"Sow you want two prepair the folkes ther for thess thinges, wee want thim all, we want the corses of stone incrased in sise and alowed for sade incrase."

What was it they wanted? They wanted first a change in the length of the dock, they wanted the substitution of granite for sandstone, they wanted heavier coursing of stone, and they wanted a diminution in the price of the plant. Now let us see how far they were successful. Michael Connolly also proceeded to British Columbia, and he is not so diplomatic as Nicholas Connolly, who said that all the folks out there wanted the lengthening of the dock. He writes in this business way:

"The Hon. Mr. Trutch has gone to Ottawa—started this morning—to back up a petition got up by the people here to have granite substituted for sandstone throughout the works, and asking that the dock be lengthened 100 feet. If you have a chance see Mr. McGreevy and have him arrange to have the second entrance at head done away with and a circular head, same as at Point Lévis, substituted."

And so desired, so done. Mr. McGreevy saw Mr. Perley, the Minister had a report from Mr. Perley, the report was brought to Council, and it was ordered by Council as follows:—

"The Minister further represents that the plans show and the contract provides for the construction at the head of the dock of inverts and a caisson recess, in anticipation of the construction, at a future date, of another dock beyond the present one; and the chief engineer reports that these inverts, &c., which occupy a length of 50 feet 6 inches, are and will remain practically useless for any purpose in connection with the dock—merely adding to the cost of its construction, without adding anything to its usefulness—and that if the dock bottom were carried out and these works abolished a further length of 50 feet would be obtained within the limits of the present contract, at an additional expense of, say, $35,000, or a total of $410,000.

"The Minister recommends that authority be granted that the inverts and caisson recess provided for in the plans, &c., and herein referred to, be not constructed, and that the dock bottom be carried out at the additional cost of thirty-five thousand dollars ($35,000), as estimated."

Now, you see how it was done; but, Sir, the change with regard to the substitution of granite for sandstone is still more marvellous. Michael Connolly wrote to Murphy to have granite substituted for sandstone, and he gave very good reasons for it, and the Order in Council was prepared accordingly, but the change was not carried out, and why? The thing is so instructive that I had better, perhaps, read the whole of the correspondence upon this subject. Michael Connolly and Nicholas had been very anxious to have granite substituted for sandstone, but they changed their mind, and then Michael wrote to Murphy:

"But I hope no such change will be made because the granite is terrible hard and the quarry 180 miles distant."

The order had been prepared and taken to Council, but meantime the contractors discovered a quarry, and then, Sir, the order which had been prepared and which was at the very door of the Council, was stopped by McGreevy, and, after all, the contract was made for sandstone and not for granite. It was the same all the way through this transaction. Now another change was made in the coursing of the stone. It was provided that the course of masonry should be one foot in thickness, but they demanded that the course should be three feet and at the same price. This was denied at first but it was afterwards granted, and it was granted at the instance of the Minister. On the 24th February Mr. Perley writes to Mr. Trutch:

"I am also to say that the Minister approves of the suggestion that the masonry in this dock be built in heavier courses than called for by the specification, and you are authorized to permit the contractors to re-course the work, provided it will not entail any extra expense on the Crown."

Later on he also writes to Mr. Trutch :

"I am of the opinion that the contractors should have preferred their request in writing before being permitted to change the courses, but as they have not done so, but have informally applied here for permission to do so it has been granted to them, and I will inform them here of this decision of the Minister and that no extra payment will be made to them on account of this change."

Sir, no extra price was to be entailed on the country, but would you believe it? Later, on the 25th January, 1886, there was a telegram from Mr. Perley to Mr. Trutch, as follows :—

"Minister directs that contractors shall be paid for full quantity of stone in dock and caisson recess, and full measurement on all stones. Letter by mail."

And then comes the letter :

"I have to inform you that the Minister has directed that the contractors, Messrs. Larkin, Connolly & Co., shall be paid full measurement for all stone they have placed in the dock at Esquimalt, these directions specially applying to the increase in the sizes of the stones needed by the contractors and rendered necessary by the change made in re-coursing the work, and they will also apply to the full size of altar coping as it exists in the work. All special stones are to be measured fairly and liberally, and their sizes are not to be affected by an arris, a nosing, a check or groove, &c."

And the increased cost to the country was just $41,000, according to the evidence of the Minister, though it had been understood that while a change would be made, it would be made at no cost to the country. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) stated here the other day that though there had been a conspiracy, it could not be shown that the hon. Minister of Public Works was in it, because it was sufficient for Mr. McGreevy's object to have the services of Mr. Perley, the chief engineer. But there are two instances in connection with this contract in which the opinion of the chief engineer was set aside by the opinion of the Minister. The first one was in the case of the re-coursing, and the last was when the engineer advised substituting granite for sandstone, and the Minister persisted in keeping sandstone. So it cannot be said that the Minister was not in the conspiracy. Now, I have only to repeat what I stated a moment ago, that there is no animosity against the late Minister of Public Works on this side of the House. It is no pleasure to anyone to become the accuser of his fellowman. It was no pleasure to my hon. friend from Montmorency to become the accuser of a man with whom he had been for so many years on terms of intimacy. I remember very well, not later than last year, when there was an election contest in Montmorency between the present member for L'Islet and another gentleman, a meeting was held there which was addressed by the hon. Minister of Militia and the hon. member for Montmorency. At that meeting the hon. member for Montmorency repeated every charge which he has since made against the Minister of Public Works, and on that occasion we did not hear from the hon. Minister of Militia the eloquent defence of the late Minister of Public Works which we heard this afternoon. Sir, it was no pleasure to the hon. member for Montmorency to repeat those charges on the floor of this House. It is no pleasure to anyone of us to have to pronounce on them if we believe them to have been proved. But, as I said before, the question before us is not simply a question of the guilt or innocence of one man. The question is much broader than that ; it involves the existence of a system which has to be put down, or which will put down the country. Some few weeks ago the Prime Minister in another House introduced a measure for the punishment of minor offenders. On that occasion, speaking of the scandals which had disgraced this country, he consoled himself by remarking that after all human nature would always be the same, and that there would be dishonest men in every community. Sir, this is not a question of individual offences. Individual offences may always take place : frauds may be perpetrated in the most honest communities, but in this case, we have to grapple with a system which permeates the whole public service from the top to the bottom. We have often boasted of our political morality in this country, especially in contrast with that of our neighbours to the south. But the American people have given us an example which should help us on this occasion. Twenty years ago, comparing ourselves with our neighbours, with our eyes turned up to Heaven, we thanked the Lord that we were not like other nations. I admit that our neighbours had much to be ashamed of in those days. They had the Crédit Mobilier frauds, the whiskey frauds, the Tweed frauds. But though they had much to be ashamed of in the way of corruption in official and public life, still there were causes to explain it and circumstances to excuse it. The American nation had just passed through four years of the convulsions of civil war, and during those four years every energy of the nation had been directed to the one object of crushing out the rebellion. Enormous sums of money were spent without any supervision, enormous contracts were granted, fabulous prices were paid ; and all with eyes closed to everything, except the one thing, the crushing out of the rebellion. Thus the door was opened wide for peculation. But if the American people had excuses, what excuse have we in Canada? Excuses there are none, and although you may on this occasion excuse the man who is charged, yet with the tinge of shame on your brow you cannot take off your eyes from that mass of corruption now in heaps before you. But there was life and energy in the American people, and the whiskey frauds, the Tweed frauds and the Star route frauds were exposed, and every offender was brought to justice and punished. But I almost despair of my country when I see the Government willing to punish the minor offenders, but receding before the mighty—when I see them willing enough to punish clerks in offices, but refusing to censure the men who are the most blameable of all. How can this nation expect to live, if such offences are condoned? No nation can live in which public moneys are not applied exclusively to public purposes. In discussing this case, the other day, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier was only too happy to have a fling at the Liberal party, and to point out that there are accusations pending against it in the Province of Quebec. Sir, I will not prejudge the case ; I have only this to say, that that measure of justice which we call for in this Parliament we want applied also in the Province of Quebec. Wherever, after investigation, blame and censure are found to be deserved, blame and censure should be pronounced. Upon this occasion I appeal especially to my fellow countrymen of French origin, to stand up to the duty of the hour, painful as that duty is. I do not appeal to them in any words of my own ; but I appeal to them from the teaching of their history. The old City of Quebec has been the victim on this occasion of most of the malversations which have been unearthed. Let them remember that this is not the first time in her history that she has thus suffered, and let them remember at what cost to the country. In the last days of the great struggle between England and France for the possession of this continent, when England and the American colonies were preparing to invade Canada from all points—from the west by the route of the great lakes, from the south by the valley of Lake Champlain, from the east by the St. Lawrence—the King of France had neither men nor money to send for the defence of this colony. The general of the army, Montcalm, had to depend on the resources of the colony, small as those resources were. Montcalm, Lévis and Bougainville and all the principal officers of the army made the sacrifice of their emoluments for the defence of the colony, and they returned to the almost empty treasury every franc paid to them in salaries. But at the moment that these great men were giving this example of their devotion—crime exceeding all crimes ! shame exceeding all shame !—the resources of the colony, insufficient as they were for the most pressing wants were the prey of the malversation of the Administration of that day. Sir, the system which has been revealed in this investigation was not invented in the Department of Public Works. This system of manipulating contracts for the profit of the contractor, this system of substituting private for public interest, this system of plundering the treasury to enrich individuals, was not invented by the Department of Public Works, but was practised in those days by the Administration, by Bigot the Intendant and his creatures Pean, Vergor and others. In the month of August, 1757, M. de Doreil, one of the commissioners of the army, thus wrote to the Minister of War, concerning Pean, one of Bigot's creatures:

"Pean has made so rapid a fortune in eight years that he is now supposed to be worth two millions * * * The English will have this country next year * * We are as sick persons in the pangs of death whose lives Providence and medical skill may prolong for a few moments * * * Look on him (Pean) as one of the chief causes of the maladministration and loss of this unfortunate country."

Then, two years afterwards, General Montcalm himself, as brave a man as ever lived, felt compelled to denounce that system to the French Government, and wrote thus to the Minister of War:

"Mr. Bigot seems occupied only with the care of making a large fortune for himself, his followers and sycophants. * * * Cupidity has taken hold of the officers, storekeepers, clerks. * * * They make astonishing fortunes. * * * Everywhere false certificates are admitted. * * * It appears that all are hastening to realize a fortune before the loss of the colony, which many perhaps desire, as an impenetrable veil over their conduct. * * They make immense accumulation of all kinds of commodities, which they afterwards sell at a profit of 150 per cent. for Bigot and his followers."

In another letter, written the same day to the Minister of Colonies, General Montcalm pointed out the immense robberies of the local engineers in the works of fortifications and on the labour of the workingmen, and he adds:

"There is robbery in all contracts concerning artillery, iron works, transports, tools, &c."

Sir, these stern denunciations brought a strong remonstrance from the French Government to Intendant Bigot, who, of course, denied everything.

But now, my fellow countrymen, let me quote here the language of the historian, commenting upon those pages of infamy and shame:

"Canada (says Parkman) was the prey of official jackals—true lion providers, since they helped to prepare a way for the Imperial beast, who, roused at last from his lethargy, was gathering his strength to seize her for his own."

How humiliating the language, but how true—how painfully true ! The resources of the colony were exhausted in shameful peculations, the way was prepared for the invader, and after her first defeat Canada had not the strength to retrieve the loss. Sir, a hundred and thirty years have rolled over since those unfortunate days, and time and freedom have obliterated the grief, but the shame is always there, and there is not to-day a cottage in Lower Canada where the names of Bigot and Pean, and the other official jackals who sucked the life-blood of their country in the hour of danger, are not remembered with abhorrence. Sir, Canada is to-day again the prey of official jackals—the jackals of this Government. Again there is robbery everywhere; if again cupidity has taken hold of clerks and store-keepers and officers, again everywhere false certificates are admitted. Montcalm is not here, but if he were, and if he were a member of this Parliament, with the right to speak and vote, is there anyone who doubts that he would denounce the conduct and the infamy of the Bigots and the Peans of to-day, as vigorously as he denounced Bigot, Pean and Vergor in his own day. But, if Montcalm is not here, we have his example; and, if his stern patriotism still lives in the hearts of his countrymen, to them I appeal and as he would now do, so now let us do.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. McCARTHY. In taking part in this discussion, I can assure you, Sir, that I do so sharing in common with the other members of this House a full sense of the responsibility which rests upon us all in arriving at a decision upon this momentous question. It is a question that is important, involving, as it does, the political life of an hon. gentleman who has been for many years, long before I took any part in public proceedings, a member of this House, and who has been for many years a servant of the Crown. It is important, not merely because it involves the political life of that hon. gentleman, but because it involves what is dearer to us all than mere political life, his reputation, his character and his honour as a man. No matter what our views on political matters may be, I trust we all share in the feeling that before we decide adversely to that hon. gentleman, we should be satisfied, beyond all reasonable doubt, of his guilt and of the righteousness of the conclusion at which we should arrive in pronouncing upon it. On the other hand, looking at it from another point of view, the question presents features perhaps still more important to the country of which we are here the representatives. I agree, not to the full extent of the exaggerated language which has been used, but in the substance of what has been said by the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition, as to the unfortunate position Canada has presented to the eyes of the civilized world since this investigation commenced. We had hitherto, whatever our other faults may have been, as compared with our neighbours to the south, the conviction that our public men bore a character for honesty and respectability which would compare favourably with that of those with whom we are naturally brought in comparison. But I had the misfortune, or good fortune, as it may have been, to be absent in the mother land while these investigations were being held; and I can assure you, Sir, that no man could feel pride in his country as a Canadian, reading, morning after morning, the disclosures made with reference to one of the great public departments of the Government of this country. Therefore, while we have to deal here, under a full sense of responsibility, with regard to the condemnation or acquittal of one of our fellow-members—one whom, so far as I am concerned, I have hitherto had to look up to as a leader, one with whom I have been brought, if not into intimacy, into certainly frequent relationship—while we have to look to that relationship on the one hand, we must not forget, on the other hand, that we are the representatives of the people, who, I believe, are not willing to condone transactions such as have been revealed during the progress of this investigation. Whatever else may be said, we who sit here as representatives of the people have no right to stigmatize them as being a dishonest or dishonourable race. I had the honour of being a member of the Committee to which this matter was referred, but for reasons I was unable to control I did not take part in its proceedings. And I felt that, with regard to the conclusion that should be arrived at by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, not having heard the witnesses, not having been able to judge of their manner or their demeanour in giving evidence, not being able to form an opinion as to their credibility, I should not take part in the final conclusions of that Committee, the other members having had opportunities which were denied to me in those respects. I would very gladly have escaped from the responsibility of taking part in this discussion, but I cannot see why I should refuse to participate in a discussion on which every member of the House, whether belonging to the Committee or not, is called upon to take a part and to decide whether the report of the majority or the report of the minority of the Committee shall be accepted and placed on our proceedings. I must add this, however, as I think all those members of the House who are not members of the Committee ought to do. We must accept the conclusions of that Committee as to the credibility of witnesses where we find it expressed in the report. We are not to take up these three volumes of evidence, running over so many pages, and whatever the impression conveyed by the dead page or the dead type might be, to overrule the judgment of those members of this House who took part in the proceedings and had the opportunity of seeing the manner and demeanour of the witnesses, and forming an opinion at the time as to the credibility to be attached to their statements. In all other respects, we stand upon an equality with the members of the Committee, and we ought to be, and I believe we are—at least those who have taken the trouble to go over the voluminous evidence—in a position to form an opinion on the question submitted to us. It is very unfortunate that, on a question so grave as this, the decision is to be left to a popular assembly of this kind. It may be that, under our system of government, it is impossible that any other or any better way could be found, but I think that, if the same course that was followed in the Parnell investigation had been pursued here, if the matter had been referred to three independent members of the bench, where we know we could find judicial impartiality, while this House and the country would have been saved the enormous expense of this enquiry, a more satisfactory conclusion would have been arrived at. We have, however, to deal with the questions presented to us, and to do the best we can under the circumstances. I regretted that the hon. the leader of the Opposition who last addressed you should have determined this matter, not as I think it ought to be determined as a judicial enquiry, as a question only to be decided upon a close and minute review of the evidence, but that the hon. member made what might be termed—and I say it without any disrespect to the hon. gentleman—a stump speech, in which he invoked party considerations and denounced the hon. gentleman who is under the trial because he was connected with the political party to which the hon. the leader of the Opposition is opposed. I think I shall be able to point out that in the references he made to the evidence, he was strikingly inaccurate. I think I shall be able to show, even to the hon. gentleman's own satisfaction that he had not only not read the evidence but that he had not even read the reports, and certainly not the report of the majority. But the hon. gentleman was able to satisfy his conscience and to arrive at a conclusion that he ought to drive—no doubt unwillingly, but on political grounds—his opponent from public life by appeals to passion, by invoking statements which were not always accurate, by charging, for instance in one example, that the leader who is no longer in this House had openly boasted that he carried and bribed constituencies with their own money, and the hon. gentleman said, what should we expect from the follower of that hon. gentleman, from the second in command, than that he should have followed that doctrine and should have carried out the practice which the late Sir John Macdonald, according to the hon. gentleman, publicly stated was his rule of conduct and practice. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the dead might have been spared in this enquiry. I think the hon. gentleman must have been hard pressed in making his attack upon the late Minister of Public Works, when he found it necessary to quote statements which he said had fallen from the lips of him who has recently left us and of whom, in my hearing, the hon. gentleman himself spoke in the very highest terms on an occasion which will be memorable to us all. But, if the hon. gentleman had not the magnanimity to abstain from attacking the memory of him who has gone, we might have expected at least that he would not have garbled his statements in the speech to which he referred. I had some recollection of that speech, not very accurate I admit, but the hon. gentleman's statement did not bring to my mind the utterances of the late Sir John Macdonald on that occasion, and by great good fortune I have obtained the words of the hon. gentleman, and I ask, and I feel certain that I will not be denied, an apology from the leader of the Opposition for the garbled statement he made. As the leader of the Opposition stated the words of Sir John Macdonald, they were:

"The Opposition charge us with having bribed the constituencies. Well, we have bribed them with their own money."

There the hon. gentleman stopped. Will it be believed that he stopped not merely in the middle of a paragraph, but in the middle of a sentence? Will it be believed that the hon. gentleman, in uttering these words, which, if they were as he gave them, could only have been made in joke, did so without giving the context? Here are the words which our late leader used:

"The Opposition charge us with having bribed the constituencies. Well, we have bribed them with their own money, and the charge amounts to this, that we have so wisely and equitably distributed the revenues in the different parts of the Dominion as to gain the approbation of the country as a whole."

Surely the hon. gentleman can see the difference.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCARTHY. They do not appear to see the difference now.

Mr. MULOCK. We are just complaining of the distribution.

Mr. McCARTHY. Well, I do not know what the difference is between the conduct which the hon. gentlemen support and the conduct which the hon. gentlemen denounce. They denounce the late Sir John Macdonald because he distributed the revenues of the country in a way the people approved of.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is what is stated, but they back up and support their own leader who bargained with the Premier of the Province of Quebec by promising better terms. If it is wrong to buy a county by the erection of a post office or public building——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame.

Mr. McCARTHY--I should like to ask whether it is right for the leader of the Opposition to bargain with the leader of the Province of Quebec that he will——

Mr. LAURIER. When was this?

Mr. FOSTER. And boasted of it in this House.

Mr. LANDERKIN. No, he did not do anything of the kind.

Mr. LAURIER. I wish to state this to the House——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has no right to add anything unless the House chose to let him.

Mr. LAURIER. Will I be denied the right—

Mr. McCARTHY. Ask anything you like.

Mr. LAURIER. Do you deny me the right?

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not deny you the right.

Mr. LAURIER. Very well; I stated in this House that I had been in favour of the resolutions of the Quebec Conference asking for an increased subsidy. I stated that in answer to a question put to me by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins) who, in 1884, was a member of the Quebec Legislature, when Mr. Mousseau, if I remember right, was in the Government, and who at that time was a member of the Legislature which passed unanimously such a resolution for increased subsidy.

Mr. FOSTER. All right.

Mr. LAURIER. What is my fault, then?

Mr. McCARTHY. What is his fault, asks the hon. gentleman. Why, Sir, if it was a fault in the late Government to distribute money in public works throughout the provinces of this Dominion, is it not equally a fault for the hon. gentleman on the hustings—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McCARTHY. Hon. gentlemen will not listen. Mr. Speaker, I can understand their desire to drown my voice, I can understand their desire to suppress free discussion. They are accustomed to assail continually, as if they themselves were free from stain and corruption, every statement of members on this side. Let them understand there are two sides to this question, and in this free Parliament we must hear both sides, their side as well as ours. Now, Sir, in my judgment there is no distinction between the leader of the Opposition, upon the hustings, bargaining that if he got power here he would hand over to the Province of Quebec the $400,000 which the Premier of that province demanded—there can be no difference between that crime, if it is a crime, and the act of this Government spending money in a county for the erection of public buildings here, or the construction of a public work there. Why, Sir, there was a demand by telegram made to that hon. gentleman: "My support depends on your answer to this question;" and if ever an hon. member was bought and sold, it was the hon. gentleman who now leads the Opposition. My friend by me hands me this telegram sent by the Premier of the Province of Quebec, and not denied by that hon. gentleman, giving Mr. Mercier's reason why the Province of Quebec and the Government of that province, should support the leader of the Opposition and his party in the late election. Every hon. gentleman knows that perfectly well, and therefore it is idle to talk--I was going to use a word for which I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, you would have called me to order—I say it was unfair, at all events, to bring as an accusation against the late Minister of Public Works, that the Government of which he was a member had been guilty of conduct certainly not more heinous and not more reprehensible than that of which the hon. member himself had been guilty:

"Mr. Laurier has accepted the resolution of the Interprovincial Conference of 1887, and he has promised to give effect to that when he comes into power."

Mr. AMYOT. That is correct.

Mr. McCARTHY. And there was good consideration for it, too. The hon. gentleman made a pretty good bargain, and the recent disclosures have shown that there was cash down in the bargain. Not merely was there the moral support of the Government of the Province of Quebec at the last election, which has given the hon. gentleman his right to make the proud boast of having a larger following from his own province than have the Government on this side; but that majority was obtained, as the disclosures which have recently been made public have shown, by means which I would have expected the hon. member for South Oxford to denounce as being corrupt and scandalous in the extreme.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When you prove any, they will be denounced.

Mr. AMYOT. Prove them first.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In a judicial way.

Mr. SPEAKER. Hon. members have no right to interrupt an hon. gentleman in the midst of his speech.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman from Bellechasse had better keep perfectly quiet. He knows why, perfectly well, and I think he had better observe the rules of order, at all events, or else, perhaps, we will be sitting in judgment upon him before he is very much older.

Mr. LAURIER. I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for Simcoe has no right to use threats to another member on the floor of this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman is threatening the hon. member for Bellechasse, I think he is not quite parliamentary. It is a parliamentary rule that an hon. member shall not threaten the House, and I presume that rule applies to threats made against individual members.

Mr. McCARTHY. I bow to your ruling. If I threatened the member for Bellechasse, I withdraw the threat, and I trust the hon. gentleman's sleep and dreams will not be disturbed in the least by anything which, in a hasty moment, escaped me in reference to this particular case.

Mr. AMYOT. I rise to a question of order. If the hon. member has any personal charge to make against me, I beg of him to state it clearly, instead of indulging in insinuations.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman has not stated any question of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman, I think, has not stated any point of order, so far as I understand him.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Take your medicine quietly.

Mr. McCARTHY. I rose, Sir, desiring to discuss this question quietly.

Mr. MULOCK. And judicially.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thought it well, before we commenced the discussion of the question proper, that I should point out that the language and the manner in which the leader of the Opposition had invoked the support of his followers, were not such as ought to characterize the discussion of this great question.

Mr. MULOCK. You have got us into a judicial frame of mind now.

Mr. McCARTHY. The last appeal which the hon. gentleman made was especially directed to his own fellow countrymen, and although, perhaps, I am not the best exponent of the views of the fellow countrymen of my hon. friend—and I hardly think they will call upon me or like me to stand as their defender—but, Sir, I do not think that any more insulting reference could have been made to a race or nationality than that which was made by the hon. gentleman himself. Why, Sir, he made an appeal to them to look over the pages of history and to observe that men of their race had, from the earliest times, and long before they passed under the flag of England, been guilty of boodling and corruption which, he said, was perpetrated and exemplified by his fellow countrymen and his fellow citizen, as I understood him to say, of the City of Quebec. Sir, I trust that the members of that race in that province, even from me—and perhaps I am not the best one to say it—even from me would repel and reject an appeal of that kind, and I trust they will not condemn the hon. gentleman who sat upon these benches so long as one of their honoured representatives, because 100 or more years ago, the members of that race had been guilty of corruption in the administration of affairs of the French Province of Quebec. In dealing with this matter it is well to see what charges we have to consider to-night, because when we compare the two reports—and for convenience sake I propose to follow the report which is before the House as the substantive motion—I think it will be found that with respect to many matters, differing as they may as to phraseology, the conclusions arrived at are practically the same. There is no one here left to say a good word for the member for Quebec West. Whatever the charges made against him were, those charges have apparently been established, so that neither the majority nor the minority who have reported to us here have a word to say in his behalf. Every charge practically, I think almost every charge, has been answered in the affirmative against him. We are asked, therefore, not asked merely to consider the position of the late Minister of Public Works, for I frankly say, at the outset, that if this was a question dealing merely with the late Minister of Public Works as a responsible Minister of the Crown and head of the department, I have no word to say in his defence. I think his conduct cannot be defended; I think on the ground of ministerial responsibility, which, under our system of government, we must exact from the heads of the department, it would be impossible to offer here in defence of the late Minister any valid excuse or any defence which this House or any portion of it would entertain. I think so far as that goes there will also be practical unanimity. But we must remember that the hon. gentleman is no longer a member of the Cabinet. We must bear in mind that the hon. gentleman resigned as Minister, though late in the day, and I agree it was late in the day; I agree it would have been better if the hon. gentleman had at once recognized the charges made against him and placed his resignation in the hands of the Premier, for, coming at the stage it did, it only intensified the feeling that the hon. gentleman's case was hopeless and his action was calculated to do him a great deal of damage. But we are asked to go much beyond that. We are asked to find that the hon. gentleman, lately a Minister of the Crown, was personally guilty of corruption, that he was privy to the conspiracy which both reports find to have existed, and by means of which large sums of money have been stolen from the public treasury of this country, whether through Harbour Commissioners or direct from the treasury here is a matter, in my judgment, of but very little moment or difference. It would be mere hair-splitting to draw any distinction as to whether this money came from Harbour Commissioners or direct from the Public Works Department; it was taken from the people, and taken from them in a manner which none of us are prepared to endorse, approve or condone. The important matter which we have to deal with now is, was the late Minister of Public Works a party to that conspiracy; was he privy to it; was he, in other words, the dupe of the conspirators or a participant in the conspiracy? I propose to deal with this matter in the fairest manner I know how, with a full sense of the responsibility which rests upon me as one of the representatives of the Canadian people, however unworthy, upon the evidence, and not upon mere rhetorical statements, and to ask that the conclusion I arrive at may be adopted by a majority in this House. The matters which invite our consideration are: (1) The dredging contract of 1882; (2) the cross-wall contract of 1883; (3) the supplementary contract with respect to Lévis dock in 1884; (4) the contracts with respect to Esquimalt dock also in 1884; and lastly, the contract for dredging the basin in 1887, being the second dredging contract which the facts show was entered into between the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co. and either the Harbour Commissioners or the Public Works Department. The first of these matters may be passed by without much notice. It is not pretended that the late Minister of Public Works had anything to do with the awarding of the first dredging contract by the Harbour Commissioners in 1882. I listened, and I listened with admiration, to the very able speech made by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) the other night, and no hon. gentleman on the floor of this House is as capable, or, certainly, more capable of dealing with this question as that hon. gentleman, and he did not pretend, and I do not suppose it will be pretended, that the late Minister had anything at all to do with the dredging contract of 1882. I am not at all justifying the manner in which that contract was awarded; but, as the conduct of the member for Quebec West is no longer a matter of discussion between us, we may pass that by, and, as I am aware the House is already satiated with this debate, I will deal with matters that are really of more consequence in this discussion. Coming, then, to the next matter, the cross-wall contract of the following year, 1883, it is well that I should state what I understand to be the law regulating this question. We have had the law stated by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth); we have had that law ridiculed in a rather severe strain by the hon. member for Queen's, and, although I may be made a subject of criticism, I venture to differ from both hon. gentlemen. Undoubtedly the first Quebec Harbour Commissioners were entrusted with the task of constructing various public works. The Dominion Government agreed, under the authority of Parliament, to advance money to them from time to time, leaving, speaking generally, to them the management and control of that money, for which they became responsible, and which it was hoped—I do not know whether the Minister of Finance entertains any longer a reasonable expectation of receiving it—would be repaid. But there are two exceptions to that general rule. The first exception is to be found in the Act of 1875. By the Act of 1875 the Governor in Council was authorized to raise $500,000 for the completion of a graving dock at Quebec harbour, the size, dimensions, plans, specifications and draft contract to be approved by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Minister of Public Works. Stopping here for a moment, let me state to the House what I understand that to mean. The construction of the work was not taken out of the hands of the Harbour Commissioners, but the plans and specifications, the size and dimensions and the draft contract were to be approved by the Governor in Council. But the contract, nevertheless, regarding the graving dock, was to be let and the control of that contract was to rest in the hands of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners. There was a clause, however, inserted in that Act, found there for the first time and repeated in a subsequent enactment, which I find has been misquoted in the report of the minority.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is correct in most of the copies. The word "hereunder" should be inserted instead of the word "hereafter."

Mr. McCARTHY. I took it for granted it was a clerical error. The report says:

"Any money hereafter paid from time to time as the works proceeded, upon the report of the Minister of Public Works as such progress is satisfactory."

The true reading is that any moneys to be "hereunder" paid under this particular Act were to be expended on the report of the Public Works Department that such progress was satisfactory. We pass from 1875 to 1887, or a period of 12 years, and during those years the moneys that had been voted by Parliament prior to 1875, and the money that was voted by Parliament between 1875 and 1887, was not subject to this control, such as it might have been, with the exception of the particular sum that was voted in the Act of 1875 itself. In 1887, however, the money then voted was placed upon the same terms and conditions, and was, I take it—though the language perhaps is not very felicitous—subject to the same control as that imposed by the Act of 1875. When we come to apply the application of money, in the view that I take of the matter, I do not think this will make any very substantial difference. But, Sir, it must never be lost sight of, in fairness to the late Minister of Public Works, that there is a distinction between that money which he controlled himself, the money that was expended by the Public Works Department, and the money which was controlled by the Harbour Commissioners of the City of Quebec which he had only an indirect supervision over, and as far as I can see, to be worked out somewhat in the following way. Take, for instance, the Act of 1875. The plans and specifications, the sizes and the dimensions in this particular work were subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. But the letting of the contract and all that was done under the contract, was controlled by the Harbour Commissioners, although the Minister of Public Works, before this money was put in the hands of the contractors—it is only fair to bear it in mind—and before he paid this money out to the Harbour Commissioners, was bound to see that satisfactory progress was being made with the work. The language of the Act says:

"Upon the report of the Minister of Public Works that such progress is satisfactory."

Now, Sir, there is a manifest distinction between the Minister being responsible to see how the money was paid to Larkin, Connolly & Co, and what would justify the Minister in saying that the money was properly paid over to the Harbour Commissioners because the progress of the work was satisfactory. I think every hon. gentleman will see that distinctly. It may be, and I am afraid it will be found, that the manner in which the Minister executed this authority has involved him in very serious consequences. First and foremost, what was the unfortunate step that was first taken? On his recommendation the chief engineer of the Public Works Department became engineer of the Harbour Commissioners, so that the man who ought to have exercised the supervision over the Harbour Commissioners was the very man who was performing the duty for the Harbour Commissioners, occupying a dual and somewhat antagonistic position; and on the recommendation of Mr. Perley, the chief engineer, Mr. Boyd, another engineer of the department under him, was employed for the Harbour Commissioners and was also retained as a servant of the Public Works Department, occupying thus unfortunately the same dual and inconsistent position. So that the late Minister of Public Works, if these circumstances have involved him in trouble and difficulties, has only himself to blame, because of the manner in which he sought to carry out the intention of this Act of Parliament. Now, first as to this cross-wall contract of 1883, and I am not going to weary the House; it would be unpardonable that I should do so after the full explanation this matter has undergone from the hon. members who on either side of the House have dealt with it. I do not mean to say that they have all been perfectly correct according to my reading of the evidence, but I think the House is seized of the salient features in relation to the letting of this contract, and I will only repeat them sufficiently for the purpose of the argument which I intend to found upon them. There is no doubt whatever that this contract was obtained by corrupt means. There is no doubt in my mind, and I regret very much to have to say it, that the tender of the firm of Peters & Moore, which was the lowest bonâ fide tender, was by means, disreputable and disgraceful to the Public Works Department, made to appear a higher tender than that of Larkin, Connolly & Co. I do not think there is any one can doubt that. I regret it very much, and it was long before I could come to a conclusion, in the absence of an explanation from the late Mr. Boyd who is not here to speak for himself; and it was only after examination of the statement in his own handwriting as proved before the Committee that I arrived at the conclusion reluctantly, that undoubtedly quantities had been filled in in the tenders, quantities which were not honest, which were not the result of his own calculations, but which brought about the result that this tender of Larkin, Connolly & Co. appeared to be $6,000 or thereabouts lower than the tender of Peters & Moore. I do not think any person can defend this. I do hope that when this commission which is to be appointed investigates the work of this department, they will be able to arrive at some scheme by which such a thing as that will be rendered impossible to occur again. I quite understand that lump sum contracts cannot in the public interest be always awarded; but, Sir, if it is in the power of an engineer, by filling in false quantities of the materials, and by moneying out these quantities, to make a bonâ fide lower tender appear to be the higher, surely there can be some means devised by which such rascality as that can be prevented in the future. But, Sir, when we come to ask to what extent the Minister is to be responsible for this, I find that the report of the minority only goes this length. At page 27 of the report of the minority we have this finding:

"We find there must have been a conspiracy between McGreevy and some one, or more, of the engineers of the Department of Public Works to procure the contract for Larkin, Connolly & Co., and we find it difficult to absolve the Minister from a knowledge of the existence of that conspiracy."

That is the greatest length to which the minority were able to go. Well, that is a negative finding, and I do not think we can found upon a negative finding, an affirmative verdict of guilty. They cannot see how it is that the hon. gentleman could be free from the knowledge of this conspiracy, and they are unable to give him a certificate of good character with regard to it But, if they start with the presumption of innocence at all, there would not be much difficulty in saying, if that stood alone, that the Minister ought to be absolved. Yet, what was it, Sir? Mr. Boyd having these tenders in his hand moneyed them out upon a schedule, and that schedule was brought to Mr. Perley the chief engineer. Presuming good faith on the part of the Minister, did you expect him or did any person else expect him to sit down and tot up these columns, or to ask about these quantities, or how did you expect that the Minister, thus imposed upon—I am assuming innocence—by his engineers, could discover this fraud? It may be said that the permission to withdraw Gallagher's tender and the suspicious dealings with Beaucage's tender were sufficient to awaken suspicion in the mind of the Minister. While I cannot too strongly condemn a principle which I am afraid has prevailed, not only under the administration of this Minister, but under the administration of other Ministers, that is, permitting tenders to be amended after they are in, and, still worse, permitting tenders to be withdrawn, one significant thing at all events might have aroused the suspicion of Sir Hector Langevin - that is, the audacity of these contractors; for Larkin, Connolly & Co., tendering in their own name, had actually put up Mr. Patrick Larkin's cheque as security for Gallagher's tender. Whether as a matter of fact that was brought to the notice of the Minister, does not appear in the evidence, so far as I am able to discover. If it stood there, however, I do not think any fair-minded man, however much he might, on the principle of ministerial responsibility, condemn Sir Hector Langevin, would say that on that ground he ought to be treated as a criminal and driven with dishonour from public life. Now, let me pass on to the next contract, that is, the one for the completion of the Lévis graving dock, of the 23rd of June, 1884. It must be borne in mind, dealing now merely with the criminal accusation against the late Minister, that there is no charge preferred against him with regard to this Lévis graving dock. If you are going to condemn a man on the report of a Committee which dealt with subjects which were not referred to that Committee, not merely in a parliamentary sense but in a criminal sense, you will be doing a great injustice—an injustice which, I think, when we come to realize it, none of us will be willing to perpetrate. This charge was to this effect, that Mc Greevy had, for a corrupt purpose, induced the Harbour Commissioners—and remember it was the Harbour Commissioners upon whom the responsibility lay—to give a lump sum of $74,000 for the completion of the Lévis graving dock—without consideration, as the hon. member for Queen's puts it, which I suppose means with reference to the country; but certainly for a very substantial consideration—the difference between $50,000 and the $74,000 so far as Mr. McGreevy is concerned. That is the way that charge was presented, and it was presented near the end of the enquiry after the Minister had made his final explanation. A lot of evidence was put in which throws a great deal of suspicion upon the hon. Minister in connection with the Lévis graving dock from beginning to end; but when we are dealing with this matter in the sense in which we ought to deal with it, are we going to condemn the Minister on a charge which was not brought forward until after the Minister's mouth was closed, so to speak, and condemn him as a criminal on that ground? The hon. member for Bothwell says: No, I do not mean that technically his mouth was closed, for he could have come forward if he had wished to. But I mean that this was not in the formal charges, and he was not summoned by the Committee to answer it. He could have come forward and answered it if he had seen it; but there was not an opportunity given to him to come forward and defend himself from it. But this charge in reference to the Lévis graving dock is not so bad as it is made to appear, even on the scanty evidence which we have before us. What is it? As it may be stated on the stump, it has a very horrid look—that a contract was let in 1887 to complete this work at $380,000, and that nearly $800,000 was paid. But it is not fair to leave the charge there. There is a patent explanation of this transaction which ought to be given before we decide that the Minister should be treated as a criminal. It appeared from the report which my hon. friend from East Toronto read the other night, that a mistake had been made on the part of the engineers. They assumed that where this dock was to be constructed there was a substratum of clay, and made the plans accordingly. Now, it is perfectly clear that the contractors were not to rely upon that—that they were bound to bore for themselves. The specification in substance said to the contractors: The surface on which you are to build the dock is sawdust and sand and clay, but we invite you to inspect it for yourselves; if this is a mistake, remember you are not to hold the Public Works Department responsible, but the consequence will be upon your own head. What is the legal consequence of that? I am not going to give the House my own opinion; but there is a case so exactly in point that I will trouble the House with a short extract from the judgment of the Lord Chancellor of England with regard to it. Exactly the same thing happened with regard to the construction of the Blackfriars Bridge, in London. The engineers supposed that certain works which they designed would be of sufficient strength to enable the contractor to erect the bridge, and the contractor took the contract relying upon the engineers' statement. After commencing the work, he found that it could not be performed without the expenditure of a great deal of money, and that a great deal of money which he had spent was wasted. Therefore he sued the City of London for damages. What were the principles of law to determine that case? First, that there was no warranty on the part of those letting the contract that the work could be performed according to the specifications, and the contractor took that risk upon his own shoulders. But it was also held that where a mistake of that kind was discovered—a mistake as to the character of the soil in this case, and as to the strength of the tide in the other case—the contractor was not compelled to perform an impossibility, but had a right to decline to perform the work; and I do not think he would have been held responsible or bound to perform the work or mulcted in damages for breach of contract, if he had failed to perform it. In other words, the contract was entered into on a mutual mistake, and it would have been unjust and inequitable to enforce it. Then what were his rights? Here is how Lord Cairns dealt with them.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do I understand the hon. gentleman to imply that there is a charge made in the minority report against the Department of Public Works or Sir Hector Langevin with reference to that?

Mr. McCARTHY. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) On the contrary, the minority report says distinctly that there is no evidence of it and they do not pass judgment.

Mr. McCARTHY. It has been commented on in the debate, and the whole story should be told fairly, because it is certainly calculated to create a very bad impression. The rule of law is stated by the Lord Chancellor as follows:—

"It appears to me that, under those circumstances, the appellant must necessarily be in this dilemma, either the additional and varied work which was thus occasioned is the kind of additional work contemplated by the contract, or it is not. If it is the kind of additional or varied work contemplated by the contract, he must be paid for it, and will be paid for it, according to the price regulated by the contract. If, on the other hand, it was additional or varied work, so peculiar, so unexpected and so different from any person reckoned or calculated upon, that it is not within the contract at all; then, it appears to me, one of two courses might have been open to him; he might have said: I entirely refuse to go on with the contract—Non hæc in fœdera veni: I never intended to construct this work upon this new and unexpected footing. Or he might have said: I will go on with this, but this is not the kind of work contemplated by the contract, and if I do it, I must be paid a quantum meruit for it. Or, for ought I know, for I wish to express no opinion upon the subject, having gone on with it, he might now, if this is not extra work within the contract, have maintained a proceeding for remuneration upon a quantum meruit for the extra work he so did."

That is a clear statement of the law and of the position in which Larkin, Connolly & Co. and the commissioners found themselves. Larkin, Connolly & Co. had a right to say: We will not go on; it is impossible for us to go on; the works you designed, the wing walls you designed with reference to a certain supposed substratum, which does not exist, cannot be constructed upon these specifications; but we will go on with it by day work, or go on and leave you to pay us what is fair and reasonable. No person knows, so far as this evidence discloses, on what terms and under what conditions this work was proceeded with up to 1884 when the supplementary contract was let. All we know is that $140,000 beyond the contract price was paid, whether rightly or wrongly we do not know; but as there is no charge concerning it we have no right to assume it was wrongly paid. When we come to 1884, what do we find? We find the contractors doing the work by day and being paid a certain percentage on the amount expended by them as their profit—I think 15 per cent.; we find that they were approached by Mr. McGreevy or that they approached him, and that they said to him: If you can procure us a lump sum for the additional work, we will give you all over $50,000. The result was he got them $74,000, and another new contract was entered into for the surplus work on that basis. In what respect does the responsibility attach itself to the Minister of Public Works there? If he had pursued his ordinary course, if he had not desired to monopolize authority which did not belong to him, he ought to have had nothing to do with this contract which did not come within the purview and control of the department at all. All the department had to do with regard to the graving dock was to make the plans and specifications and define the site, and then it remained with the Harbour Commissioners to carry out the work. But the Minister was not satisfied with that; and the unfortunate position he took in appointing Mr. Perley as chief engineer for both works was found then, for the first time, to work mischief. What do we find? We find that, on the advice of Mr. Perley, the Minister of Public Works agreed to this contract. He got the Council to agree to it upon the understanding that there was to be no claim for extras in the future, that the $74,000 was to be in full, and that one portion of the work was to be done by the close of the season of 1884 and the balance was to be finished, I forget at what time, and that all the difficulties and perils were to be at the risk of the contractors. I am sorry to differ from my hon. friends on this side, but, so far as I can judge, I think the statement of this contract given by the hon. member for Queen's the other night was correct. The supplemental contract carried on the original contract and was founded upon the original contract; and the contractors agreed for a bulk sum, making in the aggregate $577,020.43, to do the whole work and complete it, and they acknowledge in that amount is comprised the first sum of $330,973.89, the $40,659.74 already paid, the $141,326 already paid, and the $64,080 agreed to be paid, and the $10,000 for caisson. The whole sum is $577,020.43, and deducting therefrom $407,911.33, left to be paid $169,109.10. No doubt the Minister of Public Works made himself responsible for that contract, and it is impossible for him to escape the responsibility. Whether that was a good contract, whether it was too much or too little it merely depended on what may or may not have been known to the Minister. The only evidence we have is that the contractors were told the work could be completed for $43,000. They said to Mr. McGreevy: We will give you everything beyond $50,000. That is the evidence. Mr. Perley recommended it. The Harbour Commissioners relied in the first place on Mr. Perley, the Minister relied on the Harbour Commissioners. Was Mr. Perley honest in that recommendation? Was that a fraudulent misrepresentation of his, and if it was did the Minister know it? It does not follow that because there were some underhand dealings among the contractors—and they seem never to have done anything in an honest way from beginning to end—that Mr. Perley is to be condemned or that the Minister is to be condemned. But I confess I am unable to understand on what principle the further payments were made. I find, figuring out the money, that there was $169,000 to go to the contractor when all the work was done, and I take it that was to cover every claim for extras in connection with that work. Of course, if there were claims for extras outside of that work, they would have to be dealt with on their own merits.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The minute of Council says in express terms that there was to be no claims for extras.

Mr. McCARTHY. It says extras "for the future;" and there was paid before the final account was presented the sum of $154,000, leaving only $14,504 due. Nevertheless the engineer certified for $74,000; and after that this preposterous claim, the most preposterous claim that in all my experience I have heard of—the claim for $110,000 as damages while their plant was lying idle and they were doing this work—was presented, and that claim was entertained by Mr. Perley; and I would like to know what his excuse or pretense was for entertaining it. First he said I advised $30,000 to be paid for that. Then being pressed, he offered $35,000 more, and in the end $65,000 was paid. I certainly have no desire whatever to say a word against Mr. Perley, who unfortunately was not able to finish his examination, or to hound down the late Minister of Public Works, but I am unable to find any explanation with regard to that, and all I can say in regard to it is that I think we ought to suspend our judgment until the late Minister can say what he has to say in reference to it. For my part I am not satisfied, but, according to British fair-play, I do not think we should condemn the Minister on a charge of this kind without giving him an opportunity of making a defence. Now I come to the contract with regard to the Esquimalt dock, and, if there is any subject with which this House is familiar, I think it is the Esquimalt dock, and I think that those gentlemen who have not been in the House or in the Committee will find it all recorded in the Hansard. I have read the speeches of the hon. members for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) and Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) and the speech of my hon. friend on the other side, and I think the whole matter is in possession of the House. Briefly it is this: The Minister declined to give this contract to Baskerville & Co. in the early part of 1884. He declined to give that contract after he had authorized Mr. Perley to give the contract, provided Baskerville & Co. would reduce the amount they had tendered for, and they agreed to that, reducing it by some $50,000, as far as I remember.

Mr. MULOCK. They did do that.

Mr. McCARTHY. I say they agreed to do it, and, so far as their side of the matter was concerned, they were willing to enter upon it on those terms. That made their contract price less than the amount of the contract which was afterwards let in the fall of the same year. It is said that the Minister went to Quebec the following morning, and there is evidence given by a discredited witness. It is true—I admit that his testimony has generally something to support him, that as a general thing it is corroborated, and it is only where it has not been corroborated that it has been rejected. It is not corroborated here, but it is not expressly denied, and Mr. Murphy says, that he saw the Minister in Quebec and that he said: "Cannot we get the contract between Starrs & O'Hanly and Baskerville & Co.? I hear one has tendered too high and the other too low," and he intimated that he was willing to give a quarter of the profits he did not say to the Minister, but to somebody. It is clear that we cannot exclude the fact, that the contract was not let to Baskerville & Co., and that no satisfactory explanation has been made in regard to that, and that a new calculation was made, for my hon. friend who leads the Opposition was entirely inaccurate in regard to that, though perhaps he was justified in his statement by Perley's report. Mr. Perley said that, in response to complaints made by the British Columbia Government, who complained that the Government here were delaying the work Sir Alexander Campbell had agreed to enter upon, Mr. Perley was called on and made a report and new specifications were made by Mr. Bennett. The difference was that Mr. Perley asked for masonry instead of concrete.

Mr. MULOCK. But the Baskervilles substituted rubble for concrete.

Mr. McCARTHY. I said so.

Mr. LAURIER. It was an alternative matter.

Mr. McCARTHY. I was referring to Perley's report as written for the British Columbia Government or for the Minister, in order that he might give an answer to the British Columbia Government.

Mr. LAURIER. I quoted from the report made for this House last year.

Mr. McCARTHY. My hon. friend is quite wrong in that. That was only a summary of what took place years before, but I am referring to the report which was made at the time to enable this Government to answer the British Columbia Government. It appeared to me that, in judging a fellow member, the hon. gentleman might have been a little more particular in enquiring into the evidence, but I am quite sure that he made his statement in good faith, and that it was only a slip. When we come to the letting of the contracts, the Minister's conduct becomes still more extraordinary. I need not read it and I am willing to deal fairly by it, I need not read this report to Council recommending that Starrs & O'Hanly should have the contract. Everyone who reads it will see that every line of it is intended to induce Council to reject that contract, and probably the last clause was altered because Council did not agree to do that. At all events, it was altered so as to recommend that Starrs & O'Hanly's tender should be accepted. But every clause of the report, stating that they were not contractors that the Government should deal with, that they had offered to put up another sum, that they had offered to strengthen themselves, and so on, tends to the conclusion that the Minister's mind went in the direction of rejecting that tender. In the end, and by the means the House is aware of, the contract was awarded to Larkin & Connolly, and Starrs & O'Hanly were, so to speak, crowded out. From that time, the most serious case against the Minister is presented. It is impossible for me to disregard the letter written by Mr. R. H McGreevy on the Sunday before the cotract was let. I will read it:

"QUEBEC, SUNDAY, 2 p.m.

"(Private.)

"MY DEAR SIR,—The memo. of yesterday re British Columbia dock is with the Minister. He says that those conditions cannot be embodied in the contract, as it will be the same one as submitted to O'Hanly & Starrs, and it would not do to make it different; but he says that all what's asked is so fair that there will be no trouble in obtaining them, especially the $50,000 material one—however, you are to urge them just as if nothing had transpired; of course, it's for you and partners to say if you will sign without them being embodied. Politics changes; so does Ministers. I will be back Tuesday. My address will be St. Lawrence Hall, Montreal.

"I remain yours,

"R. H. McGREEVY."

Now it is impossible to suppose that that letter is relating a fiction. There must have been a memorandum and that memorandum must have been brought to the Minister by somebody. By whom was it brought? It could only have been brought by Mr. Thomas McGreevy, and that memorandum, relating to the plant, was to the effect that the Minister, notwithstanding the tender, notwithstanding the language he had used a day or two before to Starrs & O'Hanly, that the full $50,000 would have to be paid, would only call upon them to pay for so much of that as they would be required to use. And we find that from the very day that these gentlemen go to British Columbia, they act as if nothing had transpired, and they at once object to taking over this material. They object to take it. Mr. Trutch says, you must take it. He hands them over the whole $50,000 worth. I am not saying it was worth $50,000; I do not think it makes the slightest difference if it was not worth $5. He hands it all over with the exception of $10.50. They at once commence to remonstrate, but they only object to take $12,000 worth. So they keep on harping throughout the summer, and the correspondence is all here, about this $50,000 worth of plant. In the end, what happens? Mr. Perley reports that they have no choice about it, that it is an absolute condition of the contract, that they must take it at $50,000: they have got to take it for better or for worse, it is the contract, it is the condition upon which the tenders were let, that they had a right to enquire into its value before they made their tender, but now they are bound to take it. Let me follow up the history of this $50,000. This having been certified to and approved by Mr. Trutch, and communicated by him to the contractors, Mr. Perley visits British Columbia in the fall of 1885; he returns in the month of December of the same year; he is at once seen by one of the Connollys, who reports that Mr. Perley, from his conversation, talks as if everything was to be made right, and on the 18th January Mr. Perley makes a report to this effect: That he has seen this plant, that it was comparatively worthless, that it was not such as ought to have been forced upon the contractors originally, and that for his part he does not think this matters much, he is satisfied it will come into consideration at the making of the final estimate. At least you will find in the letters produced from Mr. Perley's own book, that he sends to the engineers in the month of January, 1886, a list of articles, and he asks them to write down on this list what they are willing to pay for what they take, and return it to him; and based upon that, he says, upon his own responsibility, he makes up his report, and he allows for that nearly $20,000 off, which certainly they had no more right to than I have, or any other member of this House. Now, that is so far as Mr. Perley goes. Then, what is the position of the Minister with regard to that? The Minister has Mr. Perley's report; but the Minister also has in addition, or he ought to have before him, the early statements, the early correspondence that took place, in which they had refused to allow to these contractors any deduction or abatement whatever on account of that. But the Minister, we are to believe, did not know anything about that. Now, upon that, I confess, I have some doubt. Looking at Mr. Perley's evidence, what does he say? Mr. Perley says it is true that he accepts the full responsibility for it. What does that mean? He does not accept full responsibility with regard to the re-coursing with stone, but his report for the re-coursing of stone is just as strong as the report for the allowance of stone. What does he mean by that expression? The point is, did the Minister know of it? Now, let me see what the Minister says about that, because I think something ought to turn upon the Minister's own statement about it. The Minister makes a deliberate statement with regard to that, and his statement will be found in the evidence which is before the House, and which I need not detain the House by quoting with exactness. The result of it is this: That the Minister does not, in the first place, specifically deny, though he does after cross-examination, but the Minister assumes and argues in his statement that his chief engineer has accepted that responsibility, and he points to the page in his evidence where it is to be found, and arguing upon that he says the engineer did wrong, or ought to have brought it to his notice, and that he ought to have been consulted about it. It is true that subsequently, upon cross-examination, and the matter being put squarely to him, he does say that he did not know anything about it. Mr. Perley is careful to refuse to swear that the Minister did not know it. He accepts the full responsibility, he says he accepts all the responsibility, but he is careful to say that the Minister had not knowledge of it at the time at which Mr. Perley permitted this to be made. I think I have stated that charge correctly. Now, with regard to the re-coursing of stone. That re-coursing of stone, we all know, was permitted upon the distinct understanding that it should not be dealt with as an extra. That was the distinct bargain with regard to the re-coursing of stone. It was certified to by Mr. Trutch and Mr. Bennett as being a change which, in their opinion, was unobjectionable. But until this enquiry was made, until Perley was put on the stand before the Committee, no engineer certified it was an improvement; and I have very grave doubts whether it was an improvement. I do not mean to say it was not a stronger wall, but I do mean to say it is very doubtful in my mind whether the specification that the English engineers, Kinipple & Morris, had provided in the first place was not amply sufficient for the purpose. However, that may be, giving Mr. Perley the benefit of that doubt, giving the Minister the benefit of that doubt, I am unable to see upon what pretense they allowed the $27 a yard for it. It is quite plain that the work, if called for as done, would not have been charged for at anything like $27 a yard. Mr. Perley has pointed out in his report that, for three stones, as he put it, more should be paid than for two, and, therefore, if they put in a third stone they should be entitled to charge more. We can all understand, taking a stone of a cubic foot, it will take 27 of these to fill up the space of a cubic yard. If each stone is to be dressed upon five sides, it will be found that the dressing would be equivalent, in the one case, to 45 feet, and with the 27 stones, to 135 feet, besides the additional handling and the additional cement. Now, I am not able to understand how the engineer, according to his own argument, and approving of it as being a better job for which the country should pay, having evidence before him of Baskerville's tender that that work could be done for $16 a yard, and having the report of Kinipple & Morris—that the work was not worth more than $14 or $16 a yard. Here is the report of Kinipple & Morris:

"As to substitution of solid stone in deck walls in lieu of stone and concrete, my firm were the first to introduce into Canada Portland cement concrete as backing of quay walls behind stone face, in lieu of solid stone walls which cost from $12 to $16 per cubic yard, while a stone and concrete wall of equal durability and strength only costs from $6 to $8 per cubic yard. The latter class of work has been most successful in the harbour and graving dock works at Quebec. It was at first supposed that the severe climate of the Province of Quebec would be very injurious to a stone and concrete wall, but it is not found to be the case. Should Canada take advantage of this experience, she may in the future save some millions of dollars in the carrying out of her public works."

Mr. Perley writes on the 20th April, 1885:

"What I wish to convey in the above is that as the contractors suggested a change in the dimensions of the stone they have no right to be paid for any extra stone supplied. If they are permitted to place two courses of stone instead of three it follows that they save the dressing of two beds, the setting of one course and the saving of the cement, besides the saving in handling a fewer number of stones."

So we know perfectly well that this price of $27 per yard should not have been allowed, and we find Mr. Perley, without remonstrance or suggestion, asking the Minister to allow that price, and the Minister agreeing to that request. These are two grave charges in connection with the Esquimalt dock, and I can only say, to my mind, there has been no very satisfactory explanation about them, and no one which it can be pretended is any justification or defence. The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) thought this interview with Mr. McGreevy was the same one Larkin spoke about, because it must not be forgotten that Larkin spoke to Sir Hector Langevin in the presence of Perley about the plant, and that he and Perley had words about it, in the presence of the Minister, and Larkin left with the understanding that the Minister was to look into it, whatever that implied. So the whole thing was in the mind of the Minister, and he has not very satisfactorily accounted for his granting his permission to pay this sum to the contractors. Undoubtedly in that respect, to the extent of $41,000, which the Minister himself states was the difference between the re-coursing of stone and the stone contracted for, the Minister is responsible. There remains the charge of dredging and the charge of dredging is one for which the Minister at all events should not be deemed in the first place responsible. The charge is that Larkin, Connolly & Co. agreed to take 32 cents and allow 3 cents out of 35 cents a yard for political purposes. This charge is proved. They were awarded the contract at 35 cents. It is said the Harbour Commissioners were responsible, and a good deal of controversy raged across the House with respect to the responsibility of the Minister on that account. In my opinion I do not think the Harbour Commissioners are so much to blame. It was provided that they were to get 35 cents a cubic yard for dredging and placing the material dredged on the embankment, or wherever else the Harbour Commissioners desired it, not dumping it into the river. Mr. Perley in one report says it is alternative. Read the contract, and you will see it is not so. The work was to be continued during the summer, the cost was not to exceed $100,000 and the material dredged was to be placed on the embankment or at such other place as the Harbour Commissioners required. Instead of that, and in spite of it, the Harbour Commissioners, whether Mr. McGreevy was the instrument of the Minister or not, no matter how the department and the chairman of the Commission may differ as to their evidence, there is no dispute of the fact that against the protest of the Harbour Commissioners these contractors continued to dredge in 1888 and 1889, not merely to dredge at those rates, but to take and dump the material in the river, earning 20 cents or 22 cents per cubic yard while the Harbour Commissioners were paying 35 cents. There is no question about that fact. The value of the work is not seriously in dispute. If they had received 27 cents, the price they had before, it must be remembered that Boyd deducted 5 cents per cubic yard for the quantity of material they put in the river. Peters swore that 7 or 8 cents would be a fair sum.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Nicholas Connolly said 4 or 5 cents.

Mr. McCARTHY. No doubt 22 cents per cubic yard would have been the very outside price; yet for the bulk of the material dredged and dumped into the river there were paid 35 cents, and the balance put on the embankment was paid at the higher rate of 45 cents in addition. Who is responsible? I utterly repudiate the doctrine that the Minister of Public Works is responsible in the first instance. This was money to be paid over by the Minister to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners and by them to be expended, and unless you can go further than charging the Minister with his responsibility under the Act of Parliament, unless you are able to bring home to the Minister the fact that he was in complicity with the engineer who permitted this nefarious job to be carried out, you cannot convict the Minister of any impropriety on that ground. These are the simple facts; I have not misstated them, certainly not intentionally; I have not favoured the Minister on the one hand, or stated the case too strongly on the other. It is perfectly true there is not one tittle of positive evidence against Sir Hector Langevin. The only direct charge of corruption has been ignored by both reports. It is not for us to sit in judgment on the reports, and no one proposes to reverse the reports. But we have to deal with the conclusions to be drawn from the evidence taken. We have thus been dealing with the Minister in regard to the Esquimalt dock, for which he was responsible; we have also been dealing with him in regard to the Quebec dock, for which he is more or less responsible according as the evidence indicates to the mind of the members that degree of responsibility which would fasten criminality on him.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What motive does the hon. gentleman find in regard to that expenditure?

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not quite follow the hon. gentleman. I find a motive as regards Larkin, Connolly and Mr. McGreevy, and as regards them it is plain sailing. How the Harbour Commissioners permitted themselves to be made use of in 1888 and 1889, I do not understand. Mr. Dobell tells us he protested; he produced the minutes to show that his statement was true; but beyond a mere protest, they seemed to have been powerless. As the hon. gentleman for Queen's (Mr. Davies) argued, some over-powering influence, some controlling power seemed to have been determining this matter, and the Harbour Commissioners had no recourse. I cannot help saying that this has been a most unfortunate division of authority. The Act of 1875, which placed the Harbour Commissioners under the authority of the Dominion Government, seems to have deprived them of the substantial reality of power. Five of them were nominated by the Minister of Public Works; they became, in a certain sense, his creatures; they did not realize they had the full sense of responsibility resting on them, and they were looking to the Minister, and so long as he was satisfied, they did not seem to think much was to be done by them. I have arrived at this conclusion, and it is the only safe one to be reached, that Mr. Perley is the man who can tell the truth if he is thoroughly examined. Either Mr. Perley defrauded or duped the Minister, or Mr. Perley was the tool of the Minister. There is no escape from one of these conclusions. We must all condemn Mr. Perley's acts. Mr. Perley must have succeeded, if the Minister is innocent, in hoodwinking him; and hon. gentlemen will say that he was too skilful an administrator to be hoodwinked, and that his conduct in the House and at the head of the department for many years proved it. On the other hand, it will be said that he had very rightly confidence in the officers in the department on whose characters up to that time no stain rested. But this is clear, that Mr. Perley can tell, if he makes a clean breast of it, who is the responsible man. But unfortunately at the very critical moment Mr. Perley was struck down with illness and has never been able to be recalled to the stand. At the very moment when Mr. Perley was undergoing searching questioning with respect to the Esquimalt dock, the cross-wall contract, these tenders and alterations, he was struck down, and I understand he never has been in a condition to be recalled, and at all events, never has been recalled. Is it fair to condemn Mr. Perley, whose story has never been finished? Is it fair or decent? He was there without counsel to defend him, and without an opportunity being offered to have any one to speak on his behalf; and have we the manliness left to say that this man shall be condemned until his story has been heard? Are you going to say that the Minister, upon the incomplete evidence of the most important witness, is to be treated as a criminal and driven with dishonour from his place in this House and the position he occupies in this country; or is it not fair and reasonable and proper that we should suspend our judgment until the prosecutions which these reports recommend will be carried out, and until these witness are brought into court? Then I believe, and then only, can the truth be found, and then only will it be brought home to us all whether Perley was the tool of the Minister, or whether the Minister was the dupe of Perley. I am not prepared at this stage of the enquiry to say one thing or the other, and I do not think it would be fair for us to do so. I therefore conclude with offering to the House the solution which I suggest is the proper one that we should reach in this matter. I move, Sir :

That all the words of the amendment be struck out and the main motion amended by adding the following words thereto: "with the exception of all the words contained in the concluding observations of the Report, on page 768 of the Votes and Proceedings, which, in the opinion of this House, should be struck out for the following reasons:—

1. That from the facts which were made to appear before the Committee and reported to the House in support of and in relation to the charges which it was its duty to investigate, the House is convinced that in many of the dealings of the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co. with the Public Works Department and of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, gross frauds have been perpetrated and the public have thereby been defrauded out of large sums of money.

2. That these wrongs were accomplished by means of a conspiracy on the part of the members of the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co. and Thomas McGreevy, a member of this House, and some one or more of the officers of the Public Works Department.

3. That owing to the unfortunate illness of Mr. Perley, which rendered it impossible for the Committee to finish his examination, this House does not feel that it ought, in the absence of his complete evidence, to pronounce decisively as to his complicity or otherwise in the conspiracy which the Committee finds to have existed, or to determine who among the other officials of the department participated therein.

This House, for the like reason, and because respecting some of the matters as to which evidence was given, more especially that relating to the supplemental contract for the completion of the Lévis graving dock of 1884, no charge had been made against the late Minister of Public Works, and the evidence in respect thereof is incomplete, feel unable to decide whether the conduct of the Minister in approving and sanctioning the various contracts with Larkin, Connolly & Co., the indulgences granted to them in the performance thereof, and the over-payment made in accordance therewith, is to be ascribed to a blind confidence in the integrity and efficiency of his chief engineer, even in that view scarcely to be distinguished from weakness almost criminal, or to a guilty connivance in the spoliation of the public treasury, which ought to be characterized by very different language.

4. That as no specific charge of this nature was made against the late Minister, this House, while compelled to call attention to this view of the matter, does not think that it is required to reach any more definite conclusion on the subject.

In addition to the foregoing reasons the House has no hesitation in recording its opinion that, judged by the well-known constitutional rule which makes the Minister responsible to Parliament for the administration of the department over which he presides, the late Minister of Public Works, irrespective of the considerations dealt with in the last preceding paragraph, cannot be absolved from his ministerial responsibility, and in that regard merits the censure of this House.

And the House recommends that in addition to such action as may seem to be called for under the findings hereinbefore expressed, such legal proceedings as may be available be taken against those who were concerned in the conspiracy, and for that purpose the books and papers which were before the Committee be retained or so many of them as may be necessary for such prosecution.

Finally, the House desires to record its conviction that the enquiry directed by the House has been rendered unsatisfactory, incomplete and in some respects abortive by what the House cannot help characterizing as the wilful perjury of some of the witnesses examined before it, and the House recommends that Nicholas K. Connolly and Michael Connolly and such other witnesses as the law officers may advise that there is evidence on which indictments for perjury should be preferred, be prosecuted therefor.

Now, Sir, in concluding, I only desire to make this observation. I approach this matter in no party sense. I deny any party responsibility for the action I am taking here, and I understand that, dealing with a question coming from a Committee on Privileges and Elections, it ought not to assume a party character on the floor of this Chamber. If the Committee are bound to dispose of this according to their conscience, so are the members of this House, upon whom the ultimate responsibility must rest, and I have endeavoured so far as I could—I dare say very feebly, I dare say without the thoroughness with which many other hon. members have accomplished the same object—I have endeavoured to arrive at what I believe to be a just conclusion upon this important and difficult question. But, Sir, I have this to say: that, if it indeed did involve the fate of my friends whom I am glad here to support; if indeed it did involve their fate, I should not hesitate to take the same course as I have taken here to-night, because, Sir, if this young nation is to be saved and to be preserved, it must be that this House in its might will rise and say with one united voice, that whether the man be high or low—and the greater his responsibility and the higher his position, the more we ought to say—that judgment and justice, no matter how severe that judgment may be, shall be rendered to him. No matter what the consequences might be to my friends, I shall vote as I propose to do in support of the resolution I have offered now to the House.

Mr. CURRAN. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to offer the few remarks I have to make on this important matter, I desire to state to the House, how deeply I regret, that during the last session of Parliament I should have been made the instrument by which a false declaration was read to this House on behalf of the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. McGreevy), who misled me by his statements, and convinced me at that time that there was no charge that could be sustained against him, and thus induced me to read that document which has since been proved to have been utterly without foundation. Having made this statement, that is all that I shall say in that connection. The sub-amendment now before the House has been preceded by an address which to my mind hardly leads to the conclusion which the hon. gentleman has asked this House to arrive at. I have listened with very great attention to the sub-amendment proposed by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and to the remarks which he has just made—not to my mind in support of it at all. I must confess that I cannot see upon what grounds he can urge us to arrive at his conclusion, in view of the observations which he himself has made. While in some respects he differed from the report of the majority, in most instances he followed very closely the reasoning in the report of the Committee; and certainly, with regard to the Lévis graving dock, he conclusively showed that there was no charge before this House which the hon. Minister of Public Works could be called upon to answer. If that be the case—because certain documents were put in the hands of the Committee at the very tail end of the investigation—documents which I, though a member of the Committee, never saw until several days after the proceedings had closed—if there was not only no charge against the Minister in connection with that matter, but if the evidence never came to his knowledge, as it certainly never came to the knowledge of the Committee who were to try him, why not let the matter drop altogether, as one which is entirely irrelevant, and not make it the subject of a motion or an amendment which merely involves further trouble and complication in a question already sufficiently complicated? The hon. gentleman has spoken not only of the Lévis graving dock, but he has given a great deal of attention to the contract in British Columbia.

It was not my intention to have said anything upon the subject of the British Columbia contract, because it appeared to me that the report of the Committee was entirely clear and conclusive, and just on that subject based as it was upon the evidence of Mr. Perley, upon his own admission, upon the letters written, upon all the instructions given in the department from beginning to end—all winding up not only with the report of Mr. Perley, but with the solemn statement that he took the full and absolute responsibility of having awarded the amount which was allowed for the plant ; and even according to the statement of the hon. member for North Simcoe, the evidence is entirely insufficient and inconclusive as regards the hon. Minister of Public Works. Why, I ask again, should there be a further investigation ? Why should there be further complication ? Why should we go still further into the matter when this admission is made, and when under the rule applicable to all criminal cases—and this is virtually a criminal charge—there is always a presumption of innocence until guilt is proved ? There being no guilt proved, even according to the hon. gentleman's own statement, the benefit of all doubt should be given to the hon. gentleman whose reputation is now at stake. We have further in this amendment a statement that Mr. Perley, the chief engineer, should not be condemned at the present time—that it would be unfair to his character, on account of his having succumbed to a sudden attack of illness before he was able to conclude his testimony, not to allow him to come forward and state fully and frankly all that took place, and establish one of two things—whether he was the tool of the Minister, or whether the Minister was his dupe. I say it is very unfortunate that an hon. gentleman should raise these difficulties where there is not the slightest necessity for them. In so far as the guilt of Mr. Perley is concerned, unfortunately for that gentleman, who stood so high in the estimation of the public at large, and in the confidence of the Government, there is ample evidence to condemn him, altogether outside of the British Columbia contract, altogether ouside of any of these contracts, in the fact that he accepted and acknowledged to have received, as mentioned in the report of the minority as well as of the majority, a present of $1,800, and that although he felt he had done wrong, he never returned the amount. Besides that, under the principles which govern in such matters, but more especially in view of the fact that in one of the contracts which we are now called upon to consider special mention is made upon this very subject, which he could not have ignored. The clause to which I refer is as follows :—Extract from the specifications for the construction of the Lévis graving dock :

"Should the contractor, at any time, offer or present any gratuity, in cash or kind or otherwise, to the engineer, the resident engineer, or their assistants, clerks of works, inspectors, or other servants of the commissioners or engineer, the commissioners shall be at full liberty, if they deem it advisable, to put an end to the contract."

Then the practice of receiving presents was not only condemned on general principles, but we have the special understanding written in the contract that such presents should not be given or accepted. Why, therefore, should we waste any more time in considering this unfortunate matter ? It is as clear as noon-day. The hon. gentleman also says that we should not only adopt the proceeding which has been suggested by the report of the majority, but that we should proceed to take measures to bring to the bar of justice for perjury, Nicholas Connolly and Larkin and Michael Connolly and such others as the law officers may advise. Well, for my part, I must say that when names were mentioned by the hon. gentleman, I cannot for the life of me conceive why he did not begin with those whom nobody believes except when their testimony is corroborated by other evidence. There is not in the speech which the hon. gentleman has delivered one suggestion as to what the particular point is upon which any of those gentlemen have perjured themselves. It has not been pointed out, as it should have been, to the satisfaction of this House, when this recommendation is made, especially as it varies the conclusion of the two reports before the House, anything upon which to base their action. Special acts of perjury, more especially with regard to those who have been mentioned, should have been indicated before we are called upon to adopt such action in contradistinction to the report of the majority, which has arrived at the conclusion, from the evidence, that a conspiracy was formed, and that the conspirators should be prosecuted according to law. Upon each then of those points, I do not think the hon. gentleman has given us good grounds for varying our action from that suggested either in the one report or the other, that we have been considering up to the present. I shall, therefore, proceed to give my view as briefly as I can upon the case generally, and state the reasons I have for arriving at the conclusion that the report of the majority of the Committee is that which should be adopted. It is unnecessary to say that I agree with the majority of those who have spoken that we cannot place any reliance on the evidence of a man like Murphy, who has admitted that he is a fugitive from justice, that he was an embezzler, that he commenced by embezzling $20,000, that he then embezzled $30,000, and then came to Canada and tried to embezzle the $10,000 remaining in the fund of which he was treasurer in the City of New York. He tells us himself that, since coming here, in the carrying out of these works, he has stopped at nothing. He swears that he corrupted the inspectors of works carried on at Quebec. He tells us that he made a present or a loan to Mr. Lightfoot, we do not know exactly what for. I am satisfied Mr. Lightfoot is perfectly innocent of any criminality whatever, but there is no doubt in my mind that in making that loan, Murphy was laying a scheme to make use of that young man on a future occasion, should necessity arise. He also swears, and everybody believes falsely, that he corrupted the Minister of Public Works by paying him on two occasions a sum of $5,000. Now, the other witness, Robert McGreevy, is a man whose evidence we cannot regard with anything but suspicion. The least we can say of him is that he is a fratricidal witness. Both those witnesses avowed that their evidence was not given in the public interest, that their action was not taken because they felt shocked at the conduct of Mr. Thomas McGreevy or because they felt shocked that any public officer should have acted contrary to his duty or oath of office, but because they felt that the day was gone by when they could get any more contracts, and they were determined to have revenge. Therefore we have to consider with grave suspicion the evidence of these men who know too much, and unfortunately we are met on the other side by the evidence of men who know too little, who appear not to know anything at all on a great many important points with which they should be familiar. I propose to deal with the report of the hon. gentlemen opposite as regards the dredging contract and to point out where I think they are inaccurate in their finding. I would not suppose that either of those gentlemen would put his name to a document which he did not believe in every respect to be true, but I am satisfied that the magnitude of the task, with the multiplicity of work they had to attend to outside of the drawing of that report, was such as to render them unable to give it the attention it deserved, and thus on several important points they have decidedly erred. The allegation is:

"That the Honourable Thomas McGreevy, being a member of the Parliament of Canada, and a member of the Quebec Harbour Commission, entered into an agreement with Larkin, Connolly & Co., after they had tendered for the dredging contract of 1882, by which, in consideration of their taking his brother, Robert H. McGreevy, into partnership with them, and giving him an interest to the extent of 30 per cent. in the work tendered for, he agreed to give and did give them in an undue manner his help and influence in order to secure to them the said contract.

"That to this end he, the said Thomas McGreevy, undertook to secure the dismissal of Messrs. Kinipple, Morris and Pilkington from their positions, and that they were so dismissed and replaced by Henry F. Perley and John E. Boyd."

The finding by Messrs. Mills and Davies is:

"Looking at all the evidence and comparing the correspondence, written at the time, we find: That Thomas McGreevy did corruptly lend his influence as a member of Parliament and as a member of the Board of Harbour Commissioners, in order to secure the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co. the contract, and to procure for them undue and improper concessions afterwards, and that he did this in consideration of the said firm having taken his brother Robert into partnership with them, and giving him an interest to the extent of 30 per cent."

Both reports agree that this interest of 30 per cent. was proven. I am satisfied that Mr. Thomas McGreevy knew that his brother had an interest, but there is no proof, that I can find, establishing that he knew he had 30 per cent. interest. On the contrary, I am satisfied that Thomas McGreevy thought, as he swore, that R. H. McGreevy, his brother, was a kind of contract-broker or peddler of contracts, and was making a certain sum of money out of these people; but he never imagined that he had accumulated the wealth he had in connection with these contracts. In fact, we have his own statement in regard to what he believed, and there is no reason to disbelieve that statement. Mr. Robert H. McGreevy was a factotum for him; he was very humble, he was lying low and keeping dark, but he felt his day would come, and he thought it had arrived in 1888, when, according to Thomas McGreevy, it dawned upon his mind that he should become one of the directors in the Richelieu Company. Mr. McGreevy says:

"It was at the end of 1888 or the commencement of 1889 before the elections took place, that in February some person told me that my brother was trying to get on the Board of the Richelieu Company. I think it was Mr. Michael Connolly, who told me. He was a director at the time, and we were on our way from one of the meetings of the board when he said to me that Robert McGreevy was trying to become a director. I said to Mr. Connolly, 'what business has he to go there; he does not own any stock or has any money to put into investments; he is too much in debt and has no right to go there.' I said further that I thought it was to create a division by putting a number of the then directors off. I stated at the time that some of the other directors would think that I was intriguing to get some of them off the board, and I was very much annoyed about it.

Q. You have just stated that the first difficulty between you and your brother, arose out of a statement which had been made to you by Michael Connolly, to the effect that your brother sought election as a director of the Richelieu Company?—A. Yes.

Q. And you thought that was impossible, as he had no means to buy stock nor was he then in possession of the stock which would give him an interest in the affairs of the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you then say to Michael Connolly, and what did Michael Connolly say to you on that subject? Did he give you to understand that you were in error about your brother's means?—A. He disclosed to me that Robert McGreevy was a partner in the firm, and had a large amount of money there in the company; that he was speculating with Murphy in the stock of the company.

Q. He then said you were in error as to the financial condition of your brother?—A. Yes, and that he was a partner in the firm.

Q. He then stated that fact to you for the first time?—A. For the first time.

Q. And you say that was in 1888 or the beginning of 1889?—A. Coming down from a meeting of the directors of the Richelieu Company.

Q. Did you have any conversation with your brother subsequently?—A. Yes, the next time I met him I reproached him for the whole thing, in my office at Quebec, and we quarrelled about it, and I said some very hard things to him. We never spoke since that day, or never had any conversation.

So that Robert McGreevy was interested, Thomas McGreevy knew it, but he did not know to what extent. The minority report goes on to state in reference to the dismissal of Kinipple & Morris:

"The works of the Lévis graving dock, and those of the Quebec harbour, were under the direction of a firm of London engineers, Messrs. Kinipple & Morris, whose plans had been adjudged the best after public competition. Messrs. Kinipple & Morris' resident engineer was Mr. Woodford Pilkington.

"The contractors had frequent differences with Pilkington and complained of his severity in causing them to keep to the specifications and contracts. In fact Murphy swears that the engineers were severe on them in keeping them to the letter of the contract, and that it was a question whether they would have to give up the contract or the engineers be dismissed. An organized system of denunciation was carried on against the resident engineer in the papers the contractors could control—some of the articles being written by the contractors themselves. They resolved to get rid of him. The good-will of Mr. Thomas McGreevy was secured, and Messrs. Kinipple & Morris were replaced by engineers chosen by Mr. McGreevy himself, and who were under the control of the Department of Public Works. The contractors wanted changes in the contracts, and unfortunately they appear to have been able, after the change of the engineers, to obtain anything they desired. It would seem that their principal object was to have these engineers out of the way in works to come."

It must strike anyone who has listened to the testimony given before the Committee that, when the minority report says there was an organized system of denunciation carried on against the resident engineer and that the chief engineers were dismissed through the agency of Mr. McGreevy, they are entirely at fault. There is the evidence of Mr. Dobell, there is the documentary evidence which is contained in the letter of Mr. Verret, which I may read later on, but, taking up the evidence of Mr. Dobell, it must absolutely convince anyone that these men were dismissed, and properly dismissed, and for totally different reasons. This is the evidence:

Q. You remember that Messrs. Kinipple & Morris were originally the engineers of the Quebec harbour improvements?—A. Yes.

Q. And the dock, and so on?—A. Yes.

Q. They were removed from that position?—A. Yes,

If I remember rightly, both yourself and Mr. Rae, as members of the board, objected to their removal?—A. Yes: we protested.

Q. And Mr. Rae made a formal notarial protest against that course, and you made a protest less formal?—A. The protests are those recorded in the minutes.

Q. You had objections, which were expressed at that time, to their removal?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Ouimet:

What year were they removed?—A. About 1882.

