was inaugurated in 1884 and 1885, and which, in my opinion, should have been carried out long ago. As has been stated by the Minister of Justice, that policy was to continue the Canadian Pacific Railway line to the harbour of Quebec, so as to make the harbour of Quebec the summer terminus of the railway. This was the language made use of by Sir Charles Tupper when he introduced the resolution in 1884, and made it apparent that the object for which Parliament was asked to vote the money to extend the Canadian Pacific Railway line to Quebec so as to make Quebec the summer terminus. His words were:

"To make the harbour of Quebec that which it is believed, in the interest of the whole of this country, it is desirable it should be made, namely, the summer terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway."

And towards that object the sum was voted "to extend the Canadian Pacific Railway from its terminus at St. Martin's Junction near Montreal to the harbour of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $6,000 per mile, nor exceeding $960,000 in the whole." In the following year, 1885, that sum was increased to $1,500,000. At that time it was contemplated by the authorities of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company whether they should acquire the existing line which at that time belonged to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, which had been built by the Province of Quebec, and had been sold by the Quebec Government to the North Shore Railway Company, and by the North Shore Railway Company to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, or whether they should build another line to Quebec. They already owned the line from Ottawa to St. Martin's Junction, and the question was whether they should acquire the line from St. Martin's Junction to Quebec or should build a line of their own. Provision was made in the statute for either of these alternatives, that the company should have the power either to purchase the existing line from the Grand Trunk Railway, or to build another line. Suppose that, instead of purchasing the existing line, they had built another and an independent line from St. Martin's Junction to the harbour of Quebec. Then the whole of that subsidy of $6,000 a mile or $960,000 in the whole, would have been expended from the Dominion Treasury towards the construction of that railway. It was thus contemplated that the whole of that money should be expended towards the realization of that object, whether it was attained by the purchase of the existing line or by the building of another line, but, whether it was done one way or the other, the intention of Parliament was quite obvious that in either case the Dominion treasury was to contribute $960,000 towards that object, and more than that, because the amount was increased in the following session to $1,500,000. But the two companies came to an agreement whereby the Canadian Pacific Railway Company became the owners of the North Shore line from St. Martin's Junction to the harbour of Quebec. How was this done? It was done first by paying the Grand Trunk Railway Company a little more than half a million dollars, if I correctly understand the Minister of Justice, and then purchasing bonds to the amount of about $1,000,000. I have always held that that purchase of bonds was not carrying out the letter or the spirit of the statute. It was not expending money, because the money has not been expended, but it was simply taking $1,000,000 in round numbers from the treasury and putting back $1,000,000 in bonds. That was not carrying out the letter or spirit of the statute, because that was not the object for which it was adopted, so the policy which was followed in 1886 of purchasing these bonds and keeping them hanging over the road was not in any way carrying out the law, and the present resolution is simply giving effect to the vote of Parliament in 1884 and 1885. It seems to me that this transaction is so clear, that it is so evident that this is the object of the law which was put on the Statute-book in 1884 and 1885, that there cannot be any question about it. You will see in the Public Accounts as one of the assets of Canada, the bonds of the North Shore Railway line. That was not what was contemplated, and when Parliament voted that money, it was voted for the benefit of the line which was to make Quebec the summer terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That was to be made as effectively in every manner as if an independent line had been built, and the harbour of Quebec would not have been in as favourable a position as it would have been if an independent line had been built, because an independent line would have been unblemished, whereas the Canadian Pacific Railway Company received this line blemished by these bonds of about $1,000,000. Now, it is proposed to relieve the Canadian Pacific Railway of the $1,000,000, and to that extent to carry out the statute which was passed in 1884 and 1885. So far, I am totally in accord with the spirit of the resolution. As to the details of the manner in which this is to be done, I will not at present refer to the explanations which have been given by the Minister of Justice, but, as the resolutions come up, we will refer to them.

On resolution 1,

Mr. AMYOT. I am glad the Government have at last decided to redeem some of their promises, and to give effect to the statutes passed in 1884-85. But I want to draw their attention to the exact situation in which the harbour of Quebec will stand after this legislation has been passed, and to certain other of their promises which have not yet been fulfilled. You remember that during the last election we were not only promised the settlement of what was called the million dollar debentures, but we were also promised a bridge, and that promise, which seems to have been effectual in securing a small majority for one of their supporters, does not yet seem to have received the consideration of the Government. I am glad, at all events, at seeing this first instalment of justice. The result of this legislation will be that the Canadian Pacific Railway will bring a considerable quantity of their grain to our harbour as soon as they are free from the obligations imposed upon them. If I am correctly informed, the Pacific Railway, at the present time, carry to the harbour of Montreal, daily, over 300 cars loaded with grain and other produce, to be shipped on ocean steamers. They have accommodation in the City of Montreal to receive and unload only about 150 cars daily, so that the company themselves are now embarrassed by the present state of things. Therefore, as soon as they can take their cars to the City of Quebec without increasing their obligations towards the Government, their commerce will impose upon them the necessity of sending some of their cars, at least, to the City of Quebec, and that city may have reason to expect that ocean steamers will have to be loaded in its port. But, Mr. Chairman, there will still be a great obstacle to the prosperity of the City of Quebec, and to the general prosperity of the Dominion, and I beg to draw the special attention of the Minister of Justice to that point. There exists at Quebec a society called the Ship Labourers Society. I am not opposed to these organizations of labour, but that one in particular has proved most detrimental to commerce in general. Its members have imposed exorbitant charges upon ships, exacting fees altogether out of proportion to the resources and the profits of navigation. In 1887, seeing that our commerce was diminishing at the port of Quebec, I proposed certain legislation to prevent the ship labourers from having a monopoly in loading and unloading ships. I proposed to prevent them from driving away those who did not belong to their organization, and from excluding them from the work of loading and unloading ships. On that occasion our request was refused by the Government, but the Government, impelled by public opinion, proposed a law which was nothing else than a sham. I said then to the Government, before this honourable House, that it was strange that whenever the City of Quebec was concerned, everything seemed to turn against it. At that time I did not know the exact cause of the Government's indifference, I could not see why the Government refused legislation which was asked for by our shipping interests, by our commercial interests, by our own Board of Trade; I could not see why the wishes of the city and of the district at large were ignored by the Government. The Government substituted to my proposed Bill, another very mild Bill, and in Committee of the Whole they amended and changed their Bill so as to make it more ineffectual still. Finally, when the Bill was passed, it amounted to nothing. The words which might have helped us in the first proposed Bill, were taken away by the Government. That first clause read:

"Every person who, by violence, threats or any other means whatsoever, hinders or attempts to hinder any person engaged in loading or unloading any ship."

The words "any other means" were struck out in Committee at the request of the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran). My Bill was framed in such a way that if it had passed any man could have been employed, at any wages he chose to accept, in loading and unloading vessels. The Bill of the Government left the monopoly in the hands of the ship labourers, and since then the members of that society, with the help of the Government, have been laughing at the city, laughing at our commercial and shipping interests, and going on with their tyrannical by-laws and exactions, ruining themselves and ruining our harbour. Hon. gentlemen can easily judge of the evil effects produced upon the commerce of Quebec by the legislation of this Government, and by the refusal of the Government to accept my Bill, against which they could not find any reason, when every influence seemed to tend to the passage of their Bill. In the Montreal Gazette of 30th June, 1891, a Conservative paper, I read the following:—

"The ship labourers are showing bad faith in their present attitude towards the merchants. When it was proposed during the last session of the Legislature, to abolish their society, the presidents of all the sections agreed that all their rules should be annulled, and that no rule should be enforced before it received the sanction of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Instead of standing by this agreement the men are acting in a more arbitrary and tyrannical manner this season than ever before. The old rules are being enforced as rigorously as ever, and some new ones have been adopted, while there has not even been a pretence of submitting them to the Government for approval.

"For instance, this year St. Jean Baptiste day was added to the feasts of obligation on which the men are strictly forbidden to work, and although an application was made in writing for leave to work on the steamship Valetta, which had already lost a day by arriving a few minutes too late to get into the basin, and on the steamship Enchantress, which was being unloaded for examination, the society refused to grant the permission asked for. This is the first time that work was ever stopped on St. Jean Baptiste day. Again, application was made to the society to allow the deals from the steamship Enchantress, to be unloaded by steam, but this also was refused, and the deals had to be taken out by hand and one at a time. It is said that the application, which was couched in respectful terms, was thrown into the waste paper basket with the remark that the ship was loaded in Montreal and would not have had any work done here if she could have helped it. It is somewhat significant that there is a decrease of seventy in the arrivals of sailing vessels from sea at this port for this season. This can only be partly due to the depressed state of the timber trade."

This is for the present year. We see, moreover, in a telegraphic communication sent to the Mail, of 24th July, the following statement:—

"The trans-Atlantic arrivals to date are 129 sailing vessels and 138 steamships. This, as compared with the same time last year, shows a falling off of 94 sailing vessels and 79,000 tons, and 31 steamships and 34,077 tons. This showing is bad enough, but the indications are that it will be worse before the season is over. To the large number of people who gain their livelihood from the shipping business the outlook is bad, a regular poor-house one in fact."

In the report of the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec I find the following most significant facts:—The value of the exports in 1889 was $7,276,805; in 1890 it was only $6,187,585, or a difference of $1,089,220. If we take the value of the imports, we find that in 1889 it was $3,593,193, as compared with $3,210,928 in 1891, or a decline for the latter year of $1,383,065. If we take the number of ships and the tonnage, we find the following: In 1889 the number of vessels was 387, in 1890 it was only 385. The tonnage in 1889 was 433,894 tons, against 419,690 tons in 1890. If we compare last year with 1885 there is a difference of 134 vessels. In 1885, 519 vessels left our port, while only 385 left in 1890. The tonnage also shows a striking difference. In 1885 the tonnage of vessels outward was 557,395 tons, while in 1890 it was only 419,690, or a difference of 137,705 tons. A similar difference exists in regard to vessels entered inwards. In 1889 there were 509 vessels, and only 480 in 1890. The tonnage in 1889 was 630,332, as against 589,204 in 1891, a difference of 46,281 tons. If we take the difference between these two periods in regard to vessels entered outwards, we find also an immense difference. I need not go into all these details, which are given in the official report of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners. These facts illustrate that our port is deserted by shipping, and the primary cause assigned is not the industry of Montreal, not the digging out of the St. Lawrence, which may be very proper even to Toronto, if possible. We do not object to that; but in Quebec there is a society, ill-advised, which works against the interests of the city, and we complain that the Government, also ill-advised, act against the interest of Quebec, or at all events refuse to comply with our wishes. I say that plainly, I affirm it, and I will prove it. It is one of these instances where private documents go very far to illustrate what is going on behind the Throne. I am sorry I have to lay before Parliament a private document; but the principle has been laid down by one of the Ministers in this House that where a telegram or letter is marked private or confidential or is in cypher, it means publish it at once, even if you incorrectly publish it. But this letter I will publish in full, I will not take the opportunity now or at any other time to cast any blame, based on this document, against any of the members of the Executive; but I communicate to them the document, so that they will understand in whose hands they have been and how they have been treated. The letter is of 11th June. By its terms the Committee will see that it was written in 1887, the year I presented the Bill referred to. It says:

"My Dear,—"

The first name is there in the original, but in the photograph it has been taken away. I am ready, however, to communicate the original to the Government.—

"You will see by the parliamentary proceedings that Amyot has introduced a Bill for the punishment of labourers or ship labourers who interfere with outsiders who do not belong to the society and load ships against the rules of their society. You may tell Dinan privately that the Bill will not be allowed to pass and the Government will state to Amyot and the House that the Local Government have sufficient power to deal with them. So his Bill will fall through. I write this so as they may keep quiet and not say anything about it. Tell the president to say nothing about it.

"Yours,
"THOMAS."

This shows at least, Mr. Chairman, why my Bill was not accepted; this shows what was the power behind the Throne which induced the Government to maintain firm, solid and powerful, that organization which was the ruin of themselves and of the City of Quebec, and an injury to the whole Dominion. The Government was in the hands of a man in whom they had confidence and who dictated to them the law as far as the City of Quebec was concerned. The same thing occurred when the question——

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection at all to the hon. gentleman reading private letters as much as he likes, but he seems to have mistaken the Bill before the House. This is not the Ship Labourers Bill, and I shall not have any opportunity of answering on that subject, because I will be out of order in so doing. Under these circumstances, I will have to ask you, Mr. Chairman, to keep the hon. gentleman in order.

Mr. AMYOT. I think I am establishing that the resolution we have before us is intended for the good of Quebec, and I am trying to show that it is incomplete. I am trying to show that it is the duty of the Government to come seriously to the rescue of Quebec.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the Chairman can see that, I cannot.

Mr. AMYOT. We will be glad to hear the hon. Minister of Justice, whom we always hear with the greatest pleasure, not only during this debate, but at any time he will be pleased to honour the House with his address upon that or any other topic. I do not tell him anything which is very new, I suppose. He must be aware that when the Short Line was contemplated to Sherbrooke, the member for Quebec West (Mr. McGreevy) was most ardent with the Ministers to induce them not to mind Quebec but to build that road. He must be aware that if we have no bridge—and this will be established by another private letter when one of the members of this House will be here who is not here at present—it is due to the member for Quebec West. When the question of the bridge came up the hon. member for Quebec West in that case said: "Never mind when the Order in Council will have to be passed, I will have my word to say." Now, what do we find in the enquete printed and distributed about the Baie des Chaleurs Railway.

An hon. MEMBER. Order.

Mr. AMYOT:

"MY DEAR ROBERT,—Pope sent for me to ask what answer he would give——"

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would ask the hon. gentleman to confine his remarks as much as possible to the resolution which is before the House. I, myself, was struck with the idea that he was going too far, but I thought he was coming back to the question, but instead of that he is going further away from it.

Mr. AMYOT. I will do my best to speak within the scope of the resolution before the House.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The only connection I see with the hon. gentleman is, that Quebec wanted to have a deep water terminus and my hon. friend is in deep water.

Mr. AMYOT. At all events I have no connection with the member in question, whether he be in deep water, or in boiling water, I do not know. I have no connection with him and do not intend to. Mr. Chairman, when you interrupted me——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; chair.

Mr. AMYOT—I was trying to establish that if my Bill, presented in the interest of Quebec, was refused, it was due to bad advice.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman is again speaking about his Bill, whereas the House is considering a resolution in reference to the North Shore and Canadian Pacific Railways, which has nothing to do with the question which he is discussing.

Mr. AMYOT. I want to prove that this Bill is incomplete, and I think I will prove it. I say it is the duty of the Government to complete the measure by bringing in a Bill which will bring the Ship Labourers' Society within the limits of a proper law which would protect us. I am glad that the Government has brought forward this resolution to-day; but they will remember that from the year 1885 up to the present time they have kept the City of Quebec suffering, and that even to-day they only give partial justice to that city. But I will go a step further than that. It is true that the Government gives back to the Canadian Pacific Railway the sum of $1,000,000 odd, but that was not the agreement in 1884 when we consented to grant $30,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The formal understanding then was, and I have referred to it frequently before in this House, that the Province of Quebec, not the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, would receive $12,000 a mile from Ottawa to Quebec. That was the understanding, but the Government do not carry it out now. You give to the Canadian Pacific Railway $960,000 which in 1884 you promised to the Province of Quebec. It is true, and I admit it, that you satisfy your obligations under the statute of 1885, but you have left the City of Quebec suffering from 1885 to 1891. You cannot deny that you do not comply with your obligation undertaken in 1884 to grant to the Government of the Province of Quebec $12,000 per mile from Ottawa to Quebec. It is the people of the Province of Quebec, and not the Canadian Pacific Railway, who have built the railway from Quebec to Ottawa. You have admitted the principle that the province should be recouped for the expense which it incurred in the construction of that road, and according to the promise you made you are bound to give to the Province of Quebec, the $12,000 promised. If the Government fulfilled one part of their obligation, the essential one for the province is not fulfilled and we will insist until it is fulfilled. The Government has admitted the principle of building the bridge at Quebec, and the declaration has been frequently made in this House that a bridge should be built. I have here a declaration made by the late Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald in the month of April, 1884, and I will translate it as follows, from the French version:—

"The Government recognizes the existing importance of connecting the Intercolonial Railway with the Canadian Pacific Railway by an iron bridge at the City of Quebec, and believes that it should be built in the near future. But so long as the Canadian Pacific Railway shall not have reached Quebec, and a good plan is not submitted to the Government, the Government cannot answer specifically to the question as to when it will be built."

At the last election the Government thought proper to send down their official representative to the City of Quebec, and they took care to select a man in whom we might place implicit confidence, whose word carried weight, from his past services of many years to the country, and from the high position he occupies in the world as the representative of the Government near the Throne of our beloved Queen. They selected him, and he stated in the name of the Government that the bridge would be built at once. They then sent Mr. Schreiber, their celebrated chief engineer, and he was there with his instruments examining, taking levels, sounding the river, ascertaining the distances, and so on: so that the bridge was a decided fact apart from the assurance contained in the telegram of Sir John Macdonald that the bridge was to be built at once. This is a pledge, and it must be fulfilled. So the Government are now under three obligations: first, to pay to the Province of Quebec the $96,000 promised; secondly, to undo the mischief which bad advice caused them to keep in force in 1887; thirdly, to construct this bridge, which is necessary to the trade and commerce of the country. I understand that the finances of the country will not at present very well permit a bridge to be built; but could not the Government decide on a line of ferries, which would cost from $200,000 to $250,000, for maintaining communication between the two sides of the river at all seasons of the year? The Government should at once see that the communication between those two shores is established; and why? Not only for the sake of the City of Quebec and its harbour, but for the sake of the whole Dominion. What is the case to-day? When travellers come by the Intercolonial Railway to Lévis, they are detained there very frequently for a night, and often for a day or two; but, if we had those steamers, there would be more traffic by the Intercolonial Railway, and that railway, instead of involving a deficit of $500,000 or $600,000 a year, might become a paying line and compensate us to a large extent for our large expenditures. I beg to draw the attention of the Government to these points. As to the measure before us, I, of course, accept it as a step in the right direction; but we must not stop there. We must see that the older portions of the Dominion are not entirely or constantly disregarded, and that our exclusive attention is not given to the development of the newer parts of the country. We must see that all parts of the Dominion are benefited equally by the large enterprises which we undertake for the future of the country.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is not my intention to answer the remarks of my hon. friend. He has been going a little outside of the record; but that is of course his own affair, and the House has allowed him to make those remarks, and he was welcome to make them so long as he was allowed to do so. But as he claims, as a representative of the old capital of the Province of Quebec, that Quebec has been abandoned and neglected by the Government, and that justice has not been shown to Quebec, I must tell him that surely his assertion is not warranted by the facts and by the action of the Government. In these circumstances especially my hon. friend should remember the old French proverb, chaque jour amène son pain. He should not find fault with the Government, when they are meeting the legitimate demands of Quebec in the measure brought before the House. My object, however, was to allude to the remarks made by the hon. leader of the Opposition. The hon. gentleman stated that the Government in these resolutions were only carrying out the real wish and intentions of Parliament when in 1884 and 1885 Parliament voted the sum of $1,500,000 to assist in securing an extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Montreal to deep water at Quebec. That was the demand at that time, and I shall explain at once under what circumstances it arose. My hon. friend has said that the Government are now only carrying out the wish of Parliament, and I think he is perfectly correct. I think that the arrangement which was then thought the best possible to be made between the Government and the Canandian Pacific Railway Company has not proved to be the one most likely to carry out the real, honest intentions of Parliament. We know what the intention of Parliament was by preceding legislation. In 1884 Parliament voted a subsidy of $12,000 a mile for the building of the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway, as it was then called, between Ottawa and Montreal. That demand was made upon the Government, and Parliament in consequence of an alleged promise—I was not a party to it, but I heard of it—that if the Province of Quebec would build a railway which would form a continuation of the great trans-continental line by means of which the Government had undertaken to connect the Maritime Provinces and the Pacific Provinces, a certain subsidy would be granted to it. A subsidy had been granted to the Canada Central extending from Ottawa to a certain point westward. In the charter of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and in its subsequent contracts with the Government, was included provision for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway through a large and important region of the Province of Ontario. Nobody grudged that at the time, and large grants were made for that work. But pursuant to the recognized promise made by the leader of the Government of 1874-78, the Province of Quebec expected that if the road was built as a continuation of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Ottawa to deep water at Quebec, our great ocean port, it would be granted a subsidy by this Parliament; and after it was agreed to grant a subsidy of $12,000 a mile for the line between Ottawa and Montreal, it was felt—it was then my view—that there was no reason whatever why the same subsidy should not have been granted—for the railway which had been built by the Province of Quebec at a very heavy cost between Montreal and Quebec. But at that time an agitation was raised, a movement was got up—I do not say wrongly, it is not my place here to find fault with it—but at Quebec it was thought that the Canadian Pacific Railway line was not extended to where it should have been extended; because the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, not having purchased that part of the line between Montreal and Quebec—for reasons of their own, which we are not here to-day to discuss—the city and district of Quebec had the right to ask to be benefited by a continuation of the Canadian Pacific Railway to deep water at Quebec. The North Shore Railway, which was at that time really the property of the Grand Trunk, was the one line between Montreal and Quebec. The Quebec people said: No; the Government will not grant the same measure of assistance to the Province of Quebec for having built the line between Montreal and Quebec, because we have not really the continuation of the Canadian Pacific Railway to deep water at Quebec. And that agitation went on, and the subsidy was reduced from $12,000 to $6,000, and the other $6,000 were voted in 1884 to assist the Canadian Pacific Railway in extending their line from St. Martin's Junction to Quebec. My hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) alluded to that at the time. But by whose efforts was it that the Government of Quebec did not receive compensation for the expenditure they had incurred in building the whole line from Quebec to Ottawa? I do not ask whose fault it was; but at whose request was it that the Quebec Government were not allowed what is granted by the statute of 1884 as a subsidy for a line between Montreal and Quebec? It was, as I have stated before, at the request of the people of Quebec, who wanted to have the Canadian Pacific Railway at Quebec. The two companies were brought together, preliminary negotiations were entered into, and I remember having seen the vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Mr. Van Horne, and the president of the Grand Trunk Railway, Mr. Hickson, meeting in the Railway Department and trying to come to an agreement to have the North Shore line between Montreal and Quebec their joint property, so as to make it a kind of neutral road by which those two companies could reach the deep water terminus in the harbour of Quebec. The Quebec people objected to that arrangement. They said they did not want anything but a continuation of the Canadian Pacific Railway works to Quebec. I do not know whether it was at their request or by their agitation, but all I know is that the preliminary agreement between the two companies was broken, the negotiations were set aside, and things remained in the same position as before. Then it was said that the Grand Trunk Railway, which was really the owner of the North Shore line, should immediately transfer it to the Canadian Pacific Railway on their own terms. Difficulties arose, objections were made, propositions were refused, and then we find in this statute of 1884:

"That for the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway from its terminus at St. Martin's Junction, near Montreal, or some other point on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to the harbour at Quebec, in such a manner as may be approved by the Governor in Council, a subsidy not exceeding $6,000 per mile, and not exceeding on the whole $960,000.

Thus exactly the amount that should have been paid the Quebec Government for that line was granted by Parliament as a compensation to the Canadian Pacific Railway to build a line. My hon. friend fell inadvertently into error when he said that at the following session the Government gave power to any new company, if the Canadian Pacific Railway could not get possession of the North Shore road—any such new company to be incorporated, not by charter of Parliament, but by letters patent—to build a railway from St. Martin's Junction to Quebec, for which they would have a right to receive from the Federal Government a subsidy of $960,000. That was not exactly the case. Here are the words of the statute of 1885. But I forgot to say that in that same session of 1884, the sum of $200,000 had also been given for a line of railway and bridge between the Jacques Cartier railway station and the Canadian Pacific Railway at St. Martin's Junction, connecting the Jacques Cartier Union Railway with the North Shore road. Let me call the attention of my hon. friend to this: Is it not strange that $200,000 were voted to the Grand Trunk Railway—for the Jacques Cartier was owned by the Grand Trunk Railway—to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway? The conclusion arrived at by those who know how things were carried on is this: The agreement between the two companies was nearly ended, and the Grand Trunk Railway, which had built the Jacques Cartier Union, wanted a subsidy to connect their main line by the shortest link—the North Shore Railway. They wanted a subsidy of $200,000 to meet the eventuality of their joining partnership with the Canadian Pacific Railway. In 1885 we find it was proposed that:

"The Governor General in Council may grant a subsidy to aid in procuring free access for the trains and traffic of the Canadian Pacific Railway from St. Martin's Junction, near Montreal, or from some other point on the said railway to be selected by the company, to the harbour of Quebec, in such manner as shall be approved by the Governor in Council, to wit: An additional subsidy not exceeding $340,000, constituting, together with the subsidy authorized by the said last mentioned Act—the Act I have just quoted—to aid in procuring the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Quebec, and the subsidy thereby authorized to aid in constructing a line connecting the Canadian Pacific Railway at Jacques Cartier Junction with the North Shore Railway, which subsidy shall be applicable to the said first mentioned purpose—a sum not exceeding $960,000.

If you add together these $340,000, $200,000 voted in 1884, and $960,000, you have $1,500,000, which was exactly the subsidy to be given to any company that would build that railway between St. Martin's Junction and Quebec. If that threatened project had been realized, we would have seen two lines of railway, one of which had already difficulties to struggle against in obtaining a revenue fair enough to justify the building of that railway, and another company building within probably a distance of from two to ten miles, a railway 170 miles long between St. Martin's Junction and Quebec. Really, the undertaking was absurd. But why was that provision agreed to by Parliament? It was agreed to in order to force the Grand Trunk Railway, if the Grand Trunk Railway had been unreasonable, to come to terms rather than allow a competitive road to be built at public expense by their great rival, the Canadian Pacific Railway. What ensued? The Grand Trunk Railway saw that the Government and Parliament were yielding to the wishes of our friends from Quebec, yielding to the great agitation that had been aroused by the Quebec people, and they said: Yes, we are ready to sell, but not to the Canadian Pacific Railway; we are ready to act in conjunction with them to work together the line between Montreal and Quebec, so as to bring the important traffic of immigrants to that line. Contracts were made between the Grand Trunk Railway and eight or nine steamship companies to land immigrants at Point Lévis or wherever the Grand Trunk Railway would decide, and the Grand Trunk Railway had been thinking of landing them on the Louise embankment at Quebec, which would then profit by the whole traffic of the immigrants; and more than that, the immigrants, instead of going by the Grand Trunk Railway to the south shore and being enticed by American agents to Chicago and the Western States, would go by the North Shore and the Canadian Pacific Railway to our North-West. I must say that I was individually of the opinion that such an amalgamation of the two interests on the North Shore would have been for the good of Quebec and the country at large, and I strongly advocated it. The Quebec people, however, objected, and they conquered. That is why I find it strange my hon. friend from Bellechasse should say they have always been forgotten and neglected. An agreement was made by the Grand Trunk Railway to sell the personal interest they had in the railway for $530,000. There remained the bonds which existed on that road, besides the $3,500,000 representing the privileged claim of the Quebec Government. Those bonds were to the amount of $1,108,626. The Minister of Railways at that time, a pretty careful business man, the Hon. Mr. Pope, purchased those bonds at 85 cents on the dollar, for $970,000, which is the amount which the Government is now asking this Parliament to relinquish. I am desirous that the news should not go abroad to other provinces, which are naturally anxious to know whether the Government is going to give favours to a company, or to a province, to their detriment, when demands are made everywhere for grants to develop the resources of this country, that the Government is giving $970,000 either to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or to the Province of Quebec, or to the City of Quebec. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition has put the case correctly in saying that what is now proposed to be abandoned is nothing but a fictitious claim, and that this is not giving a dollar more than was given by the law of 1885, which Parliament voted unanimously. Parliament voted $1,500,000 in order to have the summer terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Quebec, and Parliament said it did not desire to hear any more of this question of terminus thereafter. The Government made an agreement with the company in pursuance of the legislation authorizing that grant. They thought that was the best bargain. Events have proved that it is not the best bargain, because, and in this matter I go further than the Minister of Justice, and I say it is not only going against the intention of Parliament in 1885, but it has resulted in depriving a large section of the country between Montreal and Quebec of the legitimate hopes they had as to the development of trade in that part of the country after the sacrifices which their Provincial Government had made for that enterprise. What was the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in developing trade between Montreal and Quebec? We know what the Canadian Pacific Railway has done for that line. Near St. Vincent de Paul there is an immense ravine which had been covered up by a temporary trestle work. A sum of nearly $100,000 has been expended there—I am not sure as to the figures—but a trestle work of more than 900 feet long has been replaced by fine work and has been made as good railway work as could be desired, at a very large cost. Two heavy bridges, one at St. Anne, the other at Pont Rouge, have been changed from wooden to iron bridges. The agreement made by the Government was so strict that, if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were making improvements of such a nature that the primitive construction was to be changed in such a way that it would be an entirely new construction, the Canadian Pacific Railway could not be repaid by the Government unless the Minister of Railways consented to it, and the Minister decided that no payments should be made unless the work amounted only to repairs on old structures. Was it reasonable to expect the Canadian Pacific Railway to spend $200,000 in substituting iron for wooden bridges? They have spent more than half a million of dollars in the improvement of the line between Montreal and Quebec, and to what effect? If they were going to develop trade in developing the resources of the country they traverse, they might have been called upon to invest another million of dollars. They are bound to spend at least $700,000, to put their line in a first-class and remunerative condition, after having spent half a million. That is to say, they will have spent a million and a quarter, and the only result of this will be that this vast outlay of money will only serve to pay the interest on debentures amounting to $1,108,000, or at least on the amount of $974,000. What has been the consequence? According to the agreement between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, if deficiencies occurred between the revenue and the expenses of the road, such deficiencies would have to be accounted for, and it would only be after such deficiencies had disappeared that the Government could receive any interest on the $1,108,000 of debentures in their hands. During the last five or six years the deficiencies have accrued to over $500,000; that is to say, that to cover up those deficiencies and further deficits that would accrue every year, the Government would look to the Greek calends before they received a cent of revenue as stipulated in the agreement. I conclude my remarks in saying that what is done to-day is only carrying out the legislation of 1884 and 1885. I hope nobody will begrudge the City of Quebec this measure because special works are asked to be done there. They are works which will benefit shippers of grain from Manitoba or Ontario as much as they will benefit the population of Quebec itself, and while we may apparently be doing a favour to the City of Quebec, we are really only carrying out the intention of Parliament as shown in the legislation of 1884 and 1885.

Mr. AMYOT. We do not grudge anything to the City of Quebec. We do not say that this measure is bad. It is a good measure, but we say it comes too late, and I do not see exactly why we have had that very fine speech from the Secretary of State, which would certainly have been pronounced out of order if it had been delivered by me.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. AMYOT. I do not say it would have been pronounced out of order by the Chairman, but it would have been by some other members of the House. The hon. gentleman has not explained why this measure only comes now. He says it is the result of the legislation of 1884 and 1885; but what is the cause of the delay? That has not been explained. The hon. gentleman says that, in granting $960,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Government have been yielding to the members from the district of Quebec, and he pointed to me specially, mentioning the member for Bellechasse. Is he sure of what he says? Has he the proofs in hand? We are living in a period when it is good to have our proofs before us; we are not sure of what a man will say. I have seen proceedings in a court of justice where a man has stated the contrary of what everybody thought he would. I will give the evidence of what I said myself in 1884, as reported in the Hansard. Here is what I said:

"I notice that this amount of $960,000 is only one-half of the first amount that was to be given to the Government of the Province of Quebec according to the principle laid down in the first paragraph; so, in order to enable the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to reach Quebec, we take away from the Provincial Government the sum of $6,000 per mile to which that province is entitled, by what I may call the preamble of the resolution, as I take it for granted the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is not willing to go to Quebec. I observe that the paragraphs that we have already adopted, instead of forcing the Canadian Pacific Railway to Quebec, sends it elsewhere through the United States."

I predicted that in 1884, and unfortunately I was too near the truth. I suppose the hon. Minister does not want to refer to 1885. I may tell him in advance that in that year I was in the North-West.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. You were better engaged.

Mr. AMYOT. In 1884, I was opposed to the then Government on some questions, especially concerning the autonomy of the provinces, and also concerning legislation regarding certain private Bills. With the exceptions I have named, I supported the Administration, though I objected to that legislation.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. You objected, but you voted for it.

Mr. AMYOT. There was no vote taken, so far as I remember.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No, of course; but you voted for it.