By Mr. Henry:

Q. But after your protest against their removal, some time subsequently, something occurred which induced you to change your mind on the subject?—A. At first I protested strongly against their removal, but shortly afterwards some matters came to my knowledge as to the action they had taken in the construction of the graving dock which led me to change my view. I found that the resident engineer had written or cabled to Messrs. Kinipple & Morris, telling them that it was impossible to put the dock gates where they were trying to do and that they had spent 12 months trying to do this. Instead of coming out and making a proper survey Messrs. Kinipple & Morris merely cabled out: "Move them 70 feet back;" and so further work was gone on with 70 feet back. Finding that they could not succeed there the engineers cabled out to put the gates 70 feet still further back. I thought myself that that was a sufficient reason for making a change.

Q. What was the cause of the difficulty in placing the gates where it had been originally intended to place them?—A. They sounded and found rock, and when they came to try 70 feet back, when they came to get the foundation, they discovered boulders on a bed of sand, and it was impossible to put the gates there.

Q. And as to the second attempt which was also advised by cable, they were in the same predicament?—A. Exactly the same predicament.

Q. Then you ceased to have any confidence in these engineers in respect to their attention to the work that you had previously?—A. I believed when that came to my knowledge it was sufficient to discharge any engineers.

Q. And you then agreed with the course that had been taken in discharging them?—A. Most certainly.

Q. And you are now of the same opinion that you were then?—A. Entirely.

Q. Was your loss of confidence in them attributable to want of skill or want of attention?—A. Want of attention.

Q. The resident engineer of whom you spoke, but whose name you did not give, was Mr. Pilkington, was it not?—A. Yes.

Q. You remember Mr. Pilkington leaving the work in consequence of infirmity or ill-health?—A. Yes.

Q. Were the members of the firm present when he left?—A. I really forget.

Q. Mr. Pilkington was not dismissed, any way, as far as you know. Do you remember if he remained for some time after Kinipple & Morris were dismissed in the employ of the Harbour Commissioners?—A. Some short time.

Q. Some months, as a matter of fact?—A. Yes.

Q. But the sole cause of his leaving, and his position being occupied by somebody else, was his ill-health?—A. Yes.

These men, Kinipple & Morris, would not come out from England, but they cabled those general instructions to their engineer, Pilkington, a young man whom they had left in charge of a work of such vast importance, that he was to move the gates back 70 feet, and then another 70 feet. They were properly dismissed, as I think every hon. gentleman in this House will conclude, for their negligence. The minority report makes charge 5 of the general report their second charge. It has reference to the dredging of the wet basin at 35 cents a yard. The general report gives its finding at page 15:

"The Committee therefore find that Thomas McGreevy, knowing that his brother was a partner in the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co., made an arrangement with them by which he was to receive from them $25,000 to be appropriated for political purposes, out of the proceeds of a contract for 800,000 cubic yards of dredging in the wet dock of the Quebec harbour works at the price of 35 cents per yard, which it was understood he would endeavour to procure for the firm. There is no evidence that Thomas McGreevy used his influence with the Department of Public Works in connection with the making of this contract. The contract was not let by the Department of Public Works but by the Harbour Commissioners, and it appears that the department had nothing to do with the contract. Mr. Perley was connected with it only as engineer of the Harbour Commissioners.

"The only evidence of the use of influence upon Mr. Perley, as the chief engineer of the Harbour Commissioners is that constituted by the inference arising from Thomas McGreevy's letters. On account of Mr. Perley's state of health, it was found impossible to obtain evidence upon this and many other matters."

And the correspondence is here given. Now, I think that conclusion of the majority ought to be satisfactory. But the minority report endeavours to link Sir Hector Langevin with this transaction. It was admitted by the last speaker that Sir Hector Langevin had no connection at all with this contract; but they say "the question arises between what parties the blame is to be distributed and how far Sir Hector Langevin was or should have been cognizant of the facts?" Now, upon what evidence do they arrive at that conclusion? Thomas McGreevy and Perley deserve censure, and possibly the Harbour Commissioners were to blame for their want of supervision; but nothing but a desire to injure Sir Hector Langevin could have induced those hon. gentlemen to put that in their report. They try to support their statement by the evidence of Mr. Valin. Mr. Valin's evidence was shown by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) the other night to be utterly unreliable. They try to bolster up their report. The hon. member for Cumberland showed that the evidence of Mr. Dobell, which was invoked on the other side, was most conclusive in support of Sir Hector Langevin when read in full, and all its component parts taken together. Valin came before that Committee and proved himself to be a nonentity; he acknowledged himself to be a man of no understanding at all; and in my opinion if the Minister of Public Works is deserving of any censure it was because, as a member of the Government, he allowed such a man to act on that board and be its chairman. Valin's letter which was read here the other night proves that. He gives information to a gentleman of the press one day, the next day he signs a written statement taking back every word and contradicting every statement. Then he comes before the Committee, and whilst he swears to conversations which he held with Sir Hector Langevin and with Thomas McGreevy of which he took no note, and which took place years ago: at the same time he cannot swear as to the exact amount of three sums of money that were paid into his hands out of the moneys of this very plunder for which he had given his written receipts, for which he had signed his name, no, he cannot remember them. He cannot remember whether it was $1,200 or $1,500, or what amount it was. It was upon the statements of a witness like that that hon. gentlemen opposite based the finding of their report in this respect. Now, with regard to the contract for the completion of the Lévis graving dock. The minority report says:

"That in the year 1884 the said Thomas McGreevy agreed with members of the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co., to secure for them a contract for the completion of the graving dock at Lévis, on condition that he should receive from them any excess over the sum of $50,000 of the contract price, and that, accordingly, the said Thomas McGreevy afterwards received from the said firm the sum of $22,000."

Both reports make this charge No. 3. Mr. Fitzpatrick, Q.C., in his admirable address before the Committee, absolutely demolished this particular charge. He showed that the conflict of testimony between Robert McGreevy and Murphy was such that no person could place any reliance upon it, and that the evidence is so unsatisfactory that we must, perforce, come to the finding of the general Committee. But the minority report says :

"In order to arrive at an intelligent judgment on this charge, it is necessary to review the facts connected with the letting of the original contract, the manner in which that contract had been carried out up to the time when the supplemental contract was entered into, the entering into that supplemental contract, and the payments which have been made to the contractors from time to time.

"The original contract was entered into the 17th of August, 1878, between the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec and Larkin, Connolly & Co.

"It provided that for the consideration of $330,953.89 the contractors should build and finish a graving dock at Lévis 500 feet long and 100 feet wide, and hand the same over to the commissioners completed in accordance with drawings and specifications on or before the 1st of June, 1882.

"Most effective provisions were inserted securing the Harbour Commissioners from any claims for extras or damages, and holding the contractors responsible not only for failures and delays in the execution of the contract, but also for the stability of the work itself, and all its plant when built.

"Special clauses were inserted throwing the risks and responsibilities upon the contractors with respect to the foundations on which any of the works were to be erected, or with regard to the materials to be excavated.

"We mention these clauses in passing, because they seem afterwards to have been ignored, when entering into the supplemental contract with the contractors, and in the settlement of their claims."

Now, I want first of all to direct the attention of the House to the last paragraph of this finding. They say that we have ignored these clauses, these stern, strict clauses. Now, I pretend to say, that these clauses of the contract we do not ignore at all. On the contrary, the hon. gentlemen must have failed to read the supplementary contract carefully or they would have found :

"That nothing in this supplementary contract shall be interpreted as prejudicing, altering, or changing the rights or claims of either party under the contract for the building of the graving dock hereinbefore recited, and dated the 17th August, 1878."

Could there be anything clearer than that ? This must have escaped the attention of these hon. gentlemen when they were making their report, else they would not put in black and white that the special clauses throwing the risks and responsibilities on the contractors were entirely ignored, when there is an absolute covenant here that nothing is to alter the liabilities and responsibilities of the parties under the first contract. Again, speaking of the claims for extras, the minority report says :

"In view of the language of the contract under which they bound themselves to build the graving dock, and assume the risk of the foundation, &c., and became liable to heavy penalties for delays, this claim of Larkin, Connolly & Co. for $110,000 damages was certainly baseless, and in our opinion should have been instantly repudiated."

That is sound doctrine, no doubt. However, the hon. gentleman who spoke last has well pointed out the peculiar character of these contracts. We know what has been done in respect to contracts since long years before Confederation. These contracts are so one-sided that the position of chief engineer is one of supreme authority, almost. The fact of the matter is these contracts are so one-sided and so strict that the contractor has no rights at all. We know that it has been the habit to refer all difficulties under contracts of this kind to arbitration whenever the contractors would accept the chief engineer, even where he himself had made his final estimate. If you take one of these contracts you find that contractors are obliged to submit to all changes, alterations, &c., which, in the opinion of the engineer, may require to be made. They are to claim no extras, they are to claim no damages, the engineers are to control them in every shape and form, they can direct them as to how to carry on the business and the number of men they shall employ, in fact they can control all their operations. I desire to refer briefly to the last clause which I mentioned a few moments ago. The clause states that the engineer is to be the arbitrator of all claims of any kind whatever and is not only to be the engineer controlling the works, but in case of disagreement he is to act as arbitrator.

Mr. DICKEY. Is the hon. gentleman reading the general form of contract ?

Mr. CURRAN. Yes ; this is the form of the general Government contract, and all these clauses are in the contract to which we are referring. We all know that prior to and ever since Confederation, no Government has ever objected to submitting claims under those contracts either to the late Mr. Page or to Mr. Perley. It was looked upon as the only recourse the contractor had if he entered into a contract like this. Would hon. gentlemen propose that a Government should hold the contractors literally to their terms when it has been proved that they had attempted at two different places and at great expense to obtain foundations when no foundations could be obtained ? The Government could not act in that way. Therefore, I come to the conclusion that the hon. gentlemen were not just in that section of the report. I must say, wishing to be perfectly sincere in this matter, that where the Minister of Public Works made an error, and a very great one, was when he allowed his chief engineer to become the chief engineer of the harbour works at Quebec. It was alleged by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) that the Minister had recommended Mr. Perley for the position of chief engineer of the harbour works. Is that so ?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. CURRAN. That is entirely incorrect. I was going to draw the attention of the hon. gentlemen who drafted the minority report to this error. Sir Hector Langevin did nothing of the kind. They say :

"Perley was recommended to his position by the Minister of Public Works, and Boyd was recommended as assistant engineer by Perley."

I contend that is altogether incorrect, and I will show that by documents which I will refer to in a moment. The Minister consented he should act. When the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec telegraphed up, or Mr. Perley telegraphed up that he had been appointed by them, the Minister gave his consent. That was the extent of his error ; he did not recommend his appointment. There is where the Minister of Public Works made the great mistake of his life. That permission to accept the appointment no doubt arose from the kindness of heart of the Minister. He evidently felt that the salary received by Mr. Perley was inadequate for the duties he was performing and consented, in order to swell that salary, to his accepting that position. A debate occurred in this House on the 21st January, 1887, when the question of the payments to Mr. Perley came up. Discussing the question of extra payment to Mr. Perley, Mr. Langelier said:

"He is also chief engineer of the Quebec harbour works. I think that is for the interest of the works, because he has corrected the great blunders which were made by his predecessors. I would like, however, to know whether he is in receipt of any salary as chief engineer of the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec."

No doubt that the permission was given on account of the acknowledged ability of Mr. Perley, but at the same time to enable that officer to get paid a salary commensurate with his ability and position. Sir Richard Cartwright, speaking on the subject, said, adding up the various amounts received in all by Mr. Perley annually:

"That makes about $4,500. It may be the case that you require to pay somewhat larger salaries than you have been doing to officers of first-class grade and first-class ability if we can get them, but I think it would be better if they should receive a large salary fairly and squarely, than that we should eke it out here, there and everywhere in half a dozen ways."

That was sound doctrine. The motive of the Minister of Public Works was no doubt benevolent. His kind-heartedness has been the cause of his political shipwreck. The results of that error are manifest. Instead of being engineer-in-chief of the Department of Public Works, standing between the Government and the chief engineer of the harbour, that salutary check was removed. Mr. Perley was thus thrown into immediate contact with contractors. His dual quality placed him in a false position towards Thomas McGreevy, M.P., who was his master as a Harbour Commissioner and who was constantly using his influence on behalf of these contractors. It thus affected his position towards the contractors in many ways, not only in Quebec harbour Works, but in British Columbia matters as well. Under No. 4 charge, cross-wall contract, 26th May, 1883, the minority report, referring to this subject, says, page 23:

"Perley was recommended to his position by the Minister of Public Works, and Boyd was recommended as assistant engineer by Perley."

I may direct the House to the letter of Mr. Verret, secretary to the Quebec Harbour Commission. That letter is too long to read, but it shows what Mr. Verret, secretary of the Harbour Commissioners, reported on the subject of the appointment of other engineers. It is shown clearly and conclusively, not only from the letter of Ennis, the secretary of the department, but from the other correspondence which is given in the evidence of Sir Hector Langevin himself, that no such recommendation was ever made by him, but that he merely consented to Perley's acceptance. This I consider a very glaring error in the report of the minority. It is useless, therefore, to follow these hon. gentlemen further. Let us look at this case in its general aspect. All are agreed, except my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), that Perley by the receipt of the present, and by his general conduct in this matter has, unfortunately for himself, been proved guilty. We all agreed with regard to Thomas McGreevy, on the question of the Admiral for instance, apart altogether from these other questions, that he was the owner of the vessel. There is no doubt but that he was the actual contractor for the carrying of the mails, although his agent, Mr. Chabot, screened him from public view. We have, therefore, these charges disposed of, and we now come face to face with the question of how much money Thomas McGreevy actually received. It was stated in the charges that he was paid something like $200,000, and the minority report thinks the amount of the donations was $170,000. Mr. McGreevy admits that he got the sum of $55,000 in ten years, and that $35,000 of that went to Le Monde and $20,000 to election purposes.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The hon. gentleman does not forget that there was $15,000 to pay Cameron's judgment against him.

Mr. CURRAN. I said a moment ago that so far as Mr. McGreevy's guilt was concerned that there was hardly any use discussing that. I was merely coming to the point of his own admission as to the amount he said he had applied to political purposes for the Conservative party. He swore that he had given $35,000 to Le Monde newspaper and that the other $20,000 was given for elections, but he would not state where or to whom it was paid. The amount was so trifling in view of the tremendous noise made about its having been subscribed by persons carrying on these contracts for ten years, that it would be much better indeed if we had it fairly and clearly stated to us where this $20,000 had gone. In the speeches that have been made in this House a great deal has been said with regard to these political contributions, and a great deal has been added about this Le Monde newspaper, and Sir Hector has been attacked over and over again because he was said to have an interest in that newspaper, and the Government and the party were denounced because this money had been so advanced. The minority report mentioned Le Monde newspaper, but strange to say in this judicial report as they call it, they say nothing whatever about Mr. Larkin and the Globe. We must remember that Mr. Larkin was first introduced into the contracts of the Dominion of Canada by the gentlemen opposite. He was introduced into the contracts of this country on the Welland Canal years before he went into the contract for the Lévis graving dock, by the Liberal party, which he and his firm also obtained from the Mackenzie Administration. He is not only a Liberal, or a Reformer, or whatever you wish to call the party, but he was actually a president of the Reform Association until 1882, and what does he say himself? Look at his evidence on pages 839 and 840 of the blue-book:

Examined by Mr. Daly:

Q. What are your politics?—A. I am a Liberal—a Reformer as they used to be called. Q. Have you taken an active part in politics during your lifetime?—A. Yes. Q. Are you president of the Liberal or Reform Association of Lincoln?—A. I was at one time, but not now. I was for six years. Q. While you were president of that Association, and since, have you taken an active interest in politics?—A. Not of late years.

Q. When were you president of the Reform Association of Lincoln?—A. I think from 1876 to 1882.

Q. Did you contribute to the campaign fund of the Reform party during that time?—A. Yes; when I was asked to contribute I did so.

Q. Both while you were president of the association and since?—A. Yes; and since.

Q. Do you recollect the agitation that was going on in British Columbia for the enlargement of the Esquimalt Dock?—A. Yes; I heard of it. I was not there at the time.

Q. Do you recollect the Globe newspaper opposing that enlargement?—A. There was an article to that effect from the Ottawa correspondent.

Q. You recollect that?—A. Yes.

Q. It is referred to in Exhibit "17" as follows: (Reads) Do you recollect if, after this appeared in the Toronto Globe, the Globe published an editorial favouring the enlargement of the dock?—A. I do not recollect that.

Q. Are you a stockholder in the Globe?—A. Yes; to a small extent.

Q. Were you at the time of the agitation?—A. No.

Q. When the enlargement of the dock was asked for?—A. No.

By Mr. Edgar:

Q. Your contributions to the party to which you belong up there, were they charged to the Larkin, Connolly & Co. contracts?—A. They were charged to myself.

So that my hon. friend wishes us to understand, that Mr. Larkin who was subscribing at that time, and was subscribing all along, and whenever he was asked, to the Reform party and to their elections, did not give any of the money of the contract of Larkin, Connolly & Co., but that he gave Mr. Larkin's personal money. How innocent! How fine the distinction. I suppose the money he got from the contract he put in his pocket, but the money he intended for political donations to the immaculate Liberal party he carried around in a satchel. Let us continue still further to see what Mr. Larkin swears:

By Mr. Daly:

Q. Coming back to that question, I was asking you: Did you approach any person for the purpose of influencing the Globe to agitate for the enlargement of the dock?—A. No.

Q. Did you write to any person?—A. Yes; not on that subject.

Q. What subject?—A. I wrote to a director, calling his attention to the article in the Ottawa correspondence, and saying that we wanted the facts stated.

Q. Have you a copy of that letter?—A. No.

Q. To whom was it written?—A. J. D. Edgar.

By Mr. Edgar:

Q. What did you want Mr. Edgar to do about that?—All I wanted was, as mentioned in a letter I stated I had written to a friend in Toronto, to see the Globe people and not have things like that appear. It was doing me no good, or them either.

Here are facts that are not mentioned at all in the report of the minority. We have all about Le Monde newspaper, but we have not a single word about the Globe. We have not a single word about Mr. Larkin having no stock in the Globe at the time an article was written against Larkin, Connolly & Co., but that he invested in some afterwards. Nobody took the trouble to find out whether he had five or ten thousand dollars worth of stock; but it is a great pity that the thing was not further investigated, so that we should have known all about these subscriptions. It is quite clear that he did subscribe, and that whilst his partners were giving in Quebec for one object or another he was giving in his own section of the country and helping the party opposite with money subscriptions, and when this came up in evidence before the Committee not one of the hon. gentlemen held up his hands in holy horror. The leader of the Opposition this afternoon was very severe upon the late Minister of Public Works regarding these nefarious transactions. He took us back to the days of Warren Hastings, and he wound up his speech by reading from Bancroft's History reminiscences of the Intendant Bigot. Certainly that was all very interesting. It is pleasant to listen to the hon. gentleman's glowing periods even when he is denouncing us; but when we think of the fire that he threw into his denunciations, how indignant he was concerning the almost forgotten days of Bigot, and how timid were the disclaimers upon the days of Pacaud, the contrast was very striking. He told us that the time might come when Pacaud matters would be investigated by a proper tribunal, and that then he would call upon his friends to denounce the corruption in the Province of Quebec. He is perfectly willing to condemn Sir Hector Langevin as a corrupt man, a briber, a conspirator, who has joined with other conspirators to defraud this country of the people's money. He is prepared to believe that upon the evidence of Murphy and Robert McGreevy, whom we are called upon to indict as conspirators in one report, and as perjurers in the sub-amendment; but he is not at all prepared, not just yet, to denounce parties who have been proved guilty of the grossest and most unblushing corruption by the sworn evidence of respectable citizens because their testimony was given before a Committee of the Senate of Canada. My hon. friend also had a fling at the memory of Sir John A. Macdonald. He said that he was an admirer of that statesman, who, he admitted, had done a great deal for his country; and yet in the same breath he denounced him as a man who had debauched his country, who had said publicly that he had bought the constituencies with their own money. Any man who has known Sir John Macdonald and who has heard him speak, knows that you had always to judge what Sir John Macdonald said by the tone in which he said it; you had to see and hear him to understand whether he spoke jocularly or not. But as the hon. member for North Simcoe showed, the quotation was a garbled one even as it was given; and the action of my hon. friend in that matter does not, I think, reflect credit upon him. He has gone outside of the wide range of this debate in order to hurl an insult at the reputation and to blacken the name of a man whose memory is revered from one end of Canada to the other. The hon. gentleman also made an appeal to us to condemn Sir Hector Langevin, because he said he was under the control of Thomas McGreevy. He said that Sir Hector Langevin was a corrupt man, a briber and a conspirator, and he should be driven from public life—why? Because, years ago, Thomas McGreevy had lent Sir Hector $10,000; that he was still the debtor of Thomas McGreevy for that amount; that, every three months, Thomas McGreevy presented to him the notes for renewal, in order that he might hold the lash over his shoulders, or keep the sword of Damocles hanging over his head. He told us of this in his loudest tones and with his most tragic declamation, and contended that it was evidence of the guilt of Sir Hector Langevin. Now, if he wants us to believe that Sir Hector Langevin was a corrupt man, his corruption did not end with these contracts; but he was corrupt in connection with the hundreds of contracts which were let from the Atlantic to the Pacific. He was in communication with the men who had these contracts, and he could have levied enormous sums of money upon them; he might have been an enormously wealthy man instead of being a poor man to-day; and does the hon. gentleman wish this House to believe that if he was corrupt and a conspirator, instead of renewing those notes—which is an evidence that he was an honest man, and would not improperly take a dollar from any one—would not have held out his hand and said: "Mr. McGreevy, we have all these moneys passing through our hands, and I think it is time that these notes disappeared." Why not take the common sense view of this matter, and act towards the late Minister at least as charitably as we would act towards the vilest criminal standing in the dock? Is there any reason or justice in holding up the fact that he was under $10,000 of indebtedness to Thomas McGreevy as an evidence that he was a corrupt man, who was filling his own pockets and those of his friends with the public money, and that, having control of all these contracts, he was such a fool, if he was corrupt, as not to have wiped out his own indebtedness, instead of leaving it there? Now, Sir, I do not desire to weary the patience of this House, but another statement of the hon. leader of the Opposition deserves a passing notice. He told us that the proof of these charges has been such that the name of Canada has been blackened far and wide. Who is blackening it? What did we see in this House yesterday? Who are sending charges broadcast, not only against the Minister of Public Works, but against every Minister who can be charged? Who is raking up old scandals which were exploded years and years ago? One public man after another is being defamed, and this is being done by men whose old and only policy has been to defame their country. And their agents are sending their slanders and exaggerated reports by wire and cable all over the civilized world. That is the reason we have to hang our heads in shame. The hon. gentleman does not stop there. He tells us that the United States is a country where there once was boodling, but which is now a land of purity, where everything is serene. Such a thing as a campaign fund does not exist there; payments are not made by candidates, even for a party nomination to office. I can imagine the smile that will appear upon the faces of the politicians of the other side of the boundary line when they read the speech of the hon. gentleman one of these days, and see the brilliant picture which he has painted of the purity of their politics. There are other points to which I might refer; but I think it will be sufficient to say, in conclusion, that the pledge which the hon. Minister of Justice gave in the Province of Nova Scotia during the last general election, representing the Government of this country, has been carried out to the letter. On the public hustings there, speaking of these charges, he said they would be investigated to the fullest extent, that they would be investigated in every particular, that full scope would be given to prove the charges if they could be proved, and that nothing would be done to protect the offenders, were they high or low. The prosecutor of this case gave testimony on the floor of this House, and the independent press of this country has proclaimed that the Minister of Justice has acted throughout in this matter as an honourable and upright man. He has given full scope to all parties, fuller scope in this matter than is usually given, or than would be given in any other assembly of this kind in the investigation of similar charges. His principle has been and will be to do justice to all men and purify the public service, and to see that the civil servants and all those connected with the Government departments do their duty honestly or suffer the consequences. That line of action he has never hesitated to carry out. In the words of Norman McLeod, his doctrine and practice have been:

"Perish policy and cunning;
Perish all that fear the light,
Whether winning, whether losing,
Fear the Lord and do the right."

Mr. DAVIN. The question before us is one of great importance, affecting, as it does, the character of a public man who has held a prominent position for nearly twenty-five years. We are here to-night acting as judges, and we ought to be very careful in weighing what arguments may be presented to us. Now, I will brush aside at once the arguments which have been presented to us by my hon. friend who has just sat down, because after all they are the arguments of an advocate. We have to-night to discuss the position of the Hon. Sir Hector Langevin as a judge and a jury, and I will say this, that nobody could have weighed the evidence given before the Committee fairly without coming to the conclusion that there are most suspicious circumstances connected with the position and the influence exercised by the ex-Minister. I had myself prepared an amendment, but when I saw that prepared by my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) I thought it was a better one than mine. The question whether the Minister is guilty is a small one, compared with the immense issues at stake. We are a young country and is it to be tolerated for a moment that a member of the Government may enter into complicity with contractors to rob the public? Is it to be tolerated for a moment that a Minister of the Crown should do that? The verdict of this country would be decidedly not; and I may say this now: I have read all the evidence very carefully and have come to the conclusion that we cannot possibly relieve Sir Hector Langevin from this position: either one of two things—either he is corrupt or he is imbecile. We cannot get over that. The amendment of my hon. friend from Simcoe, I think, meets the case, and I intend supporting it.

Mr. EDGAR. I agree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, that we should not take a great deal of time in replying to the speech of the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran). There seemed to me to be one point on which he appeared to lay great stress, and with reference to which he actually ventured to criticise the report of the majority. He seemed to think that the majority of the Committee made a grave omission when they did not censure the Toronto Globe for something or other which was in his mind. That was really the main point on which he dwelt. He read part of the evidence of Mr. Larkin, which showed he had sent a communication to the Toronto Globe. He did not show there was anything wrong in that communication. He did not show whether it should have been published or not; he only said that Larkin swore he wanted to have a correction made in the Globe, and he blamed the Committee for not having gone into that outrageous matter further and for not having taken it up in their report. We had a much more interesting speech from the hon. member for Simcoe. I was very sorry to find that he commenced his argumentative speech with a violent and malicious attack upon the hon. leader of the Opposition. Now, I cannot understand why he went out of his way to make that attack, unless to arouse the flagging spirits upon the back benches upon that side, and in that he no doubt succeeded. Or perhaps he thought that by so doing he was to some degree rehabilitating himself in the standing he lost in the Conservative party ever since he took a position in this House which we all remember. What was his ground of attack on the leader of the Opposition? He attacked him for two things. One was, that he had assented to the proposition for the rearrangement of the provincial subsidies which was included in the Quebec resolutions. What was that? A conference was held of representatives of all the provinces except, I think, British Columbia and Prince Edward Island. All the larger provinces of the Dominion were represented in Quebec. They considered the position of the provinces in reference to the Dominion, and they unanimously came to a conclusion that there should be some fair readjustment of the financial position, and afterwards the Legislatures of all those provinces ratified their conclusions. It was not a party question. It was not treated as such, except in some of the Legislatures, but these proposals were ratified by the Provincial Legislatures. What were they? Were they not to make equal and what were considered fair rearrangements in regard to all the provinces,—not to make a preference in favour of one province or another, not to offer a bribe to Quebec any more than to offer a bribe to Ontario, or to any province, whether it was represented there or not; and the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) attacked the leader of the Opposition because he frankly said he thought that was a fair proposal. How could it place in the hands of a Government or a Parliament of the Dominion, who were satisfied to carry out those proposals, any power to bribe or improperly influence one province or another. It did not allow them to pick and choose what province they would give better terms to. It was equal rights for all in a proper sense, and that is supposed by the hon. gentleman to be buying people with their own money, that is supposed to be in the same position with the miserable policy of buying a constituency with a post office here and a public building there, a wharf in one place and a railway in another, at the choice of the member representing the constituency. That is a very different position from that taken broadly and above board by my leader at that time, and it did not become the member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to try and twist that into an attempt to bribe the people with their own money. I am sorry that the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) could not make his speech on this subject without the usual sneer in which he indulges against the people of Quebec and the French Canadians. And how does he do it? I was surprised that he took such a disingenuous course. Because my hon. friend referred to 150 years ago, when the best men in that province, Montcalm and his associates, frowned down corruption and stamped it out, although it was among their fellow Frenchmen, he turns that into an evidence in his own mind that Quebec has been corrupt for 150 years. That was most unfair, most ungenerous and most disingenuous. Let us follow the example set by Montcalm and the best men of Quebec of that day, when they condemned and denounced their fellow-citizens for improper conduct. I would like to know what happened in this Chamber last night—whether the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) was willing to denounce a fellow-citizen of his from Ontario for improper conduct as Montcalm did in Quebec. I do not say that it is because he is an enemy of the Province of Quebec, but we find him not hesitating to condemn Sir Hector Langevin, though last night he would not condemn his Ontario colleague the Postmaster General. As to this case, I do not want to prolong the debate more than I can help. I think, at this stage of the debate, very many members of the House must have become shaken in their faith in the Committee's report. That report, while it was severe upon others, spread a very broad mantle of charity over the late Minister of Public Works, and we know that charity covers a multitude of sins. Now, on the sub-committee who prepared that report, who are responsible for its preparation in every particular, there were three gentlemen. One was the Minister of Justice, another was the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard). We know that the Minister of Justice, ever since he came into public life in the Dominion six years ago, has been the junior colleague of the Minister of Public Works, and the Minister of Public Works has in a sense been his leader in this House. We know that the member for Jacques Cartier for some twelve or thirteen years, since he has been here, has been associated as a fellow-member in this House with the late Minister of Public Works, has been his follower and friend here, and I suppose, before he came into this House at all, as long as he had anything to do with politics, he acknowledged Sir Hector Langevin as his leader. Now, who shall say that those two gentlemen were not influenced by their friendship, political and personal, for Sir Hector Langevin, in bringing in favourable findings in regard to their old friend and colleague and leader? We had also a speech to-day from another of his colleagues, from the Minister of Militia, warmly advocating the cause of his old colleague. We cannot object to that; we cannot be surprised at that, but I cannot help feeling that the Minister of Militia has almost a personal interest and a personal acquaintance with this case. He was very much in the same boat as his hon. colleague in connection with McGreevy, and in connection with the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co., and therefore I think we must make some allowances for his zeal in their defence. Turning to the report of the evidence, I find, when Mr. Valin, an old member of this House and president of the Harbour Commissioners, was examined, he said something about the Minister of Militia. He was asked about the contributions made to political funds, so far as he knew, by Larkin, Connolly & Co., to Thomas McGreevy, and he says, at page 495:

"I applied again to Mr. McGreevy and to Mr. Murphy. Mr. Murphy told me: 'We have placed all that is necessary in Mr. McGreevy's hands, and we have advised him to help you especially; apply to him and you will get some.'"

That is what Murphy said:

"Then having applied to Mr. McGreevy he said to me: The elections in the County of Quebec are costing heavily."

That is in the county represented then by the Minister of Militia. He says:

"The Ministers are costing us very heavily, and I have no more money to give you."

Then again he was asked:

Q. Did Mr. McGreevy mention any other counties besides those that you have named that were expensive? —A. He mentioned particularly the County of Quebec for the Local and Dominion Parliaments. He said: Caron is always after me: and he said: I cannot satisfy him with money. He said: We have Sir Hector at Three Rivers: and, besides, other counties.

Now, I think we must not place too much reliance upon the arguments of the Minister of Militia when his own friendship for Sir Hector Langevin is recollected, and when his own relations to McGreevy are also remembered. I am certain that public opinion in this country, formed from the evidence that the people have seen published day after day, has gone very much further that the report of the Committee. Public opinion in this country has already driven Sir Hector Langevin from public life; the report has not done that. Sir, individually, I am sure that I would be very glad if I could say to Sir Hector Langevin: Go in peace. During my intercourse with him in this Parliament I have met nothing but courtesy and kindness at his hands. I have had intercourse with him more than most members had on the Railway Committee, of which he was chairman, and I have the pleasantest recollection of his courtesy and his kind demeanour through all the many sittings that we had together. I can say frankly that after public opinion has driven him from public life, I have no political reasons for desiring to throw a stone at him, and I have no personal resentments to satisfy in regard to him either. I cannot, however, agree with the majority report, and one or two things I will specially mention. The report states as its conclusion, that the Minister did not know of the conspiracy which existed, and also that he did not willingly lend himself to its objects. Now, I cannot agree with that. When did that conspiracy exist, that is admitted to have existed by the report? How long did it continue? It began in 1882, at any rate, and it continued to 1889. Now, what were the relations between Sir Hector Langevin and Mr. Thomas McGreevy, one of the conspirators, during all that time? Look at their political relations first. Sir Hector Langevin was the chief of the Conservative party in Quebec; Thomas McGreevy was the treasurer of the Conservative party in Quebec during all that time. They were fellow-members of this House, sitting close together all the time. Two general elections took place during that period, in which the chief of the party and the treasurer would come into the very closest relations. During that time an important political organ was acquired jointly by them, and largely by the funds which were the results and the proceeds of this conspiracy. What were the objects of the conspiracy to which the report says the Minister did not willingly lend himself? Why, Sir, the objects of the conspiracy, on Thomas McGreevy's part, he claims now as a defence, were to obtain political funds for his party. He says it was not personal; that the object was to obtain political funds, and he did obtain enormous political funds. Yet he says that his chief did not know what those objects were. Can any man in his senses believe that the chief was ignorant of the objects of that conspiracy? Was it the habit of Sir Hector Langevin not to know anything about political funds in his province? We know that in 1872 he took, with his own hands, from Sir Hugh Allan's representative, I think the leader of the other House and of the Government, $32,000 of money for political purposes, and he did not give a receipt for it. That shows that he was not then in the habit of ignoring the existence and the use of political funds. I do not know whether he handed that to a treasurer, or spent it himself as treasurer. Then, come down ten years later, and we will see whether Sir Hector Langevin was in the habit of ignoring the existence of political funds. Why, in this very enquiry we are considering now on the evidence in this book we find that Sir Hector Langevin, in 1882, asked in his own letter, over his own signature, a political contribution from the contractor Peters, and received $1,000 himself for political purposes, when Thomas McGreevy was treasurer, and I suppose he handed it over to him. Now, Sir, these being the political relations between these two men, can any living man honestly say that Sir Hector Langevin did not understand the political objects of that conspiracy? Then look at their present relations. They were closer than brothers. The Minister of Militia to-day said he gave Sir Hector Langevin great credit for the fact that when he came into power he did not turn his back on an old friend in his adversity, Thomas McGreevy. We can be friendly with a man, owing him no grudge and showing him no ingratitude, without taking him into our house night and day, and giving him a desk in our office, which is what Sir Hector Langevin did with Thomas McGreevy from 1878 until this session. Their personal relations were very close. Is it not evidence of close personal and political relations, too, when Sir Hector Langevin got $10,000 from him for his election before 1882, and that amount was carried for Sir Hector all through the time of this conspiracy, which has been alleged, proved and admitted in the report; he paid no interest on it, and, as he very candidly said, he never expected to pay the principal of it. Surely, that was a very close relationship. How few brothers there are who would act more generously towards one another than these two gentlemen! One takes the other to his arms, to his home, he takes him to sit at the table with him, morning, noon and night, and gives him a desk in his office. The other gives his friend $10,000, pays the interest on it, and looks after it all the time. Can anyone imagine closer personal relations than these? Still Sir Hector Langevin did not know, the report says, what was going on all this time, during which a conspiracy, involving half a dozen transactions in which Thomas McGreevy was engaged every month of every year, in which the political party of which Sir Hector Langevin was the head, was decidedly interested. Sir Hector did not know anything about it, and he did not willingly lend himself to any of the objects. Was he a dupe? Was he an innocent? Was he an imbecile? Hon. gentlemen, especially those members who have met Sir Hector Langevin for many years, and who knew him as Chairman of the Railway Committee, are aware, without asking for any sworn evidence, that Sir Hector was not anybody's fool, that he was a very able man, that he was particularly acute and well-trained in matters of that kind. No one who has seen him passing the intricate accounts of the Public Works Department through Committee of Supply has failed to admire the thorough knowledge of details which he possessed. So it is impossible to persuade any member of this House to-day that he was either a dupe, an imbecile, or a simpleton. We have evidence of a direct character in reference to what Sir Hector told people regarding his relations with Thomas McGreevy. Who can disbelieve what Mr. Valin said? Who can doubt the truth of what he said when he told the Committee that Sir Hector very often advised him to follow Mr. McGreevy and everything would be right. He said to Mr. Valin: Just follow Mr. McGreevy, you know that we meet frequently and consult together. That is what Sir Hector Langevin told Valin respecting his relations with Thomas McGreevy. I will briefly show what Thomas McGreevy told us of his relations with Sir Hector Langevin. Remember that the letters in which we find these statements were secret, private and confidential letters written to his own brother about serious and large business transactions, and there was no motive for Thomas McGreevy in those letters to tell anything but the truth. Let us see what they say. On 7th May, 1883, writing to his brother about an examining wharehouse contract, Thomas McGreevy advises his brother to get Charlebois out of the way, and all the others might be passed over. How significant that is when we possess the knowledge we have respecting some other matters. Charlebois could not be passed over. That is quite well known to us; it is known to Mr. McGreevy. "When Greek meets Greek, then comes the tug of war." When Thomas McGreevy met Charlebois there was no passing over the latter in connection with the Public Works Department: he had to be got out of the way, but the others might be passed over. Who could pass them over but Sir Hector Langevin? Then, on 2nd May, 1885, he wrote to his brother and said:

"It is now understood that Bennett, the engineer in British Columbia, will not suit; so the Minister and Mr. Perley are preparing to change him. Should you know of any one that would suit, I would have the Minister appoint him."

That was Thomas McGreevy's unbiassed and candid opinion of his relations with the Minister. In March, 1886, writing again to Robert, he said:

"Fleming was to sign his report to-day on the harbour works. It will be shown to me as soon as signed. I will see it to-morrow, and Sir Hector and myself will decide what is to be done for the future."

Rightly or wrongly that was Thomas McGreevy's understanding of the close relationship existing between them. He adds:

"He will adopt my view. I will see you and Murphy before doing anything. It is a big thing for the future."

He was right: it was a big thing for the future; it involved the 35 cents dredging contract, and other good things. That is not all. We fortunately have a little more evidence. On 13th May, 1885, Thomas McGreevy writes:

"Tell Kerrigan & Co., plumbers, that they have contract for marine hospital. They were not the lowest; Vandry was. I got the Minister to give it to them."

I do not know whether he did or not; but he had no object in telling his brother about it unless he thought he had. It gives, at all events, a beautiful picture of his confidence in his relationship with the Minister. On 25th February, 1886, in regard to Halifax graving dock, he said that Sir Hector would be glad to recommend Murphy. Murphy, of all men in the world, Sir Hector would be glad to recommend. On 13th May, 1886, writing to his brother, he says:

"The tenders for Cape Tormentine work were opened to-day by Sir Hector. The lowest is an Ottawa man. He is $134,000. His name is Perkins. The next after him is another Ottawa man. Perley says the estimate of the work is $170,000. You know what the tenders were that you were interested in. It is a great pity that a fine job like that should go so low."

There we have it clear that the very day that tenders were opened he got access to them from, we must assume, his friend and associate the Minister. We can imagine his sorrow, his touching sorrow as a member of Parliament, that "a fine job like that should go so low." We can understand, perhaps, that he and Sir Hector talked this thing over at their dinner table, and thought together that "it was a great pity that so fine a job should go so low." These guardians of the public interest, this representative of the people and trustee for the people at any rate speaks for himself when he says to his brother in confidence: "It is a great pity that a fine job like that should go so low." Then, Sir, about the Baie des Chaleurs matter we again find evidence of his close intimacy with Sir Hector Langevin, for he wrote to his brother Robert as follows:—

"They proposed (not Caron, Sir Hector) to give me control of road to Ste. Anne's with subsidy of $6,000 per mile if I would withdraw my opposition to Baie des Chaleurs Railway, and relieve you and me of our stock."

Any one of these letters, Sir, will be sufficient to show the relationship that existed between these two men, but the whole of them taken together are cumulative evidence of the conspiracy which no judge, or jury, or court in the land could dare to ignore. I shall not go into all the evidence which has been laid before the House as to the relations of these two gentlemen about the Esquimalt dock, or the Lévis graving dock, or the 35 cents dredging contract. They all show a wilful lending of himself to the object of the conspiracy. I will just say one or two words especially about the cross-wall, as there are some points I think to which attention has not been drawn yet, and to which I, for a few moments, wish to draw the attention of the House. Now, Sir, the tenders for the cross-wall were improperly and illegally called for. The Act of 1882 says in reference to this cross-wall:

"That the plans are to be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and that public tenders shall be called for and the contract awarded by the Governor in Council."

I do not think that the language of that clause can be misunderstood; I think it clearly means that the tenders shall be called for by the Governor in Council; but in case anybody should say that it does not mean that, I will refer to the testimony of Sir Hector Langevin himself, at page 1050 of the evidence, in which he says as to this statute and his duty in the premises:

"That the plans be submitted to the approval of the Governor in Council, and that tenders be called by him for their execution."

He lays that down himself as part of his duty. The tenders were, however, not called for by the Governor in Council, but by the Quebec Harbour Commissioners. That might be in itself nothing very serious, you might say, if the tenders were called for properly; but, Sir, I think I can show you why the law was departed from, and why the tenders were not called for by the Department of Public Works. We all know that in the Department of Public Works there is a long list of newspapers supporting the Government, in which advertisements for public works are inserted. The owners of these newspapers look after this thing pretty well. They have them inserted often and long and full, and as a matter of fact it is the practice of the department to distribute their patronage of that kind well and largely, and for a sufficient time. For example, in this very enquiry in the case of the Esquimalt graving dock which was advertised for by the department, and which was little more than half as important a work as the cross-wall, they advertised that work from the 12th November, 1883, to the 29th February, 1884, a period of three and a-half months, and I do not think it was an unreasonably long time. But, Sir, when they advertised for tenders for the cross-wall, they only advertised for a period of two weeks. The advertisement is dated the 16th April and the tenders were to be put in on the 2nd May, only two weeks for this great cross-wall job, the largest of all these contracts we have under consideration. Where were the advertisements inserted? Were they spread all over the country so that contractors all over Canada would have a chance to tender? No, Sir: the advertisements were only inserted in newspapers in the City of Quebec and the City of Montreal, and for two weeks only. The result was just what might be expected. There was not a tender put in for this work outside of the City of Quebec. Gallagher, of course, dated his at Montreal, but he was Michael Connolly of Quebec. There was, therefore, a distinct object in violating the law. The Minister of Public Works has told us in his own evidence that he knew what the law was, and hon. gentlemen will see that there is a vast contrast in the kind of advertising which it would have got if it had gone through the regular machinery of the Public Works Department, and the advertising it got from the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec. The Minister saw the tender of the firm and he awarded the contract, and we know that his eagle eye could not have supposed that there had been sufficient advertising. He knew when he sent the plans to Quebec, and he knew when he awarded the contract. Another rather extraordinary and irregular thing for this able Minister to have overlooked was the fact that, when the tenders came in, the tender of Larkin, Connolly & Co. did not pretend to comply with the notice to contractors calling for tenders. That notice says most distinctly that the signatures of persons tendering must be in their respective handwriting. That is, that all the members of the firms must sign the tenders, and you find that all members of other firms did sign them, but you find that this firm did not comply with that regulation, either in the cross-wall case or in the Esquimalt case. No, Sir; the signature to the tender was "Larkin, Connolly & Co., per O. E. M.," if you please; that was all. That could not pass the eagle eye of the Minister: but no attention seems to have been drawn to it by him or anybody. Then, with reference to the cross-wall, the report says:

"The Committee are unable to conclude, with any degree of certainty, that there was a wilful application of improper quantities."

Now, Sir, the hon. member for North Simcoe to-night made a very able argument on that point, and came to the conclusion, I am sure correctly, that that portion of the report was wrong, and that there was a gross and wilful application of improper quantities—he did not say by the Minister of Public Works; he said by the department. But this report exonerates even the department. Sir, I will show in two ways that there was a wilful application of improper quantities. What was the object of figuring the quantities improperly? The object was that the tender of Peters & Moore, being in reality lower than that of Larkin, Connolly & Co., should be figured up, so that it would appear to be higher than that of Larkin, Connolly & Co., who were to get the contract. The quantities were not given to the tenderers. They only tendered on a schedule of prices, and it is perfectly apparent that if the honestly-estimated quantities were applied the tenders should come out according to their merits: but if the estimated quantities were not honestly applied, but if it were the desire to favour the one tenderer over the other, the plan would be to apply to Peters & Moore's tender a larger quantity where their prices were high, so that it would be run up above that of Larkin, Connolly & Co.; but in cases where the tender of Larkin, Connolly & Co. was higher than that of Peters & Moore the opposite course would be followed, so that the high price of Larkin, Connolly & Co. would not tell against them. That was done, and I will show you how it was done in several ways. Mr. Boyd, who is dead, seems to have been an instrument to carry this out. I allege that when Mr. Boyd first applied the quantities to the prices he showed that Larkin, Connolly & Co.'s tender was higher than that of Peters & Moore. How do we find that out from the evidence? In this way: Up to the 8th of May all the correspondence from Thomas McGreevy to his brother in connection with this matter shows that Thomas had no expectation up to that time of getting the Larkin, Connolly & Co. contract, because he knew that Peters & Moore's tender was the lower. Therefore, he had to stick to the Beaucage tender, which was lower than that of Peters & Moore. But on the 8th of May a letter was written by Thomas McGreevy, in which he said that he would get Boyd's figures that afternoon. What happened next? Having got Boyd's figures, we find him on the 13th going to Montreal and meeting his brother there and showing him Boyd's figures. There was nothing to show anything new in the arrangements up to that time. Boyd's figures still showed, as they supposed, that Peters & Moore's tender was the lower, and the talk still was to stick to Beaucage. Then, immediately after the 13th, Thomas McGreevy went to Quebec, where he met Murphy on the street and showed him Boyd's figures, and told him still to stick to Beaucage, telling him to get the $5,000 ready to get Beaucage bought up, so that they could act on his tender. But Mr. Murphy, with a Napoleonic enterprise—financing, I suppose he would call it—boldly takes the bull by the horns and says to Thomas McGreevy: "Instead of providing $5,000 to let us get into Beaucage's shoes, we will let him slide, and if you get the contract on our own tender and get Peters & Moore's out of the way somehow or other, I will give you $25,000." From that moment Thomas McGreevy works on that plan. We find him going back to Ottawa. We find no more talk of acquiring the Beaucage tender. He goes to the department. After that arrangement for the $25,000 has been made, and only after that, we find that the quantities are applied by Boyd and Perley so as to bring the tender of Peters & Moore above that of Larkin, Connolly & Co. Murphy was asked, in this enquiry, whether when he offered the $25,000 in that off-hand way, he had any margin to enable him to do that, because that made a difference of $20,000, and he said there was lots of margin. If the members of the Committee are interested in finding out how much margin there really was, if they will turn to Schedule H of the engineers' report, they will find that what Murphy said was perfectly true, because there was a margin of $74,380 between the Beaucage tender and the tender of Larkin, Connolly & Co., which warranted him in making that offer. He knew what he was about. It suited them all round that it should be done, and it was done. I have shown that after Boyd's figures were made up they still knew that Peters & Moore's tender was lower than Larkin, Connolly & Co. Then I turn to the other proof of the case, which the hon. member for Simcoe used, and I will show, from the evidence of the engineers, not only that Boyd did bring them out lower, but he could not have done anything else, because that evidence shows, most distinctly, by all the tests that were able to apply to it, that Larkin, Connolly & Co.'s tender was $25,000 or $35,000 or more higher than that of Peters & Moore. They had to guide them the original plans which were before the tenderers when this contract was made, and which show the work to be done and the probable approximate quantities. The engineers of the Committee in this building had these original plans to work upon. The report of the Committee throws some doubt upon that. Now, I will have to trouble the House for a few minutes to show how clear and distinct the evidence is on that point, that these plans which the engineers had were the correct plans that Boyd used. We will take the evidence of Mr. Nicholas Connolly on that subject. He was the successful tenderer; he carried on the work and knew about the plans. At page 475 he gave the following evidence:—

Q. At the time of tendering for the cross-wall, had you any plans to refer to, or had you seen any plans?—A. Yes; I think these were the plans, although there were no plans signed for the cross-wall. That is my recollection.

Remember, there were no plans signed. Then he was asked:

Q. You think these were the plans you saw when you were tendering?—A. That is my recollection of it. Mr. Boswell could say.

Then we called Mr. Boswell, and he said, page 1252:

"These are the only plans I ever saw until we prepared in the office working plans."

Then we called Mr. Perley himself, who was the chief engineer at that time, and who was responsible for the plans prepared by Mr. Boyd under his direction. He said:

"I believe these to be the original plans prepared by Mr. Boyd because I often discussed points with Mr. Boyd relative to them."

Further than that, we have the evidence of Mr. Simon Peters, another tenderer at that time, who identifies these as the plans which he saw at the time of tendering. The only evidence brought to try and throw doubt upon these plans is that of Mr. Coste, who is the present engineer of the Public Works Department, and who entered the department as a junior at this time, and he says his reason for thinking these are not the plans is because they are not signed; but he could not find any others, although he made full search in the office, and he said the originals must have been tracings from these plans. Now, his reason for thinking they were not the plans is because they were not signed, but Mr. Nicholas Connolly said:

"I think these were the plans, although there were no plans signed for the cross-wall."

So that, while Mr. Coste gives as his only reason for doubting these plans that they were not signed, Mr. Connolly said there were none signed for the cross-wall at all. Therefore, they undoubtedly are the plans. These being the plans, the engineers used them and applied the quantities therein to the prices, and they found that they brought out Peters & Moore's tender $17,000 lower than Larkin, Connolly & Co.'s. The return made to the Minister was that Peters & Moore's tender was $8,000 higher than Larkin, Connolly & Co.'s, showing a difference of $25,859, showing to what extent the tenders were figured up and down by the engineers. There was another test. The Committee took the test of some original estimates to which the hon. member for Simcoe referred to to-night in Boyd's own handwriting, found in a book of his regarding those original estimates, and they found that the difference was still greater. They found that the tender of Peters, Moore & Wright, instead of being $8,000 above that of Larkin, Connolly & Co., was $28,000 below it, making a difference of $36,900 caused by the figuring up and down necessary to produce this fraudulent result. But, perhaps, the best test of all as to quantities is what work was done on that cross-wall. It has all been done and paid for. We know what Larkin, Connolly & Co. were paid according to the prices of their tender. They were paid for that work $832,000, and the engineers employed by the Committee show that the same work, under Peters & Moore's tender, would have only cost $762,000. There was, therefore, a clear loss to the country, by this transaction, of $69,860. To that extent, there was a wilful misapplication by the department of the money of the country. It may be said that perhaps the Minister was not to blame for this. But the letters are here of Peters, Moore & Co. to the Minister and to his deputy, Mr. Baillairgé, before this matter was closed, and according to these letters, in the opinion of Peters, Moore & Co., from what they knew of the other prices, their tender should have been found to be the lowest. If the Minister had cast his eyes over the quantities and the way they were applied and had searched into the matter as he should have done, whether he got that notice or not, but much more so having received a direct notice to do so, he would have found it himself. But that was only a part of the trick. I will not go into the other portion of the scheme, the swindle which was necessary in order to get rid of Beaucage without the payment of the $5,000. That emanated from the department itself. On the 17th May, letters were sent calling attention to errors in the tenders of the three tenderers for this firm, and Mr. Perley says in his letter that he writes by the direction of the Minister, and he has sworn that he showed this to the Minister, and sent these letters by the direction or with the knowledge of the Minister. I will not go into that, but that was the most flagrantly scandalous part of the transaction. That has been already discussed, and the Minister was responsible for that. He agreed to its being done and directed it to be done. He allowed them to shift and change, and allowed the country to be defrauded in that way. Then, in this very cross-wall contract, the Minister himself releases Gallagher, one of Larkin & Co.'s tenders, the lowest tenderer, lets him go, though his money had been put up, though, by the report which was put under the Minister's nose, his tender was $80,000 less than the tender which was accepted, of Larkin, Connolly & Co. If that contract had been carried out under Gallagher's tender, which should have been accepted, instead of under the tender of Larkin and Connolly, there would have been, as was proved before the Committee, a saving to the country of $133,000—lost, absolutely given away, allowed to be stolen by the action, with his eyes open, of the Minister of Public Works in an important function of his department. We have evidence also that Gallagher was not too low a tenderer. We have sworn evidence that Larkin & Connolly had made up their minds that they could do the work on that tender, and would have made profit under it, and poor Mr. Periey, when he was examined, said Gallagher's tender was too low for the work to be done under it, but he could not give any reason for his statement except that he supposed Boyd told him so. He absolutely could not give the Committee any reason why that was considered too low, and he had made no investigation to see whether that tender was too low or not. As a matter of fact, it was not too low, and I say the Minister was directly responsible in this cross-wall matter in another very important respect. We have heard about the dredging contract which was let at 35 cents, to include the putting of the material on the embankment. That dredging was done just outside the cross-wall. This firm were paid 45 cents for filling in the cross-wall. They put a large portion of that dredging material for three years into that cross-wall, for which they were paid 35 cents, which was more than the fair price, and they were paid besides by the Harbour Commissioners and the Public Works 45 cents a yard additional for that, making a direct fraudulent payment to them of $22,412. To say that Sir Hector Langevin did not know of that, to say that he could avoid knowing it unless he shut his eyes absolutely and wilfully, is absurd. Then it has been said to-night that we should give Sir Hector Langevin the benefit of the doubt. I am sure that the report of the minority does give him the benefit of the doubt in many ways. I think it gives him the benefit of the doubt when it gives him the entire benefit of his oath in regard to that personal payment to him of $10,000 sworn to by Murphy. I am not going into details, and I am not going to show that in almost every essential particular Murphy has been corroborated by documents and witnesses, or that in many essential particulars Sir Hector Langevin has been contradicted by documents and witnesses on oath; although he waited until the last moment before he gave his testimony and knew what had been proved and what had been denied, while that poor man Murphy was called early in the investigation and was hackled and cross-examined by the most acute legal talent in the country, and willingly gave up his papers which he had not read, and yet his testimony was corroborated in the most extraordinary manner. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), in his proposed amendment, imputes perjury to Nicholas Connolly and Michael Connolly, but he does not mention the name of Mr. Murphy, who has sworn against Sir Hector Langevin in this matter, as being shown to be guilty of perjury. So I think we have given Sir Hector Langevin the benefit of the doubt, and I think the evidence shows, and public opinion now is, and this House ought to decide, that he did know of the conspiracy and that he did willingly lend himself to its objects. I think that even on this cross-wall contract, which is by no means the strongest of the cases, we are bound, I am sorry to say, to find the Minister guilty of a great deal more than merely shutting his eyes, as the report of the minority would say, and being blindfolded and misled by his dear friend, Mr. McGreevy.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I have no intention of entering upon the general subject of the present discussion as regards the evidence which has been given on one side or the other. I simply rise in reply to the hon. gentleman who has spoken last (Mr. Edgar), to call the attention of the House to this fact, not an important one, perhaps, as regards this discussion, but an important one as regards the political position of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. The hon. gentleman severely attacked the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) because, as he says, he made a malicious attack upon the Opposition. I think it is to be regretted that any question of that kind or any idea of that kind should have been brought into this discussion: but let the blame rest upon the right shoulders. The hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition was the first to-night to introduce any matter of that kind, and, if the leader of the Opposition had not commenced his speech by an attack upon the late Sir John A. Macdonald, I venture to say that the member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) would not have made the assertions he did: but, if the leader of the Opposition thinks he can pose as the embodiment of political purity, as the embodiment of everything which is refined and dignified in political life, and under the colour of that can make attacks upon gentlemen upon this side of the House, and can assume for himself and his friends the virtue which their past history does not show them to possess, he must take the responsibility of his own action. And it is simply with regard to that point that I wish to say a word with reference to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. Let there be fair-play on this question, as we all desire there should be; but when an hon. gentleman, for the sake of making an effective appeal to this House and to his followers, commences by an attack which is altogether unjustifiable, which is uncalled for, by the circumstances, then I say he cannot complain if a fair and reasonable retaliation is made. There is only one other matter which I wish to refer to in regard to this question. I think that the votes which are to be given upon this question ought to be given not from any party point of view, but from a deliberate conviction that we ought to entertain upon the evidence that has been laid before us. I repudiate altogether the idea that this is a party question, I think it is one which ought not to be, and I trust will not be, regarded by this House as affecting the political position of the parties in this House. I do not think that anything that has been said to-day in the course of this debate at all involves the conclusion that any votes which may be given upon this question should in the slightest degree affect the position of the Government or of the Opposition. Sir, it would be a monstrous thing if it could be contended in this House that we on this side, or the hon. gentlemen opposite, upon the mere question of the validity of evidence, upon the mere question of what credence is to be given to the statements of one man or another man, are to surrender our common sense, to surrender our intelligence, to the bidding of any gentleman who may be supposed to be the leader of our party. I, for one, entirely refuse to be placed in such a position. I say this is not a question of policy, it is not a question which, in the slightest degree, affects the position of the Government, it is not one which in the slightest degree affects the position of hon. gentlemen on the other side. It is simply a question of the degree of credence that we are to give to certain evidence which has been laid before us, and upon that alone are we to determine the votes which we are to give upon this question. Sir, I altogether repudiate the idea that on this matter I am to surrender my intelligence, the best reason that I can bring to bear upon a question of this kind, at the bidding of any party leader; therefore, I repeat that I repudiate the idea that the decision of this question is, or ought, to affect the position of either the hon. gentlemen sitting on the Treasury benches, or of those hon. gentlemen opposite. In voting for the motion which I intend to support to-night, I intend to vote for it upon three distinct grounds. In the first place, I shall vote for the resolution of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) because it distinctly and clearly lays down, in terms which I think are not contained in either the report of the minority or of the majority, who are the parties to the conspiracy which all admit to have existed with reference to these contracts. It distinctly lays down, in the first place, that there was a conspiracy, that the parties to that conspiracy were the members of the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co., that Mr. Thomas McGreevy was the second party to this conspiracy, and that some officials unnamed—because it is not in our power to say who really were the officials of the Public Work Department—were the third party to this conspiracy; and all these three combined to form that conspiracy, the result of which has been the unfortunate events which I trust we all most sincerely deplore. In the second place, I support the resolution of the hon. member for North Simcoe because I think it places before this House and before the country in more just terms than either the report of the majority or the report of the minority, the responsibility which the late Minister of Public Work bears in reference to the transactions to which that report relates. I think also that it is more fair to the chief engineer of that department, for I think it would be most unfair if a majority of this House, on either one side or the other, were to come forward and say that the late Minister of Public Works was to be absolved and free to throw the blame upon his chief engineer. I think that would be as unjust as to say that the Minister is to be condemned and that his chief engineer is to be exonerated. The third reason why I support this resolution is that it lays down the doctrine which neither of the other reports lay down, and which I think has not yet been alluded to so far in the discussion, and that is that no Minister of the Crown, I care not how eminent he may be, how great his abilities may be in any direction, either as an administrator or as a debater—that no Minister of the Crown can evade, or should be allowed to evade, the responsibility which attaches to him as the head of that department, by throwing the blame of any misconduct that may arise upon any of his subordinates. Of course, that doctrine must be taken with very considerable limitations. We must clearly understand that a gentleman who is at the head of any department where great technical knowledge is required in order to carry out its details must, to a great extent, depend upon the opinions of his subordinates. At the same time it would be a fatal blow at our system of responsible government, it would strike at the very roots of our system of administration, it would really prevent anything like a certainty of honest administration, if a Minister was to be allowed to shield himself from the misdeeds of his subordinates, from the consequences of such things as we have seen happening under the the administration of the Public Works Department, by saying that he has acted upon the advice of his chief engineer. Sir, in the disclosures which are laid bare before us by the evidence given before that Committee, we have abundant evidence of the truth of that contention. If we are to accept that as a sufficient excuse for the hon. gentleman who was at the head of that department, the principle of ministerial responsibility would be entirely thrown away: and if you admit that principle, what becomes of our whole system of constitutional government? A Minister must be responsible for the department over which he presides, and if he allows improper payments to be made, if he allows his subordinates to take commissions, or to carry on the affairs of that department for their own personal benefit or advantage, he must accept responsibility for the acts of those over whom he presides, although I admit that his responsibility must be limited in some degree according to the special circumstances of the case. But he must be responsible, and if he undertakes the high position of head of a department, he must also undertake the responsibility which attaches to that position, and he must not endeavour to screen himself from that responsibility by pleading either ignorance of the transactions which have been going on, or pleading incapacity to understand the various subjects which he has undertaken to control. Sir, that principle must be adopted in all the departments, and it must be made to extend to all. It does not matter what department may be concerned; if an hon. gentleman undertakes the responsibility of taking charge of the Public Works Department, while, within certain limitations, he must be guided in purely technical matters by the advice of his chief engineer, or those who are properly qualified to judge of the technical subjects which come under his control, he must undertake, at the same time, the responsibility, and the public have a right to look to him, and the public will look to him, for a correct administration, and the public will not exonerate the Minister at the head of that department for any wrong-doing, simply because he comes forward and says that upon this question or upon that question, involving the expenditure of large sums of money, he was guided by the technical knowledge of his subordinates. When it comes to the administration of a great spending department, the Minister will not be allowed to absolve himself in public opinion, at any rate, by saying that he did not know what his subordinates were doing. It is his business to know what his subordinates are doing, that is what he is there for, and if he fails in that duty, if he fails to keep a close check upon them, then he fails in his duty as head of the department, and this House and the country will hold him, I trust, responsible, and he must not escape either upon the plea of ignorance or incapacity. Now, Sir, I do not desire to go any further into this question for the reason I have stated. I shall give my vote for the resolution of the hon. member for North Simcoe on the three grounds that I have stated. Upon the ground that it is a more fair expression of the relative position of the parties, upon the ground that it places more fairly before the country the relative position of the Minister and his subordinates, upon the ground that it does more justice to each, leaving the country and the House to understand that, as regards these questions, the Minister must accept the responsibility, and also because in one clause of the amendment it lays down distinctly the doctrine, which this House must ever bear in mind, that a Minister must always be responsible. On these grounds, I prefer the amendment of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to the report of the Committee. I desire to repeat that the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition has no right to complain of the remarks made by the hon. member for North Simcoe, for he brought them upon himself by uncalled for remarks, altogether foreign to the subject of the debate, to the late leader of the Government.

Mr. McNEILL. I had not intended to make any remark in regard to this matter, but I think it is due to myself that I should express, very shortly indeed, the reasons for the vote I feel called upon to give in reference to the amendment moved by the hon. member for North Simcoe. I would just say, in the first place, that I hope we have seen the last of such references as we are now discussing. If a matter of this kind is to be investigated again, a matter of so grave a nature, a matter of such enormous importance to the country and this House, I sincerely hope it will be left to the decision of a tribunal in which the people of this country will have confidence. The hon. member for Bothwell laughs. I think the people have not that confidence it would be desirable they should have in the decision of a committee and of a tribunal which is composed of polical partisans, in their eyes at least. I do not care how much or how carefully members of that committee may endeavour to discharge their minds of any political bias, the people will consider their minds have been affected by political bias, and no matter how just, how fair or how honourable the conclusion to which the committee arrives, the people will view that conclusion with a certain amount of doubt, and without that degree of reliance with which it is most desirable in the public interest they should view the decision of such an important question as this. I think, notwithstanding the laugh and sneer of the hon. member for Bothwell, it does not commend itself to the good sense of the people that this important question, a question of which it is hardly possible to exaggerate the importance at the present time, should be decided by a partisan committee, who are sent to consider the evidence, to decide what evidence they will admit or reject, who are to decide on that evidence which they choose to select for themselves; and they having heard the evidence, they having had a living presentation of the case before them are to come down here and make a report; and this House, the members of which have not heard the evidence (except those members who belong to the Committee), who have not had an opportunity of hearing one word or seeing any witness under examination, and being able to judge by his demeanour whether he was a credible witness or not—this other partisan body who have not heard the evidence is to pronounce judgment on the partisan body who have heard the evidence. The hon. member for Bothwell may think that a logical arrangement or proposition, and one likely to be approved by the people, but I do not think it commends itself to popular approval. Under such circumstances it is most important we should have some other tribunal to decide questions of this kind, altogether free from any suspicion of party bias. The hon. member for Bothwell may think that is not advisable; I think it is. I would add in regard to the vote I intend to give on this question that I have made up my mind to support the report of the majority of that Committee, of those who heard the evidence—a Committee containing among its members many for whom I entertain the highest respect and regard. I have here a book of 1,500 pages of printed matter, and I do not feel capable of pronouncing a reliable opinion on the evidence, at all events an opinion which I would think fit to be placed in opposition to the decision arrived at by the majority of those who heard the evidence and had an opportunity at any moment a witness was before them to ask questions to remove doubts that might exist in the minds of the Committee at any time. I wish to make this remark: I was one of three members who a short time ago took a course which was considered to be a somewhat extreme course in reference to another matter of an analogous nature to that we are discussing. I was one of three members of this side of the House who felt it to be my duty to take the somewhat strong course of voting against the motion of the Government, of the motion of the Minister of Justice, I believe, when it was moved that there should be an adjournment of the debate on the motion of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in reference to the Rykert case. I did so because I thought it essential to make sure that the matter should be probed to the bottom. I did so because I thought it was essential in the best interests of the country that if there were corruption on the part of any member of this House, that corruption should be exposed, and that member punished. If I thought this report which has been brought in by the majority of the Committee, by the Committee in fact, was what it has been described, a "whitewashing" report, I would just as surely vote against that report now, be the consequences what they may, as I voted against that resolution of the Minister of Justice on that occasion. But when I come to consider the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) in a speech which I think will be admitted by

hon. gentlemen on both sides to have been one of the clearest expositions of the case it would be possible to imagine, when I come to lay it beside the conclusions of the report, I confess that, so far as my humble judgment goes, I cannot find there is sufficient difference, so far as this main question of guilt or innocence of the late Minister of Public Works is concerned, to warrant me in voting against the report of the Committee. What does the amendment of the hon. member from Simcoe say? The amendment of my hon. friend for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) says that so far as the guilt of the Minister is concerned—I am speaking now as to the conspiracy, and as to whether the Minister was a party to that conspiracy or not, the amendment of my hon. friend says that he is in unable to decide—

"Whether the conduct of the Minister is to be described as a blind confidence which can scarcely be distinguished from criminal negligence or of a guilty connivance in the spoliation of the public treasury which ought to be characterized with very different language."

That is to say, he does not find that the Minister is innocent and he does not find that he is guilty of that charge of conspiracy. What does the report of the majority say? It says:

"Your Committee, therefore, report that the evidence does not justify them in concluding that the Minister knew of the conspiracy before mentioned or that he willingly lent himself to its objects."

The report distinctly refuses to say that he is innocent of having been a party to that conspiracy, just as my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) refuses to say that he is innocent of being a party to that conspiracy. The report on the other hand says that there is no evidence to convict him of having been guilty of entering into that conspiracy, and my hon. friend says that there is no proof to convict him of being guilty of having entered into that conspiracy. So far as the substance of the two conclusions are concerned, in my humble judgment, I do not see that the one proceeds a single iota beyond the other. This report of the majority has been spoken of as a "whitewashing" report. What does it amount to? It amounts to this, Mr. Speaker: That the gentlemen who framed this report have reported that they believe, as my hon. friend (Mr. McCarthy) believes, that there is not evidence to convict the Minister of Public Works of having been a party to this conspiracy. How would any common criminal standing before any court of justice under the English law leave that court under these circumstances? He would leave that court with a verdict of innocent when the evidence did not prove him to be guilty. Does this so-called "whitewashing" report give him the benefit of that verdict which the lowest criminal in the land could command in any court of justice in this country under such circumstances? No, Sir. This so-called "whitewashing" report does nothing of the kind. This so-called "whitewashing" report does not say that he is innocent. This so-called "whitewashing" report does not extend to him that verdict which the lowest criminal in the land would have been entitled to command had he been standing before the bar of justice under our English law. This so-called "whitewashing" report only amounts to the Scotch verdict of "not proven." As I have said before, and I need hardly repeat it, if any criminal, no matter who he may be, were standing before the bar of his country, any British subject before any British court, under our English law, and it were declared that there was no evidence to convict him as it is declared here, there would be a verdict of "not guilty." But there is no such verdict recorded here, and yet hon. gentlemen opposite profess to say that this is a "whitewashing" report. If hon. gentlemen opposite only tried to divest themselves for a moment of their party prejudices, I venture to say that they would themselves see that a more unfair, and a more unfounded, and a more uncandid statement can scarcely be imagined. The amendment of my hon. friend goes on further to say that because of the responsibility which naturally attaches to a Minister—and which I do not think that any hon. member of this House will for one moment doubt attaches and must necessarily attach to a Minister—that by reason of that the administration of the department has been such that it deserves the censure of this House. I entirely agree with that, and I entirely agree with the other portion of the report so far as the Minister of Public Works is concerned, but I say that this is contained in the report of the majority, and I say that the difference in this particular between my hon. friend's amendment and this report is, that the report of the majority says not only that he should be censured, but it does censure him.

Mr. MULOCK. Will you read it?

Mr. McNEILL. I am just about to do so, but my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) is always a little previous when I am speaking, because he never allows me to get to my point. I suppose I may be a long time getting at it. What the majority report says on that question is this:

"The administration of the department is greatly to be regretted."

I want to know whether a resolution of this House to the effect that the administration of the department of the Minister of Public Works, or the Minister of Finance, or any other Minister, had been conducted in such a way as "to be greatly regretted," would not be a vote of censure passed by this House? My hon. friend seems to be doubtful as to whether it would or would not, but I have no doubt, and I do not think the members of this House doubt that it would be a vote of censure. I say, according to my lights at all events, that when this House passes this report of the majority that it has pronounced a vote of censure upon the administration of that department which my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) says we ought to do. I may be mistaken, but according to my lights, so far as I can see, although the phraseology is different and although the phraseology of my hon. friend may be more pointed, still I believe that the conclusions arrived at in the report and the amendment are the same. Some people talk of a report of this kind as if it were to be discussed and read as a spicy newspaper article, but it should be remembered that we have to discuss this as a state document, and we have to consider the phraseology of it from that point of view, and not as a newspaper article. I contend, so far as I can see, that this report condemns the administration of the department, declares that "it is greatly to be regretted," and further says, that it is unable to pronounce that the hon. Minister has not been guilty of the other charges levelled against him.

I do not see any reason why for the sake of the phraseology of my hon. friend's report, I should adopt it, rather than the report which has been drafted by the majority of the Committee. Now, there is another matter in connection with my hon. friend's amendment which so far as I am concerned, I have a great deal of sympathy with, and that is, that portion of it in which he refers to the chief engineer, Mr. Perley. While I should be only too glad to be able to believe that Mr. Perley, for whom I have always entertained the very highest respect, was innocent of these charges, I must say that I would not be prepared to go so far as to differ with the conclusion of those who have heard the evidence which has been offered on that subject, and have heard Mr. Perley himself under examination. Not having heard the evidence myself, and knowing that my hon. friend from Simcoe has not heard that evidence, I do not feel that I would be doing my duty, so far as that matter is concerned, if, through sympathy for Mr. Perley, I disagreed with those who closely followed the enquiry and minutely weighed the evidence. I know my hon. friend has not allowed mere sympathy to interfere with his judgment in this matter. I am sure he does sympathize with Mr. Perley, as I believe everyone in this House does, but I am sure he has come to his conclusion from reading the evidence. For my part I do not feel justified in coming to a conclusion contrary to the conclusion of the whole Committee, I believe, both the majority and the minority, without having heard the evidence myself. The hon. gentleman has had more experience than I have had in sifting evidence, and his opinion is different from mine. All I say is that however great a relief it would be to my mind to vote conscientiously for that clause of this amendment, I do not feel that I would be justified in doing so.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not propose to discuss this question. I wish simply to refer to one observation that fell from the last speaker. He does not characterize the report of the majority as a "whitewashing" report, and he relies on its concluding observations as justfying him in that conclusion. If you turn to the report you will find that its concluding observations are as follows:--

"Your Committee have the following general observations to make on the charges generally:

"Having regard to various features which appear in the contracts which were the subject of this investigation, we feel bound to report that the members of the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co. conspired to defraud the Government and the Harbour Commissioners, and were materially aided in their designs by the interference of Thomas McGreevy, as has been shown in earlier parts of this report. This conspiracy has been all the more powerful and effective by reason of the confidence which the late Minister of Public Works had in the integrity and efficiency of his officers and by reason of the confidence which the late Minister entertained with regard to Thomas McGreevy, and has accomplished results which are to be greatly regretted as regards the administration of the department, and greatly to be condemned as regards those who lent themselves knowingly to the purposes of the conspirators."

Here it is stated as the proper conclusion to draw from the evidence that all these frauds were due to the confidence of the Minister in his officers. If that is not entirely exonerating the Minister from blame, I fail to understand what would be a "whitewashing" report. Let the hon. gentleman understand perfectly what he is about. He is engaged in the "whitewashing" business just as he was the other night in a somewhat similar case.

Mr. McNEILL.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. I will not refer to a painful subject, which the hon. gentleman would like to have forgotten.

Mr. McNEILL. I believe the hon. gentleman himself has been "whitewashing" a good deal in connection with the Quebec business.

Mr. MULOCK. I did not.

Mr. McNEILL. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. MULOCK. My hon. friend has no right to say that. I am prepared to condemn wrong: I do not care from what quarter it may come. When I am called upon to decide one question, I shall decide that regardless of any other which is not in issue; and I am now considering one of the questions which has engaged the attention of Canada, and more than Canada, for a long time, and has deservedly occupied the attention of this House for several months. The loss of public money is a trifle compared with the loss of public honour. The hon. gentleman says that he is perfectly content to say that the whole of these consequences arose from the abiding confidence of the Minister in his officers. Then, for fear that that paragraph might implicate the Minister of Public Works, the Committee go on to apologize to him for any possible misconstruction of what they have said, by adding these words:

"The charges against Sir Hector Langevin, as already intimated, having been as above set forth, the Committee would observe that in course of the investigation an effort was made to connect him with the wrong-doing of others who have been reported against as directly connected with fraudulent conduct."

There the Committee distinctly apologize to the Minister for the conduct of my hon. friend for Montmorency and the Committee and the general public, for having in some suggested unjustifiable way sought to connect him, with these transactions, although he was directly connected with them by the charges made on the floor of Parliament. The majority of the Committee pretend that the Minister was taken by surprise at the closing moments of the enquiry, and was not fully aware of the seriousness of the accusations made against him. Therefore they go on to say:

Let the hon. gentleman take no comfort in the opinion which he has expressed that this is not a "whitewashing" report. It has been analyzed by more than a party tribunal: it has been analyzed by the great jury of the country. The people, the masters of us all, have formed an opinion upon it: and the independent press--and I am thankful to know that there is growing an increasing independent press in Canada--has pronounced this document to be a "whitewashing" report. Let no hon. gentleman misunderstand the position he is assuming by voting in favour of this report.

Mr. McNEILL. Will the hon. gentleman allow me for a moment? I wish to say that whether the independent press or the public of this country express themselves in one way or another way, I shall endeavour to discharge what I believe to be my duty, according to the dictates of my conscience and my judgment.

Mr. MULOCK. I have not the slightest doubt that the hon. gentleman will endeavour to bring a conscientious judgment to bear upon the consideration of this question. I am not questioning his conscience; I know him well, and I would not for one moment question the goodness of his intentions; but I must question the accuracy of his judgment. I cite the opinion of the independent press as proof that he has misconstrued the tenor of this report; and before it is too late let him, and those who propose to vote with him, know full well that while here, surrounded by colleagues, perhaps coerced and dragooned into line by various influences, they may be induced to believe that it is not a "whitewashing" report, I venture to say that when they have left these halls and returned to more peaceful walks—when they come to an atmosphere which is not alive with party feeling, then their better judgment will assert itself, and they will find, when it is too late, that in adopting this report they have condoned high crimes against the country, and will have to suffer the consequences. Therefore, I say there are no two courses open. Hon. gentlemen who support this report condone all that has been charged by the hon. member for Montmorency and all that the evidence has established.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation). Mr. Speaker, we have reached the last phase of the great political trial which has been in progress for more than three months. This phase is the most important of all, for the verdict which we are now to render will enter the history of the country. Between the two reports upon which we are called on to decide, there is a great divergence of opinion. I have heard the entire debate which has taken place; I have followed the whole investigation with as much attention as I could give it. Some of my friends on this side of the House have expressed the opinion that the majority report was a thorough whitewashing. I cannot share this opinion. In weighing the conclusions of that report, I find that they resolve themselves into this: There has been a conspiracy. In this conspiracy are involved, first, the members of the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co.; and secondly, Thomas McGreevy. And this conspiracy has been enabled to do its work because the hon. Minister of Public Works too fully rested confidence, first, in his officials, and, secondly, in his friend of the last twenty years; in the man who for the ten years past has lived of his life, parliamentary and private. This judgment pronounced on one of the most important public men of the country, is, in my estimation, sufficient to cause him to step down from the lofty position he has occupied until to-day. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is not to be lost sight of that the third paragraph of the general conclusions goes still further. The hon. Minister is, by this paragraph, declared guilty of having lent himself to this conspiracy. But, if it is true that the word "willingly" is to be found in it, which means that he must bear the responsibility of this conspiracy, it must also be said that the paragraph is worded so as to soften its effect. I am ready to say just here, that, in my humble opinion, this report of the majority is less in accordance with the facts and the evidence than the minority report. There has been conspiracy. This is absolutely an undeniable fact. And this conspiracy did not bear upon a single isolated case. If it bore upon an isolated fact, its importance would be much less. It bears upon ten years of the official life of a man who has rightly been called here, the second officer in command of the forces of a great political party. I repeat it here, Mr. Speaker, the verdict given by the majority in its report is sufficient to condemn him to private life; but I add—because I have a duty to fulfil, and because I believe that I can conscientiously fulfil it by expressing the opinion I now utter—I do not believe that the conclusions of that report are sufficient, for we are not speaking merely for ourselves at this moment. The future will judge the important act that we are accomplishing now. Is it just for me, the accuser, after having expressed the opinion which I have expressed to vote between these two reports? If I have to vote, I say it without fear, I would vote for the verdict rendered by the minority. My judgment may have been prejudiced by circumstances surrounding the case. I have known important facts outside of the evidence. My mind has been full of this case for a year already. If under such circumstances, I were called as a juror in a case, would I not feel myself bound to excuse myself? I may be mistaken. I have desired to give this explanation here, and I give it to show that I do not fear to take the responsibility of the verdict rendered by the minority of my colleagues. Now, Mr. Speaker, may I say to my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, that I have only recently known the crimes which I came to denounce here? He told us this afternoon that the Conservative party profited to a great extent by these crimes. I solemnly declare in my name and in the name of my Conservative friends with whom I have been, that I only knew of these crimes when I made them known to the country. Mr. Speaker, the Conservative party has greatly suffered from that state of things,—our national dignity in the Province of Quebec has suffered still more. It is painful for us, the French minority here, to have to admit that the official chief of our race here has been unwillingly and in spite of himself I hope the head of this immense conspiracy. It is a calamity —but if we are willing to stand resolved, like men; if we are willing not too readily to despair of the country; if we are willing not too readily to despair of the forces at our disposal, there is still safety. I resume my seat after making this declaration. I believe that my motives will be understood by those of my colleagues who hear me. I have not depended wholly upon myself to reach this decision. I have consulted high parliamentary authorities outside of this House; men free from all party spirit. I also consulted precedents, although they be rare. And I came to this determination not because I wanted to shirk the responsibility of the report presented by the minority —I believe it is more just than the one that is going to be adopted—but because, I say it again, I would fear that if I should vote, my mind would not perhaps be altogether free from previous prejudice in its verdict.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 25th September, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE MILITIA ACT.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 174) to amend chapter 41 of the Revised Statutes, respecting the Militia and Defence of Canada. He said: I may say in explanation, that this Bill makes provision that when the militia is called out to aid the civil power in suppression of a riot, the civil authorities shall make a deposit of money to meet the expenses of the militia for eight days, and every eight days the militia is kept out the deposit must be renewed. It provides also that if the militia is so called out in an unorganized territory, the Lieutenant Governor shall make the deposit. It also provides that in certain cases the Governor in Council may authorize the calling out of the active militia without a deposit. If other important amendments are made it will be explained when the Bill is in committee. I may add that it is not the intention to press the Bill this session, but I thought I would introduce it to serve as a notice, and have the Bill printed, so that hon. members may look into it before next session.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, with a view of facilitating the despatch of the remaining business of the House, I beg to move :

That when the House adjourns this day, it do stand adjourned until to-morrow (Saturday) at 3 o'clock, p.m., at which sitting Government measures shall have precedence.