Mr. AMYOT. I said then that I would propose an amendment so as not to take away from the Province of Quebec any part of the $12,000 that the province was entitled to. But of course, trying to overthrow the Government on that point in 1884, would not have been a reasonable task. I will go on reading what I said on that occasion so as to take away from the hon. gentleman's mind the idea he expressed:

"The Province of Quebec has built the railway which forms part of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It has been always understood that the Canadian Pacific Railway was to reach from ocean to ocean on Canadian soil, and it has been stated and reiterated from year to year that Montreal and Quebec would be benefited by the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have been told of steamboats that were to cross between Quebec and Lévis; we have changed the course of the Intercolonial Railway by the St. Charles branch; we have brought the Grand Trunk Railway from Lévis to Rivière du Loup—all that to complete this great national route. But now, Mr. Chairman, instead of doing that, we put aside three-fourths of the Province of Quebec, and say, 'you shall benefit no more from the Canadian Pacific Railway; we are going to send it elsewhere.' To-day, under pretext to sending it to St. John or to other cities in the Maritime Provinces, we send it in the direction of Portland or Boston, or some other port in the United States, and there our commerce will consequently go. I think that before doing that we should, as far as possible, compel the Canadian Pacific Railway to remain in our own country, to benefit our own country, and to develop our cities at home instead of those of the United States. However, without going further into details, I repeat that I see no reasons for giving that sum of money to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and taking it away from the Province of Quebec. The principle laid down is just, and we are entitled to it. The Province of Quebec built the whole road from Quebec to Ottawa, and is just as much entitled to $12,000 a mile between Montreal and Quebec as it is between Montreal and Ottawa."

Then, on page 1495, I went on to speak still more explicitly, and I opposed any legislation which would take away from the Province of Quebec that large amount, either to build a second line, or to compel the company to buy the existing line. What do we care for the name of the company that has a railway going to Quebec?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Hear, hear.

Mr. AMYOT. The hon. gentleman goes on saying I did.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No; I said the Quebec deputation wanted to have "Canadian Pacific Railway" written on the cars and nothing else.

Mr. AMYOT. I never was a party to that, I never knew anything about it, and the Government should at once have informed the public at large that those who came to them in that deputation had such extraordinary plans; they were to be watched very closely. Now, Sir, against the assertion of the hon. Minister—which, of course, was made in good faith—I put my positive denial, and it is proved by what I said then, and since that time I have frequently had occasion in this House to reiterate my assertion and to affirm that that grant was taken away from the province contrary to a formal agreement that was entered into. We had consented to give $30,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway on condition that our province got compensation, because we had built a great part of the line. The Government promised us such compensation, but they failed to fulfil their promises. They have done worse than that; they have built what they call a short line, which is no short line at all. They have driven away commerce from our district, and to-day, if we have no bridge at Quebec, it is because the Government have arranged things so that it would be too great a sacrifice. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have no interest now in building a bridge across the St. Lawrence at Lévis, because, when they arrive at Quebec they reach the end of their railroad. They would be interested in a bridge if they had built a new line from Lévis to join their short line. Now, if, instead of that, the Government had pursued the policy of building a bridge and of disposing of the Intercolonial Railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway, we would have a good railway, all on Canadian soil, running from ocean to ocean; we would not have diverted our railway from its natural course on British soil, and we would not have driven away our commerce to the United States. To-day we do not want to oppose this legislation, but we only desire to assert that some of the rights of the province are not granted, that other promises made by the Government have not been fulfilled. We say to the Government: If you are in power to-day, it is due to the policy you announced by your authorized agents, the policy of building a bridge. But, since you declare that you are unable to build the bridge, we ask you to do the next best thing, and put on ferry steamers to transport cars from one shore to the other.

On resolution 4,

Mr. LAURIER. I have no objection to the wording of these resolutions, because I agree in the main with the conclusion of the Government; but the manner in which this resolution is worded is calculated to convey the impression that that road is to some extent an inferior one, that there is no traffic to maintain it, or at all events not sufficient to make it a paying road. This is not the case, however. There is reason to believe, and I think I will be supported by every one in this contention, that if that portion of the road had been placed on the same footing as the portion lying between Ottawa and Montreal, the result would have been the same on this section as on the section between Montreal and Ottawa. But the agreement which we made had as its natural conclusion the impairment of the value of this road, because the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were not willing to put it in the same condition as other portions of the road, so that it might have been in a position to have gained all the advantages it might have received otherwise. My objection to the wording of the resolution is taken, because I want to make it plain, as was stated by the Secretary of State, that this is not at all a favour done to the City of Quebec or the Province of Quebec, but is simply carrying out an agreement made in 1884, and as that agreement was not made in a satisfactory manner the present legislation is a necessity.

Mr. LANGELIER. There is another reason in favour of what has been stated by the leader of the Opposition. It is stated in the agreement of 1885 that if the receipts of the railway were sufficient to pay working expenses and interests on the debt due to the Local Government, and interest on the debentures, the whole should be paid ; if not, the whole should not be paid. There was no provision made in regard to determining the division of the receipts of the road. I have been told by those who are pretty well informed, among others by the president of the Board of Trade of Quebec, that the receipts of the railway between Quebec and Montreal were apportioned in such a way that the eight miles from Montreal to St. Martins Junction obtained as much of the receipts as the 164 miles between St. Martin's Junction and the city of Quebec. It is quite easy to understand that, although the railway may have had a large traffic, it could never pay under those circumstances. It may be that there was some exaggeration in what was reported; but there was no provision, I repeat, for a division of the gross receipts of the railway ; and if that portion of the road between St. Martin's Junction and Montreal, which is only eight miles in length, obtained almost the same proportion as that portion of the line between St. Martin's Junction and Quebec, 164 miles in length, there need be no surprise that the latter portion of the road has not paid. The truth is it has paid very well. Let us take a case mentioned to me. Freight is carried between Quebec and Montreal, and as much is charged for the distance between Montreal and St. Martin's Junction as is charged between St. Martin's Junction and Quebec. If $1 is charged for freight, 50 cents is for the distance from Montreal to St. Martin's Junction and 50 cents for the whole distance between St. Martin's Junction and Quebec. It is easy to see that the road could not pay when the charge for eight miles and for 164 miles was equal. That, I am told, has been the system followed. There was no control over the division of the receipts, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, whose interest it was to make as bad a showing as possible between St. Martin's Junction and Quebec, arranged their figures and accounts in such a way as to show that that portion of the line between St. Martin's Junction and Quebec did not pay. All those who travel between Quebec and Montreal, and Montreal and Ottawa will bear me out when I say there is more passenger traffic on the portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Quebec and Montreal than on any other portion. I have travelled between Montreal and Ottawa almost as frequently as between Montreal and Quebec, and I have travelled sometimes, not frequently, between Montreal and Toronto, and there are quite as many passengers on every train I have seen between Quebec and Montreal as between Montreal and Toronto, and as many, if not more, passengers travelling on the line between Quebec and Montreal than on the line between Ottawa and Montreal. If those other portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway pay, I do not see why the other portion between Montreal and Quebec should not pay. I do not blame the Canadian Pacific Railway for the action they have taken, as it was in their interest. It was their interest to make a poor showing for the line between St. Martin's and Quebec, in order to prevent the value of the debentures going up. It is quite evident that if the traffic between St. Martin's Junction and Quebec, as reported by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and as shown by their own account, was sufficient to pay the interest on their debentures, they would acquire a value and the company would have had less chance of getting rid of them. They wanted to get rid of them, and they took the necessary steps to prevent them from ever having any value. The company held that it was better to get rid of them, and the purchase of the bonds was a misappropriation of the money voted by Parliament in 1885, as it was using that money for an investment. It was never contemplated by Parliament, when $1,500,000 was voted in 1885, that nearly $1,000,000 of that amount should be used for making an investment. What is the difference between an investment in the bonds of the Northern Pacific and of the North Shore? No one would deny that it was a misappropriation if the Government had used $978,000 to purchase bonds of the Northern Pacific, or the Union Pacific, or the Canadian Pacific Railway, or any other railway. What has been done is exactly the same in effect. Instead of buying bonds of American roads or of a Canadian road, the Government bought the bonds of the North Shore Railway, and they bought them as an investment, and we see the result in the Public Accounts. Ever since 1885 those bonds have appeared in the Public Accounts as an asset of the Dominion of Canada. If they appear as an asset there must have been an investment which the Government had no right to make; and I am very glad they are going to dispose of this asset and to do justice to Quebec, which has not been dealt justly by since 1885. At the election in 1887 we had the release of that $1,000,000 of bonds, as it was called, promised to the electors of Quebec if they returned supporters of the Government. I presume that now the Government see that if they made the same sort of promises at an election the promise would be taken as an insult by the electors. It did not have much effect at the last election, and I presume, that is the only reason why the city of Quebec is now going to obtain a tardy justice from the Government.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I would not like to leave my hon. friend under a wrong impression. If the information that he has received from Quebec is what he has stated to the House, his information is not correct. My hon. friend said that that part of the Canadian Pacific Railway which lies between St. Martin's Junction and Montreal was paying the Canadian Pacific Railway as much as the whole balance of the line between St. Martin's Junction and Quebec. I am no more the auditor of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company than my hon. friend is; but I believe that if my hon. friend says that the Canadian Pacific Railway were charging for freights or passengers as much between St. Martin's Junction and Montreal as between St. Martin's Junction and Quebec, my hon. friend is wrong. If the Canadian Pacific Railway is an honest company, and they are known to be so, their accounts can only be kept according to the agreement which was entered into when the Canadian Pacific acquired the railway between Ottawa and Montreal. They were the proprietors of the road between St. Martin's Junction and Montreal, and the Quebec Government was the owner of the line between St. Martin's Junction and Quebec, and when they acquired that part of the railway between Montreal and Ottawa, we made an arrangement by which special rates were agreed and accepted on both sides between Montreal and St. Martin's Junction. My hon. friend may take it for granted that the rates which were then agreed upon, when the railway was sold by the Government at Quebec and when I was Minister of Railways, are the rates which are carried out now. I say that in keeping their books and in making out their accounts the Canadian Pacific Railway could not have charged more than the exact rates that were agreed upon when the railway between Montreal and Ottawa was sold to them, and when all the arrangements were fixed between the Government of Quebec and the Canadian Pacific Railway for freight and passengers between Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. LANGELIER. I gave these figures simply as an instance of the idea I wanted to convey; but I will mention a fact that was stated to me. It is understood by everyone who has any knowledge of the management of railways, that they charge proportionately less for a long haul than for a short haul, and on the portion between St. Martin's Junction and Montreal they charge for a short haul.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Of course.

Mr. LANGELIER. Instead of charging for the long haul between Quebec and Montreal, and giving the same proportion to the eight miles between Montreal and St. Martin's Junction as to any other eight miles of the road, the whole charge for the short haul was made for the eight miles from Montreal to St. Martin's Junction, and then the rest of the distance only received the balance of the money. That is what I was told.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend is right there. The short haul rates were applied for traffic between St. Martin's Junction and Montreal, and if the Canadian Pacific Railway did not do that they would rob themselves, which I do not think they are in the habit of doing.

Mr. LAURIER. This is somewhat outside of the question. The only thing I object to in the wording of the resolution is that persons throughout the country will have the impression that the Government is getting rid of an asset which is of no use whatever. In my estimation the resolution would have been preferable if it had been stated that this is carrying out the legislation of 1884 and nothing else; but instead of that the impression seems to be conveyed to the public at large: Don't you fear, the country loses nothing, the assets are worthless, the line is not a paying one and, therefore, it is just as well to get rid of it.

On resolution 5,

Mr. LANGELIER. I would like to know what is the intended capacity of the grain elevator to be erected at Quebec? It is of great importance to know what the capacity of that elevator will be.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I cannot state what the capacity will be, as there is no agreement on that point. The basis of the whole arrangement is that the accommodation provided for there shall be such as is sufficient for the future trade of the city in view of the improvements to be made on this line. The negotiations with the Canadian Pacific Railway are all on the supposition that the improvement of the line will greatly develop the trade of the City of Quebec, and also that the facilities to be afforded there are facilities in the interest of the railway company as well as the city, and that it will be necessary that the railway company should provide ample facilities there, when the traffic is improved by the improvement of the line itself. We, therefore, leave to the company the capacity of the elevator and matters of that kind, believing that their own interest will be the best guide as to that.

Mr. LANGELIER. I see at the end of this resolution that all these improvements are to be completed to the satisfaction of the Minister of Railways. I would like to know what kind of grain elevator will satisfy the Minister of Railways? Some capacity must have been contemplated when this resolution was prepared. It is quite evident that if this will be only an elevator of 20,000 bushels capacity, it will be useless. If it were stated in the resolution that the elevator shall be the same as that erected near the Canadian Pacific Railway depôt in Montreal, it could be easily understood. I think that should be mentioned, because otherwise the company will be at liberty to erect an elevator of 20,000 or 25,000 bushels capacity, which would be useless for commercial purposes. The commercial men of Quebec, who are deeply interested in this resolution, ought to know the capacity of that flour shed.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I understand that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company believe that it will be necessary to have more than one, and they hold themselves ready to erect four or five if necessary. But my hon. friend will see that Quebec has been very well treated, because the works to be done in Quebec are specifically mentioned, as well as those at Three Rivers. It is not to be supposed that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would erect an immense elevator at Three Rivers and a small one at Quebec. My hon. friend should know that the port of Quebec will and must necessarily have the best accommodation for the future traffic that the company will be able to procure. If anybody has to complain, it is not Quebec, but the other localities on the line; the other places will have to look only to the good-will of the company under their agreement with the Government.

Mr. LANGELIER. It is just as well that the resolutions should not enter into these details, because after they are adopted, and a Bill based upon them is passed, the Government will have to enter into an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to carry out these resolutions; and if we were to bind the Government in advance by some cast-iron resolution, it might embarrass them in their negotiations. But I would like the Government in the agreement to mention the capacity of the elevator; that is, the Government should make such an arrangement that if it is not carried out, they could proceed by law to compel the company to carry it out. The resolution provides for a grain elevator at Three Rivers; but Three Rivers has no right to any of this money. When it was voted in 1885, it was not contemplated that any portion of it should go to make improvements at Three Rivers. It was not intended that Three Rivers should be the summer terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but Quebec; and I do not see how you are going to secure the summer terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Quebec by building an elevator at Three Rivers.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman forgets the speech of his leader, Mr. Joly, about the great progress and prospects of Three Rivers.

Mr. LAURIER. Give us your answer.

Mr. LANGELIER. So much the better for Three Rivers; but what I say is that in 1885, when that money was voted, it was never intended to be expended at Three Rivers, but at Quebec.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand, from the explanations of the hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. Secretary of State, that the Government had no specifications from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of the nature of the works which they intend to construct, but that they have simply a general knowledge?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is true, there is no detail with regard to these expenditures, and that is perhaps accounted for by the fact that we have not made any agreement on this subject with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. As the hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier) mentioned a few moments ago, until we come to settle the terms of the agreement, it is very difficult to fix details. We do propose, before entering into the agreement, to have some enquiry made as to the probable requirements of trade there; and, on consultation with the proper authorities, I think we can arrive at pretty correct conclusions as to the necessary dimensions of any works of this kind. It is probable that a grain elevator of at least a quarter of a million bushels capacity will be required at Quebec. It is likely that will be needed by the requirements of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself. The communication from the company in regard to that states:

"Additional siding accommodation and business tracks must be provided at Quebec, as well as an elevator and flour shed of such capacity as may be necessary to provide accommodation for the business of the railway at that port."

Later, the president of the company, writing as to the accommodation to be furnished by the flour shed, says:

"The additional building for the storage of flour is already specifically mentioned in the resolutions. The company is most anxious to increase the business of the line, so that more than one shed may be required. In fact, the company would be glad to find that the business required half a dozen such buildings, and it is needless to add that they would be provided with the greatest possible expedition."

Mr. LAURIER. This, I submit, is hardly satisfactory. It seems to me that Parliament has a right to know what is the nature of the improvements to be made—not in the bulk, or in full detail, but something like an accurate statement. Of course, I would not ask anything absolutely precise; but the resolution states that the whole is to be completed to the satisfaction of the Minister of Railways. Well, what standard has the Minister of Railways to guide him as to the nature of the work to be done? How is he to decide whether they are sufficient or not sufficient? It seems to me that before we come to the next stage or the final stage of this measure, Parliament ought to be placed in possession of more information on this point. Apart from that, what my hon. friend from Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier) has stated is correct, that this money was not intended at first for the City of Three Rivers, but for the City of Quebec.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It was not intended for the City of Quebec, but for the whole line.

Mr. LAURIER. It was intended to make Quebec the summer terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Does the hon. gentleman pretend that spending a portion of this money at Three Rivers will at all serve that object? It seems to me there is no connection between the two at all. What has the Piles Branch to do with this matter? How much will be expended in improving that branch?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The line is in running order, but, no doubt, has to be improved. There is no special figure mentioned. It would be rather dangerous to measure exactly the amount to be given each locality.

Mr. LAURIER. And this is the reason why Parliament is to be bound in advance. I see that the company is to expend upon the rolling stock $350,000, and upon all the other improvements $300,000. We release the company from a debt of $1,000,000, and they undertake only to spend $600,000. Moreover, if you bind the company to expend over all the lines, about one-third will have to be spent on the Piles Branch.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. What for? For cordwood?

Mr. LAURIER. I do not know what for. This is what seems so mysterious. I do not understand why this Piles Branch should be so favoured. Why is there nothing upon the L'Assomption Branch?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The L'Assomption Branch does not belong to the Canadian Pacific Railway, whereas the Piles Branch does.

Mr. LAURIER. I mention this just as an argument to show that we should have more details as to the manner in which this money is to be applied.

Resolution reported.

SHIPPING OF LIVE STOCK.

Mr. TUPPER moved concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 154) respecting the shipping of live stock. He said: The only amendment is in the direction of improving one of the sections which made a certain offence a misdemeanour, and it also makes another section more definite, which provides that the ships shall be liable to a penalty of $100 and seizure. It is to prevent misunderstanding.

Mr. LAURIER. This may be a good opportunity to ask from the Government some explanation with reference to the introduction of American cattle for slaughter into this country.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There was an announcement made here on that subject, but the hon. gentleman was not in his place.

Mr. HAGGART. I made the announcement the other day that there was an application from a company for the purpose of having cattle slaughtered at Three Rivers to be exported, the cattle to be admitted only under stringent regulations. The Government have not come to any decision, and will not without giving the subject the fullest consideration.

Mr. LAURIER. Is that a revival of the old meat company?

Mr. HAGGART. It is a new company.

Amendment concurred in.

DECK AND LOAD LINES.

Mr. TUPPER moved concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 106) to provide for the marking of deck and load lines. He said: The amendment is with the object of making clearer the seventh sub-section of the seventh section, and does not change the effect of the Bill.

Amendment concurred in.

SUPPLY—TRENT VALLEY CANAL.

Mr. FOSTER moved that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BARRON. It will be remembered that, a few days ago, when I rose to discuss the subject of the Trent Canal, the Minister of Justice asked me to allow it to stand until the acting Minister of Railways would be in his seat. I was glad to accede to the request of the hon. gentleman, because I was anxious that the fuliest discussion should take place upon the merits of the scheme, and was specially anxious that we should have some information from the Government as to their future course in connection with this great work. I am glad now to see that the hon. Minister of Customs, under whose special charge are these particular works, has recovered from his illness and is now in his seat. When I say he is now in his seat, I see that he is not actually in his seat, but I mean that he has sufficiently recovered to be in the House, and before the discussion ceases I hope we shall have some remarks from him or from some members of the Government in regard to this great work. I may say that I have asked some gentlemen on the other side of the House, and some gentlemen on this side of the House, to take part in this discussion, knowing that they were interested in this great work, and I hope that before the House adjourns to-night there will be a sufficiently full discussion to enable the people in the Midland district of Ontario to come to a definite conclusion as to what the views of many hon. gentlemen are on this great subject. In approaching the discussion of this subject, I am quite willing to admit that there may be some force in the statement that the Government of to-day is not the Government of a short time ago. I am quite willing to admit that the Premier of to-day is not the Premier of a short time ago, that the hon. gentleman who presides over the destinies of Canada, as far as the premiership goes, is not the gentleman who was in that position a short time ago, and who was answerable to the representative of the Crown and responsible to the people as far as this great subject is concerned. Therefore, perhaps hon. gentlemen opposite might anticipate my remarks by saying that, as far as the Government of the day is concerned, they have a right to say that they have not yet announced their policy upon this great subject, and thus anticipate criticism. But I take it that, to a certain extent, any argument or any answer of that nature from hon. gentlemen opposite is somewhat taken away from them by reason of the announcement made by them soon after the late Premier's death, the announcement made by the then Minister of Public Works, who, I believe, has recently resigned his portfolio, to the effect that the policy to be pursued by the gentlemen now in office was to be the same in all particulars as that which was pursued in times past by the Conservative party. That being so, I do not think that it will lie in the mouths of hon. gentlemen opposite to say they have a right, before any adverse criticism—and I do not propose to deal in much adverse criticism—to announce their policy upon this great subject, great indeed to a large number of people in the Province of Ontario, and more particularly to the people of the Midland district of Ontario. In view, then, of the announcement made by the then Minister of Public Works that the policy of the present Government is the policy which has characterized and actuated the members of the Government in the past during the lifetime of the late Premier, I have a right to see what that policy has been, and to let those who are interested know, so far as the past is concerned, what the policy is likely to be in the future. There can be no doubt that in the past their policy has been one of professed intention to at once proceed and construct this great work. I may read as I did the other night, and I shall do now without showing that alleged undue feeling and alleged improper warmth with which I was then charged, the telegram sent by the late Premier to a gentleman at Trenton in regard to the policy of the Government, at all events up to the death of the late Premier, in regard to the construction of this work known as the Trent Valley Canal. On the 3rd March, he telegraphed from Kingston to Mr. Murphy in these words:

"KINGSTON, March 3, 1891.

"D. R. MURPHY,
"Trenton.

"Trent Valley Canal commission have reported favourably on the completion of the scheme. Parliament will be asked next session for a grant for the purpose.

(Sgd.) "JOHN A. MACDONALD."

The people have reason to complain of the manner in which the Government have played at battledore and shuttlecock with this great work, and of the non-fulfilment of the promises which have been made just anterior to every general election. There could not be a more distinct and determined promise than this which is contained in the telegram sent by the late Premier to Mr. Murphy, and, in accordance with the statement made by the Minister of Public Works before he resigned his portfolio, that the policy now actuating hon. gentlemen opposite would be the same as that which actuated them in the past, I think they are in honour bound to carry out this promise made by the late Premier, Sir John Macdonald, in his lifetime to the people on behalf of whom Mr. Murphy telegraphed to him. There can be no doubt about the authenticity of that telegram. As I said a few nights ago, the original was seen by me, and was read by Mr. Murphy at a large public meeting in the town of Peterborough, at which there were present the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson), the hon. member for East Peterborough (Mr. Burnham), the hon. member from North Ontario (Mr. Madill), and I think, though I am not sure, the hon. member for South Victoria (Mr. Fairbairn).

Mr. FAIRBAIRN. I think we should wait until the members for West Peterborough and East Peterborough are present before we discuss this question. They are as much interested as anyone in this Trent Valley route.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. FAIRBAIRN. At all events, I may say that I was not present at that meeting.

Mr. BARRON. I said I was not sure whether the hon. gentleman was there or not. When the hon. gentleman becomes more familiar with the practices of this House, he will know that hon. members should be in their seats, and I may state that so anxious was I to have them present that I have repeatedly told them that this discussion was coming on, and I actually took the trouble this afternoon to try and find these hon. gentlemen and have them here. As a further proof of the past policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, I want to read what the chief engineer wrote on the 21st May, 1881, in regard to this great work :

"SIR,—By direction of the Minister, I have to request that you will be pleased to take the necessary steps to obtain, during the ensuing summer, surveys for the system of canals, &c., whereby communication may be made between the Bay of Quinté and the Georgian Bay, already in part effected through the Trent River works, for which survey the sum of $6,000 was voted by Parliament at its last session."

I wish to emphasize the words "between the Bay of Quinté and the Georgian Bay," because by these words it will be seen that the intention of the Government was to afford communication between those points by using the internal waters, and of course to afford communication between those points means the final construction of the Trent Valley Canal. Then we go on a little further, and we find that Sir Charles Tupper, on the 6th April, 1882, reported to Council as follows :—

"The undersigned has the honour to report that from time to time, for many years past, as is shown in many successive annual and other reports, the establishment of a line of water communication between Lake Ontario and the mouth of the River Trent and Lake Huron, through the utilizing of existing river and lake waters, has been under consideration."

I might cite numerous statements from speeches made by hon. gentlemen opposite, in authority, to show that the intention has always been, and has always been expressed to be, at important periods of time by hon. gentlemen opposite, to go on with the construction of this work, and to complete the whole as a waterway from the two points I have mentioned.

If being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BARRON. Before proceeding with the discussion of the subject with which I was dealing before recess, I wish to notice a remark made by my hon. friend from South Victoria (Mr. Fairbairn). No doubt, that hon. gentleman thought I was proceeding somewhat harshly in discussing this question in the absence of some hon. members interested in the subject of discussion, but he must know that it is the duty of hon. gentlemen to be in the House, and instead of desiring to proceed in their absence, I appealed to the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson), to the hon. member for East Peterborough (Mr. Burnham), and to other hon. gentlemen in this House, all of whom know that I was anxious that the fullest possible discussion should take place, and I desired that these hon. gentlemen should be present. I appealed also to the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), whom I also asked to take part in this discussion, and who knows, as well as these hon. gentlemen I have mentioned, that I was anxious they should be present and speak on this subject, in order that the country might be made aware of the great merits of this work. Therefore, I think the hon. member for South Victoria was unfair and unjust in his interruptions, besides being out of order according to parliamentary rules. I was proceeding to point out that the pronounced policy of the Government has always been in favour of the construction of this canal, not merely for the purpose of opening up the internal waters in the interior of the province, but in order to proceed with the work as a great highway from the waters of the Georgian Bay to the mouth of the River Trent. I had given before recess several quotations in support of my contention as to what has been the policy of hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches. I find further that the late Premier, speaking in Peterborough, in the month of June, 1882, just before a general election, spoke as follows :—

"Every town of a sufficient size wanted a post office and a Custom house, and every part of the country wanted some improvement in order to develop its resources, just as those he was addressing demanded carrying out of the Trent navigation system, and they were going to get it. It was by a mere chance that the Government had the opportunity of carrying out that great project of inland navigation."

Then, speaking of the Trent waters, the late Premier said :

"The Government kept them until the revenue had expanded sufficiently to justify them in coming to Parliament, as they did last session, and getting a subsidy voted, which will be sufficient to add 150 miles of internal communication to their part of the country. That vote taken last session would, however, amply guarantee that the whole work would be carried out as fast as the revenue allowed so that it might be constructed."

Thus, Mr. Speaker, you will see that when the late Premier spoke of the whole work, he did not mean to confine it to the internal waters, but he meant it as a work connecting the waters of the Georgian Bay and the waters of Lake Ontario. Then we find that the hon. member for West Peterborough, speaking on the night of the election, in 1887, in the town of Peterborough, said :

"The Minister of Public Works had given him every assurance that the Trent Valley Canal contract between Peterborough and Lakefield, would be let during the coming summer. This was no electioneering dodge, because the elections were now all over."

Now, when the hon. member spoke these words on the night of the election, he must have had an intimation from the hon. Minister of Public Works, whom I now see in his seat, before the election came off, and of course he was expected to use the information in order to carry his seat by the large majority which he actually received. So you see that on every occasion hon. gentlemen opposite have been authorized by the late Premier and by the Government to promise to the electors that the work was going to be completed as a great through work; and it is that promise, recently made in a telegram by the First Minister, which I have read to the House, and was even made to the electors prior to the general elections, it is that promise which I now ask the Government to fulfil, a promise in accord with the policy which the Minister of Public Works stated only a short time ago the Government intended to carry out as part and parcel of the policy of the Conservative party. Now, I will read a statement made by the late First Minister to this House on the 11th July, 1885, and surely it cannot be said that such a statement made upon the floor of the House before the representatives of the people, is not an authoritative statement. Speaking of the Trent Valley Canal, he said:

"The subject is a very old one, and it has been reported on by many able engineers, and at last the Government adopted the idea of making a permanent work by connecting the two great waterways."

The two great waterways being, of course, the Georgian Bay and the waters of Lake Ontario. The late Premier went on to say:

"It may be it cannot compete in all respects with other and deeper waterways, and with a railway system, but it will be substantially a Dominion work connecting the two waters, and at the same time a great advantage to any district of country through which it passes."

I might go on quoting remarks and speeches made and promises given by hon. gentlemen opposite sitting, not on the back benches, not behind the Government, but sitting on the Treasury benches themselves, promises made time and again, to go on with this undertaking, not merely as a system connecting the internal waters of the province, but as a system connecting the great waterways which I have just mentioned. Now, when the Government, and especially the late Premier, promised so often that this work would be carried on, it is reasonable to suppose that they had sufficient information before them to enable them to make those promises, and no doubt they had. Nevertheless, they thought fit to appoint a commission. When they appointed a commission to ascertain whether this work should go on or not, whether it was feasible or not, I did quarrel with hon. gentlemen opposite for appointing the commission, because I thought, and I still think, that the commission was appointed for no other object than merely to gain time and to encourage the people still to believe that the Government would fulfil the promises they had made to them. I do not quarrel now with hon. gentlemen opposite for having appointed that commission, but I say that having done so, and the commission now having reported in favour of the construction of the work, I appeal to hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches to say to-night what they intend to do in regard to this matter. In face of the telegram sent by the late Premier to Mr. Murphy, that the Trent Valley Canal commission having reported in favour of the construction of the work, we were justified in expecting that the Government, at this session of Parliament, would place a sum in the Estimates for the purpose of completing this great work. At the time the commission was appointed I found fault. Why? Because the gentlemen appointed, at least so far as two of them were concerned, were gentlemen whose interests were entirely adverse to the construction of this work. One was Mr. Frank Turner, of Toronto, whose interests, if he had any, lay in the direction of another canal; and the other gentleman was Mr. John Kennedy, of Montreal, whose interests likewise, if he had any, were against the construction of the Trent Valley Canal. But, notwithstanding that the interests of those gentlemen were against the construction of the canal, they found, on examination of the facts and on taking the evidence, which occupies 1,700 pages, that they were compelled, notwithstanding that one lived in Toronto and the other in Montreal, to report in favour of the construction and early completion of this great work. I hold the report in my hand. I will not ask the House to listen to it, because it is of considerable length; but I will content myself by simply stating that the report is in favour of the construction of the work, and if any hon. gentleman doubts my statement, I refer him to the telegram I have read, sent by the late Premier to Mr. Murphy, wherein he says the Trent Valley commissioners have reported in favour of the construction of the work. I find that both inside this House and outside this House, except among gentlemen who have taken trouble to study this great question, there is considerable opposition and antipathy to going on with the work. I find even on my side of the House, and also on the other side of the House, hon. gentlemen seem not to realize the importance of this work. They do not seem to appreciate it, and I can account for that fact in no other way than that they have never yet taken the trouble to consider this great project in all its phases. The Minister of Customs the other night, acting in the capacity of Minister of Canals, stated, in support of the construction of a canal on the north side of the St. Lawrence in the place of the Beauharnois Canal, that it was a very old subject and had been thought of for a great many years. In like manner, if that is any argument, I may say to the hon. gentleman, that this likewise is a very old project and has been thought of for a great many years. I find that in 1827 it was first thought of, and a special committee of the Lower House of the Parliament of Upper Canada was appointed to consider the matter. The committee's report was as follows:—

"Exceedingly desirable and important that those waters which constitute the chain of lakes and rivers which run in a south-easterly direction from the vicinity of Lake Simcoe, and which empty into the Bay of Quinté by the River Trent, should be examined and surveyed by competent persons, with a view to ascertain how far they might be rendered navigable, and the probable expense attending the same."

In accordance with the report of that committee, surveyers were sent out. But it might be assumed from that recommendation that it was only intended to connect the interior waters, and not to make a great through canal. Further on, it is stated:

"It seems to have been well understood at the time, that the small wooden lock thus executed was only a temporary expedient, and that works on a much larger scale with stone locks and on a comprehensive plan, extending from Lake Ontario to Lake Huron, would be ultimately undertaken."

So, as far back as 1827, it was anticipated that a great through canal would be built from the waters of Lake Huron to the waters of Lake Ontario. In pursuance of that recommendation in 1827, I find that Mr. L. H. Baird went on and made a survey in 1833 and 1835, and in pursuance of his survey and recommendation there were locks built at Bobcaygeon, Little Lake, Hastings, and Chisholm Rapids. We can now take advantage of the locks built at that time. Later on, in 1841, surveys were made by Mr. Lyon and Mr. Keefer; and a few years since, under the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite, locks were built at Burleigh, Lovesick, Buckhorn, and Fenelon Falls. Here, I may be permitted to say, that the works done in these respective places which I have named, are magnificent works. They are, it is said, far too good for the occasion and the locality. That, at all events, is the report of the Trent Valley Commissioners, and, in consequence, the commissioners state in their report that a great saving could be effected to the country by building in the future less expensive locks. With regard to the locks already built—and I draw attention to this fact without any desire to make adverse criticism—the Trent Valley Commissioners have reported that the locks at these places, which are 134 feet by 33, are too wide and they need only be 134 feet by 23, and thereby another saving would be effected on further construction. The locks are 5 feet in depth, and are constructed for side-wheel steamers instead of for tugs and barges. So, on the work done, this large and expensive work, an excessive amount of $20,000 has been expended on the construction of each lock, and $80,000 is estimated by me as having been unnecessarily spent in connection with the work. In passing, I may say that we can save $20,000 on each lock, and as there will be 71 locks a total sum of $1,500,000 may be saved in the future by building less expensive locks. If this work is completed, and it must be completed, if hon. gentlemen desire to carry out their promises and fulfil their pledges made to the people, and desire to be honest, fair and just, and not get the reputation of being deceitful, if they carry out this work we will obtain an uninterrupted waterway from Matchedash Bay to Trenton. That is the course recommended by the Trent Valley Commissioners, the distance being 197 miles. Let me refer to the report of the commissioners to show for a moment what has been done. The report says:

"The commissioners appointed 'to consider the question of further extending the line of water communication between Lake Huron and Lake Ontario, and to determine whether any other local works are necessary and whether it is advisable that an extension of the main work should be undertaken, and, if so, to what extent,' beg leave to report:

"The main work referred to is what is commonly known as the Trent Valley Canal, being a projected waterway from Matchedash Bay, Georgian Bay, Lake Huron, to Trenton on the Bay of Quinté, Lake Ontario.