I presume, Mr. Speaker, that it would not be expected that so soon we should be able to announce the day for actual prorogation, but I have reason to believe, in fact an intimation has been conveyed to me by the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition, that every disposition will be shown to aid in the despatch of business, and that being the case, it is expected that early next week we may look for prorogation.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I may say that on this side of the House we consider that we have exhausted the fight for the present session, and that we ought to have an era of peace, though it may not be long, I hope, and the shorter it be the more agreeable it will be to all of us. Of course there are certain important matters yet to be disposed of on the Order paper that have to be discussed. However, we will do everything on our side of the House to facilitate the business so as to have as speedy as possible the blessing of a prorogation, if I may call it so.

Motion agreed to.

CHARGES AGAINST THE HONOURABLE THE POSTMASTER GENERAL.

Mr. HAGGART. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to present a matter before the House. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that a few days ago when I gave an answer to certain charges prepared by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), that I promised to present, as soon as I saw Mr. McLaren of Perth, a statutory declaration confirmatory of the remarks which I made then. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I shall read the declaration of Mr. McLaren to the House. It is as follows :—

"COUNTY OF CARLETON, } To Wit: }

"In the matter of the charge made by James Frederick Lister, Esquire, the member representing the district of West Lambton, from his place in the House of Commons, in connection with the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, of a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Port Arthur and Rat Portage, known as section B.

"I, Peter McLaren, of the town of Perth, in the County of Lanark, Esquire, do solemnly declare :

"That I have read the statement, which appears in the Official Debates of the House of Commons, made by the Honourable John G. Haggart in reply, which said statement is as follows :—

"'Mr. Speaker, in reply to the motion of the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), in which he stated that while I was a member of Parliament representing the South Riding of Lanark, I became beneficially interested in the profits of the contract which was made with the Government in 1879 between Alex. Manning, Alex. Shields, Jno. Jas. Macdonald, Alex. McDonell, Jas. J. Isbester and Peter McLaren, and that the share thereof standing in the name of Peter McLaren I was beneficially interested in, and that I have otherwise derived direct and substantial pecuniary benefits therefrom, let me, in the first place, give the most explicit and full denial to that statement. Perhaps I had better make now an explanation in regard to the whole matter. In the year 1880 the same charge was made. I took the first opportunity of denying it. A Royal Commission was appointed by the Government to enquire into all matters relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I came down here and upon my oath before the said Commission I gave this evidence :

"'Q. Have you had any personal interest in any of the transactions of the Canadian Pacific Railway ?—A. I never had, or in any other contract with the Government, directly or indirectly.'

Further on in the same enquiry, I was asked about the same questions in regard to Mr. John Ryan. To these I said :

"'I was not aware but what he was going on to complete his work when I was up there, and the first intimation I had of the contract being cancelled was seeing it in the public press. I wish also to state as emphatically as I can, because there have been insinuations in some of the newspapers, especially in a newspaper published in my own county, that I was connected in some way or other with these matters, that I am in no way connected, and have no interest in any contract or sub contract; that I never received a cent from any contractor or any person for any service in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other matter as a member of Parliament.'

"'Afterwards in Winnipeg there was a suit conducted there between Lockwood and McLaren. I was examined on oath before that court, when I stated I had not directly or indirectly any interest in connection with Mr. McLaren in section B. Mr. McLaren was examined in the same suit and gave the same denial. Now, it may be necessary to make a statement in reference to my connection with section B. The contract for section B was let in the first place to two tenderers, Fraser, Pitblado & Co., and another firm, connected with the same firm, consisting of Alex. Manning, Alex. McDonell, Jno. Jas. Macdonald, James Shields and Jas. Isbester. After they had received the contract from the Government, from some quarrel or some disagreement between themselves, Fraser and Pitblado could not get along with the other parties, and there was an arrangement entered into by which they left the work to the rest of the partners connected with the contract. In order to strengthen themselves, or in order to carry on their engagements, Mr. McLaren was requested to become a partner and to assist in the purchase of the other partners' interests. At the solicitation of Mr. McLaren, I arranged the partnership between him and the other parties for the purpose of carrying on section B business, and at his solicitation and at his request I overlooked the carrying on of the contract and the final settlement. At the time of the final settlement between the parties in Toronto, at the request of Mr. McLaren and at his solicitation, I went there for the purpose of arranging the pecuniary difficulties between them ; but, let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. members of this House, that I received no large sums of money from Mr. McLaren for doing this business. The only sums of money which I received during the five or six years which I was looking after that affair were my travelling expenses and bare hotel allowance. I may tell you I was interested with Mr. McLaren in other business, that I was his partner in another transaction, and that I had a good many pecuniary relations with him, but I was always very careful that in all the transactions connected with section B I should have no communication with the Government or any member thereof in reference to the contract, and that I should receive no sums of money in any shape of the profit arising from that contract. The only sums of money that I received from Mr. McLaren was, as I have stated before, barely the travelling expenses to and from attending to his business, and perhaps small sums of money which I got as my hotel fares. I do not know what sums of money are entered in Mr. McLaren's books as against me, because I have not since the charge has been made an opportunity of looking at those books, but for the six years that I attended to that business I do not think that the sum of money charged against me amounts to over $1,500, and that was barely the amount that paid my travelling expenses. Yesterday I heard that Mr. McLaren was going to Virginia, but when the hon. gentleman made the statement in the House I had him telegraphed not to go on any account. I hear he is in Perth to-day and that he will be down this evening in Ottawa, and I will take the first opportunity of getting a statutory declaration from him, and reading it to the House, in which declaration I am sure he will confirm every word I have said. As to the rest of the hon. gentleman's declaration that I was the medium—I had better read it in his own words:

"'That during the progress of the said works, and while the said the Honourable John G. Haggart was so interested therein, members of the said firm were called upon by members of the Government of Canada for large contributions for political purposes, and such contributions were paid out of the moneys of the said firm, and with the knowledge and assent of the said Honourable John G. Haggart were charged against the profits of the firm.'

"'If it is so, I have no knowledge whatever of that statement. I can state here that not to my knowledge did the contractors of section B contribute any sum of money towards any political purpose or to the Government, and I certainly was no medium of communication between the Government and them in reference to it. As that constitutes the whole charge, I think, Mr. Speaker, I have given as emphatic and positive a denial as I possibly could on this motion."

"And I declare the same to be true in every respect.

"That the statement made in the said charge, and which reads as follows:—

"'That the said Honourable John G. Haggart became and was beneficially interested in the profits of the said contract which accrued to the share thereof standing in the name of the said Peter McLaren and has received large sums out of the said profits, and has otherwise derived direct and substantial pecuniary benefits therefrom,'

"Was and is absolutely untrue and without the shadow of any foundation in fact.

"And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and in pursuance of the Act respecting extra-judicial oaths.

"PETER McLAREN.

"Declared before me at the City of Ottawa, in the County of Carleton, this twenty-fourth September, 1891.

"W. T. CODE, a Commissioner, &c."

Mr. LAURIER. I would just remark to the House in reference to the declaration presented by the hon. gentleman, that, in my judgment at all events, it would have been better, after the resolution of the House the other day, that that statement had not been made. If the matters referred to the other day were investigated, the hon. gentleman himself would admit that this would not be the way of doing it, but the best way would have been to refer the charges to a committee. I wish to make these remarks on this matter.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY ARBITRATION.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to enquire of the Government whether they have received any intimation from the arbitrators employed, how soon the award will be given in the matter of the dispute between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway touching the claims made by the latter in reference to the Pacific coast section?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The information I have from our counsel before the arbitrators is that the award may be expected at a very early date.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would just say this to the Government: that I assume—I would like, however, to have a statement from the Government—that in the event of that award involving the payment of a large sum of money, that it will be dealt with in what I conceive to be the proper way, namely, by a vote of this House, and not by means of a Governor General's warrant, as appears to have been done in some similar cases. I would like an expression from the Minister of Justice on this.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think it would be desirable that that course should be pursued, and unless there is some reason that I am not aware of now, it will be pursued.

SUBSIDIES IN LAND TO RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved second reading of Bill (No. 173) to authorize the granting of subsidies in land to certain railway companies.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not intend to go in this matter at any length. I rise simply to point out to the House some irregularities, to use a very mild expression, which I think the Government have been guilty of. The hon. Minister of the Interior has been good enough to place in my hands a number of papers in answer to an enquiry; and whilst I have not studied in great detail the earlier documents, which are rather historical than otherwise, I take up a letter dated the 18th January, 1891, and addressed to the Minister by Mr. Burgess, the Deputy Minister of the Interior, which I presume is a pretty fair epitome of the position of matters. I will trouble the House to listen to this letter, which I think on the face of it discloses a looseness in dealing with the public domain which should no longer continue. The letter is as follows:—

"OTTAWA, 18th January, 1891.

"MY DEAR MINISTER,—I beg to direct your attention again to my memorandum of the 23rd March, 1889, respecting the Manitoba South-Western Colonization Railway. This memorandum was used for the purposes of the sub-committee of Council appointed immediately after the last session of Parliament to enquire into the subject of railway lands generally, but my recollection is that it was prepared particularly with a view to obtain such confirmation by Parliament of the land grants earned by the company as might be found necessary.

"The extent to which confirmatory action was required may be briefly stated as follows:—

"The Act 48-49 Victoria, chapter 60, authorized the Governor in Council to grant to the company 6,400 acres per mile of the line from Winnipeg to its terminus at Whitewater Lake, about 150 miles, a total of about 960,000 acres. The company, however, have actually completed 212 miles, for which they would be entitled to a land grant of 1,356,800 acres.

"The Government by Order in Council have undertaken to find for the company 1,132,384 acres as a subsidy for the construction of 177 miles; and 35 miles of road, representing a land grant of 224,416 acres, have been constructed and in operation by the company for some years, in relation to which I am personally aware that the company was promised the usual land grant of 6,400 acres per mile. No provision of that kind has so far been made by Act of Parliament or Order in Council.

"It appears to me that what is necessary to be done now is to (1) authorize, by Order in Council, subject to confirmation by Parliament, a subsidy of 6,400 acres per mile for these 35 miles, and (2) to confirm this action by Act of Parliament, and also confirm the grant for 27 miles in excess of the 150 named in the statutes which was authorized by Order in Council.

"Yours faithfully,

(Signed) "A. M. BURGESS,

"Deputy Minister of the Interior."

Now, what does this letter show? It states, I assume correctly, that there has been no authority whatever for a land grant to the company for more than a distance of 150 miles, amounting to 960,000 acres; yet the Government have undertaken by Order in Council to find for the company, which means to give it, 1,132,384 acres. In the first place, then, the Governor in Council have undertaken to convey to this company over 150,000 acres, for which no statutory authority has been obtained from this House. Passing over that—because it may be replied that their undertaking is not good until ratified—it is now alleged by the Deputy Minister of the Interior that there should be a further grant made because the first grant which the Government undertook to make was for only 177 miles. Then, the question arises, what is to be done with reference to a subsidy for the remaining 35 miles, making up a total mileage of 212 miles, the distance in respect of which this claim is made? The Deputy Minister of the Interior declares, by way of argument, in order to move the Governor in Council to make a grant for the 35 miles, that he is personally aware that the company was promised the usual land grant of 6,400 acres per mile. Now, Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of this House to this: The Governor in Council is asked to make a land grant for these 35 miles, which have been constructed and in operation for years, and the reason for it is that, according to the recollection of a Deputy Minister, the company was promised it. Who promised it? By what authority was it promised? In this letter he states that there has been no parliamentary sanction for any grant in excess of the distance of 150 miles; and then he says: First, that the Government undertook to find land for 27 miles more than there was any pledge for, and then he says that the company was promised—I presume he means by the Government—as he is personally aware, the usual grant of 6,400 acres per mile for the remaining distance of 35 miles. Now, Sir, quite regardless of the fact that we are called upon now to make a present to a company for a road which has long since been constructed, I call the attention of the House to the extraordinary practice which appears to obtain in the Council, of passing Orders in Council pledging the Government to convey large areas of land to corporations without getting the sanction of Parliament for these pledges. Then, I call the attention of the Government and the House further to this fact, that promise was made, so far as we know not of record, but Parliament is now asked to make good some verbal promise, the only testimony in support of which is the recollection of an irresponsible officer—I mean when I say irresponsible a person who is not a representative of the people. For both these reasons, quite regardless of the fact that the road is now constructed, I venture to say that the action of the Administration, had it been brought to light at an earlier period, would have deservedly invited severe criticism at the hands of the people. In conclusion, I will say further that there is no warrant, so far as here can be seen, for their asking Parliament to make this grant of 6,400 per mile for the 35 miles. There has never been an Act of Parliament pledging the Government to it. There has never been an Order in Council, on the faith of which this company could take steps to spend a single farthing. There has never been, so far as we know, any guarantee given to that company that they would get this grant; and now we are asked to give away this vast area of the public domain to a completed road, in respect of which there is no possible obligation on the part of Parliament. Why are we asked to make this grant? Are we now free, as a matter of honour, to give or withhold it? The Minister of the Interior the other day made a mistake. When I was endeavouring to ascertain the true position of the company, I asked him if he would be good enough to explain whether we were now called on to make this grant, as a matter of obligation binding upon us or as a pure matter of grace. He told us the public was bound by a bargain. I do not know whether he draws a distinction between a bargain made by Order in Council and a bargain made by Parliament as a whole, but I can point out to him the difference. The Governor in Council can make no binding bargain to give away public lands. Parliament has not delegated such authority; and with regard to part of this transaction, the Government does not even pretend, on the face of this instrument, that there was a single Order in Council. True, after this letter of the 19th of January, I believe an Order in Council was passed, but that does not amount to anything, because it was after the enterprise was completed, and therefore it cannot be argued that the company had altered its position or expended a farthing, or that its conduct was in any way affected by that Order in Council. I protest, therefore, against such a loose system of administrating this trust. The subsequent action of the Administration in moving now to make this gift of 200,000 or 300,000 acres of land to a company, on the mere recollection of a Deputy Minister that some person—we know not whom—promised to this company that it should get this gift, is utterly indefensible. Who made this promise? When and why was it made? And why did it not see the light of day before January, 1891? It did not see the light of day even then, for I am not aware the transaction was ever made known until this Parliament met and an attempt was made to carry out this arrangement. The time has come when we should halt before we squander what land we have remaining; or if it has to be squandered, let the squandering be done by the people's representatives and not by the Government.

Mr. DEWDNEY. With reference to the remarks of the hon. gentleman concerning the statement I made that a bargain had been entered into between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway with reference to this land grant, he will recollect that I stated an Order in Council had been passed, giving to the Canadian Pacific Railway 6,400 acres per mile for 177 miles, and that we were now coming to Parliament for authority to give, not only the surplus of what had been given by statute, but the balance of the land grant to which the Canadian Pacific Railway is entitled. I think the hon. gentleman has been rather unfair in his criticism on the position of the Government and the company in this matter. In 1879, a charter was given for the construction of the Manitoba and South-Western from Winnipeg to Clearwater Lake and subsequently extended some hundred miles beyond that to the Souris coal-fields. If that charter had not expired, the Canadian Pacific Railway would have built that extension on that charter. However, as it had expired, other means were taken to continue the extension to the Souris coal-fields. In 1880, power was taken by the Manitoba and South-Western to build a branch from any point on their line between Whitewater Lake and Winnipeg. The Order in Council which appears in reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway, after the Canadian Pacific Railway had the charter transferred to them, was dated 24th March, 1885. At a future stage, negotiations were opened with reference to making a change in the land grant on the 150 miles. At that stage communication was received from the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the letters are fyled here which account for the change in the land grant, and authority was given in that Order in Council for a land grant, not only on the 150 miles, but also on a portion of the branch line they were authorized to build in 1880. At a subsequent stage, another Order in Council was passed, giving a land grant to a portion of the extension of the two lines—one on the Manitoba and South-Western proper and also on the branch line —which committed the Government to a land grant on that portion; and it left the remainder, 35 miles, for which no Order in Council was passed and no statutory authority given. That is the reason why we ask now for a Bill covering the whole length of the road, and I contend again that, not only by correspondence but also by interviews with the officers of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the president, its legal adviser, and its secretary, continuous negotiations were going on and there was a perfect understanding that the extension of that road from the main line would receive 6,400 acres per mile. At the time these extensions were being made the road was being built, there was the strongest pressure brought on the Government to have these lines built and to give assistance towards their construction, and great complaints were made that the centres in that part of the country were not receiving the railway communication which they understood would be given them. I do not know that I need say anything further in reference to this matter. I still contend that there is an obligation upon the Government to give that land grant, under the Orders in Council which have been passed and laid on the Table, and I admit that there may be a complaint that a Bill was not introduced at any earlier date. But no land has been transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and no land will be transferred to the Manitoba and South-Western, until we get the authority of Parliament.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This is a most extraordinary transaction, and I have heard nothing from the Minister yet as to the ground on which the Government would undertake to transfer a large portion of the public domain of this country to a railway corporation without the sanction and the authority of Parliament. We have a communication from the Deputy Minister to the Minister stating that there was an understanding of that sort. Between whom did that understanding exist? What right had the Administration to pledge any portion of the public lands of this country without coming to Parliament and informing Parliament of what it had done and asking the sanction of Parliament? Here is a railway that is completed, that has been in operation for some years, that had no assurance of any appropriation of this sort at the time it was constructed. It was open to the Government, if they saw proper, to make a general proposition in regard to such grants, but no such proposition exists as a portion of any Act of Parliament. It was open to the Government, if they had any understanding with any corporation, to come down to Parliament and ask the sanction of Parliament before the railway company undertook to construct the road. It has constructed the road in its own interests. It is incidentally serving the public because the company makes profit by giving that service, but it is a most monstrous proceeding, whether this road was in the public interest or not, whether it was built in consequence of the promise of this appropriation or not, for the Government to pledge any portion of the public domain of this country and allow the company to go on and act upon that pledge without immediately coming to Parliament as soon as Parliament was convoked and ascertaining whether it was the will of Parliament that these lands should be appropriated in that way. I find the amount of land contained in this appropriation is nearly 400,000 acres, and, if you take that at $2 an acre—and they are asking more than that in that section—you have nearly a million of dollars promised to a railway corporation by the Government without any authority of Parliament. The Minister of Finance might as well take a million dollars in money from the public treasury without the authority of Parliament, as the Minister of the Interior can take it from the public domain, because the result is exactly the same. That is what the hon. gentleman has done. Then this was done on the eve of the last election. If the hon. gentleman thought the railway corporation had any claim upon the Government, why did he not propose this two or three years ago? This railway has been in operation for several years. Why should those years have been allowed to go by before Parliament is asked to agree to the proposition which the hon. gentleman makes? The railway company took a neutral position in politics, but when an election is about to take place, and when the hon. gentlemen are going to the country to ask for a renewal of its confidence, then the hon. gentleman asks the railway corporation to strengthen its faith in the Administration, because the absence of that faith might cause the Government to lose the support which it desires. This was a most improper proceeding and a suspicious proceeding. It bears upon its face an understanding between the Government and the railway company apart from the public interest, it bears upon its face that this appropriation is not for the purpose of promoting the public interest or keeping faith on behalf of the public or the parties who had the right to pledge that faith; but it is evidently an understanding for the promotion of the interest of hon. gentlemen who sit on the Treasury benches, an understanding arrived at on the eve of the general election and years after the railway has been in operation. It is an understanding between the Government and the railway corporation. The very same motives which led the railway corporation to undertake to explain to the people of Canada the impropriety of adopting free trade with the neighbouring republic, the damage which the country would sustain from freer intercourse with it, the same motives which influenced the railway company to publish that manifesto, led to this understanding between the Administration and the railway corporation. I say this is a monstrous proceeding. If it was desirable to act in this way, the action should have been taken years ago, and, if the Government desired to act now, they should have waited until the elections were over, and, if the delay was the result of their negligence, they should have stated their negligence first here, and not on the eve of the elections pledged the country to the appropriation of 400,000 acres of land towards the increase of the capital of that powerful corporation.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported and read the third time and passed.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions on the subject of subsidies to be granted to the railway companies mentioned.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand there are no new resolutions.

Mr. BOWELL. There are no new subsidies. They are only revotes of subsidies, which have already been granted by the House, some of which have already lapsed, and others of which will lapse before next session of Parliament. Some of them have already lapsed, though a large portion of the work has been done.

Mr. BARRON. I suppose that is the reason that no subsidy has been given to the Lindsay, Bobcaygeon and Pontypool Railway.

Mr. BOWELL. No new subsidies are included in these resolutions, not even for a mile in a case in which the parties were entitled to it.

Mr. BARRON. I am anxious that this be understood, because the people in the County of Victoria were expecting a subsidy to the railway I have mentioned. I suppose the Government have not granted a subsidy to this railway, for the reason that no new subsidies are to be granted at all.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to ask the Government whether any considerable quantity of work has been done on those lines where a revote of subsidy is granted?

Mr. BOWELL. Every road to which it is proposed to revote a subsidy has had some work done upon it, on some of them to a large extent; on one or two of them $30,000 or $40,000 were due before the subsidy lapsed last May, just before the reports of the engineer had been received as to the quantity of work that had been done. There are none of the roads mentioned in these resolutions upon which surveys, locations and actual work have not been done, at least so I am informed by the engineers, and by the officials of the department to whom instructions were given to prepare these resolutions. I may say, in answer to the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron), that there are no new subsidies of any kind or character. The question of granting aid to future railways is still under the consideration of the Government. I may say to the House that the policy of the Government in this respect has not been changed, but in the future we shall be guided by the amount of money which we have at our disposal, and which will enable us to carry out improvements of this kind without increasing the capital indebtedness of the country.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. IVES. I would like to call the attention of the hon. the Minister of Railways to an enterprise of very great importance which is partially though not fully completed. It seems to me that the Government, in any further expenditure that they make in aid of railways, should rather give the preference to the completion of lines of railway for which aid has already been given, and which have been partially though not fully completed.

Mr. LAURIER. Louder.

Mr. IVES. I say that in future, whatever aid is given to railways should be given rather to the construction of branch lines and feeding lines, to the great lines of railway already constructed, and that particular attention should be paid to completing and making as effectual as possible and as useful as possible, lines of railway that have already been partially constructed and that have already had aid from the Government. Now, the line of railway that I am particularly referring to, is the extension——

Mr. MULOCK. I rise to a point of order. In Committee I think the hon. gentleman should confine his observations to the particular resolution before the Committee.

Mr. IVES. I am discussing the particular resolution. I say the particular resolutions are all right enough so far as they go, but they do not go far enough.

Mr. MULOCK. You are going too far.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My hon. friend in Committee cannot go on and discuss railways not mentioned in the resolutions. He might have done so before going into Committee.

To the Great Northern Railway Company, for a subsidy from a point at or near New Glasgow or St. Lin to or near to Montcalm, in the Province of Quebec, eighteen miles, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act forty-ninth Victoria, chapter ten, not exceeding in the whole $28,100.

Mr. BARRON. If that rule is going to be enforced it would prevent any reference to other roads. I do not think the Minister himself will object, so far as I am concerned, to a reference to a road.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot speak of any railway not mentioned in the resolutions.

Mr. LAURIER. Can the Minister give us any information as to the work that has been done on that line, and how far it extends now?

Mr. BOWELL. On the 19th August, 1887, a contract was entered into under the Subsidy Act, for the construction and equipment of this road, and the works were prosecuted from that time forward until the subsidy lapsed. The first 10-mile section is completed with the exception of about $2,500 worth of work. The amount paid is $29,500, leaving a balance to be revoted of $28,100. I may state for the information of the Committee, that these subsidies have in some cases been paid on the 10-mile sections, and when application has been made to assist them in the progress of the work we have deducted therefrom the proportion which is due them on the 10 miles in proportion to the amount of work that remains to be done. But in many cases where that has been done, a quantity of work which exceeds the sum which is reserved has been done upon the extension of the other sections of the road. Care is taken that in no case the full amount of the subsidy is paid unless more work is done upon the line than is called for by the resolution.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the actual line of railway? It is stated the railway is to proceed from a point at or near New Glasgow towards the village of Montcalm.

Mr. BOWELL. The 10 miles from New Glasgow towards Montcalm has been built, and the work that has been done in addition is in the same direction. The company did not select the line from St. Lin. My attention was called to this matter yesterday by some gentlemen interested in the line, who stated that either a company or some parties had it under consideration to divert the line more southward. Under the Subsidy Act I do not think any portion of this subsidy could be paid should they divert the line in the manner indicated, and I so informed the parties interested.

Mr. LAURIER. In that section of the country where the line has been built, is it now in operation?

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot say.

Mr. McMULLEN. How long has elapsed since the charter was granted?

Mr. BOWELL. The first subsidy was granted by 49 Victoria, chapter 10. On 19th August, 1887, a contract was entered into with the Government for the construction of the road.

To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for the railway bridge over the St. Charles River to give access to the City of Quebec, the difference between the amount already paid to the company and the limit fixed by the Act fifty-third Victoria, chapter two, a subsidy not exceeding $5,250.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is not this a complete change in the former proposition?

Mr. BOWELL. No. A difficulty in paying the subsidy for the construction of the bridge has arisen from the wording of the original Subsidy Act. It provided that there should be a sum paid not exceeding 15 per cent. on the construction of the bridge, not exceeding in the whole $30,000. The question now is whether the payment should be based on the 15 per cent., or whether the whole subsidy of $30,000 should be paid. Great doubt has arisen in the minds of those whose business it is to interpret the law in this respect. I may further say that a question has arisen as to the actual cost of the construction of the road, from the fact that while the department was inclined to deny the right of the company to charge for the bed of the St. Charles River, as an item in the cost of the construction of the bridge, the contractors contended that they had to pay for the right to place the abutments, &c., in the bed of the river. In order to avoid any complication or any lawsuit with respect to this matter, it was thought better to carry out the real intention of Parliament when the first subsidy was voted and make this grant of $5,250 per mile, which would not exceed $30,000, the amount originally voted by Parliament to aid in the construction of this work, which was to enable the Lake St. John Railway to cross the St. Charles River and enter the City of Quebec, having its terminus at the harbour in that city.

To the Oshawa Railway Company, for seven miles of their railway from Port Oshawa towards Raglan, in lieu of the subsidy for a like amount granted by the Act passed in the session held in the fiftieth and fifty-first years of Her Majesty's reign, chapter twenty-four, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $22,400.

Mr. McMULLEN. What work has been performed on this road? Has the contract been let, and is the work being proceeded with?

Mr. BOWELL. The Government entered into a contract with the company for the construction and equipment of this road on 12th July, 1889, the same to be completed before 1st August, 1891. That has not been carried out. So far the company have made no progress with the work of construction, but they state they have made a final location and are now in a position to proceed with the work. All the right of way has been purchased. The subsidy lapsed on 20th June last.

Mr. MULOCK. Is the road seven miles in length?

Mr. BOWELL. I understand it is longer, but that is all for which the subsidy is asked.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think there should be a distinct understanding respecting the renewal of subsidies that have expired, and that if nothing has been done during several years the subsidy should not be renewed. There should be a distinct understanding when people secure charters that unless the work is proceeded with within the time allotted the charter should be forfeited, and if nothing is done for three years or more it is simply playing with the country's money to allow parties to hang up the enterprise from time to time.

Mr. SKINNER. That would not be a fair rule. In my experience there have been many lines that failed to make a commencement or carry on the work in the time stated, for the very best of reasons. To lay down such a rule as is suggested would be doing great injustice.

Mr. McMULLEN. I admit there is no rule that has not its exceptions, but the rule should be that when men do not make some effort to push forward the work, they should not be granted a renewal of the subsidy except under special circumstances.

To the St. Lawrence, Lower Laurentian and Saguenay Railway Company, for the section of their railway from Grand Piles, on the St. Maurice River, to its junction with the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act passed in the session held in the fiftieth and fifty-first years of Her Majesty's reign, chapter twenty-four, not exceeding in the whole $92,784.

Mr. McMULLEN. What work has been done in this case?

Mr. BOWELL. Work has progressed so far that the company has been already paid $124,816, leaving a balance of subsidy to be paid off, $92,000 odd.

To the Great Eastern Railway Company, for thirty miles of their railway from the River St. Francis to the Arthabaska Railway, at St. Grégoire station, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act passed in the session held in the fiftieth and fifty-first years of Her Majesty's reign, chapter twenty-four, not exceeding in the whole $79,700.

Mr. McMULLEN. What progress has been made in this work?

Mr. BOWELL. Under the contract of 15th March, 1888, the length of railway to be constructed was 21½ miles. It has progressed slowly, work having been done from St. Grégoire to Nicolet, a distance of about 6½ miles. And the Nicolet Bridge, under a special subsidy, has advanced so far as the foundation and masonry piers are concerned, they being completed upon the 6½ miles as above, the company have been paid $16,300, leaving a balance of $79,700, of which it appears to me only $52,500 can be earned, as the distance is twenty and one-half miles, and not thirty miles.

To the South Ontario Pacific Railway Company, for forty-nine and one-half miles of their railway from Woodstock to Hamilton, in the Province of Ontario, in lieu of the subsidy for a like amount granted by the Act fifty-second Victoria, chapter three, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $158,400.

Mr. McMULLEN. I may say, in connection with this line, that I was very glad last session to learn from the then First Minister that it was not the intention of the Government to subsidize lines in direct competition with other lines. However, I presume that such progress has been made in connection with this work that it is desirable that the faith of the country should be carried out in granting a bonus. I would like to know what progress has been made on this railway, and what are the hopes of final construction?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not prepared to dispute the general principle laid down by the hon. gentleman, but there are circumstances in which competing lines are absolutely necessary in the interest of the trade and development of the country. However, this being simply a revote, I will not discuss the general question with him now. I am informed that the progress of this work has only extended to the surveys and to a certain extent of securing the right of way; but I am assured by those who are interested in the work that they propose to go on and continue it, and it is in order to carry out the pledge of the country that the revote is asked.

To the Tobique Valley Railway Company, for fourteen miles of their railway from Perth Centre station towards Plaister Rock Island, in lieu of the subsidy for a like amount granted by the Act passed in the session held in the fiftieth and fifty-first years of Her Majesty's reign, chapter twenty-four, a subsidy not exceeding $6,400 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $89,600.

Mr. McMULLEN. Where is this road located?

Mr. BOWELL. It is in New Brunswick. The road is nearly built. There is now a sum of over $30,000 due, but before we could get the Orders in Council passed the subsidy lapsed.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the cost per mile?

Mr. SKINNER. The whole road is 28 miles, and it is contemplated that the first half will cost $15,000 per mile at the lowest estimate and the last 14 miles about $9,000 per mile.

Mr. McMULLEN. And you are getting $6,400 per mile.

Mr. SKINNER. The work is very difficult on the first 14 miles, the reason being that the Tobique River flows into the St. John River near the point where the road begins, and it flows through a rocky mouth, not as ordinarily with rivers in the interior where the confluence happens through alluvial land. The work is very expensive, and the lowest figure required to build it will be at least $15,000 per mile. I know the country thoroughly, and also the history of the road, although I am not interested in it.

Mr. McMULLEN. The lowest cost of constructing railways in Ontario is about $10,000 a mile, without rolling stock or anything else, and if there are reasonable difficulties in the way it will cost over $15,000 a mile. The roads we built in our province, costing this sum, only received $3,200 a mile, and it is rather extraordinary that an exception should be made in this case, and that $6,400 should be granted.

Mr. BOWELL. The original subsidy was $3,200 per mile, and when what was termed the doubling up took place, the question was fully discussed in the House and the reasons given on account of which it was increased. I may inform the hon. gentleman that in the case of the Gatineau road and the Temiscouata road, where there were similar difficulties in the way of construction, the same principle was followed.

Mr. SKINNER. I should say that the estimate of expenditure I gave is the very lowest and does not include any rolling stock.

Mr. MULOCK. What are the financial prospects of this company? Can the hon. gentleman state if the country through which it runs is well or sparsely settled?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I can, perhaps, give some information in regard to this railway. The subsidy was originally granted for the construction of 28 miles from Perth Centre station to what was known as the Plaister Rock Island, where there is an inexhaustible deposit of gypsum. A memorial was sent in favour of it from people in the Province of Quebec as well as people in the Province of New Brunswick. So that the road is not a purely local road, and it was on that ground that the subsidy was granted. It runs through an excellent agricultural country, though the great object is, of course, to develop these immense deposits of gypsum. The Legislature of New Brunswick has granted $70,000 to this railway. Fourteen miles have been put under contract, and the contract is about completed, so that nearly all the subsidy has been earned.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is this called the McAllister subsidy?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I never heard that name applied to it.

Mr. MULOCK. Who are the owners of this plaster deposit?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The New Brunswick Government are the principal owners, and that is the reason the local subsidy was granted. I believe some private persons have one or two lots.

Mr. MULOCK. Can the hon. gentleman give the names of the individuals who are interested in the railway?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I cannot tell exactly who are interested in the company. I know that the present contractor is a Mr. Kitchen, who is doing the work very satisfactorily, and Mr. Jones, of St. John, was once connected with the work.

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose there would be no objection to the contract for the construction of this railway being laid on the Table next session, if not this session?

Mr. BOWELL. No objection at all.

Mr. MULOCK. If I might venture to go outside of the particular contract in question, I think, in view of our experience, it would be well for Parliament to trace all money granted in this way from the treasury straight to its expenditure, so as to satisfy ourselves where it goes to. I would suggest that it be understood that Parliament be furnished with all this information, not drawn out by motions, but brought down as a matter of course.

Mr. IVES. I do not like to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I believe he is out of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is discussing a question of Government policy, and is out of order for the same reason that I called the hon. member for Sherbrooke to order.

Resolutions reported, and read the first time.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the resolutions be read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. IVES. Before that motion is adopted, I want to express my regret that the resolutions do not cover a wider field. I want to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to a very important line of railway which has not been completed, and which I think has a fair claim upon the Government for further assistance, that is, the extension of the Maine Central Railway from the County of Wolfe to deep water opposite the City of Quebec, passing through the Counties of Wolfe, Megantic, Lotbinière and Lévis. I may say that already 125 miles have been completed and are in successful and continuous operation, and the traffic results have been such as to fully justify the expenditure which has been made by the capitalists engaged in the matter, and also to justify the Government in giving the assistance of $3,200 per mile to that portion of the line which is in Canada. With regard to the remainder of the line, about 90 miles, a good deal of correspondence has taken place between the people of the Counties of Wolfe and Megantic and the late Minister of Railways, and they were given his assurance that when a charter was obtained and a survey made, which would establish the advisability of continuing the scheme, he would favourably entertain a recommendation to Parliament to grant a subsidy for the completion of the line. I think the people of those counties had a fair right to expect, now that the charter has been obtained and a thorough survey made, and the feasibility of the line established, that this session the Government would have introduced a resolution to subsidize the continuation of this line to the town of Lévis; and I must express my regret that in spite of all my hon. friend from Megantic (Mr. Fréchette) and myself could urge, the Government have not seen their way clear to make any exception in favour of this project from their general decision not to bring down any new subsidies this session. I can only hope that the just expectations of the people of those counties, who have long been without railway facilities, will be gratified at a not very remote date next session.

Mr. BARRON. I quite agree in the remarks of the hon. gentleman. They apply to a road in which a great many of the people of Victoria are interested. I would again ask the acting Minister of Railways if he would say whether the sole reason he has for not granting a subsidy this session is that the Government have decided not to ask for any new subsidies? The hon. gentleman knows that this matter has been approached irrespective of party feeling; he knows there is a unity of action among the people of Victoria in favour of this road, the Lindsay, Bobcaygeon and Orillia. A grant was made for the portion from Bobcaygeon to the town of Lindsay; and the late First Minister, when discussing the propriety of these subsidies, stated that when a subsidy was partially given and the proprietors of the road showed their intention of going on with it, the balance would be given as a matter of course. I bring this up now, in order that the Minister of Customs may have an opportunity of quieting the minds of the people of Victoria with regard to this matter, because if they were to come to the conclusion that all chance of a subsidy were gone, their feeling would be one of profound disappointment. But if the reason is simply that the Government are not granting new subsidies this year, I take it that will be quite sufficient explanation, and all parties will be satisfied, relying on a subsidy being granted next session.

Mr. FRÉCHETTE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few words to the remarks made by the hon. member for Sherbrooke, about the railway of which he spoke. This railway should have been built several years ago. In 1887, I came as one of a delegation to Ottawa, to ask for the grant of a subsidy for this railway, and on that occasion, Sir John A. Macdonald said to us: Begin at the beginning; secure a charter from the Quebec Legislature, and then we will give you the usual subsidy, I believe this promise should be fulfilled. We are very far from all railway accommodations, and I see no reason why the Government should not give a subsidy to this railway. I know that this year the Government have decided to grant no new subsidies for the building of railways, but I hope that they will continue their policy of subsidizing railways next year. This line is by nearly thirty miles the shortest between Boston and Quebec, and every one knows that passengers and shippers use the shortest lines by preference. Therefore, I hope that the Government will, next session, grant this railway company a subsidy equal to that already given, in order to help the completion of the road. In this way the Government will do justice, not only to the county which I have the honour to represent, but also to the Counties of Wolfe and Lotbinière, which are crossed by this railway, and the population of which is deprived of all railway communication. The people of these counties pay taxes as well as others, and it is only just that a grant of the public moneys should be used in their interest.

Resolutions read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. BOWELL moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 175) to authorize the payment of subsidies in aid of the construction of lines of railway therein mentioned. He said: I simply want to say, in reply to the hon. gentlemen who have just spoken, the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) and the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Fréchette), that the line to which they have drawn the attention of the House has not been lost sight of by the Government, or the fact that they have strongly urged upon the Government that a subsidy should be granted during this Parliament in aid of the road. But, as I have explained to the House, the Government, for what it believes to be good reasons, have decided not to ask this session for any new subsidies for any new roads. At the same time, I intimated to the House that the policy of the Government had not been changed with regard to the principle of aiding in the building of railways, so far as the revenue of the country will justify it, without adding to the capital indebtedness of the country. There are many deserving lines, and the one referred to by the hon. members for Richmond and Wolfe and Megantic is of that character, and its merits will not be lost sight of. I might make the same remarks in reference to the continuation of the line which has already been subsidized in the County of Victoria. That question has been very strongly brought to the attention of the Government upon more than one occasion by the representative of the south riding of the county, and by those who are deeply interested in the development of the lumber, of the mineral and the agricultural requirements of that section of the country. I hope, however, in future, when these questions are considered and when the Government feels itself in a position to grant aid to railways which will be in the interests of the country, in developing its various resources, my hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Barron) will not accuse us of having done it to purchase constituencies through which the roads run.

Mr. BARRON. I must ask the hon. gentleman to take back that statement. I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say he did. The difficulty with the hon. gentleman is that, although he is a barrister or an attorney, he does not appear to understand the English language, or it may be that it is owing to my inability to express myself properly. What I said was that I hoped he would not be found amongst those members of the party to which he belongs who accuse the Government of making these grants for purposes other than those we profess to desire, that is to grant aid to railways, so far as the revenue will permit, in order to develop the various resources of the country. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should be so hasty in this matter. Probably he feels that a guilty conscience needs no accuser, and probably he thought some one had attributed to him something of which he may be guilty, and therefore he felt the truth of the accusation. I have given to the House the reasons why we have confined the present resolutions to renewal of subsidies previously voted, and I have also stated that the policy of the Government, so far as it can, and when practicable and consistent with the revenue of the country, to subsidize railways, has not changed.

Mr. BARRON. I am sorry the hon. Minister is the first I have ever heard to take this railway question out of the category of fair-play. So far as I have known, these grants have been made irrespective of party. They have in regard to this, buried the political hatchet, and if the late Premier were alive, he could produce a letter from me to that effect. It was unfair of the Minister to say that he hoped I was not one of a party who would state that they were doing this for political objects. I think it was out of order when he said, in reference to me, that a guilty party needs no accuser. I made some such remark myself on one occasion, and I was promptly called to order by the late Speaker, but the Minister of Customs thinks it right to make a similar charge, and he is not considered out of order. So far as I am concerned, he is most unjust to me if he includes me in the class of people to whom he is referring, and he is the first that I know of in political life to give this a political complexion. Reformers and Conservatives alike have joined in trying to get this road built, and to get the subsidy, and in order to get the road completed they have sacrificed their political feelings; and I am sorry that the Minister of Customs, when I had approached the matter in such an unbiassed way, should be the first man to give it a political complexion.

Mr. FAIRBAIRN. I think the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) wants to run the whole business. We are perfectly satisfied, and my people are perfectly satisfied, and we have a perfect understanding with the Government that, if we do not get this grant this year, we will next year. My section is perfectly satisfied without requiring any interference by the member for North Victoria.

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose my hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Barron) takes an interest in the development of the whole county and the whole province and the whole of Canada. No pent-up Utica confines us in regard to matters of this kind. We are told that these resolutions are in reference to works for the general advantage of Canada, and it is only on that ground that the hon. member for South Victoria (Mr. Fairbairn) can be so much interested in this matter, and so much satisfied as he appears to be in getting some future aid for this railway, but the only ground on which the money can be taken out of the coffers of the country and transferred to this railway is that it is for the general advantage of Canada, and therefore we are entitled to enquire into this and every other grant of a similar nature. The hon. gentleman may talk of the people of that county as "my people," and of the section in which he lives as "my section," as he did, but I suppose he does not carry that constituency in his breeches pocket, and he has no right to assume the monopoly of that riding.

Mr. FAIRBAIRN. If there was anything to be done to the advantage of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) in regard to which I considered it my duty to assist him, I should consult him, and then I should think it my duty to assist him in carrying that measure through, but, when an hon. member brings this before the House in regard to a section which has a representative of its own here, I have a right to contradict him on the floor of the House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—MONTREAL PILOTS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DELISLE. Before the House goes into Committee of Supply, I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Marine to a certain article which was published in the Montreal Herald on the 12th September instant. It is signed "Montreal Pilots," performing the service between Montreal and Quebec. The article reads as follows :—

"We learn by Saturday's Star that the pilot of sailing ship Trobique was wholly to blame for the grounding of the said ship. Now, we think otherwise, the Harbour Commissioners being to blame through neglecting to place proper beacons on the shore and proper buoys to mark the channels. Opposite the new sugar refinery's wharf, exactly where the Trobique took the ground, the commissioners' chart shows 24 feet of water, while the ship was drawing less than 22 feet. Now, according to the Star, the Harbour Commissioners went as far as to say that they gave the pilots warning concerning the buoy at the entrance of the wharf. Perhaps the commissioners will kindly point at the whereabouts of this particular object, because there are many of us who have had neither instructions nor information that would help to safely navigate ships through the channel in question.

"Again, the commissioners advised the master of the Trobique not to pay the pilotage or to sign his papers, which we consider most unfair after piloting the ship safely through the most intricate parts of the river, and then at the end of the journey taking the ground simply through the neglect of the commissioners to properly buoy the channel. Not satisfied with that, the secretary of the commissioners, when the pilot went to make his report, asked him (the pilot) to hand in his branch, though the master of the Trobique had not yet made his report. We think it is high time that the shipping interest should take the matter up and question the commissioners' ability to cope with the matter. This is the opinion of the "MONTREAL PILOTS."

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the pilots unanimously complain that the charts furnished to them by the Harbour Commissioners are irregular and false, that they do not show, as they should, the dangerous spots in the St. Lawrence River. I have been told by some pilots that a great many complaints had previously been made to the Harbour Commissioners, and even to the Minister of Marine, on this subject. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that a difficulty arises from the facts mentioned in this article. The pilot Groleau had taken charge of that ship and had proceeded without any accident from Quebec to Montreal. When the ship arrived at the new wharf of the sugar refinery she took ground. Now, the maps that are furnished to the pilots show that there is 24 feet of water at this place, whereas the Trobique drew only 22 feet: nevertheless the ship took ground at that place. I think this is a very important fact, to which the attention of the Minister of Marine should be at once directed. The pilots are so severely treated by the Harbour Commissioners that they are entitled to some protection from the Government. Groleau, the pilot in this very case, was summoned to hand in his license, even before any report had been made by the captain of the ship. The Commissioners took their authority, I suppose, from the by-laws of the Harbour Commission, and based their autocratic order on the section 142 of those by-laws. This section 142 never existed before the 26th day of July, 1882. It is an amendment to section 85, which was itself taken from the by-laws, orders, rules and regulations of the Trinity House of Montreal. So that from the 8th March, 1860, up to the 26th July, 1882, the Harbour Commissioners had no right to deprive pilots of their license on account of any accident to vessels, but they could only make an enquiry of witnesses under oath into the truth of the charges brought against such pilots. I will read those sections, in order to show how unjust and unfair is the amendment added by section 142. Under the by-laws of the Trinity House, Montreal, it is the duty of any pilot who has met with an accident to repair to the office of the Harbour Commissioners and report himself, and the accident that had occurred. The rule reads as follows:—

"That whenever an accident shall occur to or be caused by any vessel whilst in charge of a pilot, for and above the harbour of Quebec, it shall be the duty of such pilot forthwith, after he shall cease to be in the actual charge of such vessel, to repair to the office of the Trinity House at Montreal, and there personally report himself and the accident that has occurred, to the Registrar of the said Trinity House of Montreal, and that in default of his so doing such pilot shall, for each and every neglect so to do, forfeit and pay a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds currency."

If the pilot neglected to report himself that way, he forfeited and paid a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds currency. That was the general rule from the 8th March, 1860, up to the 26th January, 1875. At that date the rule was somewhat altered and replaced by section 85, which reads as follows:—

"Whenever any accident shall occur to or be caused by any vessel whilst in the charge of a pilot within the pilotage district of Montreal, such pilot shall forthwith, after he shall cease to be in the actual charge of such vessel, repair to the office of the Harbour Commissioners at Montreal, and there personally report himself and the accident that has occurred, with all particulars thereof, to the secretary of the said commissioners."

This regulation takes the penalty off, but on the 26th July, 1882, for one reason or another, the Harbour Commissioners added the following amendment to section 85:

"Article 85 is hereby amended by adding thereto the following words, which shall hereafter be read and construed as part of the said article, namely:

"And if such accident shall consist of the grounding or stranding of any vessel in charge of such pilot, or the collision of such vessel with any other vessel, such pilot shall be ipso facto suspended from the exercise of his functions as such pilot until the cause of such accident shall have been investigated and the decision of the Harbour Commissioners pronounced thereon, and for such further time (if any) as shall be determined by them by such decision. And in such case also such pilot shall also deliver over his license as such pilot to the Harbour Commissioners, along with the report required by this article."

Now, Mr. Speaker, this last amendment I have just read seems to me to be of a very cruel character as concerns the pilots. The pilots on the St. Lawrence River are under great responsibilities: they are entrusted with ships and cargoes of great value, and why should they be always threatened with losing their licenses if they meet with accidents which they cannot, in the majority of cases, foresee or prevent? They are all perfectly qualified for their position; they are subject to a very severe examination. Take the case of a pilot who for 20 or 25 years has piloted ships between Quebec and Montreal. He knows the river thoroughly, but if he is so unfortunate as to meet with an accident he is at once declared incompetent and incapable, and by whom? By persons who do not know anything about the difficulties of the navigation of that river, and whose own negligence is often the cause of the accident. That is not fair; that is not just towards the pilots; and I want to draw the attention of the Minister of Marine to these facts, in order that he may endeavour to have justice rendered to all parties. I will ask the hon. gentleman to enquire into the negligence of which the Harbour Commissioners are accused, and I will ask him also to endeavour to have clause 142 of the by-laws and regulations of the Harbour Commissioners repealed. There should be some other means of securing safe navigation and protecting ships than to punish with undue severity pilots who are known for their ability and honesty. Let there be an enquiry immediately after the accident, and do not deprive them and their families of their earnings when an accident, perhaps unavoidable, occurs. I hope that the Minister of Marine will take these facts into consideration and that he will endeavour to have justice rendered to all who are concerned.

Mr. TUPPER. I will call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that the subject he has discussed is largely within the control of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, who by Act of Parliament are constituted the pilotage authority for that district. A procedure is to be followed in the event of a decision of these Commissioners, wherever an offence is alleged or charged. I submit that there should be some regular charge made, rather than that, in this off-hand way, Parliament should be called upon to discuss the conduct of that board of enquiry without having any papers or facts of the case before it. I am not familiar with the facts involved in this matter: the subject has not come before me in any shape or form. I will ascertain what the facts are, and whether we have any responsibility in connection with the subject. I may mention to the hon. gentleman that the communication he read appeared to be an anonymous communication, signed, not by any particular pilot, but in the name of the pilots generally. It seemed to be a complaint on the part of those who had been found negligent by the regularly constituted authorities. I may add, in connection with the harbour of Montreal, that the work of placing buoys and other aids to navigation is under the direction of the commissioners, and is immediately under the direction of a very able officer, whom the hon. gentleman no doubt very well knows. I may say, before looking into the facts, that I shall be very much surprised to find either that the buoys were not properly placed or that the Harbour Commissioners had not proceeded according to law. I will also look into the question of by-laws, to which the hon. gentleman has directed attention.

CHARGES AGAINST AN INDIAN AGENT.

Mr. FLINT. It will be remembered that on September 14th, a discussion took place between the hon. Minister and the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) in regard to certain charges made against an Indian agent in Nova Scotia. I am not familiar with the particulars of the dispute: but, at the request of the hon. member for Guysborough, I desire to read a declaration made under the statute in connection with that subject, for the information of the Minister. The declaration is as follows:—

"I, Donald Chisholm, of Afton, in the County of Antigonish and Province of Nova Scotia, farmer, do solemnly declare as follows:—

"(1) I am informed that two certificates of mine in reference to a pair of oxen sold by me to Wm. C. Chisholm, Indian agent, were read in the House of Commons recently."

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is out of order in bringing up a statement made by some person outside of the House respecting proceedings in the House.

Mr. LAURIER. It has been done before.

Mr. SPEAKER. It has been done before, but it was not in order.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is not what was done the other day.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It was done this afternoon. The Postmaster General read an affidavit here—a statutory declaration.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No. The hon. gentleman did not read a statutory declaration regarding proceedings that transpired in this House. He read a statutory declaration with respect to a railway contract. Even if it were so, that would not put the hon. member for Yarmouth in order. I submit whether it is quite fair to persons concerned to read a statutory declaration without any notice having been given.

Mr. LAURIER. This is exactly what occurred. This matter was brought up by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), who read a statement from a certain person. At a later day the Minister of the Interior read a statutory declaration from that same person, contradicting the first. The hon. member, I submit, is perfectly in order in the action he is now taking, and in referring to this matter for the third time. The first time was by the declaration of the hon. member for Guysborough, the second at a later date by the Minister of the Interior, and now by the hon. member for Yarmouth.

Mr. FLINT. I do not propose to make any remarks, but only to read the declaration.

Mr. SPEAKER. The point of order is that a communication from some person outside of the House is proposed to be read in the House respecting proceedings of the House.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I will be glad if the hon. gentleman will bring the matter up on the item in Supply, because I shall also have some remarks to offer.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule is this:

"Nor is it in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or other communications, whether printed or written, emanating from persons out of the House, and referring to and commenting on or denying anything said by a member, or expressing any opinion as to proceedings in the House."

Mr. LAURIER. I do not dispute your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I call attention to the fact that the point was not taken when the matter was brought up before. As the point was not taken before, the hon. member very properly thought he might be permitted to bring it up.

Mr. MILLS. The point which might take it out of the rule is that there was no reference to anything that transpired in the House. It was simply a declaration of what happened elsewhere.

Mr. SPEAKER. No. I waited until the declaration had reference to proceedings in the House before I raised the point.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I desire to take this opportunity of calling the attention of the Postmaster General, who I understand is in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Statistics, to the statement I made some time ago as to matters connected with that service. Has the hon. gentleman any memorandum from the department to offer?

Mr. HAGGART. Immediately on receiving the memorandum from the hon. gentleman, I submitted it to the Agricultural Department. The department's statement in regard to the matter was obtained on the following day, and I will be prepared to give it this evening.

WALDRON RANCHE AND SETTLERS.

Mr. FLINT. I have a matter to bring to the attention of the House, especially to the attention of the Minister of the Interior, and as the session is drawing to a close I think it is desirable to bring it up at the present time. My remarks will be necessarily very brief. I bring this matter to the attention of the Minister and the House at the request of persons who have placed papers in my possession with a view to make a statement to the Minister, and in this way bring the matter before the Govment, with a view to secure the redress of certain grievances. In the vicinity of Fort Macleod, in the North-West Territories, a certain ranche has been leased by the Government to the Waldron Ranche Company, of which Dr. McEachran is the manager. The recent history of this land is as follows:—Dr. McEachran has brought an action against certain persons holding possession of lands now included in the limits of the ranche company's lease. About 1883 there was a lease of this particular land, Lot 9, Township 9, Range 28, to John Hollis, on the old form of lease, which permitted of homstead settlement being made on those lands. There is, I understand, another form of lease for grazing lands which does not permit of homestead entry of settlement being made upon them. The lease in 1883 was in the old form. During the existence of this lease bonâ fide settlers entered upon this land and proceeded to make homes for themselves in that territory. I need not enlarge upon the advisability of every inducement being held out to bonâ fide settlers. That is conceded upon all hands in this House, and has seemed to be, as far as I can learn, one of the principles of settlement in the North-West. These settlers enter upon land and begin to make for themselves homes. Most of them came from the Province of Ontario, taking with them some capital and farming implements. After they had made a great many improvements, and fenced some lands, and built houses, and were in progress of placing themselves in a position to obtain patents for their lands, having made homstead entries in the land office at Lethbridge, the lease of the said Hollis was cancelled about 1888. These settlers then being upon the premises, the Walrond Ranche Company, or Dr. McEachran, were possessed of a grazing lease in another portion of the North-West at some distance from the lands in question, and an engagement was entered into between him and the proper authorities to exchange lands which he held for the lands in question, and this exchange was carried out. Dr. McEachran then enters upon these lands, and by virtue of whatever document he received from the Department of the Interior, brought actions of ejectment against these settlers. If I am correctly informed, the actions must have failed in a court of law had not the Government stepped in and cancelled the pre-emption entries held by these settlers, and we find in consequence of this that these persons are not only in danger of being dispossessed of their lands and of their improvements, but of being saddled with a very heavy bill of costs, which means to them absolute and total ruin. I am not placing the case of these unfortunate people upon strict legal grounds, but I am placing their claims upon equitable grounds, and upon statesman-like grounds, in connection with the settlement of the North-West. I think that the damage and injury that this transaction is likely to do, not only to the persons interested, which must be overwhelming, but to the general interest of settlers in that particular region, will be very great, unless the Government can be induced either to retrace its steps and cancel the present lease of Dr. McEachran, or, if it still insists in keeping the Walrond Ranche Company in possession, to place the settlers in as good a position as they would have been had they been left undisturbed in their holdings. In order to place before the House the manner in which the settlers look upon this matter, I will read the complaint that one of these settlers has made to the late Premier. It is as follows:—

"PORCUPINE HILLS, 3rd September, 1890.

"Sir JOHN MACDONALD, K.C.B., &c., &c.

"HONOURED SIR,—Being of your own age, acquainted somewhat with your acts in connection with the development of this country, having lived in the County of Wellington (9 miles from Guelph) since 1832. My father and mother and a large family, then emigrants, settled in the Township of Eramosa.

"The above and what follows is my excuse for troubling you, notwithstanding your multitudinous business. I mention no difficulties encountered, but we eventually succeeded in farming, continuing in that business almost until the time I left Guelph to come to this very section of country, even the lot I live on to-day, before the township was surveyed, being selected by one of my sons, who came here as a private in the first batch of the Police.

"I sent ahead a lot of agricultural implements, carpenter's tools and household goods in 'bond,' viâ the Missouri River.

"This took place in 1882. When we got to Fort Benton the goods had not arrived, and we remained in Montana until the following year, when we removed to this place, bringing our stuff with us.

"The then unsurveyed land we settled on was under application for a lease by Mr. John Hollis, who had no objection to our homesteading occupancy on our different selections. Three of my sons located lots close to mine in 1883, built a small house, and did a little ploughing that year, but afterwards considered it better to first make a comfortable home for their mother and I, as well getting means to start with themselves—always claiming those selected lots, which no person ever attempted to interfere with.

"Before leaving Ontario I obtained information through Doctor Orton from the Minister of the Interior (at that time your honourable self filled that office) stating the squatters' rights would be respected.

"Being satisfied that our claim was good, none of my sons ever being away from here, except that one of them went twice to Ontario for stock, and now to be disturbed by threats of eviction from the Walrond Ranche Company, although my sons have made entries in the Dominion land office at Lethbridge last year for homesteads and pre-emptions, and have this year put in twenty-five (25) acres of crop, built a good house and stable, and done a lot of fencing work, occupying the place continually.

"This company have served them with a writ of injunction to cease operations and not even cut hay on these lots.

"The sheriff at Macleod told one of my sons lately they would be evicted, and they must only sue the Government to recover.

"Honoured Sir,—What disorder and disaster would occur if this Dominion was prevented by some foreign power from its usual industrious course, I leave you to judge. Such has been the grievous deplorable case with me and my sons since the service of this writ of injunction. I wrote to the Minister of the Interior regarding this matter on the 30th of June. The receipt of the letter was acknowledged by the department, but have heard nothing official since. I did not want my family scattered while I lived. To me it is a grievance, unreasonable, for foreign capitalists who take the profits (if any) out of this country, to drive us from our home. They threaten us thus through their agents that they will appeal from court to court, and, if necessary, take it to England. People of small means cannot stand such law expenses. My family is not the only parties ordered off.

"Hitherto your name has been the anchor chain of all bonâ fide settlers, and now, honoured sir, I ask your forbearance and interference in this matter, that it may be speedily adjusted, especially as three of my sons have been married within the year.

"I have the honour to be,

"Your obedient servant,

"ROBERT DUNBAR."

Later, there is another letter to the Premier, dated April, 1891, about the time of the meeting of this House, and that letter I will read also:

"PORCUPINE HILLS,

"MACLEOD P. O., April 8, 1891.

"Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, K.C.B., &c., &c.

"SIR,—I have written you on the 3rd of September last regarding this very important business to me and my family (and if I would be allowed an opinion) to this whole country, and therefore to your honourable self as the principal guider of its destinies.

"I thank you for the promptness shown and the interest you took in promising to lay this case before the Minister of the Interior, then in England, as soon as he returned.

"The decision of that Minister in my sons' cases I hope is an unprecedented one in Canada. He cancelled their claims without any remuneration, when there was more than half the required work done to entitle them to their patents.

"The order of cancellation was on the 18th of December last, forcing them out of their comfortable homes in this treacherous winter, with this redeeming (?) feature, 'They could take a homestead and pre-emption on any land open for settlement,' which liberal offer was open until the 1st of April, 1891.

"Subsequently, however, they received a notice from the Government land office at Lethbridge to this effect: 'Lest there be any misunderstanding afterwards, that they must pay $2.50 per acre for the pre-emption lots.'

"I don't know what is meant by this extraordinary offer. My sons could not distinguish the favour.

"They are grieved and disgusted with such treatment, being Canadians, apart from being deprived of their rights by the Land Department of the Dominion. By next June it will be eight years since we came to this place, as I mentioned in my former letter to you, and have remained here since then till last year, when Dr. McEachran, manager of the Walrond Ranche, by bullying and threats, caused one of my boys to leave, and others will follow if no reparation is made."

This is the tone of the letter, in which this man expresses considerable anxiety and shows a good deal of feeling. Now, let us glance at the position taken in reference to this matter by other observers. As I am basing a claim almost completely upon the ground that a statesman-like course should be pursued in the matter, and the greatest consideration should be shown for the feelings and interests and rights of the settlers, I feel justified in reading to the House the view taken of this matter by the editor of the Macleod Gazette as late as 27th August, 1891:

"The Gazette has been hoping against hope that the time was happily past when it would again feel obliged, in the interests of the settlers of the country, and in the interests of every business man in the district, to find fault with the Walrond Ranche Company, and its general manager, Dr. McEachran."

Then, after some kind words with regard to the personal character of Dr. McEachran, the writer goes on to say:

"The Gazette means that, in its humble opinion, the action of the Walrond Ranche Company through its manager toward settlers is doing that company more injury than almost any number of settlers happily settled on their leases could do. To be sure, the Walrond Ranche Company and the vast majority of the people in Southern Alberta look at this matter from a different point of view, and the Gazette rather despairs of convincing the former of the absolute correctness of the above statement."

I will not read all of this, for it is very long, but it is all to the same effect. I will read a very cogent putting of the case from the same journal, on 27th August, 1891, headed "A Hard Case":

"A case of interference with settlers in their holdings on the part of the Walrond Ranche Company has recently come to our notice which we commend to the immediate and careful consideration of the Minister of the Interior. It may be found that, like the recalled order regarding grazing on public Dominion lands, understrappers in the department are entirely to blame for much of the annoyance and high-handed proceedings in this part of the country. But, however that may be, we distinctly hold that the time has come for interference on the part of the Government with the high-handed proceedings of the general manager of the Walrond Ranche Company. We say that the time has come for a thorough and searching enquiry into the relations existing between the Walrond Ranche and the settlers within its limits, with a view to rectifying the abuses which now exist. Reasonable men, who know to what lengths Dr. McEachran has gone, and is prepared to go, in order to keep settlers off the Walrond lease, must agree with us that matters cannot go on as they are without serious trouble resulting, and that any agitation of the whole leasing system which is thus brought about will be caused entirely by the ill-advised actions of Dr. McEachran. No doubt Dr. McEachran has the law on his side, and we must candidly admit that he is not altogether to blame in endeavouring to retain the rights which are his by lease. It will, however, strike most of us that the almost constant trouble which the Walrond Ranche is having with settlers is proof positive that the time has come, in the case of that ranche at least, when, to quote Sir John Macdonald's often repeated saying, 'the bulls must give way to settlers,' that the land is so valuable for settlement, and so much sought after, that the time has come for its agricultural development, and that that being the case, the plain provision of the lease, viz., that it can be cancelled on giving two years' notice, should be carried out."

I would like the House to bear in mind that these settlers have not entered on the land under the lease given to Dr. McEachran; but they were actually settled on the land, and were performing a portion of the labours necessary to obtain their patents, when, proceedings were brought against them to eject them, and they are deprived, not only of the rights which they were in process of acquiring, but of a large amount of valuable property which they had accumulated or brought with them into the country. The article goes on:

"It would take more space than we can spare in this issue to give an outline of the existing state of affairs on the Walrond Ranche, to name the numerous cases of those who have suffered, and of others who have had their houses pulled down by Dr. McEachran's orders. To-day we shall tell the story of James and Anthony Dixon, and appeal to the Minister of the Interior to protect them and other men who are threatened with ruination. James and Anthony Dixon occupy the S.W. ¼ of Section 31 and the N.W. ¼ of Section 30, in Township 9-2-29. They were recently served with a summons at the instance of the Walrond Ranche, the statement of claim demanding possession of their two quarter sections: an injunction restraining the defendant (Dixon), his servants, workmen and agents from cutting hay on the plaintiff's land; an injunction restraining the defendant, his servants, workmen and agents from fencing or enclosing in the plaintiff's lands, or from otherwise interfering with the plaintiff's quiet possession and enjoyment of the same. This injunction has been granted, and the Dixons are prevented from cutting hay or fencing on their own land. The result of this is two-fold. They are unable to put up hay for their stock; and a portion of their crop had to remain unfenced, obliging them to employ a herder to keep cattle and horses out of their grain."

Another article in the same paper of 13th August, 1891, refers to the case of another family:

"A representative of the Gazette last week had the pleasure of inspecting the really fine crops on the ranche of Mr. Robert Dunbar, of the Porcupine Hills. His crop of wheat, oats and barley is well headed out and gives promise of a magnificent yield. A large patch planted in Hungarian grass is looking well, and will be ready to cut in a few days. We saw some enormous potatoes raised on the place, which beat anything we have seen so far for quality and size."

It then describes the interesting features of the farm, and closes as follows:—

"Alberta cannot afford to lose this very industrious family, and it is to be hoped, for the country's good, that the Government will give these loyal Canadians their rights as citizens and settlers. * * The wives of Samuel and Harry Dunbar arrived from British Columbia last week. Their husbands are expected at the ranche the latter end of the present week. * * A log house belonging to Mr. Sam. Dunbar was torn down by the employés of the Walrond Ranche, some two weeks ago, acting under instructions from Dr. McEachran. There are thousands of acres of land in the Porcupine Hills that will never be settled upon, and over which these cattle may roam, and it seems to us very unjust for good settlers to be unable to fence in a home for themselves with so much land lying all ready for the plough of the settler."

Now, I will sum up the case as I understand it. A petition is on the fyles of the House stating the facts, signed by fifteen or twenty settlers of just the class required to build up that country. They have been on the ground since 1883, by permission of the person who then held the lease of these lands as grazing lands. They have applied for homesteads and pre-emption entries; they planted crops, built houses, made fences, and were prepared to develop the property in a very excellent way. The grazing lease granted to the Waldron Ranche Company now places these settlers completely at the mercy of that company. Actions at law are about being concluded by which they will be ejected, with a heavy bill of costs against them. Their appeal to the Minister of the Interior is, either to cancel the grazing lease to the company and allow it to select lands elsewhere for its purpose, or else, if that cannot be done, to institute steps to give those bona fide settlers other lands, and to indemnify them for the losses they have sustained. I believe that this course will be in the interests of those settlers, in the interest of the good-will of the people generally towards the country, and very greatly in the interest of the whole North-West, which is seriously affected by this method of doing business.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

McMULLEN. I desire to add a few words to the remarks made by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), with regard to the case submitted to this House connected with the Waldron Ranche Company of the North-West. I have carefully perused all the papers placed in my hand and read over the communications which have been addressed to the Minister of the Interior regarding the hardships to which settlers have been subjected in that particular district, and I took the opportunity of laying the facts before the Minister with the view of perhaps causing a settlement to be brought about between Dr. McEachran, the president and manager of the company, and the occupants of the lands, before bringing this matter up in the House. I feel sorry to think that some steps have not been taken to meet the express wishes of those people in that district, as set out in the petition presented to this House. I am not at all prepared to lay the whole blame on the Minister of the Interior. The evil perhaps existed prior to the date when he took charge of that department, but I do think prompt and decisive steps should have been taken long ago to remove the inconveniences to which those settlers have been subjected, and that they should have been allowed to occupy their lands in that as in any other section. I find that the Dunbars became settlers in that district in 1882. I am not going to quote the figures which have been submitted by the hon. member for Yarmouth, but will simply state the facts briefly as the appear in the documents in my hands relating to this unfortunate case. Mr. Dunbar settled there in 1882, and took up a homestead and was permitted to retain his homestead; his sons lived with him for some time in order to secure first for their father and family a comfortable home by erecting a house, and so on, and then in 1883 they took up sections for themselves. After they had been on those locations in peaceable possession of them, and after they had received notice from the department that they would be permitted to homestead and obtain pre-emption entry for that particular section, very unexpectedly and to their extreme surprise they got notice from the Waldron Ranche Company that they were not to continue occupying the land, nor even to cut the hay on their own place. After that the company took an action to prevent their making further cultivation or even cutting the hay. They then employed a lawyer, who presented their case to the Minister of the Interior, in a letter dated 19th December, 1890:

"SIR,—As advocate for Mr. S. V. Dunbar, of Macleod, in an action brought against him by Dr. McEachran and the Walrond Ranche Company (Limited), for the recovery of the west ½ of Section 23, Township 9, Range 28, W. 4, I beg to make the following statement: Mr. Dunbar took up the land as far back as 1883 with the consent of the then leaseholder, Mr. John Hollis. The Government map of the township made by Mr. Francis, D.L.S., in 1883, and approved by the Surveyor General in March, 1884, shows Mr. Dunbar to have commenced his improvements at that date. On 15th November, 1886 (more than two years before the granting of the McEachran lease) Mr. Dunbar was informed by letter from the agent of Dominion lands at Lethbridge that homestead and pre-emption entries would be accorded him for the above mentioned land. On the 31st July, 1889, homestead and pre-emption entries were granted to Mr. Dunbar from the office of Dominion lands at Lethbridge, for the land in question.

"On the 10th June, 1890, Mr. Dunbar was warned by the land agent at Lethbridge to make no further improvement on the land in question, as the entry therefor was granted inadvertently. At that time Mr. Dunbar had a considerable amount of land broken and in crop, and post holes dug, and posts, wire and rails on the ground, ready to put up about a mile of fencing. Since that time Mr. Dunbar had no word from the department, nor so far as he knows has anything further been done in the premises until the receipt by Mr. Dunbar of a letter dated 19th December, 1890, informing him that his entry had been cancelled and offering a half section of available Dominion lands in lieu of the original lands. I may say at once that Mr. Dunbar is quite willing to accept the offer made and will act accordingly, but I wish to point out that an action of ejectment is now pending in our courts, brought by McEachran and the Walrond Ranche Company against Mr. Dunbar. This action, so long as the entry of Mr. Dunbar was in force, was improperly brought.

"Dr. McEachran should have proceeded in the usual way to have the entry cancelled, either by proceedings before the Land Board or by action instituted in the name of the Attorney General of Canada. The entry is not claimed to have been made by fraud, but inadvertently, and indeed Mr. Dunbar has a good claim to the land in spite of the lease. The cancellation of the entry while an action is pending deprives Mr. Dunbar of a good defence to the action, and lays him open to a judgment against him with very heavy costs. I must presume that the department was not aware that such an action was going on, and also that the cancellation of this entry has been obtained to a large extent on the representation of Dr. McEachran, who is a plaintiff in the action. I would therefore ask that either the cancellation of the entry be suspended until the present litigation be concluded or that Dr. McEachran be compelled to withdraw his action and release Mr. Dunbar from all claims arising from it, on condition that Dunbar pays his own costs and accepts the offer of the department.

"I might add that an important motion comes on in the case on Monday, the 29th December, instant, and that in justice to Mr. Dunbar the entry should be allowed to stand until that date at least. I would respectfully call your attention to the necessity for immediate action in this matter, and ask that if possible a telegraphic reply be sent to me on the subject.

"I am, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) "F. G. W. HAULTAIN.

"The Honourable
"The Minister of the Interior,
"Ottawa, Ont."

Now, this letter was addressed to the Minister of the Interior at the time Dr. McEachran, on behalf of the Waldron Ranche Company, took action to eject those men from the land of which they had been in possession as squatters for a number of years, and for which they eventually got homestead entries in 1889. Those in the House who are acquainted with legal proceedings will easily understand that had the Government not come to the assistance of the Waldron Ranche Company by cancelling those entries it would have been impossible for that company to have succeeded in their action at law. But in order to assist Dr. McEachran and the company over which he presides in getting a decree against those men to evict them from the lands they had possessed virtually from 1883—for although, perhaps, they had not resided on them day and night, but had lived with their father in their immediate vicinity, they had made improvements on the land with the view of occupying it, had erected houses, put in a crop and took the necessary steps to secure its being closed in—the Government cancelled their entries. In the face of all that, it was cruel on the part of Government to cancel their entries, even supposing those entries had been inadvertently made. Admitting that the action of the Government was, perhaps, not, at the moment, taken with any evil intent, at the same time it was cruel to cancel those entries and cause those people to be subjected to the great cost of the action of ejectment brought by Dr. McEachran. The reason why they appealed to the Minister of the Interior was that they desired to prevent Dr. McEachran from getting a bill of costs against them. Their lawyer says that, if you allow their interest to stand and relieve them from the costs of the eviction, and allow them to become settlers on some other section, they would accept those terms, but nothing in that direction has been done. I have here a letter which I think will set at rest the question whether any steps were taken or not. In answer to that letter, the Minister of the Interior sent one dated the 9th January, 1891, as follows:—

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"SECRETARY'S BRANCH,
"OTTAWA, 9th January, 1891.

"SIR,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your two letters, addressed to the Minister of the Interior, of the 19th ultimo, with reference to the cases of William T. V. Dunbar and Samuel G. C. Dunbar, respectively, and to make, for your information, the following explanation about this matter:—

"The lands for which these parties were erroneously granted entries by the Dominion lands agent at Lethbridge were originally, in the year 1883, leased to Mr. John Hollis. On the 14th December, 1888, the Hollis lease was terminated, and on the 3rd January, 1889, a portion of the lands covered by that lease, including Township 9, in Range 28, west of the 4th Meridian, was granted to Dr. McEachran in exchange for a tract of 29,000 acres held by him near Fort Macleod, which he held under the old form of lease, and which he surrendered for settlement purposes. This transaction being in the form of an exchange, the lease of Township 9, in Range 28, given to Dr. McEachran was, of course, of the same nature as the lease of the surrendered territory, that is to say, on the old form. Apart altogether from the provisions of the lease, the agent of the department had specific orders not to grant any homestead entries for lands in this Township 9. Unfortunately, that officer overlooked those instructions and the provisions of the lease, and on the 31st July, 1889, granted to William and Samuel Dunbar the entries which it has been found necessary to disallow.

"The attention of the department having been called to the agent's action, the case was submitted to the Minister of Justice, who has decided that the granting of homestead entries for lands included in Dr. McEachran's lease was an appropriation of such lands quite inconsistent with that made by the lease, and that these entries are null and void so far as they purport to give to the entrants any interest in the land.

"In view of that decision, the department has notified Messrs. Dunbar that the entries in question have been cancelled, but they have each been offered a homestead entry for any available quarter section of Dominion lands on the conditions of actual settlement thereon and cultivation thereof prescribed by the Dominion Lands Act, and this offer will be held open until the end of March next. You are no doubt aware that the privilege of taking a pre-emption ceased a year ago, but the Minister wishes to treat the Dunbars as liberally as possible, and has therefore directed that they each be permitted to purchase a quarter section adjoining the homestead they may select on the same terms as applied to pre-emptions.

"The mistake made by the agent is of course regrettable, and has led to the removal of that officer to another post; but as for the Dunbars, I am afraid that you have been misinformed about their performance of settlement duties. They live with their father, Robert Dunbar, who was himself properly allowed to have the west half of section 15 in the same township, on account of his having settled there before survey and before the issue of the lease to Hollis, but William and Samuel Dunbar have not been bonâ fide settlers upon the land for which they obtaine dentry, and, moreover, were always cognizant of the fact that the lands were covered by a lease.

"I have the honour to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"JOHN R. HALL,
"Secretary."

I may say in regard to this that they were not aware that any lease had been granted to Dr. McEachran which interfered in any way with their homesteading. In the first place, it is unfair and it is taking advantage of these boys to say that, because they lived with their father for the first portion of the year, they could not be permitted to make entries and secure those lands. They were naturally anxious to secure a comfortable home for the old people first, and immediately afterwards they took up the other lands for themselves. The action of the Minister of the Interior has separated the head of the family from the sons, who have been driven to the necessity of going to a distant part of that country, or to Montana or some other part of the United States. They felt very indignant in regard to the treatment they received, and they went to the United States, and have remained there for a considerable time. The father is anxious to have them return and take up lands close to himself, but they have not been able up to this time to do that. Not only has Dr. McEachran prevented them from taking up land near the old people, but he has pulled down their houses and scattered them. He has done that in several cases, and it is a deplorable condition of things that we should be trying to get people to go into that country and should have such a lamentable state of affairs as has been shown by the member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint). I have here a petition signed by a number of people of that district. My hon. friend read extracts from the Macleod Gazette, which I think is a paper supporting the Government. That petition appealed pointedly and earnestly to the Government to cancel the lease to Dr. McEachran, which the Government have power to do. If these lands were not intended to be settled on, why were they divided up? Here is the petition which I had myself the honour of presenting to this House:

"That in the year A.D. 1883 a lease of Township nine, Range twenty-eight, west Initial Meridian in the said district of Alberta, was granted to one John Hollis along with certain other lands as cattle range. That, in the year 1888 the Hollis lease terminated, previous to which the said township was sub-divided and the same was thrown open to settlement."

Now, these are the express words of those who lived there. They know the fact, and are cognizant of all that took place.

"That in 1889 the said township was leased to Dr. McEachran with other lands in exchange for a tract of land held by him near Fort Macleod, and which he surrendered for settlement purposes. This transaction being in the nature of an exchange, the lease was granted in the old form, under which no rights of settlement were reserved. That in the meantime a number of settlers had settled upon the said lands, had performed settlement duties and had applied for homestead pre-emption entries of portions of the same. That actions of ejectment have been brought against several of these settlers, who have been ejected from the same, and that other settlers have been threatened with similar proceedings, whereby material and substantial injury has been done to individuals and the settlement of the country signally retarded. That the township in question is in many respects peculiarly fitted for settlers' homesteads. That it is the declared policy of the Government, on several occasions declared in Parliament, to prefer the settlement of the country by homesteaders to the claims of leaseholders for cattle ranging purposes.

"Your petitioners therefore pray that your honourable House will direct the Minister of the Interior to give the holder of the lease of the township in question the notice required by the terms of the said lease to abrogate the same at the expiry of the time required for such notice, to throw the same open for homestead entry to actual settlers.

"And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c., &c., &c.

"Dated at Alberta aforesaid, this 27th day of July, A. D. 1891."