"The works already completed, as set forth in the report of the Chief Engineer of Canals, have rendered navigable the following portions of the main route, viz.:—Balsam Lake to the village of Lakefield; the town of Peterborough to Heeley's Falls on the Trent River, leaving necessary to be done, according to the same report, to render the whole route navigable, the following sections, viz.:—A canal from Matchedash Bay to Lake Couchiching, a distance of 13 21-100 miles, requiring 14 locks; a canal from Lake Simcoe to Balsam Lake, 17 74-100 miles, requiring 11 locks; a canal from the village of Lakefield to the town of Peterborough, 9 61-100 miles, requiring 13 locks; a canal and improvement in the present navigation between Heeley's Falls and Hoard's Creek, 10 85-100 miles, requiring 23 locks; improvement in the present navigation between Hoard's Creek and Frankford, and a canal between Frankford and Trenton, 7 29-100 miles, requiring 10 locks."

Accordingly, 71 locks are still required to make an entire through waterway from Matchedash Bay to the Bay of Quinté on Lake Ontario. I find, in conversation with hon. gentlemen whom I have endeavoured to convert to my views on this great work, that there is a feeling that it is going to launch us into tremendous expenditure. They seem frightened to undertake it because they do not know where the money is to come from, or where we are going to end if the expenditure is once begun. It is true that the original estimate by Mr. Rubidge was, I believe, about $10,000,000, but with the increased engineering knowledge and facilities of to-day, that estimate is found to be altogether too high, and the general consensus of opinion is that the expense of the work can be very greatly reduced from that. Let me ask the attention of the House while I show from figures I have taken from the reports of engineers, how the cost can be brought very much below the original estimate of Mr. Rubidge. That original estimate for 197 miles was $8,685,000, and there has been expended since then $1,100,000. The other night the Minister questioned the accuracy of my figures, but I have since ascertained whether they were correct or not, and I find that the figures I gave then are practically correct, and that there has been $1,100,000 expended since the beginning of the work, leaving a balance to be expended of $7,558,000 according to the original estimate of Mr. Rubidge. The commissioners who have reported upon this canal point out that a great saving can be effected. It is said that 35 per cent. can be saved by a difference in the class of work on the lockage, and 10 per cent. on the reaches between the locks, which will altogether amount to $2,000,000, reducing the original estimate to $5,585,000. I have already pointed out that the commissioners have reported that the locks are too expensively built, that they are too wide and can be reduced from 33 feet to 23 feet and that the cost of each lock could be lessened by $20,000, which for the 71 locks would be a reduction of $1,420,000; thus reducing Mr. Rubidge's estimate of $8,685,000 to the sum of $4,165,000 still to be expended, that is, including the $1,100,000 already expended. If we carry out the recommendations of the commissioners the cost of this great work, instead of being $10,000,000, will be reduced to the sum of $4,165,000 yet to be expended, and I would ask the attention of the House to the peculiar coincidence that this reduced cost practically corresponds with the estimate of Mr. Starke, an engineer who also made an estimate of the cost. Therefore, the expenditure on this important work ought not to frighten hon. gentlemen or to frighten the country, because, as I have already said, instead of costing $10,000,000 it will only cost $4,500,000 or $5,000,000. I can recollect well that Sir Charles Tupper, whether in this House or when travelling through the country I forget which, said that if the cost would not be more than $3,000,000, then, so far as he was concerned, he was quite willing to let the contract to any person who would undertake to complete the work for that amount of money. I want now to draw the attention of the House to what I consider to be a little unfair treatment of the Province of Ontario, and especially of the Midland district of Ontario, through which this canal runs. Let me point out what are the subsidies to railways received by the different provinces, excepting the Canadian Pacific Railway main line and the Sault Branch. Since Confederation Quebec has received $7,948,667 in railway subsidies paid out of the Dominion treasury: New Brunswick has received $4,261,972; Nova Scotia has received $8,936,882, while in the Province of Ontario the Dominion Government has only spent on railways the sum of $1,970,000, and besides that declared our own roads to be within their jurisdiction: and so, when we come to ask this House and this Government for a little fair-play from a subsidy standpoint, in constructing this great work, we tell them that if they spend $5,000,000 upon it, they would not then have given to the Province of Ontario as much money, so far as public works are concerned, as they have given to the Province of Quebec, or to the Province of New Brunswick, or to the Province of Nova Scotia. I say that gentlemen interested in property in the Midland districts of Ontario, and living there, have a right to come here and ask the Government to fulfil their promises, especially in view of the fact that so far as our interests are concerned we have not received fair-play at the hands of the Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think it is extremely discreditable that hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House should keep up noises as they are now doing. My hon. friend is speaking on a question of immense interest, not only to his own constituency, but to a large portion of the province from which he comes. This is the first time he has discussed the question this session, and the least hon. gentlemen opposite can do is that they will not disturb him while speaking.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must ask hon. gentlemen to keep order.

Mr. BARRON. It does not disturb me at all, so long as hon. gentlemen can hear what I say. I know that hon. gentlemen who are making the noise do not desire to hear, but it will not be very creditable to the Government side of the House to let the people who are interested in this great work know that noise and clamour have been going on from the Conservative side of the House when this work is being discussed, in which so many people are deeply concerned and interested. I must ask for a moment or two the attention of the House while I point out what is known to all of us, that there are on this continent the northern, the western, the southern, and the eastern water slopes by which our trade and commerce is conducted in and from this continent. So far as the northern and western outlets are concerned, we may dismiss them at once, because they do not come into competition with the southern outlet or the eastern outlet; but I must ask the attention of the House for a few moments while I discuss the southern and eastern outlets. The great competing water route with the St. Lawrence is the Mississippi. That river affords 20,000 miles of inland navigation. It drains by its main and tributary streams nearly half the territory of the United States, or an area of 1,226,000 square miles. Its length from its source to the Gulf of Mexico is 3,160 miles, or if the Missouri be included it would extend to 4,491 miles. In its southerly course to the Gulf of Mexico it passes through ten states and is, for 1,000 miles from its mouth, from 2,200 to 5,000 feet in width. Its average inclination is about 3¼ inches per mile, but in summer it falls to 2⅓ inches. The level is raised in rainy seasons from 15 to 20 feet at New Orleans, and from 35 to 40 feet at the mouth of the Ohio. Now, I want to emphasize the magnitude of the great southern route, in contrasting it with the route viâ the St. Lawrence, for reasons which will appear hereafter. It will carry light draught vessels which can ascend 600 miles above the Ohio, and as far as 2,200 miles from the Gulf shoal water vessels can be used. The Ohio River which empties into it, can be navigated for 975 miles above its junction with the Mississippi, or at times even further. The States of Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia have both canals that are ultimately to be connected with the Ohio, if they are not so already, and the States of Ohio and Indiana have already built canals uniting the Ohio with Lake Erie, while Illinois and Wisconsin have also water communication between Lake Michigan and the Mississippi. Yet the engineers say that this great southern waterway cannot compare favourably or compete successfully with the great eastern route by way of the St. Lawrence. Although the Mississippi and the Ohio flow through a country possessed of every possible fertility, and prolific of every species of industry, the engineers, Messrs. McAlpine & Kirkwood, speak as follows:—

"The determination of the question of the best route for the water-borne trade to or from the west, is reduced to a comparison between the routes through the State of New York and that along the St. Lawrence."

So that, notwithstanding the enormous magnitude of the waters of the Mississippi and its tributary waters, affording inland navigation to such an enormous extent of territory, we find that nature has assisted us and made the great eastern route by way of the St. Lawrence the great carrying route for the trade of the far west. The St. Lawrence is the natural outlet of a great basin of inland waters. It drains an area of 400,000 square miles. The lakes and rivers alone represent 93,000 square miles. The area of territory, where commerce is tributary to the St. Lawrence outlet is 600,000 square miles. Its lakes contain fully one-half of the whole fresh-water of the globe. The stretch of navigable waters covered by the St. Lawrence and lakes and tributaries reaches not less than 4,000 miles. Then let us consider for a moment the distances. For instance, from Chicago to Liverpool the distance, viâ the Mississippi and New Orleans, is 6,006 miles; viâ the Erie Canal and New York, 4,600 miles; viâ the Welland Canal and the River St. Lawrence, 4,180 miles; but viâ the Trent Valley Canal and the St. Lawrence the distance is 4,025 miles, the shortest of all. Now, let me ask the House to listen for a moment to a comparison of the distances, viâ the Trent Valley Canal and the Welland Canal respectively, as shown by the evidence adduced before the commissioners. Of course, it may be said that so long as we have the Welland Canal there is no necessity for constructing the Trent

Valley Canal, and it may be said by those who are not familiar with the fact, that the distance by way of the Welland Canal would be just as short as that by way of the Trent Valley Canal; but such is not the fact. The statement given in evidence before the Trent Valley Canal Commission shows that from the Georgian Bay to Kingston by way of the Welland Canal the distance is 750 miles, while the distance by way of the Trent Valley Canal is only 370 miles, a little less than half. The time taken in going from the Georgian Bay to Kingston by way of the Welland Canal would be 139 hours, and by way of the Trent Valley Canal 98 hours, allowing the same length of time to go through the locks of the Welland Canal as through those of the Trent Valley Canal. It may be said, and very properly said, that the distance from the Georgian Bay to Kingston does not give altogether a fair comparison. Then take the distance from Sault Ste. Marie to Kingston: by way of the Welland Canal it is 795 miles, and by way of the Trent Valley Canal it is 540 miles. The time taken to go from Sault Ste. Marie to Kingston by the Welland Canal would be 145 hours, and the time taken to go by the Trent Valley Canal would be 124 hours. The question, too, is sometimes raised as to what trade there would be for the Trent Valley Canal. Let me ask the House to note this fact, that from the year 1884 to the year 1887 we sent from Collingwood 6,827,000 bushels of grain, and from Midland 7,841,894 bushels; besides the grain which was carried by way of the Welland Canal and by railways; so that it cannot be denied that there would be plenty of trade for the Trent Valley Canal after its construction. Then, let us consider the quantity of timber that would be carried. We know perfectly well that this canal would open up an immense forest territory and give a value to our forests in Ontario which they have not now. The estimated quantity of timber annually cut on the Georgian Bay and the northern districts tributary to the Trent Canal, for shipment eastward, including shingles, lath and lumber, is altogether 732,000,000 feet, all of which would be tributary to the Trent Valley Canal route, which would certainly have its proportion of the trade. I would like the House to notice this fact that, according to the report of Mr. Rogers, the engineer of the Government, and according to his evidence given before the Trent Valley Canal Commissioners, there is a shore line accessible to the Trent Valley Canal, when it will be constructed, of 1,345 miles, along which shore line there is unlimited wealth. There is along that line a country, perhaps in some respects not as fertile as the line along Lake Ontario, but, at all events, a very good farming country, and possessing unlimited forests and unlimited wealth so far as minerals and iron are concerned. In my own riding we have iron which is unsurpassed by any iron in any part in United States. Mr. Rattel, of Chicago, an eminent iron man, is reported to have said that it quite equals, if it does not surpass, in intrinsic worth, the iron of any mine in the United States, yet that iron mine is practically idle, whereas, if we had this canal, we would have, at all events, another way by which the iron of that and other mines throughout this district would find an outlet. Let me give, especially to the farmers in this House, some idea of the grain and the root products of that country which would be tributary to the canal. I take my figures from the evidence given before the commissioners and contained in their report, and will just give the total, so as not to take up any more time than is necessary, because I understand some hon. gentlemen opposite are desirous of speaking on this subject. I find that in the Counties of Northumberland, Hastings, Peterborough, Victoria, Haliburton, Ontario, Muskoka, Simcoe, and the north part of York, the fall wheat grown in these counties, according to the census returns of 1881, amounted to 2,045,208 bushels in one year; the spring wheat amounted to 2,410,891 bushels; barley, 5,959,829 bushels; oats, 9,869,955 bushels; rye, 329,949 bushels; pease, 2,245,820 bushels; corn, 168,282; buckwheat, 228,871; beans, 30,552 bushels; hay and clover, 272,045 tons; potatoes, 4,583,943 bushels; carrots, 973,096 bushels; and turnips, 12,284,476 bushels—the value of all which, according to the statement given to the commissioners, is estimated at $21,757,667 for the period of one year. I draw the attention of the House to these facts in order that they may see the importance of this district through which this canal will run, if it is ever built. Of course, my remarks must be, to a certain extent, uninteresting, by reason of the fact that I must refer very largely to statistics; but I am most anxious that the House should have this information, because I find, in discussing this question in private conversation, there is an utter want of knowledge of the fertility of the soil and the wealth beneath the soil of the country which this canal is to serve. I do not desire to minimize in any way the importance of any portion of the Dominion or to reflect upon any portion of the Dominion, but I may be permitted, without laying myself open to the charge of being invidious, to make comparisons between the district through which this canal will run and the other provinces, notably the Maritime Provinces. According to the census of 1881, the population in the Trent Valley district was 301,185, while the population of Prince Edward Island was only 108,891. The population of Nova Scotia was 440,572 and that of New Brunswick 321,233. This shows that the district I have mentioned contains as large a population almost as any one of the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and very much larger than the Province of Prince Edward Island. Then take the owners of land. In the Trent Valley district there were, according to the census of 1881, 42,288 owners of land, while in Prince Edward Island there were only 16,663, in Nova Scotia 67,129 and in New Brunswick 46,162. In the Trent Valley district the occupiers of land, according to the census of 1881, numbered 35,565, while in Prince Edward Island they numbered 13,629, in Nova Scotia 55,873, and in New Brunswick 36,837. You will see, therefore, how favourably this district compares with these provinces in that respect. Passing on to the growth of wheat, I find that we grew in the Trent Valley district 3,817,412 bushels of wheat per year, according to the census of 1881, while in Prince Edward Island they grew only 546,986 bushels, in Nova Scotia only 529,251 and in New Brunswick only 521,956. Take barley, In the Trent Valley district we grew 3,231,860 bushels, in Prince Edward Island they grew 119,368 bushels, in Nova Scotia, 228,748, and in New Brunswick, 84,183 bushels. So I might go on all the way down. I might quote oats, rye, pease, buckwheat, corn, potatoes, turnips and other roots, hay, tamarack, birch, maple, elm, pine logs and other logs, and so on all the way down through an immense number of other articles, showing the growth and product to be much larger in the counties through which the Trent Valley Canal would run than in those provinces I have mentioned so heavily subsidized by the Dominion Government. I would ask permission of the House that I might be dispensed from reading this long statement and hand it to the reporters for publication.

Mr. FOSTER. That is against the rule.

Mr. BARRON. It has also been said in regard to this work that it would never pay. I have taken this statement, which I shall give to the House, from a report of an engineer whose name I am not at liberty to give at present.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name.

Mr. BARRON. The carrying capacity——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name.

Mr. BARRON. I must ask hon. gentlemen to keep order. I notice that the opposition to this discussion comes from the Conservative side of this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. BARRON. It is said that the canal would be open at least seven months in the year, and each vessel or barge will carry at least 15,000 bushels, and there would be 100 barges per day, which would give a carrying capacity of 1,500,000 bushels a day or 225,000,000 bushels a year. At 2 cents a bushel, that would be $4,500,000 of a revenue to be got from the carrying capacity as far as grain alone is concerned, and if our North-West ever comes to be that which hon. gentlemen say it will be, that which Sir Charles Tupper said it would be, if it ever produces that immense quantity of grain which I hope sincerely and believe it will produce, we must have some outlet such as this, and hon. gentlemen opposite cannot be surprised at the figures which I give them, showing that we would have 225,000,000 bushels going through that canal, which would afford a revenue, at 2 cents a bushel, of $4,500,000. These figures are fair and reasonable, speaking for the future, and I give them in order to show that this work will pay if our North-West Territories and Manitoba ever amount to that which we have been promised by hon. gentlemen opposite. It is also said that the water supply would not be sufficient. That is an argument I have heard used. It is said that there would not be sufficient water to work this canal when it was built, inasmuch as the height of water at what is known as Balsam Lake, would not be enough to supply the whole route. So far as that is concerned, I may refer to the report of the commissioners themselves on this subject, and they say:

"In regard to the practicability of the proposed route in regard to its water supply, the commissioners are of opinion that this has been established beyond question, both by the report of the engineer and by the evidence received."

I might refer to the evidence at length on this point; but I think the report of the engineer, based on the evidence is sufficient to satisfy any hon. gentleman that the water supply will be sufficient for this canal when it is constructed. Before closing, I want to draw the attention of the House to the canals on the other side of the line in order to show the enormous trade they do to-day. It has been said that the time for canals had passed by, that railroads do all the traffic. In answer to that argument, and it has been made time and time again, especially in regard to the construction of this work, I will refer to the canal statistics for 1890, and we find that the New York canals had a traffic from 1880 to 1890 in vegetable food alone amounting to 14,960,128 tons, and in heavy goods of 17,239,351 tons. To show that that has not been decreasing, I draw attention to the fact that in 1881 the total tonnage of vegetable food on the canals in the state of New York was 1,116,561 and in 1890, it was 1,167,901, giving an unanswerable argument in reply to the statement that the traffic on the canal, as an opposing route to the railway, is decreasing. In 1881, the traffic on the New York canals in heavy goods amounted to 1,827,287 tons, and in 1890 to 1,157,291, showing that the traffic in these goods is not decreasing. Turning to the Erie Canal, which is often spoken of in comparison with the Trent Valley Canal, and no doubt they bear some comparison, we find that from 1880 to 1890 there was cleared at Buffalo and Tonawanda by the Erie Canal 12,963,068 tons of vegetable food alone, or an average of 1,296,306 a year, and at Oswego by the Erie Canal 813,792. Take the amount of vegetable food carried on the New York Central and Erie Railways, and you find the average during those ten years was 426,083 tons. This shows that the traffic on these canals is not decreasing, but that, if it is not increasing, it is remaining just about where it was ten years ago. This speaks favourably for the future of the Trent Valley Canal, especially if we have the North-West and the North-Western States at the back of us, sending immense quantities of grain and produce which must find its way to the seaboard by the shortest route, and I have proved by unquestioned figures that the shortest route is that by the Trent Valley Canal. Now, when I tell the House that I have but touched upon the outward circle of the arguments in favour of this Trent Valley Canal, they will see what strong arguments can be adduced in favour of this great work. Certainly, I have not exhausted any of the arguments which can be adduced in its favour, and I have omitted numberless ones. If I have succeeded in interesting any hon. gentleman in the slightest degree in favour of this work, if I have induced him to enquire into it and study up the question to see whether we cannot support a grant in favour of its construction, then I shall have received my reward. I have felt it my bounden duty to speak upon this subject, because it is one of such vast importance to the people living in the Midland district of Ontario. In conclusion, I ask hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches to take the matter in hand and to do one thing or the other. Let them tell the people whether they are going to construct the work or not, and if they are not going to do it then let them give way to some other hon. gentlemen who will be able to make up their minds whether they will do it or not. On this side of the House, at all events, there will be no uncertain sound. There will be no promises made just before election time, to be broken afterwards, as history shows has been the practice of the present Government. On this side you will have good faith kept with the people: you will not see the people humbugged as they have been heretofore just before every election, but the people will be told honestly whether the work will be carried out or not. I now ask the Government to say yea or nay upon this subject once for all, in order to let the people know what they may expect.

Mr. STEVENSON. The people whom I have the honour to represent expect me to lay before the House the claims of the work which has been referred to by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron). Upon this subject I claim to know as much of the intentions of the present Government as that hon. gentleman does, and, perhaps, a little more. I claim to know that the gentlemen who compose the present Government have no intention or shifting or throwing over this great work. I claim to know that the promises which have been made were not merely electioneering dodges. Hon. gentlemen opposite and their newspapers have constantly declared that the promises of the Government to go on with this work were mere electioneering dodges; but I am able to tell the hon. gentleman that those promises were the honest and fair intentions of the Government, and it was really the intention of the late Minister of Railways to construct this work and carry it on to completion. The hon. gentleman has referred to a speech of mine made in Peterborough, wherein I said that the Minister of Public Works had given me an assurance that the contract between Peterborough and Lakefield would be let during the ensuing summer. I may have made a mistake on that occasion, because it was not the Minister of Public Works, but it was the late Minister of Railways and Canals who gave me that information. It will be remembered that during the second session of the late Parliament, deputation after deputation came here from the Trent Valley district, all the way from the Georgian Bay, being the largest deputation that ever appeared before this House, to urge upon the Government the necessity of the construction of this work. I myself have been upon five or six deputations that have waited upon the Government to urge upon them the necessity of going on with this work. I can assure any hon. gentleman that if he will take the trouble to go over the route and examine the chain of lakes, with only short stretches of land or small waterways between them, he will see at once the enormous advantages that would be derived by that section of the country from the construction of this canal, with a comparatively small expenditure. Now, it may be said that this is a very expensive undertaking. In some respects it may be expensive, but we are certain that in the long run the advantages will more than compensate for the expenditure. It must be remembered that this canal will pass through a mining region containing the Galway iron and lead mines and the Marmora iron mines—in fact, nearly all the mining districts in Western Ontario lie contiguous to the Trent Valley. This is not a work that will require the cutting of a canal through a long stretch of land, but involves merely the opening up of short stretches between lakes. I hold in my hand the commissioners' report, referred to by my hon. friend opposite. By that report I find, that of the proposed route, there are 126 miles already of navigable waterways, and the portion to be dug out will be only 57 miles. Of course, there are a number of locks on that line, and it is in consequence of the expensive class of locks found necessary in some portions of that line that an outcry has been raised that the canal will be too costly for this country to undertake. Some of those locks have cost in the neighbourhood of $60,000 each; for instance, the one at Burleigh, and the one at Fenelon Falls, whereas locks built twenty-five or thirty years ago, only cost about $25,000. The lock at Young's Point cost $30,000; at Peterborough, $26,000; at Lindsay, $28,000; at Bobcaygeon, $25,000. Now, we calculate this latter class of locks will be ample for all the purposes of that canal. I know it has been said by a great many people: Why do you need a canal? You have a railway from the Georgian Bay right through to Peterborough, is not that sufficient for you? Well, one reason why we want a canal is that we cannot bring heavy freight by that railway. Freight like coal, for instance, required for our manufactories, passes along the valley. Now, we know that coal is carried from Buffalo to Duluth for 25 cents a ton, and also from Buffalo to Midland for 25 cents a ton, as they get return cargoes, whereas freight from Midland to Peterborough would be $2 a ton. Coal brought from Ohio or Pennsylvania by way of Georgian Bay would cost $2.35 per ton to Peterborough, whereas if brought from Buffalo the cost would be $1.35, or nearly one-half. During the past year 50,000 tons of coal have been brought to Peterborough for our manufactures, and that fact gives some idea of what they will be in the future. We possess all along the line of the Trent Valley as fine water power as any in Ontario outside of Ottawa. The manufactures along there have been increasing, and are rapidly increasing to-day. Where are you going to grind the wheat coming from the North-West? At Peterborough we ground 400,000 bushels last year; and we have a head of water power there sufficient for almost any number of mills. I have already said that our manufactures are rapidly increasing. Only a short time ago only 200 tons of coal were brought into Peterborough, whereas 50,000 tons are now required. We, therefore, hold that we must have the Trent Valley Canal to enable us to bring our coal at cheaper rates and thus enable our manufacturers to produce goods at less cost. The whole country will be benefited by this canal. Not only will the counties on the direct line of the canal be benefited, but other sections of the country will be benefited likewise. I hold in my hand the report of the Trent Valley Commission. The commissioners were gentlemen from Toronto and Montreal, and not from Peterborough. They were engineers and went over the whole route, and then made a report to the Government. The commissioners not only declare that this canal will furnish sufficient water supply for all purposes, but they point out that it will be of vast advantage to the country in all respects, to the whole country on the route, while the north shore of Lake Huron, and even the north shore of Lake Superior will be benefited, as the people will be able to send their products east much cheaper by the Trent Valley Canal than by Lake Erie, and at the same time the dangers of the lakes will be avoided. The route will be an inland one for the whole distance. These are the grounds on which the people of my county demand that the Trent Valley Canal question shall receive the attention of this House and of the Government, and why they hold that their claims on this subject should be paramount. While we do not for a moment say that the Welland Canal is not necessary and should not be maintained, still we think we have some rights in regard to our section of the country as well as other sections, and we feel confident that time will force any Government in power to build this great waterway and great outlet for the commerce of the North-West. It may be said, what are you doing in manufactures? The town of Peterborough a few years ago had a population of 4,000 or 5,000; now it has a population of 12,000. What has built it up? Manufacturing industries. These industries are constantly increasing, not only in that town but along the whole line of the canal. At Campbellford there is a very large factory, where a large quantity of coal is consumed. All the factories there use steam, and consequently consume a large quantity of coal. The Edison Manufacturing Company in Peterborough consumes no less than 7 tons daily. If we can show that a saving of 68 or 70 cents per ton would be saved by the construction of the Trent Valley Canal, that is surely a strong argument. It would also be the means of bringing other industries, and thus give employment to our young men, so that instead of driving them to seek employment in a foreign country we would have them at home manufacturing for ourselves. In Peterborough we have more than fifty American families from Massachusetts, Cleveland, and other places engaged in manufacturing. I can take you through the factories where they are employed, and some hon. gentlemen opposite know this to be the fact for they have been in the factories with me. On this question of the Trent Valley Canal we claim a hearing in this House, and we desire the fair and candid judgment of hon. members to be given as to the necessity of having this water-way. No less than sixteen or seventeen members are elected by constituencies on the line of this canal, and every one, without exception, has been instructed by his constituents to press the construction of this work on the Government. I am well aware the Government are doing all they can to make ends meet, and they have made some reductions on sugar duties; but I wish this House to understand that we must have this canal, and I wish the Government, whether the present Government is in power or a Government of hon. gentlemen opposite, to understand that they cannot expect we will rest satisfied unless they assist in its construction. It may be said a great many towns along the frontier are not manufacturing towns. I grant the truth of that statement, and in a great many cases it is their own fault. I know many towns where the people, instead of investing their money at 5, 6 or 7 per cent. elsewhere, might have put it into manufactures and thus built up the town. I recollect a good many years ago when a member in the upper House made a speech in our town, and said that manufacturing and farming must go hand in hand. "Look at the river running past," he said, "with all its dams and water-power, and yet no manufacturing is done in your town; how can you expect to prosper without manufactures?" I recollect that hon. gentleman, who was politically opposed to myself, urged that manufactures should be established in the town. I hold that our hope in Ontario is to manufacture for the North-West. The people there have to depend on us for their manufactured goods, and so long as we have water power and steam power, and plenty of men and boys, who are willing to come into town from the neighbouring farms, hundreds of whom are constantly asking for employment in the factories and are obtaining it, we can manufacture successfully. The sooner we know this and act on it, the better for the country. Our manufacturing establishments are now producing articles consumed by our farmers at less price than they can be bought across the line. I remember a few years ago that I went across the line and had to pay 15 or 20 per cent. duty on the goods I brought into this country. Now, under our system of protection we are enabled to manufacture the articles which we require, and to compete successfully with our neighbours across the line. I hope that we shall continue to do so, for I believe that the true policy for this country is protection and the National Policy. I regret very much that some gentlemen on the opposite side of the House have thought proper to run down our manufacturers and to call them bloated monopolists. The manufacturers in Canada are not bloated at all; they are trying to make a living for themselves and to give work to the artizans and labourers, and to help the farmers; and they do help the farmers and give them a home market for their produce. Before I left home, this morning, I met a farmer who is a good Reformer, and he said to me: We farmers want protection too; give us protection. I said to him what do you want, and he replied: Make the distillers pay 30 cents a bushel for their corn, and they will have to buy our barley, and we will get lots of protection then. I say to the Government: Put on 30 cents a bushel on the corn and the farmers will be protected. But, perhaps, this is outside the question of the Trent Canal, and I will return to that subject. I see in the report of the commissioners that they state that the locks are too large and too expensive, and I may say that the people of Peterborough were so dissatisfied with the cost of them, and the mode of construction, that they asked to have the engineer removed. We came down to Ottawa and saw the late Minister of Railways and Canals about the matter. We thought the engineer's plans too expensive, and that we should have three locks built for the cost of one he was building. I think I have shown that the locks could be built, so as to answer all purposes, at far less cost than the one built at Burleigh. Mr. Starke reported that the whole of the work could be constructed for about $4,000,000, and that is very wide of the first estimate, which was about $10,000,000. You can very easily spend a great deal of money on locks, or upon any other work, if you construct them as some of those have been constructed, while locks which would answer the purpose equally as well could have been built for one-half the money. Of course, some of the engineering work may be difficult, but the Peterborough section is simply all gravel, and there are no rocks to be blasted, and there are quarries near by to supply the stone. I think the Government will find on careful enquiry that the cost is greatly magnified above what it should be, and that the work would be equally suitable to all requirements, if they build a cheaper class of locks and cheaper masonry. We are not asking the Government for a very expensive work, but we are asking them for the cheapest work which can be built to suit the requirements of the case. As I said before, the Government are trying to make both ends meet, and we are only asking them to put a reasonable sum in the Estimates for this work this year. We ask them to put a sum in the Estimates that will show they are determined to go on with this work in accordance with the promises that have been made to us; promises not made at election times but at other times, in view of the great importance of the project. Every Minister of the Crown, and in fact every man who has been over that route, have remarked what a foolish thing it was that we did not have locks to facilitate navigation in that district. We have there a lake 10 miles long and 60 feet deep and no means of getting through westward, in consequence of a railway bridge on which there is no opening, but the Government have promised to remove that evil very shortly and I believe they will do it. My hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Barron) has quoted figures to the House this afternoon bearing on this canal, but figures are a very dry subject, and I do not think I can add anything more to what he has said, because as a rule he is pretty well posted about this matter. The hon. gentleman has read from the report of the commissioners which is very exhaustive, that they believe this canal would be a paying work when it is built, and I believe they are correct in this prophecy. These commissioners were not influenced by anybody, they passed over the route, taking evidence wherever they went, and I am sure if any hon. member of this House had been there he would have come to the same conclusion that the commissioners did. When they heard the evidence, that we were paying more than double what we should pay for fuel; a thing above all other things which it is absolutely necessary for the people to have, and when they heard that the iron mines which lie right at the very edge of the canal, at Galway and Marmora, were almost idle for want of coal, they saw the importance of the work. They have tried to work these mines with wood, but to develop them to any extent they have got to get coal and coke, and the only possible way of getting it in there at a reasonable price is by water and not by rail. It may be said that we can get the coal by rail, but hon. gentlemen know as well as I do that railways combine. We have two railways there now, but the freight rate is exactly the same on both. If we had five railways they would always combine about prices, and until we get the canal we need not expect to be in a better position than we are in now. We, therefore, urge upon this House, and upon the Government, to proceed with the construction of this canal; and we urge it upon them, because we think it is absolutely necessary to build up the industries of the country, and to give us a good water way from Lake Huron to Trenton on Lake Ontario. This may not be done in a short time, for it will take years to complete, but we are making rapid strides in the development of the country, and I do not despair of seeing this water-way fully opened before many years pass. It has been a long time under consideration, it is true, but the Government and the country have had a great deal to do in the meantime. They have been building railways at race-horse speed; they have been building canals very extensively, and they had calls upon them from more important sections of the country than ours, as in the case of the St. Lawrence and Welland Canals. As these great works are now completed, I think the least the Government can do would be to give us assistance to open up the Trent Valley Canal, and, at all events, to complete one section of it at least during the next three or four years. I trust that the Government and the House will see the necessity of doing something to carry out the completion of this important work. I believe that it has been retarded because hon. gentlemen in this House and the people of the country have not had a better knowledge of its importance, and of the large and valuable section of the country which it will develop. I am sure that if the members of this House travelled along the route of that canal and saw the country in which it will be constructed they would be unanimous in voting that the work; should be proceeded with. Hon. gentlemen no doubt have heard this project talked about for the last twenty-five years, but I am afraid they have not studied closely the importance of the work, because nothing has been done all that time therefore it is not necessary. Now, Sir, it is absolutely necessary to have this work done, and I believe that the Government intend to open up this highway as soon as possible.

Mr. BURNHAM. I do not know whether I have prevented an advocate of this canal from addressing the House in the person of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Welsh), who got up at the same time as I did. If so, I would very much regret it, because so far as I know the only member of the Opposition in this House who has spoken in favour of the project is the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron), who has spoken to-night. He referred to the fact that I was not in my place when he commenced his remarks, saying that he had extended a cordial invitation to me to take part in this discussion. Well, Sir, I do not require any invitation from the hon. member for North Victoria, or from any other member of this House to speak in the House, and I do not need to be told that my duty as a member of Parliament is to be in my place in the House at all times.

Mr. BARRON. May I interrupt the hon. gentleman? I think he quite misunderstands me. There was no invitation from me to him to be present. I simply told him when I was going to speak, with the view of his being here when I should speak.

Mr. BURNHAM. At all events, reference was made to my not being in the House previous to six o'clock. I do not know exactly what I lost by not being here at that time. However, if the hon. gentleman sees fit to lecture me on parliamentary practice, I think it is open to me to do the same. He has made a very lengthy speech here to-night, and he has quoted largely from the report of the commission and the evidence given before it, which I understand was laid on the Table of this House by the acting Minister of Railways. That report, I understand, was laid there for the benefit of the members of this House, but I have not had the opportunity of seeing or reading it, for the reason that, so far as I know, it has been locked up in the desk of the hon. member for North Victoria from the day it was laid on the Table of the House to the present time. So that I am at some disadvantage to-night in speaking of the report. Now,

Sir, as the hon. gentleman has said, this is a very old project. It was projected as far back as 1827, in the days of the old Province of Upper Canada. At that time the Government were looking for the easiest and most secure route through the centre of Upper Canada from the northern lakes to Lake Ontario. They found this natural depression through the centre of Upper Canada occupied by rivers and streams, which is well described in the report of the commissioners, as follows :—

"In considering the bearing of the canal upon the development of the trade and natural resources of the country through which it will pass, it should be noted that the conditions are peculiar, inasmuch as it would act as a connecting link in a chain of lakes and streams which, for the most part, lie transversely to the line of the canal, and that it would therefore afford access to an extent of country and coast much greater than usual in a canal of its length."

Now, it is a peculiarity of this particular route that it is a valley filled with a series of lakes connected by short streams which require deepening to make them navigable, and a number of falls and rapids which require to be overcome by locks. The whole length of the canal from the Georgian Bay to the Bay of Quinté is about 206 miles, of which about 150 miles are naturally navigable. When that work was brought to the attention of the Government of Upper Canada in 1827, they employed engineers to make reports upon it, and funds were voted for the construction of the work. Commissioners were appointed, known as the commissioners for the improvement of the waters of the Newcastle district. That commission built a number of locks which will form part of the proposed system. They have been in operation something over 50 or 60 years. In 1841 that commission was in existence, but it ceased with the union of the provinces. At that time the project of building the Welland Canal was taken up, it being thought more important to have a route through the Niagara Peninsula. Now, I think it would have been better for the Province of Upper Canada, as well as for the country as a whole, if the Trent Valley Canal had been built at that time instead of the Welland Canal. The Welland Canal may have been a benefit to Montreal, bringing freight there, and it may have afforded the Americans an opportunity to take their produce to the seaboard; but the securing of a passage through the narrow strip of the Niagara Peninsula has not been of as great benefit to the Province of Ontario as a canal would have been, opening up the central portion of the province. Therefore, the people residing in that district have never ceased to take an interest in this work or to look forward to its completion. This canal has always had strong advocates in this House. The late Mr. Conger brought it to the attention of the Government previous to 1867, and had a commission appointed to enquire into it; and since that time the public interest in it has not diminished. There are ten or twelve constituencies bordering on this route which would be immediately benefited by it. There is something over 1,300 miles of coast line on its length, and the produce of the district tributary to these works, it has been estimated, includes something like 25,000,000 bushels of grain; and I think the census will show that the population of the district is something over half a million. Now, Sir, it has been urged as one objection to this work, that the days of canals have gone by. We do not find it so, however, in the United States. On the contrary, we find that large appropriations are made there for the construction of new canals. The Erie Canal, which was built for the purpose of bringing the trade of the western states to the City of New York, has not only paid its own cost, but has built up the State of New York and made it the empire state that it is; and notwithstanding all the routes running from Chicago to New York—I do not know how many there are, but an hon. member says 17—we find that 60 per cent. of all the western grain brought to the City of New York at the present time is carried by the Erie Canal. Statistics show that 30 per cent. of all the grain and heavy commodities that reach New York are carried by the Erie Canal. The Erie Canal, compared with the proposed work, is a mere ditch, because it is an artificial work. The locks on the proposed canal are 33 feet in width and 134 feet in length, whereas those on the Erie Canal are only 17 feet in width or about one-half the width of those on the Rideau Canal. Now, another advantage this canal would have over the Erie Canal is this, that the Erie, being an artificial ditch, steamers cannot be used on it, whereas on this canal steamers can be used, because there will be no danger of the banks being washed away. On the Erie Canal, however, nothing of that kind could be attempted, as there would be great danger of washing away the banks. With regard to the district through which the Trent Valley Canal is to run, its capabilities have been well stated by the hon. member for North Victoria, and in the evidence before the commission it is admitted that the canal will give an opening to the agricultural products, mines and timber of one of the wealthiest districts in these respects in Ontario. In addition to the pine timber, the canal will open up a market for the very best hardwood, which is not floatable and will not bear transportation on railways on account of the expense. Iron is there also in great quantities, and could be developed and carried much cheaper by water than by rail. These matters have been largely dealt with by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron), who has also spoken of the cheapness and the shortness of the route for vessels leaving Duluth or Chicago carrying grain to Montreal. Of course, it is not pretended that any vessel leaving Chicago or Duluth with grain could reach Lake Ontario by this canal, because the grain will be treated the same as cargoes brought from the western states to Buffalo, where it is trans-shipped into barges. Those barges leaving Lake Huron and coming through the Bay of Quinté would have practically land locked navigation all the way to Kingston, as they would come down the Bay of Quinté behind the islands and reach Kingston without being exposed to danger from lake navigation. A vessel leaving Chicago has to come down through Lake Huron, Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, and the most dangerous part of navigation is through these lakes, whereas the distance from Lake Huron to the Bay of Quinté around by the lakes is something over four hundred miles more than by the canal route. We cannot at present say that there is a grain trade from our North-West to be carried to the seaboard equal to that of the western states, but we hope we will have it, and if the production of our North-West is in the same proportion as that of the north-western states, as we believe it will be, three or four Canadian Pacific Railways will not be sufficient to carry it. The Canadian Pacific Railway cannot carry the grain to-day out of the North-West, but has to depend upon the water navigation from Port Arthur, without which they could not handle the trade. This will only be an auxiliary route, and I believe we cannot have too many routes if we want to develop the North-West. I believe, further, that vessels bringing grain from the western states or from any particular locality along the canal to Kingston will get return freights. I believe water-borne freight is cheaper than any other. We know that water-borne freight from Chicago to New York, by the Erie Canal, is charged a cheaper rate than the rates upon the railways, and these are to a large extent governed by the water competition. If the railways had not the Erie Canal to compete against, they would make the people of the west pay a good deal more for the carriage of their grain. This is evident from the fact that during the season of navigation, at all events, the rates of freight on grain and other products are reduced on account of the water competition, and it is calculated that if we had this route open to us, it would mean a saving of about 6 cents a bushel on every bushel of grain grown in that particular section, and a saving of about $2.50 on every thousand feet of lumber produced in that district. Those considerations are worthy of attention. One of the objections made is, supposing you carry the grain by the canal, what return freight will you have? But vessels can carry grain from the Bay of Quinté through the Murray Canal across the lake to Oswego and bring return freight home, or go to Kingston and bring back Nova Scotia coal to the interior of Ontario. If we had that canal, we could carry Nova Scotia coal to the centre of Ontario, so that there are advantages all round as far as we can see. Another objection is that the days of canals are passed, and that railroads will be the only means of carrying freight in the future. I have shown that railroads are not sufficient, but that there is also work for canals, and that in other countries there are at present canals still being constructed. With reference to this particular work, we have had engineers' estimates, and these engineers have put their figures very high. They have estimated for a very expensive class of work, works of the class already constructed there, and which need not have been so expensive by any means. The cost of these works could be reduced very materially. The commissioners stated that the locks might be narrowed in width and be made of less expensive materials, so that $20,000 could be taken off the cost of a lock, instead of building locks such as they have now. In the evidence in the report, there is reference made also to improvements in the system of constructing canals and especially to what is known as the lift lock. Instead of building six and seven locks in a nest, they use on the improved canals in England, Belgium and France what is called the lift lock; that is, no matter what may be the height, they make one lock work by hydraulic pressure and the barge is lifted from the lower to the higher level in one operation. Mr. Turner, one of the commissioners, was struck by that fact, when recently in England, and he referred to it in the report. I believe the adoption of the lift locks in the canal would effect a very considerable saving, in addition to the other reduction I have mentioned in the nature of the construction of the work. The hon. gentleman who brought up this subject has stated that the Government have been very profuse in promises, and that they used this project whenever there was an election. I do not deny that political capital may have been made out of it, but if the hon. gentleman occupies the position he does here, he owes his seat to this proposed canal, so that probably in self-defence he has to take the position of an earnest advocate of that work. No doubt he is sincere, but, at all events, it is a necessity for him to appear here in that character, if he wants to retain the confidence of his constituents. I must acknowledge that I am in the same position, and so is my hon. friend from West Peterborough; but, irrespective of politics and party feeling, there is a strong desire on the part of all the people in that section to have that work built. I do not appeal to this House for the construction of this work on the same grounds as those taken by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron). He proposes to consider the amount of money expended on public works and railway subsidies in other provinces, but he says he believes that a great Dominion should be built up here. I do not believe that the way to build up a great Dominion is to appeal to sectional feeling. If a work is a good one, it should be constructed, no matter what any Government may have expended money on in other places. If this work is not for the benefit of Canada, then the Government should not undertake it, and I do not want them to consider what they have spent in this or that province, but to take up this work as one for the benefit of the whole Dominion. It may be of more local benefit to the district through which it goes, but it will be for the benefit of the whole country. As my hon. friend from North Victoria has said, the commissioners have reported in favour of the construction of this work. They went there ignorant of the nature and of the advantages of that work. As to Mr. Turner, we naturally felt that he would be rather inclined to be opposed to it because he would be more interested in the Welland Canal, but it struck him, as it struck Sir Charles Tupper in 1882 when he went over that work, that here was a natural channel almost complete and only wanting a few works to make it perfect, and he acknowledged that he had no idea that such a natural water system existed through the heart of the Province of Ontario. The commissioners, Mr. Kennedy, of Montreal, and Mr. Turner, of Toronto, neither of whom was in favour of the work from anything they had previously known about it, were struck with its advantages and with the provision made by nature towards the completion of such a work. A considerable portion of this work is now utilized, and I suppose there are twenty or thirty steamers on these waters and using these locks. About nine miles above Peterborough there are some sixty or seventy miles of navigation through the chain of lakes and through the locks which have been constructed latterly and fifty years before, and forty miles below Peterborough there is a chain of navigation through locks which were constructed in 1834 or 1835. I advocate this as an entire work to connect the waters of the Georgian Bay with those of Lake Ontario, but continuous navigation on the parts already built is prevented by the non-construction of the work between Peterborough and Lakefield which should be proceeded with at all events. The Government have always shown their earnest desire to foster this work, and we have the promises to which the member for North Victoria has referred. We have the telegram from Sir John Macdonald which the hon. member read, and we always felt that he was in favour of that project. In that district we feel—not only those who were his supporters, but his opponents also—that we have lost a good friend in the late Minister of Railways and Canals. He knew the district as a citizen of the Province of Ontario, and we felt that we had his earnest sympathy in the matter. The Government now are not in just the same position. The portfolio of railways is not permanently filled, but we believe the Government have the information upon which they can act, and I hope they will continue the work and bring it to completion. It has been shown that the expense can be reduced very much below what the engineers stated by adopting the recommendation of the commission as to the size of the different locks, so that the question of expense, which has been so often referred to as against the work, will vanish altogether.

Mr. CORBY. I have listened to the remarks of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron), and, as this canal passes through a part of my constituency, I suppose I may be allowed to make a few remarks in regard to it. The hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) is not sincere in coming before this House and advocating this canal. I certainly think, from his speech, from the time it took him to deliver it and the time it must have taken him to prepare it, that he expected to deliver it at the last session of Parliament instead of at the first. He refers to the appointment of the commissioners as having been a political dodge. Now, the hon. member's speech to-night is a political dodge for his own constituency and not in behalf of the Trent Valley Canal. He pitches into the Government because there is no amount put into the Estimates for this canal. Will the hon. gentleman wait till the Supplementary Estimates come down, when I think the Government will put in an amount which will be satisfactory to that part of the country. I stand up here to advocate the building of that canal. As representing West Hastings, where the eastern terminus of that canal will be, I may say that the town of Trenton is a very flourishing town, that it has one of the best water privileges in the country, that it has one of the largest lumber concerns in the Dominion. It is said that Messrs. Gilmour & Co.'s mill is the largest mill in Canada. The town of Trenton has expended about $100,000 in building water-powers and race-ways, which have put in shape a water-power amounting to about 2,000 horse-power. I think this canal would bring a large business to the town of Trenton and to the Bay of Quinté district. I have not gone over the Trent Valley Canal and am not thoroughly posted in the route, but I think it would be a great boon to that part of the country. We have the Murray Canal now open, and vessels going to Oswego and Rochester can go through the canal instead of going by the Bay of Quinté and out through the lower or upper gap. I got up, because I knew that the member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) would not like to see anyone on this side of the House advocating the construction of this canal. I desire to say, that I am in favour of it, and I hope the Government will put enough in the Supplementary Estimates to proceed with the construction of this work.

Mr. HAGGART. I wish to say a few words on the subject which has been occupying the time of the House for the last three or four hours in reference to building a canal from the Bay of Quinté to the Georgian Bay. I myself individually, as a member of the Cabinet, am in favour of the construction of this work, as I believe it would be a great benefit to the country. I believe that in the development of water-powers alone, aside from the advantage which will accrue to trade in the carriage of goods through this canal, the building of dams for the purpose of equalizing the distribution of water throughout the year, and the effect it will have on the diminution of freight rates in the different sections of the country through which this canal will pass—I believe all these advantages will far more than compensate the expenditure that that will be required to construct the canal. I know the section of country through which the canal is being built; I know that it passes through as fine an agricultural country as there is in the Dominion. I know, as some hon. gentlemen have stated here to-night, that it passes through the whole extent of one of the best timbered sections in the Dominion. All along the banks of the canal until you get up into the rough sections at Lake Simcoe and to the north of that, there are acres of fine deposits of mineral, phosphates, iron, and other ores as there are in any other country in the world. I believe the building of that canal would be a great advantage, not only to that section of the country, but to the Dominion at large, and I may here state that the policy of the Government in regard to it is the same as it has always been. A telegram of the late Sir John A. Macdonald in reference to the construction of this canal has been quoted, also a speech of Sir Charles Tupper on the subject. The policy of the Government is confirmed by the report of the engineers who have surveyed the route and have fully considered the proposed construction, and have showed how, possibly, a large reduction may be made in the cost of construction; and this report has confirmed the policy of the Government and rendered its determination stronger than it ever was before. It is true that the amount in the Estimates is small; but, as the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) mentioned, the reason of that is patent to every member of the House; we have made a large reduction in the taxes imposed upon the people, and we are obliged to be economical this year, but I hope that in some subsequent year we may be able to increase the sum and that we may be able to give the amount that we intend to expend upon it. My principal object in getting up to speak now is for the purpose of stating that the policy of the Government is entirely unchanged in reference to the building of that great work. The hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) has given us a flowery description of that region of country, of the amount of freight that has passed through the canal, and he read an extract from some engineer's report stating that 225,000,000 bushels of grain will pass through that canal; I suppose he vouches for it, although he did not give the name of the engineer whose letter he read on the subject, and who states that at 2 cents a bushel the receipts from the canal would be $4,500,000. Well, Mr. Speaker, we have no such roseate anticipations of revenue as the hon. gentleman appears to have. We have no expectation that an amount of grain will pass through that canal greater by far than the total exports of the whole continent of North America in the form of cereals, because 225,000,000 bushels of grain is nearly double the amount of all the grain in the form of wheat, oats, pease, barley and all other agricultural products, in the form of breadstuffs, that are exported from this country to all the countries in the world.

Mr. BARRON. What was Sir Charles Tupper's statement.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know; I am speaking about your statement. I believe, as the hon. gentleman from Peterborough stated, that the canal would prove a great advantage in carrying through freight from Chicago to the ocean, that large ships, instead of passing through the Welland Canal and passing down to Kingston and there unloading into barges, may possibly adopt the shorter route and go to the end of the Georgian Bay and be unloaded there and be taken down through our Murray Canal, through the sheltered Bay of Quinté, where they will not be subject to storms on the lake, and thence onward to the ocean. I believe that a work of that kind would be of great benefit to the Dominion, and an immense benefit to the section of country in which it is built, and we all know that the indirect advantages in the shape of developing water powers and manufactories on canals, will sometimes more than compensate for the amount of money expended upon the canal. I conclude by repeating the assurance which I give to the hon. gentlemen who have spoken before me, that the policy of the Government in reference to assisting this project and building this canal remains unchanged.

Mr. WELSH. I am not acquainted with the locality of this proposed canal. During this session we have had several matters before us involving requests for grants to railways, and to-night there is a demand made for aid to a canal, There is no motion before the House, not from the Government, at all events, asking for a grant for the construction of this canal. From what I understand, this canal will cost from five to six millions of money. I merely rise to put in my protest against aiding any of these projected canals or railways until the Prince Edward Island tunnel is taken in hand. The hon. gentleman from Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson), the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Barron) and the Postmaster General have all spoke in favour of this work, so that it is not necessary for me to take up the time of the House in discussing it. But I wish to give notice to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House that I for one, and I am sure every hon. gentleman representing Prince Edward Island will agree with me, will not listen to any vote for aiding any work of such a magnitude as this canal, until the Prince Edward Island tunnel is taken into consideration by the Government. In the matter of this tunnel, and also in many other matters, when we ask the Government for a fish they give us a stone. I think it is high time there was a change. The hon. member for Peterborough, while speaking about this canal, rambled away and began to talk about the National Policy, about its giving employment to people and encouraging home manufactures. He says that we make all we want, and buy everything cheaper. Well, Mr. Speaker, I tell him that the less said about the National Policy the better. Nearly twelve months ago the late Parliament was dissolved because it was a moribund Parliament, and therefore it was claimed that not being fresh from the people we were not able to discuss the question of reciprocity. The late Sir John A. Macdonald proposed to send delegates to the United States on the 4th of March to obtain a reciprocity treaty. Well, we have lived since the 4th of March, and this new Parliament is not a moribund Parliament. After the election several members of the Government went to the United States and they came back without making any treaty, and I am sure that this Parliament will be a moribund Parliament before they get reciprocity. I think that the prosperity of this country depends altogether on obtaining unrestricted reciprocity.

Mr. FOSTER. A canal.

Mr. WELSH. No, Sir, you may put a tunnel in if you like. We do not hear from hon. gentlemen representing the Government on that side of the House concerning this tunnel, but just before the election they sent down telegrams promising it to us. One hon. gentleman, a senator, who had devoted years of his life to bring that matter before the people, resigned his seat in the Senate and came down to Prince Edward Island, and ran an election on the tunnel question. Every member who is elected from the Island, either Liberal or Conservative, endorsed that ticket, and we are all in favour of the tunnel. But since the election, we hear very little about it. I see the member from Toronto is here. He had better keep quiet, or I will put the Conservative member for King's on his back, and he will then have the old man of the seas on him. I am glad there is no motion to expend some millions on this canal that has been discussed, for I will oppose any large grant to any public work until the Prince Edward tunnel is taken in hand.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Estimates are proceeded with, I should like to obtain the information promised by the Minister the other night. The information had reference to item 53 of the first Supplementary Estimates, $6,000 for new dredging plant. I should like to get answers to the three questions I asked: Where was this plant built? By whom was it built? Who now has it in possession?

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid we passed these items on the following night. As I was not reminded of these questions, the answers were not given.

Mr. ALLISON. I was not here that night.

Mr. FOSTER. I will get the book and see that the hon. gentleman gets the information.

Indians, British Columbia—Schools... $43,730

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to obtain from the Minister some account of what is going on in the British Columbia schools?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon. gentleman will recollect that about two years ago we established three industrial schools in British Columbia, one at Kamloops, one at Kuper Island and one at Kootenay, and it is proposed this year to establish one at Williams Lake, in the northern part of the province. It is estimated to cost $6,480.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the number of pupils?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There were 23 at Kamloops, 17 at Kuper Island, 22 at Metlakahtla. There is no return from the Kootenay school, as it was not completed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The attention of the House should be called in exceedingly strong terms to this item. It appears that 23 pupils at Kamloops cost $12,583, or $500 per head.

Mr. MARA. That included the cost of the building, furnishing and starting the school.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then we will take the Metlakahtla school. They expended $5,200 in educating 22 Indian children; and that is too much to ask from the white people of the Dominion, unless the Government are able to give sufficient explanation.

Mr. DEWDNEY. A great deal of that is for furniture.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see there are certain items, but they are not very large ones.

Mr. DEWDNEY. We expect a large increase in attendance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be; but making all possible allowance, to ask the people of Canada to pay for these twenty-two Indian children at Metlakahtla at the rate of $220 per head per annum seems to me a very extravagant charge, and unless there be some special cause that is not apparent on the face of it, it seems that we are wasting our money at a very heavy rate for the instruction of these Indians for whom we ought not to be specially chargeable. The land is held by the British Columbia Government, and it occurs to me it is their duty to look after their own Indians under such circumstances.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Government, under the terms of the treaty, agreed to look after them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They might do it at a considerably cheaper rate. We are paying for these Indians a sum considerably in excess of what would be paid for white children under similar circumstances. I think the hon. gentleman should revise these Estimates with more care.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think we have been rather niggardly for years as regards Indian education in British Columbia, and it is only within the last two or three years that we have taken a new departure. This may look a little extravagant if you average the amount you see here per head, but you will find that a number of these items, with regard to the furnishing of schools, will not occur again. We expect a much greater number of Indian children, and we will be able to educate them there.

Mr. MARA. I think the expense of the British Columbia Indians to the Government last year was something under $2 a head, and even with the additional items for new schools I imagine it will not exceed $2.50 per head, as against $20 in the North-West Territories. The management of the Indians in British Columbia is so small per capita that the hon. gentleman should not object to it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the case of the Indians in the North-West, we have received the whole territory, but in the case of the British Columbia Indians we got nothing at all. There is a very good reason for this expenditure for the North-West Indians, because they were possessors, in a fashion, of the entire territory in the North-West, and when they surrendered their lands to us we undertook specific obligations to them. In their case a large part of the expenditure is the payment of a debt due by the people of Canada to those Indians whom they have dispossessed of their hunting grounds and territories, but that does not apply to the Indians in British Columbia.

Mr. MARA. All the same, the Indians of British Columbia are the wards of the Government, which is supposed to look after them. The Indians in British Columbia are self-sustaining, and cost the Government comparatively little, and when you look at the cost of $2.50 per head for the Indian population of British Columbia, you will see that it is very small.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That does not bear on this particular item. The question is whether or not the rate at which we are expending money for these industrial schools is a reasonable one or an unreasonable one. How many children do you expect to be able to maintain at Metlakahtla, and what do you expect will be the cost per head?

Mr. DEWDNEY. We expect to be able to maintain about 40, and it is estimated that all the industrial schools in British Columbia will cost $130 per head.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are you going to do with these people afterwards?

Mr. DEWDNEY. We will make them good citizens, and teach them to read and write so as to be able to earn their own living. I think by education, it is the only way we can civilize the Indian, and I think as the other expenditures decrease, in justice to the Indian we must pay more for education.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It is the duty of the Government to educate them, but it is not part of the duty of the Government to educate them at an extravagant rate. It does seem that the charges for these pupils in that institution are out of all proportion. I thoroughly believe in educating them as far as possible, but the most they have a right to expect is a common school education. Surely the hon. gentleman is doing a great deal more than that when he asks for the enormous expenditure of $43,730. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether or not supplies for the Indians in the North-West and elsewhere are all obtained by contract, and if the lowest tender is accepted; such supplies as tea, sugar, salt, coal oil, &c.?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Does the hon. gentleman refer to the North-West Territories?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Yes.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; they are obtained by tender.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). All of them?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Are any of these schools in British Columbia denominational?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are of different denominations. The Metlakahtla school is Protestant Episcopalian; the Kamloops school, Roman Catholic; All Hallows and Yale, Protestant; Chilliwack, Methodist; Kootenay, Roman Catholic, and the one we propose to establish at Williams Lake will be Roman Catholic. The schools are of the denomination of which the Indians are in the districts in which they are situated.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Has there been an application for the establishment of other schools by any other church?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I was told last night by a Methodist clergyman, that the Methodists had applied for Government aid to some of their schools there for the Indians, and that they were unable to get a grant.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I know of no application from the Methodists in British Columbia for any school. I know that they have made application for aid to an hospital on the west coast.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The gentleman who told me was the president of the Methodist Conference. He told me that they had three schools, and that they were unable to get the assistance they wanted from the Government.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not know where they are, unless they be the four day schools for which we have made provision in our Estimates this year. I have not a memorandum of what denomination they belong to.

Mr. TROW. If the supplies for these Indians are bought by tender, the prices appear to me to be extravagant—beef at 12 cents a pound, and butter at 30 cents a pound.

Mr. DEWDNEY. These are the ordinary prices in British Columbia. The supplies for the schools were not bought by contract, neither are the supplies generally in British Columbia, for the same reason that we are not able to buy our supplies in Ontario by contract. It is impossible to know what is wanted until the application is made. The supplies mentioned in the Auditor General's Report were not bought by tender, because the buildings were completed and the furniture was put in, and we wished to get the schools started, and the officers were instructed to get the supplies. In future the supplies for the industrial schools will be got by contract; but generally the supplies are given to the sick, the aged and the indigent, and it is impossible to estimate what will be required for any one year. When the fishing is good in certain parts there is no necessity of giving any relief whatever, but sometimes the fishing fails, and then we have to support the Indians. I may state, with reference to the estimated cost of the Indians in British Columbia of $130 per capita, that that is less than the average cost of Indians in the United States in their industrial schools.

Mr. TROW. I notice that corned beef costs 7 cents a pound, while fresh beef costs 12 cents a pound. It strikes me that the one would be as good for the Indians as the other, if not better.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I fancy that corned beef was got when fresh beef could not be got.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I see that bacon is charged at 25 cents a pound and tea at 57½ cents a pound. Surely these are extravagant prices.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Where is that?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Williams Lake Agency.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is three or four hundred miles in the interior, and these supplies have to be carried that distance by ox teams.

Mr. MARA. Williams Lake is so far in the interior that even if these supplies were purchased by tender, you would have to pay that price, because only one man would tender. At Kamloops the Government agent and the principal of the school went to the different stores and got a list of their prices, and they apportioned the supplies to those stores where they could get them best and cheapest. In reply to the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow), I may say that the price of fresh beef in Victoria is from 15 cents to 18 cents a pound, so that if only 12 or 13 cents a pound is paid at Kuper Island, it is a low price. Butter is also very high priced in British Columbia. The farmers demand from 25 to 30 cents a pound for fresh butter in summer, and they get from 40 to 50 cents, and even as high as 60 cents a pound, in winter, so that 30 cents a pound is not a high but a low price. Bacon is not made in British Columbia; it is mostly obtained from Hamilton.

Mr. LAURIER. I would like to ask my hon. friend why beef should be so dear in British Columbia, which I understand is a grazing country?

Mr. MARA. There are several reasons why beef was high in price a year ago when the supplies were purchased. The winter previous was very severe, and the price of cattle in the spring was very high. Then there has been a sudden growth of the towns on the coast. Vancouver has grown from nothing a few years ago to a city of 16,000 to-day; Victoria has doubled in population within a year or two; and Westminster has also doubled in population in a short time. The farmers in the interior were not able to supply those cities with the quantity of cattle they required in the spring of the year, and the prices were correspondingly high. My hon. friend will recollect that the winter previous was a very severe one; a number of shippers and drovers had to ship cattle from Oregon.

Mr. LAURIER. That would be an accidental reason, applying to that year only; but I understand that these high prices are the prices in British Columbia, not only for one season but for all seasons.

Mr. MARA. They are in Victoria and Vancouver, because the cattle are raised several hundred miles in the interior, and, of course, it costs considerable to bring them to the coast. The prices you are now quoting are at Kuper Island, some few miles from Victoria. The price of beef at Kamloops would be perhaps 10 cents or 12 cents a pound, not more than that.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). How many Indians are in charge of the North-West Coast Agency?

Mr. DEWDNEY. 4,039.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I observe that you spent in that agency last year $10,164, of which $4,155 was for salaries, and $1,878 for medicine. How many employés are there, and was there any epidemic that necessitated this enormous expenditure in medicine?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Indian Report shows exactly how the charge for salaries stands. The agent receives $1,800 a year and keeps himself.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does he get anything for travelling allowance?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; he gets the regular allowance, $2 or $2.50 per day. Some of the agents get $2 and some of the higher officials get $3.50 per day travelling allowance. Then there is $1,679.12 paid Mr. Wooden, stipendiary magistrate, from 1st July, 1889, to 1st of February, 1890. That was paid under arrangement between the Provincial Government and ourselves, when there was some difficulty on the North-West Coast. We had to keep a stipendiary magistrate there three years, but that arrangement has expired, so that this expense will not occur again. Then, there is the wages of the engineer on the steamer Vigilant, $375. That is the steamer we have on the coast. There is also the wages of the pilot.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). But the amount paid the stipendiary magistrate and the wages of the engineer and pilot are charged separately and are not included in this $4,155.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Well, there are the salaries of the school teachers.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Why are these items charged to Indian account?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Because they are all in connection with the Indian agency. A boat is kept purposely for the agent to visit the different reserves, extending over 700 miles, and the agent also acts as Custom house officer, and part of his duties is to try and put a stop to whiskey traffic on the coast.

Mr. McMULLEN. There are travelling expenses for the stipendiary magistrate, $897.50. Is that for the year?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Those were paid in closing up Mr. Wooden's account, including his travelling expenses down to Victoria.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is a charge of $71.79 for legal expenses.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That must have been with reference to some difficulty in the Metlakahtla district which Mr. Wooden was sent to settle. Two or three Indians were arrested and brought down to Victoria.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that the expenses of the stipendiary magistrate's office amount to $493. It appears to me there are a great many items in connection with these schools which are altogether too extravagant, and I think it would be well that some investigation should be made into these expenditures. The Minister must come to the conclusion that there is room for cutting down in many of these cases. The salary of the stipendiary magistrate is $1,600 and he has $900 for travelling expenses.

Mr. MARA. That office is no longer in existence.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is only half the salary. The Provincial Government paid half the salary.

Mr. TROW. What are the regulations as to the election of the headmen of the tribe? I see that some tribes have twenty headmen when the Indians are very few in number. A headman gets $15, while a common Indian gets only $5, and a chief gets $25. Was that arrangement in the treaty?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The numbers were arranged in the treaty for every band.

Mr. TROW. But what would happen when the band decreases in numbers?

Mr. DEWDNEY. We do not appoint a chief if we can possibly avoid it. We find we can get along very much better without a chief.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The Minister was giving me some information as to the salaries of the officials in this agency, but he did not finish.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot offer to make an explanation of the accounts as they appear in the Auditor General's Report. He gets our accounts, puts them together, and it would take a Philadelphia lawyer and a great deal of time to decipher what an account of that kind would mean, unless you could get a clerk from his office to pick out the items. I gave what I thought were the items, but I see that some of them were not charged here. There is an amount of $1,110.95 which is represented in the Indian Report as salaries, and I believe is charged in this $4,000 for the different teachers. There are ten school teachers in that superintendency.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). What do they get?

Mr. DEWDNEY. $32.97 a quarter.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I see that at the Hazleton school there is an amount of $62.70.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is a school grant. The salaries of only three teachers appear here in the Auditor General's Report, and the eight others do not appear.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It is a very extraordinary way of keeping accounts. I doubt whether the hon. gentleman's reports show this in full.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes, they are here.

Mr. MARA. You will find the particulars on page 33 of part 2 of the Report of the Indian Department.

Mr. LAURIER. I notice that the supplies for the steamer Vigilant sum up $2,097.05. This seems to me a very extraordinary sum for such a steamer as that, and it would require some explanation.

Mr. DEWDNEY. This steamer has only just been built. These are the furnishings for the steamer. She is only run by the agent, the engineer and an Indian pilot, and that is the whole expense of the boat when she is running.

Mr. McMULLEN. What do you pay your engineer?

Mr. DEWDNEY. $75 a month.

Mr. McMULLEN. That appears to be quite a salary for an engineer on that boat.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is a small salary for an engineer on that coast.

Mr. MARA. I pay $125 a month.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I see $1,878 for medicine.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is not surprising they should want so much whiskey when they get so much rotten beef. I asked the Minister with regard to the legal expenses.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I told the hon. gentleman that I believed that $77 was in reference to some trouble that arose at Metlakahtla.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). How does it come that we have this large sum of $1,878 charged against this agency for medicine—physic?