This is signed by twenty-five names, I understand that the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Davis) has also presented a petition with a number of names, praying the Government in the same direction. Now, as I said before, a mistake may have been made in this case. The Government may have rented this land to Dr. McEachran without first learning the facts with regard to these settlers being in possession of it; but I hold that from the very moment they became aware that these men had gone in there and settled upon that land in good faith, having the assurance of the late First Minister, when he was Minister of the Interior, that squatters' rights would be acknowledged, and under the declared policy of the Minister of the Interior, that in every case the bulls must give away to the settlers who wanted to occupy the lands, I say, in face of all these declarations, it is seriously to be regretted that any settlers should be placed in such a position that they can be harassed and annoyed, instead of being allowed to go in there and make comfortable homes for themselves. I have in my possession letters concerning that section of the country, and I am glad to be able to say, and I state it on information that I can rely upon, that in that section of country this year they have reaped from 45 to 50 bushels of good wheat to the acre; they have reaped as much as 50 bushels of barley, and 50 to 60 bushels of oats. They have splendid crops, and some of these men say to me in their communications that they believe they are in the very centre of creation, that this is the best portion of the world they were ever in; that they have been in the old country, they have been in Ontario and in the United States, yet they never lived in any section that is more delightful, that yields better crops and is a more desirable country to live in, and in which to make comfortable homes. This is the testimony of men that are in possession of these lands, and in view of these facts I say it is in the highest degree in the interest of the people of that section, in the interest of the settlement and development of that country, that the lease should be at once cancelled, and that these people should be allowed to go in there and settle and make comfortable homes for themselves. I do not know what the rent is; it may be one cent, it may be two cents an acre. I fully endorse the sentiment expressed by the late First Minister, when he said that ranching should be a secondary consideration, and that the settlement of the country, and the privilege of the people to go in and make homes, should be the first and great consideration. Now, lest there may be any doubt in regard to the facts that these men had made homestead entries, I will read a letter, dated the 10th June, 1890, from Lethbridge, with regard to the north half of Section 14, Range 28, west 4th Meridian, for which they have obtained homestead and pre-emption entries:

"I beg to notify you to make no more improvements thereon until further advised, as the entries were given inadvertently."

Now, that is dated the 10th June, 1890, and those people were living in that district from July, 1882. They first became possessed of the land in 1883, and they have been allowed to live there undisturbed under the lease, with no interference. Dr. McEachran, when he became lessee, probably knew that these people were in possession. He was out there and saw the ranche, he knew it very well, and notwithstanding that fact, he secured from the Government a lease with the right to eject those people from their comfortable homes, after living there six or seven years. In all my experience, which is not very extensive, I admit, in all the hardships that I ever read of, and the ejectments that have taken place in unfortunate Ireland, where the landlords rule with a rod of iron, I have read no case of hardship that exceeds the one I have now presented to the House, and the case that was presented by the member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) this afternoon. If you allow these things to be published in the newspapers of Europe or Canada it is enough to deter people from going in to settle those lands, when they find that settlers, after being there eight years, struggling with the difficulties and privations they have had to suffer, are subjected to all these additional hardships. I know one man from the County of Wellington who went in there, and teamed his stuff over two hundred miles; he lived out in the open prairie, and suffered the hardships and privations that are common to all those who go into those new districts. He put up buildings worth over $1,500, and now he is told that he cannot live there; his sons are banished, their buildings pulled down and scattered, lest he should re-occupy them. Not only is that so in the case of the Dunbar family, but it is the case with the Dicksons and several other families. I earnestly hope the Minister of the Interior has some reasonable explanation to offer, and that at least, whatever his explanations may be, he will see it to be his duty at once to give the necessary notice to cancel that lease and allow these men to keep peacable possession of the lands that they are well entitled to, after the privations to which they have been subjected.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think the hon. gentleman, after the interviews he had with me on this subject, and the notification he gave me that he proposed to bring it up, might have done so without inflicting upon the House a double dose of this subject, and without putting information into the the hands of the hon. member who first brought it before the House; he might have saved a great deal of time, and would just as well have attained the object he has in view. This question is no doubt an important one, and it is one that will have to be dealt with in the very near future. The question of cattle ranches in Alberta is one of great importance, and one in which, probably a larger amount of capital is invested than in any other industry in the North-West Territories. The old policy of the Government, as the hon. gentleman knows, in 1880 and 1881, was to encourage the ranching industry in that western country. It was then reported that it was a magnificent cattle country; but it was uncertain, as no one had tested it, but capitalists were encouraged to go in there and take hold of those ranching lands and put cattle upon them. Consequently, in any dealings we have in this matter, in any change of policy we propose to adopt, we must take care that we do not do injury to those who came into the country, paid for their leases and put their cattle on the ground and carried out their part of the bargain in good faith with the Government. A great number of leases at the time were taken up, not only by capitalists, who were able to put cattle on the land, but by others as a speculation. Then from year to year, as the conditions were not fulfilled, as has been the case constantly, lands have been thrown open for settlement, and within the last month or two weeks the leases of two large ranches have been cancelled and the lands thrown open for settlement. We are doing that as rapidly as leases are forfeited, either for non-payment of rent or from the owners not putting on the land the number of cattle which they pledged themselves to place there under the lease. I believe that the ranching country 100 miles east of the mountains is one of the best portions of the territories, and will in the near future be very thickly settled. I quite agree with the sentiment expressed by the late Premier in the early days of the ranching industry, that eventually the cattle would have to give way to the settler. If the whole of the present ranching country on the eastern side of the Rocky Mountains were thickly settled, as I venture to predict it will become, the owners of cattle will have to travel eastward, where the country is equally good for the purpose, and I am told by experienced cattlemen that it is even better for ranching purposes than the land close to the Rocky Mountains. There has been no difficulty in the past, and there is plenty of room yet for cattle to be moved to other tracts of country, and there will be opportunity to come to a favourable understanding with those gentlemen who are so largely interested themselves in cattle raising. In the particular district to which our attention has been called, where the Hollis and McEachran leases are situated, I may say that the Hollis lease was taken up in 1883. In 1888 Mr. Hollis indicated his wish to surrender that lease, and Dr. McEachran notified the Government that he was willing to take it and give up a lease adjoining it, close to Fort Macleod, and in regard to which a number of persons had applied to have thrown open for settlement. Consequently, when application was made by Dr. McEachran to take the Hollis lease, instead of the one he held near Fort Macleod, the Government were very glad to make the exchange. Then, Dr. McEachran's leased land was thrown open for settlement. It appears that on the Hollis lease the Dunbar family were settled. Shortly after Dr. McEachran's lease was given to him information reached the department that the Dunbar family claimed some portion of the land. Representations were made to us regarding other leases that parties were in the habit of making a business of settling on leased land, selecting the springs or other available water or other advantages offered, such as hay land, and causing complications with the object of being bought out. A number of people made it their business, and we had to be very careful to protect those who had invested their money and gone into the country in good faith. In one case I recollect that a man settled on an Indian reserve and made very extensive improvements, and we had to pay him $3,000 to leave. He then went on to the Hollis lease and made some improvements, and the Waldron Ranching Company had to pay about $12,000 to get rid of him. Then the Dunbar case was reported to the department. Mr. Pearce was sent to make a report, and his report was that Dunbar, senior, had settled on the land prior to survey, and prior to Hollis getting his lease. We then gave instructions that a patent should be issued to him for his land. With respect to the two young men, they were sons who lived with the father, who made no claim outside of the old man's pre-emption, and it was not until representations were made by Dr. McEachran that they were endeavouring to secure the springs that we came to the conclusion that the sons were not entitled to land, that they were not bonâ fide settlers, and had done nothing but a little ploughing, and had not carried out those extensive improvements stated by hon. gentlemen opposite, but had done work to the value only of probably $50 or $75. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) seemed to complain that sufficient notice had not been taken of the representations of the Dunbars. We had a good many communications with them, but they finally placed their case in the hands of their solicitor, Mr. Haultain, and with him we have had communication. With respect to the young men, they received an entry for the land, not on account of the lands being opened, because they never were opened, as stated in the petition read by the hon. member for Wellington; but when Mr. Hollis indicated his intention of giving up this lease, and we were negotiating with Dr. McEachran, we notified our agent not to give entries on the Hollis lease. In the face of that instruction, for some unaccountable reason, entries were given, and these resulted in rather serious complications. The matter was submitted to the Justice Department, and we received a report stating that the young Dunbars had no right to the land, and consequently we cancelled the entries. I was not aware at that time an action for ejectment was pending. Subsequently, they did not feel inclined to spend any further money than they had already expended on the suit. The hon. member for Wellington also stated that it was evident the lands were sold because they were sub-divided. They have been sub-divided for a good many reasons. No less than 20 or 30 leases have been opened, and we have sub-divided the whole of them with the expectation that they would be thrown open to settlement. In all our new leases it is provided that the even-numbered sections be thrown open for settlement as in any other part of the territory. I agree with the hon. gentleman that this part of the country, which I believe is as good a portion of territory as any in the North-West, should be placed in as favourable a position for settlement as any other portion of the country. There is one point further to which I may refer. The hon. member for Wellington brought the matter to my attention in a very friendly and suitable manner, and we had one or two interviews in regard to it. I brought Dr. McEachran to talk it over and ascertain if some arrangement could not be arrived at with these young men. After consultation the hon. member for Wellington wrote to the Dunbars stating the interview with Dr. McEachran, and mentioning that he was perfectly willing to buy them out and make a settlement with them. However, the country appears more favourable than it has been, and although at one time they were perfectly willing to sell out, the Dunbars have now changed their mind and propose to remain there. In regard to these two young men, there was a portion of the time between the cancellation of Hollis' lease and the issue of the new lease when the land might be open to settlement. The only claim that I see they can have would be that they were there at that time when the lands were apparently open for settlement. The House will see that so far as the old gentleman was concerned, that immediately it was found he had a right to the land instructions were issued, and he got his patent so soon as we were able to give it to him and when he complied with the regulations. The hon. gentleman at the end of his speech I think was rather violent, and he spoke of the treatment these people received as being not unlike the treatment of the tenants in Ireland. Well, Mr. Speaker, considering the number of the leases and the nature of the country there, I think it speaks well for the ranchers and for everyone concerned that we have not had more difficulties. I know that in a number of the ranches held under the old system, where it required two years' notice to cancel, some persons have gone in and settled with the permission of the ranchers and there has been no difficulty whatever. As long as settlement does not rush into that country I think that the ranchers if they had a little common sense might be able to get along for a short time in that way. The demand which has been made upon me, that a two years' notice only be given, is one that requires a good deal of consideration, and it will be taken up in the near future in connection with the proposed change of policy on this subject. I may say indeed, and it was brought about through the proposal of the manager of the Waldron ranche, I have a report before Council for two months in reference to this matter, and after the House rises it will receive further consideration, and I have no doubt that we shall have to come to a more definite policy in regard to this matter. This question may be somewhat new to this country, but it is not new to other countries. The same difficulties have been experienced in British Columbia and Australia. Where persons got these large tracts of land for ranching purposes it has been found that when settlement comes in a different policy has to be pursued; and now that this country is being opened up by railways both north and south of Calgary, and that settlement is likely to rush in there, I believe that a change will have to be made shortly in that respect, and I trust it will be made in sufficient time to do justice to the two young men whose cases were especially brought before the House by the member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen).

Mr. WATSON. This is a matter that should receive careful consideration by the House, and it proves that the contentions of gentlemen on this side of the House were right when they opposed the granting of these large tracts of country to private corporations. We find that that policy has been retarding the settlement in the far west in the same way that the colonization companies retarded settlements in some parts of Manitoba. The Minister states that this land was given to the Waldron ranche, after the practical cancellation of the lease granted to the Hollis. The Hollis' lease was practically cancelled, and yet the Government extended the same privilege on this land to Dr. McEachran which it appears to me is contrary to the land regulations in force at the time. The Government finding that they had made a mistake in giving a lease for twenty-one years, changed the system of lease which required the permission of the leaseholder before a homesteader could receive a homestead on that lease. After that change the Government claimed that all even sections should be open for homesteaders, without the homesteader getting permission from the leaseholder, and consequently it left the even sections open for homesteading. That would not be so objectionable, but here we find a case where the men have actually occupied land, until they were cancelled under the Hollis lease, and afterwards have been ejected by Dr. McEachran. I believe that the settlers who have located on that land were not molested by the Hollis Ranche Company, because they did not stock the land and had no right to it. The Hollis Company were simply speculators to secure the land and hold it for a number of years without putting any stock on the ranche at all, and consequently the lease was subject to cancellation. It was cancelled, and these settlers were occupying these lands, knowing that the ranche company were not complying with the regulations of the department and feeling safe and secure. But notwithstanding that fact, the Government granted Dr. McEachran a lease for twenty years on the old conditions, where a settler had to secure the permission of the leaseholder to occupy any portion of that land as to homestead. I think that was a great mistake, and I think also that it was contrary to the land regulations. I believe that it is a matter which requires the consideration of this House, and if Dr. McEachran received that lease contrary to the land regulations, then it appears to me the department would be in a position to cancel it. There are other cases besides this of the Dunbars. The Minister will remember the case of the Dicksons, who were settlers on this Hollis ranche lease, and at the time Dr. McEachran got possession of that lease Mr. Pearce, one of the Dominion Land Commissioners, went with Dr. McEachran to inform these settlers. One of the Dicksons asked Mr. Pearce if he could secure an entry for 320 acres. Mr. Pearce informed him that he could. Then, according to the report in the Macleod Gazette, Mr. Pearce asked Dr. McEachran if he had any objection to this settler, and he had nothing to say. If that is the case, it does seem to me to be a hardship that Dr. McEachran at a later date should undertake to eject these people, and that he should be sustained in his action by the Government. I would like to ask the Minister if Dr. McEachran secured that lease by competition.

Mr. DEWDNEY. No. I explained that it was an arrangement brought about for the purpose of getting Mr. McEachran to re-release his lease, which was far more valuable to us for settlement than the Hollis lease, because it was close to the town of Macleod, and the settlers asked that the land covered by it should be thrown open.

Mr. WATSON. It was a mistake to grant these leases in the first place; but why that should be followed up by a lease to Dr. McEachran contrary to the land regulations——

Mr. DEWDNEY. Not contrary to the land regulations.

Mr. WATSON. It was: because if the Hollis lease was cancelled there had to be a new lease granted to Dr. McEachran; and if he did not find it comfortable around Fort Macleod, because people were encroaching on his lands, that was a risk he took when he assumed the lease. Now, a notice was issued by the department on the 17th of September, 1889, which reads as follows:—

"Leases of grazing lands in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and within the railway belt in the Province of British Columbia, may be granted only after public competition, except in the case of an actual settler, to whom may be leased, without public competition, a tract of land not to exceed four sections in area, and to be in the vicinity of the settler's residence."

This was the advertisement posted in the North-West by the department at the time Dr. McEachran appeared to get a lease of this Hollis ranche.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is a regulation.

Mr. WATSON. Though that was the law at that time, it appears that Dr. McEachran had sufficient influence to secure the Hollis lease for that particular section where twenty or twenty-five settlers had lived for some years. Now, I am not going to take up time in going over a number of cases, because the people have had a full statement of the case published in the Macleod Gazette, which I believe has been circulated pretty freely among the members of this House. The hon. gentleman has said that these people—not settlers, but speculators—would go on and occupy the best hay lands, and lands where there were springs of water, for the purpose of being bought out. There may have been some cases of that kind, and in such cases the Government would be justified in protecting the leaseholders in their rights and privileges, and not allowing them to be deprived of their supplies of hay and water. But where settlers settled on those lands and cultivated them previous to Dr. McEachran getting his lease, I claim that they ought to be protected in their rights of possession. The hon. gentleman also states that so soon as these lands were wanted for settlement the leases were cancelled and they were immediately surveyed. It appears that this Hollis ranche was surveyed and sub-divided.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It was surveyed in 1882.

Mr. WATSON. I think there has been considerable money spent since that time in surveying these ranches. In the Dunbar case, old Mr. Dunbar did secure his homestead, and one of the sons also secured a homestead entry, after the land was inspected by Mr. Pearce. Now, the Government wishes to cancel that entry, saying that they made some mistake. But Mr. Pearce, one of the land commissioners, and I believe a very efficient officer, having made that inspection, and having told young Dunbar that he could secure an entry, surely he ought to be allowed to retain that entry. Mr. Dunbar should not be made to suffer for the mistake of an officer of the department, especially one occupying the position of Mr. Pearce. I believe that Mr. Pearce was right, but that some influence was brought to bear on the department by Dr. McEachran, who, I believe, performs his duties as a veterinary surgeon for the Government. If the tract of country is correctly described by the Minister as being well fitted for settlement, as I believe it is, or the settlers would not go there, it surely was a great mistake on his part to allow Dr. McEachran to enter into a long lease of these lands in 1889. If that had happened eight or ten years ago, the case might have been different. But these lands were actually in demand for settlement at the time the department allowed Dr. McEachran to take them up for ranching purposes.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There was no application at all. There were only squatters on the lands.

Mr. WATSON. Well, I understand that in that country the squatters' rights were recognized. I believe these people were encouraged to go on those lands.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Not on leases.

Mr. WATSON. Those lands were public lands the moment the Hollis lease was cancelled, and it was cancelled when the Hollis people did not go on and carry out the conditions of the lease; so that the lands were practically open for homestead entry at that time, and it is a hardship upon these people that the department should allow the ranche company to eject them. It can be easily understood that a poor settler living on a quarter section or a half section is not able to fight a powerful ranche company like the one which has Dr. McEachran at its head. If the Government are bound by the lease to the company, I think it is their duty to see that the settlers are not harshly dealt with, but to allow them to secure homesteads in other available places, compensate them for their improvements, and give them a patent for their new homesteads as if they had performed the settlement duties upon them. I think that would be fair. These people have gone there and settled in good faith. It is a mistake for the Government to permit the country to be made the subject of such statements as have been made in the public press. I have yet to learn that any of those statements made in the press are not perfectly accurate. At any rate, they are not denied by the Minister, and if people are to be dealt with in that section, as it is stated in the Macleod Gazette they are treated, we cannot expect people to go there and settle. If the ranche companies are going to monopolize that country for years—this large tract of country which has been spoken of by the Minister as now fit for settlement and cultivation—he cannot expect that settlement will rush in, when it is known that the pioneers are harshly dealt with in the manner described in the articles before us. I hope the Government will see fit at once to remedy those evils, and come to the relief of those settlers who are being persecuted by the ranche company.

Mr. LAURIER. I can readily understand that in the administration of such a vast territory as our North-West occasionally, with all the best intentions, mistakes and errors will occur—mistakes of policy and mistakes of administration; but when such mistakes do occur the department should not hesitate to rectify them. The Minister stated a moment ago that it was our duty to keep faith with the capitalists who have invested their money in the North-West. I agree with him on that point, and I have no doubt he will also agree with me that it is equally important that we should keep faith with the settlers.

Mr. DEWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. LAURIER. And if an injustice has been done, unwittingly and involuntarily, as may happen in the best regulated administration, and if in consequence of those mistakes either the capitalist or the settler must suffer, in my humble opinion it should not be the settler. No one can deny that it is more important, if we want to settle the North-West rapidly and effectively, that every favour possible should be shown the settlers. In this matter an injustice has been done by somebody. These lands were open for settlement as far back as 1872. Whether they were free for entry then or not, certainly an entry was accepted by the Government agents for those lands. I hold here the cancellation of the right of entry which was granted one of these young Dunbars :

"With respect to the north ½ Section 14, Township 9, Range 28, west 4th Meridian, for which you have obtained homestead and pre-emption entries, I beg to notify you to make no more improvements thereon until further advised, as the entries were given inadvertently."

I have no desire to lay blame on anybody. I suppose the agent, acted under misapprehension, but at all events a mistake was made. This young man was allowed to perform the settlement duty, believing that by conforming with the conditions of his entry he would acquire the right of ownership. Several years afterwards he is told that there was a mistake on the part of the department.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Almost immediately.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand it was more than a year; but the point is not material. Of course, the more duties he performed the stronger is his equitable claim; but at all events, in equity and justice, having made his entry in good faith, it is not he who should suffer. But after the entry was granted on these lands a new lease was given Dr. McEachran on the same conditions as the former lease to Mr. Hollis, which lease had been practically cancelled. In the meantime, the regulations for the granting of leases had been altered. When the Hollis lease was granted no reserve was made for the right of settlers, but at the time the McEachran lease was granted the rights of settlers were reserved in the leases. In that lease, however, these conditions and regulations were not inserted, and Dr. McEachran received it without any reservation of the rights of the settlers. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell me that it was simply substituted for the Hollis lease, and the conditions therefore were the same; but if the Hollis lease had been practically cancelled to the extent that a right of entry was granted, when the new lease was given Dr. McEachran the conditions in the old one should not have been continued. At all events, even if the position taken, that Dr. McEachran should have received his lease without any reservation of the rights of settlers, be good, the fact remains, at all events, that the department committed a wrong in granting the entry to this young man. What right then had he to suffer for the mistake of the Government? I am glad that the Minister stated that he would consider the case favourably, and I submit to him if it is not manifest that the settler should not suffer from the mistake of the department, but that the consequences should fall on the department which made it. If the Government has made a mistake, it is rich enough to indemnify the party injured.

Mr. DEWDNEY. We made him an offer which he would not accept.

Mr. LAURIER. I congratulate the hon. Minister on having shown some willingness to deal fairly with the settler, but if the settler did not accept the offer the matter should not rest there. It could be arbitrated upon. At all events, it is a great hardship, that, in consequence of what has taken place, this man should be sued by a powerful company, and of course when you bring a settler into the clutches of the law you ruin him for the best years of his life. Under such circumstances, if the hon. gentleman has made an offer to the settler which the settler does not deem sufficient, the matter ought to be dealt with in justice to the settler.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Post Office Department—To increase the salary of W. H. Smithson.. ..... $200

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this a statutory increase?

Mr. HAGGART. No; but he has been accountant of the Post Office Department for eight years, and this is the first increase he has had during that time.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is his salary now?

Mr. HAGGART. $2,400.

Mr. LAURIER. Will the hon. gentleman kindly tell me the reason why a letter carrier in this city named Nelson Marion was dismissed a year ago?

Mr. HAGGART. It was for misconduct of some kind; but the deputy does not at present remember what it was.

Department of Printing and Stationery —Mr. LaMothe's salary from 1st July, 1891 ..... $1,400

Mr. McMULLEN. Was there no provision made for this in the main Estimates?

Mr. LAURIER. I think I can explain this. Mr. Lamothe was an employé in the Civil Service, and he had to be superannuated in consequence of an injury to his eyes. Now he is able to take service again, and his service is accepted.

Department of Marine—To provide for the appointment of A. R. Gordon, Lieut., R.N., as nautical adviser to the Marine Department and Commander of the Fisheries Protection Service... $2,400

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this a new office?

Mr. TUPPER. That is not an increase. The amount of $2,400 is available for the appointment of a chief clerk in the Department of Marine. Lieut. Gordon is now Deputy Superintendent of the Meteorological Service in Toronto, and we propose to abolish that office and to transfer him to the Department of Marine, and thus fill the vacancy there. This amount is already voted, but the object of this is to include the name of Lieut. Gordon. His present salary is not $2,400; therefore we could not appoint him by Order in Council

Department of the Secretary of State—Gabriel de Laporte in the Records Branch.....$ 730

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Laporte is an old employé who has been in the Records Branch and has been paid this sum for a number of years. He has not passed the Civil Service examination, but he is very useful there, and this has been paid to him for many years.

Auditor General's Office—To authorize payment to H. R. Moore and H. Gross, of $700 and $600 per annum, respectively, on their entrance into the service (the balance having been provided in the main Estimates).....$ 100

Mr. SCRIVER. I desire to ask whether these are new appointments? Is Mr. Moore entering the service for the first time now?

Mr. FOSTER. They have been temporary clerks for some time, and are now being appointed permanently. They have passed the examination.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suppose the reason for putting them here is that you are paying them more than the Civil Service Act warrants, to begin with.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; more than the minimum. It is irregular in that respect, and therefore is introduced here. But the Auditor General has given a very good reason for the employment of these men. They are superior men, both graduates of the university, and good accountants, and he states that they are such men as he requires, and are more useful to him than three or four ordinary clerks would be at the same sum.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I make no objection; I am only asking for information. It seems to me that where a party has been in the Civil Service for a number of years, after he has passed his examination as temporary clerk, it would be well if, without coming to the House, the Minister had power to put him on at that salary which he would have earned if he had been put on the permanent list at the time he passed the examination.

Mr. FOSTER. We could not do it under the present law.

High Commissioner's Office, London—To authorize the payment of over-expenditure in 1890-91 on account of contingencies.....$1,500

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot understand how the expenditures, more particularly the contingent expenditures, of the High Commissioner's office, are scattered all through the Public Accounts. In the Auditor General's Report you find in some cases there are certain items charged to immigration, and there are items charged in other lines. Then we have contingent expenses in addition to the salary of the office. I think it would be well if the hon. gentleman would give us some accurate idea of the actual incidental expenses of that office. Let us have it altogether, not some of it put in the Supplementary Estimates, some put in the ordinary Estimates, some charged to immigration, and so on.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman will find the sums stated in the Auditor General's Report. They are not scattered any more than other estimates. If there had been sufficient in the main Estimates we would not have asked for a supplementary vote. This is the balance of about $1,000 which has to be paid, and for which we have an estimate in the supplementaries. I do not think my hon. friend will find the High Commissioner's charges scattered through many different accounts. Possibly he will find some to immigration. If the Minister of Agriculture has sent him on any special service, possibly his travelling expenses may come under that head. But as a rule they are under the head of the High Commissioner's office since it has been brought under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister says we will find it set out in the Auditor General's Report. On page B-73 I find several items. I would like to know what other items above and beyond those here recorded the sum that is now to be voted is to cover. We have postage stamps, we have repairs to the house, repairing furniture, tinting wall, stationery, stock exchange, subscriptions, and so forth.

Mr. FOSTER. We went over all that.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is very true. The hon. Minister, no doubt, has a vivid recollection of his attention being drawn to these things. Now, we want to know what this additional $1,500 is to cover.

Mr. FOSER. You shall have all the items set out. The estimates last year and the expenditures against each one, are as follows:—Rent of office and fuel, appropriation, $3,062; spent, $2,950; printing and stationery, appropriated, $650; spent, $966; postage, appropriated, $800; spent, $833; miscellaneous, appropriated, $960; expended, $1,233; travelling expenses, $200; expended, $68; income tax, appropriation, $122; spent, $188; newspapers and periodicals, appropriated, $256, expended, $406; messengers' wages, appropriated, $740; expended, $677; official residence, not estimated for, about $1,000. The whole appropriation has been $7,790 and the expenditure $8,523, which leaves a small appropriation for which this vote is asked.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is virtually about $17,500 for salary and contingencies, which the High Commissioner cost us.

To increase the salary of J. G. Colmer from 1st July, 1891.....$400

Mr. FOSTER. This is to increase Mr. Colmer's salary to $2,800. Mr. Colmer has been a very efficient officer, and has been a long time in the service. I think he is fully entitled to this increase in his salary. It puts him upon the basis of a deputy head, so far as the salary is concerned. He has charge of the whole office there, and of a very large part of the business.

Office of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada—To provide for a salary of $2,400 from 1st July, 1891, for Mr. J. Pope, assistant Clerk of the Privy Council.....$ 600

Mr. FOSTER. This is the gentleman who was Sir John A. Macdonald's private secretary. He was in receipt of $1,800 as private secretary's allowance, and this will make his salary $2,400. He has had a long and faithful service with the late Premier, and it was thought advisable to make his salary equal to that he would have been in the enjoyment of before, and he is placed in the Privy Council.

Department of Interior—Salaries..... $850

Mr. McMULLEN. Please explain this item.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is to provide for the salaries of two of the old clerks who have been in the department since 1882 or 1883. Under the recent arrangement they were selected as being two of the best clerks and placed on the permanent list.

Mr. WATSON. Is it the intention of the Govrenment to reinstate any of the officers or clerks of the department who have been suspended on account of irregularities?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot reply to the hon. gentleman at the present time. The Committee have not had sufficient time to go into the whole matter and arrive at a conclusion.

Mr. WATSON. Is a Committee investigating their cases?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. Is it going further into the cases than the Public Accounts Committee did.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I notice that one of these officers is Geo. D. Pope. Is this compensation for his visit to Prince Edward Island during the elections?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am not aware he was there.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman will get into a scrape like his colleagues in office if it is possible for his clerks to be away for several weeks and for him not to be aware of it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not follow my clerks wherever they go.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understand this man was at the island, and was there on behalf of the Administration. Surely, an hon. colleague would not take an officer from the hon. gentleman's department and send him away without his knowledge.

Mr. McMULLEN. The name of Mr. Pope brings up very vivid recollections of an individual who performed very desirable duty, no doubt, in connection with the election returns one year.

Department of Railways and Canals—
Balance of salary of late Sir John A. Macdonald $533

Mr. LANDERKIN. As one of the members of the House has been very ill during the session—I refer to Mr. Burdett—it would be only right and proper that his indemnity should be paid in full. I hope the Government will take this matter into consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. It has already been brought to our attention by Mr. Trow, the ever diligent whip. The matter is being considered.

Department of Agriculture—Additional salary to J. B. Lynch..... ..... $300

Mr. McMULLEN. What is his salary at the present time?

Mr. HAGGART. He is at present accountant of the Agriculture Department and we propose to make him travelling inspector.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears to me that instead of increasing these salaries, this expenditure should be reduced.

Mr. FOSTER. The first effect will be to take away such occupations as you have had during part of this session.

Mr. McMULLEN. It was undoubtedly a very unpleasant occupation we had to perform, and it must have been so to hon. gentlemen opposite.

Miscellaneous Justice..... $12,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the Minister of Justice will give some details of this item?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The expenditure will be unusually large this year, and in point of fact the vote last year was not sufficient, and we had to take a supplementary estimate of $10,000. In addition to this outlay, the expenses of counsel employed in the late investigation have to be paid.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the Minister give any explanation in relation to expenses connected with the late investigation? How many counsel were employed and are to be paid, and what amount are they to receive?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There are two counsel employed under the instruction of the Government to attend the Committee, if the hon. gentleman refers to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and in addition to that there was a recommendation strongly urged by the members of the Committee that the counsel who had been employed to conduct the complaint should likewise be paid. That matter has been considered by the Government, but the expenses of the other two gentlemen will amount to probably an average of $4,000 each.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I did not quite hear what the hon. gentleman said. Did I understand him to say that the Government have agreed to pay the fees of Mr. Geoffrion, who is practically prosecuting counsel, as well as the counsel employed by the defence?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I did not say positively that the Government had agreed, but I said that the opinion had been expressed in Committee that they should be paid. The Committee refrained from passing a resolution, as it was a money matter and should, therefore, be brought down by the Government. That expression came from both sides of the Committee, and I think it will be favourably considered by the Government. In the meantime, I am in communication with Mr. Geoffrion to ascertain what his fees would be.

To pay Rev. James Fulton the maximum of chaplain's salary from date of appointment, 1st October, 1889..... $300

Mr. SCRIVER. I desire to enquire what Mr. Fulton's salary now is, or what his salary will be when this addition is made?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The regular salary is $1,200 a year, but like all other penitentiary officers, under the Penitentiary Act it is provided that upon his appointment the salary shall be reduced to the minimum, which I think is $900 in the case of the chaplain of St. Vincent de Paul. The House was asked in the main Estimates to abolish that distinction as far as chaplains were concerned, and to allow them to enter at the full salary. This vote makes the difference between the minimum and the full salary.

Mr. SCRIVER. So that he will be paid $1,200 from the date of his appointment ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Manitoba Penitentiary..... ..... $900

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if the Government has come to any decision about the appointment of a warden for that penitentiary yet ? That office has been vacant for a considerable time.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The office has not been vacant : it is temporarily filled. As the hon. gentleman knows, I have not thought it desirable to make any decision as to the appointment of a permanent warden at present. I think it is desirable that the present warden should remain there, if not permanently appointed, to put the affairs of the institution in proper order and to establish a basis of expenditure for the future.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Do we understand that the Minister of Justice has appointed this gentleman who is in charge there for the purpose of ascertaining what would be a reasonable expenditure for that institution ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is one of the objects, and also for the purpose of completely disentangling the accounts of the institution so far as possible.

Mr. WATSON. I am sure that no person in this House will object to the course the Minister of Justice is pursuing if the gentleman in charge there now is a competent man, having experience of that kind to ascertain what will be the expenditure in Manitoba Penitentiary. I hope when a permanent appointment is made that the Minister will see fit to select one of the best applicants from the Province of Manitoba. Of course, I understand there are a great number of persons applying for the position, and I believe there are some amongst the number who possess all the bad qualities of the late officer and none of his good ones, for although Mr. Bedson was extravagant he was a good officer, so far as discipline was concerned. I believe Col. Boswell is an applicant for the position, and as a member of the Opposition I might say that I believe that he is a first-class officer, and would make a good warden. He is supported by a large number of the citizens of Manitoba.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid you spoiled his chances.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) That is a candid confession from the Minister.

Mr. WATSON. I do not expect that a gentleman of anything else than the political stripe of hon. gentlemen opposite would be appointed. I can testify to the efficiency of Col. Boswell as a supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite during election times. I believe he is a most efficient officer for the interest of the Conservative party.

Mr. DENISON. I have the pleasure of knowing Col. Boswell also. He is an excellent man and a good officer, and I am satisfied that if he is appointed by the Government he will fill the office very satisfactorily. I only hope that the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Watson) will not jeopardize his chances.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

To pay Mr. Macdonell, M. P. for Algoma, 21 days' sessional indemnity..... $168

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not going to object to this, although the precedent is one of a very objectionable character, to pay a gentleman for services which he could by no possibility have rendered, seeing that he was not elected until 21 days after the House met. But I would say to the hon. Minister of Justice that if this is granted we ought, in all conscience, to grant an indemnity to a gentleman who has been prevented from attending here only by very serious illness. I refer to Mr. Burdett.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is another case somewhat similar to the case of Mr. Macdonell, that is the case of the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), who was elected subsequently to the meeting of the House. Before the House met his election was contested and a vacancy occurred, but not because of any act personally affecting himself. He was elected some time after the session began ; but no provision was made for paying him for that time.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The case of the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Burdett) is one that everybody must regret, because when that hon. gentleman was able to be here he was a very diligent member. There is another case of a member who has not been absent so much, but who has not been able to be here the full time. The case of the hon. member for Kent has been overlooked, but it may be considered. The loss of the twenty-one days on the part of the hon. member for Algoma was not in consequence of his not being elected in time, but was in consequence of unavoidable delay in making the return.

To provide amount required to pay the following persons for services rendered in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery during February and March last, in connection with the last general election :—

Adjutor Samson.....	$22 20
J. B. Geo. Samson.....	85 00
Claire Hugg.....	27 00
	$134 20

Mr. TROW. I would like to say, in reference to Claire Hugg, that he is one of the most faithful officers of this House, and I do not think he is paid sufficient. There are several officers receiving $700 per annum, while he only receives $600. He is an old and faithful servant, he has been here for many years, and I think he is entitled to another $100 of salary. I would like to hear the Speaker's opinion of the qualifications of this young man.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have known this young man Hugg for many years, and I have always found him efficient in the discharge of his duties. This year considerably more work than usual has been put upon him owing to the indisposition of the chief of the pages, and I think I may practically agree with what the hon. member for South Perth has said, that Mr. Hugg is perhaps entitled to some consideration. The Committee will understand that of course the question of increasing his salary does not rest entirely with the Speaker. The Commission of Internal Economy has a great deal to do with it, and as the Minister of Finance is a powerful member of that Commission, and every one knows his economical disposition. I cannot promise that an increase will be made.

Further sum for expenses of Committees.$20,000

Mr. COCKBURN. I should like to see a clause added to this vote to provide for increases to the clerks' salaries: E. Hartney, $200; Walter Todd, $200; N. Robidoux, $100, and L. C. Panet, $100—total $600. Unless the names are specifically mentioned, I think it would be impossible for these gentlemen to claim any part of the vote. I think we all agree that the duties imposed upon them have been onerous, and I do not think that in granting them $600 we shall be going beyond what is reasonable.

Mr. SPEAKER. No portion of this item of $20,000 is intended for the salaries of any officers of the House. It is intended for the payment of expenses connected with the summoning of witnesses and the employment of shorthand writers. I may say that so far as I am concerned I have a very strong objection to the granting of bonuses to the officers of this House. I believe it is an improper mode of remunerating these gentlemen. Their salaries ought to be fixed at a sufficient sum to remunerate them for the work they are called upon to perform; and if, during a session such as this, their work is more onerous than usual, that is no reason why bonuses should be given them. They have simply performed their duty. I have expressed that opinion privately to the officers of the House; and I would very much prefer, if it is intended to increase the salaries of those officers, that the increases should be made permanent, and not take the form of a bonus, on the ground that extra work has been exacted from them. Such a system gives them the idea that all they have to do, if they have done extra work during a particular session, is to put in a claim for a bonus and it will be granted. I would like, however, to draw the attention of the Finance Minister to the salary of Mr. Todd. I understand it was intended that he should be given the grade of a first-class clerk from a certain time, but that his appointment, instead of being dated back, as was intended, was dated ahead, and he thereby lost two statutory increases to which he was entitled, amounting to $100 altogether. His case is one, I think, the Government might take into consideration; but I do not think the amount could be taken out of this vote, which, it seems to me, is intended for an entirely different purpose.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What action has been taken with reference to those clerks in the Civil Service who obtained possession of examination papers improperly, and by this means were enabled to pass their examinations and get certificates?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The clerk in the printing department who did this, instead of waiting to be dismissed, took the best course, and resigned. The clerk in the Post Office Department will be dealt with by the head of that department. Whether they will be prosecuted under the Act passed a couple of years ago or not is a matter which will be determined by the Minister of Justice.

Health Statistics..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is half the usual vote. Both the department and the Council have been looking into the matter. It was necessary that this $5,000 should be voted for the half year in order that we might have the statistics in course of preparation completed and published for the remainder of the calendar year. No further expenditure will be made after that, under the present system. It is felt that the system carried on has been defective in some cases, and that we were repeating what the provinces were doing, and the Government are considering what new system will be adopted in the future.

Mr. WATSON. I am glad to know some change will be made, because at present the work is apparently done twice. It would be much better that we should work in conjunction with the Local Legislature. Let them furnish the necessary information and the Dominion Government stand the expense of printing. If we co-operated with the different provinces we would get more valuable information for less money.

Mr. SPROULE. The work done by the provinces is quite different from this, and there is no provision in the provincial Act for this work. Our board does other work beside the collection of mortuary statistics.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The collection of statistics by the Dominion must be a compilation of what is done by the provinces. The work should be thrown on the provinces.

Mr. FOSTER. That is under contemplation.

Mr. Adam Brown, Honorary Commissioner—Honorarium..... $2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He is a very good fellow, but when did this exhibition terminate?

Mr. FOSTER. The end of last May or the beginning of June.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So that, although this is practically paying him for a job undertaken while he was a member, it is so manipulated that he will be paid for the work after he ceased to be a member. You will get out of the snarl that way.

Mr. FOSTER. This is not looked on as pay, but as a honorarium.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This business of appointing a member of Parliament to act as a commissioner and then paying him a salary is coming very perilously close to the Independence of Parliament Act; and I am not sure it is much mitigated by the fact that it was tolerably well known my hon. friend held the reversion of the postmastership of Hamilton in his pocket at the time.

Aid toward the Dominion Dairy Exhibition to be held at Sherbrooke, Quebec, in 1891..... $10,000

Mr. ROOME. Is this aid to be continued another year?

Mr. FOSTER. It has been decided to provide this amount yearly in favour of exhibitions of this kind. This exhibition will be held in the Eastern Townships this year and probably in some other portion of the Dominion another year. As my hon. friend has said, the industry is a growing one, and if an aid of this kind can have the anticipated effect, the money will be well expended.

Mr. EDWARDS. What is being done with this $10,000?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is a rival institution to the provincial exhibitions.

Mr. HAGGART. The intention is to hand the money over to the agricultural authorities to be used in the form of prizes.

Mr. WATSON. It appears to be a bonus to Sherbrooke for holding an exhibition. I do not think the Government can do too much to encourage the manufacture of dairy products in Canada, but I do think better results will be obtained from the expenditure by dividing it among the different provinces. Let the provincial exhibitions have their share and make special prizes for dairy produce. To give $10,000 to one society to have one dairy exhibition seems to me to be an extravagant expenditure, and I think, if the Government would divide this amount up among the different provinces and allow prizes to be given in the different provinces, it would be a better application of this amount.

Mr. ROOME. This exhibition has endeavoured to get all parts of Canada to exhibit there, to exhibit their cheese, and their butter, and their dairy cattle, and also to show the system of ensilage, so as to teach the farmers the best way to feed their cattle, and also to get the proper cheese for the English market. If this money were divided among the different provinces it would be of no use at all, but this is to cause a competition among the farmers of the whole Dominion, and I think it is in the interest of the country at large.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It would be of great benefit to British Columbia.

Mr. ROOME. Next year let the exhibition be placed somewhere else, but I am sure the farmers of Canada will be willing to support and carry out this proposal.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to know what benefit the people of British Columbia and Manitoba and the North-West are going to derive from an exhibition in the Eastern Townships? Perhaps all the exhibits will come from the Texas ranches.

Mr. EDWARDS. I simply desired to know how $10,000 could be expended for dairy prizes at any such exhibition. It appears to me that this is simply a gift to an exhibition association. I highly approve of these exhibitions. I do not think the Government can do too much in that direction, but I think they should have begun at the fountain head, and that is at the City of Ottawa. For some years past we have had a struggling association here, and have been asking for some aid. Now, the Eastern Townships have got ahead of us, and I suggest that, if an annual grant is to be made to the different exhibitions throughout the Dominion, it should be made next year to Ottawa, as it should have been done this year, if any such system is to be continued. As far as these grants are concerned, I highly approve of them. I think too much cannot be done to promote the dairying interests of the country. I venture to say that, if the prize lists at Sherbrooke are examined, it will be found that $10,000 have not been given by that association for any such purpose. It could not be done; but I take it that this is a grant of $10,000 to the exhibition association, and I hope the Government will continue it, and pass it round and let us have it in Ottawa, where it rightly belongs.

Mr. SCRIVER. I think my hon. friend is mistaken as to the use which is intended to be made of this appropriation. As I understand it, the object, as stated in the item here, is to provide for an exhibition at Sherbrooke of the improved methods of making butter and cheese and of curing ensilage. The management of the whole affair in Sherbrooke was under the control of Professor Robertson, and to those who know Professor Robertson as well as I do it is not necessary to say that the work was efficiently done, and that a great deal of information was afforded to the farmer. Still, I think the amount proposed here is an unnecessarily large one. Knowing what was done at Sherbrooke, I do not see that such a large amount was necessary or should have been expended. However, I have no doubt that Professor Robertson will render to the department a correct and honest and proper account of the way in which the money was disbursed.

Mr. McMILLAN. If it is right to vote this money, I think it should be divided among the different provinces. It is impossible to bring cows together from any great distances, and especially to bring them so as to test their milking qualities. Even when they are kept at home they dry up very rapidly. If this is to be done at all, let the money be given to each province, and let it be given in prizes for the best cheese and the best butter and the best milking cows of any breed, or the best milking cows of each breed.

Mr. SPROULE. I would have no objection to the expenditure of this money if it were equitably distributed, but I think it is setting a bad precedent. If it is given to an exhibition in Sherbrooke this year, that will be a precedent for a similar expenditure in some other locality next year. I agree with the hon. gentlemen who have spoken that, if this money is given, it should be given to some of the societies that are already in existence, so as to enable them to increase their prizes and do more work than they are doing now in the crippled state in which most of them are. It is said that this is given to test ensilage. We have our farm here, which is issuing bulletins every month on that subject. We have the Ontario farm at Guelph and the provincial farm in Quebec doing the same thing. I do not see any reason why we should do that in any other locality. Last year there was an appropriation made for the Dominion Dairy Association which I do not see this year. I think it would be much better to give this to support that association, which did a very valuable work when it met here in Ottawa two years ago when the House was in session. It brought together a number of men of great importance, shippers and exporters and producers. It was barely enough to pay the expenses of the year, and the amount that was used in advertising, I believe, was let drop. I think it would be much better if we had an item for that purpose rather than the one we have here now, which must surely lead to an invitation from different parts of the country to establish in each locality a society of this nature.

Mr. TROW. I do not think an exhibition of this description is intended for any particular locality. This is intended in a great measure for the Province of Quebec and the eastern portion of Ontario. It is not to exhibit stock, but dairy products. I do not think this Government could do anything that would better promote the farming industry than to change the exhibition from one province to the other, and grant $10,000, and let it go the rounds of all the provinces. It would, in my opinion, do a great deal of good to our butter and cheese industry, and would increase the profits on the sale of our butter to a million dollars per annum. An exhibition of this kind would enlighten the people in the best methods of butter and cheese making.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not understand that this is given to any association : it is given to encourage the industry of cheese and butter making in the Dominion. I am not so narrow-minded as to oppose the granting of $10,000 in Quebec or Ontario, or in any other province, because it is a local exhibition : the question to consider is, whether it is going to do any good. I can see where it is going to do a great deal of good. This is not, as I understand it, altogether for prizes, but it is to bring the cheese from all over Ontario and Quebec, or from any other portion of the Dominion where it is made.

Mr. SCRIVER. That is not the object.

Mr. COCHRANE. I understand it is to pay the expenses of getting it there. The hon. gentleman shakes his head. If he understands it better than I do, he can explain it. They bring the cheese and butter, and are paid the expense of getting it there. It is judged there, and then put on the market of Great Britain. They also know on what principle cheese is manufactured, and when the farmers get the result of the best methods they will be able, not only to award prizes, but also to instruct buyers where the best cheese is made. I think we should not stand about where the money is expended. The only question to consider is : Will it do good to the farming community of this country ?

Mr. BAIN. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and myself do not often find ourselves in accord, but I have strong sympathy with the view expressed by that hon. gentleman this evening. I think that most of us in this House will remember that this is the continuation of a series of grants that have travelled around from one province to another, ostensibly for the purpose of advancing agriculture in some form. I want to say that since we have inaugurated the system, and to a certain extent have taken this departure in the dairying industry, I think that dairymen will agree with me in saying that if it is intended to get anything like a general collection of dairy exhibits at one point in the Dominion, in practice it will be found a very conspicuous failure. The difficulty of removing and handling fine dairy products and carrying them to a distance to exhibit as such will not be found to work well in practice, and the benefit will be largely limited to the immediate localities where the exhibition is held. Now, when we turn to the action we are taking with respect to advancing the quality of our dairy products, both in butter and cheese, when we turn to the action of this Dominion at the central farm here, and in respect to the travelling dairies that are promoted throughout the Dominion, and the work of the Provincial Governments, I think if the Government wanted to economize they might take into account whether it would not be just as wise to abolish this amount altogether at an early day. I think it will be found that the expenditure we are making on travelling dairies and otherwise to bring the use of ensilage before the farmers by our local experimental farms will be of much more benefit to the farmers than the exhibition of these dairy products. I think it will be found that while the locality having the exhibition will be very desirous of getting the $10,000, after all, our funds could be more profitably employed if we withdrew this amount and simply kept up the system we have otherwise employed to advance the interest of agriculture. I do not know why the Central Government should load itself with what might be called the details of the agricultural interest. I think that is a matter that might be left to each province to provide for itself according to its particular wants. While I endorse the action of the central experimental farm with respect to advancing the butter and cheese interest, I think it would be wise for us to confine our attention to these points, and drop this grant altogether.

Mr. EDWARDS. I do not agree with the hon. gentlemen at all. I believe in continuing the grant and increasing it, and I suggest that you give Ottawa $10,000 next year, including it in the estimates as it is here for dairy purposes, and we will use it for agricultural purposes generally. I think that is what has been done for Sherbrooke. I believe, instead of doing away with this grant, we should treble it, or perhaps quadruple it, holding an exhibition annually in some one of the several provinces, a Dominion exhibition, such as the Royal in England, where the products of the different provinces can be got together. Now, our exhibitions in different parts of the country each year are simply local exhibitions, but if the Central Government gave a generous amount in this way we would have a good Dominion exhibition in some one of the provinces each year, which would be productive of very good results indeed.

Mr. SPROULE. When the hon. gentleman says these exhibition are local, he forgets that the present exhibition in Montreal has exhibits from all parts of Canada, including Manitoba and the North-West. Now, it is not our experience that exhibitions to-day, either agricultural or dairy, are confined to the locality in which they are held. It has been found that when the Provincial Government subsidized these exhibitions in Ontario, and they went round from place to place, they were generally a failure. The most successful one to-day in that province is the Industrial of Toronto. They have discarded the provincial grant entirely, because they looked upon it rather as a drawback to their enterprise than otherwise. When they got that amount of money it simply detracted from their own energy, and they did not make it as successful as it has been since. We have an exhibition of dairy produce at all these provincial shows. The Industrial of Toronto is open to the Dominion of Canada, and so it is with the Montreal exhibition and the Central one at Ottawa. Therefore, you have exhibits from different parts of the country, the same as you would have if you made special dairy exhibitions in any part of the Dominion. At the present time, with so many agricultural and industrial exhibitions in operation, much of the farmers' time is spent there which might as well be spent at home.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards) advises that this sum should be voted annually for Dominion exhibitions. I desire to remind the hon. member that in 1888, when a similar sum was in the Estimates that year for a Dominion exhibition, the Government of the day announced that they had changed their policy, and had determined that hereafter they would not aid in that way such exhibitions. I have a very painful recollection of that fact, because at the last election the only sin of omission which could be brought against me during my four years term was that I had not secured that amount of money for Nova Scotia and for the exhibition at Halifax. We considered that it was our right to receive it. The custom had been, I believe, to have the money spent annually on a Dominion exhibition, each province having the appropriation in turn; and we considered that in 1888 it was the turn of Nova Scotia. It was a very great disappointment to the people of the province, and especially to the people of Halifax, when the vote was dropped. A sum of $10,000 appears this year to cover expenses incidental to an exhibition in the Eastern Townships of dairy products. I find no fault with that expenditure. I have read in the newspapers very long and elaborate descriptions of it, and have heard here to-night that in every respect it was a success. If we in Nova Scotia are to wait our turn to get this money in rotation, we may have the same experience as we had in 1888. So, in order to protect ourselves against that possibility, I am disposed to support the suggestion which has been urged by several hon. members, that this vote should be divided among the different provinces annually and should be distributed among the central agricultural association of each province. I believe this expenditure will prove of great advantage in improving the character of the dairy products of the different provinces of the Dominion.

The Haras National Company, Montreal, for the use of 6 stallions for the Experimental Farm.. .. .. $6,000

Mr. McMILLAN. Is this system to be continued?

Mr. HAGGART. There is an agreement for a certain number of years.

Mr. McMILLAN. It would be much more beneficial to pay the money and not bring the animals in, because it is a gross injustice to individuals who have spent their own money in bringing in far better animals than these animals that come from this firm. Another gross injustice is that, if any benefit is to be derived from experimental farms, it is confined almost wholly to the farmers in the locality. Are the same stations to be continued next year?

Mr. HAGGART. These animals are to be kept at the different farms.

Mr. McMILLAN. This will prove a gross injustice to farmers in other parts of the province. The farms surrounding these stations are similar as regards conditions, and the experiments made bear directly on the farms of the surrounding districts, while farmers some distance away derive very little benefit from the experiments. There are certain portions of farming which the Government farms can properly take up, but I hold this item under discussion applies to a subject that should be left alone. It is being done in a better way by private individuals, and it will be impossible for the Government to carry it out so as to give satisfaction. I believe the Government should only take up subjects where private enterprise will not be able to meet the requirements, but in this direction the great evil to-day is that private enterprise has done more than the country really requires, and private capital is not paying those who invest in it. I speak from experience on this question. The sooner this system is abolished the better. Hon. gentlemen may turn round and show what large sums have been expended to benefit agriculture. But this outlay of $6,000 a year for five years, or $30,000, might as well have been placed in the stove. The farmers are not benefited thereby. The Government should confine themselves to efforts which would benefit the farmers, and not spend such large sums, and then tell the farmers how large an amount has been expended in their interest. I am afraid there is a reason lying behind this vote, that an arrangement was made with a powerful company before the elections, by which a large sum was to be spent during a number of years.

Mr. EDWARDS. I do not agree with my hon. friend. I believe the experimental work at the farms will do good all over the Dominion, and I approve highly of the experiments that are being carried on. While I would not criticise otherwise than favourably, in general terms, the work of the experimental farm, I condemn very strongly this system of having these horses there. There may be a great benefit done by the Government in importing horses, but not that class of horses. Since the adoption of the McKinley tariff the horses that were formerly sold to the United States we cannot now sell there to advantage. The horses we want to raise for the English market are not of this class. What would be a wise thing for the Government to do would be to import a number of first-class English thoroughbred horses and sell them by auction in various parts of the Dominion. In that way we would be enabled to raise the very kind of horses we desire for that market; we would raise cavalry horses and hunters, which sell on the English market. I will explain why I think it would be a reasonable work for the Government to do. It is because theses horses cost very high sums and private individuals will not import them. By adopting the suggestion I have offered, very great benefits would be done to the farmers of Canada and to the Dominion as a whole. So far as this bargain with the Haras Company is concerned, I agree with my hon. friend that it would be better to allow the horses now at the farm to go back and discontinue the cost of keeping them. It is simply nonsense to board them at the experimental farm; they are entirely useless there. The Government have made a mistake, and the sooner that mistake is corrected the better. Let the horses go back. Those who understand the subject will agree with me that there is no better way in which the Government can help agriculture in Canada than by importing, as I have suggested, some first-class English blood horses, and selling them to the highest bidders, with the condition attached that they are to be kept in certain districts of the country.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I feel a little diffidence in rising to discuss this matter, because when any criticism is made of the Government expenditure on the experimental farm some hon. gentleman, presumably the hon. member for East Grey, rises and declares that hon. gentlemen on this side are all opposed to expenditure for the benefit of farmers. I wish to say at the outset that I believe in experimental farms, provided they are kept to their legitimate purpose, provided they are utilized to their best advantage, utilized in the branches in which they are calculated to do good, and provided they do not do injustice to the rest of the community. In the grant now asked for the last condition is not complied with, because it does an express injustice to the rest of the community. Again, I say that these experimental farms are calculated to do a great deal of good, and I am free to admit that if the experimental farm at Ottawa can furnish to the North-West and to Manitoba a hard wheat that will ripen ten days before the red fyfe, which has been grown for a number of years past, you will have done a hundred times the good to the country that the farm has cost. But, Sir, while I admit that, on the other hand I hold that we have no right to rush into improper and unjust expenditure. In reference to this item, I wish to call the attention of the Committee to the fact that in this country of ours we have perhaps just as enterprising and just as skilful stockmen as there are anywhere on the face of the earth. I say, without fear of contradiction, that we have just as enterprising men engaged in that particular line of business, and men with as good judgment, as you can furnish at the experimental farm. When the Government, with the finances of the country at their back, draw on the resources of the country to enter into direct competition with private enterprise, they are doing a gross injustice. I know for a fact that there are men within almost gun shot of that experimental farm who have at their own private expense got just about the same class of horses that are kept there. They have imported them or paid high prices for them in this country. You bring these horses there, and you draw upon the resources of the country that these men have contributed to, and you enter into competition with them for the custom of the country. I ask if it is fair and right to do that? My hon. friend beside me reminds me that you put the cost of the service of those horses at a lower price than private individuals can possibly afford, and you pay part of that expense out of the public funds, so that you are interfering with the legitimate business of the country, and you are drawing on the resources of the country to enter into competition with the honest importers. I say that this is utterly unjust, subversive of the first principles of equity, and a thing that should not for one moment be tolerated. You must also bear in mind that this benefit is confined to a very small locality. The rest of the Dominion gets no benefit from it whatever, and as my friend from Russell (Mr. Edwards) has pointed out, they are not the class of horses that are wanted at all. I believe it would be in harmony with the principles of justice, and it would be a direct benefit to the community and to the country at large, if you just give the company back their horses, even if you have to pay them, and withdraw them from service altogether in this locality. I cannot see the justice of passing this item. I believe it is not in the interest of the country that such an estimate should continue, and the sooner it is stopped the better.

Expenses in connection with the formation and drill of a new kilted battalion in Toronto.....	$5,000

Mr. AMYOT. I would like to enquire from the Minister of Militia if the camp is to be held at Rimouski this year?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is.

Mr. AMYOT. Will the Minister tell us if it will cost the same thing, or if it will cost more than if it were held at Lévis?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I may tell the hon. gentleman, who takes a great deal of interest in military matters, that the policy of the Government is to distribute these favours over various parts of the Dominion, but I cannot say whether the camp will cost more or whether it will cost as much as it would cost at Lévis, until the returns are sent in. As soon as they do come in, I have no doubt the hon. gentleman will take the same interest in the Rimouski camp next session as he is taking now, and if he will put his question then I shall be delighted to give him all the information which he is seeking now.

Mr. AMYOT. I wish to ask——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must confine himself to the item.

Mr. AMYOT. I want to speak on this item, and I will speak on this item.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman will not speak against the rule of the House. It is all very well to ask one question, but if there is to be a discussion, the hon. gentleman must do it when the House is not in Committee.

Mr. AMYOT. I will speak on the item, and the hon. gentleman who always finds that I am out of order when I want to speak will find that he will not expedite the business of the House by that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. AMYOT. I am addressing the Chair. I want to know for what purpose this $5,000 is asked for. I want to have some details. I happen to take some interest in militia matters, Mr. Chairman. I have devoted some of my time to these matters, and very often, instead of enjoying fishing on the lakes, I joined the battalions and helped the country in that regard, and as I do take an interest in the militia force I want some information from the Minister.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have no doubt my hon. friend means the philabeg when he refers to the details which he requires. A kilted regiment, as the hon. gentleman knows, is a regiment which is permitted to wear that picturesque uniform which the Highlanders of Scotland are properly so very proud of. I can tell the hon. gentleman that several leading Scotchmen of Toronto appealed to me for permission to organize the regiment, which will be to Toronto what the Royal Scots are to the Montreal force. In giving the authorization to form this regiment I saw that Toronto had not the quantum of force which from its population it was entitled to. The formation is progressing most successfully, and I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman, who takes a great deal of interest in the militia force, will be glad to hear that all of our comrades in Montreal and Toronto have joined hands to recommend the organization of that battalion. The hon. gentleman knows, from his intimate knowledge of the internal economy of a regiment, that $5,000 is about the amount required for the uniform and for the annual drill; and as my estimates have been cut very short this year, before allowing the regiment to be organized I had to appeal to the liberality of Parliament to obtain an additional $5,000 for the purpose.

Mr. IVES. I would like to enquire of the Minister of Militia whether he and the general commanding are particularly in favour of the Highland costume over any other uniform. I ask the question, because when I applied for an additional company or two for the Sherbrooke battalion the Minister told me that there was not any money for the purpose, and I find that a new regiment is formed in Toronto, and the explanation is that it is kilted. If necessary, I can get the Sherbrooke regiment kilted, or even exposed to a greater extent to the elements.

Mr. DENISON. The hon. gentleman intimates that the principal reason for the formation of this battalion is that it is a kilted regiment. No doubt that is one reason. We have a large number of Scotchmen in Toronto, many of whom occupy prominent positions there as they do in this House. But the principal reason for the request on behalf of Toronto is this: The city has grown very rapidly during the last ten years, and though we had two regiments when the population was only 50,000, we have to-day the same number when the population is approaching 200,000. In Montreal, which is larger than Toronto, though not much larger, there are six regiments, the 1st, the 3rd, the 5th, the 6th, the 65th and the Garrison Artillery. Therefore, I think it is a reasonable request on the part of Toronto that we should have three regiments. I have been pleased to see that both the Mail and the Globe heartily endorse the Government's action in granting this sum for this purpose. It shows that they have the interest of the force at heart and are looking at the matter, not from a party standpoint, but from a patriotic standpoint. I am satisfied that what the Government are doing will meet with the approbation, not only of Toronto, but of all the people of Canada.

Mr. COCKBURN. I may add, as supplementary to the remarks which have been made by my brother member from Toronto, that while the sum put down here is only $5,000, I understand that those interested in the formation of this regiment have already out of their own pockets, contributed more than twice that sum; and I can assure my hon. friend from Bellechasse that although they may sport the Scotch kilt, a dress in which I sported in my earlier days, he need never have any fear of them.

Mr. AMYOT. I am glad that my question with regard to Rimouski has brought out these facts. I have followed with a great deal of interest the efforts of the citizens of Toronto to raise a Scotch regiment, and I think it will be a pride to the Dominion. Any expenditures the Government may make towards increasing the number of efficient militiamen will receive my hearty support. I have nothing to say against this vote; I am glad of it; but I wanted to know exactly for what purpose this $5,000 was intended. As to Toronto, I admire the city; I visited it the other day, and I think it is a pride to the Dominion. I only wish all the other cities of the Dominion would prosper as Toronto is doing. But when I want to have some details of the vote, the Minister of Militia thinks it is a great argument to sneer at the volunteers, and to say: You take a great deal of interest in the force. I do take an interest in the force, and I do so practically. I am not a brilliant man; and the hon. gentleman has taken every opportunity to diminish my value; let him take the responsibility of that. I am against the habit we have been following so many years of spending too much on the big bonnets and the feathers, and doing too little for the rank and file. If we desire to keep up the militia force we must devote a greater proportion of the expenditure to the men of the force. I hope the hon. gentleman will satisfy my legitimate curiosity, at least for Toronto, as he does not want to do it for Rimouski. I had special reasons for asking about Rimouski. A refusal to answer a simple question is not calculated to promote the business of the House, for we might, if we choose, prolong the session very much. We do not want to do that, but when we ask a question I think we ought at least to get an answer from the Minister, and not from the Chairman.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I appeal to the hon. gentleman in a spirit of fair-play. I told him I could not give any information about Rimouski, because I had not the return. But I promised him, if we have the pleasure of meeting again, as I hope we shall next session, to get the return and see whether the question he put to me is in favour of Rimouski or in favour of Lévis. The department knows absolutely nothing about it so far. As to the kilted battalions, $5,000 is to provide uniforms, arms, and meet the annual drill expense. This battalion is in addition to the ordinary militia force, and I have to appeal to the liberality of Parliament to enable me to authorize the formation of that battalion. I am extremely sorry the hon. gentleman should have fancied I answered him in any sneering manner, because I did not mean to do so, and am only too happy to give him and any other hon. gentleman any information in my power.

Mr. AMYOT. I entirely approve of the expenditure, and I hope this battalion will be a complete success.

Mr. CASEY. Will $5,000 buy all the uniforms and outfit?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Everything.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Bill (No. 175) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned was read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee thereon.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. BOWELL. Before the adoption of that clause, I desire to move an additional clause, notice of which is in the Votes and Proceedings of this morning. The clause is as follows :—

To the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company, for twenty miles of their railway, from a point at or near Newborough, towards Palmer's Rapids, in the Province of Ontario, in lieu of a subsidy for a like amount granted by the Act fifty-second Victoria, chapter three, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

The intention of this resolution is simply to enable the Government to pay for the four miles of that portion of the road between Brockville and Westport which has been built. The original subsidy was for forty miles of the road from Brockville to Westport, at $3,200 per mile. Upon the completion of the road, it was ascertained that the distance was forty-four miles, but we had no power, under the Subsidy Act, to pay for the additional four miles. Subsequently, another subsidy was granted for an extension from Newborough to Palmer's Rapids, Newborough being the point where the first forty miles terminated. The distance from Newborough to Palmer's Rapids is supposed to be twenty miles, and the subsidy granted was $3,200 per mile, payable on each ten miles when completed. In that extra twenty miles are included the four now built, and the object of this resolution is to enable the Government to pay for these four miles already constructed and running. Then, the balance of the subsidy will not be paid until the sixteen miles are constructed.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand this is a revote, and in my judgment the hon. gentleman should proceed by resolution.

Mr. BOWELL. It is not a revote in that sense. It is simply changing the manner in which the subsidy already voted shall be paid. Under the present Act we can only pay upon the completion of every ten miles, and we propose to change that, so as to enable us to pay for the four miles already constructed, and which would have been paid for under the first subsidy had the proper number of miles been mentioned. This is really not a new vote. The matter has been fully considered by the Minister of Justice and by the Law Clerk, and also by the Clerk of the House, and they all agree that the course taken is the proper one.

Mr. McMULLEN. What progress has been made with the construction of the remaining sixteen miles?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I cannot speak positively, but I do not think they are under actual construction. My hon. friend beside me says the contract is let. The company are in doubt as to whether they will take a course directly west from Westport or a more northerly course to reach Palmer's Rapids.

Mr. McMULLEN. When an Act is passed granting a subsidy to a road the Act usually outlines the terms upon which the subsidy is to be granted, and it will say from such a point to such a point, not exceeding so many miles. From Brockville to Newborough the Act, I presume, would say, a subsidy of $3,200 per mile, not exceeding forty miles. Now it is found out that the length is forty-four miles, and to compensate the company these four miles are added to a subsidy given them for an extension of sixteen miles. This four miles subsidy should stand over and be paid for when the other sixteen miles are completed. It is just possible that the other sixteen miles may not be built if we pay the subsidy on those four miles; and if the people in that district are anxious to have the balance of the road completed, would it not be well for the people to ask Government to hold in reserve this four miles subsidy until the other sixteen miles are built? Surely the company are not in such financial embarrassments that the keeping this back would be a very serious disadvantage to them. They are not likely to do more work this year; and next year, if they are prepared to present such a scheme as will satisfy the Government that they mean to complete the balance of the road, we can then pay them over the subsidy.

Mr. WOOD. I do not think the hon. gentleman will contend that his argument is founded on justice or equity. The company built forty-four miles instead of forty miles. It was intended to subsidise the whole forty miles to Westport. Subsequent to that the Ontario Legislature bonused this same road from Sharbot Lake to Palmer's Rapids, a distance of seventy miles. This Parliament grants a subsidy for eighteen or twenty miles, but it was felt that it would be unjust and inconsistent to subsidize all the rebuilt portion of the road and at the same time to leave four miles, which had been built in perfect good faith by the promoters, without any subsidy. The Government came to the conclusion that those four miles should be subsidized, so as to make the first section a complete section.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can understand how the mistake arose. At first the Government had no survey, but they granted a subsidy of $3,200 a mile for forty miles without, I suppose, having any profile or any survey. That is one defect in our system of granting subsidies. I think any company should first show if they have had a survey of the location of the line, and should state to the Government what the cost of the construction is and their hopes of carrying it through. Instead of that, the Government put the cart before the horse, and say they will give $3,200 a mile for the road, which the company may build when they like. The result is, that the country has to pay so much more than it would otherwise be required to. This is bringing the system down to a very small point, that a sum of $12,000 should have to be voted for four miles of road. The next thing will be that we will be granting a bonus to switches and to little roads running into mills.

On section 3.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would like to ask the hon. Minister in what position the South Ontario and Pacific Railway Company are. I think nothing was said to-day about it, as to when the work is likely to commence.

Mr. BOWELL. My information in reference to this road was, that when the revote of the subsidy was asked for it had been surveyed and partially located, and the intention was to go on with the road; so I was assured by the parties interested.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Soon?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; at once. I mean, as soon as it was revoted, so as to assure them the subsidy.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The surveys have taken place, and you mean the actual work was going on?

Mr. BOWELL. That is what I was assured by the representatives of the company.

Mr. MULOCK. Yesterday, when we were in Committee, I mentioned to the Committee that I thought it would be a good plan to adopt a system whereby the House should be informed yearly of what the expenditures have been made. For instance, I suggested I thought it would be only right that the House should have contracts or copies of contracts laid on the Table, and statements of moneys that are being paid or have been paid, and that view seemed to meet with the approval of the Government. If it does, I would like to add a clause requiring such a statement to be submitted to the House. I think such a statement should be furnished, and I have drawn an amendment to that effect.

Mr. BOWELL. I really do not see the necessity for that amendment, because the House at any time may call for any papers that it requires. There can be no possible objection to producing the contracts for each road.

Mr. MULOCK. I know we can get it by special motion, but there is certain information that I think the House is just as well entitled to as, for instance, the Public Accounts Committee are entitled to information. We require every year each departmental head to lay upon the Table certain information, and it comes down as a matter of course. One might just as well argue that we cannot get any information you like about the expenditure of public money without making a motion. But if it is a good thing to have it, why not let it be voluntarily laid upon the Table, instead of making it necessary to make a motion when you want to get information, and it will be weeks or months, perhaps, before it is produced, and Parliament may have been prorogued. Let it be understood that these people take the money subject to their giving you the information yearly as to what has been done with it. I will read the amendment:

That within one month after the commencement of each session of Parliament, whilst any of such moneys are being paid out, there shall be laid before Parliament a statement showing all the payments of such moneys during the then next preceding year, with the names of the respective persons to whom such payments shall have been made, and the amounts paid them respectively, and copies of all contracts, sub-contracts and other agreements under which any works of said railways in respect of which said subsidies are hereby authorized to be paid are being or shall have been constructed, as the case may be.

I think each company when it receives its money ought to accept it, subject to the obligation that this information should be laid upon the Table as a matter of course.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is a condition subsequent.

Mr. MULOCK. It is a condition of getting the gift, so they cannot complain if they are called upon to furnish these statements.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think we ought to accept that amendment without some little consideration. I think all the information asked for by the hon. gentleman appears in the Auditor General's Report, and I think it appears also in the Report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, but I am not speaking positively upon that point just now. I hope the hon. gentleman will put this motion on the Notice paper for Monday, and the Government will not ask the third reading of the Bill until that day, and in the meantime we will consider it.

Mr. MULOCK. The information asked for does not appear in any return made to Parliament. The more wide the information given the less possibility of misunderstanding occurring later on or suspicions being aroused.

Mr. BOWELL. I quite agree with you.

Mr. MULOCK. I desire that the railway company shall feel it to be their duty, before Parliament meets, to place this information in the hands of the Government to lay before Parliament. If it has to be obtained as the result of a motion, it will not be obtained.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY—NEWFOUNDLAND BAIT ACT.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. KAULBACH. I desire to claim the attention of the Government for a few moments to a matter of very vital importance to the interest of Canada, more particularly the Maritime Provinces. A subject similar in part to that submitted by me some weeks ago, and in keeping with a resolution I had placed on the Notice paper the early part of this session—and now that the session is nearing its close I approach you again to inspire you to action, to use your most active efforts, its importance being my only apology for claiming the indulgence of this House, to refer to it the second time—I refer particularly to the Bait Act of Newfoundland. The regulations relating to this matter issued by the Government of that colony, permitting vessels of a foreign nation—Americans—free access to all her ports for bait, whilst prohibiting or excluding Canadians from obtaining that article on any terms, is not only literally but practically an outrage, and should not have been tolerated as long as it has. Canada 'might in turn retaliate,' and exclude Newfoundland imports from her free list, but she has so far endured the insult, and not resented the unfriendly Act. It is admitted on all sides that Mr. Bond acted, to say the least of it, very unadvisedly in thus discriminating against Canadian fishermen; but it was done, no doubt, out of a feeling of revenge. Knowing it was the Canadian Government's intervention that blocked his absurd treaty with Blaine, a feeling of indignation, doubtless, was awakened when he found that Governor O'Brien received severe rebuke from the Imperial Government through the Colonial Secretary, and ordered to withdraw his assent to the Order in Council of the Newfoundland Government in this connection unless Canadians were included. Not satisfied with the ills he had attempted to practice on Canada, and the rebuke his Government suffered, he apparently, to vent out his spleen, cajoled the Government into granting, last spring, by regulation, free license to Americans, whilst refusing bait to Canadians. It is the prevailing opinion that when these regulations were made by the Newfoundland Government, prohibiting the sale of bait to Canadians, but permitting its sale to Americans, not only was the spirit of the Bait Act violated, but the assent of the Governor to those regulations was a breach of his instructions, which forbids his assent to any measure calculated to cause deferential treatment of other countries. I understand the Colonial Office had requested Governor O'Brien to withdraw his assent to regulations made last spring, unless Canadians received bait on the same terms as Americans. The case is more aggravated when we consider that the Bait Act received the Royal Assent on the express condition that it should not be permitted to operate against Canada or Canadian fishermen, and that Sir Robert Thornton, on behalf of the colony, gave the necessary pledge. To show the importance that attaches to this subject, Sir Charles Tupper, as High Commissioner for Canada, in a letter to the Colonial Office, dated London, 27th October, 1890, referring to the negotiations then going on between Mr. Bond and Secretary Blaine, with a view to an independent arrangement between the United States and Newfoundland relating to the fisheries, expresses himself thus:

"I believe I am right in saying that, in reference to the question of the Atlantic North American fisheries, Her Majesty's Government has hitherto invariably recognized the importance of obtaining unity of action, so far as was possible, on the part of the colonies interested. In the treaty of reciprocity with the the United States in 1854 the consent of Newfoundland, as well as of the various provinces of Canada, was made necessary to its going into operation; and the same course was followed, subsequent to Confederation, in reference to the treaties of 1871 and 1888."

And to show the significance he considers due to the subject, the following is his closing paragraph to his letter, with posteript, which reads thus:

"I should fail in my duty to the Crown, as well as to Canada, if I did not promptly assure your Lordship that I feel confident the difficulties of the vexed question of the British North American fisheries will be greatly increased by the wide departure that is now proposed from the long-established policy that has hitherto prevailed upon this very important question.

"I am, &c.,

"CHARLES TUPPER.

"The Right Hon. Lord KNUTSFORD, G.C.M.G.,
"Secretary of State for the Colonies.

"P.S.—Since writing my letter, I have received the following telegram from Sir John A. Macdonald, which I beg to quote for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government:—

"'Can scarcely believe Newfoundland has received authority from Imperial Government to make separate arrangement respecting fisheries. The relations of all the North American provinces to United States and to the Empire would be affected. We are not informed of powers given to Bond, and desire communication of them. Please represent strongly how the fishery and commercial interest of Canada will be injured by such an arrangement as Bond is currently reported as making, and how disastrous from a national point of view it would be for a separate colony to effect an arrangement with the United States more favourable than would be given to the confederated provinces. Our difficulties under new American tariff are sufficiently great now.—C. T.'"

Proving most conclusively that due regard has always been had by Canada for the interest of Newfoundland as a sister colony when any treaty hitherto has been formulated or agreed upon. A great anxiety prevails among fishermen, and owners of vessels, who have invested every dollar of their means in this industry, as to their fate in this connection. On their behalf, and in their interest, the interest of the entire fishing coast of Canada on the east, and Canada as a nation, I must ask the Government to use their every effort to see that this bait restriction, this embargo, is removed. Our fishermen have suffered serious losses this season, and feel that if they have any redress on the Newfoundland Government they have a right to seek it. Our fishermen are certainly not deserving of treatment of this kind at their hands, when we give them free entry to our ports, whilst we, a sister colony, are charged the same as foreigners. The eastern and northern shores of Nova Scotia (Cape Breton coast) at certain periods of the fishing season are the most prolific fish-producing coasts on the continent in proportion to extent: The south and south-west shore-men of Newfoundland, those who fish in large half-decked boats, locally called "Jacks," do about all their cod, herring and mackerel fishing on the shores of Cape Breton at certain seasons, landing without hindrance, to cure their fish, obtain bait, and all necessary supplies equally free with the resident fishermen. How different this is to the treatment shown to us by Newfoundland. I am informed that a shipper of one of our fishing vessels belonging to Lunenburg reports that he entered a Newfoundland port for bait this season, and was stoutly refused to be allowed to purchase one particle, but was compelled to pay the tonnage dues before he could leave, or suffer the rigour of their port regulations. This, Mr. Speaker, is literally an outrage. Many of our vessels are in debt beyond recovery, owing to restrictions on Newfoundland bait to Canadians last year and this. Must we submit to this treatment, and Newfoundland and St. Pierre be allowed to enter our ports, without an equivalent, or without our resenting such deal? Life is too short to tolerate it for one moment. Government have a right to be alive in this matter and protect our main source of livelihood, by imposing a duty upon imports of fish from all quarters hostile to us by regulation, tariff or otherwise. I am informed that on enquiry of fishermen returning from the Banks this season with a very limited catch, as to the cause, their one answer or cry was, want of bait, and, what little there was, was interfered with by American fishermen under the modus vivendi. I state seriously that if something is not done to correct this evil, and that at once, our vessels will be laid up, and fishermen who have put their all into the industry will, I fear, rise in open rebellion. If their living is taken from them, it means that or starve, fight or die. I am sorry to have to express myself in this way so strongly, but I am simply voicing the fishermen, and appearing as their mouthpiece. There was a time when we were not depending on Newfoundland for bait, when the Atlantic coast from New York to the Strait of Belle Isle, on the Labrador shore, was prolific of cod, mackerel, herring and other fish; but illicit, reckless and wasteful methods of fishing -- the cod net, the cod trap, the purse seine and other appliances, have gradually depleted the shore fisheries, as to give but a scanty and precarious living to those engaged in the enterprises in boats and small craft off the shores. In consequence of this, the fishermen are compelled to fish in deep water, and further from the coast, and to construct such a class of vessels essentially different from those employed off the shore, and of a class very superior in appearance, size and description to those of previous times, far more expensive, and better fitted and sufficiently staunch and strong to buffet all the seas and storms of the wild Atlantic, and with stowage capacity to fish the Grand Banks of Newfoundland. Hence the necessity and advisability of a bounty to fishermen to encourage the industry of fishing, and the very legitimate industry of shipbuilding. Such vessels are known as Bankers, which for style, swiftness, and safety, are not excelled in any part of the world. These vessels, with their snowy white sails and clipper-built hulls, present a spectacle more picturesque than anything I could describe, and when viewed in a stiff breeze, on the brow of a dashing sea, appear to skip from sea to sea, and but to play and make sport of the waves --not gentle and caressing waves—but fierce and mighty billows that bear along in wild ferocity. This is the description of craft that composes the fishing fleet of Lunenburg—the Gloucester of America, that our dauntless and brave fishermen claim as their companion and home, and boast that they feel as comfortable and as safe on board of one of them as in their own dwellings on terra firma. Here I am sorry to have to offer an exception in my allusion as to the safety of these vessels, as the late terrific hurricane which swept the Nova Scotia coast, carrying devastation in its course, on the 7th instant, I regret to say, has shown to the contrary, and has caused several to succumb—two with the cost of their crews—one from the port of Yarmouth and the other from the port of Lunenburg—proving there is One mightier than man. The latter vessel, the Morris Wildon, was well manned with brave hearts, the commander being not only brave, but a general favourite with all who knew him, and one of the most genial and intelligent of skippers. The sorrowing ones in this fatality who have lost their nearest and dearest have my sympathy. To support and sustain a fleet of this description requires protection and careful legislation, and I would strongly urge upon the Government of Canada that they bend their every energy in this direction, through the Imperial Government, to see that our rights are cared for; and in addition to the request, so important, regarding the Newfoundland Bait Act, that they use every prudence and caution, which I have every confidence in them they will do, that Canadian fishermen are not interfered with in any privileges they enjoy at present, or in any treaty they may formulate or consummate with the United States, our fishermen being unwilling to have the fishing privileges on our shores interfered with by Americans. My opinion is that, if we remain as we are, without any treaty with the United States, we can improve our position in every way, and ultimately be infinitely better off. A treaty with the United States could only give us a doubtful market for fish in their ports, and would not give us a market for our agricultural products, as they have a surplus of their own, which finds its way to Great Britain and other places—in fact, a large part to Canada, during the early season of summer; but give us commercial arrangements with England, and our position would be unquestionably greatly improved. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another matter of a very important nature which I desire to bring to the notice of the Government, and which is a very potent factor in the development of our trade with the West Indies. I refer to the trade treaty between Great Britain and Spain, which, as has been announced, will terminate 30th June, 1892. I observe what the hon. Minister of Finance announced to this House a few days ago in reference to this subject, in a letter received from the Foreign Office, dated 20th August, in course of which Sir Charles Tupper says he was advised by Sir F. Clare Ford, of the Foreign Office, "that it would be premature to press Spain in reference to future trade arrangements, pending the settlement of the French tariff." I trust, in the meantime, this Government will look carefully after the interests of the fishermen and farmers of Nova Scotia, who are very greatly concerned in this trade of the Spanish West Indies, and endeavour to arrange, before the present treaty expires, a treaty between Great Britain and her colonies with Spain, whereby our products and exports will be placed on an equal basis with those received by Cuba and Porto Rica from the United States. The value of the products sent to the Spanish West Indies last year from Nova Scotia amounted to over $1,000,000, consisting of dry codfish, potatoes, and lumber, being about one-ninth of the entire export of Nova Scotia. I feel satisfied that, as Sir Charles Tupper, as High Commissioner for Canada, looked after the interest of Canada so carefully in 1886, and obtained for her in that treaty, the most favoured nation treatment, he will be equal to the work if it is assigned him again, and will do the best that can be done for our interest in this connection. I observe that England's imports of Spanish wines, entered direct in 1889, was, in round numbers, something like $4,000,000, and her trade with Great Britain in other particulars is equally as valuable to her, so the outlook for a renewal of the treaty is not unfavourable. I repeat, I hope the Government will spare no pains to do all in their power to see the Newfoundland Bait regulations cancelled at once, and the Bait Act, through the influence of the Imperial Government, repealed at their next sitting of the Newfoundland Government, and the Spanish treaty with Great Britain, as respects our trade with Cuba and Porto Rica, renewed on a basis equal with that of the United States. With diligence and due care I feel we may rest assured the day is not far distant when Canada, with her industries well fostered, and her resources well developed, can place herself in the forefront in the commercial world, as a successful rival among nations.