Mr. DEWDNEY. These are medicines which are distributed on the different reserves on the North-West Coast. There are a large number of reserves. The medicines are sent to the different missionaries and the school teachers who dispense the medicines. That is the distributing point for the medicine, and that is the head agency on the North-West Coast.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I think that is hardly so, because I find medicine is also charged in the other agencies.

Mr. DEWDNEY. But that would not be on the North-West Coast. On this North-West Coast there is the Skeena River, the Naas River, Metlakahtla, Fort Simpson—there are probably thirty or forty reserves on that agency.

Mr. McMULLEN. On the opposite page we find $285.55 charged for medicine at West Coast.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is another agency further south.

Mr. McMULLEN. I thought the Minister said this was the distributing agency, and all the medicines were charged here for the North-West Agency.

Mr. DEWDNEY. For the North-West Coast Agency—that is the name of it. Mr. Todd is the agent for that North-West Coast Agency, which extends two or three hundred miles and along the coast back into the interior. This West Coast Agency is on the west coast of Vancouver Island, this is the north-west coast of the mainland. If I had known the hon. gentleman wanted such definite information, I would have brought in plans showing the different agencies. You must be acquainted with the geography of the country before you can understand where the agencies are. They extend several hundred miles running north and south, and six or seven hundred miles running east and west.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I notice on the North-West Coast Agency there is a charge of $12 for wood in one item and $7 in another, and I notice a charge of $37.50 for cutting this wood.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It cannot be for cutting this wood alone.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). In looking at part 2, page 33, of the Report of the Department of Indian Affairs, I see that all sorts of items are included. There is included an item for the engineer and the fireman of the steamer Vigilant, also the salaries of the two carpenters that the Minister mentioned. There appears, consequently, to be a great difference between the Minister's report and the Auditor General's Report; or, in other words, these two or three items I have mentioned appear to have been charged twice, once in the Indian Report and in the Auditor General's Report. They are first included in the large item of $4,155; then they appear in detail again under another heading, and the same item is in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Then the Auditor General's Report must be a mistake; but I do not think that is the case.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I think it more likely to be your mistake.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think I can explain where the mistake is. I think I made a mistake when I was endeavouring to give you an explanation of what that $4,100 odd represented, and I gave the wages of the carpenters as they appear in the Indian Department's Report, thinking these wages were included in that $4,000 until I saw they were charged in the Auditor General's Report as $4,115.40; so that it cannot represent two portions of the same account.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The items mentioned for the carpenters are really in your report, and the wages of the engineer and the wages of the pilot are also in that. They make up the sum of $4,358.

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are not included in the $4,155 of the Auditor General's Report, because you will find them lower down.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). How do you make out $4,155?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I commenced to give that information to the hon. momber for South Huron, when another hon. gentleman asked me something else about medicine. There is $1,800 for the agent; carpenters' wages, $117; stipendiary magistrate, $1,679; then salaries to school teachers, which are not in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). All these items you now mention are here; they are in the report of the department separately.

Mr. MARA. It is evident the salaries are included. There may possibly be a little difference between the Auditor General and the accountant in the Indian Department, but the difference will not be more then $2. No doubt if he had the vouchers, the discrepancy would be easily discovered.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is also clear that the Auditor General has included three school grants also included in the school salaries in the Indian Department.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the explanation of repairs to agent's house, $305?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is for repairs to the agent's house. The old house, which had been occupied by Mr. Duncan, had been damaged by the Indians, and it was placed in a proper state of repair for the new agent.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is an item of $115 for vegetable seed.

Mr. DEWDNEY. These seeds were given to Indians on the different reserves in this agency, which included 4,000 Indians.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I notice there is an entry for food of $2.60 and for medicine $1,868. Do you find it more advantageous to use medicine than food?

Mr. MARA. You are bound to give them medicine, but you are not bound to provide them with food.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is difficult to supply them with medicine. I once went up the Skeena River and had a crew of 6 Indians in my canoe. One was taken ill, and I had to give him a dose of salts. Each of the 5 insisted on having a dose also.

Mr. McMULLEN. I observe a large sum for miscellaneous expenses. Can the hon. gentleman give the details?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot give the details. It is to provide small amounts to different agencies for stationery and other supplies. The amount of $300 will cover ten agencies. There has been a new agency established since the last report, in the interior west of the coast range and near Skeena River, called Babine.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The difficulty in regard to items of this kind is that you are never able to get any reasonable information as to what becomes of the money. Is there an inspector of agencies for British Columbia?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is no inspector proper, as in the North-West, but the superintendent visits as many agencies as possible during the year. Four or five inspectors would be required to inspect the agencies during the year.

Steam launch $2,860

Mr. McMULLEN. What is this?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is the Vigilant, which we were talking about before.

Mr. LAURIER. It is an annual expenditure, because I notice there is an increase of $180.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The increase is for fireman's wages and pilot.

Mr. LAURIER. How is the general expenditure made up?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Wages of engineer, wages of pilot, expense of fuel, occasional service of deck hand and incidental expenses. The fuel is estimated to cost $1,000 per year.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman told me that the item of $2,097 was for the fitting out of the steamer, as she was a new boat. That was a fair explanation as far as it went. It now appears that this expenditure will come up year after year.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The expenditure in question was for only five months.

Mr. WATSON. During how many days will this steamer be employed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Probably the year round, except December or January,

Mr. WATSON. What is the capacity and power?

Mr. DEWDNEY. She has a double compound engine, and is 70 feet in length; she is eight or ten tons.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What service does she do?

Mr. DEWDNEY. She brings the agent round to the different reserves. Before we had this steamer the agent was only able to reach them by canoe and half the time he was not able to get to the reserves at all. We had a good deal of trouble with the Indians in that portion of the country, and a good many heart-burnings occurred that would not have happened had the agent been able to visit them as often as he ought to.

Mr. McMULLEN. When was the steamer built?

Mr. DEWDNEY. She was built in Victoria and cost about $6,000. Part of this was to be defrayed by the Customs Department.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does she do duty for the Customs Department now?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The agent has the power of a Customs officer and can exercise it if necessary; but he does not receive any extra payment for that.

Surveys $9,672

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that you employ three axemen at $40 per month, and a Chinaman at $50 per month, how does that come?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Chinaman is the cook for one of the survey parties. There are two survey parties.

General expenses, Manitoba and North-West Territories..... $134,000

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It does appear to me and it impresses me stronger every year that the amount expended in the North-West in connection with the Indian service is out of all reason and out of all proportion to the work that is really done. The amount that is paid for salaries is, in my judgment, excessive, and the amount paid for supplies is in many cases unreasonable. Let us look for a moment at a few of the items. You will find at page 185 of the Indian account a charge for horse hire "89 days, $89." When the 89 days expired the Government have had to pay $89 and to give the horse back to the owner. Would it not have been more economical to have bought the horse in the first place. I venture to say the horse was not worth $89, and yet the Indian account is charged $89 for 89 days' horse hire, and the horse goes back. It does not belong to the Government. Then, an extortionate price is paid for coal oil at all the agencies. At the Blackfoot Agency it costs 63 cents a gallon. Now, I am told that Canadian coal oil could be bought last year at 12 cents a gallon wholesale, and surely it does not cost the difference between 12 cents and 63 cents to take the coal oil from Ontario to the North-West and get a fair profit on it? At the Blood Agency 75 cents a gallon has been paid for coal oil. Has the hon. gentleman any explanation to give of these charges? For the Saddle Lake Agency, $100 is charged for one cow. This may not be an excessive price for a cow of a fancy breed, but it looks to me out of all proportion for the purpose for which this was intended. Then, I would like to know how far the Touchwood Hills Agency is from any line of railway?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Sixty-five miles.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). If you look at page 187, you will find that you are paying at that agency $8 a barrel for salt. You can get salt in Ontario for from 70 cents to 80 cents a barrel, and it surely does not cost $7 a barrel to take it from Goderich or Clinton to this agency? At the Battleford Agency you are paying for potatoes $1.95 a bushel; I would like to know whether these were bought under a call for tenders or not? At Battleford you paid $9.80 a barrel for your salt. I notice that at the same agency you purchased 38 oxen last year, and I would like the Minister to tell us what necessity there was for this purchase? I also find that you paid $4 a pair for 19 pairs of laced kip boots. Do you buy these for the Indians of the North-West? If so, I think it is an outrageous thing that we should pay any such sum as that for boots for the Indians. It was never contemplated that we should buy such high priced articles, either for the headmen or the chiefs. I find that in these accounts we are charged by every agency for tea, sugar and tobacco. I do not know what the custom has been in this respect, but I should like to be informed whether it is part of the system adopted by the department to supply such articles of luxury to the Indians? If not, who gets the benefit of them? When we supply the Indians with the necessaries of life to keep them from starvation, I think that ought to be sufficient. I know that the hon. gentleman's policy, when he occupied the position of Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, was to reduce the Indians to submission by starvation. I hope that policy no longer prevails; it is not necessary that it should prevail, because a great many of the Indians are self-sustaining, if we are to believe the hon. gentleman's report. Now, if that is so, what is the reason we should provide tea, or sugar, or tobacco, if we do provide them, for the Indians, as is charged in the accounts? As charged, one cannot tell whether these supplies go to the Indians or the employés of the Government in the North-West Territories. Now, the fact that the hon. gentleman's own reports for the last two years indicate a marked degree of success in the experiments begun eight or nine years ago in training the Indians to become civilized and making them farmers, is not an unreasonable argument against voting the enormous sum the hon. gentleman is now asking at the hands of Parliament to feed and clothe the Indians. Sir, notwithstanding the encouraging accounts given in the reports of the department for several years, there does not appear to be any indication, in so far as the demands on Parliament are concerned, that the hon. gentleman's predecessor's experiments in the North-West Territories have been at all successful. If they have been successful, and nobody reading the reports can come to any other conclusion, why does the hon. gentleman ask Parliament to vote nearly as much money to feed and clothe the Indians as was required four or five years ago? There is only a difference of $47,000. There are one or two other things it is important for us to know in connection with the administration of Indian affairs in the North-West Territories. Have you as many farm instructors there as you had eight years ago? Have you as many employés? If the Indian has been successful in cultivating his reserve, if he is now able to stand alone, there can be no necessity for keeping, if you do keep, the same number of farm instructors and employés as you did eight or nine years ago. I find in this report other extraordinary items of expenditure. I find that not less than $2,174 is charged for advertising for supplies in the North-West Territories. What justification has the Government for that? I suppose these supplies are advertised in the local papers. Is there the slightest justification for expending upon that item in one year over $2,000? I am satisfied there is not a department in the public service which requires the vigorous application of the pruning knife more than the Indian Department. I believe that with economy we could fulfil all our duties, both moral and legal, towards the Indians with nearly one-half of the sum asked from Parliament to-day. I believe, unless we have retrenched very much in the last four years, there is an army of officials in the North-West wholly unnecessary. I believe that one-half would be sufficient for the efficient performance of the service. If the hon. gentleman wants to immortalize himself, which I am afraid he has not yet done, in the service of his country, he can do it by a vigorous application of the pruning knife in the department over which he now presides. It is a big subject, I admit, which requires great consideration. We are under very heavy obligations to the Indian. We took from him his possessory right to a vast country; we deprived him, by our advanced civilization, of his means of living; we drove away the buffalo; and we are in duty bound to implement every treaty and every condition of every treaty, both in the letter and spirit. We are not only bound to do that, but we are bound, outside of treaty obligations, to deal fairly with the Indians, and that can be done, I am satisfied, at a great deal less expense than the hon. gentleman annually asks Parliament to meet. I give him credit this year for asking $100,000 less than was asked last year, but I know the hon. gentleman can go further. I can see from the reports no marked signs of improvement in some branches of the service in the North-West Territories; I can see no great diminution of employés; and I am sure from the tenor of the reports the same number cannot be required now that was required eight years ago. I trust, before another Parliament, the hon. gentleman will have caused a thorough investigation to be made in this matter.

Mr. McMULLEN. I received a letter to-day from Regina, dated 22nd August, from which I will read an extract. The writer says:

"I will give you one example of many: Upon Muscowpetung's reserve is a herd of Government cattle, all diseased, drowned and starved. These beasts are cut up, carted to the Government warehouse on the agency, issued out to the Indians, and charged up to Government. Who gets the money? In the winter of 1889 and 1890, many cattle died and were fed out in this way. I refer you to the following:—1st. Farming instructor at that time who positively issued that vile stuff to the already fast-dying natives, Donald McIntosh, Devil's Lake; 2nd. I refer you to herdsman, at the time James McGinnis, Reynoldton P. O. All that Cameron of Huron stated about the Indian Department was quite true: but he failed to get hold of the proper witnesses. He can prove all he said and far more, if he refers to said D. McIntosh and one Richard Portis, Balgonie P. O."

Mr. DEWDNEY. Who is that from?

Mr. McMULLEN. It is a private communication to me. I am giving a quotation from it, and I have a perfect right to do that.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is only right that the hon. gentleman should give me the name. It is a serious accusation.

Mr. McMULLEN. I will give the hon. Minister the name privately.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I have received two letters on the same subject.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have heard that several communications have lately been sent down by disappointed officer-seekers.

Mr. McMULLEN. This man who has written to me was never an official, but he has witnessed the abominations which have taken place under this man Reid in the discharge of his duty. We have had on several occasions to criticise not only the charges which he made himself but the way in which rotten stuff has been given out to the Indians. I have heard my hon. friend here (Mr. Cameron) boo-hooed and abused in the most uncourteous way for the charges which he made against this man. This letter was sent to me personally, asking me if I would not criticise this individual, particularly in regard to his turning out dying animals, and some that were drowned, and that were carried to the Government storehouse.

Mr. DEWDNEY. On my reputation as a man, and I hope as a gentleman, I say that the statements that appear in that letter are lies.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am very glad to hear the hon. gentleman say so, and I have no doubt that he thinks so, but there is a possibility that this thing may exist.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Our system will not allow of it. There is no better man in charge of any band of Indians than the gentleman who is in charge of that band, Mr. Lash; and I will stake my reputation that that gentleman has never allowed a rotten piece of beef to be taken into his storehouse.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We heard the same thing about Senécal.

Mr. McMULLEN. The writer of this letter says:

"The farming instructor who issued that vile stuff to the already fast-dying natives is Donald McIntosh."

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is a lie. They are not fast-dying natives.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was Donald McIntosh the farm instructor there?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; and he is there now. Give me the name of your informant, and I will bring them both together?

Mr. McMULLEN. I will give the hon. gentleman the information confidentially. I do not know the person who writes to me.

Mr. FOSTER. I was just going to ask if you knew the man at all.

Mr. McMULLEN. No, I do not; but he sends me the letter.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There may be no such man in existence.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes; he must be in existence, or he could not write the letter. I think there is a great deal of extravagance in the handling of the Indians in the North-West, as well as cruelty. There is enough money voted by Parliament to deal with these creatures without dealing out to them dead animals in this way, if it is done. I am glad to hear the Minister say that he is confident it is not done, and certainly it should not be permitted.

Mr. McMILLAN. Are the cattle which are kept in the North-West for beef purposes or for milk?

Mr. DEWDNEY. A large number of cows are kept for milk. The Indians own cattle which they have raised from the cattle which have been distributed to them, and they are generally milch cows. There may be one or two Government cows on an agency; but the cows owned by the Indians are generally broken cows. I hope we shall break a great many of the young cows we have in our herd, and distribute them to the Indians to help them to support themselves.

Mr. McMILLAN. I see that at the Saddle Lake Agency there were cattle which cost $45 a head, while at the Battleford Agency there were five that cost $200 a head.

Mr. DEWDNEY. They were brought from Compton, Quebec.

Mr. McMILLAN. How do you account for the difference?

Mr. DEWDNEY. These were thoroughbred bulls.

Mr. McMILLAN. So were the others thoroughbred. They were Polled Angus. Further, I find that the agency has been paying $2.75 a bushel for potatoes.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Those potatoes were brought from the Edmonton Agency when there was a great scarcity of potatoes. They were teamed down early in the spring before the ice was out of the river.

Mr. McMILLAN. I see at Battleford there are 54 oxen.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There are six different reserves in that agency.

Mr. TROW. At Duck Lake, which I know very well, I see that 35 bushels of potatoes were bought at $2 a bushel. That is a large price, seeing that there are considerable settlements all around Duck Lake and up to Prince Albert.

Mr. DEWDNEY. These were all seed potatoes. We paid $2.25 a bushel for some of them.

Mr. WATSON. The Minister contradicts the letter which has been read by my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) in toto. Is the Minister aware that, during his time in the North-West, pork of an unsound character was dealt out to the Indians, rusty pork that was purchased in Chicago for 1½ cents a pound, and was given to the Indians as rations?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am not aware of any such thing at all. I am not aware of any pork being bought at a cent and a-half a pound.

Mr. WATSON. Are you aware that rusty pork was dealt out to the Indians by the Government?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am aware, and the report of the inspector showed, that some of the pork which was bought from Chicago on contract had been kept in our warehouse for a length of time, and a little of it got a little rusty. That was in the Indian Head warehouse, and that is the only case I know of reported on by our inspectors.

Mr. WATSON. How much of that pork was fed out to the Indians?

Mr. DEWDNEY. A very small quantity of it remained over.

Mr. WATSON. I know the charge was made that some twenty tons of this rusty pork was bought for a cent and a-half a pound in Chicago, and was dealt out to the Indians. One chief complained about it, Chief Longlodge. I think the Minister was present when a remonstrance was made. I think I was credibly informed by a gentleman who was present, that the hon. gentleman's reply to him was: "Eat that pork or die," when the Indian complained that this pork was actually poisoning and killing his family.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I saw that report in the records of the House here, and I take this opportunity of saying that it was a base lie, as plain as I can say it.

Mr. WATSON. Would the hon. gentleman allow a commission to investigate such a matter as that?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I will allow a commission to investigate any matter connected with the Indian Department.

Mr. WATSON. That no such pork was dealt out to the Indians in the North-West?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No such charge was made to me.

Mr. WATSON. You say the charge was made in the House?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I saw it in the papers.

Mr. WATSON. Will the hon. gentleman furnish a commission to investigate that same charge?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; I will furnish a commission to investigate any charges in regard to the Indian Department.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see there is a Government herd at the Muscowpetung Agency. Does the hon. gentleman know whether any of those cattle in 1889-90 were returned as having died or being drowned?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The report we have is that they increased in number that year. Heifers were bought two or three years ago, and this year 95 per cent. of them have had calves.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In looking over these items no person can help coming to the conclusion that there ought to be a great deal of care exercised in making the purchases. You will find that about double prices are paid for everything that is required. Take the Duck Lake Agency, where there are only 1,013 Indians; we find that coal oil is paid 74 cents a gallon; flour is bought for $6.75 a sack; medical attendance, $1,272; salaries at this agency, $5,300. Going on to the Edmonton Agency we find flour is bought there at $4.75 a sack, and so on through the different agencies you will find extraordinary prices are being paid for everything that is bought. At this same agency we find an item that was mentioned by the member for South Huron, advertising for tenders for flour, $217.86; tenders for potatoes, $208.90; tenders for beef, $176.75; for general supplies, $1,569—all this for advertising. The total amount paid for advertising is $2,174.54. Go on a little further and you find: inspecting samples of blankets, $10; samples of food, $100; samples of clothing, $8.21; samples of harness, $10; samples of flour, $508; all that is on C—193. There is a total of $661.21 paid for inspecting samples. Surely there must be some mistake. How could you pay $508 for inspecting samples of flour?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is no mistake at all. Hon. gentlemen in this House are constantly complaining that the Indians are given bad flour, and if we give them good flour, we have to see that our deliveries are made of sound flour. A sample is taken from every purchase, and when the flour is delivered the sample is sent down here to the department, and the department has that flour inspected and tested to see whether it comes up to the sample which is lodged in the department, upon which tenders are made.

Mr. LAURIER. What about the boots?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Those boots were made in the penitentiary, and they are given year after year to the chiefs and headmen, in accordance with the treaty made, every three years.

Mr. LAURIER. It costs $100 for inspection.

Mr. DEWDNEY. A man is sent up to the penitentiary to inspect the boots before they are sent out. The flour is inspected by an inspector from McKay's mills here in Ottawa.

Mr. WATSON. How is the inspector paid?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are paid $2 a test: they were charging $5 a test at one time. That will be one delivery. There is a large number of deliveries all over the territories, and many samples have to be taken out of every delivery in order to ensure that the quality is good.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This plan of sending flour down to McKay's mills to get it tested, is all nonsense. You can get flour inspected in any city in the world for two cents a barrel. Any person at all acquainted with flour can judge as to its quality and value, without making a test of that sort. I think this $508 is thrown away. I find an item for flour for freighters in 1885, $300; also twine for Indians on Mackenzie River, $500. Was the twine to be used for binding the grain they raised?

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is used for fishing nets. The $300 was freight on flour shipped in 1885 and seized by the half-breeds before it was delivered. A claim was made by the merchant who had the contract to deliver the flour, and who had paid the freight. The matter was submitted to the Department of Justice, and on the department's report it was paid.

Mr. CAMPBELL. At Duck Lake Agency the Government are building several mills, and are giving a bonus of $1,000. Is that given to a private individual?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes. He constructed the mill and grinds at special rates for our Indians. This system has been followed in several localities in the North-West in order to encourage the erection of mills, as we find that until a mill is erected the Indians are careless about raising their wheat.

Mr. WATSON. What are their special rates?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are less than the ordinary and are fixed by agreement. Mr. Van Allen or some such name is the party.

Mr. WATSON. With respect to the inspection of flour, I see $2 a sample is charged. Is the inspection made on the sample furnished?

Mr. DEWDNEY. A sample is sent to each agency where the flour is delivered, and a sample is kept at headquarters. The parties tender in accordance with the samples left at each agency and here. When delivery is made, a small quantity is taken out of every two or three sacks and these samples are sent to the department and we test them.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is the Indian surveyor at Ottawa?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Nelson, at a salary of $1,800 per year.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is he allowed a living allowance?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Not while here. That is stopped now. That was for the year before last.

Mr. CAMPBELL. With respect to the Qu'Appelle Industrial School, there are 175 pupils in attendance, and the salaries are $7,000. Why are the expenses so large?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is a principal, assistant principal, matron, cook and four or five servants. It is a very large establishment.

Mr. McMULLEN. Under the head of miscellaneous, $500 are charged for seed for Indians; and yet under the head of each school separately there is a charge for seed. How does this occur?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I will look it up.

North-West Mounted Police—Pay of force.....$320,000

Mr WATSON. Is it the intention of the Government to make any attempt to reduce this force and consequently to lessen the expenditure? I am strongly of opinion that if the Government would spend a portion of this money for the purpose of inducing immigrants to go into this country, the North-West would become so thickly settled that the necessity for many of the police would not exist. There are more policemen in the North-West to-day then there were fifteen years ago, notwithstanding that the country is better settled, and that a great many of the Indians now under treaty were then roaming on the plains. I am of opinion that it would be well to keep an official staff along the frontier to prevent any raiding from the neighbouring territory, but certainly in the interior we ought to commence reducing the Mounted Police.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think I can hold out very little inducement in that respect. Our experience has been that the more a country gets settled up, the more work we find for the men, and the calls on them increase every year. As the country gets settled in the north, and it will continue to settle especially now that railways have gone into that country, you will find that it will be all that the force can do to discharge the duties they will be called upon to discharge for many years to come.

Mr. WATSON. Could not local constables, resident in the country, attend to the mere police duty? The Mounted Police, stationed at two or three different places, are maintained at very great expense, and it would appear that they are simply doing the work that local constables do in organized districts of the North-West. If a man loses a horse he goes and asks the Mounted Police to find it for him, and a lot of that kind of work might be done away with. It appears to me that most of the Mounted Police work might be done by special constables stationed in the different municipalities.

Mr. McMULLEN. This is a very important item, and as it is very late I think the House should now adjourn.

Mr. FOSTER. We will have to get some more business done.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then if you proceed with the item it will have to be criticised. We have in connection with this force no less than fifty-five officers drawing $60,000, or about an average of about $1,200 each. I contend that it is an imposition on the people of this country to keep this enormous force in the North-West. Before we had the outbreak in the North-West Territories, and when there were more Indians and half-breeds than now, 500 mounted policemen served all the purposes. I would like to know from the Minister why it is that the force is now doubled, when the country is more settled and when we have railways running all through the territories?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It was considered, by wiser heads than mine, after the trouble was over, that 500 men were not sufficient to keep the peace of the country, and with the excitement that had taken place all over the country it was thought, in the interest of the Government, that an increase would be necessary. Since that increase has been made the duties of the force have been greater than they have been before. The settlements are more scattered, the calls upon the police are greater, and in fact every little settlement expects to have one or two police settled among them. When districts are organized into municipalities they have their own constables and the police do not interfere more than they can help. Some municipalities were jealous of the police interfering, particularly in regard to the whiskey business, but that has now been changed. The Mounted Police have been the means of keeping order in the districts outside of the municipalities, and are giving confidence to the settlers from one end of the territories to the other. I think it would be fatal to the interests of our western country if it was known that we were going, at the present time, to decrease the number of the force. By looking at the report of the Mounted Police, and observing the duties which they discharge, one can easily see that the country is well repaid for the expense incurred.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What do you pay the men?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The constables get 50 cents a day to start with.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Do the Mounted Police vote?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Some of them vote.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Have they any political functions at all?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Those qualified can vote. That is all the political functions they have.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It was charged in this House that the Government gave them instructions how to vote. Is that so?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I did not hear any hon. member say that.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The statement was the reverse, that he had been ordered not to direct the men how to vote, but undertook to tell them what his own opinion was.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They do not vote by ballot there?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; by open vote.

Mr. WATSON. I may say that I have been informed by a person equally interested in the votes of the North-West, that the officers in command of the different stations were instructed by Herchmer to keep strict account how each man voted, and were told that no man voting against a Government candidate would receive promotion. Has the Minister's attention been called to that?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know why the Minister considers it necessary to keep 26 mounted police at Regina? That appears to me to be a place where a town constable would be enough to keep the peace.

Mr. DEWDNEY. A thousand men require to have some headquarters, and Regina has been the established headquarters since it was selected as the central point in the territories. All the supplies go there for distribution, the recruits go there to get their drill, and there is no more convenient place in the territories. I was astonished that there were so few there.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that over $40,000 annually is paid for the transport of supplies for these 1,000 men. Most of the supplies are bought in the North-West, and how is it that $40 apiece is spent in transport, when the supplies are virtually bought at the doors of these men?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The supplies are not all bought in the North-West, and everything is bought by contract.

Mr. McMULLEN. They are bought to be delivered at certain points.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That may be so with regard to flour, but the bulk of the supplies are delivered at headquarters and are distributed to the points where they are required.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does Mr. Herchmer, the commissioner, live at Regina?

Mr. DEWDNEY. His headquarters are there.

Mr. McMILLAN. Is the assistant commissioner his brother?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; he lives at Calgary.

Mr. McMULLEN. There are no less than ten inspectors at $1,000 each. What are their duties?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They visit the various stations. Some of them act as Customs officers, but not so much as formerly. They used to collect at Fort Macleod and Fort Walsh, but Fort Walsh has been abandoned, and there is a regular Custom house officer at Fort Macleod. They get a small percentage on the collections of Customs when they act as Customs officers.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is ridiculous that we should require to spend $700,000 on police in a territory where there are only 34,000 people. There is no justification for this, as the settlers out there are orderly people, the very best of our people, and do not require all this force to preserve the peace. The force is not required in times of peace and is perfectly useless in times of war.

Mr. DEWDNEY. If the hon. gentleman went out a perfect stranger with his wife and children to settle on a homestead within easy reach of an Indian reserve, he would be very grateful to the Government for having afforded him police protection. It is of great importance to have these men in the country in order that the Indians may know there is a force there able to cope with them. The Indians are well behaved, but are still Indians and require to be looked after.

Mr. WATSON.

Mr. LANDERKIN. When the Indians rebelled, the Mounted Police were powerless and volunteers had to be called out. At present they are a standing menace to the peace. I have more faith in the Indians than in the hon. gentleman, and I believe that, if they were not menaced day by day by the force, they would soon become civilized. This expenditure is also a reflection on the whites, who are greatly in the majority and who ought to have no difficulty in managing a few Indians.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The people of Ontario have never lived in an Indian country, and when they went out to the North-West to settle they went out unprotected without any fire-arms to protect themselves, and they are very glad to have the protection of the police.

Mr. McMULLEN. As this is a very important item and embraces an expenditure of $750,000, if the hon. gentleman will allow one item to stand, so that anyone who is absent may have an opportunity of speaking upon it, we do not desire to detain him any further.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we must pass the items.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is not right to force the item.

Mr. FOSTER. We are not forcing it.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then, I want to know how many stations there are along the border of the United States, and how many men there are at each station?

Mr. DEWDNEY. At Willow Bunch—of course the hon. gentleman knows where that is; it is on the southern boundary—there are two constables and two horses.

Mr. McMULLEN. In what township and range is that?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot tell you that. I can give you an idea of the locality. It is almost south of Regina on the boundary line.

Mr. McMULLEN. Give us the stations east of that first.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is Lee's Creek, which is west of that, and that has one sergeant and one constable, total two, and two horses.

Mr. McMULLEN. How far is that from the station the hon. gentleman named just now?

Mr. DEWDNEY. About 400 miles, but there are many stations between.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to shorten the explanation.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. Let the hon. gentleman finish.

Mr. McMULLEN. I asked the hon. gentleman to state how many stations there were on the boundary.

Mr. DEWDNEY. At Fort Pitt there are three men and five horses. That is in the neighbourhood of Fort Macleod. At St. Mary's there are three men. That is in the same district, about 40 or 50 miles from it. Stand Off, there is a total of five, four constables and one sergeant. That is going east towards Willow Bunch. There is one at Milk River, further west towards Wood Mountain. There is one south of Cypress, one at Wood End, and a small party were at Alameda, but I am not sure whether they have been removed from there now or not. Then there is a party in Deloraine, which is in Manitoba. They travel from one point to another, communicating every forty-eight hours.

Mr. McMILLAN. Did I understand that each inspector had 100 men under him?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; each superintendent.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think they might do with less than 32 inspectors at $1,000 a year. That is an enormous amount of money. I would ask if in any of these stations the Mounted Police make their own hay?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No, not now. They used to do that, but it was found inconvenient. They used to have farms which they cultivated, but it took up too much the time of the men and it was given up.

Mr. McMULLEN. Have we not to pay for the removal of the supplies from the station at Regina to the police headquarters?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; they cart a good deal themselves, but a portion is carted by the contractors.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think it is absurd, with 1,000 men there, with all the horses and the carts that I saw when I was there, and with every facility to remove the goods from the station to the headquarters, the country should have to pay the expense of that, while these fellows are walking round doing nothing.

Mr. WATSON. I was sorry to hear the Minister state to-night that he had no hope of doing away with the Mounted Police.

Mr. TAYLOR. For some time.

Mr. WATSON. Yes; for some time. It seems to me that the more settlers go in there the less need there is for Mounted Police. The remarks of the Minister to-night, that it was necessary to maintain the Mounted Police in order to protect the settlers from the Indians, will have a bad effect on immigration to that country. I have not heard of any depredations committed by the Indians in the North-West, and certainly there have been none in Manitoba, and I should think the number of the Mounted Police might be decreased. The hon. gentleman says that wherever a small settlement exists there is a demand made for some of the Mounted Police. It appears to me that if some small encouragement were given to some men in these settlements, to keep a horse, for example, they would be willing to protect themselves in case of an emergency, and I think it would be a better advertisement for the North-West in regard to intending immigration, to diminish the numbers of the Mounted Police, than to maintain 1,000 men there on the ground that they are required to protect the settlers from the Indians. The Commissioner states in his report that one reason for the employment of the police is the necessity of looking after the liquor traffic. I understand it is the intention of the Government to give the North-West Council some control over that traffic, and in that case the duties of the Mounted Police would be so much less. The Commissioner refers to the difficulty of enforcing the regulations in regard to the liquor traffic, in consequence of the permits given by the Lieutenant Governor, and I think the Government ought to amend the Act in such a way that the liquor traffic might be handled more efficiently by the Mounted Police.

Mr. DEWDNEY. We have a clause in the Act of this session.

Mr. WATSON. The fact that there is a clause in the Act of this year should be a reason why the Minister should offer some hope of a reduction in the number of the Mounted Police, as they will not have so much to do.

Mr. DEWDNEY. You misunderstood me. I say there is a clause in the Act which will correct the difficulty the Commissioner speaks of in reference to the ruling of the court.

Mr. WATSON. Was it in regard to placing the sale of liquor in the hands of the North-West Assembly?

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is in the Bill as well.

Mr. WATSON. Then if the North-West Territories have the right to deal with the liquor traffic, they should have the right to appoint officers to protect their own rules and regulations.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is a strong temperance element in the North-West, and we are not at all sure that the Legislative Assembly will be able to do away with the liquor law.

Mr. WATSON. I am sorry the Government have destroyed that temperance element in the North-West, to a great extent, by allowing the Lieutenant Governor unlimited scope.

Clothing $50,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Who are the successful tenderers for clothing?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot give you the names; there are 100 names. I will give you the information in the morning.

Mr. McMULLEN. Let it stand, then.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This question involves a list of 100 names. It is impossible that any Minister on the spot can answer that question.