Mr. TUPPER. I suppose I may say a word or two in reference to the question which the hon. gentleman has brought to the attention of the House. I regret that I am unable to give him the answer which he so much desires. He has been, as we all know, most persistent in keeping this question before the House, and in bringing it to the attention of the Government; and I can add to that, the Government have been equally persistent in discussing the subject in all its phases with both the Imperial Government and indirectly with the Government of Newfoundland. Although I am not at liberty at present to state, as I should like to do, exactly the position of the case, I think I can safely say this much, that while of necessity these matters take a very long time to settle, the correspondence among the three Governments is now approaching that condition when we have reason to expect a satisfactory settlement will be reached before next fishing season. We have no reason, however, to think that the position of affairs will be changed this year. Of course, the fishermen have been hampered, as the hon. gentleman says, but I trust it will be found that the enterprising men who have fitted out the magnificent fleet he has so graphically described, will be found not to have suffered to the extent his information leads him to believe they have, because many of the vessels have been engaged more or less in the fishing business this past season with varying success. I do not think it is necessary for us to admit that we are absolutely dependent on the ports of Newfoundland for the prosecution of the fishing industry, though it is a great convenience to enjoy the facilities of their ports, as I believe we have every right to do, under certain regulations, as well as our own.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the position at present?

Mr. TUPPER. At present we are not permitted to buy bait on any terms whatever in the ports of Newfoundland. The reason given is, that it is necessary to the successful administration of their Act as regards French fishing vessels that our vessels should be denied that right. Statements have been made—which we do not think are well founded—that our vessels in the past supplied French fishermen with bait obtained in the Newfoundland ports, and, consequently, the Government of that colony found it necessary to prohibit them from purchasing bait at all. I hope that by next spring a satisfactory settlement of the case will be arrived at.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand from the hon gentleman that the only motive for the exclusion of our fishermen from buying bait is the enforcement of that prohibition with regard to French vessels.

Mr. TUPPER. I do not know what may be the motive, but the allegation is, that it has been found our fishermen have violated the laws of Newfoundland by furnishing French fishing vessels with bait from the ports of Newfoundland.

Mr. LAURIER. If the difficulty were settled between France and England that prohibition would be removed.

Mr. TUPPER. No doubt, a strong reason in favour of it would be removed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. member for Lunenburg has used pretty strong language against the action of the Government of Newfoundland. I think that Government has reason for complaint against the Government of Canada. It will be remembered that some time ago the Government of Newfoundland, which is entirely independent of us, which has no connection with us, except the common connection with the United Kingdom, undertook to negotiate a treaty on its own behalf with the Government at Washington. The people of Newfoundland depend largely on their fishing industry and the markets they may be able to secure for the products of that industry. They had made arrangements satisfactory to them, by which they expected to secure, and would have secured, if we had not interfered, the American market for the sale of their fish. The Government of Canada prevented by its interference that treaty coming into operation, and it was not at all surprising that not only the Government but the people of Newfoundland have been greatly irritated by our action. Of course, the defence of this Government has been that separate and independent negotiations on the part of Newfoundland on its own behalf would be detrimental to the chances of negotiations between Canada and the United States, and they said that the Government of Newfoundland ought to be compelled in this respect to cast in its fortune with Canada, and should be prevented carrying on negotiations in its own behalf, if we could not carry on negotiations along with it. I am not going to say that the Government of Canada did not take, so far as the people of Canada are concerned, a view that is perhaps pecuniarly correct, namely, that we were more likely to secure negotiations in conjunction with Newfoundland than if Newfoundland were allowed to negotiate alone. But it must be remembered that the Government of the United Kingdom did permit Newfoundland to undertake negotiations on its own behalf, in conjunction with the British Minister in Washington, that these negotiations were successful, that the people of Newfoundland were satisfied, and that their position in consequence of our interference—not merely the position of their Government, but the actual condition of the entire population—has been most seriously and detrimentally affected. It is a question we ought to consider, how far that interference was justified. To say the least of it, it was taking an extremely selfish and narrow view, to sacrifice the interests of a colony, which is separate from us and whose people are so peculiarly situated that they have almost only the one means of subsistence, for they were necessarily sacrificed by the action of our Government. I say, I was in hopes that before this session was through we would have had an opportunity of discussing that matter very fully, for I do not believe, that the world is so situated, under the Divine government, that it is necessary we should do somebody else an injury in order that we might obtain ourselves the highest success in our own projects. It seems to me that is what we did. That is the assumption which underlies the action and policy of the Administration, and the protest of the Government of Canada against the Imperial Government allowing the treaty negotiated by the Newfoundland Government to come into operation was one, whatever may be its present and temporary advantage, calculated to create a feeling of hostility against us in Newfoundland not likely to be very soon allayed.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not intend to discuss this question, but I think it would be unfortunate to allow the expression of opinion which has just been placed on record to go without comment at least.

I am sorry the hon. gentleman has thought fit to make such a declaration at this period. If the question is so important as he has stated it to be, it would have been better to have had it brought up on a special motion, and have had a more extended discussion upon it. I do not understand quite the consistency of the hon. gentleman's position. In one breath he said he would not undertake to say that the action taken by the Government of Canada was not the correct one——

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I did not say that.

Mr. FOSTER—and in the next breath he proceeded to construct a case against Canada. He appeals to the divine motives underlying government in general and, he inveighs against the selfishness of our doing something which will prevent a neighbour from having advantages without getting the same for ourselves, without having seen that, if the negotiations of Newfoundland had been successful, though they might have inured to the advantage of Newfoundland, they would not have inured to the larger and greater interests of Canada, a sister colony, or to the still larger and greater interests of the Empire of which both Newfoundland and Canada form a part. He also says that this treaty would have been agreed to by the Newfoundland Government and approved of by the people, and would have been operative, to-day but for the action of Canada. In that respect, my hon. friend showed that he is not well informed on the subject, because it is evident to those who have studied the question that, when the whole matter, as arranged in a semi-official way by Mr. Bond, had been discussed and fully understood, it would not have been accepted by the people of Newfoundland.

Mr. LAURIER. Why, then, interfere?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not going into the further question of whether a component part of this great Empire, and a sister colony, should be allowed, against all precedent and against all constitutional practice, to make a separate treaty of its own fishing interest to the great detriment of the interest of the other portions of British North America, whose interests are infinitely greater than those of Newfoundland.

Mr. TUPPER. I simply desire to correct the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) in regard to one important phase of the case. As I understand, he bases his argument upon the action of this Government in reference to negotiations which took place between Mr. Bond and the Government of the United States, which he said caused all this trouble. I would point out to him that the trouble commenced before Mr. Bond's mission took place. Newfoundland took this adverse action a year before by the passage of the Bait Act, and the protest of the Canadian Government was lodged with the Imperial Government at that time.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I said the action of this Government was one which interfered with the rights of a colony which was entirely independent of us, and that by that action irreparable injury had been done to the interests of Newfoundland, and that the Government had incurred the deep hostility of the people of that Island in consequence of their interference.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not rise to take any art in the dicussion, though it is a very important one. I am very glad, however, that the Minister of Finance has made the statement he did, because it would be unfortunate to allow it to go abroad that we made any unnecessary interference with a sister colony. What I desire to say, however, is that I am disappointed on behalf of my constituents at not finding a sum in the Estimates for the dredging of Collingwood harbour. This harbour, unfortunately, owing to the fluctuation in the depth of the water, is not able to receive the class of vessels now trading upon the Georgian Bay. A year ago a survey was made to see what would be required to dredge it to a depth, not only for present use, but for the larger class of vessels which are likely to be trading on the upper lakes. It was proved that dredging to certain depths was required, and the town council of Collingwood applied to the Government and proposed to expend 25 per cent. of the amount that would be required to do what was necessary for that harbour. They fully hoped and expected to find that that offer would be entertained, and that some progress would be made with the necessary work. They are naturally very much interested in the subject, because it is essential to the well-being of the town of Collingwood that this should be carried out. It is a harbour of great importance, a harbour of refuge, and two piers have been made there which render it a very safe harbour, but the dredging has not been sufficient to accommodate the vessels that will be coming there.

Mr. DYER. I desire to call the attention of the Government to the fact that they have omitted to place an item in the Estimates for the harbour of Newport, on Lake Memphremagog. These people have long been expecting the Government to complete that work. The only passenger steamer there cannot put into that harbour in consequence of the shallowness of the water.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask the indulgence of the House while I say a few words, more especially as the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) spoke twice.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I did not.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an item in the main Estimates for dredging, and it is contemplated by the Public Works Department to have one of their dredges employed in Collingwood harbour when the winter is over.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman is referring to any item in the Estimates he is out of order.

Mr. FOSTER. No, it is not in the Estimates; it is out of the Estimates.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood him to say that there was an item in the Estimates for a dredge.

Mr. FOSTER. In the main Estimates that we have passed.

Mr. SPEAKER. I wish to draw the attention of the hon. member that he cannot discuss any item that has been passed in Committee of Supply, and if the hon. member is discussing an item that has been passed he is out of order.

Mr. FOSTER. I wanted to explain that item. I will simply say to my hon. friend that it is proposed to send a dredge upon the lake, and that dredge will undertake operations after the season commences next spring, and will continue operations in that harbour up to the month of July, on the understanding, of course, that the people of Collingwood give one-fourth of the expenditure that is made. With reference to what was said by my hon. friend from Brome (Mr. Dyer), I may say that an item was placed in the Estimates to do what he asks, and that by an error in the revision of the estimates it has been struck out. Fortunately it was not a large sum, and the amount that is required to do that necessary work will be taken from the general vote. My hon. friend may rest assured that the work will be carried out.

Mr. McNEILL. I also would like to say to the Minister that I would like a little money expended in my constituency, at Wiarton, and Colpoy's, and Lion's Head, and Southampton, Port Elgin, and Dyer's Bay, and one or two other places I might mention. I do not know that it would be well for me to enter into minute particulars with regard to all these places at the present time. I would like to make a general request of the Government that they would attend to these ports as speedily as possible, and make a sort of a general grant for North Bruce. I had hoped to see my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Madill) in his place, as he intended to refer to the matter.

Mr. McCARTHY. He will be here on Monday.

Mr. McNEILL. I am informed he will be here on Monday, and I will take up the matter then.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Oxford and New Glasgow Railway—
Revote..... $42,672 24

Mr. LAURIER. What is this item? Why was not the money expended?

Mr. FOSTER. It lapsed.

Mr. LAURIER. Why did it lapse?

Mr. BOWELL. This is the second time we have voted this sum during the present Parliament. These are items that were voted in the Supplementary Estimates for 1890-91. Portions of the work had not been completed on the 30th of June; consequently, this proportion of the revote lapsed, and we have now to revote it. The leader of the Opposition will remember that I explained fully the purposes for which this money was required when the total amount was voted in the Supplementary Estimates. The revote for the Oxford and New Glasgow, in the first supplementaries, was $233,000. There has been expended of that up to the 30th June the total amount, less the sum now asked for; so that it is simply a revote of that which was voted in June. I may mention to the hon. gentleman that all these votes are of that character, with the exception of $600 for stairs from the Halifax station to Water street.

Increased accommodation at New Glasgow..... $3,000

Mr. BOWELL. That is not a revote. We took the sum of $8,000 for the purpose of constructing a station house and a freight shed, and we found, when we received tenders, that it could not be done for less than $11,000 or $12,000, unless we reduced the dimensions of the building.

To pay Ronald McMillan compensation for land expropriated for railway purposes, with interest, taxed costs, and Government costs, as per judgment of Exchequer Court..... $3,300

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). When was that item adjudicated upon?

Mr. BOWELL. That was a dispute as to the value of lands that were taken by the Government to enable the railway to reach the wharf at Charlottetown. Some difficulty arose between the navigation company, in reference to this matter, and the Railway Department. They agreed to pay a certain sum if the Government would make a switch down to the wharf. It was supposed at that time that this land could be procured for about $500, which the navigation company promised to pay; but afterwards a dispute arose as to its value, and the Goverment made a proposal to pay what they deemed a proper sum. This was refused, and the case was sent to the Exchequer Court, who gave a judgment against us. We shall, however, receive $500 from the navigation company.

To pay legal representative of the late James Goodwin, interest on the amount, $67,260, awarded by the arbitrator on the 28th March, 1883, for work executed under his contract for the Grenville Canal enlargement, such interest being calculated from the date of reference to arbitration, 10th September, 1874, to the date of payment, 3rd April, 1883. $34,571 64

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is an old matter.

Mr. BOWELL. It is an old matter, and, unfortunately, a very expensive one. Perhaps I had better give the Committee the full information upon which we came to a decision to pay this sum. On a memorandum dated the 9th February, 1891, from the Minister of Railways and Canals, representing that under the authority of an Order in Council passed on the 7th of September, 1874, reference to Mr. Page (then Chief Engineer of Canals) was made for the sole arbitrament on certain claims presented by Mr. James Goodwin arising out of his contract for work on the Grenville Canal. The Minister further represents that Mr. Page did not make his award until the 20th March, 1883, when he awarded the sum of $67,260, which amount was paid in April, 1883. Mr. George Goodwin, the representative of the said contractor, has put forward a claim to be paid interest on this amount, and the matter having been referred to the Department of Justice, the following opinion has been given by that department:—

"Upon reference to the award it would appear that no sum was awarded to James Goodwin for interest or in consequence of delay in payment, and there is on the fyles a letter from Sir Charles Tupper confirming the statement of Mr. Goodwin that the question of interest was not taken into consideration by the arbitrator."

The original contract contained a stipulation to the effect:

"That should the amount voted for the service by the Legislature be at any time expended previous to the completion of the work, the Government might stop the work at any time, and that the contractor should not be entitled to any further payment for work done after service of a notice to that effect, until the necessary funds should have been voted by the Legislature, nor should the contractor have any claim for compensation or damages for the said suspension of payment.

"I think, considering the following facts, viz.:

"(a.) That as between subject and subject interest would be allowed in a case of this kind to a contractor upon the amount of his claim.

"(b.) That the principle which will only allow payment of six years' interest ceases to operate from the commencement of a proceeding to its close, so that a party entitled to six years' interest before action is entitled to have added to his verdict all interest which accrues from the commencement of the action until the verdict, no matter what length of time intervenes between the commencement and termination of the proceedings.

"(c.) That the delay of payment in this case was solely occasioned by the act of a Government officer to whom the case was referred.

"(d.) That the contractor had no possible means of expediting the proceedings and obtaining payment at an earlier stage, inasmuch as the matter, having been referred by the agreement of parties to arbitration, no petition of right would have been allowed.

"(e.) That the contract itself, if not expressly, by implication would seem to have contemplated the payment of compensation for delay of payment in certain events.

"(f.) That the contractor is, I think, morally entitled to compensation, inasmuch as the delay in payment for so many years must necessarily have been of damage to him, and a loss which is rarely equalized by payment of ordinary interest.

"(g.) That heretofore the Government and Parliament have frequently authorized the payment of interest in cases similar to this.

"I think that should the Government pay simple interest on the amount of the award at the rate of 6 per cent. from the date of the original reference in this matter to the date of payment of principal, such payment being just and equitable in fact, would be defensible.

"The Minister concurring, recommends that authority be given for placing in the Estimates to be laid before Parliament in the forthcoming session an item covering the amount required to pay Mr. Goodwin in accordance with the above quoted opinion."

The Committee of Privy Council concurred in that report and hence the item is placed in the Estimates.

Mr. LAURIER. When was the demand from Mr. Goodwin for interest made for the first time?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think it is set forth in the papers. I am informed he claimed interest immediately after payment of the award in 1882.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The statement of the Minister is an explanation so far as it goes. There are, however, two points he might explain a little further. These papers lay the blame on the arbitrator for not proceeding with the work until five years had elapsed. What caused that delay? The second point is, as to why this question has never been raised from 1883 until now.

Mr. BOWELL. I am informed that Mr. Page, in making the award, gave no reason for the delay, and the department is now not aware of it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This matter having stood so long, it would be better to pay another year's interest, if it is proved to be due, and allow the matter to remain until next session, when we can obtain some information in regard to it. It requires explanation. We have not even received a copy of the award or any papers in connection with it. There is first a delay of nine years before the arbitration is entered upon, and not until eight years afterwards is any claim made for interest. We are entirely in the dark as to the matter.

Mr. BOWELL. If any other information can be obtained it will be furnished. The arbitration, and the result of the arbitration, are set forth by the Minister of Justice. He must have had all the papers before him when he gave his opinion. He bases that opinion on the principle of equity as between subject and subject. He gives the opinion that the Government should not take advantage of any lapse of time that occurred from Mr. Page not making his report and award. The letter I read to the House gives as full information as can possibly be given from the papers I have submitted.

Mr. LAURIER. No.

Mr. BOWELL. I am assured by the department that Mr. Goodwin himself made a demand for the interest immediately after the award was given.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman will admit that the information he has given to the House may have satisfied the Minister of Justice at the time, but it will not satisfy the House, because hon. members are not in possession of the facts which were laid before the Minister. The hon. gentleman will see what an extraordinary claim this is. It was refered to arbitration in 1874, and nine years afterwards the arbitrator made the award. What prevented Mr. Page making the award before nine years had elapsed? We are brought face to face with these hard facts, that nine years had elapsed after the matter had been referred to arbitration and the parties had agreed to accept Mr. Page's decision before Mr. Page arrived at a conclusion. We are told that upon this award being rendered that the contractor obtained a sum of $67,200.

Mr. BOWELL. Perhaps if the hon. gentleman will allow me, I will make a proposition, which, if he approves of it, may shorten the discussion. The Minister of Justice, who is more intimately acquainted with this subject than I am, has gone to Montreal, and I will allow the item to remain until he returns. In the meantime, I will obtain the award and all other papers connected with the matter.

Mr. LAURIER. Very well.

Chambly Canal..... .....$5,000

Mr. LAURIER. I desire to call the attention of the Minister to the case of a man named Martial who was employed by the Government on the Chambly Canal, and who while discharging his duties was injured by an accident. The Government, I believe, offered him at the time to employ him as a guardian and to give him a salary of $38 per month, provided he paid his own medical attendance. He thought that not sufficient, and I understand he applied to the Minister of Justice for a petition of right, which was refused, but after a delay of twelve months I believe he accepted the offer made by the Government. He was fulfilling the duties in the meantime, but he was claiming a larger salary, and now he has made a claim to be paid by the Government for the twelve months that the matter was pending between him and the Government. If the Government offered him a certain sum at a certain time, and if he only accepted it later on, under the expectation that he could obtain more, it seems to me a matter of justice that this man should be paid in full from the time the offer was made to him. I bring the case to the attention of the Minister, hoping that it will meet with his sympathy and be fully considered.

Mr. BOWELL. The case has not been brought under my notice, and it has escaped the memory of the deputy. While admitting the moral, not the legal responsibility of the Government in cases where employé are injured, I am scarcely prepared to accept the doctrine laid down by the hon. gentleman, that if we make an offer of compensation to a man, and he refuses to accept it because he cannot get more, and subsequently accepts it, that we ought to pay him from the beginning.

Mr. LAURIER. I would say so too, but that is not the case here. The Government appointed him as a guardian because he was disabled, and gave him a salary of, I believe, $25 per month. He claimed a salary of $38 per month, and the Government did not think fit to accept his offer. He was acting during the entire time, and the claim is only that he should be paid the difference.

Mr. BOWELL. I will carefully consider the whole case.

Lunenburg Post Office, Custom House, &c. $5,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). When was this work started?

Mr. FOSTER. The land was bought two years ago. The plans are now about finished, and it is intended to carry on the work during the ensuing year.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is the work under contract?

Mr. FOSTER. Not yet under contract.

Summerside, Charlottetown and Montague public buildings—Balance of commission due superintending architects on works carried out, 1885-86..... $1,714 91

Mr. LAURIER. What is the explanation of this?

Mr. FOSTER. This has been delayed on account of the death of Mr. Sparling, the principal architect. This claim lay over in the adjustment of his affairs.

Quebec—West Farnham P.O..... $4,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this a new building?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. It has not been started. This is the first vote.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the amount of the receipts?

Mr. FOSTER. The postal revenue is about $2,000; the money orders issued and paid are about $17,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. I must say that this is a violation of the principle which has long been laid down, that until a post office yields a certain revenue a building should not be erected. There are half-a-dozen places in my constituency which yield double the revenue of this place, and which have not been given post offices. I think it is not right that post offices costing $15,000 or $20,000 should be built in places yielding a revenue of only $2,000.

Mr. BAKER. The town of Farnham, as most members of the Committee are aware, is an important one. It is a great railway centre, with extensive shops, and it is the seat of important manufactures, including a beet-root sugar manufactory. The census shows that the rate of increase in the population has been 44 per cent. in the last ten years. The revenue of the office is about $2,000, and the Government, in taking steps to provide for a public building for the transaction of its business, is only doing tardy justice to that place. So far as the cost of the building is concerned, I hope my hon. friend is exaggerating it, for I have no hesitation in saying that I think it would be a piece of extravagance to erect a very expensive building there. All that is required is a building sufficient to meet the requirements of the business. It is to be hoped that Farnham will be made a port of entry in the not distant future, and in the meantime the Government is doing wisely and well in making an appropriation for the erection of a suitable building there for the transaction of public business.

Mr. McMULLEN. I find that the actual receipts at Farnham are $1,826.53; the money orders amount to $13,745; the salary paid is $530; the forwarding allowance, $24, and the rent paid, $80; and you are going to build a new post office in a place like that. There are dozens of places with more receipts which have no post offices, and it is nothing short of an outrage, both on Parliament and the country, to build a post office here purely and simply for political purposes, only to strengthen the seat of my hon. friend. I have nothing against my hon. friend. I congratulate him on the success that he has achieved in his efforts to get a post office built there. He has done well, and I would advise him, if there are places in his constituency where the receipts are only $900, to try and get post offices built there also. But I blame the Government for what I consider a bare-faced piece of jobbery—nothing short of it.

Mr. BAKER. I must certainly repel the assertion of my hon. friend that this sum is put in the Estimates for political purposes. It is nothing of the kind; and, so far as the personal suggestion is concerned, that it was put there at my instance, to strengthen my position in the county, I repel that with indignation. My hon. friend has such a habit of making these insinuations that I attribute what he has said to-day to the force of habit; for I am very certain that if he had taken the trouble to inform himself of the position and possibilities of the town of Farnham he would have spared this Committee the exhibition of political malice which he has displayed.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, I have not lost an opportunity, since I have become a member of this House, to draw its attention to the impropriety of erecting public buildings at places where the revenues are so exceedingly limited as they are at the town which my hon. friend represents. He says it has increased in population. I am glad that it has, and I am sorry so many towns have decreased. But the point at issue is not the increase of population, but the respective business to be done. There are a hundred places in Canada where the money order transactions are four or five times what they are at this place, where the revenues are three times greater, where the rent paid is more than double, and where there are no post office buildings. Will hon. gentlemen opposite explain why this discrimination is made? My hon. friend says it is not for political purposes. I would like to know then what it is for—why the Government have thought it wise, out of the whole Dominion, to select the little town of Farnham, and decide to build a post office there?

Mr. BAKER. I am not going to allow my hon. friend to belittle me, or the town of Farnham, without remonstrance. The immediate cause of the insertion of this sum in the Estimates was the resolution passed by the corporation of the town of Farnham, setting forth the reasons for building a post office and calling the attention of the Government to the necessity of doing so. The members of the Government, with that desire to promote the public interest which has characterized them for so many years, considered the question and deemed it expedient to grant the petition of the council of Farnham. That is how this sum found its way into the Estimates. I am sure if my hon. friend would only treat himself to a journey in that part of the country he would see its capabilities are quite sufficient to justify the Government in the course they took.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is only to be expected and it is only right that an hon. gentleman should defend the grant for his own constituency. But I would ask the hon. gentleman, who thinks this vote is simply on the ground of public interest, whether the Government are not very unfortunate in their care for public interests in not having erected a building of this kind in the town of Woodstock, which is five or six times as large as the one in question? If the Government had a line laid down by which, when the revenue of any place reached a certain amount, a building would be provided, there would be no occasion for these remarks. But votes such as this are sure to call forth comment, when places in my constituency, and notably in the constituency of Oxford, are found unprovided with public buildings, though their claims are much greater than many places to which public buildings are given. The Government do not act on principles of equity, and leave their conduct open to the imputation that it is governed by other motives than a desire to promote the public welfare.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think the hon. member for Missisquoi is a pretty brave man to come over to this side and find fault with the criticism of the item to build a post office in the town of Farnham. The hon. member for North Wellington does not wish to disparage that town, but he recollects that a year or two ago the principle was admitted in this House that public buildings should only be erected where the public interest demanded their erection. It has been shown that there are many places in which the public interest requires the erection of public buildings more urgently than the town of Farnham. But the hon. member for North Wellington forgot that there are other considerations besides national and material considerations. There are political considerations. My hon. friend, I understand, has a protest hanging over him, and I think wherever it is found a building is put up in a place where the revenue is small you will find there a protest. I hope my hon. friend will not consider I am saying a word in disparagement of Farnham. That county has been in the past represented by great and illustrious men, and I would be willing to do anything I could for it, but there are other places where the demands are more urgent.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am bound to accept the statement of the hon. member for Missisquoi, that he had nothing to do with the obtaining of the grant, but that it was given on the petition of the Board of Trade and council of the town. But, a few sessions ago, this House adopted unanimously, with the consent of the Government, a resolution laying down the principle that appropriations for the erection of public buildings would depend on the amount of revenue derived. Since then, the Board of Trade and the municipal council of the town of Woodstock presented a petition to this Government asking for the erection of a post office in that town. My hon. friend referred to the importance of the town of Farnham. But if he will compare it with the town of Woodstock he will find that Woodstock has three times the population, that its population has increased in a greater percentage during the last ten years, and that it is a more important railway, manufacturing and commercial centre, and furnishes ten times the amount of revenue, if not more. In view of the resolution which was passed by this House, when, as my hon. friend says, there were no political reasons for the vote in question, I would like to have an explanation why no notice was taken of the representations of the town of Woodstock. The memorial of our council and Board of Trade was sent to at least five, if not more, members of the Government, and I do not think that even one them had the courtesy to acknowledge the receipt or state that it would receive consideration, which would have been some balm to an important section of the country. I am certain this matter was laid before the different members of the Government. The Minister of Customs had copies of the memorial presented to him, but the Government had not even the courtesy to acknowledge receipt of the petitions.

Mr. BOWELL. You do not apply that to me.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I apply it to every member of the Government who received the petitions. You do not deny having received it?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not remember, but if I received it I must have acknowledged receipt.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In addition to the one sent to the hon. gentleman by the secretary of the Conservative Association, who is also secretary of the Board of Trade, I presented a copy of a memorial to the Minister myself personally, and as I did so he said "thank you;" but while I have always been treated with the greatest courtesy by the Ministers in laying matters before them, and have no complaint to make on that score, the official representations were not acknowledged. I have no particular complaint to make so far as the town or the county is concerned, except that, if the principle is to be acknowledged, as advocated by my hon. friend from Missisquoi (Mr. Baker) and other members of the House on a former occasion—Conservative members of the House—that the position of the town of Woodstock was such that they would either have to support the construction of public buildings there or to say that the Government was not influenced by public opinion in the expenditure of public money. I would like some member of the Government to say upon what principle these grants are made, if they are not made for political reasons. I think everyone must acknowledge that there must be some other reason than that which has been given, and we are left to judge what reason it may be. I may say that, if the Government and the member for Missisquoi and others are so influenced in this matter, they should take into consideration the public interest, which I think ought to govern the distribution of public money, and in the near future they should consider the claims of the town of Woodstock and make an appropriation for it.

Mr. BAKER. I must have carelessly expressed myself if I led the hon. gentleman to imagine that I said I had nothing whatever to do with the matter. I brought it before the department. I was anxious to see, and happy to find, that the rights of the town were affirmed. The hon. gentleman is right when he says there is an election petition there, and it is an orthodox petition. It came into existence upon a deposit made by Messrs. Mercier, Beausoleil, Choquette & Co., and they are the attorneys for the petitioner. So far as the merits of the case are concerned, I have had similar cases before in my experience, but they have never yet prevailed. Matters are conducted in that part of the Dominion on such pure grounds that we are not afraid of any petition.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I desire to call the attention of the Government to the fact that there is no appropriation in the Estimates for a building in the town of Alliston.

Mr. LAURIER. Perhaps there has been no resolution of the council.

Mr. TYRWHITT. In an early part of the session I wrote to Sir John Macdonald, and he promised me in writing that this post office should remain. I asked that this should be given to the town because the old office had been destroyed by fire. I was told that a sum would be put in the Estimates to build post offices in places according to their population and revenue. The revenue in Alliston is $2,330, or about $500 more than in the place now under discussion.

Mr. LANDERKIN. But you are an Equal Righter.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I may say that it is for no corrupt reason that I ask for this grant. It cost me $2.50 for printing to be elected, and I think I can be elected again for the same sum.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Certainly the hon. gentleman is a very cheap candidate, and it is, no doubt, an honour for him. I may remind you that there was a resolution of this House which left no discretion to the Administration, declaring that the construction of public buildings should be in the order of the importance of the places, and that was to be decided by the population and the amount of revenue. In my constituency there are three or four places where the revenue is very much larger than at this place. I tell the Administration that they have violated the pledge given to this House, they have disregarded the mandate of this House, that the expenditure should be made in places according to their population and their revenue. The hon. gentleman puts an item in the Estimates for a building in a place with a revenue of less than $1,900, while there are scores of places with a larger population and a larger revenue. I ask why the Government disregards its pledge on this subject? The dignity of the House and the honour of the Administration are pledged to this principle, and it is not easy to understand what grounds the Government can give for disregarding the mandate of Parliament. The hon. gentleman passes by an important town like Woodstock, and undertakes to give a building to a place like Farnham. There are scores of places in this country where more revenue is collected and where it would be of much greater importance to expend this money. In many places where these buildings are put up they will require caretakers, and so on, adding to the public expense and enormously increasing the the fixed expenditure, without any corresponding increase in the revenue, and this is one of these places. There are places where large amounts of revenue are collected, and where it is important that public buildings should be erected in the public interest, but this is not one of those places. I say the Administration are not keeping faith with the House; they are disregarding the principle laid down in this House, without a single dissentient voice, for the guidance of the Administration, and acquiesced in by the members of the Administration, and this House ought not to allow this item to pass without the Government taking the responsibility of asking the House to repeal the resolution adopted twelve months ago. I say, Sir, that the hon. gentlemen cannot go on in this kind of way. The day of boodling, and of commissions, and this attempting to bribe constituencies with their own money, has gone by. We can no longer tolerate it.

Mr. FOSTER. Since the day you got a subsidy for railways in your own county, and filed out of the door to escape voting on it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And the hon. gentleman's leader and master approved of that proposition. The hon. gentlemen need not undertake to defend this. These hon. gentlemen, two months ago, led the public to believe there was to be a reform in the administration of public affairs, that the Government of the country was going to be cleansed of impurities, and that they were going to remove from office those who were guilty of misconduct, and henceforth were going to administer even-handed justice to men in Parliament and out of Parliament, to men on the Government side and on the Opposition side. They had laid down the rule last year by which the public expenditures should be made. These public expenditures are made out of the moneys of the people of this country, and not out of the moneys belonging to the Administration. The hon. gentlemen sitting on the Treasury benches are the trustees of the people, and it is our business to see that that trust is fairly administered, and that the scales of justice are held evenly between all classes of the population of this country. I tell the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches that this cannot go on any longer. We enter our protest against their policy. We carried with their consent last year, through this House, a resolution affirming a principle that was perfectly fair, and we ask these hon. gentlemen to observe that, and to remember that they are no longer the masters of the people of this country, or the masters of Parliament. This policy they are pursuing now can no longer be sustained, and the people of this country shall hear of it from one end of it to the other, until those hon. gentlemen either reform their policy or retire from the positions which they occupy. They must remember that they are the trustees of the people of this country, that the moneys they are expending are not their own moneys, but moneys which belong to the people. We find large places where there are thousands of dollars of revenue collected yearly that are left without proper office accommodation, because they are in constituencies represented by Reformers in this House, and here we find a constituency carried by the hon. gentleman from Missisquoi (Mr. Baker), in which there is a small village and a post office yielding a revenue of a little over $1,800 a year, which is to be provided with a public building, entailing a large expense upon the people of this country, simply because it happens to be in a constituency that he represents, or that may be pretty close between the two parties.

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Sir, I am in order. I want the Committee to understand that the rule laid down by those gentlemen has been disregarded. Does the hon. gentleman deny that? Does he pretend to say that he did not support last year the resolution in which it was declared that the expenditure of this country for post offices should be made in places where the largest amount of revenue was collected, and he is disregarding that at this moment. He has left Woodstock without any proper provision, and he is undertaking to make a provision for this village. That is what the hon. gentleman is doing, and I say that course cannot be tolerated. The people of this country must know how the revenues are being used by those hon. gentlemen. I say that they are used in a way that amounts to a misuse of the money of this country.

It being six o'clock, the Committee rose and the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McMULLEN. Before recess the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) drew the attention of the House to the fact that a year ago a resolution introduced by himself had been unanimously passed in this House with regard to the underlying principles upon which the public money should be expended on public buildings. On that occasion the hon. gentleman made quite a lengthy speech. I shall not read the entire speech; I do not wish to weary the Committee; but I wish to draw attention to a few words that he made use of in the inception of that address:

"Before that motion is submitted to the House I desire to address to it some observations upon the subject of which I gave notice some time ago, when certain public expenditures were under consideration. I think it is highly desirable that some general rule should be laid down in these matters, where it is possible, which will preserve, as largely as it can be preserved, the control of this House over those expenditures which are made for public improvements."

That was virtually the text of his address to the House upon that occasion. After he had presented the case very forcibly, he moved the following resolution:—

"That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved that in the expenditure of public money the public interest and not party favouritism should control, and in the choice of places for the erection of public buildings for post offices, Customs houses and Inland Revenue purposes, regard should be had to the amount of revenue collected and the public business done."

Now, Sir, the hon. Premier, at that time Sir John A. Macdonald, made use of the following language:—

"Now, in my opinion, the principle laid down in this House by this gentleman is perfectly correct. I agree with what my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has stated, that every expenditure of public money should be based on good, sound reasons, that it should have a justification, that it should not be for the purpose of helping one's friends. That is quite true."

Now, that was the statement that the Minister made in reply, and in the closing part of his address he said:

"However, Sir, although a motion of this kind moved in amendment upon going into Supply, is in a way a motion of want of confidence in the Government, yet I have no doubt, from the whole tone of his speech, that the hon. gentleman did not desire that it should be so considered. To prevent any misapprehension on that point I should have preferred that my hon. friend had made his motion as a substantive motion, but I wish to say that I have not the slightest objection to it, and I shall vote for it."

Now, that was the statement of Sir John A. Macdonald in reply to the address delivered by Mr. Mills on that very important question with regard to the expenditure of public money, after forcibly presenting the grounds upon which he considered the public money should be spent. The hon. the First Minister admitted that the grounds were tenable, and should be accepted, and he, on behalf of the Government, accepted that resolution, and it passed this House unanimously. Now, I would like to know on what grounds the present appropriation is made, and why it is made in violation of the position taken by the Government, and admitted by them, and how it is that they have violated that position by asking this Committee to grant a sum towards the building of a post office in Farnham. On looking over the list I hold in my hand of the places in Ontario where the annual revenue is in excess of the sum that is collected at Farnham, I find that there are something less than 54 places. In order to make a forcible impression on the Committee, I will read over the list. Take Alexandria, for instance, in the County of Glengarry, which returns $2,291.06 of receipts; in Almonte, County of Lanark, the receipts are $4,176.26; Amherstburgh, Essex, $2,000.34, Arnprior, $3,581; Aurora, $2,263; Aylmer West, $4,201; Blenheim, $2,529; Bowmanville, $4,745; Brussels, $2,541; Campbellford, $3,298; Carleton Place, $4,359; Chesley, $2,613; Colborne, $2,911; Clinton, $4,541; Collingwood, $5,822; Deseronto, $4,142; Dresden, $2,278; Dunnville, $3,028; Durham, $2,066; Elora, $2,235; Essex Centre, $3,271; Exeter, $2,106; Forest, $2,574; Gananoque, $5,041; Glencoe, $2,335; Gravenhurst, $2,802; Harriston, $3,092; Hespeler, $2,393; Huntsville, $2,187; Ingersoll, $8,556; Iroquois, $2,056; Kincardine, $4,135; Leamington, $2,716; Lindsay, $8,091; Listowell, $4,129; Lucknow, $2,349; Madoc, $2,169; Mattawa, $2,895; Meaford, $3,050; Midland, $2,438; Milton West, $2,370; Mitchell, $3,314; Morrisburg, $3,888; Mount Forest, $3,902; Newmarket, $3,441; North Bay, $2,919; Norwich, $2,244; Norwood, $2,134; Oakville, $2,364; Oshawa, $5,453; Owen Sound, $9,626; Paisley, $2,777; Paris, $2,661; Parkdale, $5,268; Parkhill, $2,850; Petrolia, $6,113; Port Arthur, $4,972; Port Elgin, $2,181; Port Perry; $2,805; Prescott, $4,811; Preston, $2,156; Rat Portage, $2,675, Renfrew, $3,804; St. Mary's, $5,850; Sarnia, $8,505; Sault Ste. Marie, $3,548; Shelburne, $2,357; Simcoe, $5,139; Smith's Falls $6,023; Sudbury, $2,844; Thorold, $2,854; Tilsonburg, $4174; Uxbridge, $3,526; Trenton, $5,011; Wallaceburg, $2,831; Waterloo West, $4,263; Watford, $2,479;

Welland, $3,343; West Toronto Junction, $3,420; Whitby, $4,235; Wingham, $3,976; Woodstock, $15,432; Yorkville, $6,277. In this list there are 54 places in Ontario where the receipts are considerably in excess of $2,000, while the entire receipts at Farnham only amount to $1,826. The members of the Government accepted the suggestion of the First Minister last year and adopted the resolution submitted by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). One of these places I have named, Woodstock, has receipts of $15,000, while Ingersoll and other places contribute very largely to post office revenue; many places contributing in excess of $5,000 a year. The average of the 54 places I have mentioned will be at least $750 a year more than is contributed by Farnham for which the hon. gentleman wants a vote to erect a post office. I want hon. gentlemen opposite to explain on what basis they claim that the House should consent to this vote, in view of the resolution unanimously adopted by the House last year? I contend, further, that before we consent to the erection of any post office we should have laid on the Table of this House a diagram with the plans and specifications and every item of information that can possibly be presented, before we consent to pass the first dollar towards its erection. In the history of the construction of post offices since 1867—more particularly the history of post offices erected from 1880 or 1881—there is not a single post office in which the sum said to be required to complete it has not been far exceeded. Take, for instance, the investigation we have had in connection with the Napanee post office, for which the estimate presented to the House was $25,400 and which has actually cost $48,000 including site, sidewalks and everything else. Even supposing there was justifiable ground upon which the Government should ask this House to consent to the passage of the item, I claim that in the first place we should have the plans and specifications with a certificate of the anticipated cost from the chief engineer, and that the building should be completed for the sum we are asked to vote. What have been our experience in regard to these matters? First, a resolution is brought in for perhaps $1,000 to buy the site, or, as in the present case, for $4,000 to start the building. Then the site is purchased and the walls and roof of the building probably cost far in excess of the sum voted. Then, next session, the Government ask for a further vote to put the fittings in and complete the building, and in the end the building has probably cost three or four times the amount at first anticipated. In like manner that has been our experience with regard to the construction of railways. There is at first a certain vote, and then an increased expenditure from year to year until such time as the building is completed. I contend that before we pass this vote the Government should lay on the Table of this House the estimate by the chief engineer of what this post office is going to cost ultimately. I say that we are entitled to that information before the item should pass for the building of a post office at Farnham in the constituency of my hon. friend from Missisquoi (Mr. Baker). Has the Minister got the plans and specifications?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the Minister say what is to be the limit of the cost of the building?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot say what is to be the exact limit, but it is to be a very moderate building.

Mr. McMULLEN. We have been so accustomed to promises of that kind, and to see them so often broken, that it is useless for the Committee to anticipate that that statement is correct. I have no doubt that the Minister would like to keep within a moderate limit, and I pay him the compliment of saying that I have no doubt he intends to do so. I do not care whether or not the hon. gentleman feels complimented at that statement, for it makes little difference to me. I am merely stating what I think is the truth, and as I expect no favour I will not be disappointed if I do not get it. Is the building to be fitted up for a Custom house as well as a post office? Is it a port of revenue?

Mr. FOSTER. It is to be suitable for a post office and for Customs and Inland Revenue to whatever extent it may be required.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister of Customs intimates that there is no port of entry there, and, if the statement of the Minister of Finance is correct, you are anticipating the purposes for which it will be erected.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is where the large beetroot manufactory is.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not know what kind of manufactory it is, but if the hon. gentleman's Printing Bureau was there, I should say it would be well to make provision for an extensive business. However, the Printing Bureau is not there; it is here. Would the hon. gentleman say if they manufacture leather for binding there, or other materials which are required in the Printing Bureau?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They manufacture wit there, but they do not manufacture it where you are.

Mr. McMULLEN. I did not hear the hon. gentleman; would he make the statement again.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I did not make a statement.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think I heard him say something about wit, and the hon. gentleman requires all the wit he is possessed of to steer clear of the difficulties he has had to contend with this session. I believe we are entitled to the information I have asked for in this matter before we pass the vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not wish to delay the Committee, but in view of what occurred before six o'clock I wish to say a few words. The Minister of Customs—the only hon. gentleman on the other side of the House who made any remark about this item—said, I think, that he had no recollection of receiving a petition, even in connection with the Woodstock post office.

Mr. BOWELL. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I did not say that. I said I thought it was strange that if I had received the petition that I did not reply to it, and I thought that if the hon. gentleman looked over the record, he would find I had replied. If he understood me to say as he stated, I certainly did not intend it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I said myself when the complaint was made to me, that I never knew of an instance where at least a formal reply was not given to these requests. I wish to take this opportunity of pointing out that the item now under discussion for the erection of a public building in the town of Farnham——

Mr. LANDERKIN. The village of Farnham.

Mr. SUTHERLAND—in the village of Farnham——

Mr. BAKER. It is an incorporated town.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It makes very little difference whether it is a town or a village; I am not referring to the place in any derogatory way whatever. I wish to point out that a resolution was carried by the House last session that public money should be expended in the erection of public buildings in towns or cities only in accordance with the amount of revenue received from the places and the business done. It is in accordance with the principle of that resolution that I wish to speak, and of course you will understand that I feel particularly interested in the town of Woodstock as a representative of the riding in which that town is situated. Deputations from that town have waited on the Government, and petitions have been presented showing the necessities of the place. The last petition was one presented by the Board of Trade during the past year, laying before the Government certain facts and figures bearing on this matter; but as no member of the Government appears to have any recollection of that petition, I will now present a few facts to show that justice has not been done to the town of Woodstock in the distribution of public money for the erection of public buildings. For the last fiscal year, the revenue derived from the post office there was $15,732.06, and the total receipts from Customs, Inland Revenue and post office together amounted to $141,282.62. I wish also to make a few comparisons, not with the town for which the present vote is intended, but with some of the more important places in the Dominion where public buildings have been erected. The total postal receipts for the last fiscal year have been in the City of Stratford $10,617; in the City of St. Thomas, $13,637; in the City of St. Catharines $13,368; in the town of Galt, $10,803; in the town of Cobourg, $6,936; in the town of Berlin, $8,971, and in the City of Belleville, $15,982. Leaving aside the large cities, such as Toronto, Montreal and Hamilton, and taking the smaller places of the Dominion, there are only two where the receipts are equal or nearly so to those of the town of Woodstock, and there are none where there are equal receipts from Customs and Inland Revenue. These are plain facts, which I wish to lay before the Government, to show that if a member on this side of the House or some person in the country accuse them of improper or political motives in the expenditure of public money for the erection of public buildings throughout the country, there is some justification for such statements. There are also a very large number of small places, where the receipts are so small in comparison with those in the town I refer to that it is almost unnecessary to make any comparison with them; but in many of these places splendid public buildings have been erected. In the town of Farnham, where a post office is to be erected, I understand the total revenue is only some $1,826, and the population is only between 2,000 and 3,000. It yields in revenue hardly $100 for every $1,000 yielded by the town of Woodstock. I would like to hear some explanation on behalf of the Government as to the reason why they do not carry out the principle which they accepted in this House last year, that public moneys should be distributed for public buildings on the basis of the amount of revenue collected, the business done and the importance of the places. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Missisquoi (Mr. Baker), that though a town may not be large, it may have important business interests, and this fact should be taken into account. I understand that the town where he resides is a railway and manufacturing centre. But, as I have said, the town of Woodstock in those respects is not second to any other town in the Dominion. There is no other town that I know of which has the same railway, manufacturing and commercial interests that we have. For the fiscal year previous to the last year, the total postal receipts were $14,755.46, which increased in the last fiscal year to $15,432.06.

Mr. SPROULE. There cannot be much exodus going on in that locality.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would just like to tell the hon. gentleman that if business is prospering there and the manufacturing interests are increasing, that is due to the industry and enterprise of the people, which should give them a further claim on the Government for consideration. There is no town in which the citizens have expended so much money out of their own municipal taxes in beautifying the place; and if this Government is a progressive government, it should try to keep up with the times. I wish also to say that the number of money orders issued at Woodstock for the past year was 4,835, the total amount of money orders issued was $47,364.59, and the total amount of money orders paid $91,384.39. Now, are the Government prepared to say that a place where such a large volume of business is done should be left with insufficient buildings and insufficient security for moneys and public documents? As the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) properly said, we do not ask for a post office there as a favour from the Government. The Government do not furnish the money themselves; it is public money placed in their hands as trustees; and when we see money appropriated for buildings in places of so much less importance, we think we have a right to complain. Having brought this matter on several occasions before the House, and in view of the resolution which was supported by the late right hon. the First Minister and unanimously endorsed by his colleagues and the members of this House, I had the right to expect that some fair and just consideration would have been given to the application I presented. I do trust that even at this late hour the Government will see that it is necessary some such principle ought to be fairly carried out.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think the principle laid down either by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) or the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) is the correct one which should be followed with regard to the erection of these public buildings. The hon. member for North Wellington gave a long list of towns and villages in Ontario, in which the gross receipts from the post office returns were larger than in the town of Farnham, and the conclusion he arrived at was that because a post office is built in a place where the aggregate receipts were $1,800, therefore every place with that much or more receipts deserve a similar building.

Mr. McMULLEN. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. SPROULE. There are many places much larger than the town of Farnham were private enterprise has furnished suitable buildings, and the cost to the country is much less than if the Government had put up buildings. In large villages and towns, where there are suitable buildings available at a moderate figure, there is no urgent necessity for the expenditure of public money in putting up others. I could name several places among those mentioned by the hon. gentleman where buildings have been supplied by private enterprise at a lower cost than would have been entailed by the erection of public buildings by the Government. The Government would not be justified in undertaking to put up post offices and Custom houses at these various points. The rule followed is that where urgent necessity demands it and suitable buildings cannot be had at a moderate rental, the Government should provide them; but in those places where there are suitable buildings which can be had at a small rental, the Government would not be justified —whether the place be large or small—in expending money to erect other buildings

Mr. LANDERKIN. There are a few features of this business which it might be well to consider before the item passes. The hon. member for South Simcoe brought up the case of Alliston, a great portion of which had been destroyed by fire, and in connection with which the late First Minister promised that, although the Government could not give a grant in aid of the people burned out, he would see that a public building would be placed there. It is a more important place than Farnham. It is larger and more populous, and there is the promise of the late First Minister which has not yet been fulfilled. I understand that the present Government declared they intend to carry out the old policy, but in this respect they have neglected Alliston and gone to Farnham. What are the reasons for this? The hon. member for Missisquoi said that the council petition was the main reason, and that he himself had done nothing. Then, when challenged, he said he had done a great deal, and the council had not done so much. Now, there are other matters which bear on this matter, which the House and the country cannot forget. At the opening of this session, it was stated that the Eastern Townships had done so well for the Government during the election, they would have a representative in the Cabinet in the place of Mr. Colby who had gone down in the fight.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. Minister of Finance says "order." Then I have not the right to speak on questions which have a bearing on this vote.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has departed from the item under consideration.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will convince you, Sir, that I am speaking pertinently to the question. It was stated in the public press that Mr. Ives was to take the place of Mr. Colby. The hon. member for Missisquoi, who is a gentleman of great experience and once had a seat in the Cabinet which was succeeded by Mr. Mercier's Government, and he does not like Mr. Mercier, and he thought that entitled him to a place in the Cabinet. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Ives) did not go into the Cabinet; the hon. member for Missisquoi (Mr. Baker) did not go into the Cabinet.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is out of order. We are not here to amuse ourselves, and he is speeking on something completely irrelevant to the question before the House.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am speaking for Canada, and to say that the honour of Canada must be maintained, whether the Government go down or go up. When a resolution is carried in the House binding the Government, and when the Government depart from that resolution, I would be unworthy to represent a Canadian constituency if I did not rise to vindicate the honour of Canada. The hon. member for Sherbrooke——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. An item went into the post office for Missisquoi.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is a disorderly thing which should not have gone into the Estimates. There was an item in the Estimates for an exhibition at Sherbrooke.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must again call the hon. gentleman to order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am out of order there, but not so wholly out of order as the Government were. The item went in, and I want to show you, Sir, how that came about.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has no right to speak of the Sherbrooke fair, which has nothing to do with the question under delate. The hon. gentleman must confine himself to the policy of the Government as shown in this matter of erecting a post office in the town of Farnham, and nothing else.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You know they were constructing an agricultural cabinet down there, but neither of these agriculturists got in. I will show you how these items got in. The Compton County Chronicle has an article headed the "Ottawa Scandals," dated Wednesday September the 2nd. I want you to notice the date, Sir, which has a bearing on this item:

"From being surprised, the citizens of Canada are now being ashamed of the revelations at Ottawa."

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I will have to ask the Committee to rise and report to the Speaker unless the hon. gentleman will bow to my ruling. He is entirely out of order, and he knows he is.

Mr. LANDEKIN. I do not care whether the Speaker goes into the Chair or not. He can if he chooses. The articles goes on to say:

"No charges made against the Cabinet Ministers have been proved,"——

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN—

—"but several of them have allowed leading officials and clerks to make use of their position by accepting bribes, and therefore the only alternative is a complete change and thorough house-cleaning from top to bottom."

Mr. FOSTER moved that the Committee rise, report resolutions and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to; Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Mr. BOWELL moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I desire to say a few words in reference to the adjournment. This newspaper, in the continuation of this article, says:

"A change we must have in the Government at Ottawa. We do not mean by this that the Liberals should be given power, for past and present history shows that their record is far worse than that of the Conservative party, but what we do mean is that the present Premier must have a complete reconstruction of the Cabinet or else resign and let some younger man take his place, and a younger Premier with almost a new Cabinet selected from the honest rank and file of the Conservative party, would infuse such life into the affairs of the country that we would go forward with a rush."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN—

"Most of the present Cabinet Ministers have seen their best days and they have allowed a class of clerks to surround them who have got the party into disgrace for the sake of paltry dollars, they therefore should resign and allow some younger members to take their places who would bring a change into the departments, and if they did not improve it any, turn them out and try another."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN—

"The different counties of the Dominion should take warning from the disgrace we have been brought to and see to it that the member they elect to represent them be a man of unblemished character, who is trusted and respected by all his constituency."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN—

"It is an honour to the Eastern Townships that not a single member from this section has had the least taint of boodle about him, and anyone thinking over the list would recognize men who are a monument where they live for honest, upright business men."

That is the end of the article, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am obliged to hon. gentlemen for their appreciation of an article from a Conservative newspaper.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; louder.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It appears that Conservative newspapers are not popular in this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Louder.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not think I will read any more.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; question.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will pursue this question a little further. I was just showing the expenditure of public money when the Committee was asked to rise.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I was showing that on the 16th September, after that article was published, the money was granted to Farnham, and the money was granted to Sherbrooke.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 9.15 p.m.

Mr. LANDERKIN.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 28th September, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

TRADE RELATIONS.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have received a Message from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has adopted an Address to Her Majesty the Queen, humbly requesting that Her Majesty may be wisely pleased to take into consideration the position of Canada with respect to certain important matters concerning its trade relations with the Empire and foreign nations, and requesting the concurrence of this House therein.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the said Address be taken into consideration to-morrow.

Motion agreed to.

COAL FOR COATICOOK POST OFFICE.

Mr. RIDER asked, Has the contract been made for the supply of coal required for the post office at Coaticook? When was the contract made? What kind and quantity of coal has been contracted for, and when is it to be delivered? To whom has the contract been given, and what is the price to be paid per ton, or otherwise? Were tenders called for, and was the contract given to the lowest tenderers? If not, why not?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, a contract was signed on the 12th of September instant, for 30 tons of coal, anthracite, large egg, and 2 tons of stove coal. The coal has been delivered. B. J. Smith, of Coaticook, is the contractor. The prices are: anthracite, $5.75; stove coal, $6 per ton. Tenders were called for, and only one was received.

TRANSCONTINENTAL MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether the Intercolonial Railway is in a condition to fulfil its part in furnishing a fast transcontinental mail service all the way from the easternmost point of railway communication at North Sydney, and whether arrangements are being made for the construction of a suitable railway wharf at the said easternmost point of railway communication at North Sydney, and whether said wharf will be made suitable also for loading coal from any mines that may be opened in the neighbourhood?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, the Intercolonial Railway is in a condition to fulfil its part in furnishing a fast transcontinental mail service all the way from the eastern terminus at Sydney, including the branch to North Sydney. The railway has excellent water facilities for its present business, and the subject of a wharf at North Sydney does not seem to require action during this session. It may be worthy of consideration at a future time, whether railway communication suitable for coal shipments should not be provided at that place.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Mr. BOWELL moved:

That the order for third reading of Bill (No. 175) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned, be discharged, and the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of adding the amendment, somewhat amended, proposed by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock).

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BOWELL moved that the following clause be added :—

That within one month after the commencement of each session of Parliament, whilst any such moneys are being paid out, there shall be laid before Parliament a statement showing all payments of such moneys during the next preceding year, with the names of the respective persons to whom such payments have been made and the amounts paid to each respectively, together with copies of all contracts between the Government and the companies, under which any of the works of said railways in respect of which the said subsidies are authorized to be paid, have or shall have been constructed, as the case may be.

My reason for suggesting that amendment is, we have sub-contracts in the agreements to which we entered with the companies. The course is simply to enter into a contract with a company for the construction of the road which is to receive the subsidy, and with what sub-contracts they may enter into with others of course we have nothing whatever to do, nor would it be possible for us to obtain them. I think, so long as we lay on the Table the contracts and agreements entered into between the Government and the companies with whom they contract, that will accomplish the object my hon. friend has in view.

Mr. MULOCK. I am glad that the acting Minister of Railways appreciates my object, even if he does not adopt my suggestions in their entirety. As far as his amendment goes, it is fair enough, but I think it is also important that the House, if it is to have full information, should have knowledge of all the arrangements which the railway companies make. Where a railway receives public aid, the country ought to know what is done with the money, and we cannot know that, unless we see the contracts under which the moneys are expended by the railway company. The railway company makes a contract for the construction depending on the subsidy, which may be called money lying in deposit with the Government and to be disbursed under the contracts. The contractors, therefore, receive the public money through the medium of the railway company and under contracts to which the Government is not a party. I think the public money should be traceable from the treasury to the receivers, and the title under which the contractors get it ought to be made manifest also. I happen to know of a subsidy which was given to a railway by this Government some years ago, and the contract was made by the railway company for the construction of the road, and the contractors for the main line sub-let the work at a price very much less than the price the company had contracted with the Government for. I regard the sub-contracts as representing the cost of the road. All the difference between the contract price between the Government and the main contractor and the price between him and the sub-contractors is so much clear profit made by the first contractor, and may be said to have come out of the public funds. We ought to know the real cost of building these railways. We ought not to be so lavish with intermediaries. I can understand that large portions of these moneys provided by the public grant, remain in their hands, and the real contractors who, we may assume, are doing the work at fair prices, simply receive what is the cost of the road, but the middlemen, who do nothing except, perhaps, to promote the enterprise, receive the oyster. For this reason, I think the House ought to have the important information which they would receive if the sub-contracts were laid upon the Table up to the time the money is earned, and I hope the Minister will admit that this is feasible. I do not think his objection is well taken, that it is not feasible for us to obtain possession of these contracts. A railway company that is depending upon a subsidy from the Government will surely, for the sake of receiving the subsidy, make arrangements to have all the information in regard to the sub-contracts given to the Government, and I think the subsidy should be withheld until that information is furnished.

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot say that the reasoning of the hon. gentleman from North York (Mr. Mulock) has convinced me that we ought to accept his proposition to the fullest extent. No doubt it would be very desirable, if it were possible, to obtain information as to the amount paid improperly by any company, but the object of Parliament in granting a subsidy to a railway is to induce parties who have capital, or who can raise sufficient money, to construct the road so that the people in the locality may have the advantage of it. The road may be of a colonization character or of a strictly commercial character, but, so long as the company which enters into a contract with the Government for the construction of the road complies with the terms of the contract, and builds the road, that is all Parliament has asked them to do when it granted the subsidy in aid thereof. We know that no company would go to the trouble of organizing and undertaking the expense incident to the organization of a company and construct the road by sub-contractors or any other means unless they expected to receive some consideration for their trouble and for the time they gave in carrying out their work, and the responsibility they assumed in their financial obligations, &c. If we lay before Parliament the contracts we entered into and the amount of money paid under them, I think we have done all that we should be asked to do. I appreciate the reasoning of the hon. gentleman as to tracing the money from its fountain head to the place where it is expended, but the adoption of that principle would, to a greater or less extent, interfere with every private transaction of a company with which we may have entered into a contract for the construction of a railway. If we have the road completed within the time specified, I think we have all that can be asked. If we enter into a contract for the construction of a road and grant a subsidy, if that road is built according to the terms on which Parliament granted the subsidy, our object is attained. If Parliament receives the information I have proposed the Government should lay on the Table of the House every session, that should be a sufficient basis upon which to take any future action if any hon. gentleman thinks the money has been improperly expended. I have gone as far in this matter as the hon. gentleman should ask.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not think the hon. gentleman has gone as far as he ought to go or as far as Parliament is entitled to have him go. We are granting certain franchises to railway companies. They are public franchises. You give a company the right of expropriation and confer franchises which do not ordinarily belong to a private company. They are in a nature public, and so a railway company having special powers and special franchises given to it, has also imposed upon it corresponding responsibilities. The Minister of Customs says that he will lay on the Table any contracts between the Government and the companies, and an account of moneys that are paid, but that is not sufficient. Suppose a railway company makes arrangements by which a large portion of the money that is paid may be applied to other purposes than the construction of the road. The Minister, it seems to me from his speech, would go so far as to say: that is a matter in which you have no right to enquire, that is a matter about which you have no right to obtain information. But that is not the rule that has been acted upon this session. There are instances in which one or the other House of this Parliament has gone very much further than that. We have enquired, not merely as to the payments made by the Government, and the road to which the payments were made, but we have gone further and enquired what was done with the money after payment had been made. Now the Minister stops short of that. He says that as between the company and the parties who may have a contract with the companies to construct the road, or to ballast it, or to make it fit for operation, we are not to enquire, that information is not to be had. If there is any ground for suspicion, then a motion may be made. But the hon. gentleman will see that the one basis upon which action can be taken is withheld, the information does not exist. If that information was brought down, it may disclose upon its face a reason for further enquiry; but, if information is not brought down, you have nothing before you except the fact that the company have claimed the money and that the Government has paid it. It seems to me that you ought to go further than that, or else the information will be of very little value.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The difficulty is in making the tabling of all these sub-contracts a matter of course in every case. There is a great deal of difficulty in that. In the first place it is not very desirable that we should seem to the public in any way to take supervision of the sub-contracts, because we never can control the liabilities which will be incurred under them, or see those liabilities discharged. When in any sense the Government require sub-contracts to be furnished and laid upon the Table of the House, the impression does get abroad among those who are interested that in some way there is a supervision over these. But apart from that, the question of sub-contracts is a very large one, and extends not only to sub-contracts made by the company itself, but also to those made by the contractors and the sub-contractors, and so on, ad infinitum. A company contracts with the Government to do work and build a road according to a specification, and receives a subsidy. They nearly always make a contract with a firm or another company to do the work, but that contracting firm or company, on its part, lets out various portions of the work. The sleepers may be the subject of one contract, the rails another, the bridging another; you may have 40 or 50 sub-contracts on a small line of railway. To enquire into all these, to make it a matter of course that the Government should furnish all these, that they should be tabled, I think is going more minutely into the matter than the public interest requires.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will see, if he reflects for a moment, that even supposing the words used in the motion of which the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) gave notice, were adopted by the House, they would not accomplish the object that he seems to have in view. Supposing that the company which has entered into a contract with the Government for the construction of a road to which a subsidy is to be paid, sub-lets it to half a dozen different contractors. All we have to do, upon the report of the engineer that each ten miles of that road is completed in accordance with the contract, is to pay over the $3,200 per mile. We do not pretend to trace that; neither would the House of Commons or any member in it be able to trace a malappropriation of money by the contractors or by the sub-contractors simply by laying the names of the sub-contractors upon the Table. All we could do would be to say that Tom Jones sub-let to Richard Jones the construction of three or four miles of road. That is all we would know, and that is all the motion of the hon. member for North York asks for. If he wants to go further and find out whether a company has entered into any improper agreement or arrangement with other parties for the purpose of obtaining from the Government an appropriation of money which they have spent for other purposes, as has been developed in the investigation to which the hon. gentleman refers, then that object certainly will not be attained by passing the resolution of the hon. member for North York. If it could be, I should be quite willing, for my part, and most anxious, to have it adopted; but we would have no further information than we would have under the motion that I propose.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would ask the hon. gentleman whether his amendment is intended to go so far as to show by the papers laid upon the Table of the House that the work has been actually done which entitles the railway company to receive the subsidy?

Mr. BOWELL. It goes that far. It proposes to lay the contract upon the Table. It proposes to show how much money has been earned and paid, and that all payments are based upon the terms of the contract which provides that upon the completion of each ten miles, and that being certified to by the Government engineer, this money shall be paid.

Mr. MULOCK. Then I would ask if there be any objection to require the railway company itself to furnish such annual statement of all the moneys it has paid out on account of those works towards which the Government is making its contribution? If not, then I would suggest that it be a duty cast upon the railways—

To furnish a statement showing the moneys paid out by or for the company on account of the works in respect of which such subsidy is voted, with the names of the persons to whom such moneys have been paid, the amounts so paid, and the consideration therefor.

I think it is the right of Parliament to know who receives the money that Parliament votes. It will not do simply to furnish a statement by the company under this proposed amendment. I am afraid that all the information Parliament will get under this amendment will be that the Government has paid so much money to this company. That is no information at all ; that is simply a statement that an obligation has been discharged, that the railway has earned the money, that the money has been paid to the railway, or to those whom the railway might appoint. That is all the information that the proposed amendment of the Minister will give us. Now, I think that the railway ought not to pay out any money on account of its work to any person unless the payment is an honest payment ; therefore, there should be no objection to make known to whom the money is paid. Part of the money comes out of the public treasury. The railway company is after all simply an agent of the Government, it is an instrument of the Government, an instrument of Parliament, in order to accomplish a public work. Part of the cost of the work is contributed by Parliament, and part of it provided from private sources ; so I think that Parliament ought to know who gets this money. It is only handed to the treasurer of the railway company for a moment, it is there temporarily, not to remain there, but it is voted for the purpose of accomplishing a certain end, the completion of the road. Therefore, the money that is paid to these contractors, or to the builders, is the money of the country, to the extent that the country contributes. It does not cease to be that, because it may pass through the machinery or the agency of the railway corporation banks. It is really public money, and the railways are simply distributors of it ; and it is as much the right of the country to know who receives the money, although it may pass through the coffers of the company, as if it were paid to an agent of the Government as an ordinary disbursement.

Mr. BOWELL. The effect of this amendment would be to enable the Government to go into the whole business of the company. We pay a subsidy based on the cost of the rails, and if the road is constructed, then Parliament has accomplished all it expected to accomplish when it paid the money. I do not think the Government can accept the amendment. I have no objection to go further in the direction suggested by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), and I, therefore, suggest the addition of the words : "and the engineer's report on which such payment has been recommended."

Mr. MULOCK. I move to add the following words to the section :—

And a detailed statement by the company in respect of which any of such subsidies have been authorized to be paid, showing all moneys paid by or for the company on account of the works in respect of which such subsidies were voted, with the names of the persons to whom such moneys have been paid, the amounts so paid, and the consideration therefor.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The object which my hon. friend has in view is, no doubt, a very praiseworthy one, and we should like to see it secured. It cannot, however, be accomplished by the amendment proposed. It is desirable that Parliament should know that the money voted in subsidies to railways reaches the purpose for which it is intended, that no tribute or tolls are exacted on the way. The amount of subsidy generally voted for railways is $3,200 per mile, or about sufficient to pay for the rails on the road.

Mr. MULOCK. It has gone up as high as $12,000 a mile.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. All the subsidies voted in these resolutions are at the rate of $3,200 per mile, and on only two occasions, and those were special ones, has the subsidy gone up to $12,000 per mile. The reason this amount is taken is that it is about sufficient to iron the road. It would be all very well if we knew that the money was devoted to the object for which it was voted, but it would be improper to compel the companies to give particulars respecting the expenditure of the balance of the money invested in the construction, $12,000 or $15,000 or $20,000, and the name of every person to whom money had been paid. Much of the work may have been let by contract and sub-contract, and much of it may have been done by day's work, and under the amendment the pay roll of thousands of workingmen, including Italians who have no names but only numbers, would have to be laid on the Table of the House. This is going altogether too far. If we ask documents showing that the railway company had carried out the work for which the subsidy was given, and if the engineer's report on which the money was paid, showing also that the road has been ironed, stations built, and other requirements furnished, and a statement of what remains to be finished, were laid before Parliament, those documents should be sufficient.

Mr. MULOCK. I cannot complain of the tone of the hon. gentleman's remarks, although he does not altogether agree with me. Parliament is interested in two ways in getting this information. First, in seeing that the money is devoted to the purpose for which it was intended, and had not been reduced on its way by any other than proper charges. In the second place, Parliament is interested in the economical construction of railways, because whatever they cost is ultimately charged on the industries of the people. If an excessive sum is paid in constructing railways, that means higher freights. The capital invested is expected to be remunerative, and we are undoubtedly interested in the economical construction of roads. I do not mean that the expenditure should be skimped, but there should be a wise economy exercised in their construction. The people in the long run have to pay the interest on the money invested, and if regulations of this character would help to promote economy in the construction of these roads, it is to the benefit of the people that these regulations should be adopted. I believe that the more fully a company is compelled to present the country an account of this expenditure, the more careful it will be not to make expenditures that will not at a later period stand the light of day. I am not vain enough to imagine that the provision I propose is the best that could be made, but my desire is to enable railway promoters to give the best value to the railway itself for every dollar expended, and to resist importunities from those who may have influence. I believe some such statement should be presented to this Parliament. There should be some sort of accountability from the company to the public whose money they receive. It is idle to talk of a company as being a corporation and being accountable to its proprietors, because the shareholders now-a-days in a company, with perhaps the single exception of the Canadian Pacific Railway, have no substantial interest in the enterprise. Stocks or shares in some railway companies now are given for little or no value. We are every day giving authority to railway companies to issue paid-up shares without service rendered, and when the road goes into the hands of the receiver the persons who put in their money are either creditors, or those who lend the money, and have no voice in the economical construction of a road, or they are the Government who make an absolute present of this money. During the process of construction there is no interested body having a right to audit the accounts or to promote economy. I contend, considering the peculiar methods in vogue in Canada for bringing railways in existence, that Parliament ought to exercise some sort of provision, or at all events should use its influence in trying to cause wise economy during the process of construction. After a road is built the money is gone: the company has a bonded debt, and the efforts of the directorate then are directed to earn enough money to pay obligations and current expenses, and the larger the debt the higher the rates and the more people have to pay for the accommodation which the road affords. For every reason it is the duty of Parliament, before the expenditure has actually taken place, to use the means within its reach in order to see that no money is wasted.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY TO PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 111) to authorize the transfer of certain property to Provincial Governments.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I move that there be added to the Bill a clause exempting from the operation of any transfer which may be made under the Act, any works which have been sanctioned by the Governor in Council before the transfer. The Committee may remember that we have an Act relating to works in navigable waters, which requires the approval of the Governor in Council to be given to wharves and booms and constructions of that kind, and it is well that those who are interested in those works should know that rights which have been acquired under the authority of this Parliament shall not be affected under the transfer.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would ask the hon. gentleman whether the effect of this provision might not be to prevent these works coming under the jurisdiction of the Local Legislature? Clearly, if we propose to transfer certain properties now in doubt, and certain rights in public works are needed before that claim is admitted; yet these works will be held as under the Government of Canada, or will be held in future, the same as if the transfer had already been made from the people interested. I can well see how it would be proper to declare that the rights of parties would not be affected, but would not the effect of this clause, just as it stands, be to obtain jurisdiction beyond that which you intend?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We can alter the clause in accordance with the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Bill reported.

Mr. MULOCK.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that the Bill be now read the third time. He said: I should, perhaps, have stated at an earlier stage that the assent of the Crown has been given to this measure. It involves to some extent, in the view of the Government, the right of the Crown in the public domain.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

DOMINION CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 147) further to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections Act—(Sir John Thompson.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 8,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I propose to add the following:—

Hereafter, should any elector be substituted for the petitioner, then and in every such case such elector, before being so substituted, shall make and file an affidavit to the same effect.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 4,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In line 30, I propose to strike out "the Chief Justice of Ontario," because the Court of Appeal is being struck off the list of courts to try election cases; and at the end of the section I propose to strike out the words, "and the hearing of such application," and insert the following:—

Provided that with respect to cases pending at the time of passing of this Act, the Chief Justice of Ontario shall take part in such arrangement.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 8,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I wish to insert the following as section 9:—

In case the petitioner in an election petition shall not be qualified to be a petitioner, the petition shall not on that account be dismissed, if within such time as the court or judge shall fix for that purpose another petitioner be substituted, and the substitution may take place on such terms and conditions as to the court or judge may seem meet.

Mr. BARRON. I would like to ask the Minister what is the reason for that proposal, because it seems to me a very dangerous one?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am told that one of the defects of the Act is that the petitioner may turn out not to be a qualified person, and in such case I suppose the petition is abated.

Mr. BARRON. In cases of bonâ fide accident, there would be no harm in the proposal; but if it is permitted to pass, we will find fictitious petitioners, and then, if evidence be obtained, a bonâ fide petitioner will present himself. The great trouble is to get honest bonâ fide men to act as petitioners, and that is the object and spirit of the legislation of this session; but if this becomes law, we will have all sorts of men acting as petitioners, and afterwards, when the evidence is obtained, they will get a bonâ fide petitioner. It seems to me this would be an unwise step to take.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The petitioner may be an alien or a non-resident. A month afterwards it may be discovered that he is not qualified to be a petitioner, and, under this amendment, we would be practically giving double the length of time to petition in that case that we would in any other, because the petition is really in point of law a nullity. If the petitioner's name were found on the voters' list and there was reason to suppose that he was a bonâ fide petitioner, there would, in that case, be a great deal to be said in favour of the amendment, but this clause, as now proposed, would cover the case where a person had not even the apparent right to petition at all, and whose petition was an absolute nullity. Yet in this case, the fact that the petition was put in would, nevertheless, perpetuate the right to petition long after the time fixed by law has expired.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I admit it is too late in the session to introduce anything so important, and will not press the clause.

Amendment withdrawn.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The next section I have re-drafted, in order to carry out the amendment agreed to by the House about the amount of deposit being $300 instead of $100 on an appeal, and at the same time to exempt from the operation of that change, appeals on preliminary objections. The clause reads as follows:—

Sub-section one of section fifty is hereby repealed and the following substituted: The party so desiring to appeal, shall, within eight days from the day on which the court or judge has given such decision, deposit with the clerk of the court which gave the decision, or of which the judge who gave such decision is a member, or with the proper officer for receiving moneys paid into such court, at the place where the hearing of the preliminary objection or where the trial of the petition took place, as the case may be, if in the Province of Quebec, or the chief office of such court, if in any other province, in cases of appeal, other than from the judgment, ruling, order or decision on any preliminary objection, the sum of $300, and in such last-mentioned case, the sum of $100 as security for costs, and also the further sum of $10 as a fee for making up and transmitting the report to the Supreme Court of Canada. Such deposit may be made in legal money or the bills of any chartered bank doing business in Canada.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The next amendment proposes only some alterations. It reads thus; it is numbered 12 in the Bill we passed the other evening:

Sub-section 4 of the said section 51 is hereby repealed and the following substituted: The registrar shall certify to the Speaker of the House of Commons the judgment and decision of the Supreme Court confirming, changing, or annulling any decision, report or finding of the court appealed from, upon the several questions of law as well as of fact upon which the appeal was made, and therein shall certify as to the matters and things as to which, by section 44 of this Act, the court would have been required to report to the Speaker whether they had been annulled, or changed or left uneffected by such decision of the Supreme Court; and such decision shall be final.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I propose to say:

That sections 1, 2, 10, 11 and 18 of this Act shall not apply to any proceedings under the Dominion Controverted Elections Act pending at the time of the passing hereof, but except as aforesaid, this Act, so far as applicable, shall apply to all such proceedings.

Mr. MULOCK. I think we are proceeding a little hastily in deciding even that petitions hereafter fyled shall not be triable by judges of the Court of Appeal. I think we made a mistake. The Committee proceeded in their conclusion before, upon the assumption that the Court of Appeal was overworked, that its work was in a congested condition. On enquiry I find that is not the case, and I think I am well advised that they are no way in arrears. If that were the only reason assigned, then that reason is gone. Moreover, I think there are great advantages to the various judges, especially those of the Court of Appeal, in having an opportunity, in the discharge of their judicial duties, of going at times on circuit. Our Court of Appeal, owing to the division of the jurisdiction now, does not have the advantages that the judges of the High Court have, and I think that even the judges of the Court of Appeal would profit by having an opportunity at times to go on circuit. It would be a pleasant change, if nothing more, in the discharge of their monotonous duties, to say nothing of that other question, which, I think, ought long since to have been disposed of, namely, the question of remuneration. I dare say that even judges are not above having some little regard to the incidental advantages that perhaps may accrue to them in being obliged to take charge of election petitions. I regret that the Government have not this session seen fit to do what I have pressed on them now for several sessions, namely, to take up the state of the salaries of the judiciary and deal with them in a satisfactory way. It is not becoming of the bench that they should be compelled to have any regard to the incidental advantages, as it were, such as accrue to them from the trial of election petitions. I hope that by next session the Government will be able to bring down a measure to deal with the matter, putting them in a proper position. It is wholly unworthy the dignity of the bench that the condition should continue to be such that yearly now we have the matter under discussion here. I think they ought not to be left in that position any longer, but next session I hope that the matter will be disposed of by the Government satisfactorily. Although it is too late to open up the question of cancelling the old amendment that was made at the last sitting of the Committee, yet I hope, when the Bill is under discussion next session, the Government will have before them good reasons for seeing that they made a mistake in legislating away, even for the future, the jurisdiction of the judges of the Court of Appeal in respect of the trial of election petitions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I was not informed when the Bill was going through, and this amendment was made, of the facts one way or the other, to enable me to say whether the amendment was a wise one or not; but it was adopted deliberately by the Committee, discussed on two evenings, and I think it would not be well to go back upon it now. But this may be well worthy of consideration at a future session.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

THE DOMINION LANDS ACT.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 165) further to amend the Dominion Lands Act.

(In the Committee.)

On section 5,

Mr. DEWDNEY. I move that the date at which the privilege of obtaining entry under subclauses 6 and 7 of clause 38 of Dominion Lands Act shall be discontinued and placed at 1st January, 1894.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I propose to add the following clause:—

Provided further, that after a homestead has been so recommended for patent, the holder of the pre-emption right may legally dispose of, convey, assign or transfer his right or title in the lands for which he wants a pre-emption entry, and this provision should also apply retrospectively, but shall have no force or effect as respects any land in relation to which the subject-matter of this clause has already been adjudicated upon, or is in adjudication by any court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. LAURIER. Of course, I speak with some diffidence in this matter, because I do not pretend to be as familiar with the legislation of the North-West as hon. gentlemen who come from that portion of the Dominion; but will not the amendment which we have adopted defeat the very object of the law, which, as I understand, was to protect the settler, and to protect him to the extent of making any mortgages which he could give inoperative?

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman will understand that no person is entitled to mortgage his land until such time as he has received recommendation for patent for his homestead quarter section. In a great many instances they want to mortgage both the homestead quarter and the pre-emption quarter. The production of a certificate of recommendation is sufficient evidence to entitle him to mortgage his homestead, but the question has arisen as to the validity of the mortgage on the pre-emption; without legislation giving it legal effect.