Mr. McMULLEN. I only asked who were the successful tenderers for the clothing supplied last year.

Mr. LAURIER. This is a fair question, and if the Minister is not ready to answer it, then let the item stand.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The item will not stand.

Mr. LAURIER. Then let us have the information. I am surprised that the Minister of Justice should adopt such a tone at this hour.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is just the time to adopt it.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman must understand that the adoption of such a tone will not advance business. This is a fair criticism, and if the hon. gentleman is not ready to give the information the item can stand, and we can pass to something else. But if the hon. gentleman says "it will not stand," in that tone, I would be sorry if he persisted, because I do not want to delay business more than is necessary.

Mr. DALY. There are 50 or 60 tenders.

Mr. McMULLEN. We asked for the successful men.

Mr. DALY. That means that you have got to give the names of 50 or 60 tenderers.

Mr. LAURIER. Are they all successful tenderers?

Mr. DALY. There are 50 or 60 successful tenderers.

Mr. FOSTER. No one knows better than my hon. friend that it is possible to ask even a pertinent question upon every item we pass, and the Minister cannot answer it on the spur of the moment. It is always usual, when a Minister promises to bring down information, to allow the item to pass under that condition. For four or five hours now we have been subjected to a style of criticism without precedent. The leader of the Opposition has not heard it; he kept out of the House, so that he should not hear it.

Mr. LAURIER. If the hon. gentleman had given a moment ago the answer which he now gives——

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend said he would give the information in the morning.

Mr. LAURIER. If the hon. gentleman said that he would give it at a later stage, then I would allow the item to pass.

Repairs, renewals, replacement of horses, arms and ammunition.... $50,000

Mr. McMULLEN. How many horses were kept for the Mounted Police last year?

Mr. DEWDNEY. 50; 75 are wanted this year.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many died last year? How many were lost or killed?

Mr. FOSTER. Ask whether their hoofs were boiled up?

Mr. McMULLEN. No; we might find out they were fed to the Indians.

Mr. DEWDNEY. 26 horses died last year.

Mr. DALY. I want the hon. gentleman from North Wellington to take back the insinuation he made there, that if these horses died they might be fed to the Indians. You have no right to make a statement of that kind to this House, and I want you to understand it. I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw those remarks.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not prepared to withdraw any remark I have made. I have a perfect right to make any statement such as I have made. After seeing the reports with regard to the treatment of the Indians, I am perfectly justified in making such an insinuation.

Mr. LAURIER. Let us proceed to business. Do I understand the $5,000 increase is for the purchase of new horses?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. Where are these horses purchased?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are all purchased in the North-West, and all raised in the North-West. The average price paid last year was $121. They are picked out by the men in the force, who are the best judges of horses.

Mr. McMULLEN. Do the men who pick them out put the value upon them?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think the man who sells the horses puts the value upon them.

Mr. WATSON. Is there not a regular agent to purchase horses?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; the commissioner, the assistant commissioner and the "vets." usually purchase.

Mr. WATSON. The commissioner and assistant commissioner may not know much about horses, but the veterinary surgeons should be prepared to purchase the horses. What amount is paid for scouts?

Mr. DEWDNEY. $6,000 last year.

Mr. FLINT. Has the department ever considered the question of training up Indian scouts gradually to become so connected with the Mounted Police that they might ultimately take the place, to a large degree, of the Mounted Police of the territories? In the United States the army in the west is being recruited from Indian tribes. The report from the officers in charge of the detachments is that the men are giving satisfaction. In considering this question of the force in the North-West, probably some such suggestion has been considered and discussed, I should like to hear if such is the case, and what opinion has been arrived at?

Mr. DEWDNEY. We have for several years employed Indian scouts, and there are always more or less of them connected with the force. We find it difficult to get them to remain permanently. We obtained uniforms for them, and they generally found their own horses, and then acted as guides and scouts, riding from station to station with messages, and were very useful in many ways. The experiment has been tried to that extent. They have never been drilled together. The Blackfeet and Bloods, who alone have been engaged by the Mounted Police, are very erratic, and it is impossible to keep them at work.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The Minister has stated that the services of the police were required owing to the whiskey business in the North-West. Has the North-West Council made representations to the Government asking that more power be given to it, in order to assist in controlling the liquor traffic? If that body has made such representations, do the Government intend to concede to any extent the concession asked?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not think any representations have been made in that regard, except asking that the liquor business might be placed in their hands.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Did they not petition against the granting of permits?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They never asked for the privilege of granting permits.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Did they not protest against the granting of permits by the Lieutenant Governor?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They asked for power to deal with the liquor traffic.

Mr. McMULLEN. I observe that $2,600 was charged for telegrams.

Mr. DEWDNEY. No expenditure was made unless it was absolutely necessary. The sending of a telegram often saves the despatching of a horse and man. The telegraphs in the northern part of the North-West are owned by the Government.

Mr. McMULLEN. Do you pay the Government lines for telegraphs?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. This does not seem to be wholly satisfactory, and as it seems a large amount to be charged for telegrams in a single department, I hope the hon. gentleman will bring down some further information at a later stage.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it is not a large sum, when it is remembered that the mail communication is defective. It is necessary to telegraph on the ground of urgency, for mails may sometimes be seriously delayed, as in some parts there are mails only once or twice a week. To wait until a letter is delivered might destroy all the benefit that might otherwise accrue.

Mr. LAURIER. That may be the explanation, but I understand the Minister will bring down further information.

Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.45 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 2nd September, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 161) in relation to the unlawful disinterment of dead bodies.—(Sir John Thompson.)

THE MEMBER FOR EAST NORTHUMBERLAND.

Mr. GIROUARD moved:

That the evidence now being taken by the Select Committee appointed to enquire into the charges preferred against the member for the East Riding of Northumberland be printed for the use of members of the Committee, and that Rule 94 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS.

Mr. GIROUARD moved the adoption of the sixth report of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. He said: I wish to offer one or two remarks in relation to one or two paragraphs of this report. The first is as follows:—

"Your Sub-Committee is also of the opinion that, under the present state of the law, the Speaker, when not aware of the contestation of the election of a member, may properly act upon the resignation of such member, and issue his Warrant accordingly; and, should clause 7 of chapter 13 of the Revised Statutes be continued, they beg to recommend that this want in the statute be remedied by providing that, in the future, the prothonotary or clerk of the court where an election petition is fyled and pending shall forthwith notify the Speaker of such election petition."

I would call the attention of the House to clause 7 of chapter 13, which reads as follows:—

"No member shall tender his resignation while his election is lawfully contested, or until the expiration of the time during which it may by law be contested on other grounds than corruption or bribery."

There is no provision in the statute for the sending of any notice to the Speaker of the House by the clerk or prothonotary of the court when an election petition has been fyled and is pending, so that the Speaker will know whether he should issue his Warrant or not. Therefore, the Committee has recommended that should clause 7 of chapter 13 be continued, a provision should be added to the statute that the prothonotary or the clerk of the court should give immediate notice to the Speaker of the fyling of an election petition. The last paragraph of the report of the Committee states:

"Your Sub-Committee finally, without expressing any opinion thereon, recommends the advisability of the House considering whether the said clause 7 of chapter 13 of the Revised Statutes of Canada should not be repealed."

I may mention one reason—a good many others, I suppose, may be advanced—in support of the repeal of that clause. There is nothing in the law which prohibits the same person from being a candidate in two or more constituencies. The consequence is that if the same person represents two electoral districts, and his seat as to both is contested, one of those districts is disfranchised. Take the case of Sir Hector Langevin, the ex-Minister of Public Works, who represents the district of Three Rivers and the district of Richelieu. The two seats, I understand, have been contested, and the consequence is that one of those districts is unrepresented. The same thing may be said of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, who ran in two districts and was defeated in one. The same thing may have happened in his case; and what happens in the case of two members may happen in the case of half-a-dozen. So that it seems to me that this is a very serious public grievance which is sufficient to induce the House to repeal clause 7. No inconvenience will result, I think, from the repeal of that clause. Suppose that a member whose seat is contested resigns, we have a clause in the statute relating to controverted elections which states that notwithstanding his resignation the proceedings may continue either to disqualify him or to secure costs against him. So that I do not see that any good object can be gained by refusing to allow a member to send in his resignation, while I see a very great grievance in the law as it stands, and it seems to me that the advisability of repealing altogether clause 7 should commend itself to the judgment of the House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would just say a word or two in regard to the report. Before this matter was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I called the attention of the House to one point upon which we were not called upon to report, that is, to what extent, apart from statutory provisions altogether, a member has the right to resign when serious charges are pending against him which if established would justify his expulsion from Parliament. I notice from the authorities that in England the Chiltern Hundreds would never be given to a person in a state of mental incapacity or where proceedings are pending whereby the applicant might be lawfully deprived of his seat or expelled from the House. Now, I apprehend that the Chiltern Hundreds being the only method known to the House of Commons in England by which a member can cease to be a member of the House, apart from being appointed to some other office of emolument under the Crown, what would deprive a person from obtaining the Chiltern Hundreds in England would also preclude him from tendering his resignation, or his resignation from being accepted. This is a matter of very serious importance, and it ought to be well considered by the House before we undertake to lay down any general rule. The Committee have expressed their views upon the provisions of the statute and how far the statute is applicable to such a case; but, apart from the statute altogether, there is a law of Parliament which deals with this matter in certain classes of cases, and I suppose it would not be well for the House, without investigating the subject, to come to a conclusion averse to this ancient rule of usage. Sir William Anson mentions in his work on the English constitution that a member against whom charges are pending which would justify his expulsion from Parliament, if established, is not in a position to accept the Chiltern Hundreds, and thus cease to be a member of the House; and I fear he would not be entitled to tender his resignation to you, and you, Mr. Speaker, would not be at liberty to accept it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) With respect to the matter which was immediately referred to the sub-Committee, I think there was a unanimous expression of opinion that under the law, as it now stands, a member against whom an election petition is pending could not resign; and we have the report of the Committee to the effect that, under the circumstances, the Speaker perhaps was not to blame inasmuch as there appears to be something wanting in the law, and no official information was conveyed to him that the gentleman who tendered his resignation was not in a position to do so. It will be noticed that the Committee make no specific recommendation further than the recommendation that the repeal of the seventh section may be considered by the House. It did not come to any conclusion on that subject. It thought the matter was of sufficient importance to leave to the decision of the House, and I desire personally to record my opinion, as it exists at present, that the report does not in any way commit the members of the Committee to an expression of opinion, one way or the other, on that subject. It seems to me that the remarks of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) are apt to mislead in one respect. He says that, under the existing Controverted Elections Act, it is provided that if a member resigns the petition shall continue to go on against him, and that the seventh section of the Act, to which we had particular reference, seems to be in conflict with the Controverted Elections Act. There is no doubt one seems to be in conflict with the other; but there is this point I am not convinced about: Suppose there is a petition fyled against a member containing personal charges, and that section were repealed, he would be allowed to resign, and he might resign, a new Writ might issue, and he might be re-elected. Of what avail would it then be to proceed with the petition for disqualification for causes arising out of the previous election?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.)

Mr. GIROUARD. He would be disqualified for good.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But he has been re-elected in the meantime. I want to impress this fact on the House, that although there does seem to be a little difficulty in the matter, the two Acts have been in operation a good many years, and I do not think any very serious hardships have occurred. I see great difficulties which may occur if you repeal the section, but it may be, on hearing the argument at full length, I may come to the conclusion that the section ought to be repealed. At present, however, one thing strikes me, and that is if, while personal charges are pending against a member, he is permitted to resign, he might be re-elected and the trial go on. Being a member of Parliament how could you disqualify him for acts done during the old election, when he has been re-elected? There are a good many difficulties to be provided against before we repeal that section. At any rate, I want it to be distinctly understood that the Committee have arrived at no conclusion on the subject.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is true the members of the Committee are not bound by any expression of opinion. They decided simply to recommend the question to the consideration of the House; and the question is a difficult one to decide because we have no precedent connected with the British House of Commons, which is not only our best model but practically our only model. The question, however, is not so urgent as to require to be dealt with during the present session, and in the Imperial Parliament it is receiving some consideration as to whether there ought not to be a means provided there for allowing members to resign their seats. In all probability, before we are called on to settle this question, we shall have the light given by the further discussion of the question there and perhaps a model in the legislation they may adopt. Leaving the question of resignation out altogether there are other means by which a member can vacate his seat here, as he does in England, for instance, by the acceptance of office. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) said there would be no practical utility in following up an election petition unless for the purpose of personal disqualification after resignation. I do not think that that object will be frustrated by permitting a member to resign. By the legislation we propose, the Speaker will be informed of the fyling of the contestation, and he will, therefore, not think proper to issue a Warrant for a new Writ until that is disposed of, even though the member should tender his resignation and his seat be vacant in the meantime. This would not prejudice the constituency or enable the member to get a better title to the seat than he had before. The same difficulty is in the Act now, if it be a practical difficulty, because the member whose seat is contested may be appointed, for example, a member of the Government, and in such case he goes back for re-election and has his seat by a new title, but the petition goes on against him for the purpose of disqualification; and I suppose there is no doubt that if he should be disqualified, he loses his seat, notwithstanding the new election.

Mr. GIROUARD. I hope I did not convey to the House the impression that, on the subject of resignation, I expressed the opinion of the Committee. I took special care to say the Committee did not express any opinion, and I intended to convey only my own view.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 155) to amend the Acts respecting the duties of Customs. He said: I wish simply to-day to move the second reading, and to-morrow I will move that we go into Committee upon this Bill. There are two resolutions on ale and beer to be considered.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not want needlessly to delay the hon. gentleman, but I propose, on or about the third reading, to take the sense of the House on one at least of the measures proposed; so that if no discussion arises now and no objection is made, I would ask the hon. gentleman to give me a day's notice before he proceeds. I suppose he will have no objection to arrange that before the third reading is moved?

Mr. FOSTER. I will do that.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

NORTH SHORE RAILWAY BONDS.

Resolution reported from Committee of the Whole for the cancellation and discharge of certain mortgage bonds of the North Shore Railway Company held by the Government, read the second time, and concurred in.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 170) respecting the North Shore section of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—THE CENSUS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not suppose that there is a single member of this House on either side or in either party who has taken the trouble to examine the returns which have recently been laid on the Table of this House affecting the population of Canada, who has risen from the task without a feeling of deep and profound regret. We may differ, and we probably will be found to differ very widely indeed, as to the causes which have led to these results, and also as to the remedies which may be employed to prevent a recurrence of these or similar disappointing statements, but I have no doubt whatever that we will all agree in this, that it is a matter for very profound regret that, in a country of the age of Canada, a country possessing the resources of Canada, possessing the enormous area of virgin and fertile territory, as yet undeveloped, which Canada does, we should find ourselves reduced to the level of the older countries of the old world in regard to the increase of population during the last ten years. But, though that is a matter of great regret to all of us, I am bound to add that those members of the House who have taken the trouble to study the subject, and to avail themselves of such pieces of evidence as were easily accessible to those who interested themselves in the matter during the last ten years, are by no manner of means surprised at the facts which have been disclosed. It is known to all the elder members of this House that for many years past I myself and many members of the Opposition have steadily and continuously called the attention of the House and of the country to what we considered the very gross exaggerations on this subject contained in the statements made by the Government in their official records, made by Ministers on the floor of Parliament, and made by that portion of the press which takes its cue from them and is well paid for so doing. The statements which were made by myself and others were no haphazard conjectures. On every occasion, besides stating the conclusions we had arrived at, we stated the grounds upon which these conclusions had been come to. We laid before the House and before the Government the proof of the facts to which we called their attention. In respect to some of these proofs, it was and is my opinion that they admitted of no satisfactory contradiction. In the case of others it was simply the ground of great probability which had to be accepted. For example, in the case of the great Province of Ontario, no man who knew the facts and knew how their statistics were obtained could doubt that I was justified in pointing out to the Government that the increase in that province was scarcely one-third of its natural increase. In regard to the North-West, absolute proof was given five years ago that the statements which had been made from this side of the House were not only no exaggerations, but that we had very largely underestimated the failure of the Government to throw population into those territories. As the House will remember, when my conclusions were challenged, I time and time again proposed to hon. gentlemen opposite to avail themselves of the opportunities which their position gave them, in order to obtain from reliable sources, and especially from the hierarchy of the Province of Quebec, such evidence on this point as I knew would satisfy them that the conclusions I had come to were substantially correct. Now, when statements of this kind have been made, not once or twice, but many times over and over again on the floor of this House, over and over again on every hustings through the two great provinces, over and over again through the press, and in every conceivable way; when the Government had the opportunity of judging of the correctness of the evidence which we have adduced; when the Government deliberately refused to avail themselves of the other sources of information to which I have referred; and when we find to-day that the statements which were made by me and by others on this side of the House have been verified absolutely and minutely, and that the statements contained in the official records have been absolutely disproved on the evidence of the hon. gentlemen's own census returns, then we are justified in pointing out to the country that the Government of Canada were either most grossly ignorant of facts which they ought to have known and ought to have appreciated when placed before them, or that the Government of Canada, for their own purposes, for political ends most probably, chose wilfully to shut their eyes to the facts and to persevere in a series of deliberate misrepresentations on a point of great moment and great interest to the people of this country. I am not going to make assertions of that kind in respect to the conduct of the Government without submitting to the House absolute proof of the correctness of my statements. First, I will take up the returns of the Department of Agriculture. Now, the House knows well that these returns were continually impeached on the floor of Parliament. I have told the House over and over again that I did not believe that the returns of the Department of Agriculture, so far as regarded their statements of the number of immigrants who had come into Canada, were worth the paper on which they were printed. What are the facts? We find that that department published year after year the following series of statements: They declared that in 1881, 47,000 settlers had come into Canada; in 1882, 112,000; in 1883, 133,000; in 1884, 103,000; in 1885, 79,000; in 1886, 69,000; in 1887, 84,000; in 1888, 88,000; in 1889, 91,000, and in 1890, down to the 1st of January, 1891, 75,000 had settled in Canada. They declared, therefore, in their very last official record that in the last decade 886,171 immigrants had settled in Canada. Sir, they were shown time and time again, if ever men were shown, that these statistics were wholly false and misleading, that it was utterly impossible and out of the question that any such number of persons could have settled here; but, nevertheless, down to the meeting of this Parliament they persisted in publishing to the world the statement that nearly 900,000 persons had immigrated to Canada and had settled in the country. It was similar in the case of the Minister of Customs. In his Trade and Navigation Returns, he gives continually authoritative statements of what the Government considered to be the then population of Canada. On these statements he based numerous percentages. He based, and his colleagues based numerous arguments showing, as they alleged, the progress which this country was making. Now, Sir, I have taken his statements for the last four years, and I find that the Government, in the Trade and Navigation Returns, declared in 1887 that the population of Canada was 4,856,226 souls; in 1888 they declared that the population was 4,946,497; in 1889 they declared it was 5,075,885; in 1890—and the House will note that these statements go to the 1st of July only—they declared that the population of Canada was 5,220,632; and if the same line of calculation were applied, they must have supposed that on the 1st of April, 1891, nine months after that date, the population of Canada would have been 5,350,000; in other words, according to their official statistics, the Government of Canada were misinformed as to the actual state of facts, to the extent of overestimating the population by 520,000 souls. That is the statement from their own records, and I repeat, it proves one of two things, either gross ignorance or wilful and deliberate misrepresentation. Sir, a good deal depended on the way this matter was stated. In these very Trade and Navigation Returns I find they stated that the per capita amount paid by the people of Canada for Customs duties, was $4.60, showing a progressive reduction, according to them, in the amount of the per capita Customs tax. The real facts, as ascertained to-day, are that on the 1st of July, 1890, to which these dates referred, the average per capita collection for Customs would amount to $5.03 or thereabouts, fully 10 per cent. in excess of the statement made in their official records. They did more. Not content with publishing these statements they took upon themselves, and it is not too much to say that they instigated their henchmen throughout the country to denounce and vilify every man on this side of the House who dared to call their attention to the facts which had been forced on our knowledge in the course of our travels through this country, and which we had collected from those statistics to which I referred, and which I repeat, were as accessible to those hon. gentlemen as they were to me, and were time and again brought by me to their notice. That was the course of the Government, and I am bound to say they were ably supported by their subsidized press. Now, it has been a matter of notoriety that for the last ten or twelve years one of the most powerful means of misrepresentation which this Government has employed was through that half of the press whom they found it convenient to subsidize and to whom their supporters look for information. Sir, it is a well-known and excellent principle of English law that when a woman loses her chastity she is regarded in a court of law as a person whose evidence is exposed to most grave suspicion, and I submit to this House that when a journal chooses to become a subsidized pensioner of the Government, that journal sinks to the level of a political strumpet, and it is no more worthy of credence than a woman of bad character. Now, Mr. Speaker, no man has a greater respect than I have for an honest press, no man has a greater respect than I have for the press that does its duty. The press of every country now-a-days has been well described as the fourth estate of the realm, and no greater political crime can be committed, or ever has been committed, than the systematic and determined attempt which has been made during the last twelve years to debauch nearly one-half of the entire press of Canada. Sir, it has been said truly enough that history repeats itself. It is not the first time by many that we have seen in history how convenient it is for a Government to have a band of false prophets in their employment. Sir, the hon. gentlemen opposite, who are great Scriptural authorities, will correct me if my statistics are wrong in this respect, but, to the best of my recollection, in the days of Elijah there were 450 false prophets to one true prophet, and the 450 were fed at the table of Queen Jezebel. Now, Sir, on reference to the Auditor General's Report, I see that we are not quite so efficiently provided for, as, apparently, we have only 104 of those false prophets who feed upon the crumbs that fall from the Government's table. I do not profess—but there is no saying what new discoveries may bring out—but I do not profess to give accurate records of the rations they have received from Queen Jezebel, but I think I will not be very far wrong if I suggest that in the case of the 450 false prophets aforesaid, the champion liars who lied every day, and all day, probably, got from ten to twenty thousand shekels a year, and the baby liars who only had imagination enough to lie once a week had to content themselves with two or three hundred. Now, Sir, I regret that the mawkish modern sentiment of the day renders it impossible to apply to these false prophets the heroic remedy which the prophet Elijah applied to the priests of Baal, but I have a suggestion to make to my good friend the Minister of Justice who, I am told, is sincerely desirous of bringing about a better state of things, and in whom we hope we will not be entirely disappointed. We cannot, as I have said, owing to the tenderness of modern sentiment, apply so thorough-going a remedy as that I have referred to, but we have a fashion in this country that when a number of parties form themselves into joint stock companies, in most of those cases the words "limited liability" are required to be printed in distinct characters and appended to the name of the company. My suggestion to the Minister of Justice is this: That he enact a short law, about three lines long—there is plenty of time to introduce it, we will facilitate its passage—to take the mask from those journals; I do not ask him to punish these people; all I ask him to do is this: that when a journal becomes a subsidized pensioner of the Government let us enact from this day forth that immediately after the title of that journal there shall be printed in letters not less than a quarter of an inch long, the sum it received last year from the Government treasury. In order to give my hon. friends some idea of how it would work, I will read to them a short list I have extracted from the Auditor General's Report. It will read as follows:—St. John Sun, $13,668; Moncton Times, $11,816; Halifax Herald, $12,001; Yarmouth Times, $4,587; Quebec Chronicle, $3,557; Charlottetown Examiner, $1,668; Summerside Journal, $1,561. Where to classify the Montreal Gazette I do not exactly know. In one part of the Auditor General's Report it figures for $5,921; in another part I see $12,000 are paid to it for printing the Geological Report, and in another place it gets $4,000 for lighting the Montreal post office. Now, Sir, I say that during the last few years the conduct of the Government, in devoting several millions of the public money, under one pretext or another, to the subsidizing of their press, has had this effect: That by means of subsidizing nearly one-half the press of Canada, an immense number of important and valuable facts have been kept from the knowledge of their supporters. I propose, Sir, to turn the search light of these census returns on a good many of the falsifications in which these people have been indulging indiscriminately for the last ten years. I say to my hon. friends beside me, I say to the Liberal press, that I know very well that, ordinarily speaking, it is quite true that you cannot interest the public in questions of statistics. But this is one of those rare exceptions when every inhabitant of Canada, every inhabitant of every municipality, every inhabitant of every town, village or city is really and seriously interested in knowing what progress his town, or municipality, or city has made during the last ten years; and such an opportunity has rarely been given to any party of calling the attention of its opponents to certain plain, clear and distinct facts which shed light on every single part of the Government's policy. When, some years ago, I took occasion to warn the House of the result of a policy of excessive taxation, I laid down these three propositions: First of all, I warned them that in a country like Canada, situated as Canada was, partially undeveloped with great resources but with those resources latent, that if you chose to impose excessive taxation on the people you would assuredly do these three things: First, you would intensify the exodus of our population, which we knew was already going on in a far greater ratio than this country could well endure. You would at the same time render it exceedingly unlikely that any large portion of the immigration, for which you were taxing the people, would remain in this country. I said also that this process of excessive taxation, applying it as you were applying it, would inevitably in its indirect consequences produce a huge depression in farm property from one end of the Dominion to the other, at any rate so far as the older provinces were concerned. And I said, in the third place, that although it was possible for you to alter the distribution of wealth by means of taxation, you would not increase it, that all you would do, and all you could do, would be to enrich a few favoured localities and enrich a few hundred individuals at the expense of the great mass of the community. Sir, I further stated, I here to-day deliberately repeat that statement and I challenge the fullest investigation, that, in so far as the older provinces of Canada were concerned, during the last twelve years there has been, in my judgment, no real increase in the wealth of the population. A small number of persons have grown rich, a few favoured localities have grown in wealth; but if you make an honest statement of affairs, if you put on one side the enormous increase of your federal debt, of your municipal debt, of your provincial debt, of your mortgage indebtedness, of your railway debt, and add to that the enormous depreciation of farm property and the enormous depreciation of value in the case of the majority of our towns and villages, and place on the other side all the growth that has taken place in a few localities, it is in the last degree unlikely that the result will show any advance during the last twelve years in the older provinces. We have been doing nothing better than marking time in that interval. That is another charge I bring against this policy of excessive and monstrous taxation. I direct the attention of hon. members beside me to the fact that they have in these census returns as absolute proof as can be given of the perfect accuracy of the statements I made with respect to the growth of Canada and the effect of that policy on the exodus and on immigration. Over and over again, from this very place, I have told the House, and I have made calculations based upon the statement, showing there was no reason to expect a greater increase during the past decade than 50,000 a year. Over and over again I have given that as the highest figure. What do these returns show? They show we have grown 504,000 in the last ten years, whereas I said the growth would be 500,000. These calculations, I repeat, were not guess work, they were based on statements and on information which I gave to the House at the time; and I contend, I think with reason, that if the results of this census have shown that I was absolutely accurate in my general estimate of the growth of population, there is reasonable ground for the belief that I will be found similarly accurate as regards the depreciation of land and the distribution of wealth. However, Sir, I desire to deal at present only with the admitted facts. I will, therefore, recite briefly the allegations which I have made at various times as to the movement of population. I have asserted, and I now repeat, that when we get the United States census returns there is, I am sorry to say, looking at the returns we have here, the strongest probability that I will be proved to have been absolutely accurate when I stated that one man in three of the whole adult male population born in Canada during the last fifty years is to-day an inhabitant of the United States; that I was equally accurate when I stated that of the whole population of Canada, men, women, and children, one person in five will be found to be a citizen of the United States; that of the immigrants you have brought to this country, at a great charge to the people of the country, three in four will be found to have quitted our shores and to have gone to the United States. As I have said, the actual increase according to the corrected returns brought down by the Government amounts to 504,534 during the decade. The number of immigrants amounted to 886,171, being very nearly 400,000 more than the total increase ascertained by our census. The natural increase of the population, according to the best judgment I can form on the point, cannot be computed, and ought not to be computed in a country like Canada, at less than 2¼ per cent. per annum, which would give a natural increase during that period of 1,077,000. The natural increase of immigrants, allowing for the fact that only one-half of them can be considered as present during the decade, if we had kept the whole number 886,000, would amount at the same rate to 110,000. I may say that if any hon. gentleman desires to know the reason why I have placed the rate at 2¼ per cent. per annum, I have done so for this reason: not merely because theorists who write on this subject have invariably laid down some such figure or one approximating to it as a proper ratio of natural increase in a country like this, but because there is actual proof, both in our country prior to 1861 and even to 1871, and in the United States during previous periods of their history when they had no aid from immigration, that the natural increase was very considerably in excess of the rate I have named. I call the attention of the House to the facts of the United States census. From 1790 to 1820, as all American students know, there was, from various causes, almost no immigration into the United States. During the interval, their population increased during the first decade from 3,959,000 to 5,250,000; in the second decade from 5,250,000 to 7,300,000, and in the third decade from 7,300,000 to 9,600,000. In other words, during those three decades, instead of the increase being at the rate of 2¼ per cent., the increase was: for the first period, 35 per cent.; for the second period, 35 per cent.; for the third period, 30 per cent. I say nothing of the well-known fact that there is every reason to believe that the natural increase in the good Province of Quebec has probably largely exceeded the figure that I have named. Nor am I disposed at present to go minutely into the statistics which I have formerly given to show that, could we have kept our population in our own country, there was the strongest ground for believing that, between 1871 and 1881, and between 1881 and 1891, our natural increase would have fully equalled, if not exceeded the increase I have named. I will only say this: that in Canada, in 1871, I find that out of 3,485,000 inhabiting the older provinces, 2,476,000 were under 31 years old; and in 1881, out of 4,000,000 or thereabouts, 2,944,000 were under 31. This is in itself evidence that that is a very strong presumptive argument in proof of my contention that the natural increase could not, and ought not to be placed at less than 2¼ per cent. Now, Sir, I call the special attention of my friends to the general result of all this, and the general result is: We had 4,324,000 people in Canada on the 1st April, 1881; according to Government statistics, we added to this by immigration 886,000 odd; the natural increase in the first case was 1,077,000, in the second case it was 110,000, and the total results are these: Could we have kept our own people in the country, could we have kept these immigrants whom we brought from other countries into ours; instead of the census showing 4,829,000 souls or thereabouts, we would have a census showing 6,400,000 souls, and the loss which we have sustained under these circumstances amounts exactly to 1,568,000 people. If hon. gentlemen will compare the progress made in the United States under similar circumstances they will see that I am within the mark in stating that had we been able to retain these immigrants and to keep our own people, the chances are that our population, for reasons given, would have exceeded the figure I have named. Now, Mr. Speaker, with the materials at my disposal it would be idle to enter into a minute analysis of the result of this census. That must be done next year or whenever it is convenient for Government to supply us with the details, but there are certain broad and patent facts to which I am going to call the attention of the House. They have divided the census, and wisely divided it, in the returns in my hands, into three great groups consisting of the Maritime Provinces, the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario, and the Western Provinces generally. I shall deal with them in rotation, and first of all I take the Maritime Provinces. I have been accused of girding at my hon. friends of the Maritime Provinces, but I may say that no man regrets more than I do to see the showing which they make on the present occasion. It is a painful and a melancholy fact that the whole of the three Provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick during the past decade show an increase of barely 10,000 souls. It appears that between 1871 and 1881 while Nova Scotia, as Sir Charles Tupper was wont to say, was being ground into the dust under the iron heel of an Ontario Finance Minister; Nova Scotia was wicked enough to increase by 55,000, against 9,900 under the beneficent and paternal rule of my hon. friends opposite; and, Sir, the Province of New Brunswick which ought to have been so highly favoured, which has grown so many Finance Ministers, the Province of New Brunswick increased by 35,000 souls from 1871 to 1881 and by 61 souls in the last decade. Now, I know that my hon. friend the Finance Minister is fond of averages and percentages, and I have made out one or two which I commend to his, and to his people's most serious attention. First, let me say that the Maritime Provinces during these twelve years have held the monopoly of Finance Ministers. No other than a maritime man need apply for the post of Finance Ministership. They were, or rather the gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces were, the most ardent advocates of the National Policy, and let us see how they have grown under the fostering care of four successive Finance Ministers from the Maritime Provinces. Nova Scotia, as I have said, grew 550 per cent. faster in the decade from 1871 to 1881 than from 1881 to 1891, and New Brunswick grew 60,000 per cent. faster in the decade from 1871 to 1881 than in the decade from 1881 to 1891. It is a positive fact that the growth was just 600 times as much under my hon. friend here (Mr. Mackenzie) and myself than it has been under the hon. gentlemen opposite, and their own statistics are there in proof.