Mr. LAURIER. Was not the object of the Act to prevent the settler mortgaging his homestead?

Mr. DALY. No.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DEWDNEY. At the request of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) I beg to move this amendment:

That henceforth, notwithstanding anything in this Act and until the repeal of the provisions in this behalf, the settler may homestead any cancelled quarter section, or cancelled pre-emption, while residing within two miles of said homestead.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I would ask the member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), if he feels very strongly in reference to this clause about the water in coulées?

Mr. DAVIN. I do not feel so strongly about it as I do about the second homestead, but I think it should be inserted.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Very well. I beg to move:

Whenever, under this Act, lands are entered for either as a homestead or pre-emption, or sold or otherwise disposed of, and such lands contain or border upon a coulée or ravine, which has been utilized for the purpose of forming a reservoir for the storage of water, or which, in the opinion of the Minister or of the agent or other officer by whom such entry is issued or such sale or disposal is made, is capable of being so utilized to advantage, such entry may be issued or such sale or disposal made subject to the condition that no building shall be erected within a specified distance from the border of such coulée or ravine, and to such other conditions as, under the circumstances of the case, seem desirable with a view to the prevention of the pollution of the water stored in such reservoir; and in every such case any patent issued for such land shall be expressed to be subject to the conditions so imposed.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Bill is reported, I trust that the hon. Minister of Justice will say something about the second homestead clause, because we really had a kind of understanding, though not such as pledged the Minister or the Government, that the matter would be placed in a more satisfactory position.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I certainly did promise that I would state our views upon the question of second homesteads before this Bill should be disposed of. At the time the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) presented his resolution to the House, I took a hostile view of the principle of the resolution; but I specially urged the House to adjourn the discussion of the matter for some time, in consideration of two views. One view, which was put forward not only in the argument of the hon. gentleman, but in petitions which had then just been placed upon the Table, was that there were persons in the list of claimants who had peculiar claims in relation to second homesteads; and the other was that the conceding of the principle involved a very large extent of the public domain, and it was absolutely necessary that we should make a full enquiry into that branch of the subject before asking Parliament to make a change of policy which involved the giving away of such a great amount of territory. The same reasons compel me to say to the House now that the Government desires, until the early part of next session, to complete its investigation of the whole matter—to ascertain, in the first place, what classes of claims have arisen under this clause, for it is said that there are some people who actually intended and expected to secure a second homestead, and made their preparations in view of that state of the law; and there are others, we are informed, who do not desire the concession at all. I believe that if the principle were worked out, as regards all who might possibly make claims, it would involve a concession of upwards of a million acres of land. We desire to investigate what these various classes of claimants are, and what extent of land would be involved in meeting their claims; and we shall be in a position to deal with the matter next session, perhaps as a Government measure. At all events, we shall be in a position to give the House such information as will enable it to deal with the matter with intelligence in the early part of the session.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 126) to amend the Acts respecting the North-West Territories.

Mr. DAVIN. I would have moved that these amendments be not agreed to, but I had a conversation with the Hon. Mr. Dewdney, who tells me that certain changes will be made which will, I think, be quite satisfactory to the North-West.

Mr. LAURIER. I would say to the Minister that I have received from the Territory of Saskatchewan a protest that the electoral districts as they are now arranged will not be satisfactory, some being too small and others too large. I stated to my correspondent that I would make the protest, but that I could not do anything more, as I do not profess to be familiar with the localities.

Mr. DAVIN. They are going to be altered.

Amendments concurred in.

SUPPLY—CLAIM OF DAVID PORTER.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MADILL. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a few remarks in reference to the claim of a contractor for $1,113 for construction of certain works at Beaverton, on the eastern shore of Lake Simcoe. This lake is 26 miles by 28 miles in extent, is connected with Lake Couchiching, which is 10 by 12 miles in extent, and affords communication with Barrie, 14 miles to the west. By means of these works, Beaverton has communication with other ports around Lake Simcoe and Lake Couchiching, including Jackson's Point, Big Bay Point, Peninsula Point, Roach's Point, Belle Ewart, Barrie, Bradford, Brechin, Atherley, Orillia, Couchiching Park, Longford, and Washago. At one time there was a private wharf at Beaverton which cost some $20,000. This wharf lasted about thirty-five years, and a great deal of business was done there by the Northern Railway and Lake Simcoe, furnishing supplies at that time to various places and as far as Lindsay and Peterborough. This wharf was destroyed by ice jams, and another wharf, costing $18,000, was built by the Midland Railway Company. That wharf was also destroyed. The people of Beaverton, in the desire to re-establish that traffic which had fallen away, petitioned the Government in favour of dredging a channel at Beaverton for the purpose of enabling boats to come to Beaverton. This petition, which was signed unanimously by all parties at Beaverton, asked the Government to make a grant for this purpose, the people of Beaverton agreeing to contribute a certain sum. The channel was inspected by the Government, but it was found that the bottom of the lake was composed of a very hard, coarse, blue clay. The clay was so hard that it would be impossible to dredge out this channel unless a steam dredge was built for that purpose. The engineer, in his report, claimed that it would cost $23,000 to dredge the channel, and he recommended instead the building of a wharf at $8,000, which would answer the same purpose. A by-law was passed by the corporation, almost unanimously, granting $1,500, as their share of this expenditure, and the Government placed a sum in the Estimates for the purpose of constructing this wharf. On Lakes Simcoe and Couchiching some fourteen steam tugs and steam yachts ply, which show that considerable traffic could be done on these lakes, but Beaverton was entirely cut off because it had no wharf. Tenders were called for by the Government, and some twelve or thirteen were received. Mr. David Porter, who was the lowest tenderer, was given the contract. The following tenders were received: Mr. Porter, whose tender amounted to $7,500; John Stewart of Ottawa, $14,800, or $7,300 above the lowest; Tobin & O'Keefe of Ottawa, $12,500, or $5,000 above the lowest; Navin of Lindsay, $12,400, or $4,900 above the lowest; Treleven of Beaverton, $11,770, or $4,270 above the lowest; G. Wilson of Ottawa, $11,400, or $3,900 over the lowest; John Burns of York, $11,490, or $3,900 over the lowest; A. J. Belcher of Peterborough and E. Thompson of Burleigh, $10,570, or $3,020 over the lowest; Smith & Heney of Ottawa, $9,917, or $2,417 over the lowest; H. Walters of Lindsay, $9,832, or $2,332 over the lowest; Robt. Grant of Toronto, $9,603, or $2,103 over the lowest; Chas. Wynn of Peterborough, $8,300, or $800 above the lowest tenderer, and the lowest tender was that of David Porter, who received the contract at $7,500. After it was decided to construct this wharf, instead of dredging the channel of Beaver River, it was considered whether it would be advisable to build this pier on the north side or the south side of the channel. It was decided, before specifications were made out or plans of the work prepared, to have it on the south side, so that the location was not changed, and it was so decided for these reasons: It was ascertained that the heavy storms, during the past two or three years, had come from the south-west portion of the lake, and that it would be better to construct this wharf on the south side of the channel. There was also some difficulty about the right of way on the north side, the title to the land being in litigation, and the dispute only decided at the last assizes. It would have been necessary, had we constructed the wharf on that side, to build a bridge across the river for the benefit of the people on the south side. Again, objection was taken to placing it on the north side on account of the action of the Grand Trunk Railway. A petition was sent to the Grand Trunk Railway asking them to relay the track from Beaverton down to the lake shore, and they refused. Therefore, so far as the reason given for building the wharf on the north side is concerned, connecting with the Grand Trunk Railway, we had the refusal of the Grand Trunk Railway to meet our views in this respect. Then plans and specifications were asked and tenders were received, a list of which I have just given. The only change in the location consisted in turning the extreme end of the wharf out in the lake 50 feet to the north, so as to be parallel to the channel of the river, where there was greater depth of water. The contract price was $7,500. Then it was ascertained, while the wharf was being constructed, that there would not be sufficient wharfage at its extreme limit, and it was necessary to add 50 feet to the embankment and extend the stone work in order to obtain sufficient depth for boats drawing 6½ feet to 7 feet on the lake. The contractor, however, did that work at exactly the same rate as the contract price. Then it was necessary to fill in between the two outside cribs for shelter, which work was extra and cost some $500, but after the work was completed, the whole cost, including these extras and the extension of the wharf some 50 feet, and the filling in of these cribs for the protection of boats, only amounted to $8,349, the extras costing $849, or the whole cost was only $49 above the next lowest tender. The work has still cost some $6,250 less than Stewart's tender; $4,151 less than Tobin & O'Keefe's; $4,051 less than Navan's of Lindsay tender; $3,421 less than Trealeven's; $3,150 less than Wilson's of Ottawa; $3,141 less than Burn's tender; $2,120 less than Belcher & Thompson's; $1,568 less than Smith & Heney's tender; $1,483 less than the original tender of Walters, of Lindsay; $1,254 less than Grant's tender, so that the extra $849, added to the original tender, only made the total cost $49 more than the next lowest tender, without any extras at all; and the work I believe was well done. Good material was supplied, and I am satisfied that the work was fully carried out, according to plans and specifications. It was taken off the hands of the contractor by the inspector, who said that, if anything, the contractor had done more than he was called upon to do according to the plans and specifications. Then Beaverton itself had given $1,500 towards this work, and appointed a local inspector, who is the reeve of the corporation. He had a double interest. He had an interest, not only as inspector, but also as representing the corporation, and was thoroughly well qualified. He has been a builder all his life, has built tug boats, worked as bridge builder, worked on the Lindsay docks and has had twenty or thirty years' experience in this business. Mr. Grey, the engineer, reported of him that the people had been very fortunate in obtaining the services of so able an inspector. In the engineer's report, it is stated that the bottom of the lake, on which this pier was constructed, is composed of very hard rocky substance. He had inspected it at certain places, and had reported to that effect. However, before the wharf was completed, there was one of the worst storms on Lake Simcoe that had been known for 17 or 18 years, and the cribs broke through with the weight of stone upon them, about two-thirds of the way out, to about a foot deep in the water, and beneath that was sand. That damage has been repaired by the contractor, who stated that he wanted to make a good job whether he made any money or not. The cribs have been replaced and made stronger than ever. He has a claim for extras of about $1,113 for rebuilding these cribs, and I feel satisfied that the job has been a good one and that the contractor has lost money on it already. I think the Government should fairly consider this matter of his extra claim.

Mr. FOSTER. I will bring the matter to the attention of the Minister of Public Works, and the remarks of the hon. gentleman, having been placed on record, will be put before the Minister who, I am sure, will pay attention to it. Of course I do not know enough about the department to make any promises, but I have no doubt whatever that right and justice will be done.

Mr. McNEILL. This work has not been constructed in my constituency, and, so far as the work is concerned, I have nothing to do with it, but Mr. Porter is a constituent of mine, and not only so, but he is a very warm political supporter of mine. I do not think he is any the worse for that, nor do I suppose that my hon. friends opposite think he is any the better, but I mention it so that hon. gentlemen may take what I have to say at its value. I would say neither more nor less than I believed to be the fact if Mr. Porter were not a supporter of mine. I know that in some quarters some observations have been made injurious to the reputation of this man in connection with this work, and it is only right for me to say—as I do with all the weight of responsibility which attaches to me speaking in my place in this House— that, if you search this Dominion through and through, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the international boundary as far north as our country goes, you will not find a more deserving contractor than Mr. Porter. He has completed a number of works for the Department of Public Works, and he has not put out of his hands a work that has not been a credit to him and to the department. Not only does he do his work well, but extraordinarily cheaply. That is something which should commend itself to the approval of members of this House. He has constructed works so cheaply as to astound the engineers of the Public Works Department. I may cite a work that he completed at the village near which I live, the village of Wiarton. I would hardly like to mention the figures, but his tender was so extraordinarily low that the engineers of the department believed he must have made a mistake.

Mr. LAURIER. They were not accustomed to that.

Mr. McNEILL. No, they were not accustomed to that, and I think a man who does his work so well and so cheaply should have the support of every hon. member in this House. When it has been suggested outside that Mr. Porter has been favoured by the Government in reference to the work, I may say that I think he has been very hardly treated with regard to it by the department. Mr. Porter tendered for the work and the tenders were opened in November. He succeeded in doing his work so cheaply because he has a practical knowledge of every detail in connection with it. He is a man who made himself. He began as a workingman and has made himself by his honesty, his intelligence and his ability. He has a wonderful faculty for organization, and for seeing every man is doing full work, and yet he is one of the most popular masters of work you can find anywhere. He has succeeded always in doing his work so cheaply by reason of the fact that he does work so quickly. There is no lost time. He knows exactly where everyone should be, and what every man should be doing, and every man is at his place and the work is kept moving on. He tendered in November, when he expected to be able to carry on his work without check or let or hindrance by reason of broken weather. The tenders were opened in the latter end of November, but he could not get his contract, and he told me that he was afraid, as the season was going on, he might not be able to complete the work at the figures. The winter passed on until near the month of February, and he came to me and said: I am afraid to undertake this work at all; and he wrote to the department and asked to be relieved of his contract and to have his deposit returned. The department—I do not know whether they were justified legally in doing so or not—refused to return his deposit, although the two reliable months of the winter when he had depended upon doing his work had passed away and he was forced to go on with it. What he anticipated, occurred. A great thaw came and his roads were flooded and destroyed, and his men were idle. Then this great storm came on and the damage was done. I think he has been harshly dealt with in not being paid extra for the trouble caused by the delays which occurred in the department. Surely a man who has proved himself so valuable in the public interest and has saved this country thousands and thousands of dollars by the contracts he has undertaken, ought to receive some consideration at the hands of the Department of Public Works. I sincerely hope that the Government will take the matter into their consideration. The two months' delay, even supposing these accidents had not occurred, meant the difference to him between profit and loss, and, when these accidents did occur, it meant a very considerable difference. Something has been said about his using wedges to level up the work. I understand that is the usual way to level up such work, and that he has done the work of levelling according to the requirements of the engineer and has turned it out as a good job, as he does every job that leaves his hands.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) makes a charge against the Government, that they refused either to return the deposit of this contractor or to award the contract to him for two months, and that this delay so altered the circumstances under which he was tendering, that the claim now advanced is the result thereof. Of course, one can understand how, under the circumstances that we have enquired into, such a tenderer as this would not, perhaps, have his tender accepted with a great deal of promptitude, and I regret that the hon. member for North Bruce, therefore, has not at an earlier period of the session been able to discover that the Department of Public Works did not desire to have a cheap and yet efficient tenderer or contractor. That is the conclusion that must be drawn from the charge that is made against the Government. The hon. member for North Bruce has given an excellent character to this contractor. He is a stranger, probably, in the Public Works Department. I hope that he will hereafter be better known.

Mr. McNEILL. He is well known in the Public Works Department.

DISMISSAL OF THE STE. ANGÈLE POSTMASTER.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the House forms itself into Committee of Supply, I wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General and of the Government to the dismissal of the postmaster at Ste. Angèle, in the County of Rouville. I gave notice to the hon. Postmaster General last week that I would bring this matter before the House, and he then stated that he had no objection. Twice I had an opportunity to do so, but refrained on account of his not being in his seat. Unfortunately, I find again that he is not in the House at this moment; but as this is probably the last time the House will form into Committee of Supply, I think it my duty to bring the matter up to-day. The Government decided to dismiss the postmaster at Ste. Angèle on account of certain irregularities alleged to have taken place in the administration of the post office under his charge. I see that on the 14th of September last, in answer to a question put to the Government asking for the reasons for the dismissal of the postmaster, the hon. Minister said that he had been dismissed on account of a registered letter having been detained too long in the post office, and that owing to this fact the man deserved to be dismissed. It was said, also, that the postmaster had even erased, or altered, the stamp on the letter, so as to show that it had arrived at a different date from that upon which it had in reality reached his office. I must say just here, Mr. Speaker, that this statement of the hon. Postmaster General is not in accordance with the facts. I do not wish to say that this statement was made to the House in bad faith, but I believe that the Postmaster General has been misinformed, and that consequently he should order the post office inspector to make a new investigation. However, on the 17th of September, three days after this answer was given in this House, I wrote to the hon. Postmaster General, making him acquainted with what had happened, offering to prove to him that this postmaster had not committed the offence of which he was accused, and asking at least for an opportunity to establish this. If, in the opinion of the Government, this dismissal must be, I understand that I have not the power to prevent it; but I would like that the true reasons for it be given. I do not want would-be reasons given here, which are not those which actuated the Postmaster General in this dismissal. I, therefore, asked, in my letter to the hon. Postmaster General, that he be pleased to order an investigation. There has been none. According to my information, the post office inspector simply went to Ste. Angèle, where he only conferred with the party who wished the post office for himself, and he made a report unfavourable to the officer. I may say now that Mr. Loiselle, the postmaster in question, went to the post office inspector to ask him if he was charged with any irregularity. The inspector stated to him that there had been certain irregularities in the matter of a letter which left St. Césaire and arrived at Ste. Angèle on the 10th of June, 1890, according to the complainant, but which really only arrived on the 13th of June. The question, then, is, when did this letter arrive at Ste. Angèle? Now, I hold in my hand a certificate from the postmaster at St. Césaire, which establishes that the letter in question was mailed at his office on the 12th of June, 1890, and that it left that office on the 13th of June, 1890. This is the certificate:

"ST. CÉSAIRE, 17th September, 1891.

"I, the undersigned postmaster at St. Césaire, certify that on the 12th of June, 1890, J. O. Demers deposited a letter which was registered under the number 875, for A. Guillet, at Ste. Angèle. This letter was mailed on the 13th of June, 1890, by way of Montreal.

"C. PEPIN,

"Postmaster."

Now, Mr. Speaker, what happened after this? I see by the affidavit which I hold in my hand that this letter arrived at Ste. Angèle on the evening of the same day, that is to say, on the 13th of June, 1890. On that day the person to whom it was addressed did not come to the post office. He sent another person, one of his employés, I believe; but as the latter had no power to take out a registered letter belonging to Mr. Guillet, the postmaster, or the party representing him, told this employé, a man by the name of Lavallée, to tell his employer to come and get his registered letter. Mr. Guillet did not come that day nor the day after. Two days later, on the 15th of June, the wife of the postmaster, seeing that Mr. Guillet was not coming for his letter, went herself to his place to tell him to come and get it. Unfortunately, Mr. Guillet was not at home, and she notified his son, who immediately started to go and tell their father that there was a registered letter for him at the post office. This gentleman did not come on the 15th. But on the morning of the 16th, when Mr. Guillet was passing in front of the post office, he was notified by the postmaster himself that he had a registered letter, and a few minutes afterwards he came in and gave a receipt for it. Here is a solemn declaration of Madame Loiselle, which fully corroborates this statement of the facts:

"I, Célina Cadieux, wife of B. Loiselle, assistant at the post office of Ste. Angèle de Monnoir, solemnly declare: That on the 13th of June, 1890, I was at the post office between six and seven o'clock in the evening when the mail came. There was also present J. E. Boulais, assistant. It was I and J. E. Boulais who arranged the letters and papers, but it was J. E. Boulais who saw to the registered letters. There was one addressed to A. Guillet and it was J. E. Boulais who entered it in the book. I saw to the distribution of the papers and other letters. It was a Mr. Lavallée who asked for Mr. Guillet's newspapers, and I told him then to tell Mr. Guillet that he had a registered letter. In the evening, towards nine o'clock, when my husband arrived, he asked me if I had sent word to Mr. Guillet that he had a registered letter. I answered: 'Yes; I sent him word by Mr. Lavallée.' On the morrow, Saturday, the 14th of June, when I saw that Mr. Guillet did not come to get his letter, I thought he was absent, and on Sunday afternoon, seeing that Mr. Guillet had not come after mass, I went to his house about three o'clock. When I arrived his two little boys were near the house, and I asked them if their father was in. They answered me, 'No.' They said, 'We can fetch him; he is not far.' I said to them, 'It is not necessary; I wanted to tell him that he has a registered letter in the post office. I had asked Mr. Lavallée to let him know.' They replied, 'Lavallée may have forgotten to tell him,' and adding, 'We will go and tell him,' started away running.

"And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing it to be true, under the Act passed in the thirty-seventh year of the reign of Her Majesty, called an Act for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial oaths. And I, the said deponent, signed this nineteenth day of September, eighteen hundred and ninety-one.

(Signed) "CÉLINA CADIEUX.

(Signed) "DAMASE BOULAIS, J.P."

This affidavit is corroborated by that of Mr. J. E. Boulais, which reads as follows:—

"I, J. E. Boulais, assistant in the post office of Ste. Angèle de Monnoir, solemnly declare that on the 13th of June, 1890, I was at the post office in the evening, at the arrival of the mail. There was also Madame Célina Cadieux, wife of B. Loiselle, and assistant in the post office. It is I who entered in the book the registered letter for Mr. A. Guillet. It was a letter that came from St. Césaire, and was stamped 13th June, 1890, as shown by the book. I was present, and heard Madame Célina Cadieux bid Mr. Lavallée tell Mr. Guillet that he had a registered letter.

"And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing it to be true, under the Act passed in the thirty-seventh year of the reign of Her Majesty, called an Act for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial oaths, and I, the said deponent, signed this nineteenth day of September, eighteen hundred and ninety-one.

(Signed) "J. E. BOULAIS.

"Taken and attested at Ste. Marie de Monnoir, this nineteenth day of September, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, before me, the undersigned justice of the peace.

(Signed) "DAMASE BOULAIS, J.P."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I also have the affidavit of the postmaster himself, which reads as follows:—

"I, the undersigned, B. Loiselle, postmaster at Ste. Angèle de Monnoir, solemnly declare that on the 13th of June, 1890, there arrived at the Ste. Angèle post office a registered letter addressed to Mr. A. Guillet; that there were on that evening at the post office for opening the bag and delivering the papers and letters, Madame Célina Cadieux, my wife and assistant in the office, and J. E. Boulais, also a post office assistant;

"That I arrived that night after the close of the post office, and that having gone in to see my letters and papers I saw, in the book of registered letters, that there was a registered letter for Mr. A. Guillet, of Ste. Angèle, coming from St. Césaire, and bearing the date 13th of June, 1890; seeing that the Ste. Angèle stamp was not well printed, as the figure 13 could hardly be seen, I took a pen and re-wrote the figure.

Mr. BRODEUR.

"I then asked my wife if Mr. Guillet had come to the post office. She said 'No; but I sent word to him by Mr. Lavallée that there was a registered letter for him.'

"This took place on the evening of 13th June, 1890. The next day, Saturday, the 14th, Mr. Guillet did not come to get his letter, and I thought he was away. On Sunday, after mass, he still did not come. Then on Monday morning as he was passing by the post office, going to church, where he was going to sing at a high mass, I said to him: 'Mr. Guillet, you have had a registered letter here for a couple of days; won't you come and get it?' And he answered, 'I will stop and get it after mass.'

"And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing it to be true, under the Act passed in the thirty-seventh year of the reign of Her Majesty, called an Act for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial oaths. And I, the said dependent, signed this nineteenth day of September, eighteen hundred and ninety-one.

(Signed) "B. LOISELLE, P.M.

(Signed) "DAMASE BOULAIS, J.P."

I must say that these facts show conclusively that far from being negligent in the discharge of his duties, this postmaster did even more than he was bound to do, for it certainly cannot be contended that the postmasters are obliged to run after people to beg them to come and get their letters. It is the business of the people to do so. In this case the postmaster receives a registered letter; he sends word to the person to whom it is directed; he even takes the pains to send to his house to let him know; he stops him on the street to tell him himself, and it is now claimed that this postmaster has not done his duty as he ought to, and that this is the reason why he was dismissed. Well, the reason he was dismissed is not for having kept a letter a day or two, but solely because he is a Liberal—because of his political opinions. That is the only reason; for it is seen by the certificate itself of the post office from which this letter started that it was sent on the same day that it appears to have been entered in the post office book at Ste. Angèle de Monnoir. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the Postmaster General has not thought fit to answer the letter which I sent him on the 17th of September last, asking for an investigation of this matter. It seems to me that when one has the audacity to come before the House and before the country and accuse a man of having committed what might be called a forgery, if this man asks for an investigation, when none has been made it would only be justice on the part of the Government to grant the desired investigation, if the Government is suspectible of doing justice. But I understand, Mr. Speaker, what there is at the bottom of that question. My opponent in the last election, Mr. Gigault, wants to revenge himself upon this postmaster for his conduct during the last election, by taking away from him the little salary of $40 or $50 a year which goes with this office. This man does not depend upon this salary to live; he is rich enough without it. But if it is the will of some that he should lose his office, he does not want to lose it under the cloud of accusations brought against him as postmaster. I hope that the Government will have enough courage and heart to grant the investigation, which is asked for. I say that this dismissal has been made for a purely political object, and I prove it by the declaration of Mr. Loiselle, who, after having received notice of his dismissal, went to see the inspector, to learn the reason for it. Here is this declaration:

"I, Bénoni Loiselle, bourgeois and postmaster for the parish of Ste. Angèle, in the County of Rouville, solemnly declare as follows:—

"That on the 4th of September, 1891, after having received a letter from Mr. King, post office inspector, to the effect that the Postmaster General had considered it expedient to repeal my appointment as postmaster, I went to see the said Mr. King to learn the reasons for this repeal.

"That then and there the said Mr. King told me that the only reason why I had been dismissed was that a postmaster was wanted who would not meddle with politics.

"That I have always been a follower of the Liberal party, and that the person designated as my successor is the chief of the Conservative party in the parish.

"And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing it to be true, and under the Act for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial oaths, and I sign.

"B. LOISELLE.

"Taken and attested before me, at Montreal, on the 21st of September, 1891.

"R. DANDURAND, J.P., P.Q."

Mr. Speaker, I believe that after this declaration, which positively affirms what I stated, it is evident that the Government has only made this dismissal at the demand of Mr. Gigault. There is a not unimportant detail in the affair: this letter came from Mr. Gigault's post office; it was mailed by Mr. Gigault's partner, and was probably a trap through which Mr. Gigault hoped to lead the postmaster into some irregularity. Unluckily for him, the facts establish beyond all doubt that there was no irregularity, and that the position taken by the Government and its friend, Mr. Gigault, show that they do not want to do justice to the postmaster, but intrench themselves behind what I will not call a lie, but certainly something not absolutely true, to deny justice to this postmaster. So, I hope that the Government will have heart and courage enough, and energy enough, to give this postmaster the opportunity of substantiating the evidence he offers. If they do not do it, I will be obliged to say that the Government, through its Postmaster General, did not tell all the truth in the statement made the other day before the House.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I have not had the advantage of being present at the beginning of the remarks of my hon. friend, the member for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur), but I understand from information which I am given, that he complains of the dismissal of the Ste. Angèle postmaster. Am I right?

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Undoubtedly.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. (Translation.) This postmaster was dismissed, as was stated by the hon. Postmaster General, for two reasons—the first, because he had made of his office, during the elections, a place of political meetings.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) The Postmaster General has not stated that. I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. (Translation.) One of the facts brought to the knowledge of the Postmaster General was that Mr. Loiselle had made his post office a place of public meetings. There is no doubt as to the rule established by the Government that a public employé must not be dismissed from his duties for his political opinions, only provided that in the exercise of his rights as elector he does not neglect his duties of Government employé. But, Mr. Speaker, a nother reason was given by the Postmaster General. It is that Loiselle was found guilty of irregularities in the exercise of his duties. I do not want to discuss this point, not having at my disposal the departmental fyle. But I know, and affirm this much, the Ste. Angèle postmaster, during the election, received a letter which was to be delivered to someone in the parish of Ste. Angèle.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) It was in 1890 that it took place, not during the last election.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. (Translation.) I do not know when it took place; the date is not material. Let it be 1890 or 1891. I speak of a fact which I gathered from the documents. A letter had been sent from a neighbouring parish to a citizen of the parish of Ste. Angèle. The letter should have been delivered upon the day of its arrival. It contained instructions for election work, given by one of the election agents. The person to whom the letter was addressed had been informed that this document would be sent on that day. He applied to the post office, and was answered that the letter had not come. He was refused the letter. He was made to wait two, if not three, days. I am positive, because I remember having seen the documents. I will call attention to the fact that this post office is not one where the multiplicity of business can cause such mistakes. The letter was not delivered. The person to whom it was addressed made enquiries, and learned that the letter had been mailed on such a day. He asked for the letter and it was not delivered. When it was delivered it was found that the post office stamp showed that the letter had only arrived the day it was delivered. Yet it ought to have been stamped the day it arrived. The postmaster had stamped it on the day he delivered it, to make believe and to be able to prove, if need be, before a court, that the letter had only arrived on that day.

Mr. BÉCHARD. (Translation.) What proof is there to the contrary?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. (Translation.) I am coming to that, and I am sure that my hon. friend will be of my opinion. Was the postmaster not aware that he would be accused? I do not know. But on the day that the letter was delivered a correction was made with the pen, changing the date of the stamp of the post office from which the letter had come, and substituting the date of the letter's arrival at Ste. Angèle—that is to say, two or three days before he delivered this letter. In a court of justice, before a tribunal, the circumstantial evidence would be held absolute; for, it being certain that the letter had arrived on a certain day, the fact that on the envelope the printed stamp was changed so as to substitute the date on which the letter was received is evidence of irregularity somewhere. At the time of delivery the office stamp was on the envelope, and the postmaster turned away with the letter which he was to deliver, and changed the first date with a pen. When the person to whom the letter was addressed received it, he said to the postmaster: "How is it this letter bears the stamp of such a date, and has been received two days ago?" The postmaster answered: "The letter was received on the date it bears."

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Must I understand that this took place during the last election, or that of 1890?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. (Translation.) I could not say whether it was during the last election or that which preceded it. I do not remember. I was under the impression that it took place during the election of 1891. But it may have been during that of 1890.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) According to my information, it was during the local election of 1890 that the affair took place.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

West Farnham Post Office $4,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Did I understand the Minister to say he would drop that?

Mr. FOSTER. That?

Mr. McMULLEN. I thought you made some remark in regard to that item.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say anything.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not wish to detain the Committee, but I simply move that the item be struck out.

Mr. SPROULE. I think, after the debate we had last Saturday night, it is too bad for the hon member for North Wellington to commence his tactics again. Certainly there were very clear grounds given for the erection of that post office, whether the place is small or large. In the first place, there is no good accommodation in the public building there, and no fit place can be had without paying an extra price for it. In the next place, the town is rapidly growing and is becoming a very important place, and I do not think it is unreasonable that a post office should be erected there.

Mr. LAURIER. I think this question has been sufficiently debated. Although, in my opinion, it is an item which cannot be justified in any way, we will not carry the discussion of it any further.

Ontario—Picton Post office, Custom-house, &c... ....$5,000

Mr. MULOCK. Would the hon. Minister explain what the proposed scheme is?

Mr. FOSTER. The scheme is to build a new public building which shall do for a post office, Custom-house, Inland Revenue office, and so on. The work was called for by the Town Council of Picton by a resolution carried on the 20th June, 1887, a copy of which was submitted to the Postmaster General, and another one to the Minister of Customs. The postal revenue collected at this office is $5,020.

Mr. MULOCK. Have you bought the land?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the estimated cost of the site and building?

Mr. FOSTER. There is no estimate of the cost of the site. It is not proposed to build an expensive building.

Mr. MULOCK. Is this $5,000 based upon any data at all? Have you any definite scheme in view?

Mr. FOSTER. The scheme in view is this, that we ask Parliament for $5,000 to make arrangements for the location and purchase of a site. This money will purchase the site and give us something towards preparing plans, and the like of that.

Mr. MULOCK. Don't you think that before we take the initial step of putting $5,000 into a scheme, there should be laid before Parliament some estimate as to the total expenditure you are likely to be led into?

Mr. FOSTER. It might be valuable. My hon. friend will see that before very much is done Parliament will have to be drawn upon for another vote.

Mr. MULOCK. I don't think this is a fair way to deal with Parliament. I do not want to take any captious objection, but I do not call it fair, and not being fair, I do not think it is honest. Before we embark in an enterprise of this kind, an intelligent statement should be laid before the House as to the probable expenditure. The officers of the department have been engaged in drawing plans of a similar character all over the Dominion, and they should be able, from mere sketches, to estimate the probable cost. This system of commencing buildings without knowing the probable cost, should terminate. It is not fair. If this Government want to recover public confidence, they should proceed in a business-like way with this proposed undertaking, and the interests of the country should be first considered. To come down in the Supplementary Estimates with an item of $5,000, in connection with an enterprise, without informing the House what the total cost should be, is not a proper way to deal with the public exchequer. I submit there should be more information given. If the Minister does not propose to reply to these observations I should like to know it.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman will deal in a decent way with this side of the House, we will do so. The hon. gentleman made the assertion that it is not honest. He has no right to throw such an assertion across the floor.

Mr. MULOCK. I said that to ask Parliament to vote $5,000 without stating what the total building would probably cost, was not a fair way to deal with the public funds, and not being a fair way, it is not an honest way. I did not say that the Minister was not honest. He must not make an accusation against himself, unless he knows it is well founded. It is not an honest way to deal with the matter. I repeat that, without desiring to take any captious objection, before we enter into an expenditure of this kind, which may involve a large sum, we should know the probable expenditure.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman has accused the Government of not replying to his remarks. He scarcely gave us time to do so. The Minister of Finance was discussing with me at that moment what I thought the probable cost of a building would be in that locality, and whether $5,000 would be sufficient to purchase a site. I told him it was more than would be required to purchase a site, and what my hon. friend was going to inform the hon. gentleman was that the Government would not enter into a contract for the construction of a building until they knew the cost. If he had not been so impetuous, he would have got that answer.

Mr. MULOCK. The purchase of a site is one thing, and the estimate of the building is another.

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman would have taken what I told him without flying off the handle so quickly, there would not have been necessity for this discussion. We have $5,000 in these Estimates, which will be sufficient to buy a site and defray the initial expenses, and before we proceed with the building we propose to come to Parliament and ask a vote. If the hon. gentleman has such a poor opinion of the Goverment as not to consider it desirable to place in their hands $5,000 to meet the cost of site and initial expenses, he must keep that opinion.

Mr. MULOCK. Five thousand dollars does not in any way indicate the cost into which the country will be ultimately led. Before we commence, we should have a reasonable presentation of the case, and should be informed within reasonable limit as to the probable total expenditure. The department has been engaged on buildings of this kind in various parts of the Dominion, and there is no great mystery about that matter. The departmental officers should have very little trouble in informing the Minister as to about the total cost of such a building as this town will require. That information should be given to this House before we proceed with this item, because we have seen how expenditure has grown from small sums to large sums in connection with local public works. The Minister has not in the slightest degree improved his position. He says we now propose to get Parliament committed to this enterprise, at all events to the extent of $5,000, and yet we have not the faintest idea how much the building will cost. I submit this is not fair. The Minister of Finance may, if he will, take offence at a criticism, but that will not in the slightest degree cause any member to neglect his duty and fail to ascertain before beginning this undertaking, what the total cost will be. Anyone who enters on the building of a house without first counting the cost is always described as a most improvident person.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) does not comprehend the whole circumstances, or he would know why the vote was asked. The County of Prince Edward has returned a member to support the Government, and there is a protest against his election. Should the protest be successful, this gentleman will then be able to say that there is a vote of $5,000 for a post office, and if the constituency elects him, it will be built. The Minister of Finance is not in a position to give the slightest idea as to where it is going to be built, its size, dimensions or material. But all these particulars are not necessary. There is no certainty that anything of the kind will be wanted, because the erection of the building depends entirely upon the return of a Conservative member for the county. If a Government supporter is sent, the construction may go forward; if not, no plans would be wanted, no site would be required and nothing else will be needed, and the vote will lapse. Consequently, the Government are not in a position to give any information. This case is on a par with that of the post office at Perth. The hon. gentlemen opposite found fault with my hon. friend for the course he adopted in making his criticism. I cannot understand how hon. gentlemen opposite have the face to come before this Committee in violation of a resolution passed unanimously by this House that such a proposition as this should not be proceeded with until those towns with the largest annual receipts have first secured post offices. Picton is entitled to a post office, and I should be glad to see it furnished with one. It is an old and respectable town. But I am afraid the Government is not going to build a post office, because they are not in position to give the Committee any information regarding it. They are now taking a vote for a site. They will peddle the site round during the coming election, and if they are not successful they will come back and say we do not want a site.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Carried.

Mr. MULOCK. No; more information is required. I move the matter be reconsidered.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. I propose to ask a few more questions.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this item carried or not?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It has been carried.

Mr. MULOCK. I move the matter be reconsidered. The reason I move it is this: I should like to ask the Minister how it comes that, if this action of to-day is based on a resolution of the town council four years ago, the Minister only acted on that resolution at the last moment in 1891. How has it become so urgent just now?

Mr. McMULLEN. I second the motion.

Napanee Post Office, Custom-house, &c.—Balance due, superintending architect	$ 963 65

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Chairman, we have had a statement from the Minister of Public Works this session that the Napanee post office had been paid for in full and finished. That statement is published in Hansard, and I should like to know how it comes now that this extra charge should be asked for?

Mr. FOSTER. This money is to provide for the amount which the chief architect states is due to the superintending architect of the Napanee building. The building is paid for, and this is only a balance due to the superintending architect.

Mr. LAURIER. Who is that architect?

Mr. FOSTER. F. Barnett.

Mr. LAURIER. Is he an employé of the department?

Mr. FOSTER. He is not.

Mr. McMULLEN. What was paid this architect?

Mr. FOSTER. 3½ per cent. on the cost of the building.

Mr. MULOCK. Did he prepare the plans for the work in the first place?

Mr. FOSTER. He prepared the detailed plans; he is the superintending architect. The department itself prepared the plans.

Mr. MULOCK. Was there, in addition to the superintending architect, a clerk of works?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. Can the hon. gentleman say how much was paid to the clerk of works?

Mr. FOSTER. $75 per month.

Mr. MULOCK. For how many months was he paid?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not that information here.

Mr. ALLISON. Was there any claim made for this amount previous to this session?

Mr. FOSTER. No; the superintending architect has been at work ever since the plans were made and sent to the builder, and the arrangement with him was, that he should be paid 3½ per cent. of the cost of the building, which amounted to $1,515; $550 has been paid him, leaving $965 due on these buildings. There is always a superintending architect and a clerk of works. Their department is not the same, and both of them must be competent men.

Mr. MULOCK. I think I would not be in error in saying that this building was in course of construction for at least three years, and that the clerk of works was paid during that time.

Mr. ALLISON. When was this building completed?

Mr. FOSTER. It must have been completed in 1890.

Mr. ALLISON. Was this architect's claim sent in to the Government before this meeting of Parliament?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not a new claim?

Mr. FOSTER. No; this is wages due to the superintending architect of the building who was paid, not by salary, but on the percentage of the cost. It is not a new thing at all, and it is the same in the case of all the large public buildings throughout the Dominion.

Mr. ALLISON. But his services are not required when the building is finished?

Mr. FOSTER. And no wages are paid him after the building is finished. I tried to inform my hon. friend that the superintending architect is paid by a percentage and not by salary. When the work is completed, the total cost is known and then you know what to pay the architect.

Mr. BARRON. I am informed that in the case of the Lindsay and Peterborough buildings there was no architect. There was simply a clerk of works in charge, and if that is so I cannot see why you should have a superintending architect in this case.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend must be wrong in that. I base my information simply on what I find in going through the Estimates here and the explanations of them. In the case of all these large public buildings there is an estimate for a clerk of works and a superintending architect as well.

Mr. BARRON. I understand in this case you have a superintending architect and a clerk of works besides. In the case of the Lindsay public building you had a clerk of works and no local architect, as the clerk of works was a Government official?

Mr. FOSTER. That might be.

Mr. BARRON. But in this case you have an architect outside of the Government officials?

Mr. FOSTER. It might be impossible to have a Government official at every one of these places. There was an architect at Lindsay, but the work there was done by one of the officers here who went up from time to time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who was the architect at Napanee?

Mr. FOSTER. Barnett.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Because I had the pleasure of inspecting the other day at Napanee a piece of work in the shape of two or three steps for which $57 was charged. I have had a good deal of building of my own done at various times, and I would consider myself very much overcharged, if I had been required to pay $10 for that work. If this is an example of this architect's charges, not only should this vote not be passed, but he should be sued for as gross and deliberate a fraud as was ever perpetrated.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend speaks inadvisably.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, I speak with knowledge obtained on the spot. This job was shown to me; and the Auditor General's Report is there also.

Mr. FOSTER. We have superior information, because, while my hon. friend was away visiting, we had an investigation here before the Public Accounts Committee, where his hon. colleague from Wellington put a number of persons through their facings on the subject of that account; and it turns out that the $57 for those steps came to be paid in this way. In the first place, there was a miscalculation in regard to the steps, which was no fault of the architect, but was due to the grading of the street. A larger number of steps were planned for than were necessary——

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Just one.

Mr. FOSTER,—and they had to be remodelled. There is also a fine granolithic step on the sidewalk which cost quite an amount of money. When you add these together, and allow a fair profit, you will see how the amount is made up.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then all I can say is that a more blundering piece of botch work was never perpetrated; and what is there is not worth more than $10.

Mr. BARRON. The hon. gentleman says that I am right—that at Lindsay the architect was a Government official, who did not receive any more than his regular pay. If that was the case at Lindsay and at Peterborough, I would like to know from the Minister why in the single case of Napanee, in the construction of a post office which has cost an enormous amount of money, and which, notwithstanding what the Minister has said, is reeking with fraud, an architect was specially employed to do work which the officers of the department are supposed to do. There must be some reason for the exception in this case.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose it is impossible to have sufficient men in the department here, without keeping a very large permanent staff, to attend to all these buildings. A large number of works are going on in different parts of the Dominion, and it is not possible to multiply our officials so that they can attend to them all. A reasonable-minded man would take that into account. The hon. gentleman made an assertion which he had no right to make: he said that the building at Napanee was reeking with fraud. Upon what ground does the hon. gentleman base that assertion? He had this matter before the Public Accounts Committee, and examined witnesses there in regard to it, and not only was no fraud proven, but on the contrary certain leads which it was thought would show fraud were proved to have been deceptive. You may say, if you like, that the cost has been extravagant, but to say that the work was reeking with fraud, when no fraud has been shown, is to go beyond the record. My hon. friend must not get into the habit of making an assertion as proved when he has had every opportunity to prove it, and no proof has been given.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It strikes me that another explanation may be given of this matter. The probability is that there was an architect in the town of Napanee who was a supporter of the Government, and they wanted to do him some favour. In the town of Lindsay I fancy there was no Conservative architect, and there was no necessity of employing a local architect, so that the work was done under the Government. I fancy that is the explanation that ought to be given.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not appear on the record.

Mr. BARRON. Notwithstanding what the Minister says, I am not in the habit of making statements unless I believe them to be true. Although this matter has been partially investigated, with perhaps a very satisfactory result to the hon. Minister, he will probably find next session that it may not be quite so satisfactory.

Mr. FOSTER. Then you should wait until next session

Mr. BARRON. I am warning the hon. gentleman what he may expect. The mere fact that this building cost $48,000. without the steps, I think, is sufficient justification of what I have said, apart from the fact that the hon. gentleman has another session before him, when it will be proved that these statements are true.

Kingston Military College—New dormitory (revote, $8,000)..... $15,000

Mr. MULOCK. Is the residental part of the institution self-sustaining?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot tell that. My hon. friend has heard this subject discussed. It has been very strongly urged by hon. gentlemen about these boards, and by the Minister as well, that the sleeping and residence accommodation is not at all equal to the teaching capacity of the college, and it is thought best to take this vote to build a dormitory which will accommodate a large number of pupils. This will also effect a saving, because, by accommodating fifteen or twenty more pupils, we shall receive a corresponding increase in the fees, which, as the hon. gentleman knows, are now large; and the same teaching staff can take care of twenty more pupils as well as of the smaller number.

Mr. MULOCK. We must draw a distinction between cheap education and cheap boarding at residental institutions. I am not depreciating the school, but when supplying dormitory accommodation for the pupils, we should see that the residence is self-sustaining. We ought to know what returns it is giving us. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can give us that information.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not able to give that information. Of course, a detailed statement of both expenditures and receipts will be found in the Auditor General's Report each year.

Mr. MULOCK. Does that show the course fees?

Mr. FOSTER. It shows the fees.

Mr. MULOCK. Does it show what is paid each individual.

Mr. FOSTER. Whether it goes into all the details, and divides them under different heads, I do not know.

Mr. MULOCK. When buildings are owned by the Dominion and used for these purposes, they have to be kept in repair and become a continuous source of expenditure. I think the fees collected from the students for residence should be sufficient to cover all the expenditures of residence, including the maintenance of the building. Perhaps we would not ask for anything as return for the capital invested, but there ought to be sufficient received to keep the building in repair.

Mr. FOSTER. In B—250 of the Auditor General's Report, you will find the whole of the expenditures.

Peterborough Custom-house—including vault accommodation for Customs andInland revenue purposes (revote)..... $9,000

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Have the Government a resident superintendent of this work at Peterborough?

Mr. FOSTER. There is a resident architect.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this the final estimate for the completion of this building?

Mr. FOSTER. The total amount expended up to 31st December, 1890, was $5,951. That was the cost of the site. Then the amount of the contract for the erection of the building was $13,487; fittings and furniture, $2,000; heating, $1,500; fireproof vault and burglar-proof vaults, $2,000; fencing and footpaths, $2,500; architect, $1,000; clerk of works, $1,500; incidental expenses, $30,938. Up to 3rd June, 1891, there was expended $10,938. In the Estimates is a grant of $6,000 and this grant of $9,000, making a total of $25,938, leaving $5,000 to complete.

Mr. BARRON. From whom was the site purchased?

Mr. FOSTER. From E. Phelan.

Mr. BARRON. That is $30,000, not one cent of which need have been spent, if the hon. gentleman had pursued the proper policy, and, as in other places, combined the post office and Custom-house in the one building. It was the original intention of the Government to have done so, but a gentleman who owned a site of land expected to sell it, and he interested some of his friends, and they came to Ottawa and got the Government to buy this particular site. In the meantime, another gentleman interested in another site came to Ottawa. There were two applicants knocking at the door of the treasury, both wanting their sites purchased. The Government, in order not to disappoint their followers, spent $30,000, not one cent of which need have been spent if the hon. gentleman had backbone enough to refuse to buy the other site, which the Government never intended to buy in the first instance. But, because the Government had not sufficient courage to resist the importunities of gentlemen having sites to sell, the people of Canada have to pay unnecessarily $30,000. Had the Government pursued the same policy followed in other places, of combining the post office and the Custom house in one building, the one site and building would have been sufficient; but as they would not offend either one of these parties, they bought from both. The expenditure is estimated at $30,000, but if we are to judge the future by the past, it will be more like $60,000 by the time they get through, and all this useless expenditure is caused because they dare not refuse the man who came down and threatened to withdraw his support if they did not buy his site.

Mr. FOSTER. Will you stake your reputation on that assertion?

Mr. BARRON. I believe it to be true, and my information is that it is true. Having been compelled to buy both sites, they felt bound to put up two buildings, when one would have sufficed. Will the hon. gentleman stake his reputation that that is not true? Will he say there were not two parties wanting the Government to buy their respective sites, and that they did so, and put up two buildings, when it was their intention to have bought only one and constructed the one building, the Custom-house and post office? I say the Minister of Finance dare not risk his reputation so far as to state that what I say is not correct. My information is most reliable, that there were two different syndicates formed which came down to Ottawa, and these Conservatives were threatening the Government that they must not buy the property of the other syndicate; so, in order to let themselves out of their difficulty, the Government, not having sufficient backbone, bought both sites and put up two buildings, when they intended originally to put up only one.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is going to be the result of all this folly? There will be two sets of officials instead of one. That will be the result of the folly of having two buildings instead of one.

Mr. MULOCK. Were the plans for this building prepared in Ottawa?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. Then I am surprised at the expenditure on architect's fees and clerk of works. The hon. gentleman has told us that the contract price is $13,487; fittings, $2,000—I do not know whether the architect gets a commission on that, but I will give him credit for it—heating $1,500, vaults $2,000, fencing $2,500, making a total of $21,487. But the plans were prepared at Ottawa, and yet he is giving the architect $1,000 in connection with carrying out the works, or 4½ per cent. on the total amount. If the preparation of plans is valued as has been represented, you have allowed the architect twice as much as you ought. Then the clerk of works would have nothing to do except possibly with the carrying out of the plans and the fencing, and you have allowed him about 10 per cent. on the expenditure. That seems to be a very extravagant way of erecting public buildings, and no private person would act in this way. Will the Minister state how it is that so much money is thrown away in these items?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not a practical builder, but I suppose the Department of Public Works and their officers go practically to work. The clerk of works has to be there every day from the time the work commences until it is over. The duties of the superintending architect are to see that the building is constructed according to the plans, and he has to make frequent visits. My hon. friend makes a computation as to the payment of the clerk of works on a percentage. If that officer is competent, he must be paid a fair wage, and I do not think $75 a month is too much.

Mr. MULOCK. I should think a work of this kind could be carried through in one season, but from the amount asked for it must take two years to build it.

Mr. FOSTER. He had only one year.

Mr. MULOCK. But you allow the clerk of works $1,500 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. He is paid $75 a month. The amount of $1,500 is only an estimate, and it is the same in regard to the architect.

Mr. MULOCK. Then you have not paid this out yet?

Mr. FOSTER. No, and it may not amount to this.

Mr. MULOCK. Then, when it is found that $1,500 has been paid to the clerk of works and $1,000 paid to the architect to supervise the construction of this work, when the plans were prepared by the Government architect at Ottawa, the transactions will be open to criticism.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, and I understand my hon. friend will leave that over till next year.

Mr. BARRON. What is the name of the resident architect?

Mr. FOSTER. Belcher.

Mr. McMILLAN. What is the duty of a clerk of works when there is an architect there?

Mr. FOSTER. The clerk of the works has to see that every stone and brick is put in properly, and certainly that is not the duty of the architect.

Regina Court House, Land Office and Registry Office..... $10,000

Mr. MULOCK. Does that represent the total cost?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the total cost will be about double this. At present the court is held in a building which is owned jointly by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Government, and the expenses in the way of rental and so forth amount to, at any rate, $2,000 a year. It was found necessary to construct new land registry offices in Regina, and, looking at the whole position of affairs, it was found better to use the present building for a registry office and build a new one for the court house.

Lethbridge Custom-house and court house $7,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is a new vote to make provision towards the erection of a building to be used as a Custom-house and court house, the site being furnished free. The total cost will be about $20,000.

North-West Council Chamber, Government offices, Regina—heating apparatus $4,500

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that Regina is getting a considerable amount of expenditure this season. My hon. friend from West Assiniboia is getting well rewarded. It is going to cost the country a good deal to buy off men at such prices.

Medicine Hat Immigrant Building—alterations required to provide Court house and Police accommodation.. $1,000

Mr. TROW. I would ask the Minister if the Government intend to put up immigration buildings also in Moosomin, Edmonton and Prince Albert? I would like to know the necessity of three immigration buildings at these remote localities where there will be no immigrants worth speaking of at either place. There may be at Medicine Hat, because there is a building there already.

Mr. FOSTER. This is for alterations and repairs required in the immigrant building at Medicine Hat, according to the estimate of the chief architect, to provide the court house accommodation and North-West Police quarters called for by the Department of Justice in the communication of 2nd December, 1890. The immigrant building at Medicine Hat is a three-story wooden building, with a one-story kitchen annexed. It is proposed to sub-divide the ground floor so as to provide quarters for male and female immigrants, with two cells and a police office, besides separate entrances to the court room. On the upper floor there will be a court room, rooms for the judge and barristers, and police quarters, consisting of barrack room, mess room, sergeant's room, wash room and kitchen.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how many immigrants got off at this station last year; because I suppose this is considered the distributing point from the railway station for immigrants going into the western portion of the territories? It is very desirable to know what number of immigrants got off at that station with a view of seeking settlement in the surrounding country.

Mr. DEWDNEY. This building was erected to accommodate the neighbourhood of Medicine Hat. I do not know how many immigrants came in last year. Quite a number of German immigrants came and settled in the neighbourhood of Dunmore. They have not been as successful as we hoped, and a good many are moving further west. The building, after it was originally constructed, was found too large for the immigration in that locality. There were three or four immigration buildings of that size erected, one at Qu'Appelle Station, one at Medicine Hat, one at Calgary. The one at Qu'Appelle Station is also used as a court house, and for a few mounted police.

Mr. TROW. I think if it was properly named it will be called a poor house, or a place for indigent persons to remain a certain time until they recuperate so they could move onward. Evidently it cannot be intended for settlers in that locality. It might be an advantage to the Galt Mine at Lethbridge, or some miners when they want to rest for a week or two.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend is quite mistaken as to the character of the country. He speaks of the place being used as a rest for indigent persons. Now, I know that country well around Medicine Hat and Dunmore, and better places for ranching or for mixed farming you cannot find in the whole North-West. If my hon. friend knows it as well as he professes at times to know the North-West, he must know that what I say is true. But what we complain of in the North-West is this: that nearly half the House do not believe in the North-West, nearly half in the House do not realize what the North-West is going to be, nearly half the House is not acquainted with this fact, and I doubt if many in the whole House are acquainted with this fact, that the amount of money we get is wholly inadequate as compared with our population. We are entitled to about $200,000 more than we get. The moment that $1,000 for a post office or $1,000 for something else is required, here are hon. gentlemen getting up, on the Opposition side, and throwing some of their moles in regard to the North-West. We always expect the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) to object. He is what the French would call, speaking from a cuisine point of view, a pièce de résistance in this matter; he is an eternal joint, he is always there. But really, Mr. Chairman, it is almost provoking to hear the tide of criticisms we hear in this House on these items. As a fact, you cannot possibly get on in Medicine Hat without an immigrant shed there. The Government, when they built the original immigrant shed, were, as Milton says, "On hospitable thought intent." Now they are going to narrow the public appropriation that will be devoted to immigrants there, and are going to have a court house and police station in the same building, without enlarging it one iota. This expenditure is moderate; in fact, it is too small.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is perfectly clear that the hon. gentleman is not satisfied with the amount of the appropriations for the North-West. The hon. gentleman says this expenditure is necessary. The hon. gentleman also sees that this building is a case of great expectations. It is larger than we require, and there is more room than is necessary, and the Government are taking pains to reduce its dimensions, and asking an appropriation for the purpose. The hon. gentleman does not know how they could get on without those improvements in that particular district. I should have thought the hon. gentleman would have been rather more ambitious, and asked a more commodious place than the immigrant shed at Medicine Hat would afford even for travellers inured to the hardships of the North-West. But the hon. gentleman says that country is admirably adapted for agriculture and ranching. I do not know any portion of the territory about Medicine Hat and east of Calgary that is adapted to anything else than ranching. The soil is in itself fertile, but the atmosphere is very dry, there being scarcely any rainfall. Certainly the country is not adapted to farming. Then, you do not require a very large population to be carried into a ranching country, for a very small population will spread over a very extensive territory when it is only suitable for ranching purposes. Some of the territory near the foot of the Rocky Mountains is, no doubt, suited for settlement, as is, no doubt, territory further east; but the territory at the foot of the Rocky Mountains and the territory further east will not be accommodated by an immigrant shed at Medicine Hat. I do not pretend to say the Minister is acting unwisely in seeking to diminish the accommodation there afforded and seeking to utilize a portion of the building for other purposes. That is a very different matter from the justification which the hon. gentleman has just given for this appropriation. It is not in order that immigrants may be accommodated, but that the space which has been afforded to immigrants in the shed should be utilized for other than immigration purposes.

Prince Albert—Immigration building.. $1,000

Mr. TROW. Has there not been expenditure made for immigrant buildings at Prince Albert and Edmonton?

Mr. DEWDNEY. After it was found that these expensive immigrant sheds were not used as we expected, the policy was changed, and last year two sheds were built for the same figure, $1,000, one at Whitewood, and one at Regina. Each building contains one or two rooms, and a stove is provided. As soon as the head of the family finds his location, the family move out of the building.

Mr. TROW. Do I understand that the head of the family can go away and obtain employment, and have his family provided for at the expense of the Government?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. TROW. Is there no limit as to time?

Mr. DEWDNEY. If they are there for a week or two, there is no objection. We do not keep them; they keep themselves; but they have the use of a stove and the building.

Mr. McMULLEN. Have we an immigration agent at each of these points?

Mr. DEWDNEY. At Whitewood the homestead inspector looks after the shed. In Regina there is an immigrant agent who draws a very small salary.

New Public Buildings, Victoria, B.C.....$10,000

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). For what purpose is the money required?

Mr. FOSTER. This is the first vote for the erection of public buildings in Victoria.

Mr. MULOCK. What is to be the total cost?

Mr. FOSTER. It is proposed to erect a post office, Custom house, examining warehouse and Inland Revenue office. This is an initial vote, the object of which is to obtain a site for the public buildings, and it is also to cover the initial expenses.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is to be the total cost?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think the Minister of Finance is astray as regards the post office. The present post office at Victoria is situated in the very heart of the city, in one of the most valuable locations. I understand the scheme is to sell the present site and buildings and purchase another site, which would be just as central for the post office now, in view of the manner in which the city has spread, and no doubt the new building could be erected and site bought for what the present site and old building would realize. That is the intention in regard to the post office. I think this amount of $10,000 is with respect to some alterations at the Custom house.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is to be the cost of the building?

Mr. DEWDNEY. My idea of the cost of the present building and site would be probably $140,000 or $150,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the hon. gentleman expect to obtain that amount for the present building and site?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes. This vote is, however, in regard to the Custom house.

Mr. HAGGART. No determination with regard to the post office has been arrived at.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then no estimate has been prepared, no plans have been prepared, and there is no intention to build it?

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Mr. BOWELL. We have rented at a very high rental a building some distance from the Custom house, which is used as an examining warehouse, where the appraisers examine all goods. I suggested, after having made an investigation through the officers of the department, that an addition should be made to the present Custom house, which is on the harbour front and very convenient for Customs, Inland Revenue and Marine Departments. The proposition was made that a large building in the centre of the city should be erected for all Government purposes, which I objected to as being inconvenient for the Customs, and with an addition of $8,000 or $10,000 expended on it I thought it would give all the accommodation required for Customs and Inland Revenue purposes on the present site. Of course, it has been objected to by those who would like to see a magnificent building erected in the city, but I thought it would be in the interest of the Government and of the public service and of the country that an expenditure equal to the amount asked for should be made on the improvement of that building, which will cause it to answer all the purposes required. The present building is well situated, and when enlarged will afford sufficient accommodation.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would ask the Minister if it is not a fact that the receipts at Victoria are dropping off, while those at Vancouver are increasing very rapidly?

Mr. BOWELL. That is not the case. I can inform the hon. gentleman that while the income at Vancouver has increased over 100 per cent. last year, and from 50 to 75 per cent. this year, the income at Victoria has increased in almost equal proportion. The revenue in both cities has increased in nearly equal ratio, and I may add also that the revenue at New Westminster has increased during the last four or five years by 200 to 300 per cent. For the year ending 30th June, 1890, Victoria collected $814,654.20, and Vancouver $153,726, and both have increased this year.

Mr. BARRON. I would ask the Government if they intend to repay Mr. B. C. Woodman who paid for fuel, and which money went into the pocket of some person else? The acting Minister of Agriculture will remember that Mr. Woodman paid for fuel for the office and that the money was paid to Mr. Têtu, but it never got into Mr. Woodman's hands at all.

I would like to know if it is the intention of the Government to refund that money to him?

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman what disposal is to be made of the money, as I do not know the circumstances.

Government Printing Bureau, Ottawa—
Babcock Fire Extinguishers..... $671

Mr. LANDERKIN. Will these extinguish the tolls usually charged there?

Mr. McMULLEN. I understood that the Printing Bureau was a fire-proof building. What are these required for?

Mr. FOSTER. This is to procure some large and small Babcock fire extinguishers for the protection of the Government Printing Bureau, and more especially the valuable plant contained therein——

Mr. MULOCK. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER—against serious danger by fire. The whole recommended by the hon. the Secretary of State.

Mr. LANDEKKIN. From whom were they bought?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. From the only agent of the manufacturers there is. It would have been very imprudent to leave the immense stock of paper and machinery that we have in the binding and stationery department especially without the ordinary protection which every establishment of a great deal less magnitude than this one has. We tried to get them from the Public Works Department, but some delay occurred, and as there is no insurance on that stock and plant, it was absolutely necessary to get them at once. These were bought at the usual prices, and there is only one agent at Ottawa, I believe.

Mr. TROW. Which of the hon. Minister's officials made the purchase?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They were bought by the Queen's Printer himself.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What commission did he get?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I ask twenty-four hours to give an answer.

Mr. MULOCK. From whom were they purchased?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not know. The Queen's Printer stated that they were necessary, and they were bought by the Queen's Printer.

Mr. MULOCK. But the hon. gentleman ought to know when and from whom they were bought.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not know from whom they were bought. I know that they were bought on the recommendation of the deputy head of the department, after a requisition to the Public Works Department, and because I would not take the responsibility of leaving the building without this protection.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not saying that these machines should not have been bought; I have no doubt that they should. But the Minister has not answered my question. From whom were they bought?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not know. I think from the agent of the manufacturers.

Mr. DAVIN. Sir George Cornewall Lewis said that his duty was to see that his department worked, not to work his department. It is perfectly impossible for a Minister to work his department; and I may say, for the size of that building, these engines are very cheaply bought for that amount. I may also say here, as a practical man, that I have been over that building, and I suppose a more perfect establishment of the kind does not exist in the world.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Was it the superintendent who made the purchase of these extinguishers?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No; that is nonsense.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister says that they were recommended by the deputy head. I presume he means the late deputy head, Mr. Senécal, or is the Queen's Printer a deputy head.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There is only one deputy head in the department, the hon. gentleman should know. I said the Queen's Printer, who is the deputy head, had recommended that we should not leave the establishment a long time without protection.

Bayfield Wharf, N.S.—Reconstruction... $5,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Has this been entirely destroyed?

Mr. FOSTER. It was almost entirely destroyed by a storm of unusual severity on 1st December, 1890.

Port Maitland—Repairs to breakwater and landing pier..... $600

Mr. FLINT. I am very glad to see this appropriation, and I think the money will be well spent.

Mr. FOSTER. What county is that in?

Mr. FLINT. In the County of Yarmouth. While I am pleased with this appropriation, I wish to express my regret that one or two other necessary repairs in the same county have not received a small appropriation. I presume it is too late this session to press their claims upon the Government; but I should like to say that there are two or three places in the county where a small expenditure of $600 or $1,000 before the coming winter would save a large amount of money to the Government before this time next year. However, as there are no votes for these works this year, I shall endeavour, if I am here next session, to press their claims upon the Government. While on my feet, I would like to refer to an application which has been made for an appropriation for the removal of obstructions in the navigable portion of the Chebogue River. A very small amount would be of very great advantage, and I trust that before the end of next session the Government will be in a position to grant it, as it would be very greatly in the public interest.

Sault Ste. Marie—To complete payments for contract and additional works performed..... $1,475

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not see any provision in this for the improvement of the River Sydenham or the removal of the bar at the mouth of the River Thames. The attention of the Government was called at an early perioc of the session, to the condition of both these rivers. There is a very large, much larger traffic on them than on many of the rivers on which improvement is sought and for which estimates are provided. There is a larger number of entries in the port of Wallaceburg than in almost any other place in Ontario, with the single exception of Toronto, and there are boats running daily between Dresdon on the east branch of the Sydenham harbour as well as from Wallaceburg, and very serious obstacles to navigation exist in that river. There are many million feet of elm logs floated down the river, and a number of them sunk to the bottom, and there are occasionally falling trees that are carried down at high water from a long distance up the river, which sink in the river, and vessels are often seriously damaged by these obstacles to navigation. Steps ought to be taken to remove these obstacles. They are rivers on which there is a very large trade. I see in these estimates large appropriations for places where there is not one-twentieth part of the trade that exists on the River Sydenham and on the River Thames. There is the town of Chatham, centre of the County of Kent, from which a very large trade is carried on, and serious obstacles to navigation exist in the bar formed at the mouth of that river. The Minister of Public Works stated two or three years ago that immediate steps would be taken to remove that bar. Steps were not taken that year or last year, nor have any been taken this year, although the matter has been at least twice brought under the attention of the Government this session and although it was brought under the attention during the previous sessions ever since the obstruction has existed. I have frequently called the attention of the Administration to the condition of both these rivers, and I say that it is only proper that sections of the country which contribute so very largely to the public revenues should, in matters of this sort, where the necessity exists, not be overlooked. They should receive at least the same treatment as is extended to other portions of the Dominion where the claim is less than it is in those cases.

Mr. FOSTER. There has been a good deal of discussion with reference to that, and money has been expended on those rivers. I will bring my hon. friend's remarks to the attention of the acting Minister of Public Works, and no doubt they will be considered by him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When will they be considered?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot say.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman will see that this matter was called to his attention very early in the session, and there is no provision in the Estimates. The hon. gentleman has taken several thousand dollars for the improvement of the navigation of other rivers where the commerce is but a mere fraction of that carried on in those rivers. The trade upon the River Sydenham, I will venture to say, is many hundreds of thousand dollars every year. The hon. gentleman will see that he is acting most improperly to pass over the condition of those rivers when they have been brought to the attention of the Government.

Mr. CAMPBELL. For the last four or five years I have brought this matter to the attention of the Government, and every year I have had a promise from the Minister of Public Works that the matter would be attended to and a sum for it placed in the Estimates. Early this session I drew his attention to it, and he assured me that a sum would be placed in the Estimates. I also saw the present acting Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Agriculture, who knows the need of this appropriation very well, and they both assured me that they would do all they could to bring the matter before Council and have a sum placed in the Estimates. I think the Government are not treating that part of the country rightly in neglecting to make an appropriation for that purpose. The traffic on the River Thames is very extensive, but is interrupted by this bar at the mouth of the river, about 18 miles from the town of Chatham. Two years ago an appropriation of $4,000 was made to remove the bar, but the passage was only cut one-third of the way through, so that it was of no advantage. It only requires an expenditure of about $5,000 more to enable vessels drawing 12 feet of water to pass over the bar. It is a very great inconvenience to the people of that country that every vessel which is loaded with lumber and coal or grain has to be lightened in order to get over the bar. A vessel drawing more than 8½ feet cannot be taken over the bar. I see that the Minister of Finance last night said the Government intended to send a dredge to Collingwood this season in response to a question by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). If they do send one there, it would be a good opportunity for that dredge to stop at the mouth of the River Thames and clean up that bar. A week or two would make a passage so that vessels could get through, and that would answer the needs of that part of the country for many years to come. It was many years since that was dredged, and it would be very little out of the revenue to allow the dredge to stop there. Then, on the River Sydenham, there is an immense traffic.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that run into the St. Clair?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It runs into St. Clair Lake. The same dredge could do both those jobs and then continue its way to Collingwood. It is a matter of very great importance, and there is not a single dollar expended there this year or last year.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. member say what this $1,475 is for?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Before the Minister answers that question, I would like to ask if these improvements in the Thames and Sydenham rivers will take place?

Mr. FOSTER. I think it would be impossible to do what my hon. friend asks at the mouth of the Thames. If my recollection is correct, it will require a very large expenditure to make that channel available permanently, as it silts in and fills in very rapidly. I have seen a report of the Public Works Department showing that the amount required would be very large. As to the River Sydenham, the department might remove any sunken logs and so on, and I will call the attention of the Minister to that matter.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If that were done, the principal difficulty would be overcome.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I know there was a report of the engineer that, in order to make the work on the Thames a lasting work, there should be sheet-piling which would cost, according to the estimate, $20,000. The people who know that channel best do not think that would be a wise expenditure, because they think that, to dredge a channel through of 12 feet in depth, many years would elapse before that channel would fill up, and the interest on the money required to make a permanent work would more than pay for this. The people there do not want that done. What they want is that a passage way should be cut through there, and they believe that $4,000 or $5,000 will complete the work there, so as to give a 12-foot passage.

Mr. FOSTER. We have not enough money voted for that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If you are sending the dredge up to Collingwood this summer, it could stop there.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not to go up this summer. It will only be available for the opening of navigation next spring.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understood the hon. gentleman to have said that he was going to send the dredge in the spring up to Collingwood.

Mr. FOSTER. I said it would be sent up at the end of the season of navigation, so as to be ready for work there in the spring.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why should it not stop at these places this fall?

Mr. FOSTER. It might be frozen up there.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It might as well be frozen up there as in Collingwood. It would only be about two days from one place to the other.

Mr. BOWELL. Was not that bar dredged out to the extent of 14 feet two or three years ago?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; but there was an attempt made to dredge it out; the dredge only went one-third through the bar. If they had continued for two weeks longer, they would have made the channel 12 feet deep through the bar.

Mr. McNEILL. I hope if the dredge is to stop anywhere on its way to Goderich, it will stop at Lion's Head, where it is very much required indeed. My hon. friend may say it is required in his part of the world; I am quite sure it is required in mine, and I hope that he will not interfere with the needs of my constituents. I want it very much there. I dare say a good many other people may require it in other places, too.

Mr. BARRON. Rest easy; you have got a protest.

Mr. BOWELL. The engineer of the department tells me that three years ago they dredged that channel to the depth of 16 feet, and that the next year it filled up. No doubt, from the nature of the soil there, and the currents, it will require constant dredging.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have the drawing, and the plan that was prepared by the Public Works Department showing the whole work that they intended to do. About a year ago there was only $4,000 voted for that work, and it only carried the cut through the bar about one-third of the way. The engineer surely knows that, and the cut is made 12 feet deep, not 16 feet deep. It was continued, and the dredge got about one-third of the way through the bar, when the appropriation ran out and this work was stopped. So that the $4,000 that was expended did not do any good at all, because the vessels could not get over. If it had been continued two weeks longer right through the bar, then it would have been useful; but the way it is now the money that was spent did no good at all. I hope that when the dredge goes up there in the spring, it will continue the work that was started two years ago.

Mr. BOWELL. There is a slight difference between the hon. gentleman's statement and that of the engineer of the department. I do not give it on my own responsibility; but he assured me again, while the hon. gentleman was speaking, that they did dredge through the bar to a depth of 14 feet. I think I made a mistake in saying 16 feet. It filled up the year following. However, we will make further enquiries into that and see who is right.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The engineer, in the many duties that he has to perform, has probably forgotten. I know whereof I speak, that the dredging was only done to the extent of 12 feet deep, and it was only continued one-third of the way through the bar. I do not think it filled up at all. I think that the work that was done was all right if it had only been continued through the bar. I think the Government ought to do this in the spring any way, if they cannot do it this fall. It is a work of very great importance to the people of that part of the country, and it ought not to be neglected.

Mr. McNEILL. I hope the Government will not lose sight of the importance of having the dredging done at Lion's Head as early as possible during this fall. Lion's Head is really a harbour of refuge for a very dangerous part of the coast. It has now filled up so that navigation cannot have the benefit of that harbour of refuge. If it was dredged, it would be all that is required.

Mr. BARRON. May I trouble the hon. gentleman——

Mr. McNEILL. I hope the hon. gentleman will not interrupt me. He interjected something a moment ago about a protest. I do not myself think that there is much benefit in a protest, but if it has the effect of sending a dredge to the people of Lion's Head, they may think there is some benefit in a protest. However that may be, it is really a matter of great importance in the interest of navigation that Lion's Head should be dredged out as early as possible this fall. I am sure, if my hon. friend had his request granted, it would not be impossible to get the dredge at Lion's Head this fall.

Mr. FOSTER. This vote of $1,475 is to provide for the payment due to Messrs. Parker and Lefebvre for work performed by them in 1888-89 at Sault Ste. Marie, according to the final estimate rendered by the chief engineer in favour of the contractors.

Mr. MULOCK. What was the contract on which this was paid?

Mr. FOSTER. The original contract was $9,885. Then, after it had been in progress for some time, it was decided to build two additional docks containing 300 cubic yards of crib-work, and that cost $1,970, making a total amount of $11,955, and payments $10,480.

Mr. MULOCK. Why were these extras not included in the original contract?

Mr. FOSTER. These are not extras for the amount of work contemplated by the original contract, but they were additional cribs built after the contract was let, and they were paid for accordingly. Orders were given to the contractors to build two additional cribs and they were paid for at the rate of $1.65. The quantity of work shown on the plan was the average value of the work per cubic yard.

Mr. MULOCK. To do what sort of work was the original contract?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not here the details of the original work.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister will see that the contract was let, I suppose, by tender, and afterwards additional work or extras was done, so that nearly 20 per cent. more was expended than was ever the subject of tender. To that extent there were no tenders invited. I should like to know how it comes that when these specifications were being drawn and advertised for, the specifications were not perfect.

Mr. FOSTER. The information I have is that when the original plans and specifications were made out, the wharf was built in this way: Cribs, and platforms upon the cribs, and a portion of it was afterwards required to receive coal, a large quantity of which arrives there. At that portion an additional crib had to be placed between the two cribs, so that the planking should be solid and hold up the great weight of coal. This extra amount was paid for the additional cribs.

Mr. MULOCK. That does not commend itself to my mind as a satisfactory answer.

Mr. FOSTER. We could not foresee everything.

Mr. MULOCK. Coal had been coming there before, and this was evidently an oversight on the part of the department. Who collects the tolls on that wharf?

Mr. FOSTER. It is a Government wharf.

Mr. BOWELL. The officer is Mr. Plummer. This wharf is a Government wharf open to the public; it is under Government supervision, and all tolls collected come into the hands of the Government, and the wharfinger is allowed a percentage, as is usual in such cases.

Mr. MULOCK. Is the wharfinger, connected with the collector of Customs, in business?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know.

Mr. MULOCK. I ask the Minister of Customs whether he would appoint as collector of Customs the partner of a man who had control of a Government wharf?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not see why the brother of a man in control of a Government wharf should not be appointed collector of Customs.

Mr. MULOCK. Suppose A and B were partners in the importing business. A is appointed Government wharfinger. He is to see that all goods pay proper tribute. Would the Minister appoint B as collector of Customs?

Mr. TUPPER. The wharfinger has nothing to do with collecting Customs. The wharfingers are under the Marine Department, and they have simply to see that the dues specified by Order in Council are collected on all goods landed. If the wharfinger happens to be the Custom's officer, that is another matter. As a rule they are not officers of the Customs Department, although in some particular instances the offices are combined.

Mr. MULOCK. Suppose goods were landed at this particular wharf, has the wharfinger no power to prevent them from passing into private hands until they have paid the Government dues?

Mr. TUPPER. No. The wharfinger's duties cease when the dues are paid.

Mr. BOWELL. If a vessel from the American Sault crosses the river to the wharf under consideration, a Customs official is there, and if there are any dutiable goods on board it is his duty to superintend their landing, and see that the duties are paid or the goods sent to the bonding warehouse. The wharfinger has nothing to do with the matter except to collect wharfage dues. If the goods are to go to another part of Canada the manifest follows them.

Mr. MULOCK. What other officers are there at this particular wharf except the wharfinger?

Mr. BOWELL. There are four or five officers at Sault Ste. Marie under the collector, and two or three additional officers had to be appointed at the opening of the Sault bridge to attend to trains crossing the river. There are two officers stationed constantly at the wharf, in addition to the collector and clerk, and one or two at the railway.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand that outside of the wharfinger and Custom house officer there are some other officers continually on the warf while it is open.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. While goods were being landed some Government officer would be present, in addition to the wharfinger, so that no goods could pass under private control without the consent of some third person, he being neither the wharfinger nor Custom house officer.

Mr. BOWELL. The wharfinger has nothing to do with it. No vessel is supposed to arrive at the wharf from the United States unless a Customs official is there to attend to it.

Mr. MULOCK. Is that the practice?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes. If the officers do not do so, they neglect their duties.

Mr. MULOCK. I have received a long communication on the subject. My recollection of it is that it declared that by reason of the business relations existing between the Customs officer and the wharfinger, the revenue suffered.

Works at Little Nation River.....$4,000

Mr. SPOHN. I do not find any amount in the Estimates for a wharf at Christian Island. I do not think it is fair, because it was promised during the last election.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I cannot permit these questions to be asked on votes to which they are not applicable. There is a proper time to raise these questions, and that is before going into Supply. I mention this for the information of members; but I will permit the hon. gentleman on this occasion to ask for the information.

Mr. SPOHN. During the last election missionaries sent by the Government directly promised the Indians that, if they voted rightly, this wharf would be built. I can assure the Government they voted rightly, for the Government candidate and against myself. It is only fair that the Government should carry out their part of the contract and give them the wharf.

Ottawa River Works, Gatineau Boom —Legal expenses incurred 1876 to 1879 and 1888 to 1890 in connection with suit brought by Noé Chevrier against Her Majesty the Queen to recover a sum of $200,000 for lands acquired and improved by the Government of Canada for booming purposes since 1856..... $8,716 67

Mr. McMULLEN. What is this?

Mr. FOSTER. This is for payment of legal expenses which have been incurred by the Dominion Government between 12th September, 1876, and March, 1879; and 1st May, 1888, and 1st October, 1890, in connection with the suit brought by Noé Chevrier against Her Majesty the Queen to recover an amount of $200,000 on the ground of being a connection of the heirs Wright of Hull, and as such entitled to a portion of the lands near the mouth of the Gatineau River which have been acquired since 1855 by the Government of Canada. Judgment was rendered in favour of the Crown in the Exchequer Court, and Chevrier proving to be a man of no means, Mr. W. W. Robertson, Q.C., the Government lawyer, had to collect costs from the Crown.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I call the attention of the Minister of Justice particularly to the fact that we are called upon to pay a sum for legal expenses 13 years old, which I suppose is barred under the statute of limitations, if nothing else. I would like to know why we are called upon to pay legal expenses incurred between 1876 and 1879?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It was a very heavy suit, extending over a long period of years, until 1888, at which time I had the bill of costs before me for my own inspection. Mr. Robertson was the agent at Montreal of the late Government, and at the termination of the suit, being unable to recover from the plaintiff in the case, who lost the suit, he rendered an account to us for about $1,000 more than the appropriation now asked. There could be no doubt that he had been retained by the late Government and that he had conducted the suit.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this gentleman the solicitor of the Bank of Montreal?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not know. There could be no doubt that he was retained and carried on the suit in a way to which no exception could be taken at all. Eventually, we agreed that the bill of costs should be taxed by counsel of high standing in Montreal. The result of the taxation was that something like $1,100 was struck off the claim, and I have no doubt that the sum now asked for is properly due to Mr. Robertson.

To assist in the publication of the Historical and Topographical Map for the Dominion of Canada, by G. F. Baillairgé, Esq., Civil Engineer, dated 31st December, 1890..... $500

Mr. McMULLEN. What is this for?

Mr. FOSTER. It is a very beautiful and very labouriously executed map of the Dominion of Canada, executed by Mr. Baillairgé, and is the result of many years' study and research by him. As my hon. friend knows, he is an old public servant, with wonderful abilities in that direction, and he has utilized them in this way, and he has left this map as a monument to posterity.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Just explain what a historical map is?

Mr. FOSTER. I really cannot explain it, but I will bring the map down to-morrow and lay it on the Table, and I know that when the hon. gentleman sees it, he will raise no objection to this vote.