Mr. FOSTER. You so exhausted it, that it has not got over the effect yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. All I can say is that I entirely repudiate such almost omnipotent power for mischief as the hon. gentleman would credit me with. Did I possess it, I should be tempted to use it, possibly not to the immediate personal advantage of some of my hon. friends opposite. Now, Sir, so far as regards Quebec and Ontario the case though bad is not quite so bad as this. The Province of Quebec seems to have lost less in proportion than any other province. In the case of Ontario our growth has been barely 50 per cent. in proportion to that which it made in the first decade I referred to. But what is very notable, and what deserves the special consideration of the House is: That that increase, such as it is, has taken place not at all in the country districts, but wholly and entirely in a few favoured cities and towns. I find that the hon. gentleman brought down a series of statements of the population of cities and towns, likewise divided in three groups; and even at the risk of tiring the House with figures, I must call their attention to two or three remarkable facts in connection therewith. I find the increase in towns and cities above 5,000 amounted to 298,000 in round numbers, but, Sir, I find that 158,000 or more of that total increase was absorbed by the cities of Toronto and Montreal and their suburbs, and I have reason to believe that this is a considerable underestimate of the true increase which ought to be credited to these two cities. I find that Victoria, Vancouver and Winnipeg account for 12,600 more of the increase, so that out of the total increase of 298,000 we find that 200,000 is taken up by those five cities alone. The population of all the rest in 1881 amounted to 440,000, on which there was an increase of 98,000, being considerably less than the natural increase per annum of births over deaths in an ordinary healthy community. The same is the case with towns above 3,000. There are five new towns here, accounting for about 17,000 of a total increase, and the result there is, that taking out the new towns which were not in existence in 1881, all the rest of the towns between 3,000 and 5,000, taken collectively, have done very little more than to maintain the natural increase of births over deaths, while below 3,000 the total increase is a good deal less than the natural increase of births over deaths. So that it follows, Sir, that out of a total increase of 504,000, at least 377,000, if not more, are due to the increase in towns and cities, and that practically the result of this census confirms in the strongest possible degree the statement which I have so often made, that the result of your policy of excessive taxation is to favour a few large cities and a few individual towns at the expense of the entire remainder of the community. As regards the whole agricultural population, not merely in the Maritime Provinces, but in Ontario and Quebec, it has practically stood still for the last ten years, and that, too, although you assert that you poured into this country immigration to the extent of nearly a million of people. Now, in this connection I dare say the House will remember that I was very virulently assailed by that portion of the press to which I have alluded, because last year I called attention to the fact that the rural population in some fifty constituencies of Ontario, which I mentioned, showed a marked diminution. Sir, we have now got the returns for those counties, and by deducting the population in the towns and cities as it is given, we find that there was only one error in the statistics which I quoted, and that was, that in most cases I greatly underestimated the amount of the decrease of the rural population in that magnificent group of counties to which I referred. Sir, I have here my speech on the Budget of last year, and, to give the House an illustration, I find that in the case of the great County of Huron, which I know well, I estimated the decrease at 3,000, whereas the statistics laid on the Table by these hon. gentlemen show the decrease in that magnificent county to amount to close on 9,000. Much the same is the case with respect to the population in Wellington, Lennox, Addington, Frontenac and other counties to which I referred. If I erred at all in the declarations I then made, it was not that I exaggerated but that, I deeply regret to say, I seriously underestimated the extent to which our rural population was being depleted under the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. And mark, Sir, those counties in which this loss has occurred are no poverty-stricken counties. They are the very garden of Canada; they are inhabited, as I know well, by a right thrifty, intelligent and industrious population; and if there were any counties in Canada likely to maintain their rural population, it would be just such counties. And now, Sir, I come to the third group, the western group as it is called, composed of Manitoba and the three kindred provinces; and here there is a tolerable increase, judged by the percentage. But here we possess the advantage of having a census taken midway. We have not merely the census of 1881, but in the case of the North-West the census of 1885, and in the case of Manitoba the census of 1886, and it is to these that I propose to call the attention of the House. So far as the North-West provinces are concerned, I am sorry to say that the showing is not as favourable as we could wish. I find that in the three North-West provinces the total population in 1885 amounted to a little more than 48,000 souls. Now, Sir, allowing for the correction made the other day, the House will see that in six years which have elapsed from 1885 to 1891 that population has increased about 19,000—that is, at the rate of 3,200 per annum. Allowing for the natural increase, which would amount to 1,100, we find that in the three provinces of the North-West there has been an increase during the last six years at the rate of 2,100 per annum, or something like an increase of 700 per annum in each of those provinces, which I take it may roughly be described as being each a good deal larger than France. In the case of the Province of Manitoba, the showing is, I am happy to say, a little better. There in 1886 we had a population of 108,000; we have now a population of 154,000. The increase there has been at the rate of about 9,000 a year, from which has to be deducted the natural increase of 2,500, so that in that province we have had an increase of 6,500 a year from immigration, an increase which, though small, is still satisfactory as compared with other regions. But, after all, Sir, what does it amount to? It amounts to this, that with an almost unbounded fertile territory to settle, we have succeeded in importing about 10,000 people per annum during the last ten years, or 20,000 families, at a cost of $100,000,000, and an annual charge to us to-day of about $7,000,000 a year. Now, Sir, there are two very noteworthy facts in respect to these same immigration statistics. One is this: Every man who has taken the trouble to acquaint himself with the class of immigrants who have been leaving Canada for the last ten years will, I think, bear me out in the statement which I have often made, that of the immigrants who leave Canada for other countries, a most unusually large percentage are men and women in the very flower of their youth, and that the real loss to Canada is very imperfectly measured by the mere statistical facts. It is the flower of our population that we are losing. We are sending no residuum to the United States, but a very large percentage indeed of the very choicest and best of our population. If hon. gentlemen doubt that, let them go to any of our colleges and universities; let them go, for instance, to the Royal Military College at Kingston, where at a heavy cost we educate men who ought to be fit for the service of this country; and let them ascertain where the graduates of those colleges and universities have gone; and they will find that of the choicest pick and prime of our people a very large percentage are daily leaving our shores and becoming citizens of a foreign land. Then, Sir, these returns show conclusively the utter futility of our system of immigration—of the policy of spending millions to bring here immigrants whom we are unable to keep. Nor is that the worst of it. The same causes that tend to deplete Canada of the flower of her population tend to deprive us of the best immigrants who come here. Just as the choice of our people leave us, so the choice of the immigrants leave us; and what is worse still, after sojourning here for a short time and going to the States, they become anti-immigration agents; they tell other intending immigrants that they came to Canada and were unable to stay here, having been driven out by a policy of excessive taxation. The result is that every hundred thousand of immigrants whom you bring here and fail to keep, operate powerfully against you in the markets of the world. Now, Sir, Canada, as everybody knows, is not a densely-peopled country. Wholly apart from the North-West, we have great tracts of virgin territory wholly unoccupied. In the Province of Ontario alone we have an area of 180,000,000 acres, of which barely 22,000,000 acres are occupied, and not thickly occupied. I have never contended that the whole of that area is cultivable or available for settlement. But I do say that there is room in Ontario to-day for a rural population treble, or quadruple, or quintuple that which now find employment in it. And I say more. I say that there is no greater folly than the argument often used by hon. gentlemen opposite, that we may sit down contented with this disastrous state of things, because, forsooth, in the United States you will find old states, thickly-peopled states, from which the population migrates in much the same way as they do from us. But there is this vital and all-important distinction, that when a citizen of the United States migrates from his native state, he goes to another state, and remains a citizen of the same country: but with us, unfortunately, when we lose our people by emigration, they leave us to become the subjects of a foreign power. So far, I think, everybody will agree that the facts admit of no dispute. With the solitary exception of the question to which I have called attention as to whether I was right or wrong in estimating 2¼ per cent. as the true natural increase, I am not aware of any single fact which admits of dispute. Hon. gentlemen opposite may not like that: I dare say they do not; but I submit it is the idlest folly to blame me or gentlemen on this side, or to blame the Liberal press, for calling attention to these facts. You might just as well, if you were in command of a ship, denounce the look-out man for telling you there are breakers ahead; or, as has actually been done by these hon. gentlemen opposite, bring the charge against me that because I pointed out these facts, therefore I created them. The thing is absurd. We have called attention to facts which we knew. We have called attention to statistics with which these hon. gentlemen could have acquainted themselves as well as we. It is no fault of ours, though it may be in a very high degree a fault of theirs, that they would not pay attention to our warning and take steps in time to avert these disastrous results to which I am to-day calling attention. I hardly know which to wonder at most, the malignity or the stupidity of the charge advanced against the Canadian Liberal party of desiring to promote emigration. Why, Sir, who is it that loses by the exodus? Which of the political parties in this country is it that ought to desire most to put a stop to this exodus? Who constitute this exodus? It is to an unusual large degree composed of the most intelligent, enterprising and adventurous among the people of Canada. Now, I say that three out of four, perhaps nine out of ten of them are always Liberals. The fact of the matter is, from the nature of the case, the Liberal party must recruit its ranks from the youth of our population. That is the rule in all countries, and in none more than in the Dominion itself. I tell those hon. gentlemen that if these young men had not left this country, the party in power would have been thrice swept out of existence. It is within my knowledge that in fifteen counties of Ontario alone, something like 500 or 600 young Liberals apiece, on an average, were lost to this country by bad government in the course of four or five years. I believe that the reverse of the charge made by hon. gentlemen opposite that we desire to promote emigration is much nearer the truth. I will not say that the members of the existing Government have conspired together to drive the youth and the flower of Canada into exile, but I have strong reason to think that some of the more astute of their party leaders and politicians have looked with great complacency on the exodus of young men from Canada, knowing they would have a much better chance in dealing with the residuum than they could have, had we kept that class of our population at home. There is another consideration. Hon. gentlemen opposite may take the choice of two alternatives. Either they were grossly ignorant of the facts I have called attention to, or, knowing them, they deliberately concealed and perverted them. But I have no doubt of this, that before the writs for the last election were issued, it had come to the knowledge of members of the Government that there was a great danger of the existing state of things being disclosed; and one of the reasons which induced those hon. gentlemen to commit what I call a gross outrage on the people of Canada and the Governor General by inducing the Governor General to dissolve Parliament under false pretenses, was a desire to hurry on the elections before the people could become acquainted with the facts of these census returns and certain other facts of great importance, now daily being disclosed by the Committees of this House. Sir, I think that was one of the main reasons why, one year and more before the legal term expired, the people of this country were hurried to an election without the possession of a vast mass of information they ought to have had. And I tell this House again, had I then had the official records I now have, had my friends then the official facts now in our hands, hon. gentlemen opposite know, and know well, there would be no majority behind the Treasury benches to-day. Now, it is time for us to investigate as well as we can the causes which have brought about this state of things. So far as I understand the situation, there are but three possible causes which could reduce a country like Canada to such a position as that which this return discloses. One of these possible causes is the inferiority of the country in soil or climate to its competitors on this continent. Do hon. gentlemen opposite assert that that is the cause? The second possible cause is the inferiority of the people in intelligence and enterprise. Do hon. gentlemen opposite assert that that is the cause, because if they do the success of the great number of our people who have gone to the United States contradicts them at once. But if they think it is not due to the inferiority of the country or the people, there remains the only possible cause, the third cause, and that is the inferiority of the policy and the administration of that policy. That is the only remaining cause, and that, I believe, is the real cause which has brought about the state of things we now deplore. Nearly twelve years have passed away since the people of Canada were persuaded to enter on the extraordinary fiscal revolution of 1879. The reasons for that revolution were based on two remarkable discoveries, then first promulgated to Canada by the gentlemen who occupied the Treasury benches in 1879 and by divers diligent missionaries of theirs, interested for more or less good reasons in promoting their success. The first of these discoveries was this: that the best way for a people to grow rich is by taxing themselves for the benefit of a few hundred greedy knaves. That was the first great discovery on which the National Policy hinged; and the second was like unto it, that truth and honesty were useless and needless in the case of the highest public servants of the country. On these two discoveries hung the success of these hon. gentlemen in gulling the people of Canada in 1879, and now Canada is beginning to understand what the results of that policy are, and it is well for Canada that she should study and record her experience there anent. What are its results? They are, first of all, the reduction of her rate of growth to a rate below that of most European countries, as evidenced by these returns. Next, the enormous increase of debt and taxation, as evidenced by the public accounts. Third, the demoralization of the entire Civil Service of Canada, as evidenced by the reports daily made to us by the several committees of this House; and lastly, the total failure of this policy, as evidenced by the results in attempting to colonize the North-West. In 1878, under my regime, the total taxation, allowing for deficits, would be about $18,500,000. To-day, the nominal taxation is admittedly $31,000,000, and the real taxation, that is the sum taken out of the pockets of the people, although a very large portion does not go into the treasury, cannot be estimated at less than $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 all told. We have had, for twelve years, a perfect carnival of corruption, as this country is now beginning to see. We are beginning to see what this boodling in excelsis means and what it costs. We have advanced $40,000,000, or $140,000,000 if you take the railway expenditure into account, for the construction of divers public works, and I venture to say that there has not been one cent expended that has not paid, in some shape or other, toll and tribute to their corruption or reptile fund. I have no time now to add more in regard to this subject except to refer to the manner in which we have been dealing with our public domain. We have some 400,000 square miles of fertile land in the North-West, and it is doubtful if more than one-eighth or one-tenth of the whole remains really at our disposal. We have a system of railway subsidies of which the end and inwardness is gradually being disclosed, and we are also subject to a combination which is generally known by the name of the Red Parlour which shows how, when elections come around, these men who have taxed the public for their private gain are in turn taxed by the Premier of the Dominion to help to keep the party in power from whom they derive their advantages. The people of Canada are getting a rude and grim waking up from the fool's paradise in which they have so long been slumbering. They are getting to learn what it is to leave their interests in the hands of knaves and charlatans, and also to learn what a great mistake we made in 1879, when we turned our backs on the English system and adopted a servile imitation of the policy of the United States. I have always felt that, while protection anywhere and everywhere is a mistake, yet, as Mr. Gladstone himself has admitted, if there be a country on the face of the earth in which, from its large and varied population, from its general circumstances, from the contiguity of its population, and from the nature of its productions, the system of protection could be successfully carried out, that country is the United States; and I have also felt that, by parity of reasoning, if there is a country in which, owing to the condition of its people, owing to the limited nature of its productions, owing to the natural separation of its people into different divisions, owing to the fact that they all live in the same part of the northern temperate zone and are therefore rather competitors than customers of each other, the experiment of protection is likely to result disastrously, that country is Canada, and the census records are the proof of it. I desire to call the attention of the House to another fact. If the Government do not choose to mend their ways and give up this system of taxation and apply themselves without delay to the task of obtaining other and better markets for us, then we are very likely to lose those markets which we have. No one can look at the proposals which have been made by the United States to the peoples of South America and the West Indies without seeing that we are in imminent risk —and I make this remark especially to call the attention of the members from the Maritime Provinces to the question—of losing the markets of the West Indies and Mexico, and of the Southern parts of this continent, as well as that of the United States. That is a matter beyond doubt, and it will require the utmost skill and statesmanship to avoid that consummation, and, moreover, our position is going to be greatly worsened by the effects of the McKinley tariff on the farmers of this country. Those effects are going to be two-fold. In the first place, there is a positive tax on the farmers of this Dominion which they cannot avoid paying into the treasury of the United States, and, in the second place, the indirect effect will be that our prices will be cut down and there will be a heavy depreciation in the value of the articles which the farmers sell at home. True, there will be some benefit to those who purchase the goods, particularly to those resident in the towns and cities, but to the farmers that is no alleviation of the effect which that unfortunate piece of legislation will have on them. This year, by mere accident and in spite of this legislation, these effects will not be so much felt. We have had a good harvest taken generally, we will have fairly good crops, and we will be able to sell our productions at fairly good prices because of the unexampled fatality which has overtaken the crops of almost every nation in the old world. But our escape is due this year to no skill on the part of the Government, but to pure accident. I tell the Government that they cannot afford to go on pursuing this policy of isolation from the rest of the new world. I desire, and always have desired to have free trade with the whole world, but, if we are driven to choose between having free trade with the new world, and having that sort of restricted intercourse which alone is possible to us with the old world, then, I say, give us free trade with the rest of the new world. Practically, we would lose nothing by that. As matters stand, and the hon. gentleman knows it well, if we deduct our trade with England—and she is not likely to close her markets to us, because they are open to all the world, and they are open to us, not for our benefit, but for hers—then almost the entire of our commerce is with Newfoundland, the United States, the Spanish and British West Indies and South America. Take that away, and we have no trade left save the trade with England, and we have very little chance of developing any new trade. Now as to the remedy for this, because I feel it is only fair to state what our policy is, inasmuch as hon. gentlemen are constantly stating that we have no policy on the subject. We propose three remedies. First, the policy of the Liberal party is to prevent boodling and to punish boodlers of high and low degree. In the second place, we desire to reform the system of taxation, especially where it bears more heavily on the poorer than on the richer class. And, thirdly, we desire to find new markets for our produce as speedily as may be. The people of Canada ought to recognize first of all that she must be, by the mere force of her geographical position, an American nation and an American power. Let them recognize that fact and all which it implies. Next, they must recognize that we have been charged with certain duties, to which duties, involving as they do the necessity of providing for the defence and good government of half a continent, certain inherent rights are attached, and notably the right to make our own bargains and our own commercial treaties on the terms which are most advantageous to the interests of Canada. In the third place, they should recognize that it is in the highest degree our interest and the interest of the British Empire to cultivate friendship and friendly relations with the people of the United States, which can best be done by the adoption of a system of reciprocity such as that which the Liberal party have had the honour of proposing on several occasions. What is to be said on the other side? What offset have the present Government to make to the state of things which is disclosed here? We know what they promised us, and we know what their record has been. They have trebled our debt, as our public accounts show. They have, in effect, trebled our taxes, as the same public accounts show. They have, to all intents and purposes, thrown away the control of 400,000 square miles of fertile territory in the North-West; they have so mismanaged it that, whereas they pledged themselves that we should to-day be in receipt of seventy millions from it, they have not got enough out of it to pay the cost of the surveys of the territory. They have caused one rebellion there by their wilful mismanagement, and sooth to say, if the truth was known, I believe that their conduct has justified many more. That is what they have done; these are their sins of commission, and in the matter of omission they have utterly failed to colonize the North-West, for which Canada has made such huge sacrifices; they have utterly failed to stop the exodus of our own people from the country, which they pledged themselves so often to do; they have utterly failed to persuade the immigrants whom they brought into this country to stay here, and they are responsible to Canada for the loss of one million and a-half of people that ought to be added to our population to-day, if we had increased in the same ratio as our neighbours have done. And, more, Sir, their misgovernment, their corruption has gone very far—and I say it with shame and sorrow—to make Canada to-day an object of contempt to the whole civilized world. Sir, that is the result of twelve years of organized, systematic and continuous corruption; that is the result of twelve years of folly, falsehood and fraud, and in order that the people of Canada may have an opportunity of knowing briefly and tersely what the practical result has been, I move that you do not leave the Chair, but that it be resolved:

That it appears from the official returns recently laid on the Table of this House, that the total population of the Dominion of Canada on or about the 1st day of April, 1891, was 4,829,344.

That it further appears from the report of the Department of Agriculture for the year 1890 that the total number of immigrants stated by the said department to have settled in Canada from the 1st day of January, 1881, to the 31st December, 1890, was in all 866,171.

That according to the last census the population of the Dominion on or about the 1st April, 1881, was 4,324,810.

That the total increase of the population of Canada in the ten years now past was 504,534.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

That at the rate of 2½ per cent. per annum, the natural increase of the population of Canada during the last ten years would amount to 1,077,531 without any immigration.

That at the same rate of 2½ per cent per annum, the natural increase of the said 866,171 immigrants officially reported to have settled in Canada between the years 1880 and 1890 would have amounted to 110,432.

That had the said natural rate of increase been maintained and the said immigrants remained in Canada, the total population of Canada would now amount to 6,404,944.

That according to statements made by members of Government, in their places in this House, and according to official documents, at least 400,000 square miles of fertile territory heretofore unoccupied in the north-west portion of Canada have been made accessible and available for settlement within the last ten years.

That the said new territory amounts to 256,000,000 acres, being an area equal to twelve times the entire area of occupied land in the Province of Ontario at the present time, and being fully five times as large as the whole occupied area of the five Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island in 1881.

That it appears from the above-recited facts that the difference between the actual increase of the population of Canada and the natural increase, together with the immigrants officially reported to have settled in Canada, is 1,568,600.

That during the last ten years the actual taxation of the people of Canada has been enormously increased under the operation of the existing tariff.

That the deplorable state of things disclosed by the above-mentioned returns imperatively commands a radical change in the policy and methods of government followed by the Administration.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to pass briefly in review some, out of a great many, of the statements which have been made this afternoon in this House with reference to the policy of the Government in several respects, taking in, widely, the immigration policy of the Government, its management of the general trade and financial interests of the country, its governmental or administrative management of the country, all of which have been, in one way or another, woven into the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat: but all of which have been made, under his peculiar manipulation, to point to the one only purpose that my hon. friend had in view, namely, to further, if he possibly could, the interest of his own party, and to depreciate the party to which he is opposed. Sir, if there ever was an occasion on which one might well have looked for statesmanship to replace partizanship, might have looked for a cool and calm discussion and dissection of facts, might have looked for a discussion of economic considerations, and a fair desire to find out the causes, a fair desire to suggest reasonable remedies, surely it might have been upon an occasion of this kind when we are discussing the broad question of the progress in population and prosperity of the Dominion of Canada at large. It was a time when my hon. friend might have struck out a course, which I know would have been unusual to him, but which would have reflected great credit upon him, when he might have thrown off his own mantle of vituperation, abuse and partizanship and clothed himself even for a few moments with, if necessary, the borrowed garment of a broad and generous statesmanship. But from the time my hon. friend began his speech until the time he left it off, there has been nothing but one long-continued wail, broken by but one note of jubilation, and that was the note struck in the early part of his remarks, that at last one of the five hundred thousand prophecies which he has ventured to utter from the time he commenced his political career in this country up to the present hour, has come very near proving true; and in this case it is an example of the old adage that it is the exception that proves the rule, and this one single exception must be quoted by himself to prove the general rule that he has been times out of number a false prophet in regard to his predictions about this country. Sir, the hon. gentleman has gone to the Scriptures, and he told you what Elijah of old did to certain false prophets, and he ventured the humane wish that it was within his power to have treated hon. gentlemen opposite him as Elijah treated those false prophets. If that form and measure of punishment had been meted out to the false prophets in this country, before this year of grace 1891 my hon. friend's place would have been vacant, and he would not have had to-day the opportunity to have indulged in his present attack. Sir, he commenced, of course, with that charity which is so usual to him, and which I must say sits so naturally upon him, so much so that we and the country would be surprised if we saw anything else sitting upon him even for a few lucid moments, by declaring that this Government had deliberately falsified the estimates given from year to year with respect to the population of this country. No one knows better than my hon. friend, and his smiling face upturned to me now assents to the proposition, that there was no deliberate misrepresentation, that there was no conspiracy on the part of the Government, that there was no deliberate misrepresentation or conspiracy on the part of the department charged with making these estimates; but they took the percentage of increase which had been the rule in the preceding ten years, and in connection with that the returns of immigration into this country as well as they could be followed, and upon these two made what the country knows, and what we know and what this Parliament knows were simply estimates of the population, given as far as they possibly could be given in accordance with the facts, as they came under the knowledge of the department. With that same charity the hon. gentleman has chosen through his remarks, in order to give the partizan flavour to them, and in order to keep as far as possible from any broad ground of statesmanship, to call every man who has been opposed to him, and who has supported the Government for the time being, a henchman, and every newspaper that had for services rendered the payment that was due, a reptile press, a subsidized press, a press which was deliberately concealing or deliberately falsifying the facts. And the hon. gentleman went so far as to invade a province which neither he nor I, I suppose, has the right to occupy, and enunciated a principle of law, that as a woman who had once lost her chastity would be debarred from testifying on oath, so the party which he opposed if once caught in misrepresentation should not be thereafter allowed to testify in its own behalf. This I will leave the lawyers of the House to take care of, but I will simply call the attention of the House thereto, to give it, I think, a sufficient refutation. He declared next, by way of introduction, that every newspaper in this country which has received a dollar or a thousand dollars by way of payment from this Government for services done, is a part of the subsidized press, of the reptile press, utterly unable to discuss the facts or give the truth to the people. I will take the hon. gentleman on the ground of reasonableness, appealing not to him in his present mood, because just now he is very unreasonable, but the good sense of the House and the broader sense of the people outside of the House. I will ask any sensible and honest man to answer this question: Whether, whenever the Government engage the services of physicians to attend its hospitals and look after its patients, and in return pays their wages, if it is fair and reasonable to say that these medical men are subsidized by the Government, are unworthy of credence and unworthy of support as honest men doing honest service and getting honest pay therefor? Is that a position which can be taken? I ask the hon. gentleman who sits opposite to me (Mr. Tarte) if he subscribes to that doctrine? I ask hon. gentlemen, not in this House, but outside of this House, some of them possibly in this House, who own newspapers in different provinces of the Dominion, which provinces are under Liberal Governments, so-called, for the time being, who advertise for the Government, who put in their bills and get their pay, I ask them if they are willing to sit under the undeserved, the unmerited and unreasonable imputations of the hon. member for South Oxford? Is it fair they should do so? If so, there is a large reptile press. There is a large proportion of men connected with the press in the Province of Quebec and the Province of Ontario who are doing these same services for the Provincial Governments, who earn their remuneration possibly just as honestly, who put in their bills just as reasonably, and get their pay; I ask whether or not it is fair, and whether the hon. gentleman's supporters think it is fair, that they should lie under these general allegations of untruthfulness with respect to this matter? We must be reasonable. We may belong to two parties. We may fight each other on a political field, but there is a higher forum and a wider jury we must appeal to in each case, and before that forum and that jury such contentions as these will not be held as tenable. The hon. gentleman must do first this thing: he must show that the moneys have not been earned, that the prices have not been reasonable, and that the services have been unreasonably requited, before it is open to him to asperse his fellow-men just as honest and upright as himself, and just as intelligent as himself, who are found in the editorial sanctums in all parts of this Dominion of Canada, and who give just as good services and as ill-requited services to their country as the hon. member for South Oxford is giving to this country now, or had given to his country at any previous time in his political history. Sir, my hon. friend, after having indulged in these preparatory remarks, mild remarks preparatory to the strong adjectives which he was bound to introduce in increasing ratio as he went on with his speech, pitched into, as everybody knew it was his design to do, the policy of the present Government. My hon. friend did not rise in this House with any idea of discussing fairly and candidly the reasons why Canada had not progressed more rapidly than she has during the last ten years. That was not his object, and he proved to the satisfaction of everyone that it was not his object, because he did not go upon lines of discussion at all. My hon. friend's object escaped him in the few words he uttered when he deplored the fact that he and his friends behind him had not had this club of census figures, which are not as satisfactory as he would have wished them to have been, to have done what? Not to have proposed means for the better government of the country, not to have proposed means for the better commercial prosperity of the country, but to beat the Liberal-Conservative party with at the elections and to have overturned them and put themselves in their places. That was the object, and that was the object which, before my hon. friend got through, he stated, and stated boldly. I will take up some few of the points made by my hon. friend and my remarks will possibly be as discursive as his were, while I am dealing with these several points. He declares that all our immigrants have gone somewhere away from us, and that the natural increase and the immigration together should have reasonably given us a larger number of people than we have to-day. That is a disappointment, he says, to him, and I am here frankly to say that it is a disappointment to this country, that within the last ten years, taking all the circumstances into account, the rate of progress has not been larger than it has been. But it is a disappointment, Sir, which it has not been simply our lot to experience. It is a disappointment which has been experienced by our neighbours across the line, it is a disappointment which has been experienced in Great Britain, it is a disappointment which has been experienced by other countries in the world. Let us look just for a moment at the United States of America. In the first place my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) took a very heavy percentage of natural increase—2¼ per cent. He cannot establish, nor will figures, nor will deductions from figures establish, that the natural rate of increase is so large as that. The United States do not maintain that the natural increase is so large as 2¼ per cent., and if you take the census of the United States you will find that in ten years 5,500,000 of immigrants came into that country, and although by the natural increase, assisted by the immigration, they ought to have had in that ten years an increase of 18,500,000 of population, they only had an increase, including immigration and all, of 12,500,000. Taking into account what they thought should be their natural increase and the known immigration into the country, the United States should have had at least 18,000,000 of an increased population instead of 12,500,000, and the disappointment at that result has been broadcast throughout the United States. My hon. friend may ask: Where has the other part of our looked-for increase gone; where have the immigrants gone, or how has the natural increase disappeared; but in the United States, as well as in this country, there has been a disappointment in that regard, there has been a lowering of the increase, and there has also been a lowering of the increase in Great Britain. My hon. friend, therefore, ought to have been honest enough to state, as the country will be wise enough to see, that there are certain causes broader than that of Administrations and of Governments; that there are certain causes deeper than that of mere fiscal policies, which are to be canvassed, if we will approach, in a broad and statesmanlike way, the question as to what reasons there are that in these new countries the percentage of increase, taking into consideration natural increase and immigration as well, has not been larger in the last ten years than it really has been. My hon. friend speaks of the effect of a policy as tending to drive people into the cities and away from the country, but he does not pretend to canvass these broad grounds of discussion which for the last three or four years have been patent to every reader of the press and of magazines, where statesmen and economists, and men of political experience, have been engaged in discussing that wonderful problem which has been met in all civilized countries; and how best it may be dealt with, namely, the gradual crowding from the country into the cities and the going over from the rural into the urban population. My hon. friend has but one reason. He does not wish to waste time by discussion; and that reason of his is simply the National Policy, and the National Policy in Canada is to be saddled with driving the people from the country into the city. Will my hon. friend go back to Great Britain, where free trade has been the rule all these years, and will he find out some cause there for the very same phenomenon to an equal degree, as to why in Great Britain there is this general tendency of the people from the rural portions of the country towards the cities? This great growth of urban population has to some minds a threatening aspect, but it has to other minds no cause for sorrow and no cause for regret. It is utterly untenable, Sir, as a plain look at the subject will show, for my hon. friend to hold that the sole and only cause of the phenomenon in this country is the National Policy. That phenomenon is equally visible, and is equally canvassed in countries where a free trade policy is and has been the policy for years and years. I may point out, Sir, that there are other reasons which account for that press and tendency from the rural and less settled portions of the country towards the cities. There are first, the numerous attractions of city life over and above country life; and whatever be the policy of the Administration in any country, there are a set of reasons entirely independent of policies which yearly call with strong voice that is heeded, and press with a tendency which is felt and which is assented to, towards the cities; the centres of intelligence where, from social reasons, business reasons, and other reasons, there are attractions that draw a certain class of minds inevitably from the rural portions of the country to make their homes and spend the remainder of their lives in the cities which are near to them. Then, Sir, there is another reason why the population of the country does not increase with such rapidity as the urban population, and it is this: There has been a change in the general farming operations of the country. Twenty years ago, aye ten years ago, it was the hand labour of the individual that did the work upon the farm, but since that time there has come a complete revolution, especially in new countries, a revolution which has attacked even the most staid of the old countries of the world, whereby the great wealth of invention, a phenomenon of this century, has been utilized to make the farmer's hand, and the farmer's power, ten-fold, twenty-fold, yes, a hundred-fold more efficacious in the performance of his work than it had heretofore been. In proportion as you lessen the amount of labour that is required on the farm by the addition of labour-saving machinery, in that proportion do you throw so many that would otherwise be engaged upon hand labour in the country out of that kind of employment, and they seek other modes of employment in other directions, and gravitate largely towards professions, towards businesses and towards pursuits and avocations which are peculiar to city life. Then, Sir, there is another reason which is not to be found in the protective policy here, or in the protective policy of the United States, or in the free trade policy of Great Britain, but which comes from causes as much wider and broader as can well be thought of. That is, for a series of years in most countries of the world; at least in our country, and in the United States and in Great Britain, and I might name others, farming has come to be in some of its aspects more unremunerative than formerly.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And therefore you tax it trebly.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not going into the causes of that; they are world-wide, they are broad, they are patent, they can be canvassed, they are known to hon. gentlemen who sit about these boards; but that reason also has driven out of the country into other avocations which are peculiar to city life hundreds and thousands of those who in other conditions would have remained upon farms and done the work of farming. No one can have read the history of the New England States for the last ten years without being struck most strongly by that circumstance. In the New England States to-day, situated, some of them, as we are, what is the wail, what is the grievance, what is the burden of everyone's complaint who observes, who thinks and who expresses himself? It is that the best New England blood, which formerly went on the farm, which stayed and worked on the farm, has been drawn away to the metropolitan cities, to engage in a wider life and, to some extent, in a more intense life, where their mental faculties, and where that striving quality of the New England mind and constitution which all who have read the history of that people admire, would be called into more intense activity, and produce results more satisfactory to them in a monetary, an intellectual, social or business point of view. These are some causes why out from the country there is a press and tendency towards the cities; and that will remain, whether my hon. friend stops preaching blue ruin and seats himself on the Treasury benches, or whether he does not get on the Treasury benches and goes on, as he will, preaching blue ruin to the country. I now mention a sample statement, and it is well always to hold up a sample of my hon. friend's most unfair and exaggerated form of statement which he has affected so long that it has now become, as we say, almost second nature to him; and I very much doubt whether, without the strongest mental discipline, long continued, my hon. friend could get himself into a state of mind to make a fair, plain statement of the actual facts connected with the discussion of party politics in this country. What did he say? Things have been fairly successful in the North-West; you have put in there about 100,000 people in the last ten years, or 10,000 a year; that is very good; you commenced upon a small basis, and you have done that; but then you have not done anything like what you should have done; you have added about 10,000 people annually, and it has cost this country one hundred millions of money to do it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And more.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, my hon. friend has the courage of maintaining his assertion. He never explains his misstatements, and his own friends, numbers of them, probably took down another as made not in a moment, not of weakness, but of frankness. He gave us to understand in the course of his argument that of the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who went from this country to the United States of America three out of every four were Liberals. There is the best of reasons for that. My hon. friend has, by dint of long years of studied practice, brought himself to the forefront of his party, where he stands as a stalwart exponent of the political and fiscal views of those who have been brought up in the clear old Grit doctrine which is taught by the Globe; and we know that my hon. friend and the Globe stand together, the one in Parliament, and the other in Toronto, preaching the same doctrines, making the same assertions, and carrying out the same policy, and leading those who read and listen to them. When they two unite their forces, the one exalting the other as the prophet of the party, it is no wonder at all that the combined efforts of the two have the effect which they most naturally and most necessarily must have; and although the effect is less seen amongst people of Conservative tendencies, because they have less faith in my hon. friend's assertions, the difficulty is that he is believed by the young men of his own party, and as soon as he is believed the young men of his own party leave the country as quickly as they can. Why should they remain in a country which is in the state and condition, as to its past, its present, and its future, that my hon. friend so vividly and so blackly portrays in this House and on the hustings of the country? But to come back again to the sample of my hon. friend's assertion, that we had added about 10,000 a year to our population in a certain number of years, and that it had cost us $100,000,000 to do it, I say that though he has given voice to numberless unblushing assertions he never uttered a more unfounded statement in his life. Say that $100,000,000 have been spent, have they been spent simply to put 10,000 people a year in the North-West for a period of five, or eight, or ten years? My hon. friend knows, and this country knows that the $100,000,000 has been spent to open up an inaccessible and unknown country which has in it the germs of an empire—that once for all the expenditure of that $100,000,000 has placed the iron horse within sound of almost every door in the North-West, and has opened up the highways of commerce and business to what will ultimately be a seething population of prosperous and contented people in the North-West; and it is within reason for me to say that that $100,000,000 has not been expended, to an infinitesimal amount, for the number of people who have already gone there, but is an expenditure for the ages, so long as this country exists and the North-West constitutes its very granary and heart, increasing year by year in population and prosperity. That was an expenditure by which this great domain was opened up, and a permanent addition made to the increasing prosperity and progress of the country to which we belong. Well, Sir, my hon. friend declares that immigrants come into this country and go out of the country, and straightway become active agents against us, and that they do so because they are driven out of this country by the fiscal policy of the Government. Now, I will again bring to his attention what has been brought to his attention many and many a time. He declares that these people go to the United States of America when they leave us. They go out of this country, which has a protective tariff of 30 per cent., and they go into a country, by his own assertion, which has a protective tariff of 50 or 60 per cent., and they go because there is a protective policy in this country. Why, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me most arrant nonsense for a man to declare that immigrants come into this country and straightway leave it because they have to take what my hon. friend would call a dose of 30 per cent. tariff, and go directly to a country where they have to live, as upon daily food, upon a tariff of 60 or more than 60 per cent. The mere statement of the fact is a refutation of the assertion which was made by my hon. friend. If it was a free trade country to which they went, if it was a country which had a lower tariff than our own, there would then be some reason to think it was our policy that caused them to go. But so long as they left this country for a country whose tariff is twice as high as ours, it is utterly absurd to argue that they left because of the fiscal and trade policy of this country. The hon. gentleman says the only cause for all this is the policy of the Government. He knows of no other, he seeks for no other, and he declares that several years ago the people of this country made two astonishing discoveries. One was that the best way to grow rich was to tax the masses for a few greedy knaves.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to give again the eloquent, the polished language of my hon. friend, and I desire it should go to the country which for ten or twelve years has, with great unanimity and strong determination, supported that policy and the party which embodied it, that my hon. friend has no better words in describing that policy than to declare it exists for the benefit of a few greedy knaves and is kept up by corruption and demoralization.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, it never was a discovery except in the brain of my hon. friend, that the essence of the National Policy was the assertion of a principle, if such we could call it, that this country was to grow rich by taxing the masses, and that it was to grow richer in proportion as it increased the taxes. But the principle that was discovered in 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, and was carried to a successful embodiment in the statutes of the country, was this, that what this country needed was more diversified industries, that what this country needed was to do its own manufacturing and carry on its own industries within itself as largely as it possibly could, and that it was not good policy for this Government, while we were taxed for the entry of our goods by almost every country, and especially the country nearest to us, to open our markets almost untaxed to those competing peoples, and thereby drain away the life-blood of our country itself,——

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much does England tax our industries?