Mr. McNEILL. Before that item is carried, I should like to call the attention of the House and of the Government to the fact that we have here in Ottawa at the present time, in the Department of Railways and Canals, a young man who is a credit and an ornament to the Dominion of Canada; I refer to Mr. William Wilfred Campbell. He is now employed there at $1.50 a day. With the permission of the House, I will give you in a few words an idea of the kind of person of whom I speak. This young gentleman's work is not such as we meet with every day. I can very well understand that there is great difficulty in the Government recognizing local talent at all, because they will naturally say that it is hard to decide where to draw the line. But I think they may very well draw the line at the point where the talent of the person is recognized by the critics of foreign countries, and I will give you an idea of the extent to which the talent of this young gentleman is recognized in other countries as well as in Canada. One of the critics is no less an authority than the London Athenæum. Then we have in the United States the New York Critic, the Boston Herald, the Boston Traveller, the Boston Pilot, the New York Independent, and many other literary authorities. These are all papers of light and leading on the other side of the line. I will quote from one which is recognized as being one of the very highest in literary matters, to indicate the nature of the work that this young man has done for his country and for mankind; I refer to the Chicago Inter-Ocean. Many of the critics I have named have spoken in high terms of the book which he has published; but the Chicago Inter-Ocean devotes a leading article to one particular poem. After speaking of the decadence of poetry in the United States at the present day and also of its probable decadence in England, this paper says:

"The nearest approach to a great poem which has cropped out in current literature for many a long day is 'The Mother' in Harper's Monthly for April. It may be a self-condemnatory confession, but we must say that the name of the author, William Wilfred Campbell, is new to us. A subject inviting poetic treatment, and rich in the pathos which gives to poetry its flavour and stamps it as being the choicest vintage of literary expression, is so treated in 'The Mother' that one feels that it could never be improved upon. There are many such poems. Milton's 'Hymn of the Nativity,' Hamlet's 'Soliloquy upon Man,' Whittier's 'Maud Müller,' Buchanan Reed's 'Drifting,' Longfellow's 'Psalm of Life,' Shelley's 'Skylark,' Matthew Arnold's 'Obermann Again,' all belong in that same category."

That, I think, is placing our young Canadian poet in pretty good company. The writer goes on to say:

"Greater poems than any of these have been written, greater still may yet be composed, but the particular subject of which each treats should be regarded as closed out. Others may imitate or dilute, but nobody can hope to rival, and these poems should be put away in the cabinet of literature as gems which are in themselves complete and priceless. It is no small thing to add another gem to such a collection, and the addition deserves to attract some attention."

Then, after some further criticism, the article proceeds:

"It would be impossible to give in common prose even the most remote idea of the beauty and poetic sweetness of the poem. Nor does the charm lie in quotable lines. The picture as a whole needs to be seen in its unity to be felt in its personation of a high and tender ideal."

Now, I am not myself very familiar with the publications of the United States, but I am informed that Mr. Steadman, who is one of the greatest literary critics in the United States, holds that literary work in Chicago is on a level with if not above that of both Boston and New York; and the Chicago Inter-Ocean is the acknowledged exponent of literary life in Chicago. That being the case, this is surely high praise. Then, a San Francisco paper speaks of the same poem in these terms:

"William Wilfred Campbell is the name of a new star in the world of poetry that has arisen in the east of late; his poem, 'The Mother,' in Harper's Monthly for April, having quite turned loose the tongues and pens of the critics. 'The Mother' is the work of a literary genius indeed."

Then, in our own country, Mr. Goldwin Smith, whose eminent position as a literary critic we all know, speaks in the highest terms of Mr. Campbell's work. Grip refers to it in these words:

"While our Canadian bosoms are swelling with pride over the poetic success of William Wilfred Campbell, whose recent contribution to Harper's Magazine, 'The Mother,' is declared by foreign critics to be one of the great poems of the century——"

And so forth. Now, I do not think that I need apologize to this House for having called its attention of this young man. I may say that since writing "The Mother" Mr. Campbell has produced several other poems which, in my humble opinion, possess very high merit indeed. I think it would be only right and fitting that work of this kind should be recognized in Mr. Campbell's own country, which is likely to be so greatly benefited by it: because I am one of those who believe that men of his genius and the work they do are almost invaluable to any country, especially to a young country like ours, where we are apt, from the very nature of our conditions, to regard everything from too much of a utilitarian point of view. I believe the value of the work which men of this kind can do for Canada can scarcely be exaggerated, and we cannot afford to lose them. They are an honour and a glory to our country. Their influence is all for good. Such men occupy a higher plane of intellectual existence than most of us do. They deal with the greater and deeper meanings of things which are always present with us but which are too often hidden from those who are involved in the hurry and the worry of the world. These men bring them to our notice. They interpret them to us, and reveal their power and beauty. And thus men are charmed and instructed, at the same time that they are elevated and refined. I do think that such a man as this is a great and glorious gift to the country that possesses him, and the people among whom he was born, and who have the honour of claiming him as a compatriot, ought to see that he is looked after and cared for, and not so neglected that he will be forced to leave the country to seek appreciation and support elsewhere. I do hope that something will be done to retain him here, and I would venture to suggest, as literary work is his natural work, that if it be at all possible, the Government should consider the feasibility of placing him in the library of Parliament. In that library there is a great want felt at the present time, that is, some one to look after that special branch of literature with which this young gentleman is familiar—belles lettres. If he were placed in the superintendence of that branch of the library I think it would redound greatly to the advantage of all who have the privilege of using the library. I am quite sure of this, that if the Government were to adopt such a course, if they place him in such a position that he will be able to follow out the bent of his genius, the day will come when it will be proved, whether they receive it or not, that they have earned the lasting gratitude of the people of Canada. I venture to say that if this young man develops in depth and breadth of conception and beauty of expression at the same rate as he has done within the short time since his writings have appeared before the public, he will rank far higher among the poets than the poet Longfellow; and I think, under these circumstances, we would be only doing what is right if we recognize the fact that we have such a young man among us. I think there are circumstances which have occurred of late which would make it a peculiarly felicitous thing to do an action of this kind at the present time. I believe it would command the approval of the literary and thinking men of every country in the civilized world where it was known, and I venture to hope that some such action will be taken.

Mr. LAURIER. I very gladly endorse the recommendation of the hon. gentleman in favour of Mr. Campbell, and commend it to the favourable consideration of the Government. I do not pretend to be at all a judge of English literature or poetry, but, in my estimation, Mr. Campbell is one of the real living poets to-day in the English language. The book of poems which has been placed in my hands, but especially the poem called "The Mother," which I read in Harper's Magazine for the month of April, is certainly something the like of which has scarcely been seen since the days of Edgar Poe. Mr. Campbell is a young man, and I think if the Government could, as I am sure they might do, because vacancies often occur in the library, give him a position which would put him above the wants of life, and which would give him the opportunity of cultivating his poetical talent and genius, it would be money well applied; and on both sides of the House and in all parts of the country the Government would win hearty approval.

Gratuity to the widow of the late W. O. Strong, civil engineer, equal to six months of the salary received by her late husband, while engineer in charge of the Kingston graving dock. $1,110

Mr. MULOCK. How long was he in charge of the graving dock?

Mr. FOSTER. From the commencement until his death. He was in the service of the department in December, 1888, and died on the 25th of April, 1889, from a cold resulting from exposure while superintending the dock.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not finding fault with the proposition, but I would like to know if there is a general rule applicable to such cases? What is the rule requiring us to pay half a year's gratuity to the family of an engineer who has been in the service two years and a half or three years and then died?

Mr. FOSTER. We have no general rule. These cases are settled, as they occur, on their merits, and the circumstances under which Mr. Strong contracted his illness made this seem a very hard case.

Mr. BARRON. I am very glad indeed to see this sum placed in the Estimates. I understand this young man took an active interest in the work he was engaged in, in fact he was on a sick bed when called to do specific work for the department; and so much interested was he in it that rather than leave it in the hands of another, he left his sick bed, and his death resulted from the exposure. I am only sorry the Government could not find it possible to give a year's gratuity instead of six months.

Mr. FOSTER. His services had not been long.

Mr. BARRON. Under all the circumstances, he was a very deserving officer, and the Government would be justified in giving his widow a year's gratuity.

Mr. SCRIVER. I think the Minister of Finance is mistaken in saying there is no general rule followed in cases of this kind. I can appeal to the Minister of Customs in support of the statement that the usual practice is to give the widow of a deceased officer two months' salary.

Mr. FOSTER. That is with reference to permanent officers. This was a temporary officer.

Ocean and river service—To meet claims in connection with the collision off Cape George, N. S., between the Dominion Steamer Alert and the schooner Scylla..... $6,000

Mr. MULOCK. Will the Minister explain this item?

Mr. TUPPER. The Dominion steamer Alert was coming through the Strait of Canso, and the master went into the cabin to look at the chart and left on the bridge in command one of the pilots who was not a certificated officer, and, while he was in charge, they ran into the schooner Scylla. After an investigation, which was conducted under the supervision of the examiner of masters and mates, Captain Smith, of Halifax, and Lieutenant Gordon, R.N., it was held by them that the reason for the collision was the improper course taken by the Alert, so that the Government, if it were a private owner, or if the action was brought in the Vice-Admiralty Court, would be liable for the damage. The amount of $6,000 is a little over what we have ascertained to be the damage. The schooner was sunk and her cargo lost, and we have investigated the amount involved in that loss and we have found as follows, after a most careful investigation, the parties being examined under oath:—The vessel was worth $3,000; provisions, $340; freight, $330; board and expenses of the crew, $100.35; effects of crew, $511; value of cargo, $1,600; salvage, $250; total $6,131.35; from which we deduct the amount realized by the sale of the wreck $550, making the total loss $5,581.35. It is proposed to pay this amount in the following way:—To the Boston Marine Insurance Company, $2,251; to the Reliance Insurance Company, $1,100; to J. E. Newson & Co. who were the owners of the freight, $500; to D. W. Hennessy, owner of the vessel, which includes the effects of the crew, $1,730.35, making a total of $5,581.35.

Mr. MULOCK. Do these two men certify that the liability depends on the fact that the vessel was steering a wrong course?

Mr. TUPPER. Yes. The court held under the provisions of the Act found that instead of getting out of the way of the schooner, the steamer had kept her course, while, being a steamer, she should have gone to port instead of to starboard.

Mr. MULOCK. Was the captain blamed for that?

Mr. TUPPER. Yes, he was censured by the court of enquiry and the case came before me as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and then, according to the custom, I consulted the Imperial Board of Trade, who have had a great deal of experience in these matters, as to the extent of punishment to which the captain should be liable, as to whether censure was sufficient or whether his certificate should be taken away, and they advised that, under the circumstances, there seemed to be no reason for going further than the finding of the court of first instance, and that the censure was sufficient. His absence from the deck was very short. It was not for the purpose of going to sleep or anything of that kind, but was simply to consult the chart. There was a very short interval during which he was absent, I think about 15 minutes, and during that time this person, who was an experienced pilot, but not a certificated officer, was in charge.

Mr. MULOCK. It seems extraordinary that anyone who was an experienced pilot should not have known that a sailing vessel had the right of way.

Mr. TUPPER. It has often happened that certificated officers have been censured for acting stubbornly or negligently in regard to the right of way when they were on the bridge.

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose this resulted from the uncertificated officer not knowing what was the law.

Mr. TUPPER. No; but he thought the schooner was keeping stubbornly on her way without reason, whereas the court found that the captain of the schooner had not been guilty.

Lighthouse and Coast Service $1,630

Mr. BARRON. I think perhaps this is the proper time to bring up something which has taken place in the department, which is of rather a serious character. I see in one of the Quebec papers an article headed:

"A BRUTAL GOVERNMENT.

"INHUMAN TREATMENT OF AN INJURED LIGHTHOUSE ASSISTANT—LEFT TO DIE BY ORDER OF THE AUTHORITIES."

The article goes on to say:

"SIR,—In the interests of humanity the public attention is called to a case of culpable mismanagement, resulting in the loss of a useful life. On Monday, September 7, Arthur Lamire, assistant lighthouse keeper, was loading the fog-gun at Heath Point, Anticosti. Bad weather was being experienced, and operations about the wrecked SS. Circe were suspended. The gun prematurely discharged and shot away part of Lamire's hand, while he himself was hurled over the cliff, thus breaking his arm. Immediate attention was required, and would have averted further disaster. The case was reported to Ottawa. Captain Brown, of Quebec, was at hand with his steam schooner attending the wrecked steamer. In spite of bad weather, Captain Brown offered, for a moderate sum, to take the injured man to Gaspé. The Marine Department would not allow this, and ordered the man to wait until they sent the SS. La Canadienne. But Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday passed, and Lamire lay in his pain. At length, on Thursday evening the department gave instructions for the man to be removed on Captain Brown's vessel. But the schooner was securing a valuable piece of wreckage. Though it involved a loss of $2,000 this was relinquished, and the sufferer was taken to Gaspé. But it was now too late. Drs. Smilie and Williamson, immediately on the vessel's arrival, were called in, but the case was hopeless; gangrene pervaded the whole arm and shoulder, and on Saturday morning Lamire died."

The article goes on to speak of the indignation felt by the people at the negligent treatment of this case by the Marine Department. The case apparently is a very serious one, and reflects upon the department as if they took no notice of the request made by parties there to have immediate assistance, in consequence of which neglect this man died. This article I have read appears in the Daily Telegraph of 26th September.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is very fair in bringing that up, particularly in view of the manner in which the item has been circulated and characterized in the Toronto Globe and the Telegraph which the hon. gentleman was good enough to show me. Other papers including the Montreal Witness, have been sufficiently brutal to make the statement that we were practically responsible for the death of this poor man who was an assistant at Heath Point Light, Anticosti. The accident occurred in connection with the signal gun by which his hand was blown off. There were wrecking steamers working there in connection with the wrecked steamer Circe. We received at Ottawa, on the 8th September, a telegram from the light-keeper stating that the man was in danger. I mention this to show the House the exact information that was before me, so that they may judge of the action taken. The telegram stated that the man was in danger through an accident by a gun and asked immediate assistance. I was in the House of Commons at the time that telegram was given to me, and I immediately answered:

"You may send the wounded man to Gaspé. Tell agent at Quebec to send assistance."

It was necessary to have a man there at Heath Point at once to fire the gun, which it was the keeper's duty to do, to warn ships coming up in the fog, and it was necessary that some man should be sent in his place. If the accounts that have reached me be true, and from what I know, it appears that the wrecking steamers actually haggled with this keeper for the price of taking this wounded man to shore. At any rate, he did not reach the coast until several days afterwards, when one of the wrecking steamers took him to shore. I ask the House to remark that we were not in a position to know what was going on. We had no reply from the keeper to whom we had sent instructions, under which we could have made any bargain with one of these steamers for the relief of this man. Finally they did send him to shore, and we all know what happened in the meanwhile. I have instituted a thorough enquiry to see whether the agent of the department, the keeper at Heath Point, was guilty of negligence. I did as any member of this House would have done in my place, I gave him carte blanche instructions to send that man ashore as he had asked for authority to do so. The accident by which the delay occurred, I am unable to explain yet.

Mr. MULOCK. I read the letter in the Globe referring to this accident, and I am much pleased at the explanation of the Minister of Marine. His having sent that telegram in that unlimited way, I think, wholly exonerates him from any responsibility for what followed.

Fisheries—To meet cost of enquiry by experts in connection with the seal fishery in Behring Sea. $5,000

Mr. BARRON. If the Minister will allow me, I want to refer to a circumstance I spoke of the other day. He will remember that at the beginning of the session I drew his attention to the fact that Mr. J. R. Graham had been discharged. The Minister replied that in point of fact he was not discharged. Technically I suppose he was correct, although in reality I was correct, because, although he had not received his formal dismissal from the department, as a matter of fact he had really been suspended by Mr. Gordon, who had gone up there, and who, I find by the papers brought down, had in point of fact suspended him and appointed somebody else in his place. So I think the Minister owes me an apology for attacking me so viciously as he did, and trying to make it appear that I was wrong when in point of fact I was correct.

Mr. TUPPER. I certainly did not attack you viciously. Perhaps I ought to have done so.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is out of order. He cannot bring up that subject under this item.

Mr. TUPPER. I have no objections to discussing it with him now.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am in this difficulty, that the Ministers are the first ones to transgress the rule that we should not have anything to do with those items which are not directly before the Committee, and that is the reason why the Estimates are dragging so slowly. Of course I cannot go against the wishes of the whole Committee.

Mr. BARRON. My object is to secure justice to a man to whom a great injustice has been done. It seems to me that this man Graham has been unfairly dealt with, although, perhaps, not knowingly, by the Minister of Marine. I think on the information the Minister obtained perhaps he was right. I do not say that the fishery inspector was either an efficient officer or the reverse; but from the information given to me I think great injustice has been done him, more especially from the report of Mr. McDermot who was overseer there. I draw the Minister's attention to one or two clauses of a letter, on which it appears he based his judgment in having the officer suspended and afterwards dismissed. The first letter is from A. Graham and it says:

"The fishery overseer for North Victoria, J. R. Graham, here is a rank, tankerous Grit, and he has used or rather abused his power or office during the late election campaign in favour of John A. Barron and against Sam Hughes, Esq. He, Graham, was posting up bills advertising Barron's campaign meeting, and when he came here. There is a nice large lake known as Mud Lake, Carden Township. As he sold four or five fish-houses on the ice he either fines the Tories or made them promise to vote for Barron or stay at home. Those that would not do either he cracked on a heavy fine and an unreasonable cost, and I happened to be one of those that would not be driven, consequently I had to pay a handsome bill of $8."

Mr. TUPPER. Whose letter are you reading from?

Mr. BARRON. The letter of Mr. A. Graham, upon which action was taken by the department. The main charge is that he was a rank, tankerous Grit. Like a lady's letter, the postscript is most important. He says:

"It would not be a very heavy draw on the fishing exchequer if you would send me the amount of my fine. It is the spring of the year, and I need the money he took from me very badly to buy seed for my farming. If you think well it would greatly assist me."

That is one of the letters on which his dismissal was based.

Mr. TUPPER. Where does the hon. gentleman get the information that I based the dismissal on that letter, because I deny it? That is a letter on the fyle, I admit.

Mr. BARRON. It is one of the letters which induced the Minister to act.

Mr. TUPPER. No. I should like the hon. gentleman to prove that I dismissed the officer on that letter.

Mr. BARRON. I state that on that letter and another letter written by another gentleman, subsequently the officer's removal was authorized, and Mr. Gordon was sent to those waters, and the result of Mr. Gordon's visit was the dismissal. There are a great many matters which I intended to bring up in regard to this matter, but as it is late in the session, I will only take up some features of them. On 11th April, 1891, this letter was sent to the department, and the Minister must admit that this letter, with the letter just read, induced the department to send Mr. Gordon up there. This letter, written by a gentleman living in Lindsay, says:

"Mr. Graham has been a Provincial Government bailiff in the past, and since has been an agent for a manufacturing firm in Peterborough. In the discharge of those duties he was almost all the time in sections of the country remote from the fishing waters."

I fail to see what reason that would be for cause for his dismissal. The writer refers to this charge:

"For instance the account dated Fenelon Falls, 6th November, 1890, signed by W. Golden, $6 for three days horse hire was incurred in endeavouring to sell threshing machines and other wares, and not in the discharge of his duty."

The account referred to was not one by Mr. Golden, but one by another livery stable keeper, whose account appears in those rendered to the department. The next paragraph goes on to say:

"In Mr. Graham's capacity as paid agent and bill poster for Mr. John A. Barron during February and March, Mr. Graham chanced to visit Mud and Dalrymple Lakes in Carden."

The charge there was that he happened, when on private duty for me, to discover the illegal fishing, and then he caused the party to be fined. As a matter of fact, I have a letter written here by Mr. Graham, which shows that he was induced to go there from noticing in the columns of the Warder newspaper that illegal fishing was being carried on. The Minister will see that it was Mr. Graham's first letter which directed the attention of the department to Inspector Graham not performing his duty, if he did not perform it. There is a letter from the first gentleman who made the charge written to this very fishery inspector. This letter the department had not before it; but it only shows how unreliable is information frequently obtained, and what great care should be taken by the department to see that injustice is not done, and that the department should not rely on letters upon which to take such severe action as was taken in this case, and which to a certain extent affected the man's reputation, especially when he was dismissed on charges to which I will presently refer. Let it be remembered that it was Graham who made the charges. Writing to the inspector, he says:

"I was sorry that I was not at home the other day when you were having such a jubilee with those old cads. You never heard a greater panic in your life, nor a worse name for anyone than me. You must not read the Warder any more, as I did not intend you would see anything of the kind."

The impression is sought to be conveyed to the Minister that it was when he was on his own business that the officer imposed these fines; but it was in consequence of his having seen a report in the Warder in regard to illegal fishing that he was induced to go there. This letter of Edward Graham thanked the officer for having done his duty so well. The very man who made the complaint was subsequently the very man who was thanked for having performed his duty so well in looking after the fishing. In the fourth paragraph of the letter, 11th April, 1891, the writer says:

"Mr. Graham's duty as overseer requires, I believe, that he post up notices re fishery close season, &c. Such has not been done at any time on those waters."

The reason it was not done was because the department itself by a letter dated 27th May, 1889, formally instructed the officer not to do so. In that letter, signed by Mr. Tilton, it is stated:

"The Minister directs that in future no special trips are to be made by fishing overseers for the purpose of posting up notices, but the business is to be done when there is some necessary travelling done for other purposes."

Mr. TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARRON. I do not say that is not correct, but it is one of the charges made against the fishery inspector on which action was taken by the department. Further on, the letter proceeds to refer to James O'Brien, and I would ask the Minister's particular attention to that point, because I understand some charges have been brought against O'Brien. We have the evidence here in the papers that this very man, James O'Brien, is criticised in Mr. McDermot's report, is equally as bad as, if bad he was, as Mr. Graham. Mr. McDermot says:

"I would further inform the department that officer O'Brien is just as useless as Graham, and that he can't cope with the poachers in the Victoria division."

Now, if Mr. O'Brien was just as useless as Mr. Graham, I ask why Mr. James O'Brien was not dismissed, and why Mr. Graham should be singled out for dismissal. It must be understood that I am not advocating the case of Mr. Graham the fishery inspector, because I am not sufficiently acquainted with all the facts of the case to say whether he was an efficient officer or not, but it does appear from the papers that some injustice has been done him. In Mr. McDermot's report there is a very serious charge made against Mr. Graham, which has done him considerable injury in the neighbourhood wherein he lives. Mr. McDermot made two reports, and in the first report he does not seem to be so severe upon Mr. Graham, but between the first report and second report some influence seems to be brought upon him. I am not at all blaming the Minister, because, of course, he would not be aware of it, and I believe he has been misled in this matter—but in the second report Mr. McDermot is very severe on Mr. Graham, and in that report he states:

"That he visited Fenelon Falls, and when he was there he was informed by one of the hotel-keepers that Mr. Graham was in the habit of becoming intoxicated, and was so rendered totally unfit to perform his duties."

The residents of Fenelon Falls when they heard of that statement in the document were annoyed about it, because whether Mr. Graham may have faults or not in his official capacity, so far as his temperate habits are concerned, I have every reason to believe that he is a temperate man. To make a serious charge of that kind against Mr. Graham, apart altogether from his official capacity, is too serious to allow to pass, especially as it has become known all through the vicinity. I have here three affidavits, one from each of the hotel-keepers at Fenelon Falls, and I will just read one of them:

Some hon. MEMBERS. Dispense.

Mr. TUPPER. If you hand them over to me I will deal with them. I may tell the hon. gentleman that Graham is not dismissed at all. The man has resigned, while very serious charges are pending against him. I did not dismiss him, nor would I accept his resignation and that is the whole trouble. I have ordered a formal investigation, and all that man can say would be much better said in open day before the proper officer when he comes to make the examination. The charges were so serious against Graham that I felt it my duty not to accept his resignation. He wants me to accept his resignation, but I have not done it. The hon. gentleman had better put the affidavits before the proper tribunal.

Mr. BARRON. I will give the Minister the affidavits, but I want to state the fact that they deny the allegations made by Mr. McDermot.

Mr. TUPPER. You do not deny that he has resigned?

Mr. BARRON. The Minister must admit that Mr. Gordon went there and suspended him.

Mr. TUPPER. He was suspended on serious charges, but he was not dismissed from the service.

Mr. BARRON. But Mr. Gordon appointed another man in his place.

Mr. TUPPER. Until after the investigation?

Mr. BARRON. When he was told by Mr. Gordon that he was suspended, he resigned his position, as he said he was not going to be dismissed.

Mr. TUPPER. I propose to give him a fair trial, and if you wish these affidavits to be put in they can be laid before the proper officer.

Mr. BARRON. Certainly I will.

Mr. TUPPER. I have abundant information under my hand to show that it was my bounden duty to act as I did in this case. I do not care about this man bill posting or bill sticking during the hon. gentleman's election. He was charged with the most serious offence of collecting money in fines and not returning it to the Receiver General; and on these serious charges, being made by my officers—officers who said it was a perfect farce the way in which he did his work—I suspended him and authorized the inspector to hear what he had to say, give him a fair trial and then report to me. Instead of this man courting enquiry and demanding fair-play, he sends in his resignation. I have had that resignation for a long time, and, therefore, no injustice can be done to Graham. The hon. gentleman says that I gave way to party feelings in this matter. I did nothing of the kind. I sent Lieut. Gordon from the Meteorological service in Toronto up there, a gentleman who is thoroughly competent to judge of what is required, and I put in force a temporary arrangement pending enquiry. There is not the slightest desire to push these charges unduly against Graham, and I have hesitated from any action all this summer, because I have not had Graham's statement of the case. But in view of the charge that he was using his position as fishery officer for his own purposes, and stealing public money, I could not do otherwise than to suspend him pending enquiry. The charges were made over McDermot's signature, and if shown to be false they mean McDermot's dismissal or the dismissal of any man making these charges without reason. In view of these charges I could not accept his resignation and I felt it my duty to suspend him. I will be glad to have the hon. gentleman's affidavits and have them fyled in the case

Mr. BARRON. The hon. gentleman says that this Mr. Graham was charged with stealing.

Mr. TUPPER. Yes; I say that is the charge.

Mr. BARRON. I do not think that statement should go without explanation.

Mr. TUPPER. One of the worst features in the case was that, with that charge in front of him, he should have sent in his resignation without waiting for the investigation.

Mr. BARRON. I think the Minister knows the explanation about the money charges.

Mr. TUPPER. I only heard it from the hon. gentleman, but I never had it from Mr. Graham.

Mr. BARRON. In justice to Mr. Graham I should say that he has a claim against the department, whether right or wrong I do not know, and he says he cannot get the money from the department. He is quite ready to hand over these moneys referred to as soon as he gets his claim settled against the department.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. TUPPER. We do not owe him a single sixpence, and even if we owed him a thousand dollars he knows, as well as the hon. gentleman knows, that he has to account to the Receiver General for the money he receives for the Crown and not to the Marine Department. All that surprises me is that the hon. gentleman should attempt to defend such conduct, more especially in advance of the fair trial that is offered to this man.

Indians—To provide for an increase in the salary paid to Mr. Ovide Roy, teacher of the boys' school at Caughnawaga..... $ 50

Mr. SCRIVER. It appears from this vote that the Dominion Government pays the salaries of the teachers at Caughnawaga. At St. Régis, where the Indians occupy the same relation to the Dominion Government, the salary of the teacher, though paid by the Dominion Government, is deducted from the moneys distributed to the Indians by the Government. I should like to know why this difference is made between the two tribes?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The reason is that the Indians of St. Régis have a considerable sum to their credit while the Indians at Caughnawaga have hardly anything.

Mr. SCRIVER. I am afraid that is the fault of the Indians at Caughnawaga. They have just as large and valuable a reserve as the Indians at St. Régis, and if they do not manage as well as their brothers. I do not see why they should be treated any better.

Indians, Nova Scotia—Grant towards building fund of Indian Chapel on Chapel Island, Cape Breton..... $450

Mr. FLINT. I will read the affidavit which was referred to the other day, having been sent by my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser). I will make no comments upon it. It completes the record of the discussion on page 5420 of Hansard. Then it will be left with the Department of the Interior to make such further investigation as they see fit :

"CANADA,
"PROVINCE OF NOVA SCOTIA,
"County of Antigonish.

"I, Donald Chisholm, of Afton, in the County of Antigonish and Province of Nova Scotia, farmer, do solemnly declare as follows :—

"(1.) I am informed that two certificates of mine in reference to a pair of oxen sold by Mr. William C. Chisholm, Indian agent, were read in the House of Commons, Ottawa, recently.

"(2.) The first certificate, alleging that $60 was the price paid for the oxen, is the true and correct one. I sold the oxen in question in 1887 for $60, and received some time afterwards $40 cash for them from the said William C. Chisholm, and he then and there gave me credit on his book for twenty dollars. The money was paid in his own store at Heatherton.

"(3.) The said William C. Chisholm never told me that a cheque came for the sum of seventy dollars or for any other sum for me. I am informed that a cheque is returned to the department as having been signed or endorsed by me. I never signed or endorsed any such cheque, neither did I authorize anyone for me to do so at any time.

"(4.) I signed the second certificate at the request of the said William C. Chisholm on his showing me an entry in his book for seventy dollars appeared to be credited to me, instead of sixty dollars, the price of the oxen. The entry appeared to me to be new figures made over erased figures and at the time I had no doubt in my mind but I was getting ten dollars more by this entry. I did not think there would be any trouble about the matter, and to obtain the additional ten dollars I signed the second certificate, thinking I was harming no one. I believed at the time the second certificate was given after I looked at the book that the figures were changed, and I still believe so, and I positively assert that the oxen in question were sold by me for sixty dollars, and not for seventy dollars or any other sum.

"(5.) The second certificate was signed by me the day I looked at his book at his own request, and I think it was about the first of August, 1891.

"And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the Act passed in the 37th year of Her Majesty's reign, intituled: 'An Act for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial oaths.'

"DONALD CHISHOLM."

To provide for the maintenance of ten additional pupils at the Roman Catholic schools at St. Boniface, at $100 per annum $1,000

Mr. WATSON. Is $100 the usual price?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes ; they have already some thirty or forty pupils paid for at the same price. There is a large number of applications made now, much larger than we have allowed this year, for admittance into that school.

Mr. WATSON. Are all schools paid at the same rate?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; some get $72 and some $100. $100 is the highest where the children are taken care of and everything found, without anything from the Government, except providing and furnishing the building.

To pay Claims in connection with the North-West Rebellion in 1885..... $600

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is to pay for the burning of the blacksmith shop at Batoche during the rebellion. On the 21st of March scouts were sent out from Prince Albert from the direction of Batoche to watch the movements of the Indians. A number of horses had to be re-shod, and volunteer Gordon was ordered to take possession of the blacksmith shop owned by William Graham. While the shop was in possession of the volunteers it caught fire and was burned down, and a claim was presented to the Department of Justice in 1888, which the department reported was not one which could be recognized. Graham then made a claim against Gordon in connection with the matter, and the department reported that it might be proper to consider whether Gordon should not be defended at the expense of the Government. Further representations were made by Mr. Macdowall, and the papers were again referred to the Department of Justice on the 2nd of June last. A few days later, the Deputy Minister expressed the opinion that Graham's claim, as then presented, should receive favourable consideration and the value of the building paid.

Mr. LAURIER. Although this is a doubtful claim, I make no objection, as the item is a small one, and it is better to err on the side of generosity. I would take occasion to ask the Minister what has been done with regard to Bremner?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The last petition presented by the solicitor of Bremner some time during the session is still before the Department of Justice.

Mr. LAURIER. There is nothing done?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. LAURIER. There is nothing to be done in any way?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Nothing has been done.

Mr. WATSON. I have had a letter recently about that matter. It appears to be a great hardship. A Special Committee of this House found Mr. Bremner had lost certain property during the rebellion. It was the opinion of that committee that the Government should pay the loss, as the property had been taken by the General of the forces. It is a great hardship that Bremner has not yet had his claim settled. His claim was investigated in this House eighteen months ago, so that the Government have had ample time to settle it. The item we have just passed is for a claim of which the Rebellion Losses Commission could not recommend payment, but, notwithstanding their report, on the representation of the hon. member for Saskatchewan, we find an item in the Estimates to cover the amount. I am not objecting to this, because I believe it better to err on the side of generosity in these cases, but I think that the report of the Special Committee of this House in the case of Bremner should have received consideration at the hands of the Government before this late date. Bremner is in a state of destitution, caused by the loss during the rebellion of his property, and the Government ought to take immediate steps to settle his claim.

Mr. LAURIER. My information is the same as that of the hon. gentleman, that Bremner is in a state, not only of poverty, but of destitution. It matters not, however, whether he is in destitution or affluence, he was despoiled of his property—I will not use a stronger word—and, under the circumstances, the Government should recoup him. The Government should not bear the loss itself, but should see that the real culprits make the loss good to the Government; but, as between Bremner and the Government, it is not to be tolerated that he, who was unjustly deprived of his property by the action of an official of the Government, should not be compensated. The thing is not to be tolerated at all, because you have this fact, that this man, who was not in the rebellion, but was a victim of the rebellion, was deprived of almost everything he had in the world, and after six years he has not been recouped for his losses. I put the case very strongly to the Government that he ought to be at once recouped for the losses he has suffered, and the Government ought to see that the other parties are made to pay what is due from them.

Mr. DEWDNEY. This question will be taken up very shortly. Bremner's last account has swollen, until it is between $16,000 and $19,000.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that he is an uneducated man, and cannot write, and probably he is not altogether responsible for the claims presented in his name. He puts his accounts in the hands of agents, but I think the Government should exercise its judgment and give a fair compensation.

Mr. WATSON. The committee appointed by this House awarded Bremner something like $4,000 or $4,500, and I think that should be paid. There is no doubt that everyone on that committee was satisfied that Bremner lost more than that, but at all events the amount found by the committee should be paid to him.

Arbitration respecting the accounts between the Dominion of Canada and the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. (Payments on account of services rendered may be made to members of the Civil Service notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act)..... $10,000

Mr. LAURIER. Who are the parties intended to be entitled to receive that money?

Mr. FOSTER. The judges are acting as arbitrators.

Medicine Hat Hospital..... $1,000

Mr. DAVIN. This is a very inadequate sum. This hospital was established in 1880, and it has done great service since, both in the way of beneficence and of medical skill. It fulfils all the purposes of a great hospital, and this amount is very small. I think we ought to look forward to expending a larger sum for such a beneficent institution.

Allowance to the family of the late Chief Justice Palmer..... $1,000

Mr. LAURIER. What is this for?

Mr. FOSTER. During his lifetime, Mr. Palmer, in Prince Edward Island, was the judge of the Admiralty Court, and he received no payment in that capacity. After his death, the present chief justice was appointed, and was and is paid a salary for Vice Admiralty work, and it is contemplated that the family of the late chief justice should be paid this small amount in consideration of his acting as judge of the Admiralty Court as his successor has been.

Mr. LAURIER. He was not paid for this during his life?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. LAURIER. That is fair enough.

To pay the Canada Atlantic Railway Company for the funeral train, Ottawa to Montreal and return, on the occasion of the death of the late Hon. Thomas White, and other expenses in connection with the funeral..... $734 40

Mr. WATSON. Why was this not paid at an earlier date?

Mr. FOSTER. They did not render this bill sooner.

Mr. LAURIER. It is very strange that a railway company should not render its bills for about four years.

Mr. FOSTER. There was a larger sum charged by the Canada Atlantic Company, and they have agreed to reduce it from $996.40 to this amount.

Expenses of Prohibition Commission... $5,000

Mr. SCRIVER. I would like to enquire whether the members of this commission have been named yet, and if not, when they are likely to be named?

Mr. FOSTER. They have not been named. The Government has been so busy with the work of this session that it has been impossible for them to settle the scope and constitution of this commission. A sub-committee of the Council has been appointed to deal with it, and just as soon as Parliament has prorogued they will make their report to the Government, and the commission will be constituted.

Mr. DAVIN. The amount is very small, and it can only mean the beginning. I do hope that when this commission is framed it will be framed in such a manner as to meet the confidence of the temperance people throughout the country.

To provide for an addition to the statutory salary of the Clerk of the North-West Council $400

Mr. WATSON. What is his present salary?

Mr. DEWDNEY. His present salary is $2,000, and this is to make it equal to that of a chief clerk, which was also the salary that was given to the late Clerk of the Assembly, Mr. Forget. It is a very responsible position, and he has been there now for three years. His name is Gordon.

Mr. DAVIN. I know him well, and you could not have in that position a more capable man, and one more earnest in the discharge of his duty.

Amount required to pay for books for the North-West Government Library.....$1,669 58

Mr. DAVIN. I may say that a charge was made against Governor Royal of crowding into the library Catholic books. I examined the library myself, and I may say here that a better selected library for its size does not exist. Perhaps I may speak to some small extent as an expert on a question of that kind, and I will venture to say that there is a larger percentage of Protestant books in the library than any other library of its size in the world. There was no foundation whatever for the charge, and I think it ought to go broadcast to the world that there is no foundation. Anyway, I examined it thoroughly, and that settles the matter.

To provide for a Revenue Cruiser, and expenses in connection therewith..$40,000

Mr. BOWELL. This is the only opportunity I shall have of giving the explanations I promised the House when we were in Committee before. I do not, however, see the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) present, who asked a question in reference to the cartage contract in Montreal; nor the member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) who asked information in reference to certain seizures. These points are pertinent to the question before the House, and therefore can be referred to. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) stated that $1,000 had been taken from Mr. Hunter in the west and had not been refunded. I promised to give him an explanation, more particularly as he threatened to make it hot for somebody, and certainly we do not desire to be any warmer than we have been for the last few months. While making these explanations I also desire to refer to a statement made by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Truax) in reference to money which he said had been paid to the sub-collector at Walkerton, Mr. McNamara. In justice to that gentleman I took it upon myself to look into the matter, and will now correct what I believe to be an error, or a misunderstanding, of the Auditor General's Report as read to the House by the hon. member for Bruce, who is reported in the Hansard at that time to have said:

"Mr. TRUAX. I notice, in the Auditor General's Report that Mr. McNamara, a sub-collector, was paid $590.56; fuel, $15.61; stove, &c., $16.10; cleaning, $48.25; telegrams, $56.25. I was not aware that Mr. McNamara had to keep an office open to the public, and cannot understand how it is he is paid $48.25 for cleaning office."

I notice also that this gentleman has corresponded with the newspapers. In his letter he repeated his statement in the House, and added:

"My intentions are to go into the expenditure of the public money so far as I am able; and as is well known to the public, almost every department of the Civil Service is rotten to the core."

The fact is, Mr. McNamara never received one cent except his salary. Anyone who looks through the Auditor General's Report will see that all the items which there appear are chargeable to Guelph, of which Walkerton is an outport, where Mr. McNamara acts as sub-collector. Mr. McNamara having seen the statement published in the official reports of this House, wrote to the Auditor General. Mr. McNamara, who wrote to me, says:

"I wrote to the Auditor General on the 15th instant and he replied under date 17th instant, in which letter he states that the only amount paid to me was my salary, and that the other items are contingencies for the ports and outports, and were paid by cheque to the collector at Guelph."

The Committee will understand from this that the charge made against Mr. McNamara is quite incorrect, and that the items in the Auditor General's Report to which I have referred apply to the port of Guelph, and not the outport where Mr. McNamara is stationed. I do not think I need take up the time of the House further with this matter than to say that the statements made by the member for Bruce were wholly incorrect, and that it is upon such incorrect statements that the gentleman takes upon himself to declare that all the departments are "rotten to the core." I have documents in my hands showing that the statement made by the hon. member for South Grey is not correct. It is true a seizure was made of machinery which was subsequently sold to Mr. Hunter, that gentleman depositing $1,000. After full investigation into the matter it was found that Mr. Hunter having purchased the machinery at auction at a sheriff's sale, after the failure of the party who imported it, he therefore was only punished by exacting from him the amount of the undervaluation, some $170; and the balance was paid back to him. It was denied on the part of the heirs that this sum was ever received. I hold in my hand the receipt given by Mr. Hunter to the collector at Stratford for the sum of $821.25. I also have the cheque which was issued to him, endorsed by the same Mr. Hunter. I have also a letter written by Mr. Hunter to myself—I mention this with a view to a comparison of the signatures—and a memorandum made on it by myself, "have the balance paid over to depositor," who was Mr. Hunter. No doubt, the hon. member for South Grey was misinformed by the information obtained. I am also informed that since this question was before the House the member for South Grey had communicated with the heirs of Mr. Hunter, and that those heirs still contended that Mr. Hunter, or his estate, never received the money. I have taken the trouble to give this information to the Committee, so that in case the member for South Grey has anything to show that the proper parties did not receive the money, and the information be given to the department, the case will be fully investigated. The fact that there are three signatures: First, the signature of Mr. Hunter to the letter to myself; second, his signature to the receipt given to the collector at Stratford; and, third, the endorsation on the cheque itself, all in the same handwriting, lead me to believe that there must be some mistake on the part of the heirs of this estate when they make the assertion that the money was not received.

Mr. LAURIER. Will the hon. gentleman lay the papers on the Table?

Mr. BOWELL. It must be understood that they are the original papers obtained from the Auditor General, and must be returned.

Mr. SCRIVER. Is the revenue cruiser intended for service on the lower St. Lawrence?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes. I hope to be able to intercept the vessels which we believe are constantly coming from St. Pierre with smuggled liquors and other goods, which are transferred into other vessels and brought into port.

To pay H. N. Case, late Postmaster at Hamilton, the sum of $500 per year from 1st August, 1887, to 1st July 1891..... $1,958.33

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Would it not be well to add a few words in explanation: "for compensation for getting out of the way of our esteemed friend, Mr. Brown?"

Mr. FOSTER. It is not for that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then what is it for?

Mr. HAGGART. He claimed that when he was appointed to the position he should have a residence in the post office, but he had to leave the post office and go outside. He has been making this claim for a number of years to compensate him for that.

Mr. MULOCK. What did you compensate him for?

Mr. HAGGART. He is eighty years of age.

Four additional letter carriers at Hamilton Post Office, at $360 each. $1,440

Mr. MULOCK. What is this for? Why do you increase the number?

Mr. McKAY. It is to provide a delivery system for the newly annexed district to the City of Hamilton, and to give that district all the postal conveniences which are now happily enjoyed by the older part of Hamilton.

Mr. MULOCK. How many letter carriers have you in Hamilton?

Mr. HAGGART. There were thirty-five, and there will be thirty-nine now.

Mr. MULOCK. How does that compare with Toronto?

Mr. HAGGART. The number in Toronto is 132.

To pay J. H. Bartlett for attendance of clock, Ottawa Post Office..... $60

Mr. MULOCK. How does this sum come to be in the Estimates?

Mr. HAGGART. He has been paid this for a number of years, but the Auditor General, on account of the recent criticisms of his accounts, refuses to pay it any longer in the manner he has been doing, and he insists in having a separate item voted for it.

To provide for salary of John Mason, carpenter, $2 per day.. $732

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that the Mr. Mason who figured in the Public Accounts Committee?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. He gave very honest testimony.

Mr. MULOCK. Has the Minister of the Interior anything to say about this?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; I would like to say one or two words about it. I read Mr. Mason's evidence for the first time to-day and I see he has given very straightforward evidence. He stated that for the work he had done for me outside of office hours I had paid him, but he did not remember the dates or the amounts of the payments. I hold in my hand the cheques of the different dates—one of 12th January, 1889, one of 27th June, 1889, one of 3rd January, 1890, one of 10th January, 1891, and one of 12th December, 1890—representing, I think, all the work that Mason did for me; and I shall be glad to give the Public Accounts Committee all the details, if they desire them.

Territorial Account—Clerical work in connection with settling Claims..... ... $200

Mr. MULOCK. It is extraordinary that you have to pay $200 for clerical work to settle accounts amounting to $600 or $700.

Mr. FOSTER. The claims were much more. They were worked down.

Mr. MULOCK. What was the name of the patriot who did this work?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not got it, but I will get it for the hon. gentleman.

To pay Dr. Bergin balance of salary and allowances whilst Surgeon General in 1885 $775

Mr. TYRWHITT. I would like to have a little explanation of this.

Mr. FOSTER. I can give a partial explanation, but I prefer to leave it to my hon. colleague the Minister of Militia.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My hon. friend and colleague the Minister of Finance has all the information, and the only information I can give is contained in the item which is submitted to Parliament.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I do not think this item can be allowed to pass in that way. I think the honour of knighthood should certainly have been conferred upon the hon. Surgeon General.

Mr. SCRIVER. Why has this account dragged for so many years? I do not say that it is an improper payment, but I would like to know why it has remained so long unsettled?

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister of Militia will soon be through with the session, and he might explain this. It is a claim for salary which appears to be six years overdue, and there is not even a vote for clerical and legal assistance in settling it, which appears to be the proper adjunct for these items. The hon. Minister surely cannot be serious when he says that all the information he has is contained in the item before the House, because that is no information at all.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman does not surely intend to carry this item without explanation? If the information is not ready, he should let the item stand till to-morrow.

Mr. CASEY. Of course nobody wishes to be unduly critical about this item, but it is one which should be explained. The hon. Minister of Militia is generally let off very easily with his estimates, so far as explanations are concerned, and we do not expect much from him in that line. But when he says that he does not know anything about the vote, more than is contained in the Estimates, that is a little too military.

Mr. MULOCK. Perhaps we had better draw on the Minister of Finance first. He says he can give a partial explanation.

Mr. FOSTER. I believe that Dr. Bergin was appointed Surgeon General of the North-West forces at the time of the rebellion. I do not know what that position means, but I believe it is an office in the Imperial Army. According to the Queen's Regulations, I believe the Surgeon General, on appointment here, is entitled to the same pay as an Imperial officer; and when the war was over and the victorious troops had marched back to their homes and families, Dr. Bergin——

Mr. LANDERKIN. Did he march back with them?

Mr. FOSTER. Dr. Bergin was paid a smaller amount than the pay of an Imperial officer, and the difference between the small amount he was paid and the pay of an Imperial officer, which the Queen's Regulations say he should have, is represented by this vote of $775.

Mr. LAURIER. Then, why did you not pay him according to the Queen's Regulations?

Mr. FOSTER. Some mistake occurred, so that it was not paid at first. I am informed by the Minister of Justice, whose word we must all take on this point, that it is a perfectly legal claim, which could be enforced in law. We do not propose to stand on that, however; but, it being a valid claim, we propose to meet it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Was there a salary fixed at the time of the appointment?

Mr. FOSTER. It was not fixed until the war was over.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It might be well if the hon. Minister would inform us how many men Dr. Bergin killed?

Mr. FOSTER. His office was not to kill but to keep men sound and healthy, and he did so to the satisfaction of the department and the country.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think he attended the forces at all. He was in the House of Commons at the time the war was going on.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). You are quite mistaken; he was in the North-West.

Mr. BARRON. Dr. Bergin was not there at all, but mixing his medicines here at the Capital.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). If the hon. gentleman will refer to the report, he will find that I am quite correct.

Mr. MULOCK. We have heard for the first time that a person has been appointed to the office of Surgeon General. To what rank is he entitled? Is he a colonel?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. As the Minister of Militia has been listening with attention to the Minister of Finance, he probably now knows what this item is about. We must ask the Minister of Finance, or the hon. member for Leeds and Grenville, what correspondence there has been about this matter, and how it happened it took the Government six years to find out that they had not paid Dr. Bergin his proper salary? That hon. gentleman has a valid claim against the Government for arrears of interest during those six years.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether this item includes all extras and additions, and whether we may expect any subsequent claim for interest?

Mr. FOSTER. This represents exactly the difference between the salary paid him and the pay he was entitled to by the Queen's Regulations as Surgeon General.

Mr. MULOCK. If this claim was due six years ago and not paid, he may bring a claim for interest. Have you made an arrangement by which this is to be accepted in full?

Mr. FOSTER. We cannot take a receipt in full until we pay the item.

Mr. MULOCK. What is your arrangement? If this money was due in 1885, interest may be hereafter claimed. In these same Estimates we have a case in point, where we are settling a claim for interest because the claimant was not paid his debt until some years after it was due.

An hon. MEMBER. That was a lawyer.

Mr. MULOCK. No: Mr. Goodwin is not a lawyer, and we are settling a claim for interest due him. I want to know whether in this settlement it will be agreed that no further claims will be made.

Mr. FOSTER. I have heard of no claim for interest. So far as I know, this is settlement in full on the question of salary.

Mr. TYRWHITT. This will require some discussion in the country between the hon. member for North York and myself, and explanations in our counties where great interest is taken in the militia. We should have some explanation from the Minister of Militia, as this is a most important matter.

Mr. BARRON. The Minister says the payment is made on account of salary. If that is so, there must have been some salary fixed at the time Dr. Bergin went into the service. But there does not appear to have been any arrangement whatever, and the payment appears to be an afterthought, which has seized the Minister of Finance or the Government quite recently. If Dr. Bergin is entitled to this amount on a basis of salaries paid Imperial officers, that reason must have been present to the mind of the Minister before this session, and to say that the only reason now for paying the sum is because he should receive the same pay as an Imperial officer of the same rank is not a plausible one. The hon. member for Leeds and Grenville defends this; but, of course, he belongs to the same profession. He appears to know more about it than the Government.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). The position is simply this, that Dr. Bergin accepted the position as surgeon without any provision as to salary, but as a large number of these items were to be settled by the Government by arrangement hereafter, his salary was among these items. No special arrangement as to salary was made after his appointment, until the settlement of the war claims, and he has made his claim by right of his legal status under the Queen's Regulations. This item represents what is honestly due him for services rendered.

Mr. TYRWHITT. It appears to me that this pay which is accorded to the Surgeon General is altogether out of proportion to what was accorded to the York-Simcoe Battalion. You will remember that the kit allowance was before the House for some years, and we had some difficulty in getting the Minister of Militia to grant this to the York-Simcoe Battalion. I think that to my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) belonged the laurels for having brought that about. I thought that, belonging myself to the York-Simcoe battalion, I might have done something; but I found exertions futile and vain until my hon. friend from North York brought his powerful influence to bear on the Minister of Militia, and then at last we got this kit allowance granted.

Mr. CASEY. This is a question which has its humourous side, but it also has its serious side. The Minister of Militia does not pretend to know anything about the matter. A partial explanation has been made by the Minister of Finance, and a fuller explanation by the member for Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Ferguson). It is, however, a serious matter that a Minister of Militia should confess his entire ignorance of why this payment is made to a member of this House six years after it is said to have become due. This passes a joke when a serious item of this kind comes up, and the Minister treats himself and the item and the House as a mere joke. It confirms our idea of the Minister, no doubt, and allows us to regard him as a humourous item, but it does not conduce to the dignity of the House. It has been pointed out that the Surgeon General, as a member of this House, spent most of his time, or all of his time, here. Yet he acquired a rank above that of the combatant colonels who were in the field. I think Col. Gzowski and he were the only two who obtained the full rank of colonel, while others who were in the field were left with the title of lieutenant-colonel, and were consequently inferior in rank to those gentlemen who remained at home. I have the highest esteem and respect for the Surgeon-General, but this vote requires some explanation as to why he should have received his high rank and his high pay, and what he did, and why this balance has been left over for six years? We have asked for this information seriously and humourously, and the only outcome has been to make a farce of the whole Department of Militia, and to show that the Minister either knows nothing about it or will not explain. I think the department is a farce, but there is no doubt that the Minister himself can be regarded as nothing else than a huge joke.

Mr. TYRWHITT. It seems to me impossible that this item should be adopted in the present temper of the House, as it is a matter of such importance to the hon. member from North York and myself, we being so intensely interested in the welfare of the militia, that it is necessary to have a thorough explanation from the Minister in order that we may place ourselves properly before our constituents, whom I might describe as the most intelligent people in the Dominion of Canada, and the most interested in the welfare of the militia, as must be evident from the fact that they are represented here by the hon. member for North York and myself. As my people are not possibly as well informed as they might be as to the standing of militia, I think this is a proper time to inform them as to the different ranks of the militia. For my own part, possibly I am as well informed as my hon. friend for North York, I have endeavoured to post myself so as to meet him in the country, and that is a most difficult task, but I do what I can in order to meet my friend here and to defend the course the Minister of Militia has taken. Of course, he has taken a very unpopular course in our part of the country, and I think this is an item which requires a good deal of explanation on the part of the Minister of Militia.

Mr. WATSON. I think the Minister of Militia shoud give some explanation of this.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). What do you know about the militia? Sit down, moccasins.

Mr. WATSON. If the member for North Leeds (Mr. Ferguson) will keep quiet, I would ask the Minister why this amount was not paid five or six years ago? I think, also, we ought to know what particular services Dr. Bergin rendered, how long he was in the employ of the Government, what was the total amount he received, before this balance became due to him? I think the Minister of Militia should give some explanation why this amount was placed in the Estimates at least five years after it was due, or if any services have been rendered by the Surgeon General since that time. I am not reflecting on the duties performed by that gentleman. I believe he performed his duties honourably and well, but some explanation should be given as to why this is now asked for.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Perhaps the hon. Minister will tell us what length of time Dr. Bergin was in the service as Surgeon General, what rate per month the Government undertook to pay him, what ground did they proceed upon at the time they fixed his salary, when did Dr. Bergin first make a claim to an additional amount, and what reason the Government have for this long delay? I think we are entitled to a statement. I do not think we ought to do Dr. Bergin any wrong, but we are entitled to know how long he was in the service, what was the rate of payment fixed, how that rate came to be fixed, and when this claim was first made?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The item of $775 is a claim to pay the Surgeon General of Militia upon the same rate as the Surgeon General at head-quarters, as provided by the British Army Regulations. The amount under British Army Regulations would be £1,300 sterling per annum. From the first of April to the 31st of August, 1885, Surgeon General Bergin was paid at the rate of £2 10s., equal to $12.16 per day, amounting $2,636.49. The amount which he received according to that rate, and which was regulated by an Order in Council of the 29th October, 1885, was $1,861.49. He has made a claim for the balance, which is the item now in the Estimates.

Mr. LAURIER. Would the hon. gentleman tell me if the colonels and other officers are paid according to the Queen's Regulations?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No; they are paid according to an Order in Council of the 29th of October, 1885.

Mr. LAURIER. Then if we paid Surgeon General Bergin according to the Queen's Regulations, why not pay all the officers by the same rule? You open the door for a precedent, which will afford other officers an excuse for making a claim on the same basis as Dr. Bergin. I move that the item be struck out.

Motion negatived: Yeas, 20; nays, 25.

PETROLEUM AT CROW'S NEST PASS.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior whether he has any information in regard to the discovery of petroleum springs at Crow's Nest Pass?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The public have known for some years that petroleum existed in the Crow's Nest Pass, and that Dr. Selwyn had lately made an examination. He has brought home some of the oil which he had collected himself from the surveys of some of the waters, and he found oil oozing out of the mountain.

Mr. PRIOR. I would like to ask the Minister whether Dr. Selwyn will make a report of a visit he paid to the Rocky Mountains, and his visit to Crow's Nest Pass, in regard to coal oil and also to the coal that he found there. This is a matter of great importance, not only to the Province of British Columbia but also to the Dominion of Canada as a whole. There is no doubt that that country will in a short time come to the fore as a large coal-producing region, and also, I believe, from all I can hear from men who have been in that country, as a large coal oil-producing region. I think when we have men like Dr. Selwyn to examine that country, the least the Government can do is to give his report to the public.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Dr. Selwyn will, in the near future, give his report, and it will be published. He has brought back with him several specimens of coal and of other minerals, and they are now in the hands of the assayers.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.25 a.m. (Tuesday).

EXPULSION OF MEMBER FOR QUEBEC WEST.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It becomes my duty to make a motion to the House which naturally follows the adoption by the House of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It is hardly necessary to say that it would be much more agreeable to me, personally, if that duty did not devolve upon me. I need hardly say that to the House, because I am sure that every member who was on that Committee, while fulfilling an important trust, was also performing a very disagreeable duty in investigating the charges made by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Tarte), and in having to report the censure of that Committee on a fellow-member of this House. At the same time, the conclusions which the Committee have come to and which have been adopted by the House, and the conclusions which have been come to also by the minority, leave no alternative but for me to ask the judgment of the House upon the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. McGreevy). It is true that one of the branches of the report of that Committee suggests that a prosecution should take place of the persons who were implicated in the frauds on the Government, but, notwithstanding that, the precedents fully justify the pronouncement by the House of the penalty which can be applied by the House itself. It is impossible to overlook the fact likewise that, while some of the offences charged against the hon. member fall under the criminal law, the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. McGreevy) was found to have been guilty of offences against the House, apart from those which fall under the cognizance of the criminal law. Under those circumstances, and without further dealing with the details of the matter, which must be fully in the minds of hon. members, after the elaborate debate which we have had on the subject, I feel it my duty to move:

That the Hon. Thomas McGreevy, member for the electoral district of Quebec West, having been guilty of a contempt of the authority of this House, by failing to obey its order to attend in his place therein, and having been adjudged by this House guilty of certain of the charges made against him on the 11th day of May last, be expelled from this House.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC WEST WRIT OF ELECTION.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved:

That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant for a new Writ of election of a member for the electoral district of Quebec West, in the place of the Hon. Thomas McGreevy, expelled from this House.

Motion agreed to.

PRINTING COMMITTEE.

Mr. TAYLOR moved the adoption of the 9th and 10th Reports of the Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL REPORTING OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. DESJARDINS moved the adoption of the 4th Report of the Committee appointed to supervise the reporting of the Debates of this House.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will not raise the point of order in opposition to this report, after having heard the explanations of the chairman of the Committee as to the merits of the case. I understand the application is a reasonable one, according to the precedent of 1885.

Motion agreed to.

TAKING EVIDENCE IN RAILWAY ARBITRATIONS.

Mr. BOWELL moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 175) to amend the Railway Acts. He said: I shall have to ask the indulgence of the House to pass the three readings at once. This Bill simply provides for the repeal of the second sub-section of section 155 of the Railway Act, and to substitute another section for it, giving power to arbitrators to insist upon having the evidence taken by stenography. That is the only change in the Act. Our attention was called to the necessity of this amendment by representations made to me of the abuses that have arisen in taking evidence before arbitrators in different parts of the Dominion, in cases of expropriation or other matters affecting railways which are referred to arbitrators. It has been represented that in many cases time has been taken up for days and weeks, and in some cases even longer, by one party insisting that the whole evidence should be taken down in long-hand writing. I shall ask leave to have this Bill read from the Table in the usual way, and pass its three readings this sitting. The leader of the Opposition has taken cognizance of this Bill, and I think will consent to this course being taken.

Mr. LAURIER. I look upon this Bill as very proper. The Railway Act seems to make it imperative that in cases of arbitration for expropriation the old antiquated system of taking evidence by long-hand shall be followed. Of course in these modern days we have discovered a much more expeditious way of taking evidence. I agree with the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Customs that the Bill shall take its three readings at once.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second times, considered in Committee, read the third time and passed.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. With your permission and the consent of the House, I propose to adopt a more expeditious method of reaching the Address of which I have given notice in this resolution. The notice for this Address, which was put upon the Paper, would require, if followed out, that I move the House into committee to consider the resolutions. With the consent of the House, I propose to move the Address at once. I, therefore, move that the House adopt the following Address:—

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY:

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN:

We, Your Majesty's must dutiful and loyal subjects the and Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled humbly beg leave to approach Your Majesty for the purpose of representing:

That by the statutes of Your Majesty's Parliament (5 and 6 Vic., cap. 45) the privilege of copyright was given to any person who should publish a literary work in the United Kingdom, if he should be a subject of Your Majesty or a resident of any part of Your Majesty's Dominion, and the re-publication within the Empire and the importation into the Empire of any copyrighted work was prohibited.

The operation of the above-mentioned Act was attended with great inconvenience to the people of the North American colonies and formed the subject of formal remonstrances from several of their Legislatures.

These remonstrances were replied to by a circular despatch from Earl Grey (then Your Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies), directed to all the Governors of the North American colonies. The circular was in the words following:—

"DOWNING STREET, Nov., 1846.

"SIR,—Her Majesty's Government having had under their consideration the representations which have been received from the Governors of some of the British North American Provinces complaining of the effect in those colonies of the Imperial copyright law, have decided on proposing measures to Parliament in the ensuing session which, if sanctioned by the Legislature, will, they hope, tend to remove the dissatisfaction which has been expressed on this subject, and place the literature of this country within the reach of the colonies on easier terms than it is at present. With this view, relying upon the disposition of the colonies to protect the authors of this country from the fraudulent appropriation of the fruits of labours upon which they are often entirely dependent, Her Majesty's Government propose to leave to the Local Legislatures the duty and responsibility of passing such enactment as they may deem proper for securing both the rights of authors and the interests of the public. Her Majesty's Government will accordingly submit to Parliament a Bill authorizing the Queen in Council to confirm and finally enact any colonial law or ordinance respecting copyright, notwithstanding any repugnancy of any such law or ordinance to the copyright law of this country; it being provided by the proposed Act of Parliament that no such law or ordinance shall be of any force or effect until so confirmed and finally enacted by the Queen in Council, but that from the confirmation and final enactment thereof the copyright law of this country shall cease to be of any force or effect within the colony in which any such colonial law or ordinance has been made, in so far as it may be repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the operation of any such colonial law or ordinance.

"I have, etc.,

(Signed) "GREY."

The intention of Your Majesty's Government as expressed in this circular has never been carried into effect. The importation from foreign countries of works copyrighted in the United Kingdom was permitted under certain conditions, but the re-publication of such works in the colonies, even under any conditions, as regards the holders of copyright, has never been permitted, nor has the right of the Legislatures of the provinces or of the Dominion of Canada to make enactments to regulate the law of copyright been recognized by Your Majesty's Government, unless such enactments could be shown to be consistent with and subordinate to the Act of the United Kingdom before mentioned.

Your Majesty's Parliament, in the year 1867, in establishing the Dominion of Canada, gave to its Parliament very extensive powers of Government, including the right to legislate on this important subject. The Parliament of Canada has enacted several statutes regulating the law of copyright for Canada. These statutes adopted the provisions which the interests and welfare of the people of this country as connected with this matter seemed to require, and at the same time gave liberal protection to the interests of all such persons as had acquired or might acquire copyright in the United Kingdom. These statutes have always been regarded by Your Majesty's Government, however, as requiring sanction by the Parliament of the United Kingdom, and the most recent of them—passed in the year 1889—remains inoperative for want of the assent of Your Majesty's Government to a proclamation which will bring it into force.

The provisions of the Act of 1889, just mentioned, are such as are required in the interests of the people of Canada, and its provisions have not been shown to be in any respect unfair as regards any portion of Your Majesty's subjects. The Act was passed unanimously by both Houses of the Parliament of Canada, and has been earnestly pressed by the Government of Canada upon the favourable consideration of Your Majesty's Government.

While your memorialists hold the view that such a statute is within the competence of the Parliament of Canada under the British North America Act, they have been informed that doubts upon that subject have been raised, and they humbly submit that such doubts should be removed by statute of Your Majesty's Parliament, giving effect to the Canadian Copyright Act of 1889 at once and confirming the right of the Parliament of Canada, according to the promise made by Your Majesty's Government in 1846, to make laws on the subject of copyright, as may from time to time be required for the country, notwithstanding that such laws may be inconsistent with the provisions of Imperial statutes passed before the adoption of the British North America Act of 1867.

Your memorialists beg to call attention to the fact that Your Majesty's Royal Commissioners on Copyright, in the year 1876, recommended that the Colonial Legislature should be given the right to pass statutes embodying principles precisely the same as those which form the basis of the Canadian Act of 1889 before referred to.

We, therefore, humbly pray that Your Majesty will be graciously pleased to invite such legislation in the Parliament of the United Kingdom as will remove the doubts hereinbefore referred to, and explicitly confer upon the Parliament of Canada the power to legislate in the interests of the people of the Dominion on all matters relating to the subject of copyright, without regard to the statutes which may have been in force when the Parliament of Canada was established.

We further pray that in order to give full effect to the Act of the Parliament of Canada of 1889, aforesaid, notice may be given by Your Majesty's Government of the withdrawal of Canada from the Berne Copyright Convention.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved :

That a Message to be sent to the Senate informing their Honours that this House has adopted an Address to Her Majesty, praying that Her Majesty will be graciously pleased to invite such legislation in the Parliament of the United Kingdom as will remove the doubts therein referred to and explicitly confer upon the Parliament of Canada the power to legislate in the interest of the people of the Dominion on all matters relating to the subject of copyright, without regard to the statutes which may have been in force when the Parliament of Canada was established, and further praying that in order to give full effect to the Act of Parliament of Canada of 1889, with regard to copyright, notice may be given to Her Majesty's Government of the withdrawal of Canada from the Berne Copyright Convention ; and requesting the concurrence of their Honours therein.

Motion agreed to.

FRAUDS UPON THE GOVERNMENT.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 172) respecting frauds upon the Government.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LAURIER. This Bill, as I read it, is simply an amendment to chapter 173 of the Consolidated Statutes, with certain modifications to extend the offences and to make them more accessible of proof. This Act was taken from the Bill introduced by Mr. Casgrain in 1886, I think, but unfortunately at that time the Bill was emasculated of what seemed to me its most important clause. I propose to offer to the hon. gentleman for incorporation in this Bill the clause which was then to be found in the Bill of Mr. Casgrain, and which was left out of the Bill as it passed this House. I hope it will commend itself to his favourable consideration. The clause to which I refer was as follows :—

" Whosoever, for the purpose of assisting in any election to the Parliament of Canada, while performing any such contract or awaiting payment in respect of any such contract, subscribes, furnishes, gives, or promises to give or furnishes any sum of money or consideration, whomsoever either directly or indirectly by himself or by the agency of any other person on his behalf, to any person whatsoever, is guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall, on conviction thereof, be liable, at the discretion of the court, to a penalty of not less than $1,000, together with imprisonment for a term of not less than one month and not more than twelve months ; and in default of payment of the penalty so incurred, the offender shall be imprisoned for a further term of twelve months unless such penalty be sooner paid."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I shall leave the Bill in Committee, as this clause, irrespective of its principle, would have to be re-drawn.

Mr. LAURIER. I notice now it would have to be amended so as to conform it with the last clause of the Bill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We will leave the Bill in Committee, and report progress. We can go into Committee on the Bill again to-day.

Committee rose and reported progress.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY— FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Mr. FOSTER presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows :—

STANLEY OF PRESTON.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, further Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1892, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 28th September, 1891.

INDEMNITY TO SENATORS AND MEMBERS.

Mr. FOSTER moved :

That the Message and Estimates included therewith be referred to the Committee of the whole House on Supply.

He said : In doing so, I beg leave to say that the Government has come to the conclusion to submit this estimate to the House for several reasons, which I shall briefly name. In the first place, the session has been an unusually long one. We are now five months and a little more in session, arduously attending to the very heavy duties which have this year fallen upon the members of the House Added to that, the session has fallen at a period of the year during which business men and professional men leave their homes and their avocations with greatest inconvenience and greatest personal and business loss to themselves. It is upon this account, it having been strongly and repeatedly represented to the Government from both sides of the House, that the Government thought it would only be fair to take this into consideration, and for this session to recommend an increased allowance for the indemnity of the members of both Houses of Parliament. Doctors and lawyers and business men have attended here these months at very great sacrifice of their interests, which require, particularly during this season of the year, their constant and unremitting attention at home. Farmers have been here from every section of the country, whose supervision and care at home has been very much missed, and the lack of which has been detrimental to their pecuniary interests to a large extent. It is not thought, and it is not put forward with the idea, that this increased indemnity of $500 is at all a compensation for that loss of which I have just spoken ; but in connection with that, gentlemen in attendance here have been put to very much increased personal cost in attending to their duties as members of Parliament. And while this is no compensation at all for their loss of business at home, it is a little compensation for the largely increased personal expenses to which they have been put here. It is, therefore, in obedience to these representations, which have been made from both sides of the House, that the Government has concluded to bring before the House this matter which is peculiarly their own. With these few observations, I would invite from my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for South Oxford an expression of their view of the case.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to approve and endorse every word which has been spoken on this occasion by the hon. Minister of Finance. The necessity of the measure which has just been introduced does not require to be defended on the floor of this House ; for the public at large will realize, I am sure, that all the members of this House, with perhaps not more than four or five exceptions, are men who have to depend on their labour for their living—men who are not capitalists, and who have no income but what their daily labour gives them. Under such circumstances, it is absolutely impossible for men to continue to discharge the duties which devolve upon them as members of Parliament if the sessions are to last, as this one has lasted, five months in the year. This increase is not asked to be permanent, but for this year only, and is not only on account of the unusual length of the session, but because of this other fact, that during a part of the time which members have been accustomed to give to their duties in this House we have had a general election; and a general election means to every member of this House an absolute cessation from his regular occupation for six or eight weeks in the year. Therefore, if the members of this House have been withdrawn from their daily avocations for more than half the year, it seems to me that every reasonable man must agree that the increase to the usual indemnity now asked is a fair one, and ought not to be objected to.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is no doubt, Sir, I think, that the statements made by the hon. Minister of Finance and by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition will be most fully appreciated on both sides of this House. Whether they will be equally appreciated outside I am not quite so sure. But under the circumstances I, for one, am perfectly prepared to share the responsibility and to justify the action of the Government. There is no doubt whatever, as my hon. friend has stated, that from the first day of February last up to this present first day of October the vast proportion of the members of this House, who are dependent upon their professional exertions for their maintenance, have suffered very great loss. It is a very different thing indeed to make provision for sparing three months in the early part of the year, which are ordinarily considered to be the time of the parliamentary session, and to have a protracted session of five months coming after six or seven weeks of an election contest, with the consequent disorganization and trouble, which, as a rule, extend to four or five weeks after the day of polling. Bearing that in mind, and bearing in mind the fact that hon. gentlemen on both sides have been subjected, not merely to a long session, but to a severe session; bearing in mind the amount of absolute work which members have had to perform during the sultry portion of the year here in Ottawa, and the atmosphere in which it has been performed, I would not have been surprised, if we had a pension list here, that a number of us who are utterly hors de combat would have to be placed upon that list. However, I for one am quite prepared to share the responsibility with my hon. friend and the Government in saying that, under the circumstances, this is a just and fair provision.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. Minister of Finance, among the reasons which in his judgment warranted the motion, mentioned that the session this year happened to have been called at a season specially inconvenient to the various members. In saying that, he, of course, rebuked the Administration for having selected that inconvenient period of the year for the convention of Parliament. With regard to the losses sustained by members by reason of the length of the session, and the unfortunate season when the House was called together, I am quite willing to admit all that has been said; and if the right of Parliament to vote money for this purpose simply depended upon those arguments, there could be no possible reason in my judgment for opposing such a vote. But I venture to suggest that no person should allow his interests to come into collision with his duty; and the weak point in connection with a motion of this kind is that the members of this House are passing judgment upon their own claims. They are interested, and it is not to be expected that they can arrive at an unbiassed judgment. Under these circumstances, I regret that it has been deemed necessary to make this motion.

Mr. FOSTER. It can be easily undone.

Mr. MULOCK. The inconveniences of public life do not fall equally upon all. I am well aware that there are some members in this House who make much greater sacrifices than others do. I am aware, as the country is aware, that many members, in obedience to the call of duty, have sacrificed perhaps all that they own in the world to serve the state; and, therefore, a session such as this is peculiarly hard upon them. I am aware that any criticism of mine will very properly be open to the answer that, perhaps, I do not suffer to to the extent of many of my fellow members, and, for that reason, I feel a diffidence in expressing what, nevertheless, is my conviction. I would say that it would be more becoming, in my judgment, for the future, if it is not deemed wise to adopt the suggestion at present, that there should be legislation on the Statute-book providing for exceptional sessions such as this, so that all will know in advance how exceptional sessions should be dealt with. Such legislation should not be the work of those who are going to benefit or suffer by it, but be applicable to succeeding Parliaments alone. If this resolution be adopted, I trust that the Administration will, before another session rolls by, introduce a measure that can be discussed by those who are not to be affected by it—a measure applicable only to succeeding Parliaments. There will be then no loss of dignity in putting in force the provisions of such legislation. There is a rule of our House, founded upon good judgment, and the wisdom of which has not been controverted, that no one shall vote upon any matter in which he is personally interested, and that rule would debar any member of this House from dealing with a motion such as this. In the future, members of this House ought not to be placed in the position of bringing, by their vote, their own interests in conflict with their duty, and I hope, therefore, if this resolution passes, this will be the last time that members will have to deal with a case of this kind.

Mr. OUIMET. In order to relive the injured feelings of my hon. friend who has just spoken, I would remind him and the House that when the Act was passed providing for an indemnity the principle upon which the House acted was that an indemnity of $10 per day would be fair and reasonable; and it was provided that, should any session last less then thirty days, the members would be paid at the rate of $10 per day. It was also supposed that no session would, for many years to come, last over 100 days. The principle of this increase we are now voting has been always acted on, as regards every servant of the House. It was acted on in the session of 1885 by myself and the House, when I had the honour to preside over our meetings, and when the session was like this present one, unusually long. The proposition to grant an additional indemnity to members is only carrying out the spirit, if not the letter of the law; and from that point of view, my hon. friend, although a millionaire, may feel relieved, since he is only doing what those who made this law contemplated. I hope it will not be considered that I am solely guided by my own personal interest in this matter.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am exceedingly sorry that the condition of affairs generally in this country necessitated our sitting five months this year. There are two or three things we have much reason to regret. In the first place, we were compelled to meet at a very inopportune season of the year. I am quite prepared to accept the statements of the Finance Minister and the leader of the Opposition, as regards the inconvenience suffered by professional men, and even by farmers, in having had to absent themselves from their private business duties at a season when their presence was particularly required, and when the harvest was being gathered. At the same time, we ought to come to some definite understanding as to the allowance to be paid members of Parliament, and thus avoid being called on, from time to time, to vote money into our own pockets. I quite agree in the remarks of the hon. member for North York, and earnestly hope that the Government, in order to prevent repetition of this kind of thing, will, by statutory enactment next session, make provision for a period in excess of the ordinary term, either by allowing a certain fixed amount per day for such period in excess or by fixing on proper compensation in some other way. It is certainly a great hardship that we should have had to remain in Ottawa for five months during the hot season of the year; and, I am quite sure, if the experience of others had been that of mine, that $1,000 allowed would hardly pay their incidental expenses in this city. At the same time, the amount our people pay for members of Parliament, including Federal and Provincial representatives, is pretty large, and it is highly desirable, in my opinion, we should have a change made in the constitution and reduce the number of representatives in this House by one-half. I have been looking over the indemnity allowed in other countries. I find in the commonwealth of Australia they allow, by their constitution recently adopted, their representatives from each state a sessional indemnity of £500 or $2,500. In the State of New York, the local state representatives are paid $1,500 per year and travelling expenses. The senators and members of Congress in the United States get $5,000 a year and travelling expenses, but they represent a very much larger percentage of population than we do. Our representation is based upon about 25,000 to each member, whereas each United States senator and member of Congress represents over 150,000. The representation in the Australian colonies is based upon 30,000, so that after all the cost of our representation is, perhaps, not very much in excess to what it is in other countries. The objectionable feature in this whole matter is our being called on to vote money into our own pockets. I am opposed to taking this matter up session by session. Let an allowance be fixed for a term of years, as it is exceedingly objectionable that we should be called on, whenever there is a long session, to vote money for ourselves. Another objection I see is this, that the Finance Minister—I do not blame him, because possibly the matter was not fully agreed upon—should have brought the matter down before many of the members had left for their homes. They should be called upon to bear the responsibility as well as those present. I earnestly hope, in the interest of this country, that we will never be called on to sit a whole summer again, investigating such matters as those we have had to look into this session. I earnestly hope the affairs of the country will be conducted in future in such a manner that we will not have a recurrence of the immoralities such as those unearthed during this session.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I was not in when this motion was proposed, and I feel it is necessary that I should make a few observations with regard to it. I believe the proposition is a reasonable one, one that is in the public interest, and I have no disposition to apologize in any way for supporting what I believe to be proper. I feel that I ought not to undertake to represent a constituency if I am not as ready to defend what I believe to be the rights of myself and my fellow-members as I am to defend the rights of the people. It was well said by Mr. Burke, many years ago, that no system of government which was undertaken to be established upon the heroic virtues could ever end in any other way than that of corruption. I think that is a sound political maxim and it is the more necessary in a country like this, where you have not sitting in Parliament men of great fortune, but men like the rest of the community, who are obliged to pursue some useful avocation in order to obtain for themselves and their families the necessary means of subsistence. That being the case, it is right and proper that a reasonable indemnity shall be allowed to the members while they are here, and we have always before us the fact that we are responsible to the people for what we do. The question is as to what is a reasonable indemnity for the services we are performing, or rather for the loss we individually sustain through our devotion to these public duties. There are many persons in the United Kingdom who are employed in various ways, not simply as members of Parliament, but in the discharge of other public duties, who receive indemnities and not salaries. It is of course true, as the hon. member for Wellington has said, that large sums are paid in some of the Australian colonies and in other countries, but in those cases salaries are paid and not an indemnity. The distinction, as I understand it, is that an indemnity is a gratuity paid to a member of Parliament or other official representative to cover those expenses which are incident to his position, and which is intended to protect him against loss; and, when you look at the case of High Commissioners and others who are appointed in the special service of the Crown, you will see that the indemnity is very much larger than that which is usually voted to members, and for the reason that, incident to their duties, there are certain expenses imposed upon them which it is necessary that they should meet and which the state is better able to discharge than they are. I think $1,000 is a reasonable indemnity for an ordinary session. I think the indemnity ought never to be fixed at a sum that would invite candidates to run for Parliament for the sake of the indemnity which is offered. That is one thing to be guarded against, and in order to guard against that, members who have business of their own to discharge must always undertake the duties at a considerable loss to themselves; but, whatever expense they are put to, whether during the session or during the period when Parliament is not in session, which is a necessary outcome of their position as members of Parliament, is an expense that the members are called upon to bear from the amount of indemnity which is granted. We might sit here for three months. It is possible for the Government to keep back important measures that they might think unpopular measures, and then rush them through when every member is anxious to get away. Under the ordinary system of indemnity, without any provision for its being supplemented, the longer a member is here the worse he is off, the greater the loss he sustains here, as well as the loss he sustains by being away from his own residence. It is always in the public interest that, when important measures are under consideration, or important subjects are being investigated, Parliament should remain in session, and the duties that devolve upon it should be carefully and efficiently discharged. In order that that may be done, if you require members to sit beyond the ordinary period of a session they ought to be protected against loss in consequence of remaining here, and you can only do that by giving them a per diem or some other allowance in addition to what they receive for the ordinary period of three months. My own opinion has been in favour of a per diem allowance after 90 days have expired, a very moderate allowance, an allowance that would be no temptation to the man in the most straitened circumstances to remain longer than necessary. If you were here ten days you would get something. If you were here twenty days you would get something more. If you vote a lump sum for a period of two months, such as we have spent here beyond the time of the ordinary session, you have no rule laid down for anything less than two months; but if you had a per diem allowance for anything over the 90 days, no matter how small it might be, you would still have something. Last year we sat for over four months, and there was no additional indemnity. I do not think that was fair to the House, and I think it is always easier for the public at large to bear the additional loss that arises in consequence of a protracted session than it is for the individual members who sit in this House. The five millions outside are better able to bear that than the 200 inside this House. Care should be taken that the amount should not go beyond a moderate sum, so that no temptation should be offered to remain longer than necessary, but the important thing is that the public should have honest service, that members should remain here till the work is done, and, if you say that the House is to receive nothing after the three months have expired and that all the additional time is to be spent here at the expense of the members themselves, then I apprehend that the time will be made very short indeed, and you will have very few sessions, no matter how important the public business is, which will extend beyond the three months. I say here, as I say to those I represent, and as I say to the whole country, that the country is bound to see that this House shall give them the best service in the power of those who represent them in the interests of the community, and that the community shall protect the members of this House against actual loss on account of the services they faithfully and honestly perform.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—DISALLOWANCE OF PROVINCIAL ACTS.