Mr. FOSTER—but that this country should create its own markets and carry on the business of manufacturing within its own borders by its own capital, paying its own labour, employing its own people to do the work. That was the principle which was acted upon and which was accepted by the people, and that principle is dear to the people of this country yet; and so long as it is reasonably and fairly maintained, I believe the people of this country will sustain the party and the Government which embodies it. My hon. friend says that another discovery we made was that honesty and purity of Government were not desirable or necessary, and he has declared that it was a part of his policy and his party's policy to hunt out and punish the boodlers wherever found, be they high or low. My hon. friend might have found convenient ground for the operation of that principle of his and have commenced the campaign many years ago. I think it is not outside the memory of those present that, not very many years ago, that policy could have been very justly employed by my hon. friend and his colleagues on that side of the House. He has talked about the subsidizing of the press, but I do not know it has gone so far in latter days as in the days when, under the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite, a newspaper was subsidized which was owned, controlled and lived upon by their own elected Speaker, who presided over the deliberations of this House. My hon. friend and the leader of the Opposition have a high mission to punish boodlers and rid the country of them. Well, they will find a very convenient field for their operations in a province very close to them at this moment. My hon. friend has declared we rule by virtue of the Red Parlour and the contributions we demand from manufacturers; but it has not been shown yet that any Government, except one, actually conspired to so legislate, to so work their operations, as to put notes in the bank and take $100,000 of the people's money in order to furnish funds to enable the party which supports my hon. friend to contest the elections, in the Province of Quebec, of those who were opposed to them in federal politics. My hon. friend had better look after the Langeliers, the Pacauds, and the Merciers, who line the skirts of his own party, and who, if he had been successful last year, would not have been contented with sitting on the skirts of the party, but would have been in high places controlling the operations of the Government and controlling it upon a basis compared to which the revelations of the Province of Quebec at present would only be as a side show to a great spectacular drama. My hon. friend has declared that Canada must remain an American nation, and when he came to the close of his address, after having discussed his disappointment, after having discussed, as he calls it, the unsatisfactory state of the country as developed and shown by the census figures, after having discussed the policy of the Government and shown its ruinous results and tendencies, my hon. friend comes to what should have been the main part of his efforts in his discussion of this question. He comes to suggest a remedy, and the only remedy he suggests is that we shall go out of office and that he and his friends shall take our places,—that the country, after having all these things portrayed before them ought not to search for reasons, ought not to enquire into causes, but ought to take his ipse dixit and make all these matters well by simply turning the Liberal-Conservative party out of power and placing my hon. friend in power. That is the sole result he comes to. We have had that as a panacea for a great many ills which my hon. friend has discussed in this House from time to time. We have had his policy so indefinitely put, so absurdly put; we have had, from the statements of their policy and the definitions he has been pleased to give of it, such an indefinite, intangible, unworkable proposition put up for the acceptance of the people that no reasonable man would give it for a single moment his assent as a practical plan for carrying out the betterment of this country and for making its trade or commerce wider and better. We have discussed that question before in this House. We know the points in which it lacks, as my hon. friend does, and yet, after all this discussion of cause, or rather after all this lack of discussion of cause, and after all his wealth of assertion with reference to this matter, he has simply this to say: If you want improvement, you must change the Government and put us in your place, and we will make all things better. After having mentioned these few things, I want just to have the ear of the House for a moment or two while I call your attention to some differences between the propositions of the Liberal-Conservative party and those of hon. gentlemen opposite. He has declared, and declared rightly, that the reason we have not progressed more in population has not been due to the fact that we have not a good soil, that we have not a good climate, or, in broad words, that we have not a good country. He has declared that it is not because we have not an intelligent and enterprising people. Those two things are facts. We have a good country, and we have good people, and in the lack of these you need not attempt to seek any reason why the population of Canada has not progressed at a greater rate in the last ten years. But there are some reasons why we may come to the conclusion that, taking facts as they are, we could not have thought to have made amazing progress, and we may come to a conclusion that the policy which was inaugurated by this party and this Government has materially aided in preventing disastrous results,——

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER—and in keeping the progress of the country up as well as it has been kept up during the last ten years. When my hon. friend and his party were in power, what did we find? We found the exodus at its height.——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. FOSTER. We found the revenue of the country going down year by year, the debt increasing and the taxation added to year after year. We found from one end of the country to the other, as set forth in the last financial statement my hon. friend made in this House, the state of the country was unsatisfactory in point of trade, of prosperity and of industry; but in that whole series of years my hon. friend and his colleagues had no single thing to propose except to go on in the same old way, to add to the taxation of the country and to borrow some millions in the old country for working expenses. My hon. friends went out of power after they had been tried in those five years and found wanting, and this party then set itself to find out the causes of this deterioration and to apply the remedy.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason that our people left the country and went to another? They went because they could not find employment in industrial operations of this country. The policy of my hon. friend opposite had the result of starving out the industries of this country without introducing any new ones to take their places. If, in the New England States, the cotton manufacturers, the woollen manufacturers, and the manufacturers of iron goods called to our surplus population—surplus in the sense that we had not employment for them—and beckoned them there, it was in order that they might get employment at their hands; and it was the policy of this Government to put on a reasonable protection and foster the industries of this country, a policy which has been fairly successful in building up the industries of this country and giving employment to people who otherwise would have had to go to other countries to seek it. There are not many sections of the country in which we cannot point to industries which are flourishing where they did not then exist, and where thousands of the hardy population of Canada are getting their daily employment and their daily wages and adding to the prosperity and the wealth of this country. That is what the National Policy was to do. There was another reason why people left this country. Young men in families where too many were reared to find their abiding home on the old farm, looked out to the fertile lands of the great West, and found their way to the western lands of the United States, where they engaged in agriculture under these better conditions of freer lands, and lands more easily cultivated. The policy of this party was to open up our own North-West where these broad lands lie, and, by bringing in facilities for travel, to drift the population away from the United States of America and direct them to our own North-West, where they would become settlers under the flag of Canada and would remain citizens of Canada. If my hon. friend points to the depletion of population in certain rural districts in the Province of Ontario, he points to a depletion which is different from what it would have been under his auspices, in the fact that the population have gone to the North-West and taken up lands there and remain our own citizens, whereas under other circumstances they would have gone to the Western States. There is no doubt that these are points which are practical and which the sense of the country easily perceives and gives the proper credit for. There is another reason. We are, by the very force of our position, close to a strong and progressive neighbour. The United States has had a national existence much longer and much larger than our own. They have gone into serious competition with us in these last ten or twelve years, when they were at their best and we were at a point certainly not our best, and, with the influences at work, with the wide facilities for traffic and travel and communication which they possess, with their open lands and the inducements they could offer, they were a competitor of great strength with Canada, and they inevitably drew upon our population. The first thing for Canada to do was to put herself in these respects as nearly as possible on a par with the United States and to open up her broad lands by easy rail communication, to build up her industries as I have stated, and to seek by these means to make a country which would offer inducements which would be fairly on a level with those which the United States could offer to immigrants and to settlers in that country. If we had not done that, would our position have been as good as it is to-day in competition with our neighbours? But my hon. friend quarrels with us because we have a debt and because we have a taxation. That debt and that taxation were inevitably necessary to make our country what within the last ten years we have made it, as a competitor with the United States, by means of these facilities for travel, by means of this railway building, this canal building and this opening up of its varied resources, not only in an agricultural point of view, but in other points of view as well. It was just at this period that this country had to adopt a policy which would place it in the vanguard of young nations, and it has done that, by the strain and stress of taxation and debt, I grant you, but a strain and stress it is well prepared to bear, because it brings us into a better position for competition for settlers from outside, and to keep them here when once we have them. There is another thing which may explain a certain disparity between what we might expect the figures of this census would have been and what the figures of the last census were, and that is, that we have this time a more honest census than before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. More honest, I mean, in that it comes closer to the actual population of the country than it did before. It is a matter of record, it is a matter to which any reasonable man will give due weight, that the instructions which were given to census enumerators this year were different from the instructions of ten years ago. Ten years ago they went to a family, they found out those that were there, they asked for those that were not there and were yet members of the family, and all those who were members of the family and of whom the head of the family, upon being asked the question, stated that although they were absent they would come back again into this country and remain here, were put down as residents of this country. This year a far different plan has been taken, and no names have been put on the list for whom the assertion could not be fairly and tenably made, that they had not been absent more than a year. That has a bearing upon the case of relative numbers, and any reasonable man will give that fact its due weight. It is impossible to estimate exactly how much difference that makes, but that it does account for much, especially in some sections of the country, every reasonable man, I think, will be bound to admit. Sir, might I be allowed, without wearying this House, and without prolonging this discussion beyond six o'clock, to call attention to another factor which has not been without weight in keeping immigrants from this country, and in driving out those who came into the country. Sir, I say it is morally impossible, it is actually impossible for damaging assertions to be continuously made with reference to this country by the leading men of any great political party, without their having some weight upon the people outside of this country, and upon the people within it as well. My hon. friend has not been the only sinner, but the chief sinner in this respect. When men like Goldwin Smith, a pessimist to the backbone, in their adopted country, dip their pen in ink and portray in the blackest colours the destinies and the future prospects of this country, couching damning assertions in elegant and chaste English, and backed up by their literary fame, before every country in the world, it is impossible but that amongst the more educated classes who read these, there be a prejudice aroused against the country which is portrayed in such colours and by such means, and Mr. Goldwin Smith does not belong to the party on this side of the House. When men like Mr. Blake, great and strong in intellect, having qualities of mind which I would be the first to acknowledge as great and strong, use those great qualities in his commanding position to fulminate against the great work which was in reality the salvation of this country, the Canadian Pacific Railway, and so portray its effect upon the country as to lead those who follow him to believe that it will reduce the people to the condition of slaves and serfs, and that those who are not in the country had better keep out of it rather than come under its dominant sway and tyranny; when men like my hon. friend who spoke this afternoon, lose no opportunity of raising their voice in the country, or in this House, always in depreciation of the country, as he has done to-day, making assertions which are as far from the truth as they well can be, does he think that these are but idle whisperings of the wind which are heard now and die away an hour hence? No, Sir, they live in an enduring and permanent form in the public press of this country, they go into the homes of this country where hon. gentlemen, by virtue of their political position are looked up to as leaders of the people, and both in the country and out of it they have their direful and baneful influence continually against the country's well-being, and it is no wonder at all that members of the Liberal party, listening to the counsels, and predictions, and preachings of my hon. friend, should leave this country and seek an asylum in another land. It is no wonder, either, that men who live in other countries and hear these speeches, and know of them only that they were spoken by men standing high in political circles, are influenced in forming their opinion in reference to Canada, and consequently a prejudice arises in their minds in reference to it. These things have their influence, they have their weight, they are copied in a portion of the press of this country, they are believed by a portion of the people of this country, they are thrown broadcast among the people who read them, and I say it is impossible, actually impossible, to weigh the evil influence of such assertions as these, or of such predictions as these, inside and outside of this country, upon its immigration and emigration. The hon. gentlemen opposite must not think that I am merely throwing at them what has been thrown at them before, and for the mere sake of doing so. I feel, and a great section of this country feels it as well, that one of the most efficacious things that could take place in giving an impulse to this country would be for my hon. friends opposite to rise for a year or two above partizanship and become statesmen, and give the country a fair share of their sympathy and effort. I may add one more thought to that. It is this: That Canada has passed through its hardest period. For the last twelve years Canada has been engaged in a gigantic task, the task of opening up the North-West, of building its immense lines of railway, of completing its canals, of adding in its different lines of progress, its facilities for traffic and for communication. It has been taxing every energy in order to bring itself, as I said before, on a level with competing countries. And during all those years of arduous toil, it has been obliged to work, so to speak, with the trowel in one hand, and to guard itself with the sword in the other hand, in face of the competition of the United States and of the world. It has done these two things together, and within that period of stress and strain, within that period of unequalled competition, it has kept its position well maintained, and has arrived now at the point when there opens before it a more extended and successful career in the way of population, of commerce and of progress. It has been laying broad and deep its foundations, and has been building up the elements of a national feeling, of a strong love of country; and from that foundation, broad and deep, it has developed a new life which is pulsing through its veins, and more hopeful prospects are opening out for success than in any period in previous years. This has been gone through with. Hard has been the struggle; great has been the self-sacrifice. But to-day we stand in a position of vantage, and with our splendid communications, internal and external, with all this accumulated power and confidence which has been the result of the work of the last ten years, with these I am not at all afraid to say that the next ten years will see a progress in Canada which has not been witnessed in any previous decade of her history. What we want now is that we shall stand together, that men of both political parties should stand together so far as the country is concerned, making the most of its advantages, giving to the outside world the very best picture we can of its resources and its prospects. And what we do not want at this particular time, at this juncture of affairs, when we see men of both political parties exercised and worried with difficulties that have cropped up, and which we are trying to make right—what we do not want is for an hon. gentleman such as he who spoke this afternoon to declare in one breath that the entire Civil Service is entirely demoralized, and in another breath that Canada is a by-word and reproach among the nations of the world.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Some hon. gentlemen opposite may wish to spread that idea, they may take the responsibility of it. But I tell you, Sir, that history, before which the actions and professions of both political parties will hereafter appear, will not give the meed of praise to persons who so acted in a crisis in the country's history. Statesmanship will always in the long run commend itself to history rather than partizanship.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Speaker, before recess the Minister of Finance, in closing his remarks, appealed to members on this side of the House, as well as the Liberal party in the country, to stand together with the Government and to give the best picture possible of public affairs, and to say nothing against the country. Well, Sir, it is far from our intention to say anything against the country. We desire to give Canada that meed of praise which is its due, and in doing so we will ever assert that it is a glorious country, a country with great capacities, a country with great resources, a country which is calculated to furnish homes for millions of freemen in the future, and we will very carefully avoid on the present occasion, as we have done on all previous occasions, saying anything against the country. But we shall probably have something to say against the men who have failed to secure for the country its best interests. We shall have something to say against the men who have retarded the progress of the country, who have burdened the country with debt, who have placed the country in such a position that in the race of progress with its great neighbour to the south it is handicapped with numerous disadvantages which do not rest on that people. We shall have something to say with respect to the policy of this country, and the bearing of that policy on the prosperity of this country, as shown by the census returns which have lately been placed on the Table of this House.

The Minister of Finance accused the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) of intemperate language, of vituperation, of bitter partizanship. That hon. gentlemen said that my hon. friend's speech, from the beginning to the end, was a prolonged wail, with one note of jubilation only, that in which my hon. friend referred to the fact that the census returns were proofs of the correctness of the predictions he had made. There is abundant reason for wailing over the fortunes of the country. I doubt not, if we lived in the time of the Israelites, we would not only wail, but rend our garments and put on sackcloth and ashes. And it was perfectly proper that my hon. friend should indulge in sorrowful reflections over the present position of the country, as evinced by these census returns.

The hon. gentleman charged my hon. friend from South Oxford with having made an untruthful statement in having asserted that the estimates of population furnished from year to year by the Government were misrepresentations. My hon. friend stated that these publications of the estimates of population were either misrepresentations, or they showed the greatest ignorance on the part of the Government, and the hon. gentleman is left free to take his choice as to which horn of the dilemma he will accept, that of gross misrepresentation or of gross ignorance. One or other of them he must accept.

The hon. gentleman disliked the charges made with respect to the policy of the Government in making large appropriations under various pretexts for the purpose of subsidizing the press. He informs us that this money is appropriated or paid on a business basis, and the papers gave value for the money they received. If the business is done on a business basis, how is it that not a Reform journal in the Dominion received any of the Government patronage? If the Government desire to advertise for tenders for public works, if they desire to place before the public advertisements respecting public works, why should they confine the publication of their advertisements to the papers of one party? If the business is done on a business basis, ought not the Government to employ the press indiscriminately and impartially for this purpose? But large sums of money are paid to the Tory press of this country, and that press is, in point of fact, a subsidized press, and the policy and purpose of the Government, in appropriating and expending this money, is to be attach that press to its fortunes as its slavish supporters and slavish vindicators.

Then the hon. gentleman told us that no doubt the member for South Oxford was very sorry indeed that the census returns had not been available for him to criticise before the elections, that he would fain have had them as a club in his hand for the purpose of influencing the elections, not that he wished to propose a remedy, but he would have used them to the detriment of the Government. It is natural that the member for South Oxford, and the members of the Liberal party should have desired to have been able before the elections were held to give the people as convincing a proof as is shown by these census returns as to the policy of the Government. The Liberal party had been engaged in criticising the policy of the Government, and it had made assertions with respect to the outcome of that policy, the results of that policy. We were unfortunately in a position in which it was somewhat difficult to prove that our assertions were true, and the census returns would have furnished exactly the proof required as to the truth of our allegations. We did propose to furnish a remedy, and it would have been more apparent than ever that a remedy was needed, if we had been able to place these returns before the people. We have been looking for years to furnish a remedy, and we went to the electors of this country at the last election with a remedy for the evils that exist. We have that remedy to propose still, and the census returns have emphasized the assertion we have made, that some remedy for the ills and evils this country labours under is necessary. The hon. gentleman tells us that the result of the census returns was indeed a disappointment, and I am not able to see how he could have said otherwise. But he says that the United States also felt the same disappointment at their natural increase. He says that they supposed they would have a natural increase as great as my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) says is the normal natural increase of a country situated as this is. What was the natural increase in the United States? Their natural increase was nearly 14½ per cent., or about 3 per cent. greater than our total increase, and our natural increase was about 8 per cent. less than nothing, if our immigrants had stayed with us; because, according to the returns of the Agriculture Department, we received immigrants to the amount of 20·49 per cent. of the population of this country in 1881. Therefore, with a total increase of 11·52 per cent. we fall very far short of having any natural increase at all. Then the hon. gentleman tells us that the United States are not in a very satisfactory position. I suppose that the increase of population of 24·85 per cent. in the United States was hardly satisfactory to that country, but we must bear in mind that it was considerably more than as much again as the increase in this country, and in a young country like Canada, with a young and vigorous population, it is needless to say that an increase of 11½ per cent. is very far from what we might reasonably expect as the result of the census. We have also to bear in mind with regard to the United States, that it is claimed that in the census of 1880, there was a very serious mistake with regard to the black population, and that the actual population of the United States was one or two millions less than that given by the census of 1880.

The hon. gentleman next referred to the decrease of the rural population and the tendency of the people to leave the farms and drift into towns, and he said that this is a tendency manifested in all civilized countries of the world. He tells us that farming has become unremunerative, that owing to the invention of labour-saving machines, and the increased ability to produce food with a given amount of labour, there is an over-production, and that farming has become an unremunerative industry. Yet, Sir, in face of that fact, the policy of the hon. gentleman has been for years to pile upon the shoulders of the farmer, with his unremunerative industry and the prices declining, a vastly increased burden of taxation. If he wishes to relieve the farmer, if he wishes to increase his prosperity, surely it is not a good way to reach that result by increasing the burdens placed upon him, as has been done by the Government for the last twelve years.

Then, Sir, when my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) alluded to the $100,000,000 spent during the last twelve years, and stated that the results flowing from that expenditure in the North-West were of a very meagre and unsatisfactory character, the Minister of Finance tells us that this expenditure was made for the ages. Well, Sir, I judge that it will be some time in the future ages before we get a satisfactory return for it. It was unquestionably made for the ages, and the ages must roll around before we get the return that the Government has promised as a result of that expenditure.

The hon. gentleman goes on to tell us that it is somewhat singular that immigrants should leave this country, with a tariff of 30 per cent., and go to the United States where there is a tariff of 60 per cent., and that if they wish to escape heavy burdens and taxes it would be natural to suppose they would remain here. Now, Sir, the average rate of duties last year was 21¼ per cent. in Canada on the total importation, and in the United States 29·99 per cent. This difference has been largely decreased under the McKinley Bill by the readjustment of the tariff, but the burden of taxation from Customs duties in the United States is much lighter than it is in the Dominion of Canada. The per capita charge of Customs for the year ending 30th December, 1890, in the United States was $3.59, while the per capita charge in Canada last year, on the basis of our population then, was $5.03. The Customs taxation of Canada is $1.44 per head, or 40 per cent. higher than the Customs taxation of the United States. Although their rates of duties are somewhat higher, yet our importations are proportionately larger than theirs, and their taxation from Customs is only about two-thirds as much as in this country. Therefore, the statement made by the hon. gentleman that we have lighter burdens in this country than in the United States is not a correct statement. We should remember also that the expenditure in the United States is of a different character from that of Canada. Last year in the United States $106,000,000 were paid as pensions, and that money was spent in the country, It was equivalent to a gift of money to the people of that country. A large amount of their taxation was paid last year in reduction of the public debt and in reduction of taxation, and the consequence is, that the public burdens of the United States are very greatly less than ours; and a large portion of the money disbursed in the United States, from the Customs duties, is disbursed in the country—paid in pensions and spent in the country. The enormous sum spent in pensions, and serving to relieve the wants of a portion of the population, is quite a different thing from sending the money out of the country to pay interest on the public debt, or the expenditure of money in an ordinary way by the Government.

The hon. gentleman also told us in the course of his speech, in justification of his National Policy, that it was necessary to inaugurate a policy that would retaliate upon other countries, in consequence of their impositions on our commerce. If that were true, what imposition did Great Britain impose upon our commerce? We send our productions free, and without any restriction, into that country, and why was it necessary to retaliate against her? Why was it necessary to adopt a policy which discriminates, in fact, against that country and which is a most onerous burden upon her and her commercial transactions with us? While she does not impose a duty of a cent upon a single dollar's worth of the millions we send to her, we impose burdens upon the English commerce which lessens the volume of that commerce and is felt to be a grievous burden by the people of that country. Yet my hon. friend has said that the sole justification for his policy was to retaliate upon countries that had imposed burdens upon Canada by their fiscal policy.

Then, Sir, the hon. gentleman came around to the question of corruption, and he seeks to minimize the extent of the corruption existing at Ottawa, and he offsets it by what? Was it by Liberal corruption in the Dominion Government? Oh, no. He offsets it by the assumption, not by the proof, but by the assumption that corruption exists in some one of the provinces in this Dominion. Forsooth, because it is charged that corruption exists in the Government of the Province of Quebec, he thinks that exonorates the Dominion Government for the course of corruption which it has pursued since it came into office in 1878. The people of the country will not accept that justification of the conduct of the Government here. Two wrongs do not make one wrong right; the loss of chastity on the part of one woman would not justify another in losing it, and if the Government of Quebec had been guilty of corruption, which is not proved, it would not justify my hon. friend or his colleagues for having been guilty of the same thing.

He says the only remedy we propose for all these evils we have been complaining of is that the gentlemen on the right of the Speaker are to step out, and the gentlemen on the left of the Speaker are to come in. Well, I suppose that would be one of the necessary stops towards a reform of the abuses that exist. Of course, if my hon. friend will accept the policy we promulgate, if he will attempt to relieve this country of the embarrassment that weighs upon it, by adopting a sound and common-sense policy, we will be glad to aid him, as he has invited us; but if he refuses the remedy for our evils that we offer, it will be necessary for parties to cross the House, because it is necessary to inaugurate a new policy, and if the Government will not do it, the Opposition must necessarily be called upon to do it.

Then the hon. gentleman reverts adroitly to the old stock argument which we have heard here a hundred times or more. With regard to the small increase of population which has taken place in the last ten years, and the unsatisfactory condition of the country, he tells us that matters are not worse than they were or as bad as they were. He says: In 1878 when they came into office they found an unsatisfactory state of trade, they found the country depressed, an excessive taxation, and a policy that had starved out the industries of the country, and they made a change that brought prosperity and created diversified industries. Now, let us examine the broad assertions made by the hon. gentleman in that portion of his speech. When the Conservative party came into power in 1878, what did they find the condition of Canada to be, as compared with other nations? It is true, trade was not in as good a state as we should have desired; it is true, Canada had laboured under a depression since 1873; but was Canada relatively in a worse condition than other countries? Were the reasons which caused that depression confined to Canada, or did they originate in Canada, or were the Government responsible for those conditions? They were not. The depression which existed in Canada existed to a greater degree in the United States; it existed to a greater degree also in England, in France and in Germany; it was a world-wide depression; all civilized nations shared in it; it had overtaken the whole commercial world, and Canada was in as good a position as any other country. Canada was struggling successfully with those difficulties; and the truth is, that the United States, during all that period of depression, having the policy which hon. gentlemen opposite adopted as a panacea for those ills, was in a worse position than Canada. There were half a million tramps roaming up and down the United States without employment; trade was paralyzed there and in England; and in Canada we had a careful, prudent Government, keeping down the burdens of taxation, carefully husbanding our resources, and waiting for the turn of the tide which was sure to come, and which did come in 1879. Had we a policy that starved the industries of this country? On the contrary, the manufacturing industries of Canada were more prosperous than those of the United States under a high protection; they were actually more prosperous than those of England. Under a revenue tariff of 15 per cent., increased in 1876 to 17½ per cent., we had developed a prosperous, diversified manufacturing industry in Canada. There is scarcely a branch of business in operation to-day that was not in operation in 1878; and a careful comparison of the statistics of manufacturing establishments shows that the manufacturing establishments of Ontario and other parts of the Dominion were paying from 6 to 25 per cent. dividends, and that they paid much higher dividends than the manufacturing establishments of New England during that crisis. Most of our manufacturing establishments were paying fair and in many cases high dividends all through that period from 1873 to 1878, and the manufacturing industries of the country were actually developing and growing, notwithstanding the depression that existed throughout the world. And yet my hon. friend had the hardihood and effrontery to say that the policy of that Government had starved out the industries of the country. Well, Sir, in what condition were our manufacturing industries in 1878? Why, Sir, in 1871 the census returns revealed the fact that we produced in Canada $211,000,000 worth of goods and employed 189,000 operatives; in 1881, according to the census returns, we produced $309,000,000 worth of goods and employed 246,000 operatives; and it was scarcely time yet for the National Policy to produce any material effect towards that great increase in the manufacturing industries of this country. So that we had a stable, prosperous, and firmly-established manufacturing industry of this Dominion under the policy which preceded the policy adopted by the hon. gentlemen now on the Treasury benches. Then, let us compare the burden of taxation. The Customs duties from 1874 to 1878 were:

In 1874	$14,325,000
1875	15,351,000
1876	12,823,000
1877	12,546,000
1878	12,782,000

That was the measure of the burden of Customs taxation imposed by the Mackenzie Government upon the people of this country. Now, how did my hon. friend and his colleagues manage this matter? Did they reduce the burden of taxation? Did they keep it where it was? Let us see. In 1880 they were fairly in the saddle; and in that and the following years the Customs duties show these increases:

In 1880	$14,000,000
1881	18,400,000
1881	22,582,000
1883	23,000,000
1890	23,968,000

They have nearly doubled the taxation imposed upon the people of this country in the shape of duties upon imports during their period of office commencing with 1879 and ending with 1890, the last year for which we have returns. Yet, in the face of this record, the hon. gentleman tells this House and the country that the policy of the Mackenzie Government had increased the taxation of the country. Why, Sir, an assertion of this kind is entirely destitute of a single iota of truth. Still more, an assertion so utterly false, so utterly misleading, is quite in character with the position taken with regard to the financial policy of the Government in almost every respect by the speakers of the opposite side.

Then, we are told that the change of policy on the part of the Government led to the swelling revenues which we have had. Well, it did, because it increased the taxation of the people. We are told that the Government of Mr. Mackenzie had deficits. So they had, because with wise foresight the Minister of Finance of that day realized that the prevailing depression was a temporary one, and that when prosperity returned and the volume of trade increased, the revenue of the country would increase, and that then the existing rate of taxation would be high enough; and so he forebore increasing the tariff, although perhaps he would have been wiser to have done so.

Mr. FOSTER. He did increase the tariff.

Mr. CHARLTON. He did increase the tariff in 1876, but from 1876 it remained at 17½ per cent., and the Government waited for that turn in the tide that would bring a return of prosperity in the commercial world and increase the revenue of the country. The change in the tariff in 1879 by the present Government was made too soon to ascertain definitely whether this would have been necessary or not in our case, but we have the experience of the United States, and the movement of Customs duties in that country will illustrate pretty fairly what would have been the movement here if no change had been made, because no change was made in the tariff of the United States. Now, the revenue of the United States from Customs duties in 1878 was $130,000,000, and in 1879 it was $137,000,000. Then the tide turned, prosperity began to come back, and in 1880 the Customs duties amounted to $186,000,000. In 1881 they amounted to $196,000,000; in 1882 they amounted to $220,000,000, or $90,000,000 more than in 1879. Well, Sir, the same rate of increase in Canada, with our old tariff, would have given us a surplus of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000, instead of the deficit we had in 1878. The forecast of my hon. friend was, therefore, absolutely correct; and had the Mackenzie Government remained in power we would have had, from our tariff of 17½ per cent., not only sufficient revenue, but an overflowing treasury. There can be no question of the truth of that assertion.

Mr. FOSTER. That would have frightened you.