Mr. LAURIER. Before going into Committee of Supply, I would call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that all the papers promised early in the session in regard to the disallowance of certain Acts of the Local Legislatures have not been brought down.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Two sets of papers have been brought down.

Mr. LAURIER. Certain papers have been brought down, but others have not. The Minister of Justice pronounced on four Acts, two of which he allowed and two he disallowed. The correspondence in regard to the two which were allowed was brought down, but not the correspondence in regard to those he disallowed. This is an important subject, and should have been debated this session, but it is too late now, and I simply call the attention of the Minister to it with regard to the future.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I was under the impression that they had all been brought down.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To pay legal representative of the late James Goodwin, interest on the amount, $67,260, awarded by the arbitrator on the 28th March, 1883, for work executed under his contract for Grenville Canal enlargement, such interest being calculated from the date of reference to arbitration, 10th September, 1874, to the date of payment, 3rd April, 1883 ..... $34,571 64

Mr. McMULLEN. I think the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Finance promised the other evening to give some further information to the Committee before this item finally passed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the Minister of Customs has some papers to lay upon the Table of the House, or has laid them on the Table. I will explain the circumstances of this case so far as I am able, inasmuch as among the papers is a reference to my department, and an opinion upon the subject of this claim. Of course, it was not in my power to recommend, nor would it have been proper to recommend the payment, but the opinion of my department recommended that the matter be brought to the attention of the House by an item inserted in the Estimates. The circumstances under which that was done, were these: The late Mr. Goodwin had a contract with the Government for the construction of canal works, one condition of which was that for any claims which he had against the Government he should have a right to refer to the chief engineer of canals as sole arbitrator and valuator. That was the form of contract which was in use in the Department of Canals for I do not know how many years, but until a very late period. Under the new practice with regard to claims they are adjudicated upon by the Exchequer Court. Having under that contract a claim for extras, or for a balance due on the contract, the Government of 1874 made a reference to the late Mr. Page as sole arbitrator and valuator. For nine years Mr. Page failed to proceed with the reference. I am not able to state to the House why he failed, because it was at his own option that he did so. For four years the same Government remained in office which had made the reference, and for nearly four years under their successors Mr. Page declined to go on with the reference, alleging his own business engagements as a reason for not doing so, at the same time not declining the reference, and the matter remained in his hand in that way. During that period Mr. Goodwin seemed to me to have been in the position of a suitor who had commenced his action, and who was entitled to be paid interest while the suit was pending on such sums as he might afterwards recover. After the lapse of nine years Mr. Page went on with the reference, and the result was an award against the Government of upwards of $67,000, and there was still a lapse of time after that before the claim was paid. It is during that period and on that amount that the claim for interest was put forward. I was influenced by two considerations a good deal in suggesting that the claim be presented for the consideration of the House. One of them was that during that period he was absolutely deprived of any other remedy; he could not offer a petition of right, a fiat would not have been granted to him, because, in pursuance of his own application, a reference had been made to the arbitrator whom he was entitled to have under the contract. The other consideration was that after the award was made, and when the principal was paid, he demanded payment of the interest as well. Everything, I think, tends to show that there was no interest whatever included in the award. The terms in which the award was made seemed to preclude that, because it was an explicit award for the amount due for work done under his contract. We have further on the fyles a written statement from the gentleman who was then Minister of Railways and Canals, Sir Charles Tupper, who, on the matter being brought to his attention, declared that there was no reference of a claim for interest to Mr. Page, and that Mr. Page was not in any way authorized to take that into consideration. It seemed to me, therefore, that the claim was a fair one, and that Mr. Goodwin should be put in the position of an ordinary litigant who, as I said before, claims interest during the time the suit is pending. I would have come to a different conclusion if I could have found that in any way he was in fault in the delay that occurred. I cannot say that at any period of the delay the fault rested with the Government; it seems to have rested with the arbitrator himself, and there are cases in which we have known that Mr. Page did make considerable delay in references made to him, for reasons connected with his duties and his work.

Mr. LAURIER. The Minister of Customs yesterday placed in my hands the papers connected with this claim, and if I could have found therein proof that when the award was made by Mr. Page, and when the amount was paid to Mr. Goodwin, the latter had taken exception to the award, or had made a claim for interest, that would be a very strong argument in favour of the present claim. Now, these works were performed in 1872-73. The reference to the arbitrator, Mr. Page, which was made by consent of both parties, was made in 1874. Nine years elapsed before an award was made, and I agree with the statement of the Minister of Justice that as long as the reference was in the hands of the arbitrator the claimant was precluded from taking any other course. The award was made in 1883, and the reports which I hold in my hand do not show that at that time James Goodwin fyled any protest, or put in any objection, or pretended that interest should be paid upon his claim. On the contrary, in so far as the papers in my hands show, Mr. Goodwin at that time accepted the money without any protest whatever, and was glad to do so. It is only six years afterwards that a claim was put forward—not by Mr. Goodwin himself, because in the meantime Mr. Goodwin had departed this life, but by his heir, or legatee.

Mr. BOWELL. Is Mr. James Goodwin's letter of 1883 among the papers?

Mr. LAURIER. I find first the petition of James Goodwin of 21st October, 1873, making his claim. Then I find a reference of the claim to Mr. Page dated 10th September, 1874. I find the award on 21st March, 1883. The next paper is a claim of George Goodwin dated 7th February, 1889: and then a report of the Privy Council on the report. In all these papers I do not find any claim from James Goodwin for interest. So far as the papers show, the claim was not made by James Goodwin himself, but by his representative, George Goodwin, as late as 1889.

Mr. BOWELL. The reason I asked the question was, that if the letter to which I refer is not among the papers, it has failed to be copied. The memorandum reads as follows:—On 30th of that month, April, 1883, immediately after the award had been made by Mr. Page, James Goodwin wrote urging that he should be allowed interest, and on 20th July he was informed that it could not be allowed. So the objection that Mr. James Goodwin did not claim interest is not a valid one: at the same time, I do not find fault with the hon. gentleman, as I see the letter is not here.

Mr. LAURIER. If at the time when the award was made James Goodwin immediately presented a claim for interest, that would certainly present the case, whether good or bad, in a different light from that which it now bears, as being the result of an afterthought six years after the award was made.

Mr. MULOCK. Was there any reference in writing?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes: an Order in Council.

Mr. MULOCK. What did it refer to the arbitrator?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It referred the claim.

Mr. MULOCK. The way the case strikes me is this: an Order in Council was passed referring certain claims to an arbitrator, and the award made was a discharge of all those claims so referred. If the order of reference covered all claims against the Government at that time, the award covers interest and everything else. The question wholly depends on what was referred.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It was merely his claim for work done under the contract. I may mention that in the Public Works Act there is a prohibition against arbitrators awarding interest. In the same connection, I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the language of the award itself, as expressing that it covered simply work done under the contract.

Mr. LAURIER. Yes: it is for work done.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the whole matter turns on the order of reference; but it is to be interpreted, of course, by any special legislation. The Act to which the Minister of Justice has referred might affect our decision, because if it did not allow an arbitrator to award interest, no matter what was referred, the Act itself would exempt the claim of interest and that would still remain an outstanding claim.

Mr. BOWELL. I read the order of reference the other day. The order of reference covered all matters in dispute arising out of the contract only for works on the canal; that was for work which had been done at the time of the reference in 1874. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the Public Works Act he will find there a clause preventing any arbitrator awarding interest on any question of dispute between contractors and the department, so that the question of interest could not be referred. That was the law at the time of reference, and is the law now.

Mr. MULOCK. If that were the Act, the interest could not have been adjudicated upon.

Mr. BOWELL. The interest now claimed accrued after the reference was made. The reference was as follows:—

"DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS.

"Whereas James Goodwin, of the City of Ottawa, in the Province of Ontario, contractor, hath entered into a certain contract with the Minister of Public Works of Canada, on the 25th October, 1870, for the works required in and for the enlargement of the channel of the Grenville Canal for lock No. A to the upper entrance of the said canal, and for the construction of locks Nos. 9, 10 and 11 thereof;

"And whereas, on 16th August, 1871, another contract was entered into by and between the parties above named for certain additional works of masonry and excavation required to increase the height and length of the said locks Nos. 9, 10 and 11, and to give an additional length of 3 feet in the lock pits of the canal, as ordered by Parliament at its then last session, and the completion thereof within certain dates therein specified;

"And whereas, on 19th February, 1873, in view of certain great public advantages to be derived therefrom, if the works could be carried on in summer and located so as not to interrupt the free navigation of the canal, a third contract to change the location of the said locks, so as to leave a certain space between the north side of the contemplated lock and the south side of the old or existing locks, was entered into by and between the parties above named;

"And whereas, on 25th October, 1873, the said James Goodwin hath preferred certain claims against Her Majesty's Government of Canada for work done, losses sustained, and disbursements made in connection with the work above mentioned;

"And whereas, on 31st October, 1873, the Minister of Public Works was authorized by an Order of the Governor General in Council to refer the claim preferred by the said James Goodwin to John Page, Esq., Chief Engineer of the Department of Public Works, for his valuation and report;

"And whereas, the Minister of Public Works, deeming it expedient to have all claims and matters connected with the contract aforementioned fully settled and closed, recommended that the whole matter be referred to the sole valuation and arbitrament and award of the said Mr. Page;

"And whereas, an Order of His Excellency the Governor General in Council, bearing date the seventh day of September instant, authorizes the reference of the said claim to the sole valuation, arbitration and award of John Page, Esquire, Chief Engineer of the Department of Public Works of Canada;

"The Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, the Minister of Public Works of Canada, acting on behalf of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, as such Minister, hereby refers to the sole valuation and award of the said John Page all claims made, stated and alleged by the said James Goodwin, against Her Majesty the Queen, for matters arising out of the above-mentioned contracts, and all matters arising thereunder and in respect of such claims, whether made on the part of the claimant or of Her said Majesty.

"And the said Minister of Public Works, under the authority aforesaid, appoints the said John Page to be the said sole arbitrator, and agrees that the valuation, arbitration and award of the said John Page be accepted as final, conclusive and without appeal.

"Dated at Ottawa this 10th day of September, A.D. 1874.

(Sgd.) "A. MACKENZIE,
"Minister of Public Works, Canada.

"Countersigned.
(Sgd.) "F. BRAUN.
"Secretary."

James Goodwin then accepts that reference in writing, which I presume I need not read. Upon that reference, which the Committee will see were all matters in dispute up to that time between the Government of Canada, then represented by the then Minister of Public Works, the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, and James Goodwin; and it was upon that, irrespective of the question of interest, which I have already pointed out he could not under the law adjudicate upon, that the award was made. This claim is for the interest from the time that he made the claim up to the time the award was made, and from which time the money was withheld through no fault of his. Four years of it was during the time hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and four years during the time the Conservative Government were in power, so that I suppose so far as the pushing—if I may use that expression—of the chief engineer to a conclusion as to the amount of money that should be awarded, is concerned, the blame, if blame there is, rests upon one party just as much as on the other.

Mr. LANDERKIN. When was the award made?

Mr. BOWELL. In 1883. The question arises whether Mr. Goodwin is not entitled to interest since the award was made; but, however, that is not claimed here, nor do I suppose that he intends making a claim for that.

Mr. McMULLEN. There are one or two objectionable features in regard to this claim. In the first place it should not have been left over for so many years, and in the second place it is a claim that has arisen between Mr. James Goodwin and Sir Hector Langevin, who was Minister of Public Works. The past history of this country teaches us that this James Goodwin was an active leader in getting up the testimonial to Sir Hector Langevin, and was one of the largest subscribers in getting up that testimonial.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This was in the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. BOWELL. And was not under the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Goodwin took an active part in getting up that testimonial. We do not know whether the present move is in order to make up to his heirs and relations some compensation for the active part he took or not, but it is wrong that a claim of this kind should be allowed to lie over for nearly nine years, and that then interest should be allowed from the time of the reference to the time the award was made. It is wrong that such claims should be left over, for they carry with them a very suspicious surrounding. I hope this is the last of this kind of claims we will have before Parliament.

Mr. BOWELL. I agree in the hope expressed by the member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen), but it is a very great pity that we cannot deal with a question of this kind on its merits. Whether or not Mr. Goodwin had anything to do with the testimonial to Sir Hector Langevin I do not know, but I do know that to the testimonial presented to the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie Mr. Goodwin contributed $1,000, and I should be sorry to say that either before he left office or afterwards, that in any way influenced the mind of the late Premier of this country. I know that that testimonial was contributed to by a number of Conservatives, because of their high appreciation of Mr. Mackenzie's character, and their knowledge that the hon. gentleman had ruined his health and was in a pecuniary position that justified them at the time in subscribing whatever they thought proper in order to compensate him, or as a reward for his faithful services to the country. It was a tribute from those who believed in him, as well as from those who did not agree in his political views. Believing the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie to be a hard-worked man who ruined his health in the service of his country, and a man who might have been better in a pecuniary standpoint in his private business if he had devoted himself to his private affairs, they freely contributed to this testimonial. I always opposed that hon. gentleman as bitterly as any one in this House, and I have attributed to him, politically, perhaps as many improprieties as any one possibly could, but I do not wish to be understood as even insinuating in the remotest degree that that testimonial which was presented, I believe after he left office, could, by any possibility, have any effect upon him, even had he returned to power afterwards. I trust it will be a long time before I impute any such motive to that hon. gentleman. I merely mention this to enter my protest against this constant hurling across the floor of the House of improper motives against members on this side, and more particularly against Ministers, in everything they do, be it of an important or insignificant character. I object most strongly to this practice. If there are any charges that can be brought against the Government, let them be made fairly, openly and honestly. But to suppose that Sir Hector Langevin, who was not in this department at all, or to insinuate that the Government were actuated by the motives that have been attributed to them, is a charge which I think the hon. gentleman upon reflection will see is unworthy of him, and the sooner these motives which are constantly attributed by our opponents are dropped, the better it will be for the dignity of this House and for the public men of Canada.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman has spoken of matters of which he has the advantage of some of us, because he has just made a statement in regard to the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), of which I was not aware.

Mr. BOWELL. I read it in the newspapers.

Mr. LAURIER. I hope the hon. gentleman does not take everything he reads in the newspapers as a fact which he ought to assert on the floor of this House.

Mr. BOWELL. I saw the name amongst the subscribers; that is what I mean.

Mr. LAURIER. He will all the more hesitate to believe what is published in newspapers, because he is connected with the press himself.

Mr. BOWELL. No; I am not.

Mr. LAURIER. Well, you were.

Mr. BOWELL. And I am not ashamed of it.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman must admit that there is a difference between the case cited by the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) and the case he cites. The hon. gentleman knows himself that he has voted a resolution only some weeks ago condemning the receipt of testimonials by Ministers who are in a position to deal with contractors; but he must admit that there is quite a difference between that case which he condemns and the other case which he does not condemn, and which no one will condemn—that is, when a man who has sacrificed his life to the public service and is at last ruined in fortune and in health and out of office when he can give no favour, no one can find fault, if the friends of that man who has given everything he had in life to the service of the country come to help him in that way. That is a very different position. I do not say that the department in this matter has been influenced by this or that consideration. We have no evidence of that; but the hon. gentleman will himself admit, I am sure, that it is not good government that claims should be resuscitated six or seven years after they have been refused. If I understood the hon. gentleman aright, he said that after the award had been made Mr. Goodwin put in a claim for interest, and that the department had told him that he was not entitled to interest, and refused his claim. The hon. gentleman must admit that if the claimant was not satisfied with the answer of the Railway Department at that time his remedy was either to apply for a petition of right or to appeal to the Minister of Justice for a decision; but after he had accepted as final the answer then given by the department that he was not entitled to the interest, it seems to me that when he renews his demand six or seven years afterwards it should not be allowed.

Mr. BOWELL. So far as papers show, while Mr. Goodwin was alive he never accepted the award as final; he always claimed the interest, and the hon. gentleman knows that when a man makes a claim he never takes "no" for an answer, but keeps at it continually. When the matter was fully investigated, and the Minister of Justice came to the conclusion that he could collect this claim in the Exchequer Court, we considered it much better that we should recognize the claim. I desire to say that the particular reason why I spoke of the matter to which I called attention was to show that I did not know that Mr. Goodwin had anything to do with getting up the testimonial referred to. It is questionable whether he was alive at that time, or whether it was not the younger man who was meant. But the Committee should bear in mind that this matter did not belong to Sir Hector Langevin's department. He never was the Minister of Railways and Canals, and he could not have been actuated by the feelings attributed to him.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot allow this matter to pass without saying a few words in reply to the hon. Minister of Customs. With regard to the testimonial presented to the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, he led this House, and no doubt intended to lead the country, to suppose that that presentation was during the ministerial life of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BOWELL. I stated distinctly and positively that it was after he had left office. I object to having language put into my mouth.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman did not make the statement so as to show clearly that it was after the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie had ceased to be a Minister of the Crown that the presentation was made.

Mr. BOWELL. I said so distinctly.

Mr. McMULLEN. I did not hear the hon. gentleman say so. If he did, I am quite willing to accept his statement. But it is one thing for a man to accept a testimonial after he has ceased to be a Minister of the Crown and has retired to private life, with his health so seriously injured as to be virtually prevented for the remainder of his days from taking an active part in public affairs, and quite a different thing for a man to accept a testimonial while he is a Minister of the Crown, and continues to be a Minister of the Crown until a few days ago, when he was removed. I do not think the cases are parallel, and it was not becoming in the Minister of Customs, in the absence of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), to have a prod at him on this occasion.

Mr. BOWELL. I repudiate that. I had no thought of it.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman is always willing to take advantage of any little technicality of that kind; it is usual with him. He can adopt that course as often as he chooses, but he will find that he will only suffer instead of benefit by that sort of tactics. Mr. Goodwin undoubtedly took an active part, not only in subscribing, but in securing subscriptions and presenting the testimonial to Sir Hector Langevin while he was a Minister. That is a different thing altogether from presenting a testimonial to a man after he has retired from official life.

Resolution reported.

CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Miscellaneous Justice..... $12,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What decision has been arrived at with respect to the payment to be made to Mr. Geoffrion?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No decision has been come to.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought that matter was under consideration, and that the Minister intended to state before concurrence the decision.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I did not understand that, or I would have pressed the matter. Nothing but the hurry of work has prevented my bringing it before Council and having it decided. I think I may say it will be paid.

Winnipeg General Hospital..... $3,178.60

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this for the benefit of immigrants solely, or for what purpose is it asked?

Mr. FOSTER. This has been granted for many years. It is an amount granted to aid these two hospitals for persons who come from outside of Manitoba. The grant arose at first from the idea that some of the immigrants going in there would have to be taken care of, but the expenditure has been overrunning the estimate. The whole expenditure is subject to revision by the department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is for the benefit of persons outside of Manitoba who are not perfectly chargeable to the Manitoba hospitals?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Rideau Canal—Bridge at Merrickville . $7,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this a new work, or is it replacing an old one?

Mr. BOWELL. It is replacing an old one which has fallen down. It is a little more expensive than it otherwise would be because they have straightened the approaches to it, which were circuitous. The same reasons apply to the next item, which is a very expensive bridge, and which arises from the fact that the construction of the canal there is extended over the drowned lands on either side, and it is proposed to make it a permanent work.

Government Printing Office—Fencing.. $1,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost of this Printing Bureau up to date—I mean the building itself?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot give you the total. My book has simply explanations for this item.

British Columbia—Victoria military buildings, including Macaulay Point Battery..... $9,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not see the Minister of War here; perhaps his colleagues could tell me with what kind of arms this battery is intended to be equipped?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot tell at the moment. I will make a note of it and answer to-morrow.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a considerable reason for causing a point like that to be protected, I am aware; but it is an utter waste of public money if you are going to put in nowadays the worn-out and obsolete ordnance that was good enough a few years ago.

Mr. FOSTER. It strikes me the Imperial Government furnishes the guns.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If they are to be of any use at all for such purposes, they must be good weapons; otherwise the money is much worse than wasted.

Mr. FOSTER. I imagine that will be looked after.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am aware how it has been looked after on other occasions, and I am aware that the public money has been made use of on these very works with very little benefit.

Mr. FOSTER. I will have the information for my hon. friend to-morrow.

Public Works—Prince Edward Island.. $8,325

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think I must trouble the Minister of Finance for a statement giving separately the constituencies in which these various votes appear.

Mr. FOSTER. I made a note of them last night and I find that in Nova Scotia there were about eight that belonged to constituencies represented by the Opposition.

Mr. LAURIER. What about Prince Edward Island?

Mr. FOSTER. That has about the same proportion.

Mr. LAURIER. I congratulate you.

To pay Dr. Bergin balance of salary and allowances whilst Surgeon-General in 1885.....$775

Mr. LAURIER. I submit again that there is no justification whatever for this vote. The reason given for it last evening was that Dr. Bergin was to be paid according to the Queen's Regulations, as he had not been so paid after the close of the rebellion. The Minister of Militia stated in answer to a question put by me last evening that the other officers were not paid according to the Queen's Regulations. I am at a loss to know why the Surgeon General should be more favoured than the other officers. If Dr. Bergin is paid according to one rule, there is no reason why the same rule should not be extended to the officers who served in the field; in fact, there is more reason why it should be extended to them. Under such circumstances I must protest against this item.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the case be put to the hon. gentleman as it stands, I think he will see that his protest ought not to be raised against this item. The law of the country fixes the pay of an officer in the active militia, when on duty for active service, at that provided by the Queen's Regulations. The Surgeon General received his appointment and discharged all his duties under that state of the law: and, after his services were completed, an Order in Council was passed providing that he should receive a smaller sum; but that he never acquiesced in or accepted in any way. The question simply is whether he has not an absolute right by law to receive these moneys. I was under the impression that there were no others to whom the same principle applies. It may be that there are some, and it may be that they engaged themselves under special circumstances; but there was no defence against the view that Dr. Bergin was entitled to be paid the salary provided for by the Queen's Regulations. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that, whether the remuneration is large or small, it is only fair that we should pay it, and not leave ourselves open to be sued for this small balance of pay.

Mr. MULOCK. If Dr. Bergin has legal rights, I suppose no person would wish to deprive him of them. But last night we were told that an Order in Council was passed by which Dr. Bergin was paid less than he was entitled to under the Queen's Regulations. The Minister of Militia, who was very economical of explanations, I think did admit that the officers who took the field were paid a lesser sum than they were entitled to by the Queen's Regulations, though they had been paid at a rate provided by other regulations. If Dr. Bergin is entitled to be paid this extra amount under the Queen's Regulations, are not all the other officers equally entitled?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think they were all so paid. At any rate, there cannot be more than two or three exceptions.

Mr. MULOCK. Of course, if the Minister of Militia were here, he would give some explanations. If the officers who served in the field have not been paid according to the Queen's Regulations, they should be included in this provision equally with the Surgeon General.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know anyone who was not paid under the Queen's Regulations other than General Laurie, who did not receive the pay of a general while on service in the North-West, for the reason that he volunteered his services in the rebellion even if he should receive no pay at all. That was an understanding between the general himself and the department. I know of no other case, and I think the case of General Laurie must have been the one to which the Minister of Militia had reference. The Queen's Regulations are the law of the land, and men who serve are legally entitled to such pay as those regulations provide for. I have been on active service two or three times myself, and those who are called to go on active service do so under the law.

Mr. LAURIER. I am surprised that Dr. Bergin was not treated in that manner earlier.

Mr. TYRWHITT. Speaking for myself and the officers of my force generally, I may say that we were more than satisfied with our pay. I never met an officer of the field force who expressed dissatisfaction with his pay; and when Parliament voted an indemnity in addition, we felt that we were most magnanimously dealt with. But I regret to say that there were officers in the field force who were not dealt with in the magnanimous way that the Surgeon General has been. I refer especially to General Strange and General Laurie, whose pay was put down to that of colonels, and who were dealt with in a very mean way. Why the Surgeon General should be selected to be paid an indemnity out of all proportion to the indemnities paid other men I cannot conceive. I believe that, in addition to the $1,500 he received at that time as a member of Parliament, he received in the neighbourhood of $2,500, and I am told he is not yet satisfied. I can only hope that this House may yet see that it is their duty, when dealing out what we are told is law to the Surgeon General, to deal simple, even-handed justice to General Strange and General Laurie, who, in my humble opinion, were not dealt with as they should have been.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand the Minister of Justice to say that Dr. Bergin was the only person entitled to be paid according to the Queen's Regulations?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He is the only person I know of who was, unless the two cases mentioned by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt).

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the answer which the Minister of Militia gave last night. When asked if the colonels and other officers were paid according to the Queen's Regulations, he replied: "No, they were paid according to the Order in Council of the 29th October, 1885." If the answer given by the Minister of War be right, and only Dr. Bergin has been paid according to the Queen's Regulations, the other officers who are not will undoubtedly feel that they are hardly treated and will claim that they should be paid on the same footing.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not know the reason for the difference of opinion, but I spoke from the fact that the Order in Council, which undertook to fix Dr. Bergin's pay at less than the amount allowed by the Queen's Regulations, included one or two others only—the two generals, I think, who have been mentioned just now. I was under the impression they were the only exceptions from these regulations.

Mr. LAURIER. With all deference to the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Militia should be the better authority.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. As to questions of fact.

Mr. LAURIER. I wanted to know if that was to bring Dr. Bergin in the same category as the others, and the Minister of Militia said that the others were not paid according to the Queen's Regulations but under Order in Council. Under the circumstances it seemed to me there was no reason at all why Dr. Bergin should be given a preference over the others.

Item concurred in on division.

WAYS AND MEANS.

House resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER moved:

Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty, on account of certain expenses of the public service, for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1892, the sum of $9,404,941.21 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolution read the first and the second time, and concurred in.

SUPPLY BILL.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 177) to grant to Her Majesty certain sums of money required to defray certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 30th June, 1892, and for other purposes relating to the public service.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first, second and third times and passed.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved first reading of Bill (No. 178) further to amend the Acts respecting the North-West Territories. He said: I stated yesterday we found after the census returns came in, that the proportions of the districts were not as they would have been if we had had the returns when we made the electoral districts. On consultation with the members from that western country, we concluded the most satisfactory way would be to reduce the Saskatchewan district to five members instead of six, that would give Assiniboia twelve and Saskatchewan and Alberta eight. That was the nearest we could come to, and the only way we found to bring this about was by a short Bill in the Senate. Of course, if the House has no objection, I would like to put that through.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that when the House adjourns it stands adjourned until 11 a. m. to-morrow morning.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. I would like to know what the programme is for to-morrow. We have the trade address from the Senate?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. Then we have the Bill respecting frauds upon the Government.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. Then what will you do with the Bill respecting dead bodies from the Senate?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Let the dead bury their dead.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That Bill is an amendment to the criminal law, and, as both Houses have abstained this session from passing amendments to the criminal law in order to take up the general Act next year, in that view I would prefer not to go on with that Bill, and, of course, it goes without saying, that the Act respecting the criminal law will not be taken up to-morrow. The Committee on Printing were good enough to have a large number of copies of that Bill distributed for the consideration of members before next session. The Bill with regard to the counting of time and the Bill with regard to the militia and defence it was understood would not be proceeded with this session. They were introduced in order to call public attention to them.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Militia is present now, so that the hon. member for South Oxford might ask him the question he desired to have an answer to before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. All I desired to know was what kind of armament is to be put at this Victoria point.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is almost impossible to answer the hon. gentleman's question at present, but the information we have is that these batteries will be armed by the Imperial Government, and, under an Order in Council and an agreement entered into between the Imperial Government and the Canadian Government, the Canadian Government undertake to perform certain defensive works, and the Imperial Government undertake to provide certain armaments for the forts which the Canadian Government are to build. They will be the most improved armaments, because the Imperial Government reserved that for itself in order to have the very best kind of armament.

Motion agreed to: and House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 30th September, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication:—

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 29th September, 1891.

SIR,—I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber to prorogue the Session of the Dominion Parliament on Wednesday the 30th instant, at 3.30 o'clock.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
CHARLES COLVILLE, Major,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Honourable,
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

VACANCY IN QUEBEC WEST.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have issued my Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for a new Writ of election for the Electoral District of Quebec West, to fill the vacancy caused by the expulsion of Thomas McGreevy, Esq.

Mr. CASEY. I would like to ask the Government whether they intended to bring on the Quebec West election before the lists are revised, or whether they will postpone it, as I understand has been agreed, until after that revision?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The matter has not been considered by the Government, but I think we would prefer to delay the election until the revision of the list is completed.

Mr. LAURIER. I had understood that the matter had been arranged or agreed to by both parties, that no election would be held under the old list.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Of course I am not free to give any pledge.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH OTHER COUNTRIES.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg to move that the House do concur in the following Address of the Senate to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen in respect of certain important matters affecting its trade relations with the Empire, and with foreign nations, after filling up the blank with the words "and House of Commons"; and amending the same by striking out the words "as with any other nation in respect of which such provisions are now in force":—

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada, in Parliament assembled, humbly request that Your Majesty may be graciously pleased to take into consideration the position of Canada in respect of certain important matters affecting its trade relations with the Empire, and with foreign nations.

Your memorialists desire in the first place, to draw attention to certains stipulations in the existing treaties with Belgium and with the German Zollverein, ordinarily referred to as the "most favoured nations" clauses, which are extended to other countries whose commercial treaties with Great Britain contain a "most favoured nation" clause, and which apply to British colonies. By Art. XV of the Treaty with Belgium, entered into in 1862, Canada is compelled to admit all articles, the produce or manufacture of Belgium, at the same or at no higher rate of duty than is imposed upon similar articles of British origin. And in the treaty with the German Zollverein, entered into in 1865, it is stipulated that the produce of those states shall not be subject to any higher or other import duties than the produce of the United Kingdom or any other country of the like kind: and that the exports to those states shall not be subject to any higher duties than exports to the United Kingdom.

Your memorialists consider that these provisions in treaties with foreign powers are incompatible with the rights and powers subsequently conferred by the British North America Act upon the Parliament of Canada, for the regulation of the trade and commerce of the Dominion: and that their continuance in force tends to produce complications and embarrassments in such an empire as that under the rule of Your Majesty, wherein the self-governing colonies are recognized as possessing the right to define their respective fiscal relations to all foreign nations, to the mother country, and to each other.

Your memorialists further believe, that in view of the foreign fiscal policy of increasingly protective and discriminative duties, it is clearly adverse to the interests of the United Kingdom, and of each and all of its possessions, that the Parliament of the United Kingdom, or of any of Your Majesty's self-governing colonies, should be thus restricted in the power of adopting such modifications of its tariff arrangements as may be required for the promotion of its trade, or for its defence against aggressive or injurious measures of foreign policy.

Your memorialists desire also to point out that the immense resources of the Dominion in its facilities for the growth of food materials, its minerals, its fisheries, and its lumber, require for their profitable development the largest practicable extension of its markets, more especially in countries whose native supply of such productions is limited, while its rapidly developing manufacturing industries demand large and increasing supplies of raw material, to be mainly supplied by countries which are extensive consumers of the productions of Canada. Your memorialists believe that among the countries with which such an interchange of traffic takes place, the British Empire holds the highest rank in amount, and from its diversity of climate and productions affords the widest prospect of rapid and practically limitless increase, while the trade of the Dominion with the United States is second only to that with the British Empire, and its development and extension are of great importance to us; though, from the similarity of most of the products of the two countries, it is probably not susceptible of so great an expansion as might be effected in the interchange of traffic with the Empire.

Your memorialists earnestly desire to foster and extend the trade of the Dominion with the Empire, with its great neighbour, the United States, and with other countries throughout the world, wherever opportunity offers; and believe that by mutual concessions, and the adoption of measures for the rearrangement of trade relations between the various portions of the British Empire, and between the Empire and foreign nations, important and lasting beneficial results may be attained, and that to the way of the attainment of these great objects, the continuation of the restrictions imposed upon Canada and other portions of the Empire by the so-called favoured nations clause creates an unnecessary and unjustifiable obstruction.

The Senate and House of Commons therefore humbly request Your Majesty to take such steps as may be necessary to denounce and terminate the effect of the provisions referred to, as well in the treaties with the German Zollverein, and with the Kingdom of Belgium, as with any other nation, in respect of which such provisions are now in force.

I do not propose to discuss this at any length, but to make just a simple statement as to why it is proposed to pass this Address. We find in the two treaties, one with Belgium and the other with the Zollverein, that there are certain clauses generally known as the most favoured nation clauses, which exist to the present day, and which are binding upon Great Britain and her colonies. The treaty with Belgium was framed on the 23rd July, 1862, and the article to which I refer in that treaty reads as follows:—

"Article 7. Articles the produce or manufacture of Belgium shall not be subject in the British colonies to other or higher duties than those which are, or may be, imposed upon similar articles of British origin."

The article in the treaty with the Zollverein of 1865, is Article 7, which reads as follows:—

"The stipulations of the preceding articles I to VI shall also be applied to the colonies and foreign possessions of Her Britannic Majesty. In those colonies and possessions the produce of the states of the Zollverein shall not be subject to any higher or other import duties than the produce of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or any other country of the like kind; nor shall the exportations from those colonies or possessions to the Zollverein be subject to any higher or other duties than the exportations to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland."

These two clauses are, as I have said, in force at this time, and are to remain in force until one or other of the great parties interested give certain notice of abrogation. These clauses, or their substance, have been extended to, or incorporated in, treaties with other nations, to the number of some twenty or more. The effects of these, of course, were, in the first place, to give Great Britain certain advantages in the markets of Belgium and of the states of the Zollverein in return for certain advantages which Great Britain gave to those several states. But the effects of those treaties were not confined to the principal signatory powers. The colonies of Great Britain and the possessions of these other states were included as well, so that so far as Canada, for instance, is concerned, these clauses have a binding effect upon us. Over and above the advantages that may accrue to us from the status given to us in trade with Belgium and the Zollverein, there may be disadvantages. These, in short, debar Canada from making a treaty with any other power of like kind with Great Britain, which shall place their articles on more favourable terms than at present are enjoyed by those countries—Belgium and the German states of the Zollverein, by the present treaty. So that, if with any other country Canada with the consent of Great Britain makes a reciprocity treaty or a preferential arrangement for trade, we shall be obliged by these clauses to give to the German states of the Zollverein the same deductions, differentiations or advantages we give to this third power. It also debars any preferential arrangement for trade between Canada and the colonies and Great Britain, which would not admit at the same time to those preferential advantages the trade of Belgium and of the Zollverein, particularly so with respect to the Zollverein. It would be a question, and such a question has been to a certain extent debated in this House, as to how far a reciprocity treaty where mutual advantages are given by both sides, a quid pro quo is affected by these clauses. Authorities differ on this point, and the positions of the countries differ. The United States contend that a reciprocity treaty does not fall under the most favoured nation clause. However, we have had a practical instance of late in the case of the Spanish American Treaty, in regard to which it has been assented to by both Great Britain and Spain that the most favoured nation arrangement in the Convention of 1886 does hold even as against the Spanish American reciprocity arrangement. As the House has been informed by papers placed before it, up to the time of the termination of that convention our Canadian products go on the most favoured nation footing, that is, they are given equal advantages to those gained by the products of the United States under the arrangement made by the United States with Spain.

Mr. CASEY. Has the hon. gentleman any information that this is being practically carried out?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. The papers have been laid on the Table; and cargoes have since gone in under the arrangement. The attention of Canada was directed years ago towards this matter, and as early as 1881 I find an Order in Council was passed, on 26th March of that year, which set out the position of Canada as regards these clauses, and Sir Alexander Galt, who was at that time High Commissioner in London, brought the substance of the Order in Council before the attention of the British Government, and they in their turn communicated with the Governments of Belgium and Germany. But the answer in each case was against the abrogation of these clauses as regards Canada; the answer of Belgium being, in fact, that one article could not be denounced without denouncing the whole treaty; the reply of the German states being that it would not be wise to revise this article without a general revision of the treaty, for which, in their opinion, there was no good reason adduced. We did, however, gain something cotemporary with, and subsequent to, our protest in this matter, and what we gained may be summarized in this way: Canada received the option of having herself included in any treaty made by Great Britain with any foreign power in which the most favoured nation clause was incorporated; and from that time on we have not been included in any treaties without having been given an option of having our name withdrawn. And we have gained something still further, that on the inception of any treaty we are informed of the fact, and asked if we have any representations to make in regard to being included or not in the proposed treaty with that power. That was done in the case of Egypt, not very long ago. We have also gained the recognition, so far as that goes, of our High Commissioner being given co-ordinate power with the British Minister resident at a foreign state, to negotiate a treaty, subject, of course, to the approval and sanction of the Queen. The matter also aroused attention in Great Britain itself, and as early as 1888, in response to an address of the House of Commons, a return was brought down showing all the treaties in which preferential arrangements in commerce and the most favoured nation clause were embodied, and a certain amount of discussion took place in the House. In 1890 an influential committee was appointed by the Board of Trade, to whom was referred the question of the expiry of commercial treaties, and that committee has, I think, made its first report to the Government. Coterminous with that the Canadian Government passed another Order in Council reiterating our previous position, and we communicated that to Great Britain, namely, the desirability, in our opinion, of these clauses being abrogated so far as the colonies were concerned. That is, in brief, a statement of the matter as it is. No one doubts but that the existence of these clauses forms obstructions in the way of Canada's treament of her own fiscal and commercial arrangements, obstructions which, I think, there will be no two opinions in this House, ought to be removed, if it possibly can be done; and the object of this Address is to bring the matter in this way directly to the attention of the British Government and to strengthen their hands, if this be needed, in an attempt to get rid and free from these restrictive clauses. They interfere with the rights and privileges which have been conferred on us by the constitution. There is no need for me to argue that question. They impede our efforts towards the extending of our commercial relations with outside countries, inasmuch as whatever arrangements we may make to get favourable terms from those outside countries, must also equally apply to those countries to which I refer. Then, again, as I stated before, they preclude the possibility of any arrangement being made between Great Britain and her colonies looking to more favourable trade relations between Great Britain and Canada and her colonies. It does not need that I should call the attention of hon. members of the House who keenly and carefully observe the trend of events in the commercial world to the fact that, at the present time, in Europe as well as in America, events are transpiring which may have very great results in a commercial point of view, and that there is observable a tendency which may produce very great changes in the commercial relations of Great Britain and the different states of Europe, as well as wider relations, in a short period of time. Different European states are now negotiating with respect to the formation of treaties of commerce between themselves, which may very materially affect the trade of Great Britain with respect to those countries. It is well known that France has adopted the policy of denouncing treaties of commerce which exist between herself and other countries as rapidly as they may be, and adopting the policy of controlling her commerce and trade by legislative enactments simply. It is not a matter of impossibility that the effect of these divers actions upon Great Britain may be to accelerate very much that which already is in progress, a direction of the thought and feeling of the people as to future trade possibilities, as to the future of the commerce of the whole Empire, which may have the effect at no distant period of inducing more thought and more attention being given towards the betterment of the commercial relation between Great Britain and her various colonies. It is not necessary for me to enter into the possibility or probability of that. I simply mention it so far as to point an argument for the passage of this Address: that, if sooner or later such a state of things is brought about, and a dominant sentiment is created in the colonies and in Great Britain which would be favourable to such an arrangement, obstacles stand now directly in their way, and for our own interests, and these larger interests, if at any future time they become possible, it is well we should use what influence we have to have these obstacles and restrictive clauses done away with, so far as Canada is concerned. Of course, so far as the Empire is concerned, the Government and Legislature of Great Britain will safeguard their own interests as best becomes them.

Mr. LAURIER. I need not tell the House that on this side we are in complete sympathy and accord with the prayer of this petition. I am sorry to say, however, that so far as the argument and the comments upon the prayer are founded there must be some difference of opinion, and I must express my regret that a matter of this importance should have been kept to the very last hours of the session, when it is impossible to give it the attention which its importance demands. I had hoped that, seeing the notice of this Address in the other branch of the Legislature, that at some future time, within a reasonable period of the session, the matter would have been brought before us, so that ample opportunity would have been given to discuss it thoroughly and fully. The Minister of Finance himself stated at the opening of his remarks that he would not—and I infer he could not—give to the subject that full consideration to which it is entitled. However, as I have said, with the prayer of the petition we are in complete sympathy with the Government, and I am glad to see that the Government is more and more coming to the conclusion that the commercial interests of the mother land and the commercial interests of Canada—I might include the other colonies—are at total variance. Great Britain has industrial, commercial, and business interests of her own; Canada has her interests peculiar to herself also, and the principle is more and more recognized that it is impossible to properly regulate those interests by uniform fiscal legislation. Great Britain has her own system of legislation and Canada has her own, and the Government of Great Britain has always recognized that fact, but the Government so far has not been able to recognize the fact that not only the internal policy should be left to Canada, but that the policy as well, in so far as it relates to our relations with other nations, should also be left to the Parliament of Canada. The proper and logical effect of this Address which it is now asked Parliament to present to Her Majesty, would be to obtain the power long maintained upon this side of the House, that Canada should make her own treaties and should not be bound by commercial treaties negotiated by the Government of Great Britain which affect the interests of Canada. At all events it is conceded in this Address that the policy of the two countries is not identical not only in their internal aspect but in the aspect of their relations to other countries. This principle is admitted in the Address, and the logical conclusion will be that Canada should have power to negotiate her own treaties. The Opposition in this House in 1882 and 1889 asserted that policy, and if this matter had been brought before us earlier in this Session we would have asserted it again; but I may say at once, as we are in the last hours of this session, that, in the earliest hours of the next session, my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will take occasion to present again that policy and to assert it once more, with better results I hope than we have attained hitherto; because the Government is only and by slow degrees coming to the full truth of the principle in this matter. I said a moment ago that the truth is here recognized, that the Parliament of Great Britain and the Parliament of Canada should have power to regulate the interests of each country. The hon. gentleman has now asked this House to petition Her Majesty to relieve us from the effect of two particular treaties—the treaty with Belgium and with the German Zollverein—the one passed in 1862 and the other in 1865. Lord Salisbury, speaking some time ago upon this subject, stated that he was at a loss to understand why the Government of Lord Palmerston should have included the colonies in these treaties. I have no doubt that the Government of Lord Palmerston at that time was under the impression that it was conferring a favour on the colonies when it included them within the disposition of this treaty; and this once more shows what I said a moment ago, that the interests of the one country and the interests of the other are at total variance. It is found that this treaty is satisfactory to the motherland, as of course all such treaties which provide for the extension of trade are satisfactory and for the advantage of the country which negotiates them. The British Government are satisfied with that; but what is to the advantage of the mother country has proved to be an injury to the colonies, or, at least, to Canada; and that is the reason why Canada has been sensible—hitherto, however, without any successful result—that she should be relieved from the effect of these treaties. In 1881, we asked for the first time to be relieved from the effect of these treaties. Ten years have passed since that time and with every disposition, I am sure, on the part of the British Government to help Canada, not to injure Canada, nothing has come out of these efforts. What is the reason? The reason is that a treaty is satisfactory to England and in order to relieve Canada from the injury done by that treaty, England would have to denounce the whole treaty and thereby to encounter the loss which would follow. Having to choose, therefore, either to sacrifice the interests of Canada or the interests of Great Britain, Great Britain has preferred to keep the treaty as a whole, to maintain the advantage to herself, and at the same time to the injury of the colonies. I do not blame the British Government for so acting, because after all in these matters the treaty is advantageous to them although it is injurious to us, and it shows us once more that Great Britain will not hesitate to do her own business even to the detriment of the colonies. Upon another question we have been reproached that our policy, if it were adopted, would interfere with British trade. Our answer to this was: Our duty is to Canada and not to England, just in the same manner as the British Government teaches this Government that the first duty of the British Government is to England and not to Canada. And so I insist, Mr. Speaker, that in all these matters it is for any self-governing country to look to its own interests first, last and always. It is for this reason that I find in this very Address a vindication of the policy which we have advocated, and a refutation of the objections which have been urged against that policy. Now, in this Address there are statements which I think are not altogether in accordance with the truth of history. For instance, the third paragraph says:

"Your memorialists consider that these provisions in treaties with foreign powers are incompatible with the rights and powers conferred by the British North America Act upon the Parliament of Canada for the regulation of the trade and commerce of the Dominion."

I agree that these provisions in foreign treaties are incompatible with our rights and powers, delegated to us, not at Confederation, but prior to Confederation, when the colonies of British North America were granted self-government. Confederation did not give us any new constitutional powers which we had not before; Confederation simply consolidated together the self-governing colonies. So far, it seems to me, the language of the Address is not historically accurate. There are a few words at the end of this paragraph to which I give my very hearty concurrence:

"And that their continuance in force tends to produce complications and embarrassments in such an Empire as that under the rule of Your Majesty, wherein the self-governing colonies are recognized as possessing the right to define their respective fiscal relations to all foreign nations, to the mother country, and to each other."

It was only three or four days ago that my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) affirmed that very principle—that every colony had the right to define its own fiscal policy, not only as regards itself, but as regards the motherland, foreign countries and other colonies as well. My hon. friend insisted a few moments ago that the Government of Canada, in preventing the Colony of Newfoundland from negotiating a treaty which suited that colony, had violated this very principle; and the only way to keep together this Empire is to allow every part which has been granted self-governing powers to regulate not only its own fiscal policy but its foreign relations with other countries and other colonies. The next paragraph is one to which I would especially call the attention of the Government, because it seems to me that on consideration it will not be possible to accept it as it is. It reads as follows:—

"Your memorialists further believe, that in view of the foreign fiscal policy of increasingly protective and discriminative duties, it is clearly adverse to the interests of the United Kingdom, and of each and all of its possessions, that the Parliament of the United Kingdom, or of any of Your Majesty's self-governing colonies, should be thus restricted in the power of adopting such modifications of its tariff arrangements as may be required for the promotion of its trade, or for its defence against aggressive or injurious measures of foreign policy."

The meaning of this, as it is here expressed, is that it is not judicious at the present time for the Parliament of Great Britain, or for the Parliament of any colony to bind itself by treaty, because it may afterwards find itself hampered in repulsing aggressive or injurious measures on the part of foreign countries. It seems to me that the Government could not admit that. It seems to me that the language here is not felicitous, because I do not suppose that the Government intend to say that it would not be advisable for the Government of Great Britain to enter into commercial treaties with other nations. This I do not understand to be the meaning of the Government. If it were I would strongly object to it. I cannot assume that this is what is meant—that we should advise the Government of Great Britain not to enter into any treaty at all, because that Government might afterwards find itself hampered in its relations with other nations. I object to our giving any advice to the Government or Parliament of Great Britain. Let the Parliament of Great Britain attend to the business of Great Britain as the Parliament of Canada will attend to the business of Canada. Therefore, I would move in amendment to this clause that the following words be struck out: "in view of the foreign fiscal policy of increasing the protective and discriminating duties:" and the words "of the United Kingdon and of each and all of its possessions that the Parliament of the United Kingdom or" and the words "or for its defence against aggressive or injurious measures of foreign policy." The paragraph would then read as follows:—

Your memorialists further believe that it is clearly adverse to the interests of any of Your Majesty's self-governing colonies that it should be thus restricted in the power of adopting such modifications of its tariff arrangement as may be required for the promotion of its trade.

The object of this Address is to ask the British Government to relieve us of the effects of two treaties—the Belgian Treaty and the German Treaty. I submit that it would be more conducive to the object in view to limit ourselves strictly to the arguments necessary to attain that object. Then, there is in this Address a very mild suggestion indeed of something in the direction of the purposes of the United Empire Trade League. I am not disposed to enter into this branch of the subject. I am willing to consider that question whenever it is fairly and frankly brought forward for discussion in the House. I have only this to say at this moment, that any attempt to establish a commercial policy upon allegiance, upon sentiment, seems to me to be necessarily fraught with ill results. Commercial policy can be founded alone upon interest, upon profit. If you attempt to build up a trade simply on sentiment, you are sure to be met with failure. Then, I call the attention of the Government to the following words in the last paragraph but one:—

"Your memorialists believe that by mutual concessions, and the adoption of measures for the re-arrangement of trade relations between the various portions of the British Empire, and between the Empire and foreign nations, important and lasting beneficial results may be attained."

That is a suggestion of something in the minds of the Government. I submit that the Government have no right to make suggestions of this kind unless they are prepared to say what they mean. What measures are here referred to? Are the Government prepared to throw out such a vague suggestion without explaining what kind of trade relations they want established between the various portions of the British Empire and between the Empire and foreign nations? These words mean that the trade relations which we have at the present time with the motherland might be improved. I do not say that they might not; but if the Government assert that they might, it is important for them to say what it is they have in their minds. They must be prepared to say what measure they will be prepared, if any, to submit, or at least to indicate such measure as will be likely to produce those results. The Government should not ask us to commit ourselves to a proposition of this kind unless they are prepared to define it; and, for my part, I strongly object to it, unless we have a definition which we can not only understand now, but which will stand as a basis for future negotiations, if necessary. With these changes, we are prepared on this side to vote the Address.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I may say a word or two, Mr. Speaker, before the Minister of Finance makes a fuller statement, if he should be disposed to do so. As regards the hon. gentleman's criticism of the reference to the British North America Act, I would agree with him if we were undertaking to state history in that phrase, but we are not stating history. The powers possessed by the provinces before Confederation were as great as those now possessed by the Dominion of Canada undoubtedly, but the intention of the framers of the Address was not, in any way, to state history, but simply to state the existing fact that these provisions in the foreign treaties are incompatible with the powers we possess, and interfere with the exercise of those powers. As a matter of fact, it is now under the provisions of the British North America Act that we would exercise any legislative or fiscal control, and that is all we desire to state, namely, that the full exercise of the powers we possess under that statute is hampered by the provisions of these treaties. I think the hon. gentleman carries his criticism too far in respect of the phrase which he seeks to strike out by his amendment. The hon. gentleman is only aiming at the elimination of an argument from the Address. The argument is presented here that these treaties should be revoked in so far as Canada is concerned, because relations have of late years been created by foreign countries which may possibly require defensive fiscal legislation on the part of the United Kingdom and her colonies. That argument may not be conclusive, but no one can say that it does not possess in the minds of a great number of persons a great deal of strength, in view of the fiscal legislation of other countries in recent years, and we know that a large number of persons, and influential persons too, both in the colonies and the mother country, have reached the conclusion that, in view of that legislation of other countries, it is desirable that concessions be made in the fiscal legislation of the United Kingdom in favour of the colonial possessions. We seek to avail ourselves of the contention, not to urge that such concessions are imperatively called for at the present time, but to ask the mother country to keep her legislation and treaty arrangements free from any obligation which would prevent her, at any time, should the necessity arise, in the interests of the Empire as a whole, for making such concessions as would be mutually beneficial to the colonies as well as the mother country, and increase at the same time the strength of the union which exists between them. It seems to me that, whatever view we may entertain as regards the fiscal policy of the Government of Canada, whether we think it ought to continue protective or to branch off in the direction of free trade, it is in the interests of this country that the Government of the United Kingdom should keep its hands free to confer upon us any benefit which may seem to her reasonable and just, in view of the relations which exist between the mother country and her colonies. That is the only argument which is presented by this Address; it does not seem to me to denounce any legislation existing at present, or to contain any pledge of future action on the part of this country, or to desire the United Kingdom to give any pledge as to its future fiscal policy, but it simply expresses the desire that we should be free to join hands, if it should be necessary to do so, as regards the promotion of commerce, or for any other object. Under these circumstances, it seems to me the contention of the leader of the Opposition has been somewhat strained concerning these two paragraphs, and I think they are the only two aimed at in his amendment.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think there is much more than argument in the three paragraphs of the Address to which my hon. friend has taken exception and which he proposes to amend. I am satisfied that these paragraphs never could have been drawn by the Minister of Justice, for I am sure that no one in this House would feel more certain than he that a paragraph simply stating a fact which we wish the Imperial Government to take action upon, should not be accompanied by a great deal that is not only argument, but is in fact, instruction to the Imperial Government as to the course it should take in its own policy, acting within its own sphere and jurisdiction. What are we asking for in this Address? We are asking that the Imperial Government should leave to us the power to deal in the future with our external commercial relations: we are asking the Imperial Government not to undertake to legislate in a way that will tie our hands and put it in the power of another country to seriously cripple us when we undertake to deal in commercial matters in a way that may be demanded by our own interests. A portion of this Address, as it stands, seems to me to rather point against commercial treaties altogether, and that is not what we desire. The hon. gentleman himself is under pledge to meet an official of the United States in the coming month. This address is hardly consistent with what the hon. gentleman proposes to undertake when he visits Washington. He proposes to negotiate a reciprocity treaty, and at the same time he declares that any commercial treaty relations with foreign states, which may bind the future action of the Government, are things to be deprecated. I do not think that is so. Then I find here this statement:

"Your memorialists further believe that, in view of the foreign fiscal policy of increasingly protective and discriminative duties, it is clearly adverse to the interests of the United Kingdom——" to do so and so. In the first place, I do not think there is an increasingly protective and discriminative fiscal policy as is here asserted. I think the tendency is rather the other way. It is true that such a course has been taken for a series of years on the continent of Europe, growing largely out of the great armed force that is kept up in those countries, which necessitates very high revenues, and this demands the existence of a protective policy. But taking the neighbouring republic, it is true that there has been legislation there in the direction of increased protection, but the hon. gentleman knows that there has been a very large popular vote in the last two elections in the opposite direction, showing that the growth of opinion in the United States is not in favour of extreme protection, but the reverse. Why should we say that the United Kingdom and each of its possessions ought to adopt a different policy? The United Kingdom is pledged to the policy of free trade. There is overwhelming sentiment existing there in the two great political parties of the state in favour of the maintenance of that system. Why should we undertake to tell the people of the United Kingdom that, looking at the growth of this protective and discriminative spirit, it is to their interest to adopt the policy of retaliation, for that is what is proposed. I understood that we were going to ask for legislation which would leave us free to do as we pleased in regard to our own matters, but by these resolutions, at the same time that we are making this request, we are undertaking to tell the Imperial Government what they ought to do in the management of their own affairs. That is going a very long way. If we said we would like you to allow us to attend to our business, while leaving you to attend to yours, that would be a different thing; but this is doing a very extraordinary thing, to tell them the course which they ought to take in the interest of the people of the United Kingdom. They would naturally say, you ask us to leave you free to deal with your own affairs, and at the same time you undertake to burden us with your good advice; surely, if you think you are the best judges of what is for your interest, we ought to be allowed to be the best judges of what is for our interest. It is going out of the record and beyond the question for us to undertake to instruct the Imperial Government as to the course the Imperial Parliament ought to take in regard to matters which affect the people of the United Kingdom alone. If they leave us free to take our own course, surely the least we can do is to leave them free to do what they consider is best for them. Then, this paragraph also says that it is the interest "of the United Kingdom, or of any of Your Majesty's self-governing colonies" not to be restricted "in the power of adopting such modifications of its tariff arrangements as may be required for the promotion of its trade," and so on. Why should we speak for all Her Majesty's self-governing colonies? We are the representatives of Canada; we are not the representatives of Australia, or New Zealand or South Africa. Let them speak for themselves. Let us speak for Canada, and let us confine our resolution and Address to the interests of Canada alone. Surely we do not want to dictate to the whole British Empire. Why should we speak for Australia or for New Zealand or for South Africa? The Imperial Government might say to us: You have undertaken to speak for these other colonies, but we may tell you that their views are not in accord with yours. What we desire is to state what Canada wants, what we should do is to speak for Canada alone and for nobody else. We are not authorized to speak for anybody else, and to speak for Canada is as far as we should go. Then this clause makes a declaration against "aggressive or injurious measures of foreign policy." In fact it proposes retaliation. In 1878, the hon. gentlemen came into power on the proposed principle of retaliation, but after they got a majority, they did not carry out that principle and they did not dare to assert it. The policy of retaliation they dared not assert in regard to the American Republic after their attention was brought to the effect of it. Do they suppose that the English Government are going to adopt any policy of retaliation between this time and the day of judgment? Certainly not. It is not in their interest to do so or in that of any country. The policy of the British Government is founded on the principle that the interests of men do not stand in antagonism but in consonance with each other, and that no country can promote its own interest by seeking to trample upon the interests of any other country, that the Creator has so made the world that each nation, in framing its own policy with a view to its own interest will conduce to the interest of any other country, just as any merchant will be glad to promote the welfare of his customers. No nation can benefit by the degradation or the poverty of another nation. That is the principle which has been acted on in the mother country for fifty years, and it has been so successful that it is not to be expected that they will go back to the barbarous policy of retaliation. That policy may be believed in, but it is not practised by the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches. What is the use of putting in such a clause? What the hon. gentlemen want we agree with, but when they insert in their resolution all the political doctrines of the Tory party we object. If the hon. gentlemen want this Address carried with the unanimous support of this House, let them leave out these doctrinaire opinions which we believe to be at variance with the principles of political economy as well as with the best interest of this country. Then there is a clause vaguely pointing to the scheme of an Imperial federation. Nothing is definitely asserted, but a vague expression of opinion has been given in favour of views of that sort. Are all the hon. gentlemen on that side prepared at this moment, on the last day of the session, to declare themselves in favour of an Imperial league of that sort? Assuredly not. I know many hon. gentlemen on that side who, while loyal to their party, are not in favour of that scheme, and here on the last day of the session, when there is no opportunity for discussion, when most of the members are absent, the Government come down with a declaration vaguely committing the House to a policy which is not supported by any party in the United Kingdom and will not be supported by a majority of those who sit behind hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches. Then there is in the last paragraph a phrase that I did not notice, which seems to me rather meaningless:

"The Senate and House of Commons therefore humbly request Your Majesty to take such steps as may be necessary to denounce and terminate the effect of the provisions referred to."

"Denounce and terminate the effect"—that seems to me rather an extraordinary form of expression. These provisions must be terminated in order to terminate the effect. The effect closes with the existence of the provisions. You do not want these provisions terminated except in so far as they affect yourselves. I do not suppose you are going to speak for the United Kingdom and all the other self-governing colonies of the Empire. That being the case, the word "effect" should come out and the words "so far as affecting the Dominion of Canada" should be put in at the end. Then the last paragraph of the resolution would be made to fairly represent the views which the House intends should be embodied in the Address. I think the hon. gentleman ought to modify the Address in the way suggested by the leader of the Opposition. They will sacrifice nothing; they will embody everything that the Address should contain for the purpose of accomplishing the object in view, and it leaves every member of the House, both on that side and on this, perfectly free in regard to those disputed questions which are not at all relevant to this matter, and which ought not to be forced upon the House when a large majority of its members have already gone to their homes.

Mr. CASEY. I would like to formulate a question which I put to the hon. Minister casually while he was speaking. I would like to have from him a definite answer on this point that will go to the country, and will be extremely interesting to that part of the country especially in which my own riding is situated, I mean in regard to trade with Cuba. Of course, we have seen the correspondence that has come down, and we have heard what the Minister has had to say upon the matter; but I want to ask him more particularly whether any difficulty has been found in entering cargoes of Canadian produce in Cuban ports on the same terms as those from the United States, since the treaty has come into force? I ask an answer to this question, for the reason that I am getting letters from a number of shippers who are interested and who say they have seen it in the debates, or in the newspapers, and who want to know positively whether as a matter of fact this privilege has been granted already to Canadian shippers, and, therefore, whether they are safe in sending out consignments to Cuba. Of course they will not send any unless they know that this understanding is not only considered to be good by the English Government, but that it is practically carried out by the Cuban Customs house officers. That is the point I want to know, as to whether Canadian cargoes have been entered?

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to the question which has been asked by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, I can state nothing more fully than the statements which have already been made to the House, and the information contained in the papers which have been laid upon the Table, which I think are entirely conclusive, and such as should satisfy every person that shipments from Canada of produce of like kinds as that included in the schedules in the Spanish American arrangement, are admitted into Cuba, and will be admitted into Cuba, until the 1st of July, 1892 on most favoured nation terms. I may say in addition, that cargoes have already been shipped from Lower Province ports and have entered Cuba, since the 1st of December, under those conditions. I think that ought to be entirely conclusive. Now a word in reference to some statements that have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite. In the first place, I wish to say that I cannot see that the memorial under consideration, so far as its tendency is concerned, leads necessarily to what my hon. friend opposite says is the logical conclusion, that Canada should have perfect freedom in itself to negotiate its own commercial treaties. The two clauses with which we are finding fault—if I may be allowed that expression—were placed in the treaties of 1862 and 1865, without the colonies having been asked to consent, without their having been consulted in any way; and these we take to be inconsistent with the powers which we at present possess. These provisions we think to be obstructions which may be very adverse to our interests in the future, although I cannot say that they have been adverse so far. The difficulty will arise whenever Canada has an opportunity of making arrangements with a foreign power to which this will be a bar, or with regard to which this will open the door so wide as to make it almost impossible for us to enjoy the good effects of an arrangement which we might be on the eve of making. Since that time, as I have stated, and of late years, the practice of the British Government is not to conclude such treaties, or to put such clauses in them without having the assent of the colonies being included therein. So that the practice has entirely changed, and we are now in a position far different from the one we are complaining of having been put in by these two clauses inserted in the Address, which were adopted long before Confederation. So that I do not consider the logical conclusion my hon. friend sees in this Address, is fairly drawn. However, as he has promised us an unexpectedly great treat for the opening hours of next session, namely, a learned disquisition by the hon. gentleman from Bothwell upon the effect of commercial treaties, we must repress our desire to be regaled in this way for some two or three months, until we meet about these boards again. The hon. gentleman from Bothwell has gone rather extensively into the arguments upon trade grounds, and he has found fault with the statements here embodied in the words "in view of the foreign fiscal policy of increasingly protective and discriminative duties;" and he has endeavoured to show that the tendency is in the other direction. Well, if my hon. friend can find a tendency in the legislation of late years in the other direction, he has a stronger microscope than I am gifted with. If he can find any tendency in that direction in the last election in the United States or in the tariff which has resulted from it as the outcome of the principles enunciated during that contest, and embodied in the McKinley Bill, he is welcome to any such satisfaction he can find. In respect of the different European countries, I think he will be at a loss to show us actual results which would indicate a departure from the protective system. He has mentioned that a large and permanent military organization has to be kept up which necessitates a large revenue for that purpose. It is a fact that they do. But protective tariffs, as a rule, are not for revenue purposes; and if the hon. gentleman will look closely he will find the trend is in the direction of increased protection in European countries quite outside of revenue purposes, and with which in some regards that consideration is not consistent. The objection which is mainly spoken of by the hon. gentleman is that included in the fourth paragraph, in which we, as the hon. gentleman says, venture to give advice to the United Kingdom as to its policy. I do not think there is very much in that criticism. We are simply expressing in a very mild form an opinion which, I think, we have a right to express in a memorial, and I do not see that detracts from the prayer of the memorial, or that it will be followed by such dire consequences as the hon. gentleman seems to think. We are simply expressing, in a mild form, an opinion as to two particular clauses. It is not with respect to the general policy, nor with respect to the future policy. It is simply with respect to those two clauses which were framed in 1862 and 1865, and which we consider obstructive, and which it is admitted by Great Britain as well are strongly restrictive. Any one who has read the speech of Lord Salisbury to the deputation who waited on him will see, in addition to the words quoted by the hon. member for Quebec, there is also running through it the idea that those two clauses in their present shape hamper the United Kingdom of Great Britain as well in her power of making trade arrangements which she might otherwise wish to make. I do not see the force of the objection raised to that clause, especially in view of the fact that, while we are memorializing the British Government on those two clauses existing in these two treaties of 1862 and 1865, we are not expressing an opinion on the general policy. The hon. gentleman has not brought forward a sufficient objection to cause us to wish to remodel the Address.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman will see that it goes beyond that; for he intimates that these clauses should be repealed in order that a certain other policy should be adopted by the mother country.

Mr. FOSTER. Most certainly. There would be no point in our wishing and asking, or the Government of Great Britain desiring and endeavouring to get rid of these clauses, if it did not leave them freer in their trade arrangements than they are under these clauses.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman was not presenting this Address for a general denunciation of the treaties, but that they should be denounced so far as Canada is concerned, that Canada should be relieved of the obligations. If the hon. gentleman were asking for the treaties to be denounced generally there might be some force in his remarks, assuming the policy to be well founded, which we never admit. That is not what he is asking, and therefore they are not relevant.

Amendment negatived on a division.

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to strike out the words "the effect of."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suggest that this clause should be amended to read as follows:—

That your memorialists desire to foster and extend the trade of the Dominion with that of the Empire, with its great neighbour the United States, and with other countries throughout the world, wherever opportunity offers, and the continuation of the restriction imposed on Canada by the so-called favoured nation clause creates an unnecessary and unjustifiable obstruction.

The hon. gentleman would thus confine himself to the matter in hand, and not commit this Parliament on the last day of the session to questions concerning Imperial federation, or a federation league or anything of that sort. The hon. gentleman will then bring before the attention of the British Cabinet that for which he is really asking, the denunciation of these two treaties, so far as regards this country and this country alone.

Mr. FOSTER. The objection has been well answered by the Minister of Justice, and we will allow the Address to stand, as drawn, after removing the three words, "the effect of."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If it is allowed to remain in that way, it will amount to an absolute denunciation. The following words are required to be added:—"So far as they affect the Dominion of Canada." The proposition is to relieve this country, and the intention should be so confined.

Mr. FOSTER. Not only is the proposition to relieve this country, but we think it would also be well that Great Britain should be free so far as these two clauses are concerned, that if any better trade arrangements may be made between other countries and ourselves, between Great Britain and other countries or between Canada and a third country, so far as these two clauses are concerned Great Britain should be free from their restrictions.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is not in accordance with the drift of the Address. I understood the object was the release of Canada from those treaties.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Now the hon. gentleman says he wants Great Britain relieved, and this is a prayer to have her relieved. Surely, if Great Britain desires to be relieved, she does not require a prayer from Canada for her release. She will make a request herself.

Mr. LAURIER. It is a pity that my hon. friend has not got the courage of his opinions. Why does he not say boldly that this is a step in the direction of the Imperial Free Trade League? We ask Great Britain what? To relieve us of the effect of these treaties. They may be advantageous to her, but they are not advantageous to us, and we ask to be relieved in so far as we are concerned. But that is not sufficient for the hon. gentleman. He wants to give advice to Great Britain not to enter into commercial treaties unless such treaties are in the interests of Canada. He wants us to keep our hands clear so that we may take part in forming a trade league between Great Britain and the distant colonies. He does not dare say so, but his proposition amounts to that.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It takes two persons to make a bargain, and if only one is free to make a bargain, there will never be a bargain made. We want not only Canada to be relieved from the operation of these treaties, but the other colonies of Great Britain as well, in order that they may be free to make an arrangement with us.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They can speak for themselves.

Amendment agreed to on division, and Address concurred in.

LOCAL REPRESENTATION OF THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved second reading of Bill (No. 178) further to amend the Acts respecting the North-West Territories. He said: This is an amendment which I explained yesterday, and its object is to equalize the representation of the several provisional districts of the North-West Territories. It has been found since the census was taken that the arrangement we had made does not give a fair representation to the different provisional districts. The population of Alberta, for instance, is 26,123, of Assiniboia, 30,285, and of Saskatchewan, 11,146. By allowing six representatives to the Saskatchewan district, it gave one representative for each 1,857 inhabitants. By giving twelve representatives to Assiniboia, it gives them one to every 2,523. In Alberta eight representatives gives one to each 3,640 inhabitants; showing that Alberta really suffers more than any of the other districts. It is proposed to take one from Saskatchewan which would then give a representative to a population of over 3,000 and equalize it to that extent.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. I have no doubt that there is, perhaps, some arguments in favour of basing the representation strictly on population; but I believe there are other considerations that we must remember, there is a territorial representation to be considered as well. Now, it is true that Assiniboia has a larger population than Saskatchewan, but the territory of Assiniboia is a great deal smaller than that of Saskatchewan, and though the population of Saskatchewan may not be as large, it is more scattered, and perhaps requires a great deal more attention from the representatives than more thickly settled districts. I am sorry that in order to give Assiniboia an increase of representation—which I would not deny, as they are perhaps entitled to it—we should be asked to deprive Saskatchewan of a division which has only been granted to it a few days ago. We knew at the time we made these new divisions, what the census was, and it was for those who were responsible to call our attention to this fact, if that was an argument strong enough to require us to make the alterations that are asked to-day. I do not see why, after agreeing to these electoral divisions in the district of Saskatchewan, we should now be called upon to stultify ourselves in making a re-arrangement of those divisions. I am aware, and the House is aware, that the passing of this Bill a few days ago has had the effect of leading the people to select candidates for those divisions we have already created, and those candidates have already begun the campaign for an election which will take place in a short time. Now, these people are greatly dissatisfied, and when the rumour was set afloat that such a change was to take place, I, for one, received several telegrams from interested parties, asking whether such changes were going to be made, and why the people should be made mere playthings of by this House, and whether, after creating the electoral divisions for them, we were going to take them away after the people had already begun to act in accordance with the law that has been passed. I, therefore, hope that while this measure may grant an additional electoral division to Assiniboia, to which I do not object, it will not be to the detriment of Saskatchewan. Add another division, if you like, but do not rob Peter in order to pay Paul.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not think any great harm would be done to any one, even if the Bill was allowed to remain as it came from the Senate. It certainly would do Saskatchewan a little good, because it would then leave for that territory the members which it was understood they were entitled to, and the people there had already made arrangements, I believe, to select members to represent the districts which we had created. I may say, in regard to Saskatchewan, that since the completion of the railway a large immigration is going in there. During the last few years I have had application to send a surveyor to sub-divide two townships, in order that the families who are there waiting may be located on the land. Therefore, in anticipation of a very large immigration into that district it is very desirable to make provisions for a large representation. The hon. gentleman who has spoken knows that in that district a portion of the inhabitants would consider it a hardship if we did not make a re-arrangement. An understanding was come to between the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) and myself that this change should be made; but of course we cannot go on with the Bill without the unanimous consent of the House, and if the hon. gentleman feels so strongly that we should not do so, of course I can do nothing but withdraw the Bill.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. I only object to one clause of the Bill, that is, the second clause, taking away from one district what is wanted in the other. I do not object to the other clauses at all.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman will see that this is a matter which has just been disposed of. It should have been brought up earlier in the session. It is impossible to say whether the new divisions or the old divisions are right. It is impossible for any man in this House, except perhaps the Minister or the hon. members from the North-West, to give a sound judgment on the matter.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

FRAUDS UPON THE GOVERNMENT.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 172) respecting frauds upon the Government.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that the following be added to section 1 :—

Every person having any contract with the Government for the performance of any work, the doing of anything, or the furnishing of any goods, effects, food or materials, and having or expecting to have any claim or demand against the Government by reason of such contract, who either directly or indirectly by himself, or by any person on his behalf, subscribes, furnishes or gives, or promises to subscribe, furnish or give any money or valuable consideration for the purpose of promoting the election of any candidate, or of any member, class or party of candidates to a Legislature or to Parliament, or with the intent in any way of influencing or affecting the result of a Provincial or Dominion election.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

House rose during pleasure.

House resumed at three o'clock.

TRADE ADDRESS.

Mr. FOSTER moved :

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General praying that His Excellency will be pleased to transmit the joint Address of both Houses to Her Majesty on the subject of certain important matters affecting the trade relations of Canada with the Empire and with foreign nations in such manner as His Excellency may see fit, in order that the same may be laid at the foot of the Throne.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the said Address be engrossed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. TROW. I beg leave to ask the Minister of War to give us his opinion as to whether we may expect peace during the recess——

Mr. FOSTER. How big a piece?

Mr. TROW,—or whether there is any prospect of foreign aggression or internal commotion.

Mr. CURRAN. No war till next session.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It seems to me that, after this cruel war that has just ended, it is not right in my hon. friend to speak of anything else than the most profound peace. It will, doubtless, take us a long time to recover from the attacks made by the hon. gentleman and his friends. However, I can tell the hon. gentleman that, in so far as my knowledge of coming events extends, we foresee no great danger of any external war. I can only hope that the hon. gentleman, during the recess, will give his time and attention to studying those arts of peace which make a people happy and prosperous. As regards my own department, I have often told the House that I am always on the defensive, and that it is not a War Department in the sense of attacking other countries. I hope to be able to maintain that strict neutrality which I always endeavour to maintain with foreign nations, so that the army of Canada may not be called upon to engage in active hostilities that may prove disastrous to our peace. Mr. Speaker, before we break up this session, I take this opportunity of wishing the hon. gentleman, whom I have known for so many years, continued health and prosperity. During many years I have acted with him in endeavouring to keep peace and order between the two contending parties, and when he and I were together in performing those functions we always succeeded in maintaining peace and harmony between the two great political parties that divide public opinion in Canada. I take this opportunity to tender to the hon. gentleman my best possible wishes for his continued good health and prosperity, and I hope that when he comes back to us with his colleagues on that side of your Chair, Mr. Speaker, he will come back as well as he looks to-day.

Mr. TROW. The Minister of Militia is usually very logical in his expression, but I never heard him make utterances so illogical as those he has just expressed. He forgets that during the contest which has taken place this session, quite a number of wounded have been left on the field, and it will take a long time before they will recover. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman speaks feelingly in hoping for peace during the future. I question very much whether it will not take a good deal more time than he anticipates to bring back to political health those who have been wounded in this contest. However, some of those hon. gentlemen opposite have not been wounded, and I hope that the wholesome lessons they have received this session will not be lost upon them in the future, and that both the Cabinet and their supporters will in the future be exceedingly guarded not to covet other men's goods. I will only say further that, notwithstanding the protests that are pending against the most of us, we expect to be back here in the flesh, and if so I shall endeavour to do my little part to keep myself in trim, at all events, so that I may be able to assist those with whom I am associated in realizing the present very bright prospects of being on the other side of the House in a very short time.

Mr. FOSTER. For a very short time.

Mr. TROW. We have already seen to-day our hon. friend the Minister of Customs coming over here and choosing his seat, showing that he expects a change. Well, he is much more peaceable on that side of the House than he was when he was here.

Mr. BOWELL. He is older now.

Mr. TROW. I recollect when he occupied a seat on this side of the House, he was nearly always on his feet discussing matters morning, noon and night, especially at night. I hope that when he gets on this side of the House he will be more peaceable than he has been in the past. However, he has not been wounded, apparently, in this contest. This has been a very long and tedious session, and it is, perhaps, out of place to make any lengthened remarks on this occasion. The Hansard reporters have done their work admirably this session.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TROW. They always do their work admirably. I do not think it is desirable to make further remarks. We expect to part in peace, as in fact we always do. We have had a great deal of trouble during this session. First, there was the death of Sir John Macdonald. He was a particular friend of mine; we were always on the best terms of friendship. I regret his death, probably as much as any member of the Cabinet or any member on the Government side of the House. You, hon. gentlemen opposite, have had your troubles all around, and it is expected that, after the wholesome lesson you have received, you will be good boys in future——

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:—

The Commons of Canada have voted the Supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the Public Service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill:—

"An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1892, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service," to which Bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this Bill the Royal Assent was signified in the following words:—

In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the First Session of the Seventh Parliament of the Dominion with the following

SPEECH:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate,
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I desire to convey to you my high appreciation of the earnestness and assiduity which you have devoted to your Parliamentary duties during this protracted session.

I have also to express my sympathy in the regret which you and the whole Dominion must feel, and which I sincerely share, for the lamented loss of the late Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Sir John A. Macdonald, who died full of years and honours, in the midst of your deliberations; and I congratulate you and the country upon the moderation and patriotism which you manifested in that crisis, and which enabled the legislative business of the country to be continued without interruption.

An agreement was made in June last, between Great Britain and the United States of America, for the practical cessation of seal fishing in Behring's Sea during the past season, with a view to the protection of seal life, pending an investigation by experts, in which this country has taken part, in the question of the necessity of measures for preventing its extinction. The report of the experts has not yet been received, and the negotiations for the settlement of the questions which have arisen on the subject are proceeding, but are still incomplete.

I am pleased to observe that, in anticipation of a friendly conference with the Government of the United States, on the subject of the extension and development of our trade with that country, and other important matters, the provisions of the protocol of 1888, known as the Modus vivendi, have been extended.

The measures you have concurred in passing are important and useful. The reorganization of the Legislature of the North-West Territories and the readjustment and increase of its powers, are just tributes to the eminent capacity for self-government which that important and rapidly increasing section of Canada has manifested. The Acts for the improvement of the law respecting Elections will, I hope, be found beneficial, by simplifying procedure and facilitating the repression of corrupt practices. The measures respecting the cattle trade, the loading of ships, the registration of trade marks and the Vice-Admiralty Courts will prove advantageous to trade, commerce and shipping. The enactments respecting the inspection of ships must prove of great value in the protection of the lives of persons employed upon them, while the Act respecting the foreshores of the Dominion and the obstruction of navigable waters will remove a possible source of dissension between this Government and the provinces.

Notwithstanding that the result of the Census shows a less important increase in population than was expected, it is satisfactory to observe the continuance of the general prosperity of the country. And the bountiful harvest with which Providence has blessed us this year, will give a fresh impetus to the settlement of the North-West, and to the enterprise and industries of the country generally.

It is gratifying to perceive that you have felt justified in reducing the duty upon sugar to the extent of about three millions of dollars, thus materially lessening the cost of an article of universal consumption, and that you have not judged it necessary to provide for replacing revenue, to the extent of more than half the reduction thus made. It is a further recommendation of this important measure, that while it largely reduces the cost of a necessary article of food, it provides for supplying the consequent loss of revenue by the imposition of duties on luxuries only.

The extensive frauds upon the Government by a group of contractors, and the irregularities of certain persons in the Civil Service, which have been discovered by investigations by your Committees are much to be regretted. The punishment with which many of them have already been visited, the steps which are to be taken with regard to others, and the operation of the statute you have passed for their repression in future will, I trust, have the effect of preventing their recurrence. And it is the intention of my Ministers to procure the issue of a Commission to investigate the organization of the Civil Service and report as to measures for its improvement.

The question of the restriction or prohibition of the liquor traffic has also been occupying the attention of my Ministers; and a Commission will issue during Recess to enquire into, and report upon, this important subject.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the liberal provision which you made for the requirements of the Public Service.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate,
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In taking leave of you for the present it is with an earnest desire for your happiness and prosperity in your several homes.

The SPEAKER of the Senate then said:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate, and Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

It is HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S will and pleasure, that this Parliament be prorogued until Monday, the 9th day of November next, to be here held, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until Monday, the 9th day of November next.

The Parliament of the Dominion of Canada was then prorogued to the 9th day of November next.
